One thing that I have learned from being on the Finance Committee is that Budget material is hard to read. You need to be an experienced MLA or a master craftsman like Matthew O'Toole, the Member for South Belfast, who had daily experience of it, to really get into the detail and see what the figures mean. Sometimes, you see just a blur of numbers with a lot of zeros; sometimes, the zeros are not even provided. It is hard to read the Budget. I have attempted to make sure that something is published that specifies the changes in each Department's net Budget allocation.

Mr O'Dowd: Will the Member give way?

Mr Frew: Yes, I will.

Mr O'Dowd: I am sure that the Member has, as I have, sat through many monitoring round statements in the Chamber. Attached to the back of the monitoring round statements is what the clause asks for: it sets out what each Department is getting extra. My experience of monitoring rounds is that they are usually good news stories. There is no hesitation from a Finance Minister in coming to the Chamber and telling the world that he can give out money; it is when they have to take money off you that they are more reluctant to come to the Chamber. I do not wish to lengthen the debate, but I am not sure that the new clause is necessary to carry out the functions that the Member wants.

Mr Frew: I accept that argument. There are two aspects to it. The first is that I hope that it is not necessary; I hope that it is uniform and standard procedure; I hope that that is what takes place. However, I am not sure about the other Departments and Committees. This is a way of ensuring uniformity and speed. Let us face it: it is the Assembly that votes on the spring Supplementary Estimates much later in the year, which is, basically, the combination of monitoring rounds anyway. In a way, it is about making sure that MLAs, who make decisions, pass legislation in the House and clear Budgets and everything else, get sight of that in a way that allows us to see the change.

It is not always the case that we throw more money about at monitoring rounds. There will be times when Departments give back and times when it is right that Departments give back. I am not saying that I want the information so that I can see that there has been a big net fall in a Department and can say, "Oh, big bad Finance Minister; you've taken money off a Department. Big bad Finance Minister"; I am saying, "Well, hold on. Why was that money handed back, and why was it good that that money was handed back? If that money is put to the centre, what use will it have in the centre?". Those are just primitive questions from MLAs who maybe do not sit on the Finance Committee.

I have sat on other Committees, and I have noticed that, sometimes, financial aspects of scrutiny are neglected. I am not saying that as a criticism; it is just a mark of life. The Agriculture Committee will be about suckler cows, beef cattle stock and less-favoured areas. It will not necessarily be about finance, although there is a lot of finance involved, not necessarily at the monitoring-round stage. This is a way of ensuring that all MLAs on all Committees will get good, timely information so that they can see drops and increases in a more consistent way.

I could have gone further, and I retain the right, at Further Consideration Stage, to go further. The Assembly votes for the spring Supplementary Estimates much later in the financial year. I toyed with the idea of tabling an amendment that the House votes on every monitoring round. That would just bring an added layer of accountability. I still have not worked out in my head whether something good could go wrong with that accountability. I am teasing that out in my head, and my head is quite primitive —.

Mr Murphy: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker, perhaps you could advise us, while the Member is teasing stuff out in his head, that Further Consideration Stage will apply only to consequential amendments that come from the Consideration Stage. It is not a point for tabling a new amendment to a Bill.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): I am sure that the Member will tease that out in his head.

Mr Frew: Yes, I will try to tease that out, Mr Deputy Speaker.

If the amendment stands, something could be done with it. Again, I put the welcome mat out: if Members see fit to amend the amendment and make it better, I am absolutely there with you. Let us see what we can do. When MLAs work together, whether in a Committee, by consensus or in partnership, we get things done. That is where we want to be. I encourage Members to knock on my door, speak to me, speak to other Members or speak to the Bill's sponsor, and let us ensure that the legislation that we are about to pass is fit for purpose and will do the job that it is designed to do.

Ms Dolan: I would genuinely welcome a situation where Mr Allister was sponsoring a Bill truly motivated by improving the functioning of government here, notwithstanding the fact that it would run contrary to his approach to power-sharing thus far. However, it is clear from the debate on the first group of amendments that, once again, the motivation of the Bill's author is to fundamentally weaken the functioning of government by undermining the important role of ministerial advisers. The amendments in group 2 carry on in that vein with regard to the Assembly and, by extension, elected MLAs.

The amendments in this second group are, at best, unnecessary and, rather than improve ministerial accountability, they dismiss and ignore the current scrutiny function of the Assembly and its MLAs. The Assembly, like Committees, is an important forum for the scrutiny of the Executive and Ministers. As we all know, the scrutiny role is a fundamental part of the work of the Assembly, and it is the responsibility of each MLA to perform that role. It is an essential rule to delivering good governance and is necessary to hold Ministers to account. In reality, the clauses do nothing to enhance that role.

Amendment No 21 is a case in point. Under section 44 of the NI Act 1998, the Assembly has the power to call witnesses and documents. Ministers already appear regularly at Committees to engage with and answer questions from MLAs. Ministers are required to answer listed and topical oral questions approximately every fortnight on the Floor of the House. Many in the Chamber are willing and more than capable of putting questions to Ministers on the Floor of the Chamber and challenge them where necessary. This is as it should be. It is our responsibility. It is what we were elected to do.

The amendments ignore the fact that the Assembly and its Members have held and continue to hold Ministers to account. It is not about improving scrutiny because, in reality, the amendments will not do that. It is about undermining the credibility of this institution, and we all know what Mr Allister thinks about the power-sharing institutions and the Good Friday Agreement that established them. On that basis, given that the Bill is about undermining the functioning of government here, Sinn Féin will oppose all the clauses of this cynical and counterproductive Bill.

Mr O'Toole: I will, hopefully, like other Members, make my remarks on group 2 briefer than they were on group 1, and they will probably be briefer than they will be on group 3, in which there is significantly more meat and quite a bit more controversy.

First, given that she will be going to bed soon, I should say that it is my wife's birthday. I am missing it to be here with Jim Allister and Jim Wells. I leave it to the House to decide whether I made the right decision. She probably thinks that I have, but anyway [Laughter.] I have already set out our approach to the Bill's general principles and our general support for many of the intentions but with specific concerns in some areas. There will be more of both in the next section. However, on the group 2 amendments, it is fair to say that we are broadly supportive of practically all of them, and we think that they are constructive as far as they go.

I do not agree with the previous Member who spoke. I will reiterate something that I said in the debate on the previous group: our party bows to no one in how serious we are about protecting the institutions. Part of our scrutiny of this will be and has always been a question of whether it strengthens or weakens the institutions, and we will continue to take that view of individual clauses and amendments.

On the group 2 amendments, as I said, in general, we support them. One of the things about the legislation — the Northern Ireland Act 1998 — that created this institution is that, along, obviously, with the negotiations that led up to the Good Friday Agreement before that, it led to the real possibility of, in some ways, a more dispersed democratic approach to scrutiny. We obviously had power-sharing at the core of the way that this institution worked. We remain committed to that. For the purpose of putting it on the record again, I am under no illusion that other people who sponsor or support the Bill are not keen on mandatory coalition, but we remain committed to the principles of power-sharing.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Beggs] in the Chair)

As I said, one of the key drivers, instincts, thoughts and impetuses in the development of the institutions was not just around power-sharing but around the dispersal of scrutiny authority and putting specific scrutiny functions into Committees. It is fair to say that the potential laid out in the Northern Ireland Act 1998 has not always been lived up to. That is not necessarily a point about the scandals that we have talked about before and will talk about again in the debate on the next group around RHI and other bits of grifting and borderline corruption; it is about how we do government, do it well and do scrutiny well. As I said, good government relies on Ministers, special advisers, the Assembly and the Civil Service all performing our respective roles effectively. The last few years have prompted a serious examination of us all in terms of how well those roles have been performed, not just by individuals but by the structures within which those individuals operate.

We have talked at some length about codes and guidance versus legislation in relation to the earlier part of the Bill. With regard to scrutiny around ministerial accountability, it is clear that some of the codes and guidance have not lived up to their billing in delivering what is not just the actuality of ministerial accountability but the perception among the public of ministerial accountability.

9.00 pm

At this point, it is worth saying that I have noted something since joining the Assembly. I was privileged to be asked to come here; it is a privilege to serve with all of you, despite our profound political differences. I have been struck by the fact that there is a significant amount of goodwill. Members are trying to do the best, as they see it, for the people, places and communities that they serve. If you paid attention to some media coverage, you would think that absolutely everything about these institutions is totally falling apart and distrusted. It is not, but there are real issues. There is a problem. Someone mentioned a certain radio programme: if you turn on the radio at 9.30 am every day, you get a certain version of this place. That may not be an entirely accurate or exact reflection of where we are, but it performs a function. That debate and the sense that things need to get better in how we hold people to account are real. We need to think about how we do ministerial accountability and scrutiny.

The Assembly is the prime source of devolved authority in this place. Our laws and governance should reflect that and uphold accountability to the Assembly. It is sometimes easy to forget that. I do not say that to undermine or take away from the important work that the Executive do, but, as I say, the Assembly is the prime source of devolved authority and the Executive are derived from that.

The SDLP supports amendment No 10 to clause 5, which protects Ministers from frivolous and vexatious complaints. It adds to the original clause. We also support amendment Nos 11 and 12 to clause 5. On our general support for clause 5, as others have said — the Bill sponsor delved into some detail — it brings complaint procedures against Ministers into the same ambit as those for MLAs. It is worth taking a step back and looking at the wider context around codes and ministerial standards. It is fitting in some ways that we are debating that this week. At Westminster, we have seen what happens when standards of accountability for Ministers go completely by the wayside. We have all seen the shocking and appalling reaction of Boris Johnson not only to clear evidence of bullying but to a top-to-bottom damning report from the now former adviser on the ministerial code, who has resigned because the code was not taken seriously by the UK Prime Minister. It is important to think about that context. There is a real crisis across the water and, if we are honest, here too. As I said, we should not overdo it, but there is a serious issue about people's trust in ministerial accountability and how we hold Ministers to account. That has been exacerbated by the events of this year and people's perception that Ministers have acted with a degree of impunity. Anything that we can do to counteract or improve that process has to be considered seriously.

The measures in the Bill are, hopefully, a positive step forward. I talked about the inquiry into Priti Patel, but I hope that what we will do in the Bill is to show that we can take the lead in these islands, for a change, in delivering more robust and free-standing ministerial accountability. That does not mean that the accountability function of the Assembly or the media, for that matter, is undermined by the commissioner's remit being extended to Ministers. If the Bill passes with the clause as it is, it would be worth whichever Department is responsible for taking forward the enhanced role of the Commissioner for Standards looking at its resourcing and staffing. Given the context that we are in of having an extreme backlog of complaints about MLAs, it would, I am afraid, be unacceptable and pretty naive of us to burden the commissioner with extra work without adequately and realistically resourcing them. We in the SDLP believe that what is proposed is an appropriate vehicle to oversee the fundamental standards and principles that are expected of Ministers.

I will move on briefly and put on record my party's support for amendment No 21, which, we think, is reasonable and hard to argue with. Again, it would put in statute what should already be happening. The Bill's sponsor can perhaps say something about this, but it does not prevent any Department being frank with a Committee about material that is not ready yet. Clause 21 will not hugely overburden Departments with duties in addition to their existing ones under the Northern Ireland Act. However, it is a useful addition, because, as we have said, scrutiny adds to the proper functioning of government.

It is worth saying that there are some here who are sceptical of mandatory coalition as a principle. Certainly, one thing that, I think, we can all agree on, whether you were a supporter of the Good Friday Agreement or a frenzied opponent of it, is that, with a structure of government like this, it is particularly important that Committees are able to do their job.

A recent Institute for Government report on the working of devolution in Northern Ireland was explicitly critical of Committee oversight. The report said that Committees needed more support by way of research and information. That is no reflection on RaISe, which does a wonderful job for us. However, it is true to say that we could have more resource for our Committees, and, if the Bill helps to beef that up by putting the information that is required from Departments on a statutory footing, why not?

We support amendment No 22, which is sensible. On clause 12 more broadly, what is proposed is a pretty sensible innovation, to be honest. It will not necessarily instantly transform how people see the institutions, but the fact that senior Ministers have to come to the Assembly to explain how government is functioning would be a useful discipline and should not create any disproportionate burden on civil servants or Ministers. It is useful, given that the institutions are, like everything else, a work in progress, and, in one sense, it is arguable that a biennial report that leads to practical constructive improvement and consensus on improvements is not damaging to the institutions but could strengthen them. Perhaps I should not have said that, because Mr Allister may want to withdraw the clause now. Biennial reporting is a useful tool and hopefully could also improve delivery of the outcome-based approach that we have moved to in the past few years. Obviously, we have not had an updated Programme for Government, in some ways understandably, because of COVID, but this is something that we could look at in complement to a new Programme for Government, whenever that comes, probably during the next mandate. There are positive things there.

The arguments against seem to be primarily around the fact that it duplicates what is already codified. I am, perhaps more than some, willing to give particular credence to arguments about not creating a disproportionate burden on civil servants, and I will talk a fair bit about that in the next grouping because, particularly, given my career history, I am very cognisant of that. We have to be careful, as we pass laws, that we are not simply creating disproportionate burdens on civil servants in lieu of changing culture. On this grouping, I genuinely do not see that we are creating enormous burdens on civil servants or Ministers.

Mr O'Dowd: Will the Member give way?

Mr O'Toole: Yes, I am happy to give way.

Mr O'Dowd: While you may not be creating an undue burden on civil servants, the question that you have to ask yourself is this: are you creating effective law?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Can I ask the Member to use the microphone so that Hansard will record his words?

Mr O'Dowd: This is not like passing a motion on a Monday or a Tuesday that has no impact. This is legislation that we are passing, so ask yourself this question: will the clauses that you pass support effective law?

Mr O'Toole: The Member asks a good and very fair question, and I touched on that a bit in my previous remarks. There are areas of the Bill that, we think, are counterproductive and superfluous in some places, so we will not support those. In this area, I do not see that this is a counterproductive law, in the sense that it is not creating, as far as I see it, a disproportionate burden on our Administration. There is a separate question about the volume of the statute book, and I am sure that people more qualified than me will have strong views on the length of the statute book and whether it is tidy or untidy. I do not think that the specific provisions create any undue burdens.

I move on to Mr Frew's amendment. As I alluded to in my interventions, we have some questions around the timing in new clause 12A, but we are certainly happy to take up his invitation at the next stage. We may not be able to vote actively for it at this stage, but, if it goes through to the next stage, we will work with him to look at the content. He has talked about the three-legged stool of the clause: we certainly think that the second two have a lot of merit.

On subsection (1), going back to what Mr O'Dowd just said about creating the right law, frankly, there is a risk that, if you put it in law that every Committee has to be provided by its Department with a briefing in advance of its submission to a monitoring round, you are, in law, creating a process that could lead to unintended consequences and to political bun fights and people haggling before monitoring rounds. We have to be careful about distinguishing between the role of an Executive — people like the Finance Minister, who is here today — who have a role in policymaking, and our role as scrutineers. Yes, there is a huge job in co-design and in Committees having a role in policy input and policy development — there is nothing wrong with that in principle — but formalising it in law as a kind of upfront thing before a monitoring round is a —. However, if it proceeds, we are happy to work with the proposer of that amendment to see whether it could either be made retrospective in terms of the information being provided in that new clause or clarified in some other way.

We also support the technical amendment to terminology through amendment No 25. At this stage, I am glad to end my comments there. I think that I was quite brief. I look forward to voting and moving on to the third grouping.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I call Andrew Muir. Sorry, it is Stewart Dickson.

9.15 pm

Mr Dickson: Apologies, Mr Deputy Speaker, if my name was not in front of you. I will speak on behalf of the Alliance Party on the amendments in the second group, which are on ministerial accountability to the Assembly.

That Ministers are accountable to the Assembly is indeed a fundamental principle of our devolved Government. We believe that Ministers should be held accountable for breaches of the ministerial code and that Members' questions and requests for briefings and papers should be responded to fully and promptly. The need to reform and, ultimately, remove the petition of concern as a block to censure of a Minister for contravention of the ministerial code and, indeed, of Members when they may have committed misdemeanours is something that we as a party sought to achieve prior to the re-establishment of the institutions and is that we will continue to press for.

In the lead-up to RHI, some Ministers, at times, showed complete and unacceptable disrespect for the Assembly and its scrutiny function. We fully recognise that there is a great deal of work that needs to be done in that regard. Multiple examples of that disrespect were highlighted by Sir Patrick Coghlin in his report, and we support the implementation of the recommendations designed to redress that.

Since the return of power-sharing earlier this year, the Minister of Finance has, through the Executive subcommittee on the RHI inquiry, pledged to the House to establish a three-person panel, including the Assembly Commissioner for Standards, to investigate breaches of the ministerial code. With the subcommittee due to report its final recommendations before the end of the year, we will hold the Minister of Finance accountable for ensuring that the panel is swiftly established; indeed, we would very much welcome an update on its progress from him to the Assembly during this debate. We do not expect that other members of the panel need to be commissioners; rather, they should be people of rigour, independently appointed and with the ability to act. We would like to hear more from the Minister of Finance about their powers and the terms of their appointment. We believe, however, that it is important that the new Commissioner for Standards be supported in what is a separate and additional role to that which she currently holds for Members of the House. On that basis, we are minded not to support clause 5, which brings the conduct of Ministers and the ministerial code directly under her remit. We are keen to get the necessary assurances from the Minister of Finance about the establishment of a panel to investigate ministerial conduct and that establishing it will be properly and completely fulfilled in line with the recommendations of the Coghlin report.

I turn now to amendments Nos 21 and 23. Amendment No 21 would put into legislation a requirement for Ministers to provide information to the Assembly and its Committees. Amendment No 23 concerns the timing of in-year monitoring processes. The Good Friday Agreement, enacted by the Northern Ireland Act 1998, gives Committees the power to call for persons and papers. The power to require attendance at Committees is included in section 44 of the 1998 Act, and we simply cannot see why it is believed that further legislation will make any tangible difference, but we will wait to be persuaded before voting on amendment No 21. On amendment No 23, the in-year monitoring process is extremely important, and Members must be able to scrutinise it fully. There is, however, a need for flexibility around the timing; indeed, we have seen that this year with the unprecedented disruption caused by the pandemic. For that reason, we feel that issues of timing are better and more appropriately dealt with through Standing Orders, where they can be ruled on by the Speaker's Office.

Mr Frew: I thank the Member for giving way on that issue. One of the reasons that I did not put dates in amendment No 23 is the flexibility that is required with having monitoring rounds and a Budget process every two years. That is why I put in a time frame of days rather than include a date for a Minister to have a duty to come to the House.

Mr Dickson: I welcome that flexibility and the recognition that to have fixed dates would not be an appropriate way forward. For that reason, issues of timing are more appropriately dealt with, as I have said, through Standing Orders.

We have no objection to clause 12, which requires the First Minister and the deputy First Minister to bring a biennial report to the Assembly on the functioning of government. As with so much of the Bill, real change will come through the implementation of the Coghlin report and through changes to culture and accepted work practices. At the end of the day, you can take a horse to water, but you cannot make it drink.

Mr Wells: It is well after 9.00 pm, and, of course, this is only a warm-up session for the real battle, which is to come after these amendments. In the debate on this group, there will be no revelations from me about the misdemeanours of spads, so this will be rather dull. Maybe part 2 will occur in the debate on the next group.

This group of amendments is rather uncontentious. I would like to think that they will go through without the need for a Division, because they make eminent sense. Every sensible MLA will give Mr Frew's amendment their full support. I agree entirely with the clause that gives the Commissioner for Standards the power to weed out vexatious complaints. I am a regular customer of the standards commissioner; indeed, there were times when he or she would have had little to do if it had not been for me and the former Member for North Antrim, who is now the MP for the constituency. Between the two of us, we kept up a steady flow of complaints to the commissioner.

I will give two recent examples. There was one from my attendance at a four-party panel discussion in Belfast, where someone asked me my view on gay marriage. I looked round the audience and thought, "If I give my views on gay marriage to this audience, first, I will not be home until about 2.00 am and, secondly, it will cause an awful lot of dissent", so I said, "I would prefer not to answer that question". A member of the LGBT community reported me to the Commissioner for Standards for not answering the question.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I draw the Member back to the amendments.

Mr Wells: Mr Deputy Speaker, far be it from me to question your ruling — that, of course, would be heresy — but it is related to the amendments, because the Commissioner for Standards is being given the power to weed out vexatious complaints. I believe that that was a vexatious complaint. Of course, under the rules that applied then, the commissioner had no choice but to look at it. Obviously, he quickly ruled in my favour because I am perfectly entitled not to answer any question put to me at a panel discussion.

More recently, I had cause to ring an office in Essex, of all places, on behalf of a constituent. I think that it was about a speeding problem. Amusingly, the lady who answered the call had the broadest Essex accent. Whilst I believe that I speak English properly, she could not understand a word of what I was saying, and I could not understand a word of what she was saying. I said, "I am sorry, but we cannot make ourselves understood. You will have to slow down". She took great exception to that comment and reported me to the Commissioner for Standards. That is what I call a vexatious complaint. It is not what the rules were set up to achieve; they are meant to deal with issues of real concern that would cause concern to the public. That is why I think that that is important.

The former Ministers in the Chamber will know that you have to take some difficult decisions. I remember that one of the most difficult decisions that I had to look at was in respect of Dalriada Hospital in north Antrim; indeed, I was lobbied intensely by people in this very Chamber. Some 14,500 residents of Moyle lobbied me, which was about 95% of the adult population of the district. That is how many signed the petition saying, "Save Dalriada Hospital". As I said earlier, as it turned out, I decided not to close Dalriada Hospital. However, had I done so — it was a 50:50 decision — I am confident that there would have been about 14,500 people making a formal complaint to the Commissioner for Standards against that decision as malpractice. That is how controversial it was. I have never in my life seen a community as engaged as the Ballycastle and Glens community was about Dalriada Hospital. If we are to have a system through which the commissioner can deal with complaints against Ministers, we have to have a filtering mechanism that stops that happening, or else the system will become unworkable.

I can think of other examples. For instance, school closures are emotive issues. A small rural primary school is down to 30 or 40 pupils, the Minister has to decide to close it and, inevitably, that causes great concern. However, if he goes through the proper procedures, he will make the right decision, albeit a controversial one, and he cannot be subject to a huge number of complaints. Another example was the recent decision by the Infrastructure Minister on the North/South interconnector. That is a hot potato in border areas.

If MLAs are to be protected from frivolous and vexatious complaints, so should Ministers. That has an awful lot of merit, and I would hope that that would go through without any dissension.

The other proposals make eminent sense. Mostly, monitoring rounds involve the Minister divvying out goodies to Departments. However, it is important that Members can scrutinise monitoring rounds because they indicate that some Departments do not have sufficient control of their budgets to spend all that they were allocated. It is important that Members, particularly those who serve on the Finance Committee, find out why that happened. It should not occur. If Ministers have good control of their budgets, they should go right to the wire, as it were, with their expenditure. We need to understand what projects have been withheld or held up and why that was the case.

I will not speak long on this group — I emphasise “this group”— of amendments. I would like to think that I would not be called to be a Teller for the votes on them.

Mr Catney: From the outset of my comments on this group of amendments, I give my full and firm support to the concept of Departments and Ministers having greater accountability to Committees in the Assembly.

Although I disagree politically with the Bill's sponsor on many issues, one of the more interesting aspects of daily life here since the Assembly was restored and one of my permanent likes is watching him hold Departments to account. I am sure that permanent secretaries have a treasure chest of war stories of coming up against him; it is a task that holds a suitable level of trepidation. That being said, there is a clear need for greater accountability and scrutiny to allow cleaner, more honest government and to restore the public's faith in this place. That will allow it to come to reasoned, sensible decisions that are based on sound evidence rather than political whim.

I support clause 5. It is right for Ministers to fall under the same complaints procedures as MLAs; it would be ridiculous for them not to be included. However, I welcome the amendments tabled by the Bill sponsor to add protection against frivolous and vexatious claims. We have only to look at some of the statistics from the Local Government Commissioner for Standards, which show that around 50% of complaints against councillors come from other councillors, to see how the system could be abused rather than used for its intended purpose.

Amendment No 21 is important in providing a statutory footing for the duty of Ministers and Departments to provide information to Committees and to allow for greatly enhanced scrutiny. In addition, as the Bill's sponsor will know from sitting on the Finance Committee, the clause will enhance the efficiency of the work. I am no expert on Committees. The Finance Committee is the first Committee on which I have served, but I find it a good and constructive Committee. Much of the information that we require is provided to us. There are times when the process of getting that information is slow, but I think that that tends to be the case for all Committees. Information should not have to be chased up repeatedly, and the amendment will, I hope, reduce the number of unnecessary delays.

I turn to Mr Frew's amendment No 23. I know what the Member is trying to achieve with the amendment and of his dedication to open decision-making. I agree with his desire to have more scrutiny of monitoring round bids. My issue, again, is with the operation of the clause. Many departmental budgetary pressures are time-sensitive, and the whole point of monitoring rounds is to allow Departments to act quickly and to give them the flexibility to deal with in-year pressures.

It may be cumbersome for Departments to come to the Assembly before every bid is submitted. Could that be done retrospectively to allow for the scrutiny that is required while keeping the process of monitoring rounds moving efficiently?

9.30 pm

Mr Carroll: The first two amendments in this section — amendment Nos 10 and 12 — are technical, but amendment No 12 is an important addition to the role and remit of the Commissioner for Standards. Other Members have talked about that. As it stands, the commissioner can investigate any MLA who is suspected of breaching the code of conduct or other wrongdoings. It is quite remarkable that the person designated to investigate complaints and breaches, effectively, has a blanket ban on Ministers being investigated. It is right and proper that there is a process, albeit that it is often a slow and laborious one; nonetheless, a process exists for MLAs to be investigated for breaches, potential breaches, misconduct and so on. Why is the same level of accountability and scrutiny not in place for Ministers? Are we really saying that Ministers are untouchable and that, as the current unamended and unchanged legislation does, Ministers are beyond any real investigation? Effectively, that will be the de facto situation unless changes are implemented to this legislation. Whilst the current state of affairs is obscene, it is in line with the general approach of Stormont in which Ministers are rarely held to account for their actions in any meaningful sense. A Minister resigning for wrongdoing is a rare thing in the House.

Amendment Nos 21 and 23 introduce two new clauses. Amendment No 21 would bring an important change to the way in which this Building and its Committees function. I have lost count of the number of times that I or other members at the Health Committee have asked reasonable questions, which are not outlandish and are not in the public domain, but have not received an answer or even an, “I will get back to you”. The fact that this amendment places a responsibility on Ministers and Departments when a Committee may reasonably require information in order to discharge its functions is right and proper. I hope that it will go some way to increasing the scrutiny function of Committees in the Assembly more generally and will increase the information that Committees, including the Health Committee that I sit on, can get access to.

In the normal budgetary and in-year monitoring round process that occurs, my experience in the Health Committee is that it is extremely difficult to find out the rationale for and the detail on why some bids are made or not made. Even political anoraks would find it difficult to explain or understand that process. Surely, any transparency around the process can only be a good thing. Any attempt to increase the information that Committee members get, to further open up or to make the budgetary process more transparent and to explain why Ministers make certain decisions can only be a good and welcome thing. It is for those reasons that I will support the amendments.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I call on the Minister for Finance, Conor Murphy, to respond to the debate on the second group of amendments.

Mr Murphy: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. The amendments in the second group all seek to ensure that Ministers are more effectively accountable to the Assembly. That is a sentiment and principle that I absolutely adhere to and encourage. However, the question, as one of my colleagues asked, is whether this legislation is the way to do that or whether it makes any substantial improvement to it. The effort here is misplaced. Amendment Nos 10 and 11 make some small tweaks to clause 5, which puts the investigation of ministerial standards within the remit of the Assembly Commissioner for Standards. Stewart Dickson, who has left the Chamber, asked questions relating to that. It is a matter for the Executive Office to establish the ministerial panel and to build on the remit that has already been established, and I look forward to it doing that as a matter of urgency.

The investigation function that has been agreed by the Executive provides for the involvement of the Assembly Commissioner for Standards as an ex officio member, if that were required. The ministerial standards panel is intended to be fast, reactive and efficient in dealing with complaints about breaches of the ministerial code of conduct. It is not clear that the Assembly Commissioner for Standards would be able to fulfil the same role, and that concern has been raised by others. The panel for the ministerial code of conduct will be obliged to report publicly. That arrangement is unlike anything else in our neighbouring jurisdictions — reference has been made to the ongoing difficulties in the London Government — but it will rely on the independence of the panel from the heads of government.

Mr Allister, in challenging this, said that it is hand-picked. The reality is that the people on the Finance Committee are hand-picked. Members on the Committee for the Assembly Commissioner for Standards are hand-picked as well. Members on all Committees of the Assembly are hand-picked, and, of course, there is a responsibility on the members who are appointed to report publicly, and that will bring a degree of independence to them and a responsibility to ensure that their work stands up to scrutiny. The place of the Assembly in bringing procedures against a Minister under section 30 of the Northern Ireland Act would remain. In fact, that would be enhanced, because all members will be given a panel members' report on which to act.

Amendment No 21 appears to be wholly unnecessary. The Assembly already has the power to call for witnesses and documents under section 44 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998. I have yet to hear a convincing reason why this new clause is necessary and what it adds to the existing statute. The Assembly has the capability to achieve its ends under section 44.

Amendment No 22 makes minor textual changes to clause 12, but it repeats the error of other provisions in this group by minimising the Assembly's scrutiny role. Rather than recognising the responsibility of the Assembly for reading, digesting and acting on the reports of the Civil Service Commissioners, the Comptroller and Auditor General and the Commissioner for Public Appointments, it asks the First Minister and deputy First Minister to provide the summary report: in other words, to give their filtered view to the Assembly of the reports of all those independent organisations, when the reports are readily available for Members and Committees to scrutinise as they so wish.

Amendment No 23 has been grouped with the other amendments on accountability when it might just as easily be grouped with the next set of amendments, which is concerned with matters of administration. It places into statute the administrative arrangements for Departments to brief their respective Committees. It is unclear exactly what is being proposed by the amendment. I routinely make a statement to the Assembly that sets out the changes to each Department's budget, which have been agreed by the Executive in each monitoring round. That happens well within the seven-day timescale proposed in this amendment. The amendment has the potential to increase significantly the administrative burden on Department of Finance staff without a corresponding increase in the Assembly's ability to scrutinise Executive decisions.

Mr Allister: The Minister has just said that the Assembly Commissioner for Standards is hand-picked.

Mr Murphy: No, I said that the members of it are.

Mr Allister: I will give way if the Minister wants.

Mr Murphy: I said that the members of the Committee on Standards and Privileges are hand-picked. The members of the Finance Committee, the Member included — he happened to hand-pick himself — are hand-picked. He makes it seem almost disparaging that the members of the ministerial panel would be hand-picked. Of course, they have a public scrutiny role that is itself open to scrutiny through the reports, and my argument is that they will provide that in a professional way.

Mr Allister: Let us consider and contrast this. The Commissioner for Standards, who deals with MLAs, is appointed having been identified through a fair and open competition. Contrast that with three hand-picked commissioners. The Assembly Commissioner for Standards has the power to compel documents and witnesses. Contrast that with the three commissioners, who have to rely on the information that the head of Civil Service gives them. The Commissioner for Standards can take evidence on oath, but there is no such provision for the three commissioners. It is a criminal offence not to cooperate with and answer questions from the Commissioner for Standards. There is no such provision for the three commissioners, so there is no comparison. Yet the Minister is contending that, while ordinary MLAs should be subjected to the rigour of such a process, Ministers should be exempt from that and that, rather, they should be treated with, as I will put it, kid gloves by three hand-picked commissioners who have no powers to get to the truth about anything. That is what the Minister is offering the House: second-grade and second-rate accountability for Ministers, as opposed to Rolls Royce accountability for MLAs. That is patently inequitable.

Of course, when you look further at it, you may ask this: if the system that the Minister is proposing is so foolproof and so good, where is it? The greatest challenge to clause 5 would be to have the three commissioners in place so that he could say, "We have delivered. This is redundant and is not needed." For nine or 10 months, there has been no delivery. Is there going to be legislation to establish those three commissioners? Where is that? Really, the Minister is suggesting and saying to the House, "Even though we, the Ministers, haven't done anything about it, you shouldn't do anything about it and you certainly shouldn't put Ministers under the same scrutiny as MLAs". That is not tenable, and the passage of time has made it even more untenable.

Turning to some of the points that Mr Dickson made, he said that his party would like to get rid of the petition of concern on these issues. So would I. I was minded to table an amendment that would prohibit the petition of concern being used on any Assembly Commission report, but the advice was that the petitions of concern are excepted matters and are outside the competence of the Bill. That is why that amendment is not there.

Mr O'Toole asked whether the commissioner would be properly resourced and who would resource them. The answer is that the Assembly Commission would, because schedule 4 to the 2011 Act is very clear. It says in paragraph 3.1:

"The Commission"

— that is, the Assembly Commission —

"shall provide the Commissioner with such administrative and other support, including staff, services and accommodation, as the Commissioner may reasonably require for the purpose of discharging the functions imposed on the Commissioner by this Act."

If we amend the Act to impose the investigation of Ministers upon the commissioner, it follows that the Assembly Commission will be under the obligation to provide extra support if he needs it. I remind the House that the last commissioner said in his annual report that he thought that that could be done without any stretch on resources, but if he was wrong about that, the provision already exists for it and he does not have to wait on the Executive or anything else, because the obligation is on the Commission.

Paragraph 4 in the schedule states:

"The Commissioner may, on such terms as the Commissioner may determine, secure the provision of such goods or services as the Commissioner considers necessary for assisting in the exercise of the Commissioner's functions."

So, the commissioner is given very strong powers to require resources to deploy services. If the commissioner finds that he needs the assistance of an expert in something, under paragraph 4 of schedule 4, he has the authority to get that. It all can be done, it all should be done and clause 5 is a very important opportunity for the House to demonstrate that there are no protected species and that Ministers are subject to scrutiny. Is that not a good place to be?

Amendment No 10 agreed to.

9.45 pm

Amendment No 11 made: In page 3, line 11, leave out from "means" to end of line 12 and insert "means Section 1 of the Ministerial Code as provided for by Section 28A of the Northern Ireland Act 1998."— [Mr Allister.]

Amendment No 12 made: In page 3, line 14, at end insert

"(6A) In Section 27(1) after 'Assembly' insert 'or minister'."— [Mr Allister.]

Clause 5, as amended, ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 6 (Records of meetings)

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): We now come to the third group of amendments for debate. With amendment No 13, it will be convenient to debate amendment Nos 14 to 20, 24 and 26 and opposition to clause 7 stand part. It should be noted that amendment No 26 is consequential to amendment No 15. I call Jim Allister to move amendment No 13 and to address the other amendments in the group.

Mr Allister: I beg to move amendment No 13: Leave out clause 6 and insert

"Records of meetings"

6. A civil servant, other than a special adviser, must make and the department must retain an accurate written record of every internal departmental meeting attended by a minister recording, in particular, those present, date and time, topics discussed, and every decision and action point."

The following amendments stood on the Marshalled List:

No 14: Leave out clause 8 and insert

"Presence of civil servants"

8.—(1) A civil servant, other than a special adviser, must be present and take an accurate written record of every meeting held by a minister or special adviser with non-departmental personnel about official business; except for liaison with the minister's political party.

(2) The department must retain the record made pursuant to subsection (1).— [Mr Allister.]

No 15: New Clause

After clause 8 insert

"Record of being lobbied"

8A.—(1) In the event of a minister or special adviser, other than as provided for in section 8, being lobbied, then, the minister or (as the case may be) special adviser must provide at the earliest opportunity a written record to their department of all such lobbying and the department must retain such records.

(2) In this section "being lobbied" means to receive personally a communication, either oral or written, on behalf of the person making the communication or another person or persons, relating to:

(a) the development, adoption or modification of any proposal of the department to make or amend primary or subordinate legislation;

(b) the development, adoption or modification of any other policy of the department;

(c) the making, giving or issuing by the department of, or the taking of any other steps by the department in relation to, —

(i) any contract or other agreement,

(ii) any grant or other financial assistance, or

(iii) any licence or other authorisation; or

(d) the exercise of any other function of the department.

(3) For the purposes of subsection (2), it does not matter whether the communication occurs in or outwith the United Kingdom.

(4) Nothing in this section shall apply to a communication —

(a) made in proceedings of the Northern Ireland Assembly or the Executive Committee, or

(b) arising in the course of liaison with the minister's political party."— [Mr Allister.]

No 16: Leave out clause 9 and insert

9.—(1) A minister, special adviser or civil servant when communicating on official business by electronic means must not use personal accounts or anything other than devices issued by the department, systems used by the department and departmental email addresses.

(2) If out of necessity it is not possible to comply with the requirements of subsection (1) the minister or (as the case may be) special adviser or civil servant must within 48 hours, or as soon thereafter as reasonably practicable,

(a) copy to the departmental system any written material generated during the use of non-departmental devices or systems; and

(b) make an accurate record on the departmental system of any verbal communications relating to departmental matters.

(3) It shall be an offence for any minister, special adviser or civil servant to fail to comply with the requirements of subsection (2).

(4) In proceedings in respect of a charge against a person (“A”) of the offence under subsection (3), it is a defence for A to show that the course of behaviour was reasonable in the particular circumstances or was in the public interest.

(5) A person is taken to have shown the fact mentioned in subsection (4) if —

(a) evidence adduced is enough to raise an issue as to whether the course of behaviour is as described in subsection (4), and

(b) the prosecution does not prove beyond reasonable doubt that the course of behaviour is not as described in subsection (4).

(6) A person guilty of an offence under this section is liable on conviction

(a) on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 2 years;

(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months or a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum or both.”— [Mr Allister.]

No 17: In clause 10, page 4, line 10, leave out “21” and insert “28”.— [Mr Allister.]

No 18: In clause 10, page 4, line 12, leave out “close”.— [Mr Allister.]

No 19: In clause 10, page 4, line 13, leave out “21” and insert “28”.— [Mr Allister.]

No 20: Leave out clause 11 and insert

“Offence of unauthorised disclosure

11.—(1) Without prejudice to the operation of the Official Secrets Acts 1911-1989 and save in the discharge of a statutory obligation or in the lawful pursuit of official duties, it shall be an offence for any minister, civil servant or special adviser to communicate, directly or indirectly, official information to another for the financial or other improper benefit of any person or third party.

(2) In proceedings in respect of a charge against a person (“A”) of the offence under subsection (1), it is a defence for

A to show that the course of behaviour was reasonable in the particular circumstances or was in the public interest.

(3) A person is taken to have shown the fact mentioned in subsection (2) if —

(a) evidence adduced is enough to raise an issue as to whether the course of behaviour is as described in subsection (2), and

(b) the prosecution does not prove beyond reasonable doubt that the course of behaviour is not as described in subsection (2).

(4) A person guilty of an offence under this section is liable on conviction

(a) on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 2 years;

(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months or a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum or both.”— [Mr Allister.]

No 24: In clause 14, page 5, line 10, at end insert

“‘family member’ has the same meaning as set out in Schedule 1(3) to the Assembly Members (Independent Financial Review and Standards) Act (Northern Ireland) 2011.”— [Mr Allister.]

No 26: In clause 14, page 5, line 10, at end insert

Mr Allister: I want to take a moment to explain the architecture of the Bill at these sections and of the amendments. Clauses 6 to 8 hang together. There is a tripartite structure here, which is anticipated when you read through the amendments to come into place. Clause 6 is to deal with the regular departmental meetings where decisions are taken and the Minister is present. Clause 6, in consequence, requires that a proper note should be kept. Old clause 7, which will now be on foot of amendment No 14, if accepted, deals with scheduled meetings with third parties by the Minister, etc. Again, under amendment No 14, proper note should be taken. Old clause 8 is now restructured through amendment No 15 and recast in terms of lobbying. That is to deal with the situation where Ministers, in respect of their own Department, find themselves lobbied about an issue, probably on an unscheduled and unsolicited basis. If it were a scheduled meeting with an interested party, it would be covered by clause 7, now amendment No 14, but you are talking about a situation unscheduled and unsolicited where a Minister or special adviser are lobbied about a matter. That is what amendment No 15 will now cover.

These are about keeping proper records of all of that. There was an interesting short report from very influential sources at the beginning of this year. Our Public Services Ombudsman, our Audit Office Comptroller and Auditor General and the Information Commissioner’s Office (ICO) produced a short little pamphlet called ‘Records Matter’. In the foreword to that, they said this:

“The importance of good record keeping cannot be overstated. This is because records provide evidence of activity. They can help to tell us why a decision was made, who made it and when. They are necessary to create confidence in any decision making process, to promote accountability and transparency, and to enable others to verify what has been done. Good record keeping is also vital for corporate memory."

The report goes on to state —. In fact, that is the essence of it. For the sake of time, I will not read any more from it. It is clear. It is our primary scrutineers — the ombudsman, the Comptroller and Auditor General and the head of ICO regions — who are making it very clear that good record-keeping is critical. That may be obvious, but they are still making it very clear.

We know from RHI, however, how deficient record-keeping was, and why. Let me remind the House of some of the evidence. Andrew Crawford told the inquiry that, in seven years, he never saw minutes of a meeting involving a Minister. We all recall the whistle-blower, Ms Hepper. It emerged in evidence from the whistle-blower that no records had been kept. We also had the infamous evidence of Mr Sterling, who said that a conscious decision had been taken not to keep records for fear of FOI, because, he told us, the major Executive parties did not want matters to be recorded that were discoverable under FOI. On record-keeping, Mr Brimstone told the inquiry:

"That wasn't the way we worked".

We also know from the inquiry report that, whatever guidance there was, it was never followed. I take you to finding 299 in volume 3. It is one of the findings by Lord Justice Coghlin about meetings with Ofgem etc:

"Applicable departmental Private Office Guidance about the minuting of meetings was not followed. In the absence of having been withdrawn or amended, it should have been followed."

There you have it, fellow Members: a culture, as established from those who gave evidence, of patent defiance of the normal expectation that records would be kept. Hence, clause 6 imposes an obligation for the keeping of records. Some might ask why that is needed in legislation and say, "We will do it in codes". Is that like the private office guidance to which Lord Justice Coghlin referred, which required the keeping of notes but none was kept?

The fallibility of codes is beyond dispute. Their public credibility is so shot through that, frankly, it is untenable, if not unconscionable, to say that we can deal with all those things merely through codes without legislation. Codes have demonstrably failed. Why? Because they have no bite. Legislation gives bite. That is why we need to put it in legislation. Will it be a burden? Not to those who do things right. Will it be a burden to those who want to cut corners? Yes, and so it should be. If the protestation is, "We're in a new culture. All is now well. That was the past. This is the now", there is no burden in putting it in legislation. Resistance to putting it in legislation raises this obvious question: what is one afraid of? If notes are to be kept anyway, and if the codes say that they should be kept, where is the burden in putting that in legislation?

It is a public trust issue. Public trust was shot through by RHI. My goodness, I am sure that, many's a night, ordinary citizens sat in their living rooms watching TV reports and shook their head at how things were done. After hearing that notes were deliberately not taken because they might unleash an FOI and that guidance was just ignored, I do not think that too many of those people who sat shaking their head would be satisfied if we said, "Oh, it's OK, because we're going to put it in a code". They want better than that, and they are looking to the House for something better than that. They are looking to the House to put it in legislation. The public trust issue could not be more stark, given what Mr Sterling told the inquiry. How, in light of that, could codes ever suffice? If we now intend to do things right, what do we fear?

In light of some points made to me, amendment No 13 somewhat reduces the ambit of clause 6 by taking out the requirement for noting "ministerial indication of intent". It keeps it tighter. It is about noting:

"every decision and action point."

Of course, there are the natural prerequisites of noting:

"those present, date and time, topics discussed".

I say this to the House: who could object to that? If you object to it, why? What would anyone want to hide by not having a statutory duty? If we had never had RHI, I could understand why people would say to me, "Oh, you're being unnecessarily burdensome and cumbersome, and all that's too much", but we had RHI. I am not asking for anything more in legislation than what we are told is now in the codes. The practical outworking — the work product required — of putting it in legislation is no greater, so why not do it?

Amendment No 14 deals with third-party meetings with non-departmental staff. I am sure that it is a relatively regular occurrence for a Minister to be asked to meet lobby groups and various others. Such groups will meet the Minister at Stormont, in his office or wherever. What amendment No 14 requires is that:

"A civil servant, other than a special adviser, must be present and take an accurate written record", where official business is discussed. The only exception to that is the necessary political exception of where the Minister is meeting with his political party. It is not for the House to pry into the representations made to a Minister in his own political group, so there is an exemption for that.

10.00 pm

I move to amendment No 15. I recast that clause considerably to put the focus on lobbying. The definition of "lobbying" I have taken from the ingloriously named legislation in England, the Transparency of Lobbying, Non-Party Campaigning and Trade Union Administration Act 2014. There, "lobbying" is defined, and I have used the same definition. I am saying in amendment No 15:

"In the event of a minister or special adviser, other than as provided for in section 8," — that is to say, other than at an organised meeting with a third party —

"being lobbied, then, the minister or (as the case may be) special adviser must provide at the earliest opportunity a written record to their department of all such lobbying".

Deliberately, it does not specify the precise mechanics of that written record, but all such lobbying must be placed on record, and the Department must retain those records.

Just a word about what “lobbying” means. It does not mean Minister Murphy being lobbied about something in the Department for Communities. It restricts the lobbying to his own Department — to any Minister’s own Department. It is not a catch-all in respect of all government. In one way, it would be good to have that, but it gets a bit unwieldy. It restricts it to specifics, proposals:

“to make or amend primary or subordinate legislation;”

If someone comes along, and says, “I hope you will be able to make the following change in the law, I’d like that to happen” for whatever reason, or someone coming along, and saying, “A policy needs adopted, a policy needs modified”, or someone coming along and wanting to talk, as amendment No 15 lists, about a contract, grant or licence — if you are lobbied on those kernel things or on any other function of the Department, there should be a record retained.

We all know that in respect of RHI there was effective cover-up of lobbying. Meetings were held with Moy Park, for example, at home and abroad, of which no notes or records were kept. That is a matter of record.

Why should there not be a record? Of course there should. Now we are told, “Oh, the codes will take care of that”. So, in recent weeks, I tabled this question to every Minister:

“to ask the Minister ... what process or mechanism exists within his Department whereby a written record is kept of any lobbying of the Minister or special adviser in relation to departmental functions, policies or proposals.”

I have had no answer from the Executive Office, I have had no answer from the Department for Communities, and I have had a variety of answers from some other Departments. The Department of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs said:

“All correspondence received by my Department is logged and recorded appropriately in line with NICS policies and guidance.”

Members will have noted that that was not the question. The question was about lobbying. The answer is:

I am sure that it is, but that was not the question. Does one infer from that answer that there is no process, even yet, for the logging of lobbying?

The Departments of Education and Health gave me an identical answer:

“My Department holds records of all correspondence, lobbying or otherwise using the HP Records Management System.”

Health and Education claim that they have such records. The Minister for the Economy gave this answer:

“Information relating to all Ministerial correspondence and invitations are retained in the formal NICS electronic records management system known as

HPRM, in line with NICS Records Management policy and GDPR obligations.

Details of all of the Minister’s meetings, including those also attended by the Special :1, with external organisations and individuals are also collated and provided to the Department of Finance for publication quarterly. The Department also holds a record of meetings attended solely by the Special Adviser.”

I remind you that the question was this: “What process or mechanism exists whereby a written record is kept of any lobbying?”. I was not asking about invitations or ministerial correspondence, but that is what I was told.

This is what the Department of Finance said:

“The Department has systems and processes in place to maintain the record keeping requirements of the Ministerial and Special Adviser codes of conduct. All written communication received by the Ministerial Private Office is recorded in the Knowledge Network (KN) System.

Officials are present at all meetings concerning departmental or executive business and records of those meetings are recorded and stored on the NICS record management system, HPRM.

In accordance with the requirements of the Ministerial and Special Adviser Codes of Conduct, where the Minister or Special Adviser meets external organisations or individuals and finds themselves discussing official business without an official present they are required to advise the Private Office.”

There is a new dimension. When they answer the question, we have other Departments that tell us that things are logged on the HP records management system. However, we have the Department of Finance telling us that, if someone is lobbied, you are required to advise the private office. What I draw from that is that, in truth, there is no system; otherwise, you would not have all those disparate answers, which are telling us that they, each to their own, do different things, if they do anything.

That is why I recommend amendment No 15 to the House: make it abundantly clear that, if you are lobbied, a record of that might be kept. That might well be the Minister coming into the private office on Monday morning and saying, “At the golf club dinner on Saturday night, I was lobbied about our upcoming energy policy in order to make sure that there is more generosity for wind turbines”. As long as that is recorded in the private office and there is a record, I am not prescribing the specifics. It is really for the Department of Finance, which has all these systems with HP, KN and everything else, to give a directive as to where it should be recorded. However, at the minute, there does not seem to be a system that is consistently in place. Again, the importance of that is that the RHI inquiry threw up the evident deficiency in recording and the concealment of lobbying. That is not good for transparency or openness, nor is it a healthy situation in government. I recommend to the House that there should be a clear and consistent requirement across that. That is why we need the statutory duty. It seems that, in other places, the party most opposed to this idea — Sinn Féin — thinks that it is quite a good idea, because, tonight or tomorrow, as we heard, a Sinn Féin member is introducing a private Member’s Bill on lobbying in the Dáil. Well, if it is good enough for the Dáil, Sinn Féin might think that it is good enough for here.

Mr O'Dowd: Will the Member give way?

Mr Murphy: Will the Member give way?

Mr Allister: Yes, I will give way to whichever one.

Mr O'Dowd: Sorry, I will give way to the Minister.

Mr Murphy: I will let my party political colleague deal with the party political point. With regard to lobbying — as a matter of interest, I speak as a former Regional Development Minister, a post currently held by Mr O'Toole's colleague, the Minister for Infrastructure — does the Member envisage that, if Minister Mallon were walking to the shops in north Belfast and was stopped and asked to get a street light fixed, she is obliged to record that? That is the exercise of "any other function" of her Department. If she were asked to get a pothole fixed, is she obliged to do that and to record it? That is lobbying, as far as I understand it and as the Member explained it to us. The lobbying that he envisages and identifies as a flaw was exposed by RHI. However, can he see where this exercise on legislation takes us and the ridiculous nature of "any function" of a Minister's Department? If, for example, a Minister were asked to get a street light or pothole fixed, that Minister would now be obliged in law to report it to her Department.

Mr Allister: The Minister is giving examples in extremis, but, if it helps, I will not die over proposed clause 8A(2) (d). If, at Further Consideration Stage, you want to remove the reference to the "exercise of any other function", I am amenable to that. The key things are the making of policy, the making of legislation, the granting of benefits, contracts, licences and all of that. If it helps Sinn Féin to support the amendment, I am happy to undertake that at Further Consideration Stage, I will move an amendment to remove the reference to:

"any other function of the department."

I do not want to diminish this to a point at which a Minister who is asked about a street light has to record that. You would like to think that a Minister would do something about it, but it is not necessary to record it. I am content to remove that difficulty for Sinn Féin by agreeing to an amendment to take out the line that appears at proposed clause 8A(2)(d). If that solves the issue and gets Sinn Féin on board, that would be a plus. I am happy to do that. However, the fundamentals here need to be addressed.

Frankly, colleagues, it is an embarrassment that so much happened with RHI. If those who had cause to be embarrassed the most have the maturity to face up to that, why are others dragging their feet? It is not just about the politics of the House; it is about the public looking to see whether we have made any credible changes. Have we put anything in place that will ensure that things like this will not happen again? We owe it to the public to do that. We heard some ridiculous lines today that this is all about me trying to undermine the structures of government. Think about it: "Transparency and openness will undermine the structures of government". I do not like these structures of government — that is no secret — but I live in this place and want things to be as good as they can be, within the limitations of those structures, for ordinary people. I have a vested interest in making things better, wholly without prejudice to my view of the institutions. This is not about a Machiavellian way to undermine the institutions; indeed, the tempting and easy thing for me, given my political standpoint, would be to sit back and watch the Executive wallow in the disasters of their own making. That would be tempting and easy, but it is not the course that I choose to take. There is no political agenda. I said at the start of the debate that this is not about green or orange. It is not about being for or against the Executive or the Belfast Agreement. It is about trying to get better and more credible working functions in government. That is not too much to ask.

I move on to clauses 9 and 11. The House will be aware of the embarrassments caused by how some spads conducted themselves. The House will remember the evidence in the RHI inquiry that, by dint of using private email accounts etc, information was hidden; indeed, only in the latter stages of the RHI inquiry did some of it come to light. The motivation was pretty obvious: if things were not on the official system, they were never going to be discovered in a departmental search and were never going to be subject to FOI. Thus, the thrust of clause 9, although I have recast its wording, is to ensure that a process that facilitated hiding information is pulled up short. I recast it in a way that means that the mischief that it now addresses is the hiding of information by failure to put it on to the official system. From the evidence given, I was readily persuaded that there are circumstances where, with the best will in the world, Ministers, spads and civil servants might have no option but to use their private systems by virtue of where they are etc. That is not a problem, provided that they put it on to the official system. That is what amendment No 16 now focuses on. It simply says:

"If out of necessity it is not possible to comply with the requirements of subsection (1)".

In other words, subsection (1) is the expectation that you use official systems. The amendment states:

"If out of necessity it is not possible ... the minister ... special adviser or civil servant must within 48 hours, or as soon thereafter as reasonably practicable" —

we are not being overprescriptive —

"(a) copy to the departmental system any written material generated during the use of non-departmental devices or systems; and

(b) make an accurate record on the departmental system of any verbal communications relating to departmental matters."

Again, that is to make sure that that which hitherto was being hidden cannot continue to be hidden. The Minister will tell us, "Oh, it's all now in the codes. Codes require you to do all this". I will say it again: the codes are a broken reed. They neither deliver on past performance nor buy the street cred that is required. Of course, where this offence is concerned, lest some hapless civil servant find himself inappropriately on the wrong side of the law, there is the reasonable excuse defence and the public interest defence; indeed, I go further in the amendment. Of course, you can never be an accused, let us remember, unless there is a prosecution brought that passes the Public Prosecution Service tests of “reasonable prospect of conviction” and being “in the public interest” — being “in the public interest” might be very germane to a prosecution such as this — but, if it gets past that and there is a prosecution, I have cast this in such a way that, once the accused raises the reasonable excuse or public interest defences, with some evidence, it is for the prosecution to disprove that beyond all reasonable doubt. It is hedged about with many protections, so that people should not unwittingly fall victim to it.

The penalties are as specified. There was an issue from the Department of Justice on whether the penalties were proportionate. After I reduced the penalty from five years to two in clause 11 — I will come to that shortly — I received a letter from the permanent secretary of the Department dated 16 October saying that the Department of Justice would consider the revised criminal sanctions in amended clauses 9 and 11 to be consistent and proportionate. That was the point that the Human Rights Commission raised. The Department of Justice raised it, and it appears now to be properly satisfied about that matter. That is clause 9.

I will return to amendment Nos 17 to 19 in a moment. However, because we are talking about the criminal offences, I will go to clause 11, which is about creating a criminal offence. To that I have proposed amendment No 20, which begins:

which is to say that there may be issues about national security. They fall under that; that is not what this is dealing with. The amendment continues:

“and save in the discharge of a statutory obligation”, which might be fulfilling an FOI request,

“or in the lawful pursuit of official duties”,

which might be a spad briefing the press on the instructions of his Minister, a lawful duty. Therefore, save in those situations:

“it shall be an offence for any minister, civil servant or special adviser to communicate, directly or indirectly, official information to another for the financial or other improper benefit of any person or third party.”

The word “improper” is used on the advice of the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission. Therefore, if, for the purpose of “financial or other improper benefit”, someone discloses official information, it becomes a criminal offence. However, again, there are the two critical defences of the public interest, which could be for a whistle-blower, or reasonable behaviour. Again, if those are raised, the prosecution has to disprove them.

Why is that offence necessary? We all know the sort of things that happened in RHI. Let me remind you of some of them. One spad, Mr Crawford, admitted that, in 2013 and 2015, he gave documents to family members. He admitted that he knew that it was confidential information. He gave information to his brother-in-law. All of that was happening at the time when the tariffs were going to change. He admitted that he gave confidential information to Gareth Robinson, son of the then First Minister, for a third party whom he named as a Mr Green. He gave a privileged legal document to Gareth Robinson. A civil servant, Mr Wightman, acknowledged that he gave documents to Moy Park about the tariff reduction. Of course, Mr Simon Hamilton and Mr John Robinson leaked emails from their own Department back to their permanent secretary and to the ‘News Letter’ to lay a false trail and create a diversion. Were those not things done for the improper benefit of third parties? I suggest that they were, yet I have in my possession a letter from the Chief Constable saying that no investigations are arising out of RHI of any of those people. Does that not tell the House that there is a gaping hole in our criminal law that we need to plug? We need to plug it with an offence of unauthorised disclosure, and that is why amendment No 20 sets out in the terms that it does that proposition. I recommend that amendment to the House. It is essential and necessary.

We will be told that codes can cover that. Let me remind the House that the old codes required integrity, honesty and confidentiality. Did they work? Patently not. With that patent failure, why would we put our trust in codes? The real importance of this is this: if codes were not a deterrent for spads who had in their terms and conditions references to integrity, honesty and confidentiality, why would they be a deterrent in the future? That is where a criminal sanction comes into its own. A criminal sanction speaks deterrence and causes those minded to do things to stop and think, because of the knowledge that, if they do them, they are breaking the law and could go to prison. That is a far greater deterrent and compulsion than thinking, “If I break this code, so what?”. This is the real essence. Codes were not good enough in the past, and I do not believe that they will be good enough in the future. If they are good enough for the House, clauses 9 and 11 will not be supported; if we have learnt the lessons, the House will support the clauses.

I will go back to clause 10, which deals with the establishment of a register of interests for Ministers and spads. Again, we are told that the new code is adequate: it is not.

There is no register of interests in the new code. There is only a declaration of interests, which is unpublished. That is not good enough. If a register of interests is good enough for MLAs, it is good enough for Ministers and spads. That is why clause 10 puts an obligation on the Department of Finance to be the recipient of declarations and to publish them in a routine fashion.

Amendment Nos 17 and 19 are merely to align the time frames with what is in the code, changing them in the Bill from 21 days to 28 days, so that there is continuity. I think that that is sensible. Amendment No 18, if it recommends itself to the House, is to better define the relationship of family members, and it draws on a definition already in Assembly legislation.

That is my run-through the amendments in this group. Clauses 6, 7 and 8, and the associated amendments, deal with record-keeping, and clauses 9 and 11 deal with the serious issue of providing real deterrents for would-be wrongdoers. Clause 10 deals with the register of interests.

Dr Aiken: Before I start, I pass on to my friend from South Belfast my regards to his wife and wish her very many happy birthdays. Apologies for keeping you here.

Mr O'Toole: I was not complaining. It is my job. Thank you.

Dr Aiken: It is above and beyond.

Ladies and gentlemen, the Bill's sponsor asked that the Committee consider clauses 6 to 8 together as they are a suite of provisions dealing with meetings involving Ministers and/or special advisers. Clause 6 deals with internal meetings, clause 7 with external and unscheduled meetings, and clause 8 with planned meetings with non-departmental personnel.

The Committee sought the views of the Department of Finance on the provisions of clause 6 as drafted. The Department highlighted that, in light of the code of ethics, which places a duty on civil servants to keep accurate records, it considers that the clause "appears to be unnecessarily specific." The Committee sought clarification on what the Department meant by that and on how the code of ethics has been revised to address the issue of maintaining accurate records. The Department responded, less than helpfully, that it does not consider it appropriate to legislate in that area.

The Bill sponsor informed the Committee that amendment No 13 reduces the burden of what must be recorded and that the amendment is in response to points made by the Department of Finance. Perhaps in his remarks the Minister can clarify whether the amendment also addresses the Department's concern that clause 6, as originally drafted, appeared to be "unnecessarily specific".

The Committee noted the intention of the Bill sponsor to oppose the question that clause 11 stand part of the Bill.

Mr Allister: Clause 7.

Dr Aiken: The Committee noted the intention of the Bill sponsor to oppose the question that clause 7 stand part of the Bill.

Mr Allister: You said clause 11.

Dr Aiken: Did I? My apologies.

No objections were voiced in the Committee to that proposal. However, as the Committee had not had the opportunity to consider the proposal in detail, or the Bill sponsor's related proposal to introduce clause 8A, members were content to support clause 7 as drafted.

The Bill sponsor informed the Committee that the intention of amendment No 14 is to make clause 8 more compatible with terms used elsewhere in the Bill. The Committee was content with the explanation and supported the amendment.

Amendment No 15, which proposes the introduction of clause 8A, is proposed by the Bill sponsor in conjunction with his opposition to clause 7 stand part. The Committee considered clause 8A only during its deliberations and received no formal evidence in relation to the clause. As was the case with clause 11A, given the trying time constraints towards the end of the Committee Stage, the Committee was unable to take evidence on clause 8A. For that reason, the Committee was only able to note the amendment.

Mr Deputy Speaker, I would like to address amendment Nos 16 and 20 together. These amendments relate to clauses 9 and 11, both of which propose the introduction of criminal offences and both of which were opposed by the Committee. The Committee devoted considerable time to taking evidence in relation to these two clauses and, indeed, a considerable part of the Committee report is devoted to the evidence received in relation to clauses 9 and 11. I cannot, however, enlighten the House on the reasons why the Committee opposed these clauses, as the opposition only became apparent at the last minute during the formal clause-by-clause decision-making stage.

The Committee had concerns in relation to the provisions in clause 9. The Bill's sponsor informed the Committee that, in bringing clause 9, the intention was to have official records to discourage people from hiding information in the event that actions may be investigated.

The Committee was concerned about the proposed requirement to always use departmental systems and email addresses and the potential for this requirement to impede good government. It was put to the Bill's sponsor that officials, acting in the interests of the Minister and the Department outside of these parameters, would have to do so in the knowledge that they would have to construct a reasonable-excuse defence. The Bill's sponsor subsequently indicated his willingness to consider an amendment to clause 9 in relation to the construction of a reasonable excuse where unavailability of official systems may impede good government. This provision is included in amendment No 16.

The Department of Finance expressed concerns that, in its view, no electronic communication is likely to take place on wholly departmentally controlled or departmentally owned systems. The Department of Finance view was that clause 9 could have the effect of potentially criminalising considerably more electronic communications by Ministers and civil servants than was intended by the legislation.

The Committee was cognisant of the fact that it may not always be possible for a Minister, civil servant or special adviser to access official systems and there could be occasions when the use of non-official systems may be required. There were concerns that, as originally drafted, clause 9 made it an offence for a Minister, civil servant or special adviser, when they were on official business, to use personal accounts or anything other than departmental systems. At an early stage, the Bill's sponsor informed the Committee of his intention to bring an amendment to change the proposed offence from being the use of non-official systems and process to the failure to record the use of non-official systems and processes back into the official system within a reasonable period of time.

The Committee also spent considerable time, during its evidence sessions on both clause 9 and clause 11, in consideration of the need for and proportionality of the criminal offences proposed in these clauses.

In relation to clause 9, the Committee heard evidence from the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission which recommended giving consideration to:

"a specific disciplinary offence which falls short of criminal liability within Ministerial, Civil Service and Special Adviser codes of practice."

The Committee also considered evidence from the Department of Justice regarding the proportionality of sentence. The Department of Justice suggested that:

“At most, if the Committee is satisfied that an offence and penalty should remain a part of any Bill going forward, the Department would consider a maximum penalty commensurate with a summary only conviction to be proportionate.”

The Committee focused on two specific areas during its deliberations on clause 9. First, members discussed the changes proposed through the Bill's sponsor's proposed amendment No 16 and, secondly, the matter of criminal offences. Members generally welcomed the proposed amendment in that it would change the focus of the clause from the use of non-official systems per se to the failure to record the use of non-official systems within a reasonable time period.

There was discussion within the Committee on the issue of the need for criminal offences. Concern was expressed both about the principle of including a criminal offence in the clause and in relation to the two-year maximum tariff. Members discussed the value of having a hybrid offence, as provided for under the clause. Consideration was also given to the need to accept the offer from the Department of Justice to consider any revisions to the clause in relation to the proportionality of the proposed sentences. At no time were any proposals or suggestions brought forward or considered to amend clause 9 to remove or amend the proposed sanctions.

When it came to the Committee's formal clause-by-clause decision, the Committee supported amendment No 16, which would introduce a reasonable excuse defence and make the offence the failure to record the use of non-official systems rather than the actual use itself. The Committee was not, however, content to support the clause as amended. The Committee divided and agreed, by a majority of one, not to support the clause.

Similarly, during its deliberations on clause 11 and amendment No 20, the Committee considered the issue of the need for criminal offences and the extent of the sanctions proposed in both the clause as drafted and the clause as amended. There was discussion within the Committee, and concern was expressed about the principle of including a criminal offence in the clause. There was discussion in relation to the two-year maximum tariff proposed by the Bill sponsor's amendment and on whether it would be preferable to return to the proposed five-year maximum tariff proposed in the clause as drafted. However, there were no proposals or suggestions brought forward or considered to amend clause 9 to remove or further reduce the proposed sanctions. A number of members indicated support for the aspect of the proposed amendment designed to address the issue of legitimate press briefings by special advisers and the provision of information under Freedom of Information Act requirements. When it came to the formal clause-by-clause decision, the Committee divided and agreed, by a majority of one, not to support the amendment and not to support the clause as drafted.

In relation to Clause 10, the Committee was content with the Bill sponsor's explanation that amendment Nos 17 and 19 are proposed to secure alignment with the code of conduct provision in respect of the time period within which all Ministers and special advisers must inform the permanent secretary of the Department of Finance of their registrable interests and of any changes to those registrable interests. The Committee was also content with amendment No 18, which is a refinement of the definition of “family members” in respect of the registration of interests. Finally, no issues were raised during Committee deliberations in relation to Clause 14 or amendment Nos 24 and 26. The Committee is content with these amendments.

Mr Frew: As this will probably be the last time that I speak, I take this opportunity to lay on record my thanks to the Committee Chairperson for his thorough work in relaying to the House the views and work of the Committee. It was very adequately done, and I thank him for that. It would be remiss of me if I did not thank the Committee Clerk and all his backroom staff for the work that they have done in supporting Committee members in their deliberations on the Bill.

I also take the opportunity — if I have not done it already, but I think that I have — to thank the Bill sponsor for his work, first of all, in producing a Bill. I encourage every single Member of the House to consider a private Member's Bill. It is the way to go. All sorts of weird and wonderful laws can be created with private Member's Bills. I encourage all Members to consider introducing one, as I have in the past. We are here as legislators, but it gives you a real buzz when you can change law and bring in law that will make a positive difference to people's lives. I encourage all Members who have not already done so to attempt it.

The Bill sponsor and I are from different parties. We are usually at loggerheads on all sorts of issues, policies and everything else. Of course, it is not only that; there is also the dynamic that we are constituency rivals. At election time, there is no quarter given — absolutely not — and I would not expect there to be. In a constituency setting, we always work on cases together. There are cases where people come to all five MLAs and we all work together for the common interest and good of our people. However, we have been placed on the Finance Committee together. I thoroughly enjoy my time on the Finance Committee, and I —.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I ask the Member to address the amendments before us.

Mr Frew: Yes, I will. My point, Mr Deputy Speaker, is that, having engaged with the Bill's sponsor in Committee, the great potential that could be churned from the Bill was clear to see.

10.45 pm

Hansard will not be able to record this, but you have only to look at this section in my copy of the Bill to see the black and red type, with the red type showing the amendments that the Bill's sponsor made to his Bill after listening to Committee members. That can only be a good thing and can only be welcomed. I appreciate the Member listening to Committee members when he could have turned his face away, just as I could have turned my face away from some of the things that he wanted to do and his motives.

I genuinely believe that the Bill's sponsor wants to make good legislation. It is a matter of personal pride, but it is also to make this place better. Why would you not support, look at, gauge, listen to, communicate and engage with the Member on that? The party opposite has missed a massive opportunity by not engaging with the Bill's sponsor or interacting with the Committee on changes that it could have brought to the Bill with amendments and new clauses on things that it might have seen as being needed or fit for purpose.

Mr O'Dowd: Will the Member give way?

Mr Frew: I will.

Mr O'Dowd: I am at a loss as to know what the Member's contribution has to do with the amendments; he is talking about amendments that could have happened. I alert the Member to this: I will divide the House on six of the clauses tonight. That will be at least one hour of voting that you have to look forward to after your contribution.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I encourage the Member to reference the amendments that we are here to debate.

Mr Frew: Yes, Mr Deputy Speaker. Threats have not worked in the past, and they will not work now. [Interruption.] We are here to do a job; let us do it mightily. [Interruption.]

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Order.

Mr Frew: I will move on to the clauses and amendments. The Bill's sponsor is right: clause 6 — it was clause 7 — clause 8 and clause 8A is a triumvirate of clauses. They very much tidy up the clauses and the Bill and have been tabled because of our concerns, requests and everything else. In amendment No 13, the Member proposes to change the wording of clause 6 from:

“every meeting attended by a minister in departmental service”

That is to be applauded. What we do not want — it was a scenario that the Minister painted — is to have an unworkable situation in which Ministers, spads and civil servants feel as if they are hamstrung and tightened and in which they are frightened or scared to move. They are real people in real-life situations. They may sometimes be criticised for being in the Stormont or Executive bubble, but they are real people with real lives and they need to get out and about, and anything that would make them hamstrung should not be allowed.

Amendment No 14 deals with the presence of civil servants and refers to “non-departmental personnel”. I thank the Member for putting in place an exception for:

I requested that of him and he listened. That is a credit to him and an improvement to the Bill.

That brings me to new clause 8A, which is proposed in the Bill sponsor's massive amendment No 15. That creates a new clause that deals with keeping records of being lobbied. Of course, that will hopefully replace the former clause 7, which dealt with records of contacts. We will vote on that. I heard what the Bill's sponsor said about the Minister's query and concern about requests over every pothole or street light being recorded, but — thank you, Mr Chairperson — as an MLA, if I were walking through Tesco and a constituent asked me about a pothole, if I did not write it down, it would not be done, because my mind would be on Jaffa Cakes, Frosties and everything else. My mind would not be on the pothole, so I would have to write it down. What is the problem with having logged it already in real time, either on my phone or on a notebook that I carry with me for constituency issues? What would be wrong with pulling a leaf out of that notebook and handing it to the private office, even if it is about a mundane thing like a pothole or a street light? Do you know something? In real life, that can annoy people to the highest degree. I would rather see that than see nothing recorded on lobbying, because that is the scale that we have tipped. That is through the history of what we have learnt from the inquiry, and it is what we are trying to guard against.

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr Frew: Yes, I will give way.

Mr Wells: Mr Allister was very generous in his contribution on amendment No 15, because he offered the Members from Sinn Féin a compromise and said that he was minded to drop new clause 8A(2)(d), which states:

“the exercise of any other function of the department.”

Mr Allister, being his very reasonable self, was throwing out an olive branch to the Members on the opposite Benches. However, what I did not hear from them was their response to that offer. It would help the House enormously if they could inform us whether that is sufficient to get them on board with amendment No 15, which is new clause 8A, and that suggestion that not every pothole — I think that that is a balanced argument. We all walk through Tesco — other supermarkets are available — and we are lobbied constantly on minor issues. That happens all the time. Like Mr Frew, if it was not for me having the oldest mobile phone in Northern Ireland with a little Dictaphone in it — it will be 21 years old this week — and, say, Mrs Smith or Mrs Jones wanted their pothole fixed, it would be in one ear and out the other. Therefore, that is a balanced argument.

Mr Murphy and Mr O'Dowd, two of the big beasts in the Sinn Féin jungle, are here this evening. What is their view on what seems an eminently reasonable suggestion from Mr Allister? It is no good doing what their three Committee members did. They sat for day after day and said, “Not an inch. No surrender. We are not having any of the Bill.” In fact, Mr McHugh voted and led his team to vote against the short title of the Bill, something that I have never seen in 26 years in this Building. You just do not do that. Are they going to accept the olive branch offered by Mr Allister?

Mr Frew: I thank the Member for his intervention. I am happy to give way to an intervention from any Member because that is good dialogue and open debate, and I encourage that.

On amendment No 15, which would introduce new clause 8A, I will give the Bill's sponsor credit because, again, he listened and added the liaison with the Minister's political party. There has to be space for debate and policy development in most of these things. That should give comfort to the party on the opposite Benches about party policy development and party political activity.

All the proposed amendments to the clauses that we have gone through — those are clauses 6, 8 and new clause 8A — offer protection from being wrongly accused of something, being somewhere, saying something or committing to something that you did not do. We all need to be protected from that from time to time. There will be times when people will be cunning and will try to entrap you just because of the job and the position that you have. All sorts of dilemmas could creep up with that, so there has to be a certain degree of protection. Recording things offers you a level of protection.

I have held office in various community things and organisations throughout my life, and if, for example, I was in a treasurer's post and thought that I was £1 out in the accounts at the end of the year, I would be horrified. I would want to keep a record of everything — I mean every expenditure and income — to ensure that I was correct. I would have to do that all year round in order to make sure that I had the confidence to know that I could truthfully tell or read a report out to a Committee or organisation and that I would be thorough, truthful and accurate. Surely the record-keeping of a Minister, a Department, a spad or an official is incredibly important. I have no problems and no issue supporting the amendments.

I then come to the offences that are created. Again, the Bill sponsor listened, because he has completely changed clause 9, where it would have been an offence even if you had made a mistake and emailed something to a private account. I know that Ministers should have their own business phones, apparatus or laptops, but in my private phone here, I have two accounts: my MLA account and my personal account. There have been many times when I have formulated an email, have hit "send" and have then realised that I have sent it from the wrong email address. It is easy to do, and it should not be a crime. The easiest thing to do is to then forward that on to your official email account so that your staff can pick it up. What would be wrong if a spad, Minister or permanent secretary had to send, or sent by mistake, an email from their personal account and then, having realised they had made that mistake — a genuine mistake — forwarded that on to their official email account? That is it logged, because you have got it through the system. It is as simple as that. You have to ask the question: why would you not then log, register or forward that email? Why would it not be reasonable to expect that official, Minister or spad to do that? That is where doubt creeps in and where transparency needs to take over. Again, it is as much about protection for that official, that Minister or that spad as anything else, and it is so that things can be retrievable and so that information can be retrieved and the public can get access to it. It is as simple and as plain as that.

The Member has also put a time limit on that, which is:

"48 hours, or as soon thereafter as reasonably practicable".

You can see that, in the formation of amendment No 16, Mr Allister has given the person every opportunity to correct the wrong. I think it was Mr Jim Wells who said earlier that "reasonable" and "Jim Allister" did not always go line to line in the same sentence, but let us give credit where credit is due. It is reasonable what the Bill sponsor has produced here, and, again, I support it, because he has also added in a defence of public interest. Again, I support that.

Clause 10 is "Register of interests", and no one should be against a register of interests. It is clear that we are in a privileged position as MLAs. We have a tough job and we are servants to the people, but we also have privileges and access to things and to powerful people such as Ministers, permanent secretaries and all of that, so it is right that we have a public register of interests. Why should that not also apply to a Minister or a spad? To me, that is just common sense and adds to the transparency and accountability of government.

I will move on to the other offence that is created. It is completely and utterly improper for a:

"minister, civil servant or special adviser to communicate, directly or indirectly, official information to another for the financial or other improper benefit of any person or third party."

There is absolutely no leeway there. It is wrong to do that for improper benefit of any person or third party, and there needs to be a deterrent. It could be that you have completely skewed a contract to favour one company over the other. That is not fair and it should not happen, so I welcome this amendment to clause 11. Again, the Bill sponsor has listened, because he has completely changed this. He has also listened to other Members who were concerned and worried about the level of tariff, and he has reduced that from five years to two years, which I think is proportionate. Again, I will say that I do not want to see anybody convicted of any of these offences.

There is no need for that to happen, and I hope that nobody falls foul of them. Why should they? This should be a standard that is set. Everybody should know the parameters and abide by the standards that the Assembly sets. They are not unreasonable standards or draconian standards but, in many ways, common sense.

I support the offences that are created in the Bill. They will add to the deterrent and, as the Bill sponsor rightly said, make people think twice about what they do in this place. There will be times when there is pressure on. There will be times when the press are hounding people for a policy development piece or the direction that a Minister has taken or that a Department is going in. That will lead to pressure from the press and MLAs and rightly so, because we must ensure that this system of democracy is as robust and transparent as possible. Do you know what? Democracy is fragile. Surely, we in the House know that, having been out of this place for three years, and for what? Let us make it better. Let us improve on what we already know and bring confidence back to the House and to all of our people. This is not about orange and green but about good government. Let us embrace it, take it on and improve it. This is the first step on a long road of reform that the Assembly must take and that the Executive must heed for the betterment of our people and our children and for their prosperity.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I call Philip McGuigan.

Mr McGuigan: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. You called me while I was googling "opposite of the big beast" so that I would not be offended if I were interrupted by Jim Wells. Anyway, I stand, as a meek kitten, to make my contribution. Tá lá fada agus díospóireacht fhada againn inniu. Tá mé tuirseach anois, agus, mar sin de, beidh m'óráid gairid. It has been a long day and a long debate. There have been some long contributions, and, at this stage I am tired and wary of the promise from my party colleague, so I will try to keep my contribution short.

I am not exaggerating when I say that I have heard little in the debate that has been anything other than predictable. A lot of the subject matter discussed and debated, as the Minister pointed out, is based on a different period — one that led to RHI — and not on the situation as it is now. As colleagues of mine have said, the Bill is not about good governance or improving the functioning of government, as its title benignly suggests. Mr Wells pointed out that we voted against the short title in Committee and rightly so, because, although it is an innocent-sounding title, behind it lies an intent to undermine the functioning of government in what is an already extremely difficult situation, given the challenges of mandatory coalition. The Bill is about undermining the Executive and the Assembly and making it more difficult to deliver for people. Am I surprised that that is the approach from Mr Allister? No. Despite the claims that the Bill is about better government, I am not naive enough to believe that the sponsor of the Bill, Mr Allister, has, to keep the biblical quotations from earlier going, had a road to Damascus epiphany. I do not think that he wants to see our Executive working better, and I do not believe that he is motivated by a new love of power-sharing.

Mr Allister's contribution in this institution is based on his relentless negativity about it. He is unapologetic in his opposition to the Executive, in his opposition to power-sharing and in his efforts to undermine the Good Friday Agreement and the peace process that built that historic agreement. He is unremitting in his crusade to turn back the tide of history and reassert the glory days of discrimination, sectarian domination and unionist one-party rule in this floundering political entity, itself based on a gerrymandered partition of the island.

Of course, all of this is wishful thinking. It is a fantasy that only Mr Allister and a few increasingly delusional followers and fellow travellers indulge themselves in. Unfortunately, having listened to some of the contributions today, it is clear that there are a few of those fellow travellers in this House, Members who have waxed long and lyrical about the faults of the Executive. Indeed, some had the joint position of First Minister.

Some of those Members who spoke with feigned indignation are blind to the reality that the RHI inquiry was necessitated by the actions of their own Ministers and special advisers, and the only serious wrongdoing identified by that inquiry was on the part of their party Members, whether Ministers or advisers.

I am not sure that this Bill will save New York from another late-night rendition of 'Breakfast at Tiffany's', although, if it did, it might give some purpose to this otherwise unnecessary and vexatious piece of legislation. The very sensible and necessary recommendations of the RHI inquiry are being implemented in full and in a way that Judge Coghlin suggested. The proposer of the Bill is rubbishing the reform recommendations and the new code of conduct before they have been tested and, as I said earlier, on the basis that the old code was ignored by one party in the Chamber.

The third group —

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr McGuigan: Go ahead.

Mr Wells: The Member knows fully that it was not just one party. His party's super-spud, Mr Aidan McAteer, in Connolly House, had total control over the properly appointed spuds from his party. It is clear that Justice Coghlin produced evidence that the Member's party was not lily-white in this matter. How does he explain and justify what Mr McAteer was up to?

Mr McGuigan: I watched with close interest the proceedings of the RHI inquiry and have read the report, and, like many members of the public, I think that it is clear where the responsibility and blame lies for RHI, like Red Sky and all the other scandals that have been mentioned here today.

In the third group of amendments, clauses 9 and 11 would create two new criminal offences. Clause 9 would make it a criminal offence for a Minister or special adviser to conduct government business on non-governmental systems, such as personal email or phone. Such an offence in the Bill would warrant a criminal conviction of up to two years in jail. Clause 11 would make it —

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Mr McGuigan: Go ahead.

Mr Allister: Perhaps the Member should read the amendments because he would then know that that is not the proposition.

Mr McGuigan: Clause 11 would make it an offence for a Minister or special adviser to pass confidential government information to non-governmental sources. Such an offence would warrant a criminal conviction.

There are two major issues with the Bill. The first is the severe risk, which has already been pointed out, that would result from entirely reasonable actions, which this legislation would render unlawful and open to criminal conviction: for example, using a borrowed phone, laptop or printer to conduct urgent business outside office hours. Those involved in government will know that, often, business is not confined to convenient office hours. I say that as we sit here at 11.00 pm.

Of course, genuine mistakes are easily made with ever-developing and changing technology. Ministers and advisers would be under constant threat of criminal charges for trying to do their jobs effectively in pressurised situations when they should be focused on the job in hand and not worrying about some minor, but, in the context of this Bill, criminal, error.

These are not abstract or outlandish possibilities. The Human Rights Commission raised serious concerns about them when it gave evidence at Committee Stage, and others stressed in their evidence the importance of proportionality. The proposed clause or amendment does not address the problems of proportionality, and it was clear, in the commission's view, that creating a specific set of criminal offences was neither necessary nor proportionate.

The offences and accompanying punishment are entirely unnecessary, disproportionate and betray the real intent of the Bill: to criminalise those who operate our power-sharing arrangements, whether Ministers, advisers or civil servants. Those clauses would make the functioning of government, the difficult job of the power-sharing Executive, even more challenging. That is the very point and purpose of the Bill: to undermine power-sharing and disrupt the functioning of government. From start to end, even in its title, the legislation is wrong and should be opposed. Sinn Féin will oppose the Bill whether its clauses are amended or unamended.

Mr O'Toole: We are slowly getting there. First, it is worth saying in response to the previous Member — and I have made the point a couple of times now — that the suggestion that everything in the Bill is somehow about the Bill's sponsor is clearly an absurd proposition. In a strange way, there is a strange irony in the suggestion that by supporting the majority, part or even all of the Bill — my party will obviously not support all of it, as, although there is much that we like, there are specific provisions that we do not like — it, somehow, means that you are being co-opted into agreeing with the Bill's sponsor on every aspect of his view of the world and these institutions. That, I am afraid, is absolutely ludicrous.

In a sense, one of the principles that underlies this place is the idea of power-sharing and that, by working together, people of different divergent — sometimes, even sharply divergent — profoundly contradictory, in-tension perspectives can produce good outcomes for citizens. Believe it or not, it is even worth taking that viewpoint when it comes to a proposal that is made by the Member for North Antrim. I say that with absolutely no illusions about his views on the functioning of these institutions. He has reiterated them tonight. Throughout the process, my party has looked at the Bill, its specific measures, clauses and amendments, with, as WB Yeats would say, “a cold eye”. We will continue to do that.

I will move on specifically to the third and, thankfully, final group of amendments for discussion, which contain measures that my party welcomes and supports but also the ones that are most controversial in the Bill and those with which my party has most difficulty. Again, that gives a lie to the idea that the purpose of scrutinising the Bill is about wholesale acceptance of absolutely every clause in it. Whether one agrees with the fundamental principle of legislating in this area, the purpose, principle and practice of legislating is to debate measures and clauses, say where one has difficulty, try to get to a position that one can support, and, if one cannot do that, vote against it. That is what we are doing now. That is what my party is doing and what I am doing here.

I will go straight into the first amendment in the group. Amendment No 13 creates a new clause 6, which requires a written record to be kept of every single internal departmental meeting that is attended by a Minister, recording, in particular, those who are present, the date and time, the topics that are discussed, and every decision and action point. The SDLP will not support that clause, either in its original form or as amended. It is true, and I am happy to acknowledge it, that the Bill's sponsor has moved towards a position of slightly lessening the burden that would be created by clause 6. I would acknowledge that, in general, the Bill's sponsor has been constructive when it comes to listening to feedback. That having been said, my party will be honest about the fact that it feels that the measure is disproportionate. In explaining why, I will draw, again, from my own experience as a civil servant.

What is an internal meeting with a Minister? Is it every time that an official speaks to a Minister, or every time that they sit down at a table with an agenda in front of them? If you are a civil servant who works closely with a Minister, particularly someone like a private secretary, you will, in all probability, have dozens of interactions with the Minister every day. Indeed, you are not doing your job if you do not have dozens of those interactions. If you are a Civil Service press officer, you may need to go back and forth with the Minister and their special adviser to refine statements or clarify pieces of information. If you are a permanent secretary, the Minister will, in all probability, have your mobile number and will have been told to contact you to resolve urgent and important issues.

Here is the thing: all those things are important. Everything that I have just described is critical to the functioning of government, and that is what the Bill is about. If the Bill is about the ordered functioning of government, which is what we want it to be about, and which is why we are supporting large parts of it, we need to think about how government functions. A large part of how government functions is that officials are able to be in relatively close contact with their Minister on a fairly regular basis. No doubt Ministers, including the Finance Minister, the Economy Minister and, I am sure, my colleague the Infrastructure Minister, particularly in responding to COVID-19 and an unbelievably dynamic situation, will have been in relatively constant contact with officials. Sometimes, that might even include text messages or WhatsApp messages.

Mr Allister, to his credit, presented in a very convincing barristerial way, but I am afraid that it is more complicated than he makes out. Again, I draw on my experience as a Civil Servant. Creating the burden of requiring that a record of every departmental meeting be kept is, I am afraid, a real problem for the good functioning of government, unless you are clarifying very clearly that what you mean by a “meeting” is one that has been scheduled for a specific purpose and that has an agenda, but I am not sure quite how you would do that.

I now come to a point, which I will come back to later, about how you improve the quality of our Civil Service. Last week's report from the Northern Ireland Audit Office pointed to the very real, big structural challenges that this place faces with the quality of its Civil Service. We heard a bit from the Minister earlier about Civil Service reform. It is right and necessary that we respond to the public outcry over RHI and understand exactly what went wrong, and the Coghlin report is invaluable in that. The report talks about minute-keeping. Personally, I am not convinced that legislation addressing a lacuna in record-keeping in what was DETI is fundamentally getting at the deep structural challenges talked about in Coghlin's report. I accept that minute-keeping was clearly not up to where it should have been there, but there is a broader challenge. As well as responding to RHI, we need to think about how we massively overhaul and improve our Civil Service and how it performs in this place. To be blunt about it, our Civil Service is not performing as it should. As a result of a decade of austerity and the issues with where people join in the Civil Service, its age profile is too high, and it does not attract enough of the right people. In saying that, in no way do I denigrate the very hard-working, decent people in the Civil Service.

Let us be absolutely clear: we need our Civil Service to improve. We feel that clause 6 would create significant challenges by adding to the everyday burden of being a good-functioning Civil Service. For that reason, we will not support it. It is not because we think that minute-keeping is not an issue or that it was not touched on in the Coghlin report, but we are not convinced that that measure —

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr O'Toole: Yes, I will give way.

Mr Wells: Does the Member accept that, in business and in local government, minute-keeping is absolutely essential? If so, why, then, is he trying to torpedo an amendment that would make that compulsory at the highest level of the Civil Service in Northern Ireland?

Mr O'Toole: First, I am not trying to torpedo the idea of minute-keeping. What I am saying to the Member is that the clause as drafted is very onerous. It is worth saying that I have worked in both the private sector and the Civil Service. You may think that the practice of minute-keeping on actions in every internal departmental meeting is much better in the private sector and the corporate world, but I am not sure that that is completely borne out by experience. Major tech companies and banks do not tend to record every face-to-face interaction with senior people, so we will not support clause 6.

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Mr O'Toole: I will.

Mr Allister: If the Member had taken up my repeated invitations to sit down and discuss those issues with me, perhaps there would have been an opportunity to meet the Member's concerns. I repeat: if the Member has concerns about the width of the ambit of clause 6, I am still prepared to have that discussion before Further Consideration Stage. However, I find it rather surprising that he never took the opportunity to discuss the concerns that he is now articulating about that clause.

Mr O'Toole: I am happy to look at any further amendments that the Bill's sponsor wants to make before Further Consideration Stage. We considered this long and hard. We spoke to the Member about the Bill at several junctures, and we support large parts of it. We have thought long and hard about the burden that that measure creates, but, yes, I am happy to discuss further changes to it at Further Consideration Stage.

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr O'Toole: Yes, I will give way again.

Mr Wells: I know that the Member is not going to like me for saying this, but I have to say it again: he sat on that Committee for many weeks and had ample opportunity to raise his concerns. This issue was discussed at length in the questioning of witnesses and in the preparation of the report. It really is disappointing that, having had that huge opportunity — we would have given him more — he now decides at this very late stage, having not taken up the opportunity to discuss it with the Bill's sponsor, to try to wreck one of the most important parts of this private Member's Bill.

Mr O'Toole: I direct the Member to the Committee report on the private Member's Bill, which makes clear that we did not support that clause when it was voted on in Committee. We had reservations, and I articulated them then.

This is not about wrecking; this is about simply setting out concerns. That is what this is about. With respect, I am not sure that it is conducive to the general tone of a Bill being developed collectively to address Members who have concerns in that way, albeit I take the points that he makes.

Clause 7 gives notice of the Bill sponsor's intention to oppose original clause 7.

Amendment No 14 — new clause 8 — requires a civil servant to take a note, which must be kept, of:

"every meeting held by a minister or special adviser with non-departmental personnel".

That is worthy of support, and we will support it. We believe that that is an area in which guidance and codes would be enhanced by legislative underpinning. Just to draw a distinction, this is what happens when you interrogate particular measures, think about how they interact, and draw in your personal experience and talk to those with experience. There is a specific burden in clause 6. New clause 8 is very much worthy of support.

Amendment No 15 introduces new clause 8A, which requires a Minister or special adviser to provide a written record to their Department of "being lobbied". It is a significant improvement on previous versions of the Bill. It creates a significant and novel burden on Ministers and special advisers to record instances of being lobbied. In other jurisdictions, in Westminster and in Dublin, in slightly different forms, it has been the practice to require those doing the lobbying to own, as it were, the burden of keeping the details or registration, but that is not necessarily a reason not to support it.

There are strong reasons for arguing that Northern Ireland, given the record of some of our Ministers, should not be afraid of being in the vanguard of transparency laws. However, that new clause did not have as much scrutiny at Committee level, as the Committee Chair said, given that it was introduced late. That is not a criticism of the Bill's sponsor. It was introduced in that way because he was responding to feedback. However, there are vital questions on which we would like to engage with the Bill's sponsor as we consider that.

That could be something for Further Consideration Stage.

Questions that we would like to engage with are about protections from vexatious complaints. Some of that was touched on by the Minister, and there are still questions on that. Those could be addressed through clarifying language, and the Bill's sponsor indicated that for clause 8A(2)(d). That is interesting. We would like to discuss that further because we think that there is real merit in what is being said here. Another question is an explanatory question about whether that is the right thing to do. It may well be, but it is worth teasing that out as we further explore why we are putting the burden of disclosure on Ministers when others have sought to place it on those who are lobbying. By the way, I am not saying that the latter is the right approach. We appreciate the strength of the rationale for this proposed new clause, but we are keen to understand more details before we are able to commit to finally supporting it as it is drafted. However, we obviously will not oppose it tonight.

Just as we did in the Committee, we will not support clause 9, which is the new criminal offence relating to the use of non-official email systems. I am afraid that, even as a summary offence, our view is that it is disproportionate and that it would have a chilling effect on lots of civil servants. The reason is in my phone, as I would be guilty of lots of crimes. That is because in my Hotmail account I still have evidence that I used my phone for official business. The Bill's sponsor will say, in many ways, reasonably, that that is covered by the 48-hour get-out clause that he introduced in his amendment. I think that, having considered this long and hard and to be genuine and honest with the Bill's sponsor, we considered it. We considered it as a party and discussed it in Committee, but we still find that it does not meet our test of being a proportionate response to an issue. I am not saying that people should be at complete liberty to use personal systems. However, the question that we asked is a very real one — I think that he asked it in a debate on one of the justice Bills in the last few weeks — and it is about how the most serious thing that a legislature can do is create a context of depriving someone of their liberty. We have to be really careful about that. We have thought about it long and hard, and we cannot support clause 9 as it is with that offence, so we will not support the clause.

I will cover clause 11, which is one of the two criminal offence clauses. Of the two, this is the one that may have more merit. The reason for that is that, from our perspective, the offence of the disclosure of information specifically for the benefit of a third party is very clearly a more egregious offence than using unofficial systems. I think —

Dr Aiken: I thank the Member for giving way. Again, one of the things that I think we looked at but did not get any details on was investigating what the crime of insider trading would be. The tariff for the crime of insider trading was somewhere in the region of about seven years, along with some other criminal penalties for it. Obviously, if you looked at some of the issues that have been raised, particularly in reference to the RHI inquiry, you could very clearly see them as insider trading, and there is definitely a requirement in that case to look specifically at where we are with the tariff.

Mr O'Toole: That is one of the things that we discussed at Committee. We still have significant questions on clause 11 that we want to tease out at Further Consideration Stage. We will not oppose it tonight, but in order to give it our final support, we would like to tease out some more of those issues. Specifically, it would be helpful if the Bill's sponsor could clarify — it would be helpful if he could do this tonight when wrapping up — what is meant by "improper". It may be that his greater experience of the statute book and case law will lead him to a definition of "improper" that is mysterious to the rest of us and already in law. However, we want more clarity on that.

We, collectively, would like his views on whether he thinks the offence would be better restricted to senior civil servants, that is, those who are above a certain grade. Elsewhere in the Bill, the salary for special advisers is linked, I think, to those at grade 5, who are, broadly, people in the senior Civil Service.

11.30 pm

Is there an argument that this offence should be limited to people in the Senior Civil Service, given that one of the comments that I have just made was around the general issues that we have? Frankly, we have broad structural issues around our Civil Service, going everywhere from morale down to high levels of sick leave and just needing a structural overhaul of the quality of our Civil Service. Notwithstanding the very good, sincere and hard-working people who work in it and who have given their all this year, we do have significant issues. One of our worries about clause 11 is that its current breadth could act as a chill factor on not just the couple of dozen Ministers and special advisers who operate in this place or, indeed, the relatively small, but very powerful, number of senior civil servants, but the more than 20,000 members of the Northern Ireland Civil Service who will, theoretically, be captured by this potential offence. It would be helpful to get the sponsor's views on that. We welcome the fact that he has introduced a similar exemption for communications with a Minister's own political party. That is useful, and again I acknowledge the Bill sponsor's constructive approach on that.

I will just go back to clause 10, which we are supporting, so I do not need to talk about that in any more detail, which is good because I have lost my notes on it.

It may not be something for future amendment but, in clause 11, it might be helpful to get the Bill sponsor's views on when, in a sense, criminal liability ends in relation to this. For example, the way that the amended clause 11 is currently drafted subject to amendment No 20 is that:

"it shall be an offence for any minister, civil servant or special adviser to communicate, directly or indirectly, official information to another for the financial or other improper benefit of any person or third party."

It would be helpful to get an answer around where in the chain that ends. For example, if a special adviser or Minister gives that information to a business lobbyist from a representative group in good faith and that meets the test of not being improper, but the second person in that chain improperly passes the information on to a party that they know, is the special adviser, civil servant or Minister responsible? When does their liability end? It would be good to get some clarity on that. We would like some more clarity on these points before we are able to support this clause, but we will not oppose it at this stage. Let us be clear that we strongly sympathise with the intent of creating a real deterrent to serious malfeasance, and we do not have a problem with that. We think that there is a real argument for it. However, potentially capturing everyone, from an administrative officer — someone working in a benefits office — up to a permanent secretary is a high bar, so we need to understand more about that.

I have already talked about issues around the Northern Ireland Civil Service. In concluding my remarks on group 2, I want to say that we are sympathetic to many of the reforms in this Bill and several in this group of amendments. It is clear that there is real value in giving a strong statutory footing to the updated codes and procedures that are intended to deal with many of the failings of RHI. However, legislation is not necessarily appropriate in all areas. We have given an honest and rigorous appraisal of this Bill. We are debating it now and, where we differ from the Bill sponsor or other parties, including Sinn Féin, we are open and upfront in saying so. The bar to create criminal offences is, necessarily, very high, but it is also true that the public in Northern Ireland want to see real, meaningful legislative action taken to address many of the long-standing issues that were revealed by the RHI crisis.

We will look to find the correct legislative means of addressing those issues. There are lots of them in the Bill, and we look forward to exploring them in more detail.

Mr Muir: I will speak on behalf of the Alliance Party on the amendments in group 3 on administrative reform and governance. Unfortunately, the Alliance Party is unable to support a number of amendments in the group and a number of the associated clauses.

Before I continue, it is important to recall the background to and origin of the Bill: RHI. When responding to the inquiry report in this place on 16 March, I said:

“The revelations that emerged in 2016 relating to the non-domestic renewable heat incentive scheme and the actions of certain Ministers, special advisers and some civil servants” — and others —

“damaged public trust in these institutions, with legitimate ... outrage and anger at ... comments such as ‘Fill our boots’.” —

I went on to say:

“Now that the inquiry is over and the report has been published, we must ensure that the report and its recommendations are not allowed to gather dust.” — [Official Report (Hansard) Bound Volume 127, p96, col 2].

As we know, in the days, weeks and months since 16 March, the focus has very much been on one clear and present threat, namely COVID-19. Many lives have been lost, our health service is under immense strain and our economy is enduring the worst economic downturn in its history. Departments and public services have rightly been focused on responding to that, but they must start to realign and refocus on general priorities, as we hopefully start to follow the road out of COVID-19 following the expected introduction of vaccines. A key element of the work that must be progressed apace is all the recommendations arising from the RHI inquiry report. A number of the recommendations have already been delivered, but more needs to be done, especially on the commitments in ‘New Decade, New Approach’. That brings me to the amendments and associated clauses that are being considered this evening in the third and final group. If passed into law, they will make many elements of practice and procedure legal requirements, with significant criminal sanctions attached. Ultimately, it is for us all tonight, or perhaps tomorrow morning, to decide whether they are an appropriate and balanced response to RHI. Alliance feels that many aspects that are due to be considered in the group lean too far towards being unbalanced and will, in some instances, make the business of government more difficult, inefficient and bureaucratic, without the required level of benefit.

Clauses 6 and 8 require civil servants to attend and take notes of internal and external meetings respectively. Of course we agree that minutes should be taken of all ministerial meetings with external parties, as well as minutes of significant internal meetings where departmental decisions are agreed. That not only is a critical element of transparent government but should be common sense and good practice for any professional organisation, let alone government. Sir Patrick Coghlin’s report was rightly damning about the failure to take or retain minutes of key meetings leading up to RHI. The Alliance Party could not agree more with the inquiry’s view in that regard. Sir Patrick’s report did not propose legislation to address that issue, however. Administrative tasks in the Civil Service, such as ensuring that minutes of relevant meetings are taken, should not be dealt with via legislation. It is not the appropriate vehicle for that task. As was recently confirmed to me in response to a question for written answer from the Finance Minister, the responsibility for ensuring that minute-taking takes place, as is requested in the Bill, already formally rests with private secretaries and permanent secretaries, with the revised Northern Ireland Civil Service code of ethics placing that explicitly as a requirement. Such a requirement will form part of the terms and conditions of employment. For those reasons, Alliance is unable to support the legal changes proposed as a result of the clauses. For those who disagree — I accept that other Members disagree — please consider the implications of passing such legislation, the impact that it will have and the desired outcome. The real outcome will be much different from what is desired and will simply inhibit good government.

Similarly, although new clause 8A, which covers lobbying, is well intentioned, the Alliance Party cannot support it, because it misses the mark in what it is trying to achieve. We would, however, be interested to see any amendments at Further Consideration Stage that improve and clarify the proposals. Transparency around the lobbying of Ministers is absolutely essential. The RHI inquiry showed the depth of a certain firm’s influence over Ministers’ decisions, which the public were rightly disgusted by. Whom Ministers meet and what they are being lobbied on is a matter of public interest and should absolutely be a matter of public record.

We support the updates to the spad code and guidance for Ministers, which requires them to detail all their engagements on departmental matters with external organisations or persons. Furthermore, the Alliance Party supports the creation of a register of lobbyists, as has been established in the Republic of Ireland and in Scotland. More can and should be done to ensure that the influence of lobbyists in Northern Ireland is transparent, and we will continue to support that.

However, as drafted, the amendment is insufficiently defined. Ministers may have to record as lobbying any conversations through any channels, be they verbal, email, letter or social media, or anything related to their ministerial portfolio. Ministers trying to ensure that they obey the law could find themselves tangled up in bureaucracy, while those who wish to break the rules will find a way round them. On that basis, we do not believe that this amendment will solve the issue that it sets out to address, and we cannot support it.

As I said, however, we are open to clarification, improvement and betterment of the Bill at Further Consideration Stage, taking into account law already enacted in the Republic of Ireland, which clarifies what lobbying is and places the burden to record and log activity on the lobbyist rather than the lobbied.

My party will not vote for clauses 9 or 11, which attempt to cover the use of unofficial communication channels and unauthorised disclosure respectively. Sir Patrick's report emphasised that Ministers and spads are expected to use official channels when communicating on official business and should be held to account when they do not do so. As per recommendation 41 of Sir Patrick's report, the spad code has been updated to reflect that in the most unambiguous of terms. The updating of freedom of information legislation, to ensure that all correspondence via all channels is covered, is needed and is something that the UK Government ought to action. Criminal sanctions already exist for the unauthorised disclosure of information through the offence of misconduct in public office. The Information Commissioner and courts already have the right to investigate and prosecute in the most serious cases. However, the bar for doing so is necessarily high, and rightly so, in order to protect public servants from vexatious prosecution and to protect whistle-blowers. For that reason, we do not believe that the proposed clauses are an appropriate method to address the serious issues identified. Where there is evidence of misconduct in public office, we support prosecutions, but we do not feel that the legislation proposed in these clauses is appropriate. The failure to get the desired prosecution of certain persons is not a sufficient evidence base to make this law desirable.

I will talk about our opposition to amendment No 18 and our support for clause 10, provided that amendment No 18 falls. I will then make some closing remarks on behalf of my party.

Clause 10 proposes that the Minister of Finance should create a publicly available register of interests for Ministers and special advisers. We note that Ministers are already required to declare their interests when appointed and that special advisers are required to declare their interests through the revised special advisers' code. However, we have no objection to putting that requirement into legislation and giving responsibility to the Minister of Finance. The RHI inquiry exposed significant conflicts of interest held by spads in dealing with RHI, and the public was rightly appalled at what they heard. A register of interests helps to ensure transparency regarding the interests of those charged with ministerial responsibility and their advisers.

However, amendment No 18 is a mistake, as it would undermine the effectiveness of the clause as a whole. The amendment removes the word "close" from the requirement to register family members' interests. It is not reasonable, in law, to require a Minister or special adviser to register the interests of relatives whom they may not have spoken to for many years and with whom they may have no meaningful relationship. The Bill would require Members not only to register the interests of siblings, aunts, uncles, nieces and nephews but also those of their spouse or civil partner. The numbers could run into triple figures. It is not a reasonable argument that we should commit to legislation something that is a serious conflict of interest. It is far better to keep the term "close" in the Bill, as per the original wording.

My party takes seriously the issue of transparency and good governance. On that basis, we have looked in detail at each clause and given full and due consideration to whether it will improve the functioning of government in Northern Ireland. I say that sincerely, as the Bill has taken up many days of my life.

In the majority of cases, my party believes that the full implementation of the recommendations of Sir Patrick Coughlin's report is the more effective way to respond to the appalling behaviour of Ministers and special advisers throughout RHI. Furthermore, in the majority of cases, we have found that the provisions in the Bill, however well-meaning, could make the functioning of government worse, rather than better, in Northern Ireland.

Finally, at a quarter to midnight tonight, and as someone new to this place, I suggest that we need to consider how we make legislation. We have heard lots of quotes from scripture, and some of the contributions were short, brief and succinct, but others were long. In closing, I will quote from Proverbs:

"Whoever restrains his words has knowledge, and he who has a cool spirit is a man of understanding."

Mr Wells: I have found the last couple of hours extraordinarily disappointing. We have spoken at length about how the Committee has worked well together to amend and revise Mr Allister's legislation. Now we find that it has been ambushed with changes that could easily have been brought up at the Committee and dealt with. Some of the concerns are simply based on a lack of understanding of the Bill; some could have been brought up months ago. For example, I am very disappointed by what Mr O'Toole said. He asked what level of the Civil Service should be liable for the punishment if a civil servant steps out of line. Why, oh why, did he not raise that at the Committee? That could have been sorted out months ago.

It is one thing for Mr Muir, who has a defence, as he was not on the Committee, to ask questions, and maybe it was a defect that no member of his party sat on the Committee. Mr Muir can argue that he did not have the opportunity to cross examine officials and to speak at length to the Bill's sponsor. However, the SDLP does not have that excuse.

Mr O'Toole: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wells: I certainly will.

Mr O'Toole: What are we doing here? This is Consideration Stage. How dare the Member stand up and lambast me for raising legitimate questions about a Bill that I am scrutinising. To be honest, it is not a reasonable thing to do. If the Member regards himself as a watchdog for what questions are asked and when at Committee Stage, that is not a productive approach. We are entitled to ask further questions at Consideration Stage. That is what it is for.

Mr Wells: Mr Muir made the point about why we are still standing here at a quarter to twelve, still debating this. Part of the reason is that issues that could have been sorted out weeks ago, by the honourable Member and others, are now being raised at this very late hour. He has raised legitimate points —.

Mr Muir: Will the Member give way?

Mr Speaker: Mr Wells, there is no point in rehashing who said what when. Please, address the group of amendments in front of you, as that is what you are here to do. It is midnight; a lot of staff are working here as well as MLAs. Show a bit of respect, and stick to the group of amendments in front of you. You do not need to give all of the anecdotes or the cross arguments, and that goes for Mr O'Toole as well.

Mr Wells: Mr Speaker, with all due respect, I cannot accept what you are saying.

Mr Speaker: Sorry, Mr Wells. I do not want to hear that because I do not want to have a row with you. I certainly am not going to parry anything with you tonight. I am making the point that there is a group of amendments in front of us. Please, stick to the group of amendments. We will have no further discussion on the matter.

Mr Wells: Mr Speaker, what I am saying is that there is a group of amendments before us. Members have expressed concerns about the amendments. What I am saying is that the best place to deal with those concerns was during the Committee Stage of the Bill when there were hours to tease out the concerns that are being expressed tonight. I do not appreciate that, having sat through every minute of scrutiny of the amendments at the Committee Stage and the formation of the Committee's report, out of nowhere, like rabbits out of a hat, concerns are being produced here, at a very late stage, when many of them could have been dealt with. Mr Muir was not on the Committee, but, equally, Mr Allister's door was always open, as it was for other members of the Committee, to discuss these issues.

Mr Muir: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wells: I certainly will.

Mr Muir: As Mr Allister will know, we have engaged on a number of occasions, and those have been respectful engagements. Part of democracy is that a Bill is tabled at Consideration Stage, you offer your views, you debate them and you vote on them. It is democracy, and that is what we are doing. They are legitimate views. Mr Allister has views that I disagree with, but they are legitimate views that he holds. We debate them, and do you know something? We vote on them.

Mr Wells: Mr Muir cannot then complain about being stuck here at almost midnight if he is raising issues —.

Mr Muir: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wells: I certainly will.

Mr Muir: One of the reasons why we are still here is that Members are talking ad infinitum and are going on forever.

Mr Speaker: Mr Muir. Andrew Muir, please. Resume your seat, please. Can we return to the debate at hand? Thank you.

Mr Wells: The only thing that I agree with Andrew Muir on tonight is his wearing of an orange tie, and that is about the only redeeming factor to what he has said.

Mr Muir: And orange socks.

Mr Wells: Orange socks. That is good. That is as close as the Alliance Party will ever come to anything orange.

It is frustrating that here we are, at this late hour, raising issues very late on in the day, particularly when Mr Allister has moved so far to try to accommodate the legitimate concerns that have been raised. How much further could he have gone to meet those concerns? Yet, still we are here at this unearthly hour of the night.

I was going to use this opportunity to dig deep into my experience of dealing with spads, but I am conscious of the fact that it is now nearly five minutes to 12. I could keep Members here until two in the morning giving my views on how the system of special advisers works in the Assembly. I am concerned when I hear people such as Mr Muir say that we do not need the legislation and the amendments because we have codes. He is a new boy to the Assembly. He has been here for less than a year. He will know just how effective those codes have been since 1998. If those codes had worked, we would not need this debate tonight. We would not need Mr Allister's legislation. What the RHI report showed very clearly was that special advisers from all parties ran a coach and horses through the codes and totally ignored them. That is why we need the underpinning of legislation. Really, the meat of this Bill and its important aspects is the legislative underpinning. If we do not have that ultimate sanction, I am afraid that the Bill will be greatly weakened.

There is still a last opportunity — the opportunity of Further Consideration Stage — and I say to the DUP and the Ulster Unionists that you have behaved entirely honourably. Strangely, I also say that Sinn Féin has too, because Sinn Féin made it absolutely clear at every stage of this Bill that it would oppose every line, jot and tittle of it. It would oppose the short title, the long title and even the colour of the cover of this Bill. It was not having any of it, so we knew exactly where we stood with Sinn Féin from the word go.

Unfortunately, we thought that we had other parties on board and that we had dealt with all the questions that they had, and now we find, at midnight, that concerns have suddenly been produced like a rabbit out of a hat. I urge those parties to take advantage of the Further Consideration Stage and to speak to Mr Allister to try to find whether there are ways to meet their concerns. That is the whole process and the procedure that is adopted. I think that it is that lack of dialogue with various Members that has been the problem here. What I am hearing is based on a lack of understanding of what the Bill's intent is, and, in some cases, there is a lack of understanding of the actual content of the Bill. That is very unfortunate at this late stage.

I had many notes prepared, but, as I said, I would like to get home before two in the morning, so I will not take this any further. I do leave this Building tonight with an intense sense of disappointment.

Mr Carroll: I rise to support much of what is being proposed in clauses 6, 7 and 12, which, undoubtedly, will strengthen the process of scrutiny and accountability and will help to rein in the flagrantly undemocratic nature of government operations here. Obviously, there are a few technical amendments too, but I will keep my comments to the main legislative changes that are being proposed.

The RHI scandal exposed the shocking practice at the heart of the functioning of government in this Building. One thing that was obvious was the complete lack of democratic accountability among politicians and their untouchable spads, who, at times, seemed to regard public funds as play money to be handed out among friends and relatives.

Shocking and sickening as that was, it did not even get to the heart of the matter.

At least part of the reason that they got away with so much during RHI was the lack of basic checks and balances in place for Ministers and their officials. That allowed them, essentially, to do what they wanted. Stormont Ministers and their advisers are continually held to a different standard from others. Clear evidence indicated a close relationship between Ministers, spads and elements of the big agribusiness sector, with huge companies such as Moy Park lobbying their way towards unfair and indefensible handouts of public money to further line their pockets, including, as others have suggested, undocumented trips to Brazil and relationships that led to hundreds of millions of pounds of public money being wasted, without minutes of meetings even being taken and no paper trail or accountability. Scandalous stuff indeed.

Clause 6 requires a Civil Service note to be kept of all ministerial meetings. Clause 7 requires all ministerial and special adviser meetings outside their respective Departments to be logged in future. Amendment Nos 14 and 21 relate further to that and mandate Ministers to report to Committees in more detail about their work efforts. Clause 8 requires ministerial and special adviser meetings with non-departmental personnel to be attended by a civil servant and a note taken. That, again, would help in scrutinising the actions of the Stormont elite.

Those moves will, hopefully, help to militate against instances involving the misappropriation of public funds, which we have seen too often in this place, and prevent the massive disparity of treatment between working-class people and self-appointed political elites in Stormont.

I will quickly give one example that accurately draws out the hypocrisy. It is worth mentioning in the light of clause 9 and amendment No 20. In July 2018, a 59-year-old mother of four, Anne Smith, from my constituency of West Belfast, was sentenced to six days in prison for failure to pay a TV licence. It shone a spotlight on the obscene disparity in the state's punitive approach towards people like Anne Smith, who struggle to get by, and the casual impunity that is extended towards those responsible for misappropriating up to £800 million in public funds through RHI. To date, not one individual among those in government or in the private sector who gloated about "filling their boots" in the RHI scandal has spent one hour in jail, nor are we likely to see that. Arlene Foster, who presided over the scandal as the Enterprise, Trade and Investment Minister in charge of RHI, walks free in the confidence that she will likely never face jail time. She is held up by some as a successful stateswoman instead of as somebody whose Ministry presided over the looting, effectively, of public funds.

As was mentioned, the First Minister famously used Post-its to go back and forth with her spad, Andrew Crawford, who was extremely close to Moy Park and the main culprit at the heart of the RHI scandal. Crawford served seven years as Arlene Foster's spad at DETI and could not recall ever seeing a formal note of a meeting — not ever. It is unbelievable and unacceptable. It is also unacceptable to think that some in the Chamber suggest that we do not need legislation to change that kind of arrangement.

Children are asked to show their working-out when they do their homework and their maths, but it appeared to have been OK for Ministers and spads not to take records of meetings about the serious business that they were undertaking. Part of the reason for such disparity is that the legal system generally is stacked against ordinary and working-class people. We support the clauses and amendments that force political elites in the Chamber to document and, therefore, justify their actions.

Mr O'Dowd: Will the Member give way?

Mr Carroll: Yes, I will give way.

Mr O'Dowd: The Member has to understand that some of the legislation will not send the elites to jail; it will send the working class to jail — the civil servants. Surely, civil servants are working-class. Some of the amendments that you are about to support will send civil servants to jail.

Mr Speaker: Mr Carroll, your microphone is not always picking up. You might need to make sure that you speak into the mic.

Mr Carroll: Yes. I find it remarkable that, despite all the stuff being outlined by me and others about the scale of RHI, Mr O'Dowd and his colleagues cannot support changes to document the actions of spads and Ministers.

It is remarkable stuff indeed. I do not know how that punishes the working class at all; it is obviously designed to target spads and Ministers.

Like I say, if it is good enough for working-class people to be hauled in front of courts over TV licences, it is good enough for Stormont Ministers for potentially facilitating much bigger crimes.

12.00 midnight

Clause 12 would establish a process whereby the First Minister and deputy First Minister would report every two years on the functioning of government and initiate improvements. As a Member who sits on the opposition Benches, I would particularly welcome that. We have long criticised the lack of information and the way that information is relayed by the Executive in a limited sense to us, other smaller parties, independents and so forth. That would be a welcome change from our perspective.

Finally, I want to say something briefly about clause 11, which makes it a specific criminal offence for a Minister or special adviser, not the working class, to communicate confidential government information to a third party. I had an issue with how that was originally worded because it was broad-sweeping and unqualified. I can imagine situations, albeit they are way outside scandals like RHI, where Ministers should be in a position to disclose information; for example, when there is a public duty to disclose information that could be harmful to people in this city or beyond. I am not for a closed house on releasing information. Clearly, though, there should be repercussions for Ministers or spads who are in the business of leaking financial documents for the benefit of their business-owning wealthy friends. One should not shy away from acknowledging that that has happened.

We are, therefore, glad to see amendment No 20. We cannot back clause 11 in its original form because it does not create room for, for example, whistle-blowing or releasing information in the public interest, nor can we ignore the related human rights concerns that were raised by the Human Rights Commission. For that reason, amendment No 20 is worthy of support. We will support it because it qualifies the matter by stating that Ministers and spads cannot release information to third parties that results in financial or similar gain. It also qualifies it to take account of defending matters that are in the public interest. I leave my comments there.

Ms Sugden: I will not go into detail on any amendments on the Marshalled List other than the ones that give me some issues or cause for concern; in most cases, that is probably quite minor.

I will start with amendment No 13, which relates to the records of internal departmental meetings. I have sympathy with Members who expressed concern about the burden that that may put on civil servants and Ministers in respect of their meetings. Even from a constituency office perspective, I am quite obsessive about keeping a record of any meetings that I have, whether those be via telephone, via video call, face to face or via social media. I must admit that that creates an awful burden for me, and, in some cases, I am not getting back to people for a month because of the level of correspondence that I receive. I caution Mr Allister that maybe something could be put into the amendment about substantive meetings, which may be more valuable to make a record of.

There is another question that I will ask about the amendment. The Bill sponsor is quite clear in this and other amendments that he is talking about departmental meetings. In this new world of Zoom calls and video calls, are those included? Are we looking at virtual calls? Are we recording telephone calls? I can say from my own experience that it is very lonely being a Minister. If there is a sense that someone is always looking over your shoulder, whether it is with every good intention or even with bad intentions — it happens — that would leave me vulnerable in the sense that I would not want to talk to anyone. Where does that go where policymaking is concerned? I understand the purpose of the amendment, and I have no difficulty in keeping records of meetings. However, it perhaps goes a bit further than is necessary, and, as others said, it is perhaps disproportionate in that respect. I would be keen to see how to make it more workable in the practical day-to-day workings of running Departments. I appreciate that all those things seem like a good idea in theory. They support the ideas of accountability and transparency, and that is what we all should strive towards. However, their workability gives me some cause for concern and may lead some Ministers to, if you like, go underground, whereby they will not speak to their civil servants or express their concerns. I would not want it to have that unintended consequence, because I appreciate its intention and where it comes from.

I am keen to understand the Member's rationale for making an exception for a Minister's political party in amendment No 14. I understand that, but I stand here as the independent Member for East Londonderry, and I appreciate the engagement that I have with other political parties away from civil servants. I ask the Member, rather than making it specific to Ministers' political parties, to consider potentially making an exception for other peer-elected representatives. The political conversations and relationships that we have as Members are better served away from civil servants.

I always maintain that a Minister's role is not necessarily to be the head of a Department; I see it almost as a politician holding the Department to account from within. That cannot happen if civil servants are present at meetings. I ask the Member for North Antrim to consider extending that exception to other politicians on the same level, rather than restricting it exclusively to a Minister's political party. I understand why that is the case, but I work alone and it is about those relationships and conversations that I have. If anyone remembers my time in the Department of Justice, it was important for me to have that engagement with Members without there being civil servants in the room. That dynamic could cause some issues with the conversations and the relationships that are necessary away from the gaze of civil servants. Politicians are the buffer, if you like, between civil servants and the people.

Mr Frew: Will the Member give way?

Ms Sugden: Yes. Please go ahead.

Mr Frew: It could actually also pick up the scenario of a Minister standing here at the box at Question Time and then, with their head fried, walking down the corridor to their office. Bold Jim or Paul could bounce up on them and say, "Minister, can you do A, B and C for me?", and then they walk into their office with their head fried after Question Time.

Ms Sugden: Absolutely. Even from my experience this past weekend, I was in conversations with Ministers about the COVID-19 restrictions. It is not that I would feel uncomfortable that they would go back to the Department and say that they were speaking to me over the weekend, but I think that there is something about being able to engage or lobby. The two corridors either side of us are called Lobbies for a reason: they give Members the opportunity to lobby Ministers in that space. We are overstepping a little when we start to bring civil servants into holding Ministers and politicians to account. As a Back-Bench Member of the Northern Ireland Assembly, I certainly would not want to be held to account by a civil servant. I do not think that that is appropriate, and potentially it is what the amendment suggests.

"Record of being lobbied" — I do find this one interesting. Andrew Muir raised the point that, in other jurisdictions, the emphasis is on the person who is doing the lobbying rather than the person who is being lobbied. I am studying for a master's degree in communication and political lobbying at Ulster University, and, for me, communication and lobbying are a two-way street. How do we draw a line over the potentially hundreds or thousands of people who contact us daily? Do we have to make a record of those, even if they were unsolicited? I appreciate that the Member has considered potentially limiting that, but it is unreasonable to expect that every time someone contacts you. Again, what does "contact" mean? Is it face-to-face contact? Do we include direct messages on Twitter or private messaging on Facebook or other forms of social media? I cannot begin to tell you, Mr Speaker; I have received hundreds of messages today. That puts a significant burden on me and my constituency office, and I am a representative of only one of 18 constituencies in Northern Ireland. I appreciate that there are Departments that are full of civil servants who could assist with that, but I do not think that it is as simple as saying that I can forward something on to the Minister. I spend hours daily forwarding my messages and capturing a record of that, probably for my own protection. Other Members have talked about that. If we are going to have a record of being lobbied, we need to be careful about what that looks like in practice and what it means. Is it just communication coming one way, or is it something that a Minister has responded to?

It is difficult to do what the amendment suggests, and it does put a real burden on the Minister. We as politicians are, after all, human and may aspire to ministerial office. I feel uncomfortable that, where the constraints and limitations placed on the job are envisaged in the legislation in order to have the perfect Minister, they are not practical, and perhaps the intent is not that.

The Bill came from a specific place: to address a lot of the issues that arose out of the scandal of a couple of years ago. That is not a bad intent by any means, but we have to be careful to remember that most people do not have those intentions. Are we going to throw the baby out with the bathwater by limiting some people in their job and applying sanctions to them, when perhaps theirs was just an error in judgement? To be fair to Mr Allister, there may be an opportunity with the amendment or in the process itself to determine what the intent was, but perhaps that is just process.

I will now talk about the use of official systems, and I will again speak specifically about the Department of Justice. The official system there is much more obstructive, if you like, than any of the other systems in government. The email addresses for the Department contain "x.gsi.gov.uk", and there is a firewall there. To be honest, it is a really antiquated system. If we compare it with other systems and security Departments in jurisdictions in the United Kingdom, it is outdated. If I am to support Mr Allister's amendment about systems, for a start, we need to upgrade those systems and make them workable. It would not have been possible for me to forward or cc such messages in the Department of Justice, because it is just not possible. My special adviser at the time had to go home with an additional box attached to her laptop, which was clunky and awful, in order to be able to do her job. She was not able to access things if she was not going through that laptop.

I do not disagree with the point. We should try as far as possible to use official systems, not least for the protection of the information. If we are to do that, however, we need to put the technology in place so that the official systems are accessible. As a younger MLA, I want my diary on my phone. I want my papers, which used to come in two big briefcases, to be available on my tablet. I want those things to be accessible to me, because, when you are driving an hour and a half down the road to East Londonderry, it is those things that make the job much easier. I recognise the intent behind the amendment, but let us be realistic about what is needed in order to put that into place. Perhaps it is something that we will just have to put in place if it finds its way into law.

Mr Muir: Will the Member give way?

Ms Sugden: Yes.

Mr Muir: Does the Member accept that, although the drafting is well intentioned, the amendment does not reflect the new technology that exists, such as cloud computing, bring your own device (BYOD) and all the rest of it. It is framed from an understanding of email, but, frankly, email is yesterday's technology. The importance is for the legislation to be correctly drafted to ensure that, as has been outlined, civil servants are not unduly captured by it when they do something that is perfectly legitimate but could be considered a criminal offence.

Ms Sugden: Yes, and I think that that is where the limitation of this law lies. In my experience, the systems that we use today and tomorrow will not be the systems that we will be using in five to 10 years, yet we might enshrine something in law that potentially has an expiry date because of technological developments. I appreciate the: window, but is it reasonably practical? I will be the first to admit that, with the level of correspondence that I receive, it takes up to a month to get back to constituents. That is how busy I am, and that is how heavy my workload is. Forty-eight hours may seem reasonable and, perhaps, if you are in a Department, you prioritise those things, but, my goodness, I prioritise everything at the minute but am still not getting back to people as soon as I would like. We need to be mindful that, in practice, these things may not necessarily work out. Are we really going to criminalise people for that? I probably would never become a Minister again if that became the case, because I would be held to account for something that it was not my intent to do. Perhaps the amendment will help to explore those things if Ministers are ever held to account.

"48 hours, or as soon thereafter as reasonably practicable"

Amendment No 17 deals with the register of interests. I have no difficulty with that. I would have assumed that to become a Minister you already have to be an MLA and, as such, that register of interests would already be in place. Certainly, when I register my interests, I look across the wide remit of every Department. If I were to find myself in, say, the Department of Justice or the Department of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs, those interests would already have been disclosed in some way.

I am not against it. We should absolutely extend it to special advisers, particularly if it is a political appointment. If anything, that keeps everyone right and ensures that your pursuit is within the confines of what anyone thinks it is for.

12.15 am

Mr Muir talked about the issue with close family members. I thought that that was a technical point, although maybe Mr Allister will correct me. I had assumed that the Register of Members' Interests had confined it to more immediate family members and that removing "close" was just to tidy up the wording because it was already covered. I am not sure whether that is the case, Mr Allister.

Mr Allister: As I sit here, I think that I have been persuaded by Mr Muir that amendment No 18 may not be as appropriate as I thought, so I am minded, in winding up on the group, to indicate that I will not move amendment No 18, at least until I give it further consideration. However,

I think that we still have to have some definition of a close family member.

Ms Sugden: Yes, I concur with Mr Muir and with Mr Allister on that point: we live in Northern Ireland, and everyone is related to everyone [Laughter.] If we were to include records of extended family members, we would be here all day and would get no business done. We need to limit what it means. I felt that it was already expressed in the standards for MLAs, particularly in relation to financial interests, but we may want to consider that before making it a necessity.

On the criminal offence of improper benefit to any person or third party, I do not think that there is anything more to say on that. If it is improper and intentional, people need to be held to account, particularly when dealing with the disclosure of government information. That is not appropriate. We cannot, on the one hand, say that we cannot take records of meetings because of the development of policy and then find ourselves, on the other hand, disclosing that information for other purposes. I am happy to support that.

I am generally supportive of everything else, and I look forward to Mr Allister's responses to some of my points. There is an interesting point about record-keeping. As MLAs, we are already, to a degree, governed by law, such as the general data protection regulation (GDPR). I would be interested to hear whether what Mr Allister has drafted is compliant with the laws that are in place. For example, there is an amendment in relation to lobbying. If you are taking a record of people's details, do you have to let them know that you have done that? Do you have to dispose of it within a certain time frame? Is it even appropriate to keep that information if you are not going to use it because, for example, the lobbying intent might not have had any value? Those are a couple of areas where I have concerns, and I look forward to hearing Mr Allister address them.

Mr Murphy: I rise to finish my contribution to a long and detailed debate. Much of the time, the discussion has been framed on the premise that all of this bad behaviour, which we are all very aware of — RHI, Red Sky, NAMA and other scandals and issues that came to public attention — happened because procedures and processes were inadequate. I think that the inquiry found that the observance of some of the procedures was inadequate as well. It has been said that nothing has happened since, that all of this could happen today because nothing has happened in between times to protect against it and that, therefore, the only thing that really gives, as Mr Allister would say, the teeth or the bite — the ability to inflict punishment as a consequence of those things not being met — is legislation such as he has drafted.

Since getting to the meat of the debate — the latter end — we have spent a lot of time talking about the law of unintended consequences. The last number of Members, in particular, talked about that. That brings us to Mr Allister's central question: the House has to decide whether the Bill is necessary and can do what is needed to address the deficit that he sees in the approach that the Executive and the five parties that make up the Executive have agreed. The question is whether that approach is correct and appropriate or whether it is deficient and can be enhanced only by the teeth of Mr Allister's legislation.

The law of unintended consequences was summed up best for me by Mr Carroll, who said that he harsh bits of this — the bite part of this; the bits that are going to punish people — are intended only for the elites. I have been called many things in the Assembly, but "part of the elite" is not one of them. He said that it does not affect the working classes and described the offence as being for any Minister or special adviser. However, he left out the middle bit about civil servants in amendment No 20, which he lauded in his contribution:

"it shall be an offence for any minister, civil servant" —

it does not specify the grade of civil servant; it could be an administrative officer (AO), the head of the service or anything in between; for them, it will be an offence punishable by jail —

"to communicate, directly or indirectly, official information to another for the financial or other improper benefit of any person or third party."

That law of unintended consequences is probably best summed up by his contribution because, clearly, he thinks that it will hit the people whom, he thinks, should be punished. It is a natural instinct for people to say, post RHI, "We want to see heads hanging on the gate at Stormont. We to see the people who are responsible punished." Then you bring forward a blunt instrument like this, and the people whom, Mr Carroll thinks, he is protecting, namely ordinary civil servants, are suddenly in the frame for all of that. Then, the hand-wringing would happen if someone were caught up in it who was not really the person we wanted to see caught. We have to be sure, if we are going to pass legislation that involves penalties such as imprisonment. As Mr O'Toole said, that is the one area of legislation where you have to be ultra careful, because you are depriving people, potentially working-class people, of their liberty. You have to be sure that what you are supporting does exactly what you want it to do. From listening to the debate, particularly that on the third group of amendments, it is clear to me that Members have different outlooks on what the Bill will achieve.

It is not that I do not see any value in enhanced scrutiny: I absolutely do. It is valuable at any time in any legislature, but, building on the experiences of RHI and the inquiry and its recommendations, it is not only valuable but essential — absolutely essential — that there is increased scrutiny, accountability and responsibility to ensure that those practices cannot happen again. I absolutely and utterly support that. That is why I have taken the lead, on behalf of the Executive, to improve these matters with the support of other Ministers, but I see no virtue or value in legislating in the way that is proposed in this Bill. Good administrative practices are better set out in guidance and codes that can be updated and adjusted as necessary.

The amendments that the Bill sponsor has tabled make significant improvements to some unfortunate drafting. Without those amendments, the Bill could have had a profoundly damaging impact on good government. However, I am still determined to oppose the clauses, even as amended, as they cut across good practice.

The Chair of the Finance Committee asked whether it was the Department's view that clause 6 was still too specific: the answer is yes. Specifying the contents of the minute of a meeting does not appear to be an appropriate matter for primary legislation and does not take account of the appropriate application of judgement. Amendment No 13 clarifies who is responsible for minuting ministerial meetings and what those minutes must include. To illustrate the mistake of legislating for such a matter, I pointed out that the provisions, as drafted, did not define what a "meeting" was, and a number of contributors referred to that. A meeting might include a conversation in a corridor, as Members have alluded to, or it might include a conversation with a taxi driver when you are travelling to a meeting. It might include, for instance, the Education Minister addressing an assembly hall full of students about education policy matters that affect their life. The amendment would render unlawful any record of a meeting that failed to include every decision taken, without any reference to and regardless of the relevance of that decision. The amendment would also render unlawful any minute that did not record the name of every person present. Does the secretary have to compile a list of all 500 schoolchildren who attended that meeting with the Education Minister in an assembly hall, listened to him talking about education policy and had the opportunity to question him or lobby him on education policy and how it affected their lives? How does recording that information square with the data protection consequences of the Department storing the details of 500 children for no other reason than the law says that it must?

Amendment No 14 looks equally unwieldy. Logically, it would require a civil servant to be present and take a note wherever a Minister might happen to meet a person other than another Minister or official just in case they began to discuss official business. That might be in a constituency office or in the canteen of this Building. For all we know, it could be a chance meeting in a supermarket or after church. That issue should not be in legislation. The good practice guide is where it belongs, so officials can apply their judgement and take the context into account.

Mr Wells asked about the suggestion that Mr Allister made when I asked him about it. I was illustrating the absurdity of the idea of what constituted a lobby, and he accepted that it was an absurdity to have to record it if somebody stopped you on the street and asked you to get a street light fixed. Of course, I could expand that slightly. If somebody stopped you on the street and asked you to get six street lights fixed, you might think that that is reasonable, but that might be the thing, as the Member will know, that makes a development an adopted development or not an adopted development. Where does one draw the line? Is it one street light or two street lights? Is it one pothole or two potholes or the resurfacing of an estate that allows a contractor to get his bond back? Where does the definition end?

Mr Wells: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Murphy: I give way to Mr Wells.

Mr Wells: The Minister makes a valid point. If Mr Allister were to come up with a form of wording that would deal with that, would he support that amendment?

Mr Murphy: That is the point that I am getting to. Even should he remove:

"the exercise of any other function of the department"

above that, it states:

- "(i) any contract or other agreement,*
- (ii) any grant or other financial assistance, or*
- (iii) any licence or other authorisation,".*

That is so expansive as to include any one of those issues that I mentioned. I would not support that. It is obviously ludicrous, and I have used an example of how ludicrous it could get when trying to define what lobbying is and where it is constituted. Clearly, I would not support that. The whole clause as drafted brings us into all that territory at any stage.

Amendment Nos 16 and 20 attempt to narrow down the effects of clauses 9 and 11. Those clauses, as originally drafted, would, as the Bill sponsor clearly now knows, have a devastating impact on government, but the amendments do not detract from the fact that the Bill would criminalise activity in such a way as to do serious damage to the effectiveness of government. Why should any official or Minister have the threat of criminal proceedings hanging over their communication using their own telephone or using a home printer after the office has closed? Why should an official or Minister be threatened with legal action to determine whether their briefing to the press or talking to a constituent was for anyone's improper benefit? Of course, the clauses as amended set out all sorts of protections to defensible breaches, but I cannot see why the courts should have the final say on whether an official is guilty of poor practice. I cannot allow for the possibility that a junior colleague might one day be in the middle of a test case where the margins of this imprecise law are explored.

Finally, amendment Nos 6, 17, 18 and 19 all relate to clause 10, which is a good example of unnecessary provision. The Register of Ministers' Interests and the register of special advisers' interests are already required. The latter register of special advisers was published, I think, in July this year. The guidance for Ministers requires publication of a statement of relevant interests twice yearly. The intention of that is to ensure that that is published, but, of course, each Minister is an MLA, and our interests are published in the Register of Members' Interests of all 90 MLAs, so that is clear. If there is some discrepancy between what I declare as an MLA and what I declare as a Minister, that should be a matter for public concern and investigation. Legislating for those things is superfluous and adds no value.

As I have said throughout the debate, I am absolutely for proper and improved scrutiny and accountability. I have invested significant work in leading the Executive's response in that regard, and my Department has invested significant work in preparing, drafting and having approved codes for spads and Ministers and on Civil Service conduct. We are about to embark on a significant review of the Civil Service here as well. All of that is intended to lead to much greater effectiveness, responsibility, accountability and transparency. That is its purpose. That is entirely proper for any democratic institution, particularly one such as this, which has gone through financial scandals and has seen scandalous practices exposed.

The Bill has a series of unintended and, perhaps, from the sponsor's point of view, intended consequences that some Members who support it have not clearly thought through. Opposition to the Bill is not opposition to greater scrutiny, accountability or transparency, but it is saying that that can be done in a much better way. That is the course that the Executive and the parties to the Executive designed over the summer of 2019 and have followed through ever since.

12.30 am

Mr Speaker: I call Jim Allister to make his winding-up speech on the third group of amendments.

Mr Allister: One will always find reasons not to do something. Of course, that is the fundamental approach of the Department and the Minister. You would nearly think that RHI had never happened or that we did not have the scandals to which I referred, because such are the little things that have happened that they can all be dealt with by codes — codes that the Minister, in his own words, wants to keep as flexible as possible and “amenable to interpretation”. What does it say about an intent to address those issues seriously to say that the answer lies in flexible codes that are amenable to the Minister’s interpretation?

That is the choice that remains. It was the choice at the beginning of the debate, and it is the choice at the end of the debate. Do we want cosy codes that we can change, tweak and amend to suit purposes, or do we want the bite of legislation? That is the fundamental and abiding choice. That is a choice to be made in the context of one of the worst illustrations of bad government, which the RHI inquiry exposed. If the response of the House is that we do not really need to do anything and we certainly do not need to do anything that we cannot tweak, change and interpret as we go along, I say to the House that it is living in a bubble. People in the Province were rightly scandalised by what emerged. If the response of the institutions is to say that we will do nothing that is binding or lasting and that we will create no deterrents, the House will further diminish its public standing because it will have failed to tune in to the expectation that more than a few transitory, amendable, amenable codes is the answer. That, I say again, is the fundamental choice.

I remind Members of what I read to you from Lord Bingham, when he outlined that codes are just codes:

“It is in my view plain that the Code does not have the binding effect which a statutory provision or a statutory instrument would have.”

That is the choice that each one of us is making: do we want the changes to be binding? Do we want to address the issue of people giving official information to the benefit of family and friends? Do we want to make a binding deterrent to that, or do we want to comfort ourselves by saying that, because we have drafted amenable codes, it will not happen again? Really? That is the fundamental choice. We must ask ourselves why it is that people want amenable codes and interpretation and do not want anything binding. That is the Minister’s position. Why is that? The essential voice on that is coming from Sinn Féin, which, of course, as I pointed out, never wanted codes in the first place. It voted against them. Now it wants to make sure that, if we must have codes, they will not have the teeth of legislation. That is a poor position for the House to be in.

I listened carefully to the debate. There are points that I am amenable to taking on board, but no point can be taken on board if the relevant clause falls at Consideration Stage, because, at Further Consideration Stage, you cannot reinsert something that has been decided on in principle at Consideration Stage. If Members are interested in ensuring that we could better some clauses — we probably could — we can do that at Further Consideration Stage only if they are still here. If they are gone, they can never be bettered. I say this to those with concerns: if your concerns are about improving those clauses, I am up for addressing them. I have always been up for talking to Members who have concerns about those issues, and I am certainly up for that going forward.

Ms Sugden, for example, raised some interesting points. She talked about amendment No 13 being too restrictive, and I think that Mr O’Toole also talked about that. She asked what “every internal departmental meeting” means and whether we are talking about substantive meetings. I must say that my inclination is to say that, yes, we are talking about substantive meetings. It is about finding the wording that embraces that without creating loopholes, which is always the challenge. I do not think that it is about the whispered meeting down the hall. Clause 6 and amendment No 13 are talking about a departmental meeting where a Minister and a special adviser are gathered together inside a Department and are settling and making decisions and deciding actions. That is the thrust of amendment No 13 and clause 6.

Ms Sugden: Will the Member give way?

Mr Allister: Yes.

Ms Sugden: I suppose, but we need to clarify that, because, from my experience, those conversations and agreements on the actions to be taken forward did not happen just in Castle Buildings. For example, I was receiving phone calls at all hours of the evening about departmental policy that was immediate and required. Any intention behind that needs to be consistent, and such conversations do not happen just in a government building.

Mr Allister: I appreciate that point, but you have to have a baseline. The baseline surely is the decisions that are taken between a Minister and his civil servants and special adviser on an identifiable occasion, and, if such a decision is taken, that decision should be recorded. Otherwise, we will get to the ludicrous situation of Andrew Crawford saying that, “In seven years, I never saw a minute of a meeting involving Ministers”. It is that mischief that needs to be addressed. Yes, we could find reasons to do nothing, but doing nothing is open season and an open invitation for things to carry on as they were.

Mr O’Dowd: I thank the Member for giving way. There is a difference between the minutes of a meeting not being taken and decisions not being recorded. Any ministerial decision has to be recorded in a submission that is sent to the Minister by the Civil Service and is available under a freedom of information request; indeed, civil servants cannot action spends or take any action without a submission signed by their Minister.

Mr Allister: Then, there would have been no RHI, would there? That is the reality. The ex-Minister says, “This is how things are done”: we would not have had RHI if that was how things were done. It was the very absence of those things that lay of the heart of all of that.

Mr O’Dowd: Will the Member give way?

Mr Allister: Yes.

Mr O'Dowd: The Member needs to understand this: RHI came about because the House passed bad legislation. The Minister brought legislation to the House that she had not even read.

Mr Speaker: John O'Dowd, your microphone is not picking you up. You are not being recorded.

Mr O'Dowd: Thank you. The reason RHI came about was that the House passed bad legislation. The Minister brought legislation to the House that she had not even read, and Members voted for it. There is a danger tonight of Members voting for bad legislation again. It proves the point that legislation does not cure all ills, but it can cause a few of them.

Mr Allister: It was not the legislation that caused the then head of the Civil Service, Mr Sterling, to say that there was a conscious decision not to record, lest it provoke freedom of information requests. That was not legislation; that was a culture. That was a conscious decision by Ministers in the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister that matters should not be recorded lest it give rise to FOI.

We cannot just push away the idea that we need to do anything with the straw men that are being set up in this debate. You have to face them with the realities of some of the evidence in RHI, and, in facing them with some of those realities, you have to make a decision. Are we going to do something about it, or are we going to shrug our shoulders? If we are not going to shrug our shoulders, we need to do something about it, and it starts with the recording of decisions. That might require some finessing of which decisions, where and when, but the principle that those who urge rejection of amendment No 13 and clause 6 want to reject is the principle of keeping any record about anything significant. That is the invitation that is being issued to the House. On the other hand, I issue an invitation to make sure that we craft legislation that will forever make sure that the head of the Civil Service cannot say that there was a policy decision not to take notes, because such a decision would be in breach of the law. That is the basis of the invitation to do something about these matters.

Ms Sugden raised the point about whether the political exemption should be wider. The one danger with that is the public perception of creating a cocoon for the political elite: "If you are a politician, this does not catch you". There is a logic to saying that a Minister must have the freedom to discuss with his party policy options and policy ways forward. I am not saying it is impossible, but it is more difficult to frame that in a way that it captures every political representation made to a Minister, because some of those representations will be in the category of lobbying. If they are in that category and if you come to another RHI, should it be concealed that party A lobbied party B to do something? That should not be concealed, but I hear what the Member says.

Ms Sugden: I appreciate the Member's giving way. I understand what he says, but I see my role as an MLA to lobby Ministers on policy. I am held to account by the people whom I represent to ensure that I do that. I have great difficulty here, where it feels like a civil servant is holding me to account. That is not the right dynamic or direction of travel. I am held to account by the people of East Londonderry, not by a record kept by a civil servant. I would not support it if it stayed limited to a Minister's political party, but I would offer that we could extend that to political peers in the sense that it is Ministers and MLAs, if that is appropriate.

I think that because that political dynamic is something that is expected, and it is not necessarily appropriate that a civil servant almost takes on that role of holding me to account as a Member of the House. By all means, he has a direct relationship with the Minister, but he does not have that relationship with Members of the legislature.

Mr Allister: I am not sure that I entirely follow. I do not think that it is the civil servant who would be holding you to account. I do not get the essence of how it is the civil servant who is holding you to account. If you are the Minister, you are being held to account, as is the civil servant, as is the special adviser, to keep a proper record. That is where the holding to account comes in.

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr Allister: Mr Wells.

Mr Wells: The honourable Member for East Londonderry Ms Sugden has raised legitimate concerns that she has with various amendments and clauses, as have Mr Muir and Mr O'Toole. Surely the best way forward is for those individuals to allow the amendments to pass at this stage and then table amendments for Further Consideration Stage to meet their concerns, rather than vote against the amendments tonight. If they vote against them, the amendments will fall completely and there will be no opportunity whatever to amend them. Voting for them can be done tonight without prejudice, and they can make it clear that they are voting for them but reserving the right to amend or oppose them at a later stage. The danger is that the concerns that are being raised by those three individuals could lead to their parties voting against the amendments and there being no opportunity to improve them at a later stage.

Mr Allister: I think, in part, that I have indicated that. Of course, there were opportunities before today to table amendments. Until last Wednesday, there were opportunities for all of us to table amendments. If those concerns had manifested themselves in amendments, we might have had an even more constructive debate on the issues.

I started the winding-up speech on the group by saying that you will always find a reason to do nothing. By not tabling amendments and then criticising the amendments that are tabled, you can easily find a reason to vote things down. I say, however, to those who are concerned that I have indicated a willingness to be amenable to sound suggestions, but I can do that only if the clauses survive this stage. There is room to move forward. I think that Ms Sugden and Mr O'Toole have made points that require being addressed, and I am certainly more than willing to try to do that. Some of those points I can almost answer here and now, but, if we are going to have a discussion, I am happy to wait. I am not so sure that Mr Muir has indicated that he is that persuadable, but my door is open on the issues. The thrust of Mr Muir's argument was pretty much like the Sinn Féin thrust, in that codes are enough, so he does not seem to me to be willing to consider more than codes.

Mr O'Toole: Will the Member give way?

Mr Allister: I will in a moment.

If I am wrong about that, I will be delighted to have that discussion.

Mr O'Toole: I thank the Member for giving way. To be fair to him, he has been amenable throughout to conversations and feedback. If I did not make it clear enough in my speech, I say that we are certainly amenable to amendments, specifically to new clause 8A and the replacement clause 11. We find it difficult to see how clause 6 can be amended in a way that makes it, frankly, workable, so that is different. To be absolutely clear, however, our position is that we are not opposing the other two amendments but are looking to have discussions about improving them.

Mr Allister: I made the point that they hang together. There is a triumvirate connection between the recording of an internal meeting of the Department, a meeting with externals in the Department and the lobbying of Ministers etc. However, I am in the hands of the House; I cannot dictate the outcome of any of these votes.

Mr Wells: Will the Member take an intervention?

Mr Allister: Yes.

Mr Wells: Mr O'Toole seems to be trying to meet us halfway. I can do the maths here this evening. He could adopt the purist position of voting against the Bill and the amendments tonight, but, the de facto situation is that the clause that he wishes to amend will, therefore, fall. If it falls, he has no opportunity to meet Mr Allister to obtain the amendments and changes that he requires. That is the difficulty that we face if he takes a purist stance.

Mr Muir is in a much more difficult situation. He is, basically, in the Sinn Féin camp of opposing the entire Bill. From what I can see, he did not seem to support any of it. Equally, if he has concerns, he can abstain tonight to enable the Bill to go through, although he would be perfectly within his rights to vote against clauses at Further Consideration Stage. He is not going beyond the point of no return this evening. The same applies to Ms Sugden. If they wish to achieve the changes that they require, it is in their hands, because it is clear that Sinn Féin will not even vote for the colour of the cover of this legislation. They are not going to have it. Therefore, it rests with Ms Sugden, Mr O'Toole and Mr Muir whether they can obtain the changes that they want; they will not be held to it at the Further Consideration Stage. We are not going to say that, because you support it tonight, you are duty-bound to support it at Further Consideration Stage if you do not get the changes that you require.

Mr Allister: The Minister said, in respect of amendment No 15, that I had tentatively offered, at an earlier stage, to drop 8A (2)(d) in relation to the function of the Department. The Minister then said that all the rest of it is far too wide. Sorry, that is the definition of lobbying in the UK Parliament's legislation. The essence of it is being lobbied about key components, about legislation, policy and things that the Department can do, such as issuing grants and contracts. Surely, if someone is lobbied about those things, that should not remain a secret. If it turns out that a Minister makes a volte-face or suddenly announces a very generous grant to a particular interest, there will be no record, ever, of how his mind was shaped and changed by the lobbying interest.

That is why it is important that, if a significant influence is brought to bear on a subject, there should be a record of it in the Department. To deny a record of that gives a Minister carte blanche to have his mind changed by vested interests, and no one will ever be the wiser about it. It is clear from RHI that Moy Park was a very active lobbyist on tariffs, when they should be increased and when they should not be decreased, among other things. Yet, not a word of it is recorded in that Department. Was that right? I say that it was not, and I am trying to remedy that situation by requiring that, if Moy Park comes lobbying again on those issues, there has to be a record. The choice is between keeping a record or having no record and leaving yourself open to the same scenario again.

Mr Murphy: Will the Member give way?

Mr Allister: Yes, I will give way.

Mr Murphy: Of course, it is not the choice, and we have made that clear. There a requirement for records to be kept, minutes to be kept of meetings, interests to be declared and interests to be published. All of that is there. It is not a straight choice at all. The Member is going back to the premise that nothing has happened since RHI, and that is clearly not the case.

I have been struck by the past number of exchanges with his trusty sidekick Mr Wells, who has been riding wingman. The Bill has been through a Second Stage debate and a lengthy Committee Stage, during which all of the issues were talked about, and here we are, at almost 1.00 am during Consideration Stage, and there is a frantic attempt to put a sticking plaster over all of the obvious holes that have become apparent in the Bill over the course of the debate. If that is what people have to offer, I am glad that we are not biting on it.

Mr O'Dowd: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. It is now 12.55 am. The debate has been going on for approximately nine hours. The issues have been well debated. The proposer of the amendments has had ample opportunity to propose and respond. I propose that the Question now be put.

Mr Speaker: The last Member who is down to speak is on his feet. If we have no more interruptions, we may be able to get to the end of the contribution of the person who is winding up the debate. I will not move any further on that.

Mr Allister: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I am drawing to a close. I have reiterated the point that there is a fundamental choice to be made about whether you want legislation or not. If you do not, you have to explain why. That raises a number of questions. Each of the clauses, with the amendments that improve them, is worthy of support. I trust that they will receive that support. If they do, I am pledged that I will seek to address the issues that some people have with them. For some, there is no addressing them. It would not matter what I did; I could stand on my head, and it would not make any difference. However, there are Members who have genuine concerns, and I am quite prepared to deal with those, if I have the opportunity to do so.

Question put, That amendment No 13 be made.

Mr Speaker: I remind Members that they should continue to uphold social distancing. Members who have proxy voting arrangements in place should not come to the Chamber.

Before I put the Question again, I remind Members that, if possible, it would be preferable if we could avoid a Division.

Question put a second time.

Mr Speaker: Before the Assembly divides, I remind you that, as per Standing Order 112, the Assembly currently has proxy voting arrangements in place. Members who have authorised another Member to vote on their behalf are not entitled to vote in person and should not enter the Lobbies. I also remind you, once again, to ensure that social distancing continues to be observed.

The Assembly divided:

Amendment No 15 proposed: After clause 8 insert

"Record of being lobbied

8A.—(1) In the event of a minister or special adviser, other than as provided for in section 8, being lobbied, then, the minister or (as the case may be) special adviser must provide at the earliest opportunity a written record to their department of all such lobbying and the department must retain such records.

(2) In this section "being lobbied" means to receive personally a communication, either oral or written, on behalf of the person making the communication or another person or persons, relating to:

- (a) the development, adoption or modification of any proposal of the department to make or amend primary or subordinate legislation;
- (b) the development, adoption or modification of any other policy of the department;
- (c) the making, giving or issuing by the department of, or the taking of any other steps by the department in relation to, —

- (i) any contract or other agreement,
- (ii) any grant or other financial assistance, or
- (iii) any licence or other authorisation; or
- (d) the exercise of any other function of the department.

(3) For the purposes of subsection (2), it does not matter whether the communication occurs in or outwith the United Kingdom.

(4) Nothing in this section shall apply to a communication

New clause ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 9 (Use of official systems)

Amendment No 16 proposed: Leave out clause 9 and insert

9.—(1) A minister, special adviser or civil servant when communicating on official business by electronic means must not use personal accounts or anything other than devices issued by the department, systems used by the department and departmental email addresses.

(2) If out of necessity it is not possible to comply with the requirements of subsection (1) the minister or (as the case may be) special adviser or civil servant must within 48 hours, or as soon thereafter as reasonably practicable,

(a) copy to the departmental system any written material generated during the use of non-departmental devices or systems; and

(b) make an accurate record on the departmental system of any verbal communications relating to departmental matters.

(3) It shall be an offence for any minister, special adviser or civil servant to fail to comply with the requirements of subsection (2).

(4) In proceedings in respect of a charge against a person ("A") of the offence under subsection (3), it is a defence for A to show that the course of behaviour was reasonable in the particular circumstances or was in the public interest.

(5) A person is taken to have shown the fact mentioned in subsection (4) if —

(a) evidence adduced is enough to raise an issue as to whether the course of behaviour is as described in subsection (4), and

(b) the prosecution does not prove beyond reasonable doubt that the course of behaviour is not as described in subsection (4).

(6) A person guilty of an offence under this section is liable on conviction

(a) on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 2 years;

(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months or a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum or both."— [Mr Allister.]

Budget (No. 3) Bill: Royal Assent

Mr Speaker: I wish to inform the Assembly that the Budget (No. 3) Bill has received Royal Assent. The Budget (No. 3) Act (NI) 2020 became law on 25 November 2020. It is chapter 6.

Committee Membership

Mr Speaker: The first item of business in the Order Paper is a motion regarding Committee membership. As with similar motions, it will be treated as a business motion and there will be no debate.

Resolved:

That Ms Nicola Brogan be appointed as a member of the Committee for Education and as a member of the Committee on Procedures. — [Ms Ennis.]

Mr Speaker: I welcome Ms Brogan to the Committees.

Ministerial Statement

NSMC: Languages Sectoral Format

Mr Speaker: I have received notice from the Minister for Communities that she wishes to make a statement. Before I call the Minister, I remind Members that, in light of social distancing being observed by the parties, the Speaker's ruling that Members must be in the Chamber to hear the statement if they wish to ask a question has been relaxed. Members still need to make sure that their name is on the speaking list if they wish to be called, but they can do that by rising in their place as well as notifying the Business Office or the Speaker's Table directly. I remind Members to be concise in asking their questions.

Ms Ni Chuilín (The Minister for Communities): With your permission, Mr Speaker, I wish to make a statement regarding the North/South Ministerial Council (NSMC) Language Body meeting.

The meeting was held virtually on 27 November 2020. The Executive were represented by me, as Minister for Communities, and by Minister Lyons. The Irish Government were represented by Jack Chambers TD, Minister of State with responsibility for Gaeltacht Affairs and Sport, who also chaired the meeting. This statement has been agreed with Minister Lyons, and I am making it on behalf of both of us.

The meeting dealt with issues relating to the North/South Language Body and its two constituent agencies, the Ulster-Scots Agency and Foras na Gaeilge. The following topics were discussed and decisions were taken where appropriate. As part of their opening remarks, Ministers acknowledged that it would have been preferable for the first NSMC sectoral meeting since June 2016 to have been held in the NSMC secretariat offices in Armagh. However, it was recognised that the meeting was being held remotely in support of the current public health efforts.

Following the opening remarks, Minister Chambers introduced the remaining items for discussion at the meeting. I will begin with the response to COVID-19. Ministers welcomed the continued commitment of all staff and organisations in both jurisdictions who have worked to promote and provide support to the Irish language and Ulster-Scots sectors during the COVID-19 pandemic. Ministers noted the impact of the pandemic on the sector and the measures put in place by both Administrations to prevent the closure of key organisations, stabilise the sector and support longer-term recovery, renewal and change. Ministers noted the productive, ongoing cooperation between both Administrations and the North/

South Language Body in relation to supports for Irish language and Ulster-Scots communities facing challenges arising from the COVID-19 pandemic.

Ministers noted that the agencies that comprise the North/South Language Body will continue to work together with both sponsor Departments to consider the impact of withdrawal from the EU. Ministers noted that the body does not anticipate significant impacts on the sector and that the matter will be kept under review at future NSMC meetings in the sector.

The Council noted the progress reports for 2017-2020 that were received from the chief executive officers of the Ulster-Scots Agency and Foras na Gaeilge, and the key achievements of the North/South Language Body since the last sectoral meeting. Those achievements include the distribution of more than £4 million in grant aid to support Ulster-Scots cultural activities across Ulster; the development of the Discover Ulster-Scots centre in east Donegal and refurbishment of the Monreagh Ulster-Scots Heritage Centre, Carrigans; the publication by Foras na Gaeilge of the online English-Irish dictionary and subsequent launch of the print version, which is being distributed to bookshops; the support provided by Foras na Gaeilge to some 400 organisations annually, through 23 schemes and funding provided to approximately 170 groups under the schemes for young people, some 50 groups supporting festivals and 18 drama companies.

The Council approved the appointment of Daithí Mac Cárthaigh, Dr Neasa Ní Chiaráin and Ola Majekodunmi as board members of the North/South Language Body. The Council agreed to hold its next language body meeting in early 2021.

Ms P Bradley (The Chairperson of the Committee for Communities): I thank the Minister for her statement to the House. The statement talked about the response to COVID-19 for the various sectors. That was very welcome. We know that the £660,000 to the Ulster Scots resilience fund and the £1.2 million to the Irish language fund — I stand corrected if either figure or the date is wrong — is due to close on Wednesday. Has the Minister had any indication of whether those have been oversubscribed? I hope that they have. If so, will she look at putting more money towards both organisations to help anybody who did not receive any?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for her question. The COVID pandemic has been a challenging time for the Ulster-Scots Agency and Foras na Gaeilge. The figure for the Ulster-Scots Agency is slightly higher — it is £850,000 — and everything is on track. I will be talking to the Ulster-Scots Agency, Conradh na Gaeilge and Ciste na hInfheistíochta. Foras na Gaeilge did not administer the Irish language funding because it said that it could not deliver on time, which would have meant a bigger delay between Ulster Scots getting funds and the Irish language getting its funds. The other two groups were therefore supported by Foras na Gaeilge to deliver. I look forward to getting a report when the applications have closed to see what additional support, if any, they need.

Mr Speaker: I thank the Minister and the Chairperson of the Committee for Communities.

Mr Lynch: Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as a ráiteas. I thank the Minister for her statement. What impact has the COVID-19 pandemic had on the operation of the North/

South Language Body and its ability to continue to support its lead organisation?

Ms Ni Chuilín: That relates to the question that was asked by the Chair of the Committee, which I have responded to. The numbers that both bodies had in through their premises and, indeed, in some of their groups have obviously decreased. A lot of online and virtual events have taken place, including Irish language classes, musical tuition for the Ulster-Scots Agency and lots more. It has been very challenging, and fair play to both bodies, which have done their best throughout the pandemic and worked very hard to support the groups and the sectors within each body throughout the pandemic. All the feedback that I have received, from groups on the ground during the pandemic, about the work of the Ulster-Scots Agency and Foras na Gaeilge has been positive. They were heartened to hear that at the meeting on Friday.

Mr Durkan: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle agus gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as an ráiteas. What consultation has there been with the Irish Government around developing a legislative programme on language development of an Gaeilge?

Ms Ni Chuilín: That was not discussed at the meeting on Friday. As the Member will appreciate, a lot of the items for discussion were retrospective and related to the recent absence of the Assembly. The Irish and British Governments are sponsors of New Decade, New Approach agreement. We will be bringing forward legislation very soon.

The Member also knows that my Department has responsibility for the Irish language strategy and the strategy for Ulster-Scots culture and heritage. Those panels have been appointed, and they will be brought forward soon.

Mrs Barton: I thank the Minister for her answers so far. Minister, in your statement regarding the language body progress reports, you talk about the distribution of £4 million in grant aid to support Ulster-Scots cultural activities across Ulster. You go on to talk about the support provided by Foras na Gaeilge to 400 organisations in 23 separate schemes, but I see nothing in relation to the finance there. Can you give me some idea of how much that has cost?

Ms Ni Chuilín: Sorry, I am not clear.

Mrs Barton: How much are you are putting towards that? You talk about the £4 million that went towards the Ulster-Scots culture. How much did the support to the 400 organisations annually through 23 separate schemes etc cost?

Ms Ni Chuilín: I do not have all those details to hand, but I will write to the Member. Just to be clear: the Member asks what each of the groups in Ulster Scots got under that funding. I do not have that information, but I will certainly provide it to the Member.

Mrs Barton: Sorry, but I wanted to know about the other one — Foras na Gaeilge; those are the groups that I asked about.

Ms Ni Chuilín: No bother. I will get the Member that as well.

Mrs Barton: Thank you.

Ms Armstrong: Thank you very much, Minister. You are right to pay tribute to Foras na Gaeilge and the Ulster-Scots Agency for all their work during COVID and beyond.

You said that the North/South Ministerial Council wants to provide for and promote the Irish language and Ulster Scots. We know that legislation needs to be brought forward for the commissioners for both. Will the Minister confirm how soon that legislation will come forward? Will it be under accelerated passage, or will it just come through as normal?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for her question, but that was not covered as part of the NSMC meeting. The NSMC, last Friday, took a retrospective look at the work of both bodies from 2017 to 2020. Perhaps the Member should ask TEO to answer her question. In my response to Mark Durkan's question about the legislation, I said that I am responsible for the strategies for both. I am working on those and trying to make as much progress as possible, because it is quite clear that legislation is needed to protect both.

Mr Newton: I thank the Minister for her statement and answers so far. Was the Northern Ireland centenary and the positive role that both organisations might play discussed? If not, will the Minister place it on the agenda for next meeting?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his question. It was not discussed. Had it been discussed, it would have been in my statement. I know that Foras na Gaeilge and the Ulster-Scots Agency are working on a programme for 2021 and beyond, and I have absolutely no doubt that it will be included in their forward work programme.

Ms Ennis: I thank the Minister for her statement. What measures are in place to ensure public accountability for the funds allocated to the North/South Language Body's agencies to deal with the COVID pandemic?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for her question. There were places that needed to be filled on some of the bodies, and that has been done. They are filling the rest of the places, so that is the accountability. While Foras na Gaeilge and the Ulster-Scots Agency's chief executive officers report directly to the NSMC sectoral meeting, they are held to account by their board. Once their board membership is completed, that will ensure full scrutiny.

Mr Easton: I thank the Minister for her statement so far. Minister, in your statement you mentioned that:

"Ministers noted the impact of the pandemic on the sector".

Will you outline some of the impacts that were discussed?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his question. He probably knows from work in his constituency that there were festivals, face-to-face classes, dance and music tuition, work on historical documents, heritage classes, events and seminars that all had to be cancelled as a result of the pandemic. The face-to-face work at least had to be cancelled. As far as was possible, the Ulster-Scots Agency and Foras na Gaeilge did a lot of virtual stuff with groups. An Cultúrlann in west Belfast has lost a lot of money as a result of the restrictions, and other events have been hit financially. I felt that it was important that the Ulster-Scots Agency and the Irish language were supported out of the money for arts, culture and heritage because their financial loss as a result of COVID needed to be reflected in the overall arts, culture and heritage package.

Mr Sheehan: Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as ucht a ráitis inniu. I thank the Minister for her statement today. Will the Minister tell us when we can expect to see a business plan for 2021 and a corporate plan for the 2020-22 period?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his question. Early in the new year, if not sooner, corporate and business plans will be brought forward by the bodies. The next sectoral meeting is in the new year, and we will have a full NSMC, so outstanding documents such as those can maybe be brought forth. My information is that, because we had to clear a lot of the retrospective documents, both agencies have been working on their business and corporate plans. I anticipate that those will be almost good to go.

Mr McGlone: Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as an ráiteas fosta. An féidir leis an Aire a insint dúinn cén cineál malartaithe tuairimí agus malartaithe taitní atá tosaithe le Rialtas na hÉireann i dtaobh fhorbairt na Gaeilge? Will the Minister tell us what sort of exchanges of information, views and experiences on the development of Irish language legislation there has been with the Irish Government?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his question. Had the development of the Irish language been part of the NSMC, it would have been in the statement. In response to another question, I know that the Irish and British Governments are, as we speak, fulfilling their NDNA commitments with regard to the funds that are coming forward. My Department has responsibility for the Irish language and Ulster-Scots culture and heritage strategies, and I assure the Member that I am making good progress on them. That is a question that the Member needs to ask TEO. Had it been discussed at the sectoral meeting, it would have been in the statement.

Mr Beggs: I thank the Minister for her statement. It refers to Foras na Gaeilge supporting some 400 organisations annually; 23 separate schemes; 170 groups under the schemes for young people; 50 groups supporting festivals; and 18 drama companies. Can the Minister provide a detailed breakdown showing how all that funding is used and indicate the numbers of organisations, schemes, groups supporting young people, groups supporting festivals and drama companies in the Ulster-Scots community as well those in the Irish language community?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his question. As it is almost identical to his colleague's, I will give both sets of breakdowns to both Members from the Ulster Unionist Party.

Mr Frew: I thank the Minister for her statement. Have the Ministers in either country conducted any detailed impact assessment of how cultural activity and sport have been impacted by lockdowns? Has the Minister identified the long-term damage involved, and has she been able to adapt her strategies to suit?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his question. Each of us will have looked at the overall impact of COVID-19. That is why I brought forward money for the Ulster-Scots Agency and, indeed, for Conradh na Gaeilge and the Ciste Infheistíochta Gaeilge. A lot of the work that those groups do, particularly with youth groups, normally happens in halls, so the halls have lost money, the caterers have lost money and the freelancers involved in those events have lost money. They are all part of the fabric that makes up Ulster Scots and, indeed, the Irish language. That is why it was critical that, when we were investing money in arts, culture and heritage across the board, those two were not left behind. There has been substantial financial loss, but I want to put it on record that both agencies have gone above and beyond to try to keep, as much as possible, the links to the groups that they have worked with for years and have done their best to keep communication going in very difficult circumstances.

Ms Bradshaw: Thank you, Minister, for your statement. There appear to be four vacant positions on the board of the Ulster-Scots Agency. I think that you touched on it previously, but could you give us some details and timescales for the appointment process to fill those vacancies?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for her question. I expect all those positions to be filled early in the new year and those people to have had their governance training, orientation and everything else before the next NSMC sectoral meeting.

Mr Allister: Can the Minister clarify this: is there still an active board in respect of Foras na Gaeilge? I ask that because, according to its website, there has been no board meeting for which minutes have been produced since January 2019 and, indeed, no minutes have been produced in English since 2018. Why is that?

In respect of the assistance given to the Irish language groups to disburse COVID-19 money, can that money be spent outside the jurisdiction of Northern Ireland?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his questions. They are good questions — not that the Member ever asks questions that are not wonderful. It is a matter of public record, so we need to know why the minutes have not been on the website. I will certainly ask about that.

The COVID-19 money that the Assembly and Executive have given to groups is spent in the North. If the Member is suggesting differently, he needs to bring examples to me.

Mr Speaker: That concludes questions on the statement. Members should take their ease for a moment or two before we move to the next item on the Order Paper.

Executive Committee Business

Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 11) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020

Mr Speaker: Members, the next items of business are motions to approve three statutory rules (SRs), all of which relate to the health protection (coronavirus) regulations. There will be a single debate on all three motions. I will ask the Clerk to read the first motion and then call on the Minister to move it. The Minister will then commence the debate on all of the motions that are listed on the Order Paper. When all Members who wish to speak have done so, I shall put the Question on the first motion. The second motion will then be read into the record, and I will call the Minister to move it. The Question will then be put on that motion, and that process will be repeated for the remaining statutory rule. If that is clear, I shall proceed.

Mr Swann (The Minister of Health): I beg to move

That the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 11) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved.

The following motions stood in the Order Paper:

That the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 12) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved. — [Mr Swann (The Minister of Health).]

That the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Wearing of Face Coverings) (Amendment No. 3) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved. — [Mr Swann (The Minister of Health).]

Mr Speaker: The Business Committee has agreed that there should be no time limit on this debate.

Mr Swann: The three sets of regulations before the Assembly make specific amendments to the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) Regulations and the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Wearing of Face Coverings) Regulations, but, before I move to the detail of each of the SRs, I must place on record my disappointment that neither the Minister for the Economy nor the Minister of Education agreed to my request for either or both of them to lead on the Assembly's scrutiny of the changes — changes, I might add, that were primarily made only following direct requests from those Ministers on specific and detailed amendments.

Were I not to move the regulations today, they would have fallen, yet, despite their not being my Department's amendments, I suspect that Members will agree that it was important that such an outcome should be avoided. Whilst, in their virtually identical responses to me, both felt that they were not accountable for the regulations, I have already expressed my belief that, during an unprecedented global public health crisis, there should be no space for Ministers or Departments to work in silos. That is why I especially welcomed the previous commitment from the First Minister and deputy First Minister that regulations would be tabled and led in the Assembly by the relevant Minister. Although that was, regrettably, not the case today, I thank the Ministers who have shown or are shortly to show generosity with their time and support, namely the two junior Ministers, the Communities Minister and the Justice Minister.

I will move on to the issues at hand. SRs 232 and 239 amend the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) Regulations in a specific and narrow way. The amendments achieve the following. The amendment No. 11 regulations ensure, first, that the categorisation of tourist accommodation within the restrictions regulations follows the existing formulations in the Tourism (Northern Ireland) Order 1992. That will simply ensure clarity around types of accommodation that were not explicitly set out in the original drafting, such as hostels. Secondly, they ensure that people who rely on a carer are not prevented from taking individual exercise. We have made sure that, where a person needs assistance in entering a swimming pool, for instance, that is not inadvertently restricted. Thirdly, they ensure that the restrictions on the close-contact sector do not extend so far as to prevent make-up and hairdressing for film and television production that is under way during the period of the restrictions.

My Department was made aware of the impact that the restriction would have had on ongoing productions and responded by making the exception on the condition that extensive protective measures were in place. The industry standards are high, and I understand that this has allowed those productions to continue. Fourthly, they ensure that motorhomes are categorised with touring caravans in the regulations, so that, where sites for touring caravans are closed, the same restriction is placed on the sites for motorhomes.

The amendment No 12 regulations ensure that there is no restriction on school physical education as a consequence of the restriction on sports events. That would, clearly, be an inappropriate restriction on children's education and a barrier to schools delivering the curriculum. They ensure that, where tables are set up outside a bar or café, they are treated as part of the premises and are subject to restrictions as much as where there is outside seating. We were made aware of instances of businesses seeking to subvert the intention of the original restrictions by having stand-up tables that would have allowed customers to loiter around the premises as much as if there had been seating and, thereby, undermining the effectiveness of the original restriction.

These may be small matters in themselves, but they are intended to ensure the integrity of the Executive's restrictions and reflect our understanding of the impact that they are having on people. Some of the amendments tighten the restrictions slightly, and others loosen them slightly. In anything that we have done, we have sought to assess the risk — the risk of increased infection associated with loosening restrictions and the risk of serious negative consequences for individuals and the community if legitimate and valuable aspects of life are restricted.

SR 233 amends the wearing of face coverings regulations. The amended regulations were made on 29 October and came into force immediately. Their purpose is to mandate the use of face coverings by post-primary pupils on home-to-school transport and public transport. Previous amendments to face coverings legislation had extended the requirement to use a face covering on all buses, coaches and taxis but not school transport. An exemption existed for children under 13 years of age. The amendments to the regulations has been made so that only children who are not yet at secondary school are now exempt from wearing a face covering on school transport or public transport. The term "junior pupil not yet receiving secondary education" exempts children under 11 years and six months old who are not yet at secondary school from wearing a face covering. The exemptions from medical and other requirements remain unchanged. The regulations were put in place before school resumed on 2 November 2020.

Mr Gildernew (The Chairperson of the Committee for Health): Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle agus gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire. Thank you, Mr Speaker and my thanks to the Minister for his statement.

The Health Committee was briefed by departmental officials on the three statutory rules on 12 November and agreed to recommend that they be confirmed by the Assembly. With regard to amendments No. 11 and No. 12, to the No. 2 regulations, members raised issues of process, inquired about consultation and alignment between Departments and asked about equality considerations.

On process, the Committee asked officials about the potential, moving forward, for the Department to resume its engagement with the Committee at the stage of policy development, although, clearly, that would be subject to a degree of uncertainty, given the circumstances. No assurance was offered on facilitating better scrutiny, something that remains of concern to the Committee. The number of sets of amendments and the volume of technical amendments were also raised. Officials explained that that results from working at speed to respond to rapidly changing circumstances. We were informed that a cross-departmental working group meets weekly to consider the policy detail resulting from Executive decisions but, given the time constraints, gaps are hard to avoid, although they can be plugged quickly via amending regulations such as we have today. It was suggested to officials that further consideration be given to cross-departmental considerations of policy alignment in the current context. One member cited an example of street furniture being installed during a period of restrictions on hospitality.

The Committee also probed consideration of equality issues in the absence of formal equality impact assessments. Officials advised that the human rights context and the proportionality of restrictions were considered in respect of each statutory rule and that the Department sought to strike a balance between the impact on rights generally and the impact of not imposing restrictions, given the nature of the pandemic. Pressed on the adequacy of the current approach, officials conceded that there was recognition of the need for more granular consideration of equality issues and that how that might be approached was under consideration.

I now turn to the face coverings amendment. Members were advised that the percentage of passengers wearing face coverings on public transport had gone up from 10% to 85% as a result of them becoming mandatory in that setting. On that basis, it was hoped that the rule would also prove effective in extending the requirements to post-primary school children on home-to-school transport and public transport. It was suggested that officials consider the inconsistent messaging in continuing to exempt children from wearing face coverings in retail settings. The rationale offered was that social distancing is more feasible in many retail settings, unlike public transport, but the director of population health undertook to consider the messaging point further with the face coverings working group chaired by the Executive Office.

Officials were also asked about any potential harm deriving from unhygienic practices in the use of face coverings. They advised that, on balance, research showed that there remained a net benefit from the wearing of face coverings.

Agreeing on the evidence in favour of face coverings, members enquired about plans to widen requirements to use face coverings in indoor settings generally and the extent of the Department's research on international experience and best practice, particularly that of south-east Asian countries that have successfully reduced transmission of the disease and where face coverings have been routinely used for some time. The Committee intends to seek a wider briefing on the evidence in the new year.

On foot of questions about the links between sets of regulations, officials confirmed that almost all regulations on face coverings are now separate and will not fall with temporary additional restrictions.

If I may, a Cheann Comhairle, I will say a few words as Sinn Féin spokesperson on health. The statutory rules were made and came into force in late October and early November, with much of the content relating to clarifications, for example, on close-contact services working in TV and film production. The House must take the measures and restrictions seriously, as they impact in many ways on the lives and livelihoods of the public, even if those restrictions are time-limited and subject to change in a few weeks' time.

Two things are vital: communicating a plan, purpose and strategy; and, importantly, putting in place the means to achieve that strategy. I welcome any clarifications that can be made. It is better that they are not needed, but, when they are needed, it is right to get them made and put through.

On achieving the desired outcome, I raise the issue of compliance. We have heard how, with face coverings on public transport, we saw compliance increase to an estimated 85%. I would like that to be further increased where possible, which means enforcement. It also means — this is a crucial point — that we need to ensure that everyone is aware of what is required and, importantly, that there are no barriers to compliance. That, for example, means supporting business with grants, providing workers with statutory sick pay and ensuring that people have masks or something to cover their nose and mouth where needed. When people are struggling financially, we need to consider the cost of masks.

As we enter the winter months, those remain some of the challenges and tests that will not go away. We must work together effectively to meet the challenges in the weeks and months ahead.

Mrs Cameron: I intend to be fairly brief. At the outset of yet another coronavirus health restrictions debate, I put it on record that my thoughts are with those families who have been bereaved — the number is nearing the 1,000 mark — and very much affected by the pandemic.

Obviously, the restrictions and regulations put barriers in the way of normal everyday life, of the right to work, the right to family life and, indeed, even the right to public worship. The Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 11) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 set out the changes to the places where restrictions will apply and gives additional clarity, including some exemptions, to the restrictions, with the biggest restriction, obviously, to business. It is worth remembering that businesses have bills to pay and food to provide. In recent weeks, many businessespeople across South Antrim have contacted me in utter despair at not being able to pay the bills and feed their families. That is a reality, not an exaggeration. While we can produce restrictions, it appears that we cannot produce money in a timely manner to support those people, of whom we ask so much at this time. It is right that we put on record the sacrifice that they are making. In my book, it certainly is not good enough, and I appeal to the Finance Minister to do more and do it faster.

Ms S Bradley: Will the Member give way?

Mrs Cameron: I will indeed.

Ms S Bradley: I appreciate the Member's words. As an MLA, I am inundated with calls from businesses that genuinely do not know whether they can keep their doors open. Will she be fair and make that call to the Department for the Economy and her party colleague, who absolutely needs to step up quickly?

Mrs Cameron: I thank the Member for the intervention. Certainly, I welcome the cross-Executive work that is going on, and we ask all Ministers who have responsibility in areas of support to put their shoulder to the wheel.

Once again, there is a great deal of confusion, which has not been helped by the ambiguity in the regulations and their late publication. Businesses that have multiple facets are unsure whether they can open at this time and whether they can sell non-essential goods. On the other hand, businesses that sell entirely so-called non-essential goods are watching their high-street competition selling the same products as they are forbidden to sell.

I welcome the fact that the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 12) Regulations provide for physical education to take place in schools and other educational settings. We know how important that is as part of a child's school day, given that exercise brings physical and mental benefits.

Mr Buckley: I thank the Member for giving way. I totally agree with her about the need to focus on children's physical activity to ensure their mental and physical well-being. Does the Member for South Antrim concur with me that it is also important that we look at the adult population's mental and physical well-being in relation to the restrictions? I think particularly of the many thousands of gym attendees across the Province at the moment. For many of them, their only form of exercise is in a gym setting. With the onset of winter, dark nights and, indeed, adverse weather, sometimes, that gym setting is the only way in which they can get physical exercise. Does the Member agree with my call and, indeed, the Committee's call for dialogue between the Minister and the Department and gym businesses and attendees to ensure that we can find physical and mental well-being in the winter months?

Mr Speaker: I remind Members to stick to the scope of the regulations in hand this afternoon.

Mrs Cameron: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I thank the Member for his intervention. I see his point completely. Certainly, from my view, even while out walking the dogs yesterday, I was very aware that the fairly small path that I took through a forest and down to the lough was very crowded. That is the knock-on impact that the closure of the likes of gyms has created, with cyclists, runners and entire families out doing their best to do something healthy, to get out there and to look after their physical and mental well-being. The closures are certainly having a knock-on impact as well.

We have had these debates on many, many occasions. To be honest, much of this is repetition. Maybe that is because we as a society are in a cyclical crisis. We make progress, and then we regress, but we want to break this cycle and the current lockdown. The restrictions, albeit that they are flawed in many ways, are rightly aimed at driving down the number of cases, saving lives and protecting our health service from being overwhelmed. I very much welcome it that our clinicians are doing their utmost to keep as much of our health service as possible going throughout the second wave of coronavirus. We all must look on the restrictions as an opportunity to do the little bit that we can to support our NHS staff in keeping as much of the health service open and operational as possible. We can all help by restricting our movements. This is another chance for us to do the right thing now. Otherwise, we will be back in that cycle once more.

Amendment No. 3, which refers to the wearing of face coverings, extends the requirement to wear a face covering to post-primary school children on school transport and on other public transport.

I finish, yet again, with an appeal to all to wash your hands, wear a mask, keep your distance from others, including family who do not live in your house, and cut down on your contacts to protect your friends, your family and your colleagues. That is what we ask of everyone. If we all do that, we can indeed break the cycle.

Mr McGrath: I welcome the opportunity to participate in the debate. I acknowledge the Minister of Health's insight into the DUP's ministerial version of teamwork, but we all know that a team is only as strong as everybody playing their part. I hope that all Ministers will do what they can to try to help with the workload of responding to COVID.

The three regulations that we are being asked to ratify are those that were laid before the Assembly on Thursday 29 October. I pay tribute to our healthcare staff who continue to fight the invisible enemy in the wards and corridors of our hospitals, in care homes and in houses. I extend my deepest sympathies to families impacted by the passing of loved ones.

Members will be all too familiar with the process by which regulations and amendments are laid in the Assembly. Some of the regulations that we give consideration to today, as we try to wrestle with the decision of whether to agree with them, have actually lapsed. Surely, there must be a better way for us to carry out this business. A better approach would be that, when the amendments are drafted, they are brought to the Chamber for debate and discussion, so that we can interrogate the decisions taken and ask questions about their various impacts, in order that we understand the process and can go back to our constituents with the details of those decisions.

Mr Buckley: Will the Member give way on that point?

Mr McGrath: That is not surprising from the Member.

Mr Buckley: I thank the Member for giving way. He has passionately articulated that point at the Committee. Does the Member agree that one of the increasingly difficult parts to justify in relation to the delay in regulations coming to the Committee and the House is the fact that, for example, on a Thursday when the Health Committee meets, we have a situation where new regulations will come in on the Friday morning? That results in a communication breakdown as to what should apply and what has previously applied.

Mr McGrath: I thank the Member for his intervention. To simplify it, I think that there is a better way of doing it. It would not take much to sit down with a blank page and to work out the best process for making sure that we can participate in the decision-making and understand it. If we understand it, we can articulate that to our constituents. How often have Members had a phone call or email about a regulation from a constituent and said, "I do not know the answer to that" and then set about the difficult process of trying to find out that information?

On the regulations themselves, the first of the issues clarifies what was lacking, specifically in regard to self-catering accommodation, indoor exercise, closure of hostels, caravans, clarity on where close-contact services can operate and some restrictions on outdoor seating. The second provides clarity for physical education to take place in an educational setting and clarity on facilities adjacent to hospitality premises. The third legislates that post-primary schoolchildren must wear a face covering on school and public transport.

I place this on the record: what does it say about us that we are legislating for children to wear face coverings, when an MP who sat in this House and was a Minister in the Executive, once upon a time, continues to throw this back in the face of those children, in believing that he is above such practices, whilst taking the money from the parents of those children via their taxes to pay for the face masks that he does not wear properly? I implore his colleagues opposite to get this knocked on the head, even at this late hour, eight months into a world-wide pandemic.

Many changes have been made to the regulations from the ones that we are discussing today. We are in a period of lockdown, with non-essential retail closed and many other elements of daily life restricted. My experience of the most recent regulations is that they have been as unhelpful as past ones. What is non-essential? What is homework? How much of your produce constitutes "significant"? What about car washes? Are music lessons educational? Are Irish dance classes different —.

Mr Speaker: Sorry, could the Member get back to the scope of the regulations? You are straying well beyond those and into the new ones.

Mr McGrath: Thank you, Mr Speaker, but the regulations —.

Mr Allister: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. I am obliged. I would like clarification. We have debated a sequence of these regulations for many successive weeks. On each of those weeks, the Chair, in recognition of the reality that events have moved on, has permitted discussion that brings the matter more up to date. Are you today making a contrary ruling so as to restrict us to regulations, some of which are no longer extant or even relevant?

Mr Speaker: First of all, let me assure the Member that I am fully aware of the rulings on scope and how the Speaker or Deputy Speakers will conduct debates. I am involved in the decision-making for making the call on that, so I am fully aware of the nature of the debate and how it should be conducted.

Very often, Ministers and others have widened the scope of the regulations. That is why we have been giving Members the latitude that is necessary for them to do their best to explore the issues and to allow them robust scrutiny. I am reminding Members to stick to the scope of the regulations that are on the Order Paper today. That is not a new regulation. The Deputy Speakers have tried, on a number of occasions, to bring Members back to the debate at hand.

We give latitude and we will always give latitude to allow Members to do their job of exercising full scrutiny and accountability. By the same token, it is reasonable to keep people within the scope of the regulations, and the Deputy Speakers and I frequently and routinely do that. I hope that that assures the Member.

Mr McGrath: Thank you very much, Mr Speaker, and I will, of course, comply with your ruling, but it shows once again the farcical nature of the debate that we must curtail ourselves when the public are suffering from the regulations that have been enacted over last number of weeks. They have questions and concerns about regulations, but we cannot discuss them here in a timely manner.

That is quite sad, because it raises question after question. We are sent an email on regulations to seek out that information, but sometimes it takes days if not weeks before you get an answer. The communication from the Executive Office about restrictions lacks detail and information, and it creates more questions than answers.

The only thing that is certain about the Executive Office's communications on regulations is the eye-watering budget that it has to spend on that communication. The businesses that are impacted make an application for help, and, for some, that application falls into a big, dark hole and they do not see or hear anything about it for weeks, not knowing if they will or will not get financial assistance so that they can comply with the regulations.

People are hurting. The Executive supply financial help, but it appears that not everyone is getting it in a timely manner. The Department for the Economy and its Minister need to pull up their socks and get their part of the COVID response right. People's livelihoods are depending on it.

I continue to accept the need for these regulations and their amendments, even if they have lapsed. The health and well-being of the public at this time remain my number-one priority. While I support the motion, I continue to implore the Health Minister to examine whether there is a different way that we can do these regulations.

Ms Bradshaw: I do not intend to speak for long. All that needs to be said about the regulations that we are talking about today was said at the Committee in a very long, interesting session with departmental officials about the challenges of developing such regulations at speed.

I very much appreciate that what we are discussing today are, in some ways, technical amendments in order to give clarity. I want to pick up and go into greater detail on the point that the Chair of the Committee raised when he talked about a need for greater cooperation across Departments. In my constituency of South Belfast, the Department for Infrastructure introduced what are called parklets outside a coffee shop, where people have seating that they manage and are now using. It is not businesses providing the seating but the Department.

That issue was raised with me in the context that coffee shops down the road that are doing take-away coffees feel a wee bit aggrieved. That initiative speaks to the need for Departments to work together so that anything that is taken forward is about trying to achieve compliance with the public health regulations. I also place on record my appreciation of the fact that the wearing of face coverings has now been extended to all post-primary pupils. It was confusing and difficult for people on trains to decipher who should be wearing them and who should not.

That brings us to the wider chaos that has surrounded the development of the regulations. At the Committee session, it was pointed out that a period is required between the Executive agreeing and announcing new restrictions and the regulations being drafted to put them into effect, and that there is a further period while they are ironed out by further amendments such as Nos. 11 and 12, which we are nominally debating.

I will not say much more, but I want to pick up on a point made by Jonathan Buckley, who joined the Health Committee recently. I am one of those gym goers who try to go every morning, although I probably only make it about four or five mornings a week. Maybe it was just at the gym that I go to, but, last Thursday morning, there was a strong sense that we are closing for only two weeks. They understand, given the capacity of our health service, the need to get this right so that we do not have a lot of infections over the Christmas period. I have a great deal of sympathy for people who run independent gyms, whose salaries may be affected. However, I think that, amongst gym goers —.

Mr McGrath: Will the Member give way?

Ms Bradshaw: Sure.

Mr McGrath: The Member's point is very relevant. I am another one of those gym goers, although it may not show. I have heard from one-on-one trainers and from gym owners that, if they can get financial help in a timely manner, they will comply. It is not an issue of closing; they understand what they have to do. It is about getting the financial help in a timely manner that would help them to do it.

Ms Bradshaw: Absolutely. That goes to the heart of it. They do not want outbreaks in gyms; they do not want anybody who they work with to be affected. They see the benefits —.

Mr Buckley: Will the Member give way?

Ms Bradshaw: Go ahead.

Mr Buckley: I do not want to stray, but I have spoken to many gym users. I had correspondence from a nurse who finds that the gym is the only place that she can take care of her mental and physical well-being. I understand where some are coming from, but there are many gym users and gym owners across Northern Ireland —

Mr Speaker: The Member is now straying.

Mr Buckley: — for whom it is not financial; it is mental and physical well-being that is the concern.

Ms Bradshaw: I will bring it to a close. I was walking along Loughshore at 6.45 am today and nearly got the head blown off me, so I do understand why it does not suit everybody to go out walking early in the morning.

Lastly, I urge the public to stick to the regulations that have just been brought in. I understand the frustration at the situation and at our politics, but there is no reason for us to introduce such tough measures other than to protect public health and our Health and Social Care system. Instead of seeking loopholes, let us understand one thing: the more closely we stick to the regulations, the sooner we can ease them.

Mr Middleton: Like others, I pay tribute to our health staff, and to all our front-line workers, for the tireless work that they have been doing, and my thoughts and prayers are with all those who are affected by COVID-19. As others have said, it feels repetitive to be speaking on these issues, given that the restrictions have already been implemented. Nonetheless, it is important that we say a few words on them.

(Mr Principal Deputy Speaker [Mr Stalford] in the Chair)

The Health Minister made a point in his opening remarks about silo mentalities. We need to be mindful that working in silos is not helpful. I have said in the Chamber before that, given how the Executive work, when the Executive take decisions, uncomfortable as those decisions may be for individual Members, including me, it is important that we show a united front when we deliver those messages. However, that also applies to the schemes. I see Members across the Chamber who will trip over themselves to welcome initiatives from the likes of the Economy Minister and then trip over themselves to be the first to criticise. We need to work collectively to ensure that we can deliver the outcomes that we want to see.

Mr McCrossan: I thank the Member for giving way. The Member will appreciate that this is not about anyone tripping over anything. This is about ensuring that those who are most in need receive financial intervention in a timely way to ensure that they can make the best decisions in the interests of the public and of their own businesses.

That is why we are “tripping over” things: to ensure that they get the necessary financial intervention.

1.00 pm

Mr Middleton: I thank the Member for that. I do not disagree, in that what we do —.

Mr Clarke: Will the Member give way?

Mr Middleton: Go ahead.

Mr Clarke: The Member will note that, when the previous Member who spoke was on his feet, he was not tripping over himself to defend Belfast International Airport. Until last week, his Minister had not made any intervention there but had rushed to get money to the City of Derry Airport.

Mr Middleton: I thank the Member for that. The point that we are all trying to get to is that we all want to get the best for our constituents and businesses. We do not want to see the continuing politicisation of a lot of the issues. Point-scoring, Facebook posts, Twitter videos and all that — the public can cut through that stuff. It is important that we support the Ministers, who are trying hard, and particularly the officials, who are doing their best to support those who need to be supported.

Amendment No. 11 brings some welcome clarity to the issues and the regulations. It is fairly self-explanatory.

Amendment No. 12 relates to physical education in educational settings. It was vital that that be rectified, and I welcome the fact that that was pushed forward by the Minister of Education. We know that physical education goes beyond physical exercise and good health: it has a mental health impact for young people.

I want to come on to indoor exercise, which is relevant and has been mentioned. I take issue with the fact that gyms have not been able to operate for that indoor exercise piece for adults. Despite what some Members have said, it is not a financial issue for gym owners. They place the well-being of their customers above the financial incentive that they would have gained from the two weeks. That is a frustration that I have, and the many gym owners who have contacted me are deeply frustrated and very concerned about their customers. Many of them are assisting their customers with recovery from various issues. That is a point that I wanted to —.

Mr Buckley: I thank the Member for giving way. I will not labour the point, but many gym users and owners would like to have a conversation about whether there is a way forward that could allow gyms to reopen in a safe and compliant manner to ensure physical and mental well-being.

Mr Middleton: I agree completely with the Member. As the Minister stated at the outset, the regulations deal with cross-cutting issues. They go across Departments, so it is important that all Departments have a say. It goes back to the restrictions themselves: we need to ensure that the views of all Ministers are taken on board. We know that the Economy Minister has been fighting hard for businesses and to get them reopened in a safe and timely manner, but that is a cross-cutting issue. We need all Executive Ministers to be heard on it.

I go back to the amendment on face coverings. It was important to give clarity, particularly to post-primary pupils, and I know that many principals welcomed that. Concerns were raised at the time about the enforcement of that on buses, for example, and on their way, but there seems to be a level of compliance around that.

It is important that we try to have a consistent approach. As I said, if we allow physical education to take place in schools, which is the right thing to do, we also need to allow for that exercise to take place in indoor and safe settings. I urge that that be allowed to happen. I remind Members that it is important to get out of this endless cycle during the next number of weeks. The way to do that is to adhere to the guidelines and ensure that we keep one another safe.

Mr Sheehan: I welcome the opportunity to speak in the debate. We have been here before and have covered a lot of ground.

I always think that it is important to contextualise why the restrictions are needed. The simple reason is that we need to protect our health and social care system. We cannot allow it to be overwhelmed in the face of the pandemic. Years of underinvestment in the health system have meant that we do not have the capacity that we might like to have to deal with the upsurge in the number of people who become ill as a result of the pandemic. It should never be the case that groups of people with one illness are pitted against groups of people with another illness. The fact is that there are people who are ill and they have to be treated. Unfortunately, clinicians have to make ethical decisions on who should be treated first. However, basically, the restrictions are in place to protect life, to try to reduce the rate of transmission, to protect our front-line workers and to protect society in general.

Drafting legislation is not easy at the best of times, but it is all the more difficult when all this legislation comes at us in haste and we do not have time for the usual scrutiny that would take place. It is inevitable that anomalies will sometimes appear, mistakes will be made and clarification will be needed. However, it is disappointing when some prominent people speak out angrily and, sometimes their language is, maybe, not as diplomatic as it ought to be. If we were using similar language, we would be castigated from the high heavens. Some of those people may be brilliant musicians, fantastic chefs or people who can run great hospitality businesses, but I would love to see their credentials on public health and dealing with pandemics. I say to everyone that we have a difficult job. Some people are more concerned about their own narrow interests, but political leaders have to take account of society in general, the needs of all of our citizens, the need to protect our health service, the need to save people's lives and the need to stop people becoming ill. Those are issues in the context of the restrictions, even today's restrictions, that we need to be cognisant of.

One of the amendments that we are dealing with today is around the issue of masks. I say to the Minister that I have been banging on about the necessity of wearing masks from as far back as late March and early April. The evidence that was mounting, particularly in other countries, and the science that was coming to the fore told us that the wearing of masks reduced transmission, and I am glad to see that we implemented legislation to make it mandatory to wear face masks in certain circumstances. That is good, but there is an issue — my colleague raised it earlier — about the cost of face masks. We have seen that, in many other countries, face masks are free for the population. The Minister should consider making face masks available free of charge, at least in some circumstances.

Another issue that we should all welcome — it has been welcomed by a number of Members — is the clarification around physical education in schools. We came in for some ridicule around the issue of PE in schools when the legislation was first mooted. Clarification was absolutely necessary, and I welcome that. We had a ridiculous situation where fewer students could take part in outdoor physical education than were allowed indoors in the classroom. That issue needed to be rectified, and, thankfully, it was.

I do not intend to go on for much longer today, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle, you will be glad to hear.

However, there are compliance and enforcement issues about these restrictions and restrictions in general. Without wishing to stray off the focus of the amendments, a good example of "compliance" and "enforcement" issues was shown on last week's 'Spotlight' programme about the contact-tracing system in Wales. When contacts were traced by the contact tracers, they were followed up with phone calls. If they did not answer the phone during their period of isolation, contact tracers called to their homes. Essentially, the rationale for calling to their homes was to see whether the person who was isolating needed support. However, I am sure that everyone can easily imagine that there is an element of enforcement there too, because, if the person who was supposed to be isolating was not there, that raised further issues. That is an issue with contact tracing. The Minister knows my views well on that. I will just leave it there rather than drift off further on the issue.

I have one final question for the Minister, to which many people out there need to know the answer: when will the Executive announce what the situation will look like post 11 December? I advise the Executive that, rather than leave it to the last minute, and us all end up on the cliff edge as we did during the past number of weeks, an announcement should be made here today about what the situation will look like after 11 December.

Ms Anderson: Before I talk about the amendments and restrictions, I, like others, want to send my heartfelt sympathy to the loved ones of all those who have died of COVID on the island of Ireland and, indeed, across the world, and also to the many more people who have ended up in hospital. We know that people are struggling with what is now called "long COVID". We also know of young people in particular who had COVID and thought that they had come through it OK, but now we hear that a pattern may be emerging with some young people ending up with pneumonia and other illnesses.

It is in that context that we all remember that the five parties in the Executive have to make difficult, challenging decisions that impact on our daily lives. They all agreed that more interventions were necessary before the end of November in order to curb the spread of coronavirus and prevent hospitals from becoming overwhelmed. Before COVID, hospitals like Altnagelvin Area Hospital in Derry were already struggling with awful waiting lists and, at times, people being left on trolleys or being taken home by their families rather than having them left there waiting to be seen. It is without doubt that COVID has made a bad situation worse.

The journey to the restrictions in amendment Nos. 11, 12 and 3 was somewhat unedifying. We witnessed the DUP, the largest party in the Executive, use a veto to hinder the majority of the power-sharing Executive, who represent the overwhelming majority of people in the North, from taking that decision forward sooner.

People to whom I have spoken in Derry oscillate when they talk about further restrictions coming in. I am sure that many Members have found the same. There are people who are absolutely fed up after nine months of restrictions after restrictions coming in. When they think that things are moving on, they have to be rolled back. At the other end, I meet people who just say, "I want a total lockdown. Lock us down for three or four months, try to sort this out and see if we can get back to some kind of near normal". They do not want to see any more of their loved ones ending up in hospital. Thousands and thousands more people have ended up in hospital, and, as we said, unfortunately — tragically — many of them ended up in the morgue.

Mr McCrossan: I thank the Member for giving way. Will the Member agree with me that there needs to be a strong, unified message coming from the Assembly and the Executive on the importance of these restrictions? Behind every single number is the death of a loved one. Family members — wives, husbands, children, grandchildren, brothers and sisters — have been left heartbroken by this virus. They could not see their loved ones from the time that they entered hospital until they were carried out.

Ms Anderson: I thank the Member for that intervention. I am very conscious of Mr and Mrs Ward from Strabane. That family has been left devastated by the parents' deaths within 12 hours of each other. It is a very sobering thought for us all. How could anyone not come together and have a unified position on these kinds of restrictions? The hope is that the vaccines that have been or are being clinically trialled will receive authorisation and soon become available for us to use safely.

As other Members have said, once again, we find ourselves in the Assembly talking about regulations that are already in place. There is not one Member in the Chamber who is not frustrated at that kind of process, because it is not how we want to do scrutiny. That all goes without saying, but we recognise that we are in the middle of a global pandemic, and things do not move in the way that they should.

Yesterday, 351 people tested positive for COVID-19. Unfortunately, some of them will end up in hospital beds and in intensive care. NISRA confirmed that, within a one-week period, 100 people died, and we all heard that last week. However, some people have questioned the COVID-19 death rate. I mentioned Mr and Mrs Ward in Strabane, and other family members have died within hours of one another. We all should challenge those kinds of questions. Of course, people have the right to question, but the evidence on the number of people who have tragically lost their life is there for us all to use.

We also know from the COVID-19 inequality report that the infection rate in the 10% most deprived areas has been one fifth higher than the rate in the 10% least deprived areas and that the hospital admission rate of patients with COVID-19 in the 10% most deprived areas was almost double the rate in the 10% least deprived areas.

Mr Buckley: Will the Member give way?

Ms Anderson: Yes.

Mr Buckley: On that very point, the Member will understand that there is a lot of scepticism. Indeed, there is anger about the side effects of lockdown. Professor Jack Lambert, the leading infectious diseases expert in the Republic, who leads an Irish doctors' group, presented a "white paper" to the Government. It states:

"It is concerning that a single-minded fixation on lockdowns and Covid-19 persists ... to the exclusion of too many of the other crucial facets of population health and wellbeing."

Another doctor in the group stated:

"Lockdowns as we have seen from the analyses severe [sic] nothing other than to punish the most vulnerable in society".

While we have learnt a lot about COVID-19, its effects and how to treat it, we must move on in how we respond to that. Lockdowns are not always the simple answer. The House must take their significant side effects into account.

Ms Anderson: Of course, we must take all of that into account. We all have people in our family settings who are struggling with lockdown, but poverty is not new, inequality is not new and vulnerable people are not new. We know that we have to have greater interventions. When we look at the inequality report, we can see how the 10% most deprived areas have been affected. Why do we have to tackle regional inequalities? Why do we need an anti-poverty strategy? Why do we need collective agreement to tackle all of that? So that people can cope a bit better. No one is making a decision to try to keep people away from their civil liberties. I find it quite challenging that we have removed people's civil liberties, but we are doing it because we are in a global pandemic. Of course, it is about getting a balance, and we have to try to get it right.

When we talk about poverty killing people, we know that those on low incomes who work in the high-exposure facilities do not feel like, "We are all in this together", and some of them feel quite offended when they hear some of us say it. If you are a key worker on a low wage who is living in poverty or you are a porter in a hospital or a domiciliary care worker and, thus, are more exposed to catching the virus, you do not feel like we are all in this together.

The chair of the BMA, Dr Black, told us that some hospitals are hanging together by a thread. It is hoped that the amendments and restrictions that we are dealing with today will take the pressures off Altnagelvin Area Hospital in Derry and other hospitals across the North, where we know that hundreds of staff members are off sick or self-isolating, which is putting further pressure on the health service. So, whilst some of the amendments before us, including the amendment No. 3 and No. 11 regulations, are tough, staff in hospitals, who have been on the front line for nine months, are demanding that they be supported.

During debates like this, as MLAs, we raise impacts that COVID and the restrictions have had on people's lives and livelihoods, and we have heard some of that today. The amendment No. 11 regulations clarify what businesses can and cannot open and is already in place. This is not about singling out a Minister, but I want to add my voice to those who have been calling for the Economy Minister to get schemes in place for the newly self-employed and sole traders. Regardless of what constituency you come from, you must all be being lobbied by people who fit into those categories and want to work but are prevented from doing so by restrictions like these. The delays in devising a scheme are unacceptable.

Mr Buckley: I thank the Member for giving way. She strikes the right tone when she says that we are all being lobbied about getting grants out to those who in the most need as quickly as possible. However, does she accept that the actions of some in her party in terms of the misuse of public money, when we saw COVID grant money going to non-elected and elected officials within Sinn Féin's constituency offices, have meant that significant checks and balances have had to be applied, which has sadly meant a slowing down in the time to get grants out?

Ms Anderson: I am very conscious of what the Audit Office said in relation to the schemes and the kind of mistakes that were made. We know what happened, and we know that apologies were given for the three Sinn Féin offices that received those grants. I do not know what has happened with the other 450 or so people who received grants by mistake; I assume that all of them have returned the money. The Audit Office says that the percentage of risk was small. There are thousands of businesses and people out there who are desperately looking for and need some help. As we stand here talking about the restrictions, representatives from Excluded NI, which is one campaign of many that I could name, feel like they are howling at the moon, because — this might be uncomfortable for you — almost daily they are calling on Minister Dodds to introduce new schemes for businesses that have been left out and that the Minister herself said have fallen through the cracks, yet they see nothing coming forward.

Given that the Minister has received substantive funding for such schemes from the Finance Minister to implement the amendments that are before us today —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: To be fair to her, I appreciate that the Member is responding to a point. However, I am afraid that the debate is now veering away from the regulations. We should try to return to the regulations.

Ms Anderson: Amendment No. 11 closed down an awful lot of the hospitality and other sectors. That is why those people are desperately trying to get access to a scheme. They feel that there has been a protracted delay in getting money into the pockets of their workers and their workers' family. Those are the people who are calling on us, as we come forward with restrictions like those in amendment No. 11 and others, to take account of the fact that there are people who have not received a single penny in nine months.

When we are talking about trying to get collective support in the Chamber, we need support for amendment No. 11, amendment No. 12 and amendment No. 3 on face masks from the people outside who are listening to us. We need to demonstrate competence and ability and to show that we can act fast and smart, all within due diligence, and get financial support into the pockets and purses of those who need it the most.

If any Minister is struggling with trying to do that, the Executive should look at giving that Minister a helping hand to see whether that can be brought forward. Life is challenging enough, so in order for the five parties in the Executive to ensure that people get support to live with this deadly virus and these terrible restrictions on people's civil liberties and their life, we need to make sure that the labels of effectiveness and efficiency are the by-products that are worn by all Ministers.

Take amendment No. 11, for instance. The Committee for Infrastructure this morning had an informal meeting with taxi drivers. Once again, taxi drivers lost work overnight, and just as they thought that they were getting things together, along comes amendment No. 11. Further restrictions were put in place, and their customer base is no more. Once again, bars, restaurants and hotels are closed, and that is having a knock-on effect on taxi drivers, who, like other people, want to work, but these necessary restrictions and the public health message are preventing them doing so.

Even though the restrictions mean that they have no income, they play their part. Many of us know taxi drivers who, throughout the pandemic, especially when people were shielding and even now when we are dealing with closures under amendment No. 11, have taken workers to hospitals and people to care homes. They have delivered food parcels and medicines, and they have done their best. We all know how they are valued, yet they asked us whether we valued them at all. Some drivers downgraded their insurance but still have a taxi policy. Yet, before the restrictions in amendment No. 11 were introduced, taxi drivers were promised that they would be included in the Department for the Economy's COVID restrictions business support scheme. However, just as amendment No. 11 was announced, they were told that they were excluded from that scheme too. They have been excluded from a scheme that was put in place because of decisions that they had to make because of their insurance, and now they have been excluded again.

We need to make a call and let taxi drivers know that while amendment No. 11 is going to have an impact on their businesses — we have asked people to stay at home, and, as a result, there is no one on the streets or to take to and from the pubs, restaurants and hotels — we are aware that they need support.

Generally, people are fed up and frustrated with two more weeks of these amendments.

People have listened to the chair of the BMA, Tom Black, say that reopening the hospitality industry would be:

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

1.30 pm

Ms Anderson: That is hard for —.

Mr Allister: I have listened patiently to the Member, but the thought that keeps occurring to me is that she is lecturing us through the surrogacy of Dr Tom Black about doing the right thing. Did she think of any of that when she was leading the colour party at a funeral that was attended by thousands of people? Did she ever think of doing the right thing? Or is what she says for everyone else but not her and her cronies?

Ms Anderson: We have all listened to Tom Black and heard what he said. Bobby Storey has been dead for five months. As other Members would, we send our thoughts and sympathy to his family, because what happened is something on which there has been an ongoing, daily exchange of views. Sinn Féin has made it clear that we are aware of the impact that it had on the public health message and has apologised for it.

Tom Black is an eminent doctor; of course, we would listen to him. It was hard for people in the hospitality industry, for instance, when they heard about more restrictions and amendment No 11 coming into place. They had hoped that they were going to open, only to be told that they were not. They had spent thousands on putting measures in place. When they opened in the summer, they tried their best to keep people safe by putting those measures in place. I assume that other Members have heard from people in the hospitality sector, and many others, who, when they heard about amendment No 11, further restrictions and the fact that they were not going to be allowed to open as they had hoped, question why schools are open. There is no doubt that children in school —

Mr Allister: On a point of order, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. Will you advise the House if amendment No. 11 says any of the things that the Member says it does?

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 11) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020:

... provides for a person to take part in indoor exercise or sport with a carer or carers.

... requires the closure of hostels and similar establishments, with certain exemptions.

... provides that an exemption in relation to caravans also relates to motorhomes.

... provides that hairdressing, makeup and other close contact services may operate in film and television production, and defines certain terms.”

Amendment No. 12:

“provides for physical education to take place in schools and other educational settings.”

and:

“provides that tables or other facilities in an area adjacent to hospitality premises are to be treated as part of the premises.”

Amendment No. 3 extends:

“the requirement to wear a face covering to post primary school children on school transport and on other public transport.”

It has been read into the record, and everybody knows what we should be talking about.

Ms Anderson: Thank you. It is in that vein that I talk about amendment No. 12 and children at school, because that has provoked some conversations. We need to ensure that children have playtime at breaks and lunch rather than having to remain in one small room for up to six hours. That relates to amendment No. 12.

There is no doubt that children’s education is paramount, but the point that I want to make about playtime and amendment No. 12 is that it can be challenging, because staff absences are placing a huge strain on schools. That is what is happening in Derry and across the North. The staff who are left in schools are trying to cater for blended learning, or making sure that children get outside for exercise and all that amendment No. 12 deals with.

During the two weeks of restrictions, when other places are closed, anxiety is fuelled among staff members by that. The staff feel somewhat isolated and a bit at risk. That is something that we need to acknowledge, because we are talking about mental health and the levels of anxiety, which are not good for staff or pupils. If, as the Deputy Chair of the Health Committee has said, we do what amendment No. 3 encourages us all to do — wear a face covering, coupled with washing our hands and keeping social distance — hopefully, businesses will see the opening of their premises on 11 December.

However, I echo the question that Pat Sheehan asked as to whether the Health Minister will bring forward recommendations to the Executive about further restrictions post 11 December. The industry needs to know that now, not on 10 December, and not at lastminute.com. We all want to be able to have some form of “new normal” exchanges with each other as we continue to practise these measures. No one wants these restrictions that we are discussing to be in place. No one wants to catch the virus, either. However, given the death toll that we have all mentioned, the pressure on hospitality settings and the real pressures on hospitals, those extra two weeks offer us the chance of pushing the community transmission as low as possible to allow, hopefully, for a safer Christmas for everyone.

I support the amendments.

Ms S Bradley: On behalf of the SDLP, I acknowledge what are, ultimately, clarifying amendments that have come to the House. I recognise that we are in a global pandemic and that we are working a system that is far from perfect or ideal. Decisions are being made at Executive level, announcements are being made and I — like every Member of the House, regardless of party — will be inundated, almost instantaneously, by text messages and emails asking, “What exactly do these regulations mean for me, my business, my school or the organisation that I represent?” I appreciate that the piece of work in front of us is almost the latter end of that process. Today we are looking at the amendments that were required to bring in to check the regulations that were quite hastily, in many cases, put on paper and brought through the House.

That said, many amendments that come to the House in this form are a result of those phone calls, texts and messages that we get from people on the ground who are going to be affected by the announcements that have been made. Therefore, I get frustrated, as I am sure many Members do, that, when the announcements are made, the clarity is often not there. As a Member of this House, I have yet to find the correct, quick, swift way of getting that clarity. The goalposts keep moving as to what emails I should be using and what websites I should be visiting. It is a movable feast. There is a huge piece of work — a problem that has to be ironed out — as to how we communicate better, from the point when the announcement is made right through the process to this point, where we have clarifying amendments before the House. I say, and I know, and I have heard — and I would like the Minister, as a Member of the Executive, to clarify for me — that money was set aside for that purpose. Money has been set aside purely for communication. I have yet to see the outworkings of that. I would appreciate it if the Minister were to enlighten me on that.

I will speak about the process that brought these amendments to the House. On this occasion, it happens to be the Departments of the Economy and Education that are the foundation Departments behind these amendments. It would be a helpful part of that communication tool, regardless of who the Minister is or which amendment is in front of us, to use the House as the place to speak directly to not just Members but the media and public who are watching and give the rationale behind the amendments, the voices or stories that they heard that brought the Executive to a consensus and explain that for people to understand.

I have noted that, while there have been very harsh regulations imposed on almost everyone in some form, when the logic behind the regulations is communicated, people are very understanding because business people are also mothers and fathers. No one stands alone in any part of their life. COVID-19 rippled through every part of our economy and community, and it touches every house, household and individual. We are definitely failing in our communications and the way in which we explain the rationale behind a lot of the amendments and, indeed, the original regulations.

Mr McCrossan: I thank the Member for giving way. The Member has hit on a key point. As has been rightly pointed out, a lot of us have been inundated with questions from businesses every day. Does the Member agree that a helpline should be established for MLAs to get the information quickly and in one place? Does the Member also agree that communication is not rocket science? Communication should be very clear. This is a relatively small region of six counties, 11 council areas and 18 constituencies, and communication should be very manageable and doable very quickly.

Ms S Bradley: I thank the Member for his contribution. It is a very clear ask, and a helpline would help every Member, as they will, ultimately, spread that information very quickly to those who need to know it.

I appreciate that sometimes the logic or the nuance behind some of the amendments is quite complex, and it is not black and white or simple to relay. However, when we take the time to do that, people do understand it. They do get it. Ultimately, we have these clarifying amendments in front of us, and there is detail against each of them. However, I have to admit that, while the last Member was speaking, I revised whether I was looking at the right amendments. While I would love to be speaking about the high-street voucher scheme, I see that it is not part of the No. 11 amendments; nor is the scheme for taxi drivers, which is a very important cause. However, I would be swerving far from the amendments in front of me if I were to bring that to the Floor. I will not confuse matters further.

I thank the Minister for Health for coming forward with these amendments today. However, I am not sure that his doing so is good practice, to be quite honest. I would have liked an opportunity to have the Minister behind the amendments in front of us. We know we missed a lot of the scrutiny and that had to happen due to the speed that was required. That being said, this was an opportunity to put on the public record —

Dr Aiken: Thank you for giving way. Today, the Education Minister was on a Zoom call that he was pushing out on Twitter. Do you think it would be more appropriate if the Education Minister were to take the time to be here to explain the regulations to Members?

Ms S Bradley: I take the Member's point. I am not privy to where the Education Minister is today. I do not say that to get at the Education Minister or the Economy Minister. I genuinely say, across the House, that it would be best practice to have the thinking and the logic delivered by whichever Minister is behind the amendments. I appreciate that, even had the Ministers been here today, they would be speaking retrospectively. The Ministers will be bringing something that has already happened, and that is difficult to iron out of the system, but a Minister's being here would have had great value.

Based on that, I do recognise and note the clarifying detail in these amendments. Like other Members, I urge the public to remember that this is about you. It is about you, your family, your neighbourhoods and your community. While there is no denying that the credibility of some of the people in this place who have to step forward and deliver this has been shaken, ultimately, the people of Northern Ireland know better. They know that this is about them standing up for their communities, their loved ones and the people around them, and they ultimately know how thankful we genuinely all are to those healthcare workers who are stepping up day and daily and putting themselves at risk for the safety of others.

I will close my remarks by offering my condolences to all those families who have been affected by the loss of loved ones during the COVID-19 pandemic to date.

Mr Chambers: I was disappointed to learn from the Minister's opening remarks that two Ministers in the Executive declined to accede to his request for one or both of them to lead on the Assembly's scrutiny of amendments — those in front of us today — that they had specifically requested. I understood that the Executive had pledged to move away from the ministerial silo mentality and to take collective decisions and, more importantly, collective responsibility. It did not work before, and, to echo the words of Mr Middleton, it is not helpful now. Surely, if ever there was a time for such a united and collective approach, it must be in the middle of a second surge of a worldwide deadly pandemic, and that should include the House and not just the Executive.

Tomorrow, the House will discuss a private Member's motion on the roll-out of the COVID vaccine. That enormous and unprecedented exercise will require the full support of the Executive. It will not benefit from any Minister going on a solo run to sow seeds of doubt, nor the intervention of elected Members from outside this House voicing bizarre opinions.

The failure of Ministers to take a degree of responsibility for regulations that they have called for is at odds with the previous commitment of the First Minister and deputy First Minister that regulations would be tabled and laid in the Assembly by the relevant Minister. There also seems to be confusion among some Members that all the regulations and guidance issued during the pandemic have been other than decisions taken by and on behalf of the Executive.

It is very noticeable that some Members appear to target the Minister of Health when demanding answers on various elements of regulations, and it seems to me to be a classic case of shooting the messenger. Minister Swann is normally the conduit to the Executive for the current medical and scientific advice, but the decision on whether to accept or ignore that advice lies with the democratic vote in the Executive or, as happened recently, can be rejected by use of the cross-community vote veto. That decision may still have negative consequences for the health of the people of Northern Ireland.

The regulations before us have been in operation for a few weeks. They were scrutinised by the Health Committee a few weeks ago, and, as such, it is a bit of an academic exercise coming before the House today, but protocol has to be followed and satisfied. As we, hopefully, move into the phase of beginning to vaccinate, we must congratulate the scientists who have brought the vaccine forward in such a timely manner. All of us in the House need to commit to supporting the efforts to vaccinate our entire community and the efforts to restore all other services offered by our NHS.

Maybe those who hurl from the ditches will stop trying to outdo each other in sniping at the Minister and his Department and will accept the fact that the DUP and Sinn Féin had two opportunities to take the Health portfolio. That was before we fully understood the implications of the pandemic that was coming towards us at that time. Tackling growing waiting lists was the major challenge back then. I am grateful that my colleague Robin Swann had the courage to take up the challenges when others ran away from them, and I think that the work that he has done to date has been recognised by the vast majority of the public.

We know that other hospital services have been curtailed.

That is a regrettable consequence of this virus. It is also the stark reality of the price that we are having to pay because of this virus. That reality seems to present difficulties for some Members to accept or to understand. I am sure that the Minister, in his winding-up speech, will have no difficulty in confirming that no urgent or immediate life-saving medical intervention has been or will be denied to anyone. If these regulations, along with others, are followed and a reduction in the rate of COVID transmission is reflected in a reduction in the number of hospital admissions, normal services can be fully restored across all medical disciplines.

I listened today, and on Thursday at the Health Committee, to Mr Buckley passionately making the case for gyms to reopen. I wonder whether he has taken advice from Professor Gabriel Scally on this issue. I know that he holds the professor in quite high regard. The professor advocates total lockdown. I take Ms Bradshaw's point that it is only for two weeks. Lockdown is only until 11 December, and it will be reviewed.

Mr Buckley: Will the Member give way?

Mr Chambers: No, I am just finishing.

In the meantime, my party and I fully support the regulations that are before us today.

Mr McCrossan: Minister, first I wish to put on record my sincere appreciation and thanks to you and your private office for your helpful intervention last week in relation to a constituent of mine. It came as a great comfort and support to Frank Tracey and his family. It is with much regret that I say that Frank lost his battle with this virus in the early hours of Saturday morning, leaving behind his lovely wife, Jude, his daughter, Anita, and his two sons, Matthew and Darren. I can safely say, Minister, before discussing these regulations, that the journey that I have been through with the Tracey family in the past 10 days has brought this virus home hard. I heard a wife on the other end of a phone cry and plead. A daughter and two sons knew, as their father's condition worsened in Altnagelvin Hospital, that they would never see him again. In the early hours of Saturday morning, the nurses in that hospital held Frank's hand and sung to him to comfort and calm him in the final minutes of his life. It came as a great comfort, Minister, to Frank's family to know that those nurses went the extra mile to support their father and husband in the final hours of his life.

Frank called me last Tuesday when I was on my way to the Assembly, knowing that his battle with the virus was coming to an end. He had this to say:

"Please get the message out there loud and clear. I have done everything, as have my family, to ensure that we followed the regulations and kept safe."

He admitted that he could not beat the virus. He was a man who was very fit, healthy and able. He was energetic, loved life and loved his family. He asked that people take this seriously and said that it could end a life very quickly. In Frank's case, it was just over one week.

I put on record my sincerest appreciation of the healthcare staff who have to comfort people in their final hours and who ensure that they are at peace and not alone, which is very difficult indeed. Minister, I thank you, because I know the difficult job that you have and the burden that is on you to try to help and support people throughout this pandemic.

The message is simple: wear masks, wash hands and keep your distance. I was a personal friend of Frank, and he was very much loved in the community of Strabane. This is the third death in just over a week. Ms Anderson, rightly, mentioned the Ward family who lost their mother and father. Nothing halts complacency like a sudden and painful death, and that family have suffered incredibly. That is why these regulations, which clarify measures that are in place, are so important and essential. We all tend to forget that our actions and our complacency can have dire consequences for another person or their life. Society needs to hear these stories about the journeys that families are on and the coldness of the process and the journey. When a person is taken, quite ill, into the care of the hospital, the family may not see that person again. That is a very harsh and very painful reality. They were not allowed a wake and no wider family or friends can attend the funeral. I can tell you, Minister, that I have been helping people throughout this pandemic and that opened my eyes this week. I have never had a phone call like it.

In Frank's honour and memory, it is important to put on record just how important our healthcare staff are and to offer the condolence of the House to his family — his wife, Jude, daughter, Anita, and two sons, Matthew and Darren. I urge the Assembly to work, as strongly together as we can, to protect human life. Nobody wants these regulations; nobody wants businesses closed; but nobody wants to lose a father, a mother, a daughter, a son or a grandparent. That is what is most important. They are irreplaceable. Thank you.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Question Time begins at 2.00 pm. I suggest that the House takes its ease until then. This debate will continue after Question Time, when the next Member to speak will be Dr Steve Aiken.

Members, please take your ease. Do not forget to clean the surfaces if you are leaving the Chamber. Thank you.

The debate stood suspended.

Oral Answers to Questions

The Executive Office

NDNA: Rights, Language and Identity Update

1. Mr Muir asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the introduction of legislation on commitments related to the rights, language and identity section of New Decade, New Approach (NDNA). (AQO 1201/17-22)

Mrs O'Neill (The deputy First Minister): We are committed to the development and implementation of the rights, language and identity proposals in the 'New Decade, New Approach' document. The delivery of those priorities will be important in building our shared future based on mutual respect and parity of esteem.

While the COVID-19 pandemic has undoubtedly delayed the speed at which we would have liked to see these issues progressed, it has certainly not deterred us from delivering them as quickly as possible. Officials are undertaking the necessary preparatory work to legislate for the core elements of the Bills, and we intend to progress legislation during 2020-21 and to create the relevant bodies as quickly as possible thereafter.

Mr Muir: Thank you, Mr Speaker, and I thank the deputy First Minister for her response. On 3 September I tabled a question for oral answer to the Executive Office that asked:

"in light of delays encountered to date, whether they intend to publish revised timescales for the implementation of New Decade, New Approach."

It is now the end of November, and I still have not received a response. Will the deputy First Minister give a commitment that new, clear and firm timescales will be given for the implementation of the rights, language, identity and all other aspects of 'New Decade, New Approach'?

Mrs O'Neill: I thank the Member for the question. I am sorry; I do not understand why you have not had a response, but I am happy to give you the commitment that, when we introduce the Bills, they will be laid out with a very clear time frame for delivery and you will be able to chart their way through the rest of the mandate. It is my intention that we deliver on the New Decade, New Approach issues, which, obviously, brought us all back together and brought about the restoration of the Executive. This is a really important piece of work that needs to be brought to the House in the imminent future.

Mr Lynch: Do the joint Ministers agree with me that all 'New Deal, New Approach' commitments, not just those on language and rights, need to be delivered? However, critically, is she concerned that the British Government have failed to implement their commitments on legacy, including a public inquiry into the murder of the human rights solicitor Pat Finucane, which is a decision that we await today?

Mrs O'Neill: Thanks to the Member for his question. As he and everybody in the House know, 'NDNA' committed all the parties to working together and to doing everything possible to heal wounds and eliminate the issues that always divide us. Core to NDNA was that the British Government would:

"within 100 days, publish and introduce legislation ... to implement the Stormont House Agreement, to address Northern Ireland legacy issues."

They would also "start an intensive process". Clearly, to date the British Government have failed to bring forward any meaningful proposals on legacy, and there has not been any intensive process. To my mind, the failure to progress the commitments that were made demonstrates shocking levels of bad faith, particularly as those commitments have been outstanding since the Stormont House Agreement back in December 2014.

I spoke today to the Finucane family, who will this afternoon receive next steps from the British Government. It is their view, which I certainly share, that all state agencies must be accountable to the law. It is my clear view that the British Government have no alternative but to direct a public inquiry into the murder of the human rights lawyer Patrick Finucane. I believe that it is also in the public interest to do so.

The failure to honour political commitments and to uphold legal obligations in legacy matters will have far-reaching implications that affect victims and public confidence in the rule of law and the administration of justice. If we are going to continue to build the peace that we all must work very hard for every day, however difficult and challenging, in order to collectively heal all the wounds of the past we must continue to do that together.

Mrs Barton: Deputy First Minister, you will know that the Ulster Unionist Party is against this aspect of the New Decade, New Approach deal given that language and culture were already catered for as part of the Belfast Agreement. Minister, will you outline the overall cost of implementing this section of the agreement?

Mrs O'Neill: I am aware that the Ulster Unionist Party is against introducing legislation that delivers parity of esteem for those who have an Irish national identity. That is regrettable, and I ask you to reconsider that position. No one has anything to fear from legislating for the language or from allowing children who are educated through the medium of Irish to live their life through Irish. I again ask the Ulster Unionist Party to perhaps rethink its position and perhaps join everybody else who is trying to deliver this legislation, because I believe that it is in society's wider interests.

When we bring forward the proposal and the time frame for the delivery of the legislation, we will also bring forward costs for the various elements, including those for the office of identity, as well as details on what that will look like. I am very happy to provide that information to the Member.

Mr McGlone: Will the role of the commissioners for languages be clearly defined in the legislation governing languages?

Mrs O'Neill: The Member will be aware that the legislation has been published as part of New Decade, New Approach, so he will be aware of what has been legislated for. Obviously, there are provisions in the Bill on the office of identity, and more meat has been put on the bones of that. Again, I hope to bring forward the legislation very soon and have a comprehensive conversation about the shaping of it.

Border Checks

2. Mr Robinson asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for their assessment of whether the change in approach in relation to border checks as previously intimated by the Minister for Foreign Affairs will be beneficial to the working relationship between Northern Ireland and Dublin. (AQO 1202/17-22)

Mrs O'Neill: The protocol commits to avoiding the need for any customs and regulatory checks or controls and related physical infrastructure North/South. As such, there is no change in the position of the Irish Government. The recent statement from Minister Simon Coveney clarifies that that will remain the case, even if, notwithstanding, the controversial clauses in the Internal Market Bill are reinstated when it returns to the House of Commons. I welcome that clarification.

Mr Robinson: Does the deputy First Minister agree that, compared with previous statements, the more cooperative tone from the Republic's Minister for Foreign Affairs is welcome, particularly for Northern Ireland businesses?

Mrs O'Neill: We have to continue to work together. It is in everybody's interest that we work together North/South and, indeed, east-west, on the taxing issue of Brexit. As I said, the clarification from Minister Coveney is welcome.

Mr Allister: How does the deputy First Minister feel about the guarded border that is being provided by the Republic of Ireland in respect of COVID-19? Does that not illustrate the faux anger and farce of opposition, both from Dublin and politicians such as herself, to as much as an extra camera on the border when it came to Brexit? Is she so wedded to an ideology that she does not care whether restrictions on imports into Northern Ireland cripple the Northern Ireland economy, or, in fact, is that what she is looking for?

Mrs O'Neill: I remind the Member that the majority of the House reject Brexit. The majority of the parties and the majority of MLAs reject Brexit; it is being foisted upon us against our wishes. We set ourselves a task at the very start of the Brexit debacle to try to afford ourselves some protections, and those were achieved in the form of the protocol and the withdrawal agreement. Albeit far from perfect, they at least provide us with some guarantees and assurances, particularly in relation to there being no return to a hard border and protecting the all-island economy.

Whilst there is no meeting of minds in the Executive on Brexit, there is a joined-up approach insofar as we want to minimise disruption and minimise costs being pushed on to the consumer. We have worked very hard to make sure that that is front and centre of the debate.

I say clearly to the Member that I have worked very hard to protect the interests of the people who live here. I have looked to Dublin to afford some protections to people in this jurisdiction, and we need to continue to do that.

Mr Sheehan: I want to pick up on the issue of borders and border checks. Does the joint First Minister share my concern about the uncertainty facing cross-border workers in the context of Brexit?

Mrs O'Neill: Yes, I certainly do. There are an estimated 30,000 cross-border workers in Ireland, many of whom cross the border, back and forth, every day as part of their daily routine. The loss of protections at the end of the transition period in just over one month's time — that is fast coming towards us — will have a huge impact on people's everyday lives.

I am concerned about the flaws and shortcomings in the British Government's frontier workers' regulations. I note that several trades unions, the Committee on the Administration of Justice (CAJ), the Centre for Cross-Border Studies and various migrant welfare associations have also recently raised those concerns with the British Government. As the Brexit negotiations enter the endgame, it is not an acceptable nor a tenable position that cross-border workers are still in limbo at this stage of the discussions.

Any frontier schemes must be accessible for, and cognisant of the special needs of, cross-border workers in Ireland. The British Government must fulfil their legal obligations as contained in the Good Friday Agreement and the EU withdrawal agreement.

Mr Blair: Can the deputy First Minister confirm that all Departments have been working collectively to ensure that they are ready for the post-transition period and to deal with all possible outcomes of the negotiations?

Mrs O'Neill: A cross-departmental group has been set up. It looked at the areas of concern and what we need to address. Six high-level impact risks have been identified and will need to be addressed: food supply; highly regulated goods, such as medicines; business preparedness; data flows; sanitary and phytosanitary checks; and transport. Everyone is working together on a cross-departmental basis to try to address those. I can assure you that there is a long list beyond those six things that also needs to be resolved. There are significant challenges, and significant preparation is under way. As we come to the crunch period — we have been told it is a crunch for a number of weeks now — we are now in the realm of the endgame for where Brexit is going to land. These are big challenges for the Executive and the Assembly, and we are going to have to embrace them and take them on.

Mr Stalford: The contents of the Internal Market Bill represent a "backstop to the backstop", to use a phrase. Given the reaction that there has been to the content of the Internal Market Bill, does it not expose just how false the claim that "best endeavours would be used" has proven to be? By what torturous logic does the deputy First Minister of Northern Ireland say that a proposal that cuts Northern Ireland business off from its largest market represents a good outcome for us?

Mrs O'Neill: The Member will know my views on the Internal Market Bill — they are very clear. This is the British Government trying to rewrite a deal which they had previously made and reneging on a commitment which they made to the EU, only to then legislate and to breach international law. That does not bode well for anybody looking for a future trade relationship. When it comes to the interests of businesses here, there will not be very many opportunities if the British Government continually breach their own obligations that they themselves signed up to.

COVID-19 Recovery Plan

3. Ms McLaughlin asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline the work their Department has undertaken in preparing an Executive-wide COVID-19 recovery plan. (AQO 1203/17-22)

COVID-19: Task Force

14. Mr Butler asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what discussions have taken place with Executive colleagues and other relevant agencies in relation to establishing a monitoring, compliance and enforcement task force to address COVID-19. (AQO 1214/17-22)

Mrs O'Neill: Mr Speaker, it is my understanding that question 12 has been withdrawn. With your permission, I will answer questions 3 and 14 together.

The Executive's response to, and recovery from, COVID-19 continues to be focused on the health and well-being of our citizens, our economic well-being, revitalising the economy and our societal and community well-being. A large amount of public health evidence is considered, much of which is publicly available. Papers from the Scientific Advisory Group for Emergencies (SAGE) are published on a publicly available data repository, and reports of independent SAGE and original scientific publications are considered, along with other evidence. The Executive are placing a particular emphasis on people and families, and we know how important this is to everyone. Any decisions on the Executive's next steps, therefore, will be informed by the impact that they may have on us as individuals, on families and on the wider communities within which we live. We are committed to ensuring that support packages meet the needs of those who need our help.

Looking towards 2021, the Executive have approved a recovery framework which is aimed at progressing a cohesive approach across the whole of Government that will deliver an economic, health and societal recovery, with citizens at its core. This work will complement the longer-term Programme for Government which is currently being developed and which we are aiming to have in place by April 2021. The junior Ministers currently lead a strategic enforcement group comprising local government and PSNI representation, as well as TEO, Justice, Economy and Communities officials. We are also looking at additional ways in which we can encourage all citizens and sectors to adhere to regulations and public health advice.

Ms McLaughlin: Thank you, Minister, for your answer so far. We are 10 months into this pandemic, Minister. Can you give a guarantee that, following the current lockdown, we will get a very clear recovery plan? The Republic of Ireland, England and Scotland have plans, and the people of Northern Ireland deserve one.

Mrs O'Neill: As I set out in my original answer, we are very much looking towards recovery. We are still in the midst of the pandemic, and we have to work our way through the latest phase that we are in.

We are really hopeful that the measures that have been brought in will bring us to the other side of Christmas. Most people will have noted over the past number of days that the figures for positive cases are going in the right direction, and that is welcome.

2.15 pm

We have to look towards recovery. We have, as you know, appointed an interim head of the Civil Service, which will help us in our recovery. We want Jenny Pyper to focus on COVID, Brexit and recovery: those are the three things at the top of her in-tray, working with us.

We have to work our way out of this. The Treasury's announcement last week was disappointing for our ability to invest in recovery. The Executive are and will be focused on recovery into the new year. We will have to pick up an awful lot of broken pieces, because that is the reality. Economically, a lot of sectors are in tatters and need the Executive's support.

Ms Dolan: Minister, our priority must be to find new ways to minimise the impact of the pandemic, save lives, reduce the spread of the virus and protect the capacity of our health service. Is the joint First Minister optimistic about the potential for a mass vaccination and testing programme?

Mrs O'Neill: Thanks to the Member for that question. Most of the questions that I was asked over the weekend were about the vaccine, because everybody is looking for hope and a way out of the pandemic.

We had a good presentation at the Executive last Thursday from the head of the Department of Health COVID-19 vaccine programme. It is really heartening that plans for the roll-out of the vaccine are at an advanced stage. I hope that some of the most vulnerable will be the first to receive the vaccine. It will be laid out in five phases. The first phase includes our healthcare staff, care home residents and those over 80 years old. Early in 2021, those over 65 and vulnerable people under 65 will receive it. In spring 2021, those over 50 who have not been vaccinated should receive it. By the summer of 2021, we hope to see mass vaccination rolled out to the general public. That is a hopeful position to be in. Necessary alongside that will be the rolling-out of mass testing. That will be an important part of our management of COVID until we get to the point where we have widespread vaccination in place.

The roll-out of both of those programmes will be challenging. They present us with a huge logistical challenge, but core to our approach to all of this is the establishment of a task force, which we announced last week, to take forward this essential work. There is no doubt in any of our minds that the delivery of a mass testing programme and of the vaccine are transformative in our battle against COVID.

Mr Beattie: Thank you, Minister, for your detailed answers. Could you expand slightly and let us know what role the Department for the Economy and the Department for Communities will have in any recovery plan/framework?

Mrs O'Neill: Any recovery plan or any plan for the future will involve every Department because everyone will have a part to play. Work has been done on that over the past few months. Whether it is the Department for the Economy supporting or investing in businesses or the Department for Communities supporting people, individuals or the community and voluntary sector, everybody has a part to play in society.

We aim to deliver a balanced and proportionate response. Dealing with the here and now is about supporting people economically and financially. However, recovery is not about just getting us back to where we were; it is about how, maybe, we can do things better. Can we have societal reforms that help us to deliver better? It is a combination of supporting individuals, workers and businesses and that wider societal approach. It is not for just the Executive to deliver that: we will very much look to wider societal input. We will not be able to do this together, because we will be recovering from such a massive shock: COVID and Brexit together — a double dunt. That will hugely shake the foundations of life as we know it, so we have a big job of work in terms of recovery.

Mr Dunne: Can the deputy First Minister elaborate on the need to support businesses — for example, those on the high street and those in the tourism and hospitality sector, such as hotels — that are hardest hit and really are in need of support through recovery? [Interruption.]

Mrs O'Neill: I do not know what was going on with that noise, but I will carry on.

You are absolutely right: some of the financial packages that the Executive were able to announce last week were hugely significant. We are trying to reach people who have perhaps not had funding previously. We are conscious of the fact that the tourism sector has been completely decimated. Tourism and COVID just do not go hand in hand. We know that we need to support people to stay still until we come out the other side of this and they can start to operate again. We hope that a number of the things that we brought forward last week will go some way to supporting people right now, everything from the rates holiday and the voucher scheme, which will get our high street running again, to the support that we announced for tourism, hospitality schemes and bed and breakfasts and the additional support for pubs. All those things are really important to keep people afloat until we get to the other side of this.

Brexit Negotiations: Update

4. Ms Rogan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on preparations for the outcome of Brexit negotiations. (AQO 1204/17-22)

Mrs O'Neill: Over recent weeks, negotiations have intensified with the aim of securing an agreement. Discussions on the future relationship have continued since then. We welcome the commitment to continue discussions, but we recognise that the talks could still result in a non-negotiated outcome. We are therefore continuing our operational readiness planning to include that possibility. The key challenge for Departments in this planning process is the urgent clarity that is needed to implement the protocol and any agreed deal with the EU. Our officials have undertaken bilateral meetings with officials from other Departments in order to scrutinise readiness issues and identify possible mitigations, including where interventions would be required from the British Government, and assurances around continuity agreements or bilateral agreements.

Ms Rogan: Ministers will be aware that the lack of clarity and preparedness on the implementation of the protocol will have a real impact in economic terms. Can the joint First Minister set out the primary issues of concern at the minute?

Mrs O'Neill: Thanks for the question. I said in answer to an earlier question that this is a crunch week. It appears that we are edging closer to an outcome. As I said, we have been told for some time that this would be crunch week, but it is clear that time is running out. It appears that things are edging closer — at least, the issues are narrowed down — to reaching an agreement. There is no doubt that we and all Departments face significant challenges in undertaking all the readiness planning, including the lack of clarity on issues in relation to the protocol, which will have wider implications for operational readiness. As a result, the EU future relations programme has been refocused on readiness activities. The Executive have agreed to focus on the six high-priority, high-impact risks identified by the Departments: food supply; flow of highly regulated goods; business preparedness; data flows; sanitary and phytosanitary (SPS) checks; and transport. To ensure that those are considered concurrently, that planning is being taken forward in parallel with the COVID-19 response and recovery. We have in place a hub structure, which exists to respond to both COVID and EU exit, should it be required. All of that speaks to the need for immediate clarity and certainty and for the British Government to fulfil their legal obligations as contained in the Good Friday Agreement and the EU withdrawal agreement.

Mr Beggs: The outworkings of Brexit and the Northern Ireland protocol are slowly becoming apparent to Northern Ireland consumers and businesses. Many retailers are already indicating that checks on food products will add to costs and delays and that some products will not even be placed on shelves from 1 January. Has the deputy First Minister, along with the First Minister, vigorously lobbied the EU to minimise delays on our goods moving to GB and to minimise the bureaucracy, costs, delays and inconvenience for Northern Ireland consumers?

Mrs O'Neill: I can say to the Member — we have spoken about it in the House before — that, yes, we have. We have raised it at every opportunity. We do not have a meeting of minds on Brexit, but we have a meeting of minds in trying to limit disruption to our local businesses and in making sure that costs are not passed on to consumers. Over recent weeks, we have heard at length about the issue of food supply, and I have said that that is one of the high-risk areas that we have identified. We will continue to raise that issue until we have clarity on all of these things. It is about time that businesses here had that clarity. We have been calling for it for a considerable time.

Mr McGrath: The deputy First Minister will be aware that today begins the last three weeks before Christmas recess. Does she have any indication of the legislative timetable that will be required to deliver the Brexit legislation that is required before 31 December? As nothing is planned for this week, how will we fit that in to the two weeks that are left?

Mrs O'Neill: The Member has set out the challenge. With all the work and preparedness that is being done cross-departmentally by Departments, there is no doubt that there will be a legislative burden on us. Even if it does not come before the end of the year, it will carry us through the rest of the mandate. We will be bringing forward legislation because, I think, there will be things that come in the aftermath as well.

We have set out the legislative programme. Once we have clarity — hopefully, we will get that one way or the other this week — we will, at least, be able to set out clearly what the legislation looks like and get a timetable for its delivery.

Ms Bunting: The deputy First Minister mentioned the importance of relationships during this crucial period. In light of that, does she concur that recent tweets from Sinn Féin TDs about a terrorist campaign have been immensely hurtful and damaging to relationships at home?

Mrs O'Neill: A Cheann Comhairle, the question is about Brexit. The Member may take the opportunity during topical questions, but this question is about Brexit.

HIA Redress Funding

5. Mr Clarke asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on discussions with church organisations in relation to the funding of redress for historical institutional abuse (HIA). (AQO 1205/17-22)

Mrs O'Neill: Payments of compensation to victims and survivors of historical institutional abuse began in May, and, as of 19 November, redress panels had made 219 determinations, totalling £5.9 million. A total of £4.3 million has been paid out. While redress can never fully right the wrongs of the past, it is an acknowledgement by the Executive of the harm done, harm that must never happen again.

Contributions from institutions found responsible for systemic failings by the Hart inquiry would defray some of the costs of compensation. That is a key Hart recommendation. Officials have engaged in a further round of contacts with the institutions to affirm the Executive's intentions. To proceed, we are seeking a round-table meeting with the relevant institutions to emphasise the seriousness of the negotiations and the urgency of making progress and to agree the fundamental principles that would govern the negotiations.

Mr Clarke: The latter part of the answer answered my question in the sense that no discussions have yet taken place. It is important for many in the House that the financial burden is laid on the institutions that were responsible for the hurt caused to those people. Minister, I urge you to update the House on your commitments to make sure that those institutions pay for the damage that they did to individuals who were supposed to be in their care.

Mrs O'Neill: There is no question about that. Although there have been contacts at an official level, I am quite frustrated that there has not been a further meeting. I assure the Member that I have raised with officials the need to have that meeting now. We need to progress the issue now.

Mr Nesbitt: Given that we know the institutions that will be liable to contribute to redress, will the Minister consider asking them to make substantial deposits immediately, deposits that could be refunded if they had paid excessively? Such a scheme would take much of the pressure off the public purse.

Mrs O'Neill: As I said, they have a role to play and have to contribute financially. I take on board what you said and will speak to officials to see whether it is possible. If it would help to prevent further delay, I would be more than open to looking at it.

Ms Ennis: Will the joint First Minister provide an update on the timeline for delivery of the new HIA support services?

Mrs O'Neill: I am delighted to say that we will launch the service tomorrow. It will build on what has been achieved for HIA victims and survivors and on the interim service for counselling and emotional support that was established in the early summer. This is certainly another milestone in the implementation of the Hart report.

Mr Speaker: That ends the period for listed questions. We move on to 15 minutes of topical questions.

2.30 pm

COVID-19: Vaccination Roll-out

T1. Mr McCrossan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the roll-out of the COVID vaccine and to reassure those living in rural areas that they will have access to the vaccine, particularly those people who have no access to cars or public transport. (AQT 741/17-22)

Mrs O'Neill: As I set out earlier in Question Time, the vaccine programme certainly offers us the best hope in our fightback against the pandemic, and great strides forward have been made. There will be a roll-out plan over five different phases, with the first phase being nursing homes, care home staff and over-80s. That is deemed to be the most vulnerable category. It moves on to over-65s and under-65s who are vulnerable.

The roll-out of the vaccine is very positive news. I do not want anybody to get carried away, because it may take us until next summer to have it fully implemented, so we still need to be vigilant and to follow the public health advice. However, this is a brilliant step forward, great strides have been made, and I commend all those who got us to this point. We will have a range of vaccinations, with access, I think, to seven different vaccinations. We will receive our Barnett consequential for all that. A mass vaccination society offers us the best protection against COVID and the best hope for moving beyond COVID.

Mr McCrossan: I thank the deputy First Minister for the answer to the question. It is a very positive step forward, and it is very reassuring that there is light at the end of the tunnel. Hopefully, 2021 will be a much better year for our society than the one that we have all endured this year.

Can the Minister outline whether councils will have a particular role in administering the vaccine to ensure that its roll-out is done swiftly and quickly? Does the Minister foresee that the army will be required in order to get the vaccine out?

Mrs O'Neill: Last week, the First Minister and I announced the task force, and the task force is about bringing together all the Departments in looking at how they can play their role in making sure that we deliver mass testing and a vaccine right across our communities. We have excellent infrastructure here to be able to deliver both programmes. We want to bring Departments together, and councils will certainly have a role to play. We have so many community facilities to use if required. Councils have played their role, as have communities, the whole way through the pandemic. It will take cross-departmental work and a huge lift on behalf of everybody, but that is why we announced the task force to do that very piece of work.

Brian Stanley TD: Narrow Water Tweet

T2. Mr Robinson asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline the deputy First Minister's reaction to the comments of her Sinn Féin colleague, Brian Stanley TD, on the horrific Narrow Water atrocity. (AQT 742/17-22)

Mrs O'Neill: Brian Stanley deleted his tweet, which was inappropriate and insensitive; he has apologised, and I accept that. We all have a responsibility in this decade of centenaries to remember and commemorate the past in a respectful manner. There is an onus on all of us in positions of political leadership to do our utmost to move this society on, to avoid refighting old battles of the past and to conduct our politics in a way that is respectful and which does not threaten anyone.

During this decade of centenaries, we are marking the key seminal events that have clearly shaped the direction of Ireland and the relationship between Ireland and Britain, over the past 100 years. We must set out our analysis, experience and narrative of the past 100 years in a way that is honest, while doing so in a way that does not deepen division. As an Irish republican, I will contribute constructively by setting out, with confidence, our inclusive, positive vision for the future, where our mission is to bring all the people of this island together, not to keep us apart.

Mr Robinson: Given previous incidents, such as the gesture by Sinn Féin's Barry McElduff about Kingsmill, what action would the deputy First Minister take if a Member from her Assembly team was to make insulting remarks that were similar to those of Mr Stanley?

Mrs O'Neill: As I said, I think that all of us in political leadership have an onus to do our utmost to move society forward and to make sure that we avoid refighting battles of the past. I encourage all of us in the Chamber, as political leaders, to do so.

Santa Claus

T3. Mr Lyttle asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, given that it has been a challenging year for children in Northern Ireland, with many, including two little people in his house, really looking forward to the hope and gifts of Christmas, to confirm, for younger — and some older — constituents, that the Executive guidelines will allow Santa Claus, insofar as is possible, to deliver some presents to children this Christmas. (AQT 743/17-22)

Mrs O'Neill: That is an excellent question, and I am quite sure that —

Mr Speaker: He is asking for a friend. [Laughter.]

Mrs O'Neill: — all the little boys and girls out there will really want to know the answer. I can confirm that the elves have confirmed to the Executive that Santa is getting ready, Dancer, Prancer and Rudolph are ready to go, the presents are packed and Santa will be here. They also said that all the boys and girls need to be very good, because there are just 25 more sleeps before Santa is here.

Mr Speaker: I call Chris Lyttle to follow that one with a supplementary question. [Laughter.]

Ms Bailey: Have you been good? [Laughter.]

Mr Lyttle: I have tried my best this year. I thank the deputy First Minister for that confirmation that Santa Claus will be allowed to work in Northern Ireland this Christmas, and, indeed, I wish all children a really happy end of term and Christmas this year.

Will the deputy First Minister ensure that the Executive work together, as best as they possibly can, in order to make 2021 a better year for all children in Northern Ireland?

Mr Speaker: I will check Hansard to see whether I can give you a reference. [Laughter.] I call Kellie Armstrong.

Ms Armstrong: Thank you very much, Mr Speaker. I thank the deputy First Minister and my colleague for that —.

Mr Speaker: I am sorry, Ms Armstrong; I neglected to let the deputy First Minister respond to the previous question, if she wishes to do so.

Mrs O'Neill: I will just concur with Mr Lyttle. Absolutely, and 2020 has been a desperate year all round on many fronts for many people. We all acknowledge readily that many people are struggling right now as a result of everything that has happened this year. Let us all hope that next year will be a better year, and let us all work together to make that the case.

Mr Speaker: I now call Kellie Armstrong.

Commission on Flags, Identity, Culture and Tradition: Final Report

T4. Ms Armstrong asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, given the previous question about presents, to confirm when the flags, identity, culture and tradition report will be published or brought to the Executive for discussion, particularly because she received a present at the weekend, which concerned her slightly, in that it was the image of a flag that is being designed to commemorate the 100th anniversary of Northern Ireland, which looked to be very one-sided. (AQT 744/17-22)

Mrs O'Neill: As the Member knows, we received the report back on 17 July. It covers a wide range of complex and challenging issues that have remained unresolved and have impacted on our society for many years. The junior Ministers met the former joint chairpersons of the commission in order to discuss the report, and we are considering the final report. We will decide on the appropriate next steps, including a decision on the publication of the commission's report, in due course.

Ms Armstrong: As I mentioned, next year brings forward the 100th anniversary celebrations and centenary, however people want to recognise it. Given that Northern Ireland has come so far in the last couple of decades, can the deputy First Minister confirm whether, moving forward into next year, any considerations will represent all the citizens who live in this place, including those of us who designate as "both" and "other", in order to ensure that, if there is any production of flags, memorabilia or anything, it is actually inclusive?

Mrs O'Neill: I am on public record as saying that the decade of centenaries opens up the debate on all the seminal events that shaped the direction of Ireland and, indeed, Britain, and the relationship between the two islands. For me, 2021 should be inclusive. It should be about how we include everybody in the conversation about the continued transformation of society and how we can make things better. For me, it certainly presents an opportunity. Whilst I will certainly never say that there is anything to celebrate about partition — it has failed everybody across the island — I do not want 2021 to be defined by rancour or division. I certainly want it to be about a forward-looking conversation, the future and how we can do that and make things better together.

Mr Speaker: I advise the House that questions 7 and 9 have been withdrawn.

Smaller Retailers: Frustrations

T5. Mr Irwin asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether they accept the frustrations of smaller retailers such as toyshops when they see large supermarkets selling the same products that they have been prevented from selling. (AQT 745/17-22)

Mrs O'Neill: Yes, I certainly can. It is such a frustrating time for many people. There are many contradictions and anomalies in the regulations, so I share those concerns. We tried to mitigate that somewhat by allowing click and collect in order to allow people some opportunity to be able to sell. However, I fully accept the challenges that there are for the business community right now.

Mr Irwin: I thank the deputy First Minister for her response. Can she confirm that such businesses that have to close will receive support through the Department of Finance scheme in a timely manner?

Mrs O'Neill: A number of schemes are paying out grant aid at the moment, and whilst we are asking people to close their doors, it is vital that they be financially supported. We hope that continued progress is being made on both schemes across the Department of Finance and the Department for the Economy. We need to get that money into people's pockets now. I assure the Member that those who have been affected by the recent wave of restrictions will also be included in the financial support package.

Bobby Storey Funeral: PSNI Contact

T6. Mr Storey asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, given that the deputy First Minister has stated in the House that all state agencies must be accountable to the law, whether, as one of those state agents — a Minister of the Crown — the deputy First Minister will outline accurately what contact she has had with the PSNI in relation to the Bobby Storey funeral, unlike when she appeared before the Executive Office Committee on 1 July, when she stated that republicans would have come in even larger numbers from across this island and further afield to the funeral had that been possible and had Sinn Féin not actively discouraged people, given that we now know that that discouragement was not the case. (AQT 746/17-22)

Mrs O'Neill: I have come before this House and the Committee on many occasions and have amply dealt with the issue. On the PSNI inquiry into the funeral, I have cooperated from the outset and will be available to the PSNI when it sets a date for a discussion.

Mr Storey: Does the deputy First Minister accept that it has been hugely frustrating for the public to see this fiasco being played out for the last number of months when, at the weekend, in north Down, people were put off the beach for going for a swim? She and her colleagues, some of whom are in this House, attended a funeral in breach of the regulations, and, months later, we are still playing out this pantomime of giving the right, accurate account to the law.

Mrs O'Neill: My position is very clear. I have stated very clearly that I am more than happy to speak to the PSNI when something is arranged. At the weekend, people were asked to leave the beach for a reason, which is that COVID-19 is rife and we need to try to get on top of it.

Christmas: Advice

T8. Mr McHugh asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, as Christmas is fast approaching, what advice the joint First Minister has for families. (AQT 748/17-22)

Mrs O'Neill: It is such an important time, and I am grateful for the earlier question from Chris Lyttle. It is important that we give people hope. I am glad that, last week, we could announce that the Executive have agreed that up to three households will be able to form an exclusive bubble for five days between 23 and 27 December. For us, that is a balance, as we know that any relaxation comes with an increased risk.

Our health service is still under huge pressure, as we know, and that will be the case into the new year. Even at Christmas, we are asking people to be sensible and to please prevent the virus from spreading. So be as safe as possible if you get together. Some people will not take advantage of the relaxations, but it is for everybody to make up their own mind, based on their personal circumstances, and decide what is right for them and their families. Our message is that we are allowing some flexibility, but please think of the health service and think about the implications for what might come in January if we let our guard down too much.

Mr McHugh: I thank the joint First Minister for her answer. My question is probably very appropriate, as my mother is in a care home and was only recently diagnosed with COVID-19. Can she confirm whether decisions on Christmas arrangements have been made for care homes and for students?

Mrs O'Neill: I wish your mother the very best and hope that she comes through COVID-19. Last week, the Executive looked at a whole range of questions and answers that we can put into the public domain to help people to understand and make their own plans for Christmas. One of the areas missing last week, which the Health Minister told us he would bring a proposal on this week, is what visiting will look like for nursing homes in the Christmas period.

We hope to have that information this week, and then we will be able to collate it and put it into the public domain.

Also, the issue of students needs to be clarified again. The universities are doing great work on testing to allow students to come home, but, again, we should put that out there in black and white so that people can see in one source exactly what the current circumstance is.

Mr Speaker: Time is up, Members. Please take your ease for a moment or two.

Health

Carrickmore Health Centre

1. Mr McAleer asked the Minister of Health for an update on the plans to develop Carrickmore health centre. (AQO 1215/17-22)

Mr Swann (The Minister of Health): The Health and Social Care Board, through the primary care infrastructure development programme, is taking forward planned investment in primary care premises across Northern Ireland. That will be based on a hub-and-spoke model. Carrickmore health centre is a spoke of the Omagh hub, and it is recognised that, due to the growing size of the GP practice, it is now operating in a space that is well below its capacity requirements. It has, therefore, been identified as a priority for capital investment. However, due to many competing priorities across Northern Ireland, it is likely that new provision in Carrickmore will be a longer-term priority unless significant new capital funding can be provided.

In 2019, the Western Health and Social Care Trust carried out work to convert two old dental rooms to provide additional GP practice space in the Carrickmore health centre to meet the urgent and immediate needs of the practice. A requirement for funding to commence new health centre provision in Carrickmore was identified by my Department as part of a recent Department of Finance-led four-year capital budget information-gathering exercise. However, since that exercise, the Chancellor of the Exchequer's November spending review now covers the 2021-22 year only. Therefore, my ability to take the project forward is subject to the confirmation of future budget allocations. However, once a capital budget is available, the Health and Social Care Board will work with the Western Health and Social Care Trust to take forward the preparation of the business case to identify the preferred option.

Mr McAleer: I thank the Minister for his answer. I declare an interest as a registered patient at the Carrickmore health centre. I am glad that the Minister has identified this as a priority for capital investment, albeit in the longer term. Does he recognise that, given that we have an ageing population and that the Carrickmore health centre serves a very large and dispersed rural population, that has huge implications for rural isolation and ambulance response times? Given that we are amongst the furthest away from acute services, does the Minister not agree that this particular health centre should be prioritised for investment?

Mr Swann: As I said in my initial answer to the Member, I do. But, as I also said, the recent funding allocation only being for one year puts pressure on that.

A number of hubs for the Tyrone and Fermanagh area are envisaged in the strategic implementation plan, including Omagh, Enniskillen, Lisnaskea, Dungannon, Strabane and Cookstown. The hubs in Omagh and Enniskillen are operational. The business case for the hub in Lisnaskea is under review and will be followed by a business case for the Dungannon hub. The Health and Social Care Board is also investing in the development of spokes, which will take the form of smaller health centres, and is working with the Western Health and Social Care Trust to explore the need to invest in trust-owned health centres. In addition, GP practices in GP-owned or leased premises can also apply to the Health and Social Care Board for grants to support the development of their premises.

Mr Butler: I thank the Minister for his update on those hubs. Can he update us on the activity of the GP COVID centres?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his question. The establishment of primary-care COVID centres was an urgent and immediate response to the challenges that were posed by the COVID-19 pandemic. They ensured that primary care services could be maintained by enabling patients who have COVID-19 symptoms to be treated separately from patients who have other conditions that require assessment or treatment in primary care. The staffing and operation of those centres is managed locally by GP federations in response to local demand.

Primary-care COVID centres have been crucial in ensuring that GP practices have been able to continue to deliver vital services and face-to-face appointments for patients and have greatly reduced the flow to emergency departments. Between 6 April and 22 November this year, there were 109,697 COVID-related queries to GP practices. Of those patients, 23,022 were triaged and referred to primary COVID centres, with 15% of patients assessed at those centres and, then, referred to secondary care. The week from Monday 19 to Sunday 25 October saw 1,045 referrals — the highest weekly number of referrals since the centres opened.

Mr McCrossan: I thank the Minister for his answers so far. First, it is important to acknowledge the important role that health centres play, right across our respective constituencies and particularly in rural constituencies such as mine and Mr McAleer's. Are there any projected costs for the necessary works at the health practice in Carrickmore?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his question. The answer was in the final sentence of my answer to Mr McAleer. Once a capital budget is available, the Health and Social Care Board will work with the Western Health and Social Care Trust to take forward the preparation of the business case in order to identify their preferred option. As I said, because the Chancellor of the Exchequer's spending review will now only cover 2021-22, my ability to take that project forward is subject to the confirmation of future capital budget allocations.

Baby Scan Studios: Regulation

2. Ms Armstrong asked the Minister of Health to identify the body with responsibility for regulating private baby scan studios operating in Northern Ireland. (AQO 1216/17-22)

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for her question. Private baby-scan studios are not included in the list of regulated establishments and agencies as set out in the Health and Personal Social Services (Quality, Improvement and Regulation) (Northern Ireland) Order 2003. However, if ultrasounds are carried out in those studios by radiographers, the radiographers are regulated by the Health and Care Professions Council (HCPC). Independent hospitals and clinics may carry out private baby scans, and those establishments are regulated by the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority (RQIA) under the 2003 Order and the Independent Health Care Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2005.

Ms Armstrong: I thank the Minister very much. As he is probably aware, the Care Quality Commission had growing concerns about failures to discover serious medical issues during private baby scans in England. While he says that some of those places are not regulated but that radiographers may be, what assurances can he give to families here that serious medical conditions will not be missed?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member; she has made a valid point, and her question gets to the heart of it. There is a risk that those private baby scan studios do not tell women about an abnormality or a serious condition. Pregnant women are offered at least two ultrasounds during pregnancy by health and social care staff through our systems, and that includes an anomaly scan at 18 to 20 weeks. All private scans are in addition to that.

When it comes to the specific regulatory framework, RQIA's regulatory activity is determined by the 2003 legislation, which reflects departmental policy at that time. Since then, the health and social care system has changed dramatically in how we access care and in the type of care that is available. That includes the rise of services that are available on the high street and online. Statutory health and social care providers such as trusts, which run our hospitals as well as some primary care services such as GP surgeries and community pharmacies, are not regulated by the RQIA. However, the professional staff who work in those services are regulated, so that carries across with regard to my initial answer.

Ms Flynn: The Minister will be aware that the paediatric pathology service here collapsed a few years ago and is currently accessible only in Liverpool. Will the Minister explore, with the Health Minister in Dublin, the provision of an accessible paediatric pathology service on the island or an in-reach service into the North?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for the point. She has raised the issue with me previously, and I know that she works on that area continually. We have been exploring a number of options, but the biggest challenge not only across these islands but across parts of the world is the availability of paediatric pathologists. It is an acquired skills set. There is an opening call for recruitment for our Health and Social Care service in Northern Ireland, and we have explored models with the Republic of Ireland, but the model that we operate at the minute involves being able to work with colleagues in the United Kingdom. It is not satisfactory; it does not provide the emotional support that parents often need when they lose a child. We are acutely aware of that in the Department and across the health and social care sector. We are working hard to correct that, but the availability of paediatric pathologists is the biggest challenge to us all.

Ms Bailey: Is the Minister aware of any instances of women trying to access baby scans at NHS or other premises being blocked from doing so, so they have to go to a private provider? If that is the case, what can be done in such circumstances?

Mr Swann: I am not aware of that having happened. If the Member knows of any examples, I would appreciate it if she highlighted them to my office, because the Health and Social Care system — the equivalent of the National Health Service in Northern Ireland — is available for those who need it, free at point of use and point of delivery. That is something that I stand over.

Test and Trace: Update

3. Mr O'Toole asked the Minister of Health for an update on the test and trace programme. (AQO 1217/17-22)

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his question. Our testing and track and trace programmes continue to evolve at pace. As part of the UK-wide programme, we are continuing with the implementation of a number of new testing interventions (NTIs) in Northern Ireland — for example, the testing of asymptomatic healthcare workers will begin this week. That NTI will enable the early identification of the SARS-CoV-2 virus in healthcare staff who do not have symptoms, which will ensure that front-line staff self-isolate early, thereby reducing the risk of the onward transmission of infection. Testing of asymptomatic students also commenced this week at Queen's University with the use of lateral flow devices, and plans are progressing to offer testing, where needed, to the wider population of students. Learning arising from those NTIs will help us to better understand how the new asymptomatic testing technologies can be implemented and extended more widely.

With regard to the contact-tracing service, in addition to a number of digital enhancements, including a new self-trace platform, the Public Health Agency commenced enhanced contact tracing on 16 November. That is a significant development in our approach to combating the virus and will ensure a strong focus on identifying the likely source of a case of infection and potential common exposures, which can lead to clusters. My staff and colleagues in the PHA are continuing to work on a range of options to ensure that our contact-tracing service is well positioned to deal with the pandemic in the coming months. That will involve the development of a hybrid model, with a focus on further digital solutions to deliver early messages to contacts and cases, while allowing the health professional staff in the contact-tracing service to risk-assess and deal with more complex cases and with clusters and outbreaks.

Mr O'Toole: I thank the Minister for his answer. May I ask a couple of very brief follow-up questions? First, students who are travelling back to Northern Ireland ahead of Christmas, particularly from England, Scotland and Wales, have thus far received very limited information from the Executive. I realise that that is in part the responsibility of the Economy Minister, but the Health Minister has a slightly better record of giving us straight answers. Will he update the House on whether there will be specific testing and tracing advice to students travelling here for Christmas?

Secondly, in relation to the end of the transition period and Brexit — we have talked about this before — has the Minister had clarity on whether there will be complete certainty around cross-border data flows if there is not a deal on comprehensive data-sharing equivalence by the end of this year?

Is he assured of that? Can he be confident that contact testing and tracing between Derry and Donegal, for example, will not be jeopardised on New Year's Day?

3.00 pm

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his two supplementary questions. On the first, information will be provided to students who are coming home from England, Scotland and Wales by the university at which they are studying. The advice, the testing method, the approach and the guidance that they must follow will be provided by the location at which that testing is being provided. Therefore, information on their travel corridor will also be established.

For students who are currently domiciled in our universities and are returning to England, Scotland or Wales, advice will be given through our testing system and the NTI that started in Queen's University at the beginning of last week. That will be expanded to students studying at Ulster University so that we can let them travel home safely.

Data sharing and contact tracing are health based, like the information that is transmitted about patients who use the cancer services in Altnagelvin and the parents and patients who use the children's cardiology service in Dublin. That is an agreement between the Irish Government and the Northern Ireland Assembly's Executive, and it will not be affected by the General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR). The current challenge in the sharing of information is a difficulty that I have experienced with the Irish Government's sharing of data, specifically in relation to travel locator forms. It has been the basis of many conversations and much correspondence, but it is a difficulty that I have still not found a satisfactory resolution to.

Mr Gildernew: We know that the contact-tracing model and preparations were inadequate to meet the increased demand at the start of this surge and that the inadequacies stemmed from poor modelling. Has the Department now addressed that inadequacy?

Mr Swann: I challenge the Member's use of the word "inadequacy". I have challenged it in the past, as the Member knows. I see Mr Sheehan, who has developed expertise in that area, looking at me. From the onset of the pandemic to where we are now, we have seen significant changes in the contact-tracing system. Originally, the system was used to identify sexually transmitted infections and food poisoning, and a small team was based in the Public Health Agency. Now, we are always learning, and we are developing the system on the basis of what we see across best practice. We have increased the scale of the system, and we continue to increase the number of contact tracers who follow up on that service. We are developing digital and online platforms to allow that information to be gathered at a rapid pace, because we know the value of contact tracing.

In Northern Ireland, we have always been clear that our contact-tracing system will be health based. It will remain embedded within our healthcare system. It is not part of any private, for-profit industry. We value what it brings to our health service as part of how we combat the spread of COVID-19 in Northern Ireland.

Mrs Cameron: I thank the Minister for his answers thus far. I declare an interest, in that a family member is working in the current test, trace and protect scheme.

I certainly would not describe the programme as “inadequate”, but we could do better at times. Has the Minister looked at the Welsh model of contact tracing with a view to upscaling ours? Has he looked at how we can have more meaningful communication, with checks and updates, with people who have tested positive, or people who have come into close contact with those who have done so, in Northern Ireland?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for that. A TV programme compared our service with the Welsh model, and you will appreciate that the service models for contact tracing in Wales and Northern Ireland have their differences. As you are aware, the service provided by the Public Health Agency in Northern Ireland is staffed by health professionals focusing very much on a person-led approach. That manual element is augmented by a number of digitally-enabled solutions, including the recently introduced self-trace platform and the StopCOVID NI app. In Wales, contact tracing is provided through local authorities and health boards, which are supported by Public Health Wales.

Despite the differences in the models, it is still possible to draw some high-level comparison on performance. For example, in Wales, during a seven-day period in mid-November, according to the most recently published Welsh Government data, 92% of positive cases and 82% of contacts were reached. In Northern Ireland, if we look at a seven-day period around the same time, we can see that 94% of positive cases and 98% of contacts were reached. There are, undoubtedly, aspects of both models that work particularly well and other areas that will require further refinement, and we have been open about that. I am satisfied that, in Northern Ireland, the measures that I recently discussed with the Health Committee and the Executive, with an increased focus on a hybrid model, involving manual contact tracing services supported by digital solutions, will ensure that we are positioned to deal with any further increases in numbers in the months to come.

Mr Chambers: Can the Minister provide any update on his previous request to the UK Government for 4 million lateral flow tests?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his question. We continue to be in discussion with DHSC. Ministers from all four nations of the United Kingdom have a very close working relationship. Matt Hancock has congratulated us on what will be an ambitious programme. He is willing to discuss how that programme will work out in Northern Ireland as we take it forward. We have yet to see the outworkings of the pilots that have been taking place in Liverpool and in Merthyr Tydfil in Wales. In our system, it will be piloted at Queen’s University and rolled out across our Health and Social Care system to make sure that, if we receive that number of lateral flow devices, we can utilise them in the best and most effective way.

Students: Health Advice

4. Mr Middleton asked the Minister of Health what guidance his Department is issuing to students prior to the second semester of this academic year. (AQO 1218/17-22)

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his question. I will answer the question in respect of students at the local universities on healthcare courses commissioned by my Department. It is very important that reassurance and support is provided to healthcare students, so that they can pursue their studies despite the challenges created by the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic to learning on placements. Placements are a fundamental dimension of much preregistration learning across the health professions. Officials in my Department are working closely with key stakeholders, including the higher and further education providers, to ensure that students are made aware of the key messages, and that includes guidance specific to each subject area issued by their university or education provider and the overall health guidance issued by the Public Health Agency.

A joint statement from the four UK Chief Nursing Officers (CNOs) and the Nursing and Midwifery Council (NMC) was issued on 23 November to clarify the principles for nursing and midwifery students during the next phase of the pandemic. The overriding objective set out in the statement, which I consider to be paramount, is to continue to support students to complete their programmes on time, so that they can enter the workforce as registrants as quickly as possible. My officials have shared that statement with the local universities and have asked them to ensure that it is communicated to all students.

I am also fully committed to supporting the continuation of medical and dental education. Accordingly, my officials continue to work very closely with Queen’s University and other key stakeholders on the practical and financial implications of delivering education in clinical environments and complying with social-distancing protocols. I have also confirmed to the universities that all such healthcare students will be entitled to avail themselves of the free healthcare car parking at HSC trust premises that has been made available to HSC employees up until 31 March. In addition, the universities have been advised that their healthcare students are key workers and are entitled to free public transport when travelling to placements.

Mr Middleton: I thank the Minister for his response. The Minister will be aware that there is a lot of frustration among students about the lack of guidance, particularly when it comes to travelling home for Christmas and as they enter their second semester.

Will the Minister commit to working with the Executive to issue guidance similar to that which has been issued by his counterparts in the UK?

Mr Swann: As the Member will be aware, I work with all my Executive colleagues to bring forward the necessary guidance, but in those regions and areas where other Ministers have policy lead, it is helpful to us if they bring forward that policy for discussion. We can then provide information and guidance rather than my Department leading on areas that are outwith our policy area.

Mr O’Dowd: Minister, several weeks ago, the Scottish Government introduced about £1.3 million for mental healthcare and well-being for students. I raised the matter with the Economy Minister a number of weeks ago, and I got a positive response. Will you approach the matter positively to see whether you can identify specific funding for our students for their mental health and well-being?

Mr Swann: Certainly. The Member well knows my commitment to mental health since coming into office. In fact, when the pandemic first hit Northern Ireland, I gave assurances to the Committee, its members and the House that mental health would not go off my Department's agenda, and that is why we continued with the development of the mental health strategy, which will lead to the mental health action plan. Within that, we worked on the support mechanisms that will be needed for mental health specifically due to the fallout from COVID. I have no hesitancy in giving the Member that reassurance, and, equally, I am keen to work with and to support the Economy Minister on the issue in support of our students.

Ms Bradshaw: Minister, I take you back to my South Belfast colleague's question about students travelling home. I have been contacted by parents who are concerned that their children may get a negative test on campus, but, between then and arriving home to their household bubble, they will be on a tube, a train, a bus or other mode of transport and could well pick it up on their journey home. Is there no way that you could work with Queen's University so that some of that testing could take place when the students return home as well?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member, but the testing that is being completed to allow our students to travel home is done with the lateral flow devices that are being set up in the mass testing centres in our universities. It is not practicable to move that testing centre closer to home for the second test because such diverse geographical regions are involved. I say to the students who are returning home that, when using public transport, they should follow all public health guidance, such as wearing face coverings and as much social distancing as is practicable. If there are alternatives to using public transport, they should explore those. They should avoid car sharing, because we have seen from previous studies in other places that car sharing has become a source of infection. I am afraid to say to the Member that, because of the utilisation of the lateral flow devices in tests and the way that the test works, it is not possible to move that second test closer to home.

COVID-19: SWAH Use

5. Mrs Barton asked the Minister of Health for an update of the utilisation of the South West Acute Hospital (SWAH) during the COVID-19 pandemic. (AQO 1219/17-22)

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for her question. As Members will be aware, over the last number of months, the COVID-19 pandemic has had a significant impact on the delivery of some services in our Health and Social Care system. As a result, it is critical that we make the best use of all available capacity in the system.

The Member will recall that she kindly invited me to the SWAH earlier in the year. During that visit, I saw at first hand the opportunities presented by the hospital. I am pleased now to be able to confirm that a number of new initiatives have been taken forward to support service delivery as we work to maximise the use of all available capacity in the system. A key initiative that is being developed is on the delivery of elective surgery services, with surgeons from across Northern Ireland travelling to Enniskillen to provide surgery that cannot be provided at other sites due to the number of COVID-positive inpatients.

In the initial phase, that work has understandably been focused on high-priority patients who require surgery. The initial sessions have been offered to the Belfast Trust for surgical lists and time-critical treatments that have been displaced by the activation of the Belfast City Hospital Nightingale. Throughout the coming months, the position will be kept under review, and further work is under way to explore options for maximising the availability of capacity at the SWAH in the longer term.

Mrs Barton: I welcome that information. Minister, will you agree that having the extra facilities in the SWAH will make it even more attractive for new staff to work in it?

Mr Swann: Very much so, and the Western Health and Social Care Trust is working on that. We have seen that come about in other areas and in other facilities. However, the biggest deterrent in attracting staff to some of our excellent hospital and healthcare facilities is often that Members and other elected representatives start to talk about a service being downgraded or a location closing. That deters and disenfranchises people who may be interested in going to one of those sites to seek further employment. The implementation of what will be elective surgery lists in the SWAH is a further enhancement and something that makes it attractive for people to work there as well as giving them the opportunity, of course, to live in the Member's constituency.

Mr Speaker: That ends the period for listed questions, Members. We now move to 15 minutes of topical questions. Question 1 has been withdrawn

AstraZeneca Vaccine

T2. Ms S Bradley asked the Minister of Health, given that the AstraZeneca COVID-19 vaccine is to undergo a new global trial to further determine its efficiency, what effect that will have on the vaccination programme here. (AQT 752/17-22)

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for the question. I am assured by colleagues that it will not have any effect on or cause any setbacks to our vaccine programme, because our assessment will be done by the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA). Once that assessment comes forward, we will, hopefully, utilise that vaccine in a safe and appropriate manner. Only when that guarantee and assurance come forward will we utilise it in Northern Ireland.

Ms S Bradley: Thank you, Minister. A few weeks ago, you gave a welcome reassurance to the House regarding concerns about the flu vaccination. Can you give that same assurance that all the logistical operation required for a COVID-19 vaccination programme will be in place and will in no way delay the vaccination programmes that are being rolled out?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for a topical and apt question about the vaccine. As I have said, while the vaccine is part of the solution, we still have to follow the guidance that we have. That is why our regulations are still needed, and it is why all the good health advice regarding social distancing, face coverings, hand hygiene and respiratory hygiene is crucial.

I give the Member the reassurance that, until the MHRA says that the vaccine is safe to use, we will not use it. Developing the roll-out of the vaccination programme is a large logistical operational challenge. My Department gave a presentation to the Executive last week highlighting the preparations that we have already made. I can tell the Member that those preparations are impressive. We have offered that same presentation to the Health Committee. The detail that it has taken to get to this stage has involved overcoming a large number of logistical challenges.

One of the biggest challenges is that the AstraZeneca vaccine comes in batches of 975 vials per pack, and it will be highly challenging, if not impossible, to break those down into smaller packs. It is a vaccine designed for mass vaccination and mass vaccination centres, and that will pose an initial challenge to the delivery of our vaccine programme in Northern Ireland. That is why we are also looking to the development and the coming on schedule of other vaccines so that we can utilise them fully as well in the different models that we are working up.

Since taking on the post of Minister of Health, I have been greatly impressed by the people across the Health and Social Care service. Their dedication and the detail that they have put into preparing for the vaccine mass delivery is impressive, and I look forward to sharing that with the Health Committee and in the debate tomorrow in the House, where, Mr Speaker, I am back again.

Mr Speaker: You will be more than welcome, Minister.

Cancer Treatment: COVID-19 Delays

T3. Mr Irwin asked the Minister of Health for his assessment of the delays to cancer treatment services due to COVID-19 and to state whether preparation for the second wave has been adequate. (AQT 753/17-22)

Mr Swann: I do not think the Member is implying it, but I take exception to that. I have said it before in the House, in response to a question for urgent oral answer. There is ongoing work and challenges with the delivery of our cancer services. I will be clear — it was made clear when we were discussing our regulations — that those decisions are being made by clinicians on the clinical need of patients. Casting any aspersion on the professionalism or the work of our health professionals is unfortunate. I know the Member well enough to know that that is not his intention.

There are ongoing capacity challenges across the cancer pathway that the service is actively managing. A surgical oversight group has been established in the Northern Ireland Cancer Network with the aim of optimising capacity, now and through any potential surge, and to provide ongoing clinical advice to the cancer reset cells.

I reassure the Member and the House that all possible steps are being taken to maintain services during the second surge. However, it is likely that the redeployment of staff, staff absences, reduced access to theatres and patient reluctance to attend hospital will all contribute to delays in pathways. Experience from the first surge suggests that the greatest impact is likely to be on invasive diagnostics and surgical treatment. Depending on the scale and continuing duration of this surge, there may be a requirement to increase independent sector capacity beyond the current contracted level.

Mr Irwin: I thank the Minister for his response. On Friday past, I spoke to a constituent who was diagnosed at the beginning of last week with cancer. He was told by medical staff that they were not sure when treatment could start, but they advised him to contact his MLA to see if they could help in some way. Does this not tell you that there are problems, Minister? Obviously, when medical staff are advising people diagnosed with cancer to go to their MLA for help, there is an issue.

Mr Swann: As I have said to the Member, I am not denying that there is an issue; I am saying that the challenge is that we have an already overstretched health service. It was stretched before the pandemic and COVID. Patients and members of the community were already approaching elected representatives about access to surgeries and to the health service. What the Member indicates is not new. It is something that I have experienced and that, I am sure, every Member of the House has experienced. The way to get those members of the public seen quicker is to reduce the number of COVID patients that we are supporting within our health and hospital services. Again today, we are still sitting at over 400 inpatients, with 39 in ICU. If we take all the steps and measures that we can in the House to reduce the rate of transmission and infection, we can get those services and provisions back on track as soon as is practical, possible and safe.

IVF: Update

T4. Ms Mullan asked the Minister of Health for an update on the IVF operational group and its work to date. (AQT 754/17-22)

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for her question. Pre COVID and pre pandemic, it was one of the things that we had set up to meet the commitment under 'New Decade, New Approach' to increase to three cycles of IVF. Unfortunately, one of the victims of COVID-19 was our IVF service in Belfast. It was paused; it was stepped down for months. It has now recommenced working, on a reduced capacity. The IVF working strategic group on how we build up to those three cycles has not met as we are trying to get the IVF facility, procedure and service back up to scale as soon as possible to meet the already latent demand that we unfortunately missed over a couple of months.

Ms Mullan: I thank the Minister for his answer. As you rightly highlighted, COVID has delayed many treatments. Unfortunately for those awaiting IVF treatment, it has added further to delays that, in some cases, are now running into years, Minister. Will you assure us that you are looking at all available options and will you look at directing investment into fertility services to improve and speed up the journey?

Mr Swann: That was one of the things that the working group was specifically asked to look at because, as I said, it was a commitment under 'New Decade, New Approach' that we would move to the offer of three IVF cycles. One of the challenges as well was moving to the age profile of women coming forward so that they could access the service. It is something that we are looking at because of the delays and knock-on delays that have been caused due to the pandemic and the service being paused. We want to make sure that nobody misses out because of steps that were taken by us rather than through any fault of their own. That work is all ongoing.

There was a significant financial commitment under 'New Decade, New Approach' to move to those three cycles, so if the Member can support me in that ask to the Finance Minister, when my budget asks come forward, it would be appreciated, because it is definitely an ask that we are prepared to make.

Face Coverings

T5. Dr Archibald asked the Minister of Health whether he will bring forward proposals for the introduction of free face coverings for lower-income families. (AQT 755/17-22)

Mr Swann: I thank the Member. That was one of the matters touched on during the debate on regulations. The provision of free face coverings is not something that my Department has looked at. There is guidance as to how the public can go about making their own cloth face coverings from the utilisation of T-shirts and other pieces of clothing. That advice and guidance was there from the early introduction of regulations on face coverings. What I would say to those in workplaces is that there should be provision of free face coverings.

I am not sure whether the Member is aware of this, but there is a proposal to put 20% VAT back on PPE, which would have a significant impact not just on individuals or businesses but on our care homes and our health sector. I am working with the Member's colleague, the Minister of Finance, to try to challenge that at Westminster, because to put that additional cost on PPE, as we enter a second surge, would be unconscionable.

Dr Archibald: Particularly given that there are younger people for whom face masks are now mandatory, I urge the Minister to continue to look at that.

Given the correlation between areas of higher deprivation and higher incidences of COVID, what learning has been gained by the Department of Health and by the interdepartmental work on high levels of COVID in more deprived communities?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member. That is a valid point that has been recognised in discussions with your ministerial colleagues, the Minister of Finance and the Minister for Communities. It is about the inequalities that COVID has highlighted across our society. We have a duty to tackle those inequalities and, going forward, that should be looked at, across the Executive, in the development of a Programme for Government.

One of the strengths of our National Health Service is that it is free at the point of use and free at the point of delivery, and you do not have to pay, for example, €50 to see a GP. Where there are financial challenges in areas of high deprivation with regard to access to work and to other supports, one of the big benefits that we have here is our National Health Service.

Urology Inquiry: Patients

T6. Mr O'Dowd asked the Minister of Health, in light of the fact that, last week, he announced an inquiry into a consultant urologist at Craigavon Area Hospital, for an update on how many patients, private and NHS, will be involved in that inquiry. (AQT 756/17-22)

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his question. As he said, I provided an oral statement to the Assembly on this matter on 24 November and announced my intention to establish a statutory public inquiry. In July, the Southern Health and Social Care Trust notified my Department of clinical concerns in relation to the work of a consultant, who, as the Member said, no longer works in the health service.

To date, 1,159 patient records have been reviewed, 271 patients or families have been contacted and the equivalent of nine serious adverse incidents (SAIs) have been identified.

The work of the trust in safeguarding patients and identifying further concerns continues, with oversight being provided by the Department's permanent secretary, who is leading the urology assurance group.

3.30 pm

As regards private patients, the Department is working closely with the Southern Trust to ensure that there is a process in place for follow-up to ensure that they can be confident of any healthcare services with which they were provided. Any private patients who are concerned should contact their GP or the trust's information line in the first instance.

Mr Speaker: There is one minute left for a supplementary.

Mr O'Dowd: I thank the Minister for his answer. Is he in a position yet to announce the name of the inquiry chair? Will he ensure that patient voices are involved in the design of the terms of reference?

Mr Swann: In quick response, I am not in a position to name a chair, but I give the Member a guarantee and assurance that patient voices will be heard as we establish and finalise the terms of reference of the public inquiry.

Mr Speaker: Members, time is up. Please take your ease.

Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 11) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020

Debate resumed on motion:

That the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 11) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved. — [Mr Swann (The Minister of Health).]

The following motions stood in the Order Paper:

That the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 12) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved. — [Mr Swann (The Minister of Health).]

That the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Wearing of Face Coverings) (Amendment No. 3) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved. — [Mr Swann (The Minister of Health).]

Dr Aiken: I thank the Minister for his forbearance and for his remarks so far. I want to say this before I specifically ask the Minister a question. Just before questions to the Executive Office, there was a very powerful testimony from Mr Daniel McCrossan MLA about the Tracey family. I do not think that any MLA who was in here to hear those remarks could fail to have been moved by compassion not only for that family and all the families who have suffered from COVID but, above all, for the excellent staff who went above and beyond the call of duty to support that person in his need. I put on record from the Assembly — all Members of the Assembly — our condolences to the family and our thanks to the staff of the NHS for their outstanding work and for what they do.

I note that, today, the Economy Minister and the Health Minister should have been here to provide —

Mr Swann: I am.

Dr Aiken: Did I say the Health Minister? My apologies to the Health Minister. The Economy Minister and the Education Minister should have been here to answer questions. There are particular areas in amendment Nos. 11 and 12 that should have been dealt with by them. All MLAs cannot fail to be concerned about the lack of information, particularly from the Department for the Economy. Some businesspeople in Northern Ireland have been excluded, and other businesspeople have been waiting seven to eight weeks for any guidance or support.

Minister, since it seems that only you have the courage to come to the Assembly to answer questions, even for other Departments, can you specifically ask the Minister for the Economy to expedite the movement of payments to those who need them and to those who have been excluded? Will you also ask her how she can give out advice, through her Department and Invest NI, that those people should just wait until the website updates itself? That is the level of guidance being given. That is not the kind of thing that we expect —.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I draw the Member back to the restrictions in front of us.

Dr Aiken: That is, indeed, within the restrictions, Mr Deputy Speaker.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Order. I ask the Member to draw his comments back to the particular regulations that we are debating.

Dr Aiken: Thank you very much indeed, Mr Deputy Speaker. In that case, I have made my point about the Minister for the Economy.

I will move swiftly on to the Minister of Education, who also should have been here to present these rules to us. I declare an interest as a school governor. I have been struck by the paucity of information and communication from the Department of Education to MLAs. Minister, since you are the only one who seems able to come and explain the regulations to the Assembly, will you take that point back to the Minister of Education and ask him to come before the Assembly or, better still, to talk to the schools of Northern Ireland and give them the information that they are due?

On that point Mr Deputy Speaker, and before you bring me back to the rules and regulations, I will finish by saying that the Ulster Unionist Party fully supports the amendment No. 11 and amendment No. 12 regulations.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The remaining Members who indicated that they wished to speak and who should be here are not present. I return to the Minister to respond to the debate.

Mr Swann: I had written in my notes, “Mr Speaker”, then “Mr Principal Deputy Speaker” and then “Mr Deputy Speaker”. You are the third one in the Chair since we started the debate, Mr Deputy Speaker.

I am grateful to Members for their contribution to the debate. I appreciate the degree of goodwill that the Assembly shows to this unusual process whereby the role of legislative scrutiny is applied only after the event. Nevertheless, it is important that scrutiny takes place in order that Members can examine and comment on the measures that have been taken.

In the current context, things move fast. The observations and concerns of Members are taken on board as we develop policy and work on the next set of amendments. The public must have confidence that the Executive are not acting without scrutiny. For that reason, I will respond to a number of questions raised by Members during the debate.

Comments were made by the Committee Chair on the policy development of the regulations. I have had useful conversations with him. The amendments are led by policy asks from other Departments and Ministers. We follow those up and attempt to put them into regulations that are not only understandable but legally enforceable.

There are challenging equality issues within these regulations. We all recognise that, in normal situations, I would not bring them forward. It is about seeking a balance of detail and proportionality. The Member also made a comment about the benefits that face coverings bring to post-primary and home-to-school transport.

Mr Gildernew moved on to comment as a Sinn Féin MLA on the challenges of communication. The Member and I have had many conversations at Committee on the importance of communicating the regulations, why they are necessary and the benefits that they bring in supporting an already overstretched health service. I thank him for his continued stance as Chairperson of the Committee on putting forward out the single, unified message that he and I have been able to achieve: the need for these important regulations.

In response to comments made by Pam Cameron, the Deputy Chair of the Committee, I thank her for her commitment and support and for the role that she continues to play in supporting the health service. She commented on support for businesses and individuals who are going through tough times. As I have often highlighted, the unity of message and purpose coming out of the Executive at this time is more crucial than ever. The Member mentioned the amendment made at the request of the Education Minister in regards to PE in schools. When the regulations were laid, it came to the attention of the Department of Education that the restrictions on sport did not exempt school PE. Until that issue was resolved, the Department of Education advised schools that PE was to be paused. A resolution was provided by these regulations as quickly as possible. It was neither the intention nor the spirit of the regulations to stop PE.

Colin McGrath commented on how the regulations were handled and brought forward. He said that the general public were “suffering” under the regulations. I say to the Member that the general public are suffering the regulations so that we can ensure that fewer members of the general public suffer COVID.

As regards timing, it is the Assembly’s requirement for the input of the Examiner of Statutory Rules and the timing of scrutiny provided by the Health Committee that allow us to set the process. Any process that would bring regulations to the House before that work was completed would meet with equal and opposite complaint. There is a challenge with regard to the speed and detail of some regulations, and it is a challenge that we all want to see rectified and bettered.

Ms Bradshaw spoke of the technical nature of the regulations, because that is what they and all the regulations are. They are technical amendments that were necessary to correct anomalies and queries that were raised. Sinéad Bradley said it was only when people questioned how the regulations affected their daily lives that we could fine-tune them and have them in place so that, if they are ever needed again, and hopefully they will not be needed again, we will have got over those hurdles.

I agree with Mr Middleton that there is a need to move away from the politicisation of this issue. I have been calling for that for some time. He said that, on these issues, all Ministers needed to be heard. I will give way quite happily to any of my ministerial colleagues who want to step in and move any of these regulations in the coming days.

Mr Sheehan spoke of the protection of the health and social care system and the realisation that that is the driving force behind these regulations. At present, we have 427 COVID inpatients. In the first wave, our maximum number was 322, so we have over 100 additional COVID patients being supported across our hospitals today. That is the reason for these regulations. Ms Anderson also spoke about the pressures that the healthcare system is under.

Queries were raised about time frames and legislative timetables. COVID does not respect any timetable, calendar or plan that we set. If only it did, it would be far easier for me, my health service and the healthcare workers to work with. I have said this many times, and I am echoing Mr Sheehan’s comment when he talked about siren voices who seem content with undermining what is a sound health message. That does not come out of just frustration. Sometimes, it comes out of pure bloody-mindedness, Mr Deputy Speaker, if you will excuse my language, because that is what I often get from our front-line healthcare workers when they hear those who are determined to undermine what is a sound health message.

It is a sound health message that does not necessarily always have to come from our political leadership, although it is welcome when it comes from that leadership with a united front. However, it is a message that comes from all our healthcare workers, no matter where they are across the system.

3.45 pm

Mr Sheehan also asked whether I could set out today what it will look like following 11 December —.

Mr Sheehan: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Swann: I will.

Mr Sheehan: I was getting a bit ahead of myself. I meant to say “this week” rather than “today”.

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his latitude. If he gives me a week, I would be more than appreciative. I was going to say that setting something out today would be highly challenging given that we are working through these regulations, which came into effect some time ago. I wish I could set the Executive’s timetable — if only I could — and I am sure the Member wishes that I could as well.

With regard to where we are, Ms Anderson raised the prospect of a vaccine. One thing that I ask is that the House gets behind the delivery of a vaccine and shares the benefit that it will have for the people of Northern Ireland in returning to the normality that we all know and want. I will be back in the House tomorrow afternoon for a debate specifically on that point. Sinéad Bradley asked about communications and whether the money for that is being well spent and how it is spent. The communications budget for COVID sits in the Executive Office and has been utilised to bring forward social media, TV and print adverts.

Following up on Mr Sheehan’s point, Mr Chambers talked about the hurlers in the ditch, who are often mentioned here. They are the individuals who seem to be able to sit back in comfort and combat COVID-19 with 20/20 vision and the clarity that are provided by educational degrees and qualifications that they received on social media. I only wish that I had the gift and the power to combat COVID-19 and the pandemic in the comfort and security and with the 20/20 vision that many of these people do. I assure you that, if I had 20/20 vision, 11 January would have been a different day in here.

Mr McCrossan and my party leader, Dr Aiken, summed up the experiences of the Tracey family. Unfortunately, they are not on their own, as so many families across Northern Ireland have had to endure that suffering. As Mr McCrossan explained, Frank's message should be one for all of us: we should thank our health service and support it to deal with the terrible virus that COVID is. I thank Members for their acknowledgement of the dedication of our healthcare workers, who are still having to go the extra mile. Healthcare workers across the healthcare family, should they be our GPs, community pharmacies, nurses, doctors, porters, cleaners or canteen workers, all play a part in our tackling of this dreadful pandemic and this dreadful virus. Hope comes with the opportunities that a vaccine and mass testing may bring, but we still need to get through these next few days, weeks and months while the virus is still with us.

The last contributor, Dr Aiken, made a number of calls to the Minister for the Economy and the Minister of Education. I am sure that those Ministers will hear those calls.

I am sure that, if they do not hear them from the Member directly, they will hear them from their departmental staff and advisers.

We all have a responsibility to help to curb the spread of the virus. We do that by maintaining social distancing and good hand and respiratory hygiene; wearing face coverings; self-isolating immediately if we experience any symptoms, including a new persistent cough, a fever or a loss or change of smell or taste; seeking a test if we experience any of those symptoms; downloading the StopCOVID NI app; and complying with the restrictions. By following the advice as we go about our daily lives, we can protect ourselves and others from serious illness, protect our health service and our economy and help to avoid further prolonged and more stringent restrictions.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 11) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved.

Medicines and Medical Devices Bill: Legislative Consent Motion

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I call the Minister of Health to move the legislative consent motion for the Medicines and Medical Devices Bill.

Mr Swann (The Minister of Health): I beg to move

That this Assembly endorses the principle of the extension to Northern Ireland of the provisions within the Medicines and Medical Devices Bill dealing with human medicines, veterinary medicines and information systems as amended at Committee Stage in the House of Lords.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Business Committee has agreed that there will be no time limit on the debate. I invite the Minister to open the debate on the motion.

Mr Swann: Members agreed legislative consent to the Medicines and Medical Devices Bill on 16 June. It allows the existing regulatory frameworks for medicines, medical devices, clinical trials and veterinary medicines to be updated or amended by subordinate legislation. The need for a further legislative consent motion has arisen because of an amendment made to the Bill at the House of Commons Report stage on a medical devices information system and, more recently, government amendments agreed at the House of Lords Committee stage concerning human and veterinary medicines. I will now expand on those areas in more detail.

A government amendment to the Medicines and Medical Devices Bill was made during the Commons Report stage on 23 June 2020. It provides a power by regulations to establish a medical device information system operated by NHS Digital. The amendment was in response to the report from the Independent Medicines and Medical Devices Safety Review, chaired by Baroness Cumberlege, entitled 'First Do No Harm', which was published on 8 July 2020.

The aim of a medical devices information system is to improve the safety and standards of medical devices by ensuring that better information can be captured and shared on implanted devices in order to identify much earlier the risks posed by specific devices. The medical devices information system will provide critical benefits to patients who have been or will be implanted with medical devices. They include the collection and storage of information linking unique device identifiers to patients, clinicians and the specific surgical procedures that implanted the device. It also establishes the systems that will enable health providers to trace patients who have been treated or implanted with a medical device so that they can be provided with appropriate medical treatment if a safety issue occurs with the device. That will be a huge step forward for patient safety, will assist with the timely identification of the patients affected and will help to manage any risks to patient safety.

It is important to ensure that the regulations developed to implement the information system take account of Northern Ireland's information governance and code of practice on the sharing of patients' identifiable information, both for direct care and secondary use. I wrote to Lord Bethell on that point in July 2020, and an amendment to the Bill has been agreed so that, when making regulations, the Secretary of State is required to consult Scottish Ministers, Welsh Ministers and us in Northern Ireland. In addition to that statutory obligation to consult my Department, a separate non-legislative commitment has been given by the Department of Health and Social Care (DHSC) to ongoing discussions on the medical devices information system's governance arrangements and other operational details. It will ensure that the Department of Health in Northern Ireland is engaged in relevant policy and operational discussions and the development of draft regulations. It is important that we are included in the UK-wide medical devices information system, and I welcome the amendment to the Bill that provides for a statutory duty to consult the devolved Administrations in the development of the regulations and any amendments. Scotland has already given its legislative consent on the matter, and legislative consent is being considered by the Welsh Government in the coming days.

I now turn to the other amendments that have been agreed at Lords Committee stage and require legislative consent from the Assembly. The first of those is on the disclosure of information in accordance with international agreements. In order that the UK, particularly the regulators — namely the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA) and the Veterinary Medicines Directorate (VMD) — can continue to work with international partners to ensure the safety of medicines in the UK, there is a need to strengthen the legal basis for sharing information internationally. That will be in the form of a statutory information gateway inserted into the Bill to ensure that vital information can be shared with bodies outside the UK, such as overseas regulators, in pursuance of international agreements and arrangements.

There has been much discussion at Westminster and among Assembly Members about the potential for regulatory divergence between Great Britain and Northern Ireland with regard to medicines and medical devices. Currently, responsibility for medical device regulation is reserved in respect of the whole of the UK. However, human medicine regulation and veterinary medicine regulation are both transferred matters in relation to Northern Ireland. The MHRA and the VMD regulate those areas UK-wide on a day-to-day basis, and, after the end of the transition period, with regard to human and veterinary medicines and medical devices, under the terms of the Northern Ireland protocol, Northern Ireland will continue to follow the EU acquis. However, the MHRA and the VMD will continue to regulate human and veterinary medicines and medical devices for the whole of the UK and will continue to ensure that patients and animals in Northern Ireland receive the safe and effective medicines and devices that they need.

While there are some concerns about the implementation of the NI protocol, formal channels are in place between officials here and their counterparts in the UK. Officials also meet regularly in the Ireland/Northern Ireland Specialised Committee. The Specialised Committee reports to the withdrawal agreement Joint Committee and provides advice on the decisions to be taken by the Joint Committee under the protocol.

The issues of the falsified medicines directive and the regulatory importation requirements for medicines moving from Great Britain to Northern Ireland after the end of the transition period have been raised with the EU through the Specialised Committee.

A 12-month period of flexibility has been agreed with the EU to implement the regulations. That will ensure that there will be no disruption to the flow of medicines to Northern Ireland at the end of the transition period.

4.00 pm

A further amendment that was agreed at the Lords' Committee Stage in respect of the Medicines and Medical Devices Bill can also be used as a vehicle to address any concerns on possible divergence. A reporting obligation on the Secretary of State is to be provided for in the Bill that will consider the operation of regulations for human medicines, veterinary medicines and medical devices once every two years. That sets out the view of those who have been consulted, whether change has been made a result of that consultation and includes a look ahead at further proposed regulatory change known at the time within the forthcoming reporting period. Any issue of possible regulatory divergence can be raised within that reporting mechanism.

I have also agreed that a separate report will be taken forward by Northern Ireland Departments in respect of regulations that are made only by Northern Ireland Departments. That will be laid before the Assembly.

Another amendment to the Bill has also been agreed at the Lords' Committee Stage that provides for a public consultation on regulations under the Bill, and that, again, can be used as a vehicle to address any possible issues of regulatory divergence.

In addition to those amendments to the Bill, other amendments require legislative consent from the Assembly, including applying the draft affirmative procedure to human and veterinary regulations, except for those solely relating to fees, when the negative resolution will be applied, and for emergency regulations, when the confirmatory procedure will be applied. That will allow for greater parliamentary and Assembly scrutiny on the making of those regulations.

Before regulations are made to change the existing regulatory framework, three considerations are applied that assess the safety, availability and attractiveness of the relevant part of the UK to develop and supply those products. In the application of those three considerations, it has been agreed to provide an overarching duty to have regard to the importance of promoting the health and safety of the public and, in relation to veterinary medicines, the health and welfare of animals. A summary of that assessment must be included in any public consultation on the regulation for human medicines, veterinary medicines, and medical devices. That will strengthen provisions around the exercise of those regulation-making powers and provide reassurance that it is intended only to make regulations to amend the current regulatory regimes where those changes promote health and safety.

To respond specifically to concerns that have been raised about the absence of a definition of "attractiveness to the UK", it has been agreed in an amendment to the Bill to clarify that that is a consideration of the likelihood of the relevant part of the United Kingdom to be seen as an attractive or favourable place in which to supply and conduct clinical trials for human medicines and to develop and supply veterinary medicines.

Finally, with regard to offences, an amendment has been agreed to make it clear that the powers that are provided under human medicines and veterinary medicines cannot be used to provide for an offence to be punishable with a sentence of imprisonment of more than two years. That maximum will then apply equally to penalties for new and existing offences. The Department of Justice has previously considered the Medicines and Medical Devices Bill and, more recently, the amendments that are being proposed. It is content that the current offences and penalties are necessary and commensurate with the current offences and penalties framework in Northern Ireland.

I trust that Members will understand the importance of Northern Ireland being included in those additional provisions to the Medicines and Medical Devices Bill, as, ultimately, those amendments seek to improve patient safety as well as allow the Assembly greater scrutiny in the regulation-making process. That is why I ask Members to support the motion.

Mr Gildernew (The Chairperson of the Committee for Health): I wish to speak on the Committee for Health's report and summarise our consideration of the matter. First, I want to thank the Committee for Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs for its prompt consideration of the legislative consent motion and contribution to the report. I will leave it to my colleague, the Chairperson of the Agriculture Committee, to address the issues around veterinary medicines.

This is the second legislative consent motion on the Bill. The Committee did not come to a view on the first one due to the limited time available for scrutiny. The Minister of Health first wrote to the Health Committee on 15 July advising us of the need for a further legislative consent motion to take account of a recommendation included in the report of the Independent Medicines and Medical Devices Safety Review, chaired by Baroness Cumberlege.

The Minister wrote to the Committee on 5 October and again on 15 October, advising Members of further amendments to the Bill being considered by the House of Lords, which would also require legislative consent. The memorandum was laid on 5 November, and departmental officials briefed the Committee on 12 November.

The briefing from the Department focused on the amendments to the Bill, as outlined by the Minister. Those include: the power to establish a medical devices information system (MDIS); provision for an information-sharing gateway to allow for information to be shared with overseas regulators; and a statutory requirement that the devolved Administrations be consulted on any regulations made regarding the amendments.

Officials advised the Committee of the non-legislative commitment from the British Government's Department of Health and Social Care (DHSC) to engage with the Minister of Health on the MDIS policy and operational discussions and the development of any draft regulations.

Members were also briefed on the amendments to the Bill that were tabled in the House of Lords. Those were tabled in response to concerns raised by the Delegated Powers and Regulatory Reform Committee about the scrutiny and oversight of the use of delegated powers in the Bill. Those include increased requirements on consultation and reporting on proposed regulations and a move from negative to draft affirmative or confirmatory resolution for regulations made under the Bill.

The Committee raised a number of issues with officials, mainly around the operation of the MDIS and the transfer of data from the Department of Health to NHS Digital. Specifically, the Committee enquired whether the Department had any concerns about the collection and sharing of patient information with NHS Digital and data security and ownership of the data.

In the Department's response, it advised that the purposes for which data can be shared and the types of organisations that can receive that information will be specified in the regulations made under the powers in the Bill. The Department further advised that the Minister will be fully consulted in the making of the regulations, which will determine the scope and limitations on data sharing.

The Committee asked whether the Minister was content with assurances received from DHSC on governance arrangements and patient safety issues around the MDIS. In the Department's response, it referred to the statutory duty to consult Ministers in Scotland, Wales and the North, which will be written into the Bill.

Mr Stalford: Will the Member give way?

Mr Gildernew: I will.

Mr Stalford: The Chair of the Health Committee touched on the most crucial issue here: that people have absolute confidence that their data will be secure and only used responsibly. Does he agree that it is really important that we have the list of the organisations that will have access to people's sensitive medical data so that they know exactly what the situation is that confronts them?

Mr Gildernew: I thank the Member for the intervention. Yes, I agree that the security and protection of data is absolutely essential, and I am sure that the Minister will address that issue.

The Department also advised the Committee that it was content with the assurances received.

Members raised a number of issues relating to Brexit and the protocol on Ireland/North of Ireland in relation to the MDIS and whether any of the amendments to the Bill had implications for the protocol and the contingency planning around that. The Department advised that there were no such implications for the amendments for which legislative consent was being sought. The Department confirmed that medical devices appear in the list of subject areas in annex 2 of the protocol and that it had given consideration to whether the amendment to provide for an MDIS may be subject to a different regime here but stated that that will not be the case.

The potential for future divergence, as touched on by the Minister, was also considered by the Committee. The Department advised that the North's involvement in the MDIS will not be affected as the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency will continue to regulate devices in the marketplace, which should mitigate any potential divergence in standards. The Department referred to a number of actions that, in its view, will mitigate the risk of divergence in regulations for patient data, such as the inclusion in the Bill of a statutory duty to consult and the non-legislative commitment by the DHSC to engage with the Minister of Health. The Department also advised that, as the EU does not require the storage of patient data at a central level, it is not the case that we would be subject to two different information-sharing systems.

Finally, the issue was raised of the supply of medicine and medical devices and the attractiveness of the North, as referred to by the Minister, as a favourable location for clinical trials. The Department advised that there are long-term implications for the supply and regulation of medicines in the North and referred to the recent agreement between the British Government and the European Union to allow the pharmaceutical industry 12 months from 1 January 2021 to comply with the new regulatory requirements, which, as a consequence of the protocol, will apply only here in the North. The Committee also raised that issue with departmental officials in relation to Brexit, and it will continue to keep a close watch on that in the months ahead.

The Committee has ongoing concerns about the impact of Brexit on medicines and medical devices. The pressures of COVID-19 have restricted the time available to the Committee to scrutinise the motion that is before us today. However, in view of the importance of the issues addressed by the amendments, the Committee agreed that it was content to support the motion in relation to human medicines and medical devices.

The Committee notes the recommendation of the Cumberlege review that a central patient-identifiable database should be created by collecting the key details of the implantation of all devices at the time of the operation and acknowledges the role that the MDIS will play in patient safety in the event of a recall of a medical device. The Committee also supports the inclusion of the statutory duty on DHSC to consult the Minister of Health on any regulations made in connection with the MDIS and welcomes the improved scrutiny of regulations that is provided by the proposed amendments. We trust that the Minister will engage with the Committee on these matters in the future.

Now, I will make some very brief remarks as Sinn Féin health spokesperson. Although this is largely a technical issue, a series of such issues faces us in the days, weeks and months ahead. It must be very challenging for the Minister to have to deal with COVID-19 and the secondary tsunami of Brexit, which is coming down the tracks at us. There is very little good for us from Brexit. It creates uncertainty, difficulty and, potentially, unforeseen consequences.

We did not vote for Brexit in the North, and what we face, regardless of the protocol, is a loss of freedoms, a loss of rights and other immeasurable losses to our citizens brought on by the unwanted exit from the European Union. We have no guarantees of anything. On the supply of medicines, we still have no guarantee; the only thing that we know for sure is that we have been given an extra year to try to arrive at a solution, but the solution is not apparent.

We are left at the whim of a Government who have told the world that they have no difficulty with ignoring or breaking international law. We have been left at the mercy of the worst instincts of an English nationalism that is pessimistic —

Mr Buckley: I thank the Member for giving way. Does he recognise that the main danger in this legislative consent motion is, in a sense, the Northern Ireland protocol? The Member can bash Her Majesty's Government, who put forward the protocol, but will he say that it was wrong that Members and parties in this House supported said protocol? In this instance, it pertains to medical devices and equipment, but will he acknowledge the damaging impact that it could have on a variety of sectors?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): May I draw Members back to the legislation in front of us? Let us not have a prolonged debate on the protocol or Brexit. Keep remarks relevant to the regulations.

Mr Gildernew: I have no difficulty whatsoever in totally disagreeing with what the Member just said about the protocol. It is not the protocol that is creating the problems here; it is Brexit. The protocol became necessary to try to mitigate some of the negative impacts of Brexit for business.

We have been left to the whims of a pessimistic and inward-looking Government whom many of us here in the North reject and who will create serious problems.

4.15 pm

Mrs Cameron: Mr Deputy Speaker, you will be glad to know that I will be brief.

I support the motion. The Government have stated that the aim of the Bill is as follows:

"Our goal is this: we want the UK to be the best place in the world to design and trial the latest medical innovations. This Bill gives us the powers we need to make that happen. It will mean that the NHS has access to the most cutting-edge medicines and medical devices, with enhanced patient safety; it will help our life sciences seize the enormous opportunities of the 2020s, supported by a world-leading regulator".

That is a worthy goal, and we hope that it is realised. We support the legislative consent motion. It is a sensible piece of legislation that is intended to delegate powers to make changes to medicines and medical devices regulation in a way that provides a consistent UK-wide approach. The amendments will allow the free flow of data on patients with medical devices across the United Kingdom.

However, the true test of the Bill and, indeed, any common UK framework on medicines is how it interacts with the terms of the NI protocol and the potential for divergence between Northern Ireland and Great Britain's statute books in future. We accept that, in the main, the Bill deals with the safety of medicines and devices rather than trade in those goods. Nevertheless, we cannot ignore the fact that the two are interlinked.

The recent 12-month derogation that was agreed by the Joint Committee provided immediate relief but is not a permanent panacea. The key priorities for us are patient safety, continuity of supply and supporting businesses to innovate. The attractiveness test must benefit Northern Ireland; we cannot have a situation where Northern Ireland cannot benefit from United Kingdom clinical trials or advances in technology because we are tied to the European Union. I am sure that no Member of the House would want such a situation to come to pass.

The Bill will ensure that, in making regulations, Ministers have to examine the potential impact of decisions on the attractiveness of different parts of the UK. We want Northern Ireland to play a leading role in advances in those areas, and we want patients and bodies to have access to exciting clinical trials that are being led on a UK-wide basis.

It is crucial that mitigations are put in place via agreements with the EU so that Northern Ireland can continue to play a full and vibrant part in UK initiatives in those areas. Northern Ireland deserves its fair share.

Mr McGrath: I welcome the opportunity to speak on the motion because the voice of the people in the North is essential in any conversation pertaining to Brexit and its implications. The Bill was presented to the Committee in June, and, at that time, I suggested that it resulted in more questions than answers. I welcome the fact that the Committee was given a further opportunity to scrutinise the legislation and to ask the essential questions that we needed answers to.

While I continue to place on record my opposition to Brexit and the upheaval and chaos that it will bring, it only solidifies why we must do the best that we can with legislation such as this. The legislation itself is concerned with the regulatory gap that will be left at the end of the transition period and covers human medicines, clinical trials of human medicines, veterinary medicines and medical devices. Unfortunately, the Bill is scant in detail and has been described by one Member of the House of Lords as:

However, I am satisfied that the questions that we had about the Bill were addressed in the Committee, as were concerns regarding the need for the Assembly to have proper scrutiny and to debate any regulations before they are approved; that is something to be welcomed.

While I am broadly supportive of the motion, I maintain the position that the need for it is not based on anything resembling taking back control. It is the result of small-minded English nationalism that did not give consideration to us in the North of Ireland until the eleventh hour. Here we are, on 30 November, a mere few weeks before the end of the transition period, with no sight or sound of whether a deal will be agreed by the UK and the EU. Quite simply, that shows that we are not prepared for Brexit.

Even the former First Minister, Peter Robinson, has been found in the headlines once more after saying that he believes that the British Government will put the interests of English Tories ahead of the people of the North. That should serve as an important lesson for us, but it is one that some in the Chamber would do well to ponder before falling into the role of Tory poodles just so quickly.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): May I draw the Member back to the legislation that is in front us rather than have a Brexit debate?

Mr McGrath: Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker. I thought that the motion was as a result of Brexit, but maybe I am incorrect.

People are being left in disagreement with a deal that has not yet been reached, there is disarray about potential impacts on the vital supply of medicines and businesses are not clear on what they have to do. That does not sound like governance, but why should we expect the Tory Government to change the habit of a lifetime? I support the motion.

Ms Bradshaw: On behalf of the Alliance Party, I support the motion, particularly clauses 1 to 7 in Part 1, which concern the devolved aspects that are directly related to health. I place on record my thanks to the Health Department officials who came to Committee meetings on a number of occasions, as the Chair pointed out, and for the briefings, oral and written, that they provided us with. They were excellent. I am not going to repeat what Mr Gildernew said.

There are significant amendments being brought forward in the LCM, not least that arising from the recommendations of the Cumberlege report on the database for medical devices. I recognise that that inquiry very much focused on vaginal mesh implants, but I sincerely hope that, with that recommendation, the Department of Health here and across the water will start taking hernia mesh implants seriously and will keep a record of the number of patients that are significantly negatively impacted on. They cause a lot of pain. I very much welcome that that will come forward through this.

This is an enabling Bill that affects significant matters. I remain somewhat concerned that we have reached the end of November and some aspects that are covered by the Bill are still unclear because we await a deal between the UK and the EU. Nevertheless, we need to be clear that, as an enabling Bill, medicine supply will remain in our hands. Ultimately, however, we are enabling the maintenance of the status quo, that is, world-class regulation combined with local control. I also very much welcome the amendment that will provide for local scrutiny and input.

As we said during the debate in June, we have concerns about the distinct lack of clarity about the Bill. It remains frustrating that we have not had the time to engage properly with the pharma sector in general. Nevertheless, relevant future regulations should be subject to appropriate scrutiny and consultation of that nature. It remains the case that we see the challenges ahead. They arise not from the Bill but from the circumstances that make it necessary. We have not seen any of those challenges being seriously addressed in the last five or six months. Nevertheless, those challenges would be made more difficult by the rejection of the motion. On that basis, it has our full support.

Mr McAleer (The Chairperson of the Committee for Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs): The AERA Committee first considered the Medicines and Medical Devices Bill at its meeting on 5 March when a letter from the AERA Minister noted that it was making its passage through Westminster and that it was focused primarily on human medicines and medical devices, with Part 2 dealing with veterinary medicines. Following the tabling of the legislative consent motion by the Health Minister, it was referred to the Health Committee for consideration. Subsequently, the Health Committee asked the AERA Committee to consider and comment on the section of the Bill that concerns veterinary medicines.

On 11 June, the AERA Committee took oral and written evidence on the four clauses that make up Part 2 and that deal with veterinary medicines. The Bill was complex and technical, and the Committee had very little time to fully explore its implications or to consult with all the relevant stakeholders. The Committee raised a number of issues, which I outlined in my speech to the House when the LCM was debated on 16 June. Ultimately, the Committee agreed that it was content with the LCM as it related to the veterinary medicine provisions in the Bill.

On 22 October, the Executive agreed that a further LCM was required to take account of recent amendments to the Bill and that it was to be laid by the Department of Health. Those amendments will make provision for the exercise of regulation-making powers under the Bill and will enhance the legislative scrutiny of and public engagement on those regulations. The amendments will also strengthen provision for sharing information on veterinary medicines on an international basis.

At our meeting on 12 November, the AERA Committee considered oral and written evidence on the Bill and examined a number of matters with officials on amendments relating to veterinary medicine. Members raised a query in relation to the amendments proposed in respect of information sharing in order for information to be shared with bodies outside the UK in pursuance of international agreements and arrangements, and how that would comply with the Data Protection Act. Departmental officials advised that the Bill would be fully compliant with all aspects of the Data Protection Act in the sharing of information.

Members also raised a query in relation to the lengthy list of matters on which regulations might be made, and they sought reassurance that any procedures in relation to this are put in place by the end of the transition period. Officials confirmed that that would be the case.

The Committee agreed that they had no concerns with a further legislative consent motion, so far as they relate to Part 2 of the Bill on veterinary medicines.

Ms Flynn: The pressures of the current pandemic have restricted the time available for extensive scrutiny of the legislative consent motion. However, as previously noted by the Health Committee Chair, some extremely important issues are addressed in the amendments concerning the Medicine and Medical Devices Bill.

I am pleased to note that the Bill incorporates the recommendations of 'First Do No Harm: The Report on the Independent Medicines and Medical Devices Safety Review'. As many Members know, that report was long awaited and hoped for by many women who have endured harrowing injuries as a result of mesh implants. The 'First Do No Harm' report recommends, for example, the establishment of a centralised patient database that should be created by collecting the key details of the implantation of all devices at the time of operation. That is something that did not happen until now. It also recommends the establishment of a patient safety commissioner.

The 'First Do No Harm' report uncovered a complete lack of transparency with regard to the regulation of devices, such as mesh implants. They were used in the surgical repair of pelvic organ prolapse and have caused crippling, life-changing complications for many patients. I met with many such patients and can report that their entire lives, families, careers, intimate relationships, literally every aspect of their lives, have been upended by the trauma of their experience. Our responsibility to mesh-implant victims does not end with this Bill, or with the recommendations of a report. It is met only when we provide the supports recommended and needed by those injured by mesh implants. Full redress for all those patients affected must be a priority and, most urgently, the Department of Health must provide care for those injured by mesh implants, and that begins with safe access to full mesh-removal surgery.

With every scandal that develops, whether neurology, urology or mesh implants, sadly, we find a lack of transparency, accountability and too many patients who are hurt and who have lost faith in a healthcare system that was supposed to help, rather than harm, them.

Therefore, I welcome the LCM, in the context of the amendments, to help to implement the recommendations of Julia Cumberlege's review: the creation of a patient safety database; the recording of details of devices when they are implanted into women's bodies; the putting in place of a patient safety commissioner; and a suitable redress scheme. Those would be significant steps in restoring the confidence of so many who have suffered so terribly as a result of medical devices.

It would be remiss of me not to finish my remarks by paying tribute to all those campaign groups and individuals who worked tirelessly to have their voices heard and to highlight the mesh-implant medical device scandal.

Mr Carroll: For some months now, the lack of scrutiny and oversight of legislation and regulations moving through the Assembly has been a massive cause of concern for me and other Members who are not part of the Executive. That is nothing new, of course. A lack of scrutiny and accountability has been synonymous with this place and was highlighted in the last term by a financial and political scandal of massive proportions. Over recent months, the scale on which important changes have been moved through the Assembly without the basic checks and balances is utterly unacceptable and could have serious ramifications down the line. It is worse, of course, that it is happening in the middle of a health pandemic and as we face a potentially calamitous Tory Brexit that, on a weekly basis, the Assembly acts on many occasions as nothing more than a rubber stamp for that Tory Brexit legislation. Some of the Executive parties seem unfazed by that, despite the clear lack of concern around scrutiny aspects.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr McGlone] in the Chair)

4.30 pm

Is the Assembly but a puppet Assembly on many of the major questions of the day? What does it mean for accountability if this legislation is rubber-stamped today before serious questions are answered? Who is responsible if the results are bad for the public? Will the Executive use the choice line, "It wasn't us, it was the Tories", as they did when they similarly rubber-stamped welfare reform legislation several years ago? Would that not be totally negligent?

When this LCM first came to the Health Committee, it was rushed, as many Members have said. The Committee thought there was not enough opportunity and time for scrutiny, in part because of the pressures of the COVID crisis, and decided that it was not in a position to support the motion. The Minister informed the Committee that the Tories themselves had put a rush on the legislation through Westminster and that therefore there was no time, in effect, for the Assembly to scrutinise it in a similar time frame. From that, seemingly, the bigger parties agreed to support the LCM. I do appreciate that the Health Minister and his Department are under humongous levels of pressure and scrutiny but, to be frank, I am uncomfortable at best with the Assembly being beholden to pressure from the Tories to ram through legislation relating to the post-Brexit period, particularly when I cannot see the need for much of what is contained in the original Bill to be rushed through anywhere.

Having listened and engaged with discussions on this legislation at the Health Committee, I still have serious questions and echo some of the concerns raised by my colleague Ms Flynn about the issues with mesh and other potential patients in the future. There is a clear need to provide a regulatory framework to ensure that processes are in place after Brexit. However, a big question mark remains over whether this legislation provides that framework. I do not claim to be an expert in medicine or medical devices, but the manufacture, marketing and supply of medicines is a serious matter and demands real attention.

For example, clinical trials are detailed in clause 4 of the Bill. As we heard at the Health Committee, clause 4 could provide the possibility of medical cannabis trials and other things that activists such as Charlotte Caldwell have long been campaigning for. We have to approach that with some level of caution, and I am certainly cautious about that. When I hear talk of red tape and bureaucracy being stripped back, to me it sounds like code for potentially placing the public at risk through a lack of clinical trials for medicines more generally. I raised a number of concerns about that at the Health Committee. The main one was about getting a detailed list setting out the limits of devolved authority and what matters will remain in London. The Committee was advised that it was a complicated field and that a comprehensive list cannot yet be provided, but that officials are working through the issues. I appreciate that the Minister may be able to respond to some of the issues in his closing remarks.

I note two comments from the BMA on the substantive Bill that went through in Britain. These comments indicated how the changes presented here might lead to questionable regulatory practices, including:

“hundreds or more individual decisions to change our current regulatory regime into a markedly different one, one statutory instrument at a time”.

The BMA report went on to argue that the attractiveness principle of the Bill could create scenarios:

“in which ‘attractiveness’ could run into conflict with patient safety, and that greater protections or clarity are needed within the Bill.”

To me, that smacks of a scenario where public health and safety could be sacrificed for private profit and wealth — something that we all should be deeply worried about, considering the experience of the pandemic.

I have further concerns. I am concerned that in reality this Bill, while moving away from the former approach, actually puts significant power in the hands of Government Ministers and the Tory Secretary of State — for example, the power to adjust regulations unilaterally and without further scrutiny or control of decision-making is further strengthened in the hands of Ministers and not of this Chamber.

There has also been a real lack of consultation on the Bill regarding the clauses that we are being asked to carry over. For example, we have been told that there are no human rights concerns, which, on the face of it, is good to hear and, no doubt, is reassuring, but how can we be sure of that when no wide-ranging consultation took place, even with our health sector? What input did the trade union movement have and what input should it have in any moves like this?

For all those reasons, as a democrat and a socialist, I cannot give carte blanche consent to this LCM. Given the way this place is structured, I cannot block it. Having listened to the debate, I doubt that it is even within our gift, but I implore the Executive and the Minister to begin to move away from this insufficient and reckless form of governance in regard to LCMs and legislation generally.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): Had Mr Chambers indicated that he wants to say something?

Mr Chambers: Yes.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): OK. That is grand.

Mr Chambers: I will be very brief, Mr Deputy Speaker; I had not intended to speak. As the recipient of a temporary implantable recording device, I certainly welcome the information in this report that the medical device information system is to improve the safety and standards of such medical devices. I have never felt that my health and safety has been compromised to date, but I am reassured by this. It is also good that data and information gathered will be shared, because it will help others in the future. I just want to put on record that my party fully supports this legislative consent motion.

Mr Swann: I thank Members who contributed to the debate. I would also like to take this opportunity to thank the Health Committee and the Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs Committee for taking the time to examine the legislative consent memorandum and for their helpful and positive engagement with departmental officials on this matter. I appreciate that the Committees, again, had to work within a very challenging timescale, and I thank them for their patience, understanding and cooperation with both Departments. I also thank my Executive colleagues for their support on this matter and for agreeing to the need for a further legislative consent motion on this Bill.

I believe that, on this occasion, it is appropriate and makes good sense for Westminster to legislate on matters that are devolved to the Northern Ireland Assembly. In practical terms, the Bill provides the powers needed to update the current regulatory regime for medicines, clinical devices and clinical trials in response to the end of the transition period, but it also has the best interests of patients at its heart.

As I stated earlier, the amendments to the Bill at Lords Committee Stage seek to improve patient safety as well as allow the Assembly greater scrutiny in the regulation-making process. The Bill will provide for the implementation of a new UK-wide medical device information system and will collect and store information linking unique device identifiers to patients, clinicians and specific surgical procedures that implanted the device. This will be hugely beneficial to patients and to patient safety now and in the future.

I will address some of the queries that Members raised during the debate. Assurances were sought on the regulations to be developed to implement the medical devices information system and to take account of the governance arrangements around medical devices and patient safety in Northern Ireland. I want to put on record that Northern Ireland has in place strong information governance arrangements and a code of practice on the sharing of patients' identifiable information both for direct care and secondary use. It is those governance arrangements that I am referring to and to which draft regulations will need to conform.

An amendment to the Bill has been agreed whereby the Secretary of State will have a statutory duty to consult Scottish Ministers, Welsh Ministers and ourselves, and that has been written into the Bill. In addition to that amendment, there is a separate non-legislative commitment from the Department of Health and Social Care to ongoing discussions on the medical devices information system governance arrangements and the operational details that will ensure that the Department of Health in Northern Ireland is engaged in relevant policy and operational discussions and the development of draft regulations, and I am content with the assurances received on the legislative and non-legislative approach.

Questions were raised about who will share the data with whom and why. Information relating to human medicines is and will continue to be shared by the MHRA and the HSC. The MHRA is an executive agency of the DHSC, and both are exercising the powers of the Secretary of State. The power will be expressed as a power of the Secretary of State, so, in respect of Northern Ireland, the power of human medicines should also be exercised by my Department — the Department of Health in Northern Ireland. That is because medicines and the implementation of international obligations are transferred matters for Northern Ireland. For veterinary medicines, the power should similarly be exercised by the Secretary of State and the Department of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs.

It is not possible to provide a definite list at this time of bodies or countries with which information would need to be shared, but it would include overseas regulators, which includes regulators associated with countries and territories; overseas governments; non-governmental organisations — for example, the World Health Organization; international institutions — for example, the European Medicines Agency; and international networks such as the OCABR Network for Human Biologicals.

This information is shared with overseas bodies and networks, and it will be done in two main ways. One is through using EU databases, and another is directly with overseas regulators and bodies and networks, facilitated by information-sharing agreements and arrangements. After the transition period, the UK will lose access to the EU databases, and information sharing with EU countries and institutions will be facilitated by information-sharing agreements and arrangements similar to those in place with non-EU countries. The legal status of those agreements or arrangements varies from treaty obligations to more informal exchanges of letters. It is important that, going forward, there is an explicit statutory power that ensures that information can be shared without breaching legal restrictions on information sharing, which includes the common law duty of confidence; the provision of the UK GDPR; individual rights in the Human Rights Act; restrictions on the sharing of information obtained pursuant to specific legislation; and contractual rights. I hope that that lays to rest some of the concerns that were raised.

There were also concerns regarding the attractiveness of Northern Ireland in terms of supply of medicines and medical devices. The UK is currently aligned with the EU acquis for medicines and medical devices. That will change after transition, when Northern Ireland will remain aligned with the European Union and the rest of the United Kingdom will not. There are long-term implications for the supply and regulation of medicines in Northern Ireland, where the large majority of medicine supplies are drawn from the UK market via GB. Northern Ireland is part of a UK-wide medical supplies contingency programme for EU exit, which is led by the Department of Health and Social Care, with the involvement of all the devolved Administrations. At the fourth meeting of the Ireland/Northern Ireland specialised committee on 5 November, the UK Government and the EU Commission reached an agreement to allow the pharmaceutical industry 12 months from 1 January to comply with new regulatory requirements that apply only to Northern Ireland and are a consequence of the Northern Ireland protocol. That will allow industry time to adapt to the new arrangements and to mitigate risks to barriers to trade. The MHRA will continue to regulate medicines for Northern Ireland and, as the UK regulator, will represent all parts of the United Kingdom in ensuring their attractiveness as a place to trade.

Mr Buckley: I thank the Minister for giving way. We will all welcome the 12-month derogation period. I thank the Minister's officials, who helped to lobby for that very intervention. Does the Minister agree that now is the time — indeed, the Committee wrote to the Executive about this — to push for a mutual recognition agreement on medicines and medical devices by the new deadline of December 2021 to avoid a further cliff edge?

Mr Swann: I thank the Member for his question. I had a meeting last week with Minister Argar, who leads on this work in Westminster, and both teams of officials, and they made exactly that point. Now that we have a 12-month period that allows us to put in place a concrete base, we must not waste any of that time. We agreed on that. In recognition of the tremendous work, as noted by many Members, that my Department has been involved in to secure that 12 month-period, we must ensure that we do not lose the expertise on either side of the table, because we need to make the best use of the 12 months that lie ahead so that we can give that reassurance to the industry in Northern Ireland on the continuity of supply.

My Department will continue to work with the Department of Health and Social Care and the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency on compliance with the Northern Ireland protocol and future relations within the EU. That will include consideration of the optimal supply and logistic models for medical supplies for Northern Ireland, the attractiveness of Northern Ireland for clinical trials and the opportunities that may arise from life sciences. On the specific effects of the Internal Market Bill on the supply of medicines and medical products to Northern Ireland from GB, the advice from our legal advisers is that, post implementation, they are likely to be negligible. That is based on advice received in consultations to date, having considered the provisions of the Bill in its current iteration. However, as the Internal Market Bill is still making its way through Parliament, that advice is caveated by the need for ongoing review of the position, which could change over the next few weeks.

A number of Members mentioned the vital work of the Cumberlege review and the formal response to the crucial recommendations that came from its report. As Members will be aware, the Cumberlege report highlights the failure of the healthcare system in a number of areas, including the need to listen to and understand patients' voices and their concerns about certain treatments. Recommendation 7 of that report relates to the requirement for a central patient-identifiable database recording the key details of all medical devices that are implanted. The LCM provides the necessary enabling powers for regulations to be prepared to require healthcare establishments to submit that data to a central database on a UK-wide basis. The benefits of a UK-wide system include the analysis of a much wider pool of data to identify signals indicating possible issues with or within a device.

An independent medicines and medical devices safety review group has been established in my Department to consider the recommendations of the review in a local context, including how they align with their ongoing work on patient safety. The working group consists of relevant representatives from the Department's policy and professional leads, and they are collaborating with colleagues across the United Kingdom on the matter. I reassure Members that the work is ongoing, but it has been delayed by the current pandemic. I will provide a formal response to the Cumberlege report, following full consideration by that group, which will take into consideration things such as a patient safety commissioner, an issue that the Member raised, and the need for what should, we think, be a national redress system that covers the entire United Kingdom.

Concerns were raised about the delegated powers in the Bill and whether they simply replaced the delegated powers provided for in section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972. The majority of the sought delegation powers reflect specifically the powers available to the UK now, which are in that Act. Secondary legislation made under the Bill is strictly limited to the matters found on the face of the Bill, without the ability to amend and update current regulatory frameworks. We are and will be unable to take appropriate and proportionate steps to address patient safety concerns.

The Bill provides for increased Parliamentary and Assembly scrutiny of regulatory amendments to the law that relate to human medicines, because the vast majority will now be subject to the affirmative resolution procedure, with the exception of fees and supplementary provisions in the civil sanctions regime for devices, as I mentioned in my opening comments. This is an enhancement to the current way in which updates to the legislation have been made, which have been subject to the negative resolution procedure to date. There is also a duty in the Bill for there to be public consultation before making future regulations.

The other amendments that require legislative consent add further strength to the Bill by providing for necessary information-sharing in accordance with international agreements and provide clarity on the offences clause. They also provide further safeguards in the regulation-making processes by outlining consideration to be taken when making regulations, by prioritising public safety and by clarifying attractiveness.

Regulations made under the Bill have the requirement to include public consultation and will mainly apply the draft affirmative procedure. The Bill now also provides for a new reporting obligation.

All these amendments will provide greater scrutiny for the Northern Ireland Assembly, which I welcome. I commend the motion and the LCM to the House.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly endorses the principle of the extension to Northern Ireland of the provisions within the Medicines and Medical Devices Bill dealing with human medicines, veterinary medicines and information systems as amended at Committee Stage in the House of Lords.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): Members should take their ease until we change round for the next item of business, please.

Committee Business

Licensing and Registration of Clubs (Amendment) Bill: Extension of Committee Stage

Ms P Bradley (The Chairperson of the Committee for Communities): I beg to move

That, in accordance with Standing Order 33(4), the period referred to in Standing Order 33(2) be extended to 15 May 2021, in relation to the Committee Stage of the Licensing and Registration of Clubs (Amendment) Bill [NIA Bill 10/17-22].

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): The Business Committee has agreed that there should be no time limit on this debate. I call on the Chairperson of the Committee for Communities to open the debate on the motion.

Ms P Bradley: As the House is aware, the Licensing and Registration of Clubs (Amendment) Bill passed its Second Stage on 3 November 2020 and was referred to the Committee for Communities for its Committee Stage.

The principles of the Bill and beyond were debated at length at Second Stage. They aim to bring forward measures that seek to tackle alcohol misuse, to promote responsible consumption and to support the hospitality and tourism sectors. However, during the Committee Stage, we will seek to establish whether the Bill strikes the appropriate balance between those apparently competing objectives.

The Committee has begun in earnest its consideration of the Bill. The call for evidence and views was issued on 16 November 2020, with a generous four weeks for responses to allow those who want to respond more time than usual due to the current COVID situation. We are aware that many organisations and individuals will be under extreme pressures at this time. At its meeting on 12 November, the Committee agreed, after discussion, to request an extension to Committee Stage until 15 May 2021. The Committee fully appreciates that this will come as a disappointment to some Members and to a range of key stakeholders across a number of sectors.

I would like the House to bear with me as I explain why the extension is crucial for the Committee to conduct proper scrutiny of this substantial Bill of 36 clauses and two schedules. The Committee was aware of significant pressure from a number of sources to have the Bill process done and dusted, including being granted Royal Assent, so that the Bill's provisions could be implemented by Easter, with Easter Sunday being 4 April 2021. While the Committee fully understands the pressures that the hospitality industry is facing, it cannot be ignored that, as a result of our considerations and those of the Assembly, we are shaping licensing laws for many, many years to come. I put that on record at Second Stage so that there was no confusion about the fact that the Committee will not be rushed in getting the Bill through, albeit we want to do our best to support the hospitality industry.

The Bill is about much more than Easter opening hours. The Second Stage debate clearly highlighted the wide range of very important issues that the Bill covers. I will now take a few moments to remind Members of the long list of issues that Members requested that the Committee cover and consider during its Committee Stage.

The Committee was asked to consider the very fundamentals of the licensing system, including the prices that are being paid for licences and the surrender principle. We were asked to consider the impact of extended opening hours and drinking-up time on the hospitality sector in general, on clubs, on the wider night-time economy, including taxi drivers, on rural pubs, on hospitality staff, on local residents and on the PSNI to name but a few. We have been asked by Members to consider the impact of the Bill on alcohol consumption and abuse and the related health impacts, on underage drinking and on safeguarding issues for those under 18 attending functions and award ceremonies in licensed premises. We have been asked to consider local producers in depth, with many Members wanting to do much more for that group because they feel that the Bill is not ambitious enough. Concerns were raised at Second Stage about advertising restrictions, loyalty schemes and alcohol deliveries, all of which are areas covered by the Bill.

The Committee has been asked to do a massive amount of work in its Committee Stage, and that will take a considerable period of time. There are no shortcuts. The Committee understands that and knows that it should not be distracted by any artificial deadline. At our meeting last Thursday, we had three excellent briefings from Assembly researchers that further cemented our view that there are gaps in data and evidence. Many issues requiring in-depth scrutiny and lessons to be learnt from other jurisdictions cannot be rushed.

The Committee has also taken advice from the Bill Office in making its decision to request the extension. Even if the Committee felt that it could complete all that in-depth scrutiny within the 30-day time frame, there is absolutely no guarantee that the Bill would get Royal Assent in time for the provisions to be implemented by Easter 2021. The timescale is very tight, and neither the Department nor the Assembly controls all the processes and related timings that the Bill must pass through after its Final Stage. In normal non-COVID circumstances, the Committee would have the option of holding a substantial number of extra meetings to get through the many evidence sessions that it needs to hold. However, we are not operating in our usual circumstances. Members will know that there are limitations on all Committees at present in the number and length of meetings that they can hold. For that Easter deadline to have been really achievable, the Committee, operating as it is under the restrictions, would need to have the Bill much earlier.

It is crucial that we are realistic on a number of fronts. Primarily, we need to give the Bill the proper and thorough scrutiny that it deserves. There have been changes to it since it was last considered in 2016, and its scope is much wider. The Bill is generating lots of interest, and we will need to take evidence from a variety of different interests in order to ensure that we hear from everyone that might be affected by it.

Whilst the motion is to extend the Committee Stage until May 2021, we will, of course, make every effort to work closely with the Minister and officials to have the Bill dealt with before that date, but we must allow ourselves leeway in order to ensure proper scrutiny in the current context of the pandemic. The Committee supports the Minister in her aims to strike the right balance between offering a level of support to the hospitality and tourism sectors, which we all agree is much needed, and protecting our communities by ensuring that the sale of alcoholic drinks is controlled.

In conclusion, in order to allow the Committee for Communities to complete its scrutiny as robustly as it can on a wide range of hugely important issues and within a realistic time frame, I commend the motion to the House.

5.00 pm

Ms Ennis: I want to make it clear that it is Sinn Féin's position that we need to reform our licensing and regulation laws. We need that to happen as quickly as possible, not least to help the beleaguered hospitality industry, but also to help with economic recovery from COVID-19. As the Chair said, and as contributions from Members at the Second Stage of the Bill show, there is a lot to consider. This legislation will be with us for a long time, and we need to make sure that we get it right.

We have a list as long as your arm. Dozens of groups and individuals want to come to the Committee to give evidence. We need to ensure that we give those groups the respect and the adequate time that they need in order to properly brief members.

If we want modern, fit-for-purpose reform of our licensing laws, the Committee needs the time to ensure that that is what we get. As the Chair said, this is to ensure that the Committee is equipped to do that. I want to assure Members that we will make every effort to get this done as quickly as possible, but we need the time and space to make sure that we do it right. It will be with us for a long time, and we need to ensure that it is something that we can all live with. That said, I support the motion to extend the time for Committee Stage consideration.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): As there are no other Members to speak on this item —. Sorry, excuse me. I have to call the Chair again. I now call the Chair.

Ms P Bradley: Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker. I thank the Member for her contribution, and I thank all the members of the Committee for Communities who agreed to the extension. I look forward to the Committee progressing through its scrutiny of the Bill.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That, in accordance with Standing Order 33(4), the period referred to in Standing Order 33(2) be extended to 15 May 2021, in relation to the Committee Stage of the Licensing and Registration of Clubs (Amendment) Bill [NIA Bill 10/17-22].

Adjourned at 5.02 pm.

Northern Ireland Assembly

Tuesday 1 December 2020

The Assembly met at 10.30 am (Mr Speaker in the Chair).

Members observed two minutes' silence.

Matter of the Day

Public Inquiry into the Murder of Human Rights Solicitor Pat Finucane

Mr Speaker: Mr John O'Dowd has been given leave to make a statement, which fulfils the criteria set out in Standing Order 24, on the public inquiry into the murder of human rights solicitor Pat Finucane. If other Members wish to be called, they should indicate that by rising in their places and continuing to do so. All Members who are called will have up to three minutes to speak on the subject. I remind Members that I will not take points of order on this or any other matter until this item of business has finished.

Mr O'Dowd: I rise to speak on yesterday's decision by the British Government not to hold a full public inquiry into the murder of human rights lawyer Pat Finucane. I want to start by paying tribute to the resilience, courage and, indeed, dignity of Geraldine Finucane and the Finucane family in their 31-year campaign for the truth about Pat's killing.

I am conscious that, when such events and stories hit the news headlines, many victims out there reflect on the loss of their loved ones, and many victims also seek justice for their loved ones. What makes Pat Finucane's case stand out? It is this: there have been several investigations into his murder, and most of them — indeed, the most high-profile of them — have concluded, and the then British Prime Minister stated, that there were high levels of collusion by the state in his murder. What does that mean? It means that those who were tasked with, first of all, protecting Pat Finucane and his family were involved in his murder, and those who were tasked with investigating the murder of Pat Finucane were involved in his murder. How can those who were tasked with protecting him and who failed him, and those who were tasked with investigating his murder but were involved in his murder, in any real terms investigate his murder? Hence the need for a full public inquiry into his murder. Indeed, in 2001, the British Government committed themselves to an inquiry into his murder, such were the levels of concern around the collusion in this case.

Those who say — some say it in a dignified manner, others are just brutally ignorant in their response — that there are other victims out there are quite correct. However, what stands out about Pat's case is that the state was involved in his murder. In what other circumstances would this House divide or say, "Well, perhaps the British Government are correct. There should not be an inquiry"?

The allegation sits. The facts sit: the state was involved in the murder of a solicitor in this society. That should concern everyone in the House, regardless of your political allegiance or your views on the conflict of the past. The state, the people who told us that they were protecting us, and the security forces, who told us that they were there for our security, plotted, planned and carried out the murder of a solicitor.

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr O'Dowd: The state has now refused to carry out an inquiry into that. The state has a duty to carry out an inquiry into that.

Mr Givan: Of course the murder of Pat Finucane was wrong. I acknowledge the barbaric nature of it, as he was murdered in front of his family. One can only imagine the trauma that that has caused, and it is clearly evident to this day, 31 years later. That pain is felt by thousands of people right across Northern Ireland. I think of La Mon. I think of Bloody Friday. I think of Enniskillen and Narrow Water. The list goes on of thousands of people who suffer as a result of the terrorist campaign of over 30 years in this country. Many of those families have had but a mere desktop exercise carried out by the Historical Enquiries Team (HET). When I think of the Finucane investigations, I think of Lord Stevens, Justice Peter Cory and Sir Desmond de Silva. I think of an inquiry, which was going to be set up under the 2005 Inquiries Act, that was rejected. I also think of the criminal conviction that was secured in the murder of Pat Finucane, which attracted a 22-year custodial sentence. Thousands of victims of terrorism could only wish for the same level of interrogation to have taken place into the murder of their loved ones.

Victims have heard loudly the special status being afforded to the Finucane family by a range of political parties in this House and, indeed, by other international political figures. When I think of those international obligations, I think of the Smithwick tribunal that found the collusion of an Garda Síochána officers with the provisional IRA in the murder of Harry Breen and Bob Buchanan. Where is the public inquiry into that collusion of the state? I think of the safe haven afforded to republican terrorism by the Republic of Ireland for decades. Where is the public inquiry into the actions of the Republic of Ireland? I think of the evidence to that tribunal linking to the Provisional IRA and of the lack of engagement and evidence provided to that tribunal. I think of members of Sinn Féin who have taken their criminal acts to the grave and denied truth and justice to the victims of IRA terrorism. I think of the United States of America and the financing and arming of the Provisional IRA. Where is the congressional inquiry into those activities?

So, yes, everyone ought to be treated equally. Everybody ought to have truth and justice. When are we going to see it from all the other actors in the terrorist campaign that took place for 30 years?

Mr Allister: The murder of Pat Finucane was terrorist, brutal and extremely shocking, just like over 3,000 other murders; yet, compare and contrast the attention and the demands in respect of those.

Look at the Finucane case: it has had Weston Park; the Cory inquiry; the de Silva report; the offer of a public inquiry; legislation especially drafted to deliver that inquiry; and a criminal trial and a conviction. When I contrast that with all the rest, the deficit is staggering. Compare that with those who were burned alive at La Mon, those who smothered under the rubble of Enniskillen and those who were butchered at Kingsmills.

If we want to talk about collusion, we need to talk about all the collusion. That would include the collusion of some who have sat on Benches in the House, who were leaders of the IRA and who doubtless colluded in multiple murders. What did Martin McGuinness know about the Enniskillen bombing? What did he know about the murder of Pat Gillespie? What did he know about countless other murders? If you want to talk about collusion, talk about it across the board. If there are those who colluded, it is not a one-way street. Anyone involved in criminality deserves the rigours of the law. There should be no exemptions for Sinn Féin or anyone else. That should be the starting principle.

What we have is a hierarchy — a Finucane elite — who think that they can demand what no one else gets. Even when they were offered a public inquiry, they said, “No. We need an international judicial inquiry”. Such is the elitism attaching to the matter. Of course, the bottom line is that it is all about insatiability. They are insatiable; they will never be satisfied. They would not have been satisfied with a public inquiry unless they had got to write its outcome. That is the plain truth. When they dismissed the very idea of prosecutions, it was clear that they are not interested in justice. They are interested in maximising the rewriting of history, which is why, of course, this continues to be a boil that needs to be lanced and should have been —

Mr Speaker: The Member’s time is up.

Mr Allister: — properly lanced yesterday by the refusal, at any stage, of —

Mr Speaker: The Member’s time is up.

Mr Allister: — a public inquiry.

Mrs D Kelly: I welcome the opportunity to speak on the Matter of the Day. As a child growing up, I was always taught that two wrongs do not make a right. It is very unseemly that we are turning the murder of one person into a green and orange issue. All of us in the House should be concerned about finding truth and justice for all victims, regardless of the perpetrators.

It is astonishing that some Members would hold the British Government and their agents to the same standards as terrorist organisations. Surely we should all expect the Government to have a higher standard than any other and to protect all their citizens.

It is a fact that the murder of Pat Finucane was supported by elements in the British establishment. The family have called for the inquiry, and I find it disingenuous for people to say that they were offered a public inquiry. Members know that the 2005 Act was brought into effect quickly to give the Secretary of State undue influence and the ability to interfere in any public inquiry and the matters and facts that might be brought before an independent inquiry tribunal. Stop messing about.

Today and last night, we saw how the British Government treat the widows and children of murdered victims in the North. They treat them with disdain. They cancelled a meeting for which the family had waited almost two years with 10 minutes’ notice. That was pretty damning.

All victims deserve truth and justice. All families deserve to know what happened to their loved ones. The SDLP has always stood four-square with all those victims. I pay tribute to Geraldine Finucane and her family and all families who have had to carry that burden from the day and hour that their loved ones were murdered.

I am always in awe of their determination and of how their lives have been put on hold in their search for truth and justice. It does not end with the partner or the child of the family affected; it is trans-generational. If we are to build reconciliation in this society, we must deal properly with legacy. Yesterday, the British Government failed miserably. They failed not only the Finucane family but all families who are searching for truth and justice as they deal with the legacy of our troubled past. The clear message was that we are not to get truth and justice or the legacy institutions that families deserve and need.

Mr Beattie: I start by condemning the callous and brutal murder of Pat Finucane. It is truly a stain on our shared past. This should be a sombre Matter of the Day; it should not be used as an opportunity to hurl insults across the Chamber or to use victims to score political points. There are no winners or losers here. Hundreds if not thousands of victims across the United Kingdom, Ireland and further afield still wait for truth and justice, including my family. Nobody is looking at their case. Nobody is promoting the small man: the one who was murdered, is long forgotten and whose name does not slip off your tongue.

We have failed victims. Every one of us in the Chamber has failed victims. The Westminster Government have failed victims. The Irish Government have failed victims. We did not consult or speak to victims. We did not get them to join us when we tried to come up with a legacy mechanism, which they do not support. The Stormont House Agreement is failing because the victims do not support it. Many will scream at me and say, “Well, you are saying that because you are a unionist”, and I will throw back at them that there is a Bloody Sunday family member who does not support the Stormont House Agreement’s legacy mechanisms. Go to her, and tell her that she is wrong.

We need to come together and come up with something that works. It must be victim-centred. To be victim-centred, it must include the victims. We cannot deal with legacy one public inquiry at a time. Victims from across this country and these islands look at us and ask, “When will somebody help me to get justice and truth for my family member?”. The reality is that nobody is even talking about them.

Mr Blair: It should go without saying that it is a sad set of circumstances that brings us here today, but it is probably worth repeating that in order to bring balance and measure to the discussion.

The announcement yesterday evening by the Secretary of State appears, to some of us at least, to be further foot-dragging and yet another diversion from the discovery of the facts. The failure of the UK Government to establish a public inquiry into the murder of Pat Finucane falls short of the Supreme Court ruling requiring an article 2-compliant investigation. It is a failure that brings delay to the Finucane family, who have shown great dignity in their pursuit of an outcome. Today, to Geraldine Finucane and her family, we can say only that our initial reaction is that we share their frustration and offer our sympathy.

The frustration and anger at the UK Government’s decision will be shared more widely, and that is because it is difficult to see how this outcome can be regarded as in any way consistent with the 2019 ruling by the UK Supreme Court. Today, we can see that yesterday’s announcement is unlikely to be the end of the matter, and the family, with others, will continue their campaign for truth. The UK Government had already accepted that collusion was apparent in this case, and they have done so again.

They have apologised again. That feet-dragging, as I have called it, around the decision leading directly to an article 2-compliant investigation suggests institutional resistance to full discovery of the facts. That further delay, with talk of review upon review — a legacy review, an ombudsman review and a policing review — adds yet further elements to a process that is now decades old. We could refer to those further processes or reviews as bringing their own resource issues or demands. We could guess as to the additional time that they will take and the additional stresses that they will bring.

There are other, more relevant factors in all of this, however. There remains in place the existing Supreme Court ruling. There remain, more importantly, the needs of victims. In the past 24 hours, we have had a stark reminder of Government outcomes falling far short of the needs of victims and a stark reminder that there are thousands of Troubles victims who seek truth and deserve justice. In this most recent case, a public inquiry is necessary owing to public-interest issues, which were highlighted by the Supreme Court. As well as stepping up urgently to address their failings of yesterday, the UK Government must now act to honour the commitments that were made in the Stormont House Agreement to implement a comprehensive process to deal with the past in Northern Ireland, a process through which most legacy issues could be addressed. That remains the most viable and achievable option for victims who are waiting, especially for those for whom time is running out.

Mr Carroll: The decision not to grant a public inquiry into the killing of Pat Finucane is a shameful and despicable one. The Finucane family have already waited for far too long for truth. Yesterday’s decision will only prolong their struggle and pain. The evidence regarding the murder of Pat Finucane points to state murder and an appalling level of collusion at the very heart of the British Establishment. This calculated move to block an inquiry begs the question: how far are they willing to go to cover up that collusion and state murder, carried out with impunity?

We should not, however, be surprised by that callous move. The British Empire was one where the sun never set and the blood never dried. Today, the British Government continue to try to cover up their crimes in Ireland and in the North, perhaps because the same Establishment continues to collude in murder in other parts of the world. For over 30 years, British Governments have dragged their feet and tried to cover up the collusion at the heart of this case, but this is the ultimate insult to Pat Finucane’s family and other victims of collusion. I will add that former Prime Minister David Cameron effectively confirmed that collusion took place in this case.

We need more than polite words from the Irish Government. I call directly on the Taoiseach, Micheál Martin, to take a stand against this outrageous decision, because the refusal by Johnson and the Tories to hold a public inquiry should not be accepted. Just as they tried to stop justice for the Bloody Sunday victims, they are trying to stop justice for Pat and his family. Just as they failed then, they will fail again. We must show our solidarity with the Finucane family, their campaign and the campaigns of all victims of violence and state violence. It is in our interests to stand with them for as long as their fight continues.

In the past 24 hours, some have asked, “But what about other victims?”. Indeed, but it is not as though shutting the door on the killing of a human rights solicitor and denying proper answers about what happened will do anything for any other victim of the state, state agents or paramilitaries. It is a real shame that some in the House are willing to defend the horrible record of the British Government in that regard, but it is hardly surprising.

Mr Speaker: No other Members have indicated that they wish to speak on the Matter of the Day.

Ministerial Statement

The Procurement Board

Mr Speaker: I have received notice from the Minister of Finance that he wishes to make a statement. Before I call the Minister, I remind Members that, in the light of social distancing being observed by the parties, the Speaker's ruling that Members must be in the Chamber to hear a statement if they wish to ask a question has been relaxed. Members still have to make sure that their name is on the speaking list if they wish to be called, but they can do that by rising in their place, as well as by notifying the Business Office or the Speaker's Table directly. I remind Members to be concise in asking their question.

Mr Murphy (The Minister of Finance): I wish to provide Members with an update on the Procurement Board. Procurement expenditure accounts for some £3 billion annually, representing one quarter of the Executive's Budget. That makes the Executive a hugely significant buyer of goods, services and construction work, and there is tremendous potential to use that spending power for good.

Procurement policy is overseen by the Procurement Board, which I chair as Finance Minister.

As with many areas of work, the restoration of the Procurement Board has been delayed by the pandemic. The procurement team in my Department has been focused on the response to COVID, and I thank the team for assisting in the procurement of essential PPE for our public services. In particular, working with the Department of Health and the Executive Office, it secured a £60 million order of PPE from China. In a competitive global market, that was a remarkable achievement for a small regional Government.

Today, I can announce the restoration of the Procurement Board, which will meet on 16 December. I would also like to update Members on how, with the agreement of the Executive, I decided to restructure the Procurement Board. I have completely changed the make-up of the board. Previously, almost 20 people attended the Procurement Board. That was too large a group, and I have reduced the membership by half. That will allow the group to meet more regularly and to drive forward reform.

Previously, the Procurement Board was staffed by permanent secretaries. As accounting officers, permanent secretaries have a significant interest and role in procurement, but I believe that the board should be made up of the experts who actually design and manage procurement exercises. I am therefore replacing the permanent secretaries with four procurement practitioners. From the health sector, I am appointing Peter Wilson, interim director of operations in the Business Services Organisation (BSO), who is responsible for procurement and logistics. To provide expertise in the delivery of infrastructure, I am appointing John Irvine, director of major projects and procurement in the Department for Infrastructure. Sharon Smyth, commercial director in the Department of Finance, will also be appointed, as she has extensive experience in procuring a wide range of supplies and services for Departments. From the Strategic Investment Board (SIB), which is responsible for the Buy Social policy, I am appointing Brett Hannam. The people who design and manage public contracts will, therefore, be at the core of procurement policy.

It is also important that procurement policy benefits from the expertise of the sectors that tender for and deliver public contracts on behalf of the public sector. I have therefore appointed five representatives from key sectors of the economy. From the construction industry, I have appointed Mark Spence, managing director of the Construction Employers Federation (CEF), and Denise McMahon, chair of the Northern Ireland Construction Group. To represent the manufacturing sector, I have appointed Mary Meehan, deputy chief executive of Manufacturing NI. To speak on behalf of small and medium enterprises, I have appointed Ian McClelland, director of LM Services, which is a mechanical and electrical engineering company, and a member of the Procurement Board forum for small businesses. To champion the interests of social enterprises, I have appointed Colin Jess, director of Social Enterprise NI. Those representatives will be asked to engage with their respective sectors in order to bring their views and experiences to the Procurement Board.

I thank the outgoing members for their time and commitment during the term of the previous board.

To date, procurement policy has been approved by the Procurement Board and circulated throughout the public sector through guidance notes. Compliance with that guidance has not been entirely consistent. It is, therefore, important to elevate the status of procurement policy. From now on, procurement guidance notes will go to the Executive for approval. Procurement policy will, therefore, carry the authority of Ministers, who are accountable to the public, and their accounting officers, who are legally responsible for ensuring that public expenditure provides value for money.

The new members of the board will be asked to identify problems, quickly develop solutions and bring fresh thinking to procurement policy and practice. However, I want to finish my statement by highlighting some of the immediate priorities that I will ask the board to progress.

One of those priorities is social value. I am aware that that is something that the all-party group on social enterprise chaired by Mr Stewart Dickson is also passionate about. It is important to point out that social value is not only a concern of social enterprise: there are many private sector businesses that want to contribute to social good, for example, by lowering carbon emissions or paying their staff a living wage. Those social benefits are not factored in to tenders that score only on price and quality. Therefore, I intend to bring a new policy on social value to the first meeting of the Procurement Board. With that policy, social value will be a mandatory component of procurement exercises rather than an optional add-on.

Another policy priority is security of supply. The COVID pandemic triggered a global scramble for PPE and other essential supplies. We do not want to be in that position again. It would be much better if we could source vital supplies locally rather than worrying about supply routes by air and sea. The need for secure supply routes is also heightened by Brexit, which is likely to disrupt trading relationships, particularly if the British Government fail to agree a trade deal with the European Union. A stronger focus on security of supply will, of course, benefit local businesses and help increase employment levels, so I will ask the Procurement Board to develop policy in that area.

There are many other policies that I would like the board to consider, and I would welcome Members' views on what other procurement issues they would like brought to the table.

The new structure of the Procurement Board will mean that procurement policy is co-designed by those who manage and those who deliver government contracts. That will mean that procurement policy carries the authority of Executive approval.

I believe that the changes will help to maximise the social, economic and environmental impact of the Executive's £3 billion annual spend on procurement. I welcome Members' views on the new Procurement Board and the issues that it should focus on.

11.00 am

Dr Aiken (The Chairperson of the Committee for Finance): I thank the Minister for his remarks and for meeting me earlier today.

As the Minister is aware, the Committee wrote to him in March about the formation of the board, and, despite the delay, we welcome his statement today. There is much detail on the formation of the board, and the Committee will want to take the time to scrutinise it closely.

We have a few initial questions that we would like you to answer. First, is forming a board under your chairmanship that will seek to control and manage £3 billion — approximately a quarter of our Executive's budget, I think — appropriate, given the other instruments that are being set up through New Decade, New Approach, particularly the fiscal council? When should we expect the fiscal council to be in position?

Where are the terms of reference? Who will have primacy in the procurement process? Is the role entirely to provide policy, or is it to direct cross-Executive procurement spending? How does the Procurement Board interrelate with the services sector? Since a lot of government expenditure seems to go to the likes of PwC, Deloitte and other consultancy services, will there be a representative of the services sector on the Procurement Board?

There will be significant procurement issues, and I notice that you talk in your statement, Minister, about the importance of making sure that the Northern Ireland supply chain is given primacy. You will be aware, if we ever get any details out of the Joint Committee or the Specialised Committee, that we will still have to apply EU procurement rules and may not be able to do what, you said, you wish to do with procurement in your statement. We need some guidance on that.

Bringing outside experts into the process is welcome. I cannot think of any Member who does not welcome the external expertise. However, would you consider having an independent chairman of the board? If you are chair of the board of a procurement process that looks at significant government spending, it may seem that the best will, guidance and advice from external sectors are not being utilised appropriately to get us the best out of our procurement spend.

The Committee looks forward to getting more details on this and to your talking to us about the Procurement Board at the earliest convenience.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Not only did the Chairman of the Committee go up to the line with that series of questions, but the line is somewhere in the distance. The Minister is under no obligation to answer all the questions — I think that there were six — but I am sure that he can try.

Mr Murphy: I also identified six questions and will attempt to answer them.

In relation to the fiscal council, as with the Procurement Board, COVID-19 has impacted on the speed at which we have been able to deliver on that New Decade, New Approach commitment. However, we are at an advanced stage, and I hope to bring proposals to the Executive in relation to that very soon. The terms of reference will be signed off in the next day or two, and we will ensure that the Committee is informed of them.

On the role of the board and the chairing of it, one of the consistent complaints has been about a lack of consistency, in that procurement policy and guidance have been the property of the Procurement Board but have not necessarily filtered down through Departments and into arm's-length bodies and agencies. To ensure consistency of delivery, authority is being given to the Executive because they will pass the procurement guidance notes and will be responsible for authorising them. My role in chairing the board, as an Executive Minister, will be to ensure continuity through to the Executive and for that Executive authority to flow down through Departments, through permanent secretaries and Ministers, to make sure that there is follow-through.

There have been good procurement policies and guidance notes, but they have somewhat slowed as they have moved down the chain through Departments and not necessarily been reflected in output.

We want to ensure that this is not just an organisation or a board that produces policies for the sake of having documents, but one that changes the way that business is done.

The consultancy sector is a varied one, as the Member knows, as is the service sector. We have looked for sectors that have groups that represent the broad sector from which to draw expertise. If other sectors are identified where there is a gap, I will be happy to look at that again to see whether that sector can come together and whether there is an organisation that might represent it and make someone available from it.

On the question of supplies, as a response to the pandemic, we did have local businesses and manufacturers that stepped up and repurposed their output. I am thinking of firms such as O'Neills, which supplied scrubs, and Bloc Blinds and Huhtamaki, which produced PPE gear. They were very effective and very successful, and the issue of security of supply is something that, increasingly, all governments across the world will be looking to. Clearly, the experience during the pandemic was around the difficulty in accessing that critical supply that was needed very quickly by the health service. We need to look at that, and it is doable within whatever arrangements we have with Europe beyond 1 January. We need to ensure that, if local manufacturers are going to repurpose, they have a guarantee, or at least a huge degree of certainty, about an ongoing contract and ongoing demand for the goods that they might supply.

Mr Frew: I thank the Minister for his statement. I can certainly tell that he is hungry — hopefully, hungry for reform. I want to pay tribute to my colleague William Humphrey, the Chairperson of the Public Accounts Committee, who has been pushing for some time now for private-sector influence on the Procurement Board. The Minister said that compliance with the guidance had not been entirely consistent in the past. Can he outline to the House what he means by that? Also, he told us that procurement guidance notes will now go to the Executive for approval. How were they approved before?

Mr Murphy: The lack of consistency is reflected in the fact that some policies and guidance that the Procurement Board brought forward, particularly in relation to social value, were seen as optional add-ons rather than being essential. We want to give the board more expertise to develop better policies in a quicker way by having key people involved. That is not to disregard the permanent secretaries, but there would be duplication if a policy went through the permanent secretaries and ended up in the Executive, and then the Executive gave it the authority. Previously, the guidance notes were approved by the board itself, and that was the extent of their status. This time, the guidance notes will be approved by the Executive, and there is then a responsibility on Executive Ministers, and on their accounting officers, to make sure that those guidance notes are followed through by their own Departments, arm's-length bodies and agencies.

The guidance and policies that are produced will have more teeth and more enforceability, which, in turn, gives them more consistency. Depending on the attitude of a permanent secretary, it may have been that some Departments were keen on pursuing and promoting the issues, while others, perhaps, were not. We want to get consistency across the board and we want to ensure that there is a level of expertise within the board to get the best possible policies and guidance notes.

Ms Anderson: I welcome the Minister's statement. For far too long, the social component of procurement contracts was the least enforced. Those who are further away from the labour market, particularly the brokers, have found it very difficult to get access. Will the Minister ensure that the more robust monitoring and enforcement that he mentioned in his statement will mean that the £3 billion of public money that is spent yearly on this process will result in training and job opportunities for those in greatest need in the most deprived areas, such as Derry city and beyond?

Mr Murphy: Yes, that is the intention. On the social value end, we have brought in the Strategic Investment Board (SIB), which was largely responsible for the Buy Social policy. When it comes to the other issues of employment, apprentices and the long-term unemployed, we want to ensure that that consistency travels down through. That is why the involvement of the construction industry on the board itself gives us that interface so that we can see what the issues are from the other side. It is one thing to produce policies through civil servants and public representatives but another to engage with the sector that has to implement them.

We had a useful discussion with people in the Derry area in relation to how some of this had not made its way onto the ground. Those are the sorts of issues that we want to correct through our engagement with the board. We want to ensure that it is effective, that there is a clear understanding of where the policy becomes unstuck in its practice and that we fix those things to make sure that the desired outcomes are achieved.

Mr O'Toole: I want to ask the Minister more about the process of procurement policy, specifically guidance notes going back to the Executive. It is fair to say that, this year, the Executive have not always covered themselves in glory with regard to the timing of their decision-making, notwithstanding the unique circumstances. Will the Minister assure us that the notes that go back to the Executive will not gum up the process of procurement, jeopardise the inclusion of actual, real social value aims or allow this simply to be another tool for divvying up favours between certain parties in the Executive?

Mr Murphy: I cannot, in turn, ask the Member to explain. His point that procurement policy is used for "divvying up favours between parties" in the Executive requires some explanation. That is an outrageous statement. I ask the Member to justify it in some other place. He is accusing people of corruption — of divvying up procurement favours in the Executive.

His party has a member on the Executive. The Executive have had plenty of well-documented disagreements over key issues. They have also produced a range of agreements on a multitude of issues, and I do not see those issues becoming of significance. I brought the proposal for a reconstitution of the board to the Executive, and no dissenting voices were raised. I outlined my ambition to have a more effective social value policy and procurement and more consistency in the application of policies. All of that was agreed by the Executive, so I do not anticipate any difficulty in that regard.

I am not sure how the Member intends to stand over the last remark of his contribution. I know that he has the cover of this institution for such remarks, but, if he is making an insinuation that there is divvying up in procurement among Executive parties, he has an obligation to stack that up or withdraw it.

Mr O'Toole: On a point of order, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. I want to make clear that, when I talked about divvying up, there was no suggestion that I was talking about the procurement of individual contracts. I did not say that. The Minister has read too much into what I said. I said that there is an issue around things going to the Executive and becoming part of the political bartering. That was the point that I was making. I think that it was fairly clear in my remarks, and I stand by them.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Strictly speaking, I do not think that that was a point of order, but the Member has put on the record his intention. It is important that, at all times, Members speak to each other with moderation and tolerance. I suppose that "tolerance" is as good a word as any. However, I understand that Members have strong views. The Member's remarks are on the record and clarification given.

Mr Muir: I thank the Minister for his statement. Procurement will play a vital role in the economic recovery that we will need in the years following COVID-19. One of the key issues, which the Minister will be aware of, is an infrastructure commission. Proposals have been circulated in relation to that. Will the Minister provide an update on his views on those proposals and how it would interact with what has been announced today?

Mr Murphy: There is a range of reasons why we want to see the most effective use of significant amounts of capital money for infrastructure. We want to see it being spent well, we want to see maximum value and return for it and we want to see the maximum contribution to the local economy as a consequence of that spend. Construction is a key component of our local economic activity, and, where possible, we want to see local construction companies benefit. Having the Construction Employers Federation, as well as the person responsible for procurement policy in the Department for Infrastructure, represented on the procurement board, brings a new level of expertise in that regard. I hope that that will see better outcomes in procurement, which is something that we all want to achieve.

Mr Storey: I welcome the statement. The Minister will be aware that I, as a former Finance Minister, raised concerns about procurement in the past. I trust that today's announcement is about more than a name change, as was the case previously. We had the famous change from CPD to CPD. [Laughter.] I have to say that that was a surreal moment in the Civil Service. I trust that we will see real progress. I welcome the fact that the construction industry is now involved.

I seek clarification from the Minister on two things, although I could be wrong about them. First, with regard to the involvement of the Department of Education — I declare an interest as a governor of two schools in my constituency — the procurement processes in that Department are woeful. We are being done over in that process at a cost to the public purse. Secondly, will the Minister explain what the relationship will be between the board, as reconstituted, and CPD, because many are still sceptical as to whether we can get delivery on procurement?

Mr Murphy: I thank the Member for his questions. He has raised those issues in the past. I am not sure whether the dramatic change from CPD to CPD did not happen under his watch [Laughter.] However, there is a clear intention. This is not just a name change for the board; it is a change of personnel. Procurement is being taken out of the hands of permanent secretaries. That is not to cast any aspersions on the people who served on the board; I thank them for their service. It is to bring in, as the Member says, expertise from various sectors. Among the people on the board, we want departmental representatives who deal with procurement. I know that Education is a gap, but that does not mean that there is no ongoing consultation with Departments. Sharon Smyth of the Department of Finance will have responsibility for engaging with Departments that are not represented on the board. Education is a significant spender of public money in public contracts, so there will be that read-across.

The clear intention is for a new start. It is a reconstituted board that comes from a different place as regards who is involved. We want people who represent industry — construction or SMEs — and for them to engage with their sectors in order to bring forward their views. The intention is to create a facility so that people can give information privately on any complaints. Previously, people might have felt that, if they made a genuine, legitimate complaint publicly about the main contractor, that might be detrimental to their ability to do future work. We want to create a facility in which people have an opportunity to register issues with the board in a way that protects them from any blowback, if that were the case with relationships in contracts.

This is a genuine attempt to do things differently. We will have to test that as we go along, but I hope that, in the not too distant future, the Member will recognise that there is a different way to do things.

Mr Storey: On a point of order, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. It seems that Members can clarify things that they have said. May I clarify that the name change did not happen under my watch? However, it happened during a suspension of the Assembly, so perhaps the Finance Minister and his party should take responsibility for it [Laughter.]

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I do not think that I need to rule on that [Laughter.]

Mr O'Dowd: On a point of order, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. I wish to clarify whether points of order are allowed during a ministerial statement and the questions that follow? [Laughter.] I believe that they are not.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: That is a legitimate point of order and is, therefore, unique this morning. The Member is, of course, correct.

Mr McHugh: Ba mhaith liom buíochas a ghabháil leis an Aire as a ráiteas. I thank the Minister for his statement. This is a good opportunity for change. I will be more specific. In order to ensure that social value is incorporated into procurement contracts, will the board consider a minimum score for social value alongside price and quality?

Mr Murphy: That would be an effective way to achieve that. If the focus is just on price and quality, we lose the ability to give proper consideration to social value. Social value is about many things. It can be about a more green approach to construction, as well as having social outcomes in employment by ensuring that there is spend in certain areas and access for people from communities and social enterprises that can provide services. There is a whole range of measures. Scoring contracts in a way that guarantees that social value is a component part of procurement is an effective way to do that.

Mr O'Dowd: Perhaps, if guidance is to be approved by the Executive, that will lessen the litigation against contracts. Given the scale of the contracts awarded at times, it is unsurprising that judicial reviews (JRs) etc are brought, but we have to reduce those. Will the Minister ensure that the Procurement Board looks at how legal action can be minimised? Several weeks ago, the Economy Committee received a presentation from the Law Society on mediation in such matters. Will the Minister ask the Procurement Board to look at that process as well?

Mr Murphy: Yes, as I referenced in my response to Mr Storey, litigation is really the end point. It happens when someone is dissatisfied with how a contract has been awarded. Litigation holds up capital projects in particular and can have a significant and detrimental impact on economic activity generally. That is not to say that people are not entitled to go to court if they feel strongly that they have a case to make, and we would not deny them that. However, there is an opportunity to have some kind of mitigation process at an earlier stage, which is why I will ask the board to consider an alternative service to allow suppliers to raise their concerns and, in some instances, to provide a private opportunity for them to do so. Business relationships are at the heart of procurement, and people are often reluctant to speak out in case damage is caused to those relationships as a consequence. We want an alternative measure that enables suppliers to raise concerns confidentially, and we want the matter to be independently reviewed. That will be a key part of it, and, hopefully, it will have the effect of offsetting the possibility of people going to court. While people are entitled to go to court, it undoubtedly holds up processes and has an impact on budgetary spending.

Mr Catney: Minister, your statement says:

“Compliance with this guidance has not been entirely consistent.”

How will that be measured by the new Procurement Board? How will it measure success?

Mr Murphy: Success will be measured by the consistent application of policy and guidance notes. In the past, we have found that, sometimes, consistency did not filter down through Departments. The approval of guidance notes and procurement policy by the Executive gives them a strength that they did not have. There is an obligation on Executive Ministers and accounting officers in Departments to follow through on that. Monitoring by the board will ensure compliance and find where that is not happening. As outlined, we will have representatives from the sector. If the board finds that the policies are not coming through at the bottom end or that compliance is not the practical experience of people applying for contracts and engaging in the provision of services, we will quickly hear about that. It is the board’s responsibility to challenge that where necessary.

Mr Nesbitt: I am still trying to get my head around the fact that Mr O’Dowd used a point of order to make it clear that points of order are out of order at this time.

I thank the Minister for his statement. I particularly welcome the appointment of Colin Jess to represent the social enterprise sector. It is also reassuring that the Minister of Finance’s grasp of mathematics is sound enough to be able to identify how many questions the Committee Chair squeezed into his remarks.

Minister, you talked about social value and included the private sector. Will you expand your definition of social value and advise whether you intend to legislate and include that in a social value Act?

Mr Murphy: I thank the Member for his question. He squeezed in a few questions there himself [Laughter.] I have to say that, in my experience, Mr O’Dowd’s contribution was not the most surreal thing ever to have happened in the Chamber — not by a long shot [Laughter.] Social value includes a range of things, such as a greener approach to doing business or paying the minimum wage, and many private sector companies wish to engage in that. If that was a part of the scoring for the award of contracts, many in the private sector would embrace it and not see it as a burden. I am sure that the Member has had the same experience of speaking to the many people who want to deliver better outcomes for society as well as securing contracts and improving their business.

Clearly, any social value policy is much stronger when underpinned by legislation. The Department’s procurement side has been very much involved in assisting other Departments to get supplies over the COVID period, and I am not certain whether there is enough time left in the mandate to legislate. We have asked officials to explore the possibility. If there is an opportunity to do social value legislation in the time left, I will be happy to do it.

Ms Dolan: Minister, thank you for your statement. Many school principals ask for more flexibility for minor procurements. Will the Procurement Board consider that?

Mr Murphy: Yes. We need to get that balance right. At Question Time last week, I said that many elected representatives can give examples of where things are procured for significantly higher prices than they can be got for locally. There is a balance to be struck between ensuring that there is transparency and accountability in buying arrangements — public money is being spent — and making sure that there is flexibility at a local level to get supplies for the best price that they can be got for locally, while contributing to the local economy. The Procurement Board will therefore undertake to strike the right balance.

Mr Dickson: Minister, I warmly welcome your statement and, indeed, your reference to the all-party group on social enterprise, which has been lobbying for a lot of what you are proposing today for some eight years. Following on from Mr Nesbitt’s question, you already have on-the-shelf legislation ready to run to deliver a social value Act for Northern Ireland. We will, in many ways, be playing catch-up with the other four nations of the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland, where social value legislation is well embedded. It is slightly disappointing to hear that that may not be achieved in this mandate. In your statement, Minister, you said:

How will that work in Northern Ireland?

Mr Murphy: First, if I can legislate in this mandate, I will — I give the Member that assurance — but I want to ensure that we have sufficient time to do that. He will know that, if we start a legislative process and it does not conclude, it falls off the shelf at the end of the mandate and we have to start all over again in a new mandate, with whomever might be in the post. Since I came into the Department, it has been my intention to do that, but other priorities, such as responding to the pandemic, took over.

In my view, if the policies and guidance notes that the Procurement Board send to the Executive are approved, they will have Executive approval as a policy. Each Department — the permanent secretary and staff — will then be obliged to follow through on that, as will arm’s-length bodies and the agencies. As I say, because we now have people from various sectors on the Procurement Board, they can see whether that filters down to where it is supposed to achieve an outcome on the ground. We want to hear from people in the social enterprise sector and in all the other sectors to ensure that those polices are followed through on. If there is an opportunity to legislate — I would like to do it — I certainly will.

Mrs D Kelly: I thank the Minister for his statement. Minister, you will be aware that international contractors win some of the biggest contracts and then subcontract and subcontract until most of the money is sliced off for management rather than for the product. How can you legislate to prevent such occurrences?

Mr Murphy: You tend to find that, depending on the size of the contract, it can attract more international attention, and contracts can be framed in such a way as to be broken up for the various sectors, which perhaps makes them more within the range of local employers and local companies. Of course, you have to do that in a way that is correct under the guidelines and rules, and we are still not sure what the hangover from the exit from Europe will mean for state aid and all those rules. Even within those guidelines and rules, there are ways of doing procurement that can support local companies as much as possible. As it stands, local companies get about four out of every five contracts, but, of course, it is the quality and size of those contracts that needs to be measured. Where that can be achieved, it is a desirable outcome. It has to be done within regulations, but we need to do procurement in a way that provides maximum support to the local economy.

Miss Woods: I thank the Minister for his statement. On Mr Aiken's comment about an independent chairman, an independent chairwoman would be good too.

The Minister will be aware that we have an opportunity not only to build back better from COVID but to tackle our climate emergency through a just transition. What consideration will be given to a green, sustainable procurement by the board? Can it be mandatory? What role will there be for cooperative models in procurement, focusing on community wealth building and working with councils? Perhaps I can also ask what he means by the reference to "living wage" on page 5 of his statement.

Mr Murphy: Firstly, yes. The Executive have targets on green outcomes and carbon-emission reduction. I would like to see those reflected, as they should be, in our procurement policy, because the Executive cannot just argue for those things and then spend £3 billion and not try to use it to effect the outcome of their own policies. I think that that will be a key component in procurement. The Living Wage Foundation has outlined the definition of a living wage, and that is the definition that I work to.

Mr Allister: Can I bring the Minister back to the point that Ms Dolan raised about the lower end of the procurement market and her example of schools? Hitherto, if a school had a broken window, it would bring in a local handyman and have it fixed for very little. Today, the school reports it to Armagh or wherever, someone comes and looks at it, someone comes back and somebody comes out again, and the cost is phenomenal. Will the Minister consider bringing to the table of the board a proposition that there should be an exemption threshold below which local service needs can be met by the local management in the way that, formerly, it was done?

Mr Murphy: It is interesting that people in procurement will not have heard the stories that all of us, as elected representatives, hear in conversations with school principals, who say, "I could get a local guy or woman to fix something, and it would cost a tenth of the price". There is a threshold, but I think that we need to examine it to see whether it is sufficient in its application.

As I said to Jemma Dolan, there is a balance to be found between transparency and accountability, with people not giving contracts in schools or any other public-sector procurement operation to their brothers-in-law or cousins, and value for money. Procurement is about value for money. One of its primary functions is to ensure that public spend gets value for money, so, where practices at a local level clearly do not give value for money, we have to look at that, but we also have to make sure that we have that transparency and accountability built in.

Mr Beggs: The Minister just mentioned value for money. Will he ensure that when the Procurement Board meets it recognises that big is not always beautiful and that that sometimes limits competition and results in significant subcontracting, where the control is lost? For example, painting a classroom can cost two or three times more than getting a local painter.

Mr Murphy: That speaks to the previous conversations that we have been having on all that. I think that it is about finding a balance between ensuring that you get transparency and accountability and value for money at a local level with small contracts. As I said, four out of five contracts are won locally, but that, obviously, depends on their value. That is why there is value in having people in from the various sectors. You then have people who are practitioners of how procurement works. It is one thing having a very good policy that we can all support, but it is another thing to see how the experience of that impacts on the ground and how it works in practice rather than in theory on the paper that it is developed on. I think that that will be the value of having those various sectors, and they in turn represent the voice of the industries and the sectors that they come from. Also, we have that function of hearing confidentially from people out in the world where people procure and enact these contracts. That will all be valuable, but, on local spend, it is about getting the balance and the threshold right on that.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: No other Member is rising in their place or indicating to me, so that concludes questions on the statement. Before I move on to the next item, I will say to Members that, during questions to the Minister, I reviewed my copy of Standing Orders. Standing Order 19 relates to questions, and (2)(b) of that Standing Order states that questions should not contain "arguments, inferences or imputations". The use of the words "divvying up" has an imputation attached to it. I would never wish to curtail debate or free expression, but I remind Members of their obligations under the rules of the House. Members, please take your ease while we move to the next item of business.

Executive Committee Business

The Harbours (Grants and Loans Limit) Bill: Accelerated Passage

Ms Mallon (The Minister for Infrastructure): I beg to move

That the Harbours (Grants and Loans Limit) Bill [NIA Bill 12/17-22] proceed under the accelerated passage procedure.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Business Committee has agreed that there should be no time limit on this debate. I call the Minister for Infrastructure to open the debate on the motion.

Ms Mallon: I welcome the opportunity to address the Assembly on the motion. This is a key time for our maritime sector as it aspires to thrive and strengthen. Unfortunately, the sector, like others, has faced financial challenges as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic. Members will agree how important it is, at this time, that our key gateway seaports have sufficient capacity to facilitate future economic growth, adapt how they do business to respond to current challenges, and are connected to key destinations and markets. Accelerated passage is not to be sought routinely; nor is it something that I do lightly. My preference, when taking forward legislation, is to have a full Committee procedure, enabling clause-by-clause scrutiny and the resolution of any issues, there and then, to the satisfaction of the Committee.

I will now explain to the Assembly, as required under Standing Order 42(4), why I am seeking accelerated passage, the consequences of its not being granted, and how I will minimise the future use of that mechanism.

I believe that there are compelling grounds for the use of the accelerated passage procedure in the case of this proposed legislation, which is a short and concise Bill to increase the total amount of grants and loans that my Department can provide to ports. The existing total limit of £35 million was set in 1989, and, working with colleagues in the Department of Finance, a new grants and loans limit of £90 million has been agreed. That will enable my Department to react appropriately to the current and future challenges faced by the ports. The total amount of loans and grants made by my Department to the ports over the years counts against the total limit indefinitely. It does not decrease in line with depreciation nor with loan repayments, and the total currently stands at £34.3 million. If all the potential future loans, identified by the ports to date, were to materialise over the next five years, it will require a further £27 million, making the total £61.3 million.

These figures do not take into account any additional grants or loans that may need to be provided to the ports because of the additional financial pressures being placed on them as a result of COVID-19 or to facilitate future developments in a post-Brexit world.

I turn now to the consequences of accelerated passage not being granted. As the North's ports continue to develop their port operations and to diversify their business, they will continue to make loan applications to my Department over the next few years. If accelerated passage is not granted, my proposed legislation will not be in place in time to be able to continue to provide financial assistance to the ports, particularly in the short term. That could have dire consequences for the ports and for the local economy. It would be a poor reflection on the functioning of the Executive and the Assembly if we did not move quickly to address a potential risk to our crucial gateways for trade. The North's main commercial ports have all agreed that there is a need for the increased loan and grant limit.

With regard to minimising the use of the accelerated passage procedure in the future, I have already mentioned my full commitment to clause-by-clause scrutiny at Committee Stage under normal circumstances, but we are not in normal times. I will continue to take any necessary steps to ensure that the accelerated passage procedure is not unnecessarily sought by my Department. In accordance with Standing Order 42(3) of the Northern Ireland Assembly, I appeared before the Committee for Infrastructure on 23 September to explain the need for accelerated passage for the Bill and to outline the consequences of its not being granted. I thank the Chair and members of the Committee for their recognition of the need to expedite the Bill and for their support in seeking Assembly approval for accelerated passage.

Members will have an opportunity to raise issues on the detail of the Bill during its Second Stage debate. In the interim, I seek the support of the House for use of the accelerated passage procedure and look forward to hearing Members' comments.

Miss McIlveen (The Chairperson of the Committee for Infrastructure): The proposal for accelerated passage of the Bill does not sit well with the Committee for Infrastructure. Like most Members, the Committee believes wholeheartedly that legislation should be afforded the full scrutiny of the Assembly processes, which includes Committee scrutiny. I welcome the Minister's acknowledgment of that today.

The Committee was notified at the start of September about the proposal for this Bill and discussed it during its strategic planning meeting on 9 September. The Committee asked the Minister to brief it on the Bill, and during that briefing on 23 September the Committee sought clarity on three aspects: what the Bill is expected to do; whether it does it; and why the Minister is seeking accelerated passage.

During the briefing, the Minister and her officials explained that Northern Ireland's ports are governed by the Harbours Act (Northern Ireland) 1970, and that this includes funding. Under the 1970 Act, ports are expected to fund their own capital investment, while the Department is able to make loans and grants to assist with major developments. However, this assistance from the Department is limited under the 1970 Act and shall not exceed £35 million. The Minister explained that, given future uncertainties, the need to build additional infrastructure and the added issue of the financial difficulties resulting from the reduction in freight and shipping volumes through ports as a result of the pandemic, there is a need to raise this existing total limit of £35 million. Therefore, the Committee accepts the what and the how behind the Bill.

However, the Committee has been less willing to accept the need for accelerated passage. In the course of the briefing it was established that the 1970 Act, which governs the funding, was last amended to raise the amount that the Department could provide to the ports by way of grants or loans in 1989, some 31 years ago. Therefore, this is legislation being rushed through by accelerated passage — an emergency measure — when there have been 31 years to plan for an increase in the funding limit. On questioning, even the Minister said:

“It seemed strange to me that we had not looked at the issue and that it had not come up before.”

The Committee recognises that the increase is required in the circumstances to ensure the smoothest possible working of our ports in these difficult times. However, surely there must have been someone in the Department with the foresight to see this coming and raise this matter earlier. That would have avoided the need for accelerated passage and given this House its place in properly scrutinising the legislation it signs into law.

The Committee reluctantly accepts that, at this moment, accelerated passage is required. The Committee for Infrastructure therefore agrees to there being accelerated passage of the Harbours Bill. However, it would like to be very clear that, in this case, accelerated passage has only become necessary because of the inaction of the Department; it is not because of events. The Committee for Infrastructure therefore supports the motion that the Bill proceed under the accelerated passage procedure.

Mrs D Kelly: I welcome the Minister’s presentation of the legislation today, even though it is by accelerated passage. The Minister made it very clear that that is not, and never will be, her favoured route, but necessity has enforced this action. I think that the majority of parties in the House have held that departmental portfolio and have therefore had responsibility for the ports. This is fairly straightforward legislation that will enable the ports to meet the challenges of not only COVID but Brexit. I therefore support the Minister’s legislation before the House.

Ms Anderson: I thank the Minister for being here and for introducing the legislation. As the Chair said, we, as a Committee, have scrutinised the legislation and the need for accelerated passage. This is not how any of us want to do business. Like other Ministers, the Minister has said that she is dissatisfied with taking forward legislation in that way. I do not think that there is one Minister who likes the accelerated passage process.

Given that we are on an island, it goes without saying that ports are a vital part of our economy. Foyle port in Derry, for example, is a key marine entry point into the north-west. Foyle port handles 2 million tons of cargo per year and supports 1,000 jobs. A data centre is also located there, and that has resulted in more inward investment coming in to boost the local economy. It is therefore a vital gateway for the north-west economy and has allowed capacity to grow as we move forward. COVID has brought additional challenges to a sector that was already dealing with the looming uncertainty of Brexit, and that is mentioned in the clause.

I understand that the loans and grants issued by the Department were, in the past, used for developments such as the renewable energy project at Foyle port, as well as purchasing new tugboats and cranes. While we have been told that the loans and grants are not expected to be used for sanitary and phytosanitary (SPS) checks, they may be used for other measures relating to Brexit preparation — again, that is mentioned in the clause — and to help ports to grow their business in the post-Brexit environment. As the Minister and the Committee Chair said, the limit has not been increased since 1989, and the increase to £90 million is based on inflation, therefore I believe that it is a reasonable move to assist the ports in moving forward, particularly given that the Department stated that, if all the future loans identified by the ports were to materialise over the next five years, it would require a further £22.5 million.

I would like to take a moment to comment on the current position that the ports find themselves in — this is in relation to what the clause mentions at the end — with regard to Brexit. The British Government and Minister Poots have been somewhat lethargic, to say the least, in their efforts to prepare our ports for 1 January. We have talked about that extensively in Committee. Given that DAERA officials have been working very hard around the clock, and we need to acknowledge that, to make sure that the readiness plan is feasible, it is a pity that their efforts have been somewhat hamstrung.

Mr Allister: On a point of order, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. Are we discussing accelerated passage, or are we discussing the merits of the Bill? From listening to the current speaker, I think that she has jumped the gun and moved to Second Stage.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Member is correct. The Member for Foyle will have the opportunity at Second Stage to raise all the issues to which she is presently talking, but Mr Allister is correct: this section of business is about the use of accelerated passage. I am loath to interrupt you, but, if you wish to wind, there will be an opportunity at Second Stage.

Ms Anderson: I will wind on that point. It is related; we know about the relationship between accelerated passage, COVID and Brexit. The ports are dealing with those things. We recognise that giving accelerated passage to the Bill will have implications for COVID and Brexit, what is happening and what we are facing. That is why the Committee, after taking that into consideration, agreed to accelerated passage somewhat reluctantly, as did the Minister. I will make the rest of my comments at the next stage.

Mr Beggs: Accelerated passage should be sought only in exceptional circumstances. Exceptional circumstances are coming in about a month’s time; we are coming to the end of the EU transition period, and, as of yet, there is no clarity about the implications of that. There may be complications with marshalling, inspecting and other emergency activity that needs to occur, so it is important that we create a little bit of headroom space by proceeding with accelerated passage. There is also COVID. Our ports are vital to trade and our businesses. They have been operating at a reduced schedule, and yet perishable goods move in both directions, so it is essential that there are still good ongoing connections. It is important to support our ports for that reason. However, both those issues could have been predicted at the start of the year. Why was permission to increase not sought much earlier, in which case the Bill could have proceeded via normal passage? Nevertheless, I recognise that we are where we are and that there is a need to create that headroom and an ability to assist if necessary. For that reason, the Ulster Unionist Party and I support accelerated passage.

Mr Muir: The Alliance Party regrets that the Bill is coming through accelerated passage. As an MLA, I have quickly become all too well aware of the shortcomings of the procedure. We appreciate the fact that the lack of devolved government for three years and Brexit preparations have meant that the need for this legislation has become urgent. However, we struggle to understand why the legislation was not brought forward some years ago.

In evidence to the Committee, departmental officials stated that the original plan was for the limit to be raised as part of a more holistic governance review. We assume that that review will still take place at some point; perhaps there will be an opportunity for the Committee to consider how the limit is managed on a long-term basis. I would like to hear more about the prospects of that review from the Minister in her closing remarks. That said, I am satisfied that the need for this legislation is urgent, as Mr Beggs outlined, and that the Bill seems relatively straightforward. Based on the briefings to date, it seems that no additional serious complications need to be considered, and, on that basis, we are prepared to support accelerated passage.

Mr Allister: Accelerated passage should be utterly alien to the House. Sadly, it is becoming far too familiar to the House. It should be alien because it is the role of a legislative Assembly to sift, test and interrogate legislation. Accelerated passage strips out all that; it removes the critical Committee Stage, during which matters can be sifted, tested and interrogated, and it takes the shortcut of simply legislating on the back of Second Stage and further debates. That should be alien to a legislative Assembly. It should be particularly alien to a legislative Assembly in which you have an all-party Executive because, without an Opposition, there is no other opportunity to interrogate the issues.

Therefore, the drift, step by step, whereby the Assembly is always finding excuses to dispense with normal procedures when matters such as this are raised, is alarming. There is not much point in Members saying that they are uncomfortable with this and offering various platitudes such as, “We do not like doing it” or “It is not the way that we would do business but we are going to do it”. It is either right or wrong. Further to this, the point has been made that we had 31 years to do it, but no one bothered. Since January, there has been an opportunity to do it, but it was not done.

Over two months ago, on 23 September, the Minister went to the Infrastructure Committee about this issue, and, over two months later, we are here. Two months, which could have been spent on scrutiny in the Committee had the Bill been brought to the House then, were wasted. Who was running down the clock to get to December and say, “Oh, poor us. We must have accelerated passage”?

We could have had the Bill much earlier in the year, and I protest, most vigorously, at the erosion of the powers of the House and at the easy option of accelerated passage being taken. It is not good enough. It should not be the easy passage that it is. I, for one, want to record my dissent from the slippage into repeated accelerated passage.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: No other Members have indicated that they wish to speak. I therefore call the Minister for Infrastructure, Ms Nicola Mallon to conclude and wind on the debate.

Ms Mallon: Again, I thank the Committee for its support on this matter. I recognise and share the concerns expressed by Members about the use of accelerated passage. That is why my speaking notes were very specific on the matter and why, when I appeared before the Committee, I clearly said that this was not the way to do business.

Given that a number of Members asked why it took so long, it may be helpful to outline the timeline. The loan and grant threshold was last raised in 1989 — 31 years ago. I cannot speak for other Ministers, but I wrote to the Executive on 6 July to raise the issue of the Bill. On 5 November, the Executive agreed to its introduction.

The Department for Infrastructure writes to the ports twice yearly to ask them to identify their loan requirements for the next five-year period. No one could have predicted the impact of COVID or the financial and resilience challenges that it would present to our ports. There are clear indications that my Department will receive a new request for assistance before the end of the year. Those are the circumstances under which the Bill is being brought forward in this way to the House.

Does the Member wish to comment?

Mr Allister: Yes, please. So that we are clear on this, I will say that part of the cause of the total disrespect of the processes of the House is the indolence of the Executive in addressing this issue. It took from July to November to approve what is, effectively, a two-page Bill. Really? Is that the standard of misgovernment that we have reached in the House? Then, of course, there is the ready reliance on accelerated passage. It is a situation of the Government's own making.

Ms Mallon: All I can do is set out the factual timeline.

I thank all of the other Members for their comments. I thank Mrs Kelly for supporting the intention of the Bill. However, like other Members, she is concerned about the use of accelerated passage.

Ms Anderson raised a number of important points, and I will be happy to address those at Second Stage.

12.00 noon

Mr Beggs raised the issue of the strategic importance of ports for trade. I agree with that absolutely. That is why they need to be supported during this difficult time, particularly in the face of COVID. Mr Muir asked about the governance review. Yes, that review is planned, and I am happy to engage with the Committee on it.

I thank all who contributed to the debate, and I ask for the Assembly's support for the position that the motion be adopted.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Thank you, Minister. Before we proceed to the Question, I remind Members that the motion requires cross-community support.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved (with cross-community support):

That the Harbours (Grants and Loans Limit) Bill [NIA Bill 12/17-22] proceed under the accelerated passage procedure.

The Harbours (Grants and Loans Limit) Bill: Second Stage

Ms Mallon (The Minister for Infrastructure): I beg to move

That the Second Stage of the Harbours (Grants and Loans Limit) Bill [NIA Bill 12/17-22] be agreed.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Before we begin, I have to place on the record for Hansard that cross-community consent was achieved, because I saw and heard Ayes from all sides of the House.

In accordance with convention, the Business Committee has not allocated a time limit to the debate.

Ms Mallon: I am sure that Members will agree that, as an island economy, it is critically important that our ports are able to meet existing and future challenges. The importance of the ports' role in the supply of goods into and out of Northern Ireland has never been more clearly illustrated than during the COVID-19 crisis.

All of Northern Ireland's ports are governed by my Department's harbours legislation for the provision of grants and loans. Although the trust ports at Belfast harbour, Coleraine harbour, Foyle port and Warrenpoint port, and the privately owned port of Larne, fund their own capital investment and are expected to be commercially self-supporting, my Department can provide assistance for developments of a major nature. That assistance can be by way of a loan or a grant.

On the overall limit to loans and grants, the Harbours Act states that the aggregate amount of grants and loans together shall not exceed £35 million. The original £6 million limit has been adjusted on four previous occasions, gradually rising to the current £35 million level. The last rise was made in 1989. The total grants and loans made stands at £34.3 million. The Harbours (Grants and Loans Limit) Bill is straightforward. It is a short Bill with a single purpose: to raise the existing total loan and grant limit from £35 million to £90 million. The new limit was identified, in liaison with colleagues in the Department of Finance, as an appropriate uplift in line with inflation. That will enable the Department to continue to provide loans and grants to our ports. The existing limit has been almost reached, and the ports face major challenges at this time, particularly as a result of the COVID-19 crisis and the need to grow business post-Brexit.

For the costs to be incurred by ports in implementing the Ireland protocol, it is important to note that DAERA will take forward any necessary EU works at the ports. The British Government have also committed to funding that work. I have to be clear that I do not anticipate the legislation being used to enable construction of sanitary and phytosanitary-related (SPS) infrastructure, nor is that a matter for DFI.

The region's main commercial ports have all agreed with the need for the increase to the loan and grant limit. The Executive also support the increase and agree that the legislation can be done by accelerated passage. The grants and loans made under the Bill increase a charge on the Consolidated Fund, so Minister Murphy has confirmed to me that he is content to recommend the Bill, as required under section 63 of the Northern Ireland Act. I commend the Bill to the Assembly.

Miss McIlveen (The Chairperson of the Committee for Infrastructure): The Committee was notified of the proposal for the Harbours (Grants and Loans Limit) Bill at the start of September this year and discussed it during its strategic planning meeting on 9 September. The Committee asked the Minister to brief the Committee on the Bill, and, on 23 September, the Committee received that briefing.

During the briefing, the Minister and her officials explained to the Committee that Northern Ireland's ports are governed by the Harbours Act (Northern Ireland) 1970, which includes funding. Under that Act, the ports are expected to fund their own capital investment, while the Department is able to make loans and grants to assist with major developments. That assistance from the Department is, however, limited under the Act, which states that it should "not exceed £35 million". Given future uncertainties, the need to build additional infrastructure and the added financial difficulties resulting from the reduction in freight and shipping volumes through the ports as a result of the pandemic, the Committee is aware of the need to raise the existing total limit of £35 million that the Department can provide by means of loans and grants to a more substantial £90 million, as set out in the proposed legislation that is before us.

The Committee for Infrastructure had already met, on 1 July this year, representatives of the seaports, who are eager to grow and strengthen their business after EU exit. However, the Committee notes that the impacts of COVID have removed the financial certainty that they would like in order to invest in and develop their business. This is an issue not just for them, as the ports have taken on a more strategically important role for our economy in the post-Brexit era. The Committee is aware that it is vital that our ports are ready for the challenges and opportunities facing them. The uncertainty of COVID has come at the worst possible time, a time when the ports were meant to be pushing forward with expansion and plans to build on the new opportunities that are opening up to them. Instead, they are now battening down the hatches and weathering the storm. The Committee appreciates the need for the Department to provide adequate support in order that, for the benefit of our economy, the port can develop the infrastructure that is required.

In its discussion with the Minister and her officials, the Committee sought assurances about the narrow scope of the Bill, that the sole purpose of the Bill is to raise the loan and grant limit and that there would be no other consequences. The Minister gave the Committee those assurances, noting that it is a very short and concise Bill. As Members will note, there are only three clauses: the commencement; the title; and a single line to increase the port funding limit. The Committee also asked for information about the consultation that had taken place with the Executive and the sector. The Minister advised the Committee that one issue was raised by the Executive, which was her proposal to include in the Bill the ability for the Department to increase the loan and grant limit at a future date through secondary legislation. She pointed out that, after objection from the Department of Finance about a lack of scrutiny, that was taken out. She confirmed that there were no objections to the purpose of the Bill.

The Minister was content that she had consulted with the ports and that they were in support of this proposed legislation. The Minister was asked about some of the financial challenges facing the ports, and she advised that those include the likes of urgent quayside repairs, which would be aided by the grant mechanism that is proposed by the Bill. Clarity was also sought on whether checks and balances were in place, what the loan can be used for and the need for that to be addressed in the Bill. The Minister gave an assurance that the Bill was purely for grants and loans and to increase the limit from £35 million. Given that assurance, I understand that the Committee is satisfied. While my preference was to have a Committee Stage, I am content to support the Bill at Second Stage.

Mr Boylan: Ba mhaith liom labhairt i bhfabhar an Bhille seo. I will speak in favour of the Bill. I am content that we can speak at its Second Stage. Before I make my remarks, while it is in my head, I ask the Minister to indicate when the harbours and ports will be able to access the funding. I ask that that happen at the earliest stage because we are leading into Brexit and everything else, and I am sure that there is a piece of work to be done by the ports.

Our seaports are an essential part of the economy. Moving forward, they need to be able to grow and continue to play their vital role in trade, connectivity and employment. This year, our ports have faced considerable challenges. When they were trying to prepare for Brexit as best they could with the limited information that they had, the coronavirus pandemic introduced another unwanted burden to the sector.

The ports all fund their capital investment; however, the Department can make loans and grants to them under the Harbours Act. The original limit was set at £6 million, but that was changed on multiple occasions in the past and gradually rose to the current limit of £35 million in 1989. Since then, it has not increased. It is also worth noting that, as stated by the Minister, the total amount of any loans granted by the Department does not decrease in line with depreciation or loan repayments. The total amount of grants and loans made to the ports stands at £34.3 million: you do not need a calculator to tell you that that is very near the current limit.

Furthermore, the Department has informed us that if all the future loans that have been identified by the ports were to materialise over the next five years, it would require a further £22.5 million. I think that the Minister might have said £27 million; perhaps she will clarify that point. That does not take account of any additional grants that may be provided to the ports in response to COVID-19. Although DAERA is leading on Brexit preparations at the ports, the Department has stated that the legislation could be used to make grants to the ports for other Brexit preparation measures.

Considering those factors, it has been proposed to raise the current limit of £35 million to £90 million. That figure is based on inflation. Applying the retail price index provided a new limit of around £88 million, which has been rounded up to £90 million. The new limit will help to ensure that the Department can assist the ports during the COVID-19 crisis and enable the consideration of any additional funding needed as a result of Brexit.

The Department stated that ports would be at a disadvantage if the proposed amendments were not made, as they would lose out on the opportunity to access additional funding. In the circumstances of the COVID-19 pandemic, the Department informed us that it is aware of at least one port facing financial challenges in maintaining and operating its services.

A new loan limit of £90 million has been proposed. Although the Bill is to go through accelerated passage — we had the previous debate — I think that Members will understand the necessity of using such a procedure. I support the Second Stage of the Bill.

Mrs D Kelly: On behalf of the SDLP, I support the Bill. I thank the Chair of the Committee for setting out clearly the Committee's consideration of the Bill and the rationale behind our decisions to support it and its accelerated passage.

On Mr Allister's earlier comments, I declare an interest as a member of the Business Committee. It has requested the Executive's legislative timetable for several weeks, and I want to assure him, although I see that he has left the Chamber, that there has been no slackness on our behalf.

I look forward to the development of the ports. Hopefully, the additional resource will give some surety to them in what, as others have said, are very uncertain times.

Mr Beggs: Essentially, this is a very straightforward Bill. There is one significant clause, which gives the power to increase the amount of loans or grants that can be passed to ports that are included in the Harbours Act (Northern Ireland) 1970. The amount of the increase is £65 million, from £35 million to £90 million, which, as the Minister indicated, is in line with inflation and is not an exorbitant amount.

The Minister also indicated that she is aware that there are pressures on the ports. I am also aware of considerable pressures on our ports as a result of COVID-19. Manufacturing has reduced during the pandemic. Hopefully, it will pick up considerably; nevertheless, it will not be at the same level as before.

Another aspect of fundraising for our ports, and an important business for them, is the tourist trade. The "holiday at home" mantra that tourists in Northern Ireland have largely been practising — and, indeed, tourists in the rest of the United Kingdom — has obviously reduced the amount of traffic and income to airports. We want that to pick up again, and we want our ports to be able to service that industry again whenever we get through the current pandemic. Therefore, it is important that our ports are still able to operate and still have the commitment there of ships and infrastructure to service that.

It is important that we maintain support for our ports so that tourists are able to come here. It is also so that we are able to ship our products, suppliers can quickly bring goods into Northern Ireland from Great Britain, and the perishable goods that we export can quickly get to market. Therefore, it is important that we have the ability to once more ramp up the services and to provide frequency, such as is provided from the port of Larne in my constituency, which is where we have the shortest, fastest journey to Cairnryan. I had to get that plug in. However, that is equally so for the ports of Belfast and Warrenpoint with their ro-ro facilities. It is important, in particular, for speed in the modern facilities that ro-ro traffic, which has been particularly affected by the pandemic, has the ability to ramp up again. On that basis, as I have said, I am content to support this increase, which is in line with inflation.

It is regrettable that this is also occurring at a time when a regulatory border is being created down the Irish Sea, as that will be a major impediment to our businesses and our region. It is something that I, and my party, warned others about the risks of doing. It is regrettable that, one month off, there is still not full clarity of the full implications. I have heard the Minister say that she is not planning to use this fund to support the ports with regard to the end of that transition arrangement. It would be helpful if the Minister could advise whether there would be the flexibility here for her to assist our ports in the case that some sort of emergency arose and others did not step in.

Secondly, with regard to this additional money, the Bill does not speak of how that will be determined or how it will be carved up going forward. It would be helpful if the Minister could say a little about that. In particular, there is concern that Belfast City Airport and City of Derry Airport received airport funds, but our principal airport, which is also trading at a loss, has not received support from that —.

Mrs D Kelly: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beggs: I certainly will.

Mrs D Kelly: Will the Member acknowledge the fact that the Finance Minister gave a rates holiday of over £1 million to the airport in question, and that, from my understanding, it has been in discussions with the Finance and Economy Ministers, who have responsibility with regard to the funding for the airports? At least acknowledge where the responsibility lies.

Mr Beggs: The Member has rightly highlighted that there has been support for all three airports through other mechanisms, but I am conscious that only two of the three received support from Infrastructure. There needs to be clarity around how this is used going forward. I hope that they will all be appropriately supported.

The other aspect and question that I have about the Bill which I find quite strange — perhaps it is because it is having to be taken forward by the accelerated passage route; it would be helpful if the Minister could explain — is that we are essentially increasing the amount of funding in line with inflation. That is a very minor change to our legislation. It is something that, for instance, with regard to benefits, happens each year with a statutory rule. Why is this change not occurring with a statutory rule? The next time we adjust it, are we also going to require primary legislation, as happened here, to repeal this legislation — assuming it goes through — and to introduce the new figures as we go forward? Why is it not being adjusted using a statutory rule? As others have indicated, had there been proper scrutiny and time allowed for Committee discussion, that could have been pointed out, and an amendment could have been tabled to enable such a change to be made much more easily and efficiently. It would be helpful if the Minister would explain why primary legislation was required.

That having been said, it is important that the Bill passes Second Stage. The Ulster Unionist Party will support it.

Mr Muir: I rise on behalf of the Alliance Party to support the Bill's passing Second Stage. Last week, I was here until 2.30 am debating the Consideration Stage of a Bill. Hopefully, we will not be here until that time again.

My party welcomes the legislation. The £35 million loan and grant limit in the Harbours Act (Northern Ireland) 1970 has not been amended since 1989. That was a long time ago. The current balance is only 2% short of the total limit. It is, therefore, right that the limit is updated to £90 million.

Ports are a vital part of Northern Ireland's infrastructure. They are important contributors to local growth.

Warrenpoint harbour alone adds £9.6 million to the local economy. Ports bring in tourists and cruise ships — hopefully, they will be back some day soon — and allow people to make their journeys across the water to visit friends and family or to go to university. Perhaps, most importantly, they are the gateway for the vast majority of Northern Ireland's imports and exports. They allow our fantastic local businesses to bring in parts and to export their products across the world. They also keep the food on the shelves, which we take for granted.

At Committee, the Minister stated that the ports fund their own capital investment and are commercially self-supporting, but loans and grants can be provided by the Department for developments of a major nature. The distinction between “capital investment” and “developments of a major nature” seems vague. We would have liked to have teased that out in more detail at Committee Stage. I would like to better understand whether the ports are expected to exhaust their commercial borrowing options first before turning to public funding. Perhaps, the Minister can touch upon that in her remarks.

I am, however, satisfied that there is further clarity in the legislation with regard to public funds. There should be no risk of increasing the loan limit as long as the Department's credit processes remain sufficiently robust. Ports need to be able to invest so that they can continue to provide the service that their customers expect and to meet the challenges of today.

I wish to talk about the three main challenges. The first is carbonisation. It was the major strategic goal that was raised by the port authorities when they came to the Committee in July. Additional investment will help ports to turn away from coal and oil products to become a major player in the development of offshore renewable energy.

The second challenge is Brexit. There is not long left until the end of the transition period. While the impact of disruption at the ports is likely to be more keenly felt by consumers and haulage firms, port authorities still face major challenges in preparing for those new arrangements. In the short term, ports are working with DAERA and HMRC to build the new infrastructure that is necessary as a result of the hard Brexit that is being pursued by the current UK Government.

Finally, there is the challenge of COVID-19. Although the ports have experienced a significant drop in trade, particularly in the number of foot passengers travelling through Belfast and Larne, since the onset of the necessary travel restrictions as a result of the pandemic, the medium- to long-term impact of COVID-19 on their businesses remains unknown. However, it is clear that ports face major challenges in navigating the choppy waters ahead.

It is, therefore, critical that we are able to invest in ports' facilities to support long-term sustainability and growth. Public grants and loans can be used only for capital projects and not for resource expenditure to aid cash flow. The ports have estimated that they will require some £22.5 million in loans and grants over the next number of years, notwithstanding the additional financial pressures as a result of COVID. My party supports the Department in ensuring that the capacity exists to provide that funding. The Committee for Infrastructure will have a role in monitoring how that figure of £22.5 million compares with the reality of what is required in the environment in which we currently find ourselves.

I support the Bill because an increase in the loan limit is long overdue and ports need to be able to invest in the future for the sake of us all. I look forward to hearing other Members' contributions and the Minister's response.

I thank and pay tribute to all those who have continued to work in our ports throughout the pandemic. Their contribution has often gone unacknowledged in the crisis, but it is absolutely vital to the well-being of our society during the most challenging of times. We owe them a great debt of gratitude.

Ms Ennis: I welcome the opportunity to speak to the Second Stage of the Harbours (Grants and Loans Limit) Bill. Like other Members, I acknowledge that our ports play a huge role in our island economy. The importance of keeping our supply chain secure and open has been acutely highlighted during the pandemic. However, like other sectors, ports have faced many difficulties during this period. It has, for example, meant that a lot of the roll-on roll-off — ro-ro — facilities encountered difficulties at the start of the pandemic, which impacted port income. Freight volume took a hit, as, of course, did passenger levels on ferry operations.

It is important that our ports continue to grow and play their essential role in our economy. Warrenpoint port, no doubt, plays a big role in that regard. In 2019, Warrenpoint port handled 3.5 million tons of cargo, and Ulster University estimated that, during 2019, the port put some £9.6 million back into the immediate local economy of Warrenpoint, Newry and beyond.

The total number of loans and grants issued by the Department currently stands at £34.3 million. As other Members said, that is very close to the max of £35 million. Also, between £22 million and £27 million in future loans have already been identified by the ports. That is without consideration of any other additional investment that may be needed as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic.

Those loans and grants are used to enable ports to commit to measures for future economic growth. In Warrenpoint harbour, for example, I understand that those grants were previously used to help to replace old infrastructure and to construct a deepwater quay.

While the Department and the Minister do not believe that the grants will be used for SPS checks, as that work is led by DAERA, they state that such grants and loans could be used for other measures related to Brexit preparations. Given the paramount importance of our ports, it is madness that checking facilities will not be ready in time for 31 December.

Although contingency measures have been put in place, the British Government and Minister Poots knew well ahead of time that they needed to upgrade the ports. Not only did they delay that needlessly but Minister Poots actively stepped in to obstruct preparations at a critical time and relented only when he was told to do so by the British EFRA Minister.

Meanwhile, ports have worked tirelessly in their preparation efforts for Brexit. It is unacceptable that they find themselves in the current position with just weeks to go until the end of the transition period.

Sinn Féin wants our economy to grow, which means allowing our ports to respond successfully to all the emerging challenges that stand before them. The increase in the limit to £90 million will go some way to assist in that. I support the motion.

Ms Anderson: The last time that I stood to speak, I think that I strayed into Second Stage, but, sure, it would not be like me. I will take this opportunity again to say how wonderful Foyle port is in Derry, as people would expect me to say. It is a fantastic port that employs over 1,000 people.

Ports are vital to our economy. The particular clause in the Bill is quite striking, and many Members referred to the impact that COVID has had on ports and, of course, Brexit.

As my colleague has just stated, the British Government and Minister Poots have been somewhat lethargic, to say the least, in their efforts to try to prepare the ports for what is coming down the road at us on 1 January. Perhaps we will know this week or perhaps we will not. Who can tell? We are waiting on the outcome of the negotiations. However, the resources to build the necessary infrastructure are vital to ensure that ports are in a competitive position in the medium to long term.

When we reflect on EU exit and the impact that it will have on the economy and on ports, I would like to recall, for instance, Project Kelvin in Derry, which is an EU multimillion-pound/euro cable that was built to provide the island of Ireland with the first undersea network cable for the fastest transatlantic route directly to Ireland.

How does that relate to this clause? When we are talking about Brexit, that was one of the many things that we secured from the EU on infrastructure projects. It enabled the establishment of a data centre at the Foyle port in Derry, the Atlantic Hub, which is attracting interest from EU countries. It is clear that the funding cap increase in the clause — the Minister talked about it, and it is vital for the ports — needs to be coupled with a renewed call for the British Government and Minister Poots to clarify urgently what buildings and IT systems will be in place. A clear plan and leadership are the best way of ensuring that the money is spent in the best way possible.

We urge both sides of the Joint Committees, as we head towards the end of the transition, having been kicked out of the EU against the democratically expressed wishes of the majority of the people in the North, who voted to remain —

12.30 pm

Mrs D Kelly: Will the Member give way?

Ms Anderson: Yes.

Mrs D Kelly: I want to correct the record. The Member said that we were being "kicked out" of the EU: "dragged out" would be more correct.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Order. For the past four years, politics has been dominated by the argument about whether leaving the EU is a good thing. There will be occasions to discuss that, but this is not one of them. I ask Members to return to the content of the Bill.

Ms Anderson: I will stick to the content of the Bill, particularly what it says as a result of the COVID-19 crisis and Brexit. I cannot answer the last contribution because of your ruling, but I am sure that the Member knows where I stand, which is that people did not vote for it.

In the context of EU exit, as referred to in the Bill, we urge the Joint Committee to work quickly on any aspects of checks that are within the remit of the spirit of compromise. It is vital that our ports can deal with the challenges that lie ahead. Raising the cap on loans and grants, as referred to in clause 1, is to be welcomed.

I give my support — somewhat reluctantly, because we do not like accelerated passage — to the Bill.

Mr Harvey: As already stated, the Bill will increase the existing limit placed on the Department with regard to the financial assistance that can be given to local harbours. The change in the limit from £35 million to £90 million is welcome, and I am pleased to see the Minister bringing the Bill to the Assembly. I am hopeful that the Bill will enable the Department to be much more flexible in responding to the needs of our ports, particularly as we reach the end of the transition period and emerge from COVID-19.

Our harbours act as one of our main gateways to the world. They provide the economic and social links that we rely on both within the United Kingdom and to the furthest parts of the globe. We must ensure that they receive the necessary government support to operate and compete on the world stage. The operational capacity and soundness of our main shipping ports have a direct economic impact on the ability of local companies to export their goods and on our access to key markets and destinations. Should our ports not be fit for purpose, the knock-on effect on other sectors of the economy would be significant.

The Department consulted all our main harbours, including Belfast, Larne, Foyle and Warrenpoint. Such targeted consultation is vital to ensuring that the sector is fully involved in all these decisions. At present, communication with our ports and haulage industry is vital, and I urge the Minister to keep those lines of communication open over the next few months in particular and to react, where needed, to support our harbours and our ports.

I note that the limit has not been updated since 1989. A lot has changed for our commercial ports and harbours since 1989. In the light of that, I call on the Minister to take time to consider any other areas in which her Department has a role, to ensure that all other mechanisms in her portfolio are up to date and provide fit-for-purpose state support to meet 2020 needs.

While the Bill is long overdue, I have some concerns about accelerated passage, given the lack of time for wider consultation, which, I note, has not been feasible on this occasion. I appreciate, however, given the limited scope of the Bill, that all the ports that stand to be impacted on have been involved in the consultation process. I am therefore happy to support the Bill.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: No other Members have indicated to me that they wish to speak. I call the Minister for Infrastructure, Ms Nichola Mallon, to conclude and wind up the debate on the motion.

Ms Mallon: I thank all the Members who have commented on the Bill at Second Stage. Some general issues have been raised, as well as several specific points, and I will try to deal with them. If I miss anything significant, I will get back to Members in writing once we have examined the Official Report. I reiterate my appreciation to the Chair of the Committee and its members for their support for increasing the threshold. I acknowledge the concerns around the utilisation of accelerated passage, which I share.

The Chair of the Committee set out clearly the uncertainty of COVID, the challenges that it presents to our ports and the need for adequate support. She also set out the engagement that my Department has undertaken with the ports, the Finance Minister and other Executive colleagues. She set out the rationale for the Committee's support for the Bill and reiterated the its fervent support for our ports and the critical role that they play.

The Chair of the Committee also gave examples of how previous loans and grants had been used by the ports, and that is an important point. Loans and grants have been used for the Evermore renewable energy project at Foyle port; the expansion of the ro-ro facilities and the construction of a deepwater quay at Warrenpoint harbour; the purchase of new tugboats and cranes at Foyle port; and the replacement of old infrastructure and the construction of new bulk storage silos at Warrenpoint harbour. It is important that we take cognisance of the fact that that is how the grants and loans have been used and that we clearly understand that the next set of planned loans and grants will be expected to be used, as Members have said, to enhance the resilience of our ports and ensure that they have the financial capacity for future economic growth, including diversifying their business, land acquisition and building cruise ship infrastructure. Mr Muir and Mr Beggs talked about the importance of tourism. It is also anticipated that the money will be used for purchasing additional tugboats and replacement cranes and for quayside repairs.

Cathal Boylan sought clarity on a number of issues, and I am happy to provide it. He asked when the ports would be able to access the finance. The intention is that the operational date for the legislative amendment will be in January. He highlighted the fact that the current threshold has almost been reached and that real and pressing financial requirements face our ports: I agree, and that is why we tabled the legislation. He asked for confirmation of the value of future loans that have been identified by the ports over the next five years. I can confirm that the figure that I have been presented with is £27 million, as opposed to £22 million. Were those loans to materialise, that would bring the total up to £61.3 million.

Mrs Kelly spoke in support of the Bill's Second Stage and highlighted the strategic importance of our ports and the role that they play.

Mr Beggs talked about the increase being in line with inflation. He emphasised the importance of tourism and of ensuring that our ports are equipped to facilitate and service the industry. I share his concerns about the lack of clarity on implementation of the protocol. I have close engagement with our ports, and it is hugely difficult and challenging for them to prepare when it is not clear at all how they are meant to do so or what is required of them. Mr Beggs talked about Brexit and SPS checks. He will understand that that is a matter for DAERA. There is a clear commitment from the British Government that they will fund the work that is required for the implementation of the protocol. That is a commitment that, I think, all of us in the House support and want to see materialised and realised.

Mr Beggs also spoke about the importance not only of ports but of airports. He mentioned the International Airport. It is important to clarify — I think that it was Mrs Kelly who stated this — that rate relief has been provided by the Finance Minister to all three airports. That equated to £1.7 million in support for Belfast International Airport. The Economy Minister has secured £2 million for tourism. My understanding is that she is engaging with Belfast International Airport on two of its airlines. The Finance Minister is also preparing a paper to bring forward to the Executive on the provision of safety and security grants to all three airports. That will be funded from the remaining money that is sitting in the centre for our airports. I reassure Mr Beggs and all Members that, given that the statutory responsibility for airports is shared across the Minister for the Economy, the Minister of Finance and me, I am committed to working with my ministerial colleagues to ensure that we support our airports during this challenging time.

Mr Beggs also asked why we were not addressing the increase of the threshold at a later stage through secondary legislation. I think that it was the Chair who pointed out that that was one of the issues that I originally raised but the Finance Minister had had concerns about it. Therefore, in recognising the pressing nature of the Bill in ensuring that we can get financial support to our ports, I proceeded without that principle and objective. It is something that I hope to return to with my ministerial colleagues.

Mr Muir reiterated his support for increasing the threshold. He raised the issue of commercial borrowing. Our ports can borrow commercially, but very specific circumstances are set by Treasury, so it is important that they are able to access grants and loans from government. Mr Muir paid tribute to the ports and all those who work in them and keep them going. I agree that we owe them a debt of gratitude.

Ms Ennis talked about the importance of our ports in keeping our supply chains open. We are very much reminded of that during COVID and of the fact that those who work in our ports, ships and haulage companies are critical key workers. She referenced Warrenpoint harbour in particular and the importance of that port to the local economy and the community that she represents. Very recently, I met again representatives of Warrenpoint harbour to understand better the challenges that they face and to reiterate my Department's support and commitment to continue to work with them.

Ms Ennis and Ms Anderson again raised concerns about the lack of clarity about Brexit and what that will mean for local businesses and communities and our ports in particular. They highlighted their concerns about the lack of clarity on SPS checks, the time that is left to prepare and all the challenges that come with that. Ms Anderson also spoke about Foyle port, which is a significant employer in her area. She referenced the many benefits to the north-west and to Northern Ireland of membership of the European Union.

Mr Harvey spoke about ports being the gateways to the world and to key markets and destinations. I agree with that. Importantly, he emphasised the need for ongoing communication with our ports. I reassure him that I will continue to engage and work closely with our ports to support them through this difficult time.

I hope that Members across the House support the Second Stage of the Bill, and I look forward to continued engagement with them as the Bill progresses through its stages.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That the Second Stage of the Harbours (Grants and Loans Limit) Bill [NIA Bill 12/17-22] be agreed.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: That concludes the Second Stage of the Harbours (Grants and Loans Limit) Bill.

Given that it is 12.44 pm and that there is a very important debate to take place on COVID, I will, by leave of the House, suspend now, because the Business Committee is meeting at 1.00 pm. Do not forget to clean your surfaces before you leave the Chamber.

The sitting was suspended at 12.44 pm.

On resuming (Mr Speaker in the Chair) —

Oral Answers to Questions

Infrastructure

Driving Test Backlog

Mr Frew: Mr Speaker, I have just rushed from Committee, and I thank you for your latitude.

1. Mr Frew asked the Minister for Infrastructure for an update on her plans to reduce the backlog of driving test appointments. (AQO 1229/17-22)

3. Mr T Buchanan asked the Minister for Infrastructure for an update on the steps she has taken to address the backlog of applications for practical driving tests. (AQO 1231/17-22)

Ms Mallon (The Minister for Infrastructure): Mr Speaker, with your permission, I propose to answer questions 1 and 3 together.

Driving instructors were included in the Executive's regulations on businesses that closed from 16 October until 20 November to help stop the spread of COVID-19. Following that Executive decision, driving tests also ceased over this period of increased restrictions based on public health and scientific advice. Driving tests resumed on 21 November but ceased again for two weeks from 27 November to 10 December inclusive, due to the circuit-breaker restrictions announced by the Executive. Motorcycle lessons and tests are not affected by those restrictions.

The Driver and Vehicle Agency (DVA) has opened up its booking system exclusively for customers whose tests were cancelled between 17 October and 20 November. Testing slots have been released for February, and additional booking slots have been made available in December and January, as the DVA increases capacity by recruiting additional examiners. The DVA is working on proposals to reopen the booking service next for customers impacted by the two-week circuit-breaker restrictions and, in due course, will issue further communications to customers through indirect and social media channels.

While testing resumes, the DVA will continue to offer driving tests on a Saturday and, following consultation with key stakeholders, plans to offer driving tests for heavy goods vehicles on Sundays, where it is suitable to do so without compromising the integrity of the test. The DVA will also use overtime to rota off-shift dual-role driving examiners to provide additional capacity and to provide cover for scheduled driving tests where, due to a variety of unforeseen reasons such as sick absence or the requirement to self-isolate, driving examiners are unable to attend work.

I understand that this is a challenging time for new drivers and for the DVA, but I assure Members that officials are working hard to minimise the disruption caused by the impact of COVID-19.

Mr Frew: I thank the Minister for her answer. She is no doubt aware of the massive impact that this has had directly and indirectly because of the lockdown. It has massive implications throughout wider society for other reasons. The problem with driving test appointments affects the mobility issue, job applications, loneliness and mental health. Has an impact assessment been completed in the Department on the impacts of not testing during lockdowns?

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his question and understand the huge impact that this has on the multiple aspects that he has highlighted. Given that it is a public-facing service, the DVA and the driving test element of that have been severely impacted, as all public-facing services have been. We are mindful of that and constantly review the situation and do what we can to maximise capacity.

I assure the Member that we have 37 driving examiners and 40 dual-role examiners, who conduct both vehicle and driving tests. To increase the driving test capacity, we are in the process of recruiting an additional 27 temporary and permanent vehicle examiners. So far, 10 temporary examiners have started with the DVA; six have completed their training and been appointed to test centres; and four are currently undertaking training and are due to be in place by early January. We are also working at pace to recruit a further five temporary vehicle examiners. In addition to that, the recruitment of 12 permanent vehicle examiners and a further recruitment process for permanent driving examiners will be launched in the new year.

We are very mindful of the impact, and I assure the Member that we are doing what we can, in line with risk assessments, to maximise our capacity. We have also extended the validity of test pass certificates for learner drivers. We are committed to doing what we can to minimise disruption and restore our services as quickly and safely as possible.

Mr T Buchanan: I thank the Minister for her response on the issue. We are open for business again on Friday 11 December.

Students who have booked to do their driving test will be coming in that day. They do not want to cancel the test again, as it will have been cancelled on a few occasions, and they may not have had a driving lesson for two, three or four weeks prior to the test. Will you engage with your Executive colleagues to allow those students a little flexibility so that they can have a final driving lesson on Thursday 10 December, the last day of lockdown, in preparation for their driving test without cancelling it for a third or fourth time?

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his question. He is correct: we will resume driving tests on 11 December. While driving instruction was suspended during the recent period of increased restrictions, it was still possible for learner drivers to practise their driving under supervision from someone in their household or support bubble. Candidates who are concerned that they will not be ready for their driving test when it is scheduled to take place should contact the DVA. We are open to offering refunds and rebooking tests, but I hope that, during the period of restrictions, our learner drivers were still able to practise safely on the road in line with the regulations.

Mr Sheehan: Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as ucht a freagraí. I thank the Minister for her answers. Many people are waiting for driving tests, Minister, and a lot of them depend on their car for essential travel. How many tests per week do the DVA anticipate doing when services resume? How long will it take for the backlog to be cleared?

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his question. This is not a normal year, so assessing the current demand for driving tests is difficult. In order to book a practical driving test, a learner driver must first pass their theory test. As of 1 November, over 21,000 people held a valid theory test pass certificate, and, therefore, that is the maximum number of people that could apply for a driving test at that time. However, some of those learners will have already secured a slot and will have their test between now and the end of February.

I understand that learner drivers are hugely frustrated and really want to take their test, but it is a close-contact service, so we have to undertake risk assessments and adapt our services accordingly. That is why, in response to a previous question, I wanted to emphasise that we have extended the theory test pass certificate period because we hope that that will go some way to mitigating the disruption caused to learner drivers. Of course, we are not in normal circumstances, and we will continue to do all that we can to increase capacity so that all the learner drivers who want a test can book it as quickly as possible.

Ms Hunter: Minister, I understand that the Executive's decision to impose the restrictions has affected the DVA service, and I welcome how quickly the Minister and her Department have responded. With regard to communicating with the public on COVID-19 and driving tests — you have touched on this already — will social media and nidirect be updated with guidance, as that is the usual route through which most people receive timely access to information?

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for her question. As we respond to and recover from COVID, it is really important that we communicate consistently, clearly and constantly with the public not just about the restrictions but about how services are affected as a consequence. As I said, DVA is dealing with a significant workload, and officials are working hard to keep drivers safely on the road and to adapt and support new learner drivers at this challenging time. I assure the Member that the DVA will continue to communicate the opening of general bookings to the Northern Ireland Approved Instructor Council and will write to all driving instructors to advise them when the booking service will be available. As the Member has rightly pointed out, social media is an important tool in communicating with the public, and we will continue to provide updated information on nidirect and ensure that any changes are communicated through all social media channels.

Ms Bradshaw: There was a system in place for a few months that gave priority to the essential workers whom Mr Sheehan mentioned. I have a constituent whose theory test was delayed and then delayed again. She has a low-wage job and has had to use her own money for taxis to get to a COVID test. There is discrimination against essential workers, and the whole system needs to be reviewed.

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for her question. She makes an important point. Following the reopening of the online booking service, from 5 October, we moved to a full opening of the system because we were mindful that some people had their tests cancelled way back, and we have tried to manage that in as fair a way as possible. There was a process prior to that for critical workers based on a priority waiting system, and that looked at a combination of the applicant's role and whether a driving licence was needed for their job or for commuting to work. We are keeping that situation under review, but the approach that we have taken since is to open up the system to all applicants. If the Member has significant concerns, I am happy for her to write to me directly about them.

Mr Beggs: I put on record my thanks to the Minister and the DVA for facilitating driving tests for a number of key workers to enable them to carry out their duties. I am aware of ongoing problems with one constituent who applied in July and was given a date that was subsequently cancelled because of COVID. That person is still waiting.

The Minister mentioned that recruitment is still going on. It is disappointing that it has taken so long to recruit. Does she agree that the time taken for the recruitment process is excessive and that, given these exceptional circumstances, the process needs to be speeded up so that key workers, young people and members of the public who need a driving test can be facilitated by trained instructors in a timely manner?

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his question and for his kind words about the hard work of the officials. As I said, we are recruiting 27 permanent and temporary examiners. We are working off a merit list for a number of those, but we also have to make sure that all those who are recruited are fully trained. These driving examiners are taking pupils out, and we need to make absolutely sure that they are trained because this is a road safety issue. We are, of course, trying to do things as efficiently and effectively as we can, but it is always about balancing that with my statutory responsibility for ensuring road safety.

Mr Speaker: Questions 7 and 11 have been withdrawn.

A7: Upgrade Approval

2. Mr Harvey asked the Minister for Infrastructure when she plans to approve the upgrade of the A7 from Doran's Rock to Saintfield. (AQO 1230/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his question. The A7 Doran's Rock to Rowallane scheme is at an advanced stage of development, and the design work and an environmental assessment for the scheme are substantially complete. The next stage of development work will include taking the proposal through the statutory procedures, which will include a vesting order to secure the land required for the school from adjacent landowners. The A7 from Downpatrick to Belfast forms part of the strategic road network and is classed as a link corridor.

My Department is developing proposals for a new regional strategic transport network transport plan that will set out the priorities for future development of the main road and rail networks across Northern Ireland. I will consider proposals for improvements to the A7 as part of that process. This plan is still in development, but, once I have identified my preferred options and priorities, a draft document setting those out will be issued for public consultation, giving you an opportunity to support or challenge the proposals.

Mr Harvey: As you are aware, Minister, the short stretch of the A7 between Doran's Rock and Saintfield is a main route linking Downpatrick to Belfast. This is the final link in that road that needs to be upgraded. Given that this part of the district has seen little investment in infrastructure lately and given that no work has been carried out on the scheme for some 10 years now, I was seeking assurance from the Minister that she will look into this to see that it is completed soon. I got that assurance.

I will ask my supplementary question. Minister, while we are talking about roads and transport issues, have you given consideration to biennial MOT testing for motor vehicles when they reach four years of age as opposed to it being done annually as it is at present?

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his questions. I think that I have addressed the first part of your question in saying that I will consider that as part of the wider strategic road network, and I am happy to hear your views on it at that stage.

I was keen to look at biennial testing, but events have somewhat overtaken us in terms of COVID and staffing resource. I am keen to move to a call for evidence on that issue at the earliest opportunity. It is an important area that we must examine thoroughly when deciding on next steps.

Ms Kimmins: The Minister will not be surprised to hear this, but another road that is in desperate need of upgrading is the A1, and, unfortunately, in the last number of weeks, we have seen yet another fatality there. I am sure that other Members saw the segment on the news last week about those who have been campaigning long and hard for improved safety on that road. Can the Minister state when, if next month's decision on the inspector's report is positive, construction is likely to begin?

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for her question. I am very aware of how important the A1 improvements are to the many people who have expressed their support for the scheme, especially those who have lost loved ones. I saw that segment on the news. My thoughts are with the family who lost their loved one in the collision on the A1 earlier this month.

As the Member will know, the inspector issued his report to the Department on 19 October. Officials will require some time to fully consider the inspector's proposals and recommendations. When I have been apprised of the findings, I will give them careful consideration before deciding on the next steps for this scheme. I assure the Member that I very much recognise the importance of these improvements. I hope to be in a position to publish the Department's response to the inspector's report towards the end of January 2021. I am committed to moving it forward at pace, if, as the Member indicated, upon the completion of all of those statutory processes, the decision is positive.

Mr McGrath: I welcome the assurances from the Minister about the A7, not least because it will enable people from Belfast to enjoy the delights of Downpatrick much more easily.

Another road that is due an upgrade is the ring road bypass around Ballynahinch. Can we get an update on that bypass and where we are with the project?

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his question. In June, I announced my commitment to fund the continued development of a number of strategic road improvement schemes, including the Ballynahinch bypass, as part of my plan to aid economic recovery and community transformation while addressing regional imbalance. The Ballynahinch bypass scheme is now at an advanced stage of development, and preparatory work on contract documentation has been completed. I have asked officials to complete the work necessary to allow me to make the direction order, and this includes a review of the environmental reports, which is nearing completion. Subject to the outcome of the review, I hope to be in a position to make the direction order for the scheme in the new year. I reaffirm my commitment to moving ahead with the Ballynahinch bypass while also promoting the opportunities for active travel in the town. I will be and am considering the next steps.

River Foyle: Flooding

4. Ms Mullan asked the Minister for Infrastructure what measures her Department is taking to address flooding issues along the River Foyle. (AQO 1232/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for her question. A feasibility study for Derry completed earlier this year by my Department recommended significant flood alleviation works to both banks of the River Foyle in the city centre to provide protection from coastal and river flooding. The associated business case has recently been approved, and it is anticipated that the Derry flood alleviation scheme, which is estimated to cost £17.3 million, will progress to the detailed design stage within the next few months. In conjunction with this work, and as part of the Living with Water Programme (LWWP), I have also recently allocated £130,000 from this year's budget to start the development of a Living with Water feasibility study in Derry.

Ms Mullan: I thank the Minister for her response and that update. That is very welcome, Minister. I ask that areas such as Foyle Road be included. I have written to you on this, and you responded yesterday. I will arrange a meeting locally with your office. Can you give assurances that your Department will effectively deal with the problem following our engagement, given that your Department has had to respond nine times in the past two years to flooding in the Foyle Road area?

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for her question. She has corresponded on the matter with me, and I have said that my officials are to meet with her on-site so that we can see what we can do to address the issue and to support the local community, which may be affected by any flooding in the area.

Mr Durkan: I thank the Minister for her action. Clearly, she is delivering on promises and making progress in the north-west. I was delighted to welcome her to Derry last week. Can the Minister provide an update on the LWWP in Derry, please?

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his question and his kind words. I was pleased to visit Derry to mark the completion of works on the north-west transport hub. The Member will be aware that 'Living with Water in Belfast', an integrated plan for drainage and waste water management in greater Belfast, was published for consultation on 11 November.

The draft plan indicates that approximately £1.4 billion of investment is needed over the next 12 years to upgrade the drainage and waste water infrastructure in the greater Belfast area to protect against flooding, enhance the water environment and facilitate growth. The focus of the programme is on developing integrated catchment-based solutions to manage rainwater on the surface and, where possible, avoid hard-engineered drainage solutions that involve long-term operating and maintenance costs. It is my intention to bring the final plan to the Executive for approval in the spring of 2021, and, following the publication of the final Belfast plan, I intend to publish guidance on the development of integrated drainage investment plans across the rest of the North.

As I said, I have allocated £130,000 from this year's budget to start the development of a Living with Water feasibility study in Derry. The study will initially focus on working with the designers of the A2 Buncrana Road strategic improvement scheme to bring forward integrated drainage solutions locally. The study will examine opportunities to use blue-green spaces such as the linear park — Galliagh, is it? — to reduce naturally surface water flows in order to improve water quality in the rivers and reduce flood risk in the surrounding area.

Mrs Barton: Minister, following the recent peatbog slide at Meenbog, where a large quantity of peatbog land was displaced into the Mourne Beg river, do you accept that such bog slippage has endangered a pristine salmon river, releases captured carbon, reduces ponding and further increases the risk of flooding downstream? How will your Department limit the chance of that occurring in Northern Ireland?

Ms Mallon: The Member raises an important issue. That was a serious incident. My officials responded when they became aware of it, and the AERA Minister was on-site with his Southern counterpart. That incident demonstrates the need for joined-up working across the board. Planning can play a role in a number of those situations, as can, as I referred to, blue-green infrastructure and natural catchments. There is a real opportunity to be more creative in dealing with such difficulties.

Road Safety

5. Mr Middleton asked the Minister for Infrastructure what steps her Department is taking to address road safety. (AQO 1233/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his question. I take my responsibility very seriously to promote road safety. This has three strands: education, enforcement and engineering. We work with others, including the Department of Education, the PSNI, the Fire and Rescue Service and the Ambulance Service, and work to develop the new road safety strategy is ongoing. I want to do what I can to tackle drink-driving. On 9 November, I removed the so-called statutory option from legislation, making it harder for some drink drivers to evade justice. I will bring draft legislation to the Assembly early in the new year to increase the fine and penalty points for using a handheld mobile phone while driving and to close the gaps in a law that predates modern smartphone technology. I have also announced the road safety grant scheme for 2020-21, and a number of projects focusing on road safety and active travel will be rolled out across local communities in the coming weeks. I was delighted to allocate £2 million of funding to introduce part-time 20 mph speed limits at 100 schools by the end of this financial year, and I will introduce more as funding permits. My Department also has a rolling programme of educational activities, including the road safety public information campaigns. In recent times, those measures have included promoting the benefits of walking and cycling and doing so in a safe way, taking account of COVID. My Department will continue its engineering efforts, including undertaking general improvements to the network; providing facilities for users who are more vulnerable; introducing measures aimed at regulating traffic; and seeking to maintain the road network to ensure that it continues to be safe for us all.

Mr Middleton: I thank the Minister for her response and for the work that her Department has done. The most recent figures show that 54 people have been killed on our roads this year. That is up from the same period in 2018-19, despite the fact that we have had a lockdown and fewer drivers on the road. That is very concerning. As we approach a dangerous time of the year, what with the darker nights, will the Minister ensure that her Department will do everything to continue to promote that message and work with organisations such as Life After that support those bereaved through road collisions?

Ms Mallon: I assure the Member of my commitment and the commitment of all my officials to doing all that we can to improve road safety. He is right to highlight the fact that we are coming into a period of much darker nights, where we will experience some challenges on the roads. I am committed to working with the PSNI, the fire service and a range of partners, particularly community groups, because they have a really important role to play in taking the road safety message to the heart of communities. I am aware of Life After, and I have already agreed to meet it.

Ms Flynn: To follow on from that, I will say that, unfortunately, I have lost two extremely close family members on the roads, both at the start of December, so I am well aware of the impact that losing someone in such a cruel way can have on families.

I know that the Minister will be aware of the new McDonald's restaurant that has opened on McKinsty Road in the Colin area of west Belfast. We met a team of her officials the other week and had a good site visit, but I have the same concerns and genuinely live with a fear that, with kids, young people and people of all ages crossing those four lanes, someone will be killed or really seriously injured. Can the Minister update us on progress or on a timeline for pedestrian safety measures?

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for her question, and I offer my sincere condolences on the loss of her family members.

I am aware of the issue, and the Member, along with other colleagues, has written to me about it. There was a site meeting with officials, and signs have been erected, but we need to do so much more. I have asked my officials to work proactively with McDonald's so that we can get a more sustainable road safety solution there.

Mr Blair: I thank the Minister for her answers on road safety and for the detail given. Whilst I welcome the information on the further roll-out of 20 mph limits outside schools, will the Department pay particular attention to areas that have been raised with it separately, such as Maine Integrated Primary School in Randalstown, which I raised?

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his question. I want to do so much more in that area. Logistically, it is challenging to roll that limit out to 100 schools in this financial year, but it is something that I am committed to doing. I am also committed to seeing it rolled out further to many more of our schools. We have to use a matrix and criteria to do it fairly, but I assure the Member that I want to see 20 mph limits outside many more schools in coming years. I look forward to continuing to work with him as he advocates for that on his constituents' behalf.

NDNA Update

6. Mr McGrath asked the Minister for Infrastructure for an update on her Department's commitments in 'New Decade, New Approach' (NDNA). (AQO 1234/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The commitments made by parties in 'New Decade, New Approach' will be transformational, and I am committed to doing all that I can to deliver on our shared promise to the people of the North. My Department is progressing Executive flagship projects on the A5 and A6 along with other key infrastructure projects including the A1 junction safety programme, the iconic Narrow Water bridge and York Street interchange. Work is also progressing to develop the design of the Newry southern relief road and other statutory requirements in advance of public consultation. 'New Decade, New Approach' also recognises that significant investment is required in our sewers, pumping stations and upgrades to our waste water treatment works. Progressing action on that, in November my Department launched a public consultation on Living with Water in Belfast, which is the strategic drainage infrastructure plan for Belfast.

Collaboration across our islands is key to ensuring the delivery of the commitments in NDNA, as the agreement also contains pledges from the Irish and British Governments. I have met and had useful discussions with the Irish Transport Minister, Minister Ryan, on how we can work in partnership to progress the shared commitments to improve the lives of all our citizens who share this island. The North/South infrastructure projects in 'New Decade, New Approach' were discussed at the October North/South Ministerial Council (NSMC) transport sectoral meeting. At that meeting, I provided my counterparts with an update on my commitments and priorities, including enhancing the rail network to create a spine of connectivity on the island, the A5 project and the Narrow Water bridge. I look forward to continuing to work closely with Minister Ryan and members of the British Government to realise those commitments.

Mr McGrath: The Minister has made serious progress in delivering on the commitments of 'NDNA'; in particular, she has clearly set the standard for all-island partnership working and progressing delivery. With that in mind, will the Minister's work towards an infrastructure commission include a focused all-island element?

2.30 pm

Ms Mallon: The short answer to the Member's question is yes. We need only look at the climate emergency to realise that the issues facing our citizens are not restricted to boundaries or borders. I am committed to working with all partners across this island, and across these islands, as we tackle the challenges facing all our citizens. I believe that an infrastructure commission would play a critical role in delivering that.

Mr Speaker: That ends the period for listed questions. We move on to topical questions.

Procurement Board

T1. Dr Aiken asked the Minister for Infrastructure, given that she will be aware that, this morning, the Finance Minister announced the reestablishment of the Procurement Board, to outline how that will affect her Department and how responsibility and accountability will be run within the new board. (AQT 761/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his question. I welcome the Finance Minister's proposals to reconstitute the Procurement Board. The new Procurement Board announced today by Minister Murphy will, I believe, provide impetus to the development of public procurement policy to ensure that it delivers maximum social, economic and environmental impacts.

The Executive spend significant sums of public money annually on procurement, so it is only right that procurement policy is designed and developed by those who manage and deliver government contracts and that policies have Executive approval. I look forward to engaging with the Finance Minister to agree the roles and responsibilities of the new Procurement Board and on how any work will be referred to the Executive. It is vital, as the Member points out, that Ministers have oversight, given our accountability.

Dr Aiken: I thank the Minister for her answer. As she will be aware, we have not yet seen the terms of reference for the Procurement Board, and a fiscal council has not yet been established. Bearing in mind those two issues, does the Minister have any concerns, given that her Department will be one of those most closely monitored by the new Procurement Board?

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his question. He will be aware that my party and I are supportive of a fiscal council, as we believe that it is an important tool for planning and for the future management of our finances. We need to be strategic in our investments. I believe that that is important work and that we all should be involved. I look forward to having an input on the terms of reference. I believe that our strategic, long-term approach to, and delivery of, services and projects right across all Departments needs to be much better. It was with that in mind that I set up the ministerial advisory panel on an infrastructure commission, which would have a key role to play in ensuring that we are strategic in our approach and in the delivery of projects to the maximum effect.

International Day of Persons with Disabilities

T2. Mr Butler asked the Minister for Infrastructure, given that she will be aware that this Thursday, 3 December, is the International Day of Persons with Disabilities, when Parliament Buildings will be lit up in purple as an acknowledgement, to join with him to celebrate the day and to reaffirm the Executive's commitment to ensuring full equality for disabled people in Northern Ireland. (AQT 762/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his question. He has been a long-standing champion of equality and of the rights of disabled people. I share his commitment and will do what I can. I am fully supportive of Parliament Buildings being lit up to mark International Day of Persons with Disabilities. However, as the Member says, we need to go much further than just lighting up buildings, and I want to assure him that I am committed to doing what I can in my Department.

We are working to ensure that DFI services are accessible and inclusive. For instance, more than 95% of Ulsterbus vehicles are wheelchair-accessible, but they need to be 100% accessible. That is why all future bus and coach purchases will be wheelchair-accessible. My Department and Translink also work closely with the Inclusive Mobility and Transport Advisory Committee, as it is important that disabled people are involved in shaping and designing services from the very beginning. I assure the Member that I am committed to that cause and that I, as Minister for Infrastructure, will continue to do what I can.

Mr Butler: I thank the Minister for her answer. Will she provide an assurance that, in her vision to deliver sustainable and green transport strategies, disabled people will be central to every consultation and included in those strategies?

Ms Mallon: The Member makes a very important point. We bandy about the term "co-production", but what it should mean is that we are working with our citizens to shape services and to make sure that we have a society where everyone feels involved and where there is equal access. That is why, in the terms of reference for the ministerial advisory panel on the infrastructure commission, I specifically referenced the need for our infrastructure to be not just sustainable but inclusive.

I continue to engage with my Executive colleagues in the hope that we can take forward the recommendations of that panel and have sustainable and inclusive infrastructure right across our society.

Road Maintenance: Newry and Armagh

T3. Mr Irwin asked the Minister for Infrastructure what plans she has to increase resources for the maintenance of B-class and minor roads in the Newry and Armagh constituency. (AQT 763/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his question. He is an extremely active advocate for his constituency. I have made the point to him on a number of occasions about the need to be transformative and to get the basics right. I maintained the budget for road maintenance this year. I also established the rural roads fund, which is £10 million, so I am committed. I have also said that it is very important that we, as an Executive, do what we can individually and collectively to tackle regional imbalance. I am committed to doing more. Of course, what I would like to do is constrained somewhat by the financial envelope within which I have to operate, but I will continue to make the case at the Executive to ensure that we get the funding required to invest in our infrastructure, particularly in our rural areas.

Mr Irwin: I thank the Minister for her response. I am sure that she will accept that some of those minor roads are in a very bad state of repair, with large potholes. I had one lady in my office this morning who had wrecked her wheel on a pothole yesterday afternoon. She told me that the police car had hit the same pothole, also yesterday afternoon. Last year, there were claims of over £7,000 on one pothole. Does the Minister accept that more resources are required to deal with that situation?

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his supplementary question. I agree that we need to have more finances and that we need to improve our roads. I think it was the Barton report that identified independently that £140 million is required annually to ensure that our roads are maintained to a satisfactory standard. The Member will be aware of what took place when Danny Kennedy was the Minister for Regional Development. The Department has struggled to recover from that. I assure the Member that I will continue to make the case for greater investment in our infrastructure, because it is key to our communities and our economic growth.

Glider Service: South Belfast

T4. Mr O'Toole asked the Minister for Infrastructure, given that she has talked at length and passionately about the need to use the COVID crisis as a step change towards more active travel and the better use of public transport, particularly in the city that they both represent, to provide an update on the delivery of phase 2 of the Glider service, specifically in relation to South Belfast. (AQT 764/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his question. All politics is local. DFI teams, along with consultants Atkins, are continuing to actively work remotely on the development of that project, which is also a Belfast region city deal infrastructure project. A feasibility and options appraisal is being developed, together with an associated interim outline business case. I hope to be in a position to consider an emerging preferred option later this year. COVID-19 restrictions may, however, have a bearing on that timeline. An interim outline business case for Belfast rapid transit 2 was forwarded to the Belfast region city deal executive board on 12 August 2020. My understanding is that it may be in a position soon to indicate which projects have been successful and how much funding has been allocated.

Mr O'Toole: Thanks to the Minister for her answer. It would be really helpful if the Minister were able to meet me and people who are interested in the possibility of extending the Glider phase 2 to Carryduff, which is a part of the constituency that has not always been as well connected and funded as it should have been. Will she meet me to talk about the potential of extending the Glider phase 2 and broader possible public transport development in that part of the world?

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his question. There is obviously great enthusiasm for the delivery of that project. There is huge interest in the routes that the Glider will take in both north and south Belfast. I assure the Member that I will consult on routes for phase 2 of the Glider project. I am, of course, more than happy to meet him to discuss the matter.

Planning Act (NI) 2011: Review

T5. Mr Blair asked the Minister for Infrastructure for an update on the timescale for the review of the Planning Act (NI) 2011, given that, when the Act came into force in 2015, DFI was required by law to conduct a review of it within three years, albeit that the review was delayed, with the absence of a functioning Assembly given as one of the reasons for that delay. (AQT 765/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his question. He is right, there is a requirement to review the Act, and I have initiated that. My officials have attended the Committee, and I hope to be in a position, later this year, to be able to provide an update to the Committee and the House.

Mr Blair: I am keen to know whether the Minister can provide any information on the sectors, groups or organisations that she has consulted with on the review.

Ms Mallon: As part of the review, my officials have been engaging with key stakeholders. I recently met with the Northern Ireland Local Government Association, and that was one of the issues that it wanted to discuss with me. I reassured it that, given the critical role that councils play in our Planning Service and the delivery of a much-improved Planning Service, they will be central to the review and will be widely consulted. We will be engaging with stakeholders, right across the board, on the review and as we work to identify what needs to change, from a legislative and non-legislative perspective, to improve our Planning Service.

Bus Services: West Belfast

T6. Mr Carroll asked the Minister for Infrastructure for a breakdown of the 500 extra bus services that were announced several months ago to deal with COVID and to state how they relate to his West Belfast constituency, including any extra buses. (AQT 766/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his question. He is correct. To ensure the safety of passengers and staff, Translink provided 500 additional buses. I do not have at hand the specific breakdown of the information that he is seeking, but I am more than happy to write to him and provide that information.

Mr Carroll: I thank the Minister for her reply. It is important, for her benefit, to emphasise that the Glider service, particularly in my constituency, is regularly full to the brim of people trying to get home from school or work. In those circumstances, I question whether it is possible to socially distance. Will the Minister commit to ensuring that extra buses will be placed on routes in my constituency, including buses that have more space and capacity than the Glider, to avoid a situation where students, workers and everybody are forced into potentially hazardous situations?

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his question. I am aware of occasions when there have been a substantial number of passengers on Glider services, making it difficult to be socially distanced. It is my understanding that Translink has been providing additional services along the routes where that is occurring. The challenge is that our young people, in particular, prefer to use the Glider, with its access to the internet, rather than use a standard bus. It is something that we are working on. We are working with Translink to engage with schools to reinforce the public safety message and the requirement to wear face coverings. There are a number of measures that Translink is taking to try to address the issue. I am happy to provide the Member with the information on the routes that he was speaking about.

Parking/Traffic Management: Derry

T7. Ms Mullan asked the Minister for Infrastructure, while sticking with the theme that all politics is local, for an update on the plans for a residents' parking scheme and traffic management facilities in the Bogside and Bishop Street area of Derry. (AQT 767/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for her question. One of the joys of being the Infrastructure Minister is that you get a whirlwind tour of all the constituencies and to hear about the important issues that are facing communities.

On the residents' parking scheme, the Member will be aware that officials are reviewing the analysis of the scheme that was carried out on Rugby Road. I have not been presented with the findings of that yet. However, I am very clear that, when we have those findings, we need to be learning lessons. I am mindful that, in your constituency and others across Northern Ireland, this is an issue of importance to communities and one that elective representatives would like to see delivered. I have committed to continue to work on it, and the Department will publish the findings of the review when I receive them.

Ms Mullan: Thank you for that response and the work that is ongoing for residents. It has been an issue for nearly 10 years and there have been many consultations. We would like to see an end to the consultation and something put in place. Could you expedite that work, please?

Ms Mallon: To reassure the Member, the work that my officials are undertaking is not further consultation. They are analysing the successes and the difficulties with the scheme that was devised and implemented in Belfast so that we can adapt that learning and ensure that new schemes that are rolled out are informed by the learning that has gone before to make sure that they are as effective as possible for communities.

Mr Speaker: Time is up, Members. Please take your ease.

2.45 pm

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Beggs] in the Chair)

Justice

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Question 2 has been withdrawn.

1. Mr Boylan asked the Minister of Justice to outline her plans to replace the Prisons 2020 strategy. (AQO 1244/17-22)

Mrs Long (The Minister of Justice): Since the publication of 'Prisons 2020: The Way Forward' in July 2018, the Northern Ireland Prison Service (NIPS) has driven a programme of continuous improvement across the organisation, with the aim of delivering better rehabilitation for people in our care.

During the first two years of the programme, we have seen significant progress made towards the strategic commitments across each strand of the programme: our people, our services, our infrastructure and our partnerships. Plans for the first two years of the programme detailed over 180 deliverables, which have resulted in significant improvements for staff and people in our care.

The programme has entered its third and final year, and consideration is being given to how we will maintain the drive for continuous improvement. In light of the achievements made in Prisons 2020, I am committed to implementing a consecutive programme to continue the next stage of our continuous improvement journey. The process to develop our strategic commitments for the next three years will involve analysis of the outcomes of the Prisons 2020 programme, consideration of our recent Criminal Justice Inspection Northern Ireland (CJINI) inspection reports and consultation with our staff, partner organisations and wider stakeholders.

Members will recognise, however, that prisons are a complex and challenging environment, which has been impacted by the pandemic. Those pressures and restrictions have delayed the development stage of the next programme. However, I will be progressing that with the director general once it is deemed safe to do so, and I aim to have the next plan in place during 2021.

Mr Boylan: I thank the Minister for her answer. Minister, you will be aware that, despite some real improvements in our prisons, several inspections, including at Magilligan and Maghaberry, have reported worse outcomes for prisoners from disadvantaged communities, particularly those in the Catholic community. What work has been undertaken by the Department of Justice to identify the causes of that disparity and to develop effective responses?

Mrs Long: The reasons for people being inside the prison system are multifaceted and complex. The prison system does not have control over the disparity in the number of people within the system. People are committed to our care by the judiciary and the courts. However, supporting vulnerable people in prison is a priority area for the Prison Service. That was clear in Prisons 2020 and will continue to be a focus in the next phase of continuous improvement.

What people have seen in the reviews of and reports on prisons is a significant improvement since the introduction of the supporting prisoners at risk (SPAR) Evolution programme — a person-centred approach in care planning that focuses on supporting the individual. It also aims to support individual needs for people in crisis or distress, addressing the root causes while supporting them through that period in a way that is right for them. As with all prisoners, of course, the focus is on rehabilitation and successful re-entry into the wider community.

Ms S Bradley: I note that the strategy was to run until March 2021. Does the Minister intend to publish a final report following the final quarterly submission from the Prison Service management board, which provided the oversight arrangements for the programme?

Mrs Long: Yes, it is our intention to produce a final report because that will also be the basis on which we will plan for any other continuous improvement programme that will be issued consecutive and subsequent to the completion of Prisons 2020. I had hoped to be in a position to have more development work done on that this year, but, given the extent of the impact of COVID-19 on prisons, it simply has not been possible. However, we are hopeful that we will be able to do that during 2021.

Mr Beattie: It is good to hear the Minister say that people are one of her priorities; quite rightly so. Although not a statutory responsibility of the Prisoner Ombudsman, will the Minister support the ombudsman's request to look at the staffing level of night custody officers at Her Majesty's Prison Maghaberry?

Mrs Long: The Member continues to return to this issue despite the fact that the director general for prisons has been very clear that our prisons are properly and adequately staffed. We will, of course, consider any request from the Prisoner Ombudsman to look at any aspect of the Prison Service. However, I ask the Member to reflect on the information that the director general has provided, on a number of occasions, on the management of night and daytime custody.

Mr Allister: Given the very clear connection between our prisons and our criminal justice system, does the Minister think it appropriate to join in a tribute to Lord Kerr, who sadly passed away suddenly this morning? Lord Kerr was a man whom I knew throughout my professional life, first as a member of the Bar and then as he progressed through the various tiers of the judiciary. He served with distinction at a time when many judges were under serious threat, and some were murdered by the IRA. Of course, he became our Lord Chief Justice and went on to be our representative in the Supreme Court until just three months ago. Will the Minister join in a tribute to him and in extending condolences to his wife, Gillian, and family?

Mrs Long: Very much so. As the Member indicated, very sadly, the former Lord Chief Justice of Northern Ireland Brian Kerr passed away today. He served as a member of the Supreme Court from 2009, when it was reconstituted in its modern format, until his retirement only months ago. Indeed, on his retirement, he was the only serving member who had been there when the court was constituted. He distinguished himself in his service to Northern Ireland, and in particular the judiciary, but it goes much wider than that. It goes to the rule of law and to our expectations of fairness and justice. He also distinguished himself in the Supreme Court by standing up for people's rights, which he spoke about often and with passion, and we are all very grateful to him for that. I join Mr Allister in extending my condolences to his wife and children.

Hate Crime Legislation

3. Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the independent review of hate crime legislation in Northern Ireland. (AQO 1246/17-22)

12. Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Justice whether legislation resulting from the recommendations of the independent review of hate crime will be accompanied by an implementation plan. (AQO 1255/17-22)

Mrs Long: With your permission, Mr Deputy Speaker, I will answer questions 3 and 12 together.

I received the final report from Judge Marrinan's independent review of hate crime legislation yesterday. A substantial work of four volumes, it runs to approximately 885 pages and includes 34 recommendations. It is very commendable that he has been able to undertake such a thorough piece of work on this important issue. Colleagues will appreciate, of course, that, having just received the report, I will need to take some time to carefully consider all the recommendations that he has made and the context that he has set out for them.

The next steps will include my officials working to develop an implementation plan that takes account of the recommendations contained in the report. Whilst Judge Marrinan's report is wide-ranging, the primary purpose of the review was to consider the legislation associated with hate crime, so I will want to give particular consideration to any legislative recommendations emanating from it. Any legislative changes will need to be scheduled into the Department's legislative programme in due course.

I have written to Judge Marrinan, and met him today, to thank him for undertaking the review of hate crime legislation. I place on record my thanks to him and his team for their hard work on what was a very complex review in what, at times, were very challenging circumstances, particularly in light of the onset of the COVID-19 pandemic. I also pay tribute to those victims of hate crime who spoke with such candour to Judge Marrinan and allowed him to see the impact of hate crime on our community. They have advised us very fulsomely on the way to tackle any deficiencies in the current system.

Miss McIlveen: I appreciate the Minister's response. Obviously, when I submitted the question, I did not anticipate it being quite so timely. I commend Judge Marrinan and his team for the comprehensive report that they have compiled. I appreciate that the Minister has just received it, and it is lengthy, but can she assure us that, in her consideration of the report and in the proposed legislation that she will ultimately bring to the Chamber, she will ensure that private conversations in the home will continue not to be subject to criminal law?

Mrs Long: There are a number of things that have been said. I know that Judge Marrinan reflected on freedom of speech when it came to his report, and we need to read and consider very carefully the balance that he has struck. We also need to consider that there are conversations that happen in the home that would be captured by, for example, our domestic abuse offence, legislation on which we are about to pass in the Chamber. We therefore have to be conscious that there are limitations even in the home as to what is deemed appropriate and what is deemed inappropriate. If, for example, someone is engaged in threatening conduct in the home as part of a conversation, that is not acceptable. That is abuse. I therefore would not want to give a blanket confirmation of my position on that. We need to look carefully at the report and at having a balance between issues around hate crime and the ability to speak freely. We need to look at all of that in the round, so I am not willing to give such a commitment today, because it would be premature and cut through some of the other work that we are doing on domestic abuse.

Ms Anderson: Minister, as you know, 600 racist hate crimes were reported to the PSNI last year, and only 13% to 14% received prosecutions. That is a shockingly low figure, as, I am sure, you will agree, particularly for the victims who reported and endured those hate crimes.

It is something that we heard very clearly during the Black Lives Matter protests. Minister, I know that you are working your way through all the recommendations, given that you received the Marrinan report only last night, but what do you intend to do to try to ensure that people continue to report such crimes to the PSNI, despite the low uptake of prosecutions? Moreover, what do you intend to do to increase the number of prosecutions for those people who have reported racist hate crimes?

Mrs Long: I thank the Member for her question. There are a number of things that we can all do to encourage people to have the confidence to come forward and report hate crime when it occurs and to ensure that those with whom they are working in the justice system are fully apprised of it. One of the benefits of having the review take place over recent months has been the increased debate and focus on the issue of hate crime and its impact on the wider community. Raising awareness will therefore also help. Undoubtedly, however, when people come to the justice system after finding the courage to step forward and tell someone of their concerns, we want to ensure that the justice system responds effectively and efficiently. Judge Marrinan's report provides a basis for us to ensure that that is the case. It is not the only reported crime that has very low rates of prosecution, as well as very high rates of attrition of victims and witnesses. We experience the same thing with domestic abuse and sexual offences. One of the things that I am looking at very actively is having a victims of crime commissioner: someone who can advocate for and support victims who are going through the process so that we ensure that the justice system is responsive to their individual needs.

Mr McCrossan: Minister, the public consultation that was led by Judge Desmond Marrinan reports having received over 1,000 submissions. Notably, 80% of those were described as "online submissions". Does the Minister agree with me that any legislation deriving from the review must take serious account of the growing level of hate crime that is evident online?

Mrs Long: Absolutely. It is something that is fully referenced in the report and the recommendations. As Members will be aware, online hate crime and general online crime is a reserved matter for Westminster. I have, however, already been in touch with the Home Office and spoken with Priti Patel and some of her colleagues, as well as with colleagues in DCMS who are taking forward a White Paper on online hate crime. We want to ensure that they take forward that work on online harms or that they will consider giving the Assembly the power to take forward local resolutions. In this instance, it is probably best dealt with at Westminster level, because I believe that the level of clout that we have with organisations such as Facebook and Twitter is much greater at that level, or, indeed, at a pan-European level, where we have some leverage over what their community standards are. Having seen some of the hate speech that is regularly published on Twitter, Facebook and a number of other similar platforms, I think that, if it were to be published in any normal newspaper, the newspaper would simply not exist. The fact that it is allowed to be posted on those platforms from untraceable anonymous sources in order to pester, threaten and intimidate people, spread hate and incite violence is unacceptable. At times, I wonder what the community standards could be of any organisation that does not find some of those comments to be in defiance of those standards.

3.00 pm

Dr Aiken: I thank the Minister for her answers so far. Does she believe that the term “hate crime” should now also encompass the term “sectarian”?

Mrs Long: That was the first recommendation that Judge Marrinan made in his report. There is huge merit in what he asked for in that he recognises that there are crimes that are motivated by sectarian hatred in society. It is an aggravating factor in those crimes. The way that he suggests that those crimes and, indeed, all hate crimes be dealt with is as an aggravating factor to an existing crime. For example, assault that is motivated by hate, whether that be sectarian or based on someone’s sexual identity or race, then has a factor attached that would lead to a higher penalty when it comes to sentencing. It is appropriate that sectarianism be included in that mix, because, undoubtedly, there are areas where we see the impact of hate crime and the chill factor, threat, intimidation and violence that goes with it. We also see the stuff that is perhaps more pervasive and that puts people in their place and lets them know who is in control. If we are not in favour of coercive control through domestic abuse in the home, we certainly should not accept coercive control in our communities.

Ms Bradshaw: One of the recommendations was that the definition of hate crime should be extended to include gender-motivated offences. Does the Minister have any initial thoughts on that?

Mrs Long: There are a number of additional areas to that. In addition to looking at sectarianism as a particular form of hate crime, age, sex, gender and variations in gender characteristics or identity could also be added to the list of hate crimes. Again, my Department wants to look at that very carefully through the overall context of the report. However, in the light of what we have seen, even in recent days, with multiple attacks on women during a short period in our own city, there is certainly merit in looking at whether the motivation for an attack is the gender of the person who has been attacked.

I am glad to see that the report also deals with transgender issues. It is incredibly important that those issues are dealt with at the same time as all the others, because that is an area where the number of people who experience hate crimes and, indeed, discrimination is increasing. We have to prepare for that and deal with it adequately.

Prisons: Planned Investment

4. Mr Newton asked the Minister of Justice what investment is planned for prisons over the next three years. (AQO 1247/17-22)

Mrs Long: The Northern Ireland Prison Service has a central role to play in seeking to make our community safe as we contribute to reducing reoffending and improving the effectiveness of the justice system. It is essential that we hold those who are in our care safely and securely, and it is equally important that we make the community safer by supporting and challenging people to change as we focus on rehabilitation, resettlement and reintegration into society. In order to do that, it is important to have the right infrastructure.

There has already been considerable investment in the Northern Ireland Prison Service under the Prisons 2020 programme. That included the construction and opening of Davis House at Maghaberry prison, modernising the fleet that is used by the prisoner escorting and court custody service (PECCS) and significantly improving how modern technology is used to support people in our care. Subject to funding being made available, that investment will continue, and the Northern Ireland Prison Service has identified four priority areas for consideration in the next three years.

Mr Newton: I thank the Minister for her answer. No prison service could achieve the high standards that we all want without the dedication of the staff who are employed in it at all levels. All those staff are agents of change and, indeed, reform, whether that be in the prisons or the young offenders’ centre. What specific investment will take place in order to upgrade the skills, qualifications and knowledge of prison staff at all levels?

Mrs Long: There is a continual improvement programme for prison staff training and to support them in other learning that they may wish to take as part of their continued professional development. That is very important.

We also invest, and will continue to invest, in the well-being of our prison officers because it is an incredibly complex and stressful job that they undertake. I am awaiting the outcome of the review that I commissioned into dealing with mental health, but also other issues that might arise as a result of people working in the Prison Service, to look at the support that we can give people while in service and also after they leave.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I call our newest Member Nicola Brogan.

Ms Brogan: Concerns have been raised that Woodlands Juvenile Justice Centre has been used as a place of safety for young people when beds have not been found for them in suitable places by social services. Does the Minister agree with me that the juvenile justice centre, as a prison, is not an appropriate place of safety and should not be used as a children’s home?

Mrs Long: I am not aware of that allegation. However, to be clear: people who are committed to our care come into our custody having first passed through the courts, so someone has made a judgement as to whether they should be committed to our system.

As the Member will know, we are taking forward work on the reform of Woodlands Juvenile Justice Centre to produce a care and justice campus. Many of the young people arriving at the care centre at Loughview and in Woodlands will be the same young people at different stages in their development. So, we are working very closely with the Health Minister to develop a proper campus that will allow for their individual needs and a needs-based approach to be taken to remove some of the stigma that the Member is concerned about around people being committed to custody rather than care.

Miss Woods: Does the Minister support the installation of technology, such as body scanners, in the Northern Ireland Prison Service so that people who are, or, importantly, are not, carrying illegal drugs and substances on their person can be identified quickly?

Mrs Long: Technology has a role to play, although it may not be as cut and dried as the Member suggests in terms of its ability to determine whether people are carrying contraband into prison. However, we are, of course, always interested in using technology where we can, subject to the budgets available to the Prison Service. We want to maximise the use of technology to enable us to minimise the time that people have to spend in searches, for example. However, it is not a straightforward issue. It will require significant investment in the prisons estate, and that will depend on the outcome of the budget.

Sentencing Review

5. Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Justice what impact her Department's sentencing review will have on people convicted of causing death by dangerous driving or driving while intoxicated. (AQO 1248/17-22)

Mrs Long: A maximum sentence of 14 years' imprisonment currently applies for the offences of causing death by dangerous driving, causing death by careless driving whilst under the influence of drink or drugs, and causing death by careless driving and failing to give a specimen.

The report on responses to my Department's review of sentencing confirmed support for an increase in the maximum sentence for those offences, increasing minimum periods of disqualification for the offences; and applying the disqualification period after the custodial part of any sentence has been served.

I am not yet in a position to advise on the impact of the sentencing review on those convicted of causing death by dangerous driving or driving while under the influence of drink or drugs. However, I find the arguments in favour of longer maximum sentences and changes to disqualification periods persuasive, and I expect them to be reflected in any decisions that I might take.

Mr McCrossan: I thank the Minister for that answer and welcome the increase in sentencing and in the disqualification period. I also thank the Minister for meeting Peter Dolan, the father of Enda Dolan, who continues to campaign hard for all those families who have lost a loved one to a dangerous driver or a driver who has been behind the wheel whilst intoxicated.

Given the sentencing to date and how painful it has been for those families, does the Minister agree that the sentences handed down in previous cases have failed many families who believe that sentences were too lenient?

Mrs Long: The Member will appreciate that I cannot comment on whether sentences are too lenient or otherwise, much as I may have personal opinions. As Justice Minister, it would be inappropriate for me because it is a matter for the judiciary to decide on the leniency or otherwise of sentences and, indeed, for the Director of Public Prosecutions to appeal where he feels that that is necessary.

However, I will say that I share the Member's admiration for Peter Dolan and the work that he and his wife have done in respect of campaigns. It will not change their situation. It will not change their tragic loss of Enda, who had a horrific death due to dangerous driving. However, it will, undoubtedly, bring some comfort to others. The problem with sentencing is not necessarily always whether the sentences are appropriate; the complexity of our sentencing structures often make them impenetrable and leave families unable to understand why sentences have been given and what they mean. That is something that we are taking seriously as we look at the sentencing review, because, for sentencing to be effective, it also needs to be easily understood.

Ms Flynn: Will the Minister give an updated timeline for the next steps of the sentencing review, including how long she believes it will take to complete the programme of work?

Mrs Long: I extend my condolences to the Member; in remarks made during the Minister for Infrastructure's Question Time, I heard about her loss of family members as a result of driving incidents, so I extend my condolences to her and to other families who have suffered likewise.

It is my intention to take decisions, particularly around sentencing, hopefully this side of Christmas. It will then be a matter for us to consult on my preliminary decisions with other Justice partners, and, as a result of that, develop instructions for legislative counsel to take forward to start to draft appropriate legislation. That will be done in two stages.

There are a number of elements to the sentencing review itself, but I intend to accelerate the area around dangerous driving and drink-driving as my priority area, because that was the one area that came through as being a strong priority in the consultation, and then to take through the remainder of the recommendations at a slightly slower pace. I hope that we will be able to at least get to that stage.

Members will be aware that our legislative programme — it sounds strange saying this in 2020 — in the Department of Justice is pretty much full until the end of the mandate. However, that does not preclude us from starting to draft legislation that will then be ready to take forward urgently in the next mandate.

PSNI: COVID-19 Absences

6. Mr M Bradley asked the Minister of Justice how many PSNI personnel are off work due to the COVID-19 pandemic. (AQO 1249/17-22)

Mrs Long: As of 1 December, 51 PSNI personnel were absent having been confirmed as positive for COVID-19. There were also 308 police officers and staff in the PSNI self-isolating and one person absent on compassionate leave due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

Mr M Bradley: Does the Minister agree that it is vital that the PSNI does not draw personnel away from investigations into drugs and criminality to police COVID breaches? Are there sufficient numbers available to provide community protection, particularly patrols in the community and in my local area, which is rural?

Mrs Long: The management of resources within the PSNI is a matter for the Chief Constable, not the Justice Minister, and he will determine how those resources are deployed. There has been a challenge, obviously, for the police in policing the response to COVID-19 and reflecting the demands of this Chamber that they be part of that response where people are breaking the rules. That takes up time from a limited resource, but it is, of course, always important that they continue to deliver against their vision of being a police force that is responsible, visible, accessible and victim-focused.

We have to accept that the police have been pulled in a number of directions, as we all have, during the COVID-19 pandemic, but I have no doubt that they remain committed to serving all communities, rural and urban, on all issues, including regular crime. Even during the pandemic, we have seen some particularly impressive work by the PSNI, whether as part of Operation Arbacia or in detecting other crime in local communities.

Mr Sheehan: Will the Minister give an assessment of how her Department has been affected this year by virtue of the fact that many staff have been absent as a result of COVID-19?

Mrs Long: With respect to the Department, it is always difficult when staff are absent. Our Department is a small one, but it is very much outward-facing, so most of the people in the Department work in contact-facing roles with the public.

Their engagement has also been curtailed as a result of COVID-19 because, where they would normally be out on site, working with people and engaging with communities, that work has been much more challenging.

3.15 pm

We have also had to manage things that we would not normally have to manage, whether that is keeping our prisons, as far as possible, free from COVID, ensuring that we have safe spaces in the courts so that we are able to continue to deliver justice in a timely way, or our wider work in local communities, dealing with some of the outworkings, for example, of lack of access to youth services and some of the diversionary work in which members of my staff are involved, particularly around interfaces and other places.

It has been a challenging year, but I want to give credit to the Department's staff for the amount of work that they have been able to put in. The fact that we have seen so little slippage, for example on substantive work such as our legislative programme and many of the other topics that we are dealing with, is a credit to them and the amount of work that they have put in.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): That concludes the period for listed questions. We will now move to 15 minutes of topical questions. I advise Members that topical questions 1 and 5 have been withdrawn.

Innocent Victims of Terrorism

T2. Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Justice whether she recognises the terrible injustice, pain and agony experienced by many of the innocent victims of terrorism, including the victims of atrocities such as La Mon House, Enniskillen, Omagh, Teebane, the Shankill bombing and the Darkley shootings, when law-abiding, decent people were caught up in terrible events, and to state why there has been no justice in the courts and no public inquiries for those victims and their families. (AQT 772/17-22)

Mrs Long: It is very difficult for me to answer a question that engages the investigation by the RUC, and subsequently the PSNI, of those atrocities; the decisions of the Director of Public Prosecutions in respect of whether cases that are brought to him met the evidential test for prosecution; and the responsibility of judges, who, again, are independent but make decisions as to whether people are prosecuted.

I remind the Member that there are many families — he is quite right — who have not received, and will not receive, justice and truth as a result of the atrocities that were committed during the Troubles, and that is hugely regrettable. It is a source of pain for those families, and I believe that that needs to be remedied and that the remedy needs to be a comprehensive one. The remedy for that was, as best we could get, in the Stormont House Agreement. That has now been resiled from by the UK Government, and we are now in a hiatus and unaware of what the alternative proposition may look like.

Every day that passes without justice being delivered is another day of anguish and pain for those victims. I will repeat what I said to the Secretary of State last night in a call with him. I believe that there is a degree of urgency to this, which is not reflected in how it has been handled since March. I believe that he needs to bring forward his intended alternative mechanisms now.

To be clear, the current justice system, the Department as it is now and our budgets are neither designed for nor big enough to deal with all of the legacy issues that are now arriving on our desks. There is increasing legacy litigation, and there are increasing pressures on staff time and on the number of inquiries that are likely to come forward. It will simply not be possible for us to police both the past and the future.

Mr Dunne: I thank the Minister for her detailed answer. There is a need for justice for all innocent victims of violence. Does she concur with Stephen Farry, her party's MP for North Down, who supported the Finucane inquiry and said that a public inquiry was warranted in that case?

Mrs Long: Mr Deputy Speaker, this is not "Ask Alliance"; this is Justice questions. This is a question about my position as Justice Minister, not about my position as leader of the Alliance Party. In answering, however, I first want to acknowledge the hurt and disappointment of the Finucane family. They will, no doubt, be experiencing that just as — as the Member has said — other families will, as a result of the Secretary of State's decision.

I recognise that the issues are complex and difficult and that they have profound impacts on the families concerned. I spoke with the Secretary of State last night, as I said, and I outlined my concerns to him.

Since March, I have raised with him, on a number of occasions, my concerns about the absence of any coherent and credible plan for dealing with the legacy of the past, despite commitments in New Decade, New Approach. It was a decision for the Secretary of State, ultimately, but it is the justice system here in Northern Ireland that is left to deal with the outcome.

On the substantive point of whether I believe that a public inquiry is necessary: yes, I do. When a Government stands in Parliament and admits and apologises for collusion, a family has a right to know what involvement that Government and their predecessors had in that collusion.

ROXANNE: PSNI Involvement

T3. Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Justice, assuming that she is aware of the issue, for her view of the fact that the PSNI is involved in an EU-funded research project, ROXANNE, and is, therefore, working in tandem with the Israel Ministry of Public Security, including the Israel National Police, the border police and the Israel prison service, which oversees the committing of serious human rights abuses. (AQT 773/17-22)

Mrs Long: Yes, I am aware of ROXANNE, but it is an operational matter for the Chief Constable as to what programmes officers are involved in. It is a European programme that involves a number of EU nation states. The direct cooperation between the PSNI and other EU states is something to be encouraged and welcomed. I am also aware that the involvement of Israel is a separate issue to the main involvement in ROXANNE. However, the Member would be best asking that question of the Chief Constable.

Mr Carroll: It is important for the Minister to comment on the matter since she has declared that PSNI actions were proportionate in cases such as the Black Lives Matter protest. Amnesty International has cited the Israel National Police:

“for carrying out extrajudicial executions and other unlawful killings, using ill treatment and torture (even against children)”.

Sunday was International Day of Solidarity with the Palestinian People — a day on which millions of people across the world engaged in activities to condemn the Israel state and its occupation, aggression and racist laws. Given that other state police forces —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Will the Member come to his question, please?

Mr Carroll: — have pulled out of the programme and that the Minister has a duty to uphold justice, will she commit to pressing the PSNI to withdraw from the programme for reasons based on the daily denial of justice for Palestinian people?

Mrs Long: I refer the Member to what I have just said. It is a matter for the Chief Constable and the Policing Board to take that forward. To be clear on the Israeli-Palestine question, I voted for recognition for Palestine when I was a Member of Parliament. I have made very clear my views on some of the actions that the Israeli Government have taken. I detach that from the people, because their Government are often not a good representation of individuals in the country.

I want to be clear about this. It is not my role to direct the PSNI in any of its jobs. I also want to correct the Member, because he has, for whatever reason, latched on to the idea that I said that the policing of Black Lives Matter protests were proportionate. They were not, and I did not say that. I did not say that. I have a list of quotes that I have made on the issue because I knew that the Member would raise it. I said that the policing of COVID generally was proportionate and appropriate. There is a distinct difference. I also stressed on every occasion that I could not comment on individual circumstances.

Court Cases: Backlog

T4. Mr Newton asked the Minister of Justice to quantify the number of cases that, due to the pandemic, could not be taken before the courts and to give a timescale for addressing the backlog. (AQT 774/17-22)

Mrs Long: Prior to the COVID-19 pandemic, there were approximately 8,000 criminal cases in the court system. However, with the closure of some courts during lockdown, that rose to approximately 12,800 cases by early September, which is a rise of about 59%. With the reopening of almost all courts from August onwards, the cases disposed of by the courts have exceeded those received. Consequently, the outstanding caseload has reduced. The most recent real-time management information indicates that the figure stands at around 11,255 cases. The figures also show that recovery is taking place across all areas, and the number of cases in the system is reducing by around 175 cases a week. The figures in relation to outstanding caseloads for civil and family business cannot be generated retrospectively, and, because they include cases that may have been settled privately between parties, they cannot be interpreted in the same way as criminal cases.

Mr Newton: I thank the Minister for her detailed answer. Has any assessment been carried out of the mental health problems of or support offered to the victims of crime who have been waiting such a long time to have their cases dealt with?

Mrs Long: No systemic research has been done on the impact, but action has been taken. For example, Victim Support has been engaged in keeping people updated and offering them adequate support during the time that they are waiting. The Public Prosecution Service has also engaged additional resource to communicate with people who are waiting for cases to come to trial. Every justice organisation has a recovery plan in place to take account of some of the challenges that we will face.

We also meet regularly as the Criminal Justice Board to ensure that our response to the impact of COVID on the courts is balanced across all the different issues. It would have been easy, on the face of it, to reduce the number of cases much more quickly by having quick disposals of simpler cases, but I was committed to the fact that we needed to be able to return to a situation where, as well as dealing with simpler disposals, we could also hear complex cases with jury trials. It is important to recognise that those are some of the most sensitive and difficult cases. Keeping those people waiting a disproportionate length of time, simply to get better statistics, would be unjust in the extreme. Therefore, we have ensured that we are able to continue with jury trials, and we hope to open additional courts in Lagan side over the next number of months.

PSNI Injury on Duty Claims

T6. Mr Chambers asked the Minister of Justice, given the understandable delays caused by the pandemic in relation to dealing with PSNI injury on duty claims, to confirm that the appeals are being considered once again and are progressing in a timely manner. (AQT 776/17-22)

Mrs Long: COVID was one of a number of issues in policing injury on duty claims. Progress is being made. I am happy to write to the Member, because I do not have all the detail in front of me, giving him further detail on exactly where we are with that programme.

Mr Chambers: I appreciate that, Minister, and look forward to receiving it. Perhaps you can also address my supplementary question in the letter: are you satisfied that sufficient administrative resources are in place to expeditiously discharge the backlog in cases awaiting consideration?

Mrs Long: Dealing with resources will always be challenging for a small Department with limited resources. We do exactly what we can. We are dealing with several priorities at this time, a number of which have a deadline attached. We are conscious that matters that may have been delayed due to COVID are among those priorities, and we try to progress things as quickly as we can and in as timely a manner as possible.

PSNI Pay Award

T7. Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the implementation of the PSNI pay award that was announced in February 2020 and was backdated to 1 September 2019. (AQT 777/17-22)

Mrs Long: The pay award for last year has been progressed. I certainly signed off on one of the pay awards earlier this year. The current pay award is still under consideration, but good progress is being made, and it is now between my Department and the Department of Finance. I am happy to write to the Member to confirm the detail of the most recent award.

Mrs Cameron: I thank the Minister for that answer. I would appreciate that clarity because I have had several officers contacting me and looking for that pay award to be made available to them.

Does the Minister agree that issues such as delays in pay awards and the potential impact of the spending review announcements made by the Chancellor will have a negative impact on the numbers in our front-line workforce?

Mrs Long: There are two issues. The first is delay. We have sought to eliminate as much delay as we can. As you will appreciate, a process has to be gone through: the pay remit must go through the Police Remuneration Review Body, then come to the Department, and we must make our case to the Department of Finance.

The wider issue is that stringent measures may be imposed on us from elsewhere. That is a whole other matter altogether. It will be a matter for all Departments, not just mine, and for all who receive funding through central government, to reflect on the fact that we may find ourselves in what is, in budgetary terms, a standstill situation next year, with a not particularly bright economic horizon ahead.

That is the simple reality, and it will require us all to manage our expectations in line with our budgets.

3.30 pm

Organised Crime: Legislation

T8. Mr Harvey asked the Minister of Justice, further to the findings in the recently published annual report of the Organised Crime Task Force, to outline whether she intends to introduce new legislation to tackle organised crime. (AQT 778/17-22)

Mrs Long: I thank the Member for his question. A review of organised crime is ongoing in the Department, and we intend to look at introducing new offences at some point after the review is complete. We are, however, doing other things in the interim to tackle organised crime. For example, I have liaised with the Home Office to ensure that the Criminal Finances Act 2017 is commenced in Northern Ireland. That will lead to the implementation of unexplained wealth orders, account freezing and forfeiture, and a number of other financial measures that I hope will act as a disincentive to those who are involved in organised crime because they believe it to be profitable. When it is no longer profitable, I think that we will find a decline in that type of crime.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): That is the end of our period of questions to the Minister of Justice. I ask Members to take their ease for a few moments before the question for urgent oral answer to the Minister for the Economy.

Question for Urgent Oral Answer

Economy

Collapse of the Retailers Debenhams and Arcadia

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Gary Middleton has given notice of a question for urgent oral answer to the Minister for the Economy.

I remind Members that, if they wish to ask a supplementary question, they should rise continually in their place. The Member who tabled the question will be called automatically to ask a supplementary question.

Mr Middleton asked the Minister for the Economy what support she and the Executive will provide to local employees affected by the collapse of the retailers Debenhams and Arcadia.

Mrs Dodds (The Minister for the Economy): Debenhams is a name familiar across many towns and to many shoppers in Northern Ireland. The news today about it and Arcadia will have come as a shock to their employees and to the shopping centres — CastleCourt, Rushmere, Fairhill, Foyle side and the Quays — where Debenhams is an anchor tenant. It is important to note that no redundancies have been announced at this point. I intend, however, to write to the administrators to impress on them the need to seek alternative buyers to take on the stores as going concerns in order to retain the jobs and livelihoods of local staff.

We are heading into a very difficult period for the economy in Northern Ireland, the United Kingdom and, indeed, the British Isles. I previously warned in the Chamber that the cycle of restrictions would impact particularly on the young and on female, part-time and lower-paid workers. Unfortunately, today's news shines a light on that.

Mr Middleton: I thank the Minister for coming to the Chamber and answering the question for urgent oral answer. The announcements by Debenhams and Arcadia have come as a huge blow and shock to our high streets, with thousands of jobs now at risk. Many employees are deeply worried and concerned, and our thoughts are with them at this time.

Will the Minister commit her Department to working with the wider Executive, particularly the Minister for Communities and the Minister of Finance, and with local councils to deliver stimulus packages to our high streets to provide them with as much support as we can in the coming months?

Mrs Dodds: The Member is quite right: this is a UK-wide issue. It has been estimated that there are around 12,000 jobs at risk in Debenhams and around 13,000 jobs at risk in the Arcadia Group. That is an enormous blow to the United Kingdom's retail economy. I have a meeting tomorrow with the Business Minister, and I intend to take this up at a national level because this is something that our national Government also need to work on. However, the answer is an absolute yes. I will work with colleagues across the House to ensure that we deliver what we can to support employees and, indeed, those shopping centres where Debenhams is a significant and important anchor tenant that attracts shoppers into the other stores.

My Department already has the Assured Skills academies and the Bridge to Employment programmes. We are engaging with companies and recruiting for the Assured Skills programme. Since the start of the financial year, 192 young people out of 203 on Assured Skills programmes have gained employment. The programmes are short, sharp, targeted interventions in the labour market that are designed to return high levels of employment. Of course, we continue to operate the Bridge to Employment programmes. The Careers Service will also be on hand to try to help employees match their skills and experience to vacancies, give advice and guidance on reskilling and give information on growth and emerging sectors.

It is clear that a joined-up approach across government is absolutely necessary, and the involvement of the Minister for Communities and the Minister of Finance will be essential. However, the House should be in no doubt that the best way to support jobs in Northern Ireland is to have an open economy.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I remind the Minister that she has two minutes.

Mrs Dodds: Thank you.

Mr Carroll: I offer my sincere sympathies to the staff of Debenhams and the Arcadia Group who have lost jobs and to the others who may do so in the near future. Our workers have been treated like dirt. It really says everything about the obscene system that we live under that a man who owns a yacht worth £100 million can play God with the lives of thousands of workers.

Does the Minister agree that those workers' pensions should not be touched or impacted in any way by these announcements? What measures will her Department take to ensure that those workers are financially protected or given the opportunity to get support to access employment, where appropriate, in the future?

Mrs Dodds: The Member makes a very important point about the pensions, particularly those in the Arcadia Group. I intend to take that up with the Business Minister tomorrow in order to ensure that those pensions are protected and that appropriate funding is put into the pension pot so that there are proper resources for people as they retire.

Ms Kimmins: I thank the Minister for her answers so far. As well as this being devastating news for the Debenhams workers and their families, hearing of the number of other retailers that are also in difficulties is another major blow. The news is hugely devastating for Newry, which is in my constituency, where a significant number of those retailers employ hundreds, if not thousands, of people.

The Minister alluded to some of this in her previous answers, but, for clarification, what is the Department doing proactively to engage with workers and to help them reskill and retrain to try to bridge the gap if those redundancies come?

Mrs Dodds: As I said in a previous answer, it is really important that there is a cross-departmental response. The Department for Communities, with all the employment programmes that it progresses, will be very important in addressing those issues.

As I said, my Department has been promoting the Assured Skills academies, and they are really important in the targeted approach of trying to provide employment for people, as is the Bridge to Employment scheme. It is important that we reach out and help people to retrain as quickly as possible. Because of COVID-19, my Department has, since March, offered more than 5,000 online training places to allow people to upskill and to improve their prospects in the labour market. That is a very significant intervention that we intend to continue, as it has had notable success.

Ms McLaughlin: Thank you, Minister, for coming to the House today to address this serious issue. Like others, I pass on my sympathy to any workers who have got this devastating news. Given what retail workers have gone through in recent months and given that Christmas is ahead of us, it is devastating. I will pick up where my colleague to the left of me left off in relation to Philip and Tina Green.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Can you come to your question?

Ms McLaughlin: Minister, this company has a track record of stripping assets from businesses that go into administration, leaving people without pensions and proper redundancy packages. You need to move quickly with the Business Minister to protect the assets of the Arcadia Group so that employees are not left holding pension pots that are worth nothing.

Mrs Dodds: The Member makes an important point about protecting workers' pensions, and I will raise that issue at my quad meeting with the Business Minister tomorrow.

Dr Aiken: I thank the Minister for her remarks so far and for coming to the Assembly. On behalf of the Ulster Unionist Party, I put on record our commiserations and our support for help for the workers in Debenhams and Arcadia who are approaching a particularly poor Christmas and beyond.

Minister, in August, you set up a high street task force, which should now work closely with Land and Property Services (LPS), chambers of commerce, the Federation of Small Businesses, Retail Northern Ireland and councils to come rapidly to a set of outcomes and proposals that should be brought before us here. Will the Minister commit to have that task force, which is now in place, come up with answers and to come back to the Assembly within two weeks to explain how she will support the high street, particularly in the difficult times ahead?

Mrs Dodds: I thank the Member for his question but point out to him that responsibility for the high street task force lies with the Executive Office and with the Communities Department, which are charged with bringing it together. I am sure that they will be happy to answer the Member's question in detail.

In relation to the high street — I have mentioned this on many occasions — over the past number of months, my Department has given out almost £340 million in support to businesses through the £10k grant, the £25k grant, which was specifically targeted at retail and the high street, and the microbusiness fund. Today, I am sending for urgent procedure a scheme in relation to the self-employed, and we are looking at developing other schemes alongside the schemes operating in relation to the local restrictions. It is important to support businesses and the high street in particular. However, the most important thing that we can do is ensure that our high street is open for business and can trade safely.

I must say, Mr Deputy Speaker — I beg your indulgence on this — that I listened with great hope to the plans for the roll-out of the vaccine. I hope that we can do that as safely and as quickly as possible so that life can return to something more normal.

3.45 pm

Mr Dickson: Minister, key and crucial to any redundancy situation are negotiations with trade unions. I was shocked to hear Paddy Lillis, the general secretary of the Union of Shop, Distributive and Allied Workers (USDAW), say today that neither Debenhams nor the administrators had engaged in any discussions with that union about potential redundancies in this company. Will you take that up with the Business Secretary tomorrow and encourage him to ensure that Debenhams and/or the administrators stand up to their legal obligations to consult the trade unions? While the focus is on Debenhams today, let us not forget those who have been excluded in other areas with regard to employment matters.

Mrs Dodds: Yes, I will. It is extremely important that we are able to speak to the trade unions and that we treat them as partners in an extremely difficult, sensitive situation for many of their members.

Mr Dunne: I think that we all share the pain and the loss of Debenhams and Arcadia and the potential loss to our high streets. Does the Minister recognise the real threat from the internet? I think that we are all guilty of it and we all must admit that we use the internet too much for purchasing, and that is a real risk. What can be done to address that issue, and what further support can be given to the high street? I understand that you are bringing forward a voucher scheme.

Mrs Dodds: Many businesses have indicated to me that they now operate a dual system for their business where they have an online presence and a high-street presence. It is important that we retain the high-street presence, but sometimes the online presence also helps to sustain that business. I talked to businesses in mid-Ulster recently who gave us real examples of that.

Yes, we will bring forward a £95 million stimulus scheme for the high street in the new year. It is aimed at supporting bricks-and-mortar businesses on the high street. You will not be able to use the prepaid card or the funding online. It is aimed at supporting local businesses in local towns and local jobs.

Ms Mullan: I thank my fellow Member for Foyle for tabling the question. I also extend my thoughts to the employees facing redundancy.

Minister, in the summer, Debenhams paid off a number of staff, including staff in Derry — many of them long-term staff — who could have been furloughed at that stage. They treated them terribly. As outlined by Mr Dickson, they would not engage with the unions or with me. Will you engage with Debenhams and the administrators to ensure that workers receive their redundancy entitlements?

Mrs Dodds: I have already indicated to the House that I will write to the administrators who have now taken over responsibility for this to ensure, first, that we try to salvage as much of the business as possible and, secondly, that workers have their rights. Of course, should any of those workers feel that they have not received their rights, they should revert to the Labour Relations Agency, which has a dedicated line to help those people with their employment rights. I urge them to do so.

Mr O'Toole: It is worth clarifying that, while, correctly, the thoughts of us all are with the workers at Debenhams and Arcadia, who have been put in the most appalling situation in the run-up to Christmas, it is worth differentiating between the two businesses. One — Arcadia — is in administration, and the other — Debenhams — is in liquidation. Those are two different things. When the Minister speaks to the UK Business Secretary, can she clarify exactly where they are in respect of the pensions deficit? There is a pensions deficit specifically with Arcadia, which is in administration, that is, in significant part, due to the grotesque greed of Philip Green and his family, who have taken billions of pounds out of that business.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Will the Member come to his question?

Mr O'Toole: Can she clarify that she will have conversations about the two specific situations as they relate to the employees in Northern Ireland? We know that, in the Republic, Debenhams employees were let down badly.

Mrs Dodds: I will be happy to do so.

Mr Nesbitt: The Minister on more than one occasion has referenced the fact that Debenhams has been an anchor tenant for a number of shopping centres in Northern Ireland. Can I ask the Minister for her assessment of the viability of those centres without an anchor tenant? What steps might she take to ensure that this news does not provoke further closures and job losses in smaller outlets?

Mrs Dodds: I thank the Member for his question because he describes a real danger. Many of those large stores brought people into shopping centres and then they visited the smaller shops in the shopping centres. That is why I have persisted in saying two things in the Chamber over the last number of months: we should have an economy that is open and shops that can trade, and we should try to do so safely.

The other element, in recognition of the real difficulties on the high street — we use that term generically to include all shops in Northern Ireland — is that there are real difficulties in the sector. One is from persistent rounds of closures, particularly now, in the run up to Christmas, but there is also competition from online sales. That is why we are introducing our high street stimulus scheme and why we want to support Northern Ireland businesses, shops and jobs through that stimulus scheme. I look forward to it rolling out in January and February so that we can signal a recovery as well as the hope of the roll-out of the vaccine. I hope that that will lead us to more hopeful times.

Mr Muir: As others have touched on, many workers in Northern Ireland have already suffered the scars of a Philip Green business going bust. The actions of Philip Green, as Matthew O'Toole outlined, have been grotesque.

He paid his Monaco-based wife billions in dividends, while former BHS workers were left with massive holes in their pensions. Does the Minister agree that it is incumbent on Mr Green to make good his obligations to his employees?

Mrs Dodds: I have said many times that my sympathies, on this occasion, are entirely with those who are impacted and will, potentially, lose their jobs. Many of those jobs are part-time, they are for female workers and they are lower-paid jobs. My sympathy is with them and not, of course, with Philip Green. I have committed to the House that, in my call with the Business Minister tomorrow, I will ask that they ensure that pensions are protected, particularly in Arcadia, and that pension pots are appropriately managed.

Mrs Cameron: I thank the Minister for coming to the Chamber today to discuss this devastating blow to many workers. I declare an interest, as I have a daughter who is employed by Arcadia and is incredibly worried about her future. Does the Minister agree that the best thing that we can do as an Assembly is to support retail to open as safely and as quickly as possible and for as much time as possible through the remainder of the pandemic?

Mrs Dodds: Yes. I absolutely agree. I am on record many times in the House as saying that the best way to support our economy is to have an open economy, to allow our retail and high street to trade and to do so safely for customers and employees. I would like to see retail outlets able to open again in the run-up to Christmas. It is a really important time for retail in Northern Ireland, but, of course, I urge everyone to follow the health advice to keep your distance, wash your hands, wear the face mask and behave appropriately when in retail outlets for the safety of employees and business owners. We need to ensure that our high street can function again as quickly as possible.

Ms Dolan: I pass on my sympathies to the workers and their families at this difficult time. There is no good time for job losses or job insecurity, least of all at the start of December.

Minister, you will be aware that many young people work in Debenhams and in the retail sector generally. Unlike many of their colleagues, workers under the age of 22 will receive less redundancy pay, despite having the same period of service and the same role. In light of that announcement, will you amend the relevant legislation and remove the age discrimination that exists in redundancy pay?

Mrs Dodds: Redundancy pay is a reflection of time served, the position held and wages gained. We are committed to a wide-ranging review of employment legislation, and I am sure that that can be one of the elements. However, we are where we are. It will not impact on the young people who will sadly lose their jobs through the liquidation of Debenhams and the potential administration losses at Arcadia. I hope that we can salvage something for those businesses, for young people, for part-time workers and for the many female members of the workforce there. It is really important that we try to support them.

Mr McCrossan: I thank the Minister for her statement. Minister, this is a devastating blow for our economy, for our constituencies and for the employees and businesses that are affected in the rippling consequences of the closures. The challenges facing business today are unprecedented with Brexit, COVID-19 and the rise in online sales. How can the high street survive unless we in the House change how traditional town centres and high streets operate?

Mrs Dodds: It would be interesting to have a conversation with the Member about his vision for how we change that and for how high streets operate. I am sure that the high street task force will afford him the opportunity to input to that.

For the here and now, we are very concerned. I have said repeatedly and say it again today that this is a difficult period for the economy. It has been an extraordinary and unprecedented period for the economy, and the best way to help the economy and businesses to survive and to support jobs is not only to open up the economy but to support Northern Ireland jobs, businesses and high streets. I look forward to rolling out the £95 million stimulus scheme, which, I believe, will do that.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I ask Members to take their ease for a few moments until the next item of business.

COVID-19 Vaccine: Preparations

Mrs Cameron: I beg to move

That this Assembly welcomes the recent breakthrough in efforts to establish a safe and effective COVID-19 vaccine; highlights the importance of Northern Ireland retaining full access to the UK Government's supply network, including national distribution plans; stresses that this approach provides the best means of protecting the wider public as soon as possible; believes a professional expert should be appointed to lead on the vaccination programme in order to ensure it is available to front-line staff and those most vulnerable in Northern Ireland at the same time as the rest of the UK; and calls on the Minister of Health to outline a clear action plan for the roll-out, starting before the end of December 2020, of a COVID-19 vaccine in Northern Ireland.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): The Business Committee has agreed to allow up to one hour and 30 minutes for the debate. The proposer of the motion will have 10 minutes to propose and 10 minutes to make a winding-up speech. All other Members will have five minutes. Please open the debate on the motion.

Mrs Cameron: I very much welcome the opportunity to propose the motion on behalf of the Democratic Unionist Party, because, today, we have light at the end of the tunnel. I am sure that all our hearts have been lifted in recent weeks with the announcements heralding the groundbreaking development of vaccines to combat the horrendous virus that has lived amongst us for the last 10 months. It is a remarkable feat of science and an answer to the prayers of millions across the world that we now stand but weeks away from administering a vaccine to those on the front line and the most vulnerable.

Sadly, for many families, the vaccine has come too late. We now know that, according to the NI dashboard, over 1,000 lives have been lost to COVID-19. Many homes across Northern Ireland struggle to bear the pain of loss to that awful disease. We know of others for whom the mental anguish of lockdown, the fear of catching coronavirus or the belief that they have contracted COVID-19 and may pass it on to a more vulnerable loved one has been just too much to bear. The number of such lives lost will likely not be captured under the banner of COVID. As we move ahead with plans for a vaccination programme, we do so with the memory of those whom we have lost at the front and centre of our hearts and minds.

Of course, we are very much taking for granted that the regulator will approve the vaccines in the coming days and weeks. However, that process must be thorough and independent. The vaccines must be safe, and they must — absolutely must — have the confidence of the public. If and when that approval arrives, we must be ready to hit the ground running in Northern Ireland in order to protect our people. That is the purpose of the motion: to focus minds and to collectively identify issues and offer solutions.

It is a matter of concern and regret that we are, to some degree, playing catch-up in planning for the roll-out of a vaccine. When you look at Wales, for example, you see that its Health Department and Chief Medical Officer were, months ago, doing some of the work that we are doing now. We need to act with haste because, ultimately, the speed at which we can deliver a vaccine will be a matter of life or death for some.

I will focus my comments on three key areas: getting a plan; the logistics of delivering the plan; and equality of access in the plan. We come at the issue of planning with the comfort of knowing that the UK has one of the world's largest vaccine order books per head of population. The Government have secured early access to over 355 million vaccine doses through agreements with separate vaccine developers at various stages of trials. The NI share of the BioNtech/Pfizer vaccine will be around 1.14 million doses between December 2020 and September 2021. The NI share of the AstraZeneca vaccine will be around 2.85 million doses. For that, we say thank you to our Government at Westminster.

Given the confidence about what is coming, we could have planned to a greater degree, but we have not done so. Our constituents remain largely in the dark about how the vaccine will be delivered. Whilst I understand the need for the public's help in continuing to adhere to the regulations and guidelines until it is safe to do otherwise, it is also vital that we have hope for the very near future. What would be better this Christmas, during a pandemic, than saying that next Christmas could be truly normal?

What shape must the plan take? First, it is vital that front-line health workers and the most vulnerable across our Province — those living in care settings, those reliant on domiciliary care, those with underlying medical conditions and those most at risk — are able to avail themselves of the vaccine at the same stage as those in the rest of the UK, and that means accelerating this work.

Furthermore, it requires a strong, ambitious action plan for getting ready.

That plan should include detail on appointing external professional logistical expertise and support where needed; meeting workforce requirements by ensuring that staffing levels can be scaled up or down and are mobile where necessary; maximising available premises where the vaccine can be administered; procuring appropriate levels of cold storage and transport; having a strong communications strategy that addresses misinformation about the vaccine; addressing barriers to access or proximity for marginalised groups; and preparing digital systems to capture data on who has received the vaccine and how it has affected different groups. I urge the Minister to address those issues in his response to the debate.

The second area that I will highlight is the logistics of the plan. Put simply, do we have the people to deliver the vaccination programme? We are told that our GPs, many of whom have not conducted face-to-face appointments for many months now, have never been busier. We understand that a knock-on impact on workload has emanated from the worst waiting times that NI has ever seen for elective surgery and from the impact of long COVID.

With GPs under pressure, how can they do more? If they are to, can the Minister tell us how much GPs will be remunerated for administering each vaccination? With GPs under so much pressure, surely we cannot reduce public access to their day-to-day appointments in order to enable them to deliver the COVID vaccine as well. Will others be skilled up to fight the war against coronavirus? If so, will they need to have a background in healthcare?

Let us not forget that many of our front-line healthcare staff, especially our nurses, are simply exhausted, having been at the coalface of the battle for months. At a time when we should be ramping up all aspects of our healthcare system, we cannot draw more people away from that task. The Minister has often said that the health service is short-staffed. The vaccination programme will only exacerbate that.

In that context, I urge the Minister to utilise our nation's military resource to deliver the vaccination programme alongside our medical professionals. With the understanding that the vaccine will require two doses, 28 days apart, it is vital that there are enough hands on deck to deliver and administer it. That is critical to the success of any programme. The deployment of MoD personnel to explore the logistics of rolling out a vaccine in Northern Ireland is therefore a welcome and constructive move.

The third element is equality of access to the vaccine. We have a diverse population: young and old; urban and rural; those who have underlying health conditions and those who do not; and those who work on the front line and those who do not. To meet that reality, the vaccination programme must be dynamic and flexible, owing to the fact that it will be administered in a range of settings to patients whose circumstances will differ. Serious consideration must be given to mitigating any risk, such as that to the 80-year-old with underlying health conditions who is living at home. What about cancer patients? What about the 100,000 people who were named as being clinically vulnerable because of diabetes at the start of the pandemic? Where will they be on that priority list? What about those from an ethnic minority background, who may well be more susceptible to the virus? There are many people who have many questions about how the vaccine will be administered to them, and many will question the safety of it.

We understand that it may not be possible to use certain vaccines in care homes owing to logistical issues. Why is that? Will that lead to a delay in residents being able to avail themselves of the necessary protection that they require? We have also learnt much about the impact of the varying types of underlying health conditions. That begs the question of whether priority for vaccination will be given to those on the at-risk list: those who were previously shielding. I ask the Minister to outline what we have learnt over the past period and whether that learning has impacted on the potential roll-out of the vaccine. Is there a new, nuanced list of at-risk individuals? If so, how will those individuals be made aware? I implore the Minister to communicate and to be as transparent as possible about the roll-out of this life-saving vaccine. We know that some will not take the vaccine. That is their choice, and it should always be their choice. If we want maximum buy-in to the programme, however, communication and openness will be vital.

This is the first day of the last month of 2020. I do not think that any of us has ever looked forward to a new year as much as we are this year. I look forward to Members' contributions and to the Minister's response in due course.

Mr Gildernew (The Chairperson of the Committee for Health): I, too, acknowledge the individual and family tragedy of every one of the 1,011 deaths that we have sadly recorded to date.

After so many difficult months, I very much welcome the opportunity to consider some much yearned-for positive news, albeit that it will undoubtedly bring additional challenges of its own.

The Health Committee has briefly considered legislation and funding associated with the vaccine and will be briefed in further detail at its meeting on Thursday on plans for the roll-out of the programme. In August, the Committee received correspondence advising us of a consultation on proposed amendments to the Human Medicines Regulations 2012 to support the rapid and effective roll-out of a COVID-19 vaccine and an influenza vaccine. We were advised that that was to ensure that an unlicensed vaccine, once it is deemed safe and effective, could be given temporary authorisation pending the licensing process and subject to strengthened controls. It was also designed to allow a wider range of trained personnel to administer the vaccine, allow for promotion of the vaccine and facilitate its transportation.

The Committee sought information on consultation responses and enquired about liability in the case of any adverse impact of a vaccine. In October, while the Committee was assured that all safety checks were proceeding as normal, we were advised that an individual would be able to claim against the vaccine damage payment scheme, should they meet the eligibility criteria. The Committee was updated on the consultation responses and was advised of changes made in response, including commitments to review the relevant regulation within a year; to specify that a person of appropriate expertise will consider any question of loss of immunity for liability where conditions are breached in respect of vaccine authorisation; and to enhance supervision arrangements for the expanded workforce administering the vaccine.

During discussions on the budget last week, the Committee enquired about costings associated with COVID-19 and the vaccine in particular. We were advised that an initial £140 million had been allocated towards the vaccine but that the British Government had since indicated that it would be purchased by them and that the charge would not be passed on to the Executive. While a lesser amount will now be required to fund the administration of the vaccine, officials stressed that a high degree of ongoing uncertainty about COVID-related costs remains more generally. The Committee welcomed those positive developments and will continue to monitor the next steps.

I would now like to make a few comments in my role as Sinn Féin health spokesperson. We all understand the grave nature of the COVID-19 pandemic and the devastating effects that the virus has had on the health and well-being of our citizens and economy. We understand that an effective vaccine is the best way to combat the virus at this time and to allow our citizens and our communities to return to more normal activities. Around the world, incalculable numbers of lives have been saved by widespread vaccination. Vaccines have all but wiped out smallpox, rubella, typhoid, measles and polio, which we witnessed in Belfast a number of years ago. Those are illnesses that can cause immense death and suffering.

The science behind any COVID-19 vaccine must be transparent, and there must be no doubt about the safety of the medicine. While the successful development of a vaccine is very welcome, we must ensure that it does not lead to complacency. It cannot be a reason to lose focus on the crucial find, test, trace, isolate, support and communicate strategy that is so badly needed to stop the transmission of COVID-19.

Ms Flynn: Will the Member give way?

Mr Gildernew: Yes.

Ms Flynn: Does the Member agree that countries that have put in place a more robust find, test and trace programme have been successful in protecting not only their people but their economy?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Gildernew: Yes, there is significant emerging evidence that that is the case, and we should look at that. We look forward to welcoming a panel to the Committee on Thursday who might give us more information.

We must also guard against community complacency at this time about the need for basic precautions to be maintained, including washing hands, maintaining social-distancing requirements and reducing our social contacts where we can. That is particularly challenging as we enter the Christmas period, but it remains as vital now as it has since the outset of the emergency. I appeal again for everyone to do all that they can in that regard.

4.15 pm

The vaccine must be delivered through the public health system with community support. It must be made available to all equally, regardless of age, location or financial means, free of charge, with priority given to the most vulnerable: the elderly, those with underlying conditions, those in areas of high deprivation and front-line workers. It is important that that work be clinically led to ensure that the vaccine is rolled out in a way that maximises its protection.

This horrendous pandemic has shown that we need to transform our health and care system and that austerity has no role to play. A key part of rebuilding must include preparations for any public health emergency that may occur in the future. We must have the staff, equipment, systems, training and preparedness built into the health and social care system —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): I ask the Member to draw his remarks to a close.

Mr Gildernew: — and the ability to find, test, trace, isolate and support must be central to that plan.

Mr McGrath: I welcome the opportunity to take part in this important debate. Recent announcements of successes in the development of vaccines to treat COVID-19 have brought the greatest injection of hope that the world has witnessed this year.

I concur with the remarks made earlier about the vaccine probably being too late for many people and families. That will be difficult for them to process, so our thoughts are with those families at this time.

A major impact of COVID-19 has been loneliness — loneliness for those who have been isolating, loneliness for those who live alone and have lost their community support networks and loneliness in the face of winter darkness. The vaccine brings hope that, with the short relaxation of the regulations this Christmastime, it will help us to combat loneliness at a critical time. As we prepare for the celebration of Christmas, knowing that the new year will bring with it hope for the roll-out of a vaccine will bring comfort to many.

Our primary concern, when the vaccine arrives, should be whether we have adequate supplies for those who need it most: our hospital and care home residents and staff; our healthcare staff; and our essential workers. They are the people who need to be protected now, and that is something that we could achieve quite quickly.

We have to remember that a vaccine is not a silver bullet to address all our worries about COVID-19. It will not depoliticise the virus or fix our economy. In the absence of a vaccine, we can follow those crucial steps of hand hygiene, face covering and social distancing to ensure the safety and well-being of the most vulnerable and our key workers. We can keep flattening the curve through our supply of common sense and personal responsibility.

The vaccine will act as another step on the road out of COVID-19. With the delivery of a vaccine will, I hope, come the loosening of the restrictions placed on the public. Important discussions will have to be had for those who want to avail themselves of the vaccine and, just as importantly, for those who do not want to take the vaccine. While it is essential that the North receive the roll-out of the vaccine at the same time as our counterparts in GB, it is also essential that any action plan for the roll-out includes discussion on a cross-border plan. The vaccine does not recognise borders, and it does not generate in predominantly nationalist or unionist areas.

I welcome the fact that discussions with GB are already under way. I also welcome the fact that the Health Minister has conveyed to the UK Government the need for lateral flow device testing kits for the North. Although, regrettably, I have little faith in the Tory Government's willingness to deliver in the interests of the people here, I have faith in our Health Minister. I want to assure him of our support as he continues his work in leading our response to COVID-19, particularly where other Ministers have shirked their responsibility.

The motion suggests that we need an accountable person to lead the roll-out. I appreciate that the newly appointed head of the Civil Service will have a part to play, but I hope that there might be some sort of task force in the Department and a senior named official there to lead the roll-out so that we can interact with that person should we have difficulties in our constituencies.

The best tool that we have to beat COVID-19 is our willingness and ability to come together to form a cohesive approach that all of us can buy into.

We have shown what we are capable of achieving here when we work together with a common purpose against a common foe. Every choice that we make from here on will determine our future, and therefore hope remains. Our hope for a better tomorrow is our single greatest weapon against this foe. It is that hope that will allow us to endure these difficult days, safe in the knowledge that our best days are ahead. We will reach those days, but only when we stick together. I support the motion.

Mr Chambers: I place on record my admiration and appreciation for the urgent response of scientists in producing a vaccine that will protect our population from COVID-19. This has been a fantastic United Kingdom achievement. It is reassuring that checks and balances have been, and are being, carried out to ensure that it is a vaccine that is safe to use.

What is our expectation of this vaccine? Is it a magic wand? In the medium to long term, it will give community and individual protection. The more people who decide to be vaccinated — I hope that it will get close to 100% — the quicker the spread of this deadly virus will be slowed down and eventually halted. In the short term, we must not allow its arrival to create any sense of complacency in the community. The virus will not go away just because a vaccination programme has begun. The messaging around washing hands, wearing face coverings, social distancing and following the guidance in regulations will still be a vital weapon in suppressing the virus while we seek to vaccinate everyone, starting with our valued NHS and care staff and then our most vulnerable citizens. That is another reason why it is not a good idea to campaign, contrary to medical and scientific advice, for the opening of certain sectors currently closed by legislation.

The motion calls for the urgent appointment of a professional expert to lead the vaccination programme. That is a sensible suggestion that I think has already been addressed by the Minister of Health. I have to say that I was a little bit disappointed by earlier remarks that implied a degree of criticism of the plan to roll out the vaccine in Northern Ireland before it has even begun. It is reassuring that a panel of vaccinators are being recruited from various parts of our health service and that they are receiving the necessary training for the task.

This programme is an enormous challenge, and certainly unprecedented in living memory. It is an exercise that will require the support of the entire Executive and everyone in the House. Any actions or words that compromise this operation, or, indeed, lead to a loss of public confidence, would be unhelpful in the extreme. We have to recognise that there will be local hiccups and not try to use them for political point-scoring. It is correct that those who will be administering the vaccine initially will be the first to receive the dose. There will be some logistical issues around how some of the vaccines produced have to be stored or transported. This will add to the challenge of the task. There will also be challenges in how the vaccine will be brought to nursing and care homes and taken out to those who are receiving care in their homes. These are all issues that the professional experts who are leading the programme will undoubtedly address.

Over recent months, there have been calls for military intervention. The Minister is on record that he would not hesitate to call in such help if it was required. To date, it has not been necessary. However, that may change in this phase of the fight against the virus. The logistics of this operation will be such that I have no doubt that the army will be able to offer support. I am sure that the Minister will be happy to deploy that help and support if it is needed. As if the roll-out of this vaccine was not a big enough challenge for the NHS, there will also be the development of a mass testing procedure. This testing will slow up transmission of the virus while we strive to protect the community through the vaccine. The pilot scheme in Queen's University, which used lateral flow devices to test students, has been a useful and helpful exercise in informing how this type of speedy testing can be rolled out for general public use.

We have come a long way in the fight against this virus. We have learned a lot about it. We have also come a long way in protecting our citizens. Hopefully, we are about to commence the last lap of what has been a difficult pandemic that has caused much pain, suffering and death within our community. If we stick together in the coming weeks and months, we will get our lives back and be able to do the things that we may have taken for granted before this virus reached our shores. It is certainly not a time to let our guard down or to start to relax. Complacency is the friend of the virus; there is a responsibility on all of us not to do anything to encourage that friendship.

Ms Bradshaw: I rise to support the motion in the hope and expectation that the Assembly will stand united behind vaccination. There are some specific issues around this motion that I want to prioritise, and there are some matters in it that remain legitimately uncertain.

First, the efforts to establish a vaccine have been a remarkable triumph of science. This motion carries, inherent within it, a clear trust of science when it comes to the development of safe and effective vaccines. Those endorsing it must also reflect that we need to trust science when it comes to managing restrictions around social distancing in order to protect public health and the health service during the period between now and increased population immunity, as is to be delivered by those vaccines.

If we are to trust the scientific experts on pharmaceutical interventions, then we must also trust them on non-pharmaceutical interventions. That does not mean that we do not challenge or debate, but it does mean that we should not be ignorant of their advice and the reasoning behind it. Indeed, the motion specifically refers to a professional expert to lead the programme, yet we have seen politicians increasingly try to overrule professional experts in recent weeks on issues as wide-ranging as the closure of gyms and the wearing of face coverings. If we are going to endorse the use of professional experts, then we have to start respecting their professional expertise. We simply cannot have parties overruling the scientific evidence in their partisan political interests on one occasion before demanding that we all trust the science and experts on another.

Secondly, which brings us to the core point that is missed in the motion, I share in the call for all of the parties in the Chamber to get behind a public awareness campaign that is focused on the need for this vaccine to protect the health of the population as a whole, and, particularly, to remove pressure from the health service. Every party leader needs to clearly commit to endorsing the use of vaccines that the regulators have deemed safe and effective and that they will fully and proactively encourage access to, and the use of, those vaccines through the agreed vaccination programme without reservation. I trust that we will soon hear a unanimous statement from the Executive to that effect.

However, I am unsure why a date — the end of December 2020 — appears in the motion. I am uncomfortable with the treatment of this issue by the UK Government as some kind of competition to get there first. We must emphasise that, while time is clearly important, this cannot be rushed and that the vaccines used must be established by the professional experts to be absolutely effective and safe. We must allow for that in this process. Any vaccine that is used in Northern Ireland or anywhere else will have to have been through that process, and we want that regulation to be clearly detailed and definitive. In practice, that may mean that a roll-out is delayed if further assurances are sought. In our case, that would be by the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency. Alternatively, of course, if authorisation proceeds quickly, it may mean that a roll-out can begin imminently, perhaps well before the end of December. However, let us not solely be driven by time; we also need to be cautious about creating false hope that the roll-out will be completely swift. Regardless of where in the world the first jab takes place, it will be well into next year — even in the best case scenario — before we will be able to return to relatively normal lives, which will be thanks to the population immunity that will be delivered by the vaccines.

We should not underestimate the global logistical challenge. Protection only comes from population immunity, which, realistically, will need to apply across as much of the globe as possible, as quickly as possible, to enable the safe resumption of international travel and trade. It is welcome news that at least one of the vaccines can be stored for some days in smaller sites, but the issues around haulage and storage are not to be underestimated, especially as two doses are likely to be required.

The strongest aspect of the motion is the call for a clear action plan to be published for the roll-out of the vaccine. We have surge plans and suchlike, so we need an action plan here that makes it clear who makes up the priority population groups. I welcome that the Health Minister has released the draft potential plan for the roll-out to the Health Committee, and I have had a quick look at that.

With regard to the Minister's recent decision to continue to pause shielding and the placing of that group on the list for prioritisation, I encourage him —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): I ask the Member to draw her remarks to a close.

Ms Bradshaw: — to ensure that the clinically extremely vulnerable group is well up the list of people who are called forward.

4.30 pm

Mr Easton: We can all agree that the recent news about a number of vaccines being developed is extremely positive. It gives us all hope of a return to normality. I must say that I am quite optimistic and excited about it.

The roll-out of vaccines will be on a scale that we have never seen previously. Given the recent issues with the distribution of the annual flu vaccine, thorough preparation must start now. A clear action plan must be developed in order to achieve a successful roll-out. The motion calls for the appointment of a medical professional to lead on the programme. I agree with that wholeheartedly. I note that, over the weekend, the UK Government appointed a junior Minister to have oversight of the vaccination in England for that specific reason.

On the delivery of the vaccine, it is obvious that current staffing levels will not be enough to cater for the demand. What discussions has the Minister had on the potential for former NHS doctors and nurses to come back into service to assist in that roll-out? Likewise, has he discussed the potential for current student doctors and nurses to administer vaccines? What about the use of the army? Obviously, training will be required for administering the COVID vaccine. Can the Minister update the Chamber on that? Given that a large number of staff will presumably be involved in administering the COVID vaccination, can he assure the House that GP practices will be able to continue to operate for those who need telephone or in-person appointments?

Another important aspect is prioritisation for the vaccine. I understand that the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation (JCVI) has released a draft priority list for those who will receive the vaccine, with care home residents and staff, rightly, at the top, followed by Health and Social Care workers and people who are over 80 years of age. However, the list goes on to make a distinction between those who are under the age of 65 and at high risk from the virus and those who are under the age of 65 and at moderate risk from the virus. We have all heard about the conditions that put one at increased risk of hospitalisation: cancer, diabetes and obesity. Can the Minister advise the House which conditions may be prioritised over certain other conditions and whether the body of evidence on which such decisions are made will be published?

I highlight the point following the roll-out of the annual flu vaccine and the shortage of supply. The chairperson of the BMA's Northern Ireland general practitioners committee said that, if the issue in the flu vaccine supply chain had been known about earlier, the over-65s who were most at risk could have been prioritised. Given the potential issues in obtaining a supply of COVID-19 vaccines when one is approved, it is imperative that the priority list is clear and well publicised.

With regard to those who were instructed to shield earlier in the year, some of the practices that delivered the flu vaccine in my constituency allowed those individuals to have their vaccine administered during an appointment. While I appreciate that practices have taken thorough measures to become COVID-secure, that allowed those people who were most clinically vulnerable to avoid the majority of those who were receiving the flu vaccine and to have private appointments. Some of those people may not have left their homes a great deal since the beginning of the pandemic. Some may be very elderly or fearful and daunted by the thought of being asked to attend a site where mass vaccination is taking place. Can the Minister advise the House whether private appointments for vaccinations could be an option for those who were shielding?

That brings me to the issue of location. I am aware that, in England, sites are being readied in preparation for the roll-out of the vaccination. Have universities or other suitable venues, such as leisure centres or church halls, been identified as potential sites for mass vaccination — particularly in north Down, by the way? On the vaccines themselves, what would happen if more than one vaccine were approved for use at around the same time? We do not yet know the conclusions on the effectiveness of each vaccine. From what I have read, it appears that some vaccines are more effective at reducing an individual's risk of serious illness from COVID-19.

Mr Buckley: I thank the Member for giving way. On that point, does he agree that it is vital that as much information as possible on the individual vaccines available is in the public domain?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Easton: Thank you very much, Mr Deputy Speaker.

Yes, that is crucial. While the Oxford vaccine has shown signs of reducing the transmission of the virus, are we to prioritise certain vaccinations over others once they are approved? Some vaccines require one dose; others require two. Will there be some logic in deciding which individual receives which vaccine? I would like confirmation from the Minister that the vaccine will be voluntary, which is also very important.

I want to make it clear that I want the funding in place now to roll this out. I want hundreds of trained people ready to roll this out. I do not want any excuses or delays. I want to get back to a normal life, as does everybody else.

Ms Flynn: I apologise that some of my points will be repetitive as other Members have touched on them, but it is important that I cover them. I support the motion and join other Members in welcoming the positive developments to secure a safe and effective COVID-19 vaccine.

Last week, I held engagements in my local area of west Belfast with a number of groups, including a pensioners' group and a youth group with children ranging from the ages of 10 to 18. What I found most interesting was that, regardless of age, the same question was to the fore of people's minds, and it was, "When can I access a vaccine, and when will we begin to see an end to coronavirus?".

Concerns have been brought to my attention, and some Members have touched on this, by people who had to clinically shield during the first wave of the pandemic. Understandably, they have been worried and anxious throughout this whole period, and it is fair to say that many have been living with the constant fear of contracting the virus and with the thought of how serious that might prove for them.

With that in mind, I have submitted a question to the Minister of Health asking which clinically vulnerable groups, apart from those over the age of 65, will be considered as priority groups for receiving the COVID-19 vaccination. I look forward to the Minister's briefing to the Health Committee on Thursday, when, I am sure, we will be provided with such further detail. However, today, I stress to the Department and to the Minister that central to any successful roll-out of this vaccination must be a clear communication strategy with the public on what to expect and when to expect it.

All the groups that I have spoken of — pensioners, young people, those who were shielding — as well as the wider public need firm assurances that, when the vaccine is ready, it will be safe and free, and it will be made accessible as swiftly as possible to all, regardless of age, gender, financial position or location.

The Minister and the Executive must initiate a compelling, powerful information campaign to generate maximum awareness of the importance and safety of the COVID-19 vaccine. A high uptake of any future vaccination programme will be crucial, as we all know, in defeating this virus.

People need to know and understand that countless lives are saved daily across the globe as a result of vaccines. As referenced earlier by the Committee Chair, vaccines have all but wiped out serious diseases such as smallpox, polio, measles, mumps, rubella and many more. We have a responsibility to make people appreciate and take pride in the fact that this is the chance for our generation to eliminate coronavirus.

I am conscious that today's debate will, as the Deputy Chair of the Committee and others mentioned, be of little comfort to families mourning the death of a loved one who tragically lost their battle with COVID-19. Earlier, Ms Cameron referred to the fact that, sadly, we passed the sad milestone of 1,000 deaths today. However, I hope that, in some small way, the progression of a wide-scale vaccination programme will instil some happiness, contentment or hope in the wider public and that we can all begin to plan and to aspire to live our lives just as we used to before.

Mr Sheehan: This virus has turned all of our lives upside down, and not just here. On the face of the planet, there is barely a country that has not been badly affected by the advent of this new virus. Here, it has shone a light on the inadequacies of our health service as a result of years of underfunding. As we come out of this, and hopefully as the vaccine brings an end to the crisis that we are in, I hope that there will be a complete review of the funding of our health service so that, in the event of any future pandemic of this nature, it will be ready to deal with it. The virus has also shone a light on the health inequalities in our society. As usual, those on the margins are the ones who have been the most adversely affected by the pandemic.

Those are issues for the future. The immediate future, hopefully, is bright. We have a vaccine coming to deal with the virus. We know, and this has been mentioned by a number of Members, how much vaccines have advanced the cause of medicine in the past 100 years. According to the World Health Organization, 28 diseases can be treated, and in some cases almost eradicated, by the use of vaccines, including diphtheria, hepatitis A, B and E, measles, meningitis, polio, rubella, TB, yellow fever and whooping cough. The list goes on. When the virus becomes available, I will certainly be taking it and my children will be taking it.

Mr Swann (The Minister of Health): Will the Member give way?

Mr Sheehan: Certainly.

Mr Swann: We will give you the vaccine rather than the virus. [Laughter.]

Mr Sheehan: I beg your pardon. I was getting carried away there. As I said, I will be taking the vaccine and my children will be taking the vaccine. I will be encouraging everyone to take the vaccine, because that is what we need.

One of the questions that we must ask about an action plan, which, I hope, we are going to see more detail on over the coming weeks, is this: who is going to get the vaccine? We understand that the most vulnerable should get the vaccine first, but then where will the vaccine be delivered? Whom will it go to? Will it be care homes, of course, then the over-70s, then the over-60s and so on?

Ms Ennis: I thank my colleague for giving way. He will be well aware of the nightmare situation that those who reside in assisted living settings have had to endure throughout the pandemic. They have effectively been unable to leave the places where they reside owing to the PHA classing them as domiciliary settings or care home settings. I am sure that my colleague will join me in calling on the Minister of Health to ensure that those who live in assisted living settings are among some of the first to receive the vaccine when it is rolled out.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Sheehan: I could not agree more. That is the type of question that the Minister is going to have to answer at some stage. There is the broader question of who is going to get the vaccine, and then there is the question of at what stage it will be delivered to them.

There is another question: who is going to deliver the vaccine? I do not want to make a political point here, but some of the Members who are advocating the use of the British military to roll out the vaccine are trying to make some sort of political point. I do not envisage the British military being on the Falls Road giving out a vaccine for the virus. That is not realistic. We have enough people, and that part of the action plan that the Minister is going to roll out will need to say who will be administering the vaccine. Will it be GPs? Will it be community pharmacists, who were saying recently that they are at the ready to deliver it if they are needed? Will it be paramedics, district nurses and nurses in hospitals delivering it to staff, patients and so on? All of that detail needs to be clarified.

Clarity is also needed on where the vaccine is going to be delivered. We already heard talk about leisure centres being used for mass testing. Perhaps GAA clubs or other sports premises, where a lot of people would be confident about going for their job, could be used as needs be. All those things are important.

Hopefully, the vaccine will be here soon. I do not have a lot of confidence in this British Government if they are behind providing and delivering the vaccine here. They have made an absolute hames of everything that they have done concerning the pandemic so far. I hope that they get it right on this occasion, that we get the vaccine soon and that we get our whole population vaccinated. In the meantime, we need to be sure that we have a proper contact-tracing system. I welcome the Minister's acknowledgement yesterday that I have some expertise in that field.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): Will the Member draw his remarks to a close, please?

Mr Sheehan: Certainly, a LeasCheann Comhairle. It is important that we have that fallback situation in case there are any delays with a vaccine.

Mr McCrossan: I also support the motion. It has been a very painful and difficult year for our society, the world, families, business and those who have lost loved ones. We have heard that in excess of 1,000 people have now lost their life to the virus here in Northern Ireland. The virus has shattered dreams, ripped the hearts from families, devastated our economy, taken people's livelihood and turned our entire world upside down, but, at the heart of the virus, there has always been our heroes in our health service. Those people have stood on the front line and have not only provided the necessary care for people who were in desperate need but have had to communicate with families who were in great pain and drive themselves beyond their own limits — emotionally, mentally and physically. It is important to acknowledge that they have led the fight against the virus and provided support to every person in our society. It has touched our heart in some way for the past nine or 10 months. There is light at the end of the tunnel, and I am very relieved to see it. The vaccine is welcome. The memory of the damage that the virus has caused will live with each of us for the rest of our life, particularly those on the front line who have held the hands of the dying, and those who have lost loved ones.

The vaccine is welcome news. Society can breathe a sigh of relief at last, but not just yet. We still have the Christmas period to get through. The slightest bit of complacency could put a life at risk. The House needs to be clear that the most dangerous period that we have faced in the last year is upon us. The Christmas period, when, naturally, we come together with family and friends, is the most dangerous and critical time. If we are taking this seriously, we need to take every necessary step to ensure that we stick to the advice.

Over the past week, I have raised the importance of getting the vaccine out to the most vulnerable. I echo the words of colleagues across the House in ensuring that that happens. I also welcome that there are five stages to the roll-out, with the first focusing on our dedicated healthcare staff, care home residents and those over the age of 80. It is my understanding that the plan will advance to those over 65, then to those under 65, then to those over 50, and then widened out to the general population. There is a job of work, because, as always, social media has the naysayers who are asking how a vaccine has been developed so quickly. It has been a global effort to save human life, and we need to be very clear that that has been the case. For the next number of weeks, we need to urge people to take the vaccine and to encourage their families, friends and community to do so. The leadership of that message needs to come consistently, clearly and strongly from the House.

As to logistics, I represent rural West Tyrone, and my constituents will be asking themselves how far they will have to travel to access the vaccine. We should also remember that many in my constituency and in other rural parts have no access to vehicles. Therefore, where the vaccine is to be provided will be critical to them in alleviating any anxiety that they may have. That is why ensuring that it goes to the hearts and hubs of communities is important.

Mr Gildernew: Will the Member give way?

Mr McCrossan: I will indeed.

Mr Gildernew: Does the Member agree that, in order to provide accessibility and to build community support, it would be of value to talk to community groups such as the GAA or rugby clubs that provided good support at the start of the pandemic?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): The Member has an extra minute.

Mr McCrossan: I thank the Member for his intervention. It is clear that we are all in this together. A single life lost is one too many. We all face a huge challenge as we work together to get the vaccine rolled out and to support those with responsibility for overseeing it. That is why, across these island and this island, we need to work with our counterparts to ensure that we have a united approach to battling the virus.

After that, we face big challenges. The battle does not end when the vaccine is rolled out. Work will then start to repair the damage that the virus has left in its path in mental health services, investment in rural services and the health service, as Mr Sheehan rightly pointed out. I do not envy the Minister, but I put it on record that he has my support and that of my party in overseeing a difficult and challenging task ahead. I also put firmly on the record a thank you to our healthcare staff, who have led the battle against the virus.

Ms Armstrong: I welcome the motion, as it provides an opportunity for the Health Minister to confirm his roll-out of the vaccination programme across Northern Ireland.

I will take all of us on a step back. On behalf of the Alliance Party, let me say that we are extremely grateful to the scientists, biochemists, doctors, researchers, nurses, lab technicians and all who have helped to get us to the vaccine.

We all have concerns about circuit breakers and about not being able to see vulnerable family members. Some businesses are at breaking point, and, sadly, some have already closed. In the House, we are acutely aware of the pressure that the Department of Health and all working in it are under. This is the first chink of light, the first real hope of a solution that will bring the misery of COVID-19 under control and, hopefully, lead to the eradication of the virus.

The planned, large-scale vaccination programme is, I am sure, being developed with the engagement of multi-professional health experts across the system, including primary care, general practice, pharmacy, community services, care homes and school health. It is potentially linked to acute services, for example A&E and outpatients. While all that goes on, we need to consider the public. Our population needs infrastructure availability and service capacity, and all those demands need careful consideration. If we are to take forward a vaccination programme, the House wants to learn more about it. As others have said, there needs to be clear guidance for the public. We need to manage their expectations and give them confidence that the vaccine will work.

In considering how the vaccine will be rolled out, I expect that a well-organised system will break down the population into priority groups. It is, of course, vital that healthcare staff be among the first to receive the vaccine, but I urge the Minister to ensure that all key workers and front-line staff, as mentioned by the Chair of the Health Committee, are taken into consideration in the first wave.

That should include the police, public transport staff, people who work in residential and domiciliary care, Prison Service staff, teachers and classroom support and foster and kinship carers. It should come as no surprise to the Minister when I say that the absolutely exhausted, unpaid carers should be in that first wave.

Mr McCrossan mentioned access to the vaccine. I worked in community transport for years before I became an MLA, providing access to services for older people and those with disabilities across Northern Ireland. It will be a key issue to ensure that people who are defined as vulnerable can get to where the vaccine will be administered. It does not matter who says what and whether it is a church or a GAA hall, a school or anywhere else: if you cannot get to it, there is no point in it being there. I ask the Minister of Health to work with the Minister for Infrastructure to ensure that older people, people with disabilities, people with limited mobility and rural dwellers all have access to a public transport solution if needed.

I ask everyone to consider 2013. In 2013, we had one of the heaviest snowfalls in Northern Ireland for years. If that happens in 2021, what will we do? We need to think about the worst-case scenarios and give people an honest-to-goodness solution. I ask the Minister for a clear public messaging campaign that needs to start as soon as he has a clear idea of what the programme will look like. We do not need any more podiums of doom, Minister; we need to look at people and ask them to work with us.

As Mr McCrossan said, there will be naysayers out there and the people who will never take a vaccine. It would not matter what the vaccine was for; they would never take it. They will say that it is all rubbish and that the Government have made it all up. However, this will save lives. Those scientists — our heroes — have come up with something that will save the lives of people across Northern Ireland. We need to ensure that the public come with us, that their expectations are managed and that they have confidence. The best place that they can get that confidence is here in the House. Leadership is unity, and unity is what is needed in the time ahead. We have lost over 1,000 people: we do not need to lose any more.

Mr Carroll: We certainly welcome the news that a COVID-19 vaccine may now become available. We have shared in the suffering and tragedy of the pandemic with people around the world over many months — almost a year. It has been a stark reminder of our common humanity, because, as people have said, the pandemic pays no heed to borders or nationality. It has impacted on all of society, but, as others pointed out, not and never equally. Healthcare workers risked their lives on front lines to save people's lives and sometimes paid tragically with their lives, whilst billionaires, some of whom are stuck on private islands, saw their wealth increase exorbitantly during the pandemic.

The health and safety of the low-paid essential workers who kept society moving during the pandemic were treated as an afterthought by those who were most concerned with how the likes of Randox and other big corporations could profit during the pandemic. The vulnerable and the low-paid have suffered most through botched government health and financial relief policies, while the politically connected rule with one law for them and another for the rest of us. Workers and small businesses have fallen through the cracks time and again, while government contracts worth billions have been dished out to a corrupt, politically connected golden circle. Shameless profiteering has been ramped up by unscrupulous people in power during the pandemic.

The pandemic has revealed the impact of decades of neglect and attacks by government on our health service, but it has also made clear why our health service and all other public services are vital and so essential. The private sector cannot deal with a crisis on this scale, because it is geared towards profits primarily and not the health and well-being of society. The private care homes debacle has demonstrated why privatisation has failed residents, workers and families. The era of Stormont looking after the likes of Moy Park bosses while crushing the health service into the ground must end. When the pandemic finally ends, a new era of equality must begin in which our health service and all our public services are fully protected and funded; care home residents, their families and workers are kept safe and paid properly; poverty pay and zero-hours contract are ended; students are not treated as disposable; people of colour and migrant communities are treated with the respect that they deserve; and bosses and politicians are no longer allowed to shamelessly profit and make rules and laws, often to suit themselves.

We still face the immediate danger of a life-taking virus, which has been compounded many times over by the catastrophic response of the Governments on these islands, including the Executive. While we certainly welcome the potentially extremely positive news, my party thinks that several points need to be raised. We are unlikely to be able to vaccinate our way out of the pandemic, at least not this year. Therefore, there will be a continuing need to pursue a strategy to protect people. We have joined others in calling for an all-Ireland zero COVID strategy against the policies coming from Westminster, the Dáil and, indeed, Stormont.

The need for an all-Ireland integrated health strategy has been made all the more evident this week as the guidelines in the North and South go in different directions, and that is a continued recipe for disaster.

5.00 pm

Secondly, the distribution programme for a vaccine should not be done in a way that creates disparities. It should be done on an all-Ireland basis, with healthcare workers, the vulnerable and the elderly being first in the line. We cannot have a situation where people are being vaccinated in Derry but not Donegal or vice versa. We need to make sure that the vaccine is safe, and therefore, the patent should be made available for scientific scrutiny. The vaccination science should be transparent, and that is crucial to build public confidence in any vaccine programme and to keep people safe. It is worth mentioning that Jonas Salk who created the polio vaccine said:

"There is no patent. Could you patent the sun?"

It is disgraceful that the profits of major corporations could soar as a result of COVID vaccinations.

Connected to that, we need to invest in education on the scientific and health merits of utilising a vaccine, as others have said. A lot of confusion about the science is swirling around and being promoted by former US President Donald Trump — assuming that he is going to walk out of office — neo-Nazis and the far right, and other deplorable conspiracy theorists.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): I ask the Member to draw his remarks to a close.

Mr Carroll: Sure. We should invest in education rather than rely on punitive measures to encourage participation in a vaccine programme. Finally, as I said, my party does not think that corporations should be able to profiteer from the misery that people have been afflicted with this year.

Mr Swann: As Members have said, today we reached another sad milestone in this pandemic, where the number of COVID-related deaths recorded on my Department's COVID dashboard has passed 1,000. We must always remember that we are not talking about statistics but much-loved people who will be desperately missed. My profound sympathies go to every bereaved family. This is a harsh reminder of the threat posed by COVID-19, and no one should underestimate the virus or delude themselves that it can never affect them.

I am very aware that there is a small and vociferous minority who seek to play down the coronavirus risks. To anyone trying to play it down and minimise the impact, I say, please, think again. This vaccine has come too late for those people. So let us not lose or abuse the time between now and when we are able to deliver the vaccine.

I thank Members for bringing this motion, as it provides a timely opportunity to provide the House with the update that was given to the Executive last Thursday. The update will answer many of the initial questions that Mrs Cameron posed when she moved the motion.

When the Executive returned on 11 January this year, no one in the Chamber could have imagined what lay ahead or that we would soon be entering a once-in-a-generation global health crisis that would push all of us — not least our front-line health and care staff — to the extremes. However, while the pandemic has been a health crisis, the impact has been much wider, as has been mentioned. Daily life has changed beyond anything we could have imagined at the start of this year.

We are now in the midst of a further period of extended restrictions. I fully appreciate the huge impact that these restrictions are having across so many sectors in Northern Ireland and the many sacrifices that people are making. However, thanks to those restrictions, the number of infections is starting to come down, although the system is still under significant pressures. As I speak, there are still COVID-positive inpatients in our hospitals and a high, but stable, number in critical care. These are not decisions that anyone wants to take, but they are necessary. They will prevent our health service from being overwhelmed. They will save lives, and not just the lives of patients with COVID but of any patient who urgently needs treatment.

I have listened with interest to Members' contributions, and I should state that I wholeheartedly support the motion. This is an important subject and a valuable discussion, but I am sure that all Members will agree that it is imperative that we get this right.

At this point, I will take a few moments to describe the planning and preparations for the vaccination programme. As has been said across the House, we need experts to lead the House, and, as has been said by most parties, we need experienced health service professionals who know what they are doing and can act quickly and decisively.

The motion calls for the appointment of a professional expert to lead our vaccination programme. I can confirm that that has already happened. I have appointed Patricia Donnelly, who is a former director of acute services in the Belfast Trust and a highly experienced health professional, to drive and oversee the planning and delivery of our vaccination programme. She has been working extensively with officials and clinicians in the Department, the Public Health Agency and the health and social care trusts for some time, and she gave a presentation to the Executive last Thursday on the advanced stages of planning.

Vaccination plans are at an advanced stage and will be delivered over a number of phases, which will see different groups or age cohorts being invited in to receive the vaccine over the following months. The vaccination programme will build on the Northern Ireland health service expertise in delivering immunisation programmes, as was mentioned by the Chair of the Committee and a number of Members.

As Members may be aware, the UK Government have secured access to seven vaccine candidates across four vaccine types, which could result in 357 million doses of COVID-19 vaccines being made available in the United Kingdom. While I am always open to all-island solutions, the UK did not sign up to an EU procurement process as the Commission confirmed that it was not possible for the UK to pursue parallel negotiations with potential vaccine suppliers. That meant that the UK would be required to stop its negotiations with manufacturers with which the EU had launched negotiations, and I suspect that Members will agree that that would have been a mistake and a challenge.

The UK is well positioned nationally. The Government have secured early access to doses through agreements with several separate vaccine developers at various stages of trials. I can confirm that Northern Ireland will receive its Barnett share — 2.85% — of the total UK stock of COVID-19 vaccines that are eventually approved for use. It is important to say that the vaccines will be deployed only for use when they have passed the required safety and efficacy tests and received authorisation from the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA). I assure everyone that, while the process is being progressed as rapidly as possible, the experts in the MHRA will provide that approval only when they are assured that the vaccine is safe and effective.

Nevertheless, we expect to have authorised vaccines available for use shortly, and we are ready to begin a programme once sufficient quantities are in place. Realistically, it may be early in the new year before the full vaccination programme is in operation, but we are hopeful that the programme will be launched in only a couple of weeks in each of the four UK countries. As I mentioned earlier, the planned vaccination programme will be a major logistical exercise that will last many months and will take us well into the middle of next year at least.

Members will be aware from media reports of some of the requirements for the different vaccines in terms of storage, transport and other logistical issues. At present, the two vaccines that are expected to be used first require two doses to be given 28 days apart, which answers some of Mr Easton's questions. We are therefore planning on the basis of a number of scenarios based on different vaccines becoming available at different times. This is a developing situation, and our plans are flexible enough to respond to any emerging developments.

The vaccines will be rolled out to eligible groups as quickly as possible, bearing in mind the limitations of where the Pfizer vaccine can be safely deployed. This will initially involve health and social care workers and care home staff. It will extend to the over-80s and care home residents early in the new year as additional vaccines become available,

In addition, we are rapidly exploring the most effective way to safely deliver vaccines to other priority groups as quickly as possible. The Pfizer vaccine, which is expected to come online first, presents a number of logistical challenges. With colleagues in England, Scotland and Wales, we are continuing to work through those challenges. The handling of subsequent vaccines is expected to be more in line with that of routine vaccines. It will therefore be easier to deploy those outside of the mass vaccination sites, and it should allow them to be delivered by GPs and others, as some mentioned in the House, in the same way as the current flu vaccination programme.

I mentioned earlier the importance of getting this right. The most important aspect of this is to have a systemic, reliable and sustained vaccination programme. While we want this to start as quickly as possible, we also need to minimise waste and, above all, ensure that vaccines are delivered in the correct environment for them to be effective. The vaccination workforce will initially be based mainly on occupational health staff, trust peer vaccinators and GP staff, who have a proven track record of delivering the annual flu programme to thousands of patients over a 12-week period. The exact composition and location of vaccination teams will vary according to the requirements of the different vaccines and the population receiving the vaccine as well as the timescales of the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency approval.

On 16 November, an expression of interest was issued to all registered healthcare professionals, including pharmacists, nurses, dentists and allied health professionals, in relation to becoming sessional vaccinators. These individuals will be trained up and brought into the programme as and when they are required. In addition, we are seeking healthcare assistants and admin staff to support the programme and free up the time of the vaccinators. As always during this pandemic, I have been overwhelmed by the commitment and enthusiasm of staff from across the health and social care system. Already, almost 1,000 individuals have registered their interest in helping to deliver this programme, and over 400 applications have now been submitted.

In recent weeks, I have received a number of queries related to how different groups will be prioritised in receiving the vaccine, an issue that has also been raised here today. Vaccination policy in Northern Ireland is based on the recommendations provided by the JCVI, which advises the four UK Health Ministers. Made up of independent experts, it advises the Government on which vaccines the UK should use and provides advice on who should be offered the vaccination first. The JCVI has access to all relevant information on the COVID vaccines and to the clinical data on the groups who suffer the worst outcomes if they catch COVID-19.

Although we are not strictly obliged to follow JCVI recommendations, up to this point, Northern Ireland has always implemented its recommendations. It is appropriate that we follow its expert advice on who should be offered the vaccine first. On Friday 25 September, the updated JCVI interim position on prioritisation was published. It was produced on the basis of a combination of clinical risk stratification and an age-based approach. It has advised that the vaccine first be given to care home residents and staff, followed by people over 80 and health and social care workers, and then to the rest of the population in order of age and risk. It is expected that this will help to optimise the targeting and the deliverability of the vaccines. The JCVI position is available on its website and will be updated as more information becomes available.

An effective vaccine will be the best way to protect the most vulnerable from coronavirus. It is the biggest breakthrough since the pandemic began.

It is a huge step forward in our fight against coronavirus and will potentially save tens of thousands of lives. Once vaccinations begin, we will closely monitor the impact on individuals, on health service pressures and on the spread of the virus. As large numbers of people from the at-risk groups are given a vaccine, we will be able to examine the impact on infection rates, on hospitalisations and of reduced deaths. If successful, that should, in time, lead to a substantial reassessment of current restrictions.

5.15 pm

In closing, I want to leave the House with three main messages. First, work to deliver the vaccines is well advanced. Our health service is primed and ready to deliver a vaccination programme, safely and systematically, and I look forward to updating the Health Committee in more detail on Thursday.

Secondly, mass vaccination is an enormous logistical challenge, and it will take time. There is no way around that and no quick fix. We expect that it will take many months before the vaccination programme is complete, and we need to recognise that we are not through this yet.

Thirdly and finally, although there is some way to go, the appearance of these vaccines is real grounds for hope. An effective vaccine will be the best way in which to protect the most vulnerable from coronavirus, and it is the biggest breakthrough since the pandemic began. Although the pandemic is not over yet, and there are still difficult decisions ahead, this may, at last, signal the turning of the tide.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): I call Jonathan Buckley to conclude and make a winding-up speech on the debate and the motion.

Mr Buckley: I begin by thanking Members for their positive contributions to the debate and their support. There have been many dark days in the House throughout 2020, but, even as we debate the motion today, there are glimmers of light. For the first time, and on record, health officials have confirmed that if the Pfizer vaccine is given the go-ahead in Northern Ireland, it will be good to go, with roll-out on 14 December. That is something from which Members can take great heart and solace.

If I had to sum up Members contributions, I would begin with one word and one word only: hope. The proposer of the motion, Mrs Pam Cameron, whom I thank for being a co-signatory to the motion, talked about the light at the end of the tunnel. Those points were echoed right across the Chamber. Colin McGrath talked about an injection of hope. Órlaithí Flynn talked about the hopes of many from different groups in her constituency. That is something that is shared, regardless of constituency or country, right around the world.

Pat Sheehan talked about the bright future ahead. Daniel McCrossan talked of a painful and difficult year of shattered dreams but acknowledged, in a strong contribution, the support and help of the NHS staff who have been on the front line of this battle. Alan Chambers, Paula Bradshaw and Kellie Armstrong talked of their appreciation of the scientific efforts behind vaccine development. It goes on record, from all Members, that we owe a great deal to those scientists who have worked diligently to try to produce a vaccine, safely and efficiently, to deal with this pandemic.

Paula Bradshaw referenced the appointment of professional expertise in the motion and questioned some Members' sincerity on that point. Although there will always be widespread differences on the effects of lockdown from a range of experts in their field, it is right that politicians challenge those viewpoints as well. By "expert", this motion made specific reference to the logistical administration to ensure speed and accuracy of a vaccine programme.

Colm Gildernew, the Chair of the Health Committee, talked about the vital Committee scrutiny that is ongoing and hopefully will continue on Thursday. It is a vital aspect of the engagement required. He also mentioned, along with Órlaithí Flynn and Pat Sheehan, the worldwide vaccines and how they have transformed our world. He referenced 28 worldwide diseases that have been eradicated through vaccines. That is a very important point, and one that we should all bear in mind.

We are all too aware of the challenges at hand. We live in unprecedented times and face a monumental task on many different fronts on the road to a coronavirus recovery.

The effects of COVID-19 and, indeed, the consequential lockdown have presented challenges that will take a considerable time to overcome and may present some that perhaps we have not even encountered yet, sadly.

Almost all families have been affected either directly or indirectly by the virus. Indeed, the development of a vaccine is quite simply a matter of life and death for some, including those who are vulnerable and high-risk and those who are desperately waiting on a return to normality.

Amidst the challenges that we have faced, I welcome the recent breakthrough in establishing a safe and effective vaccine. We all must hope that this is the turning point, as the Minister said, on the road to recovery. That was echoed right across Members' contributions today.

Central to the fight against COVID-19 is our capacity to research, trial and develop a vaccine. From day one, as mentioned, the United Kingdom has been a leading influence in the global effort to develop a vaccine, and, to that end, we can be proud and thankful for local companies such as Almac, which is in my constituency, for their key role in the clinical trials that led to the first effective vaccines. That is an incredible contribution from the scientific field here in Northern Ireland.

The United Kingdom boasts one of the world's largest vaccine order books per head of population, securing early access to over 355 million vaccine doses through agreements with seven different developers at various stages of trials. Northern Ireland alone is projected to account for a share of nearly four million vaccines from phase 3 of trials from BioNTech, Pfizer and AstraZeneca.

With that supply network in place, it is now essential that Northern Ireland develops a decisive action plan, as outlined by the Minister, on a roll-out of a vaccine so that the wider public and those who are most vulnerable can get the protection that they urgently need. Some Members made reference to that in their contribution. I echo the points about a clear communications plan — I think that that was mentioned by Órlaithí Flynn and others — in order to ensure the safe roll-out of a vaccine and to address some of the concerns that people will, rightly, have about the speed of its development.

Mr McGrath: I thank the Member for giving way. Do you agree that, alongside the plan that there is going to be, there needs to be one for easing the regulations, although obviously not immediately for all the regulations? People need to have hope that, as we start the vaccine process, we will also start to have the road back to normality. People may have a concern that we are going to be looking at a vaccine that may take until the summer to deliver, and they are keen to get back to some sense of normality soon.

Mr Buckley: Absolutely, and I thank the Member for his intervention. It is vital that the news of and potential roll-out of a vaccine brings hope about some form of normality in the short term for those many businesses and people right across your constituency and mine who have faced the realities of lockdown and its effects on their business and livelihood.

The action plan must be strong and ambitious, detailing how workforce requirements can be met and how to maximise the number of premises where vaccinations can be administered. Members right across the House made reference to the different types of community settings that have already played a vital role, but, in anticipation of a vaccine, we must be strong and ambitious in how we can mass vaccinate our population in order to ensure that we put an end to this disastrous saga of lockdown and COVID-19.

It is essential that external professional logistical expertise is appointed to lead on a vaccination programme. We simply cannot get this wrong. I welcome the appointment of Patricia Donnelly and the detail of the decisive plan that the Minister outlined. At the Committee on Thursday, I would like to hear how the logistical expertise of the personnel that are involved can be part of that solution with the task force.

With that in mind, we must emphasise that any vaccination programme that is put in place be dynamic and flexible owing to the fact that it will be administered in a range of different settings to patients whose circumstances will, inevitably, differ. That point was highlighted quite well by Sinéad Ennis about those in a home setting who have not been able to access community facilities because of PHA advice.

I welcome that the initial recommendation set out by the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation prioritises healthcare and care staff to be among the first to receive access to vaccines.

It is crucial that that be upheld, given the vulnerability of those whom they care for and the grave consequences of the infection being in such settings.

We must take into account the needs of conscientious objectors to vaccines and respect their right to choose. That is vital. While we sell the message of hope, we all must bear it in mind that there are conscientious objectors.

Ensuring that there are enough hands on deck to deliver and administer a vaccine — indeed, some may require two doses weeks apart, as outlined by Alex Easton — is critical to the success of the programme. At a time when the health service's capacity is under pressure, the deployment of personnel, be they from the Ministry of Defence or elsewhere, to explore the logistics of rolling out a vaccine in NI is a welcome and constructive development.

There is absolutely no doubt that the distribution of a COVID-19 vaccine is a large logistical, operational challenge, but it is one that we must act on now and be adequately prepared for. Northern Ireland cannot lag behind any other region or country in its preparations. The first seemingly insurmountable challenge has been overcome. The sun is finally setting on what has been a horrendous 2020. The glimmers of a new dawn await our nation, and I hope that the Executive and, indeed, the world grasp the opportunity with both hands.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly welcomes the recent breakthrough in efforts to establish a safe and effective COVID-19 vaccine; highlights the importance of Northern Ireland retaining full access to the UK Government's supply network, including national distribution plans; stresses that this approach provides the best means of protecting the wider public as soon as possible; believes a professional expert should be appointed to lead on the vaccination programme in order to ensure it is available to front-line staff and those most vulnerable in Northern Ireland at the same time as the rest of the UK; and calls on the Minister of Health to outline a clear action plan for the roll-out, starting before the end of December 2020, of a COVID-19 vaccine in Northern Ireland.

Adjourned at 5.27 pm.

Northern Ireland Assembly

Monday 7 December 2020

The Assembly met at 12.00 noon (Mr Speaker in the Chair).

Members observed two minutes' silence.

Assembly Business

Mr Stalford: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. There are conventions and practices, sir, on the answering of questions tabled by Members. On 2 November, I tabled a question to the Minister of Health, asking him which procedures, other than cancer and heart operations, have been postponed for patients as a consequence of the pandemic. It is now 7 December. Can you guide me as to how I can get a timely answer from a Minister to a very important question?

Mr Speaker: Thank you, Mr Stalford. You are aware that I have limited authority to address those matters. Standing Orders state that Ministers should respond to queries and letters from all Members and that all Ministers are accountable to Members. You have made your point on the record. There are other opportunities for you to follow that up through other forms of questions and so on. The Member has made his point. I always encourage Ministers to respond in a timely manner to all Members' questions at all times.

Mr Givan: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. I am looking for your advice to Members as to how we can seek responses and what the protocol is in light of the Justice Minister's decision not only to register an interest on a policy issue but to recuse herself from that policy responsibility, which has been delegated to the permanent secretary to take key policy decisions. That is unprecedented in Northern Ireland's devolved history; it has never happened before. What are the protocols for Members when seeking responses on that issue, particularly in light of the fact that the permanent secretary does not have speaking rights in the Assembly to deal with a very serious issue?

Mr Speaker: The Member is aware that I have not had an opportunity to look at that. I do not know much about the background, but I know that all Ministers are responsible and accountable to the House for matters that are within the remit of their Department. Whether or not they have delegated authority to a particular civil servant or official to take certain matters forward, the Minister is still accountable to the House and will always remain so. I hope that that satisfies the Member.

Ministerial Statements

Intergovernmental Agreement on Criminal Justice Cooperation

Mr Speaker: I have received notice from the Minister of Justice that she wishes to make a statement. Before I call the Minister, I remind Members that, in light of the social distancing being observed by the parties, the Speaker's ruling that Members must be in the Chamber to hear a statement if they wish to ask a question has been relaxed. Members still have to make sure that their name is on the speaking list if they wish to be called. They can do that by rising in their place as well as by notifying the Business Office or the Speaker's Table directly. I remind Members to be concise, please, in asking their questions. I also remind Members that, in accordance with long-established procedure, points of order will not normally be taken during a statement or in the period for questions thereafter.

Mrs Long (The Minister of Justice): With your permission, Mr Speaker, I wish to make a statement regarding a bilateral meeting under the auspices of the intergovernmental agreement (IGA) on cooperation on criminal justice matters, which was held virtually on Friday 27 November 2020. This was my first such meeting with Helen McEntee TD, the Minister for Justice, at which I represented the Executive. I intend to continue the practice, which was introduced by former Justice Minister David Ford, of making periodic statements to keep the Assembly informed of meetings held under the auspices of the agreement.

The intergovernmental agreement on cooperation on criminal justice matters provides the framework for North/South cooperation in this area. It provides for meetings between the Justice Ministers, North and South. Such engagement is very important. To a large extent, we share the same justice problems, issues and concerns. This was the first IGA ministerial meeting to take place since November 2016. That long gap came about as a consequence of the period of the Assembly's inactivity and the recent Irish general elections.

The re-establishment of the ministerial meetings is particularly timely given the known impacts that the coronavirus pandemic has had on the justice systems and the as yet unknown consequences that will flow from Brexit. It is an extremely useful forum to maintain relationships with our counterparts in Ireland across a wide range of justice issues. The IGA joint work provides a focus on justice issues related to management of offenders, support for victims, knowledge exchange between our forensic services, engagement on youth justice developments and policing of diverse communities. Five joint project advisory groups provide the mechanism by which the work in each of those areas is taken forward.

In spite of the hiatus in the publication of a work programme, Minister McEntee and I were impressed by the progress made in those areas since the last IGA meeting. A work programme is normally prepared and published annually under the auspices of the IGA. That requires ministerial sign-off, and I am pleased to announce today that a new work programme has been prepared under the terms of the IGA for 2020-21. The programme was signed off jointly by Minister McEntee and me at the IGA ministerial meeting.

I have spoken often about the importance of working together across the justice system, the Executive and the voluntary and community sector to implement the recommendations of the Gillen report in a way that delivers the reform envisaged. I therefore particularly welcomed the opportunity at the IGA meeting to share the progress that we are making on the implementation of the Gillen review, highlighting some of the current key initiatives that will help to transform and improve the experience of victims and witnesses.

Those initiatives include the introduction of the Committal Reform Bill to the Assembly on 3 November, which will help to reduce delay and the time taken to deal with serious sexual offences cases by removing the use of oral evidence as part of the committal process. It will also avoid vulnerable victims having to give oral evidence and be cross-examined more than once in the process. In addition, the Bill will introduce new arrangements whereby relevant cases can bypass the committal process entirely, thus ensuring that those cases are transferred to the Crown Court at an earlier stage.

I also updated Minister McEntee on the establishment of a new pilot scheme that will provide publicly funded, independent legal advice to adult complainants in serious sexual offence cases. The service will be available from the point that a crime is reported until the commencement of the trial. I recognise that the criminal justice processes themselves can be traumatic for complainants in those cases. I am confident that the new initiative, which should be operational by 1 April next year, will help to support complainants as their cases progress and increase their confidence in the criminal justice system.

We also discussed the work that my Department is taking forward on providing remote evidence facilities in Belfast and Craigavon. I expect those facilities to be operational within weeks, enabling vulnerable adult and child victims and witnesses to provide their evidence to the court remotely. That important step forward will also improve the experience of complainants and vulnerable witnesses.

It will minimise the likelihood of their being re-traumatised by having to meet the accused or give evidence in a daunting courtroom environment at what is undoubtedly a traumatic and distressing time in their life.

Minister McEntee and I agreed on continuing collaboration and on a work programme at official level that is aimed at promoting shared learning on support for victims. So many of the issues and challenges relating to victims and witnesses are mirrored across our two jurisdictions. In each jurisdiction, we face challenges around supporting victims and witnesses in the criminal justice system; providing timely and accurate information to victims that is relevant to their case; and ensuring that victims and witnesses are consistently able to access their entitlements under their respective charters. There is much merit in continued cross-border cooperation on those issues, and I welcome the ongoing commitment to close cooperation through the support for victims programme advisory group.

We also discussed the impact of domestic violence and the exacerbation of incidents of domestic violence that have arisen during the COVID-19 pandemic. That is something that both Ministers and the two police services see as a priority area of work. We expect some further areas of shared work to develop in that area following the introduction of the Domestic Abuse and Family Proceedings Act in Northern Ireland.

I have attached a copy of the 2020-21 work programme, which was agreed at our meeting on 27 November, to the printed version of the statement. It will also be published on the relevant departmental websites following the statement.

We had an important discussion on the challenges being faced by justice organisations in both jurisdictions as a result of Brexit. As Ministers, we are committed to ensuring that we maintain and build on the good cross-border cooperation that exists, as well as to sharing standards, practices and procedures in areas such as operational engagement, forensics and data exchange. It is critical that those important areas of joint work can continue as we approach the end of the transition period following exit from the European Union.

I will also provide Members with an update on the Joint Agency Task Force (JATF), which was instituted under the Fresh Start Agreement and is led by senior officers from the Police Service of Northern Ireland, and Garda Síochána, the Revenue Commissioners and HM Revenue and Customs. A number of other organisations, including the National Crime Agency (NCA) and the Irish Criminal Assets Bureau (CAB), are also involved in operational activity. That is overseen by a strategic oversight group and an operations coordination group. Six initial priority areas of action were agreed: rural crime; child sexual exploitation; financial crime; illicit drugs; excise fraud; and human trafficking. The task force has advanced our cross-border operational response. At the meeting, we received a copy of the latest six-monthly JATF report, which covers until September 2020. In spite of the coronavirus pandemic, cross-border investigations have continued across a number of crime types, including burglary, armed robbery, hijacking, ATM thefts, livestock thefts and cruelty to animals.

Human trafficking remains a concern in both jurisdictions. A number of cross-border investigations remain active, with potential victims having been identified. The PSNI modern slavery and human trafficking unit (MSHTU) and an Garda Síochána human trafficking investigation and coordination unit (HTICU) recorded 76 persons who presented during the period as potential victims of human trafficking in Ireland and Northern Ireland. During the reporting period, the coronavirus pandemic, because of the international restrictions on the movement of people, has negatively affected the illicit production facilities of organised crime groups (OCGs). That is assessed as a temporary effect, however, and illicit production remains a significant threat. A number of cross-border excise fraud investigations are currently being pursued by the authorities on both sides of the border.

A total of 15 financial crime investigations are ongoing under the auspices of the cross-border JATF. The investigations are being conducted by the PSNI, an Garda Síochána, the CAB and the NCA, supported by HMRC and the Revenue Commissioners, and they incorporate a range of criminal offending, including drug trafficking, cigarette smuggling, modern slavery and human trafficking, theft and fraud. In addition to criminal investigation powers, non-conviction-based asset recovery powers are being utilised in both jurisdictions to disrupt OCGs and recover the proceeds of crime.

The reporting period witnessed three large law enforcement agency interventions on both sides of the Irish Sea. Those resulted in the seizure of approximately €9.7 million of drugs. Minister McEntee and I will take receipt of the formal six-month update from the Joint Agency Task Force at our next meeting, and I look forward to being able to report on the further success of the task force to the Assembly in May.

In conclusion, I am committed to maintaining our excellent criminal justice cooperation with Ireland between our respective law enforcement agencies. The strong levels of engagement between our respective criminal justice agencies is all the more important as Brexit negotiations reach a conclusion and we begin our exit from European Union structures.

Mr Givan (The Chairperson of the Committee for Justice): I thank the Minister for the statement and for coming to the House to provide it.

Since long before Brexit, there has been a crime bonanza on the border that has been exploited by criminal and paramilitary organisations. A lot of the issues that the Minister referred to have been taking place for many years. Did the Minister discuss with her counterpart in the Republic of Ireland the measures that will be taken post-Brexit that will demonstrate a serious level of engagement to tackle the criminality that has existed for many years at the border?

Mrs Long: The Chair of the Committee is correct to say that there has been a history of criminality on both sides of the border. That is true of almost all border communities right across the globe, because people will work to exploit differences at the interface in order to continue with criminal activities.

It will be a matter for the future security partnership, if such a partnership can be agreed, to ensure that we maintain the kind of streamlined, effective and efficient cross-border working that we currently have. However, I am reassured that the work that has been done by my Department and the Department of Justice in the Republic of Ireland builds on the good cooperation and collaboration that we have. Through the joint agency task force, there is a real opportunity to bring together revenue and customs interventions as well as criminal justice interventions in order to ensure that we are able to actively and cooperatively deal with cross-border crime.

Ms Dillon: I thank the Minister for her statement. I appreciate some of the issues that were outlined.

For the future, it might be beneficial for us to get a wee bit more information about what is coming from the other side, meaning what is being said by the Justice Minister in the Twenty-six Counties about the updates that Department is giving us.

Will the Minister give some more detail about the new pilot scheme and the legal advice for adult complainants in cases of serious sexual offence, including the number of complainants that might have access to it, where it will be based and how long it will run for?

Mrs Long: I am happy to write to the Member with further details of that. My statement is obviously about my engagement with Minister McEntee. She will make a comparable statement to the Dáil in due course.

Mrs D Kelly: I welcome the Minister's positive engagement with her counterpart in the South, in particular on sexual and domestic violence. However, it is very important, given the week and the day that are in it, that we examine a wee bit more closely the operational engagement of forensic and data exchange in the absence of the agreements that will be lost to us when Britain leaves the EU. I know that there is unprecedented cooperation in the exchange of data on forensics, fingerprints, DNA and the European arrest warrant between the PSNI and an Garda Síochána and the two Ministers. What are the gaps and how will they be filled in the immediate aftermath of the UK exit?

Mrs Long: I thank the Member for her question. As she is aware, there are two main priorities for the Department of Justice. The first is to have an effective and efficient replacement for the European arrest warrant should we not have access to it beyond our exit from the EU. The second priority is for data adequacy agreements to be sought. Data adequacy agreements have been sought by other countries, particularly in relation to General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR), so there is an effective way forward on that. However, we will be the first to seek a data adequacy agreement when it comes to justice measures, so it is, as yet, untested territory. However, both Departments have worked closely together in order to ensure that we have effective mechanisms to continue with our cooperation on a legal basis in the interim while those things are done.

However, it is our view that, should there not be a future security partnership agreed as a result of Brexit, it is important that the Home Office takes forward as a matter of urgency bilateral negotiations under the protocol with the Irish Government in order to ensure that all the various justice measures that may be compromised by Brexit can be streamlined and improved through a bilateral agreement.

Mr Beattie: I thank the Minister for a really useful statement. I apologise if I am straying into the operational side, but I would like to hear her view on this, although I appreciate that she may not be able to go into detail. As you know, a lot of cross-border crime is organised by paramilitaries: financial crime, illicit drugs, excise fraud and human trafficking. How will the JATF coordinate with our own paramilitary task force and feed in to the action plan on paramilitarism, criminality and organised crime?

Mrs Long: The Member makes a very good point. As he knows, the PSNI is the main coordinating body for the paramilitary and organised crime task force. So the work done through the JATF will also be reflected in work on paramilitarism more generally. The Chief Constable is best placed to discuss operational matters for the coordination. However, as the Member will be aware, the Department is also doing work to enhance our capability in areas such as civil recovery under unexplained wealth orders, the freezing of criminal assets in banks, and forfeiture orders, and that will help in the fight against organised crime. As he rightly says, the division between organised crime and paramilitarism is often paper-thin, where it exists at all.

Mr Blair: I thank the Minister for her statement. Cross-border cooperation and policing is a crucial matter at all times, but it is particularly so in the context of Brexit uncertainties. The statement and the planned work programme provided today refer to cooperation on operational engagement, forensics and data exchange. Is similar cooperation taking place at a local level with, for example, neighbourhood teams and district policing teams?

Mrs Long: I thank the Member for his question. It is a consideration that the Department discussed with both the Chief Commissioner for An Garda Síochána and the Chief Constable of the PSNI. There is very good local cooperation between community policing teams on their concerns such as community crime, tensions, fear of crime, and tackling local neighbourhood issues in communities.

As we all recognise, people in border communities live cross-border lives, and what impacts on people on one side of the border will impact on communities on the other side. There is good ongoing working, and the Department believes that that will continue post exit from the European Union and the transition period largely through cooperation at local level between the various policing teams. We have seen that, perhaps to a greater degree than usual, because of policing on COVID-19 issues and trying to cooperate on the use of resources. It is very important that we continue with that on-the-ground cooperation as well as the high-level cooperation that is taken forward with Ministers for operational planning.

Mr Dunne: I thank the Minister for her statement. We welcome the commitment in the joint agency task force that tackling human trafficking is one of the six priority areas. However, there is real concern about the very low number of convictions secured for human trafficking offences, with only nine individuals prosecuted for trafficking and four convictions secured. What more can be done to tackle human trafficking on a cross-border basis?

Mrs Long: First, it is worth acknowledging that the JATF can do a number of things. For example, previous reports have indicated areas where collaborative working has added value. Not only does it increase the ability of law enforcement to target, intercept and seize tangible criminal assets, but to interrupt and disrupt criminal activities, particularly those that will lead to crime groups having financial incentives for their work. Human trafficking falls within that category because, unfortunately, those involved in human trafficking do not treat people with human dignity but as commodities to be traded, and it is hugely important. There has also been enhanced identification of organised crime groups that work across the border, better communication and stronger relationships between law enforcement North and South, and that is also important.

Whilst there have previously been strong cross-border links, the ability to run coordinated operations has a particular value, particularly with issues like organised crime and human trafficking. There are also opportunities for enhanced and streamlined information- and intelligence-sharing and opportunities for joint training, all of which will impact on human trafficking.

It has to be said that organisations that, as part of their organised crime networks, are engaged in trafficking anything at all will use those routes to traffic drugs, contraband, cigarettes and whatever it might be, and they will use them just as readily to traffic individuals. We need to be very conscious of that. Even the work at a local level in creating more vigilance and more awareness in local communities has been hugely important in exposing suspicious activity, which can then be reported on either side of the border and escalated so that it can be looked into.

Ms Rogan: The Minister has noted that both Ministers and the two police services see domestic abuse as a priority area of shared work, and that is welcome. A particular focus should be on those living, working and residing in the wider border regions. Can the Minister outline some details of her discussions with Minister McEntee about any joint work that was done to tackle domestic abuse during the recent pandemic?

Mrs Long: First of all, quite a lot of work was done on both sides of the border in terms of communication, and that was a key aspect of this, because people will listen to the media, will access Twitter and will access social media and the mainstream media in much the same way regardless of which side of the border that they live on. Coordination of our being able, for example, to bring forward more advertising to raise awareness has also been important.

As the Member may be aware, the Republic of Ireland has also had the O'Malley review of domestic abuse and vulnerable witnesses, particularly in the prosecution of sexual offences. That work very much mirrors the work that was done by Gillen, particularly around sexual offences, and it has been good for us, for example, to be able to look at areas where we have been piloting certain approaches to dealing with vulnerable witnesses and then feeding that through to our counterparts in the South. There are other areas where they are piloting the issues and we are able to learn from their experience. That kind of cooperation and collaboration, whether it is in relation to domestic abuse or sexual offences, is something that we need to build on in the coming weeks and months.

Across this island, there are clearly people who are living in fear in their own homes and are subject to domestic abuse and violence. We want that to stop, and it is very clear that there is a coordinated effort on both sides of the border to ensure that, first of all, we have the right legislative vehicles to ensure that abuse is captured and also that we have the right coordination when it comes to, for example, training of officers who will be dealing with this on the front line. That is another area where cross-border cooperation can be very helpful.

Mr Newton: I thank the Minister for her statement. It was extremely useful. I note, Minister, that cruelty to animals was discussed with your counterpart. Specifically, was the cruel practice of puppy farming discussed? I note that the mid-Ulster PSNI is running a campaign in this area that it has titled Paws for Thought, and it is indicating in that campaign that it believes organised crime groups are involved in puppy farming. Indeed, the PSNI indicated to me that it is concerned about puppy smuggling across the border. If puppy farming was discussed, perhaps the Minister will let us know, or, if it was not discussed, will she add it to the next agenda?

Mrs Long: It was not particularly focused on at the meeting, though we did talk more widely about animal cruelty and animal welfare, particularly issues around, for example, organised crime group involvement in the theft of animals, the smuggling of animals or the abuse of animals through things like dogfighting. However, I am more than happy to add puppy farms and, indeed, puppy smuggling to the list of issues that we talk about, because it is clear that organised crime groups will diversify into whatever sector they can, and if they have no consideration when it comes to human trafficking, they certainly have no conscience when it comes to how they treat animals.

Ms Dolan: I thank the Minister for her statement. I note and welcome the Department's work on providing remote evidence facilities for vulnerable adults and child victims and witnesses.

Will the Minister agree that the Barnahus model is the gold standard for supporting child victims and witnesses, and can she confirm if there is any work ongoing to introduce such a model here?

12.30 pm

Mrs Long: Yes, I am happy to confirm that we are looking at the Barnahus model, and we would like to see it introduced, in line with the recommendations of the Gillen report. We are building, first, the remote evidence centres, because that is the first bit that we are going to trial and pilot here. That will be done in Craigavon and in Belfast initially, and we will then be able to test the effectiveness of those operations and learn from that pilot. It would then be our intention to look at the wider issues around the Barnahus model to see whether there are more things from it that we can bring forward in due course. However, I would like to believe that, at some point, we will be in a situation where we will not have vulnerable victims and witnesses having to give evidence in court at any of our courthouses in such sensitive and difficult trials.

Mr O'Toole: Minister, thank you for this update. It is, however, mildly perplexing that, with just a couple of weeks until the end of the transition period, Brexit has just three short paragraphs in this statement. To that end, and given the importance of the issues that have been outlined in relation to the end of the transition period, first, can the Minister update us on her reasonable worst-case scenario, which may have been presented to her by officials, for what happens with cross-border law enforcement if there is not a deal by the end of this year?

Secondly, can I invite her to set out her position today to people who are still considering that no deal is a good outcome for any part of the United Kingdom? Can I offer her the opportunity now to make her position and that of the Northern Ireland Executive clear to people who are still toying with that idea?

Mrs Long: I thank the Member for the opportunity to do so. I would not wish people to think that, because it is three short paragraphs in my statement, it did not get sufficient attention at the meeting. I can assure the Member that it certainly did.

The first thing that I want to say is that a lot of preparatory work has been done in my Department and with the Department of Justice in the South on how we can reinforce our cooperation, how we can ensure that we are able to continue with joint operations and, indeed, how we can ensure that we are able to continue to share data on a legal footing because, of course, goodwill is not enough when it comes to Brexit. However, it is clear that significant obstacles would be presented to us in both delay and in cost were we not to have a fully agreed future security partnership. As we know, that future security partnership is inextricably linked to having a wider agreement.

I have no difficulty in saying that I believe that leaving the European Union without an agreement would be an act of folly and recklessness. It would do harm not just to the economy but to the justice system, and it would inhibit our ability to cooperate. It is important for people to recognise that many of the fallback positions that we will take as a safety-net position when we exit the European Union, if we were to do so without a future security partnership, would leave us reliant on protocols and on conventions that were agreed in the 1950s.

I have to say that it is difficult to fight crime in 2020 with the tools that were available in the 1950s. Those tools are still operational and are still effective. They would still allow us to, for example, extradite people, but the length of time that it would take to do so would multiply greatly. One of the key indicators that we are trying to address in the Department of Justice is delay in the court system. It seems to me to be utterly bizarre that we would introduce, potentially, an additional two to three years for extradition, during which time, we have to remember, there could be victims and witnesses who are waiting for a trial to take place.

So, on all of those scores, we will do our best to work within structures that are available to us to keep people safe and to protect the local community. No one should be under any illusions about the loss of capacity that could result if we do not get agreements around things like access to the European arrest warrant through the future security partnership and access to the databases such as Prüm and the European criminal records information system (ECRIS) that we will otherwise lose and, indeed, if we do not get access to a data-adequacy agreement. It would have direct implications for the administration of justice, mainly in cost and in time, although we may be able to work at a slower pace in some areas. The PSNI and an Garda Síochána have done a huge amount of work to ensure that they will be able, under existing arrangements and future arrangements, to continue to share data as far as possible. You will understand that, until we have clarity about what is expected, it is very difficult to give people the reassurance that they will rightly seek on these issues.

Mr Frew: Public protection arrangements in Northern Ireland (PPANI) manage sexual offenders, and there have always been concerns, problems and blind spots about offenders travelling across the border multiple times. That has nothing to do with Brexit, of course. Will the Minister enlighten the House on improvements over the last number of years on the management of sexual offenders between two jurisdictions?

Mrs Long: I thank the Member for his question. He will be aware that there was a meeting of various public protection agencies last week, including the Probation Board and the Probation Service. I was able and very pleased to attend that meeting prior to meeting Minister McEntee under the IGA. The public protection advisory group (PPAG) carries out its work in a positive, progressive and professional manner, with representatives from probation, the police, prisons and the Justice Departments in Northern Ireland and Ireland. Staff training and development opportunities are being explored across the justice agencies on a cross-border basis, and PPANI-related training on domestic violence and sexual offenders is being progressed and developed.

The annual PPAG seminar is now in its eleventh year, so considerable work has been done in that time. The theme for this year is emerging North/South needs and the development of criminal justice practice. It was hosted by colleagues in the South via a virtual platform on 27 November, and Minister McEntee and I were present at the event. I was encouraged by the level of cooperation, on a cross-border basis, between all the agencies. It is absolutely crucial, as the Member rightly said, that we continue to share data, evidence and intelligence to keep people safe in their communities.

Ms Kimmins: My question follows on from the previous question on sexual violence and the impacts across both jurisdictions. Minister, based on what you have said, will you commit to the development of an all-island strategy to tackle sexual violence, mainly for the issues that have been outlined.

Mrs Long: Close coordination and cooperation are very important. Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland are at different stages in the roll-out of our various strategies. We try to keep pace with each other. I certainly have no objection to an additional strategy if it were to bring added value. However, the working groups already established under the five-strand approach to the IGA are probably more effective because they drill down at operational level to what cooperation and collaboration we can bring about and what learning we can take from each other. I am happy to talk to the Member further if she believes that additional value can be drawn from having a more coordinated approach.

Mr Durkan: I thank the Minister for her statement, which heralds the success of law enforcement agency interventions, which have seen the seizure of almost €10 million worth of drugs. Such seizures are very welcome in reducing the amount of drugs in our communities. In my opinion, real success should be measured on the arrest and apprehension of big-time drug dealers and the dismantling of drug gangs who continue to flood our communities with dangerous drugs that ruin lives. Does the Minister agree, and does she know how many arrests were made with regard to these interventions?

Mrs Long: I do not have those figures, but, if I can obtain them, I am happy to write to the Member. The figures will be held in different formats in different jurisdictions, but I will endeavour to get some indication. I agree entirely with the Member that it is not enough simply to take the drugs out of the community. That is a huge issue, but it is also important to take the drug dealers out of the community and ensure that they face justice. All partners in the JATF are absolutely committed to that task. Part of the strategy is to disrupt criminal gangs so that they can no longer profit from dealing in drugs or, indeed, human misery via human trafficking. However, the Member is quite right that it is also important that those responsible are brought before the courts. Unfortunately, disrupting their activity is often not sufficient to disabuse them of their interest in continuing with it.

Ms Anderson: Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as an ráiteas. I thank the Minister for her statement. As you know, Minister, I concur with your view that Brexit is folly, reckless and wrong.

Picking up on what you said in a previous answer, am I right in understanding that losing access to key EU justice and security cooperation arrangements means that the North will be left with substandard tools to tackle cross-border crime, that we could become more susceptible to criminality at the end of the transition period and that there will be no good Brexit, whether there is a deal or no deal?

Mrs Long: The Member makes an important point but I want to reinforce a couple of things. First and foremost, we have worked very hard within the Department of Justice and with the Department of Justice in the South to ensure that, wherever possible, we are able to find alternative means of doing the work that we currently do, because we do not want people to feel unsafe, nor do we want to send a message to criminals that life will be any easier post the Brexit transition period than it is currently. Our intention and that of all the agencies involved in cross-border cooperation is that we will find those alternative means. However, if we do not have a justice and security partnership fully negotiated between the UK and the EU, there will potentially be gaps in the system. That could affect our access to certain databases of information held in the EU and some of the measures and tools available in the EU. That would drive us back to relying on older conventions, such as the Lugano convention from 1957.

Those conventions work — I do not want people to think that they do not — but they take much longer. For example, an extradition under the Lugano convention can take many, many more months than an extradition under a European arrest warrant. That multiplication factor has an impact on those accused of crime and on the ability of alleged victims of crime to seek justice. It also has a cost implication because it is much more onerous for us to manage. There are genuine challenges there.

If a future security partnership is not agreed as part of the current talks, we fall into the situation where it would be for the UK Government to enter bilateral negotiations with the Irish Government to try to find a way forward. We would certainly lobby very strongly, and we have been lobbying the Home Office and others, that that should be the first priority and that the first country whose door they should knock for a bilateral agreement is Ireland. It is, by far, our and the UK's largest customer when it comes to issues like extradition and data sharing. It would make sense to start with Ireland and work from there, rather than starting elsewhere and working backwards.

We are very clear that there are a number of routes to get to where we want to be, which is good, continued cooperation. However, there are a number of obstacles to be overcome in order to get there. It is clear to me that huge energy and expenditure are involved in trying to get us to where we want to be. That is regrettable when that money and attention could instead be focused on the job that other Members referred to: trying to put criminals out of business.

Mr Allister: I read in this statement that the intergovernmental agreement proclaims a focus on support for victims. Does that extend to seeking truth for IRA victims who died because the Dublin Government assisted in the spawning of the Provisional IRA? Does it extend to those who failed to obtain justice because the Dublin Government denied extradition for decades and allowed collusion between the gardaí and the Provisional IRA? Does any of that interest the Minister enough to have pressed her Dublin counterpart for truth and justice for such victims, whom she should represent?

Mrs Long: I thank the Member for his question. No, it does not extend to that particular issue. It is about support for victims who are going through the justice system and are involved in live cases. Of course, some of those will be legacy cases, and therefore it would extend to some of those cases.

The Member asked whether it interested me sufficiently that I would be willing to press my Irish counterparts on that. The answer to that, of course, is yes, because I believe that truth and justice for all victims matter and that legacy issues need to be comprehensively dealt with. I have stood in this place many times, and I assure the Member that, wherever collusion may come from, whoever may be behind it, wherever the information comes from and whether it requires a public inquiry or another form of legacy investigation, I am in favour of that happening.

I reassure the Member that I, not only as leader of my party but as Minister of Justice, recognise fully that our not being able to resolve legacy issues is having a toxic effect on our ability to deliver justice in many communities in the here and now. It is polluting our ability, through the new start that we had for policing and justice, to move forward. It is therefore incumbent on the British and Irish Governments and all the parties in the Chamber to find a comprehensive way forward, be that through the Stormont House Agreement, which is what we signed up to, or through an alternative proposition that is to be put to us and that we have yet to see. It is important, and incumbent on all of us, to find a way forward that delivers for all victims by providing truth and justice. It cannot continue to be dealt with in a piecemeal fashion. That is not fair on victims, and they should be at the forefront of our consideration of those matters.

Mr Speaker: That concludes questions on the statement. Members, please take your ease for a moment or two. Thank you.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr McGlone] in the Chair)

North/South Ministerial Council: Inland Waterways

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): I have received notice from the Minister for Infrastructure that she wishes to make a statement.

Ms Mallon (The Minister for Infrastructure): With your permission, Mr Deputy Speaker, in compliance with section 52 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, I will make a statement about the North/South Ministerial Council (NSMC) inland waterways meeting that was held on 11 November 2020 in the North/South Ministerial Council joint secretariat headquarters in Armagh and by videoconference. The Executive were represented by me, as Minister for Infrastructure, and Robin Swann, the Minister of Health. The Irish Government were represented by Darragh O'Brien TD, Minister for Housing, Local Government and Heritage, and Malcolm Noonan TD, Minister of State for Heritage and Electoral Reform. The statement has been agreed with Minister Swann, and I am making it on behalf of us both.

The meeting was chaired by Minister O'Brien and dealt with issues relating to inland waterways and the constituent agency, Waterways Ireland. The following topics were discussed and decisions taken, where appropriate. First, we noted the response of Waterways Ireland to the challenges posed by COVID-19. The Council was advised that there had been an increase in user numbers along towpaths and trails during the period of COVID-19-related restrictions and noted the role of Waterways Ireland in leading a user-engagement project through the Network of Inland Waterways of Europe (NIWE) to achieve a greater understanding of the increased recreational use of inland waterways since the onset of the COVID-19 pandemic. The Council also noted the increasing popularity of inland waterways as a holiday destination for the domestic market. The Council further noted Waterways Ireland's preparations for Brexit in the context of its status as a North/South implementation body.

We noted the comprehensive progress report provided by Waterways Ireland that covered matters including the management and maintenance of waterways, capital expenditure projects and an ongoing programme of replacing existing jetties and lock gates and installing new ones along the navigations. Ministers also noted plans for blueway developments and restoration work on the Ulster canal and that Waterways Ireland had successfully hosted the World Canals Conference in Athlone in September 2018.

In terms of corporate governance, the Council noted Waterways Ireland's annual report and accounts for 2016, 2017 and 2018, which have been laid before the Northern Ireland Assembly and both Houses of the Oireachtas. We also noted that Waterways Ireland's annual report and draft accounts for 2019 have been submitted to the Comptrollers and Auditors General in both jurisdictions and, following certification, will be laid before the Assembly and both Houses of the Oireachtas.

The Council approved Waterways Ireland's corporate plan for 2017-2019 and associated business plans, which were prepared in accordance with the guidance issued by the Department of Public Expenditure and Reform and the Department of Finance, and it recommended the budget provision for each.

We noted that Waterways Ireland's 2020-22 corporate plan and 2020 and 2021 business plans have been prepared and, following necessary approvals, will be submitted to the NSMC for approval before the end of 2020.

We also noted the process for the recruitment of the chief executive officer for Waterways Ireland. The Council consented to a number of property disposals and received a progress report on the restoration of the Ulster canal and the development of the Ulster canal greenway. We noted the progress that was achieved in the restoration of the Ulster canal, including the completion of phase 1 of the restoration from Upper Lough Erne to Castle Sanderson, the ongoing work and future plans for the restoration from Clones to Clonfad and the development of the Ulster canal greenway.

The Council agreed to hold its next NSMC inland waterways meeting in early 2021.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): Go raibh maith agat, a Aire. We will now move to Michelle McIlveen, Chair of the Committee for Infrastructure.

Miss McIlveen (The Chairperson of the Committee for Infrastructure): Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker. I thank the Minister for her statement. While I understand that there is a format for recording those meetings, it is somewhat disappointing that, given the time that has lapsed since the last update and the work that has been carried out in the interim by Waterways Ireland, all that we are receiving today is a list of noted reports. That said, will the Minister outline the main priorities for Waterways Ireland in Northern Ireland in 2021 and provide details of the properties that the Council has agreed to dispose of? Will she indicate whether she would be prepared to share the reports with the Committee?

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for her question. The properties that were disposed of included a lease agreement for the airspace at Grand canal dock; the portion of the cantilevered office development of Waterways House, which extends over Grand canal dock; three separate lease agreements for the lease of airspace at Grand canal quay for the redevelopment of Bolands Mill, which will encroach into Waterways Ireland airspace over Grand canal quay at Barrow Street, Dublin; to facilitate the development of a pedestrian boardwalk and 10 residential balconies and two cultural exhibition balconies; and a 999-year lease of airspace at Grand canal quay for the development of the Mill 2 Dock Mill apartment development Barrow Street, Dublin into apartments with balconies and an incorporated lower deck.

Also disposed of was a lease of airspace at Grand canal dock for the portion of the cantilevered office development at the Malthouse, which extends over Grand canal dock; an easement of the installation of a polyethylene pipe at Rathangan across the Grand canal to facilitate storms outfall; a lease for the erection of a pedestrian bridge to service a new railway station at Pelletstown railway development, Dublin 15; an easement for an installation of a docked housing; and a power cable to provide power to the rail lines at Pelletstown railway development, Dublin 15. The Council also disposed of a 35-year lease for a revised area of land to facilitate the construction of an access gangway and retractable pontoon at Ballyvollane, Mountshannon Road, Annacotty in County Limerick; a lease to facilitate the continued construction of the Royal canal greenway; an easement to facilitate a prescribed right of way to the domestic residents and land at Moyvally, Enfield in County Kildare; an easement to formalise a right of way to access land at Bracklin Little, Kilbeggan in County Offaly; the granting of a 99-year lease and sale of an area of ground along the shoreline at Priors Point, Carrick-on-Shannon, County Leitrim; and an easement to facilitate a right of way to a property at Clogheen, County Kildare, that they purchased from Waterways Ireland.

Also disposed of was an easement to formalise a right of way to access lands in Mullingar in County Westmeath; an easement in respect of a 500 millimetre diameter and 300 millimetre diameter rising main under the Grand canal using an existing 1,500 millimetre culvert as part of the Upper Liffey Valley sewerage scheme; an easement for surface water and foul sewer pipes under the Royal canal at Branniganstown; an easement to facilitate access to their property at Skirtean, County Kildare; a right-of-way easement to facilitate access to the property at Jigginstown, Naas, County Kildare; and an easement to facilitate access to their property at Rogerstown, Edenderry, County Offaly. It also disposed of a 99-year lease for the erection of a road bridge crossing the Barrow River as part of the Athy distributor road scheme; and the granting of a supplemental lease of an area of Shannon waterway in County Roscommon.

All the disposals were in the South of Ireland. None was contentious. Some were financially significant, and each property is, naturally, subject to valuation prior to disposal to ensure that best value for money is achieved.

I am happy to share the reports with the Committee and with Members.

Ms Ennis: I thank the Minister for her statement. On the issue of waterways, what plans are there for a lifting bridge at Newry southern relief road as well as at Narrow Water to ensure continued access to Newry canal?

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for her question. That issue was not discussed at the meeting. However, the Member will know that I have been engaging with local stakeholders on the issue. Most recently, I met representatives of all political parties in the council to hear their views on a lifting bridge. I am continuing with that focused engagement to ensure that we get the right project for the Newry southern relief road. The Member will also be aware of my commitment to a bridge at Narrow Water.

Mrs D Kelly: I thank the Minister for her statement. She will be aware that, in my constituency, there has been a campaign for many years to extend the Ulster canal to Portadown. I look forward to hearing about that in a future statement. The canal is a commitment in New Decade, New Approach, so can the Minister provide an update on the Ulster canal greenway?

Ms Mallon: I am happy to provide an update on the Ulster canal greenway. As the Member rightly points out, the Ulster canal restoration project is a commitment in New Decade, New Approach, as is the Ulster canal greenway.

Waterways Ireland, in collaboration with Monaghan County Council, Armagh City, Banbridge and Craigavon Borough Council, and East Border Region Ltd, took the lead in submitting an application for INTERREG funding for the project. The application was successful, and just under €5 million was allocated towards the cost of the greenway.

The Ulster canal greenway strategy, devised by Waterways Ireland in collaboration with local authority partners along the Ulster canal corridor, identified 12 potential greenway routes totalling almost 200 km in length, and two of them comprised this project: Smithborough to Monaghan, and Monaghan to Middletown.

The annual socio-economic value of improved health outcomes from local population access to those 200 km of greenway for walking and cycling is estimated at £14.4 million, so they are projects with huge multiple benefits. That fits into my priorities as well in ensuring that we have a green recovery from COVID-19.

Mrs Barton: Thank you, Minister, for your statement. It is quite a large project. What conversations have there been with the Northern Ireland Tourist Board to promote the project in Northern Ireland?

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for her question. Waterways Ireland is committed to working in partnership with local authorities and their tourist representative bodies. The Ulster canal greenway, and the canal itself, are projects that will deliver multiple benefits, not only for physical and mental health but also in attracting visitors to the area, so they are hugely important for their tourism benefits. Waterways Ireland will, no doubt, continue to work with all key partners in the delivery of the project.

1.00 pm

Mr Muir: I thank the Minister for her statement. My question is on the Ulster canal greenway. Phase 2 is Smithborough to Middletown, and the Minister said that that is on course for delivery in 2021. Is the Minister confident that that will occur? Are there any timescales for future phases and completing the entire project?

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his question. I have not received any information on the time frame other than what has been set out, but I am happy to come back to the Member with further details if that does not prove to be correct.

Mr Hilditch: Thank you, Minister, for your statement. Can you advise whether the recruitment competition for the chief executive post has begun? If so, when will it be concluded?

Ms Mallon: The CEO post in Waterways Ireland became vacant with the departure of the former postholder. As a result of the absence of the NSMC at that time, a successor could not be appointed, so the post was filled on an interim basis and with a fixed-term contract. I can confirm to the Member that a recruitment competition was launched by the Public Appointments Service on 23 October; the closing date was 12 November. Following the normal process of shortlisting and interview, the successful candidate will be appointed by the NSMC.

Mr Boylan: Cuirim fáilte roimh ráiteas an Aire inniu. I welcome the Minister's statement and the announcement in relation to the Middletown section. There are question marks over whether it is Middletown to Monaghan and then on to Smithborough. Did that discussion come up on the day, Minister? Is that the whole route? Will the Minister give a commitment to work with local councils to get that project under way as soon as possible? This will be a game changer for Middletown, with big opportunities to promote tourism and everything else. It will certainly help that wee border village.

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his question. I agree that it is a game changer and that there are huge benefits. My understanding of the route is as he has set out, but I am happy to provide further detail to the Member as we move this project forward.

Mr K Buchanan: Minister, I have a rundown of every culvert and pipe in all the counties throughout Ireland, and I appreciate the work that is going on down there. However, can you confirm what the priorities are for Waterways Ireland here in Northern Ireland in 2021 and beyond?

Ms Mallon: Waterways Ireland is obviously about ensuring that we maximise our blue infrastructure. The Member will be aware that, particularly during COVID, we have seen a huge increase in the number of people who are accessing our local heritage and our local blue and green infrastructure. It is about ensuring that that is safe and that we are able to invest in that infrastructure so that we grow it. One of the things that we have seen during COVID is a huge increase in the number of visitors and the number of people who are using this infrastructure as part of their staycations. I would like to see us build on that, and I know that Waterways Ireland is committed to that. It has been engaging across Europe and looking at international best practice to ensure that we are able to showcase our blue infrastructure, our navigations and our canals in a way that ensures maximum benefit to health and well-being, but also for tourism — for people who live here, but also for when we are able to open up again and invite people from around the world to come and see the many assets that we have.

Ms Anderson: Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as an ráiteas. I thank the Minister for her statement. Minister, you said in the statement that you discussed the status of Waterways Ireland. However, given that the North will lose EU oversight, perhaps by the end of today, did the North/South Ministerial Council discuss issues relating to improving and maintaining the quality of Waterways Ireland's waters and protecting that from further environmental harm? We know that there will be no good Brexit for the North of Ireland.

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for her question. It is absolutely clear that there should be no reduction in any of our environmental standards. When we spoke about Brexit, we examined the preparations that Waterways Ireland has undertaken for the end of the transition period. We also talked about the impact that it may have. Although there is no possible outcome from Brexit that will impact solely on Waterways Ireland, there are various outcomes that will impact on the organisation. EU directives will no longer apply to GB and NI, which may lead to an incremental divergence in legislation between the two jurisdictions over time. GB and NI will also not have to comply with the EU procurement directives, so some rules may be changed. In the short term, following the exit, our rules are likely to remain the same; however, they may change in the medium term. The additional procurement regime will also bring added administration and Waterways Ireland has considered the implications of the need to migrate to a new tender advertising portal and platform.

As the Member highlighted, EU funding will no longer be available in the North, except for PEACE PLUS, which the EU has committed to continue to allocate. Of course, any changes to the common travel area arrangements would impact on Waterways Ireland staff whose area of work covers both jurisdictions, as well as on users of the navigations, particularly the Shannon/Erne waterway that runs through Counties Leitrim, Cavan and Fermanagh. To assure the Members, those issues were discussed.

Mr Catney: Minister, thank you for your statement. I live on the towpath, and it is a real asset. I was on it yesterday on my new electric bike, which you also made legal.

I noted the increase in the capital budget that was provided to Waterways Ireland. Will the Minister tell us more about why that was provided?

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his question. It is great to hear that he is embracing the active travel agenda — literally on his e-bike.

Waterways Ireland has a statutory duty to engage, maintain, develop and promote the navigations for which it is responsible, mainly for recreational purposes. To fulfil that statutory duty, the navigational infrastructure must be fit for purpose and meet health and safety requirements and customer expectations. Severe weather events, particularly the more frequent incidences of flooding in recent years, as well as ongoing usage, causes the deterioration of infrastructure. DFI capital allocations to Waterways Ireland are invested in repairing damage to the infrastructure — replacing jetties, moorings and other facilities that are beyond repair — and providing additional facilities to accommodate the increasing number of users on Lough Erne and the lower Bann.

Specifically, in the years 2017 to 2020, Waterways Ireland delivered a number of capital projects on Lough Erne and the lower Bann. Toome lock house was refurbished and opened as a waterways heritage centre and cafe that is operated by Toomebridge Development Amenities and Leisure Limited, a local community association. Existing jetties were replaced, some with floating jetties, at six sites on Lough Erne, and access ramps were also replaced where necessary. A leakage and the swing bridge were repaired at Portna lock and an automated lifting device was installed. Work will commence on the rehabilitation of Carnroe weir in spring 2021 with an anticipated completion date of autumn 2022.

It is also important to note that Waterways Ireland has reported an increase of 3,288 boat registrations since 2016. That demonstrates the increasing popularity of our inland waterways.

Mr Beggs: I thank the Minister for her statement. It refers to the draft accounts for 2019, which are not yet completed. That is some 11 months after the accounts were closed. In accounting for public money, it is helpful to have timely reporting. Given that Waterways Ireland does not have a board, who can be held to account for that late finalisation of the accounts and expenditure of public money?

Ms Mallon: The Minister of Finance here had cleared the accounts. The Minister of Finance in the South did not have time to clear them in advance of the meeting, but I understand that they have now been cleared. Therefore, those accounts will be laid in the Assembly and the Houses of the Oireachtas.

As to there being no board, the Member will know that North/South bodies were established under the North/South Co-operation (Implementation Bodies) (NI) Order 1999. Two of the six bodies were established without a requirement in legislation to have a board, one of which was Waterways Ireland. At the NSMC plenary meeting on 15 June 2012, Ministers endorsed the St Andrews review recommendation that sponsor Departments should consider options for the setting up a board to direct Waterways Ireland's affairs, and an options paper was presented to Ministers for consideration at the North/South Ministerial Council meeting on 19 June 2013.

I am advised that Ministers agreed that the existing governance arrangements should be strengthened but that there was no requirement for the appointment of a board at this time. I assure the Member that steps have since been taken to strengthen the governance arrangements. An annual service level agreement has been put in place between Waterways Ireland and sponsor Departments, and Waterways Ireland provides biannual assurance statements to sponsor Departments.

Mr McGuigan: Like everybody else, I welcome the announcement and information on the Ulster canal greenways. I am a bit jealous of Pat getting out on his bike yesterday. The rural roads of North Antrim were very frosty yesterday, but the gritting of rural roads is an issue for another day. Can the Minister update the House on the Ulster canal restoration works, particularly phase 2 of the project, and when it is estimated that the restoration of the canal to Clones will be built?

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his question. As he will know, in 2007, the Irish Government gave a commitment to fund the total cost of the restoration of the Ulster canal from Lough Erne to Clones. In the same year, Waterways Ireland was given NSMC approval to explore the possible restoration of the Ulster canal from Lough Erne to Clones. Phase 1 — the restoration of the stretch from Lough Erne to Castle Saunderson — was completed in spring 2019 and is now open for navigation. Phase 2 — the restoration of the stretch from Clones to Clonfad — is under way. A commission to investigate the source of a sustainable water supply for the marina has been completed. Waterways Ireland is satisfied that a suitable supply has been sourced in order to facilitate the development. Creative design is also ongoing to develop a vision for the canal in Clones. Work relating to land requirements and purchase arrangements for that section of the restoration has also commenced. I will briefly mention phase 3. Work will commence on the restoration of the stretch from Castle Saunderson to Clonfad when phase 2 is complete. All three phases of the project have been funded by the Irish Government.

Mr McCrossan: Before I ask the Minister a question, I wonder whether Pat Catney would bring his e-bike to Stormont and give us a demonstration going up and down the mile a few times.

I thank the Minister for her very useful statement and also for her huge efforts over the past number of months to support communities during the pandemic. I know that COVID-19 has had a particular impact on services. Can the Minister tell the House what impact the restrictions have had on Waterways Ireland?

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his question. It points to something that has been very positive during the pandemic. Where counter metrics are available, comparisons with the 2019 figures showed a 110% increase in user numbers on towpaths and trails along the navigations from March to August 2020. Where counter metrics are not available, feedback from local government and community partners indicated an unprecedented increase in the number of users, many of whom were using the facilities for the first time. During August, all boat hire companies reported 100% bookings, solely from the domestic market, as the inland waterways became a popular option for staycations. In previous years, the domestic market accounted for, on average, 22% of boat hire business. Bookings for September and October were at 80% to 90%, again from the domestic market. It is important that we build on that momentum and success.

A number of times, I have talked about the “quiet revolution” during COVID, whereby people are re-engaging with nature, having a more active lifestyle and getting a renewed appreciation for their shared home place. I am really pleased that Waterways Ireland has been part of the delivery of that and that it will continue to build on that success and the positive feedback from visitors and local communities, because we have a real opportunity to make inland waterways a more integral part of the local community as we build the green recovery in the post-pandemic era.

Mr Allister: I want to return to the question of openness and transparency with regard to Waterways Ireland. The Minister has told us that it has no board. That means that there are no minutes that any member of the public could ever read. In fact, when my office phoned Waterways Ireland to ascertain how one could follow its work, we were told to read its annual report. Read its annual report? The 2016 report has just been published this year. We are in the ridiculous situation where even the Chair of the Committee has to come to the House to ask what projects are under way. If there are no minutes, no accountability and no oversight, how is a member of the public meant to follow the work of Waterways Ireland as it spends our public money? Is it not a farcical situation?

Ms Mallon: I thank the Member for his question. Waterways Ireland is accountable to the Department for Infrastructure, the Department of Housing, Local Government and Heritage (DHLGH) and the North/South Ministerial Council. Ministers discharge their oversight responsibilities in respect of Waterways Ireland through the NSMC. That includes consideration and agreement of the budget, of corporate and business plans, and of progress towards agreed business targets and project milestones.

Quarterly monitoring meetings are chaired by senior civil servants from DFI and DHLGH. The chief executive officer and appropriate directors attend to account for business performance and corporate governance. Waterways Ireland’s audit committee meets quarterly. The committee, which has an independent chair and two external members, has unrestricted access to the internal and external auditors. It also has access to the work of internal audit, approves the internal audit work plan and receives reports on various aspects of internal control.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): That concludes questions on the statement. I ask Members to take their ease while we move to the next item of business.

Executive Committee Business

The Administration of Estates (Small Payments) (Increase of Limit) Order (Northern Ireland) 2020

Mr Murphy (The Minister of Finance): I beg to move

That the Administration of Estates (Small Payments) (Increase of Limit) Order (Northern Ireland) 2020 be affirmed.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): The Business Committee has agreed that there should be no time limit on this debate. I call on the Minister to open the debate on the motion.

Mr Murphy: The purpose of this legislation is to raise the limit on the amount of property that certain organisations are permitted to distribute on the death of a member without the necessity for probate or other proof of title or where the deceased has nominated a specific beneficiary.

The Administration of Estates (Small Payments) Act (NI) 1967 is the relevant legislation that falls within the remit of my Department. The legislation applies to certain payments made by industrial and provident societies, credit unions, trade unions, councils and Departments. It allows the organisation to release money to a nominee or beneficiary up to a fixed value to which the deceased or the deceased’s personal representative was entitled without that nominee or beneficiary having to prove title or seek a grant of probate through the probate office. The primary legislation vests the power to make this order in my Department. However, as the legislation relates to bodies associated with several other Departments, Executive colleagues were consulted, and they have approved the proposed increase in limit.

The limit was originally set at £500 in 1967. It has been reviewed and increased a number of times since, most recently in 2004, when the limit was raised to the current figure of £10,000. Sixteen years have therefore passed since the last review, and a recent short and targeted consultation revealed that the existing limit is posing problems for affected parties. It is now much more frequent for amounts of a little over £10,000 to be left by a deceased person, meaning that beneficiaries need to seek a grant of probate. That adds costs, which takes away from the amount of the estate that is left to distribute. For those with minimal resources, those additional costs can be significant and can delay access to the estate at the most difficult of times, not least now in the light of the COVID-19 pandemic. In some cases, beneficiaries may have to forgo receiving the whole amount to which they are entitled, because the cost of obtaining a grant of probate is greater than the amount in excess of £10,000 that is available.

Raising the small payment sum will assist with some of the difficulties that beneficiaries may experience with the deceased’s estate. It will result in a quicker and more efficient process of the payment of money to nominated persons or beneficiaries. Having had the opportunity to consider those issues, I think that raising the sum to £20,000 is proportionate and takes account of inflation and the concerns that stakeholders raised.

Article 2 of the order, which revokes the 2004 order, therefore increases the small payment limit to £20,000.

By virtue of section 6(2) of the 1967 Act, the order applies to deaths occurring or nominations affected after the expiration of a period of one month beginning on the date on which the order comes into operation.

This is a short, technical yet important piece of legislation that will assist many people during difficult times. I therefore recommend that the Administration of Estates (Small Payments) (Increase of Limit) Order (Northern Ireland) 2020 be affirmed.

Dr Aiken (The Chairperson of the Committee for Finance): The Committee considered the policy proposals in the Administration of Estates (Small Payments) (Increase of Limit) Order 2020 at its meeting on 21 October. It considered the benefits of increasing the limit on the amount of money that may be released to the beneficiaries of a deceased person from that person's estate by certain organisations without the need for a grant of probate.

I put on record my thanks to the Irish League of Credit Unions (ILCU) for responding to the Department's consultation. Indeed, it was the only organisation to do so. The ILCU response outlined the difficulties caused by the current limit of £10,000, whereby credit unions required deceased members' families to apply for grants of probate or letters of administration from the court. Such decisions can be difficult for recently bereaved next of kin or personal representatives, because the cost of obtaining a grant of probate can often exceed the remaining estate. The Committee noted that the increase in the limit to £20,000 will enable payments to be made directly to the nominated person without partial payments being made in lieu of waiting for a court-answered grant of probate for the remaining moneys.

I also thank Mr McHugh MLA, who is a member of our Committee, for his assistance in helping the Committee come to its decision on the order. His wide experience of the credit union movement helped the Committee in its deliberations. The Committee considered the statutory rule at its meeting on 2 December and agreed that it be affirmed by the Assembly. Finally, I put on record the Committee's sincere appreciation of the work that credit unions do, much of it on a wholly voluntary basis, in providing responsible and affordable financial services at a local level for the benefit of their members and the communities that they serve. I commend the motion to the House.

Mr Frew: I also support the move. It is common sense, and, having looked through all the evidence at the Committee, I am satisfied that it is the right thing to do. It seems to be needed as a result of progression in inflation throughout the years, and, in most decades, the legislation has been amended. It is therefore common sense and right and proper. When people pass on, their affairs can sometimes be tricky, and you have grieving families and other persons in amongst it all. The order will allow a good bit of latitude for all those financial institutions that deal with this type of thing, so, as a party, we must welcome it.

Mr McHugh: I speak in support of the motion as someone who has experience, as mentioned by the Chair of the Finance Committee, of credit unions. I was a founder member of Mourne Derg Credit Union in Castlederg in the 1970s, when four of us came together to set up a credit union in order to address the needs of our local people. It not only facilitated them to receive low-interest loans but it encouraged them to be thrifty and to take responsibility for their own affairs.

That is what credit unions represent in so many ways. People could, over time, build up savings in excess of £5,000. You might wonder why I mention that figure. It is a feature of credit unions that, in the event of a death of a member who is under 65 years of age, their shares are doubled and forwarded to their next of kin. That would immediately bring them over that limit of £10,000. I am not one bit surprised that the credit union movement was the only organisation that replied to the consultation, given that this provision is in the interest of all its members. Very often, its members are people who do not have large savings, but those are still their life savings. In the event of their death, particularly if it is untimely, that is all the more reason why those resources should be available to their family without them having to go to the extent of looking for a grant of probate.

I welcome the opportunity to support the motion, because it is at a time like that that those people desperately need to be able to access funding to, for example, cover the cost of a wake and funeral and to maybe purchase a grave and a headstone in memory of the person who died. It is so easy for that figure of £10,000 to be surpassed, and it is only appropriate to have legislation to accommodate that.

Mr Catney: I also welcome the motion. Although the proposed change through order is small, its impact should not be understated. A death in the family is a time when we should come together to grieve, support each other and celebrate life; it is not a time to have the added worry about financial difficulty or long and difficult court proceedings.

The Assembly has, rightly, increased the limit of funds that can be released by certain organisations without probate or another proof of title in order to allow families to cover pressing costs like funeral expenses. However, the last increase was 16 years ago. Without going too far off the point, I will say that the cost of funerals is spiralling and has become a burden to everyone, regardless of wealth. It is certainly sensible to increase the limit in order to allow families a small bit of relief at the most difficult of times.

Furthermore, the cost of accessing probate put it out of reach for some of our low-income families. That is not fair, and it should be tackled in the wider context of access to our justice system. In addition, the time that it takes from the application to the granting of probate can be lengthy, which can add stress and worry for families and create financial difficulties for beneficiaries as funeral costs, which I mentioned, mount up. That situation has been exacerbated by the COVID-19 pandemic, with getting access to solicitors to effect probate and to court proceedings incredibly difficult. It should also be noted how stressful it can be going to the courts. It is not a normal activity for a lot of our community, and it is certainly not a burden that should be allowed at a time of grief.

I do not know whether this is a conflict of interest, but I said at the Finance Committee that I am a member of the credit union in Lisburn. On Friday morning, I met Atlas Women's Centre, which is across the road from our credit union. A crowd of people was waiting to get in. That shows that it is much needed and much welcome in our community.

The current limit has had a great impact on the operations of our credit unions. I thank the credit unions for their support for the increase as well as for the good work that they do in general to support our communities at this difficult time.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): Anois iarraim ar an Aire Airgeadais conclúid a chur ar an díospóireacht. I call the Finance Minister to conclude the debate.

1.30 pm

Mr Murphy: I thank the Chair of the Committee and all the Committee members who spoke in the debate for their support for the change to the legislation and for their work in analysing the proposition before them. I concur with the views that the Chair and others expressed in relation to the credit union movement. I am a member of a credit union and know that it provides a valuable service, particularly to those who, although they have little, what they have is precious to them; and for assisting families during bereavements. As Members said, the point of the change is to ensure that timely and correct support is available to families.

This is a technical but, nonetheless, useful change to the law, which will greatly assist those in need in our community to access property on a death without the need to seek probate in the circumstances that I have set out. I commend the motion to the House.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That the Administration of Estates (Small Payments) (Increase of Limit) Order (Northern Ireland) 2020 be affirmed.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): I ask Members to take their ease while we make changes for the next item of business.

(Mr Speaker in the Chair)

Domestic Abuse and Family Proceedings Bill: Further Consideration Stage

Mr Speaker: I call the Minister of Justice, Mrs Naomi Long, to move the Bill.

Not moved.

Mrs Long (The Minister of Justice): It is with regret and disappointment that I beg not to move the Further Consideration Stage of the Domestic Abuse and Family Proceedings Bill today.

Members will be aware that good progress was being made through the amendments proposed to the Bill as a result of ongoing and constructive engagement with the Justice Committee to approve a number of provisions in the Bill. As a result of our collective and collaborative efforts, I had intended to bring forward a number of positive amendments to the Bill today. Those amendments would have further strengthened how offences would operate as well as further detail on potential regulations for the safeguards and protections to be afforded to victims of domestic abuse, including through new domestic abuse protection notices and orders, on which I launched a consultation today.

Unfortunately, however, I now have no choice but to postpone the Further Consideration Stage of the Bill. I asked the Chair of the Committee not to move amendment No. 15, but he refused to give me that assurance this morning. There are potentially significant financial ramifications for the Executive from the amendments on legal aid. At the end of last week, I was made aware that the Treasury's Budget guidance would put the entire cost of doing something that has repercussive implications for other parts of the UK on to the Northern Ireland block grant. Those issues would normally be examined and addressed during policy development and economic appraisal processes for any new policy. However, due to the way in which the legal aid provisions were added into the Bill — via a Member amendment at Consideration Stage — that due diligence was not able to be completed, and, without it, it is not clear whether the legal aid provisions in the Bill, and the further amendments that were to be tabled at Further Consideration Stage — in particular, amendment No 15, which would prevent commencement of the Bill without the legal aid issues — would have financial repercussions on other legal aid schemes. If they were to do so, the impact on the Executive's Budget would be potentially catastrophic. It would be RHI on steroids. It is imperative, therefore, that we do not proceed unless either amendment No 15 is withdrawn or we have time to investigate this important issue.

Many in the House and outside, including myself, key stakeholders and those affected by domestic abuse, will be disappointed by these developments and our inability to complete the Final Stage of the Bill before the end of this year, as I had intended. However, given the risks posed by the legal aid provisions in the Bill at clause 27 and some of the further proposed amendments, particularly amendment No 15, which was to be tabled today, I consider it vital that further time is taken to more fully ascertain the consequences and the best way forward. As has been the case to date, I wish to continue to work with the Committee on a resolution of the matter to ensure that this important legislation can be put on the statute books as soon as possible. I beg not to move.

Mr Speaker: Thank you, Minister. The Further Consideration Stage of the Domestic Abuse and Family Proceedings Bill has not been moved. Therefore, we will move on to the next item of business. I have given some latitude, but I understand that the Committee is of the same view as it was last weekend, so there will be no movement in that regard.

Given that the next item of business is Question Time, I propose to suspend —.

Mr Givan (The Chairperson of the Committee for Justice): On a point of order, Mr Speaker. This is a shameful course of action by the Justice Minister. What she is doing today in respect of this issue is a disgrace. This was a Committee amendment, not a Paul Givan amendment. It is not my position to act unilaterally when the Committee has reached a decision. This is an abuse of the democratic process, and caught in the middle are victims of domestic abuse. That is what makes it all the more despicable. The Minister should be moving the Further Consideration Stage. It is for the Assembly to decide whether it votes for amendments that are tabled. The actions of the Minister today do not bode well for the way in which she has conducted herself in respect of this legislation.

Mr Speaker: As I said earlier, I gave latitude to the Minister, so, in deference to the work that has been ongoing, I gave latitude to the Chair of the Committee.

Mrs Long: On a point of order, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: I will take a point of order, but I am not going to continue this discussion any longer.

Mrs Long: Mr Speaker, will you confirm that the Minister has the right to withdraw and beg not to move, and that there is nothing disorderly or disrespectful in what I have been forced to do today in respect of the Bill?

Mr Speaker: Of course the Member, as the Minister, is in order not to move. The Minister did not move, so we are not progressing through the debate.

Mr Frew: On a point of order, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: As I said, Mr Frew, I am not taking any further points of order on the matter, because I am going to close it. I allowed quite a bit of latitude to the Minister, in the circumstances, and likewise to the Chair of the Committee, who encapsulated the Committee's thinking on the matter. It is unfortunate that we have reached this moment — this predicament — that we are in, but we are in it. I commend all Members for their hard work throughout this complex Bill, as was testified to last week by Members from every party. I hope that, in due course, that due diligence will return to the debate and that we can try to proceed with this important Bill in a fair and respectful manner. The matter is closed. The Bill has not been moved today. The next item of business is Question Time.

Mr Allister: On a point of order, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: I am not taking a point of order on this matter.

Mr Allister: It is not on this matter. It is on a different matter.

Mr Speaker: Let me finish this. The next item of business is Question Time, which will commence at 2.00 pm. I, therefore, propose, by leave of the Assembly, after Mr Allister's point of order, to suspend the sitting until then.

Mr Allister: Last week, I asked the Business Committee to list, for this afternoon's business, the Further Consideration Stage of my private Member's Bill. The Committee refused to do so. Yet now, we arrive at a point where, after Question Time, there is no business for the House.

Why did the Business Committee not, as a precaution, list a second piece of business, so that that Bill could have been progressed? Now, neither Bill is to be progressed. What sort of management is that?

Mr Speaker: I do not know whether that is a point of order. The fact is, Mr Allister, that you have been around the Assembly long enough to know that the Business Committee, respectfully, schedules the business for the Assembly. You are well aware of that, and recently it has had to accommodate sittings that lasted well into the night and into the early hours of the morning. It has been trying to juggle Members' time and the orderly business of the Assembly. I take no issue with the Business Committee's decisions thus far whatsoever, and I have every confidence in its ability to continue managing business well.

The circumstances today are unexpected. As I said, I regret that they have arrived and the way in which they have done. Let us hope that we can get back to this Bill in a respectful manner that resolves the outstanding issues, so that victims of domestic abuse and violence will be safer in the future.

The sitting was suspended at 1.41 pm and resumed at 2.00 pm.

(Mr Principal Deputy Speaker [Mr Stafford] in the Chair)

Oral Answers to Questions

Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: It is time for questions to the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs. As Members are aware, the Minister is not available today. I am sure that all Members will join me in wishing Mr Poots a very speedy recovery. The Speaker has received notification from the Minister for the Economy that she will respond to questions today on Minister Poots's behalf.

Farm-gate Prices

1. Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs for his assessment of farm-gate prices in Northern Ireland. (AQO 1258/17-22)

Mrs Dodds (The Minister for the Economy): I thank the Member for her question. Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, with your permission and before we start, I inform the House that I am happy to stand in for my colleague and that I spoke to him this morning. He had his toast and porridge, was in very good form and is looking forward to getting out of hospital. Obviously, he had quite a traumatic period over the weekend. We will do our best to answer your questions as they arise.

The Department publishes statistical reports that contain the latest average farm-gate prices in Northern Ireland. Each of those reports average prices for the latest period, along with comparisons against prices in previous periods. Those reports show that average beef, lamb and pig prices from January to September 2020 were higher than those of the same period in 2019, whereas average milk prices have been 0.9p per litre lower. They also show that average prices since September have remained around or above prices of the previous year for each of the farm products that are reported.

Ms Sugden: Thank you, Minister, and please pass on my best wishes to Minister Poots for a speedy recovery. It is quite fortunate that the Minister for the Economy is answering these questions. If the Principal Deputy Speaker will indulge me, can I ask the Minister for the Economy to give her assessment of farm-gate prices in Northern Ireland given that agriculture is one of the largest industries in Northern Ireland and underpins our local economy?

Mrs Dodds: Thank you for the question. In many ways, agriculture was an area of policy that I looked at for many years in the European Parliament. I really enjoyed meeting and talking to the sectors right across Northern Ireland. We understand, from the published statistics, that milk prices are, on average, a little lower. Although milk prices for September were 1.59p higher than in September 2018, the average price across the period is 0.9% lower. That represents volatility and shows that the price is lower than the rest of the United Kingdom. It also represents the market and the exposure that Northern Ireland milk prices have, for example, to the commodity market. In GB, much greater supplies of milk go into the liquid market and supermarkets and producers can have longer and more stable contracts.

We understand that, for the week ending 21 November, beef prices are 13.2% higher than for the same period last year.

That is a difference of £150 per finished head of cattle and is a significant uplift in beef prices. In fact, we probably are third in the EU league table for beef prices. Nevertheless, and again from a processing point of view, this is typically a low-margin process where issues of competitiveness and productivity are hugely important.

Pig prices have remained much the same, and —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I am afraid —

Mrs Dodds: — dropped calf prices are round about, or slightly higher, than we would have expected.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I am loath to interrupt the Minister, and she will probably give me a kicking for it afterwards [Laughter] but it is important that we try to stick to two minutes or less.

Mr Allister: Looking forward, Minister, under the iniquitous protocol, overheads and production costs will be very adversely affected by reason of feedstuff and fertiliser imports. What is the likely consequence for profitability, for farm-gate prices and, indeed, for consumer prices, of the gallows for the Union that Mr Poots is building at our ports?

Mrs Dodds: Of course the ports issue is an implementation rather than an end of the transition period issue. For Northern Ireland as a whole, let us be absolutely clear that my party believes that having a free-trade deal and zero quotas and zero tariffs is in the best interests of Northern Ireland. We think, and we want people to understand, that there are issues under the protocol that could be sorted out. We want to see unfettered access between us and our main market. I understand that the Internal Market Bill is being reintroduced in Parliament today and that there is a legislative route for that in the United Kingdom. However, there are also routes for that in the Joint Committee. Sensible, practical, pragmatic approaches by the EU could ensure that those things happen. We want to understand that goods at risk will be sorted out in the Joint Committee and that, as the Member quite rightly says, goods coming into Northern Ireland for input into the agricultural sector are treated as not being at risk of going into the single market.

Mr McGlone: I join others in wishing Edwin all the very best for a speedy and full recovery. It is a tricky enough situation that he found himself in over the weekend.

Minister, I do not necessarily expect you to know the answer to my question because it is a bit complicated. However, I was contacted this morning by a sheep farmer who has bought hundreds of sheep that are in the UK. Before the sheep can be brought over here, they have to be a year old and that year will take them into the new year. With everything that is going on at the moment, he finds himself in a new year limbo as to whether he may bring them over. He has invested hundreds of thousands of pounds in that stock. We spoke earlier about productivity, but we need the product in order to be productive. Perhaps the Minister could get back to me with some clarity on that.

Mrs Dodds: Yes. Thank you for your good wishes to Edwin. I will certainly pass on the good wishes of the House when I speak to him later and give him an update on how we got on.

In fact, the Minister updated the Executive on this issue at our EU meeting on Thursday, as he has been working on it over the past number of days. As yet, there still needs to be a resolution, but I will, of course, ask the Minister to write to you specifically on the issue and on any ways of resolving the impasse.

Mrs Barton: Minister, if you could also pass on my good wishes to Mr Poots and wish him a speedy recovery.

Might an oversight body similar to the Groceries Code Adjudicator, in place throughout the United Kingdom but tailored for Northern Ireland's needs, improve farm-gate prices in future?

Mrs Dodds: Again, I thank the Member for her good wishes.

There has been much talk about minimum-price legislation and about Northern Ireland primary producers being price-takers as opposed to price-makers in the whole supply-chain system. Personally, I think that, while the Groceries Code Adjudicator had the potential to do good things, the lack of any kind of enforcement powers meant that, although it sounded good, it did not actually have the powers to respond to the needs of the supply chain. Therefore, if we were to have more of that, it would need to have much more legislative power to take remedial action.

Ms Sheerin: This follows on from the question asked by my constituency colleague Mr McGlone. I have written to your colleague Mr Poots about the fact that sheep are now being brought in from Scotland, the majority of which are blackface sheep that require scrapie monitoring. I just want to impress upon the Minister the urgency of the situation, given that, as Mr McGlone mentioned, this involves thousands of pounds for local sheep producers, who are depending upon sheep that they have already bought from Scotland.

Mrs Dodds: Again, I know that the Minister is alive to the situation and will respond to it. On a general point, this demonstrates the issues with the protocol and how some in the House who call for its full implementation are creating rods for the backs of some of our farmers.

Illegal Dumping

2. Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs what steps are being taken to strengthen legislation and expedite proceedings in response to illegal dumping. (AQO 1259/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: Thank you for the question. Responsibility for dealing with illegal dumping is shared between the local councils, which deal with low-level waste offences, and the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA), which deals with large-scale waste criminality and hazardous waste. While there are no plans at present to strengthen the legislation around illegal dumping, officials are working with councils to consider the effectiveness of the existing legislation and explore how they can work together to make best use of the powers that it provides. That may create opportunities to deal more quickly and effectively with lower-level offending on a local level through fixed penalty notices rather than being reliant on court proceedings, the timings of which are outside our control.

Mr Humphrey: I thank the Minister for her answer. Over the summer, some 200 tons of illegal rubbish was dumped at Edenderry industrial mill on the Crumlin Road in my constituency of North Belfast. That led to a plague of rats, a swarm of flies and noxious smells, with people feeling and taking ill. Belfast City Council was too slow in its response, and the Northern Ireland Environment Agency was somewhat secretive in passing information to and sharing information with elected representatives. The situation simply was not good enough, and it took an intervention from the Minister to resolve it. I ask the Minister, in responding for her colleague Mr Poots — to whom I, too, sent my regards for a speedy recovery this morning — what more the Department, working with local councils, can do to ensure that, if such a situation arises again — sadly, it is happening more often in Northern Ireland — there is a more effective and speedy response.

Mrs Dodds: I thank the Member for his question. I followed the story and how it impacted on the lives of local people in that part of the Shankill. It really is quite disgraceful that such things continue to happen. The answer lies in the closer working relationship between district councils and the NIEA. While the NIEA is responsible for larger waste criminality, councils can take a proactive approach to fly-tipping. It is about trying to bring the two together so that one does not pass the responsibility on to the other, and we then see a situation like we had in the Shankill where the Minister had to intervene. The additional powers that the Minister is looking at include giving councils discretionary powers to take enforcement action in respect of illegal waste disposal other than littering and to provide them with more robust penalties as this works through the system.

2.15 pm

Dr Aiken: I thank the Minister for her comments so far. Can she pass on our good wishes to Edwin? It is good to see that he will be getting some first-hand knowledge of how well our NHS is coping at this moment in time.

Is there any information to confirm that waste from the Republic of Ireland is being illegally dumped in Northern Ireland?

Mrs Dodds: I thank my colleague for his good wishes for Edwin, but I remind everyone that he is a former Health Minister and is acutely aware of how amazing our National Health Service has been in response to the pandemic. His wife is a nurse, who has many years of service in the National Health Service.

I do not have specific information on that. If there is information in the Department, I will, of course, ask the Department to write to the Member on that specific area. I am aware that there have been various news stories on the issue, and we need to make sure that criminality of this sort is dealt with, appropriate penalties are levied and costs are directed to where they should be.

Mr Boylan: I thank the Minister for her answers so far. I extend my good wishes to Minister Poots and wish him a speedy recovery.

In my constituency, in the Fews Forest, at a nature spot called Carrigatuke viewpoint, there have been over 50 incidents of illegal dumping over the last 18 months. Will the Minister take it back to Minister Poots that we need a cross-border approach, because there is clear evidence that there is illegal dumping of material from across the border?

Mrs Dodds: Yes, I fully accept and agree. The Minister will talk to his counterpart to ensure that that kind of criminality does not take place, that we can levy appropriate fines and make sure that costs are apportioned appropriately and sensibly in the matter. I am sure that the Department will write to you about any specific incidences that have occurred at the beauty spot that you spoke about.

Ms Bradshaw: Minister, given that we appeared to see an increase in illegal dumping during the COVID lockdown, how is the Department working with the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) and the councils to look at the broader issues around waste management?

Mrs Dodds: The councils, NIEA and the Department are looking at how effective the legislation is, and they will bring forward further proposals on that. As I said to my colleague from the Shankill, where there were some very serious incidents, additional powers would perhaps be conferred on councils to allow them to have an immediate response to littering and illegal dumping.

UK Trade Deals: Japan and Canada

3. Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to outline the benefits to the agri-food sector of the recent UK trade deals with Japan and Canada. (AQO 1260/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: The UK-Japan Comprehensive Economic Partnership Agreement (CEPA) was signed on 22 October 2020 and is largely based on the existing agreement between the EU and Japan. Similarly, the agreement in principle with Canada, announced on 21 November 2020, will roll over the provisions of the existing Comprehensive Economic and Trade Agreement (CETA).

These agreements have still to be fully ratified, but once that has been done, they will give certainty to agri-food businesses that are exporting goods and will ensure that they can continue to benefit from the existing trading arrangements. For example, CETA includes tariff-free trade on 98% of goods that can be exported to Canada, including beef, fish and seafood. The CEPA agreement with Japan secured tariff-free access for more agri-food goods and protection for some of our iconic products. Commitments on tariffs for the UK and Japan have largely been transitioned from the EU deal without changes. That deal sees tariffs for UK exports to Japan fall on beef, pork, salmon and a range of other agricultural exports, subject to staged tariff liberalisation, which is in line with the EU agreement.

Mr Dunne: I also pass on my best wishes to the Agriculture Minister, Edwin Poots. I got a message from him today saying that he is receiving great service, so he appreciates the health service to which he contributed as Minister.

I thank the Minister for her answers. I welcome the great news and the opportunities for the agri-food sector in Northern Ireland. Can she give the House an assurance that incoming products to Northern Ireland will continue to meet the required high quality standards?

Mrs Dodds: Northern Ireland will meet the standards because it will continue to employ EU single market rules.

I suppose that the wider issue to which the Member refers is the potential for wider UK free trade deals. What we would really like to see is the United Kingdom as a whole not accepting agricultural produce that is produced to a lesser environmental standard or social standard in terms of employment than it would expect of Northern Ireland or other member states from the United Kingdom. It is important that we do not make Northern Ireland produce — indeed, United Kingdom produce — uncompetitive by undercutting it with cheap imports.

Dr Archibald: I also extend my good wishes to Edwin to get well soon.

The Minister said that the UK-Japan agreement largely replicates that between Japan and the EU. Does she accept that, due to the fact that no new tariff rate quotas (TRQ) were agreed, some exporters could be at a disadvantage under the agreement?

Mrs Dodds: The Japan agreement largely replicates the agreement that the EU has with Japan. Commitments and tariffs have been transitioned largely without changes. That will see tariffs for UK exports to Japan fall on pork, beef, salmon and other agricultural produce. For butter, milk and milk powders, where there were UK exports in 2019, UK exporters will continue to access Japan's market via their WTO TRQ.

Mr Chambers: I join in the good wishes to Minister Poots. It is reassuring that the NHS was there for him in a timely manner when he needed it.

Minister, following 1 January 2021, will Northern Ireland food products for export be labelled "UK" or "EU"?

Mrs Dodds: Those matters will be worked out in the Joint Committee.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Mr John Stewart. Sorry, Mr John Blair. I am on autopilot.

Mr Blair: Thank you, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. May I associate myself and my colleagues with the good wishes expressed to Minister Poots for a full and speedy recovery?

I think that the Minister has clarified that what is being talked about is, at the very best, a replication of existing EU arrangements for Canada and Japan. More specifically, from an economic or agricultural perspective, can she tell us whether any data is available to show whether there is any benefit at all for trade or the economy with the new arrangements?

Mrs Dodds: I presume that the Member means in relation to the trade deals with Japan and Canada. Canada is one of our largest partners. The CETA deal means that 98% of all products that pass between the countries, and now the United Kingdom, are tariff-free. That is a huge boost to the economy of Northern Ireland and the wider economy of the United Kingdom.

The good news about the Canada deal is that Canada is committed not only to the rollover of the deal signed in November but the renegotiation of parts of that deal so that it is bespoke to the rest of the United Kingdom. It is a really important trade deal for Northern Ireland.

The Japan trade deal is also important. Japan is one of the largest importers of agricultural produce in the world. There is an enormous opportunity to take our product to that market. That is another extremely important trade deal for the Northern Ireland economy. The crux of the matter for Northern Ireland will be making sure that we are a full part of those trade deals, notwithstanding the implications of the Northern Ireland protocol.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Once again, I apologise to the Member for getting his name wrong. There is only one John Blair.

Gorse Fires

4. Mr McGrath asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to outline the impact of gorse fires on mountainous areas such as the Mourne. (AQO 1261/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: I thank the Member for his question. Gorse fires or wildfires in mountainous areas in Northern Ireland have a significant impact on the environment and are a risk to life and property. Semi-natural habitats often affected by such fires include heathland and blanket bog. Many of these areas are important nature conservation sites. Indeed, between 2010 and 2019, 64 wildfires were recorded in areas of special scientific interest.

These habitats can be damaged by fires, with impacts ranging from gradual change in species composition arising from surface burns to complete loss of vegetation and seed banks in severe, deep burns. In surface burns, the shift in vegetation composition can be undesirable, such as increases in gorse or bracken. In deep burn, the impacts can lead to long-term erosion due to lack of vegetation cover. The wildlife living in these areas is also negatively impacted. The impacts include the loss of foraging areas and the destruction of the nests and eggs of important breeding birds such as hen harriers. The damage caused to habitats and species can take many years to recover, and some may be lost for ever. Such fires also threaten life, property, forestry, agricultural land, public water supplies and other public utilities. They impact on emergency response services at the cost of millions of pounds to the public purse.

Most wildfires are the result of human activities and are preventable. Proactive steps to recognise and address the risk of wildfires have been, and will continue to be, taken by the Department, other stakeholders and landowners. Those steps include public messaging and awareness raising, the establishment of wildfire groups, such as those in the Mourne and Belfast hills, and the development of wildfire management plans in areas of special scientific interest. Officials have gained considerable expertise in wildfires through liaison with local landowners and knowledge exchange with other European countries. We will continue to develop ways forward.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Minister —

Mrs Dodds: May I add one important fact? This year, 2020, was the worst year for wildfires since 2011. To May of this year, the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service had to deal with over 600.

Mr McGrath: I thank the Minister for her comprehensive response and add my weight to the remarks wishing Minister Poots well. Does the Minister agree that something has happened? The number of wildfires in mountainous areas across the North and the island of Ireland is substantially increasing. Events supposed to happen only once in 100 years or once in 50 years are happening annually and costing millions of pounds. Does the Minister agree that climate change is playing a part and that we must respond accordingly?

Mrs Dodds: As my answer made clear, a range of factors is involved, including pressures from climate change. However, human behaviour, such as people walking in the mountains etc, is also a factor. We need to ensure that we work together and properly disseminate information about not only the dangers of the fires themselves but the dangers to our environment and the cost to the public purse.

Mr McAleer: I also associate myself with extending best wishes to Minister Poots. I sent him a message earlier today and am glad to note that he is moving in the right direction. I also want to commend Minister Dodds for coming in at short notice. You have done a good job so far, so fair play to you.

Unfortunately, earlier this year, at the beginning of lockdown, when the weather was incredibly warm, we witnessed many gorse fires, many of them in my district. It is important that the Department, and, indeed, all the Departments, educates and informs people about the damage that such fires do to people's lives and to biodiversity. When those who are impacted on by the fires try to engage with compensation services, it can become a legal quagmire. Does the Minister agree that it is important that everyone do their best to educate and inform people about those fires and their impact?

Mrs Dodds: We are very privileged to live in one of the most beautiful parts of the world. Like the Member for South Down, my whole family are from the Mourne area, so I know exactly the beauty of the areas. It is therefore really disappointing when people abuse the privilege of walking and spending time in the hills.

We need to have a multi-agency approach among the NIEA, the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service (NIFRS), the Forest Service and the other rescue services to try to get the strategy right so that people can be safe in those beautiful areas but also respect them. I agree with the Member that that will require information campaigns so that people understand their responsibilities.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: We now move on to topical questions. Before I call the first Member to ask a topical question, I say to Members that they will know that I am a relaxed and fairly easy-going sort of person and do not stand too much on formality or anything like that, but I impress on Members the need for short, sharp questions. For a perfect example of that, I call Mr Daniel McCrossan.

Mr McCrossan: You may judge that in a minute.

Meenbog Landslide

T1. Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs, after associating himself with the comments to wish Minister Poots well and a speedy recovery and putting on record his sincere appreciation for the fact that Minister Poots visited Meenbog outside Castleterg following the slippage that caused huge difficulties, where they had a good meeting that he was glad to attend, for an update on the Department's work on the Meenbog landslide, specifically progress on the clean-up, work to confirm the root cause and work to prevent such a thing happening in future. (AQT 781/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: I read some of the newspaper reports of the visit to Meenbog. It is only over the past 12 hours, however, that I have become much more tuned into the issues involved there.

I am happy to tell the Member that Loughs Agency staff are continuing their investigation into the recent major water pollution incident at Meenbog. The incident appears to be the result of significant slippage of an enormous quantity of peat and soil at the upper end of the catchment around the waterway. The nature and type of remedial measures will depend on the environmental assessments that are under way. Those include assessments and evaluations of water-quality data, fisheries, invertebrates and riverbed silt that will take some time to complete. It is, however, an issue that the Minister has taken on board and on which he has met his counterpart from the Republic of Ireland to discuss, so it is being worked on and taken forward by the Loughs Agency as a matter of priority.

Mr McCrossan: I thank the Minister for her answer. I absolutely acknowledge that the Meenbog slippage was a catastrophe. It affected Killeter, Aghyaran, Castlederg, Ardstraw and the surrounding areas quite significantly. The meeting between Minister Poots and Minister McConalogue was very effective and showed a great sign of strength and unity on that cross-border issue.

Minister, one particular business was impacted on very badly by the slippage. I am not sure whether you will be aware, but will you update us now or at a further stage on whether there is any form of compensation that could help with the pressure that has been put on that business?

Mrs Dodds: While I am aware of measures that the Loughs Agency is undertaking on the remedial issues that need to be resolved because of that, I am unaware of that particular business. I will, of course, ask officials from the Department to contact you to talk through the issue that is of interest to you.

Clean Air Strategy

T2. Miss Woods asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs, after wishing Minister Poots all the best as he recovers and thanking the Minister for the Economy for standing in, to outline how rural perspectives were considered when drafting the clean air strategy. (AQT 782/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: As with all these strategies, a number of wide-ranging perspectives is taken into account. If the Member has a concern that a particular issue was not addressed, I advise her to write to the Minister so that it can be properly considered.

Miss Woods: I thank the Minister for her answer. Why was a population of 10,000 chosen as the threshold beyond which air quality assessment would be conducted, even though that would exclude most rural areas from assessment and risk agricultural pollution not being fully measured?

Mrs Dodds: I presume that the modelling indicated that that number was acceptable in that instance. Of course, I advise the Member to contact or write to the Minister to advise him of her concerns.

River Blackwater: Works

T3. Mr Beattie asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs, after stating that it is good to see the Economy Minister supporting her ministerial colleague and telling the House that he looks forward to the day when Ministers from across the Floor will support each other, to outline whether, following the successful works on the River Blackwater catchment, there are any plans to expand those works along the River Bann. (AQT 783/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: I would, of course, be very supportive of that from a constituency point of view. I consider the River Bann and our particular part of it to be one of the most beautiful parts of Northern Ireland. Since I walk along the river with the dogs quite a lot during the week, and this is a personal view, I consider that to be important.

I will report the issue to the Minister, and I will say on a general basis that really good work has been done with remedial tidying up and dredging so much of the rubbish that has been unnecessarily dumped in the river and so on. From a general point of view, we want to see cooperation in order to make sure that those things do not happen and that people act responsibly to ensure that the beautiful environment that we have is maintained.

Mr Beattie: Minister, I kept my questions local because I knew that you were standing in. As you know, local constituent Jon Medlow has been working hard with volunteers to clean the River Bann. I believe that you might have met him. Does the Minister have any plans to give financial aid in order to allow volunteers like Jon and other groups to carry on that important work?

Mrs Dodds: I agree that it is important work. Caring for, sustaining and future-proofing the assets that we have is hugely important. I speak not just as a local but as the tourism Minister, because we need to ensure that we make the best of those assets. That is what brings people to Northern Ireland. I commend the groups for their work and what they do. Of course, I will pass on to the Minister your concerns about funding for such groups.

Litter

T4. Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to clarify, as we all strive for a cleaner and greener environment, who has responsibility of cleaning of litter and detritus from our public footpaths and roadsides. (AQT 784/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: As the Member said, we all have our part to play in that. I know that the Minister is committed to education and to building civic pride around our beautiful environment.

The Department works closely with councils and other NGOs to support educational and promotional campaigns that achieve behavioural change in reducing litter.

DAERA's environment fund supports Keep Northern Ireland Beautiful, which runs a series of successful programmes, including Eco-Schools; Live Here, Love

Here; Clean Coasts; and Adopt a Spot. More than £3 million has been awarded to Keep Northern Ireland Beautiful since 2007, with additional current funding of more than £1 million to support educational and promotional campaigns. The Clean Neighbourhoods and Environment Act enables councils to issue fines of up to £80 for litter offences or £2,500 fines for cases that have to be dealt with through the courts. They are very important issues and impact on everybody's everyday lives, and I thank the Member for raising them.

Mr Dunne: I thank the Minister for her answer. Can she assure us that, under the Litter (Northern Ireland) Order 1994, the NIEA will use its influence on local councils to ensure that public footpaths and roadways are clean and safe for all road users? There seems to be a reluctance by some councils to clean public footpaths on roads where there is extensive traffic.

Mrs Dodds: I am sure that the Minister will agree with the Member that it is extremely important that we use every power available to us to make sure that we have done our best to ensure that roads, footpaths etc are clean, fit for purpose and suitable for the beautiful environment that we have in Northern Ireland.

Anaerobic Digestion Plants

T5. Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs, after asking the Minister for the Economy to pass on his best wishes to his constituency colleague Edwin Poots, to outline the potential impact on the provision of anaerobic digestion plants in light of the fact that Minister Poots has let it be known more than once that he does not think that Northern Ireland needs an incinerator. (AQT 785/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: There is a debate about the incinerator, and I have no intention of engaging in it today. However, my Department is responsible for a new energy strategy, and looking at different types of energy and how they can be inputted into the grid will be key to it. We hope to bring out that strategy for consultation in March 2021, and the Member will, I am sure, contribute his views on anaerobic digestion and waste and energy to it.

Mr Lunn: The Minister will know that the jury is out on anaerobic digestion as a long-term solution to our needs, particularly in view of the carbon footprint of the whole process, the extent to which anaerobic digestion plants depend on government subsidy at the moment, and the limited life of the plant involved, which, I believe, is no more than about 10 years. There is also huge cost involved in replacing it. So, are we quite sure that Minister Poots should not exclude totally the requirement for an incinerator because an awful lot of academic information seems to indicate that we need one, and fairly quickly?

Mrs Dodds: I am sure that the Member will make his views on waste known to Minister Poots. As I said, the energy strategy will be out for consultation in March 2021, and I look forward to receiving various views on all those issues.

Rural Poverty and Social Isolation

T6. Mr Storey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs, after passing on his best wishes to his colleague Edwin Poots and adding to the Minister for the Economy's comments about the River Bann, in that she will know that it runs through his constituency, where Drumaheagles, which is adjacent to the River Bann, is a beautiful part of Northern Ireland, where, no doubt, she has enjoyed some happy times, to provide an update on the initiative to tackle rural poverty and social isolation, which has become an issue that the Minister will be well aware of through her ministerial responsibilities, particularly given the impact of COVID over the past number of months. (AQT 786/17-22)

2.45 pm

Mrs Dodds: I thank the Member for his question on rural poverty and social isolation. Isolation and loneliness in particular have been exacerbated by the COVID restrictions, and there are some very touching stories of how that has impacted on folk, particularly older folk, in isolated rural areas. The tackling rural poverty and social isolation (TRPSI) programme continues to provide support for a range of initiatives in collaboration with other Departments, statutory agencies and the community and voluntary sector. That has helped, on average, 60,000 rural dwellers to address poverty, isolation and health and well-being issues. An additional £5 million has been confirmed to help rural dwellers and communities and to assist businesses to recover from the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic. That brings the TRPSI programme budget for 2020-21 to almost £11 million. That increase in financial support has enabled the Department to approve a number of schemes to bolster the rural economy and sustain and increase its capacity.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: There are 30 seconds left, Mr Storey.

Mr Storey: Will the Minister clarify whether there has been collaboration with the Department for Communities in relation to this initiative?

Mrs Dodds: Yes, the Department works closely with the Department for Communities and with local councils as delivery agents in relation to the initiative. It is very valuable for rural dwellers in Northern Ireland.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: That concludes questions to the Minister of Agriculture. Members may take their ease for a few moments before we move to questions to the Minister for Communities. If you are leaving the Chamber, do not forget to clean the surface where you were sitting.

Communities

Intimidation Points System

1. Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Communities when her Department will publish alternative proposals to replace the intimidation points system, as outlined in her statement of 3 November 2020. (AQO 1272/17-22)

10. Ms Dillon asked the Minister for Communities whether the revised system of housing allocation points will include intimidation points for the victims of domestic violence. (AQO 1281/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister for Communities): Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, with your permission, I will group questions 1 and 10.

I will publish a consultation outcome report on the fundamental review of social housing allocations next week. That will include a preliminary time frame for the implementation of the proposals. I have publicly stated that I will not proceed with the removal of intimidation points. I want to retain those points for those who really need them. There is a strong perception that the intimidation points system is being abused, and I want to see alternative mechanisms implemented to strengthen the verification process and put an end to that abuse.

That may require the establishment of an independent body, once options have been developed.

It is unacceptable that victims of domestic violence are not currently treated with the same priority as those who receive intimidation points. I want that to change as soon as possible.

Mrs D Kelly: Minister, many people in my constituency have 130 points and more, such is the housing shortage and crisis for many families, even without intimidation points. I am sure that you are well aware of that in your constituency. I welcome the particular regard that you paid to victims of domestic violence in your answer. Will you put in place a process or framework to ensure that domestic violence victims are not disadvantaged in any way by any review?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for her question and supplementary. As she knows, in my constituency, some people are sitting on 240 points without intimidation, with no prospect of going anywhere. I think that there was a broad assumption that people who were subject to domestic abuse and violence were allocated intimidation points. That is not the case. The issue did not come up in the consultation as strongly as I felt that it would, but it certainly came up once people realised that that was not the case. After I publish the consultation report next week, I will move straight to options with officials, and, hopefully, I will have something in the coming months. It is really important that that is changed.

Ms Dillon: My question has been answered by what the Minister has just outlined. I was well aware that, unfortunately, domestic abuse points are not included in intimidation points. I think that you, Minister, have just given a time frame, but, to clarify, when might we expect those points to be in place? It has been an outstanding issue, certainly in my constituency, for a long time.

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for her question. As she will be aware, as part of the recent statement that I made here about the overall housing transformation, the case of the fundamental review was certainly highlighted. The changes outlined in that statement need to be made within this mandate, and I am, with others, progressing work in that regard. I hope that, in the coming months, we will have a completely different system for the allocation of points, which will include intimidation points for victims of domestic abuse and violence.

Mr Dickson: Thank you very much, Minister, for indicating your strong priority for victims of domestic violence in the future. Do you agree that there were disgraceful scenes in the House earlier today, when the Chair of the Justice Committee attempted to derail important domestic violence legislation, and that that will exacerbate the situation that you find yourself in?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I will take the Member's last point first. I did not see it, so I will look at it. The start of his question was about why people have waited for so long. Going by his and others' responses, I think Members will agree that it is quite appropriate that intimidation points are kept for people who have been subject to domestic abuse and violence.

Business Adaptation and Improvement Grant Scheme

2. Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Communities whether additional moneys will be made available to local councils to administer a further business adaptation and improvement grant scheme. (AQO 1273/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for her question. My Department's COVID-19 recovery revitalisation programme has already allocated £17.6 million to councils to enable them to create a safer environment for shoppers, visitors and workers. It includes contributions of £5 million and £2 million from the Department for Infrastructure and the Department of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs, respectively. The programme was designed to be as flexible as possible to ensure that each council delivers a plan that addresses the specific needs in its area. Every council plan has included a small grant scheme to help businesses to provide a more COVID-secure environment for their customers. The eligibility criteria and value of the grants were determined by each council in consultation with local stakeholders. The total value of the grants across all councils is approximately £6.9 million.

Miss McIlveen: I thank the Minister for her response. The previous tranche of funds that was distributed to Ards and North Down Borough Council, which covers the majority of my constituency, was available only to businesses in the designated town centre. That was at the suggestion of her Department, and it left many dozens of businesses without the benefit of assistance. In fact, there were 22 businesses in one street in Comber alone. Will the Minister do anything to provide assistance to those businesses, which by virtue of a line on a map were unable to avail themselves of that funding?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am sorry to hear that. The Member will be aware, given her previous role, that I am responsible for townlands and villages with a population of 5,000 and over. Edwin Poots — I wish him the very best — and I did this scheme jointly to ensure that no one was left out. I will find out what happened and write to the Member. Hopefully, whatever happened, whatever gaps there are will be closed. I will get the detail and talk to the Member personally.

Mr Catney: Will the Minister provide a breakdown of the number of businesses that the money has already reached and give examples, if possible, by council area?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I do not have that detail to hand, but I will write to the Member. When I was talking to some businesses about how they were hoping to avail themselves of support, they were looking at additional sanitisation and infrastructure for safe social distancing. A number of them were looking at outside heaters, street furniture, awnings, gazebos and things like that in order to help to bring customers in safely. Again, I do not have the details to hand as to what each council got, but I will get them for the Member.

Ms Ennis: We know that there has been a delay with some of the financial support schemes that were established recently. Will the Minister set out the steps that she is taking to ensure that councils receive those allocations quickly?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for her question. That is why I was a bit surprised to hear Michelle McIlveen's concerns. The onus was on Edwin Poots, Nichola Mallon and me to ensure that those schemes, unlike others, got out as quickly as possible through the councils, which have been funded by my Department to ensure that they in turn can provide front-line services as quickly as possible.

Unlike with other schemes, the councils, to be fair to them, have acted very quickly. We have made the application as simple and straightforward as possible while respecting and honouring due diligence and ensuring that each council was as flexible to the needs of their local businesses as possible. Again, as each tranche is rolled out, we have ensured that speed has been of the essence. I hope that that is the case across the board and look forward to ensuring that it is.

Winter Support for Vulnerable People

3. Ms Mullan asked the Minister for Communities to outline her plans to support the most vulnerable people over the winter period. (AQO 1274/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for her question. My Department has a number of supports in place, including an automatic one-off COVID-19 heating payment of £200 to people who are in receipt of pension credit or the highest rates of disability benefits; a £10 Christmas bonus, which is paid to people who are in receipt of a qualifying benefit; a winter fuel payment of between £100 and £300 for eligible older people; and a cold weather payment of £25. The universal credit allowance has also been increased. I have increased the annual income threshold for discretionary support and introduced a self-isolation grant for people who have been diagnosed with COVID-19.

The provision of food support remains a priority for me, so I have provided almost £800,000 to FareShare, which is a food redistribution charity. I have allocated £750,000 to councils to provide access to food. My Department has also allocated a further £3.5 million to support access to food, and I hope to make an announcement in the not-too-distant future about our warm, well and connected policy, which will operate throughout December and January.

Ms Mullan: I thank the Minister for her answer and for her work and ongoing support for those who are most vulnerable. I also want to thank her for meeting the community and voluntary sector in Derry and Strabane with me last week. Will she outline her intention to work collectively with other Departments and agencies to ensure that long-term and targeted support is provided to those who are most in need?

3.00 pm

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for her question. It was a pleasure to meet, along with the Member and Martina Anderson, the many workers from across the community in the Foyle constituency. It is important to put on record — this is also in response to the previous question — that Edwin Poots, Nichola Mallon and I are working on the revitalisation fund for councils; and Naomi Long, Robin Swann and I are working on supporting people, particularly in relation to homelessness. From an Executive point of view, I have enjoyed the full support of each Minister for every substantial allocation of money that has gone to sports and arts. It is important that we use public money to get better outcomes for people. I reassure the Member, and other Members, that I will continue to take that approach.

Mr Durkan: Will the Minister confirm whether a household can receive multiple heating payments if more than one eligible individual is living at the address?

Ms Ní Chuilín: It is for one household. The COVID heating payment is a one-off, and the household is the applicant. It is on top of the winter fuel payment, which is anything from £100 to £300. This payment is in addition to what is already there. Given that people have had to isolate for a lot longer than we thought in March would be the case and the fact that we are going into a very, very cold spell, I am sure that the Member will agree that it is important that people stay not only warm but safe and well.

Mr Beggs: Are individuals who are in receipt of a supplementary payment, due to the complete loss of their award when transitioning from DLA to PIP, entitled to the additional heating payment?

Ms Ní Chuilín: The payment is for anybody on pension credit, higher rates of disability or higher rates of PIP, and it includes the children. People who are currently in receipt of any of those, never mind what they are transferring to, meet the criteria and should receive the payment. If the Member has examples of where he feels that that may not be the case, he can drop them up to my office.

Ms Bradshaw: The Minister will recall that, approximately this time last year, she, Christopher and I met with the —. Sorry.

Sign Language Legislation

4. Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister for Communities for an update on the proposed legislation on sign language. (AQO 1275/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: It is too close to Christmas, Paula.

Ms Bradshaw: I know. I am sorry.

Ms Ní Chuilín: Yes, I recall that. A draft framework and policy proposals for legislation on sign language were consulted on prior to the publication of 'New Decade, New Approach', which committed us all to introducing a sign language Bill. I hope to introduce a sign language Bill very soon, within this mandate. My officials are engaging with the Office of the Legislative Counsel with a view to establishing a timetable and preparing instructions.

Ms Bradshaw: Thank you, and apologies. The Minister will recall from the evening that we spent in a church hall in my constituency how important the sign language Bill will be. I am sure that she will have heard from many constituents about the loneliness that they have felt during lockdown. To what degree will access read across not only to public services but to wider societal issues such as sport and community life?

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Member will be aware that I brought forward the framework in my last year in DCAL. That framework was widely consulted upon, and it touched on different sectors. That sign language framework will help to inform the Bill. This has been widely consulted on, and, if we have heard anything from the sector, it is that we should, "Just get on with it".

Ms Sheerin: Will lessons be learned from what has been done in the South of Ireland and Scotland? Will the Minister commit to meeting with the sector on the implementation of the Bill?

Ms Ní Chuilín: All other jurisdictions and legislatures have been consulted. Not only have any Bills, Acts or pieces of work that they have brought forward helped to shape the framework, they will help to shape the Bill.

Not so long ago, I met with people who are deaf or partially deaf. I made a point of meeting as many people from the sector as possible, including parents who have children who have lost their hearing or who do not have hearing. I am more than happy to meet more people in that situation, particularly given that the framework is not on a statutory footing. There is therefore a denial of rights, particularly for families. People communicate through sign language, and we definitely need legislation to enable that.

Water Leak Claims

5. Mr Robinson asked the Minister for Communities whether the Northern Ireland Housing Executive or third-party contractors are responsible for paying tenants' claims for goods damaged due to a water leak. (AQO 1276/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his question. For a payment to be made in a public liability claim, some degree of negligence must be established. Depending on the circumstances giving rise to a water leak, in some cases that negligence may attach to the Housing Executive, while in others it may attach to the contractor. It is also possible that negligence could be established jointly against both the Housing Executive and the contractor. Tenants are advised to have contents insurance in place, but that is not always affordable. The Housing Executive provides useful guidance and information on public liability claims on its website, and I welcome comment on that content from anyone who looks at it.

Mr Robinson: I thank the Minister for her answer, but will she undertake to ensure that clear guidance is issued to tenants? At present, there is confusion and frustration over the fact that there is no clear pathway for Northern Ireland Housing Executive tenants.

Ms Ní Chuilín: I will certainly have another look at it. The Member tells me that it needs cleared up, so I will need to have a look at it. I will write to the chief executive and the chair of the board thereafter. Any guidance on a departmental website needs to be as clear and plain as possible so that people can access the information and services that they need.

Mr Nesbitt: I wonder whether the Minister can inform the House, either today or in writing, of the average amount paid out in recent years because of damage that is the responsibility of contractors.

Ms Ní Chuilín: I will have to respond in writing, because I do not have that information. When responsibility is contested, the situation can become protracted, and it is tenants who are, unfortunately, caught in the middle. I do not think that anyone thinks that is a satisfactory position to be in. I will get the information in writing to the Member.

Ms Kimmins: Will the Minister advise whether public liability claims against the Housing Executive are a frequent occurrence?

Ms Ní Chuilín: For anyone who has been subjected to water damage and leaks, particularly if a contractor has been in, once is enough. As I said to the Member for Strangford, Mr Mike Nesbitt, I will provide the Member with a breakdown of what has happened, even for 2019-2020, and I will share it with Mr Robinson, who asked the listed question, to determine whether the Housing Executive was responsible or the contractor was responsible, and what the outcome was, if any.

Mr McGlone: I ask the Minister about the importance of updating tenants on their responsibilities to have proper insurance cover for contents and the like. We are coming into really cold weather. We have had a wee sample of it. We do not want people being left literally wet and caught with no cover at all, and their house possibly ruined through flooding or another circumstance that has occurred in their home as a result of poor weather.

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Member probably heard what I said at the start of my answer to Mr Robinson. It is about affordability. For many families who are on low income and living in poverty, they are often dealing with a decision either to pay for house insurance or to feed their kids. It is the tenant's responsibility — it is in the tenant's handbook — and housing associations and the Housing Executive constantly remind tenants of it. When you are talking about families living in poverty, however, house insurance is not at the top of their list.

Financial Hardship: Christmas Support

6. Ms Bunting asked the Minister for Communities how her Department will support people facing financial hardship over the Christmas period. (AQO 1277/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for her question. My Department has a range of initiatives to support people facing financial hardship over the Christmas period. In my answer to Karen Mullan, I gave a breakdown of the supports that are in place, including the winter fuel payment; the cold weather payment, if there are prolonged cold spells; a Christmas bonus payment of £10; an increase in discretionary support; and access to food and other supports that my Department funds through the councils. I hope to announce other additional supports very soon.

Ms Bunting: I am grateful to the Minister for her answer, and I noted her earlier answer. At this stage, I am asking particularly about food banks and the people who use them. In East Belfast, we have Manna and the Larder, which are both run by churches and are doing sterling work, but, regrettably, they provide a vital service. The Minister will know that, as more people struggle, there are more desperate people in need and fewer people who can give, and the food banks are running short of supplies. Is there anything that her Department can do directly with food banks, or can she advise how food banks can tie in with FareShare?

Ms Ní Chuilín: Both. FareShare has received money from my Department, and most community food banks, if not them all, work very closely with FareShare. In the Member's constituency, money has been coming to food banks from my Department through allocations made by Belfast City Council. I am looking at additional supports.

I want to put on record that, ideally, there should not be food banks. That is the bottom line: there should not be food banks. We need to put more money into people's pockets so they can make their own choices. However, while we are in this situation, I am sure that the Member will agree that, from right across the Executive, substantial support for bids has been provided through my Department for me to help people with food support and other essential items.

Ms Hunter: I thank the Minister for her answers so far. If someone should need to claim universal credit in December, given that there is usually a wait of six weeks for a payment, will her Department take any steps to ensure that people receive the payment more quickly so that no one will be left penniless at Christmas?

Ms Ní Chuilín: Absolutely, and the contingency fund is available. People should not wait five weeks for their UC payment, and they should not be offered loans either. There is the contingency fund, and there is also discretionary support so that people can get a payment. No one should be sitting like that over Christmas. I remind people that, while a wait of a few weeks for universal credit is in the legislation, people should not be offered a loan first; they should be offered money from the contingency fund, and, if that does not suit, they should be offered money from the discretionary fund.

Mr Butler: I thank the Minister for her answer. On the back of Ms Hunter's question, as you pointed out, the discretionary support fund is a vital support mechanism. However, I am aware that applications are taking over seven days in some instances. Will the Minister advise what steps she will take to reduce the time taken to process applications this side of Christmas?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am genuinely sorry to hear that. I was, and am, keeping a close eye on the average payment time. It worked out at about four days, and I still felt that we should try to get a payment out as quickly as we could. I assure the Member that staffing and training have been increased, and the staff are dedicated and committed to ensuring that no one is left without food or money, particularly in these very cold days and in the run-up to Christmas.

Ms Rogan: I thank the Minister for her answers so far. Minister, what is your Department doing to ensure that people are aware of the benefits that they are entitled to and take up the help that is available to them?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I will give Advice NI a plug and say that it has been very good at publicising benefit take-up campaigns and publicising what is available. I know that anyone who is involved in the independent advice sector will be letting people know, as will Age NI, NICVA and many other organisations. The difficulty is that you will always find people who do not have access to social media and who may not be connected to those groups. The Department publishes information. If the Member or anybody else knows of groups or individuals who have found out about a benefit after the fact, they should come back to me so that we can close the gaps. I do not want anybody to be left sitting destitute or without.

Job Start Payment Scheme

7. Dr Archibald asked the Minister for Communities to outline progress in delivering a scheme similar to Job Start in Scotland, which takes account of local circumstances and needs. (AQO 1278/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for her question. I am pleased to advise that we will be providing increased funding to help to remove barriers to work for people who receive income-related benefits. For example, in Scotland, the Job Start scheme payment is a grant of £250, or £400 if the recipient is the main carer for a child or children. That is available only to those aged 16 to 24. Here, the adviser discretionary fund can provide up to £300 to remove a barrier to work. I am increasing that limit to £1,500 in a 12-month period and expanding the range of supports that it can be used for.

Dr Archibald: I thank the Minister for her response. That is useful information. Can the Minister provide any assurances about participation in Job Start programmes?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am not sure: is the Member asking about sanctions? This is not about sanctions. This is about a voluntary programme that, hopefully, young people aged 18 to 24 will avail themselves of. If they cannot — rather than do not want to — avail themselves of it, they will not be sanctioned, which was the problem, particularly for young people with educational challenges, those with mental health issues, and those who are leaving care or being looked after. They were in the bracket of young people who were more sanctioned than others. It is about the fact that some of them cannot make their appointment, rather than that they just did not bother turning up.

Charity Sector: COVID-19 Support

8. Mr Newton asked the Minister for Communities how she intends to support the charity sector through the COVID-19 pandemic. (AQO 1279/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: [Long Pause.] Sorry about this; we are flying through these questions.

Our local charity sector is vital to us as a community, especially now. I know that charities have been struggling financially because fundraising is down. In June of this year, I put £15.5 million into the charity fund, and I am pleased to say that 501 successful applicants received a total of £8.8 million. I am acutely aware that charities still face significant financial challenges, and I am working on making an announcement shortly on a further phase of funding to support them.

Mr Newton: The Minister will know that, although the number of charities that she quoted have been supported, quite a number have not. It seems that there are charities that, even though they are independent in Northern Ireland, because they operate nationally and the national body has reserves, the local body is perceived to be ruled out of getting funding from the Department for Communities. Will the Minister look at the situation so that local bodies that are tied to national bodies are eligible for funding from the support that she has on offer?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am sorry to hear that, because having reserves does not exclude any charity from applying to this fund. If the Member has any examples, I will be happy to receive them. This is about how people try to raise money here for charitable purposes and to provide good outcomes for people. Charity fundraising has been greatly inhibited, almost to the point where it has ceased, so I would be really disappointed, particularly given the work that people are doing on our behalf, if they did not get any support at all.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: We now move on to topical questions.

Grassroots Sports

T1. Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Communities to clarify the situation with grassroots sports, particularly on the younger side, given that there has been a lot of talk and communication about elite sports, which have got back on the road again, albeit with barriers in place. (AQT 791/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his question. I know about his interest in grassroots sport. I will, hopefully, get a bit more detail on that today or early tomorrow. The number of spectators has increased, but I think that the Member is asking me whether training and so on can recommence. I am still waiting on those regulations to be sorted out.

I hope that they will be sorted out as soon as possible, because I know that a lot of the sporting bodies, and particularly the smaller clubs, have been excellent at social distancing and at providing sanitisers for the youngsters and trying to keep them as safe as possible.

Mr Hilditch: I appreciate the Minister's answer, and I am sure that she will appreciate that kids are now developing from around five or six years of age through to early teens before they go into the older age groups, so I am talking about that very young element, who have lost out so much this year. I am seeking the Minister's support for that to be looked into as quickly as possible and clarity sought.

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Chair of the Communities Committee is here, and, when those regulations are brought forward and further clarification and guidance is offered, it will be copied to the Committee. I will make sure that it is copied to you as well.

Business Rates

T2. Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Communities, given that retail forms an important social and community space and element in our town centres, albeit that all retailers, whether multinational or local independents, are struggling with the shift to online shopping, what action she has taken to contact the Minister of Finance to achieve a long-term reduction in the rates that are charged so that more realistic rents will be charged, with more businesses able to survive and provide a service to the community. (AQT 792/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I have not had a conversation with the Finance Minister about the long-term trajectory of rates. We are more focused on, first, the fact that there has been rates relief. We have had his support and the support of all of our Executive colleagues, including your colleague, for the revitalisation fund, which gets money out to help, in particular, small and local businesses. I am happy to copy the section from Hansard containing your question to Conor Murphy.

Mr Beggs: I thank the Minister for her response. Considerable pressure will be ongoing beyond the COVID period, and that is why I am asking the question. Similarly, has the Minister made contact, or in conjunction with the Finance Minister made contact, with the Chancellor so that online large retailers such as Amazon pay fair taxation and are unable to continue to shift their profits offshore and use complex tax avoidance methods, leaving local retailers at a disadvantage?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I would not ever contact the British Chancellor, because the normal protocol is that it goes through the Finance Minister. I have absolutely no doubt that the matter of supporting our local businesses has been raised. The issue of big global companies coming here and paying very little tax is one that has been with us for a long time, and I agree with the Member. I do not think that they pay their fair share. In fact, there have been court battles, which are probably still ongoing, around some of those big names. They are not paying their fair share. Their employees are, but, as companies, they are not, and that is not right.

Sports Hardship Fund

T3. Mr Butler asked the Minister for Communities for an update on the sports hardship fund and any other work that her Department has undertaken, given that she has been very vocal and supportive of sporting groups at all levels and will share his fear that some groups, whether grassroots, amateur or elite, are coming under viability pressures at this time. (AQT 793/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his question. I share his concern about the impact of what, indeed, David Hilditch raised. This year has been horrendous for many people, particularly young people, who have lost out on quite a lot of socialisation with their friends. There is no better example of when they are with their friends as when they are playing sport.

On sports hardship, I am sure that the Member will be aware that I have put a significant amount of money forward. Indeed, £25 million is going into sport. I met the governing bodies and the Northern Ireland Sports Forum last week, along with Sport NI. We want this process to be as straightforward as possible. The applications are open, and, hopefully, awards will be made at the end of January or the beginning of February to help people not just with their loss but with the impact of COVID. The best thing that we can do is to get this guidance sorted out as quickly as possible so that people can get back to doing what they want.

Mr Butler: I thank the Minister for her answer. I have had a number of emails and letters from constituents who are concerned about the viability of the Belfast Giants at the SSE Arena, which has been a great success for Northern Ireland and one of the sports that truly unites us here. Can the Minister outline whether she has had any contact with Belfast Giants or if she is aware of any assistance that has been sought? Would she consider any application that was made?

Ms Ní Chuilín: Like many others, or maybe not, I was shocked to find out that the Belfast Giants have been here for 20 years. Time has gone in the blink of an eye. I will not receive any applications; it will be Sport NI. I am aware that they will make an application because I saw it covered in a local news bulletin. I will not mention the name in case I give them an unfair advantage. It is something that many groups have been talking about because they need some support. The Belfast Giants are more than aware of the application process.

Sports Hardship Fund

T4. Ms P Bradley asked the Minister for Communities, in a follow up to Mr Butler, and after welcoming the sports hardship fund, which opened last Friday, to outline the rationale behind the fact that the groups, organisations and clubs have to go through their governing bodies, which might benefit some of the larger organisations such as football, GAA and rugby but could make it more difficult for some of the smaller groups and clubs whose affiliated bodies might be in other parts of the UK or in the Republic of Ireland. (AQT 794/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: To assure the Member, the governing bodies are not making decisions on the applications; they are supporting them. The Sports Forum deals with a lot of other governing bodies — the smaller ones — and, indeed, Sport NI usually deals with the elite athletes and others. It is also to help smaller groups, in particular, with the template. For example, a small five-a-side football team should not have to go through the same due diligence as Linfield. That is not fair, but the IFA should be there to help them and, indeed, anybody else. That was the rationale behind that.

Ms P Bradley: I thank the Minister for her answer. In the same vein, what conversations has the Minister had with the Finance Minister? I was recently made aware that a cricket club had applied, through the Finance Minister, for that stream of funding but was told that it had to apply through the sports fund. Will there be an even playing field? Whether it is a working men's club, social club or sports club, will they not be disproportionately affected by applying through the sports fund, instead of through the Department of Finance funding?

Ms Ní Chuilín: The primary function is about sport. A working men's club that does not have any attachment to sport, other than its name, need not apply. You would not be surprised at some of the queries I have had. In my opinion, this needs to be as straightforward as possible because people have had a tough enough year. If anybody is in any doubt, they should go to Sport NI to ask for support with the guidance. If they are not getting support from a governing body, or they do not get enough and maybe need more detail, they should go straight to Sport NI, because it is primed and ready to take any queries. I got that assurance last week because it was one of the things that I asked.

Arts Funding

T5. Mr O'Toole asked the Minister for Communities, in relation to arts funding and the different funds that have been announced, to state how much of the £29 million has been allocated and how many grants have been given out. (AQT 795/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I do not have that information to hand, but I will write to the Member. I want to assure him that we will make, and have made, additional funding available for individuals and freelancers because they are going through a difficult time. They do not normally receive public money. With regard to the breakdown, I am not saying this to be smart, but the Arts Council has published it on its website. I will get a breakdown of the grant given under each heading, but I suggest that the Member also goes to the website.

Mr O'Toole: I thank the Minister for her answer. Will she give some assurance that all the allocation will be given out to artists and creatives, whether or not they are technical? I have dealt with constituents who, for example, run stage crews. A wide range of people have been completely excluded from other schemes and are a vital part of our creative industries. Is the Minister confident that all that money will be given out before the end of the financial year and that people who need help will get it, because some of these schemes are not opening until the new year?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I want to assure the Member because I have heard speculation, not only about when the sports funding will be available but when the arts funding will be available. The Arts Council has got that out to people as quickly as possible.

Some of the feedback that I have received from individuals is that they have been helped at the right time with the appropriate amount of money. I assure the Member and everybody else that the process has been as open and transparent as possible and has been supported and made easy by the staff of the Arts Council.

Intimidation Points

T6. Ms Dolan asked the Minister for Communities to outline how the proposals in her statement on 3 November — to establish a statutory body to oversee the verification of intimidation points and greater PSNI involvement in the intimidation points system process — will be progressed. (AQT 796/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for her question. That was one of the first questions asked by Dolores Kelly and Linda Dillon at today's Question Time. We need a robust scheme that is properly verified because some people have abused intimidation points. While some people abuse the system, other people are lying on sofas with four generations under one roof. Some of us have constituents with over 200 points who have not received intimidation points, and they need to be supported. We need to ensure that the system is robust and that it verifies anyone's claim for intimidation points.

Ms Dolan: Go raibh maith agat. Thank you, Minister for that answer. It will clearly will take time to develop new proposals. Will interim arrangements be put in place during that development phase?

Ms Ní Chuilín: It will take time to develop the proposals. Next week, I will announce the consultation on the fundamental review of housing allocation points. My officials and I will meet Housing Executive officials to look at next steps. I want the proposals to be brought forward as soon as possible, particularly for victims of domestic abuse and violence to ensure that they are not further penalised as a result of the current system.

Councils: Loss of Income

T7. Ms Anderson asked the Minister for Communities what support has been put in place for councils, including Derry City and Strabane District Council, to deal with loss of income in 2020-21. (AQT 797/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: At this stage, I am counting to well over £85 million, and we are still going. This money is needed. It will keep the councils open and essential functions going. In the Member's constituency, she will see that the council is the funding conduit to get money out for food and essential support for the community. The Executive have completely supported that. I met representatives from the Society of Local Authority Chief Executives (SOLACE) and the NI Local Government Association (NILGA). I have no doubt that they will put in more bids, and my Department has fully funded each of their requests.

Ms Anderson: Go raibh maith agat, Minister, for that answer. What decision-making model has the Department put in place for income support allocations for each council?

Ms Ní Chuilín: The model has been that, when the first application went in, when Deirdre Hargey was here, there was strong due diligence to ensure that any asks of the councils were tested by our financial mechanisms and procedures. They withstood that due diligence. The requests are coming in based on councils' needs, and, to be fair, that relationship has been respectful and inclusive, and it has worked. All 11 councils have received the full amount for which they applied to my Department.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Mr Gary Middleton: one question and one answer.

Subregional Stadia Programme for Soccer

T8. Mr Middleton asked the Minister for Communities when funding from the subregional stadia programme for soccer will be allocated. (AQT 798/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The short answer is this: as soon as I get the final business cases. My officials, Sport NI and the IFA are working very closely together. I hope that an announcement on the subregional programme will be made in the spring or early summer.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: That concludes questions to the Minister for Communities.

Mr Givan: On a point of order, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. I would appreciate the Speaker's Office investigating the Alliance Party Member for East Antrim, Stewart Dickson, who, during question 1 to the Communities Minister, made very serious allegations and maligned my character when he said that I had sought to derail the Domestic Abuse and Family Proceedings Bill in earlier proceedings today. Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, you can confirm that it was the Justice Minister who decided not to move the Further Consideration Stage, thus preventing the Assembly from considering this important legislation.

Members will know that Chairmen, or Madam Chairs, of Committees do not act unilaterally, and the decision in respect of that amendment was supported by the SDLP, the Green Party and the Ulster Unionist Party. It also had conditional support from Sinn Féin. Had the Justice Minister's legal aid amendment been successful, Sinn Féin, too, would have supported the commencement order associated with that amendment.

To that effect, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, will you insist upon the Member for East Antrim coming to the House, retracting his outrageous statement and apologising to me and the House for misleading Members?

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Thank you. Standing Orders 36 to 42 deal with the procedures of the House in relation to the scheduling of Bills. What the Member said — I am not getting into the debate — about the legislation not being moved by the relevant Minister is accurate. In relation to the comments made by Mr Dickson, I suggest that the best way to proceed is to allow Mr Speaker to review Hansard — I am not calling for a basin of water — to see whether any breach occurred and take the appropriate action arising from that. I hope that that satisfies the Member.

Adjourned at 3.36 pm.

Northern Ireland Assembly

Tuesday 8 December 2020

The Assembly met at 10.30 am (Mr Speaker in the Chair).

Members observed two minutes' silence.

Assembly Business

Mr Speaker: I have been advised that junior Minister Gordon Lyons will be moving the motion to approve a draft statutory rule on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs. The motion was relaid by the First Minister and the deputy First Minister to facilitate that arrangement. A revised Order Paper was issued this morning.

Mr Buckley: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. I am sure that you, and the House, will be aware of this being a hugely significant day, with the roll-out of the first COVID-19 vaccinations across Northern Ireland. I commend all those who are involved with that triumph.

Can you advise, Mr Speaker, on Standing Order 18A(5) on oral and written statements? I find it bizarre that the Minister of Health is not before the House today to make an oral statement. I am sure that, like me, Members have many questions on logistics, storage, communications and addressing vaccine hesitancy, to which they rightly deserve answers.

Mr Speaker: I thank the Member for his point of order. It is always the Minister's prerogative to come to the Chamber, and I would always encourage Ministers to do so as often, as early and in as timely a manner as possible, given the importance of all their business. The Minister has not come here to make a statement, and that is his choice. In fairness to him, however, it was only last week that he was here in response to the debate in the House, and the issue was thoroughly aired at that time.

The Member has made his point. It is a very good news story and an important development for all of us in how we combat the virus. There will be debates on the health regulations later today, as the Member will know. I dare say, given the wisdom and intelligence in the Chamber, that Members will find opportunities to raise that very important and positive development. The Member has made his point, and I thank him for that.

Mr O'Toole: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. Can you advise on the best way in which MLAs can secure a debate, given the gravity and urgency of the Brexit negotiations and their effect on Northern Ireland? I have submitted two Matters of the Day that, as is your right, you have not granted. It is really important, however, that we have a debate, given that civic society and business groups across Northern Ireland came together yesterday to urge the UK and the European Union to do a deal, which is in the vital and solemn interests of everybody whom we serve. I was wondering whether the Speaker could advise on how we can, given the week that is in it, with the European Council meeting at the end of this week, secure a debate in order to make our voice heard on how important this is for all the people whom we represent.

Mr Speaker: I do not think that the Member expects me, in response to that point of order, to rehearse arguments on Matters of the Day. I know that you recognise that it is the Speaker's decision to do that.

There are opportunities at all times for Members to raise these matters. It would be wrong to suggest for one second that that matter has not been addressed repeatedly in the Chamber, as is appropriate, given its importance. The Member should reflect on other opportunities to raise the matter in the House on an appropriate basis. Thank you for that.

Executive Committee Business

The draft Marketing of Plant and Propagating Material (Legislative Functions) (Amendment) (EU Exit) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020

Mr Lyons (Junior Minister, The Executive Office): I beg to move

That the draft Marketing of Plant and Propagating Material (Legislative Functions) (Amendment) (EU Exit) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved.

Mr Speaker: The Business Committee has agreed that there should be no time limit to the debate.

Mr Lyons: I send my best wishes to the Agriculture Minister, and I am, obviously, standing in for him. I know that many Members have passed on their best wishes already, but I want to pass on mine and, I am sure, the best wishes of everyone in the Chamber.

I am seeking the approval of the Assembly to make the Marketing of Plant and Propagating Material (Legislative Functions) (Amendment) (EU Exit) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020. I am bringing this draft legislation before you under the affirmative resolution procedure, as the statutory rule (SR) gives the Department a legislative power.

The proposed legislation would transfer to DAERA powers that would allow the provision of legislative functions from two EU directives that are not in annex 2 of the Northern Ireland protocol to be exercised by DAERA. One relates to the marketing of propagating material of ornamental plants, and the other relates to the marketing of vegetable-propagating and planting material other than seed. The SR will ensure that domestic legislation can be operated in propagating material and plant-propagating material, ornamentals and vegetable plant material after the EU exit implementation period (IP).

To give some background, as a result of those directives not being in the Northern Ireland protocol, the EU powers that are used to make and amend legislation relating to the directives will not be available to DAERA post-implementation period completion day, which is, of course, 31 December 2020. If no action is taken, the Department will not have sufficient powers available to make domestic legislation in propagating material and plant-propagating material.

The transfer of functions to domestic legislation can be done under section 2(2) of the European Communities Act 1972, provided that it occurs before the IP completion day. The powers are used in the SR to transfer the legislative functions from the two EU directives that I referred to, which are not in the Northern Ireland protocol, in order to give the Department the powers to make and amend the relevant domestic legislation.

The draft regulations confer powers to DAERA through a transfer of legislative functions that would not be available to the Department after completion day. That will enable DAERA to make and amend relevant legislation in the areas that I mentioned. The making of the SR does not make or amend policy in those areas.

Mr McAleer (The Chairperson of the Committee for Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs): I welcome the opportunity to speak as Chairperson of the Committee for Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs and to outline the views of the Committee.

The European Union (Withdrawal Agreement) Act 2020 means that it has been necessary to review plant health legislation in order to take account of the protocol. DAERA currently uses section 2 powers of the European Communities Act 1972 to make legislation on the marketing of plant-propagating and planting material. Those powers will not be available after the end of EU exit implementation period.

While powers are available under the European Union (Withdrawal Agreement) Act for matters that are in annex 2 of the protocol, Council directive 98/56/EC, which regulates ornamental plant-propagating material, and Council directive 2008/72/EC, which regulates vegetable-propagating and planting material other than seed, are not in annex 2 of the protocol.

The AERA Committee considered a written briefing on an SL1 for a statutory rule on the Marketing of Plant and Propagating Material (Legislative Functions) (Amendment) (EU Exit) Regulations (NI) 2020 at its meeting on 22 October. It is that SR that we are considering today. At the meeting, the Committee indicated that it had no concerns or objections to the rule. The Committee has been advised that this instrument will allow DAERA, as the appropriate authority in this jurisdiction, to exercise legislative functions here after the end of the transition period equivalent to legislative functions exercisable by the Commission and the Council.

The instrument sets out DAERA's powers to set conditions with which ornamental planting material must comply; set labelling and document requirements for plant material; modify the regulated species of vegetable plant materials; set conditions with which vegetable plant material must comply; and derogate in the event of temporary supply difficulties. These regulation-making powers will enable the Department to amend marketing requirements after the end of the transition period to ensure that those statutory requirements can keep pace with scientific and technical knowledge and be responsive to market conditions.

The Committee considered the draft SR at its meeting on 3 December and was advised that no public consultation had taken place. The SR has been screened for equality impact, and there is no impact on business, charities, voluntary bodies or the public sector. A regulatory impact assessment has not been prepared. The regulations will have no financial implications for businesses. It has no human rights implications, nor is it incompatible with EU law. The order is, therefore, deemed to comply with the requirements of section 24 of the NI Act 1998. The report of the Examiner of Statutory Rules did not identify any issues in relation to the statutory rule. Therefore, the Committee was content with the proposals from the Department and recommends that the statutory rule be confirmed by the Assembly.

Mr Irwin: I send my best wishes to Edwin Poots and wish him a speedy recovery. The two motions before the House represent the latter stages of the Brexit transition process as we accelerate towards 1 January. It is important that we have these regulations before the House. In respect of the draft Marketing of Plant and Propagating Material motion, the Committee had its opportunity to discuss these points.

There was a general acceptance that what is before the House is necessary, as is much of the legislation coming from DAERA, given the approaching deadline.

Powers being transferred include setting labelling and documentary requirements for plant material and derogations in the event of temporary supply difficulties. As the clock ticks down towards the deadline, I note that efforts are intensifying. At this late stage, there is still time for the Prime Minister and his negotiating team to ensure that, post-transition, our economies across the United Kingdom are protected and that trading arrangements remain frictionless and without costly barriers.

I have raised in recent weeks the issue of seed potatoes and ware potatoes and the absolute necessity for the east-west supply route to remain open and frictionless. I would welcome the Minister's update in that regard. I know that his Department has been in direct contact on the matter. I welcome his continued work on that front, given the importance of this market to, for instance, the hundreds of fast-food outlets across the Province that utilise potatoes from the south of England.

The Minister may also want to spell out to the House the wider implications of not progressing the legislation on plant and propagating material. As I have stated, we have little option, given the countdown to 1 January, which is just a few weeks away.

Mr McGlone: The SDLP accepts the amendments to the regulations on the marketing of plant and propagating material. The Chairperson has gone into the processes at the Committee in quite a bit of detail. The amendments are some of the many required by Brexit that the Assembly has had to scrutinise in a limited period. Indeed, there is a limited period for some of this stuff. The pace at which we were expected to scrutinise the statutory instruments, with the limited detail that we had, and return them to Westminster was, frankly, a disgrace. Those who think that Brexit was a good idea in allowing us time to scrutinise should reflect on that.

The regulations will transfer functions to the Department to allow for legislation in those areas after the end of the transition period. As the amendments are largely technical, we do not see a problem with agreeing to them; in fact, they are practically necessary. However, those powers should not be left in limbo or surrendered to Westminster at any stage. It will be for the Assembly to scrutinise any future legislation that the Department chooses to bring forward as a result of these and future amendments.

10.45 am

Mrs Barton: The SR is required in Northern Ireland to transpose EU law into domestic legislation and ensure that the UK fulfils its obligations. It deals with regulations for the marketing of ornamental plants and propagating material and the marketing of vegetable-propagating and plant material other than seed. The SR does not introduce new policy. Therefore, the Ulster Unionist Party supports it.

Mr Blair: I thank the junior Minister for laying out the detail of what is before us. I will speak initially as a member of the AERA Committee.

As has been explained, the statutory rule was laid before the Committee. It was content with the merits of the policy and agreed that it should move to the next legislative stage. The SR contains provisions relating to the marketing of ornamental plants and propagating material and vegetable-propagating material other than seed.

The statutory instrument will allow DAERA, as the appropriate authority in Northern Ireland, to exercise legislative functions in Northern Ireland after the end of the transition period. It sets out DAERA's powers to set conditions with which ornamental plant material must comply, including set labelling and document requirements for plant material. It also modifies the regulated species of vegetable plant material, sets conditions with which vegetable plant material must comply and allows the Department to derogate in the event of temporary supply difficulties.

The statutory rule is mainly technical; nevertheless, in the run-up to Christmas, it is a useful opportunity to thank DAERA officials for all the work that they have done on our behalf to make legislative preparation for the EU exit process, often in the face of much uncertainty.

In closure, speaking on behalf of the Alliance Party, I have no objections to the rules or regulations.

Mr Speaker: No other Members have indicated that they wish to speak on the matter. I invite junior Minister Lyons to conclude the debate and make the winding-up speech on the motion.

Mr Lyons: Thank you very much, Mr Speaker. I thank Members for considering the motion. It appears that the House is in broad agreement with what has been proposed, and I do not intend to go over the points that have been made. To summarise, the regulations will transfer legislative powers to DAERA and do not make any policy changes. It is important that the SR be made before the implementation period ends to ensure that the Department takes powers to make and amend legislation in that policy area. I commend the motion to the Assembly and ask it to approve the draft Marketing of Plant and Propagating Material (Legislative Functions) (Amendment) (EU Exit) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That the draft Marketing of Plant and Propagating Material (Legislative Functions) (Amendment) (EU Exit) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved.

The draft Plant Health and Diseases of Animals (Amendment) (EU Exit) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020

Mr Speaker: I have been advised that junior Minister Lyons will move the motion on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs. The First Minister and the deputy First Minister relaid the motion to facilitate that arrangement. A revised Order Paper was issued this morning.

Mr Lyons (Junior Minister, The Executive Office): I beg to move

That the draft Plant Health and Diseases of Animals (Amendment) (EU Exit) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved.

Mr Speaker: The Business Committee has agreed that there should be no time limit to the debate.

Mr Lyons: The draft regulations are to be made under powers that were conferred by the European Union (Withdrawal) Act 2018. They will ensure that Northern Ireland's primary legislation that governs plant health and animal health and welfare continues to operate effectively at the end of the transition period in a way that aligns with the Northern Ireland protocol.

The draft regulations are one of a number of SRs that will be laid before the Assembly over the coming weeks to ensure that Northern Ireland has a functioning statute book on and after 1 January 2021. As the draft regulations amend primary legislation, the 2018 Act requires that they are subject to the draft affirmative resolution procedure. That means that they cannot be made until the Assembly approves them.

The amendments that are made by the draft regulations are technical in nature. Before I explain what they do, it may assist Members if I provide a brief overview of the legislative background. In 2018 and 2019, a number of statutory instruments (SIs) were made at Westminster to ensure that domestic legislation could operate in the event that the UK left the European Union without an agreement. Some of those SIs amended Northern Ireland legislation for which the Department has responsibility. They were taken forward at Westminster to ensure transparency and scrutiny in the absence of a fully functioning Assembly and are due to come into operation at the end of the transition period.

While there are some provisions in those SIs that are still needed because they reflect the fact that the UK is no longer a member state of the European Union, some changes that are made in them do not take account of the Northern Ireland protocol. The draft regulations revoke some of those provisions. They also make some technical amendments to primary legislation relating to plant and animal health and welfare to ensure that it aligns with the Northern Ireland protocol. The draft regulations amend three separate pieces of primary legislation: the Plant Health Act (Northern Ireland) 1967; the Diseases of Animals (Northern Ireland) Order 1981; and the Welfare of Animals Act (Northern Ireland) 2011.

I will now speak briefly to the amendments to be made to each of those pieces of primary legislation. I will turn first to the amendments to the Plant Health Act (Northern Ireland) 1967. Sections 2 and 3 of that Act currently provide the Department with powers to make legislation to prevent the introduction of plant pests to Northern Ireland and their spread within or from Northern Ireland. The Department can exercise those powers if it believes that it is necessary or because it is required to do so to implement an obligation under EU law, referred to in the 1967 Act as a "Community obligation". Following the end of the transition period, those EU laws relating to the spread of organisms that are harmful to plants or plant products specified in paragraph 41 of annex 2 to the Northern Ireland protocol will continue to apply here. It is, therefore, important that the Department continues to be able to exercise its powers to make legislation under the 1967 Act to implement any obligations that may arise under those EU laws. The draft regulations achieve that by making technical amendments to sections 2 and 3 of the 1967 Act. They replace the references to "Community obligation" in those provisions with a reference to:

"retained EU law or relevant Protocol" obligation. For clarity, they also define what is meant by "relevant Protocol obligation". In a nutshell, the draft regulations ensure that, at the end of the transition period, the Department continues to have the powers necessary to fulfil its obligations.

The draft regulations make similar changes to the Diseases of Animals (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 and the Welfare of Animals Act (Northern Ireland) 2011. I will speak to those amendments together, as they are almost identical in nature. Article 46A of the 1981 order and section 28 of the 2011 Act provide powers for inspectors to enter premises to investigate alleged breaches of European Community obligations relating to animal health and animal welfare respectively. Following the end of the transition period, those EU laws relating to animal health and welfare listed in paragraphs 36 to 40 of annex 2 to the Northern Ireland protocol will continue to apply to Northern Ireland. The draft regulations ensure that the powers that inspectors need to investigate compliance with those EU laws can continue as they do now at the end of the transition period. Again, that is achieved by replacing the phrase "Community obligation" in the relevant legislative provisions with a reference to:

"retained EU law or relevant Protocol"

obligation. Given those changes, it is necessary to revoke some provisions in one of the no-deal statutory instruments that I mentioned earlier: the Animal Health and Welfare (Amendment) (Northern Ireland) (EU Exit) Regulations 2019. The 2019 regulations amended article 46A of the Diseases of Animals (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 and section 28 of the Welfare of Animals Act (Northern Ireland) 2011 to reflect the UK's departure from the EU. They did not, however, take account of the Northern Ireland protocol. The amendments to the 1981 order and the 2011 Act, and these draft regulations, mean that the changes made by the no-deal SI are no longer needed.

Finally, the draft regulations make a very minor amendment to a reference to the phrase, "other member States", in schedule 2 to the 1981 order to reflect the fact that the UK is no longer a member of the EU.

The Examiner of Statutory Rules has considered the draft regulations and has not raised any issue with them in her report. They have also been approved by the Office of the Legislative Counsel and were scrutinised by the Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs Committee on 22 October 2020. The Committee agreed that the regulations should proceed to the next legislative stage, which is the approval of the Chamber.

In conclusion, the changes contained in the draft regulations are technical and do not represent a change in policy. They ensure that the relevant legislation can continue to operate at the end of the transition period as it does now.

I commend the draft regulations to the Assembly.

Mr McAleer (The Chairperson of the Committee for Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs): At the outset, I add my best wishes to those being sent to the Minister. Yesterday, I recorded my best wishes and was also in contact with him. I wish him well and commend Mr Lyons, who is looking very comfortable at the Dispatch Box as the replacement Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs.

I welcome the opportunity to outline the views of the Committee. Plant health and animal welfare fall under the protocol. Primary legislation in this jurisdiction is required to align with EU obligations in accordance with the protocol so that it can continue to operate effectively at the end of the transition period.

I want to be clear that the primary legislation that we are referring to is the Plant Health Act (NI) 1967, the Diseases of Animals (NI) Order 1981 and the Welfare of Animals Act (NI) 2011. The AERA Committee considered a written briefing on an SL1, the draft Plant Health and Diseases of Animals (Amendment) (EU Exit) Regulations (NI) 2020, at its meeting on 22 October. It is that statutory rule that is subject to debate now. At that meeting, the Committee indicated that it had no concerns or objections to the rule. The rule amends the primary legislation that I mentioned earlier relating to plant health and animal health and welfare to ensure that it aligns with the protocol. The Committee has been advised that the rule is technical and does not involve policy changes. It provides that investigations in respect of alleged breaches of animal health and welfare obligations arising under either retained EU law or the protocol can continue at the end of the transition period. It also provides that DAERA can continue to make legislation preventing the introduction or spread of plant pests into or within this jurisdiction as per the protocol.

Finally, the statutory rule amends the Diseases of Animals (NI) Order 1981 to reflect that the UK is no longer a member of the EU. The Committee considered the draft SR at its meeting on 3 December and was advised that, as the amendments contained in the rule are technical and do not involve policy changes, they have not been subject to public consultation.

A screening exercise was carried out, and no equality issues were identified. No regulatory impact assessment is required as there are no impacts on the private, voluntary or public sector as a result of the changes. A rural needs screening exercise was carried out on the statutory rule, and no impact was identified. There are no financial implications associated with the introduction of the rule.

A statutory rule does not have any human rights implications, nor is it incompatible with EU law. It therefore complies with the requirements of section 24 of the NI Act. The report of the Examiner of Statutory Rules has not identified any issues with the statutory rule. Therefore, the Committee was content with the proposals from the Department and recommends that the statutory rule be confirmed by the Assembly.

I want to add a couple of comments as Sinn Féin spokesperson for agriculture and rural affairs. The legislative process that we have been engaged in marks, effectively, the legal separation of the North from the EU, which is against the democratic will of the people of the North.

We have been governed by the common agricultural policy for many decades. A huge regulatory and scrutiny burden has been placed on the Committee and the Department. I commend and echo what Patsy McGlone said in the previous debate: the legal separation has resulted in the Committee having to deal with over 50 statutory rules and instruments. In normal circumstances, that body of work could take years to do, but we have had to do it in weeks. Doing so has put officials in the Department and our Committee officials under huge stress. We on the Committee have held bumper meetings to deal with a huge load of scrutiny at pace. We find it very challenging and unacceptable, particularly given that it is not something that the people of the North consented to in the first place.

11.00 am

There are many other areas of relevance and many other challenges in the North of Ireland to do with rural affairs, such as COVID, TB and the ammonia action plan. There are loads of other issues that we want to look at, and that has placed our Committee, and the officials in particular, under huge pressure. It is really important that we pay tribute to the work of the officials. Occasionally, they do not get the information that they need in decent time from DEFRA in order to process it all for the Department and the Committee. I pay tribute to them for all the work that they have been doing. I also place on record my thanks to my colleagues on the Committee. As I said, we are trying our best to scrutinise a massive volume of work, which is the legal fallout from the separation that we did not consent to in the first place.

Mr Irwin: As with the previous motion, this is a legislative necessity around plant health and diseases of animals. Again, the time pressure is clear to avoid moving past the 1 January 2021 deadline without the necessary legislative powers in place. As was also the case with the previous motion, it is essential that legislative protection be provided. That is the nature of the motion.

As I often say publicly, the body of our current animal health and welfare regulations enables our produce to be elevated to an enviable biosecurity, welfare and, ultimately, taste and marketability position. I encourage the Department and the Minister to ensure that high animal welfare standards are maintained and protected, given the immense effort of our producers to create that high level of traceability and those high welfare standards. Farmers often refer to the amount of red tape around food traceability. As a farmer myself, I am only too aware of the burden that that places on the producer. That having been said, however, it is an important aspect of production that has many benefits, which must be protected as we move into 2021.

As of today, there is still much uncertainty around the terms of the trade deal and the outworkings of the negotiations that will continue throughout this week. I am interested to know what role the UK animal health and welfare common framework will play in designing future policy in that area and what engagement will take place with the industry on that. Engagement is essential across our agri-food and horticulture industries. It is also most important to know whether, in any trade deal that is arrived at, protections will be included in the UK Internal Market Bill so that we have a high degree of clarity for local businesses and our consumer base in order that our industry is best prepared for the changes that lie ahead. I support the motion.

Mr McGlone: The SDLP accepts the amendment to the regulations on plant health and diseases of animals. The amendment regulations are some of the many that are required by Brexit that the Assembly has had to scrutinise in a limited period. The Chairperson outlined the detail of that.

I, too, place on record my thanks to the departmental officials for their endurance, as they had to put up with all that on this side. They have been placed in a really awful position because of the lack of flow of information from DEFRA. Indeed, in some circumstances, as we found out in the Committee, there was no flow of information from DEFRA, which led to statutory instruments not being discussed as scheduled at the Committee given the limited information that was provided to us from the other side. Again, that is one of the fallouts from Brexit, and we do not need to rehearse those matters because they are being rehearsed elsewhere today, I hope.

The regulations align legislation with the terms of the Ireland protocol of the Brexit withdrawal agreement. They will allow for investigations into alleged breaches of obligations under either retained EU law or the protocol. I specifically welcome that, as the Minister outlined, the regulations will allow inspectors to retain the ability and the legal wherewithal to enter premises and examine not only animal health issues but animal welfare issues, which are crucial to us all. We have had motions in the Assembly about that, so it is vital that that power is retained and, indeed, built on.

As a result, the Department will also be able to make legislation to prevent the introduction of pests as required by obligations arising under the Ireland protocol. The protocol is an important safeguard, whether a trade deal emerges from the ongoing negotiations between the British Government and the EU. It is essential that the Assembly is able to meet its responsibilities in maintaining the protocol. The SDLP will hold the Minister and the Executive accountable for meeting those responsibilities.

Mrs Barton: The purpose of the statutory rule is to amend primary legislation relating to plant health and animal health and welfare and to ensure that domestic legislation could operate in the event of the UK leaving the EU without an agreement. The rule allows for investigations into alleged breaches of animal health and welfare obligations arising under retained EU law. It allows the Department to continue to make legislation in Northern Ireland in order to prevent the introduction and spread of plant pests and animal diseases. The high welfare standards that we have here in Northern Ireland need to be protected as we move forward into the world market. The UUP supports the SR.

Mr Blair: Speaking first as a member of the AERA Committee, I will say that I am aware that these matters were laid before the Committee for approval and that it considered them and was content with the merits of the policies. DAERA stated that there were no changes to policy since the information was submitted to the Committee.

Speaking as the chair and a member of the new Assembly all-party group on animal welfare, I note that the SR provides that investigations into alleged breaches of animal health and welfare obligations arising under either retained EU law or the protocol can continue at the end of the transition period as they do now. In light of that, as we face more uncertainty on EU exit in the coming days and weeks, I appeal for animal welfare issues to remain a high priority in that regard and for the Department to keep those matters under continual review.

On behalf of Alliance, I will say that, as the amendments are technical and do not involve policy changes, I am happy to support them.

Mr Harvey: I thank the junior Minister. I wish to make a few brief remarks on the draft regulations that are before the House. First, it must be noted that the draft Marketing of Plant and Propagating Material Regulations and the draft Plant Health and Diseases of Animals Regulations are necessary alterations to existing domestic legislation.

The regulations are being made through powers that were conferred on the Department by the European Union (Withdrawal) Act 2018 and are necessary for our exit from the European Union at the conclusion of the transition period on 31 December. As such, there is an urgency for the approval of those regulations and others that have come before the House in recent days as we prepare for our exiting of the European Union. Both sets of regulations are technical and do not involve any changes to current policy.

The first of the draft regulations relating to propagating material involves the transfer of some additional legislative powers to DAERA. That will give the devolved Executive powers in relation to the setting of conditions with which ornamental and vegetable plant material must comply, for instance, as well as the setting of labelling and documentary requirements for plant material. It is, therefore, anticipated that there would be an ability to build greater flexibility into the system in respect of those conditions in order to be as contextually aware as possible. Such flexibility may be required in relation to derogations in the event of temporary supply difficulties, for instance.

The regulations are designed to be compliant with annex 2 of the NI protocol, namely to ensure that we can operate effectively after the end of the transition period. My party's position on the NI protocol is well documented, and we have been consistent from its inception. We opposed the Commons Bill, on three occasions, and we continue to believe that the protocol is undemocratic and will be economically and constitutionally damaging for this region of the United Kingdom. That having been said, there is a duty on us to provide as much certainty and clarity as possible for businesses, individuals, producers and consumers. Not to introduce the regulations, regardless of opinion on the protocol, would leave the Department bereft of control in these areas and would not have a positive effect.

As for future travel in these areas, I look forward to the Department updating the Agriculture Committee on the outworkings of the policies and what input the UK animal health and welfare common frameworks will have in the design of future policy. Whilst EU and UK rules remain the same, that cannot be guaranteed, moving forward. Regulated areas, such as labelling, are at particular risk of divergence, and we will need to bear that in mind, post-transition. In the meantime, for the reasons that I have outlined, I support the motion.

Mr Wells: I have grave concerns about this, but I am going to bow to the much greater knowledge of EU issues of Mr Jim Allister QC, who had the privilege of representing Northern Ireland in the European Parliament and who is across these issues. I share his concerns about what is happening here today.

What we are doing has significant implications. It begs the question of why we are doing it, given that, hopefully, Northern Ireland and the rest of the United Kingdom will be out of the European Union on 31 December, when many of us will be rejoicing that we will no longer be under its bondage and control. The United Kingdom will become a free and independent state that will be able to make its own decisions on plant health, the importation of seeds, and animal welfare. The United Kingdom Government will be able to set standards that are even higher than those at present stipulated by the European Union. Therefore our product, as Mr Irwin says, will be able to be sold on the world market as having the highest possible standards in respect of inputs, the treatment of animals, the use of hormones and many other issues that are of concern to consumers throughout the world. Our products will be based on quality, rather than the lowest common denominator, and people will be able to buy food, particularly from Northern Ireland, with the confidence that the standards are some of the highest in the world.

Mr O'Toole: First, I will touch on the statutory rule, and, secondly, with your permission, Mr Speaker, I might stray into some broader issues in relation to Brexit, given what I said earlier, and the fact that Mr Wells has just done the same. Before I do that, I join others in wishing the Agriculture Minister all the best and a speedy recovery.

The statutory rule amends primary legislation to ensure that our statute book is in some kind of order as we approach the end of the transition period and that it aligns with the Ireland protocol. It provides that investigations into alleged breaches of animal health and welfare obligations arising under retained EU law can continue largely as they do now until the end of the transition period.

It also provides that the Department can continue to make any legislation pursuant to EU requirements under the protocol that prevents the introduction into or spread within Northern Ireland of plant pests and implement other obligations. That is welcome and sensible.

However, as with lots of these statutory rules that have come before us in relation to Brexit, they come with limited time and extremely abbreviated opportunity for scrutiny. Whatever one's perspective on leaving or remaining in the European Union or whatever one's perspective on the protocol, it cannot be right that we have had such limited time to debate the implications of this secondary legislation. The Chairman of the Agriculture Committee described clearly the pressure that not just the members but the clerical and support staff of that Committee have been under in scrutinising statutory regulations. We can only imagine the level of stress and demand that there has been on civil servants in the Department to prepare for these extremely novel arrangements.

Let us not forget that the reason why they are being scrutinised at such a hurried pace, in extremis and in such extraordinary circumstances, is because of the refusal of Boris Johnson's Government to extend the transition period in the middle of the biggest pandemic — the biggest global health crisis — certainly in a century, possibly even longer than that. It is, frankly, unconscionable that that has happened.

Let us take a step back and think about this. We have not been able to meet properly as an Assembly since March. We were only a few weeks into the return of these institutions when the biggest public health crisis in a century struck. Consequent to that, there occurred an enormous, unprecedented economic crisis. We are going to be dealing with the consequences of that for years, if not decades. It has completely transformed the way of life of the communities that we serve. It has taken over, in large part, the business of this Assembly and Executive. I am sure that it has filled up the inboxes of every MLA here, not just with routine casework but the most extraordinary and difficult requests from constituents for support, in extreme economic distress, and concern and anxiety about public health. It is extraordinary, immoral and unconscionable that the transition period has not been extended in those circumstances. That is why we are having to debate this legislation in such an extraordinarily compressed time.

It is also why small businesses across Northern Ireland, the UK, Ireland and these islands are having to process so rapidly the change that is going to come upon them in a few weeks. Many of them, as we heard clearly last night from businesses and civil society, simply will not be ready at the end of this year. There is no circumstance in which they can do the necessary legal and preparatory work to be ready.

First and foremost, therefore, let us put on the record today as we pass this statutory rule, which, as my colleague Patsy McGlone said, we have no specific objection to, that it is immoral and unacceptable that not just this Assembly — we are MLAs and it is our job to scrutinise legislation — but the businesses, communities and people we serve have been put under this extraordinary stress in this year of all years. It is wrong and should not have happened. The transition period should have been extended, and it is unconscionable, as I said, that it was not.

I will talk briefly about the broader issues around Brexit and the upheaval that we will face in a few weeks' time.

Mr Speaker: I am sorry, but the Member needs to stick to the statutory rule that we are debating.

Mr O'Toole: I will stick to the statutory rule, Mr Speaker, because the statutory rule is, in a sense, connected to the broader issue that we will face in the next few days. I will say briefly that, though the statutory rule does a largely technical job, it is part of a bigger picture. It is part of the extraordinary disruption that we face at the end of this year as a result of Brexit. As several Members said, we still do not know the outcome of that negotiation. We will probably not find out for at least a couple of days. Whatever your perspective on Brexit or the protocol, the next 48 hours are critical to businesses, communities and the people that we serve.

Last night, civil society and businesses from across this place came together and said that they need a deal between the UK and the EU. Hopefully, that deal will be done in the next couple of days, but, if the UK Government or Boris Johnson are listening — perhaps he is — let us be absolutely clear: Members and the people, communities and businesses that we serve absolutely need a deal.

Mr Speaker: I ask the Member to wind.

Mr O'Toole: We also need time to prepare for —

Mr Speaker: Sorry, Mr O'Toole. I will have to ask you to resume your seat if you continue to move away from the statutory rule. I have given you plenty of latitude.

Mr O'Toole: Mr Speaker, I will come back to the statutory rule. This statutory rule is important. It is a small technical statutory rule to clean up the statute book and keep us in line ahead of the end of the transition period. However, let us be absolutely clear: it is part of an enormous upheaval that people and businesses will face at the end of the year. We need a deal. To anyone who still thinks that we can get by without a deal at the end of the year: do not do this to people and businesses in Northern Ireland. We need a deal and we need goodwill from the UK and the EU to make the new arrangements work. Let us be absolutely clear and let the Assembly send that message to everyone: we need a deal, and we need to make it work on the basis on goodwill.

Mr Allister: This statutory instrument marks a seminal moment in the Assembly. For me, it is a most disturbing moment, which should, frankly, be equally disturbing to anyone with any fidelity to the Union of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. Contrary to what some unionist Members read from their weekly paper press release, this is not a statutory instrument that is merely technical and makes no policy change. It signals a fundamental change in the manner in which we are to be governed because it amends the statutes of the United Kingdom in these subject matters to require the Minister to make such orders as are “necessary” by the relevant protocol. In other words, what we are doing in the statutory instrument is surrendering the power of the devolved Assembly to make our own laws that touch on these issues and intend instead to commit ourselves irreversibly to imposing the laws that are in the protocol: laws that we do not make, that we cannot change and into which we have absolutely no input. Yet the statutory instrument enslaves the House to not one, not 10 but 45 EU directives and regulations. It commits us to the unquestioning adherence to and implementation of each and every one of those.

Under the Plant Health Act (Northern Ireland) 1967, we unalterably impose 11 EU directives and regulations. Under the Diseases of Animals (Northern Ireland) Order 1981, we enslave ourselves to 32 EU directives and regulations that we cannot change. Under the Welfare of Animals Act (Northern Ireland) 2011, we subject ourselves to two EU directives that we can never change. Therefore, let no one mislead the House or the public by pretending that this is only a technical measure that involves no change of policy. This involves the most fundamental change to the manner in which we are governed in decades, and, of course, it says to us that no longer will this House or a Minister of this House decide what legislation governs these subjects. We will be bound and chained to 45 EU directives and regulations that we cannot change. That is the seriousness of what this statutory instrument does, and it is most disappointing to me that a DUP Minister is here in the House urging and advocating that enslavement.

We were told — we were promised — that Brexit was about making our own laws. The iniquitous protocol sets Northern Ireland apart as a place that will not make its own laws, and here we have Members of the House meekly and limply advocating that we enslave ourselves in that very way. I am not prepared to consent to that, so, when the opportunity arises, I will seek to give the House the opportunity to vote against this enslavement. To me, it is an utterly retrograde and appalling measure that separates us from the United Kingdom and deprives us of the right to make our own laws on these subjects. It underwrites the annexation of Northern Ireland into the orbit of the EU by subjecting us, under annex 2 of the protocol, to these 45 directives, of which there are many more scores to come. Under annex 2, the protocol binds Northern Ireland to over 300 EU directives and regulations, leaving us unable to ever change them and obliged to follow whatever changes Brussels makes to them without any consultation or input from us.

This is a shameful day for our legislative Assembly. We are being asked to surrender the right to legislate according to our own needs and to have that right suborned to the diktat of EU regulations and directives. Strip away all the fancy words, and that is what this statutory instrument is about. It puts upon the people of Northern Ireland 45 EU directives and regulations that we can never change. I do not and will not consent to that, and I am very sad that some who should know better — I wonder whether they even read the regulations — will endorse the very enslavement of this place to EU rules.

Mr Lyons: I thank all Members for their contributions to the debate. I will briefly comment on some of the remarks made. First, I will refer to the remarks of the Chairman of the Committee. Before that, I extend my thanks to those who have been working so hard to make sure that we are prepared for what is coming in the months and years ahead. I also thank the Committee members for their diligence in carrying out their work.

The Chairman talked about the legal separation that has taken place between the UK and the EU. That is the outworking of the withdrawal agreement. There is opposition to at least some parts of that agreement from almost everybody in the House. It is the situation in which we currently find ourselves, however.

11.30 am

Mr Irwin urged that there be no change to welfare standards in Northern Ireland following the end of the transition period, and I can confirm that we will continue with the standards that are in place. That is important, because we do have high welfare standards here in Northern Ireland. It is one of our strongest selling points when it comes to our produce.

Mr Wells: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Lyons: It is important that that continue to be the case. I will give way to Mr Wells.

Mr Wells: The Minister makes a point about animal welfare standards. As a long-term vegetarian of 37 years and someone who has a keen interest in animal welfare, I support him on that. It is interesting, however, that he is binding us to a set of animal welfare standards that does not give us in the Northern Ireland Assembly the power, for instance, to ban foie gras, which involves one of the most cruel forms of animal food production in the world. If we, as the United Kingdom and as Northern Ireland, bind ourselves to those rules, we will not be able to go further and enhance our animal welfare standards, because we are bound to EU diktat. Several times, Members have brought up that very cruel form of food production. We do not carry it out in Northern Ireland, but we cannot ban the import of that horrendously cruel product because we are bound to EU regulations.

Mr Lyons: I do not know the particulars of the circumstance that Mr Wells mentions, but, yes, we are going to be bound to EU regulations in many ways by the protocol. As the Member will be aware, that is of disappointment to me as well. He will be aware of the position of my party in arguing and voting against the protocol. In fact, it was Members of this House, many of whom were so concerned about a border on the island of Ireland that was never going to happen, who are responsible for what is now happening as a result of the protocol. There will still be levers for us on animal welfare and food standards, because, in many ways, it is a minimum requirement for us, and there will be the possibility for us to go above and beyond.

Mr Irwin talked about the common framework. The Department will have the same powers available to it after the end of the transition period as it has now. I have been informed that the UK animal health and welfare common framework will be supported through concordats agreed between the four UK Administrations rather than through legislation, and I hope that that is of help to him.

I did note the concerns and wider issues that Mr Wells raised. We are doing this to ensure that we have that fully functioning statute book following the end of the transition period. It is important that, for the retained EU law from the directives that are currently in place, inspectors will be able to carry out the work on those laws and directives that have broad support across this place. That is what this legislation will allow us to do.

Mr Allister: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Lyons: I will give way to Mr Allister.

Mr Allister: Is it not utterly fatuous to say that we could not have inspectors if we do not pass the statutory instrument? This statutory instrument is about robbing the Minister of any discretion. It is amending each relevant section in each of the current Acts to state that the Minister will make such orders as are called upon by the protocol. Without the protocol, the Minister could make whatever directions he wants about inspections, but, with the protocol, he can make only those that EU directives require him to make, and that is something that he can never, ever change. It is enslavement, and the Minister well knows that. Shame on him for trying to put it upon this House.

Mr Lyons: The Member has made his views known in his contributions. I do not think that there is anything that I will be able to say that will change his point of view. He has placed it well on the record.

Mr O'Toole put a number of his concerns on the record. None of them was particularly relevant to the SR. The Member is well aware that they had nothing to do with the SR, but he made his points. I referred to Mr Allister already. I thank Mrs Barton for her support. At this stage, I commend the motion to the Assembly.

Question put.

Some Members: Aye.

Some Members: No.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Clear the Lobbies. The Question will be put in three minutes. I remind Members that we should continue to uphold social distancing and that Members who have proxy voting arrangements in place should not come to the Chamber.

Members, please resume your seats. Before I put the Question again, I remind Members that, if possible, it would be preferable to avoid a Division.

Question put a second time.

Some Members: Aye.

Some Members: No.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Before the Assembly divides, I remind Members that, as per Standing Order 112, the Assembly has proxy voting arrangements in place. Members who have authorised another Member to vote on their behalf are not entitled to vote in person and should not enter the Lobbies. I also remind Members that social distancing will continue to be observed while the Division is taking place. Please be patient at all times and follow the instructions of the Lobby Clerks.

The Assembly divided:

Ayes 81; Noes 2.

Resolved:

That the draft Plant Health and Diseases of Animals (Amendment) (EU Exit) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I ask Members to take their ease for a few seconds to allow the Minister of Justice to take her place.

12.00 noon

The Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 13) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The next items of business are motions to approve five statutory rules, all of which relate to the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) Regulations. There will be a single debate on all five motions. The Minister will move the first motion and commence the debate on all the motions listed in the Order Paper. When all who wish to speak have done so, I shall put the Question on the first motion. The second motion will then be read into the record, and I will call the Minister to move it. The Question will then be put on that motion. That process will be repeated for each of the remaining statutory rules. If that is clear, we shall proceed on that basis.

Mrs Long (The Minister of Justice): I beg to move

That the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 13) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved.

The following motions stood in the Order Paper:

That the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Wearing of Face Coverings) (Amendment No. 4) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved. — [Mrs Long (The Minister of Justice).]

That the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 14) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved. — [Mrs Long (The Minister of Justice).]

That the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 15) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved. — [Mrs Long (The Minister of Justice).]

That the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 16) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved. — [Mrs Long (The Minister of Justice).]

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Business Committee has agreed that there should be no time limit on this debate.

Mrs Long: I am asking the Assembly to confirm five sets of regulations now made. These Department of Health regulations introduce amendments to the public health protection regulations, which are made and amended as necessary to give effect to the Executive's decisions. I have, however, agreed to lead the debate for two reasons. First, although all the regulations are prepared by the Department of Health, in the case of the first two sets of amendment regulations, which are concerned with the increase of fines and penalties, my Department worked in collaboration with Department of Health officials. Colleagues will recall the Executive's agreement to the proposals that I brought forward in October to increase fines and penalties and to introduce a number of new offences on foot of the rapid review of fines and penalties requested by the strategic compliance group. That group was set up earlier this year by the Executive to oversee arrangements for encouraging compliance with public health restrictions. Given my Department's role, it was therefore a natural step for me to lead this debate. Secondly, as my officials were preparing for the debate, three more sets of amendment regulations to give effect to the Executive's decisions on public health restrictions were made, so I further agreed to lead the debate on those in the interests of supporting the Health Minister and the Executive Office in a collaborative way.

The first set of regulations, the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 13) Regulations, deals with a number of changes made to the main public health regulations, commonly referred to as the (No. 2) regulations, on offences and penalties that apply when the restrictions are breached. The second set of regulations, the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Wearing of Face Coverings) (Amendment No. 4) Regulations, increases the level of fixed penalties for failure to wear a face covering in settings prescribed by the coronavirus regulations.

Both sets of regulations came into effect at 5.30 pm on 12 November.

The third set of regulations, the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 14) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020, provide councils with the powers to enforce the No. 2 regulations, including on premises improvement notices. The regulations came into effect at 4.00 pm on 13 November.

The fourth set of regulations, the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 15) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020, deal with the extension of the restrictions that were initially introduced on 16 October and the limited relaxation of those restrictions for coffee shops, close-contact services and off-sales. The regulations came into effect at 6.30 pm on 13 November.

The fifth and final set of regulations, the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 16) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020, ensure that unlicensed premises that reopened on 20 November were restricted to no more than six people per table from no more than two households. The regulations came into effect at 8.00 pm on 19 November.

I will now set out, in detail and in turn, each of the regulations.

The Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 13) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020, SR 2020/250, were signed at 5.30 pm on 12 November and laid before the Assembly at 9.30 am on 13 November. They increased the previous fines and penalties and introduced new offences. The fixed penalty that previously started at £60 was replaced by a single fixed penalty of £200, or £100 if paid within 14 days of issue. That penalty applies to breaches of restrictions on gatherings in public or private places that remain punishable on conviction by a fine of up to £5,000. The regulations also provide that recipients of a £200 fixed penalty cannot be issued with another for the same offence. The option of summary prosecution may be used instead.

The offences of not closing a business as required or breaching the early closing requirements for hospitality will be punishable on conviction by a fine of up to £10,000 or will attract a fixed penalty starting at £1,000, which can be increased for subsequent breaches up to a maximum of £10,000.

A new offence of not implementing measures to maintain social distancing in retail and hospitality settings will be punishable on conviction by a fine of up to £10,000 or a fixed penalty starting at £1,000, which can be increased for subsequent breaches up to a maximum of £10,000.

A new offence of organising or participating in a large gathering or unlicensed musical event, with large defined as "30 or more persons", will carry the new higher-level penalty for organisers. That is punishable on conviction by a fine of up to £10,000 or a fixed penalty starting at £1,000 and increasing to a maximum of £10,000 for further breaches. A new lower penalty for participants is punishable on conviction by a fine of up to £5,000 or a fixed penalty of £200. The fixed penalty of £200 will be reduced to £100 if paid within 14 days of issue.

The Health Protection (Coronavirus, Wearing of Face Coverings) (Amendment No. 4) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020, SR 2020/253, were signed at 5.30 pm on 12 November and laid before the Assembly at 9.00 am on 13 November. They increase the penalties for failing to comply with the health protection regulations on the wearing of face coverings. The fixed penalty that previously started at £60 was replaced by a fixed penalty of £200, which will be reduced to £100 if paid within 14 days. That penalty, which remains punishable on conviction by a fine of up to £5,000, applies to breaches of restrictions on the wearing of face coverings in settings prescribed by the regulations. As before, the regulations provide that recipients of £200 fixed penalties cannot be issued with another for the same offence.

The Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 14) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020, SR2020/255, were signed at 4.00 pm on 13 November and laid before the Assembly at 5.00 pm on 13 November.

Those regulations provide district councils with the power to designate persons to enforce the No 2 regulations, to issue a premises improvement notice where those who are responsible for the premises are in breach of the No 2 regulations, and to specify a time limit within which the measures that are required must be taken, which must not be less than 48 hours from the time that the notice is issued.

SR 2020/256, the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 15) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020, were signed by the Department of Health at 6.30 pm on 13 November and laid before the Assembly at 9.00 am on 16 November. Those regulations deal with the extension of the restrictions that were initially introduced on 16 October and the limited relaxation of those restrictions in respect of coffee shops, close-contact services and off-sales. They allowed the reopening, under certain conditions, of unlicensed food and drink businesses, cafes and coffee shops mostly, which were allowed to reopen from 20 November, with opening hours limited from 5.00 am to 8.00 pm.

The regulations allowed the reopening, from 20 November, of the close-contact services sector, including hairdressing, tattoo parlours, holistic therapies and driving instruction. As a condition of that reopening, those businesses were required to operate by appointment only and were required to collect and retain for a period the names and contact telephone numbers of customers for contact-tracing purposes.

Finally, the regulations removed a restriction that had previously been placed on pubs and bars preventing them from selling alcohol for consumption off the premises. Although many bars and pubs have an off-licence, the regulations had sought to prevent them selling alcohol for consumption off the premises during that time. The lifting of that restriction was accompanied by the requirement that they sold drink only in the original sealed container so that bars were not selling glasses of alcohol to customers on the street.

SR 2020/276, the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 16) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020, were signed at 8.00 pm on 19 November and laid in the Assembly at 9.00 am on 20 November 2020. Those regulations ensure that the unlicensed premises that reopened on 20 November were governed by a rule to restrict numbers of customers to no more than six per table from no more than two households.

Those five sets of amendments are designed to encourage adherence to the restrictions and to deter any breach of them. They complement the basic but critical and consistent public health message: wash your hands, keep your distance, and wear a face covering.

Mr Givan (The Chairperson of the Committee for Justice): I am pleased to speak on behalf of the Committee for Justice in the debate. The Committee first received notification of the health protection regulations in a written briefing from the Department of Justice received on 1 December. Yes: seven days ago. One week ago was when the Committee was provided with a written briefing.

The Committee was advised that two of the regulations are of relevance to the Department of Justice as they relate to offences, fines and penalties for breaches of the regulations. Therefore, although the responsibility for the regulations rests with the Health Minister, the Minister of Justice agreed to lead the debate on those two regulations, along with the three others in support of the Health Minister, as she has outlined.

During the pandemic, the Justice Committee has received regular written and oral briefings and updates on COVID-19 and its impact on the justice sector. We have questioned officials and senior police officers, including the Chief Constable, on breaches of the regulations and the approach to enforcement. We have sought information on the number of fines and fixed penalty notices issued, and also on the number and type of breaches reported via the COVID-19 hotline. Despite that, there was no engagement by the Department with the Committee on the review of fines and penalties that gave rise to the challenges reflected in those regulations.

The review of offences and penalties was carried out collaboratively by the Department of Justice and the Department of Health. It was the Minister of Justice who recommended the proposed changes to the Executive. The Department of Justice advised the Committee that the proposals had been considered by the Executive on 8 and 15 October. There was, therefore, ample time to inform the Committee for Justice of the proposed changes well before the notification of 1 December.

It has been said —.

12.15 pm

Ms Bradshaw: On a point of order, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. Will you remind the House that Standing Order 43(1) provides:

“Every statutory rule or draft statutory rule which -

(a) is laid before the Assembly; and

(b) is subject to Assembly proceedings,” —

Including negative, affirmative and confirmative procedure —

In this instance, because they are Department of Health regulations, it was right and proper that we, the Health Committee, scrutinised it.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Member's understanding of Standing Order 43(1) is correct.

Mr Givan: It has been said many times before that this situation is unprecedented, and it is sometimes necessary to make changes at a swift pace. However, that does not appear to have been the case in this specific instance. The Committee discussed the Department of Justice's written briefing on the regulations on 3 December. The Justice Committee recognises that the scrutiny of the health protection statutory rules is a matter for the Committee for Health and that that Committee is often required to consider regulations at short notice, which does not always allow for consultation with other Committees.

The Committee is concerned, however, that there may be a more widespread scrutiny deficit, with Statutory Committees being either unaware or provided with last-minute notification of policy changes relevant to their Department's remit that are being included in health protection regulations. I will, therefore, be writing to the First Minister and deputy First Minister on behalf of the Committee to ask all Departments to engage with their respective Statutory Committees on matters to be included in the health protection regulations that fall within their remit at the earliest opportunity.

I am unable to provide the Committee's position on the regulations, given that we have not had the opportunity to consider them or the policy intention behind them. I understand that Department of Justice officials gave oral evidence to the Committee for Health, and, therefore, it will be for the Chair and members of the Health Committee to comment on the specific details in the regulations.

Those remarks are made in my capacity as Chairman of the Justice Committee. I appreciate that some Members seem to struggle to recognise the role of a Chairman of a Committee, but what I have just articulated is the unanimous position held by all parties on the Justice Committee.

Setting aside my role as Chairman of the Committee, I will speak in a personal capacity on the regulations and the process through which they have been brought about. As I outlined in my role as Chairman of the Committee, the Justice Committee recognises the unprecedented way in which the regulations have been taken forward. It recognises, and I recognise, that it is for the legislative framework through the Department of Health and, indeed, the Statutory Committee for Health to deal with the detail around the statutory rules. Indeed, I received a letter from the First Minister and deputy First Minister yesterday outlining that issue, and I put on record my appreciation to Arlene Foster and Michelle O'Neill for writing to me in my capacity as Chairman of the Justice Committee.

The First Minister and deputy First Minister outlined the approach that the Executive have been taking and the collaborative way in which they are seeking to operate, and I agree with all that. That is, however, notwithstanding the issue around the roles of Committees. In my conversation with the First Minister yesterday, I was able to provide assurance to her that the Justice Committee takes its role very seriously, as do I in my membership of that Committee.

Where Committees have an opportunity to engage and be consulted with, I advocate that all Ministers should do so with their relevant Committee. Under the relevant powers conferred upon Committees in section 29 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 and, indeed, in Standing Order 48 of this House, the final bullet point states that the Justice Committee's role is to consider and advise on matters brought to the Committee by the Minister of Justice. We were denied that opportunity because the Minister of Justice did not come to the Justice Committee. Departmental officials did not come to the Justice Committee. We recognise the legal statutory process for how this is being engaged, but the Minister could have led the way on this and engaged with the Justice Committee, but she chose not to do so.

Ms Bradshaw: Will the Member take an intervention?

Mr Givan: That is a decision for the Justice Minister. I will take an intervention.

Ms Bradshaw: What happens in the Alliance Party is that, if an issue comes before the Health Committee that crosses into other Departments, I engage with my MLA colleagues on those Committees to find out their position so that I represent the whole party at the Committee. Are you suggesting that that is not what happened on your side of the House?

Mr Givan: Of course my members engage across political parties, but that does not negate the opportunity that all Members have through our membership of the relevant Committees to provide an opportunity. As I indicated, the Committee has engaged with the Chief Constable and ACC Todd on gold command when it comes to enforcement. That is all relevant to the regulations when it comes to enforcement. I understand the way in which things operate, but there are opportunities, and Members can bring that expertise through their normal Committee membership.

A letter that was circulated to all Justice Committee members states that the Executive Office understands that some members of the Justice Committee consider that, in light of the Minister of Justice's offer to lead on this debate, the scrutiny role should have been conferred on it, and that they intend to express their dissatisfaction during the debate. I was able to provide useful information to the First Minister to explain what the Justice Committee agreed to do. There is an issue about the information source when it came to advising the Executive Office. Who provided the information on what the Justice Committee agreed and discussed? It certainly informed the basis of a letter that I would question. There needs to be an explanation in that respect. No doubt the Minister will elaborate on that.

Mrs Long: Will the Member give way?

Mr Givan: I will happily give way, despite the fact that the Minister never engaged with the Committee. I will, however, engage with the Minister in the Assembly.

Mrs Long: Is the Committee Chair aware that Committee meetings are public and that people can watch them on television?

Mr Givan: If that is the basis on which I received the letter, that will be an interesting explanation. If anyone watched the proceedings of the Committee, they will know what the Committee decided.

Just for Members' benefit, the minutes of that Committee meeting have now been published. Members will now know what the Committee agreed. The Committee agreed unanimously at the meeting on 3 September to write to FM and DFM asking that all Ministers engage with their respective Statutory Committees on relevant aspects of COVID-19 health regulations that cover policy areas that are the responsibility of their Department. That correspondence will be copied to all Committee Chairmen and Madam Chairs. The Committee also agreed to ask the Department of Justice why there was no engagement with it or information provided on the review of offences or penalties in the proposed changes prior to 1 December, given that that falls within the remit of the Department of Justice. The Committee also agreed to ask for the protocol advising the Committee when DOJ officials are providing oral evidence to another Statutory Committee. At no stage did the Justice Committee seek to usurp the legal responsibility of the Health Committee in carrying out its role with the statutory rule. I encourage the Justice Minister to work with the Justice Committee. We have an important role. We can provide you with advice and support, and we can give an insight, but, Minister, we can do that only when you decide to engage with the Justice Committee. I hope that, in future, you seek to take a more constructive approach when it comes to COVID-19 regulations.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Member, but I remind him that comments should be directed through the Chair.

Mr Givan: Of course, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker.

The Committee considered the regulations that relate to enforcement. We had the police before us because, when you introduce enforcement measures such as fines that have already taken effect, it is vital that we see a consistency of approach in their application. We know from the early months that it took the police some time to quality assure — if I can put it that way — the way in which they dealt with checking people's activities. We had cases in which the police looked in people's shopping bags to establish whether essential items had been bought, and we know the furore that that created.

The police had to put measures in place to ensure that a consistent approach was being applied, and I welcomed the way in which they did that.

Of course, had we been given an opportunity, we would have considered the proportionality of the associated fines. The Justice Committee looks at fines for speeding offences, for example. We all know that speeding kills, and we would have been able to look at the current speeding fine and compare it with the fine that has been introduced. However, we were not able to do that because we were not engaged.

We need to consider how different breaches have been handled by the Police Service. Members raised the issue of the policing of protests such as the Black Lives Matters protest, at which fines were issued. Indeed, under the most recent regulations to be introduced, we have cases where church authorities have been interviewed by the police because of alleged breaches. Of course, people compare and contrast that with the lack of police interviews when it comes to a particular funeral in west Belfast. Then, we raise the issue about the public having confidence in the administration of the fines that are being put in place.

We need to see enforcement measures being applied equally to everybody in society. There cannot be a two-tier approach to policing. The Minister of Justice has a particular role in ensuring public confidence in the administration of justice. I know that she will say that these are operational matters for the PSNI; a position that she has taken since assuming office. However, when that operational decision-making process impinges on public confidence, it comes within the scope of the Justice Minister.

Mr Wells: I thank the Member for giving way. There is deep concern in the community that the police, we understand, have indicated that they will be swift to take action against Tandragee Baptist Church for its alleged breach of the coronavirus restrictions. However, they have yet to interview the leader of the party opposite, Michelle O'Neill, about the disgraceful scenes that we witnessed at the Bobby Storey funeral.

Mr Givan: The Member makes the point very well. When I look at the regulations going through the House today, I see that we are increasing the level of fines and making it clear, as an Assembly, that enforcement is an important tool. It is the application of that tool that requires consistency of approach by the Police Service of Northern Ireland. I share the concerns that the Member elaborated on.

It is important that effective enforcement measures are in place. However, we all have the power in our own hands to act in a responsible way and to apply common sense so that we should not need enforcement in the community when it comes to policing the regulations. The best form of policing any society is self-policing, self-regulation and an awareness of one's personal responsibility. That is, ultimately, where we need to get to. Nevertheless, a minority will always flagrantly breach the law. That undermines the entire message, and it requires effective enforcement and policing. The absence of such enforcement and policing leads to people no longer acting responsibly. A further consequence is that the Executive have to take action to close down small businesses and close contact services, such as hairdressers' salons. They have paid the price because there has not been self-regulation or the kind of enforcement that there should have been. Let there be a better approach so that we do not need to take action against other individuals and organisations in our society.

Mr McCrossan: Will the Member give way?

Mr Givan: I will, yes.

Mr McCrossan: I appreciate the strength with which the Member delivers his message about the importance of ensuring that we adhere to the regulations. Has he given such advice to his colleague Sammy Wilson?

Mr Givan: Of course, all Members need to behave in a sensible and responsible manner. It is up to everybody in the House to conduct themselves in that way. It does not matter which Parliament you are in.

Let us not be distracted from the core substance of what we are dealing with today. It is important that we have a consistent approach to the policing of the regulations. I look forward to hearing the Minister's response and to her providing a justification of her failure to engage with members of the Justice Committee.

12.30 pm

Mr Gildernew (The Chairperson of the Committee for Health): I appreciate the Minister's being here to address the Assembly on these measures.

The Health Committee considered the first four sets of regulations on 26 November, but the amendment (No. 16) regulations were included in the final Order Paper without the Committee being given prior notice. They were therefore added late to our agenda last Thursday. A briefing on the first four SRs was provided by a cross-departmental group of officials, who gave an overview of the main provisions. Those provisions included the extension of the schedule 2 restrictions, subject to modifications; additional requirements for premises selling food or drink; new premises improvement notices; and changes to penalties, including penalties for failure to wear a face covering. Officials also advised us of a strategic level working group that had been established by the Executive to look at compliance with coronavirus regulations. We were advised that the working group is chaired by junior Ministers and brings together a range of agencies and that it has conducted a rapid review, since September, owing to concerns about rates of transmission and a desire to ensure effective deterrents from breaching the rules.

Provisions relating to increased penalties prompted questions around rationale, necessity, the evidence base and equality considerations. The remaining questions centred on practical outworkings. Given the absence of a formal equality impact assessment of the higher penalties, Committee members probed the consideration given to the issue. Among matters considered were affordability issues relating to masks and the differential impact that increased fines could have. Although officials assured the Committee that such matters were taken into account and agreed that there could be potential inequalities, they could not provide detail, and they advised that they might not be able to come back to us with it, as the Executive papers are confidential.

Ms Dillon: I thank the Chair for taking an intervention. Does he agree that it is important that the PSNI continue its course of action around engagement, encouragement and enforcement — the three Es, as were talked about at the start — to address exactly the issues that he has just raised? We have to accept that, in some circumstances, people will not understand the regulations, because they are complex, even for those of us who are going through them every day. They are therefore difficult for ordinary people on the street to understand. The PSNI needs to continue in that vein so that people fully understand the implications of what they are doing.

Mr Gildernew: Go raibh maith agat. I thank the Member for her intervention. I agree with her. It is essential that it start with communication, and then engagement and encouragement. In some ways, enforcement demonstrates a failure of the other steps. We need to work from that basis and understand that some people will potentially struggle to abide by the restrictions because of a lack of income and because, in some senses, they are difficult to understand.

Officials also outlined the continued approach to using enforcement as a last resort, which is in keeping with the Member's intervention, but could not provide detail on trends or fines relating to enforcement. We wanted to know about the evidence base for anticipated improvements in compliance underpinning the increase in fines. Officials said that they would have to come back to us on that. We asked about affordability issues with masks, and we were again advised that officials would take the matter back.

Mr Buckley: I appreciate the Chair's giving way. His feelings on the inappropriate way in which these regulations come before the House, and the lack of scrutiny thereof, are firmly on the record, as are mine. The points that he has just outlined surely go to the heart of the lack of democratic scrutiny in the House. We are here today debating these regulations even though officials came before the Committee, could not provide the information and promised to come back. When they did, they still did not provide it. Does the Chair agree that the fact that the Chair of the Justice Committee has outlined today how that Committee had no role in the scrutiny of these regulations is of concern, given the lack of democratic scrutiny of regulations that have come before the House?

Mr Gildernew: I thank the Member for his intervention. I have been consistent in saying that we need to see good information being provided to and good engagement happening with whichever Committees are relevant to the scrutiny of the regulations. I will deal later with the fact that, in normal circumstances, we would not be considering legislation or changes to rules in this way, but it is pertinent to note that, although we recognise that these are unusual situations and circumstances, it is incumbent on all Departments, and everyone concerned, to provide the required level of data and analysis. If, as the Member indicated, Committees are being asked to support regulations, they should be provided with a clear sense of why those regulations are needed and why a particular approach versus another is best. They should then be able to assess that.

I am quite sure that these questions are asked —.

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Mr Gildernew: Yes, I will.

Mr Allister: In the same vein, the Member's Committee has considered a successive number of these regulations, each of which bears the affirmation that no impact assessment was made. Sometimes, it says that there was no "regulatory impact assessment" or simply no "impact assessment". Has it never given the Committee concern that it has been asked to consider regulations where there has been no impact assessment?

Mr Gildernew: I thank the Member for his intervention. Yes, that is one of the issues of concern, and the Committee is increasingly seeking to ensure that, whatever vehicle is used, maximum consideration is given to that. As we move further into what should be normal ways of operating, equality impact assessments should be done or some attempt made to address the lack of those assessments.

On a practical note, the detail of the information to be gathered by hospitality settings was raised. A member suggested that requesting addresses might support businesses wishing to comply with the rule restricting the number of persons at a table to no more than six and from no more than two households. I recognise that complying with that is difficult. I spoke this morning with someone who is involved in the hospitality business and who reports that that is a very difficult thing to establish.

Responding to a question on the distinction between retail and office settings, officials explained that health and safety legislation deals with workers, whereas the present suite of regulations is aimed at protecting the public.

The Committee, as ever, seeks to not only be constructive but to provide the appropriate scrutiny on behalf of the public. One source of data that informs the Committee on a regular basis, along with all the other pieces of information, shows, unfortunately, the new daily case rate, the figure for hospital admissions, the ICU capacity, which today sits at 99%, and, sadly, the daily reported deaths which, as of today, are 1,059. None of that evidence and information can be ignored.

Despite reservations arising from some unanswered questions, the Committee agreed to lend its support to the measures. The Committee recognises that the regulations are cross-departmental and has written to the Health Department, which is the drafting lead, seeking to have its concerns heard and addressed in future sets of regulations. Indeed, the Justice Minister could directly comment in her response whether the Department has been consulted directly at this time in developing a new COVID-19 strategy or even whether the Executive have seen the new detailed strategy that includes the pillars of finding, testing, tracing, isolating and supporting the public. That was a Health Committee motion that was agreed by consensus in the Committee and again in the House. We have called for a new COVID strategy, developed by the Department of Health and supported by the wider Executive, in order to end the cycle of lockdowns. That was passed last month in the Assembly, and, as we enter the early phases of Christmas and the vaccination programme, it will be timely to hear about progress to date on any development of that new robust strategy.

With your permission, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle, I would like to address Members briefly in my role as MLA and Sinn Féin spokesperson for health. I am sure that many Members will make similar points as the debate goes on, but I am concerned about the steady increase in the number of new cases that are announced daily. To put it bluntly, we are not seeing the drop in case numbers, admissions and, sadly, in deaths, that we hoped for. I cannot help but think of the absolute mess, when public health proposals were voted against in the Executive, created by using a cross-community vote and of where we could be now had the Executive been able to act quicker.

However, we are where we are —.

Mr Clarke: Will the Member give way?

Mr Gildernew: I will.

Mr Clarke: I note what the Member said about where we are today, but had the Member the same concerns when most of his colleagues on the Benches around him attended a funeral in breach of the same regulations?

Mr Gildernew: That matter has been addressed multiple times in the Assembly.

However, we are where we are. One constant feature of the COVID-19 pandemic has been the ever-present lack of time. Therefore, it is to be expected that some of the technical amendments that tidy up the original intentions of the decisions are brought forward. It has to be said again: no one wants the restrictions to be in place for any longer than they have to be. Unfortunately, however, the case for restrictions is often being better made in the corridors of ICU wards, on the countless calendars marked with crucial missed appointments for other health matters, and by families that have had to resort to making FaceTime calls instead of visiting family members as a result of the restrictions.

I support the amendments. Let us continue to do all that we can, individually and collectively, to stop the spread of COVID-19.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I call the Chair of the Executive Office Committee, Mr Colin McGrath.

Mr McGrath (The Chairperson of the Committee for The Executive Office): I will be making my remarks as an SDLP Member. I thank you for the opportunity to speak in the debate today. I thank the Justice Minister for coming to the House and actually bringing forward some legislation and participating in the debate.

The regulations that we are being asked to ratify take us back to the middle of November, a time that, on reflection, many in the House may choose to forget, given the chaos that was allowed to take hold at that stage. However, today is a momentous day in the fight against COVID-19, and we must keep our eyes fixed firmly on the future and how we do things from here on. It is important to note that the first COVID-19 vaccine was given to Margaret Keenan in England, although she hails from Enniskillen. The first vaccine in the North was given to a constituent from South Down, Joanna Sloan, who is a nurse. We welcome the fact that she has received the vaccine and wish her, and everyone else who has been vaccinated, the very best as she delivers the vaccine to people across Northern Ireland.

Amendment No.13 provides additional requirements for food and drink establishments, further provision for social distancing and large gatherings, and increases the fines that a breach carries. Amendment No.4, on face coverings, also increases the level of fine for those who breach the regulations. Amendment No.14 gives district councils the power to attach premise improvement notices to businesses that needed to amend their protection in light of the regulations. Amendment No.15 concerns the circuit breaker that allowed the phased reopening for close-contact services and the gradual reopening of hospitality. Finally, amendment No. 6 concerns those in close-contact services who work in film and television production and the number of households that can sit at a table in the hospitality industry.

I do not know about anybody else, but I find that mapping out the timeline of events can be quite confusing, as so many amendments are being updated. Some will have lapsed by the time we discuss them, and some have since changed, even though we are discussing them. I am sure that everyone in the House can resonate with being asked a question, whether by a constituent or constituency office staff, that requires you to stop and think to try to work out what the exact regulation is and what its impact may be.

Let us be under no illusions: scrutinising legislation is definitely not for the faint-hearted. However, these regulations were, and are, necessary. We need to continue to do all that we can to stop the spread of the virus and help our beloved healthcare staff, who, frankly, have been the heroes in all of this. As the vaccine is rolled out, we need restrictions now more than ever.

How do we do that? We have to normalise some behaviours that previously would have seemed improbable or even impossible. For example, the wearing of face masks has become normalised for most of us. When someone not wearing a face mask coughs or sneezes in public, you become very aware that they are not wearing a face mask.

How do you encourage the wearing of face masks? Well, you can do it through the science and detail the reasons for doing it; you can do it through encouragement and asking people to wear a face mask; or, if necessary, from time to time, if people refuse, you have to levy fines. That is what resulted in conformity from about April or May through to now. Very quickly, all those measures together encouraged people to wear face masks. Fines have played their part.

12.45 pm

Mr Sheehan: Will the Member give way?

Mr McGrath: Yes, of course.

Mr Sheehan: Would it not also be an encouragement for some people to wear masks if they were made freely available? These masks are sometimes not inexpensive, especially the disposable ones. If they were made freely available, more people might be more likely to wear them.

Mr McGrath: I thank the Member for his intervention. I know of his continued intervention in the Health Committee, especially highlighting the situation in South East Asia, where face masks are worn regularly and have been part of the ability to control the spread of the virus there. Yes, I totally agree with him. They are not very expensive. I think, from checking DUP returns, that it costs about £48 for quite a considerable box-load of them. If you can get the face masks and make them available to people, it would encourage their use. I know that it is an extra cost for businesses, but people sometimes find themselves at shops and other places and do not have a mask and could do with one. Making them generally available would certainly help.

Mr Givan: I appreciate the Member giving way. He has articulated a clear position on the need for wearing masks, and I do not disagree with that. Will he also comment on those who, under the law, rightly have an exemption for respiratory reasons such as asthma or for psychological reasons? It is important that we respect their position and do not have a scenario where people are being shamed because they have legitimate health reasons for not wearing a face mask.

Mr McGrath: I thank the Member for his intervention. I believe that those protections are in legislation and in the regulations as well. They specifically highlight that those who have particular reasons for not wearing masks should not have to wear them. I welcome those protections as well.

Ms Dillon: I thank the Member for taking a second intervention in such a short space of time. You talked about that provision and people finding themselves at shops without a mask. I have seen that for myself on many occasions. It is an issue, even more so if you have travelled by public transport; it is different if you only have to go back to your car. Some shops do provide them. Some shops and retailers — the big retailers — have been able to stay open right through the pandemic and have done fairly well because of that. They will be in a good position to provide free masks.

Mr McGrath: I thank the Member for the intervention. Holistically, we are making the point that, if we can make masks available, it is of benefit and we should continue to do that. I would welcome that.

We are looking at the overall regulations today and questioning whether they were necessary. We have all accepted that the regulations that we currently have were and are necessary, but it begs this question: why did we stop for a week in the middle of the circuit breaker, reopen everything and then close it down again for a further two weeks? That just did not sit right. It means that we will see a slight rise in cases, then, when we shut down for two weeks, cases go back down again. One has to reflect back to that period and ask whether it would have been better to have gone six weeks right through. It has already been mentioned that the numbers are not dropping as we would like, and that may be because of that week when we did not shut down.

Mr McCrossan: I thank the Member for being so generous in giving way. Will he agree with me that, while intervention is absolutely essential to help support businesses through this very difficult time, the Eat Out to Help Out scheme may have been too generous and far too early an intervention, given that it has absolutely fed into the levels of infection in our communities?

Mr McGrath: I thank the Member for his intervention. Yes, we need to provide as much support as we can to businesses because they are having a difficult time, but, at the same time, we need to make sure that the protections and support that we are providing for businesses do not have an inadvertent consequence. I hope that we can provide the financial support that businesses need, and that may mean that they do not need to operate to a level that may cause some difficulties.

The vaccines are being rolled out to the most vulnerable and to those at risk. Christmas is ahead of us, and there is very real hope going into the new year. However, our work as legislators must continue.

As we come to the end of the year once again and prepare to begin anew, let the lessons of the past few weeks not be lost on anyone in the House. Bullheadedness and digging your heels in gets us nowhere and will only set us back. Let us approach the new year with a sense of optimism on what has been done when we let the public down and with a renewed sense of clarity, collective purpose and cohesion for the Executive. While I have issues with what happened and the way in which it happened in November, we continue to look forward to the future. We support the amendments.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Members, given that it is now 12.51 pm and the Business Committee is due to meet at 1.00 pm, I propose, by leave of the Assembly, to suspend the sitting until 2.00 pm. The first item of business when we return will be questions to the Economy Minister. When this item of business resumes, the next Member to speak will be Mr Doug Beattie.

The debate stood suspended.

The sitting was suspended at 12.51 pm.

On resuming (Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Beggs] in the Chair) —

Oral Answers to Questions

Economy

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Question 10 has been withdrawn.

Project Stratum

1. Mr McAleer asked the Minister for the Economy to outline the oversight mechanisms in place to ensure Project Stratum is delivered in budget. (AQO 1287/17-22)

2. Mr K Buchanan asked the Minister for the Economy for an update on the roll-out of Project Stratum. (AQO 1288/17-22)

4. Mr Blair asked the Minister for the Economy whether there is a prioritisation plan for the roll-out of rural connectivity to be delivered by Fibrus through Project Stratum. (AQO 1290/17-22)

Mrs Dodds (The Minister for the Economy): Mr Deputy Speaker, with your permission, I will group questions 1, 2 and 4. Again, with your permission, I would like to avail myself of the extra minute to answer that grouping.

I am delighted that Project Stratum, delivered through the DUP's confidence and supply deal, is up and running. Project Stratum will utilise public funding, together with Fibrus Networks investment, to deliver gigabit-capable broadband infrastructure to more than 76,000 primarily rural premises across Northern Ireland. The citizens and businesses in these areas have waited far too long for acceptable broadband, and their struggles have been deepened by the COVID-19 crisis. As some 97% of these premises are classed as Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency (NISRA) band H, which covers settlements that have fewer than 1,000 people and are in open countryside, the entire intervention area is a priority for my Department. Deployment work is already under way. That is very significant because, within the nine-month period initially thought to be required for network design, the figure of 19,000 premises will have been passed.

I appreciate that Members will want to know how Project Stratum will impact on their area. My Department is engaging with Fibrus Networks to ensure that citizens and businesses can access further information on deployment plans and project implementation dates. An online portal has been developed by Fibrus Networks to provide this key information throughout the deployment phase of the project. Details of the deployment plan are available on the portal, and a premises checker will be added over the coming weeks. Links to the Hyperfast NI portal can be found on my Department's website and the Fibrus website. The portal will be updated and expanded as the project progresses.

I understand that some Members may feel disappointed that their areas are further into the roll-out cycle than they would prefer, but I ask for their patience. It is vital that the network is designed with technical and economic efficiency. That will enable as many premises as possible to benefit from the intervention. I hope that Members agree that the important message for citizens and businesses is that a solution is now in reach and that all those premises that were struggling to access acceptable broadband will be served by this intervention, making them among the best-served places for broadband in the United Kingdom and, indeed, throughout Europe.

I assure Members that the management structure for Project Stratum contains the required tiers of project oversight to support robust governance procedures. These include a project board and a project management team. The project board will monitor progress —.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Minister's three minutes are up, some time ago.

Mrs Dodds: Sorry. There is a lot of information to get out.

Mr McAleer: I thank the Minister for her very comprehensive response. Many MLAs, particularly those who, like me, represent rural areas — I represent West Tyrone, which is in the Sperrins — are itching to know when it will come to our local town or village. When Project Stratum was conceived, it was estimated that the number of premises with no access to superfast broadband was over 100,000, whereas Project Stratum now targets 76,000. Will the Minister explain that gap and advise whether there is a solution for the 30,000 premises not currently part of the Project Stratum intervention area?

Mrs Dodds: I thank the Member for his supplementary question. I apologise for my lengthy response, Mr Deputy Speaker, but my Department is receiving a lot of questions about this, and we want to give a fulsome response to Members in the Chamber.

The identification of the projects came about through an open market review that identified the potential number of premises available. Those were then looked at in conjunction with the already existing commercial access to broadband, and that gave us the number that we are looking at in the Project Stratum intervention area. There are about 3% of other premises that we would like to have within that intervention area, and we are currently working with our national Government to try to work out a solution for those premises. We will come back to the House as quickly as possible with information on that.

I know that the Member will be interested in this: in West Tyrone, 9,591 premises will be able to avail themselves of superfast broadband as a result of Project Stratum.

Mr K Buchanan: I welcome the Minister's work in getting this rolled out. We are now indeed seeing confidence and supply money rolling into Northern Ireland, and we will now see confidence in and supply of our broadband, and to all communities, I might add. At the very start, some were very negative in their comments about the project, but it is going to be rolled out across all communities and will support all of them. There are 18 constituencies in Northern Ireland, but obviously there is only one, Minister, and it is the most important one: Mid Ulster. [Laughter.] What is Project Stratum going to do for the average homeowner, pupil and student in Mid Ulster?

Mrs Dodds: I looked up the figures on the portal before coming to the House. In Mid Ulster, 8,785 premises will benefit from next-generation broadband thanks to the Project Stratum intervention. We have all seen how families have struggled with homeschooling and homeworking during the pandemic. The intervention will increase their ability to do those kinds of things no end.

It is also very important for the economy. One of our economic goals is to have a regionally balanced economy. The new connectivity for the economy is fibre, and that will help us get a regionally balanced economy so that people in rural areas, where before they might have been served by very poor broadband, can now be connected and work in the same way as those in more urban settlements.

Mr Blair: What work is the Department doing on community fibre partnerships to ensure that areas that are not yet included and those that are harder to reach can be included in this or future programmes? I have some such areas in my constituency, and I am sure that the Minister has some in hers.

Mrs Dodds: As I said in response to other colleagues, a small number of premises are still in the very-hard-to-reach category and thus outside the scope of the current Project Stratum. We are in discussions with the Department for Digital, Culture, Media and Sport and with Fibrus Networks on how we can bring solutions to those premises. That will most probably be on a cost and a case-by-case basis, but we are determined to try to have the best broadband service in the whole of the United Kingdom, if not Europe, for Northern Ireland. It is an enormous selling point when we talk to investors across the globe.

Ms McLaughlin: Project Stratum is indeed a very welcome initiative, and it could not come sooner. What review mechanisms has the Minister in place if, for example, the project is delayed or the roll-out is just not up to the standards or expectations that her Department has?

Mrs Dodds: I am not anticipating problems. This is an exciting project, the goal of which is to give us a better-connected and more regionally balanced economy. It is a really important initiative. We have a project board and different levels of guidance and governance for the project.

Of course, payment will be dependent upon delivery, and that is the most important element. I do not anticipate there being problems. There are always glitches in life, but I am looking forward to a smooth roll-out and to 19,000 properties in Northern Ireland having, by the first six to nine months of next year, a level of broadband that they would not have received commercially. That will make an enormous difference.

Mr Boylan: I welcome today's announcement. The Minister and I have had a number of conversations in the corridor in relation to this project. I want to be a wee bit selfish and ask about the number of premises that are being targeted in Newry and Armagh and the time frame for that. It is most important that this project be rolled out to those premises, most of which are in the open countryside, that have been waiting a number of years for broadband provision.

Mrs Dodds: The Member opposite and I clearly understand how absolutely important this is for, and the economic opportunity that it can bring to, rural communities across Northern Ireland. Project Stratum will target 8,101 premises in the Newry and Armagh constituency. That will give an average coverage of access to next-generation broadband in that whole constituency of 99.5%. That will be a pretty good record, when we reach it.

Wet Pubs: Grant Scheme

3. Mrs Cameron asked the Minister for the Economy what progress has been made in developing a grant scheme to support wet pubs experiencing financial hardship. (AQO 1289/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: I thank the Member for her question. I fully appreciate that many pubs have been asked to close under the regulations and, as a result, have had no income or limited income. It is vital that we provide support to prevent permanent pub closures and job losses. That is why I want to see those businesses receiving additional top-up support as soon as possible. My Department has been allocated a funding envelope of £10.6 million and is designing a scheme within that budget that will go forward to the Executive for agreement. The aim of the scheme is to provide compensation to wet pubs that were required to remain closed under the health regulations restrictions for a further 12-week period, from 4 July to 23 September, when the rest of the hospitality sector was permitted to open and trade.

Mrs Cameron: I thank the Minister for her answer. I am sure that she will agree that longer-term financial support may be needed well into 2021 to assist the hospitality industry in getting back on its feet and to protect jobs, following so many months of lost income this year. How can we help the sector to recover next year, once the roll-out of the vaccine is at a more advanced stage?

Mrs Dodds: I am on record many, many times in the House as saying that the best way to help the economy is to ensure that it is open and functioning and that people can go about their daily business. We are in the midst of a health pandemic. That, sadly, has brought great suffering to the hospitality sector, and particularly to those traditional pubs that have not been able to open for pretty much most of the year, maybe bar a week or two in late September/early October. That is why it is incumbent upon us to try to support them. I will bring forward the scheme to the Executive this week, hopefully. We are waiting on details of verification checks, and I know that the Member will appreciate that it will have to be done in such a way that we can authenticate and check applications.

Dr Archibald: The fact that that scheme will go to the Executive this week, hopefully, will be welcome news for the sector. All these schemes are very welcome. Last week, the newly self-employed criteria were published. When that scheme opened, it became apparent that some people will still be excluded on the basis of the criteria, particularly in relation to the requirement for 50% of the trading income to have been from self-employment in 2019-2020, which will exclude those who became self-employed later in the year. Will the Minister commit to looking at that criterion to ensure that those people who previously missed out get paid?

2.15 pm

Mrs Dodds: I am, of course, going to provide a full answer on the self-employed scheme. We launched that scheme to deal specifically with those who had no access to any interventions whatsoever. We have broadly employed the same criteria as the schemes in Scotland and Wales, and it is therefore in line with the criteria in the self-employment scheme (SES). That is why the scheme was designed and launched in the way that it was.

We are always willing to look at any of those issues, but we need to have the rationale. The reason for the 50% requirement is to protect those who are genuinely self-employed and to make sure that that is their main source of income.

Dr Aiken: I thank the Minister for her answers so far. With the Minister and the Deputy Speaker's indulgence, I will ask this question: are the Executive looking to provide some sort of grant support for licensed sport and social clubs in order to help them make it through the rest of the winter? Furthermore, will she join me in wishing Mr Stewart Dickson a very happy birthday? [Laughter.]

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): That is stretching the question, but I will pass it to the Minister to decide whether she wishes to respond. [Laughter.]

Mrs Dodds: Mr Deputy Speaker, I could not resist. I am not going to sing the happy birthday song, but I wish the Member a very happy birthday. Given all the challenges that he has been through, that is very welcome.

Some Members: Hear, hear.

Mrs Dodds: Mr Aiken is always willing to embarrass you at every opportunity, is he not? [Laughter.] Licensed premises that have been closed and that have been instructed to close will be able to apply for other grant schemes in the same way as others who have applied.

Self-employed Workers: Support Scheme

5. Ms Hunter asked the Minister for the Economy for an update on developing a support scheme for self-employed workers ineligible for support packages to date. (AQO 1291/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: The Executive have agreed a funding allocation of £10 million to support the newly self-employed. The newly self-employed support scheme opened at 6.00 pm on 3 December and will provide financial support to those newly self-employed individuals whose business has been adversely impacted by COVID and who have not been able to access support from the UK Government's self-employment income support scheme.

The scheme will provide a one-off taxable grant of £3,500, enabling support for approximately 2,900 newly self-employed individuals. Invest Northern Ireland will deliver the scheme on behalf of the Department for the Economy, and the scheme will close to applications at 6.00 pm on 7 January 2021.

At scheme closure, any underspend will be considered and a top-up grant may be paid to eligible applicants. Details of the eligibility criteria, along with an eligibility checker, can be found on the NI Business Info website.

Ms Hunter: I thank the Minister for her answer. Minister, in addition to the support scheme for self-employed workers, is your Department any further forward in developing a scheme that directors of limited companies can avail themselves of?

Mrs Dodds: My Department is developing a scheme for limited companies. Again, we want to discuss the eligibility with the various business organisations that deal with those issues. We are doing that, and we will continue to work on it as quickly as we can.

I put on the record that we in my Department are managing parts A and B of the COVID restrictions schemes; we have launched the self-employment scheme; and we have almost finished working up the scheme for traditional pubs. We also have a scheme waiting for large hospitality, another for bed and breakfast businesses and we are working very hard on the high street stimulus scheme. I pay tribute to the officials from my Department for the work that they are doing in order to support businesses in Northern Ireland. That is an enormous workload on top of all the other day-to-day issues.

Mr Stalford: I associate myself with the comments of Mr Aiken, although I would not dare to guess which birthday Mr Dickson is celebrating. I would not wish to offend — or compliment — him by making a guess.

The scale of the challenge that the Minister faces in stimulating the economy is reflected in the fact that she put in a bid for £390 million and received roughly a third of that from the Finance Minister. It is not real money in the sense of the economy generating new money; it is government money that will, ultimately, have to be paid back.

Can the Minister commit to using her influence and power in the Executive to push for the fastest easing of restrictions on economic activity that safety will allow? It is essential that people be allowed to get back to work.

Mrs Dodds: The Member, and Members across the House, will be in no doubt that a fully functioning economy is required to be open and devoid of restrictions. However, we are in the middle of difficult health circumstances, and, like my colleague Robin Swann, my advice to people is to be respectful of one another, remember the rules, wash your hands, keep your distance, and wear your face mask. If we do those things, we can have an economy that is freer and more open and able to trade.

I noticed today that the first woman in the world to receive the vaccine — although she lives in Coventry, and we will forgive her for that — is from Northern Ireland. I take that as a great sign of hope for the future, recognising that getting the vaccine rolled out is a mammoth challenge.

Mr O'Dowd: Minister, I want to return to the self-employed and newly self-employed. I understand that representatives of the self-employed are bringing forward to the Minister proposals that would meet her objectives of ensuring that the public purse is protected and that money goes to those most in need. Will the Minister take those proposals seriously and undertake to assist the newly self-employed?

Mrs Dodds: I think that the Member knows well enough that I receive delegations from right across the spectrum of Northern Ireland, and I will treat their representations with respect and look at all suggestions that are put forward.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Rachel Woods is not in her place.

NI Goods: Unfettered Access

7. Mrs Barton asked the Minister for the Economy to outline the measures in place to ensure Northern Ireland goods have unfettered access to the Great Britain market, while EU goods passing through Northern Ireland are subject to proper administration. (AQO 1293/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: I thank the Member for her question. Given the tweets that we have just seen, and some of the issues that have been aired today, her question is timely.

Since taking office, my priority has been to ensure that Northern Ireland businesses continue to enjoy unfettered access to our largest market, Great Britain. I have engaged with our Government on a regular basis to ensure that, and I am pleased that those efforts are yielding results.

Unfettered access can be guaranteed by the United Kingdom through the Internal Market Bill by agreement in the Joint Committee. I note the latest reports. I also note, and the House should note, that I spoke to businesses this morning, and all agree that a pragmatic, practical outcome is desired.

The SI covering goods from Northern Ireland into GB is too vague; it is not a comprehensive definition of a Northern Ireland-qualifying good. While international trade, including which measures will be taken to ensure that EU goods do not use Northern Ireland as a backdoor to the GB market, is a matter for the United Kingdom Government, it is important that the quality and provenance of Northern Ireland goods are preserved. The Government have yet to outline specific anti-avoidance measures that would be used against EU businesses attempting to avoid tariffs by bringing goods into Northern Ireland.

I welcome the commitment to developing a sustainable longer-term definition of “qualifying”, and anti-avoidance measures. Engagement with industry and the Executive on those is essential. The Executive have written to the Government supporting proposals from the Northern Ireland Food and Drink Association (NIFDA) that could act as an effective model for the agri-food sector in ensuring unfettered access.

Mrs Barton: Thank you, Minister, for your answer. Minister, can you advise on the country of origin of goods that have been produced using products from several countries, for example cheese or Baileys drink?

Mrs Dodds: The Member will be glad to know that I spoke to the chief executive of Dairy UK on that very issue this morning. I assume that the Member refers to milk in Northern Ireland that may have been processed into cheese etc in the Republic of Ireland. We need a practical outcome to this so that, if it is done in that way, it is treated as a product of origin of one or the other. However, most importantly, what we need to ensure for all of our produce is that we have free access to the EU market in this respect and that we also have access to our biggest market. I will repeat this because it is worth repeating: Northern Ireland sells more in the Great Britain market than it does in the Republic of Ireland, the rest of Europe and the rest of the world all added together. That unfettered access to GB is absolutely vital.

Mr McAleer: The Minister made reference to the anti-avoidance measures that the British Government are supposed to put in place to prevent the North from becoming a back door into the British market. That has the potential to become a huge impediment to trade heading east. There are only 23 days to go until the end of the transition period. Does she have any assessment or sense of what shape the anti-avoidance measures might take?

Mrs Dodds: As I said in my answer to the original question, the Government have said that they would bring in anti-avoidance measures. Those are likely to be measures around asking firms to prove that they are not using a particular route through Northern Ireland in order to avoid duty on the goods that they are bringing into the GB market.

A couple of things are massively important for Northern Ireland. We want to preserve our place within the United Kingdom’s internal market. As I have said, it is the most important market for Northern Ireland. I know that the Member will be extremely interested in this. For agri-food in particular, it is absolutely vital that we preserve that place. It is equally vital that we preserve the provenance of Northern Ireland goods so that Northern Ireland is not seen as a bit of a back door through which anybody and everybody can bring goods into the GB market. That would undermine us in the GB market and undermine the value and provenance of Northern Ireland goods. That is massively important as well.

Mr O’Toole: I do not know if the Minister has seen it, but, in the last hour, there has been news of some agreement at the Joint Committee. She, like me, will want to see the detail of that agreement between Minister Gove and Vice-President Šefčovič. Pursuant to that, once we see the detail, is she willing, with others in the Executive, to press for full access for Northern Ireland businesses to existing EU trade deals? Via the Joint Committee, we should be able to agree that we get access both to UK deals and, of course, the UK market — and I agree with her on that — but also existing EU trade deals. That offers real opportunity for businesses here. It is also essential for —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member has asked his question.

Mr O’Toole: — businesses, particularly the dairy business.

Mrs Dodds: The chief executive of Dairy UK will be very pleased that we were listening to him this morning. I, like you, will want to see the detail of what has been agreed. I have read the statement, which followed discussions that have been ongoing for a number of days. As I have said in the House on many occasions, for Northern Ireland and for the rest of the United Kingdom, it would be better if we were able to achieve that zero-tariff, zero-quota deal. We need the practical outcomes of the protocol to be agreed. As I said in an earlier answer, we can do that through either the Internal Market Bill or, with the agreement of the EU, the Joint Committee.

I will be very interested in the outcome of the discussions today and in the Minister’s statement about the discussions to the House tomorrow.

2.30 pm

It is important that we have access to the new trade deals that the United Kingdom will do. That is a huge issue for us. Of the 37 trade deals that the EU has, most, bar about three, have rolled over. As members of the United Kingdom, we will have automatic access to those rolled-over EU trade deals. We very much need to make sure that we have access to the new trade deals with the US, New Zealand and Australia on the same basis as every other part of the United Kingdom.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): That is the end of our period for listed questions. We now move on to topical questions.

Excluded PAYE Contributors: Support

T1. Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister for the Economy what proposals she has to bring forward a scheme to assist PAYE contributors who have been excluded both from furlough and the newly self-employed support scheme. (AQT 801/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: I presume that the Member means the national self-employed income support scheme (SEISS). As I indicated, we have launched a scheme for the self-employed. That is for those who became self-employed after March 2019 and could not, therefore, have supplied a tax return to HMRC before we were struck by COVID in March 2020. The scheme that we have brought forward is broadly the same as the schemes that were developed in Scotland and Wales. I look forward to those who have been unable to access any support being able to access support through that scheme.

I presume that the Member is also asking about those who became self-employed, say, in 2018 or in late 2019, who have not had a particularly successful outcome through SEISS. Those people are not included in our scheme and would require a completely separate scheme. Of course, it will be up to the Executive to decide whether they want to include those people in the scheme. That would mean topping up national schemes, and the Executive would have to decide whether they want to do that and whether the Finance Minister has the funding for it.

Ms Bradshaw: Minister, thank you for your response. I have recently received correspondence from constituents who have advised me that, when they applied for the newly self-employed support scheme, they had been frustrated by what seemed to be a mismatch between the definitions used in the Go For It programme and what the Department is using for eligibility. Could you look into that? As you know, Minister, many of those who have fallen through the cracks are in very dire straits, and it is having a serious impact on their mental well-being.

Mrs Dodds: I am completely aware of how difficult life has been over the last number of months. That is why, through the three support schemes that we brought out earlier this year, we paid out over £340 million to those who required help. I am also aware that that did not include everyone who needed help. That is why we have specifically targeted the self-employed who were unable to access the national self-employment income support scheme. That is a very important distinction.

The criteria for the new scheme were developed in line with those that the excluded group brought forward. They are also in line with those used in the Scottish and Welsh schemes of the same nature.

Trade Deal

T2. Mr Middleton asked the Minister for the Economy, given that she will be aware of the media attention on the discussions and agreement between the UK and the EU over the Northern Ireland protocol, whether she agrees that it is vital that an overall trade deal be reached to support businesses in Northern Ireland and whether she would support a flexibility or grace period for local companies as they try to adapt to the new arrangements post 1 January. (AQT 802/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: I thank my colleague for his question. It is important that we reach a deal; I have said many times that that would be the best outcome for Northern Ireland. It is also important that we reach a conclusion on the issues that the protocol has thrown up for Northern Ireland. I do not support the protocol. I am not pretending about that to anyone in the House — everyone knows my view. However, we have practical issues to resolve for the good of the business community and economy in Northern Ireland, and to support jobs. That is important.

This morning, I spoke to my EU stakeholders group, which is made up of a wide range of businesses across Northern Ireland. We agreed with yesterday's statement from business leaders that a period to ease the adjustment is necessary given the late hour of the agreement. Of course, we will reserve judgement on the agreement until we see the details.

Mr Middleton: I thank the Minister for her response and welcome her comments. I agree with her that it is important that we wait to see the detail. Will she continue to raise the concerns around the protocol? This morning, with colleagues, I met representatives of the airlines. They raised serious concerns about the impact that the protocol will have on them. Will the Minister commit to continuing to raise those issues on their behalf?

Mrs Dodds: I absolutely will. What we might see from the discussions of the Joint Committee are high-level agreements coming out over the next number of days. Underneath those, however, will be a myriad of practical issues that the protocol has imposed upon us and which need to be resolved. I advise those in the House who call for full implementation of the protocol to step into my shoes for a brief period and listen to the difficulties of businesses that are struggling with the complexities of customs, export certificates and the cost to them. Another important issue for the House, and one that we need to keep reminding the Government of, is that cost to business and their promise to ensure that businesses do not have to bear it themselves.

Black Taxis: Financial Support

T3. Mr Sheehan asked the Minister for the Economy, given that she has provided multiple grants to hotels and accommodation providers but continues to exclude taxi drivers and the coach industry, to give a commitment to amend part B of the coronavirus business support scheme so that taxi drivers and coach operators can access payments additional to the rather meagre payments that they have received from the Department for Infrastructure, particularly because the black taxis play a valuable role in the tourism sector in his constituency and the other Belfast constituencies, where the drivers provide guided tours for tourists throughout the city, to the benefit of hoteliers and other accommodation providers. (AQT 803/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: Of course, the Member will understand that the responsibility for looking after taxi drivers and the coach and haulage industries is with the Department for Infrastructure. It is the Department that regulates same and has brought forward the scheme in relation to same.

The COVID restrictions business support scheme is meant to look after the supply chain of businesses that are named in the restrictions. Therefore, they have to be named and be in the direct supply chain: they must have a contract with a named business. The best way in which to support taxi drivers is to have an open and free economy. Of course, in the next year, one of our absolute priorities will be to restart and reboot the tourism economy so that we can see visitors coming back to Northern Ireland and ensure that jobs in that sector are secure for the future. Northern Ireland has a lot to offer tourists, and I look forward to working with the sector on that renewal. I hope to make announcements about that in the near future.

Mr Sheehan: I must say that I am very disappointed with that answer. Taxi drivers in particular, who, under normal circumstances, work long and antisocial hours for little recompense, have been left behind in the pandemic. It took a long, long time to launch the Department for Infrastructure scheme.

The Minister has the power to —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Does the Member have a question?

Mr Sheehan: — amend part B of the coronavirus business support scheme, which would ensure that taxi drivers and coach operators get additional payments.

Mrs Dodds: I sympathise with taxi drivers and coach operators. There already is a scheme for them, however. They have applied to it, and those applications have been verified, but if the Executive decide that there should be additional funding for that scheme to satisfy additional hardship payments, I will support that.

Kickstart

T4. Mr Irwin asked the Minister for the Economy whether Northern Ireland is part of the GB Kickstart scheme, given that, as she will be aware, the impact of COVID on the economy has been unprecedented, and it is his understanding that a number of initiatives exist to help people stay in work or find new employment. (AQT 804/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: I thank the Member for his question. Much of what we do in the Department for the Economy is to support the broader economy and to support training and initiatives in the economy. That is why we launched our apprenticeship schemes, which are being received well by industry. We are creating new apprenticeships and supporting others. Kickstart is the Department for Communities' scheme, and I spoke with the Minister some months ago when Kickstart was announced for the rest of the United Kingdom. I understand that she is working up a scheme, and I encourage her to bring it forward as quickly as possible.

Mr Irwin: I thank the Minister for her response. I am sure that she will agree with me that it is vital that every effort be made to help many of those businesses.

Mrs Dodds: Absolutely. It is really important to help businesses, and individuals as well. Perhaps the House, in the closing minutes of this Question Time, will want to know that part A of the COVID restrictions business support scheme has received 3,603 applications, of which, to date, support has been paid out to 2,544, with over £12 million being given to individuals in this period of restrictions. We hope to have all of part A of the scheme fully paid out by the end of the week, except for the one or two applications that are much more difficult to do. Part B of the COVID restrictions business support scheme will start paying out this week, with significant payments being made today and on Friday.

Project Stratum: West Tyrone/Fermanagh and South Tyrone

T5. Mr McCrossan asked the Minister for the Economy, after giving his full support to Project Stratum and the progress that has been made, with Fibus being awarded the contract, but also expressing his concern about the timeline for increased broadband coverage, for her assessment of the need to prioritise West Tyrone and Fermanagh and South Tyrone in the roll-out, given that those constituencies are the worst impacted in terms of connectivity. (AQT 805/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: I have made my view very clear on that. The contract was awarded in such a way that the company that got it would be able to roll it out in a way that made most economic and technical sense. If we start to prioritise one area here, one area there and one area somewhere else, we will make the contract more expensive, and fewer homes and premises will then be included in the contract area.

Like you, I would like to see my constituents get broadband in their area as quickly as possible, and they would like to see me being able to chop and change things around, but that is not how it will work. We are rolling it out in the most economic and technically sensible way in order to get the most that we can from the contract and to include as many premises as we can in it.

Mr McCrossan: West Tyrone is somewhat worse, but I understand that we have to defend our constituents. Can the Minister outline whether any assessment has been undertaken with her colleague the Minister of Education on the impact that Project Stratum will have on boosting broadband connectivity in rural schools?

2.45 pm

Mrs Dodds: I have not spoken to the Minister of Education about that specific issue, but we all know that connectivity is key. It is king, and fibre is the new method of connectivity. Project Stratum will bring economic opportunity to your constituents in West Tyrone on an equal basis to those who live in larger urban settlements. That is a good thing for families, farms and jobs in the West Tyrone area. I look forward to seeing it roll out.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I ask Members to take their ease for a few moments.

(Mr Speaker in the Chair)

Education

Mr Butler: On a point of order, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: We do not take points of order during Question Time, Robbie. Sorry about that. I will take it later.

Exams: COVID-19 Disruption

1. Ms Kimmins asked the Minister of Education whether he will reconsider the awarding of qualifications in 2021 to take into account the continuing disruption experienced by exam cohorts as a result of COVID-19. (AQO 1302/17-22)

Mr Weir (The Minister of Education): I thank the Member for her question. It is my priority that examinations to award Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) qualifications, which is the one area that I have direct control over, should go ahead as planned in 2021. However, it is clear that there is a need — I have acknowledged this from the start — for adaptations, given where we are this year.

The first suite of adaptations, which I agreed on 9 October and subsequently on 6 November for GCSE qualifications, provide a significant reduction in the burden of assessment for young people while still allowing as much opportunity as possible to cover the content of the specifications. I also agreed a number of health-related adaptations for AS and A levels. However, the situation has been kept under review, and my officials have been working closely with CCEA to develop a range of further mitigations and contingencies to respond to the fluid public health situation. That is particularly the case for AS and A levels. That work is at an advanced stage. It has also involved discussions with key stakeholders in terms of partnership at school principal level. I hope to be in a position to provide more information on that issue very soon.

Ms Kimmins: I thank the Minister for his answer. Having read the public exam guidance that was published in November, I and many others are still deeply concerned that the Minister and CCEA continue to ignore the concerns of young people, their families and teachers. There will be no level playing field when it comes to the public exams that will be used next year. Many young people will have had multiple periods of self-isolation, so the education experience is very varied. Will the Minister consider directing CCEA to add greater optionality for the exam papers for 2021 to try to reduce some of the stress that is being felt by our young people?

Mr Weir: As with a lot of things in education, it depends on what you define as a particular term. Optionality has, generally speaking, been considered from a purely educational point of view, which is about having more exam questions from which to choose. Direct concerns have been raised. That is one of the options that continues to be looked at.

Concerns have been raised, particularly by non-selective schools, that optionality, by that definition, would create problems, especially for some children with special educational needs and candidates who are not as strong academically, and that it could discriminate against them. However, there is a range of other options, if I may put it that way, for adaptations that I hope to bring forward very soon.

We have already gone further than some other jurisdictions, particularly England, with adaptations for GCSEs. I hope to be in position to come to a conclusion and to make further announcements on those adaptations before Christmas in order to give people a level of certainty. We will have to take account of the current wider situation because it is about trying to create as level a playing field as possible. In the current circumstances, whatever direction I or any jurisdiction move in, the playing field will not be completely level for anyone. That is part of the difficulty, because, sometimes, making one decision will be fair for some people and unfair for others, and it is about trying to balance that. I hope to be able to reach a conclusion on that fairly soon.

Mr McCrossan: I thank the Minister for his answer to the question. I am very concerned — I have put my concerns firmly on record — about examinations going ahead, particularly given what happened in the summer and the impact that that has had on the mental health of our young people and teachers in schools. Minister, you are in the bad books of a lot of students and teachers, and I think that you know that very well. Given the situation and that the Commissioner for Children and Young People and the mental health champion have spoken out, will you now cancel examinations this year?

Mr Weir: No, I will not. Frankly, if we are talking about fairness for people, we first have to take into account that the exams that I control are administered by CCEA. If we were to cancel all CCEA examinations, there would still be roughly 20% of students doing English board examinations. It would place students in Northern Ireland in a different position not just from students in England, Scotland and Wales but — this may be of greater interest to the Member — the Republic of Ireland, all of whom are going ahead with examinations. Every jurisdiction, by one means or another, is going ahead with examinations.

We need to ensure that we have a level playing field for grading throughout the United Kingdom and that, as much as possible, there is a level playing field for students in Northern Ireland. If we were the only jurisdiction that, in all forms, abandoned examinations, where would that leave some of our students when making comparisons for university places? Rather than snatching at a populist headline, we have to think this through so that we can see where it leaves our students.

The one thing that I am going to do is be absolutely straight with students and others. Members will say, “Wales has abandoned exams”. It has not, really. It is having assessments that are externally set and externally marked. Presumably, if there is going to be a level playing field for students in Wales, those assessments will have to be carried out under examination conditions. In many ways, if it walks like a duck and quacks like a duck, it is a duck.

Mr Butler: We are now on the edge of the Christmas break for schools with no certainty about a return date due to the potential for increased COVID transmission over the festive holiday. What impact assessment has your Department carried out on the extent of lost classroom learning, particularly for years 11 to 14?

Mr Weir: From that point of view, the adaptations that will be put forward will cover the situation and will recognise that not every student has faced the same issues. We will also need to look, in a wider UK context, at dealing with special considerations for individuals. Perhaps unsurprisingly, rumours will always abound in Northern Ireland. There are no plans to delay the return to school in January. I want our young people to have as full an opportunity as possible to be educated directly. Let us make sure that rumours do not start that, again, do not have any substance.

Mr Speaker: Questions 2 and 7 have been withdrawn. I call Chris Lyttle.

COVID-19: Academic Selection Guidance

3. Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education what guidance he has issued to schools using academic selection in 2021 regarding the admission of pupils without test scores due to COVID-19-related absence. (AQO 1304/17-22)

Mr Weir: I thank the Member for his question. I was not aware that question 2 had been withdrawn.

As the Member will be aware, setting admissions criteria is, by law, a matter for boards of governors of individual schools. To assist in the process, guidance was issued to all post-primary schools on the operation of the transfer procedure. However, given the unique situation that we find ourselves in, I have also written to the boards of governors of schools that will be using the entrance test results in their admissions criteria. I am sure that the Member will be aware that schools are under an obligation to publish the criteria and to produce them by 11 December. I have told boards of governors that, in drafting their criteria, they should consider any eventuality whereby test results are available, but not necessarily for every student.

As such, I have indicated to them that, as part of the single set of admissions criteria, they should look at how they will deal with students who will have had to self-isolate, for instance, and, perhaps, have not been able to do all the tests. They will also be working alongside the test providers. It is also the case, this year, that schools will apply special circumstances. I have asked them to review their special circumstances, because I suspect that there will be a greater call on those this year than in previous years. It will be for individual schools to determine how they deal with such applications, and once criteria are completed, they will be published by the Education Authority at the beginning of the new year.

Mr Lyttle: The Education Minister has failed to introduce a dedicated code to gather COVID-19-related pupil absence data, but, in November, the National Association of Head Teachers surveyed 89 primary schools and found that, on average, as many as 37% of P7 pupils had experienced a COVID-19-related absence since the start of term. I ask the Education Minister, yet again, how can it be fair to base post-primary admission on testing 10-year-old children in such exceptional circumstances?

Mr Weir: I admire the Member for the inventive ways in which he attacks academic selection. His attacks seem to take slightly different twists and turns, and the route, now, is under the cover of COVID-19.

With regard to absences, we have direct information on pupils who are absent and still able to engage, and those who are self-isolating. Those figures reached their highest point towards the end of October when there was a combined rate of about 8%. It is a lot lower than that for most of the other weeks, and it tends to be slightly lower in primary schools than in post-primary schools.

We have seen the alternatives suggested by a few schools looking to move away from academic selection this year.

The alternatives that they seem to have produced relate to whether your mum, dad or older brother went to the school. It is a range of those things. It is a form of selection by family and genetics. Sometimes, it will be a question of getting into the school if you have a brother, but not if you have a sister, or vice versa. It is an accident of birth — an accident of DNA.

Whatever the criticisms of academic selection, it is, at least, based on the merits of the applicant. As such, while a wider debate on academic selection has gone on for a long time, with a range of views, to jump in and put in place those sorts of measures will only exacerbate difference and make it utterly impossible for some students to get into a school that is not based on academic selection. If a child was the greatest genius in the land, they would simply be denied, because of who they were related to. That does not seem to be a particularly satisfactory way of selecting children for an oversubscribed school.

Mr Sheehan: The Minister will be well aware of Sinn Féin's position on academic selection and the rejection of children. Participation in those tests should not be equated with support for them. Often, sitting those tests is the only way that children can get into a school that is nearest to their home.

What alternatives is the Minister considering to post-primary transfer this year in the context of COVID-19, absences from school, self-isolation and mental health issues?

3.00 pm

Mr Weir: I appreciate that your party has been very consistent and clear-cut on the issue. I support academic selection and the right to academic selection. It is enshrined in law. Unless schools choose something that takes them outside the law, admissions criteria are up to individual boards of governors. We can give schools advice that says, "You need to have a range of criteria to look at eventualities for individuals". However, it is ultimately a choice for schools.

Many fine schools across the system have never used academic selection, or only use it partially, and also get absolutely brilliant results. I welcome those schools, and I do not intend to force academic selection on anyone. However, neither do I intend to take the right to academic selection away from schools. I am not planning for an alternative. We will give advice, particularly on what is required on health and safety issues. We also advise that schools need to be more cognisant this year, on a wide range of criteria, to cover those eventualities. We will give guidance, particularly on the special circumstances that each individual school has to apply; it cannot be something that is done on a blanket basis. Those schools need to examine their criteria closely to make sure that they are fit for purpose for this year, but I am not going to impose a solution on them that takes away their right to academic selection.

Mrs Barton: Thank you very much for your answers so far, Minister. With regard to the use of academic selection for this cohort of pupils, can you outline any contingency planning discussions that you or your Department have had with grammar schools in response to the recent successful Committee for Education motion on the same issue?

Mr Weir: I thank the Member for her question. I have made it very clear that not only is academic selection in legislation but it is up to boards of governors. It is not a question of me or my Department coming up with criteria. The grammar schools that use academic selection are perfectly entitled to do so. I am not going to interfere in that right. As I said, a range of mitigations is being put in place this year, because anybody doing any form of public examination will have to follow a range of guidelines for health and safety. That will apply in all circumstances. However, I will not take away the right to academic selection. I will not be the Minister who seeks, by the front door or the back, to destroy our grammar-school system.

SEN: Additional Resources

4. Mr Buckley asked the Minister of Education what additional resources have been allocated to minimise any disruption to children with special educational needs (SEN). (AQO 1305/17-22)

Mr Weir: I thank the Member for his question. To help support schools and the education sector in addressing many of the new pressures arising as a result of COVID-19, I announced significant additional funding, with the support of the Executive. To date, extra allocations of £6.9 million have been made to the Education Authority (EA), earmarked for special educational needs pressures arising from COVID-19 and Education Restart. I have asked the EA to continue to monitor funding requirements as the pandemic progresses, in order to inform potential departmental bids for additional resources.

Mr Buckley: I know that the Minister fully appreciates the devastating impact that COVID-19 has had on children with special educational needs. He will join with me in appreciating the tenacity of the children and the teachers and parents who look after those young people. Will the Minister provide an update on the transformation and improvement programme of special educational needs services?

Mr Weir: I am happy to do so. The Member mentioned teachers and parents. As we move towards Christmas, I want to place on record my thanks and appreciation — as I have done before, particularly for those in special educational needs but across the board — for parents, principals, teachers and all educational staff who have ensured that education continues.

Specifically on the question that the Member asked, the SEN governance group was established in September to maintain strategic oversight of the implementation of improvements being made in the EA and the Department. Considerable criticism has been levelled in the various reports that have been produced, and it is important that those are answered strategically.

The EA recently established a programme of improvements through its SEN strategic development programme, which provides a single coordinating governance structure for the SEN transformation agenda across Northern Ireland. The programme not only draws together ongoing multi-agency SEN development work but defines a single strategic plan to address the wide-ranging recommendations for changes that have resulted from various review reports over the past few years, including the 2020 Northern Ireland Audit Office SEN report, the SEN learner journey recommendations and the recent report by the Northern Ireland Children's Commissioner.

Mr Dickson: Minister, can you explain why the school restart fund does not apply to special schools? Is the failure to apply the fund to special schools an act of discrimination against special schools?

Mr Weir: No, it is not. Perhaps I am being a bit pedantic, but the Member may be referring to the Engage programme rather than restart. The restart fund is the wider package of measures that is being taken into account. As I indicated, £6.9 million of restart funding is directly for special educational needs. The Engage programme is £11.2 million of funding and is targeted at mainstream schools. As a more one-to-one intervention is required in special schools, I have instructed the EA to work directly with special schools to make provision of a similar nature to the Engage programme. Given the budgeting, the Engage programme has been delegated to schools. As the Member will also be aware, budgets for special educational needs are not devolved to the schools but are dealt with at EA level, which is why I have instructed the EA. There is a good argument for a lot more flexibility with the budgets. With the Engage programme, the flexibility on how that money is used is devolved to individual schools. Needs will be met directly in special schools, but the budget will come through the EA rather than the Engage programme.

Ms Mullan: Minister, the Education Committee heard evidence a number of weeks ago that suggested that the Department of Health had not fulfilled its obligations to cooperate with the Education Department on children with special education needs. Can the Minister assess the current levels of cooperation between the Education and Health Departments to support children with special education needs?

Mr Weir: To be fair, while the Committee Chair and I will often clash, he made reasonable suggestions to develop better stakeholder engagement and a reference group for vulnerable children. I am trying to take the suggestions forward with officials. As the Member suggested, that cannot happen purely in the Department of Education, and it requires cooperation.

Much of the Member's question would be better answered by the Health Minister. However, good work has been done and the situation is beginning to improve. There is no doubt that turning aspirations into real cooperation can be challenging at times and requires a continual effort. It can be brought forward as the consultation on the SEN regulations comes to an end, and the code of practice will be allied to the regulations. The code of practice will be a driver to improve what we can do for our young people with special educational needs.

Mr Allister: Extra resources in this area are very welcome. However, does the Minister agree that there needs to be better alignment between the release of resources and further improvement of the statementing process? The current targets are still disappointing. You can have all the resources that you like, but if the kids are not statemented, you are not marrying the two, and that is where the solution lies.

Mr Weir: I agree with the Member up to a point. As with all issues, resources are required to do certain things. Resources, in and of themselves, are not the complete picture. I do not have the figures to hand, but timescales for the statementing process have improved considerably. They started from a very poor base a year or two ago and have reduced considerably.

I see somebody shaking their head from a sedentary position, who clearly does not have the figures in front of them either. I revealed the figures at my previous Question Time.

Before the Chair gets a little bit paranoid, I will say that I am not accusing him. For once, he is an innocent man. The figures suggest very long-term waits. For example, a number of months ago, a number of children were waiting, say, more than a year and a half for a statement. That is no longer the case. There have been reductions in all those elements. It is about making that progress.

The Member is right about alignment, and the purpose of the SEN regulations is to try to get a much more joined-up approach. That is why they are out for consultation. It is important that we can move ahead with those as soon as possible and do as much as we can with the resources that are there.

Nettlefield Primary School

5. Mr Stalford asked the Minister of Education for an update on capital works at Nettlefield Primary School. (AQO 1306/17-22)

Mr Weir: I thank the Member for his question. As Nettlefield Primary School is a controlled school, the Education Authority is responsible for minor capital works there. It has advised that, subject to the availability of funding and prioritisation of other works, consideration is being given to progressing minor works at the school. I know that the Member takes a close interest in Nettlefield, and I believe that it was one of the schools that the permanent secretary and I visited pre-COVID, which seems a long time ago. Specifically, in the next financial year, the EA is looking to progress minor works relating to the toilets and the roofing, and I know that there is a danger with the windows. The concrete steps outside the school office could also prove to be a hazard. All those matters are being considered for progression by the Education Authority, which will deal with the operational side of it.

Mr Stalford: I declare an interest as a past pupil of Nettlefield Primary School. I am grateful to the Minister for his answer. The Minister knows that this is a unique building. I think that it is a listed building, which complicates the process of making improvements to it. The Minister has seen the state of some of the rotten window frames and the general poor state of some parts of that building. Please, will he do everything in his power to process this as quickly as possible and get the work carried out? The school really needs it.

Mr Weir: I appreciate that. One of the restrictions has been the school's listed status, which is not unique to Nettlefield. For some buildings, listed status is not, with the best will in the world, preserving great Georgian architecture but is, at times, holding back measures that need to be taken to improve health and safety. The EA is cognisant of the issues at Nettlefield. The problem is that, when the last call was made for minor works, there were around 6,000 applications, about 600 of which have been funded so far. There is a lot of demand out there, but I can give the assurance that the EA will take it seriously and that the Member being a past pupil of Nettlefield will in no way disadvantage the school. [Laughter.]

Mr O'Toole: I welcome the Minister's answer. Although I am not a past pupil, Nettlefield clearly has real issues. It is a notable building, and it really needs the work that my South Belfast colleague has asked for.

May I ask a brief question on the broader capital budget of the Department of Education? Given that it has been a unique year for getting capital spending out the door, has the Minister had any conversations with the Finance Minister about ensuring that the capital allocation that sits with you this year will be spent in-year and none of it will be handed back?

Mr Weir: I understand that, and I think that the Department was well aware of that. For instance, some money has been released, after discussions with DOF, to the EA for issues such as the procurement of additional bus allocation and a range of other procurements. I appreciate that there was disruption, particularly around the spring, to capital spend. We have caught up on some of that. On the broader budget, as we move towards 2021, the situation with capital resources will still be very tight across the board, but I had very useful conversations with the Minister of Finance yesterday on the broader budgetary issues covering both resource and capital demand.

Mr Nesbitt: I am sure that the Minister will join me in congratulating Nettlefield on surviving the many challenges that it has faced down the years. I understand that the Minister has visited West Winds Primary School, which is in the constituency that we both serve. Will he join me in congratulating the senior leadership team on the energy that it has brought to school life? Will he support that team's desire to see the same infrastructure improvements in that school as have been seen in other primary schools in the area in recent years?

Mr Weir: I certainly congratulate the school on its hard work and success, not just under its current principal but under its previous principal. It has been success story and a particular beacon of light.

For people who are checking the Register of Members' Interests, I should perhaps indicate that I visited the school in my capacity as an MLA for the area, as I think the Member did as well, rather than in my capacity as Minister of Education. I was able to view some of the school's challenges and some of the improvements that need to be made to its physical infrastructure. Speaking as an MLA, I am very much in favour of those improvements. Indeed, I want to see the best possible availability of space and construction for all our pupils, not just in the great constituency of Strangford but beyond the constituency and throughout Northern Ireland.

Ms Brogan: I thank the Minister for his update on Nettlefield Primary School. Can he provide an update on the Strule shared education campus in Omagh, which is in my constituency of West Tyrone, please?

Mr Weir: I should first say that this is the Member's first Education Question Time. I will see her tomorrow at the Education Committee, and I welcome her to her place.

Work is continuing on that. Recently, I have taken a position to the Executive, and the Executive all agreed that we need to move ahead with Strule. There is still some work to be finalised between the Department of Finance and Treasury. Without breaking any confidentiality, I was able to raise the matter directly with the Finance Minister yesterday, and the Department of Finance is pushing ahead. We need a final position from Treasury to confirm all of that, however. It is probably the biggest capital project that Northern Ireland has ever undertaken, and there is a strong determination, not just from the Department of Education and me as Minister of Education but from the whole Executive, to carry on to make sure that the campus is brought to fruition.

Mr Lyttle: Can the Minister outline the monetary scale of the maintenance backlog across Northern Ireland?

Mr Weir: I do not have those figures directly to hand, but I will be happy to provide them to the Member.

Mr Speaker: That ends the period for listed questions, Members. We now move on to 15 minutes of topical questions.

Independent Review of Integrated Education

T1. Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Education whether he has read the excellent report on the independent review of integrated education and, if so, whether he has any initial comments to make on its recommendations. (AQT 811/17-22)

Mr Weir: Yes, of course I have read the report. Indeed, I had to take some imaginative action to make sure that it was published on time in the previous mandate. I think that its final version was produced during the period of purdah, so I had to make sure that it was able to be released. In order to cover the situation in which we are not supposed to release anything during purdah, I remember that the report had to be released at a quarter to 10 on election day in 2017.

As I said, yes, I have read the report. A number of its recommendations have been put in place. The report refers to the fact that, where there are outstanding recommendations, a number of them are part of a wider picture and some may not be 100% appropriate, but the consideration of that is in the wider revised draft terms of reference that hopefully will form part of the independent review. I have submitted a paper to the Executive on that. Any independent review would take forward anything that is outstanding from that.

Mr Lunn: I thank the Minister for his answer. I refer him to recommendation 17, which suggests that his Department should be more proactive in advising schools about the transformation process. Is he satisfied that the Department, historically, has delivered on its statutory obligation to facilitate and encourage integrated education?

Mr Weir: I should say that, although history was one of my favourite subjects at school and is something that a lot of politicians in Northern Ireland will always get accused of being immersed in, I do not really think that there is a great deal of point in trying to decide retrospectively what should have happened five years ago or 10 years ago. Trying to meet the challenges of where we are now is probably the more appropriate response. As I indicated, as part of the outstanding recommendations, we will look at what is appropriate to be put in place. How it can be put in place will lie with the independent review, which hopefully will soon be initiated.

Pupils' Mental Health and Well-being: Funding

T2. Ms Flynn asked the Minister of Education, after welcoming his recent announcement of £5 million for schools to support pupils' mental health and well-being, albeit that £1.5 million came from the Department of Health, to state whether £5 million was sufficient and to outline whether he plans to submit further bids. (AQT 812/17-22)

Mr Weir: I thank the Member for her question. There are actually two funds, and she may be slightly mixing up the two. Of the £5 million that was recently allocated, £4.75 million was directly for schools; the other £0.25 million was for the Youth Service, because obviously there were gaps there. That was specifically money that I had put forward a proposal for. The Executive endorsed that and provided it via the COVID side of things.

With regard to the £1.5 million that the Member referred to, there are plans to have a wider, embedded £6.5 million in addition to the £5 million. The £6.5 million is for mental health and well-being, with that contribution from Health because of the crossover issues. The aim is for that to roll out in the new year.

There may be some possibilities to look at what can be done next year and, while COVID funding will still be available in 2021-22, I am sure that the Finance Minister, if he was here, would indicate that it is roughly about a quarter of what it was in total. There is still the possibility to bid for further COVID money, but the aim is, in addition to the COVID money, to have something secured within the Budget on a rolling annual basis.

Of the original £6.5 million, as this is the first year of additional funding, some of that will be through pilot programming. We have to see what works in practice. What may work in West Belfast may not work in West Tyrone, or what works in a primary school may not work in a special school or a post-primary school. Part of it will be testing out and then trying to embed what is very successful and, perhaps, shift resources.

Ms Flynn: I thank the Minister for his response. Will the Minister also outline the time frame for the delivery of the emotional health and well-being framework? Will he commit to making this an urgent priority in the new year of 2021?

Mr Weir: The framework will try to marry the two issues, so it will be early in the new year for both.

Ards: Post-primary Provision

T3. Miss McIlveen asked the Minister of Education, after declaring an interest as a governor of Nendrum College, Comber, for an update on any discussions that are being held about controlled post-primary provision in the Ards area. (AQT 813/17-22)

Mr Weir: I thank the Member for her question. As the Member is aware, there has been pressure on places, particularly at some post-primary schools in the Ards area, in recent years. In light of this, 90 extra places were allocated across the Strangford constituency in advance of the 2020 process. We tried, to some extent, to get ahead with that. There will be some reduction in pressures in 2021 because a smaller cohort will be transferring. In addition, I have put in an initial 10 places in advance of 2021, but my Department stands ready to allocate further temporary variations. For permanent change, a development proposal would need to take place.

To try to judge where the pressures are in the area, I want to look at a new policy of rightsizing and normalisation, as it is called, across the board in Northern Ireland. If a number of schools, for instance, have year-on-year issues with getting temporary variations, that can be taken into account. Legally, the definition for a development proposal will be a significant change. However, it strikes me that, where there are scenarios that are simply reflecting what has happened on the ground, that will need to be put into place. With regard to any specific development proposal, that will come as a legal process that I, as Minister, and the Department will have to give a direct verdict on. I cannot comment on any individual development proposal.

Miss McIlveen: I thank the Minister for his response. Parents and pupils are keen to have provision for post-16 education at Nendrum College, and Glasyry College is long overdue a new build. Will the Minister provide an update on what consideration is being given to those projects?

Mr Weir: At the moment, it would be a significant change if we were to move to the scenario where either school has sixth-form provision as opposed to school ending for pupils at age 16. I do not have any particular problem with that per se, but it would come as a development proposal (DP).

As for the current situation, any development proposal would need to come through the managing authority. At present, there have not been any published DPs for Nendrum College or Glasyry College from the EA. If that were to be considered, it would have to be initiated through those organisations. It may be that it has, again, been overtaken by other events. The Member may want to raise that directly with the new chair of the Education Authority, Mr Barry Mulholland, whose appointment was announced today.

SEN Framework: Time Frame

T4. Ms Rogan asked the Minister of Education to outline a time frame for the full implementation of the new special educational needs (SEN) arrangements, given that we are all too aware of the shortcomings in recent years in the administrative and operational processes involved in the provision for SEN children, albeit that the new SEN framework and the associated regulations in the code of practice will hopefully represent a new beginning in supporting those children and their families. (AQT 814/17-22)

Mr Weir: The current arrangements, the terms of the SEN regulations and the code of practice are things that all of us would welcome. The fine details are out for consultation, which will finish before the end of Christmas. I hope to move ahead with that in as full a way as possible as soon as I can.

The only issue, which, again, I urge Members around the Chamber to support me on, is the requirement for a significant financial investment. In this year's Budget, around £7.5 million was directly allocated to that. A full-year cost will be £30 million. Therefore, resources will have to be either provided or found. To some extent, the speed of movement on that will depend on the wider financial settlement that we are able to reach. I believe that the Finance Minister is hoping to bring proposals on draft Budgets to the House fairly soon.

To be fair to the Finance Minister, we are potentially going to be in quite a difficult situation across the board next year because, effectively, once you take out particular elements of COVID, or at least one major ring-fenced element, the financial settlement that will be provided to the Executive is likely to be pretty close to flatlined cash, which will make things very difficult. Implementing the SEN regulations is a priority and a critical commitment, and I will do everything that I can to move them as fully and as fast as I can.

Ms Rogan: Minister, you may be aware that in the Downpatrick area of my constituency of South Down there is a serious shortage of special school places. I take this opportunity to commend the great work and leadership of Knockevin Special School. It is well oversubscribed, indicating that there is a need for increased provision in our area. Will the Minister commit to looking into that in order to ensure that provision is available for local families in the area so that they do not have to travel miles for a suitable placement?

Mr Weir: Again, there is always a bit of a balance to be struck in trying to ensure that people do not have to travel too far while ensuring that there is an element of specialist quality. As with anything, if you simply spread that too thinly, you do not get the quality. If there was to be, for instance, extra provision directly either through additional schools or units, in the first instance, that would be for the EA. If it requires a development proposal, that would be something that I, as Minister, would have to sign off on, but, certainly, we want to make sure that every provision is made for our special educational needs students.

TIMSS: Mathematics

T5. Mr K Buchanan asked the Minister of Education, given that he will be aware of the trends in international mathematics and science study (TIMSS) report that lists Northern Ireland's position in mathematics, to give his opinion of that good report and Northern Ireland's placing. (AQT 815/17-22)

Mr Weir: Certainly, I welcome that report. In the dark days that we have had, it is fairly good news. In the TIMSS report that was published today, in mathematics, we are the seventh-highest performer in the world among those who were submitted. I think that around 58 countries were put in. Of those countries that are wholly in Europe, we were the top European country. I suppose that I will do this on a cross-community basis and say that we significantly outperformed pupils in England and the Republic of Ireland in that subject.

In science, there was also a strong performance, with about 18 countries ahead of us and 28 below us. It should be remembered that some jurisdictions did not participate in TIMSS, possibly because of a suspicion that they would not get the result that they wanted. That makes our position even more impressive.

The findings emphasise that year 6 pupils in particular in Northern Ireland experience high academic success, that there are very few problems with school discipline, and that classrooms are safe and orderly. It is the case — this is a lesson as well — that the most successful countries are those with the smallest gap between those at a socio-economic advantage and those at a socio-economic disadvantage.

While there is a great deal of work to be done on that in Northern Ireland, it is noticeable that our figures show that, for maths and science, the gap between affluent and socially deprived children was considerably lower than it was for our international comparators involved in TIMSS. That shows that, in many ways, there has been a lot of good work, but, of course, there is a still much good work to be done.

3.30 pm

Mr Speaker: There is about a minute left for a supplementary.

Mr K Buchanan: I thank the Minister for his answer. Given how difficult it has been this year with regard to digital learning, online learning etc, what is the Minister's opinion of the TIMSS findings on learning by digital means?

Mr Weir: The TIMSS findings showed that we are considerably ahead of our international comparators. There are issues — I know this from the previous Question Time — with ensuring that there is broadband availability, and there is always more that can be done. What it showed was that 96% of students here had access to a computer or tablet, which is well ahead of our comparators, although that does not necessarily mean that those students have individual access at home. To cover the situation, particularly during lockdown, more than 10,000 devices have so far been provided to our most disadvantaged and vulnerable learners. However, there is further work to be done.

Looking at the independent report and the comparisons with other jurisdictions, we see that we are well ahead of the international average. I should indicate that many very affluent economies throughout the world took part in TIMSS, so Northern Ireland was not being compared with countries that always have difficulties in that regard.

Mr Speaker: Time is up. Members, please take your ease.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr McGlone] in the Chair)

Northern Ireland Assembly Commission

Assembly Staff: COVID-19 Mental Health and Well-being

1. Dr Archibald asked the Assembly Commission to outline the measures it is taking to support the mental health and well-being of Assembly staff during the COVID-19 pandemic. (AQO 1317/17-22)

Mr K Buchanan: I thank the Member for her question. The Assembly Commission has a strong focus on the health and well-being of staff, and that is a key aspect of the Commission's corporate strategy and corporate plan. The Commission also has a health and well-being framework and a wide range of health and well-being resources on the Assembly's intranet.

During the COVID-19 pandemic, the Commission issued three regular weekly communications to keep in touch with staff, as many were working some or all of the time from home. Each week, "Well-being Wednesday" communications were issued to promote a wide range of resources on health and well-being topics.

The Commission's employee assistance programme continued to be available throughout the pandemic. Under that programme, staff can avail themselves of 24/7 counselling, online training, and access to a range of electronic resources covering health and well-being topics. The Commission has 18 staff trained as mental health first-aiders, and our learning and development team regularly promote activities to assist staff with managing their health and well-being. The Commission will continue to support and promote the good mental health of its staff throughout the pandemic and beyond.

Dr Archibald: I thank the Member for his answer. It is welcome to hear about those resources. Does the Member agree that the Commission has a duty to ensure that staff are looking after not only their physical health but their mental health and well-being, especially given the added pressure that many have faced as a result of the pandemic and the extra workload that they have been carrying?

Mr K Buchanan: Yes, I agree that the Commission has a duty of care to its members and, moving on from the staff in the Building, to the personal staff of MLAs, whether they are in the Building, working remotely or in constituency offices. The Member might be interested to hear that the Clerking and Member Support Office is exploring the delivery of electronic courses on mental health awareness through the Northern Ireland Civil Service online training platform. These short training courses will be available to all Members and their staff. So, it will be available not only for Members in the Building but all staff, whether they are employees of the Commission or our own direct employees.

Ms Hunter: I thank the Member for being here today to answer questions. What steps is the Assembly Commission taking to encourage further uptake of the specific mental health support offered by the Commission during the pandemic?

Mr K Buchanan: I will need to get written clarity on some parts of that for the Member. If you are happy, the Commission will write to you to give you more information.

Youth Assembly: Update

2. Mr Carroll asked the Assembly Commission for an update on the Youth Assembly. (AQO 1318/17-22)

5. Mr Lyttle asked the Assembly Commission for an update on the Youth Assembly. (AQO 1321/17-22)

Mr O'Dowd: With your permission, Mr Deputy Speaker, I ask for an additional minute, as I will answer question 2 and question 5 together.

I thank the Members for their questions. As Members will be aware, the Speaker, on behalf of the Assembly Commission, announced the establishment of an Assembly-supported Youth Assembly in July 2020. Since then, work has been under way to put in place detailed arrangements for the establishment of the Youth Assembly. A number of important developments have occurred, and I will outline some of those for Members.

Two members of staff from the Assembly's Education Service were appointed to take forward the work. They have been joined by two youth participation officers, who started work on 30 November. The Speaker is establishing an advisory group to give the Commission access to advice, including from the youth sector, as it takes further significant decisions. The group will be advisory, as opposed to having decision-making powers. A young person's Youth Assembly co-design panel has been established to help co-design some of the practicalities relating to the Youth Assembly, notably around recruitment and selection, induction and communication. Up to six virtual sessions of the co-design panel have been arranged for December — one has already taken place. Once all the sessions have been held, staff will write up the outcomes and findings and bring them back to the panel in January to allow it to finalise its thoughts and recommendations. Work continues on awareness raising. A Youth Assembly web page and online social media presence have been created; emails have issued to the youth sector, schools, further and higher education colleges, youth organisations and sporting organisations, and over 640 people have signed up to a Youth Assembly mailing list.

Looking ahead, it is hoped that the report of the co-design panel's findings on recruitment and selection will be available for presentation to the Assembly Commission by the end of January. Not surprisingly, the COVID-19 pandemic has had some impact on progress to date and may yet slow the pace of progress. However, as previously said, the Assembly Commission is determined that the Youth Assembly will be established and operational as soon as possible. The Speaker has said that he looks forward to hosting the first formal plenary session of the Youth Assembly in the Assembly next year, hopefully before the summer.

Mr Carroll: I thank the Member for his detailed reply. I will probably forward some Assembly questions on the information that he supplied.

Does the Member agree that we need legislation to ensure that the Youth Assembly is a permanent feature and is not dependent on or subject to Assembly time or budgets? He talked about the advisory group and co-design panel. Does he agree that we need to ensure that young people set the agenda and the methodology via some form of youth steering panel to include those young people from the NI Youth Assembly who have lobbied to participate?

Mr O'Dowd: I thank the Member for his further questions. He will be aware, from even the information that I gave him, that the Commission is keen to have young people design the Youth Assembly from the outset and to bring back their recommendations, and for the Commission to be directed by young people rather than the Commission directing young people. In terms of legislation, the Commission will await the recommendations of the advisory groups and will move from there.

Mr Lyttle: The Alliance Party has supported the campaign to give a voice to young people throughout my time as an MLA, so I welcome the long-overdue progress that has been made on the establishment of a Youth Assembly. How are its members likely to be appointed, and in what way will they be able to interact with the procedures of this Assembly?

Mr O'Dowd: I thank the Member for his question. Again, those matters are for the panels that will advise the Commission. We do not want to set out what will happen ahead of the panels having their discussions and making recommendations to the Commission. This is youth-focused. They are planning it, they are bringing it forward, and the Commission will then roll out the recommendations.

Ms Rogan: The Member outlined the actions that the Commission has taken. What actions will it take to ensure that the Youth Assembly is inclusive and representative of our increasingly diverse society?

Mr O'Dowd: I thank the Member for her question. The extent to which the consultation has taken place thus far shows how the Commission has reached out. Over 640 people have signed up to be contacted about Youth Assembly matters. I listed some youth sectors earlier, and the following organisations have been invited to nominate to the Youth Assembly's co-design panel: the National Children's Bureau, Boys and Girls Clubs, uniformed organisations, the Uniform Youth Work Hub, Girlguiding Ulster, Scouts NI, the Girls' Brigade, the Boys' Brigade, Cara-Friend, Disability Sport NI and Disability Action. That is quite a broad range of organisations and representative bodies that have been contacted to input into the design of the Youth Assembly.

Mr Humphrey: The Member has answered part of my question. I declare an interest as a member of the Scout Association. Uniformed organisations have a hugely important role in Northern Ireland: the Scouts, BB, GB and Guides. It is important that their role and contribution to society is reflected in the Youth Assembly, which must be reflective and representative of Northern Ireland society. How can we ensure that that happens?

Mr O'Dowd: As the Member said, we have contacted a broad range of uniformed organisations, which play an important role in our society and, over the recent period of the COVID pandemic, have shown the volunteering spirit of many young people. Again, I emphasise that this is down to the design panel. It is meeting and discussing, and young people are engaging on what the Youth Assembly will look like, so let us wait for its recommendations and move forward from there.

Assembly Staff: Minimum Breaks

3. Miss Woods asked the Assembly Commission for its assessment of the management of the minimum breaks requirements of the Working Time Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2016 for Assembly staff in Parliament Buildings. (AQO 1319/17-22)

Mrs D Kelly: I thank the Member for her question. The management of the requirements arising from the Working Time Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2016 for Assembly staff is addressed in the Assembly Commission's staff hours at work policy. The purpose of the policy:

"is to establish a fair, equitable and consistent approach to the recording and management of hours worked across the business".

The policy advises that staff:

"will normally take a lunch break of at least 30 minutes each day (this break must be recorded)."

The policy states:

"It is important to remember that if you work more than six hours, under legislation a break of at least 20 minutes must be taken. This break must be taken during the working period and not at the start or end of it."

The policy also states that staff:

"must have a break of at least eleven hours between finishing work one day and starting work on the following day".

It is the responsibility of staff and their line managers to ensure that that requirement is met. By way of example, the policy records:

"if you work until midnight to cover a late plenary, you should not start work until at least 1100 the following day."

Staff record their hours worked, including breaks during the working day, in a personal electronic record, which must be reviewed by their line manager at least monthly. For Assembly staff who work in a shift pattern, the shift rota is developed to comply with the legislative requirements.

3.45 pm

Miss Woods: I thank the Member for her answer. The Member touched on this, but she will be aware that, in recent weeks, plenary sittings have gone on into the wee hours of the morning. As she outlined, under the working-time regulations, workers are entitled to a rest period of not less than 11 hours in each 24-hour period during which they work for an employer. Will the Commission ensure that staff who are here until 3.00 am are not back at 8.00 am or 9.00 am?

Mrs D Kelly: I thank the Member for her supplementary. The Member can be assured that both the Assembly Commission and the Business Committee are very mindful, when setting the weekly business agenda, of trying to comply with a decent finishing time, although, of course, there are debates without time limits. The Speaker is bringing forward a paper to look at options that might be available to the Business Committee and the Commission in the orderly taking of business without constraining Members' scrutiny and ability to ask questions, and to outline their responsibilities in relation to legislation. There is no doubt that late plenary sittings can lead to operational difficulties for a number of business areas in the secretariat. The heads of business and line management are committed to working with their staff to ensure that, as far as possible, they have breaks in accordance with legislation and Assembly Commission policy. Given the shortness of this mandate and the legislative programme before us, I assure the Member that the Commission and the Business Committee are very alert to the working time directive.

Ms Dolan: To ensure that staff get their breaks and time away from their work stations, does the Commission need to recruit more staff or review work practices?

Mrs D Kelly: I thank the Member for her supplementary. The Assembly Commission is absolutely committed to the full and effective implementation of all legislative requirements. Any member of staff who does not feel that he or she has received a break as set out in the working-time regulations should raise that matter, in the first instance, with their line manager. However, as the Member knows, during suspension, a lot of staff were redeployed across different Departments. The number of Assembly staff in the Building is below the required number. An extensive recruitment exercise is ongoing, so we hope to be in a position to fill all posts over the coming months.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): As the Member who was due to ask question 4 is not in her position and question 5 was grouped with question 2, anois bogaimid go dtí uimhir a sé agus iarraid ar Mhaolíosa Mac Aodha ceist a chur, I call Maolíosa McHugh.

Assembly Staff: COVID-19 Working Arrangements

6. Mr McHugh asked the Assembly Commission to outline the criteria used to decide whether Assembly staff are required to work in Parliament Buildings or from home during the COVID-19 pandemic. (AQO 1322/17-22)

Mr Blair: I thank the Member for his question. Throughout the pandemic, the Assembly Commission, like other responsible employers and in keeping with all regulations and guidance, has sought to ensure the health and safety of all users of Parliament Buildings, including Assembly staff. Specific measures include visible guidance on the management of risk through effective hand-washing, the implementation of social-distancing measures, an enhanced cleaning regime, and expediting and using a widespread policy of working from home, where that is possible.

In the early stages of the response to the pandemic, the Commission was also acutely aware of the specific issue of staff who were at increased risk of severe illness from COVID-19 and the need for them to be particularly stringent in following social-distancing measures. For that reason and in keeping with the guidance in place at that time, staff with specific underlying medical conditions were not required to travel to work.

As the regulations and guidance have evolved, the underlying criteria that are used to decide whether staff work in Parliament Buildings or at home have remained largely the same. Those are, first, whether the work of the Assembly requires the attendance of members of staff in Parliament Buildings. If so, those members of staff will attend Parliament Buildings safely and securely. That situation arises for staff from a range of business areas. Secondly, if attendance is necessary only on specific days or for part of a week, many business areas have implemented a rota system to ensure coverage of Assembly business while mitigating the risk of COVID-19 infection. Thirdly, if the work of the Assembly does not require attendance at Parliament Buildings, members of staff can work from home if their duties are amenable to homeworking. The Commission will continue to ensure that all services required by the Assembly are delivered while safeguarding the health and safety of staff.

Mr McHugh: Thank you for your answer. It would appear that, during the latest lockdown, a significant number of staff continued to work on-site, particularly on the fourth floor. Why was that?

Mr Blair: The figures show that, from a staffing body of just under 345 full-time equivalent members of staff, the nature of their tasks is such that some 290 full-time equivalent members of staff are able to work from home for all or part of the time on their own device or on a device provided by the Commission.

The number of staff working from home on a particular day will vary, depending on the nature of Assembly business and on the need for a physical presence in Parliament Buildings. For example, on Mondays and Tuesdays, the number of staff working from home will fall, as there is a need for staff to help facilitate plenary business on those days. Similarly, staff will be needed to facilitate Committee meetings on Wednesdays and Thursdays each week. There is less need for staff to be physically present in Parliament Buildings on Fridays when there is no plenary sitting or Committee business, and, hence, the number of staff working from home can be greater.

Mr Humphrey: Last Thursday, the permanent secretary of the Department of Finance and the head of the Northern Ireland Civil Service HR division were before the Public Accounts Committee and discussed that very issue. One of the points that a number of Committee members made was that the targets, deadlines and productivity of staff working remotely have to be managed. Is the Commission convinced that that has happened and continues to happen?

Mr Blair: During the COVID-19 period, the Commission surveyed staff on their well-being and on the communications that they had received. I think that we will come to that in a later question. The findings of that survey showed that the vast majority of staff felt that they were able to work effectively from home and were trusted to do so.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): Mr Beattie is not in his place to ask question 7. Anois bogaimid go dtí uimhir a hocht. I move on to question 8.

Assembly Staff: Family- and Carer-friendly Working Hours

8. Ms Brogan asked the Assembly Commission to outline the action that it is taking to provide family- and carer-friendly working hours for Assembly staff. (AQO 1324/17-22)

Mr K Buchanan: I thank the Member for her question. The function of the Assembly Commission, as set out in section 40(4) of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, is to:

“provide the Assembly, or ensure that the Assembly is provided, with the property, staff and services required for the Assembly’s purposes.”

The working hours for most staff employed by the Assembly Commission will therefore be directly related to the working hours of the Assembly. A notable exception to that requirement is the working hours for staff who maintain a 24-hour security presence in Parliament Buildings.

For the vast majority of staff, working hours are dictated by the working hours of the Assembly. Those working hours, most notably the duration of sitting days or the scheduling of Committee meetings, are not in the gift of the Assembly Commission. Sitting times are the preserve of the Business Committee, while the scheduling of Committee meetings falls to each Committee. I am aware, however, that the Speaker has agreed to come back to the Business Committee with a range of options for how business might be better managed, given the heavy programme of legislation that is expected towards the end of the mandate.

Although the Commission has no role in setting the working hours of the Assembly, it has a range of policies and procedures in place, including a staff-hours-at-work policy and a flexible working policy that have enabled approximately a quarter of all staff to utilise flexible working patterns to facilitate better family-friendly or carer-friendly working patterns.

Ms Brogan: Although I am very much a newcomer to the Assembly, I am aware that recent debates have gone on until 2.00 am.

While the democratic scrutiny of legislation is crucial, is it not the case that a few Members making long, uninspiring and, at times, repetitive speeches means that there is, at times, more hot air than scrutiny? The resulting long sittings make the legislature a less than family-friendly environment for staff and MLAs to work in. In the light of such prolonged debates, how does the Commission envisage encouraging all Members to be conscious of their responsibility to each other and to the staff who support our work here?

Mr K Buchanan: I thank the Member for her question. She is more than welcome as a new Member to the Chamber. Indeed — in her words, not mine — some Members may take the long road round, or, as the Speaker said previously, they take the detour. That having been said, two weeks ago, I believe, the issue was discussed at a meeting of the Business Committee, of which I am a member. We do not want to deter or stifle debate. However, sometimes, some Members — and I would not dare to look around the Chamber to indicate who — may use an extremely long sentence when a short sentence would do. The Business Committee has discussed the issue and the Speaker is going to look at it with regard to controlling debate. I appreciate that, when it goes on until 2.00 am or 3.00 am, it is not family-friendly in any way. The matter is in hand at the Business Committee and not the Commission.

Mr Catney: As an ex-employer myself, I thank the Member for his answers so far. When was the last time that the Commission surveyed staff for their views on working conditions at the Assembly?

Mr K Buchanan: I thank the Member for his question. I am not actually sure of the answer. However, I have no doubt that my colleagues in the Box will take note of the question and write to the Member on that. If he is happy with that, we will get clarity for the Member.

Parliament Buildings: Emblems, Paintings and Artefacts

9. Ms Flynn asked the Assembly Commission to outline the action it is taking to ensure the display of emblems, paintings and artefacts in Parliament Buildings, and its immediate environs, are representative of all the people the Assembly serves. (AQO 1325/17-22)

Mrs D Kelly: I thank the Member for her question. I understand that the Commission has considered that issue on a number of occasions over the years. Progress has proven difficult for a range of reasons, including that it has not been possible to obtain suggestions of items that are available to meet those objectives or, indeed, to achieve political agreement. Most recently, the Commission considered a request for a permanent display of some of the artefacts that it owns, including some that are currently kept in storage. The Commission was unable to reach consensus on that request but agreed that officials should explore whether there were artefacts available for loan from other places that would add balance to ensure that any display reflected the entire community. Initial contacts by officials were unsuccessful in identifying potential objects. The work was then paused as priority was given to re-establishing the Assembly in January 2020 and then to managing business in the context of COVID-19.

The Commission discussed the issue at its last meeting and agreed that it is an important piece of work. Officials are in discussions with Dr Eamon Phoenix in order to try to identify potential artefacts that might be more reflective of the entire Assembly, and be available for loan, which could be added to those owned by the Commission. Assuming that potential items can be identified, officials intend to develop a range of options for the Commission to consider.

Ms Flynn: I thank the Member for her answer. Does she agree that, given that we are 22 years on from the signing of the Good Friday Agreement, which promised equality and mutual respect, now is the time for the Commission to agree that any display of paintings, artefacts and symbols throughout the Building should reflect and be representative of all the citizens and the diverse society that the Assembly now serves?

Mrs D Kelly: I thank the Member for her supplementary question, which touches on a couple of areas, one being a perceived imbalance — some might say a very real imbalance — with regard to the symbolism of the Building. The Member will understand that there are different views within the Commission on that issue. The Building was influenced by the history of the time when it was built. Some might argue that it is less reflective of the current Assembly since 1998, although some of the additions of recent years, including the portraits of former office holders and those of Seamus Heaney and CS Lewis, are more representative of the current make-up of the community. It would be misleading if I told the Member that I expect it to be easy to take those issues forward in an agreed way. However, it is, at least, positive that the Commission has agreed to look at the area further.

4.00 pm

There was 14-week public consultation on equality and good relations in that context, and the Commission approved the 2016-21 good relations action plan on 15 November 2016. That five-year plan set out how the Commission proposes to fulfil its duty under section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 to:

“have regard to the desirability of promoting good relations between persons of different religious belief, political opinion or racial group.”

The plan contains a number of actions and anticipated outcomes that may relate to Ms Flynn's original question, such as the consideration of new art initiatives to allow opportunities to reflect the wider community in Parliament Buildings.

Mr Allister: If new artefacts are found, will those, too, be hidden away in storage at a cost of £12,000 a year, or is that reserved only for existing artefacts? When will the Commission catch up with our history and agree to an exhibition of artefacts that it owns in order to coincide with the centenary of Northern Ireland?

Mrs D Kelly: The Commission, many Members and political parties are very sensitive to what is called the decade of centenaries, and we have tried to take a mature and respectful approach to it. The Commission has agreed principles for centenary events that require them to be organised in an inclusive, politically sensitive and respectful way that takes account of different perspectives. The Commission is due to have further discussion at its next meeting about how the centenaries in 2021 will be marked. Those events will be consistent with the principles and are required to be agreed by consensus.

Mr Humphrey: Given the Member's response that the Commission has been unable to reach agreement on the display of artefacts, emblems and paintings in Parliament Buildings, what position has the Commission taken on some of those going out on loan, particularly next year as Northern Ireland celebrates its centenary, which is important to many of us?

Mrs D Kelly: The Member makes a valid point. There are different views in the communities, and there will be some for whom the centenary of Northern Ireland is much more important than for others and is something to be marked. The Commission is meeting tomorrow, and I give an undertaking to have that point tabled and an answer to go back to the Member directly.

Mr McCrossan: I welcome the question and thank the Member for bringing it and for the Commission member's answers to them. Has the Commission given any consideration to a lasting monument or memorial to the late John Hume as a key architect of these power-sharing institutions?

Mrs D Kelly: I will have to answer as a member of the Commission, but, as an SDLP Member, I fully support the principle behind Mr McCrossan's ask. The Commission has not considered that, but, again, it is meeting tomorrow, and, no doubt, that can also be tabled. However, I cannot make any promises, because, as we know, there has to be political consensus.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr McGlone): On that note, we will conclude that item of business, so I ask Members to take their ease while we change the top Table and move to the next item of business.

(Mr Principal Deputy Speaker [Mr Stafford] in the Chair)

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I ask Members who are leaving the Chamber to please do so.

The Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 13) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020

Debate resumed on motion:

That the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 13) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved. — [Mrs Long (The Minister of Justice).]

The following motions stood in the Order Paper:

That the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Wearing of Face Coverings) (Amendment No. 4) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved. — [Mrs Long (The Minister of Justice).]

That the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 14) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved. — [Mrs Long (The Minister of Justice).]

That the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 15) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved. — [Mrs Long (The Minister of Justice).]

That the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 16) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved. — [Mrs Long (The Minister of Justice).]

Mr Beattie: It is good to come back to this debate. I am always mindful, when we look back to when the pandemic started, of how fast-flowing things were and how we had to make decisions extremely quickly. Multiple MLAs have talked about those unprecedented and extraordinary times and the extraordinary measures that we all had to take. We had to change the way in which we worked in the Assembly to keep up with the pandemic. We gave considerable leeway to the Executive because of the threat that we faced from COVID-19; the First Minister and the deputy First Minister, the Education Minister, the Economy Minister, the Infrastructure Minister and the Finance Minister were all given considerable leeway with regard to scrutiny.

I am happy to give the Justice Minister the same leeway today with regard to scrutiny. I thank the Justice Minister for moving the amendments, some of which she brought to the Executive as proposals and papers. It is right that she moves them today. I wish that other Ministers would do the same. Some have brought papers to the Executive, which were then moved for them by the Health Minister while their colleagues chirped and complained from the sidelines. We have collective responsibility here; our Health Minister, our Justice Minister, our junior Ministers and the Communities Minister have all moved amendments. We all need to be mindful of what things were like at the start of the pandemic and what we, as MLAs, were like as we tried to keep up with what we were trying to achieve.

Having genuinely thanked the Minister, I must say that I remain disappointed that she did not, when asked to by the Executive, head up the enforcement and compliance working group. I accept that that is not just a Justice issue and that it involves Health, Communities, Infrastructure —

Mrs Long (The Minister of Justice): Will the Member give way?

Mr Beattie: Of course.

Mrs Long: I thank the Member for his thanks, which is very much appreciated. On what basis does he say that I would not head up the working group? How does he know whether I was asked to do that at the Executive? My understanding is that Executive conversations are confidential. That allegation has been made on a number of occasions. It is not accurate. I would be interested to know why the Member feels that that is the case.

Mr Beattie: Thank you, Minister. I have asked that question on multiple occasions, and I think that this is the first time that you have said, "No, it's not accurate". If you are saying that you were not asked in writing or in person by the Executive to head it up, I will say sorry.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Order. I ask the Member to resume his seat. I fear that we are straying from the regulations. It is important — [Interruption.] Yes, I know; someone was having fun. If I were in your place, I would probably be enjoying a bit of sport, too. However, we need to get back to the regulations rather than the internal operations of the Executive Committee.

Mr Beattie: I will give way to the Minister if she wishes to reply.

Mrs Long: I will reply, with the Principal Deputy Speaker's permission. The Member has now made reference to me being asked in writing to take this role, which, of course, again, is not accurate. Nevertheless, it begs the question: why would the Member have access to written communications from the Executive Office to any Minister? I would like some clarification on that because it is an important point, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. Whilst it may not be pertinent to this debate, it goes to the very heart of confidentiality of discussions in the Executive Committee.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Minister has put her comments on the record, and she is right: it is standing practice and convention that the proceedings of the Executive Committee are to be kept private.

Mr Beattie: Sometimes, as an MLA, you use a scatter approach.

Mr Clarke: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beattie: You throw out questions like: "Were you asked?", "Was it an email?" or "Was it a letter?". I was using a scatter approach, the Minister has answered, and I will accept what she says, as all of us in the House should do.

I will give way to the Member.

Mr Clarke: I thank the Member for giving way, with the Principal Deputy Speaker's indulgence. Given that there has been a lot of interest in this subject and, indeed, in the Minister's own words about how we have arrived at this situation, it would be good if the Minister would put on record today what her actual position is on all of that.

Mr Beattie: I am going to take on board what the Principal Deputy Speaker said, and I am not going down that rabbit hole.

The point that I was making was that, of course, enforcement is not just a Justice issue; it involves the Health, Communities, Infrastructure, Economy and Finance Departments, and enforcing regulations is important. They are a tool. I agree with what Ms Dillon said earlier, which was repeated by Mr Sheehan, about the enforcement stance. It should not just be about enforcement but about encouragement and giving information so that people understand what is and what is not expected of them, particularly with regard to face coverings.

It is right that the police are criticised when they get it wrong or when they are not consistent in their approach, but it is not fair to criticise them for the sake of it. When we bring out regulations, they come out quickly and some of them are not as clear as they should be on paper. The police are fighting a difficult battle in that regard.

The amendments that we are talking about today are largely redundant because many of them will be overhauled on Friday. I do not want to keep on talking about redundant amendments purely for the sake of throwing an insult or having a go at somebody. We can have a good discussion, but they are slightly redundant.

Amendment No. 4 to the face coverings regulations throws up an interesting dilemma — the Minister mentioned it earlier — around the fine for not wearing a face covering when you should, which is £200, or £100 if it is paid within 14 days. An individual will not be fined again if they are a repeat offender but could face summary dealings. It is quite a leap from a fine of just £100 to suddenly finding yourself facing summary dealings or appearing in court. Some people are habitual non-mask wearers, and that is something that we need to be aware of.

The whole issue of face masks is extremely complex. I apologise because I cannot remember who said it, but somebody said that we should not stigmatise those who cannot wear face masks because of a medical condition. That is absolutely right; we should not do that, but we certainly should go after those people who can wear face masks but deliberately do not. It is important that we all buy into that, because this is a societal issue and we need to wear face masks. There is an argument for those people who cannot wear them because they are claustrophobic. Instead of wearing a face mask, perhaps they could be given a visor that would, at least, give them some protection. There is an argument there, and it is a fair discussion. We certainly cannot stigmatise them. However, we need to go after those people who are not wearing a face mask.

4.15 pm

My last point is on vaccines. It is a good news story. It is important that we have a positive uptake and that we in the Assembly — every MLA — lead by example to get people to take the vaccine, because it will take us out of the pandemic. I saw someone saying that all MLAs should be first to take the vaccine to make sure that it works and has no adverse effects, and that we should do it publicly. I would be more than happy to do that, but then they would start clamouring and complaining that MLAs were jumping the vaccine queue. You cannot win. The point I make in thanking the Minister —

Mr Buckley: I thank the Member for giving way. I share his sentiment about the good news story of the vaccine, but does he agree that it is important that we respect the well-enshrined principle in the United Kingdom that vaccines are not mandatory, because there are those who, for their own reasons, will not want to partake?

Mr Beattie: Of course; that is a given. I do not think that anybody is talking about going into a care home, lining up the residents, blindfolding them and sticking a needle into their arm without their knowing. Everybody has to be given the choice of whether they want to take a vaccine. The Member's point has been well made, but the point that I am making is that we need to be absolute leaders on this issue and tell people that the vaccine will get us out of the pandemic. If we do not — if Members show any division, or promote something completely different, even if they are merely promoting an issue that their constituents are concerned about — we will have a problem. If we do not have an uptake of the vaccine, we will not get out of the pandemic, and we will live this over and over and over again and lose people. Over 1,000 people have died, so there are over 1,000 grieving families. We cannot keep that on.

I take this opportunity to thank the Minister for tabling the amendments and for challenging my points of view. That is the way it should be done. Tone is important, as is how we do things here and how we talk to each other. How we respect each other is incredibly important. However, what is most important is how we deal with the pandemic. We need to focus on that.

Ms Bradshaw: It is great to be speaking in the debate on such a positive day as the vaccine programme begins to be rolled out. It offers a clear glimpse of light at the end of the tunnel, although this set of regulations reminds us that there is still a lot of road to travel. It is disappointing that the Chair of the Justice Committee is no longer in the Chamber to hear what I have to say before I move on to the body of my speech. Some of the points that he made earlier today were factually incorrect and did not give a good representation of the work that we on the Health Committee are trying to do. These are negative resolution statutory rules. We are not given the luxury of full scrutiny, and we cannot bring forward health professionals or a number of other stakeholders. We have 21 days to get the process through. The Chair mentioned that he would have liked to have brought in the Chief Constable. We would have liked to bring in similar people, but we could not do that. He also said that he would have liked the Justice Minister to have come in and presented the amendments that are of relevance to the Justice Committee. We have never had the Health Minister there. It is not his job to provide us with that level of insight. That is the job of his departmental officials who are responsible for the drafting. As Colm, the Chair of the Health Committee, said, sometimes that can be a cross-departmental delegation, but, effectively, it is the Health officials who come to the Committee.

Mr Buckley: I thank the Member for giving way. At the risk of misrepresenting the Chairperson of the Justice Committee, I think that he said that the Chief Constable had been before the Justice Committee on previous occasions about the regulations. His point of contention was that nobody from the Department of Justice was available to brief the Justice Committee on these regulations.

Ms Bradshaw: The point that I made in my intervention earlier was that it is not up to the Justice Minister to come forward. These regulations are developed and produced by the Department of Health, which is why they come through the Health Committee. I made the point that I engage with my MLA colleagues. The Alliance Party has a small team, and we all have our own portfolios, so, if there are any issues, I engage with them before attending the Health Committee.

We have to put trust in our Ministers. They are the ones who, a couple of times a week at present, look at the current restrictions and at what is coming forward. We are reliant on them, in the pressing and particular circumstances of the pandemic, to engage with their departmental officials, special advisers and others to come up with restrictions that are the best-case scenario. Nothing is perfect in what we are doing to try to fight this pandemic. Everything is done in haste. I would prefer, as would everyone on the Health Committee, that we had much more time to scrutinise the regulations, but we just do not have that time, and that is why we say in every one of these debates that we do not think that the information is good enough. However, we are where we are.

Today, we are debating regulations that are so far out of date that some may soon be back in date. I intend simply to run through the amendments. As we are to assume that, generally, these amendments will be relevant again from Friday, you will be pleased to hear, Principal Deputy Speaker, that, from this point, I will not stray too far off the subject.

Amendment No. 13 is a brave attempt at enforcing the distancing required, which has pretty much disappeared from public awareness since the Executive Office reopened hospitality in the summer, with the announcement that, effectively, one metre would suffice. It is wise to be cautious about this and to reinforce the two-metre measure across the board. While I agree that it is wise from a public health perspective, I would be interested to hear what discussions were held with the hospitality sector about the viability of reopening with a strict two-metre requirement. Anyone listening to 'The Nolan Show' this morning heard that one of the restaurants in my constituency has already determined that, come Friday, it will not reopen for the foreseeable future because it is not financially viable. Not least because of the risk of having to close again should there be a case on the premises, it will not reopen this side of Christmas. The whole thing leads us to wonder why the two-metre requirement was abandoned in the first place.

It is also interesting that amendment No.13 requires the two-metre distancing rule to be observed in queues. It would make sense also to wear face coverings in that scenario. A few weeks ago, the weekend before departmental officials came to the Health Committee, photos of the queue outside Primark that Sunday were circulating on social media. That happened after it had been announced that shops were to close, and we saw it happen again in Lisburn at the weekend. People were queueing outside shops and posing a great risk to those around them through community transmission. As we all have a face covering ready prior to entering a venue, I do not see why people should not be asked to wear it to provide extra cover while waiting to enter. The question that many are posing, however, is how enforceable it is in practice. Establishments do not control the area outside the venue in which they operate. Who is specifically required to enforce that regulation in a queue? I wonder whether we should be looking to other authorities, perhaps councils, for assistance with enforcement, particularly around the busy Christmas period. We know where the hotspots are, certainly in the city centre and in south Belfast.

I commend the sector, nevertheless, for taking seriously the requirements outlined in amendment No. 13. In principle, as many have calculated, it will mean lower footfall. However, it will also mean safer custom, and that can only be to everyone's benefit. I ask the public not to wait for enforcement. It is in the interests of us all and in the interests of public health that we adhere to the regulations at all times, including in spirit. The more we crowd, the faster the virus spreads, and the more quickly we will, potentially, be back in absolute lockdown.

Amendment No. 14 follows on from the suggestion, made some time ago, that, in the same way as premises must display hygiene ratings in Northern Ireland, they must also, if not set out in a manner that adequately adheres to the regulations, display improvement notices. In theory, it is an excellent idea, and I hope that it works equally well in practice. We asked the officials about it, but there is some way to go on how to ensure that best practice in one premises can be shared with the next.

Amendment No. 15 is a clear improvement. It requires contact details from every customer, not just the person who makes the booking or the first one through the door. This is essential if we are to have any hope of using this information for contact tracing, which is the objective.

Questions remain, however. Does that information suffice? How precisely is to be used? I wonder whether it is enough to take down a name and contact number. Should we not be asking for the full address of every customer? My colleague on the Health Committee Pam Cameron has raised that issue as well. Doing so would go some way to ensuring that the six people around the table are from only two households. Even if that were done, the question would arise of whether we have an adequately resourced contact-tracing service to make any use of the information, with cases still at over 150 per 100,000 of the population every week and perhaps moving towards 200 by Christmas Day. Put simply, do we have the right information, and how is it being used to enhance public health and public safety?

The amendment (No. 16) regulations were debated by the Committee only last week, but they probably should have been in place a long time ago. I fully support raising the fine for not wearing a face covering where one is required. My view, however, remains that the regulations themselves are still too difficult to enforce in practice, essentially because they enable too many exemptions. A recent survey in the United States shows that case rates have halved in areas with mandatory mask-wearing rules and risen in areas without such rules.

I have no hesitation in commending each of the amendment regulations to the House. My only real quibble is that it should have taken so long for them to get to this point. In responding to the debate, can the Minister answer the question about the practical implications of the amendment regulations to keep us all safe and to increase confidence in using venues as they reopen over the Christmas period?

Mrs Cameron: You will be glad to hear that I intend to be brief, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker.

On the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 13) Regulations, it is once again worth noting the huge sacrifice that we have asked of our hospitality trade, both those who own and manage premises and their employees. Uncertainty and disruption like never before have placed a huge strain on that trade. I sincerely hope that the reopening in the very near future is one that heralds their new start. I am conscious that the social-distancing element in hospitality can make a business sustainable or unsustainable. I ask for clarity on the 2-metre versus 1-metre allowance in hospitality settings.

The Health Protection (Coronavirus, Wearing of Face Coverings) (Amendment No. 4) Regulations deal with penalties and enforcement. It is regrettable that we need such provisions. The vast majority of people have taken on board the regulations and adhered to them. As in life, however, the minority do not. It is right therefore that we have in place a penalty framework as a last resort. I welcome the comments from my colleague Paul Givan about the necessity of taking personal responsibility and adhering to all the regulations. That will mean enforcement for some who do not.

I want to touch on the relationship with the local councils as referenced in the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 14) Regulations. It is worth the House recognising the huge role that local councils have played in the course of the pandemic. Many council workers have been on the front line day and daily, and we thank them for that. The relationship between the Executive and councils can be further developed, and the provision in the amendment (No. 14) regulations to issue premises improvement notices where premises are in breach of the (No. 2) regulations is but one method of enforcement.

The amendment (No. 15) regulations are to be welcomed for the flexibility that they afford certain industries, such as close-contact services and driving instruction. Those services must be provided by appointment only, and client information must be retained for 21 days. The regulations also include the opening hours allowed for unlicensed premises, the opportunity for bars to provide off-sales business, and clarity about packaging. As my Health Committee colleague Paula Bradshaw already mentioned, contact tracing will be vital going forward. If information is being collected that is intended to be used, it is really important that the contact-tracing system have the resources and staffing behind it to make it powerful and effective.

4.30 pm

The Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 16) Regulations is the final regulation for this debate and makes minor corrections to the drafting of the regulations, ensuring that, on licensed premises serving food and drink for consumption on premises, which reopened on 20 November, we are governed by a rule to restrict numbers of customers to six per table from no more than two households. I have raised this in the past, and I ask the Minister if she can give some clarity around what specific contact details the premises are required, in legislation, to retain. I asked this question at the Health Committee before and was told that the legislation does not specify what detail is to be taken and held. Surely it would make sense to require a postal address along with a name, contact telephone number or email address, for example, to encourage people to abide by the rules, and even to actually make people aware of the rules. We know how often they have changed, and it is quite hard even for us to keep up with them, never mind everybody else. I would like to see some clarity around the detail that is required in legislation.

I understand that these rules are here for a reason. They have been put into law for the protection of health. It would be appropriate for this useful information to be provided, especially when we expect that enforcement to happen. Enforcement is critical, and we want to see more enforcement where necessary, but it is right, too, that we need to concentrate. We cannot legislate for every area of life, as we are trying to do, and we cannot enforce every area of these rules and regulations. It really is up to individuals to follow the rules, make themselves aware of what the rules and guidelines are and follow them to protect each other.

It is regrettable that these debates are effectively meaningless as they come to the House long after the horse has bolted, and this frustration has been well aired on many occasions. No doubt, that same frustration will make an appearance in today's debate once again. It would be wrong —.

Mr Humphrey: I am grateful to the Member for giving way. The Member will know that I have made that point before. In terms of messaging and getting the message out clearly and consistently to the people of Northern Ireland, having these regulations discussed, debated and agreed at the time when they are going to be released is hugely important. Otherwise, it causes confusion.

Mrs Cameron: I thank the Member for his intervention. I agree entirely. We know where we are and we know that we agreed this emergency legislation process back at the beginning of the pandemic. This is the outworking of it, but it is certainly not where any of us in the Chamber wants to be in terms of legislating.

It would be wrong of me not to mention this historic day that we are in. This morning, 90-year-old Margaret Keenan, who is originally from Fermanagh but is living in Coventry, became the first person to have the COVID vaccine. This is truly a day to celebrate. We are seeing the light at the end of the tunnel today, so it is very welcome news. We all understand that there is a long way to go in order to protect the most vulnerable from becoming seriously ill or dying from this coronavirus, and we see that reflected even in the numbers reported today — 14 deaths since yesterday. It is vital that we continue to do our personal best to keep the transmission of COVID-19 under control until the threat is much, much lower. We need to support our health service and our economy by following those basic steps and minding our hands, face and space.

I finish by wishing Mrs Keenan a very happy ninety-first birthday for next week. Indeed, I thank her for being a wonderful example to us all in using her common sense and for her willingness to be the first individual in the UK to have the COVID-19 vaccine. I will finish there. I support the motion.

Mr Sheehan: I suppose that we have been here before. It is a bit like Groundhog Day when these regulations arrive on the Floor of the Assembly, and it becomes a bit of a blur sometimes, so if I get a bit confused, a Cheann Comhairle, about the regulations that I am talking about, forgive me for meandering a bit off the topic. I will do my best to focus on the regulations.

Some of the regulations that we are dealing with now have already been superseded, but, irrespective of what we are dealing with today, we have to look on all of the regulations that we have dealt with as part of a contract with the population. We ask them to abide by these regulations, and, in turn, they expect us to do our best to protect their life and to ensure that our health and social care system does not get overwhelmed. That is the type of contract that we are in.

I want to deal first with scrutiny, because that seems to be an important theme to be discussed today. The fact is that we have not been able to provide proper scrutiny, or the scrutiny that we would like to provide under normal circumstances, but we do not live in normal circumstances. These types of regulations are rushed. They are made in haste. Sometimes, there will be mistakes, and, sometimes, there are mistakes in drafting. There are other problems with them. They arrive late. In my view, it does not really matter which Committee does the scrutiny, because we are all going to face the same problems. The Chair of the Justice Committee outlined what he would like to do in the circumstances, and, as Paula pointed out, that is just not possible. These regulations arrive to the Committee, and they have to be dealt with. There is a cut-off date for dealing with them, and that is what we do.

Ms Bradshaw: Will the Member give way?

Mr Sheehan: Certainly.

Ms Bradshaw: Will you agree that we, on the Health Committee, have tried to leave party politics out of the pandemic and have tried to be very collegiate in our approach to these regulations and amendments throughout the whole pandemic?

Mr Sheehan: Absolutely. In fact, thinking back, I cannot think of any serious disagreement or row that has taken place in the Committee over the regulations. We have had debates and discussions that have been as thorough as possible under the circumstances, but I cannot recall any serious disagreement over them.

I have to say that, when I was listening to the Chair of the Justice Committee, I thought that maybe his problem stemmed from relationship difficulties with the Justice Minister more than anything else. It is unfortunate that he is not in his place now to discuss that. If he needs some marriage guidance counselling, I am happy to offer my services. [Laughter.]

Mr Clarke: Will the Member give way?

Mr Sheehan: Sure. Go ahead.

Mr Clarke: For the record, I do not believe that he is away seeking marriage guidance counselling; I think that he is chairing the Justice Committee.

Mr Sheehan: Sorry, I missed that.

Irrespective of what regulations we are dealing with today, it is important that everyone adheres to all the regulations, especially today, when we have the beginning of the roll-out of the vaccination programme. That is light at the end of the tunnel. We are also coming into the teeth of Christmas, and the restrictions have been relaxed. With those two things, there is a possibility that people will let their guard down. Of course, coming up to Christmas, everyone is more sociable, more friendly and convivial, and that may lead to people lowering their guard. We have to be sure that that does not happen. We have to be sure that —

Mr Butler: I thank the Member for giving way on what I think could be one of the most important points that could be discussed today, which is the relaxation of the restrictions before Christmas. People will have a desire to get out and celebrate Christmas as much as they can. There is a lot of hope there, but there is also anger and frustration in the community. Do you agree that it is vital that, at every level of government here, whether that is the Executive, Committee Chairs and Committees, we are collegiate in our message over the next number of weeks in order to give that leadership to the public, who have not enjoyed the best examples of leadership throughout the pandemic from certain elements at times? Now we can get it right. We have two or three weeks until Christmas, and it is vital and important that we get the message right and are collegiate in fighting this challenge, which is still there and will remain for some time.

Mr Sheehan: Absolutely. I cannot disagree with a word of that. I was going to say that the messaging over the next few weeks is very important. It is vital that all of us are on the same page in all this. As I have said, the arrival of the vaccine has raised people's hopes. We are coming up to Christmas and the restrictions have been relaxed, so there is the possibility of people letting their guard down. We have to guard against that.

Before the pandemic, few people were familiar with the name Gabriel Scally; now everyone knows who he is. He is one of the most pre-eminent public health doctors on these islands, and he is originally from the North. He says, "By all means, go out and celebrate with your friends and family before Christmas. Go and mix, do whatever you want and socialise, but be prepared to bury some of your family and friends after Christmas". That is how serious it is; that is the message that we have to get across. If people disregard the restrictions and the message of social distancing, washing your hands, wearing a mask and so on, we face increased transmission, if not before Christmas, certainly after it. That is important.

Some of the restrictions relate to the wearing of face coverings or masks. I am on record, in the Chamber, of advocating the wearing of face masks long ago. Indeed, I was very disappointed that the wearing of face masks was not introduced earlier. In fact, junior Minister Lyons introduced a bit of mirth into the discussion, some months back, about my raising the wearing of face masks when it was not part of the regulations being introduced that day.

In countries with a culture of wearing face masks, there is a lower transmission rate of the virus. The science is now clear: wearing masks, according to the Chief Scientific Adviser, significantly reduces the transmission of the virus.

Mr Clarke: I thank the Member for giving way. I have no opinion, one way or the other, and I accept what the Member is saying. However, when scientists came out at the start of the pandemic questioning their use, that made people sceptical. Now, we are trying to change that message to encourage their use. I comply. I carry my mask with me and use it on every occasion. The confusion came when scientists gave out a different message at the start of the pandemic and encouraged people not to use them.

Mr Sheehan: That might have been the case at the start of the pandemic, I do not know. However, from very early on, as far back as March, scientific evidence was emerging about the efficacy of wearing masks and face coverings. In those countries, where they are worn habitually — South Korea, Hong Kong, Taiwan, and so on — the rate of transmission of the virus and, indeed, deaths as a result of COVID-19, is much lower than here.

There are other reasons for that: their contact-tracing operation, controls at ports and airports, and enforcement of isolation, for example. I am not suggesting that face masks, on their own, are responsible for lower transmission rates; however they are a significant factor. Over recent months, the evidence in support of wearing masks has increased. I have heard a few Members saying that you have to bear in mind that some people cannot wear masks for medical or psychological reasons. I heard a reputable doctor on TV recently say that there really is no reason why anyone should refuse to wear a mask. There may be a small number of exceptions, but, by and large, everyone should be wearing masks or face coverings, particularly indoors and when they are coming into contact with other people.

4.45 pm

My criticism about the fact that we did not introduce face masks earlier is, again, because the countries that have been most successful in dealing with the virus are the ones that acted with speed. They did not wait for the science to be absolutely 100% sure. If there was any suggestion at all that a measure was going to work, they moved quickly. When the virus first arrived in South Korea, the Government there called in all the pharma companies and told them to develop a test. The pharma companies came back and said that they could only develop a test that was 90% accurate. The Government told them to go ahead. Better 90% accurate than not carrying out any tests.

It is the same with these other issues such as face masks. Speed is of the essence. We need to move quickly; we cannot sit and discuss. It is similar with these regulations. We cannot introduce them here in the Assembly and thrash them out and debate them until we are blue in the face. We need to move quickly. In those circumstances, sometimes mistakes will be made, but that is what happens.

Mrs Cameron: I thank the Member for giving way. I am a little bit concerned about some of his remarks about face masks and when he said that the majority of people can wear them. I chair a newly formed all-party group on lung health, and there are very many serious conditions that certainly would not be compatible with the wearing of masks. Whilst I wear my mask on every occasion that I need to and where it is appropriate, it is good that we recognise that there are people who absolutely should not be wearing them because it is detrimental to their health. We also cannot dismiss some mental health aspects of face coverings for people with, for instance, claustrophobia or for those who suffer from severe asthma. There are certainly cases where the wearing of a mask is not appropriate and certainly not good for health. It is important that we keep it real around this. Not everybody can wear a mask, but all those who can should do so.

Mr Sheehan: I accept what the Members says. I have no difficulty with that. I am quoting what a doctor said. There is always an alternative. If you cannot wear a face mask, there is probably no reason why you cannot wear a visor, for example. A visor, they say, is not as good as a face mask but it is better than not wearing anything at all, and that is the issue that I am trying to emphasise here. There are also quite a few chancers who say that they cannot wear a face mask, and they get away with it because they do not have to prove that they can or cannot.

I talked about these regulations being part of a contract. There are issues around enforcement, compliance and support, and, in my view, they are all part of the one continuum. You start off by supporting people, you ask them to comply and you do what you can to ensure that they can comply. That was why I raised earlier, with the Chair of the Executive Office Committee, the idea of providing masks free of charge in some circumstances, maybe to people who are on benefits or something like that and to the low paid, so that masks could be made available to them.

This is an important day. This is the day on which the vaccine roll-out started. I hope and I suppose that most people will be praying that the timetable that has been announced will be kept to. I have to say, without wanting to rain on anybody's parade here, that I have some scepticism about the ability to roll this vaccine out in the timescale that has been announced. There are a number of reasons for that. We are dependent on the British Government to supply the vaccine. Everything that the Government have touched so far in relation to the pandemic has been shambolic. In dealing with the pandemic, they have made a mess of every single aspect, and we are dependent on them to get the vaccine.

Mr Buckley: I thank the Member for giving way. Does he not acknowledge — I know that he has been critical of the approach of Her Majesty's Government to COVID thus far, and, on some points, for very good reason — that people have been able to access the vaccination because of world-leading scientists, who have made it possible for the vaccine to be used in the UK today?

Mr Sheehan: I am not making a political point about this in terms of constitutional issues and where the vaccine is coming from. All that I am saying is that the source is not reliable. I am on record as welcoming the introduction of the vaccine. I am also on record as saying that I will take the vaccine, and I will encourage absolutely everyone else to take it. I said here last week that my children will take it, too, but I was a bit quick off the mark, because it is my understanding that children will not get the vaccine. In any event, I will certainly encourage as many people as possible to take it.

My problem is with the British Government and the way in which they have dealt with the pandemic so far. They have exhibited a degree of ineptness that is rare to see in any Government. That is partially my concern.

I have other concerns as well. My concern about the contact-tracing operation here has been well documented. There have also been problems with the roll-out of the flu jab. What I hope is that, between the Department of Health, the Executive Office and the COVID-19 task force, they can ensure that there is a smooth roll-out of the vaccine. The sooner most of us get it, the better, so that we can get back to some sort of normality. I will leave it there.

Mr Buckley: In beginning my remarks, I also want to mark this hugely significant day when the first vaccines have been provided to some very vulnerable individuals, alongside healthcare workers. That is remarkable. It is a day that many of us have looked forward to. General society can now start to look towards a day when regulations in this regard are no more, albeit we are far from that position. My party and I welcome the vaccine, and I am sure that there is a sigh of relief among many people across our society, be they from a care home setting, a vulnerable individuals setting or a health and professional setting. You name it: everyone has an interest here. We, of all people, know all too well that their hopes and aspirations depend on a successful vaccine getting life back to some form of normality.

In discussing the regulations in general, true to form, I will point out, as I have done on previous occasions, the folly of the way in which regulations come before the House. It has become the case that the regulations that come before the House — some have come to the end of their time and others have maybe a week until the end of their time — are, in their content, completely out of keeping and out of pace with where general society is, so it very much becomes an exercise of the House talking to itself. The public switch off, because they cannot keep pace with how the regulations affect their daily life. We as Members always need to be acutely aware of that.

As I have said in the Health Committee, the primary function of Members of the House — I exclude Ministers from this — is scrutiny.

I am open to hearing how other Members feel on this point, but I think that the feeling is shared. I feel that, throughout the COVID pandemic, we have failed the people of Northern Ireland in the way in which we have been able to scrutinise this draconian legislation. I am sure that many Governments, Parliaments and democracies have similarly failed their people. It has affected and infected every element of our society, and yet, as legislators, the duty of scrutiny has been very much lost. In my short time as a member of the Health Committee, albeit coming up to two months, I have been disturbed by the lack of democratic scrutiny of these important issues. I do not, for one minute, blame the Department of Health. By and large, it is how the regulations come before the House.

Ms Bradshaw: Will the Member give way?

Mr Buckley: Absolutely, yes.

Ms Bradshaw: I am struggling with your use of the word “failed”. I feel that the system is a very difficult one for us to operate in and that the timescales are, as I outlined, difficult. However, as a legislator and someone elected to represent people, I do not think that I, or any member of the Health Committee — I know that you joined only recently — have failed people. Will you explain, please, what you mean by “failed”?

Mr Buckley: I thank the Member for her intervention, and I will explain what I mean. I stand firm in saying that Members’ endeavours have been true. Members have endeavoured to serve their constituents in the best manner that they can. I mean that, as Members, we have failed in the scrutiny of such important legislation. These restrictions are so draconian that they require thorough, detailed investigation. However, by virtue of the very means by which they have come before the Committee and the House, we have failed our constituents in our ability to scrutinise.

Ms Bradshaw: Will the Member take another intervention?

Mr Buckley: Of course.

Ms Bradshaw: I take the Member’s point. We have all said how frustrated we are with the limited time and lack of witnesses. However, we support the regulations when they come to the House because we know that, if we waited another four or six weeks to scrutinise them, many more might die and our hospitals could be even fuller. A lot of this is about balancing the risk against our scrutiny role.

Mr Buckley: I thank the Member for her intervention, and her point, in principle, is on record. However, it does not detract from how I feel about the way in which the Assembly was unable to scrutinise the regulations before us.

We heard earlier from the Chair of the Justice Committee. Members can get precious about this, and some argue that challenging a Department or a Minister in the middle of a pandemic is political handbagging. I do not see it that way. Members have the right to ask detailed questions of whichever Minister it may be or whatever —.

Mrs Long: Will the Member give way?

Mr Buckley: When I finish my point, I will.

Members are entitled to do that. As a member of the Health Committee, I welcome any form of scrutiny of the regulations by any Committee — I think that Mr Sheehan said something similar — because I do not have all the answers; nor do Members in the Chamber. However, collectively, we have to scrutinise the regulations and give our constituents the best form of service possible.

On that point, I will give way to the Minister.

Mrs Long: I thank the Member for his generosity in giving way. I agree that there is an obvious need for scrutiny. However, there is also the issue of due process. Does the Member agree that it might be seen as slightly inappropriate — he described it as “political handbagging”; I will not go that far — to hold someone in my position to account for, as I did, in an act of generosity and in the spirit of collegiality, offering to bring these regulations forward? I have found out, to my cost, that, unfortunately, no good deed in this place goes without punishment.

Mr Buckley: I thank the Minister for her intervention. I noted the Chair of the Justice Committee’s suggestion that the Minister led on these regulations in the Executive and that she certainly had a key part to play. While I recognise —

Mrs Long: Will the Member give way?

Mr Buckley: When I have finished this point, I will.

I recognise that the Minister has come before the Assembly to talk about the regulations that pertain to her Department. I put on record, however, that it is only right that, if the Justice Minister is appearing before the House to talk about regulations that pertain to her remit, the Chair of the Justice Committee has every right to ask questions on behalf of members of that Committee, just as I would expect my own Chair to represent the needs and musts of the Committee that I sit on, namely the Health Committee.

5.00 pm

Mrs Long: I thank the Member for giving way. There are two issues that need to be clarified. First, there are five sets of regulations, into only two of which my Department had any direct input. We did not lead on any of the regulations, but we worked collaboratively with the Department of Health and its officials to produce what are health regulations and that remain within the purview of the Health Minister.

On a further issue, it is not the case that we did not give the Justice Committee its place. In fact, we sought advice from the Executive Office Committee on how to handle this, and we followed exactly the same procedures that have been used with the Executive Office Committee and any other Committee where a different Minister led in the House. I am not standing here today as Minister of Justice reporting on issues to do with the Ministry of Justice and my Department. I am standing here today as a member of the Executive, and I am reporting on work that has been done by the Executive collectively.

Mr Buckley: I thank the Minister for her intervention, and I have no doubt that she will be able to articulate her position quite well when she responds to the debate. She mentioned that she worked collaboratively, which I did mention in reference to two of the regulations. If she did work collaboratively with the Executive, of which I have no doubt, the Minister will be well able to answer questions that Members in the Chamber may have in what is our only form of in-depth scrutiny, if we can call it that.

I want to look at the enforcement and policing regulations, which are SR 2020/253. The issue has caused a lot of concern among many members of the general public. I, for one, regard enforcement and COVID compliance as a key way in which we can allow business and society, in some sense, to live with COVID. I have been concerned from the beginning of this process that we have been paying mere lip service to enforcement, but that became less clear as time went on in the pandemic. I want to make reference to this, because it is only but right to do so, and I am not for one minute saying that this is for the Justice Minister directly to answer, but it is a wider policing question: there is no doubt that, for many, two-tier COVID policing has existed. That is firmly my view. It is the firm view of many in our society as they have watched the police reaction to certain events throughout the pandemic, and their eagerness to enforce in some instances and to dismiss in others. I think of the west Belfast Bobby Storey funeral. Five months on, still no fines and still no action. I think of house parties in the Holylands, where limited action has been taken, much to the detriment of those residents who have had to live in a state of constant panic, with house parties continually on their doorstep.

I compare that with the forceful, quick action taken at the Black Lives Matter protest, with public swimmers in Helen's Bay, with gyms and, as Mr Wells rightly outlined earlier, with Tandragee Baptists. The amendment (No. 4) regulations seek to increase fines, so the regulations on compliance must be applied equally when policing COVID. Public confidence is key to ensuring that there is uniformity of approach in how the public interact and, indeed, how the police go about their business. How the police have handled the COVID-19 regulations has been dire at best and affected public confidence. That is not for one minute to take away from the fact that it is a very difficult situation to police, but at least do it with an even-handed approach that will allow for more collective buy-in from the public.

As we have gone through this pandemic, we have looked upon key moments of public discourse that have brought about seismic change in how the public has reacted to regulations that have come from this place. I think particularly of the Bobby Storey funeral in west Belfast. If we examine that time, the news coverage that it received and the sheer sense of underhandedness, given that members of the general public were asked to bury loved ones, sometimes on their own, compared to the funeral of Bobby Storey, we can have no doubt that that played a pivotal role in turning many people in society against the regulations that were in place.

However, as we debate and discuss these regulations, I want to say that I, as a member of the Health Committee, welcome the interventions of other Committees. I want to talk about the Communities Committee. A regulation before us — I think that it is No. 14 — talks about the powers that district councils will have to rate particular premises to make them COVID compliant or COVID insured. This is a point that the Committee really tried to home in on but, unfortunately, the evidence that was forthcoming was lacklustre at best. I for one would like to see council leaders being given the opportunity to inform the Health Committee, and maybe even the Communities Committee, as to how effective this approach may be.

Despite the quick pace with which we are moving, I do not think that anybody is under the illusion that the COVID vaccine is going to cease the need for regulations in the short term. However, we need to prepare society for what life looks like after January. I for one will continue to argue that COVID compliance, a level of enforcement and vaccination are all part of the puzzle that will allow our society to safely interact, allow businesses to get on with their day-to-day work and keep our communities safe. However, that can be done only if we have attention to detail in scrutiny. I am open to any suggestions from Members about how we may do that. We have had plenty of debate about the dissatisfaction with the way in which the regulations come before the House, but we have had relatively little debate on the scrutiny role that other Committees can play.

The Health Committee has a huge agenda. Its workload is immense. I recognise that, having come on to the Committee. I pay tribute to the members of the Health Committee who have been there throughout this entire pandemic. While we debate issues of importance such as a vaccination programme and continue to deliberate on the COVID response of the Minister and the CMO, the level of questioning that we can give that subject has been so constrained. In some cases, Members are given the opportunity for only one minute of questioning. When you compare that to the body of work that must be involved in the scrutiny of these regulations, you see that it is only right and fitting that other Committees are given the opportunity to play their part.

I welcome this day for what it is with the vaccination. I hope and pray that we can all have a safe Christmas with our loved ones, mindful of the effects that COVID still has on the wider community.

Ms Flynn: I start by acknowledging that the past few months have been really difficult and challenging. I genuinely struggle to think of anyone who has had an enjoyable time throughout the period of the restrictions, but I am sure that we are all aware of the many people who have had a very stressful and very lonely time. Tragically, we have seen the reported deaths rise above 1,000, and the true number is likely to be much higher. My thoughts are with all those families who have been bereaved and who are going to particularly struggle over the Christmas period.

As we debate and discuss the restrictions brought forward by the Minister of Health and his Executive colleagues, it is important that we do not lose sight of the negative impact that COVID-19 is having right across society. We are debating four health protection regulations — amendment No 13, amendment No 14, amendment No 15 and amendment No 16 — as well as amendment No 4, which deals with face coverings. Most of the statutory rules came before the Health Committee on 26 November, with the last appearing on the Order Paper before the Committee has considered it fully, as it was included in our tabled papers just last Wednesday. That speaks to the speed with which some of the regulations are drafted and to the importance of having an agreed approach that is based on public health principles ahead of time.

The majority of restrictions were made around 13 November. As referenced by the Chair of the Executive Committee, many will remember that date more for the difficulties in securing agreement in the Executive, including that some Ministers rejected public health proposals. Regrettably, as we all know, coronavirus does not care about political divisions or disagreements. It just wants to spread, and systems need to be in place in order to reduce or stop that spread. I look forward to the new COVID strategy, which was debated in a motion in the House recently and supported by all parties.

Returning to the regulations, amendment No 14, essentially, gives councils the ability to enforce some of the existing regulations. It was made on 13 November, some eight months after the pandemic started to hit. I welcome that that measure is now in place, but should it have taken so long for the Department of Health or the Health Minister to empower the councils?

The face coverings regulations raise the fixed penalty fine for not wearing a face covering from £60 to £200. When we introduce fines, it is important that there is a measure of their effectiveness. Unless someone has the means to pay a fine of £200, that amount could be just as unaffordable as a fine of £2,000. I make that point because a balance needs to be struck between introducing restrictions and ensuring that people have the means to adhere to the restrictions. That must be the central approach. As much as restrictions are there to control, there also needs to be an approach of support.

At the start, I mentioned that we have all come across many people who have had particularly stressful times. That includes people from right across society, including people from businesses and staff who are struggling with their livelihood to health and social care workers, ordinary families and people of all ages, young and old. I will end my comments with the same sentiments that the Minister expressed in her closing comments. There is a tried-and-tested response to help to keep one another safe. I encourage people to please keep socially distancing, washing their hands and wearing masks.

Ms Hunter: I will try to be brief. I welcome the opportunity to speak on the motion on health protection regulations.

We are now moving into our tenth month of living with restrictions as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic. Back in March, little did any of us think that, as we celebrated Christmas, we would still be living with the restrictions. Of course, we all recognise the regulations that we are debating are, unfortunately, necessary in order to drive down the infection rate of COVID-19 cases here in the North. At the same time, however, we recognise the many hardships that have come about as a result of the pandemic and the restrictions, not least the damage that has been caused to businesses.

In reference to amendment No 13, we understand the frustrations, challenges and difficulties that new requirements can cause, especially with social distancing and larger gatherings in smaller restaurants across the North. From speaking to businesses in my constituency of East Derry, I know that no types of businesses have remained unaffected. Such businesses include those in the hospitality sector and contact services, including hairdressers, local gyms run by young families, the personal training industry and many other small, local shops that have not been required directly to close as a result of the restrictions but have suffered greatly from a lack of footfall in villages and town centres.

5.15 pm

We urge local business owners to continue to act responsibly to avoid a notice from the local council and to prevent any behaviour that may create a serious and imminent threat to public health. December would usually see sectors and businesses experience a boom in business in the lead-up to Christmas. Sadly, we all know that that will not be the case this year. That must make what has been a daunting and uncertain year for business owners even more concerning and worrying for their future viability.

As my party's mental health spokesperson, I also continue to be mindful of the emotional well-being and mental health impacts of the pandemic, resulting in isolation being experienced by many people. While Christmas is often a difficult time, particularly for the most vulnerable in the community, including the elderly, this year presents even more difficulties for even more people. Many family members will not be able to come home for Christmas or to gather together.

As I have already acknowledged, the restrictions are difficult but, unfortunately, necessary. We recognise that one of the amendments, No 4, increases the fine for not wearing a face covering from £60 to £200. We know that fines are not ideal. No one wants a fine, especially in the month of Christmas. Therefore, we proactively encourage the public to continue to do the responsible thing and wear a mask indoors. Whilst Friday sees us move into another phase of restrictions, I continue to urge everyone to adhere to the regulations, including practising social distancing in the days and weeks ahead, including over the Christmas holidays, when it would be all too easy to let our guard down.

Whilst acknowledging all the difficulties of this year that the pandemic has presented to all of us, whether in jobs or businesses, the restrictions on our daily way of life or mental health and well-being, the recent news of a vaccine and its roll-out in the coming weeks and months gives us hope that 2021 will be a much better year. We support the motion.

Mr Chambers: I had not intended to speak in the debate. I will be brief. I want to refer to remarks that my colleague Mr Buckley made earlier. He referred to the perception of “two-tier policing”. I certainly agree with him on that, as there seems to be some grounds for people having that perception. Recently, I saw it in my own constituency when swimmers were cleared off the beach at Helen’s Bay. They were law-abiding people who could not understand why they had to leave the beach.

All the talk about dissatisfaction has been well rehearsed in the House and at Committees. None of us is entirely satisfied with the way in which regulations have been brought through the system. In normal circumstances, we would not give some of those regulations, or the way in which they have been brought to us, houseroom. Unfortunately, however, we are in the middle of a pandemic in which more than 1,000 have died. All over the world, hundreds of thousands of people have died. I think that most of us get it that we are in the midst of an emergency. However, some people still seem to be struggling to come to terms with that, and they want everything to be done the right way, with all the i’s dotted and all the t’s crossed.

However, in the middle of this situation, people are doing the best they can to protect life and limb. In fact, although we will never know the number, there are people alive today because of the regulations introduced in the past lot of months. We have to take that into consideration. The most important thing about the regulations — Ms Bradshaw referred to it earlier — is that delay costs lives. If we delay the introduction of something that is absolutely necessary to protect the health of the population of Northern Ireland for three weeks, we will inevitably cost lives and put more pressure on the NHS.

Mr Buckley said that we had failed. We have to be careful about using words like that. We have to be very careful that people who are absolutely knocking their pan in — for want of a better expression — in the NHS to save lives do not feel that, somehow, we are referring to them. We have to be careful that we do not taint the people in the social care sector who are going the extra mile for people who are shielding, for instance, with the word “failure”.

The public really have played their part in protecting life and limb by making sacrifices. There is not a family in this country who have not made major sacrifices to comply with regulations. Our children have lost out on their education. They are all back at school, but it is not normal; they are not getting a normal education. That is not the fault of the teachers or anybody else; the pandemic has created that set of circumstances. Here we are, just 10 months since the pandemic decided to visit these shores, and we have produced a vaccine that has started to be rolled out today. I am struggling to see where the failure is, but there are people out there who have been waiting for months for grants that they were promised but still have not received. Maybe there is a bit of failure in that regard; maybe we need to look at where that failure occurred.

Mr Buckley expressed a passion for scrutiny. I think that that passion for scrutiny is one that we all share in the House. If some of his colleagues in the DUP had exercised a level of scrutiny during the renewable heat incentive (RHI) debacle and in the run-up to Brexit, we may not have found ourselves —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: This is out of order, sir.

Mr Chambers: — in these situations. Thank you very much, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Wait a wee second. There are two things. First, let us not bark up and down the Bench at each other. Secondly, the Member knows that the last element of that speech was way beyond the regulations that are under consideration, but it is in Hansard; you have put your views on the record.

Mr Carroll: Before I speak on the amendments, I reiterate a point that I have continually made: it is astounding that we have not had a chance to discuss the ramifications of the latest amendments that will come into effect later this week, which will see a further opening up of the economy and society once again. It is absurd that we are not discussing regulations as they come in. As has been referred to, medical experts, such as Gabriel Scally, have already warned about a new wave of cases, off the back of those changes, but it seems as though the Executive do not think that their medical advice merits serious discussion in advance of the decision coming into effect. Instead, as has been said, we are discussing amendments that were laid almost a month ago. Once again, true to form, there is delayed scrutiny and accountability at Stormont. Given the concerns that have been raised about the latest amendments and the Christmas break, when will we discuss those new regulations? Will it be in the middle of January, when they will have been in operation for almost a month and the effects will, likely, already have been felt, including, potentially, another spike in cases? That would be absurd beyond belief.

The amendment (No. 14) regulations provide councils with powers to ensure that premises have improvement notices and allow for an enforcement officer from the council to take action where appropriate. My concern — I raised it in Committee — is about whether councils will have enough staff who are able to carry out that role and function. That seems to me to be a mammoth task, and it is likely that breaches will happen across the board. To my knowledge — I am happy to be corrected — there has not been an aggressive mass recruitment campaign across the councils to increase the number of staff who can deal with those issues. I would be grateful if the Minister could provide some detail on how she or her Department believe that councils are equipped to deal with inspections and notices, and possible breaches as well, in workplaces.

Amendment No 4 to the face coverings regulations includes increases in the level of fines for people who do not wear masks. It should go without saying that the wearing of face masks is a vital and essential part of the process to stop the spread of the virus. However, we have to say that that message has been stymied by the approach of some of the Executive parties and, occasionally, their party members. Just a few months ago, the Education Minister, for example, rubbished the idea of pupils wearing face masks on buses but recently accepted that call.

Mr Buckley: I thank the Member for giving way on that point in relation to face masks. Earlier in the debate, Mr Allister referred to the fact that there has been no impact assessment of the intended or unintended consequences of many of the regulations, given the speed at which they were introduced. Will the Member accept that, equally, the evidence to suggest that the proper use of face masks is essential because improper use might increase the risk of transmission? That observation comes from the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) in the United States regarding the many people across the country who are not wearing masks in the correct manner and, therefore, could be putting themselves and those around them at risk.

Mr Carroll: I thank the Member for his intervention. I do not know what “improper use” of face masks is; perhaps he can define it. As I said, the Education Minister categorically rubbished the idea that pupils should wear face masks on public transport. I will come on to the point about impact assessments in a moment.

In addition to what the Education Minister said, it was before the Executive, seemingly punted by the Tories, made it compulsory to wear face masks in shopping environments. I and others, including health experts, had been calling for actions to be implemented on that for weeks at the very start of the pandemic, and still the Executive have not rolled out a programme of mass availability of free, reusable masks, despite the fact that I have been going on about it for months, as have other Members today and in the Committee.

If someone genuinely forgets to bring a mask on public transport or when entering a shop, where is the support provided to them? They will be fined if this amendment to the regulation goes ahead, and the fine will increase and they will have to pay even more. That is not to mention — it is connected to the issue — the nefarious and dangerous role that is being played by MPs who are linked to the Executive, such as Sammy Wilson, who repeatedly and openly breached the regulations and defied any sense of sympathy with people who have lost loved ones from COVID.

That is where we get to the heart of the problem with the face masks regulation. Essentially, it blames individuals when it is clear that the public have gone over and beyond to stop the spread of the virus against misinformation and bad examples from those at the top of society. Stronger fines are not the answer; the answer is a better public campaign and better public reps. While I am on the topic — it might fall outside the Minister’s remit — I ask the Justice Minister if she knows whether Sammy Wilson has been fined yet. His efforts were blatant and purposeful, but I have not heard anything about him being fined or punished yet.

The amendments could result in people who have simply forgotten their mask being fined. Such hypocrisy will not be lost on the vast majority of people.

Mrs Long: Will the Member give way?

Mr Carroll: I will, yes.

Mrs Long: Just on that specific point, I want to reassure the Member that someone who has merely forgotten their mask would not be fined. That has to be looked at in the context of the police approach, which is to engage, educate and encourage. Enforcement is the fourth of the four Es, so they would not automatically move to fine someone for not having a face covering.

5.30 pm

Mr Carroll: Thank you, but, as I understand it, there is no detail spelling that out in the regulations.

Mr Sheehan: Will the Member give way?

Mr Carroll: Yes.

Mr Sheehan: Forgetting face masks is an interesting issue. The principal of the school that my two kids attend has asked parents to wear a face mask when they are leaving children to school, especially if they are in rang a 1 or rang a 2 — primary 1 or primary 2 — and are being brought to the door. I usually wear a mask, but, this morning, I was almost at the door when I realised that I did not have it on. There was nobody queuing in front of me, so I went ahead. The point is about someone who gets onto a bus, perhaps, and has forgotten their mask. It is not just a question of someone forgetting their mask. The fine and enforcement are irrelevant. The point is that somebody is getting onto the bus. They may be asymptomatic; they may have COVID-19. Earlier, I talked about providing masks free of charge. Maybe, if the bus driver had a supply, he or she could provide a mask to the person who has genuinely forgotten their mask. Again, I am raising the issue of making masks free in some circumstances.

Mr Carroll: I thank the Member for his intervention. I agree. The wide availability of reusable masks, which can be expensive — I will come on to that in a second — has not been provided for. This is worth hammering home. I am happy to be corrected, if the Minister can do so, but the Executive are pushing forward with the strategy of increasing fines if someone forgets their mask, does not have access to one, cannot afford a new pack or does not have access to a pack of disposable masks, rather than implementing measures to ensure that they have every opportunity to get a mask, as Mr Sheehan suggests. I am happy to be corrected, but I do not know where in the regulations it specifies that there will be exemptions in specific cases. My fear is that the way in which these issues have been proceeded with over the past few months means that people will be fined, and there will be an increase in fines.

Can we rule out a scenario in which a mother who is rushing out of the house to do her Christmas shopping and, in the rush to get the kids ready and out the door, forgets her mask, or masks, is hit not only with a fine but, under this proposal, an increased fine of up to £100 or £200? That is important stuff. How can we rule that out when this amendment is being put forward? If that is not bad enough, last week, the Health Committee was told, when this amendment was being presented, that the rate of non-compliance had not increased markedly or shot up. So, where is the rationale? Hopefully, the Minister can come back on this. Where is the research and evidence to back up increasing fines?

Where is the assessment of how the proposal would affect people on low wages and benefits? That speaks to Mr Buckley's point about an impact assessment. Has people's compliance with wearing a mask increased? I predict that I will probably not be able to divide the House on the Question, as has been the case with other issues, due to the way in which Stormont is structured and the fact that it does not allow smaller parties to register their opposition by way of a vote against measures. I therefore categorically place on record my, and my party's, opposition to the ill-thought-out amendment to increase fines for those not wearing a face mask when the Executive have not gone over and beyond to ensure that people are supported, every step of the way, to ensure that they have access to a mask.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: No other Member has indicated to me that they wish to speak. I therefore call upon the Minister of Justice, Mrs Naomi Long, to conclude and give a winding-up speech on the debate on all five motions.

Mrs Long: This has been a very useful, and mainly constructive, debate. I am grateful to Members for their contributions. I appreciate the degree of goodwill that the Assembly shows towards what is a very unusual process, whereby the role of legislative scrutiny is applied after the event, rather than before.

Nevertheless, it is important that that scrutiny take place, in order to examine and comment on measures that have been taken and to inform how we go forward. In the current context, things move fast, and the observations and concerns of Members are taken on board as we develop policy and work on the next set of amendment regulations. It remains the case, however, that it is important that the public have confidence that the Executive are not acting without scrutiny.

I turn my attention to the comments from Mr Paul Givan. As I said earlier, it appears that no good deed will go unpunished. Unfortunately, it seems that, by stepping into this role, I have created something of a controversy in offering to help the Health Minister, who has been in this Chamber on almost every sitting occasion since the pandemic began. I felt that it was appropriate, given that my Department had had some involvement in, although was not in control of, these regulations, that I offer to help. Of course, the Health Department then did as I would have done myself and asked me to take forward some additional and rather unexpected changes, which I am more than happy to do in the spirit of collegiality.

On the issue of lack of opportunity for the Justice Committee to scrutinise the regulations, as I said in my opening comments, these are Department of Health regulations, made by the Minister of Health. I was asked to lead a short, sharp review, on behalf of the Executive, in support of the Minister of Health. The review was not a Department of Justice review, and I do not believe that it is right to characterise enforcement as being solely a Justice issue either.

My officials worked collaboratively on the review with their counterparts in the Department of Health, the Executive Office, the Department for the Economy and the Department for Communities. The first stage of the review, which was a comparative analysis of the offences and penalties in place across the UK and in the Republic of Ireland, was completed by the Department of Health, after which my Department developed proposals, given that we have an advisory role only on the creation of new offences and penalties that relate to other Committees' and Departments' responsibilities. We sought clarity from the Executive Office on the Assembly procedures that should be followed, and it was confirmed that policy responsibility for the regulations lies with the Department of Health, and the role of scrutiny therefore falls to the Health Committee, with the Justice Committee requiring notification only. As a matter of professional courtesy, however, the Justice Committee was notified in a letter by me, and a copy of the regulations was made available to it on 1 December. All these regulations fell to be scrutinised by the Committee for Health. We were asked by the Department of Health to make an official available to join the Committee meeting at which these regulations were being considered, and we agreed to that. The Department for Communities also fielded an official who had assisted with the amendment (No. 14) regulations. There was no requirement or expectation that either Department should have to notify its respective Committee or that its respective Committee's scrutiny functions would be engaged by doing so.

Such collaborative working across Departments is to be encouraged, not criticised or impeded. I am in the Chamber today in that spirit of collaborative working and in recognition of the extreme demands that have been, and continue to be, placed on the Health Minister and his officials, and indeed on the Executive Office. I have always said that my Department and I will play our full part to support efforts to keep us all safe during this pandemic, and that is what we are doing today.

On his concerns about policing of the regulations, the Chair of the Committee rightly noted that I would not be drawn into a debate about operational matters, which are the responsibility of the Chief Constable. He is incorrect, however, in suggesting that that is something that I introduced when I came into office. It is a convention that has been in place since justice was devolved, as the legal position in that regard makes clear. The Chief Constable is responsible for operational decisions and is directly accountable to the Northern Ireland Policing Board. Complaints about such decisions are the purview of the ombudsman's office. I am both bound and determined to respect the operational independence of each of those structures, as my office and position demand.

I move on to the remarks of the Chair of the Health Committee. He expressed his concern that the issues, and the scrutiny process used around the restrictions, are complex and frustrating for a number of Members. I have some sympathy in that regard, a point that was reinforced by Mr Colin McGrath and Mr Paul Givan.

The confirmatory approval process has been put in place to reflect the urgency with which the Executive have had to operate in these extraordinary circumstances. That is a point well that was well made by Mr Chambers in his contribution and by Paula Bradshaw in hers.

The normal Assembly scrutiny has been adjusted to accommodate the making of regulations in short order to reflect the requirements of the changing context in which the Executive are working in response to COVID-19. Debates are held at the earliest opportunity available to the Department. The Assembly approved the confirmatory approval process for these emergency regulations and, therefore, with respect, we are following the approach that the Assembly itself has agreed. Whilst it is undoubtedly a frustrating approach, it is, nevertheless, the appropriate means for these issues to be brought forward. The timing of the debate is also a matter for the Assembly, given the Assembly's own requirements for the input of the Examiner of Statutory Rules and the timing of scrutiny by the Health Committee, which has to be allowed and given its space.

The confirmatory approval process allows the Department of Health to make and lay the regulations quickly. In practice, that has often been in a matter of days or even hours after an Executive decision. As a number of Members, including Ms Paula Bradshaw, said, any delay in making the regulations could cost lives, and therefore being speedy in how we deal with these things is the trade-off against the normal scrutiny that we enjoy in the House. I believe that the scrutiny function provided by our Committees and the Assembly in this matter is absolutely critical. We would not be taking this forward in the way that we have if it were not absolutely necessary.

Normally, the regulations are scheduled for debate at the first opportunity after the Health Committee session. However, given that some regulations are only in place for a fortnight, that means that some will be debated after they have ceased to have effect. I completely understand Members' frustration in that regard. Following the making of regulations, the timing of the scrutiny and debate is largely in the hands of the Assembly. It is worth noting, however, that the process of developing and scrutinising regulations would normally take a matter of months and not days. Therefore, the normal procedures cannot be followed in these circumstances. These are not normal circumstances, and no one in the Executive or the House would argue that the current procedure is a model for scrutiny in normal times.

The Chair of the Health Committee mentioned issues that had been raised with my officials about the human rights assessment of the regulations. The matter was raised with the Executive Office following the Committee session, and the Department of Justice is awaiting its response. However, on the wider issue of the queries, my officials are also awaiting a response from the Health Department's Assembly liaison officer to ascertain the process for responding to the Committee. Normally, the Department of Justice will receive a letter from the Committee Clerk and respond in writing. When the Department receives such a letter or, indeed, an alternative mechanism, it of course endeavours to respond.

On the consideration of human rights implications, I am not at liberty to share the exact content of papers presented to the Executive, including legal advice that is provided. You will be aware that there is an established convention that this type of information is not shared. I can say that the Executive consider a range of factors when discussing potential restrictions and sanctions, including human rights considerations. In particular, the Executive give due attention to whether any measures being contemplated are necessary and proportionate. As part of the review of offences and penalties, the Executive looked carefully at the level of penalties that are applied across these islands and for other offences that are also dealt with via fixed penalty.

There will always be a careful balance to be struck between keeping people safe and individual freedoms. We have heard much about the balance between life and livelihood, but there is a third angle that Gerry Carroll referred to. There is life and livelihood but also liberty. We need to keep all three of those in mind as decisions are made and taken forward. As a society, we should not give up our freedoms easily or lightly. We should question when those freedoms are constricted, but that does not mean that we should resist the sensible, cooperative kind of efforts that we have been making to protect life. The Executive keep our balance under constant review when we seek to recalibrate our approach to restrictions and the associated penalties.

The track-and-trace programme was raised by the Chair of the Health Committee. As he will be aware, there is already a developed programme of test, track, trace, isolate and support. Indeed, support is available through the Department for Communities for those who have to self-isolate. However, it would be more appropriate for the Health Minister to make any announcements on his approach to the motion that was debated in the Chamber and passed with all-party support.

5.45 pm

I can, however, say that there is a COVID task force, which is being headed up by the interim head of the Civil Service, although its scope is to be further clarified. That has been agreed by the entire Executive. Our hope is that it will bring a strategic focus not only to the cross-Executive approach to tackling the pandemic but to our plans for recovery, which are hugely important at this juncture.

Mr Buckley: I thank the Minister for giving way. Will she provide clarity on whether the enforcement element will be included in the work of the task force?

Mrs Long: There will be a number of elements in its work. I will come on to enforcement, so the Member may get his answer then, but one of the key issues for the task force is not to duplicate structures that are already in place to deliver on Executive priorities but to streamline and coordinate cooperation so that we are using a more effective and efficient system. It is unclear whether those will be rolled into the task force or whether the current compliance group will continue in its operations and simply work through the task force on coordination.

Mr Beattie and Mr Clarke showed extreme curiosity about how COVID regulations would be enforced and whether I should be the person who does that. Obviously, I do not want to disappoint them by not providing them with a fulsome response. I will, of course, not open up Executive confidentiality, but suffice it to say that I have always been clear that promoting adherence to the COVID restrictions is a cross-cutting matter. Enforcement of COVID restrictions is not solely a matter for the PSNI; other statutory organisations, such as councils, Border Force and others, have responsibilities for compliance and enforcement. Those organisations are not within my purview. The focus, therefore, should be on encouraging adherence, compliance and enforcement and on using enforcement as a last resort only when necessary.

The Executive agreed, after discussion, to set up a strategic-level group, chaired by the junior Ministers and under the auspices of TEO, to coordinate efforts on compliance and enforcement. Senior officials from my Department, the PSNI and other Departments that are engaged are part of that group and are playing their full part in supporting the collective effort to encourage adherence and compliance.

Enforcement was raised by quite a number of Members, including Mr Buckley, and I want to set it out in some detail because it touches on the regulations that we are discussing today. Enforcement activity should always be proportionate and must be seen to be legitimate. None of us in the Chamber or anywhere else wants to see a heavy-handed response to these issues, and enforcement of COVID restrictions is not solely a matter for the PSNI. As I said, other statutory organisations, such as councils, also have responsibilities for compliance and enforcement. Locally, both the Northern Ireland Policing Board and the Office of the Police Ombudsman have been overseeing the PSNI's enforcement approach and will report on that. Operational decisions, including penalties, are a matter for the Chief Constable, and he is accountable to the Northern Ireland Policing Board.

The PSNI publishes weekly statistics on the number of penalties issued, and that reflects its ongoing enforcement efforts. I encourage Members to look at those figures and to inform themselves on the work of the police before they comment on those matters, because I think that some would find it surprising. As of 7 December, the PSNI had carried out a total of 5,365 actions associated with enforcement of restrictions. PSNI figures, as I say, are available, but I will just read them into the record, if I may, Mr Speaker.

A total of 2,101 COVID 1 notices — that is, penalty notices — have been handed out since March. There have been 791 COVID 2 notices, comprising 135 commercial and 656 private notices. Those are prohibition notices that are issued to licensed premises or for a restriction of gatherings in a private dwelling. Forty-nine COVID 3 notices have been issued, and those are for failure to isolate. Some 923 COVID 4 notices have been issued, which is the one that now replaces the COVID 1 notices, with fines starting at £200 instead of £60. There have been 25 COVID 5 notices, which are penalty notices that are issued to businesses and/or premises for breach of the regulations, and the fines start at £1,000 and go up to a maximum of £10,000. Finally, 1476 community resolution notices have been issued.

In addition, local councils have collectively carried out 58,501 acts associated with public health restrictions for the period 1 May to 30 November. I do not think that any Member, having sight of those figures, could suggest that no effort has been made on enforcement.

Mr Buckley further raised the issue of the Holylands, which we all realise presented particular challenges on enforcement. The PSNI focus there, as in other places, is on early intervention and the four Es approach, engagement, explaining, encouraging and, where necessary and appropriate, enforcement. It is important that, if Members make sweeping statements about the PSNI, they should make sure that their comments are informed. Mr Buckley said that there had been limited enforcement when, in fact, more than 900 fixed penalty notices have been issued in the past three months. In addition to arrests and other interventions, such as the issuing of COVID-19 tickets, the police report all actions taken against students to the universities for them to consider disciplinary investigations and sanctions. The PSNI has referred over 1,100 students to their respective universities.

Since Halloween, which was relatively uneventful, the Holylands has experienced a rising number of calls for service regarding noisy parties. There was extensive media coverage of disorderly student gatherings in the streets on the nights of 23 and 24 November. I think that we will all agree that those scenes were disgraceful and that those who live in that neighbourhood, whether full-time residents or students, should not have to tolerate such disruption. The PSNI re-evaluated the operational response and put in place a specific operation from 5.00 pm to 3.00 am, and that will remain in place until such time as the police no longer require it.

The primary focus of the police operation is high-visibility reassurance on foot and in vehicles. Daily, active engagement with local points of contact in universities, Belfast City Council and the local community is crucial. The PSNI in south Belfast has been extremely proactive this year and, since 13 September, has issued 684 COVID-19 1 penalty notices, 214 COVID-19 number 2 prohibition notices, 224 COVID-19 number 4 penalty notices since 12 November, 62 community resolution notices, and has conducted three arrests.

On the wider point about compliance and enforcement, the Executive set up the strategic enforcement group, now known as the strategic compliance group, to assist our response to compliance and enforcement, given that it is a cross-cutting matter. The group is led by the junior Ministers, and my Department is represented alongside a number of other Departments and statutory agencies, all of which are working hard in a collective effort to encourage compliance. Enforcement activity should be proportionate and seen as legitimate, and I think that that is important.

The PSNI is continuing to work with retailers, transport providers, the hospitality trade and others to support compliance with the government regulations by engaging and explaining and encouraging people to make the right choices. The police will enforce only where necessary. That position is endorsed by the Northern Ireland Executive and the Northern Ireland Policing Board and is in line with the national guidance from the National Police Chiefs' Council.

Mr Sheehan raised the issue of how we can support and encourage people to comply, and Mr McGrath made similar comments. People are weary and exhausted. The COVID-19 restrictions mark a huge limitation on our way of life, albeit a necessary one. We are social creatures, and, in times of stress, our natural instinct is to huddle for protection. It is, therefore, unnatural and requires a high degree of restraint, concentration and awareness for people to maintain their social distancing when they are anxious and under stress. However, the evidence that we have seen as an Executive is that most people want to comply, so making it easy for them to do so is hugely important. That includes those who may struggle with cost.

The Department for Communities provided approximately £60,000 through Ulster Supported Employment Ltd (USEL) to make and distribute face coverings to those who are vulnerable.

In addition, prisoners in Magilligan, who were also involved in producing scrubs for the health service, turned their sewing skills to good use to provide face masks. That came as part of a community collaboration, where local churches donated fabric and the prisoners stitched face masks and passed them on to schools, to children's wards in the hospital, and to other community organisations. It is encouraging that those in prison are part of the effort to try to tackle Coronavirus and support the local community.

A number of Members, including Pat Sheehan, Pam Cameron, William Humphrey and others, raised the issue of face coverings. The Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) Regulations make the wearing of face coverings mandatory in indoor spaces such as shops, public areas and public transport. The wearing of a face covering has never been presented as a panacea to prevent or reduce the spread of the virus in our towns and cities. It should be noted by all that the Executive have been advising, since early in the pandemic, that people should wear face coverings, although it was not made mandatory until later. The wearing of a face covering is one of the measures that we can all take to help curb the spread of the virus and play our part in bringing levels of infection down. Other measures are maintaining social distancing, washing our hands, avoiding touching our faces and all of the other things that we have discussed at length.

One reason why we did not move straight to regulations was that concern was expressed by the World Health Organization and others that, although the introduction of face coverings does reduce transmission, the accompanying relaxation in people's other behaviours, such as social distancing and contact with others, could offset some of those benefits, particularly in cultures where the wearing of face coverings is not culturally normal. Therefore, people would struggle to remember to wear them and also, when wearing them, may feel a false sense of security. So there are issues with face coverings. That had to be weighed by the Executive, and we tried to implement it at the correct time.

There is no scientific evidence that wearing a face covering can make a healthy person unwell. The World Health Organization has issued advice on face covering and addressed some of the myths around prolonged use of medical masks. The prolonged use of medical masks can be uncomfortable. However, it does not lead to carbon dioxide intoxication or oxygen deficiency. While wearing a medical mask, you should make sure that it fits properly and is tight enough to allow you to breathe normally. The World Health Organization also advises that we should not reuse disposable masks and we should change them as soon as they become damp.

There is no scientific evidence that it will make a healthy person unwell. However, it is recognised that, for some people with underlying respiratory conditions or sensory issues, wearing a face covering can be problematic or extremely distressing. For that reason, the restrictions exempt such individuals from having to do so. By following this advice, we can help protect ourselves, our families and others from serious illnesses and protect our health service and our economy and help prevent further prolonged and more stringent restrictions.

I thank Paula Bradshaw for her remarks reflecting that the crucial issue in all of this is how we, individually, act to stop transmission. A number of Members including Paula, Pam Cameron and others raised the issue of personal responsibility. With the rate of transmission that we are currently seeing, everyone needs to play their part to bring the levels of infections down and to protect lives, livelihoods and, indeed, our liberties. It is a matter of personal and collective responsibility. We have a responsibility to help curb the spread of the virus by maintaining social distancing; maintaining good hand and respiratory hygiene; wearing face coverings; self-isolating immediately if we experience any symptoms, including a new persistent cough, a fever, a loss or change of smell or taste; seeking a test if we experience those symptoms; downloading the StopCOVID NI app; and complying with the restrictions that are in place. If we follow that advice, it can and will make a difference.

People need to adhere to the restrictions, but where they do not, enforcement has a role to play. While there has been, understandably, given the context, a natural focus on enforcement, we should also remember that high levels of enforcement are actually indicative of a failure — a failure to bring people with us, to convince them that these measures are necessary and encourage them to be careful, even when they are out of sight of enforcement activity. It is, therefore, really important that we show leadership and encourage and support others to comply. Órlaithí Flynn made that point very strongly. Whilst I am sympathetic on the issue of the cost of the penalties and fines, those fines are entirely avoidable if people follow the regulations; it is easy to avoid being fined.

Pam Cameron asked for clarity on what further details would require to be taken by the hospitality sector for contact tracing. Regulation 4C(3) states that the name and phone number of one person per household, plus the date of the visit, the time of arrival and the number of members per household have to be recorded and held. My understanding is that that is for a period of 21 days in order to allow contact tracing.

A number of Members, including Pat Sheehan and Robbie Butler, referred to the relaxations that are to be permitted over the Christmas period and the need for people to be responsible and considered. I will not test Members' patience by going down the road of discussing those relaxations as they do not form part of these regulations. Suffice it to say that we are all aware that, in every contact, every personal interaction, every crowded place, be it a shop, living room, bar or restaurant, and every unventilated place, every time that we are in those places and situations, we increase the risk of transmission.

The relaxations announced by the Executive are permissive. No one has to do any of this. People can maintain stringent distancing, isolation and all the other measures for as long as they wish. People are not required to bubble with family — some Members may be relieved to hear that. People can decide, instead, as many of us who are less sociable will do, to close the door on Christmas Eve and not to open it again until the new year. That may be good for your health but, for your interactions with family and friends, not so much.

Mr Gildernew: Will the Minister give way?

Mrs Long: I will, surely.

Mr Gildernew: In light of that, does the Minister agree that, notwithstanding the useful debate that we have had about evidence, process and the need to carry out these emergency measures hastily, there is some evidence that has to be considered that is crucial and beyond dispute? One is that our hospitals today are at 102% capacity. More people are in our hospitals today than there are beds. Only a very small number of ICU beds are available, and we have had 1,073 deaths. People need to bear those things in mind when they are making decisions over the time ahead.

Mrs Long: I absolutely concur with what the Chairman of the Health Committee said; it is very wise advice. These are permissive regulations. No one has to get together with others, and there are risks attendant on doing so. I ask people to think carefully and weigh up for themselves whether the benefits of getting together with family and friends to socialise is worth the risk that that might bring to those people with whom they have contact.

Many may make the judgement — some already have — that they would rather postpone their celebrations with family until the vaccine has created a safer environment in which to do that. However, we talked about liberty, and we have to leave the matter to personal judgement. It would be cruel and unwarranted for us to try to prevent people from being able to meet family over that period, particularly those who may, for good reason, have a prospect of this being the last Christmas that they might spend with some of their family members. We have to be sensitive to that.

I simply ask that people do as the Chairman of the Health Committee suggested and as I have said: approach the holiday season with caution. The advice has not and will not change when it comes to hand and respiratory hygiene, wearing masks, ventilating spaces and keeping your distance. Do not drop your guard because it is Christmas. COVID will not change because it is Christmas. It will not take time off.

Gerry Carroll raised the issue of the cost to councils. I can inform him that the Department for Communities has committed additional funding in excess of £85 million so far to all councils to assist in combating COVID. All councils have confirmed that they do and can deliver the requirements of these regulations with the resources that they have.

Today's debate was useful and constructive and forms part of the opportunity that Members have to undertake scrutiny. We are all learning how to respond to a novel virus, and Members' scrutiny contributes to how we take forward future regulations and restrictions. I reassure Members that it is not a waste of their time. Members are not simply talking to issues that have come and gone but are engaging on how they want us to take things forward.

Today is a momentous day for the vaccine, and I think that it will be universally welcomed. I thank the scientists who developed the vaccine, the individuals who stepped forward in record numbers to assist with clinical trials and the Department of Health for its preparatory work on the roll-out of mass vaccination.

When the Health Minister is here, he cannot blow his own trumpet, because that would be seen as inappropriate, but I shall blow the Health Minister's trumpet for him on this occasion. I have seen with my own eyes the work that has been done in my doctors' surgery on the preparatory work for this and how they rolled out the flu vaccine. Many people talked about surgeries running out of the flu vaccine, but, of course, the truth is that the flu vaccine was rolled out so quickly and so effectively that we exceeded capacity in terms of vaccinations. Many surgeries hired community halls, church halls and other venues to test and trial a mass roll-out of vaccines. We know how to do this quickly, effectively and efficiently. We know how to get it out to the public. We now need to build public confidence that the vaccine will provide us with part of the solution to returning to normality.

We have an opportunity to go into the Christmas season and beyond with optimism, perhaps for the first time since the virus descended on our shores earlier this year. It is the light at the end of the tunnel, but we are not there yet. In the meantime, therefore, I plead with people to bear in mind what the Chairman of the Health Committee said about our health service, think about the people who have passed away, be responsible for your actions and take care of yourself, your family, your friends and your community. If we work together, we will get through this.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 13) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 be approved.

Macro Economic Outlook Micro Inquiry Special Report

Dr Archibald (The Chairperson of the Committee for the Economy): I beg to move

That this Assembly welcomes the Committee for the Economy's special report [NIA 56/17-22] providing evidence on how the economy has been impacted as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic, and ideas on how to rebuild it better; supports the development of cross-departmental plans to boost our economic, health and social well-being, by investing in infrastructure, skills, manufacturing and industry; recognises that collaboration across government is vital and will translate into social progress where people, communities and high streets thrive and prosper, and where good jobs are created along with the skills and networks needed to raise productivity and earnings; and calls on the Minister for the Economy, and her Executive colleagues, to use this evidence in planning our economic recovery and future.

Mr Speaker: The Business Committee has allowed one and a half hours for the debate. The Chair will have 10 minutes in which to propose and a further 10 minutes in which to make a winding-up speech. All other Members who are called to speak will have five minutes.

Dr Archibald: The Committee has undertaken a micro-inquiry to seek views from a range of stakeholders on what we need to do to support the recovery and rebuilding of our economy following the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic, and has produced a special report highlighting a range of themes. I thank those who participated in the inquiry, and the Committee has shared the report with the Economy Minister.

The business, manufacturing, tourism and hospitality sectors in particular told us that they have yet to see the full impact of the COVID-19 crisis. They feel that the longer we remain in a survival or stabilising phase, the greater the negative impact on their sectors in the longer term. Academics highlighted the likely prospect of a deep recession, with an even tougher recovery. However, some businesses are still growing and have had opportunities due to COVID-19. There have also been business start-ups during this period, whilst other businesses remain in survival mode. While the pandemic is primarily a public health emergency, the economic risks are real and impactful. Many businesses are bracing themselves for more job losses in the months to come. Rather than managing our economic decline, we must focus on rebuilding. Economic disruption looks set to continue into the new year. Nine months into this crisis, however, we can reflect on what has worked well and adapt good policies accordingly.

We should continue to push forward to the recovery phase, directed by a realistic plan, specific to our needs, to start building back better as we prepare for our next challenge, which is Brexit. With that comes the challenge of how we will replace EU funding on a like-for-like-plus basis through the shared prosperity fund. We must deliver on the policies needed to help to stabilise the economy right now and develop an overarching plan to make sure that our economy is rebuilt in a way that improves its responsiveness to the needs of communities and businesses. One of the most vital ingredients in building our economy back better is improving technology and digital infrastructure. There has never been a time when we, as a society and economy, have been so reliant on technology. In fact, we have suddenly become reliant on services that allow us to work, shop, access services and learn from home. The Committee welcomes the appointment of a contractor to Project Stratum. To support that, we need to make it easier for telecom companies to improve rural connections by setting up mast-sharing agreements. Communities need to see 5G rolled out to provide the best online technology available.

Having a workforce that is flexible, agile and skilled to help local businesses to prosper is essential to economic recovery. Increases in unemployment have had a knock-on impact on high streets, with businesses in real distress, especially in hospitality, retail and transport. Members have concerns about the gap between the skills that workers possess and those that businesses say they need, with a deficit in workers with skills in science, technology, engineering and maths subjects. The result is lower wages, lower productivity and unemployment. We must create strategies to ensure that people have the skills that they and businesses need for us all to prosper. There are clear patterns of intergenerational, low-paid, insecure employment and worklessness within more-deprived communities. The impact of COVID-19 caused the Committee's stakeholders to highlight the fact that we are experiencing greater disparities between the haves and have-nots.

Mr Stalford: I am grateful to the Chair of the Committee for giving way. At this time of year especially, I think that this is relevant. One of the things that has concerned me greatly is that lower-paid workers who are being told that they are not allowed to go to work are struggling to pay for Christmas for their kids. The direct consequence of them not being allowed to go to work will be to push them into the arms of loan sharks and moneylenders, and that has a huge societal impact. Would the Member care to talk to that for a few seconds?

Dr Archibald: Many individuals and families are facing very difficult circumstances at this point. It is important, therefore, that there are supports put in place for those people, and there have been, via the Department for Communities and the supports that have been made available through the Economy Department. Those have been really important to ensure that people have the support that they very much need. It is important, therefore, that we have the strategies to move forward in the economic recovery. Young people and those on lower incomes are often those most badly affected by the pandemic, re-emphasising inequalities that already exist.

Unemployment, underemployment, low-paid work and lack of skills have blighted communities and held back our economy. With an increase in unemployment forecast, we must have a strategy to encourage and support start-ups and entrepreneurship. The development of indigenous businesses with higher earning capacities is key. In order to get this right, there must be a proper framework to support entrepreneurship, along with new thinking on how to get more people trained with professional and technical qualifications. That must be supported by a new, realistic childcare strategy that gives parents more and better opportunities to work.

With fewer staff travelling to work and fewer tourists and with schools closed for several months at a time, transport operators have experienced a devastating blow to their income. Now is the time to plan ahead in order to ensure that the public transport network will be ready for a return to operations when there is greater demand and that it will better support our communities in getting their goods to market and people across our island. An overarching transport strategy needs investment, particularly when getting people to airports, universities and manufacturing sites. That will require long-term solutions for the major road networks and the development of a high-speed rail link connecting all our towns and cities. Airports are essential to our economic development, as they provide access to airlines. Just this morning, the Economy Committee had an informal meeting with the chief executives of our three airports. Moving passengers and transporting cargo are very important to our local businesses. Therefore, we need to ensure that the airports survive for the good of our economic future.

As highlighted in the Committee's energy strategy debate last month, we must ensure that buildings are made as energy-efficient as possible, that investment is available for our electricity grid and that companies offering renewable technologies are given the support that they need to succeed. Our planning system needs to provide greater flexibility to change landscapes in order to help our health and well-being. We must work to eliminate fuel and energy poverty for our most vulnerable, as well as ensure that energy prices are a draw for businesses to invest here and not a disincentive.

In order to build a better economy, we need embedded collaboration across all levels of government; delivery on plans to create social progress where people thrive and prosper and where good jobs in indigenous businesses are created; and development of the skills and networks that are needed to raise productivity and earnings. Government procurement also needs a shake-up, with a greater focus on buying locally and support for companies here to build capacity in order to increase employment and earning potential for all our people. How we commission public services should recognise the wider social, economic and environmental benefit and context. Business leaders are concerned that, as we approach the official date for EU exit at the end of the transition period, there remains a lack of information, and, therefore, there is uncertainty about what will happen next. That, along with the COVID-19 pandemic and the fact that we are in the month of Christmas, makes this a period of great uncertainty. Businesses and consumers urgently need information to make the best decisions that they can. We need to deliver for them not just now but in the longer term through better planning, investment and collaboration across government.

I will now make some brief remarks as Sinn Féin's economy spokesperson. Sinn Féin set out our recovery strategy back in June. That is based on four principles: supporting workers and families; supporting businesses to create and sustain jobs; delivering on a just transition; and giving the Executive the tools to finance recovery. Prior to COVID-19, our economy was not in good shape. We had the lowest growth, the lowest productivity and the highest economic inactivity in these islands. There were structural challenges that have persisted and that need to be addressed as part of our recovery. Our economic strategy must be one that delivers good jobs, addresses regional imbalance, promotes a zero-carbon economy and improves productivity. We need to deliver on the commitments in the New Decade, New Approach agreement on strengthening workers' rights. Those and skills development are core to improving productivity.

We must support alternative business models, including social enterprises and cooperatives in order to drive community well-being and wealth-building. Our economic strategy must support indigenous SMEs and, in doing so, tackle long-standing regional imbalances by coordinating local economic development in towns and villages in order to create employment opportunities. We need to reimagine our towns and cities as part of the recovery to utilise space through sustainable development where people work, live and socialise. Any economic strategy for recovery must involve long-term planning to deliver a just transition to a net-zero-carbon society. A green new deal should be a core tenet to the recovery, creating high-skilled, well-paid employment by harnessing our abundant natural renewable energy resources. That can help to deliver lower costs for families and businesses, create warm homes for those in fuel poverty and provide public transport for all, including isolated rural communities.

To be able to deliver on economic recovery —

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Dr Archibald: — the Executive must be afforded additional powers to borrow. I will leave it there. I again thank all those who contributed to the micro-inquiry.

Mr Middleton: None of us could have predicted the impact of the pandemic on our economy. It has devastated our high streets and disproportionately affected young, part-time, low-paid and female workers.

The latest Office for Budget Responsibility outlook in November indicated that COVID-19 has caused the UK economy to shrink by 11% this year, the largest drop in over 300 years. The collapse of established retailers such as Arcadia and Debenhams has distilled the devastation that the pandemic and subsequent restrictions have caused to our high streets. We must remember that COVID-19 has, of course, affected different business in different ways. Some sectors, including retail, hospitality and tourism, have been dealt a particularly bitter blow. Those sectors often have higher numbers of female, young, part-time and low-paid workers, and the threat of job losses will be heartbreaking for them and their families.

I welcome the special report and will speak in support of the motion. It will support a fully informed debate on how best to chart a course towards recovery. The Committee report raises a number of constructive themes, including investment in connectivity and digital infrastructure, which I am sure that the Department will look at closely over the coming weeks.

As the Chair said in her remarks, there has been no time that we, as a society and an economy, have been so reliant on technology. Whether in work, retail or education, the COVID-19 pandemic has accelerated changes that would normally have taken years to progress. On that note, like others, I welcome the progress on Project Stratum and the £165 million contract to Fibrus, which will see broadband rolled out across Northern Ireland. It should be noted that that was a key issue for our party in the confidence and supply agreement.

The report also touches on ensuring a flexible and skilled workforce. Many employees who have been placed on furlough or who fear that they will lose their jobs will need help to retain them as we come to the end of that period. I also welcome that the Department for the Economy is developing a new skills strategy that will take much of that forward.

The report also refers to transport infrastructure, and I broadly agree with the views of the stakeholders about looking again at the strategic roads plan to future-proof it and the need to improve public transport connectivity. That has also changed over the course of the pandemic.

Air connectivity was another important element of the report to ensure that businesses have proximity to the rest of the UK and, indeed, the continent, as that will be an important factor in our recovery. From our meeting this morning with the chief executives of the airports, I know that they are very worried about the current position, but they are also hopeful that, with the right support, we can get through this. We need to make the case for greater air connectivity, including to the US, to consolidate Northern Ireland's reputation as a positive place for foreign investment. The Committee report rightly denotes the decimation of the tourism and transport sectors as a result of the pandemic. The ground-up approach to recovery must help those businesses and our airports to rebuild.

A further important area that the report touches on is tourism and the revival of our town and city centres. It refers to the need to review our city centre infrastructure, support our retailers, and to having a proper mix in our town and city centres. It refers to the need for a joined-up communication plan and campaign to promote the message that Northern Ireland is a safe place to visit. That is a cross-cutting issue for all Departments. The Department for Communities has a role in city centres, as do the Department for the Economy and the Department for Infrastructure. We want to see a joined-up approach in that respect.

Finally, we need to be ambitious. As the report states, it is not about "managing decline" but "rebuilding" and promoting a better and stronger economy as we emerge from COVID-19.

Like others, I want to put on record my thanks to the Committee, the Committee Clerk and the Committee staff for the way in which they conducted the micro-inquiry. As we go forward, I hope that it will encourage debate and inform some of the decisions that will need to be made over the coming months.

6.30 pm

Mr Catney: This is the second important report that we have seen from the Committee for the Economy in as many weeks. I thank the Committee and officials for their good work.

In order to build an adequate recovery from the pandemic, we must admit to long-standing issues with the economy. As has already been stated, productivity in Northern Ireland is 15.6% below the UK average. Low productivity puts significant constraints on growth in Northern Ireland, with knock-on effects on levels of investment and innovation. Low productivity feeds through to individuals and families through lower incomes and fewer opportunities for quality jobs. Northern Ireland has a much larger concentration of employment in lower-paid sectors, such as agriculture, retail, and health and social care, than the UK average. In contrast, employment in the rest of the UK is more concentrated in higher value added sectors, such as professional services, ICT and financial services.

Northern Ireland's low productivity is linked to low levels of skills and historical difficulties with skills gaps in the employment market. There is a shortage of people with professional and industrial qualifications in the labour market. In contrast, Northern Ireland has a relatively high proportion of university graduates. However, the subject mix of graduates is not always proportionate to labour-market demand, with an oversupply in some areas. As a result, graduate skills may be underutilised in the economy, and lower-skilled workers may be pushed down the employment ladder.

In addition, we must identify the sectors that have been disproportionately impacted by the pandemic. Sectors with large numbers of low-paid roles are more likely to have employees who had been furloughed and lost their jobs. That includes demographics that faced pre-pandemic inequalities. Emerging UK studies indicate that women; young people; black, Asian and minority ethnic individuals, and people with a disability are at particular risk of the adverse social and economic consequences of COVID.

Turning to the other areas that were specifically covered in the report, it is clear that the Executive should commit to the transformation of skills. Northern Ireland's workforce has, on average, a lower level of educational attainment and skills compared with other UK regions. That leads to skills shortages, which reduce the growth potential of local firms, deter investors from locating here and limit productivity, growth and competitiveness. For individuals and families, low skills levels also mean that Northern Ireland has the highest percentage of low-paying jobs in the UK.

We must also commit to the programme of investment in infrastructure that underpins economic growth. Northern Ireland is held back by long-term underinvestment in key infrastructure. Congestion and pollution demonstrates the need to reduce our reliance on cars through investment in public transport, along with walking and cycling routes. Water and sewerage infrastructure is near or at capacity in many places, limiting new development and raising environmental risks. While Belfast is now a super-connected city, digital infrastructure outside the city lags far behind.

The COVID-19 crisis provides Northern Ireland with an opportunity to renew the commitment to address the climate emergency. The pandemic has led to changing attitudes towards outdoor spaces and increased demand for green spaces, cycling and exercise. Yesterday, the Minister for Infrastructure spoke to that point with her comments on the potential for inland waterways and canals to fulfil that need.

The pandemic has also rapidly changed the way in which we work, travel and use towns and cities. Those changes provide opportunities to develop a more resilient economy through climate-friendly policies that make best use of the city centre, public transport and tourism.

The Executive have an opportunity to work with the business community and councils to consider —

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr Catney: — different strategies. Any vision for economic recovery will rely on collective persistency. The Department for the Economy —

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is up. Thank you.

Dr Aiken: I thank the Chair and members of the Committee for the Economy for producing this macroeconomic report. Many of the things that I will mention are areas that we have covered before, but it is vital that we emphasise some of them. The first is the development, maintenance and retention of skills, particularly as we come out of the COVID period. I have talked about the impact that those skills have on our aerospace industry. That needs to be looked at. We need to encourage the retention of those skills and abilities. I encourage the Committee and the Minister to use their best endeavours with our Government when it comes to Ministry of Defence orders and other orders in terms of aerospace, the shipyard and other significant areas.

We should invest in our small manufacturing base. There seems to be an emphasis on fintech, which is very important, but we should also support our wider manufacturing base across Northern Ireland. Many companies feel that Invest Northern Ireland is there for FDI only. Invest Northern Ireland should be the engine room and incubator for small businesses across Northern Ireland. They must be closely linked to what goes on in our universities. On some occasions, our universities demonstrate best practice, but they also demonstrate some worst practice. We should link investment in our universities with investment in our economy very closely. We need to work on areas that we can grow and develop. That should be a priority for any future strategy to get ourselves out of COVID and to deal with the problems of Brexit.

We have talked a lot about infrastructure. I welcome the fact that the Committee today met the airport chief executives. I would like to see a commitment from all members of the Executive to point out to the Treasury that air passenger duty is a significant disincentive to investment in Northern Ireland. If we are seeking to make Northern Ireland one of the best places for small businesses and innovation, we must have connectivity links. We need to do something about the infrastructure in Northern Ireland. I am talking not only about improving broadband with Project Stratum but about improving our green networks, specifically our bus and rail networks. That needs to be developed across —

Mr Catney: I thank the Member for giving way. I have brought this up in the House before; there is a railway line between Lisburn and Antrim that has been mothballed. Over the past 20 years, at least £20 million has been spent on it. At its closest point, that line is within 400 yards of the International Airport. It could be linked up to the City Airport. There should be a united front to get that line open to serve the local community.

Mr Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Dr Aiken: We should appreciate the fact that even 10% of the money for the much-vaunted Boris bridge would transform our infrastructure in Northern Ireland.

Another significant area that we need to look at is our energy structure and policy. Our party is committed to zero net carbon by 2035. Given what is happening in the rest of our nation as it pushes towards electric vehicles and improvements in our green economy, that offers our manufacturing sector and our research and development sector another incentive to grow.

I cannot stand here without expressing my concerns for the excluded in Northern Ireland, such as small businesses, which are desperate for support. The Minister talked today about payments going out to people under section B. Time and time again, all of us as MLAs see people who are struggling with bureaucracy and forms.

If we do not support those companies, there will not be much of an economy left to bring back when we come out of COVID and get to the other side, hopefully by the late spring of next year.

Finally, I want to talk about our towns and city centres. The impact on our high streets was mentioned earlier — the Member who mentioned that is not here now — as was the loss of jobs from companies such as Arcadia and Debenhams. Now is the time for us to think local and to use the opportunity that we have to help rebuild our high streets and incentivise them to bring jobs back. We might even have small manufacturing back on our high streets. The important thing is that we need to revitalise our town centres and villages, and we have the opportunity to do that.

I thank the Economy Committee, the Committee Chair and the Minister for coming to listen to the debate today. The Ulster Unionist Party supports the motion.

Mr Dickson: Before I start, I place on record my thanks to the Committee staff who worked on the report and to those who responded to it and helped to develop it for us.

It has been a very difficult year for Northern Ireland. We are no strangers to economic hardship, but the circumstances of this particular downturn are unlike any that we have seen before. COVID-19 has put many plans on hold but we cannot put the work of planning for the recovery on the back burner. We must consider what sort of recovery we want to pursue and how we can build a better economy out of all of this. Today, with the start of the vaccination campaign, we have a glimmer of hope on the horizon, and even better news is that the second vaccine is coming on stream.

Our report raises six key themes, and I would like to speak briefly about each of those. The first is technology and digital infrastructure, and 2020 has shown us the possibility of working remotely. More has been done online, but not everything. Day-to-day social interaction is a vital part of what we do. Collaboration, innovation and those idle moments chatting in a staff room have social as well as economic value in our lives. We are tackling digital exclusion, which, I know, is a Department of Finance responsibility, but it is more important that we address our telecommunications problems.

Project Stratum, which other Members mentioned, is due to begin immediately, and I hope that that will result in major change, particularly for rural residents and businesses. Connectivity has the potential to revive areas of depopulation, especially if many will not need to go to the office as much as they did in the past. We also have great opportunities to build on our successes. The fintech sector is one such example, but we should not put all our eggs in one basket.

Secondly, we need to look at skills and employment issues, which will be key. The Minister knows that well, and the Department has done well to roll out skills opportunities for those affected by the pandemic. However, it is regrettable that, unlike in other European countries, there has never been a culture of support for lifelong learning in Northern Ireland. Once people left school, that was it. Investing in people and their skills should be our most important asset. I would like to hear from the Minister this evening what she is doing to strongly encourage employers to invest directly in upskilling employees. Childcare needs to be revamped. The Nordic countries have much more flexible workforces because of their attitude towards childcare. If we are to be serious about equality and improving the opportunities that are available to all, we need a radical approach to that as well.

We need to look to our transport infrastructure. Certain areas of our trunk road network need development. One such place is the York Street interchange, which is a source of frustration to many of my constituents in East Antrim. Beyond that, however, it is a vital hub for goods and supplies traversing a great part of Northern Ireland through that part of Belfast. We need to resolve that problem soon. Our railways need to be part of our future by offering a clean, convenient and cost-effective way of travel.

Two weeks ago, we spoke in the Chamber about our micro-inquiry into energy. Northern Ireland has the potential to be a world leader in clean energy. We must ensure that it is affordable and, of course, that there is always an adequate supply. The North/South interconnector will play an essential part in that, as will generating and storing electricity as part of our future capacity.

We need to be planning now to divest ourselves of fossil fuels and to invest in green, new-energy sources for Northern Ireland.

6.45 pm

Mr Storey: Will the Member give way?

Mr Dickson: Yes, I will.

Mr Storey: On that point, the Member will know that Wrightbus, in my constituency, along with Energia, has been pioneering much work on hydrogen. The reality is, however, that when you compare the amount of money that is being invested in hydrogen with the millions, or perhaps even billions, of pounds that are required to achieve what the Member is referring to, you will see that we are not at the races. From where does the Member see the money coming? Although I support what he is seeking to achieve, these are big-ticket issues, and they are going to cost a considerable amount of money.

Mr Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Dickson: I have absolutely no doubt about that, and I agree entirely with the Member that this requires imaginative and targeted investment for the future of Northern Ireland. Expanding businesses such as Wrightbus and others that are invested in the green economy and in delivering green energy is vital, because it is that energy that will drive the rest of our economy, whether it is by providing the lights in buildings such as this or whatever else it happens to be. All of those things are important.

Tourism and the revival of our town centres are also key to our future economy. Our report notes that tourism makes a vital contribution to our economy in many ways. It sells Northern Ireland to the world and supports thousands of jobs, but it also creates an internal market. This has been a terrible year for the sector, and we need to ensure that we support it properly to get through this, as we need to do with our air connectivity with the rest of the world, to which others have made reference. I believe that there are concerns about air connectivity for —.

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr Dickson: I thought that I had an extra minute.

Mr Speaker: You got six minutes. You got the extra minute.

A Member: It is his birthday. Give him another minute.

Mr Nesbitt: It is his birthday.

Mr Speaker: He got the additional minute. I know that Mervyn may have distracted him, but no matter. [Laughter.]

Mr Stalford: Ronald Reagan said that, when put together:

"The nine most terrifying words in the English language are 'I'm from the government, and I'm here to help.'"

It is all well and good for Members sometimes to stand up in the Chamber and rhyme off a shopping list of things that they think that the Government should do. It is all very admirable and laudable, but we have to be realistic about the role of government and what it can do. We can all play fantasy by directing business to do this or do that, but, in many cases, the best thing that government can do for business is to get out of the way and let businesses get on with the job of creating jobs and investment. It has been really frustrating — not from all members of the Economy Committee, I hope — to hear the idea that the economy is some sort of abstract construct that exists independent of everything else. The economy is everything. It pays for everything. When Members rise to their feet and say, "We want to invest in this project", "We want to re-profile this element of the economy" or, "We need to be doing x, y or z", they must remember that we can pay for those things only if we have a thriving economy. The best way in which to get to there is through the quickest opening-up of our economy as possible, within the bounds of safety — I understand that — in order to allow our people to get back to work, to earn and to spend in the economy.

Mr Catney: I thank the Member for giving way. The most important thing that businesses need is certainty. The House can supply plenty of that if it comes together and agrees on the economic policy that most of us are trying to get out there in order to deliver for our businesses.

Mr Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Stalford: Thank you, sir. I absolutely agree that the development of sound economic policy is important, but there also needs to be a realisation that sound money is important. When we are talking about pumping billions into the economy to sustain jobs and businesses throughout the pandemic, there needs to be a realisation that that money will have to be paid back.

The Second World War ended in 1945. I think we finished paying off the debt for it in something like 2010. This investment, or this borrowing, will need to be paid back, and it will be paid back not just by me, but by my children and probably, if God spares us and blesses us with them, my grandchildren as well. It is important that people in elected office are cognisant of the fact that this is not talking telephone numbers. This is real money that will have to be paid back. We are running up a massive national debt.

The report that has been produced is a useful resource and gives us lots of useful information. I will talk about where we are at for a few moments, before I talk about where we should be going. At the present time, the people who are being clobbered the most by the restrictions in place are those who can least afford it. I said this in a previous debate. It is well and good for people with the letters MLA after their name, sitting in a palace on top of a big hill in Belfast, to tell people that they cannot go to work, but that has serious impacts. As I said in my intervention to the Chair of the Economy Committee, around this time of year, people on low incomes are often forced into the hands of moneylenders and loan sharks. I prophesy that it will be 10 times worse this year, because people have had their capacity to earn removed from them.

I welcome the development of the voucher scheme that the Minister announced. I also welcome the clarification that she gave — that that will be paid to individuals, not households — because we know that, in the context of this pandemic, instances of domestic abuse and coercive control have increased. I do not want a Government scheme that is designed to help businesses to be used by people who abuse their loved ones, or the people whom they claim to love. The Minister sought £390 million, and she received one third of that. When Members stand up and tell the Minister, “We need to do this, that and the other”, they also need to be honest about the resource that is available.

I move on to some of the issues that have been raised. We need investment in our infrastructure, particularly to the west of the Province. We also need reform of how we do procurement, which can be one way in which the Government can assist business. Reforming how we do procurement is something we should consider. I hope that the Minister will be able to speak to that. However, let us be realistic. The best thing we can do for our economy and the prosperity of our people is to let them get back to work.

Mr O’Dowd: I have no quotes from Ronald Reagan, you will be disappointed to hear, Mr Stalford. However, if you have to quote Ronald Reagan to back up your economic argument, you are on a beaten docket straight away.

Mr Stalford: Will the Member give way?

Mr O’Dowd: I will, quickly.

Mr Stalford: The Member will be quoting Hugo Chávez or Fidel Castro at us at some point, I have no doubt.

Mr Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Mr O’Dowd: Was it John Wayne who said, “Get off your horse and drink your milk”? Did you ever hear that one? [Laughter.] I welcome the economic report from the Committee. As someone else said, this is the second report from the Committee in a matter of weeks. It shows that there is a lot of work going on in the background across all the Committees, not only in scrutinising legislation, but in bringing forward reports in aid and support of the Departments that they scrutinise on a weekly basis. The report is a snapshot. It is not comprehensive and does not claim to be. We would like to have seen more voices in it, particularly those of the trade union movement, because that is an important sector and vital to the economy that everyone is speaking about. There cannot be an economy unless there are workers involved in production. When the workers are allowed to play an equal and inclusive part in the economy, the economy thrives from that.

I will touch specifically on the role of universities and colleges in promoting a healthy economy, particularly as we move out of the current COVID-19 recession into what might be the Brexit recession or the continuation of the Brexit recession. Although we are in economic difficulties now, Brexit will compound those even further. Talks that are taking place in Brussels and London will have a huge impact on livelihoods and businesses right across this island. However, universities and colleges can and should have a central role in economic revitalisation.

Universities can be economic drivers because of the money that is generated if they are located in a city or large town. The expansion of the Magee campus will be an economic driver for Derry. Universities also play a role in research and development, so they can bring tens of millions of pounds into an economy. However, universities need to be supported by government to do that. Today has, obviously, been vaccine day. If we support our universities to get involved in the sort of research that led to the vaccine and in the sort of work that, for a number of years, preceded it, we can bring tens of millions of pounds into society. If we increase our student numbers, we can bring tens of millions of pounds into society. If we stop the brain drain to England, Scotland, Wales and elsewhere and educate our students here, we will have an investment in our economy.

I also want to refer to the poor cousin in the further and higher education debate: colleges. For far too long, our colleges have been the poor cousin in that equation. Our colleges provide excellent academic and vocational courses. When you look at the report, you see that concern is expressed about the lack of vocational skills and training. That has a lot to do with the perception that a good education means going to university. Yes, it does. However, a good education and having a good skill set also mean going to your local college, doing a trade, doing an academic course at a college and becoming a valued and productive member of society. I want to see a greater focus and emphasis placed on our colleges that is not to the detriment of our universities but for the betterment of our colleges.

If we suddenly have an east-west economy, we are going to continue to have a standard of living and productivity levels that are lower than those anywhere else on these islands. However, if we have an east-west, North/South economy, we can do great things. The Minister and her Department have to broaden their mind to the realisation that the people we represent in this part of the island can benefit from working in an all-Ireland economy. There is huge potential in that for our businesses, workers and families. I feel no threat from an east-west economy. I do not see why people see a threat from a North/South economy. We have to expand and liberate our minds to how we look at our economy for the next number of years.

In conclusion, I commend the report to the House, the Economy Minister and the Department as a snapshot in time and a valuable resource as we map our way out of the current economic difficulties. I will end on this point: I often hear Members, particular those on the opposite Benches, say that we have to open up the economy, and then the word “safely” comes along. The economy is restricted because it is not safe to open it up. When it is safe, there will be not be any objections from anyone about opening it up. So, yes, let us open up the economy, safely.

Mr Dunne: I, too, welcome the debate this evening. It has been very constructive.

The global COVID-19 pandemic has had a profound and unprecedented impact on our economy and employees right across Northern Ireland. The latest Office for Budget Responsibility outlook report, which was published, in November stated that the UK economy will shrink by 11% this year. The largest drop in over 300 years is a stark reminder to us all of the challenges ahead. However, there is room for optimism as we begin the long road to recovery, particularly with the vaccine development, as a number of Members mentioned earlier, and we will all have seen the encouraging images of the vaccine roll-out that started today. We must embrace this opportunity to promote confidence, especially in our economy.

The micro-inquiry on our economic outlook has been a useful opportunity for stakeholders to have their say on what the key priorities for economic recovery should be. There are six main themes in the report that stakeholders felt were central to a strong recovery, and they are absolutely fundamental. We must acknowledge the significant financial support that has already been delivered to businesses this year, with the various local funding schemes initiated by our Economy Minister, through her Department, complementing the various financial support measures from our UK Government, including one year’s rent relaxation for many businesses. Those measures have been a lifeline to thousands of employees and employers in every corner of Northern Ireland. The medium-term recovery plan, ‘Rebuilding a Stronger Economy’, which was published in June by our Minister, rightly prioritises decisive interventions to sustain and support our economy over the next 12 to 18 months and beyond.

One of the key themes of the inquiry was transport infrastructure, including the importance of air connectivity. Indeed, as has been mentioned, the Committee had a very useful Zoom meeting this morning with our three local airport chief executives. In fact, there was a stark highlighting of the global challenges from the reduction of air travel. Our airports are operating at a reduced capacity of around 20%, which is hard to believe, and that will ultimately have a knock-on impact on staff and, indeed, on the wider aerospace sector, which is a valuable local employer that supports thousands of jobs directly and through the local supply chains.

As has been mentioned, digital connectivity is another key theme of the report, and it was encouraging to meet Fibus on Friday to learn more about its exciting plans to roll out fibre broadband right across Northern Ireland. That £165 million investment contract was made possible by the DUP confidence and supply agreement, which I take great pleasure in highlighting. The COVID-19 pandemic has highlighted the need for this investment. The workplace has been transformed, and businesses, schools and residents are even more dependent on good-quality broadband coverage to stay connected with friends, family, customers and employers. It can also open up global doors for local businesses to expand.

Town centres and tourism are another two key areas that have been greatly impacted by the pandemic, and, as they recover, there will be many challenges ahead for our high streets and our tourism sector. There has undoubtedly been an adverse impact on many young, part-time, lower-paid workers in the retail, hospitality and tourism sectors, and it will undoubtedly take time to rebuild and recover. However, there are opportunities that we must embrace. It was only last year that Northern Ireland demonstrated to the world that we could host top-class, world elite events such as The Open at Royal Portrush with great success. We look forward to building on that legacy and hosting such premier events through event tourism in the near future.

We need to get the balance right. COVID-19 has not yet gone away. We need to adapt, and we look forward to the reopening of non-essential retail, close-contact services and parts of our hospitality sector on Friday. I wish them well as they seek to reopen safely in the coming days. I commend the Minister for her ongoing efforts during what has been a very challenging year. I know that she is fully committed to, and focused on, supporting our economy as it rebuilds and recovers in the days ahead.

Ms Dolan: I welcome the opportunity to speak in the debate this evening, and I commend the Committee on the report, which is intended to be the beginning of a wider, much needed debate on economic regeneration following COVID-19.

As the report says, business and other sectors have yet to realise the full impact of the COVID-19 crisis, as has society as a whole. As I have previously outlined in the Chamber, if COVID-19 has taught us one thing, it is the value of our low-paid workers. There are patterns of repeated low-paid, insecure employment in deprived families and communities. Low pay causes in-work poverty and leaves families in danger of deprivation.

The pandemic has shown that retail workers are essential workers and must be valued. These workers generally earn minimum wage and work unsociable hours to put goods on our shelves. Sinn Féin is committed to ending precarious working arrangements, which are commonplace in the sector, and I am hoping that my private Member’s Bill to ban zero-hours contracts will be one step towards that. The consultation closes on Sunday, if you have not already completed it. During the consultation period, we heard some horror stories of how workers on zero-hours contracts have been treated. One employee told us that, if he went off sick from work with COVID, for example, or any other illness, there was no guarantee that his job would be there for him when he was well again. Therefore, it is imperative that trade unions such as the Union of Shop, Distributive and Allied Workers (USDAW) are included in conversations around the reform of the high street.

Having a workforce that is flexible and agile to help local businesses to prosper is essential to any economic recovery model, but, in return, workers need and deserve secure, stable and unionised employment. While high-street retailers have suffered due to restrictions, global giants like Amazon have made extortionate profits. In the last quarter alone, Amazon's global revenues jumped to €80.6 billion. Sinn Féin recently supported a global campaign that called on legislators across the world to take action on Amazon's tax evasion and exploitation of workers. The Executive need additional taxation powers to level the playing field between these large corporations and small retailers.

Another sector that has already been touched on but needs attention in the aftermath of COVID-19 is tourism and hospitality, which has suffered more than any sector this year. As I come from one of the most scenic and beautiful counties in Ireland, I understand the value of tourism and the positive impact that it has on the local economy and workforce. In Fermanagh, it is our bread and butter, but tourism has been decimated by COVID-19, and the industry is, understandably, very concerned about the future. The significant fall in overseas visitors has been mitigated by a sharp rise in North/South tourism activity. The reality is that many of the hoteliers and B&Bs who come out the other end of COVID will have been kept in business by all-Ireland tourism flows. That has been acknowledged by the tourism recovery steering group set up by the Minister, which has found that, over July and August, visitor numbers from the Twenty-six Counties of Ireland to the North increased by 200%. The Minister and Tourism NI must invest in the all-Ireland tourism product and seek to build on its strengths as part of its recovery.

While we face unprecedented challenges on our way to recovery, we have an opportunity not to repeat the problems underpinning the economy. We must not seek a return to business as usual. We should seek to advance the objectives of social and economic equality, sustainable economic development and the protection of workers' rights and incomes.

Ms Bailey: I, too, welcome the motion. The Green Party believes that we can build back better and that the key to doing so is a climate change Act, that will transform and grow the Northern Ireland economy from being a fossil-fuel-driven economy to being a green-energy-driven economy. That, of course, involves talking about a green new deal and a just recovery. Climate action can be built into stimulus packages, bailouts and a planned retreat from fossil fuels that reallocates employment into secure and socially useful work while also making the global economy and supply chains more resilient to inevitable future shocks.

To create green infrastructure and jobs, green bonds could be issued directly by central government or through national or regional green investment banks, and that could also help to transform the electricity system into renewable energy generation, rolling out, for example, charging points for electric vehicles, building cycle networks and building low-carbon housing. It is also very possible to restructure national electricity grids away from a centralised model to one where energy generation is distributed among many sources, including wind and solar, but also includes community-owned wind farms. We need to end the subsidies that prop up the fossil fuel industry and reallocate that money to research and development funding for, for example, battery storage technologies and clean energy.

Given how weak the sector is at present, states could buy out oil and gas companies and take their reserves into public ownership, effectively keeping those fuels in the ground. Displaced workers could be compensated and retrained. That is what has happened in Spain, for example, with the coal industry.

The fragility of our food supply has recently come into stark focus, highlighting limited storage capacity, just-in-time supply model and dependence on imported food. The absurdity of flying and driving most of our food from big producers across the world has become apparent. During the pandemic, many have taken the initiative to support local small businesses and bought their food from local suppliers. Economic stimulus measures could build on this by ensuring that large public-sector organisations are anchored in communities, with councils, hospitals and colleges sourcing their food from local producers. The Preston model has been used and has shown that the model can work.

Mr Dickson: Will the Member give way?

Ms Bailey: Certainly.

Mr Dickson: Does the Member agree that we run a very serious risk, once the pandemic is over, of going back to our old habits? We have supported local businesses, grown more vegetables and done things differently, and, unless we get strong government intervention, we run the risk of going back to our old habits.

Mr Speaker: The Member has an additional minute.

Ms Bailey: I thank the Member for his intervention. He makes very valid points. We need to realise that the COVID crisis is the start of many more crises. We have a health pandemic leading to an economic crisis. We have taken our eye off the ball: we have a climate crisis, and we have not really begun to take on board the ramifications of that.

With that in mind, the Bank of England is predicting that the worst recession for 300 years is coming. Two hundred and thirty leading economists were asked about spending money on climate-friendly green policy initiatives, which could not only help to shift the world closer to a net zero emissions pathway but offer the best economic returns for government spending. The respondents, who included academics, senior G20 Finance Ministry officials and Central Bank officials, all gave their highest ratings for climate benefit and economic outcomes to green measures, including clean energy investment and building retrofits. That was in stark contrast to the unconditional airline bailouts that were rated, by the same people, as “very poor” across all their metrics.

Recent findings suggest that a post-crisis green stimulus can help to drive a superior economic recovery. The top five policies agreed by the economists were clean physical infrastructure investment in the form of renewable energy assets and storage, including hydrogen, which we hear a lot about here, grid modernisation and carbon capture and storage technologies; building efficient spending for renovations and retrofits, including improved insulation, heating and domestic energy storage systems; investment in education and training to address immediate unemployment from COVID-19 and the structural shifts we need from decarbonisation; natural capital investment for ecosystems, resilience and regeneration, including the restoration of carbon-rich habitats and climate-friendly agriculture; and, of course, clean R&D spending, which we heard about from Members this evening. The senior economists who were surveyed viewed green stimulus measures as among the most beneficial for the economy, as well as having strong potential cuts to emissions.

Over recent months, the House has had much discussion about a green recovery. Now is the time when we really need to see planned actions coming forward with delivery strategies. I support the motion.

Mr Carroll: I am conscious of the limited time so I will try to be as concise as I can. There is no doubt that we can agree with elements of this report. I will talk about the positive environmental moves, such as plans to retrofit homes as part of recognising the serious climate emergency that we face. Much of the report is aspirational and without concrete detail. For that reason, we will inevitably have to wait for the proposals in order to scrutinise them properly.

That said, considering the detail in the report and the way in which it is being presented as a benchmark policy by the Committee for the Economy, some 10 months into the pandemic, it is fairly disappointing how low the Executive have set their sights and how the same neoliberal framework as was geared towards a bargain basement economy before the crisis is being presented as a solution, effectively, to get us out of it.

The report came off the back of engagement in the macroeconomic outlook micro-inquiry, which does not roll off the tongue. It drew on a range of business stakeholders, including employers across all major sectors — retail, hospitality and tourism — the Chamber of Commerce and the CBI, among others. I do not deny that those groups have things to say or that they should have a voice, but it strikes me as glaring that the trade union movement was not engaged with in the same way. No unions are referenced officially in the appendix or in the meat of the proposals, and that is very concerning. This comes from an Executive whose members, many of them, spent months clapping for workers. It smacks of an approach that continues to pay lip service to the very workers who have kept people and society alive. That is utterly unacceptable in my opinion, especially as the current membership of the Minister’s Economic Advisory Group already has too large a focus on big business.

I do not criticise the lack of trade union voices for the sake of it. I do so because I recognise the deep class divide that exists in our society. Unlike some MLAs, and maybe some Ministers, I do not believe that big corporate employers and their workers have common interests; quite the opposite. I suggest that the labour movement and the working-class interest generally is better placed to inform our economic recovery. For example, we cannot address the economy without addressing the past 10 years of austerity and its continued existence in the form of public-sector pay cuts. This report states, for example:

Ministers can, to be blunt, waffle all day about consumer confidence. However, if the biggest employer on this island continues to deny decent pay to public-sector workers, people will simply not have the money in their pockets to spend.

A similar point has to be made about the claim or idea that workers need to increase their productivity. Reducing the argument to one, essentially, about being productive or unproductive implies that whether workers are good or bad is based solely on the amount of profit that they produce. It calls into question the viability of some jobs. It is exactly that kind of Tory-speak that has led many of us growing to despise it because of the impact that it has had, and will have, on our communities.

Finally, we have the question of revenue. The Executive and the Committee — maybe more so the Executive — pass the buck, claiming that we cannot raise revenue and that our hands are tied. I consider myself a James Connolly socialist who wants to see a socialist Ireland. I do not doubt the problems of partition or the nefarious role of Westminster in our affairs. However, considering that the DUP and Sinn Féin spent the last decade arguing for tax cuts for the wealthy and for corporation tax to be lowered, which would have stripped hundreds of millions of pounds from our block grant, it is simply unacceptable to say that there is nothing we can do.

The Executive need to shift the focus of their economic policy. They need to urgently do the opposite of what they have done for the last 10 years. They need to reject austerity, fight to tax the rich and do everything in their control to reverse wealth inequality, including lifting the cap on rates for high earners and wholeheartedly rejecting the privatisation of public services and the continued wasted expenditure that that creates. None of this seems to be in the report in front of us or in the mindset of the Committee for the Economy. I would welcome the Committee including that in future reports or in amendments to this one.

Mr Speaker: That concludes contributions from Members. I invite the Economy Minister, Diane Dodds, to respond to the debate. The Minister has 15 minutes.

Mrs Dodds (The Minister for the Economy): Colleagues, I am grateful for the opportunity to respond to the debate, and I thank the Committee for this important work.

When devolution was restored earlier this year, many of us thought that the mandate would be dominated by the end of the transition period and establishing our new relationship with the EU and wider world. None of us could have predicted the enormous shock that would be delivered to our economy as a result of COVID-19. Since early in this pandemic, I have been warning that this was not only a health crisis but an economic one.

It has brought huge challenges to businesses and job losses for workers. That impact, unfortunately, is being felt most acutely by part-time workers, young workers and low-paid workers, many of whom are female. Again, that is why I have consistently warned of the impact of a cycle of restrictions and lockdowns and made it clear that, irrespective of what level of grant is available, it will not compensate for the loss of earnings or protect every job.

Recovering from the pandemic will require a Herculean effort, but I and my Department are determined to use the disruption as an opportunity to refocus and rebuild, concentrating on growth areas of the economy and on sectors in which new jobs will be created in the coming years. Many Members indicated that we will need to stimulate the high street, and I am looking forward to rolling out in the new year the high street stimulus scheme, which I hope will support Northern Ireland shops, businesses and jobs.

The report quite rightly identifies Brexit as being a major challenge. Unfettered access to our biggest market and freedom to trade within the UK's internal market are hugely important. I note the agreement announced today, but I will resist comment until we see the details.

Throughout all of this during the past year, I have been hugely impressed by the resilience and determination of our tech sector. Northern Ireland is a global leader in cybersecurity, fintech and legal tech, but we can also lead the way in life and health sciences, advanced manufacturing and clean energy. The Economic Advisory Group will continue to advise me and my officials on where else it sees opportunities for Northern Ireland in the global economy.

To capitalise on those opportunities, we need to be flexible and quick to respond. We must focus on the here and now but with an eye to the future. I understand the Committee's desire for a long-term economic strategy, but I question whether producing more long-term, strategic plans, stretching many, many years ahead, is the most sensible thing to do when technological advances are happening so quickly and changes to our way of life have accelerated so quickly. I have often said that COVID-19 is a clear demonstration of that. It has been both a disruptor and an accelerator for the economy. The process of digitisation has proceeded at a pace that perhaps in other circumstances would have taken years, not months.

Mr Storey: Will the Minister give way?

Mrs Dodds: I will give way this once, but I have —.

Mr Storey: On that very point, the Minister is well aware that a company in Ballycastle in my constituency has launched a new air sterilisation product and therefore taken advantage of an opportunity. The company also has a cross-border element, in that it has joined up with other companies in the Irish Republic. Will she welcome that innovation, which proves that, although there have been many challenges, there have also been opportunities for businesses, with many rising to the challenge of the opportunity presented to them?

Mrs Dodds: I absolutely will. I commend that company, and I look forward to visiting it in the near future. It is a really classic example of entrepreneurship, innovation and support from our universities working together to create a new product for the time that we are in.

The Assembly is littered with long-term, glossy strategies that sit on a shelf only to be made redundant as they are overtaken by events. I must say that I favour shorter, more-focused plans that allow us to be more agile in our response.

I caution strongly against the Committee report's view that having greater tax-raising and revenue-raising powers would enable us to plan for the longer term, and with greater certainty. We must be very careful about which additional powers we seek and be clear on what we would do with such powers, if they were devolved. Devolving and using tax-raising powers would, as we all know, have to be offset against our significant subvention from Westminster. That would come at an enormous financial cost to the block grant. Anyone who thinks that now is the time to increase the level of taxation on hard-working families or struggling business is completely detached from the reality in our community across Northern Ireland.

Considerable work has already been undertaken to assist businesses in their recovery. Earlier this year, I set out my vision for economic recovery in 'Rebuilding a Stronger Economy'. That paper sets out a short- to medium-term plan for recovery. I have also brought forward a number of initiatives. In addition to the various financial business support schemes, I have launched supports for digital capability and a scheme to keep apprentices in jobs, and I have announced financial planning grants and a high street stimulus plan to help us exit the period of restriction and deliver a shot in the arm for our economy as we firmly enter our recovery phase.

I understand the Committee's concerns that sometimes the delivery of these schemes is slower than some of us would like, but the Chamber would rightly be the first to hold my Department to account when mistakes are made. I note that the report calls for decisions to be taken more quickly and the adoption of a less risk-averse approach. However, I caution that we are in charge of taxpayers' money, and it is important that reasonable requirements are in place to ensure that funding is directed to those who need it most and to safeguard against fraud and error.

The report makes a number of recommendations. While I cannot respond to them all now, I would like to address some of the key themes. The world of work has changed beyond recognition. As the report points out, we are more reliant than ever on our technology infrastructure. Our everyday home lives have become intertwined with our work lives. We have all enjoyed watching our colleagues dealing with unruly children during important Zoom calls, delivering, perhaps, their most perceptive insights when they think that the mute button is still on. Thankfully, it is no longer seen as unprofessional but as part and parcel of how we work in 2020.

However, working from home has been extremely difficult for some, especially in rural areas, let down continuously by their broadband connections, creating stress and frustration. The House is aware that, only a matter of weeks ago, I announced the awarding of a £165 million contract to Fibrus Networks. Many of the contributions today have recognised the importance of that connectivity. It will transform the landscape for many of our citizens and businesses, but primarily across rural areas of Northern Ireland, and I welcome that. Broadband connectivity has always been important, but the pandemic and the restrictions that we have all had to live under have stressed its importance over and over again. The project is vital to our recovery and represents a considerable step towards bringing next-generation broadband services to the people who need them most.

Whilst working from home has been an option for many of us, for others it has not been possible. Restrictions have seen businesses closed to the public and staff furloughed. Many of these businesses have not been able to reopen, and employees will lose their jobs. They will need our help to retrain and to develop new skills to maximise their exposure to the jobs market. Many Members have mentioned this impact of COVID, and we are working on a skills bridge programme for our manufacturing sector, as well as our apprenticeship programmes.

The Committee's report is correct in that a flexible, agile and skilled workforce will be essential to our economic recovery. As members of the Committee know, I am a firm supporter of investing in skills. I will very shortly be laying out our new approach to skills, a key element of which will be a skills system that addresses inequalities, providing everyone with access to education and training opportunities that will enable them to fulfil their potential. I look forward to working with the Committee in addressing the skills gaps and, indeed, the gaps in skills funding. It would be a tremendous testimony to the work of the Minister and Committee if we could make sure that we restored skills funding in Northern Ireland to its 2012 levels.

In response to Mr O'Dowd's comment, I say that skills are about research and development. Yesterday, I was speaking to the vice chancellor of Queen's University, which is now noted as one of the best universities in the whole of the United Kingdom for its entrepreneurial activity. Investors tell me that that link between academia and industry is a reason to come and invest in Northern Ireland.

We need that kind of approach, which allows us to look at research and innovation as essential to the development of the economy.

7.30 pm

I want to address another remark that Mr O'Dowd made about the further education sector, which he said was perhaps the poor relation in the education sector. I just want to put on the record that, very shortly, I will open new further education colleges in Banbridge and Armagh. I look forward to opening the new further education college in Enniskillen as part of the South West College. Just last week, I announced an investment of £45 million in a new further education college in Coleraine and the tender for the contract for the new Ballymena further education college. I would like to think that, in Craigavon, after the legal case is settled, we will see the new £50 million further education college there. I hope that that demonstrates to the House that further education is something that we are incredibly proud of. We want to invest in it, we are investing in it, and it is nobody's poor relation.

Connectivity was mentioned by many Members. I know that connectivity is key to economic success. I assure Members that I have been using my influence on it. I spoke recently to the people doing the Union connectivity review, and I have just secured £2 million to support connectivity and an air routes fund.

We had some observations about tourism and hospitality and how they have been so devastatingly impacted by COVID-19. Our tourism recovery steering group already has a draft report. I hope to work, as a matter of priority, with the sector as demand for travel returns and as we can see, with the roll-out of the vaccine, a more normal approach to our everyday life and to our holiday and tourism plans.

We have secured an additional £12 million in funding in order to encourage consumer confidence and stimulate demand. That is an area that we intend to focus on in the new year in order to reboot and renew that really important part of the community.

The green recovery was mentioned. Many in the House will have heard me speak time and again of the importance of the green recovery to Northern Ireland, the economic opportunity that we will have in clean energy and the commitment to ensure that at least 70% of our electricity by 2030 is generated from renewables. That is a huge commitment, but it is a whole-Executive commitment because it will also require sensible planning decisions to allow those commitments to be fulfilled. Economic recovery is not for just the Department for the Economy; it is for the Executive, and it will require cross-party and cross-departmental working in the Executive if we are to be effective with our economic recovery.

I thank the Committee for publishing the report. An effective Committee needs to strike a balance between supporting a Minister and holding a Minister to account for the decisions that they make. I trust that, as we plot our way through the coming months, the Committee will continue to play a constructive role and will work with the Department. We will get through this, and we will emerge more determined and more focused than ever before, and we will develop an economy that is fit for Northern Ireland's second century.

Ms McLaughlin (The Deputy Chairperson of the Committee for the Economy): I am pleased, on behalf of the Economy Committee, to make a winding-up speech on this important debate, which seeks to map out key issues for the Minister and Executive to consider and to incorporate into their planning for economic recovery and to build back better.

The Committee has proactively engaged with the Minister and risen to the challenge of ensuring that the Committee and stakeholders play a key role in the policy development process, and it will continue to do so. I thank the Minister and all the Members who contributed for their participation today. I also thank the many stakeholders who contributed their views to the Committee's special report through an online discussion event, as well as the Committee team for its work.

I will now make a very brief comment on behalf of the SDLP. I wish to stress the extent to which the proposals from stakeholders are aligned to my party's policies. The SDLP's recipe for economic recovery and progress involves investment in our energy sector, broadband, transport, childcare, renewing and saving our traditional urban centres amidst the crisis that they are suffering, and protecting our locally owned and independent businesses.

We believe in investing in the future by investing in the infrastructure and skills development that will build our productivity. It is only by improving our productivity that we will create the economic success and wealth that our society so desperately needs. Investing in the technologies of the future rather than the fossil fuel industries of the past will see our society prosper. That involves commitments to renewable energy sources, including hydrogen and geothermal as well as wind and solar. It involves building a world-class health sciences sector. It involves not just using the most advanced technologies but having our universities, colleges and businesses develop those most advanced technologies. In short, the recommendations from the micro-inquiry are, to a very large extent, the same as the policies that the SDLP has produced in the last few months.

A Member: Will the Member give way?

Ms McLaughlin: I have only 10 minutes and have a lot of Members' contributions to get through; I am sorry.

It will come as no surprise that I warmly welcome the recommendations and hope that all parties will do so and that our Executive will work together to implement them.

I will now reflect on Members' comments. Kicking off the debate was my Foyle constituency colleague Gary Middleton. Gary concentrated his observations on the impact that COVID-19 has had on our high streets and town centres. He addressed the issues of low-paid workers, particularly in the retail, tourism and hospitality sector. He highlighted that, significantly, a large number of those low-paid workers are female and part-time. He also raised a number of constructive themes regarding telecoms and mentioned Project Stratum and the confidence and supply money that went towards developing and rolling out that project. He talked about transport infrastructure and referred to the importance of air connectivity to developing and growing our markets in Northern Ireland.

Next, Pat Catney my party colleague talked about productivity. He concentrated on how essential building productivity is to growing our economy. He talked about skills development and indicated that low productivity also reflects low incomes and lower skills, mentioning in particular the agri-food and retail sectors. He indicated that, in order to develop our productivity, we need to concentrate on skills development and that that should be done through our universities. He indicated that help is required for sectors that have been disproportionately affected by COVID-19, mentioning the help and support needed by young people, women and people in the BAME community. Pat also raised the issue of areas being left behind and the need to level up right across Northern Ireland.

Steve Aiken brought some Royal Navy comparisons to the table. He talked about the manufacturing industry, particularly our indigenous manufacturing industry, being the engine room of our economy. I agree with him. Although I do not have the flair for Royal Navy comparisons, I heard it very much from his comments. He also talked about improving our railway and connectivity infrastructure and about the energy strategy.

He finished his comments by talking about businesses that have been excluded from any support and how desperately they need some of the support packages that have been delivered to be redressed so that they, too, can be supported and be here for us all in the future.

Stewart Dickson — the birthday boy — said that Northern Ireland is no stranger to economic hardship. He also said that this is an important moment to build back better and stronger. He spoke about the six themes that are contained in the macroeconomic report and concentrated on skills and employment. He indicated his regret that there is a lack of lifelong learning opportunities in our economy and said that we should address that. He indicated that that was being addressed in many areas but that we need to make sure that it is taken forward. He spoke about connectivity and railways that are green, clean, convenient and cost-effective. That was a theme that we heard from many of the contributors to the debate.

Next up was Christopher Stafford, who threw in a wee dose of reality. He poured down on everybody's parade —.

Dr Aiken: That is Christopher. [Laughter.] My apologies, Mr Speaker.

Ms McLaughlin: He asked who would pay for it all and told us that everybody should just get out of the way and let businesses crack on and start to do what they do best, which is create a healthy economic environment and allow innovation. He also discussed the need for businesses to be allowed to open up and said that that was the best way to get the economy back on its feet. Unfortunately, Mr Stafford said that he has had many sleepless nights because he is worried about the national debt and who will pay for it. Will it be him, his weans or his grandchildren? He just did not know, but he knew that somebody would have to pay for it.

John O'Dowd concentrated his remarks on the report. He indicated that it is just a snapshot and contains themes for further discussion and debate. It is certainly not "oven-ready". We know what that means; it does not mean oven-ready. It was just a snapshot and a look at how we can build back better. He indicated that he was disappointed at the lack of input from trade unions and how important listening to the voice of workers will be in rebuilding the economy. He discussed the role of universities and further education and said that they are central levers and key drivers for economic recovery. He indicated that Brexit would compound what is an already very damaged economy and spoke about the need for an increase in R&D and student numbers and a greater emphasis on vocational training. He also talked about the all-island economy but said that it should be North/South and east-west. An all-island economy will bring us all opportunities.

Gordon Dunne told us about the 11% shrinkage in the economy but urged optimism. He said that today was a day to be optimistic because the roll-out of the vaccine had started. Although our hearts sank with the 11% shrinking of the economy, there are reasons to be optimistic. He acknowledged the significant financial support that has been received to date by businesses and employees and welcomed that. He expressed pride in the £165 million investment in Project Stratum and —

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is almost up.

Ms McLaughlin: — said that that had come from the confidence and supply agreement.

Jemma Dolan — I thought that you were from Derry because you said that you are from the greatest place in Ireland. You are not.

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Ms McLaughlin: Sorry. [Laughter.] I apologise. I did not get through everybody's contributions. It was a good debate. Minister, thank you for joining us and giving us your time.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly welcomes the Committee for the Economy's special report [NIA 56/17-22] providing evidence on how the economy has been impacted as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic, and ideas on how to rebuild it better; supports the development of cross-departmental plans to boost our economic, health and social well-being, by investing in infrastructure, skills, manufacturing and industry; recognises that collaboration across government is vital and will translate into social progress where people, communities and high streets thrive and prosper, and where good jobs are created along with the skills and networks needed to raise productivity and earnings; and calls on the Minister for the Economy, and her Executive colleagues, to use this evidence in planning our economic recovery and future.

£165M Broadband Improvement Contract Awarded to Fibrus Networks Ltd

Published at 12.01 am on Wednesday 18 November 2020.

Mrs Dodds (The Minister for the Economy): Today I announced the contract for the delivery of Project Stratum has been awarded to Fibrus Networks Ltd.

Project Stratum represents a £150million investment as a result of the confidence and supply arrangement, from the Department for the Economy, alongside £15million by the Department of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs, as well as a substantial investment by Fibrus in network build costs. The project aims to bring next generation broadband services to premises across Northern Ireland currently unable to access speeds of 30 megabits per second or greater.

After a competitive and very robust procurement process, I am pleased to announce that the contract has been awarded to Fibrus. This announcement means that we are one step closer to bringing next generation broadband services to those businesses and people who need it most. Fibrus proposes a full fibre solution, capable of offering speeds of up to 1 gigabit per second to almost 97% of premises in the target intervention area. Deployment of the new infrastructure is expected to commence immediately and implementation will run until March 2024.

While always recognised as important, the pandemic and restrictions we have all had to live under have underscored the importance of broadband connectivity. Project Stratum will transform the broadband connectivity landscape for many of our citizens and businesses across primarily rural areas of Northern Ireland.”

The investment of £150million by my Department, combined with £15million from DAERA and the investment by Fibrus in the project, will deliver gigabit-capable broadband infrastructure to more than 76,000 premises in the intervention area. My Department will work closely with the supplier and, through continued engagement with DCMS, will deliver infrastructure to serve all premises in the target intervention area, including those not currently in scope, as soon as possible.”

This is a welcome announcement which will enable the Department to work with Fibrus to deliver this much needed improvement to broadband access for rural communities,

The implementation of Project Stratum will further Northern Ireland’s position as digital global leader. Full fibre broadband is key to unlocking the full economic and social potential of our rural communities. This investment will enable towns, villages and rural communities to keep connected and facilitate the increasing demand for working and studying at home. The benefits of Full Fibre Broadband are more relevant now than ever before.

Project Stratum complements the UK Government’s ambitious broadband targets in seeking to provide gigabit-capable broadband to the whole of the UK as soon as possible. UK Digital Secretary

With Fibrus on board, we can bring the benefits of next generation broadband speeds to tens of thousands of homes and businesses, helping people work remotely, take advantage of new tech and boost economic productivity.

COVID-19 Decisions

Published on Thursday 19 November 2020.

Mr Swann (The Minister of Health): As Members will be aware, the Executive met today to discuss the course of the epidemic and to consider options to maintain the position at manageable levels in the immediate run up to the Christmas period.

After extensive consideration the Executive has agreed that the below measures will apply with effect from 00.01 am, 27 November, for a period of two weeks:

- Closure of all retail except essential retail that was permitted to stay open in March
- Off licences will remain open, with an 8pm closing
- Closure of close contact services, and driving instruction (not motorcycles), except close contact for Film and TV production; those ancillary to medical, health and social care services; and elite-sports therapeutic services - i.e. – as 13 October- 19 November
- Closure of all hospitality (except for accommodation for essential travel). Takeaway and delivery, and food and drink in motorway services, airports and harbour terminals remain open.
- Closure of all leisure and entertainment (to include all soft play areas, gyms, swimming pools etc)
- Sporting events only permitted for elite sports. Individual/household outdoor exercise and school PE to continue.
- Elite sports events behind closed doors without spectators
- No household gatherings of more than one household, other than current arrangements for linked households (bubbles), with current exceptions for caring, maintenance, house moves, etc.
- Closure of places of worship, except for weddings, civil partnerships and funerals. Remain with 25 max for weddings and funerals
- Stay at home, work from home if at all possible, otherwise only leave for essential purposes such as education, healthcare needs, to care for others or outdoor exercise.
- Schools and childcare to remain open
- Universities / FE to provide learning at distance except where it is essential to provide it face to face.
- Public parks and outdoor play areas remain open
- Stay at home in guidance, with liaison with PSNI on policing and police visibility
- Financial support package to be developed over next few days

COVID-19: Update

Published at 5.00 pm on Friday 27 November 2020.

Mr Swann (The Minister of Health): The revelation that 100 Covid-related deaths were registered in the week to Friday 20 November is a chilling illustration of the seriousness of the invisible threat of Covid-19 that Northern Ireland, like virtually every other county in the world, is facing.

From my last written update to Members I am able to report that the number of new coronavirus cases has continued to decline overall, however it should be noted there still remains concerns in regards to the number of cases in the over 60s.

Hospital admissions have continued to decline, albeit slowly, over the last week but remain at a relatively high level. Whilst today there remains 425 Covid confirmed inpatients, thankfully the number of patients in critical care has stabilised.

That continued high number of inpatients however, combined with the fact that our HSC system is still endeavouring to deliver as much non-Covid care as possible, is resulting in ongoing pressure across our hospitals in terms of capacity and bed occupancy.

Given the further restrictions that we have entered into today, we should expect that the numbers of new cases, the subsequent pressures on our health service will decline until shortly before Christmas when they may begin to rise again. The rate of increase will of course depend on how much Rt increases above 1 following the 11th December.

So whilst the situation remains serious, I would advise Members that the correct mood to adopt right now is one of cautious optimism. While nothing is guaranteed, the progress on a vaccine does offer us hope for 2021.

Yesterday I issued an encouraging public update on the roll-out of a Covid-19 vaccination programme from next month. Members should also know that I have appointed Patricia Donnelly – an experienced and adept HSC leader - head of my Department's Covid-19 Vaccine Programme. I will continue to keep Members informed on this important issue over the coming weeks.

Whilst there is much to be optimistic about this must not be the cause of any complacency, or any weakening of our resolve to keep the spread of the virus to a minimum.

Progress has been made in reducing new cases, with restrictions in place in recent weeks having a discernible impact. That progress must not just be maintained but accelerated.

The virus is still spreading in our community, is still making too many of our fellow citizens desperately ill, and tragically is still claiming lives.

For the sake of ourselves and our health workers we have to redouble our efforts to get through this winter. All our focus now should be on maximising the benefits of the lockdown that has just begun. That is why I sincerely hope we as a society make the most of these two weeks, that we follow the public health guidance and that we stay at home. Our actions today will determine what position our health and social care system will be in as we approach the crucial Christmas period.

There are conflicting views among Members and across society on how best to respond to this pandemic. We must find unity of purpose in making these next two weeks deliver in terms of pushing down infection rates. That is our duty.

We owe it to our frontline staff, to care home residents and to other vulnerable members of our community. We owe it to people who can be spared the devastating effects of the virus. We owe it to their families.

Let's all of us across Northern Ireland carry each other through this winter, doing all we can to ensure as many people as possible get to enjoy Christmas and live to see a better New Year.

The Executive Office

Appointment of Interim Head of the Civil Service

Published on Friday 27 November 2020

The First Minister and deputy First Minister: We are writing to inform Members that we have engaged Jenny Pyper to undertake the role of interim Head of the Civil Service.

We wrote to Members on 26 September to advise that a recruitment competition to fill the HOCS post regrettably did not result in an appointment being made, and that we were working to put in place appropriate interim arrangements. We gave careful consideration to a range of options and the relevant NICS policies and the requirements of the Civil Service Commissioners.

We have now jointly agreed to engage Jenny Pyper as Interim HOCS.

Jenny will take up the role on 1 December and it is intended that this will last for eight months, during which time the HOCS position will be reviewed and the process to fill it will be developed. Once this work is completed, we will be in a position to launch the relevant recruitment campaign to fill the role on a substantive basis.

This will be a critical period for the Executive as we deal with a number of pressing issues, not least the end of the EU Exit transition period; and our response to, and recovery from, the Covid-19 pandemic.

We have agreed that Jenny will chair a newly-established Covid-19 Taskforce, which will deal with crucial issues such as vaccination rollout, mass testing and compliance.

As set out in New Decade, New Approach, the Executive is committed to further reform of the Civil Service, as well as significant and ambitious reforms in the development of an outcomes-based Programme for Government. This will involve working in partnership with society and across all sectors to develop and deliver a PfG that will improve the lives of all the people of Northern Ireland.

While this will be a temporary role, it is a crucial one at a time of significant challenge and with substantial work to be done.

Jenny Pyper has a wealth of experience in public service and leadership, most recently as Chief Executive of the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation; and we believe she is well placed to lead the NICS and support the Executive through these unprecedented times.

We would like to put on record our gratitude to the Permanent Secretaries and senior leadership team of the NICS for the critical work they have undertaken during these unprecedented times; and indeed to colleagues in all parts of the Service who have not only played a vital role in responding to the pandemic, but have supported the continued delivery of services to citizens in the face of many challenges.

We very much look forward to working with Jenny and wish her well as she undertakes the Interim HOCS role.

BUDGET 2021-22: Funding Available

Published on Tuesday 1 December 2020.

Mr Murphy (The Minister of Finance): The purpose of this Statement is to inform the Assembly of the funding made available for Budget 2021-22 as notified by the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on 30 November 2020.

In line with my legal obligation under Section 64 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 I am required to lay before the Assembly a Statement detailing the amount of funding provided for 2021-22 at least 14 days before laying a draft Budget for the financial year.

Our core DEL arising from recent Chancellor's Spending Review is set out in the table below.

£million	Non Ring-fenced Resource DEL	Capital	FTC
2021-22 Core DEL	11,596.0	1,578.0	73.6

The Chancellor also set out further funds for 2021-22 for COVID and non-Barnett items and these are set out in the following table.

£million	Non Ring-fenced Resource DEL	Capital
COVID	538.2	3.6
Farm Payments	315.6	-
Fisheries	3.1	-
Security	31.2	0.9
Total	888.2	4.5

In addition, the Secretary of State has confirmed the following funding will be available under the Fresh Start Agreement and EU Exit protocol funding.

£million	Non Ring-fenced Resource DEL	Capital DEL (Net)
Shared Education and Housing		28.4
Equality Commission	0.8

This brings the total funding available from the British Government to

£million	Non Ring-fenced Resource DEL	Capital	FTC
2021-22 DEL	12,484.9	1,610.9	73.6

As required by legislation, I will demonstrate that the amount of funding required by any draft Budget does not exceed the amount notified by the Secretary of State as set out in this statement.

COVID-19 Vaccine

Published at 3.00 pm on Wednesday 2 December 2020.

Mr Swann (The Minister of Health): This statement provides an update on the latest developments relating to a COVID-19 vaccine.

I'm sure by now Members will have heard that the Medicines & Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA) has now provided an approval to supply the Pfizer/BioNTech coronavirus vaccine within the UK.

This is a very welcome development and a hugely significant day for Northern Ireland. As I have previously outlined my Department has plans and preparations in place to begin the roll-out of a COVID-19 vaccination programme.

The programme will begin initially with health and social care workers, including our care home staff and we will be setting up mass vaccination centres that will enable our frontline staff to be vaccinated quickly and safely. In keeping with the JCVI recognition for the need for flexibility in implementation given different vaccine characteristics we also expect other vaccines to become available shortly which will enable care home residents and the oldest members of our society to be vaccinated. Further groups will then be added to the programme throughout 2021 based on age and clinical vulnerability factors.

This is the news we were all hoping for before Christmas and my thanks go to all those who are working hard to make this possible. However it needs to be remembered that the vaccination process will be a major and long-running logistical exercise, with everyone requiring two doses of a vaccine. Our rate of progress will depend on available supplies that will be distributed as part of a UK-wide programme.

We will all need to be patient and allow the priority groups to receive their vaccination first. While this is not the end of the Coronavirus nightmare it should represent the beginning of the end. We need to think of vaccination as a long trek to freedom.

Unfortunately this does not mean that restrictions on our daily lives will be able to disappear anytime soon. There is still a very tough winter ahead for our health service and society and so we all need to continue to protect it and each other. However the news today is still a very positive development and offers us real hope this Christmas and into the New Year.

Executive Office

Decisions of the Executive on COVID-19, 3 December 2020

Published on Friday 4 December 2020.

Mrs Foster (The First Minister) and Mrs O'Neill (The deputy First Minister): Today, the Executive discussed its ongoing approach to mitigating the health, economic and societal impacts of COVID-19, and agreed a way forward in relation to the measures that will come into effect on 11 December 2020.

We are pleased to be able to update you on those decisions, which will allow our people, and our businesses, time to prepare.

The Executive has agreed that the following can open:

- Non-essential businesses, including retail and close contact services to include driving instructors.
- Pubs and private members' clubs serving a main or substantive meal that has been prepared in their own kitchen; restaurants and cafes. Contact details must be taken from all customers. Mitigations, that were previously required, will stay in place. Food and drink can be purchased until 10.30pm but cannot be consumed on the premises after 11.00pm, and all persons must vacate the venue by 11.00pm.
- Hotels and guesthouses. Mitigations that were previously required will stay in place, including restrictions on food and drink.
- Gyms, swimming and diving pools can open for individual training, training with a personal trainer and non-aerobic classes of up to 15. Contact details must be taken.
- Outdoor events and gatherings, subject to a risk assessment if more than 15 attending and measures in place to limit risk of virus transmission with an upper limit of 500 on participants.
- Sports events, subject to a risk assessment if more than 15 people attending with measures in place to limit risk of virus transmission. An upper limit of 500 spectators is permitted. Inter-school competitive sporting events are not permitted.
- Outdoor exercise in groups of up to a maximum of 15.
- Places of worship.
- Outdoor and indoor visitor attractions, museums, galleries and libraries.

The following must remain closed:

- Wet pubs and private members' clubs not serving a main or substantial meal. Off sales are permitted up to 10.30pm. This applies to off sales, supermarkets and hospitality venues selling alcohol.
- Concert halls and theatres, except for rehearsals and recordings.
- Nightclubs.

The Executive also agreed that:

- Current arrangements for gatherings in domestic and private dwellings will remain the same as is currently in place, apart from the temporary arrangements over the Christmas period.
- Receptions for marriages and civil partnerships are permitted, with numbers subject to risk assessment determined by the place of worship, or venue. Mitigations that were previously required will stay in place.
- Wedding ceremonies and civil partnerships will continue and the number attending will be determined by the place of worship, or venue.
- Attendees and the organiser/operator of funerals must comply with funeral guidance issued by the Department of Health.
- No holidaying in groups outside of the domestic settings rules – this applies to venues, such as self-catering chalets, which can accommodate large numbers.

The Executive is mindful that everyone has had a very difficult year. The festive period is important to us and we are taking modest steps to enable people to meet in domestic settings, outdoors, and in places of worship. This will apply from 23 to 27 December, and we acknowledge the need for everyone to make their decisions and exercise their choices most carefully over those days.

It has already been announced that during those days, up to three households may meet. This is to enable families and friends to spend time together over the Christmas period. The Executive has today agreed that the three households can consist of two households and one existing bubble. This is in recognition of the importance that bubbles have played in providing support and tackling social isolation.

We will be asking everyone to make their decisions carefully and to follow the public health guidance should families and friends decide to meet indoors. There will be guidance on NI Direct shortly.

We are acutely conscious that this is not a normal Christmas. Not everyone will choose to, or be able to, see everyone they would normally see, and this will be difficult for many. We are also conscious that not everyone has support systems, and that there are some people and families for whom Christmas is a difficult time in the best of times. The Executive, therefore, discussed some of the support systems that are in place. We are making sure that support and advice is readily accessible and we would encourage anyone who is lonely or vulnerable to make use of the help that is in place.

We are also focused on care homes, and the position of providers, residents and their families and friends. There will be more specific advice for the care home sector very soon.

We would remind Members that this remains a crucial time in our fight against COVID-19.

While the relaxation of some restrictions announced today, and the progress with vaccines, have given us much to be hopeful for, we are not out of the woods yet.

We cannot, and must not, forget the danger that COVID-19 poses to our communities.

The behaviour of each, and every one, of us over the coming weeks will determine whether we will need to put additional measures in place to protect the vulnerable in our society, and to prevent our health service from being overwhelmed.

We would urge everyone to work together and be careful at this time, particularly over the Christmas period, to protect those closest to us.

Department for Communities

Additional Support for Vulnerable People Over the Christmas Period

Published at 10.00 am on Thursday 10 December 2020.

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister for Communities): This statement provides an update on actions being taken to provide additional support for vulnerable people over Christmas and New Year and beyond to March 2021.

I have allocated a further £6.5 million to support those most severely impacted by the Covid-19 pandemic by tackling emotional and material need over the Christmas and New Year period.

This funding, which was secured in the October monitoring round, will see £3.5million used to support the most vulnerable in our society to access food and other essential items to take account of the challenges faced at this time of year, which have been exacerbated by the pandemic. These immediate to medium term interventions are designed to support those experiencing food poverty and insecurity between now and the end of March 2021. This funding will also allow for essential items such as sanitary products, given the impact of period poverty on individuals and families in our community. This funding should help to ensure that people do not have to choose between these essential items, and provide dignified, compassionate support for those in need.

I can confirm that £2.5m of the funding will be allocated to local councils for support with food and everyday items and will build on the previous support provided by my department earlier in the year to build the capacity of community food providers and implement more sustainable responses to food insecurity. This allocation will also provide support for volunteering in recognition of the crucial role that volunteers have played in the crisis to date.

In addition, a further £1m is being provided to established charities including St Vincent De Paul (SVP), the Salvation Army, Barnardo's, Save the Children and the food poverty charity, Fareshare. This will help to enhance their seasonal campaigns and increase the reach and impact of the interventions they all currently deliver, building on their track record across many years.

The remaining £3million will be used to fund a series of important Wellbeing initiatives, aimed at keeping people Warm, Well and Connected. This initiative was developed through engagement with the voluntary and community sector, on the basis of their insights into the difficulties being faced within our community. They reported concerns around people being able to light and heat their homes, increasing numbers of people feeling isolated and struggling, and the impact of a lack of digital connectivity. The Warm, Well and Connected initiative will target at least 15,000 people who have been most adversely impacted by the pandemic, to reduce their risk of isolation, to improve their emotional wellbeing, to promote the take up of support to address good mental health, supporting participation in physical exercise and the need to eat well. An important element of the initiative will be access to immediate help with the cost of home heating for those who find themselves with no other means of support, particularly over the Christmas and New Year period.

The initiative will be delivered in partnership with local government, 29 Healthy Living Centres, the six Rural Support Networks, which together reach 1,500 smaller rural organisations and Bryson Care. Importantly, additional partners include the Age, Disability, Carers and LGBT plus sectors, through representative groups.

I am also very pleased that I am supporting a specific Wellbeing and Resilience programme for the Voluntary and Community Sector workforce, recognising the fact that the community sector at grass roots level have been front line responders since March. We are indebted to them for the role they have played, and it is important that we now support their continued wellbeing and build resilience for the next phase of the Covid response, and for the recovery period ahead.

All of these initiatives have been developed through co-design with a wide range of partners with a view to addressing objective need across our communities as a result of the Covid pandemic, taking into account the particular issues faced at this time of year.

Written Answers to Questions

The Executive Office

Mr McGrath asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what work has been done to address other discriminatory behaviour on the grounds of age in the provision of goods, facilities and services, in each of the last five years.
(AQW 5649/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill (The First Minister and deputy First Minister): We refer the Member to the answer provided to AQW 5551/17-22.

Ms Anderson asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, following the Executive announcement that those who work from home should work from home, whether all officials and staff members in their Department, who can work from home, are working from home.
(AQW 9127/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: The NI Executive guidance states 'Work from home unless unable to do so'. The position within The Executive Office is kept under review by line managers on an ongoing basis and this confirms that staff are acting in accordance with the guidance.

Ms Armstrong asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the work of the Historical Institutional Abuse Interim Advocate.
(AQO 974/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: Since the Interim Advocate took up his post in August 2019 he has played an important role in promoting the interests of victims and survivors.

His work has included putting forward the views of victims and survivors on improvements to the legislation and advising on procedures for the Redress Board.

The Office of the Interim Advocate has dealt with numerous enquiries, including over 400 regarding the redress scheme since its launch. The Personal Support Unit established by the Interim Advocate continues to provide help to victims and survivors.

Recently the Interim Advocate has facilitated discussions with victims' and survivors' groups on all aspects of an apology. He submitted a report on this on 16 October and met with us on 20 October to discuss. He has stressed the importance of a wholehearted apology dealing with acknowledgement, responsibility, recognition, and repair. Officials have also been meeting SAVIA to discuss the apology. All of this work has taken account of the experience of other jurisdictions and international best practice. We will consider the views of all victims and survivors and we will make decisions soon.

The Interim Advocate has also worked with victims' groups and officials on the development of future HIA Support Services. We are pleased to say that TEO is taking urgent steps to introduce further services. Additional support is available from Monday 2 November to meet pressing and immediate needs, and we are intending that the HIA Support Service will launch on 1 December.

Department of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs

Ms Rogan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs (i) at what stage is the report of the Fishing and Seafood Development Programme; (ii) and when will it be published.
(AQW 6606/17-22)

Mr Poots (The Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs): The Fishing and Seafood Development Programme (FSDP) is being taken forward in two stages.

The report from Stage 1 of the Fishing and Seafood Development Programme (FSDP) was published on the 26 September and is available on the Departments website.

The final report including an examination of the opportunities for shore based businesses and fish processors is expected early in 2021

Ms McLaughlin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs whether (i) he will take action with his counterpart in the Irish Government to prevent the exporting of smoky coal from Northern Ireland into the Republic of Ireland; and (ii) he will initiate action to ban the sale and distribution of smoky coal in Northern Ireland.

Mr Poots: As Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs I am unable to comment on issues relating to import and export. However, my Department has policy responsibility for the sulphur content of solid fuels.

At present my Department is developing the first Clean Air Strategy for Northern Ireland. In December 2016, the previous DAERA Minister, Michele McIlveen, gave a commitment to develop an air quality strategy. Since then, my officials have been working on developing a draft Clean Air Strategy discussion document. This work has involved close collaboration with other Departments, including the Department for Infrastructure and Department for Economy. .

The Discussion Document has now been finalised and will be launched shortly for a 12 week public consultation in the coming weeks. During the consultation period stakeholder views will be sought on a range of matters relating to air quality and it is likely that discussions around smoky coal will be raised at this stage. I will, in due course, consider all consultation responses and the interests of a wide variety of stakeholders before making any decisions on possible policy options.

Mr Muir asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs whether he plans to introduce a ban on single use plastics.

Mr Poots: In the New Decade, New Approach deal, the Executive is tasked with bringing forward actions to address climate change including creating a plan to eliminate plastic pollution.

An Executive paper will be tabled shortly proposing an action plan to eliminate unnecessary single-use plastics in the government estate. If agreed by the Executive, the plan will be phased in over the following 12 months to enable the necessary changes to purchasing contracts with suppliers to be made.

With other UK administrations having introduced or consulting on introducing legislative measures on single-use plastics, I will review with my officials whether it would be appropriate to introduce similar measures for Northern Ireland.

On a more local front, my Department has been supporting the local charities Keep Northern Ireland Beautiful and Sustainable NI in the delivery of a multi-year behaviour change and education project. The 'Tackling Plastics' project is working with schools, the general public, local councils, businesses and the public sector to eliminate problem plastics. While legislating to ban or restrict the availability of single use plastic has an important role, changing mind-sets and lifestyles away from single use and thoughtless disposal is equally, if not more important.

I propose to launch a consultation on a review of the Carrier Bag Levy in early 2021 but at a broader level across the UK there are important legislative measures being introduced that will have a significant impact on plastic use. I am working closely with Ministerial colleagues across the UK to introduce legislation to promote a Circular Economy Package which will help to retain the value of plastic resources within the economy and out of the environment. Legislation on a Deposit Return Scheme and Extended Producer Responsibility are also being considered, both of which will help to increase plastic recycling and this would be supported by a HM Treasury Plastic packaging tax, specifically designed to incentivise the demand for recycled plastic.

I trust this provides reassurance that I am already addressing issues with single-use plastics and that I continue to keep the situation under review.

Ms Bailey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs, pursuant to AQW 7139/17-22, for his assessment of the threshold of biodiversity loss, or other environmental factors, (i) which would make new legislative measures to address biodiversity loss necessary; and (ii) which would prompt a possible review of the Biodiversity Strategy in 2021/22.
(AQW 9030/17-22)

Mr Poots: My officials are currently engaging with other UK colleagues on the proposed new Convention of Biological Diversity (CBD) targets that are to be agreed at the next Conference of Parties (COP15) event to be held in late 2021. The previous international targets, the 'Aichi Targets', form the basis of the current Northern Ireland Biodiversity Strategy and GB equivalents.

The current biodiversity strategy runs until the end of 2020. It is therefore planned to conduct a review to coincide with the new targets that will be agreed by the CBD, in which the UK government plays an active role. It is therefore likely, notwithstanding further delays to the COP 15 event due to the Covid-19 crises that this review will complete in late 2021.

There are currently a number of regulations aimed at protecting our natural environment and currently I have no plans to introduce new legislative measures. However I am content to keep the option of additional legislation under review in our efforts to conserve and restore biodiversity.

Mr Blair asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs when his Department plans to appoint members of the Office for Environmental Protection in Northern Ireland.

Mr Poots: The commencement of the Environment Bill provisions relating to the extension of the Office for Environmental Protection (OEP) to Northern Ireland is subject to the future approval of the Assembly. DAERA officials are however engaged in preparatory work with Defra to consider detailed operational arrangements, including staffing requirements, job descriptions and the recruitment processes.

As a result of the Covid-19 crisis the passage of the Bill through Parliament has been subject to delays with the Committee Stage due to resume on 3 November 2020. These delays have made the aim of having the Office for Environmental Protection (OEP) fully operational by 1 January 2021 much more challenging. It is obviously prudent to prepare for the possibility that this target date may not be met and to that end, my officials are working closely with their Defra counterparts on a range of issues, including the potential need for interim staffing arrangements to handle complaints from the public that would fall under the OEP's remit

Mr Blair asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs, given the concern in the local farming community around global competition, what work his Department is undertaking to prevent Northern Irish farmers being undercut by farmers from the United States of America and elsewhere.

Mr Poots: I am aware that countries with which the UK is negotiating FTAs, i.e. the US, Australia and New Zealand are major agricultural exporters. I have been clear that tariff protection, particularly for sensitive agricultural products, including those where we have a significant production interest must be maintained. Furthermore, I have also been clear that there must be no diminution of standards for food imports and that the standards applying in GB should be no lower than those which must apply in Northern Ireland under the NI Protocol. I have written to the Defra Secretary of State on these matters and will continue to make further representations to avoid Northern Ireland farmers being disadvantaged.

I am pleased that the UK Global Tariff which will apply to imports from all countries which do not have a Free Trade Agreement (FTA) with the UK maintains agricultural tariffs at similar levels to present for most products.

Ms McLaughlin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs whether the Strategic Planning Policy Statement, that rules out fracking technology, also rules out the activities for which Tamboran Resources has sought to be licensed in relation to Dowra Sandstone.

Mr Poots: It is my understanding that Tamboran Resources (UK) Limited has recently amended their application for a petroleum exploration licence. My Department has not, as yet, been consulted by the Department for the Economy on the amended application. My Department is therefore not aware of the specific details regarding the amended application.

It would be for the relevant planning authority to take into account the requirements of the Strategic Planning Policy Statement should such a planning application come before it.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs, in relation to the announcement for England, Scotland and Wales, what plans she has to introduce an early warning sewage monitoring system for COVID-19.

Mr Poots: The Department is engaged with DEFRA and other UK regulators on its participation in the UK wide programme on COVID-19 surveillance in wastewater.

DAERA are committed to funding a virus surveillance monitoring programme in Northern Ireland and are currently scoping this programme and securing its delivery mechanisms. This programme will be in place by December 2020

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs whether he plans to make the theft of dogs a specific offence under the Welfare of Animals (Northern Ireland) Act 2011.

Mr Poots: I understand how important dogs and other pets are to their owners and the emotional distress that losing a pet to theft can have. The theft of a pet is, however, already a criminal offence under the Theft Act (Northern Ireland) 1969. The offence attracts a significant maximum penalty of up to ten years imprisonment which is higher than that available in other jurisdictions of the UK. In determining the sentence to be imposed, the courts take account of the individual circumstances of the offence including its impact on the victim. I am, therefore satisfied that the existing law is sufficiently robust to deal with dog and pet theft.

Mr Blair asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to detail which local council areas comply with the standards in the Northern Ireland water quality regulations.

Mr Poots: Water quality in rivers, lakes, estuaries, coastal and groundwaters is assessed against standards set out in the Water Framework Directive (Classification, Priority Substances and Shellfish Waters) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2015.

In the latest full classification in 2018 only 37% of Northern Ireland's water bodies were at the relevant good status or better, with each of the local council areas having water bodies below this standard. Therefore none of the local council areas fully comply with the water quality standards in the above Regulations.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs what his Department is doing to fulfil the Executive's commitment to building a united and shared society through the Together: Building a United Community strategy. (AQW 9771/17-22)

Mr Poots: DAERA's commitment to the Together: Building a United Community strategy is to promote and supports measures to address social isolation, service deficits and improve community cohesion in rural areas. This is achieved through the DAERA funding of almost £900,000 per annum for the Local Rural Community Support Service Programme and the Rural Infrastructure Support Programme. DAERA is also represented on the Good Relations Programme Board.

Mr Chambers asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs how many new officials have been recruited to manage any checks that may be required on goods travelling in either direction between Northern Ireland and Great Britain from 1 January 2021. (AQW 9825/17-22)

Mr Poots: As of 12 November 2020, six Inspector Group 1, three Fish Health Inspectors and 2 Plant Health staff have been recruited in relation to checks that may be required on goods travelling from Great Britain to Northern Ireland. Further appointments to veterinary and inspectorate posts within the Veterinary Service Portal Branch and Plant Health Division are expected in coming weeks.

No additional checks or documentation will be required for the movement of live animals, products of animal origin or plants from NI to EU or GB.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to detail the number of instances of fly-tipping recorded since the March lockdown to date, compared to the same period in 2019. (AQW 9851/17-22)

(AQW 9851/17-22)

Mr Poots: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to detail the number of instances of fly-tipping recorded since the March lockdown to date, compared to the same period in 2019

Incidences of alleged 'illegal waste disposal' reported to my Department are recorded as such, and not under the specific term 'fly-tipping'. Since 23 March 2020 to date, my Department has received 782 reported incidents of alleged 'illegal waste disposal', compared to 566 in the same period last year, an increase of 38%.

My Department focuses its enforcement actions primarily on larger scale waste dumping activity rather than low level ad hoc dumping often referred to as 'fly-tipping', which is primarily addressed by District Councils (DCs). The increase in waste incidents given above concerned low level ad hoc dumping which were subsequently referred to and dealt with by DCs.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs what (i) departmental; and (ii) arm's-length body spend there has been in (a) Ballintoy; (b) Balnamore; (c) Dunloy; (d) Loughgiel; and (e) Rasharkin, in each of the last ten years. (AQW 9873/17-22)

Mr Poots: The Department of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs and Arm's Length Bodies has identified a total of £1,448k in Ballintoy, Balnamore, Dunloy, Loughgiel and Rasharkin from 2013-14 to 2019-20. This is broken down in Table 1 below.

	2013-14 £'000	2014-15 £'000	2015-16 £'000	2016-17 £'000	2017-18 £'000	2018-19 £'000	2019-20 £'000	Total £'000
Ballintoy	4	4	-	-	4	-	-	12
Balnamore	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Dunloy	163	72	-	-	19	14	185	453
Loughgiel	148	5	-	-	158	49	-	360
Rasharkin	15	16	465	-	105	13	9	623
Total	330	97	465	-	286	76	194	1,448

Due to the Department's document retention policy of 7 years, financial information for the 2010-11, 2011-12 and 2012-13 years is limited and has therefore been excluded.

Miss Woods asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs what proportion of the contingencies fund advance of £536,000 will be spent on setting up the Office for Environmental Protection.

(AQW 9884/17-22)

Mr Poots: The Contingencies Fund Advance of £536,000 granted to Defra on 23 October 2020 will be used solely on activities to support the establishment of the OEP in England. The approval covers expenditure across IT and networking, corporate services, estates, finance, recruitment and other HR costs. Whilst Northern Ireland will not directly receive funding from the Contingencies Fund it will benefit from the setting up of these structures, should the Assembly approve implementation of the OEP.

Practical decisions about the operation of the OEP in NI and what proportion of the OEP's budget would be allocated to work carried out in NI are still to be determined.

Mrs Barton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs whether agricultural goods produced and processed in Northern Ireland will be marked as origin UK or origin EU following the implementation of Brexit.

Mr Poots: Labelling of agri-food products is complex and there are cross-cutting responsibilities across a number of government departments and agencies. Also, the rules differ according to product and destination market.

Subject to the outcome of the ongoing UK/EU negotiations, the Ireland/NI Protocol will apply from the end of the Transition Period (from 1 January 2021). Northern Ireland will remain aligned with EU regulations on food labelling as set in Annex 2 of the Protocol, while the rest of the UK will apply its own rules.

Under both EU law and the law applicable in Great Britain, country of origin labelling is required for a range of agri-food produce, including meat, fruit and vegetables, honey and olive oil.

DAERA and the Food Standards Agency (FSA) have been working with colleagues across the four nations on food labelling requirements and what this may mean for industry and stakeholders after the end of the Transition Period.

On 5 November 2020, the UK Government published updated guidance on food labelling requirements. This guidance, available at <https://www.gov.uk/guidance/food-and-drink-labelling-changes-from-1-january-2021>, indicates that from 1 January 2020:

- Where EU law does not require a member state to be indicated, food from and sold in NI can continue to use 'origin EU' or 'origin UK';
- Where EU law requires a member state, food from and sold in NI should be labelled as 'UK(NI)' or 'United Kingdom (Northern Ireland)';
- Food from NI and sold in GB may be labelled as 'UK(NI)', 'United Kingdom (Northern Ireland)' or 'UK'.

The UK Government recognises that businesses will need time to adapt to these new labelling rules. It is working with DAERA and district councils in NI on a proportionate and risk-based enforcement approach for new labelling requirements on the NI market that takes these challenges into account. This approach will be implemented in a way which supports businesses as they adapt to the new requirements.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs what initiatives his Department is undertaking to promote better mental health and wellbeing amongst farmers.

Mr Poots: The Tackling Rural Poverty and Social Isolation (TRPSI) Framework supports the development and delivery of initiatives to address the three priority areas of financial poverty, access poverty and social isolation. Through this Framework, my Department supports a range of initiatives to promote better mental health and wellbeing amongst farmers and rural dwellers and further details are set out in Annex A.

Miss Woods asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs when he will launch the recruitment campaign for the Northern Ireland Member of the Office for Environmental Protection.

Mr Poots: The establishment of the OEP in Northern Ireland is subject to the approval of the Northern Ireland Assembly and decisions on recruitment will be made in that context. DAERA officials are, however, engaged in preparatory work with Defra and other relevant organisations to consider the necessary recruitment arrangements. This work is still at a relatively early stage, and until the process is agreed I cannot advise when the recruitment campaign may be launched.

Mr Irwin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to detail any funding opportunities that exist for the mushroom industry (i) in response to COVID-19; and (ii) for the purposes of innovation and efficiencies.

Mr Poots: I consulted widely with industry stakeholders, representative bodies and political representatives prior to my Written Statement to the NI Assembly on 30th June announcing the allocation of £21.4m COVID-19 funding support. During those consultations the financial impact of COVID-19 on the mushroom industry was not raised.

COVID-19 support schemes have been developed and delivered with over £18m paid out already to dairy, beef and sheep farm businesses. Processing of claims from eligible potato businesses is ongoing and the scheme supporting the Ornamental Horticulture businesses has just closed for applications. Support for the mushroom industry does not fall within the scope of these two schemes.

Whilst DAERA is unable to provide COVID-19 support to the mushroom industry, I would encourage mushroom growers to consider the range of other COVID-19 support measures as appropriate including the Bounce Back Loan, Furlough Scheme and the Self Employed Income Support Scheme that have been introduced by Government to help businesses.

Further details on the range of COVID-19 support measures for businesses can be found on the NI Business Info website www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk. These details are updated and added to on a regular basis.

My Department is currently providing the following funding opportunities for the mushroom industry:

- 1 The Farm Business Improvement Scheme (FBIS) Capital, Tier 1 is currently open for applications and there are a number of items of equipment that are eligible for grant aid, which will support mushroom growers directly and indirectly. The scheme closes on Friday 4th December 2020.

The objective of Tier 1 is to improve the sustainability of farms in Northern Ireland. It provides support for farmers and growers to invest in equipment and machinery that will help realise improvements in efficiency, environmental practice, animal health and welfare, and health and safety, associated with modern farming practices.

Tier 1 is for projects costing from £5,000 - £30,000 (eligible costs) and is primarily aimed at the purchase of off the shelf equipment and machinery.

Further details on the FBIS Capital scheme can be found on the DAERA website <https://www.daera-ni.gov.uk/articles/farm-business-improvement-scheme>

- 2 The Agri-Food Co-operation Scheme can provide up to £30,500 of funding along with 50 facilitation days to assist groups of farmers and food producers to collaboratively progress a new project.
- 3 Eligible support measures as part of this scheme include Specialist Mentoring, Training, Business Tools, Study Tours and Co-operation Support. The scheme is delivered on behalf of DAERA by Countryside Services Ltd and further details of this scheme are available on the Countryside Service Ltd website <https://www.countrysideservices.com/agri-food-co-operation-scheme/>

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to outline the progress his Department has made in securing the relevant lease agreements for suitable site locations for points of entry facilities before the end of the transition period.

Mr Poots: After a period of intensive work on the Sanitary and Phytosanitary (SPS) Operational Delivery Programme, specific sites have now been identified for each port Point of Entry. As part of the work required to secure access to these sites, the DAERA Programme Team has been in negotiations with those ports through Land and Property Services and DSO Commercial to secure the relevant lease agreements. These negotiations are at an advanced stage with the ports, and the team is intending to resolve final issues in the coming weeks.

You will also be aware that it is not possible to have the full facilities in place at each Point of Entry by 31 December 2020. In response to this DAERA have initiated contingency plans to have a level of facilities in place for the 31 December 2020, thus allowing goods requiring SPS checks to move through our ports into Northern Ireland. This will allow me to ensure Food Supply Security is maintained for Northern Ireland. To achieve this DAERA have also engaged Land and Property Services and DSO Commercial to secure the relevant short term licence agreements for the contingency work at each of the ports.

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs for his assessment of the implications for the transportation of domestic pets within the United Kingdom as a result of new border control infrastructure at ports.

Mr Poots: The UK Government (UKG) has submitted an application to the European Commission, seeking approval for the UK to be listed as a third country in respect of pet travel. The outcome of the application will determine the documentary and health preparation requirements for pet travel from GB to NI post transition.

In the meantime, my officials continue to work closely with their UK counterparts to make plans for a range of outcomes and with a view to ensuring as minimal disruption as possible.

I am extremely mindful of the potentially wide reaching societal impact of any barriers to pet travel between here and the rest of the UK. I have, therefore, raised this matter directly with ministerial colleagues across the UK and will continue to work with them with the aim of securing a satisfactory resolution to this matter.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to outline his plans to bring forward legislation to ban single-use plastics.

Mr Poots: In the New Decade, New Approach deal, the Executive is tasked with bringing forward actions to address climate change including creating a plan to eliminate plastic pollution.

The NI Executive has recently approved a plan I proposed to reduce unnecessary plastic within the NICS government estate. The overall aim of the plan is to work towards a ban on unnecessary single-use plastic in the government estate by October 2021. The actions in the plan are grouped around raising awareness and changing behaviours across the NICS and working with our suppliers and contractors.

In terms of legislation, the Treasury is introducing a tax on plastic from April 2022. All plastic packaging with less than 30% recycled content will attract the new tax. This will have two significant outcomes. More and more of the packaging on goods that you buy will either contain recycled plastic or will use alternatives to plastic. Secondly, the tax will create a demand for recycled plastic which will help to drive collection programmes for plastics that are not currently recycled.

DAERA is also working with the other UK Devolved Administrations on the reform of Extended Producer Responsibility scheme. This means that within the next few years producers will have to meet the full net costs of managing all of the packaging they place on the market when it reaches the end of its life and becomes waste. This will incentivise producers to use less packaging and to design packaging that can be reused or recycled more effectively.

With other UK administrations having introduced or consulting on introducing legislative measures on single-use plastics, I am presently reviewing with my officials whether it would be appropriate to introduce similar measures for Northern Ireland.

Mr McGuigan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs for his assessment of the 2019 State of Nature report by the Natural History Museum and Royal Society for the Protection of Birds which found that we are the 12th worst performing region for biodiversity loss out of 240 countries.

Mr Poots: The 2019 'State of Nature' report was a collaboration between 78 conservation and research organisations, including the Natural History Museum and RSPB, as well as the Northern Ireland Environment Agency. It presents an overview of how the UK, and individual countries are faring, with emphasis on the last decade. This demonstrated that the abundance and distribution of the UK's and Northern Ireland's species has declined since 1970, and that this decline has continued to present, with approximately 11% of Northern Ireland's species, for which there is sufficient data available, currently threatened with extinction..

Following publication of the State of Nature report, the Natural History Museum, in collaboration with RSPB, has updated its Biodiversity Intactness Index (BII) which estimates historical biodiversity loss and how much, on average, of a region's natural biodiversity is still left. While unsighted on the full rankings, it is reported that the UK is amongst the lowest of European countries. This reflects the relatively small size of these islands and the extent and impact of industrialisation and changes in agricultural practice and management that have occurred through recorded history.

Healthy biodiversity and ecosystems are vital for human existence, providing food, energy, sustaining air quality, storing carbon, and supporting wildlife. They make a significant contribution to the economy and to the health and wellbeing of the public. Nature will play a key role in mitigating against, and adapting, to climate change. The declines highlighted in the State of Nature 2019 report are, therefore, of concern.

While our biodiversity is subject to a range of pressures and threats, it is possible to attenuate some of these by supporting nature-friendly farming and targeting conservation action. My Department is working with a range of stakeholders, including other Departments, landowners and environmental NGOs to implement these. However, the scale of action required to mitigate against the key drivers of biodiversity loss, including climate change, land management and pollution, is challenging and will require concerted action across government and key sectors, and support for those who manage our natural landscapes.

There is a role for society at large to help protect our biodiversity, where small actions, including cutting down on unnecessary car journeys, reducing use of pesticides and encouraging pollinating plants, can have a cumulative beneficial impact.

Ms Sheerin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs what consideration he is giving to the Livestock and Meat Commission research report on options for supporting the suckler beef and sheep sectors.

Mr Poots: I have agreed to meet with members of the Livestock and Meat Commission (LMC), Northern Ireland Meat Exporters Association (NIMEA) and Ulster Farmers Union (UFU) to discuss the findings of the research report.

In my statement to the House today I announced that funding coupled payments targeting, for example, suckler cow and breeding ewe producers, was one option which I am considering.

There will be ongoing consultation with farmers and other stakeholders as policy is developed in this area.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs why he declined to meet the Building Communities Resource Centre, representing the community associations of Armoy, Bushmills, Dervock, Mosside and Stranocum, to discuss their rural communities.

(AQO 1134/17-22)

Mr Poots: I received an invitation from the Building Communities Resource Centre on 3 September to discuss infrastructure challenges faced by these five villages, however my Department does not have statutory responsibility for the issues highlighted by BCRC. I did provide a detailed response explaining the support that was available from DAERA and advised that BCRC should discuss their issues with the Council.

My department has made available significant investment to help sustainable Rural Development across Northern Ireland, including supporting the development of integrated village plans. It is important that the village plans provide the catalyst for communities to work with their councils and the responsible statutory bodies to address the needs and issues identified.

It is worth noting that in April 2016 Causeway Coast and Glens Local Action Group (CCG LAG) was allocated £9.6m Rural Development Programme 'LEADER' funding by my Department to manage and bring forward actions to primarily support rural Business, Village Renewal and Basic Services in the Council area. My understanding is that the Council identified 40 villages (including Dervock, Bushmills, Mosside and Armoy) who were offered the opportunity to avail of the village plan development process. Twenty two villages, including Dervock and Bushmills co-operated with Council and received support.

The £70m allocation to LAGs across NI from 'LEADER' is now fully committed and remains on course for full investment by programme closure. The Tackling Rural Poverty and Social Isolation (TRPSI) programme remains active and supports a wide range of activity in rural areas, in collaboration with the Community and Voluntary sector and Public Authorities. I advised BCRC to continue contact the North Antrim Community Network (NACN), which is funded under TRPSI, to avail of on-going support. I know that NACN have worked with the BCRC villages to access other TRPSI funding and meet with other stakeholders and statutory bodies.

I do understand the frustrations which BCRC have but believe that DAERA have provided a range of supports to assist the villages identify needs and work with the appropriate statutory bodies to address issues identified.

Mr Middleton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs how his Department has assisted farmers in the Foyle constituency during COVID-19.

Mr Poots: On 30 June I made a written statement to the assembly outlining that £21.4m would be made available to support businesses in the dairy, beef, sheep, potato and Ornamental Horticulture sectors that had been hardest hit financially as a direct result of the COVID-19 pandemic.

The Agricultural Commodities (Coronavirus, Income Support) Scheme (Northern Ireland) 2020 opened for applications from the dairy, beef and sheep sectors on 7th September and closed on the 23rd September. Almost 11,300 farm businesses were eligible to apply for approx. £18.2M, and during the period 11,177 applications were received representing a financial commitment of £18.18M.

Within the Foyle constituency there were 73 eligible claims submitted with £216,228 paid out to farm businesses.

Support is also being provided to potato farm businesses that supplied the potato processing market and eligible Ornamental Horticulture businesses. These elements of the COVID-19 support package are still being processed.

Throughout the COVID-19 pandemic CAFRE advisers have also been available to provide technical advice and support to farm businesses that have been impacted as a result of the pandemic.

Department for Communities

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Communities when in-person welfare benefit appeals will recommence.

(AQW 6456/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister for Communities): My Department has advised that oral hearings using technology options commenced on 28 September 2020. Face to face oral hearings re-commenced on 19 October 2020 in the main hearing centre.

Ms Flynn asked the Minister for Communities what progress has been made in relation to the Woodbourne Environmental Improvement Scheme, particularly regarding vesting issues.

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Department is committed to delivering this Scheme and it has made significant progress to date in terms of resolving design issues to the satisfaction of local representations as well as achieving planning permission. There are a number of complicated delivery factors relating to land ownership. My officials are currently exploring these issues with local council and other statutory partners to resolve and move the scheme forward.

Mr Beattie asked the Minister for Communities for a breakdown of funding awarded to groups in the Upper Bann constituency, in each of the last three years.

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department does not record expenditure in line with constituency boundaries. Therefore I am unable to provide you with a breakdown of funding awarded to groups in the Upper Bann constituency as requested.

The Government Funding Database is a public database that holds records of applications from and funding to voluntary and community sector organisations. You may find it helpful to search the database to obtain details of funding awarded to specific organisations registered within the Upper Bann area. Please note, information within the database is held according to the registered address of the organisation, which may not correspond to the location of the group benefitting from the funding awarded.

The Government Funding Database can be accessed at: <https://govfundingpublic.nics.gov.uk/>

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Communities to detail the steps taken by her Department to support individuals and families impacted by COVID-19.

(AQW 9093/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín:

Social Security

My Department is committed to supporting people at this difficult time and has put a series of changes in place to ensure that the social security system is more flexible, to relieve hardship and to ensure people most in need get the help and support they require. Full details on the range of changes made in relation to welfare benefits can be found at <https://www.communities-ni.gov.uk/landing-pages/covid-19-benefits>.

Labour Market

As part of the response to the labour market impact of COVID-19, my Department is developing a range of measures including Job Start, Incentivised Work Experience Placements, Opportunity Guarantee for Young People and the Work Ready Employment Service. In addition, Expanded Flexible Funding is available to Work Coaches to address barriers to employment through the Advisor Discretionary Fund, and subject to entitlement criteria, upfront grants are available to provide support to cover initial childcare costs for parents returning to work.

Voluntary and community sectors

I have introduced a range of measures to support the Voluntary and Community sectors which deliver vital services across our communities including:

- Flexibilities in grant funding amounting to £18m to Neighbourhood Renewal and Areas at Risk organisations.
- £4.7m to date of emergency funding through the Community Support Programme.
- A COVID-19 Community Support Fund of £3.25m.
- A £750k allocation to Councils for a COVID-19 Access to Food Fund.
- An Access to Food response and investment of almost £800k to support Fareshare;
- A £700k Financial Inclusion Fund allocation for Councils.
- Establishment of COVID-19 Community Helpline which has been contacted by over 32,300 people;
- A Voluntary and Community and Social Economy (VCSE) COVID Recovery Fund (to be opened soon) of £2.5m To complement this, my Department will make a further £800k available specifically for IT to enhance connectivity and opportunity for online delivery across the VCSE sector.

Full details on my Department's community level response can be found at: <https://www.communities-ni.gov.uk/publications/dfc-covid-19-community-response-plan>.

Arts, Language, Culture and Heritage

My Department has supported artists in a number of ways, through the Artists Emergency Programme, the Individual Emergency Resilience Programme, the Organisations Emergency Fund, and funding to the arts, language, culture and heritage sectors from the Executive's allocation of £29m.

Individuals, organisations and groups within the indigenous languages sector will receive financial support by way of a £2.5million COVID-19 support fund.

Further details on the amounts awarded and the ways in which my Department has supported and continues to support these sectors can be found at: <https://www.communities-ni.gov.uk/articles/funding-arts-culture-and-heritage-sectors>

Support for the Deaf Community

My Department has partnered with the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB), Public Health Agency (PHA) with input from the British Deaf Association (BDA) to provide access to key COVID-19 public health information, as well as a COVID-19 Daily Deaf News update for the Deaf community, who can have difficulty accessing existing news sources. Further details are available at <https://www.communities-ni.gov.uk/landing-pages/covid-19-partner-organisations>.

Housing & Homelessness

You can read more about the actions my Department and Housing Executive have taken in relation to Housing and Homelessness at: <https://www.communities-ni.gov.uk/landing-pages/covid-19-housing>. This includes:

- Working with Housing Executive to ensure that housing support services are provided through the Supporting People (SP) programme and ensuring all appropriate steps in line with current government guidance are being taken by SP providers to protect the health and well-being of vulnerable service users; and
- Ensuring the continued operation of homelessness services in an effective and safe way including the provision of emergency/temporary accommodation.

As we continue to respond to the impacts of the pandemic, I will keep all support under review to ensure that the needs of people here are met.

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Communities to detail the process undertaken by Northern Ireland Housing Executive to determine housing need in a housing area.

(AQW 9317/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Housing Executive has a legal responsibility to assess social housing and has advised that its assessment of social housing need is carried out in two stages.

Stage one is the Projected Social Housing Need Calculation. It is first necessary to determine the Projected Housing Stress i.e. the number of applicants in housing stress on the assumption that no housing supply is available. The Housing Executive then calculates the Projected Social Housing Supply. This quantifies the current and likely future available supply of social housing by adding the average level of relets multiplied by the projection period (5 years) to the number of currently available void stock. This does not include new build completions as this is what the social housing need projection is seeking to establish.

To calculate the figure for the Projected Social Housing Need in an area the Projected Social Housing Supply figure is deducted from that for the Projected Housing Stress. One year's average relets is also deducted to act as a counter to over-supply of new build, and prevent the waiting list reducing to zero.

Stage two of the assessment is a Sensitivity Analysis. This involves the Projected Social Housing Need figure being examined for trend validity, through sensitivity analysis, in order to identify fluctuations in trends and take account of specific local factors.

The sensitivity analysis also incorporates the deduction of new build schemes that have commenced on site before the date of the assessment and any schemes completed after 1st April of the relevant year and before the Housing Need Assessment. Other factors examined in the sensitivity analysis include the average residual housing need, housing market trends, local intelligence, demographics trend validity, housing mix, regeneration and rural proofing.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Communities for her assessment of the application of the policy on the recording of potential conflicts of interest by the office of the Charity Commissioners NI.

Ms Ní Chuilín: The management of actual or potential conflicts of interest concerning Charity Commissioners or staff is a matter for the Commission.

My Department has recently requested that the Chief Commissioner provide a copy of the current arrangements to confirm that these are open, transparent and operating effectively. Any additional assurances required will be requested from the Chief Commissioner.

Ms Sheerin asked the Minister for Communities, given that the pandemic has made inspections difficult, whether she will apply a moratorium on the obligation on private contractors to provide Building Control completion certificates as a prerequisite to payment from the Housing Executive for works related to the Affordable Warmth and Boiler Replacement schemes.

Ms Ní Chuilín: Building Control Regulations are intended to ensure the safety, health, welfare and convenience of people in and around buildings. Building Control Certificates provide assurance that work has been completed to an agreed, acceptable standard and that public funds are being correctly and responsibly spent.

For these reasons the Housing Executive is unable to process payments to contractors, for work completed under the Affordable Warmth Scheme and the Boiler Replacement Scheme, in advance of an inspection by Building Control and receipt of a Certificate.

It is for each Council to determine the essential measures that are required to ensure the safety of their staff and householders and which may enable inspections to be carried out, particularly with regard to the level of restrictions required at any specific time during the pandemic. I have received confirmation from the eleven local Councils that arrangements are currently in place for Building Control to complete the necessary inspections, either physically through site attendance and/or virtually through alternate arrangements such as assessments of photographs of contractor's work, to enable certificates to be issued as appropriate. Any further queries about Council processes or the alternative arrangements in place should be directed to the individual local councils responsible for completing inspections.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister for Communities whether she will follow the Scottish Government's approach by moving away from Personal Independence Payment assessments to a new Adult Disability Payment.

(AQW 9461/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Department's existing contract with Capita for PIP Assessments is due to expire on 31 July 2021. An independent evaluation of the performance of the PIP Assessment Service is currently being undertaken. The purpose of this work is to identify potential service enhancements and to inform the future direction of the service.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Communities to detail the (i) number of her departmental buildings in each constituency; and (ii) existing available desk space in each one.

Ms Ní Chuilín:

- (i) The number of DfC departmental buildings in each constituency is as set out below. It should be noted that the majority of the buildings are owned or leased by the Department of Finance's Properties Division on behalf of DfC and any other co-located department(s). The detail below therefore refers to the small number of DfC-owned or leased buildings along with the DoF buildings for which DfC is the largest occupant.
- (ii) As part of its response to the Covid19 pandemic the Department carried out specific Covid19 risk assessments at all of its buildings. As a result, and having employed a number of mitigating factors, a reasonable safe amount of desk space was determined as part of this process.

All of the departmental buildings are occupied within this safe number.

Constituency	Number of buildings	Office capacity pre- Covid19	Office capacity during Covid19
Fermanagh and South Tyrone	2	295	195
West Tyrone	2	212	157
Newry and Armagh	2	349	227

Mr Butler asked the Minister for Communities what plans she has to introduce legislation to (i) regulate online advertising of gambling products and services; (ii) restrict when remote or online gambling operators can advertise to consumers; and (iii) make it an offence for remote gambling operators to target online advertising at under-18s or families with children.

(AQW 9495/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Betting, Gaming, Lotteries and Amusements (NI) Order 1985 contains no provisions in relation to remote (online) gambling. Online advertising of gambling products and services is regulated under Section 5 of the Gambling (Licensing and Advertising) Act 2014 which permits a remote (online) operator to advertise to consumers here provided they hold the appropriate Gambling Commission licence.

The Committees of Advertising Practice (CAP) recently launched a public consultation on proposals to introduce new strengthened rules and guidance to better protect children and young people (under-18s) and vulnerable people from potential gambling-advertising related harms. This consultation is in response to research published by GambleAware.

Meanwhile, the Advertising Standards Authority (ASA), an independent body, will continue to monitor and enforce the strict guidelines around gambling advertising. The ASA takes complaints about inappropriate content seriously, and accept complaints from both members of the public and the industry.

I continue to keep all aspects of the regulation of gambling under review, including the operation of Section 5 of the Gambling (Licensing and Advertising) Act 2014. I will make an announcement on the way forward shortly.

Mr Butler asked the Minister for Communities what plans she has to introduce legislation to require gambling operators to include explicit and prominent public health warnings about the harms associated with their products and services in their advertising and marketing.

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Betting, Gaming, Lotteries and Amusements (NI) Order 1985 sets out the law in respect of advertising of gambling products and services.

Online advertising of gambling products and services is regulated under Section 5 of the Gambling (Licensing and Advertising) Act 2014 which permits a remote (online) operator to advertise to consumers here provided they hold the appropriate Gambling Commission licence.

Both local and online advertising of gambling products and services must comply with the Advertising Codes issued by the Committee of Advertising Practice (CAP) and administered by the Advertising Standards Authority (ASA).

Any decision to take a public health approach to gambling is a matter for the Minister of Health in the first instance and for the Executive to approve.

Mr Butler asked the Minister for Communities what plans she has to meet the Minister of Justice to discuss the enforcement of Article 130 (Restrictions on advertisements relating to gaming) of The Betting, Gaming, Lotteries and Amusement (NI) Order 1985.

(AQW 9497/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Article 32 (Bookmakers); Article 111 (Amusements); and Article 130 (Gaming) of The Betting, Gaming, Lotteries and Amusements (NI) Order 1985 sets out the law in respect of advertising of gambling products and services. Enforcement of the law is a matter for the PSNI.

I will shortly make an announcement on the way forward in relation to reform of gambling and I will engage with all Ministers as part of this process.

Mr Newton asked the Minister for Communities when she will bring forward her strategic and costed plan to bring Housing Executive homes up to an appropriate energy conservation standard.

(AQW 9516/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I refer to my response to AQW9207/17-22.

Mr Newton asked the Minister for Communities when she will make a decision on the future of the Knockagoney Avenue shops and maisonettes.

(AQW 9517/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I refer to my response to AQW 8251/17-22. The business case recommending the redevelopment of 64-86 Knockagoney Avenue was approved by the Housing Executive Board at its meeting on the 30th September 2020. It was received by the Department for Communities on 6th October 2020 and is currently being considered.

Ms Mullan asked the Minister for Communities for an update on the work at Rinmore Drive and Creggan Heights, Derry, to rectify deficiencies identified in cavity wall insulation and other building deficiencies, including a timeline from the start of the work to completion; and whether a work programme has been carried out on similar work to be carried out on identified Housing Executive stock across the Foyle constituency.

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Housing Executive has commenced a procurement exercise to appoint a Consultant to survey the properties in Creggan to ascertain the extent of the defects affecting the thermal comfort in these properties. The survey will be carried out on a phased approach with Creggan Heights comprising the first phase. This will enable the Housing Executive to identify any deficiencies in Cavity Wall Insulation (CWI) but also identify if there are other potential structural or ventilation issues that may also be contributory factors causing condensation, damp or mould.

When the surveys have been completed, any action required will be addressed via a planned scheme approach. It is not possible to give an accurate timeline until the surveys have been completed, but the Housing Executive are committed to carrying out any remedial works as a matter of urgency.

While a number of other properties with potential CWI issues have been identified in the Foyle constituency, these will be addressed via the Housing Executive's Cavity Wall Insulation Action Plan that is currently being finalised for public consultation. This Action Plan will set out how the Housing Executive intend to address the findings and recommendations of the recent British Board of Agrément CWI report that found incidences of defective cavity wall insulation in our stock.

The scale of a cavity wall insulation programme that would be required to address all such properties would be extremely costly at a time at which the Housing Executive continues to project a significant shortfall in funding for investment in its stock. Consequently a cavity wall insulation programme is only one of a number of competing investment priorities that will have to be assessed through the Housing Executive's review of its Asset Management Strategy and Investment Plan.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Communities how many Housing Executive tenants in North Down are waiting for housing adaptations.

(AQW 9557/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Housing Executive has advised that there are 24 Housing Executive properties in North Down currently awaiting housing adaptations. 14 of these properties are in the pre-site stages, 5 are on site and 5 are on hold.

The 5 adaptations that are on hold are due to revisions to the OT (occupational therapist) recommendations or property access issues.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Communities to detail the cash reserves of each housing association.

(AQW 9560/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The cash reserves for each Registered Housing Association have been extracted from the 2019-20 certified accounts and are shown in the table below:

Registered Housing Association Cash Reserves

Grove Community Housing Association	£1,555,805 ¹
St Matthew's Housing Association	£1,871,502

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister for Communities for an update on the detail of the legislation she intends to bring forward to introduce a regulatory mechanism for letting agencies.

(AQW 9612/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: As I outlined in my recent statement to the Assembly, I will bring forward legislation to the Assembly that will improve the safety, security and quality of the private rented sector.

In terms of letting agencies, as this issue cuts across the responsibilities of other Departments, officials are working with these stakeholders on the most appropriate method to introduce a regulatory framework.

Ms Bunting asked the Minister for Communities how many housing applications in East Belfast have been deferred, in each of the last 5 years.

(AQW 9623/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Housing Executive has provided the following table which details the number of housing applications with a first preference Common Landlord Area (CLA) within East Belfast with a deferral event, for each of the last 5 years.

Year	Number of cases with a deferral event
2016 / 2017	35
2017 / 2018	54
2018 / 2019	28
2019 / 2020	35
2020 / 2021	15
Total	167

The Housing Executive has added the caveat that the figures above reflect the CLA that the applicant had selected at the time the application took place, or the current CLA for those applications that are still active. As a result it is possible that the applicant's areas of choice may have been different at the time the deferral event took place, and therefore there is a small margin of error in the statistics.

Ms Bunting asked the Minister for Communities whether the Northern Ireland Housing Executive has experienced any difficulties in sourcing building materials to carry out maintenance work and schemes, as a result of COVID-19.

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Housing Executive has confirmed that their Direct Labour Organisation has experienced difficulties in sourcing general building materials from various supply partners, and receiving them in a timely manner.

There has also been some indication from contractors that delays have been encountered from suppliers of various products. The Housing Executive is continuing to monitor this situation.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Communities what funding is set aside for the All-Island Local Authority Programme; and how it is spent.

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Department is providing £62,705 to Co-Operation Ireland for the delivery of the 2020-21 All Island Local Authority Programme.

The funding meets staff costs, convening quarterly All-Island forum meetings and the annual Joint SOLACE NI/CCMA conference, evaluation and impact assessment, and programme delivery via four sub-groups:

Leadership capacity building – delivery of two bespoke training programmes for female officers within local government sector;

Brexit – publishing four information sharing updates on practical cross-border information sharing and learning relevant to the local government sector;

Climate change - convening Climate change conference and the sub group to explore opportunities for the development of practical cross border local authority projects; and Philanthropy – convening steering group to conduct research and capacity building on how to prepare local authorities for engaging with philanthropy foundations/trusts.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Communities what is the legislative basis and authority for expenditure on the All-Island Local Authority Programme.

(AQW 9709/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The All- Island Local Authority Programme aims to support local government through capacity building and sharing best practice between local authorities across the island. The legislation authorising the spending is provided by Schedule 2 of the Budget (No. 2) Act (Northern Ireland) 2020, and the Government Resources and Accounts Act (Northern Ireland) 2001.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Communities why the Ulster Transport Museum will not carry out a public consultation on their decision to remove the Model Engineering Society from the site.

Ms Ní Chuilín: The decision to remove the Society from the Cultra site is an operational matter for the management of National Museums NI which does not require public consultation.

National Museums NI and the Model Engineering Society have had a long-standing working relationship, based on a licence agreement.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Communities why the Ulster Transport Museum will not provide the reasons why they have asked the Model Engineers Society to leave the site.

Ms Ní Chuilín: When I last corresponded with you on 15 June 2020 in relation to this matter my letter fully outlined National Museum's reasons requiring Model Engineers Society removal, but to reiterate:

National Museums informed us that the reason for their decision is that they are developing a new masterplan for the Cultra site and looking at how they can more fully unlock its potential in the future to meet long term objectives. In this context they reviewed the relationship with the Model Engineers Society, who for over 50 years have been given free access to the Walled Garden within the Transport Museum site to operate their model engines and concluded that this was no longer operationally sustainable.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Communities what plans the Ulster Transport Museum have for their current facility.

(AQW 9743/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Walled Garden is a key heritage asset and National Museums NI wishes to gain greater public value from it. National Museums has prepared a plan for the next stage of the development of the garden, which is in line with the broader masterplan for the whole Cultra site. The first phase involves research, site investigation and conserving the Walled Garden.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Communities whether there are plans to sell the Ulster Transport Museum site.

Ms Ní Chuilín: National Museums NI have no plans to sell the Ulster Transport Museum site.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Communities whether there are plans to move the Ulster Transport Museum to another site.

(AQW 9745/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: National Museums NI have no plans to move the Ulster Transport Museum to another site.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister for Communities to detail the current number of holders of (i) liquor licenses; and (ii) register of clubs, broken down by (a) sex; (b) age under 25 years old; (c) age 25 to 65 year old; (d) age 65 years plus; and (e) resident in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 9769/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Although my Department is responsible for the policy and legislation regarding the retail sale and supply of alcoholic drinks, the courts are responsible for issuing liquor licences and certificates of registration.

Each District Court provides my Department with the number of liquor licences and certificates of registration that they hold on an annual basis. The most recent figures the Department hold show there were 2679 liquor licences and 485 registered clubs in 2019.

It is possible for the courts to renew a licence up to 12 months after it expires and subsequent year's figures may therefore show adjustments due to successful late applications.

The remainder of the information requested will be held in the registers of liquor licences and registered clubs in each District Court. I believe that the information is held in hard copy format and can be viewed by prior arrangement.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister for Communities for an update on the administration of post-European Social Fund funding.

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Department for Communities (DfC) currently provides match funding to 14 disability projects in the European Social Fund Programme 2014 -2020.

In light of the DfC strategic vision for the future and to encompass the lessons learned from the current ESF provision into the design of our future provision it is critical to ensure our people have a clear pathway on gaining the correct support to moving towards, and into the right employment. The Department is critically aware of the milestone of ESF funds ending. The replacement of this provision, that supports vulnerable individuals, is a challenge and we will fully engage and work collaboratively with all Departments in the Executive and all organisations that represent and work towards, meeting the employment needs of people with disabilities.

The Department for the Economy (DfE) together with the Department of Finance is engaging with the British Government on the Shared Prosperity Fund - this trilateral engagement is at both Ministerial and official levels.

In order to consider the future policy and delivery options DfE have established a project in collaboration with DfC. A letter dated 29 October 2020, was issued to all projects from DfE and has been posted on their website, under the European Social Fund section. All updates or related information will be shared there as we move forward.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister for Communities what discussions she has had with regard to ensuring a transition period for European Social Funds.

Ms Ní Chuilín: Thank you for your correspondence of 05 November 2020.

The Department for Communities (DfC) currently provides match funding to 14 disability projects in the European Social Fund Programme 2014 -2020.

In light of the DfC strategic vision for the future and to encompass the lessons learned from the current ESF provision into the design of our future provision it is critical to ensure our people have a clear pathway on gaining the correct support to moving towards, and into the right employment. The Department is critically aware of the milestone of ESF funds ending. The replacement of this provision, that supports vulnerable individuals, is a challenge and we will fully engage and work collaboratively with all Departments in the Executive.

The Department for the Economy (DfE) together with the Department of Finance is engaging with the British Government on the Shared Prosperity Fund - this trilateral engagement is at both Ministerial and official levels.

In order to consider the future policy and delivery options, DfE have established a project in collaboration with DfC to consider options and develop details of potential ESF succession arrangements.

I trust you find this reply helpful.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Communities (i) for an update on the plans she has to extend the Video Relay Service for deaf people to any service that relies on telephone contact with service users or customers, i.e. public, third party and private sectors; (ii) whether this service would be provided by a single or multiple providers; and (iii) what contact she has had, or plans to have, with members of the Northern Irish deaf community as part of this process.

(AQW 9854/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department is committed to addressing issues of accessibility for the Deaf community and officials are currently developing options to continue to improve and expand local British Sign Language (BSL) and Irish Sign Language (ISL) interpreter support.

In October 2019 my Department introduced a Video Relay Service (VRS) in Personal Independence Payment (PIP) and Disability and Carers Service (covering Disability Living Allowance, Attendance Allowance and Carer's Allowance). As VRS is being deployed across all areas of the Department for Work and Pensions (DWP), DfC officials have ensured that additional local benefits areas have been included in this roll out from October 2020.

The Health and Social Care (HSC) Remote Interpreting Service is co-funded by the Department of Health and my Department and is managed by the HSC Board. It was launched as part of an urgent response to the COVID-19 emergency to ensure that BSL and ISL users can contact all non-emergency HSC services for information, advice and to arrange appointments and treatment. This service provides two local Deaf Community Liaison Officers who communicate directly and regularly with BSL and ISL users to promote the service and report continuous feedback from the Deaf Community regarding its effectiveness to the service's monitoring group.

The Department of Finance Collaborative Interpretation, Translation and Transcription Services contract has been extended to April 2021 and has been varied to include the capacity for VRS to be delivered by the provider, Action on Hearing Loss. This VRS is available to all public bodies listed at <https://www.finance-ni.gov.uk/publications/list-public-bodies-which-can-participate-cpd-collaborative-frameworks>.

Following my meeting with the NI Coalition on Deafness on 9 September during which I had a constructive discussion on how we continue to support Deaf people, I instructed my officials to continue this engagement with the Deaf community and its various representative groups over the coming weeks and months. Officials have subsequently met with several local Deaf organisations in recent weeks to discuss a range of sign language issues, including VRS and financial support for the sector, and will continue to do so.

I assure you that I remain committed to ensuring that BSL and ISL users have the same rights and opportunities as those in the hearing community.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Communities what departmental and arm's-length body spend there has been in the last ten years on recreational provision in (i) Ballintoy; (ii) Balnamore; (iii) Dunloy; (iv) Loughgiel; and (v) Rasharkin.

(AQW 9871/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department's and its arm's-length body's spend in the last ten years on recreational provision in (i) Ballintoy; (ii) Balnamore; (iii) Dunloy; (iv) Loughgiel; and (v) Rasharkin is attached at Annex A.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Communities what additional public housing stock is planned for (i) Ballintoy; (ii) Balnamore; (iii) Dunloy; (iv) Loughgiel; and (v) Rasharkin.

(AQW 9872/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: There are no social housing units currently programmed to start in these locations as part of the Social Housing Development Programme (SHDP) 2020/21 – 2022/23.

As part of the formulation process for the SHDP 2021/22 - 2023/24, Rural Housing has indicated that they intend to seek to develop 14 new social housing units in Balnamore in 2022/23, subject to identification of a suitable development opportunity.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Communities what is the public housing stock in (i) Ballintoy; (ii) Balnamore; (iii) Dunloy; (iv) Loughgiel; and (v) Rasharkin.

Ms Ní Chuilín: Please see table 1 below detailing the total Housing Executive stock in the above areas:

Table 1

Area	Number of stock
Ballintoy	15 Dwellings
Balnamore	70 Dwellings
Dunloy	72 Dwellings
Loughgiel	47 Dwelling
Rasharkin	122 Dwellings

Table 2 shows Housing Association Stock in these same areas.

Table 2

Area	Number of stock
Ballintoy	2 Dwellings
Balnamore	Nil
Dunloy	4 Dwellings
Loughgiel	Nil
Rasharkin	4 Dwellings

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Communities how much public funding the transport museum at Cultra receives.
(AQW 9895/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Ulster Transport Museum is one of four museums in the National Museums NI portfolio. Funding is allocated to National Museums NI as a corporate entity, not to the individual museums.

In 2019/20 the resource allocation from the Department for Communities to National Museums NI was £12.248m.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Communities for an update on the roll-out of the Sub-Regional Stadia Programme for Soccer.
(AQW 9901/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Sub Regional Stadia Programme for Soccer is one of the commitments in the “New Decade, New Approach” Deal and as such my Department has been working to refresh and re-engage with the programme to provide a robust evidence base on the challenges, strategic priorities and needs of soccer at all levels.

A range of primary and secondary research tools have been adopted to inform the evidence base. This work is nearing completion and has utilised a club survey along with discussions with key stakeholders including governing bodies of football, Sport NI, councils and Disability Sport NI. The analysis stage has begun and will inform the shape and scope of the programme going forward.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister for Communities whether she plans to increase jobseekers allowance in line with the universal credit increase.

Ms Ní Chuilín: Jobseeker’s Allowance was increased by 1.7% in April 2020 following the British Government’s announcement to end the benefit freeze.

A person can make a dual claim to New Style Jobseekers Allowance and Universal Credit and if entitled to both, the award will be made up of New Style Jobseeker’s Allowance rate along with the additional Universal Credit rate. This will mean that the claimant will receive an amount equivalent to the increased rate of UC.

People on Old Style Jobseeker’s Allowance can make a claim to Universal Credit if they believe that they will be better off. There are special arrangements for those in receipt of the Severe Disability Premium, who will be able to make a new claim to Universal Credit from January 2021.

People should check their eligibility before applying to Universal Credit as legacy benefits will end when they submit their claim and they will not be able to return to them in the future. For this reason, people are signposted to independent calculators on GOV.UK. The Department for Communities cannot advise people whether they would be better off moving to Universal Credit or remaining on legacy benefits.

From July 2020, a two-week run on of Old Style Jobseeker’s Allowance is available for those whose claim to Universal Credit ends entitlement to these benefits to provide additional support for people moving to Universal Credit.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister for Communities whether she plans to increase employment support allowance in line with the universal credit increase.
(AQW 9906/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Department for Communities has made a number of changes across the social security system in response to the COVID-19 pandemic

It has always been the case that people on legacy benefits can make a claim for Universal Credit if they believe that they will be better off. There are special arrangements for those in receipt of the Severe Disability Premium, who will be able to make a new claim to Universal Credit from January 2021.

From 22 July 2020, a two-week run on of income-based Jobseeker’s Allowance, Income Support and income-related Employment and Support Allowance is available for all those whose claim ends entitlement to these benefits, to provide additional support for people moving to Universal Credit.

People should check their eligibility before applying to Universal Credit as legacy benefits will end when they submit their claim and they will not be able to return to them in the future.

To help alleviate the financial difficulties people may face during the COVID-19 public health crisis the Department has recently introduced additional support in the form of a non-repayable Discretionary Support COVID-19 Living Expenses Grant. This new grant is designed to assist with short term living expenses where a person, or any member of their immediate family, has been infected by Covid-19 or has been advised to self-isolate in accordance with the latest guidance from the Public Health Agency. There is no limit to the number of COVID-19 Living Expenses Grants that can be awarded provided the claimant is in a crisis situation and these awards will not impact any future application to Discretionary Support.

This new grant alongside other changes introduced recently have enabled many more people on low incomes to access emergency financial support and have provided further help to the most vulnerable in society who are facing extreme, exceptional or crisis situations financial hardship during this period. Further information is also available at www.nidirect.gov.uk/articles/extra-financial-support

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister for Communities what discussions she has had with her counterparts in Westminster regarding the TUC and Living Wage Foundation recommendation to increase statutory sick pay from £95.85 to £320 per week.

Ms Ní Chuilín: In March, my predecessor, Deirdre Hargey MLA, wrote to the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions requesting that urgent consideration was given to increasing the rate of statutory sick pay to reflect the true cost of living through adopting the real living wage as the standard rate of Statutory Sick Pay. This would ensure that individuals are financially supported during this worldwide pandemic, removing a potential source of stress and worry and ensuring that all those who are ill or self-isolate do not continue working and potentially endangering the health of others and spreading the virus further.

Depending on their circumstances, people on low incomes and in receipt of Statutory Sick Pay may be able to get additional financial support through either Universal Credit or new-style ESA. I have also made available additional support to people who are on low incomes and are required to self-isolate, through the Discretionary Support Self-Isolation Grant. This payment is available to assist with short-term living expenses and it can be claimed by people who are temporarily unable to work due to COVID-19

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister for Communities whether she is considering statutory sick pay levels as part of the review of welfare mitigation measures.

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department is not yet in a position to provide details of the specific issues that will be covered in the forthcoming review of welfare mitigations. However, it is expected that the review will focus on support for people claiming social security benefits. Therefore the levels of Statutory Sick Pay will not form part of the review Statutory Sick Pay is payable to employees who are unable to work due to illness

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister for Communities how many people have claimed Statutory Sick Pay for COVID-19-related absences from work since March 2020.

(AQW 9920/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Department does not hold this information in relation to Statutory Sick Pay.

HRMC holds standard payroll information on SSP payments.

Mrs Barton asked the Minister for Communities, pursuant to AQW 7895/17-22, for an update of the benefits appeals awaiting decision since 31 August 2020.

(AQW 9927/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: As at 31 October 2020 there were 8,351 appeals at various stages of case progression, an increase of 620 cases since 31 August 2020.

Mr Butler asked the Minister for Communities what plans she has to introduce legislation to permit remote gambling in Northern Ireland.

Ms Ní Chuilín: There is no evidence to suggest that any online operators are seeking to set up their operational base here. Most of the operators providing online services are registered offshore, but provide their services, under licence, to consumers here.

Any remote gambling operator wishing to provide services to consumers here must comply with the provisions set out in Section 5 of the Gambling (Licensing and Advertising) Act 2014 which permits a remote (online) operator to advertise to consumers here provided they hold the appropriate Gambling Commission licence.

Both local and online advertising of gambling products and services must comply with the Advertising Codes issued by the Committee of Advertising Practice (CAP) and administered by the Advertising Standards Authority (ASA).

On 2 November, I published the Outcome report from the recent consultation into the future of gambling regulation. I will shortly seek the Executive's agreement to my proposed way forward and I hope to make an announcement on my proposals within the next few weeks.

Mr Butler asked the Minister for Communities to detail the protections that exist for Northern Ireland consumers when accessing online gambling sites licensed by the Gambling Commission.
(AQW 9942/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Online advertising of gambling products and services are regulated under Section 5 of the Gambling (Licensing and Advertising) Act 2014 which permits a remote (online) operator to advertise to consumers here provided they hold the appropriate Gambling Commission licence and comply with their codes of practice. This inclusion ensures that consumers here will have the same level of protection as consumers in Britain in respect of the advertising of remote gambling.

The protections that exist for consumers are set out in the Codes of Practice and Licencing conditions at Part II Section 3. They include:

- Protection of Children and other Vulnerable persons
- Self-exclusion
- Prohibiting the use of credit cards for payments
- Provision of a complaints and disputes service.

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Communities to detail the total number of pending social security appeals, broken down by social security benefit type.
(AQW 9955/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: As at the 31 October 2020 there were 8,351 pending appeals and details are outlined in the table below.

Appeal Type	Number Pending
Attendance Allowance	113
Bereavement Benefit	5
Carers Allowance	22
Child Benefit	20
Child Support Maintenance	18
Child Tax Credit	26
Compensation Recovery	5
Disability Living Allowance	683
Employee and Support Allowance	626
Housing Benefit	57
Incapacity Benefit	5
Income Support	67
Industrial Injuries Benefit	65
Job Seekers Allowance	44
Maintenance Calculations	22
Maternity Benefit Allowance	4
Pension Credit	5
Personal Independence Payment	5,958
Rates Collection	2
Social Fund	12
Universal Credit	552
Working Tax Credit	40
Total	8,351

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Communities to detail the average time for (i) a personal independence payment; and (ii) an employment support allowance appeal to be heard.

(AQW 9956/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The average waiting time from the date a valid appeal is lodged to first date of hearing, during the business year 2019/20, for (i) a personal independence payment appeal is 31 weeks and (ii) an employment support allowance appeal is 21 weeks.

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Communities what steps her Department has taken to clear the backlog of employment support allowance and personal independence payment appeals.

Ms Ní Chuilín: As at 31 October 2020 there were 626 Employment and Support Allowance (ESA) appeals and 5,958 Personal Independence Payment (PIP) appeals at various stages of case progression. To maximise listing capacity the Appeals Service (TAS) has introduced additional options for case listing. Appellants can now choose to have their appeal listed on the papers, by telephone, over video link and in person. Every effort is being made to increase listing capacity across all benefit appeals including securing additional venues for physical hearings that meet the requirements of my Department's COVID-19 Secure Risk Assessment for public and staff safety which is of course paramount at this time.

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Communities to detail the projected timeframe to clear the backlog in personal independence payment and employment support allowance appeals.

Ms Ní Chuilín: The timeframe to clear the backlog of appeals is determined by a number of factors, but primarily the directions and decisions of an independent tribunal panel in every appeal. Therefore, my Department is unable to advise when the caseload will be cleared.

My Department is working closely with Courts and Tribunals Service which has administrative responsibility for the operational effectiveness of the Appeals Service under the terms of a memorandum of understanding. Appellants now have the option to have (a) their appeal listed on the papers, (b) to have their appeal heard by telephone/video link or (c) to have their appeal heard in person. Every effort is being made to increase listing capacity across all benefits appeals types, including securing additional venues that meet the requirements of my Department's risk assessments for public and staff safety which is of course paramount at this time.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Communities (i) how many staff in her Department are working from home; (ii) how many staff have been provided with IT equipment to allow them to work from home; (iii) for her assessment of the IT equipment necessary to allow all staff to work from home; and (iv) how many staff are furloughed due to not having the IT equipment needed to allow them to work from home.

Ms Ní Chuilín: In line with Executive guidance, all staff within DfC that can work from home, are working from home. This equates to circa 5,500 of the department's 8,500 staff.

We are continuing to make positive progress in increasing our capacity to work remotely and have increased our remote IT access from 680 pre Covid-19 to almost 5,435 devices.

DfC provide essential services to some of the most vulnerable in our society, therefore we need to continue to deliver these key services. We have made significant progress since the start of the pandemic by securing additional IT, to increase our ability to deliver more services remotely, with more IT on order. However, due to the nature of the business in some DfC areas, especially those in the front line, staff are unable to work remotely and are therefore required to work in the office.

The Furlough Scheme is not applicable to public sector organisations, such as the Civil Service.

DfC remains committed to delivering essential services to the most vulnerable in our society and our staff have demonstrated resilience throughout this pandemic in their continued commitment to provide this necessary support to the people who need it most.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Communities to detail the date on which the appeal was lodged for the earliest Personal Independence Payment appeal that is still outstanding.

Ms Ní Chuilín: The date of lodgement of the earliest and still outstanding Personal Independence Payment appeal is January 2017

This case has been managed in accordance with the standard operating procedures.

Ms Flynn asked the Minister for Communities when AQW 7079/17-22 will be answered.

Ms Ní Chuilín: AQW 7079/17-22 was answered on 16 November 2020.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister for Communities to detail (i) the progress she has made in finalising the £15 million COVID-19 relief funding for the sports sector; (ii) the engagement she has had with sectoral bodies in relation to the scheme; (iii) when she will publish the eligibility criteria; and (iv) when the scheme will open for applications.

Ms Ní Chuilín: I can confirm that officials are developing a business case in accordance with Managing Public Money and NICS guidance as well as working with Sport NI on developing a programme that will deliver a needs based scheme to ensure that the funding is distributed equitably, with full transparency and to those who can evidence the financial losses incurred because of the Covid restrictions.

I can also confirm that I, along with officials from the Department, have engaged with representatives from across the sports sector including Governing Bodies and clubs. SportNI have also engaged with the senior representatives of sports Governing Bodies on the impact Covid has had on their clubs, activities, participation rates and on their finances. It is my intention to launch the Fund as soon as possible.

Mr Middleton asked the Minister for Communities how much funding has been provided for the COVID-19 food parcel service, broken down by council area.

Ms Ní Chuilín: In partnership with Councils and the Voluntary and Community Sector, my Department launched its COVID-19 Food Parcel Service in April.

The initial food box scheme came to an end on 26 June and the focus moved to supporting and enhancing a more sustainable approach to help those who need help to access food.

As part of the transition from an emergency response, essential food boxes were provided to households who were still shielding i.e. those who have been advised to shield in a letter from their GP, who were unable to get out to buy food or get food in until 31 July 2020.

A total of 204,006 food boxes at a cost of just over £6.61m were delivered to those most in need since the Department for Communities launched its COVID-19 Food Parcel Service.

A breakdown by Council area is provided in the Table below.

Council	Number of Food Boxes Delivered	Cost
Belfast City	50,627	£1.64m
Derry & Strabane	25,849	£0.84m
Antrim & Newtownabbey	19,388	£0.63m
Newry, Mourne & Down	18,599	£0.60m
Ards & North Down	17,791	£0.58m
Armagh, Banbridge, Craigavon	17,122	£0.56m
Fermanagh & Omagh	14,440	£0.47m
Lisburn & Castlereagh	13,468	£0.44m
Mid Ulster	11,528	£0.37m
Causeway Coast & Glens	7,884	£0.26m
Mid & East Antrim	7,310	£0.24m
Total	204,006	£6.61m

Mr T Buchanan asked the Minister for Communities to detail the timeframe for the release of funding for the Sub-Regional Stadia Programme for Soccer.

(AQW 10136/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Sub Regional Stadia Programme for Soccer is one of the commitments in the “New Decade, New Approach” Deal and as such my Department has been working to refresh and re-engage with the programme to provide a robust evidence base on the challenges, strategic priorities and needs of soccer at all levels.

A range of primary and secondary research tools have been adopted to inform the evidence base. This work is nearing completion and has utilised a club survey along with discussions with key stakeholders including governing bodies of football, Sport NI, councils and Disability Sport NI. The analysis stage has begun and will inform the shape and scope of the programme going forward including the potential timescale for release of funds.

Department of Education

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education what is the cost of providing school meals for primary schools.
(AQW 9243/17-22)

Mr Weir (The Minister of Education): The Education Authority has advised that it is not possible to separately identify costs between primary and nursery schools. The cost of providing school meals for primary and nursery schools in 2019-20 was £49.945 million. This is the gross cost of providing school meals in primary and nursery schools and does not take account of income from paid meals. As the Education Authority's annual accounts for 2019/20 have not been finalised, this figure is subject to change.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister of Education, given the long-term health impacts such chemicals have to the future fertility and increase in cancers in young people, what action he is taking to remove plastics and other items that have Endocrine-Disrupting Chemicals from all schools, especially school canteens and any sanitary provisions.

Mr Weir: The operation of school meals kitchens and dining facilities is generally a matter for the Education Authority. Although not specifically focused on endocrine-disrupting chemicals, EA has considered measures which could help to reduce or remove single use plastics in their facilities.

EA also initiated the Plastic Waste in Schools Competition, which encouraged pupils to audit, monitor, and analyse the differing types of plastic that come into their school environment, explore what their primary uses are, look at how plastics are managed and consider what happens to these plastics after use.

While these measures may help in both health and environmental terms, school canteens are not the only sources of plastics. Ultimately the solution to this is one for wider society, which will require additional research into the long term effects of these materials and suitable alternatives.

Mr Butler asked the Minister of Education how much of the additional £12.8 million allocated for pressures including Special Educational Needs (SEN) and schools maintenance will go towards SEN schools; and whether these schools will receive this money directly.

Mr Weir: Of the £12.8m, I have agreed that £10.9m will go towards addressing existing in-year Special Educational Needs demand pressures. £3.2m of this will specifically be for Special Schools, for which funding is managed centrally by the Education Authority in the normal way. The £1m for schools maintenance will go towards addressing pressures arising in the School Maintenance Service, which covers both Building Maintenance and Grounds Maintenance work for the schools estate.

Mr Butler asked the Minister of Education to provide (i) a breakdown of how the additional £12.8 million will be allocated; (ii) what formula has been used to allocate this funding; and (iii) how this funding will be distributed across the sector.
(AQW 9703/17-22)

Mr Weir:

- (i) The additional £12.8m will be allocated to the Education Authority (EA) as follows:
 - £10.9m for Special Educational Needs;
 - £1m for school maintenance; and
 - £0.9m for schools' contingency funding.
- (ii) The funding will be allocated to the EA to address existing in-year demand pressures, and as such a formula will not be used.
- (iii) This will be determined by the EA on the basis of existing in-year demand-pressures.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education, given their extra duties due to COVID-19, for his assessment of the need to provide teaching principals with additional resources.
(AQW 9858/17-22)

Mr Weir: I have outlined a significant package of funding to help support the safe reopening of schools. The allocations made to schools to date are to mitigate additional costs due to COVID-19, beyond teacher substitution costs, and are therefore for schools to manage within these parameters.

The Department will continue to monitor schools' funding requirements, in conjunction with the EA, as the pandemic progresses, and bid for additional resources as required.

In addition, the following support is also available to ALL schools:

- Public Health Agency helpline

- Education Authority dedicated telephone number for schools who require advice and support where a positive COVID-19 case is identified in a school
- A dedicated Education Authority email address has been established
- All schools have a named cross-organisational Link Officer.
- Information and flowcharts are also available on the DE website, EA website and C2k exchange.
- For statutory settings, the Education Authority Cleaning Service can be contacted.
- For other Education Restart queries, the Education Authority's Education Restart Helpline continues to be available.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) the support schools are expected to receive for cleaning due to COVID-19; (ii) whether there exists a bank of cleaning staff to cover absences; and (iii) his assessment of teachers having to clean schools due to the unavailability of cleaning staff.

(AQW 9859/17-22)

Mr Weir:

- i) The support schools are expected to receive for cleaning due to COVID-19;

Whilst the management and provision of cleaning is currently a delegated responsibility for schools, the Education Authority offers the provision of cleaning to schools, through the EA Cleaning Service which currently has a Service Level Agreement with 401 schools across NI.

Since the outbreak of Covid-19 the EA Cleaning Service has been providing advice, support and the provision of staff resources to all schools across NI, irrespective of the requirement for a Service Level Agreement. This also includes the provision of cleaning staff for schools which request additional cleaning staff throughout the school day.

The EA Cleaning Service has also been responsible for supporting all schools across NI in relation to confirmed cases of Covid-19. In order to effectively support schools, the EA Cleaning Service has established a helpline which operates from 8.00am - 8.00pm, 7 days per week. To further improve the support to schools with regards to confirmed cases of Covid-19, the EA Cleaning Services has now established Cleaning Response Teams. Utilising a fleet of vehicles and specialist sanitising machines these Response Teams will be responsible for undertaking an immediate enhanced clean in every NI school following a confirmed case of Covid-19.

The support of the EA Cleaning Service to all schools has ensured that schools have remained open and safe during the current pandemic.

- (ii) Whether there exists a bank of cleaning staff to cover absences

Staff resources will continue to be maintained by the creation of a pool of people, who have expressed an interest in working for the EA Cleaning Service.

- (iii) His assessment of teachers having to clean schools due to the unavailability of cleaning staff

As stated above since the outbreak of Covid-19 the EA Cleaning Service has been providing advice, support and the provision of staff resources to all schools across NI, irrespective of the requirement for a Service Level Agreement. Teachers should therefore not be in a position to have to undertake cleaning of schools.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister of Education to detail the full suite of support services offered to those with special educational needs when they reach the age of 19.

Mr Weir: The Education Authority's (EA) Transition Service was created to help young people and their parent or carers access appropriate information, guidance and support to help them make informed choices about the future and its aim is to provide a high quality, collaborative and fully inclusive service for all pupils with a Statement of Special Educational Needs (SEN) at 14 years+.

The Transition Service also provides support to schools and works to promote pupil and parent or carer participation in the Transition planning process, working closely with the Northern Ireland Careers Service and other statutory and voluntary agencies.

Each area office of the Education Authority has two dedicated Education Transition Co-coordinators and every young person age 14+ with a Statement of SEN will have a named Transition Co-ordinator whose role is to provide advice and support to the young person, their parents and school, as preparations begin for adult life.

During the first term of Year 10, the young person will be introduced to the named Education Transition Co-ordinator who will support the young person throughout the Transition process.

These individuals will work with the young person, with schools and other relevant agencies:

- To support the young person throughout the Transition planning process and to advocate on issues which directly affect them;
- To ensure that a Transition Plan is compiled, maintained and reviewed on a yearly basis.

- To liaise with and support schools in the implementation of the Transition Plan;
- To collaborate with statutory and voluntary agencies
- To work to overcome any obstacles which may be prohibiting effective and smooth transition

A Transition Plan is a formal document which draws together information from a range of professionals and others within and beyond school and is a 'living' document which will be reviewed and amended as the young person grows or as their needs change.

Post-19 services are a matter for the Department of Economy (Further & Higher Education opportunities), the Department for Communities (with reference to training organisations) and the Department of Health (health and social care related pathways).

Mr McNulty asked the Minister of Education whether he will commission a review of the support provided for children with special educational needs and, in particular, the delays between a child being diagnosed with a special need and the appropriate support packages being put in place.

Mr Weir: In order to address the acknowledged delays and issues within the current system, I established the Special Educational Needs (SEN) Governance Group to maintain strategic oversight of implementation of improvements being made within the Education Authority (EA).

To underpin this programme of improvements, the EA have recently commenced work on consolidating all of the areas for improvement, including their SEN Pupil Support Service, into an overarching work programme known as the Special Educational Needs and Disabilities Strategic Development Plan (SEND SDP).

The Department is currently consulting on a New SEN Framework which will introduce new duties for the EA, Schools and Health designed to reduce timescales and bureaucracy, which will ultimately lead to improvements and efficiencies in the SEN process.

Given this on-going work, I have no plans to commission a review of the support provided for children with SEN at this time

Mr McNulty asked the Minister of Education to detail any engagement he has had with his (i) Welsh; (ii) Scottish; and (iii) London counterparts with the view to potentially suspending the use of examination-based assessments for GCSE and A levels for 2021 and using classroom-based assessments instead.

(AQW 9994/17-22)

Mr Weir: I have regular discussions with Ministers across the other UK jurisdictions. There has been no suggestion or proposal to suspend GCSE or A Level exams.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister of Education what support and consideration will be provided for pupils with dyslexia, or other learning disabilities, for CCEA English now that GCSE talking and listening elements have been removed from the 2020/21 exam.

Mr Weir: Schools are best placed to give support and consideration to the specific, individual needs of their students with regard to teaching approaches and assessment adaptations. As is the case each year, individualised adaptations are made for candidates with additional educational needs.

The Education Authority, through its Pupil Support - Literacy Service, provides support for pupils, schools and parents in the area of specific learning difficulties in Literacy (SpLD) including Dyslexia.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister of Education for an update on the New Decade, New Approach commitment of the reform of education.

(AQW 9997/17-22)

Mr Weir: In March, I temporarily suspended work on the Independent Review so that staff could be redeployed to deal with urgent Covid 19 related matters. I have, however, recently asked for planning work to be recommenced. As a result, in the coming weeks, I will table a draft Terms of Reference for the Independent Review at the Executive for consideration and comment.

In line with the New Decade New Approach document, the Independent Review will cover a wide range of issues relating to education design and delivery. The Review will focus on the education journey and outcomes of children and young people; support for schools and settings; and system level design, delivery and administration.

The Review is expected to provide a strategic and evidence based assessment of the effectiveness of the current education system in Northern Ireland and the outcomes it delivers for children and young people.

The Review itself will commence in 2021, once an open recruitment process has been undertaken to establish an appropriate Panel. I intend to ask the Panel to report within 15 months of taking up post, with an interim report to be prepared within 9 months.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister of Education when he will deliver on the New Decade, New Approach commitment to publish a childcare strategy and childcare budget.

Mr Weir: Resources of the Childcare Unit within my Department have been solely focussed on the response to the Covid-19 pandemic since March of this year. While this remains the immediate priority, the learning from the past eight months will help shape our plans for the full Executive Ten Year Childcare Strategy.

I have committed to a Strategic Insight Lab which will take on board this experience and, with input from key stakeholders, help inform the development of a roadmap for the way ahead. This is being planned for the New Year (work on the Covid-19 pandemic, permitting). It will provide an opportunity to review the assumptions and actions within the draft Childcare Strategy, including the commitment to an Early Education and Childcare Offer as referenced in 'New Decade New Approach'.

There is currently no capital or revenue budget allocated to my Department to fund the Executive Childcare Strategy. Significant policy and resourcing issues have yet to be considered and decisions on these will require Executive agreement.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister of Education how many substitute teachers are currently available to school principals required to replace teachers who have to self-isolate or who have COVID-19.

Mr Weir: There were 9,302 teachers registered as available for work on the Northern Ireland Substitute Teachers' Register (NISTR) as at 16 November 2020. In a usual month, between 3,000 and 4,000 substitute teachers will receive bookings through NISTR.

A fund for teacher substitution costs, to support existing staff absences specifically as a result of Covid-19, is being centrally managed by the Education Authority, and will be allocated to schools based on verified costs.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Education, in light of the decision taken in Wales to cancel GCSE and A-level exams for 2021, whether his Department intends to adopt a similar approach here.

Mr Weir: No. I remain convinced that exams are the fairest means of awarding qualifications and for that reason my priority is that exams should proceed as planned in NI if at all possible.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 8509/17-22, how much has been paid to Deloitte.

(AQW 10022/17-22)

Mr Weir: My answers to AQW 6596/17-22 and 7368/17-22 refer.

Public disclosure of this information would be commercially prejudicial to the Education Authority (EA) as it would provide the system supplier with valuable insight and context for any future negotiations the EA might be required to undertake with them between now and full implementation of the HR & Payroll solution.

Ms Mullan asked the Minister of Education, given his view that principals are best placed to carry out the tracking and tracing of COVID-19 in schools, what additional support his Department will provide to principals to ensure that their other duties are carried out.

Mr Weir: As you are aware, to help support schools address many of the new pressures arising as a result of Covid-19, the Minister has announced significant funding to help support the safe reopening of schools. Additional allocations, from recently agreed Executive funding, will be communicated to the Education Authority (EA), as schools Funding Authority, imminently.

The allocations made to schools to date are to mitigate additional costs due to Covid-19, beyond teacher substitution costs, and are therefore for schools to manage.

While the Department has been successful in securing additional funding to tackle Covid-19 to date, there is no guarantee of additional funding. It is for this reason that schools have been advised to exercise spending restraint in line with their current funding allocations. Notwithstanding this, the EA continues to monitor schools' funding requirements, as the pandemic progresses, in order to inform Department of Education bids for additional resource, as required.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) the average absence figures for primary and post-primary schools since school restarted in August; and (ii) the comparable figures for the same time period for each of the past two years.

Mr Weir: Absence is reported by schools in half day sessions. The average absence figures since schools restarted in August 2020 are 5.2% for primary and 7.7% for post primary schools. For the same period in 2019, the proportion of total possible attendance recorded as absent was 3.6% for primary schools and 5.3% for post primary schools. Data for the same period in 2018 is not available as the equivalent reports were not available then.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Education, given the decision by the Welsh Government, what consideration his Department has given to cancelling formal examinations in 2021 due to amount of missed teaching time.

Mr Weir: I remain convinced that exams are the fairest means of awarding qualifications and for that reason my priority is that exams should proceed as planned in NI if at all possible.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education whether he plans to remove the Catholic Certificate of Education.

(AQW 10134/17-22)

Mr Weir: There are currently no proposals being brought forward in relation to the removal of the Certificate in Religious Education. Employment matters are kept under constant review.

Mr M Bradley asked the Minister of Education what processes are in place to ensure the Education Authority's Educational Psychology Service continues to work during the pandemic.

(AQW 10169/17-22)

Mr Weir: The Educational Psychology Service (EPS) continues to work remotely, where possible, but is arranging meetings with schools, using risk assessments, to progress assessment work.

Safe 'Assessment rooms' have been set up across all localities to help facilitate urgent assessments where it is not possible to carry these out at home for pre-school children or in their school setting.

For those children who require psychometric testing, appointments are underway. Each school's named Educational Psychologist has been in contact with their schools to agree priorities for the forthcoming year.

EPS continues to carry out assessments as efficiently and effectively as possible making full use of the Psychology assistants and carrying out consultations remotely where possible. The use of on-line assessment tools secured through Restart Funding will help facilitate this process alongside additional Psychology Assistants.

Ms Mullan asked the Minister of Education when the Virtual Learning Programme was launched; and whether his Department holds data on the range of software packages that have been selected by schools to date.

Mr Weir: Schools were advised about the proposed support available to access online software on 24 June 2020. Further information on the Virtual Learning programme including FAQ guidance and a link to a funding template for completion by schools was made available on 6 July, including publication on the C2k system.

Based on information submitted by schools in their funding applications, collated by the Education Authority, a wide range of online software packages have been selected by schools to date. This includes IXL, Maths Mastery, Mathletics, Accelerated Reader, Accelerated Maths, The Transfer Tutor, Maths Seeds, Lexia, Sumdog, MyMaths, MyOn, Bug Club, Reading Eggs, Manga High, Doodle Maths/English, 10Ticks Mental Maths, Purple Mash, Timetables Rockstars, Education City and others.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education, given the evidence that there is a significant drop in participation in Physical Education (PE) and sports post-16, and considering how essential healthy physical activity is for mental and physical wellbeing, whether he will commit to making 120 minutes of PE compulsory in schools post-16.

Mr Weir: My Department recognises the importance of physical activity and the contribution it makes to the health and wellbeing of young people. It is for that reason that Physical Education (PE) is a compulsory part of the statutory curriculum for all pupils at each Key Stage. My Department's recommendation of a minimum of two hours curricular PE each week applies only to pupils of compulsory school age.

In post-16 education, students generally undertake study towards specific Level 3 qualifications of their choice. Compulsory education ends at age 16 and there is no statutory minimum content or curriculum beyond this other than the statutory requirement for schools to provide access to a minimum number of courses under the Entitlement Framework. It is a matter for an individual school to decide what additional subjects, including PE, might be offered beyond students' specific subject choices.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education whether he will (i) confirm his commitment to the curriculum support programme by providing the sum of £2.5 million over the next three years; and (ii) commit to greater and longer-term funding in the future to enable the programme to expand and consolidate the work done to date.

Mr Weir: My Officials are currently considering the three-year Sports Programme proposal which was submitted by the Irish Football Association and Gaelic Athletic Association on 4 November 2020.

I am fully supportive of the Sports Programme which has been funded by my Department since 2007; however, you will appreciate that as departmental budgets are currently agreed on a yearly basis only, no commitment to funding can therefore be made beyond that.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Education whether he has considered publicising the amount of positive COVID-19 cases in schools every week.

Mr Weir: Information on the number of positive COVID-19 cases within schools is not collated or held by the Department of Education although it is published by the Public Health Agency (PHA).

The PHA has been collecting data on the number of COVID school incidents reported to the PHA COVID School Team since schools reopened. By the 8 November 2020 they had received in total since 24 August, 2,420 reported cases by schools (both pupils and staff) with 625 schools reported as having had at least one case.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Education to detail the extent of any consideration his Department has had on postponing next year's GCSE and A level examinations.

Mr Weir: My priority is that exams should proceed as planned and that learners should be awarded certified outcomes in Summer 2021 to enable them to progress to the next stage of their education, training or into employment in Autumn 2021.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister of Education what actions he has asked the Youth Service to take to address an increase in the concerns for young people's mental health.

Mr Weir: The mental health and wellbeing of children and young people remains a priority for my department and I have agreed that the Education Authority (EA) youth service continues to provide a range of initiatives to support this, particularly at this time. These include the FLARE programme aimed at young people aged 12 to 25 years who experience challenges to their mental health and wellbeing; the EA's youth online service, which has engaged with over 60,000 young people online during Covid-19 Restrictions; the Resilience Education Allowing Change to Happen (REACH) programme which will provide support for all pupils based on request; small group work to support targeted groups of young people who have identified mental health concerns, and intensive support for very specific pupils.

In addition, the health and wellbeing of children and young people is a key theme within the EA's Regional Youth Development Plan and Local Area Plans from which all youth work programmes are developed. Each funded youth organisation must deliver a minimum of three bespoke programmes to support the mental health and wellbeing of children and young people.

Workforce development plays a key part in the delivery of all these services and the EA youth service provides a range of opportunities for professional staff and volunteers to build capacity within the youth service to support the mental health and wellbeing of children and young people. Quality is also key and the EA's outcomes based accountability framework ensures that all programmes are strength based and intentionally build the resilience of each young person engaged, with funding for youth services only available to youth organisations who can demonstrate how they can provide youth services based on a strength-based approach.

The voice of young people is essential in responding to their needs and as part of the assessment of need on which EA youth services are based, the youth services engaged directly with more than 18,000 young people. The most recent assessment of need specifically engaged young people on their mental health. The Regional Assessment of Need can be viewed at www.eani.org.uk/services/youth-service/governance-and-leadership/regional-advisory-group

Mr Beattie asked the Minister of Education for an update on the situation at Craigavon Senior High School; and the implications for other schools.

Mr Weir: The Public Health Agency and Education Authority are directly supporting Craigavon Senior High School. An Incident Management Team has been established by the Public Health Agency which comprises the School Leadership, Public Health Agency Doctors, Education Authority Officers, Armagh Banbridge and Craigavon Council and a representative from the Controlled Schools Support Council. The Incident Management Team convened on the afternoon of Friday 13 November and met again on the afternoon of Sunday 15 November.

The outcome of the Friday afternoon meeting was that all pupils on the Portadown campus would move to blended learning, accessed from home for a period of two weeks. The Education Authority's School Development Service will be working alongside the school to assist with the planning of blended learning. The Lurgan campus will continue to operate with in-school learning.

The Public Health Agency initiated a mobile testing unit to enable all pupils and staff to access immediate testing in order to reduce the length of time that the Portadown campus would have adopted this approach.

Advice remains that schools should continue to access testing through the established testing program in the community and follow the advice of the Public Health Agency when a positive case is notified.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education what contingency plan is in place for pupils unable to take post-primary transfer tests due to a COVID-19-related absence.

Mr Weir: Boards of Governors of schools are responsible for setting the admissions criteria used to prioritise children for admission. Each school using academic selection in 2021 should consider the eventuality whereby test results are available, but not for a proportion of applications, when drawing up admissions criteria.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education whether any additional resources or enhanced criteria has been allocated to cope with any increase in COVID-19-related special circumstances applications for post-primary transfer.

Mr Weir: A special circumstances procedure is used by schools that make use of academic selection, as a component of their admissions criteria. It deals with circumstances beyond the control of the candidate (for example bereavement, accident or illness) that on the day of the test may have led to that candidate's performance being adversely affected. The formulation and application of admissions criteria, including any special circumstances procedure, are matters for the Boards of Governors of schools.

Miss Woods asked the Minister of Education for an update on the new build of Priory Integrated College, Holywood.

Mr Weir: Priory Integrated College has been selected for a major capital investment project to improve or replace its existing accommodation. The project will cater for the school's current approved enrolment of 600 pupils.

In February 2020 the EA successfully completed the appointment of an Integrated Consultant Team to carry out the design of the proposed Priory Integrated College. The business case was approved by the Department of Finance (DoF) in August 2020. This identified the preferred option as a new build school at a site on Redburn Road in Holywood.

The Integrated Consultant Team is now working on the early stages of the design process.

Ms McLaughlin asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the recommendation of the Pivotal Public Policy Forum NI report A New Economic Vision for careers advice to begin at the onset of Key Stage 3; and whether he will progress that objective.

(AQW 10469/17-22)

Mr Weir: Within the Key Stage 3 statutory curriculum, 'Learning for Life and Work' is a compulsory area of learning which includes learning about career management and different career options.

Mr Butler asked the Minister of Education what contingencies are in place for children who miss (i) two or more AQE tests; or (ii) both GL tests.

(AQW 10530/17-22)

Mr Weir: Boards of Governors of schools are responsible for setting the admissions criteria used to prioritise children for admission. Each school using academic selection in 2021 should consider the eventuality whereby test results are available, but not for a proportion of applications, when drawing up admissions criteria.

Department of Finance

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance to detail the number of Civil Service staff who are (i) working from home; and (ii) on furlough, broken down by Department.

(AQW 9796/17-22)

Mr Murphy (The Minister of Finance): My Department does not hold the information requested as it is a matter for each of the relevant departments.

We do however have information for the Department of Finance based on staff headcount.

On 2nd November 2020:

- 2,521 staff (77.3%) were working from home
- 352 staff (10.8%) were working in the office
- 386 staff (11.8%) were on annual leave/sick absence

No DoF civil servants are furloughed.

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Finance how many owners of wind turbines have received a rates demand in each of the last three years.

(AQW 9922/17-22)

Mr Murphy: The table below outlines how many rate demands were issued for Wind Turbines.

Year	No of Bills Issued
2017/18	344
2018/19	437
2019/20	461

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Finance whether Land and Property Services are aware of owners of wind turbines who are not receiving a rates demand.

(AQW 9923/17-22)

Mr Murphy: Land & Property Services is not aware of any wind turbines which are not receiving a rates demand.

Mrs Barton asked the Minister of Finance whether he has received a request from the Minister for the Economy to provide support for businesses to each property for multi-property businesses that received only one Business Support Grant per business and not one grant per property.

Mr Murphy: I have not received any such request from the Minister for the Economy in respect of the £10,000 Small Business Support Grant.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Finance what discussions he has had with the British and Irish Governments on the way in which the SEUPB will operate post-Brexit.

(AQW 10014/17-22)

Mr Murphy: The SEUPB role is to implement the current PEACE IV and INTERREG VA programmes and to develop and implement the new PEACE PLUS programme. Commitments have been provided for these programmes within the Withdrawal Agreement and the Political Declaration agreed at the European Council on 17th October 2019.

These commitments were noted and welcomed at an NSMC meeting in SEUPB Sectoral format on 30th October 2020. I attended this meeting along with Minister McGrath, Minister for Public Expenditure and Reform in Ireland, as co-Sponsor Department Ministers for the SEUPB.

My officials are engaging with Whitehall on the details of an agreement to be concluded by the British Government and the EU Commission for the PEACE PLUS programme. The role of SEUPB as Managing Authority for the PEACE PLUS programme will be formalised within this agreement.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance why wind turbines are included in the scheme for Small Business Rates Relief, given that telecommunication masts are excluded.

Mr Murphy: The exclusions for Small Business Rates Relief are set out in The Rates (Small Business Hereditament Relief) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2010, as amended. The Scheme was renewed without change in 2020 for a further year by The Rates (Small Business Hereditament Relief) (Amendment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020.

The scheme here was modelled on the Welsh small business scheme which still includes wind turbines within the relief. At the time of implementation wind turbines were not excluded. This remains the position. Other jurisdictions include additional relief for renewable energy. Telecommunication masts are often part of a regional network operated by multi-national companies and, therefore, not consistent with the concept of small business.

Mr Muir asked the Minister of Finance to detail the outcomes of the four resolved cases reviewed by the independent panel set up to examine the role of civil servants in the Renewable Heat Incentive scheme.

Mr Murphy: Of the four cases heard by the disciplinary panel, one resulted in a disciplinary penalty and three resulted in a determination of no case to answer.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister of Finance what additional resources he deployed to Land and Property Services in recent months to help with the processing of the various business support grants.

Mr Murphy: Land & Property Services' Revenue & Benefits Directorate has approximately 430 staff that have provided the core resource for administration of the various support schemes, as understanding of the rating system was required to process the applications. LPS has redeployed as many of these staff as necessary from their usual duties to work on administration of the £10,000 Small Business Grant Scheme, the 12 month rates holiday scheme and the Localised Restrictions Support Scheme. The exact number working on the schemes at any one time has fluctuated according to demand.

During the administration of the £10,000 grant scheme in April 2020 and May 2020, LPS was still working to get all staff the necessary IT equipment to allow them to access the rating system and work from home. On 1st April 2020, a total of 55 Revenue & Benefits staff were available and working from home on the grant scheme and at 1st May 2020 this had increased to 118. All staff in Revenue & Benefits available to work were working from home or in the office by 1st June 2020.

In addition, these staff have been supported by 12 LPS colleagues from Digital Operations, Communications and Corporate Correspondence teams. These staff have built the application portals for all grant schemes, provided internal procedural documentation and guidance for staff as well as external guidance for businesses, whilst handling the customer and MLA/MP queries about the grant schemes.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Finance whether (i) paid; and (ii) airport carparks are eligible for 12 month rates relief. (AQW 10111/17-22)

Mr Murphy: A general 4 months rates holiday was given to all businesses including car parks. A further 8 months rates holiday was then granted to specified business uses within the retail, hospitality, leisure, tourism, and childcare sectors, and the main airports, which were all identified through research undertaken by the Ulster University Economic Policy Centre, as being of the greatest need of support.

The Rates (Coronavirus) (Emergency Relief) (No.2) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020, provides that in order to be eligible for the additional 8 months rates support, the property has to be wholly or mainly used for one of the qualifying business uses, set out in Schedule 2 of the Regulations. <http://www.legislation.gov.uk/id/nisr/2020/144>

When this policy was being developed, consideration was given to car parks. It was concluded that car parks do not fall within the definitions of the targeted scheme. The three main airports are expressly included with the Regulations and therefore all hereditaments within each airport, including their car park provision, will benefit from the additional 8 months relief, unless an excepted hereditament within Schedule 1 of the Regulations.

Ms McLaughlin asked the Minister of Finance whether he will consider a 100 per cent business rates holiday for newspaper publishers. (AQW 10127/17-22)

Mr Murphy: I circulated a paper to Executive colleagues back in June seeking to provide the newspaper industry here with a 12 months rate holiday, given the significant loss of income that the sector has experienced. I remain keen to see this matter tabled at the Executive and agreed.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister of Finance why Land and Property Services did not start processing Localised Restrictions Support Scheme applications until after Friday 30 October 2020. (AQW 10143/17-22)

Mr Murphy: The Financial Assistance (Coronavirus) (No.2) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 for the extension of the scheme to all council areas came into effect on Friday 30th October 2020. Until those regulations came into operation, my Department had no legal authority to issue payments to applicants from outside the Derry City & Strabane Council area.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister of Finance (i) for an update on the Localised Restrictions Support Scheme for businesses ordered to close from 16 October 2020; (ii) to detail the number of online applications submitted each day; (iii) when the first run of payments was authorised or made; (iv) how many payments have been made; and (v) to detail the time it has taken to make these payments. (AQW 10145/17-22)

Mr Murphy: Work is continuing at pace to progress applications as quickly as possible. LPS aims to have the majority of payments issued by the end of November 2020. LPS has prioritised applications where all the information on the application is complete and data is available for validation. Applications that are incomplete require more manual intervention and checking before they can be approved for payment.

Please note that the total number of applications received in the table below includes businesses which have made multiple applications. LPS is coming across a large number of these and it is adding to the validation and checking that needs to be completed before an application can be processed. The number of businesses which have applied is therefore less than the number of applications received.

Number of Applications Received Per Day

Date	Number	Date	Number
14/10/2020	263	29/10/2020	203
15/10/2020	318	30/10/2020	120

NB Applications opened for the scheme in Derry & Strabane on 14th October 2020. The scheme was extended to all Council areas on 16th October 2020

The first run of payments in respect of the scheme when it initially opened for the Derry & Strabane District Council area was on 16th October 2020. Financial regulations to extend the scheme to all District Council areas took effect on 30th October 2020. The first payment run to the wider scheme area was on 4th November 2020.

From 16th October 2020 to 23rd October 2020, 108 payments issued. In the week commencing 26th October 2020, 85 payments issued. In the week commencing 2nd November 2020, 607 payments issued. In the week commencing 9th November 2020, 2,618 payments issued.

At 13th November 2020 a total of 3,418 payments have been issued in respect of applications received.

Mr McCann asked the Minister of Finance how many registered COVID-19 deaths there has been amongst staff in Health and Social Care Trusts.

(AQW 10150/17-22)

Mr Murphy: Deaths are registered with the General Register Office and analysed by the Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency (NISRA). The death statistics from NISRA are based on the information recorded at death by the certifying Doctor on a Medical Certificate of Cause of Death (MCCD) form. NISRA count all Covid-19 deaths where Coronavirus or Covid-19 (suspected or confirmed) was mentioned anywhere on the death certificate.

On 1st October 2020, NISRA published high level information showing that, between March and August 2020, of the 102 Covid-19 deaths among people aged 20-69 years, seven indicated a healthcare or care-related occupation: <https://www.nisra.gov.uk/sites/nisra.gov.uk/files/publications/Covid-19%20deaths-%20March-August%202020%20-%20Bulletin.pdf>

However, as the occupation recorded on the death certificate can be a current or a previous occupation, it is not possible for NISRA to verify if the seven Covid-19 deaths were members of staff in a HSC Trust at the time of death.

Mr Allen asked the Minister of Finance to detail (i) the number of Local Restrictions Support Grant payments made to date; and (ii) the number of applications still to be processed.

(AQW 10170/17-22)

Mr Murphy:

- (i) At 13th November 2020, 3,418 payments have been processed.
- (ii) At 13th November 2020, 8,183 applications are still to be processed. Please note there are a number of applicants who have made multiple applications or who are ineligible, therefore not all outstanding applications will result in payment.

To date, over 1,200 have been provisionally marked as ineligible or duplicate applications. As LPS is in the process of notifying these applicants, they are still recorded as unprocessed applications.

Mr Stalford asked the Minister of Finance to detail (i) the number of COVID-19-related deaths that have comorbidities; (ii) the comorbidities by category; and (iii) the categories of comorbidity by number.

(AQW 10175/17-22)

Mr Murphy: The requested information is not available at present. NISRA is currently analysing Covid-19 related deaths in relation to pre-existing conditions (i.e. an analysis of conditions that either preceded Covid-19 in the sequence of events leading to death, or was a contributory factor in the death but was not part of the causal sequence) and plans to publish the results of this analysis on Wednesday 23rd December 2020. The report and associated tables will be available on the NISRA website at <https://www.nisra.gov.uk/publications/monthly-deaths>.

Mr Muir asked the Minister of Finance when his Department will be reviewing the business case for the proposed Civic Centre in Newry as part of the application for funding from the Belfast City Deal by Newry, Mourne and Down District Council.

Mr Murphy: DoF Officials have been engaging with departments and Belfast Region City Deal partners on the development of a number of Outline Business Cases (OBC) for projects to be taken forward under the Belfast Region City Deal. DoF officials will consider these business cases for approval once formally submitted by the Belfast Region City Deal Executive Board and the department with policy responsibility, in this case DfC, is content.

Department of Health

Mr Beattie asked the Minister of Health what help the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust provides to children with a stammer, or any other speech impediment; and to detail the cost of these services in each financial year since 2015/16.

(AQW 6562/17-22)

Mr Swann (The Minister of Health): The Trust's Children and Young Peoples' Speech and Language Therapy Service provides assessment and support to children and their families, as well as providing training to, and working in partnership with parents and a range of other professionals including pre-school providers, education staff and other health professionals. Those children with a stammer will, where appropriate, be referred to the Trust's Specialist Paediatric Stammering Service.

Annual costs since 2015/16 for the services provided are detailed in the table below:

	2015/16	2016/17	2017/18	2018/19	2019/20
Children's SLT	£1,724,390	£2,230,093	£2,096,102	£2,158,265	£2,516,458
Stammering Service	£44,840	£44,145	£34,466	£66,477	£70,713

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Health to detail the average time for a COVID-19 test result to be communicated to an individual.

(AQW 6722/17-22)

Mr Swann: The National Testing Programme is run by the Department of Health and Social Care in England.

I am advised that in the period 1st to 17th September, 35.3% of results from testing sites were received within 24 hours and 87.9% of results were received within 48 hours.

Mr Gildernew asked the Minister of Health what adaptations or additions have been made, or are being planned, to hospital canteen and relaxation facilities to ensure safe social distancing requirements.

(AQW 6878/17-22)

Mr Swann: All Health and Social Care Trusts have made a number of changes to the configuration of hospital canteen and relaxation facilities to ensure adherence to best practice hygiene and social distancing requirements. These measures include:

- completion of Covid-19 specific risk assessments;
- introduction of one-way systems;
- clear signage on entry and on tables promoting safe social distancing of two metres, wearing of face coverings and optimal hand hygiene;
- increased availability of hand sanitising units and wipes;
- use of Perspex screens or barriers where appropriate;
- increased frequency of cleaning;

- requirement to wear face coverings in all public spaces; and
- introduction of contactless payments.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Health what consideration he has given to introducing Pirfenidone and Nintedanib for people diagnosed with Pulmonary Fibrosis.

(AQW 7054/17-22)

Mr Swann: I refer to my answer to AQW 7217/17-22 & AQW 7218/17-22 combined.

Mr McGrath asked the Minister of Health for his assessment of the current UK guidelines prohibiting Pirfenidone and Nintedanib medication.

(AQW 7217/17-22)

Mr Swann: Both pirfenidone and nintedanib have been recommended by the National Institute for Health and Care Excellence (NICE) and are available for treating patients with pulmonary fibrosis in Northern Ireland.

My Department has a formal link with NICE under which NICE technology appraisals are reviewed locally for their applicability here, and where found to be applicable, they are endorsed for implementation within Health and Social Care.

Whilst there is a process to check the guidance for legal and policy applicability, there is no reassessment of the clinical or cost evidence used by NICE in coming to its decisions and forming its advice.

However, I can advise that NICE has commenced a technical appraisal review on both pirfenidone and nintedanib, which is expected to conclude in 2021. The aim of a technical appraisal is to consider whether there is any significant new evidence likely to impact on the current recommendations and so determine whether the guidance should be updated.

Mr McGrath asked the Minister of Health whether he plans to review the availability of Pirfenidone and Nintedanib medication for people diagnosed with pulmonary fibrosis.

Mr Swann: Both pirfenidone and nintedanib have been recommended by the National Institute for Health and Care Excellence (NICE) and are available for treating patients with pulmonary fibrosis in Northern Ireland.

My Department has a formal link with NICE under which NICE technology appraisals are reviewed locally for their applicability here, and where found to be applicable, they are endorsed for implementation within Health and Social Care.

Whilst there is a process to check the guidance for legal and policy applicability, there is no reassessment of the clinical or cost evidence used by NICE in coming to its decisions and forming its advice.

However, I can advise that NICE has commenced a technical appraisal review on both pirfenidone and nintedanib, which is expected to conclude in 2021. The aim of a technical appraisal is to consider whether there is any significant new evidence likely to impact on the current recommendations and so determine whether the guidance should be updated.

Mr Muir asked the Minister of Health whether a face shield visor meets the definition of face covering as set out in The Health Protection (Coronavirus, Wearing of Face Coverings) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020.

Mr Swann: Face covering means a covering of any type which covers a person's nose and mouth. A face shield or visor may be used as a face covering, however my Department advises that cloth face coverings should be used as they provide better protection from the risk of infection from the virus that causes COVID-19. If a face shield or visor is to be worn, it should be used in combination with a cloth face covering for increased protection.

However, face coverings are not a substitute for other measures such as social distancing, hand hygiene, good respiratory etiquette and cleaning of shared contact surfaces, all of which remain critically important.

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Health whether the Direct Assessment Unit at Causeway Hospital, caring for frail, older patients, is still operational during the pandemic; and whether GP referrals to this service are continuing.

(AQW 8843/17-22)

Mr Swann: The Direct Assessment Unit (DAU) at Causeway Hospital remains operational, providing medical and multi professional assessments for the frail older patient. It can be accessed by referral from the Emergency Department, or from a GP, until 5pm. If a patient is unable to attend before 5pm they can be offered an appointment for the next day.

Ms McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health (i) what the criteria is for reintroducing shielding; and (ii) what advice he would give to those who had been shielding and are now working in high-risk environments in geographical areas where the level of community transmission is high.

Mr Swann: In response to the infection rate in Northern Ireland, a range of robust new restrictions were introduced on 16 October. As part of this, following careful consideration, the advice of the Chief Medical Officer was that shielding should remain paused.

Updated advice for people who are Clinical Extremely Vulnerable has been published online on NIDirect and includes guidance in relation to work. The guidance notes that if it is possible to work from home, individuals should continue to do this. However, if an employer has taken the proper measures to ensure social distancing in the workplace and the person can travel to work in a way which allows for social distancing, they can continue to work.

The position on shielding will be kept under continual review. The safety and well-being of those who were previously being asked to shield will not be compromised but will always have to be balanced against the detrimental consequences of shielding, for example on mental health.

Everyone who was previously shielding continues to need to take strenuous precautions in their day to day lives and should scrupulously follow the guidance we set out when shielding was paused. This includes, good hand hygiene; staying at home as much as possible; maintaining social distancing; working from home where possible, or ensuring social distancing when going to and from work; and limiting social contacts.

In addition, it is vital that everyone in our community plays their part in keeping themselves and others safe by following the public health advice and adhering to the regulations and guidance.

Mr T Buchanan asked the Minister of Health to detail the waiting times for (i) first time; and (ii) follow up appointments for (a) cancer; (b) stroke; and (c) dementia, over the last 6 months.

(AQW 8964/17-22)

Mr Swann:

- (a) (i) From April-September 2020 patients waited an average of 16 days for first time cancer appointments.
 (ii) Data on waiting times for follow up appointments for cancer is not currently available.
- (b) (i) The following information on waiting times for first time appointments for stroke have been provided by the Health and Social Care Trusts:

Belfast Trust stated, "First time; Stroke is a medical emergency and patients present at ED either by ambulance or self –presentation. Patients are assessed and prioritised as urgent and seen by the stroke team. Patients referred as TIA are seen within 24hrs of referral and are deemed as urgent referrals".

Northern Trust has provided the following tabulated data-

Northern Trust Outpatients Average Completed Waits - Care of Elderly (Stroke)

Specialty		Apr-20	May-20	Jun-20	Jul-20	Aug-20	Sep-20
Care of Older Persons	Red Flag (weeks)	-	1	-	-	-	-
Care of Older Persons	Urgent (weeks)	-	3	3	13	15	17
Care of Older Persons	Routine (weeks)	-	-	20	23	20	21

"The outpatient waiting time information relates to average waiting times for patients seen for their first outpatient attendance. It is calculated as an average of the difference between the date the referral letter arrives in the hospital and the date of appointment. If a patient cancels or Does Not Attend (DNA) their waiting time is set to zero from the date of cancellation or DNA."

South Eastern Trust stated, "The South Eastern Trust can confirm that on average stroke referrals are being seen within a day".

Southern Trust stated, "The information requested would not be readily available as information on Outpatient Waits (Review i.e follow-ups) is not readily available under the categories of (a) cancer; (b) stroke; and (c) dementia as asked for in this AQ."

Western Trust stated, "The Trust reports on the number of patients who received Lysis in the month. There is currently no waiting list for first appointment in Stroke Services".

- (ii) The following information on waiting times for follow up appointments for stroke have been provided by the Health and Social Care Trusts. Only Belfast Trust and South Eastern Trust were able to provide comment on follow up appointments:

Belfast Trust stated, "Follow up appointments – there is no delay in routine stroke follow-up, patients are reviewed at 6 weeks post discharge."

South Eastern Trust stated, "Stroke inpatients are reviewed normally 6-10 weeks post discharge on an individual patient basis and the South Eastern Trust is meeting that timescale."

- (c) (i) The tabulated information (Table A) below on waiting times for first time appointments for dementia have been provided by the Health and Social Care Trusts.
- (ii) Information on follow up waiting time is also included in Table A. Only South Eastern Trust provided information on follow up appointments. Western Trust also provided the comment that, "The Trust does not formally report on follow up appointments. The Western Trust can confirm that there is internal monitoring on recall lists. However, given the complex dementia pathway, to extract and provide information would involve an extensive manual exercise."

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Health what capacity community occupational therapy services are currently operating in Derry.

(AQW 9416/17-22)

Mr Swann: It is not possible to provide the figure requested for Londonderry specifically as the information is only available on a Trust-wide basis. The Western Health and Social Care Trust's Community Occupational Therapy service continues to deliver 80% of services in accordance with the staffing capacity available commensurate with Covid-19 and non-Covid-19 related absences.

Ms Flynn asked the Minister of Health to detail the services his Department coordinates or commissions with the Department for the Economy on (i) suicide prevention; and (ii) mental health.

Mr Swann: The Department of Health and the Department for Economy co-ordinate in relation to Higher Education Institutions with regards to Action 4.5 of the Protect Life 2 Strategy for Preventing Suicide and Self Harm. This action aims to encourage universities, colleges, schools and training organisations to promote a culture of help-seeking behaviour and suicide prevention awareness among their students and trainees.

The Department of Health does not directly commission or co-ordinate mental health or suicide prevention services with the Department for Economy, however a broad range of work is undertaken by Belfast HSC Trust, the Public Health Agency, Department for the Economy (DfE) and Further and Higher Education settings to promote mental and emotional wellbeing amongst University students. This includes the student support service that is jointly commissioned by Belfast Health and Social Care Trust, Queens University Belfast and Ulster University.

Higher Education Institutions are autonomous bodies who formulate their own actions and mechanisms in regard to student welfare packages and Further Education colleges are also responsible for putting in place their individual pastoral care arrangements.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister of Health to detail the current waiting lists for the first appointment with a cardiac consultant from a GP referral to a consultation with a Cardiologist, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust.

Mr Swann: My Department publishes quarterly National Statistics on the waiting times position for a first consultant-led outpatient appointment. This data is provided by HSC Trust and Medical Specialty, within which Cardiology is presented, and the majority of these data are the result of GP referrals. The most recent published data reflects the position as at 30th June 2020, with the 30th September 2020 publication due for release on 26th November 2020. National Statistics waiting times data can be found at:

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister of Health what proposals he will bring forward to make Group B Strep tests during pregnancy after 35 weeks available to all women who request them.

Mr Swann: The current recommendation from the UK National Screening Committee (NSC), which advises all four UK Departments of Health, and the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists is that screening for Group B Strep (GBS) infection should not be offered to all pregnant women. This is because it is not known whether this would do more good than harm. There is serious concern that screening would result in large numbers of women receiving antibiotics they do not need, with possible adverse health effects for mothers and babies. GBS Screening is, however, offered to women who had GBS detected in a previous pregnancy.

In Northern Ireland every pregnant woman is provided with a hard copy of the Pregnancy Book which is reviewed and updated by the Public Health Agency (PHA) on a regular basis (most recent edition published in May 2020). It is also available on the PHA website (page 51). The 2020 Pregnancy Book contains information on GBS including specific information about what happens if a woman has had GBS in a previous pregnancy and the circumstances in which a woman will be offered antibiotics during labour. <https://www.publichealth.hscni.net/sites/default/files/2020-05/Pregnancy%20book%202020%20%E2%80%93%20196%20pages.pdf>

In November 2019 the Chief Medical Officer and Chief Nursing Officer issued a reminder letter to the health service, highlighting the need to ensure that women who had GBS detected in a previous pregnancy are offered the appropriate options in relation to testing and treatment.

You will be aware that research to find the best way to prevent illness and death due to GBS infection in newborn babies is underway. Once the results of this research are available these will be considered by the NSC and the Department to determine whether the current policy should be changed.

Mr Gildernew asked the Minister of Health to list the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority reviews which are (i) currently being undertaken; and (ii) are in the process of being published.

(AQW 9527/17-22)

Mr Swann: The reviews currently being undertaken by RQIA are

- 1 Review of Governance Arrangements in Independent (Private) Hospitals and Hospices in Northern Ireland;
- 2 Review of GP Out of Hours;
- 3 Review of Serious Adverse Incidents (SAIs);
- 4 Review of Deceased Patients Records; and
- 5 Review of Vulnerable Prisoners.

None of the above reviews are in the process of being published.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Health whether he has considered moving away from a psycho pathologisation approach to trans healthcare.

(AQW 9569/17-22)

Mr Swann: A review of gender identity services is currently being progressed by the Health and Social Care Board. The Gender Identity Pathway Review Group supported by a soon to be established Gender Identity Liaison Panel, in bringing forward its findings and recommendations concerning a future model of care, will be fully aware that since early 2019, transgender health issues are no longer classified as mental health and behavioural disorders under the World Health Organisation's global manual of diagnoses.

Mr Sheehan asked the Minister of Health whether his Department or its arm's-length bodies have considered becoming an EU Recognised Notifying Body.

Mr Swann: It would not be appropriate for the Department or its ALB's to undertake this commercial function to assess a manufacturer's product for the marketplace. This role is carried out by commercial organisations, who are designated and overseen as competent to do so by the Medicines and Healthcare Regulatory Agency, the government's competent authority and regulator in this area.

Mrs Barton asked the Minister of Health to detail the number of (i) physiotherapist; (ii) speech therapist; and (iii) occupational therapist, vacancies in each Health and Social Care Trust.

Mr Swann: Information on the number of physiotherapist, speech & language therapist and occupational therapist vacancies actively being recruited to in each Health & Social Care (HSC) Trust at 30 June 2020 is detailed in the table below.

HSC Trust	Vacancies actively being recruited to at 30 June 2020

Mrs Barton asked the Minister of Health where the registration criteria for prospective patients applying for acceptance to a medical practice or surgery is published.

(AQW 9594/17-22)

Mr Swann: Eligibility to receive publicly-funded health care in NI is based on ordinary residence. Ordinary residence means the residence is lawful, voluntary and for a settled purpose as part of the regular order of an individual's life for the time being, whether of short or long duration. The decision on whether someone is held to be ordinarily resident in NI, and can therefore register with a GP and access healthcare in NI on the same basis as all other residents of Northern Ireland, is made by Business Services Organisation (BSO).

Information on the process to register with a GP in Northern Ireland, including the evidence required to show ordinary residence, can be found in the Entitlement Aid on the BSO website.

Paragraph 71 of Schedule 5 to the Health and Personal Social Services (General Medical Services Contracts) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2004 (SR 2004 No.140) ("the GMS Regulations") requires every GP Practice to compile a Practice Leaflet and to make a copy of the Leaflet available to Practice patients and prospective patients.

Schedule 8 to the GMS Regulations sets out the information which is required to be included in the Practice Leaflet. This includes information on how to register as a patient and information about the GP Practice area by reference to a sketch, diagram, plan or postcode.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Health to detail the rationale within the Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) Regulations which prohibits a class of 30 children, who have spent a school day together in a classroom, from doing PE together in an Assembly Hall or outside; and (ii) to make public the science that underpins this rule.

Mr Swann: The Executive, when making a decision on restrictions, takes into account not only the medical evidence but the economic and educational evidence and the totality of the effect each one can have in reducing the rate of infections of COVID-19.

Following a review, the latest amendment, The Health Protection (Coronavirus, Restrictions) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 12) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2020 made on 3rd November 2020, now provides for physical education to take place in schools and other educational settings.

The Executive maintains an ongoing process of review of the coronavirus restrictions regulations, which considers both the current level of the pandemic and the impact the restrictions are having, and it is the Executive's clear intention not to retain the restrictions for any longer than is absolutely necessary.

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of Health for an update on the establishment of safe settings for blood cancer patients in which critical blood cancer treatment can be administered.

Mr Swann: COVID-19

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Health, in relation to the ongoing pressures of a COVID-19 second wave, for his assessment of the current status of cancer services in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 9676/17-22)

Mr Swann: COVID-19 presents ongoing capacity challenges across the cancer pathway which the service is actively managing. As during the first surge, all possible steps will be taken to maintain cancer services in the event of a second surge. My Department has developed a COVID-19 Surge Planning Strategic Framework, which provides the overall structure and parameters within which HSC Trusts have developed plans for managing the response to COVID-19 in the event of further waves. This framework and plans can be viewed on the Department website <https://www.health-ni.gov.uk/publications/winter-surge-plan>.

I have established a Cancer Services Rebuilding Cell to set out the approach to implementing the reset of cancer services (assessment and treatments), taking into account the potential need for the HSC to respond to further COVID-19 surge(s) in 2020 and the existing capacity constraints in HSC.

In addition, the HSC has commissioned additional assessments and treatments from independent sector providers. This capacity is being prioritised for those patients with suspected or confirmed cancer.

One of my primary aims in the difficult weeks ahead will be to ensure the continued delivery of high quality cancer services, providing of course that it is safe to do so.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister of Health what his Department is doing to fulfil the Executive's commitment to building a united and shared society through the Together: Building a United Community strategy.

(AQW 9685/17-22)

Mr Swann: My department continues to engage fully with the Together: Building a United Community (T:BUC) Strategy through our membership of the Good Relations Project Board, which was established to support delivery of the strategy across departments.

In recent years, T:BUC funding has supported vulnerable children and families known to Health and Social Care Trusts to, among other things: strengthen team working and leadership skills; build resilience; develop a better understanding of cultural differences; and encourage them to play an active role in their communities.

Mr Gildernew asked the Minister of Health how many FFP3 masks were issued, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust, for each month since January 2020.

Mr Swann: The numbers of FFP3 masks issued by Business Services Organisation each month since January 2020, by Northern Ireland Health & Social Care Trust, are set out in the table below:

	BHSCT	NHSCT	NIAS	SEHSCT	SHSCT	WHSCT
January	2,135		270	385	760	770
February	4,115	35	515	820	2,235	620

Mr Gildernew asked the Minister of Health what percentage of Personal Protective Equipment is sourced directly by (i) his Department; (ii) other Executive Departments; and (iii) Health and Social Care Trusts.

(AQW 9714/17-22)

Mr Swann: During the period 1 March 2020 to 15 October 2020 over 99% of the Personal Protective Equipment (PPE), procured for the NI Health and Social Care Sector, by value, was sourced by the Department of Health and Business Services Organisation. The remainder was sourced for and by individual Health & Social Care Trusts.

My Department does not hold any data in relation to the PPE sourced by other Departments in Northern Ireland.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Health to detail any cross-border collaborative work taking place in relation to trans healthcare.

(AQW 9756/17-22)

Mr Swann: At the request of my Department, the Health and Social Care Board is leading on a review of gender identity services. As part of this review, exploratory discussions have already taken place with health service colleagues in the Republic of Ireland and Great Britain with a view to understanding the service currently offered in each jurisdiction, and considering such learning for its potential application to a new service model in NI.

The review is ongoing and I would expect any potential service model to be scoped and fully explored before the review's findings and recommendations are submitted to my Department for consideration.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister of Health how many people attended the GP COVID-19 Assessment Centres, broken down by centre for each week since they were introduced.

(AQW 9767/17-22)

Mr Swann: The number of cases referred to the primary care COVID-19 centres for each week since they were established is outlined in the table below. Information on the breakdown of referrals by each COVID-19 centre is not held by the Department.

Mr Beattie asked the Minister of Health what work his Department is doing to address children's mental health.
(AQW 9775/17-22)

Mr Swann: Child and Adolescent Mental Health Services (CAMHS) provides a Stepped Care Model for children and young people up to the age of 18 who are experiencing mental health issues. There have been considerable improvements in CAMHS in recent years, including the development of a 33 bedded purpose built Children and Adolescent Mental Health Inpatient Unit (Beechcroft), implementation of the Stepped Care Approach and the publication of the Integrated Care Pathway for CAMHS in Northern Ireland.

I published a Mental Health Action Plan and a COVID-19 Mental Health Response Plan in May 2020, with specific actions focused on the mental health needs of children and young people.

My Department is leading on a cross-Government Action Plan to take forward agreed recommendations from the Children Commissioner's 'Still Waiting' Report, to improve mental health services and support for children and young people, where resources allow. Implementation of the 'Still Waiting' Action Plan was included as an action in the Mental Health Action Plan.

The Department of Education's Framework for Children & Young People's Emotional Health and Wellbeing in Education which is near completion will have a focus on providing early and enhanced support for those children and young people who may be at risk or showing signs of needing further help. While DE have been leading on the Framework, DoH have been particularly involved in the mental health aspects. My Department recently committed recurrent funding of £1.5 million to help support this work.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Health for an update on the review of Equal Lives.
(AQW 9785/17-22)

Mr Swann: The Department carried out an evaluation of the cross-departmental Bamford Action Plan 2012-2015 in 2016, however Executive approval to publish the report had not been completed prior to the collapse of the Executive in early 2017 and the report therefore remains unpublished. My officials are working on options for publication.

In the interim period, and building on the vision set out in the Equal Lives report, Transformation funding was allocated to the Health and Social Care Board in 2018 for the development of a new regional learning disability service model. Progress on the development of the model is continuing and being closely monitored by my officials.

Mr Gildernew asked the Minister of Health how many FFP3 masks are currently held within (i) Business Services Organisation; (ii) Northern Health and Social Care Trust; (iii) Western Health and Social Care Trust; (iv) Southern Health and Social Care Trust; (v) South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust; (vi) NI Ambulance Service; and (vii) the emergency pandemic stockpile.

Mr Swann: The number of FFP3 masks currently held in each Health & Social Care Trust as well as Business Services Organisation (BSO) and the Pandemic Influenza Preparedness Plan (PIPP) stock is set out in the table below This reflects the position as of 10 November 2020.

Stock of FFP3 Masks (000's)

BSO	1,006
BHSCT	49
NHSCT	69
NIAS	14

Mr Gildernew asked the Minister of Health for his assessment of care home beds in the south Tyrone area following the recent Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority action on the Valley Nursing Home.

(AQW 9811/17-22)

Mr Swann: In respect of the RQIA action at the Valley Nursing Home, the immediate focus is on assisting the home to address the current COVID outbreak and helping care home staff provide the appropriate level of care for the residents.

At September 30th 2020, there were 40 registered care homes within Co Tyrone.

These 40 homes provide a total of 1180 single bed places, plus a further 60 shared rooms.

The number of available beds / vacancies can vary on an hourly basis as residents are admitted / discharged and social workers, GPs and other health care professionals make direct contact with a home to check availability when the need arises.

At a strategic level, there have been challenges in parts of the system for some time, particularly with regard to the location, size and registration category of care homes, most noticeably in the lack of provision of beds for people with a dementia. The outbreak of the Covid-19 pandemic has placed unprecedented pressures on the HSC system in general but more specifically in terms of the availability of hospital and care home beds.

The Trust along with the HSCB along with my Departmental Officials will continue to work to resolve these issues.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health how many nursing vacancies exist in the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 9821/17-22)

Mr Swann: Information on the number of registered nursing vacancies actively being recruited to at 30 June 2020 in the Belfast and Northern HSC Trusts is detailed in the table below.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health how many nursing vacancies exist in the Northern Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 9823/17-22)

Mr Swann: Information on the number of registered nursing vacancies actively being recruited to at 30 June 2020 in the Belfast and Northern HSC Trusts is detailed in the table below.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Health for his plans to address pay discrepancy for staff working in intensive care units.

(AQW 9837/17-22)

Mr Swann: There is currently a skill mix of band 5 and band 6 ICU Nurses within the HSC.

Banding of all Agenda for Change roles, including those within nursing, is determined by the duties and responsibilities of a role assessed in partnership with Trades Unions using a job evaluation scheme. Across the UK, jobs are matched to nationally evaluated profiles, based on the roles undertaken.

These profiles work on the basis that similar posts and responsibilities across the UK health services reflect the demands of the job and to ensure equality of pay. This process ensures that the level of post is dependent on the role, not the environment and as there is a difference between roles, for example between a qualified critical care specialist nurse and a nurse working in ICU, a skills mix is necessary.

Due to the global health emergency and local COVID-19 transmission rates, critical care requirements are significantly stretched across the region, resulting in increased pressures on the critical care nursing workforce.

In recognition of this, my Department is currently considering if interim arrangements can be put in place for progression of Band 5 to Band 6 for critical care nurses who meet an agreed criteria.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister of Health what assurances he can give that cancer diagnoses and cancer treatment services will be protected from any pause in services due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

(AQW 9845/17-22)

Mr Swann: The COVID-19 Surge Planning Strategic Framework which I published on 6 October 2020 included reference to the Cancer Services Rebuilding Cell, which has been established to oversee the resumption of cancer screening, diagnosis and treatment in clinically safe environments as quickly as possible, and to protect these services as much as possible during the current and future waves of the pandemic. The framework can be viewed on my Department's website at:

All possible steps will be taken to maintain services including commissioning additional assessments and treatments from independent sector providers, with capacity prioritised for those patients with suspected or confirmed cancer.

One of my primary aims in the difficult weeks ahead will be to ensure the continued delivery of high quality cancer services, providing of course that it is safe to do so.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health what actions have been taken to support and protect dementia sufferers and their carers, in care homes and in private residences, in the context of a second wave of COVID-19 this winter.

(AQW 9852/17-22)

Mr Swann: Trusts have been requested to develop support plans that ensure that Trusts and service providers are working closely together to maintain services in a safe and effective way.

Along with the Community and Voluntary sector, Trust staff continue to provide local support to people with a dementia and their carers. This has included telephone calls to provide information and offer reassurance and use of other technologies including Apps and video links.

Trust Memory Services have adapted to current circumstances and through the use of technology and other innovative practices, are able to undertake assessments and care reviews.

The HSC, including the Department, will continue to provide information and guidance in relation to a range of COVID-19 related issues that impact on those who have a dementia, whether they live in the community or are placed in a care home setting.

Information about Dementia and COVID-19 is available on the following links:

- <https://www.nidirect.gov.uk/campaigns/dementia>
- <https://www.health-ni.gov.uk/>

Information booklets are also available at:

- <https://www.publichealth.hscni.net/search/node?keys=dementia>

We will continue to review all such interventions and ensure they remain appropriate.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Health when the Children and Young People's Strategic Partnership will be made statutory.
(AQW 9861/17-22)

Mr Swann: My Department sought views on this issue as part of the 2017 public consultation on the draft Adoption and Children Bill. The Department of Education has subsequently advised that it is in the process of establishing structures to monitor and report on the Children's Services Co-operation Act (Northern Ireland) 2015 and the Children and Young People's Strategy, for which it has lead responsibility. I have agreed to delay our proposals to place the Children and Young People's Strategic Partnership (CYPSP) on a statutory basis until those structures are established and have been operating for a period, to assess how effective the new structures are in improving co-operation between public sector bodies, as well as the role that the CYPSP will have within them and how its effectiveness might be strengthened. Once this has been done, the merit of placing the CYPSP on a statutory basis will be reconsidered.

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of Health (i) for an update on the business case for specialist perinatal mental health services; (ii) whether any outstanding issues on the business case have been resolved with the Public Health Agency; and (iii) when it will be concluded.

Mr Swann: The business case for specialist perinatal mental health services is being finalised by the Public Health Agency. On receipt of the finalised business case my officials will complete a final review and forward to me for consideration.

Mr Gildernew asked the Minister of Health why he has yet to bring forward breastfeeding legislation.

Mr Swann: I am committed to the promotion of breastfeeding especially considering the lifelong health benefits this delivers for the infant. I believe however that education, changing attitudes through public information, and supportive environments are especially important. It is important that all avenues are explored before a conclusion is reached that legislation is the best or only way of meeting the desired policy objective. It is therefore necessary that my Department explores and assesses all alternative methods of achieving the same end.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Health how many (i) Belfast Health and Social Care Trust staff; (ii) staff from other Health and Social Care Trusts; and (iii) agency staff are currently working in Muckamore Abbey.

(AQW 9880/17-22)

Mr Swann: The information requested is set out in the table below, broken down by categories of staff.

	Belfast Trust staff	Agency staff
Registered Nurses	26.43	73.8
Senior Nurse Assistants	58.52	45.41
Day care staff	29.68	0
Social Workers	5	Less than 5
Psychology & Behaviour Team	13	0
Medical	Less than 5	Less than 5
Allied Health Professionals	18.62	0
Administrative staff	20	8
Management	6	Less than 5
Patient and Client Support Services (Catering, laundry, cleaning)	62	8
Estates	9	0

The figures provided represent whole-time equivalent staff. Numbers of agency staff employed at the hospital can fluctuate. There are no staff from other HSC Trusts currently working in Muckamore Abbey Hospital.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister of Health to detail the number of (i) GP practices; (ii) patients in each practice; and (iii) GP's in each practice.

(AQW 9910/17-22)

Mr Swann: Information relating to GP practices is produced by the Family Practitioner Services Information Unit, of the Business Services Organisation. The number of GP practices and the number of patients in each practice can be found in the Quarterly General Medical Services Statistics at:

<http://www.hscbusiness.hscni.net/services/3174.htm>.

The Business Services Organisation also publishes the Northern Ireland GP list, which includes the practice number of each GP, at: <http://www.hscbusiness.hscni.net/services/1816.htm>

Ms S Bradley asked the Minister of Health, further to the announcement of Pfizer and BioNTech having a 90 per cent effective COVID-19 vaccine, how many of the UK advanced order of 30 million doses are due to be distributed to Northern Ireland.

Mr Swann: It has been agreed that the Barnett formula will be used to allocate vaccine share across the 4 nations after a small share of the vaccine has been set aside for use in the crown dependencies. The Barnett formula split for Northern Ireland is 2.85% and therefore we should receive roughly 1,506,000 doses of the total order from Pfizer of 40 million doses.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister of Health whether his Department is counting the number of people who have deleted the Stop COVID-19 app.

Mr Swann: Information on the number of people who have deleted the STOPCovid NI app is not collected by my Department. An undertaking was made to key stakeholders prior to the launch of the app to limit the data collected to help address any privacy concerns.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister of Health what action he is taking to deal with the number of people removing the Stop COVID-19 app.

Mr Swann: Use of the app is entirely voluntary and it is designed not to track usage for privacy reasons.

The benefits of using the app to assist in breaking the chains of transmission are being actively promoted through a communications campaign through news and social media.

As you will be aware, I have had personal experience of receiving a notification via the app after which I worked in self-isolation for the stipulated 14 day period. I shared this on Twitter at the time in the hope that this would encourage others to download and use the app.

Mr McGrath asked the Minister of Health, in light of the announcement by Pfizer on a potential COVID-19 vaccine, (i) how many vaccines have been ordered for Northern Ireland; (ii) what the criteria will be for those to receive the vaccine; and (iii) to detail the timescales for delivery of the vaccine.

Mr Swann: The UK has secured access to 6 vaccine candidates, across 4 different vaccine types which could potentially result in 350 million doses of COVID-19 vaccines being made available in the UK. Northern Ireland will receive a 2.85% share of the total UK stock of COVID-19 vaccines that are eventually approved for use.

Vaccination policy in Northern Ireland is guided by the recommendations of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation (JCVI), an independent expert advisory group. JCVI will recommend which COVID-19 vaccine(s) should be used, and on the priority groups to receive the vaccine based on the best available clinical, modelling and epidemiological data. JCVI have published an interim prioritisation list which is available at: <https://www.gov.uk/government/publications/priority-groups-for-coronavirus-covid-19-vaccination-advice-from-the-jcvi-25-september-2020>.

The two leading COVID-19 vaccines secured for use in the UK could potentially be available before the end of the year while the other COVID-19 vaccines are due to be ready for deployment at various points throughout 2021. The vaccines will only be deployed for use if they have passed the required safety and efficacy tests.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Health to detail the total cost of agency staff at Muckamore Abbey since the start of the ongoing investigation, including all associated costs.

Mr Swann: In the period from September 2017 until September 2020, the total agency costs incurred at Muckamore Abbey Hospital were £11,575,121.

Ms Flynn asked the Minister of Health how his Department will engage the maximum number of groups, individuals, families and those with lived experience on the substance use consultation, given current limitations around COVID-19.

(AQW 9973/17-22)

Mr Swann: There has already been substantial engagement with relevant stakeholders, including professional bodies, service providers and service users who assisted my Department during the co-production phase of the new Substance Use Strategy consultation document. In addition, my officials also met with Siobhan O'Neill, our Interim Mental Health Champion, as part of the consultation development and she has committed to lend her support to engagement events around the consultation process.

Due to the nature of the current pandemic, the consultation will be mainly digital in nature, and responses can be completed online using the Citizen Space portal. The consultation will run for 14 weeks to maximise the opportunities for people to engage in the process.

The consultation has been widely publicised through press releases, social media, and issuing the document to a wide range of consultees. In addition, we have asked that all key stakeholders share it with all those with an interest – including asking service providers to seek input from their service user and family groups.

Planning is underway for at least two independently facilitated public engagement workshops to be held online during the course of the consultation period so that as wide a range of views as possible can be incorporated. In addition, we are working with the regional service user group to discuss how best we can engage directly with service users and their families, including those not in treatment.

My officials will also actively provide briefing to those who wish to discuss the strategy and are happy to engage directly with any groups who wish to contribute, including the Health Committee and a wide range of stakeholder organisations.

Ms Flynn asked the Minister of Health when he will publish the findings of the review into mental health crisis services.

Mr Swann: My intention is to publish the review of mental health crisis services in April 2021. My officials will use findings to influence, shape and inform development of a new ten year mental health strategy.

The mental health crisis review team will provide my Department with initial thinking by December 2020 for inclusion in the draft mental health strategy that I expect to be published for consultation by the end of the year.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Health to detail his plans for improving access to post-acute rehabilitation for stroke patients. (AQW 9983/17-22)

Mr Swann: The reform of stroke care in Northern Ireland remains a key priority for me. My department's consultation, 'Reshaping Stroke Care', outlined a specific commitment to driving improvements in community-based services, including rehabilitation.

While work on a range of projects, including Reshaping Stroke Care, has been paused in the context of the need to prioritise the response to the coronavirus pandemic over the past few months, I am committed to progressing as soon as possible. In the interim, the Stroke Network has been developing a long term support specification which includes the provision of rehabilitation services.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Health to detail his plans to increase the number of pharmacists and community pharmacists. (AQW 9987/17-22)

Mr Swann: My Department published its Pharmacy Workforce Review and associated Action Plan on 9th November 2020. The Review contains an analysis of the current pharmacy workforce in Northern Ireland. The Action Plan sets out a suite of proposed actions against each of the recommendations made in the report, including a number of actions around how to increase the number of pharmacists and community pharmacists in Northern Ireland. A copy of the published report and Action Plan can be viewed at: <https://www.health-ni.gov.uk/publications/pharmacy-workforce-review-2019>

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Health to detail the amount of money allocated to the commissioning of a Nightingale Hospital at the Whiteabbey Hospital site; and what long term benefits this additional funding will have for services at the hospital post-COVID-19.

Mr Swann: The capital costs allocated for the necessary refurbishments at the Whiteabbey site to develop the Nightingale facility amount to £4.53 million. It is anticipated that the facility will remain assigned for Nightingale purposes for a period of up to two years.

Developing the second Nightingale facility at Whiteabbey provides a legacy facility for future use, which would not have been the case had a commercial site been chosen. The future use of the Whiteabbey facility will be carefully considered in due course.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister of Health to detail any additional support provided to groups, such as Women's Aid, since January 2020 to cope with domestic violence.

Mr Swann: In acknowledgement of the challenges posed by covid-19 my Department facilitated advance payment of grant funding and contract payments to voluntary and community groups, including Women's Aid and Nexus NI.

My Department also granted key worker status, for the purposes of accessing childcare, to all health and social care workers from 23 March - 29 June when access was restricted, which included those working in refuges and on the Domestic and Sexual Abuse Helpline, ensuring continued provision of vital services.

My Department approved a bid from the Health and Social Care Board for additional funding to Women's Aid of £60k for a 6 month period during the initial coronavirus surge to support families who have experienced, or been a victim of, domestic abuse.

Health officials also took part in fortnightly PSNI-led teleconferences with other government departments and delivery partners in the voluntary and community sector to share statistics and ensure a joined up approach as part of recovery planning.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister of Health, in light of Pfizer's announcement on Monday 9 November 2020 on a potential COVID-19 vaccine, (i) how many vaccine units have been pre-ordered by his Department; (ii) what engagement he has had with the (a) UK Government; and (b) Irish Government in relation to securing and deploying vaccine supplies; (iii) what engagement he has had with GP representatives in relation to the deployment of a vaccination programme; and (iv) to detail the timescales for delivery and deployment of a vaccine.

Mr Swann: My Department has not directly ordered any COVID-19 vaccines as the Department for Business, Energy & Industrial Strategy (BEIS) is leading on the procurement of COVID-19 vaccines on behalf of the whole of the UK. Six vaccine candidates, across 4 different vaccine types have been secured which could potentially result in 350 million doses of COVID-19 vaccines being made available in the UK. This includes 40 million doses of the Pfizer vaccine. Northern Ireland will receive a 2.85% share of the total UK stock of COVID-19 vaccines that are eventually approved for use.

I and my officials have been liaising with our counterparts across the UK regarding the plans for vaccine deployment across each country. The Irish Government is part of an EU led COVID-19 vaccine procurement process.

My officials have also been engaging with GP representatives to discuss their role in a COVID-19 vaccination programme.

It should be noted that the Pfizer vaccine still has to receive approval from MHRA before it can be considered for use in a vaccination programme. It is possible that we may have the vaccine in use before the end of the year and we are currently planning on that basis, however realistically it may be next year before sufficient doses are available to vaccinate on a large scale.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health what evaluation has been carried out into the risk of a mutated form of COVID-19 from mink.

Mr Swann: The public health implications of recent findings of mink-specific variants of SARS-CoV-2 in Danish mink farms are being assessed urgently at international levels and by national public health authorities. The European Centre for Disease Control and Prevention (ECDC) is working with the Danish public health agency on the human implications for public health and has produced a Rapid Risk Assessment available at:

<https://www.ecdc.europa.eu/en/publications-data/detection-new-sars-cov-2-variants-mink>.

In the UK Public Health England are working with departments and agencies to assess the public health risks. A zoonosis risk assessment is in preparation and is expected to be published shortly.

In the meantime my Department has taken urgent steps to minimise the risk of this strain being imported into Northern Ireland. Specifically, the International Travel Regulations have been amended on 9 November to restrict travellers from Denmark. The Chief Medical Officer has also issued precautionary advice to the HSC on the appropriate investigation and management of those presenting to the health service with a travel history to Denmark.

My Department and the Public Health Agency are working with their counterparts in Ireland and taking practical steps to minimise any risk associated with travellers arriving from Denmark and coming to Northern Ireland through Ireland.

Ms Flynn asked the Minister of Health whether any specific COVID-19 modelling has been completed by the Chief Scientific Advisor or the Chief Medical Officer on post-primary transfer test settings.

(AQW 10051/17-22)

Mr Swann: The Chief Scientific Adviser and the Chief Medical Officer have not undertaken any modelling in respect of the settings for post-primary school transfer tests.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Health what plans his Department has to address loneliness this winter.

(AQW 10064/17-22)

Mr Swann: I recognise the importance of loneliness and its impact on health and wellbeing along with the particular challenges of this key issue for those who are already vulnerable. My Department have a range of policies/programmes/initiatives already in place that should help alleviate some of the pressures that people are experiencing.

The Department is also represented on the All Party Group on Loneliness which was formed following a series of all-party roundtables and policy events at Stormont in 2019 and 2020. In addition the Department is now part of a 4-country Group in the UK and we are liaising with counterpart policy leads to learn and share best practice.

The Department are also seeking partnership with counterparts in ROI, and beyond, to learn and share from other's experiences and innovative approaches to tackle loneliness and social isolation in relation to health and wellbeing.

The Institute of Public Health in Ireland is represented on my Department's Reform Board for Adult Social Care. They have carried out research into loneliness on an all island basis. We are liaising with them to further investigate their research and specifically the research that relates to Northern Ireland.

The Department has set up monitoring of loneliness via different surveys for adults and children. This will allow us to look at loneliness in conjunction with other health information, including general health and mental health as well as health behaviours.

A scoping exercise within the Department's policy areas and across the HSC including Trusts and DOH arms length bodies, is underway, to further identify policies; strategies, programmes and initiatives in place (including funding/investment) and those that are under development that contribute to tackling loneliness and isolation that impact on health and wellbeing, aligned to my Department's priorities and outcomes for government.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Health how those most at risk of loneliness are able to access the mental health and emotional support they need to cope and recover from COVID-19.

Mr Swann: I recognise the importance of loneliness and its impact on health and wellbeing and in particular the challenges of this key issue for those who are already vulnerable during the pandemic.

Since the beginning of the pandemic, mental health services have in general not stopped unless it has been deemed clinically appropriate or in direct response to workforce resource pressure, albeit some services have been delivered using different methods such as telephone and video communication.

Mental health services in Northern Ireland are provided in line with the regional stepped care model. This approach remains during the COVID-19 pandemic. All those who need care and treatment will be provided with services that are clinically appropriate.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Health whether he has discussed with his Executive the colleagues the prospect of developing a long-term cross-departmental loneliness strategy.

Mr Swann: Loneliness is a vital theme within a number of existing and relevant policies of the Department with the overall objective of improving the welfare of the population. Whilst the Department does not have one separate policy for loneliness, there are a range of policies; programme and initiatives in place – that make a positive contribute to tackling loneliness specifically related to health and wellbeing.

My officials are currently carrying out a scoping exercise to identify and co-ordinate what is currently in place both in the Department and across the wider landscape of the HSC (in our 5 Trusts and our Arm's Length bodies).

It is anticipated that the first phase of this exercise will be completed by the end of 2020. The findings of which will inform how we move forward from a policy perspective.

It is clear from the preliminary research that loneliness is a key issue and as such cannot be solved by any one Department, organisation or sector working alone. Therefore a collective and collaborative approach would be beneficial. This would support a more joined up and co-ordinated working together to rebuild approach and identifying existing policies and synergies across organisations. Going forward we need to be action orientated so as to better target resources that contribute to tackling loneliness for those who are most vulnerable, both now and in the future.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Health when AQW 7054/17-22 will be answered.

Mr Swann: I refer to my answer to AQW 7217/17-22 & AQW 7218/17-22 combined.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister of Health to detail the number of cancer diagnoses in each of the last 24 months for (i) bowel; (ii) lung; (iii) breast; (iv) prostate; (v) gynaecological; (vi) upper GI; (vii) head and neck; (viii) urinary; (ix) haematological; (x) melanoma; and (xi) other cancers, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust.

Mr Swann: Full registration of all cancer patients in Northern Ireland (NI) is currently only available from the NI Cancer Registry (NICR) up to the end of 2018.

Information provided by the NICR on the number of cancer diagnoses in each month from January 2017 to December 2018 for (i) bowel; (ii) lung; (iii) breast; (iv) prostate; (v) gynaecological; (vi) upper GI; (vii) head and neck; (viii) urinary; (ix) haematological; (x) melanoma; and (xi) other cancers, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust is provided in Tables 1-11 overleaf.

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of Health whether he has requested military operational support to assist with the nationwide roll out of an approved COVID-19 vaccine.

Mr Swann: Officials in the Department have been engaged with armed forces representatives throughout the pandemic and on a range of issues. Armed forces colleagues are providing advice and assistance in relation to the logistical aspects of the plans for the COVID-19 vaccination programme in Northern Ireland.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health what action was taken by his Department in consequence of Exercise Cygnus in 2016.

Mr Swann: To specifically address the lessons from Cygnus, a cross-government Pandemic Flu Preparedness Board (PFRB) was established to provide oversight for a UK-wide programme to deliver plans and capabilities to manage the wider consequences of pandemic influenza. In Northern Ireland, this work is overseen by the Civil Contingencies Group (NI) resilience programme, in its role as the principal strategic emergency preparedness body for the public sector.

While Exercise Cygnus was concerned with pandemic influenza, many of the outcomes from the exercise apply across responses to a range of Health and Social Care (HSC) emergencies where they affect, or have the potential to affect, Northern Ireland. Further, work to build resilience and increase emergency preparedness following Cygnus was undertaken by my Department, including: the training and exercising of key staff; the review of existing legislation and emergency plans; and the establishment of a bespoke Emergency Operations facility.

My Department continues to work collaboratively as part of the Civil Contingencies Group (NI), and with wider HSC providers.

The future work of the PFRB will take the learning from this current crisis to further support our preparedness capabilities and resilience in order to continue to provide an effective response to all health emergencies.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Health whether he will address the discrepancy of staff in intensive care units on band 5 and others on band 6 pay grades.

Mr Swann: There is currently a skills mix of band 5 and band 6 Nurses within Intensive Care Units across the HSC.

Banding of all Agenda for Change roles, including those within nursing, is determined by the duties and responsibilities of a role assessed in partnership with Trades Unions using an agreed job evaluation scheme. Across the UK, jobs are matched to nationally evaluated profiles, based on the roles undertaken.

These profiles work on the basis that similar posts and responsibilities across the UK health services reflect the demands of the job and to ensure equality of pay. This process ensures that the level of post is dependent on the role, not the environment and as there is a difference between roles, for example between a qualified critical care specialist nurse and a nurse working in ICU, a skills mix is necessary.

Due to the global health emergency and local COVID-19 transmission rates, critical care requirements are significantly stretched across the region, resulting in increased pressures on the critical care nursing workforce.

In recognition of this, my Department is currently considering if temporary arrangements can be put in place for progression of Band 5 to Band 6 for critical care nurses who meet agreed criteria.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Health whether he has considered uplifting pay for staff working in intensive care units.
(AQW 10202/17-22)

Mr Swann: There is currently a skills mix of band 5 and band 6 Nurses within Intensive Care Units across the HSC.

Banding of all Agenda for Change roles, including those within nursing, is determined by the duties and responsibilities of a role assessed in partnership with Trades Unions using an agreed job evaluation scheme. Across the UK, jobs are matched to nationally evaluated profiles, based on the roles undertaken.

These profiles work on the basis that similar posts and responsibilities across the UK health services reflect the demands of the job and to ensure equality of pay. This process ensures that the level of post is dependent on the role, not the environment and as there is a difference between roles, for example between a qualified critical care specialist nurse and a nurse working in ICU, a skills mix is necessary.

Due to the global health emergency and local COVID-19 transmission rates, critical care requirements are significantly stretched across the region, resulting in increased pressures on the critical care nursing workforce.

In recognition of this, my Department is currently considering if temporary arrangements can be put in place for progression of Band 5 to Band 6 for critical care nurses who meet agreed criteria.

Mr Muir asked the Minister of Health when AQW 7862/17-22 will be answered.
(AQW 10252/17-22)

Mr Swann: Face covering means a covering of any type which covers a person's nose and mouth. A face shield or visor may be used as a face covering, however my Department advises that cloth face coverings should be used as they provide better protection from the risk of infection from the virus that causes COVID-19. If a face shield or visor is to be worn, it should be used in combination with a cloth face covering for increased protection.

However, face coverings are not a substitute for other measures such as social distancing, hand hygiene, good respiratory etiquette and cleaning of shared contact surfaces, all of which remain critically important.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister of Health what proposals his Department is working on to address the increasing cost of locums.

Mr Swann: Employment of agency staff and locums has been necessary to ensure that safe and effective services are sustained and maintained.

A key factor in tackling this issue is transformation of HSC and the need for long term investment in our HSC workforce. The Bengoa report made clear that rising locum and agency costs are due to the current configuration of services and that "changing the model of care" is the only solution. Officials are currently working with HSC employers and Trade union colleagues on detailed proposals to reduce agency and locum spend in NI, beginning, as a first step, to examine the root causes of agency expenditure.

We are now, however, experiencing a second wave of infections, and, as a result, the number of patients in Trust hospitals who are COVID-19 positive continue to rise. My Department's immediate priority therefore is to continue working closely with HSC Trusts to ensure there is sufficient capacity within the system to meet these exceptional demands.

Mr Middleton asked the Minister of Health how many patients have entered Altnagelvin Hospital, tested negative for COVID-19, and then subsequently tested positive for COVID-19 whilst in hospital care.

Mr Swann: Information on the number of patients admitted with a negative test on admission, but that subsequently test positive for COVID-19 whilst in Altnagelvin hospital is not available.

Department for Infrastructure

Mr Chambers asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether there are points of contact within her Department for elected members with street lighting queries to deploy other than the online reporting facility.

(AQW 9431/17-22)

Ms Mallon (The Minister for Infrastructure): In addition to the online reporting system, where elected representatives can track the progress of repairs (<https://www.nidirect.gov.uk/services/report-street-light-fault>), my Department has in place a central telephone number (0300 200 7899) to facilitate reporting of street lighting and other issues, particularly those with health and safety implications which may require urgent attention.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister for Infrastructure for an update on works undertaken by her Department in West Tyrone (i) for the 2019/2020 financial year; and (ii) the schemes being undertaken in 2021/2022.
(AQW 9479/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The electoral area of West Tyrone straddles two DFI Roads Section Office areas, specifically Derry & Strabane and Fermanagh & Omagh East. The information requested is collated by Section Office area but is not available specifically for the area requested.

Details of works undertaken in 2019/20 and programmed for 2020/21 within the Fermanagh & Omagh East Section Office area are included in the spring Fermanagh and Omagh District Council report which is available via the following link:

<https://www.infrastructure-ni.gov.uk/sites/default/files/publications/infrastructure/Fermanagh%20and%20Omagh%20District%20Council%20Report%20Spring%202020%20-%20FINAL%20REPORT%20AS%20ISSUED%20TO%20FODC.PDF>.

Details of work completed in 2019/20 and work programmed for 2020/21 within the Derry and Strabane Section Office area will be included within the Derry City and Strabane District Council report which is due to be presented to Council on Wednesday 9 December, after which my officials will send you the link to the report.

Details of works programmes for 2021/22 are not available at this time.

Mr Robinson asked the Minister for Infrastructure (i) why Northern Ireland was excluded from the Veterans' Railcard Scheme; and (ii) how she will address this.
(AQW 9513/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The Veterans Railcard will offer 1/3 off train fares in GB for military veterans and family members they are travelling with. To avail of the scheme, military veterans will be required to pay an annual fee for the card and there will be restrictions to the discount available during peak periods.

Translink currently offers a discount of 1/3 on rail, Goldline and Ulsterbus services when purchasing tickets after 9.30am. Translink also offers multi-journey tickets which provide a greater discount than the Veterans Railcard can provide on services before 9.30am, due to the minimum pricing restrictions on the Veterans Railcard for services at this time.

In addition, under the NI Concessionary Fares Scheme, residents here in receipt of a War Disablement Pension or a Guaranteed Income Payment from the Service Personnel and Veterans Agency may apply for a War Disablement SmartPass, which allows the card holder free concessionary travel on public transport services within the North. Similarly, everyone over the age of 60 is entitled to free travel on public transport services.

It is, therefore, unlikely that the introduction of a similar scheme in Northern Ireland would offer significant further benefits beyond those already available to veterans here.

Mr Blair asked the Minister for Infrastructure what funding her Department provides towards maintenance of electric car charging stations.
(AQW 9533/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The e-car public charge point network is owned, operated and maintained by the Electricity Supply Board (ESB). My Department does not provide any funding towards the maintenance of the public network of electric car charging stations. For information in relation to the e-car public network, ESB can be contacted at ecars@esb.ie or enquiries can be sent directly to ESB, Two Gateway, East Wall Road, DUBLIN 3, D03 A995.

I fully recognise the importance of having modern, reliable public electric vehicle charging infrastructure in providing confidence for users of ultra-low emission vehicles and in respect of the connectivity improvements this would bring. I am committed to seeing this infrastructure increased as part of my Department's climate change action and I have agreed with the DAERA Minister to work collaboratively to promote the use of electric vehicles and specifically to improve the charge point network.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Infrastructure to give a projected timescale for when the driving test backlog will be cleared.

Ms Mallon: Driving instructors are included in the Executive's regulations on businesses that must close until 20 November to help stop the spread of Covid-19. Following this Executive decision, driving tests also ceased over this period of increased restrictions based on public health and scientific advice. Driving tests will resume on 21 November. Motorcycle lessons and tests are not affected by these restrictions.

The DVA has identified that over 1,000 key workers and customers who had their driving test cancelled from late March to the end of June fall within the group of customers who had their tests cancelled due to the current restrictions. The DVA considers these customers as a priority group and has provided them with advance access to the booking system from 9 November to enable them to reschedule their appointments before it opens to the remaining customers whose tests were cancelled.

To create additional capacity the DVA will open up the booking system for February for the customers impacted by the recent restrictions only. Over 2,000 additional booking slots have also been made available in November, December and January as the DVA increases capacity by recruiting additional examiners. These slots will initially only be available to these impacted customers. Once all customers who had their tests recently cancelled have had the opportunity to rebook their appointments, the DVA is planning to open up the booking service for all other customers in late November/ early December.

The DVA will continue to offer driving tests on a Saturday and following consultation with key stakeholders is planning to offer driving tests for Heavy Goods Vehicles on Sundays, where it is suitable to do so without compromising the integrity of the test. The DVA will also use overtime to rota off-shift dual role driving examiners to provide additional capacity and to provide cover for scheduled driving tests, where due to a variety of unforeseen reasons such as sick absence or the requirement to self-isolate, driving examiners are unable to attend work.

To help further mitigate the impact on customers due to the cessation of practical driving as a result of the latest Covid restrictions, I will be bringing forward further legislation to extend the validity of theory test pass certificates. Theory test pass certificates which have already been extended by eight months and will expire from 1 November 2020 onwards, will have their validity period extended by a further four months. In addition, theory test pass certificates which expire between 1 November 2020 and 30 June 2021, and which have not already benefited from an extension, will have their validity period extended by eight months.

The DVA acknowledges that learner drivers are keen to take their driving tests at the earliest opportunity and will continue to work hard to maximise the availability of test slots. However, all driving test services across these islands are experiencing high demand with longer than usual waiting times. Like all public facing services, the Covid-19 restrictions mean that the DVA has had to adapt its services to ensure that they can be provided safely and they would ask customers for their patience at this difficult time.

In a normal year the DVA conducts around 47,000 Category B (private car) driving tests. However, this is not a normal year and therefore assessing the current demand for driving tests is very difficult and will continue to be influenced by a range of factors beyond the DVA's control, such as Covid restrictions.

It is my priority to ensure that our staff and customers remain safe and the DVA will continue to be guided by the latest public health and scientific advice as we work as quickly as we can to serve all our customers.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail what options her officials are looking at regarding the future development of Narrow Water bridge.

Ms Mallon: I am committed to progressing the long awaited transformative, iconic, Narrow Water Bridge. The Narrow Water Bridge is a commitment in New Decade, New Approach and is currently at options analysis stage and my officials are working to update an economic appraisal of options for development in collaboration with Southern colleagues in the Department for Transport. Current options under consideration include road design in addition to pedestrian and cycling options

Work has included significant stakeholder engagement and most recently, in September, I met with representatives from the Narrow Water Bridge Community Network and local political representatives to discuss the local support for a bridge to link the communities on both sides of the lough and how to maximise the multiple opportunities this project would deliver for local communities and our wider island economy.

I have recently engaged with Minister Ryan on the Narrow Water Bridge at the North South Ministerial Council on 7 October.

Mr O'Dowd asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether her Department has any plans to install electric car charging points in Department for Infrastructure owned carparks in Upper Bann.

Ms Mallon: The e-car public charge point network is owned, operated and maintained by the Electricity Supply Board (ESB). ESB is responsible for the development of their network of charge points and decides on a commercial basis what public infrastructure is required to meet current and future demand. For information in relation to the e-car public network, ESB can be contacted at ecars@esb.ie or enquiries can be sent directly to ESB, Two Gateway, East Wall Road, DUBLIN 3, D03 A995.

The market is also open to other commercial operators who would wish to provide charging infrastructure and it will be for them to consider site locations. My Department will, however, liaise closely with commercial providers to ensure the charging infrastructure remains fit for purpose commensurate with growth.

I fully recognise the importance of having modern, reliable public electric vehicle charging infrastructure in providing confidence for users of ultra-low emission vehicles and in respect of the connectivity improvements this would bring. I am pleased that my Department has been able to support the EU INTERREG VA Funded FASTER electric vehicle network project. This is a joint proposal across Scotland, Ireland and Northern Ireland to support the overarching ambition to transition to low carbon transport systems and to demonstrate how working together across these islands we can provide early systems learning in relation to the electrification of transport.

The project will complement and enhance the existing EV charging infrastructure, which was co-financed by the EU through TEN-T funding.

The project will install a total of 73 electric vehicle charging points across the island of Ireland and the West of Scotland by 31 March 2023.

Mr O'Dowd asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail (i) what procedures the Southern Division of DfI Roads has in place for dealing with correspondence from elected members of Armagh City, Banbridge and Craigavon Borough Council; and (ii) what quality controls are in place to ensure such correspondence is dealt with in a timely manner.

Ms Mallon: My Department is committed to providing quality services to all of our customers, including the elected members of Armagh City, Banbridge and Craigavon Borough Council, and our Customer Charter sets out the standard of service you can expect.

In relation to correspondence, acknowledgements to written correspondence received by the Department are issued within 3 working days, with staff endeavouring to investigate and provide a more detailed response within 15 working days that has been through the applicable clearance and approval process. Performance against these targets is also subject to ongoing monitoring and review by management within Southern Division.

Reports of routine road and street-lighting faults received by telephone call or email are recorded on our fault management system, with customers notified of the enquiry reference number. In addition, the on-line Report a Fault service on the NI Direct website is available to both public representatives and members of the public to log routine faults directly onto the fault management system. The website also provides information on the Track a Fault service through which customers can monitor the progress and results of an investigation.

The fault management system has recently been enhanced so customers receive an automated email acknowledgement as well as an indication of when the fault is likely to be dealt with. The email also includes a hyperlink to the Track a Fault service, together with guidance on how to view the Department's current policies, such as its Roads Maintenance Standards for Safety, which aims to help inform customers about our role and approach.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail (i) planned; and (ii) considered road improvements to the existing A5 road in Strabane.

Ms Mallon: My Department is shortly due to release its Annual Report to Derry City and Strabane District Council in advance of its meeting with Council next month. This report, which will provide a comprehensive list of all completed and proposed works within the Council area including those on the A5 road in Strabane, will after the meeting be available on the Department's website at <https://www.infrastructure-ni.gov.uk/publications>.

Ms Bailey asked the Minister for Infrastructure (i) whether she met wedding car operators in advance of announcing the Support Fund for Taxi Drivers and Private Coach and Bus Operators last week; and (ii) whether wedding car operators will be eligible for support under the Support Fund for Taxi Drivers and Private Coach and Bus Operators.

Ms Mallon: Flood Protection Schemes

Ms Rogan asked the Minister for Infrastructure what funds have been allocated to flood protection schemes in this financial year.

(AQW 9634/17-22)

Ms Mallon: My Department has allocated £6.6m to flood protection schemes in this financial year. This includes funding for flood alleviation and drainage infrastructure works.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether she will extend the £19 million Support Fund for Taxi Drivers and Private Coach and Bus Operators to include wedding and event car hire businesses.

(AQW 9641/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I recently secured funding of £14m for taxi drivers and £5m for private bus and coach operators from the Executive. The funding for taxi drivers is open to drivers in all classes, including Class C which wedding car drivers fall under. This package, taken together with the £1.5m that I have already put in place to waive fees for the renewal of taxi and bus vehicle licences, will ensure that more drivers will be able to continue in the trade and hence be available for recovery, post-Covid.

The financial assistance scheme for taxi drivers is open to all self-employed licensed drivers including wedding car drivers who were available to work from 22nd March to 30th September 2020 and is being launched this week. The bespoke support offered will be via a one off payment of £1500. This one off payment will be a contribution to their yearly overhead costs including PPE and recognises the financial pressures sustained by eligible taxi drivers due to Covid-19.

Ms Anderson asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether she will explore the possibility of earmarking the Section 76 financial contribution to the Department for Infrastructure from housing developers in Skeoge, Derry, for sewerage and drainage infrastructure along the A2 Buncrana Road.

Ms Mallon: The financial contributions to my Department from the developers of the housing lands in the Skeoge area of Derry are to mitigate the transport impacts associated with the development and were identified when planning permission was granted. As such, this funding can only be used to address transport impacts and not improvements to sewerage and drainage infrastructure.

These housing lands were zoned as part of the Derry Area Plan 2011 which acknowledged that many development sites will require the improvement of existing infrastructure and indeed the provision of additional infrastructure, such as roads and sewerage. It further advises that developers would bear the costs associated with these works to facilitate their developments.

Ms Anderson asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether she will direct her officials to fully explore a Nature Based Catchment Management Strategy for the Linear park in Gallaigh, Derry, in order to sustainably address persisting drainage issues which hampers development in the wider Ballyarnett area, including the expansion of the A2 Buncrana Road.

Ms Mallon: On the 11 November 2020 I launched a public consultation on Living With Water in Belfast - a £1.4 billion investment plan for drainage and wastewater management within the greater Belfast area. The plan sets out a new approach to the provision of drainage and wastewater infrastructure by promoting holistic and integrated solutions that achieve a wide range of benefits at reduced cost and disruption. Proposed measures include blue/green infrastructure such as river floodplain reconnection works alongside more conventional hard engineered improvements to sewerage networks and wastewater treatment works.

The plan is being developed as part of my Department's Living With Water Programme (LWWP), a multi-agency initiative which provides a blueprint for an integrated nature based catchment management approach to drainage and wastewater management. The LWWP is initially focussing on Belfast but I am very keen to see the Living With Water approach being extended to other parts of the North. This includes Derry, where I have recently allocated £130k from this years' budget to start the development of a Living With Water feasibility study. This study will initially focus on working with the designers of the A2 Buncrana Road Strategic Road Improvement scheme to bring forward integrated drainage solutions within the Skeoge River and Pennyburn Culvert catchments. The study will examine opportunities to use blue/green spaces, such as the linear park in Gallaigh, to naturally attenuate surface water to improve water quality in the rivers and reduce flood risk within the surrounding area.

Ms Anderson asked the Minister for Infrastructure, in the review of planning, whether she will consider a mechanism to provide a solution when a householder infringes their covenant not to construct a wall, fence or tree on a service strip which has not been adopted by the Department for Infrastructure, and where a developer refuses to consider legal action to remedy this situation due to reputational damage, which ultimately prevents the roads from being adopted.

Ms Mallon: The adoption of Private Streets including service strips is a developer led process, and planning conditions are normally placed on development which include service strips, to ensure visibility is retained from individual driveways in the interests of road safety and to prevent damage or obstruction to services. Given the length of time involved in some cases, issues in relation to service strips may fall outside the timeline for planning enforcement. Service strip infringements are often best resolved by the developer and homeowners in the interests of getting the road infrastructure adopted and maintained as a public road.

Although the issue of service strips infringement will not be included in this Review of the Planning Act, as it is considered to fall outside the scope of the terms of the review, the more general issues related to enforcement will.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Infrastructure for an update on her Department's legislative plans.

Ms Mallon: In terms of primary legislation, you will be aware that I am currently progressing the Harbours (Grants and Loans Limit) Bill, which is scheduled for introduction to the Assembly on 23 November 2020 for accelerated passage.

I am also planning a number of pieces of subordinate legislation to address the increasing problem of mobile phone use by drivers and also the introduction of part-time 20 mph speed limits at a further 100 schools. The first piece of mobile phone legislation will increase the fixed penalty fine for using a mobile phone whilst driving from £60 to £200. The second, which is subject to affirmative resolution procedure in the Assembly, will increase the number of penalty points for the illegal use of mobile phones from three to six. I hope to be in a position to implement these increased deterrents by the end of January 2021, subject to the usual Assembly approval processes. The legislation required to introduce part-time 20 mph speed limits at a further 100 schools is in the final stages of drafting and I expect the relevant notice will be advertised shortly as required by the legislative process.

In addition, as a member of the Committee for Infrastructure, you will be aware that a significant part of my Department's legislative programme involves the development of routine subordinate legislation in key areas such as rail, ports, planning, transport, roads and driving. This legislation is required to address issues such as Brexit, Road Safety and Roads management, and the planning process, which generate an ongoing need for legislative change. I am also exploring a number of additional areas for legislative change that can be advanced within the period remaining before the end of the mandate.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether she is exploring the removal of permitted development rights for precious metals.

Ms Mallon: While I am bringing forward legislation to remove permitted development rights for petroleum (oil and gas) exploration, I have also asked officials to brief me on the operation of the minerals exploration permitted development regime for precious metals. This will allow me to consider whether I wish to bring forward any further changes to permitted development rights for mineral exploration.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for Infrastructure for an update as to when previously planned works will be carried out at Patton's Lane, Holywood.

Ms Mallon: The Environmental Improvement scheme planned for Patton's Lane in Holywood is being delivered in partnership with the Department for Communities.

At a joint inspection involving my officials and their counterparts from the Department for Communities the scope of the works and the principles for the design were agreed.

My Department is now seeking to undertake the necessary design work in order to have this work progressed during the current financial year.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Infrastructure (i) for an update on the Road Safety Grant Scheme; and (ii) where funding is intended to be allocated, broken down by Division.
(AQW 9746/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The Road Safety (Safe Travel) Grant Scheme closed for applications on 9th October 2020. My Department received 61 applications for project funding, and all projects are being assessed against the criteria for the scheme. Starting with the top scoring projects, funding will then be allocated to projects which meet the criteria. Work continues to score each project. Decisions are expected to be issued shortly after which the breakdown of funding will be available.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Infrastructure what engagement she has had with transport sector representatives following the drafting of support schemes.

Ms Mallon: After I initially met with representatives of the transport sectors on the 30 September 2020 to discuss the proposed support schemes, I engaged with representatives of the bus sector on the 27 October 2020 to discuss the proposed design of a support scheme.

In developing a draft support scheme, my Officials have also met with representatives of the bus sector on the 8 October 2020, 3 November 2020 and 17 November 2020.

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Infrastructure what engagement her Department has had with the Quarry Products Association NI regarding buffer zones.
(AQW 9749/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The 1995 'Report of the Blasting Controls Working Group' which deals with buffer zones around quarries was updated in October 2017 in consultation with stakeholders including the Quarry Products Association NI (now the Minerals Products Association NI). QPA also regularly engages with several business areas in the Department including planning where they can raise any issues of concern.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail her plans for reopening the practical driving test booking system for slots beyond January 2021 for all learner drivers.

Ms Mallon: Driving instructors are included in the Executive's regulations on businesses that must close until 20 November to help stop the spread of Covid-19. Following this Executive decision, driving tests also ceased over this period of increased restrictions based on public health and scientific advice. Driving tests will resume on 21 November. Motorcycle lessons and tests are not affected by these restrictions.

The DVA has identified that over 1,000 key workers and customers who had their driving test cancelled from late March to the end of June fall within the group of customers who had their tests cancelled due to the current restrictions. The DVA considers these customers as a priority group and has provided them with advance access to the booking system from 9 November to enable them to reschedule their appointments before it opens to the remaining customers whose tests were cancelled.

To create additional capacity the DVA will open up the booking system for February for the customers impacted by the recent restrictions only. Over 2,000 additional booking slots have also been made available in November, December and January as the DVA increases capacity by recruiting additional examiners. These slots will initially only be available to these impacted customers. Once all customers who had their tests recently cancelled have had the opportunity to rebook their appointments, the DVA is planning to open up the booking service for all other customers in late November/ early December.

The DVA will continue to offer driving tests on a Saturday and following consultation with key stakeholders is planning to offer driving tests for Heavy Goods Vehicles on Sundays, where it is suitable to do so without compromising the integrity of the test. The DVA will also use overtime to rota off-shift dual role driving examiners to provide additional capacity and to provide cover for scheduled driving tests, where due to a variety of unforeseen reasons such as sick absence or the requirement to self-isolate, driving examiners are unable to attend work.

To help further mitigate the impact on customers due to the cessation of practical driving as a result of the latest Covid restrictions, I will be bringing forward further legislation to extend the validity of theory test pass certificates. Theory test pass certificates which have already been extended by eight months and will expire from 1 November 2020 onwards, will have their validity period extended by a further four months. In addition, theory test pass certificates which expire between 1 November 2020 and 30 June 2021, and which have not already benefited from an extension, will have their validity period extended by eight months.

The DVA acknowledges that learner drivers are keen to take their driving tests at the earliest opportunity and will continue to work hard to maximise the availability of test slots. However, all driving test services across these islands are experiencing high demand with longer than usual waiting times. Like all public facing services, the Covid-19 restrictions mean that the DVA has had to adapt its services to ensure that they can be provided safely and they would ask customers for their patience at this difficult time.

It is my priority to ensure that our staff and customers remain safe and the DVA will continue to be guided by the latest public health and scientific advice as we work as quickly as we can to serve all our customers.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Infrastructure (i) what plans she has to extend the two-year validity period of theory test pass certificates for those learner drivers whose theory tests expire after 31 October 2020; and (ii) whether any extension will be backdated to include anyone whose theory test expired from 1 November 2020 onwards.

Ms Mallon: The Motor Vehicles (Driving Licences) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1996 have been amended to allow an eight month extension to the validity of theory test pass certificates, which expired between 1 March and 31 October 2020 and a 6 month extension to the validity of off-road motorcycle test pass certificates, which expire between 1 March 2020 and 31 August 2020.

Further legislation will be brought forward and put in place to help further mitigate the impact on customers due to the cessation of practical driving tests as a result of the latest Covid restrictions.

Theory test pass certificates which have already been extended by eight months, will have their validity period extended by a further 4 months. In addition, theory test pass certificates which expire between 1 November 2020 and 30 June 2021, and which have not already benefited from an extension, will have their validity period extended by eight months. There is no requirement to further extend the validity period of off-road motorcycle test pass certificates as these tests have continued to be delivered from 6 July 2020.

Customers whose certificates expire between the relevant dates do not need to do anything: their certificates will be automatically extended, and customers will be able to book a practical driving test when the service reopens on 21st November 2020.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Infrastructure what steps are being taken to (i) process the backlog of planning applications; and (ii) ensure other statutory agencies involved in the planning process are working to schedule.

Ms Mallon: While responsibility for processing the majority of planning applications falls to councils, my Department has taken a number of steps to assist with the processing of planning applications as expeditiously as possible during the pandemic, such as: temporarily suspending the requirement for a pre-application community consultation public event; encouraging councils to review their schemes of delegation in order to reduce the number of applications which would be required to go before planning committees for decision; and working with the Department for Communities to bring in regulations enabling councils to hold planning committee meetings remotely in order to allow council business to proceed.

I am also aware that many councils have adopted pragmatic contingency arrangements to ensure planning applications continue to be processed during this period.

In relation to statutory consultees, I am aware that they are working hard to conduct business as usual, in terms of processing statutory planning consultations, albeit subject to the Covid restrictions. All key statutory consultees are available to participate in virtual or telephone meetings and address any planning queries. My Department is also working closely with statutory consultees through a cross governmental Planning Forum to implement recommendations from a recent report on the role of statutory consultees in the planning process. It is intended that this work will improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the planning process particularly with regard to major and economically sensitive planning applications.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Infrastructure, pursuant to AQW 6243 17-22, for an update (i) on her work with the Office for Low Emission Vehicles for the development of a UK-wide transport decarbonisation plan; and (ii) on her contribution to the Department for the Economy Energy Strategy.

Ms Mallon: Over the last few months, my officials have been working closely with the Department for Transport (DfT) on the development of UK wide transport decarbonisation plans and with the Department for the Economy on the transport elements of the proposed new Energy Strategy for the North.

In respect of the UK wide plans, my officials will be engaging further with DfT, and the other Devolved Administrations on emerging findings following engagement with key stakeholders from across the transport and environmental sectors in the coming weeks.

In parallel, my Department continues to lead the Transport Working Group, set up to inform the transport elements of the draft energy strategy. The working group has prioritised four key areas for consideration: modal shift; the electrification of transport; the introduction of alternative fuels; and the future of mobility.

The outcomes from these comprehensive pieces of work will help shape how transport decarbonisation can be achieved across these Islands, with particular focus on the Northern Ireland context, and will help inform any future policy intentions I would wish to bring forward.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail any plans for roll-out trials of low traffic neighbourhoods, as applied in some parts of England.

Ms Mallon: The Low Traffic Neighbourhoods scheme in England is a UK Government scheme and as such it is not being rolled out locally. My Department is currently engaging with local residents on a number of similar schemes to address concerns about the speed and the volume of through traffic in residential areas.

My Department will study the outcome of the trials in England with a view to taking any lessons learned from it which can be applied here.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Infrastructure, pursuant to AQW 8353/17-22, what steps are now planned to make adequate sewerage provision in the villages of (i) Armoy; (ii) Dervock; (iii) Mosside; and (iv) Stranocum.

(AQW 9795/17-22)

Ms Mallon: For each Price Control (PC) period, NI Water prioritises its Wastewater Quality Programme with the environmental regulator, the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA). In doing so, a prioritised list of schemes for wastewater treatment works, serving a population equivalent greater than 250, is identified to deliver defined quality improvements or major upgrades. These are prioritised with a strong emphasis on environmental compliance, headroom capacity issues and the potential to ease development constraints.

There are over 100 towns and villages experiencing wastewater capacity issues across Northern Ireland. Unfortunately, due to insufficient funding being made available, the upgrades to the wastewater treatment works serving Armoy, Dervock, Mosside and Stranocum have had to be deferred until at least PC27(2027-2033), when they will be subject to NI Water's business planning prioritisation process and the availability of funding for PC27.

Mr Robinson asked the Minister for Infrastructure why the Northern Division have only one gully cleaner operational.

Ms Mallon: My Department currently has 7 of its in-house gully emptiers assigned to Northern Division. One of these machines is out of service until mid-December for a major repair. A further three gully emptiers are also available to Northern Division through external contract.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether funding from the Blue/Green Fund is available for feasibility studies.[R]

Ms Mallon: The Blue Green Fund which I announced in June 2020, encompasses a number of individual projects and programmes, some of which have already been launched such as my Departments' contribution to the COVID 19 Town Revitalisation Schemes; and further projects and programmes which are currently being developed to be rolled out in the near future including the Blue/Green Challenge Fund to support community groups and businesses.

The Blue/Green Fund is Capital, and therefore it is important that careful consideration is given to the use of the fund for feasibility studies, to ensure that the product will represent an asset which can be capitalised.

The underlying theme for all of the Blue Green projects and programmes is to act as a catalyst for positive infrastructure and cultural change in the way we live and travel. By their nature many of these programmes and projects are and will be pilots to establish feasibility, and to pump prime for future activities.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for Infrastructure, in light of the recent serious road traffic accident in the vicinity, when the speed limit review will be carried out at The Cotton, Newtownards Road, Donaghadee.

Ms Mallon: I was very sorry to hear reports of the collision involving a pedestrian on the Cotton Road and I hope the young person is recovering from her traumatic experience. I have asked officials to contact the PSNI when their investigation is complete to obtain further information relating to this collision and to consider any emerging factors relevant to my Department.

As I previously advised in my recent correspondence to you, I can confirm that I have asked my officials to carry out a speed limit review along this stretch of road during the next few months and to advise you of the outcome when this has been completed.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail the rationale for the £100,000 cap on payments to an individual bus and coach operator to be provided as part of private bus and coach support scheme.[R]

Ms Mallon: The DfI support scheme for private coach and bus operators being developed will distribute £5m of public funds. £100k is the maximum payment which can be paid through this scheme and is in addition to other available financial support such as the £25k of business support grants, furlough and rate support and COVID 19 loans. This scheme was devised to help ensure payments can get to the industry quickly and the cap was recommended in line with value for money. It is estimated that this £100,000 cap will impact on approximately 2% of operators and I have asked my officials to continue to work with the industry through this crisis.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail (i) the methodology behind finding the compliance rate of face coverings on public transport; and (ii) how often this is reviewed.

Ms Mallon:

- (i) Translink operational staff undertake surveys to assess compliance with the requirement to wear face coverings on public transport. The surveys record the numbers of passengers wearing face coverings and the number who are not. On rail services, surveys are undertaken across the whole rail network. On Ulsterbus, they are carried out at various stations and mid-route on some services. Metro and Glider services are subject to surveys across a range of different routes and halts.
- (ii) Whilst the methodology for undertaking the reviews has not been revised the surveys are, on average, carried out on a monthly basis.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Infrastructure when the current backlog of driving tests is expected to be cleared.

(AQW 9831/17-22)

Ms Mallon: Driving instructors are included in the Executive's regulations on businesses that must close until 20 November to help stop the spread of Covid-19. Following this Executive decision, driving tests have also ceased over this period of increased restrictions based on public health and scientific advice. Motorcycle lessons and tests were not affected by these restrictions.

To create additional capacity the DVA has opened up the booking system for February for the customers impacted by the recent restrictions only. Over 2,000 additional booking slots have also been made available in November, December and January as the DVA increases capacity by recruiting additional examiners. These slots have only been released to impacted customers and once all customers who had their tests recently cancelled have had the opportunity to rebook their appointments, the DVA will open up the booking service for all other customers.

The DVA will continue to offer driving tests on a Saturday and following consultation with key stakeholders is planning to offer driving tests for Heavy Goods Vehicles on Sundays, where it is suitable to do so without compromising the integrity of the test. The DVA will also use overtime to rota off-shift dual role driving examiners to provide additional capacity and to provide cover for scheduled driving tests, where due to a variety of unforeseen reasons such as sick absence or the requirement to self-isolate, driving examiners are unable to attend work.

To help further mitigate the impact on customers due to the cessation of practical driving as a result of the latest Covid restrictions, I will be bringing forward further legislation to extend the validity of theory test pass certificates. Theory test pass certificates which have already been extended by eight months and will expire from 1 November 2020 onwards, will have their validity period extended by a further four months. In addition, theory test pass certificates which expire between 1 November 2020 and 30 June 2021, and which have not already benefited from an extension, will have their validity period extended by eight months.

The DVA acknowledges that learner drivers are keen to take their driving tests at the earliest opportunity and will continue to work hard to maximise the availability of test slots. However, all driving test services across these islands are experiencing high demand with longer than usual waiting times. Like all public facing services, the Covid-19 restrictions mean that the DVA has had to adapt its services to ensure that they can be provided safely and they would ask customers for their patience at this difficult time.

Given the ongoing unprecedented situation we find ourselves in as a result of the pandemic, assessing the current demand for driving tests is very difficult and will continue to be influenced by a range of factors beyond the DVA's control, such as Covid restrictions. It is therefore not possible to accurately give a projected timescale when the demand for driving tests will return to pre-Covid levels.

It remains my priority to ensure that our staff and customers remain safe and the DVA will continue to be guided by the latest public health and scientific advice as we work as quickly as we can to serve all our customers.

Miss Woods asked the Minister for Infrastructure, pursuant to AQW 7857/17-22, whether Derry City and Strabane District Council's ability to enforce against sand extraction at Kildoag Road, Goshaden, Derry, is being hampered by her Department not enacting legislation in respect of the Review of Old Minerals Permissions.

Ms Mallon: Councils currently have a range of powers available to them under the Planning Act (NI) 2011 to enforce against unauthorised development should they consider it necessary. These enforcement powers are separate from the provisions relating to the Review of Old Minerals Permissions under the Planning Act which have not been commenced.

In addition to planning enforcement powers, councils also have powers under the Environment and Clean Neighbourhoods Act (NI) 2011 to take action in relation to nuisance and amenity issues.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether she will bring forward a pilot school streets initiative involving the creation of temporary restrictions on motorised traffic at drop-off and pick-up times outside of schools.

Ms Mallon: As Minister responsible for promoting and improving road safety, I want to work actively with partners to reduce death and serious injuries on our roads and I believe providing road safety measures at schools can go a long way to help.

I was therefore delighted to have been able to commit funding in this year's capital budget towards the introduction of part-time 20 mph speed limits at around 100 schools. These measures will increase driver awareness and achieve reductions in vehicle speeds outside and near these schools ensuring that parents, children and staff will be safer as they go to and from the schools on a daily basis. Our efforts are therefore currently primarily focussing on the delivery of this challenging commitment.

However, I am also interested in the school street initiative and have asked my officials to explore options for a 'School Street' scheme in Northern Ireland and to liaise with the Department of Education and Sustrans.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether she has spoken with the Minister of Health regarding improving active travel access to Health and Social Care Trust sites for staff.

(AQW 9887/17-22)

Ms Mallon: Since the summer officials have made improvements to active travel access to the three hospitals within the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust area. This includes a two way cycle lane along the Dublin Road, providing improved access to the City Hospital, with further consideration being given to a trial cycle lane along the Donegall Road. In addition a two way cycle lane has been put in place along the Grosvenor Road to provide access for staff to the Royal Victoria Hospital. A small improvement has been made along the Crumlin Road to help those who wish to travel actively to the Mater Hospital. I have asked my officials to make contact with their counterparts in the Department of Health to see if any further opportunities to work on active travel issues with Health and Social Care staff can be identified. I will ensure that my Department pursues all possible opportunities to promote active travel and the benefits it brings to mental and physical health.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for Infrastructure for her assessment of the impact upon (i) Translink; and (ii) the provision of public transport services as a result of receiving £10 million for lost passenger income from the October monitoring round.[R]

Ms Mallon: The member will be aware of the significant impact that Covid-19 has had on the passenger income that public transport providers across these islands normally rely on to maintain public transport services and also of the huge efforts that Translink, our own publicly owned public transport provider, has made to keep services running safely for those passengers who rely on them to get to work or for other essential purposes.

To keep these services running over the winter period and to ensure that the company's financial viability is not put at risk, Translink's latest assessment is that it needs a further £20m and that amount was part of the bid lodged by my Department with the Department of Finance. The £10m allocation provided to me, which is in response to a much wider range of pressures than Translink's alone, falls far short of what is needed.

However, the member will also be aware that the Executive has previously committed to ensuring the necessary steps are taken to maintain the viability of Translink and its ability to deliver necessary public transport services. I am working closely with the Minister of Finance and other Executive colleagues to ensure that this commitment translates into timely funding allocations that can ensure that the provision of the public transport services on which so many people rely is not adversely impacted.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Infrastructure, in order to clear the MOT backlog, whether she is considering using garages with the correct equipment and expertise to be allowed to do MOT testing, as in the rest of the United Kingdom.

Ms Mallon: MOT tests are conducted in compliance with The Road Traffic (Northern Ireland) Order 1995 and the Motor Vehicle Testing Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2003 and this existing legislative framework does not provide for vehicle tests to be conducted at private garages.

From 20 July, the Driver and Vehicle Agency (DVA) resumed MOT testing at all test centres for priority vehicle groups, including those vehicles that are not able to avail of a Temporary Exemption Certificate (TEC). This includes taxis and buses due a first time test, vehicles not previously registered in Northern Ireland, vehicles whose MOTs have expired by more than 12 months that includes vehicles previously declared SORN and those sold by car dealerships.

From 1 September, MOT testing was further extended to include four year old cars and motorbikes and three year old light goods vehicles. Vehicle testing also resumed for vehicles in this category that currently have a TEC; they will be called for test when the TEC expires. In addition, the DVA also resumed the testing of heavy goods vehicles and trailers.

TECs will continue to be issued for all other eligible vehicles until vehicle testing services can be fully reinstated. Vehicles whose existing MOT certificate expired from 26 March 2020 or will expire before testing for their category resumes will be automatically exempt from testing for a full 12 months, with their new MOT expiry date pushed forward into 2021.

The DVA can currently test all vehicles that require an MOT, and MOT test appointments are available to book within the waiting time targets in all test centres so there is no backlog. However, in order to prevent a backlog of MOT tests, the DVA has recently recruited some vehicle examiners and is currently in the process of recruiting additional examiners. The DVA will also use overtime to provide additional capacity and cover for vehicle tests, if due to a variety of unforeseen reasons such as sick absence or the requirement to self-isolate, examiners are unable to attend work.

Like all public facing services, the Covid-19 restrictions mean that the DVA has had to adapt its services to ensure that they can be provided safely and they would ask customers for their patience at this difficult time.

It is my priority to ensure that our staff and customers remain safe and the DVA will continue to be guided by the latest public health and scientific advice as we work as quickly as we can to serve all our customers.

Mr Chambers asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail (i) the cost of the recent resurfacing of a portion of Gransha Road, Bangor; and (ii) whether this work came from a departmental reserve list of projects.
(AQW 9899/17-22)

Ms Mallon:

- (i) The resurfacing scheme at the Gransha Road in Bangor has only recently been completed and the final costs have still to be determined; however the estimated cost is around £175,000.
- (ii) The Gransha Road resurfacing scheme was included on the list of proposed schemes for the 2020/21 financial year and therefore did not feature on the recent reserve list.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Infrastructure when street lights on both sides of the A2 Dual Carriageway from Palace Barracks to Redburn Square, Holywood, are going to be replaced and working.
(AQW 9900/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I can confirm that phase 1 of the street lighting replacement scheme on the A2 Dual Carriageway from Palace Barracks to Redburn Square was completed in April 2020. The second phase of this scheme addressing the lighting on the Belfast bound carriageway began on Monday 9 November and is expected to be completed by Friday 20 November.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Infrastructure, given recent development along the road, what consideration has been given to reducing the speed limit from 60mph to 40mph between the entrance to Loughview Cemetery and the start of the current 30mph zone on the A21 Ballygowan to Comber Road.

Ms Mallon: Requests for a change to a speed limit on a public road are assessed in accordance with the Department's guidelines 'Setting Local Speed Limits in Northern Ireland' which can be accessed via the following link: <https://www.infrastructure-ni.gov.uk/publications/setting-local-speed-limits-northern-ireland-rsppg-e051>

Officials have carried out an assessment of this section of the A21 Ballygowan to Comber road in accordance with this policy and concluded that the existing speed limit remains appropriate based on the current level of development and the nature of the road.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Infrastructure, now that drivers attending appointments are prohibited from entering the building, why no means of shelter is provided at Ballymena MOT centre.

Ms Mallon: The Driver & Vehicle Agency (DVA) continues to review its risk assessments to ensure that all relevant control measures relating to Covid-19 are incorporated into its driver and vehicle testing processes. As a result, localised arrangements are being put in place to accommodate as many customers as possible within the test centre buildings while their vehicle is being tested. Customers will be required to wear face coverings and comply with local H&S requirements and this position will be kept under review.

It is my priority to ensure that our staff and customers remain safe and the DVA will continue to be guided by the latest public health and scientific advice as we work as quickly as we can to serve all our customers.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for Infrastructure (i) to detail how she arrived at the figure of £1,500 for each taxi driver from her support fund; and (ii) for her assessment on whether this is sufficient funding for taxi drivers to cover the course of the COVID-19 pandemic.

Ms Mallon: The Taxi Drivers' Financial Assistance Scheme, which launched on 13th November, recognises that self-employed taxi drivers have significant overheads, including additional PPE costs, which were not covered by payments received through the available self-employed income support schemes (SEISS). It provides additional support to that which was/is available to self-employed drivers through the SEISS. The SEISS allowed individuals to claim a taxable grant worth 80% and 70% of their average monthly trading profits. This separate scheme recognises that drivers have not been able to earn as much income to cover their ongoing costs, such as taxi insurance, but which they have still had to pay out.

The one off payment of £1500 is based on the evidence and information provided by the sector relating to their average yearly overhead costs; these costs have been independently verified by the Department. The amount is in recognition of the financial pressures sustained by eligible taxi drivers due to Covid-19 and the additional costs incurred on PPE.

I recognise that, similar to other support schemes, this will not fully fund the overheads but it will make a significant contribution to the overheads faced by sector.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether she will seek further funding to assist taxi drivers as part of the January monitoring round.

(AQW 9970/17-22)

Ms Mallon: As you are aware I recently bid for £25m and was allocated £19m to fund the private coach and bus scheme, and the taxi driver financial assistance scheme to assist with overheads including PPE and insurance costs which was launched on 13 November. £6m from the £25m bid is being held at the centre and it will provide me with some flexibility in keeping under review the circumstances of the sectors.

I continue to press for the inclusion of the taxi and private coach and bus sectors in the various other support schemes being taken forward across the Executive.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for Infrastructure for her assessment of the impact of receiving no funding for Driver and Vehicle Agency lost income in the October monitoring round.

(AQW 9971/17-22)

Ms Mallon: As the Driver & Vehicle Agency (DVA) is primarily funded through fees collected for all of its services to the public, COVID-19 has had a major impact on the financial position of the Agency.

At the October monitoring round my Department put forward a £12m bid for the remaining estimated loss of DVA income. This bid for funding was unsuccessful at this round and a further bid has since been submitted. If no funding is received for this loss of fee income, the DVA Trading Fund will be in a significant deficit position for the 2020-21 year and planned capital investment for future years may not go ahead. I would intend to submit another bid for this funding as part of January Monitoring.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Infrastructure for an update on the work of the Safe Transport Team.

(AQW 9980/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The Safe Transport Team (STT) have been policing bus, train and Glider services since 21 September 2020 and have carried out the following operations:

- 2 x plainclothes operations within Great Victoria Street/Europa Buscentre;
- 1 x operation with passive drugs dog in Great Victoria Street/Europa Buscentre;
- 2 x targeted operations on the Glider service in West Belfast relating to Anti-Social Behaviour;
- Travelled the length of the rail network including the Cross-Border route on the Enterprise as far as Newry, and visited every station and unmanned halt along the entire rail network;
- Carried out Anti-Social Behaviour patrols at Downpatrick and Newtownards bus stations and liaised with Neighbourhood Policing Teams in those areas in relation to issues raised by Translink; and
- Numerous journeys on late night rail services.

The team have also met with each of the bus and rail operational teams and are developing detailed plans to further ensure the safety of our public transport network.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Infrastructure what date bus and coach operators can access the funding from the forthcoming support scheme.

(AQW 9981/17-22)

Ms Mallon: A financial support scheme for bus operators is currently being developed, as a high priority, by my officials. It is planned that the scheme will open for applications during week commencing 23 November.

Mr O'Dowd asked the Minister for Infrastructure on what grounds planning permission would be given to a proposed housing development which has no connection to outfall sewers or storm sewer available.

Ms Mallon: Under the reformed 2 tier planning system, councils are responsible for determining the vast majority of planning applications including those for housing developments.

Whilst the Department's Strategic Planning Policy Statement (SPPS) recognises that adverse environmental impacts associated with development can include sewerage, drainage, waste water and water quality it notes that planning authorities will be best placed to identify and consider, in consultation with stakeholders, all relevant environment and amenity considerations for their areas.

All such planning applications are considered on a case by case basis on their merits, taking into account the Local Development Plan; regional planning policy; local circumstances and characteristics; the advice of statutory consultees, including (where relevant) NI Water and DfI Rivers; and, all other material considerations. Ultimately, the interpretation, relevance and weight to be attached to all material considerations, is a matter of planning judgement for the planning authority.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Infrastructure (i) whether her Department holds a copy of an archaeological evaluation of the Boyne Bridge, South Belfast; and (ii) if so, whether she would lay a copy of the same in the Assembly Library.

Ms Mallon: I can confirm that my Department holds a copy of an Archaeological Evaluation and Bridge Coring preliminary Report, which discusses the coring of the south end of the Boyne Bridge in Sandy Row, Belfast in order to establish whether or not the 17th century Saltwater Bridge over the Blackstaff River still exists in a buried state at its south end.

A copy of this report will be provided to the Assembly Library. This report is also available to view on the planning portal using the reference number LA04/2020/0223/DC.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Infrastructure for an update on the resurfacing of Moss Road, Millisle.

(AQW 10053/17-22)

Ms Mallon: My Department has added the resurfacing of the urban stretch of the Moss Road, Millisle to its resurfacing programme for the current financial year. Design work is currently being undertaken for this scheme and work is programmed to commence during the current financial year.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Infrastructure what consideration has she given to introducing e-scooter regulations.

Ms Mallon: I can confirm that it is currently illegal to use e-scooters on public roads and public spaces for rental or private use here and in GB.

However, DfT in conjunction with local authorities are currently running pilot e-scooter rental schemes in GB within designated areas which began in July this year. The aim of these schemes, which do not extend to Northern Ireland, is to help assess their safety and impact on public spaces. I have asked my officials to monitor these schemes, and once an analysis is available, to provide me with a report which will assist my consideration of their legal position here.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether she will engage with bus and coach representatives over the forthcoming support schemes.

Ms Mallon: I have had a number of meetings with representatives and key stakeholders from the bus and coach industry. These discussions have been useful, and my officials continue to engage regularly with the industry to keep them informed and seek their input on the development of the support scheme.

Miss McIlveen asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail the timescale for the resurfacing of Mill Street and Castle Street, Comber.

Ms Mallon: My Department's budget for carriageway resurfacing is limited and therefore work has to be prioritised and targeted at those roads which are in the poorest condition and where the greatest benefits can be accrued.

Mill Street and Castle Street, Comber are both in reasonable condition and therefore my Department currently has no plans to carry out any resurfacing work at either of these locations.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister for Infrastructure for an update on the St. Lucia site, Omagh.

(AQW 10081/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The St Lucia site remains in joint ownership between my Department and the Ministry of Defence (MOD) who retain ownership of the Historic Core. My officials continue discussions with MOD colleagues regarding the transfer of this remaining part of the site, however it is unlikely that any additional resource will be offered with the transfer.

You will be aware that the purpose of the gifting of this site was to generate revenue for the NI Executive. However the transfer of the Historic Core in its current condition and given the current market conditions is likely to place a considerable financial burden on the Executive and be disproportionate to its market value.

Notwithstanding this, I have asked my officials to explore all the available options in respect of the site with key stakeholders including the Department for Communities (DfC).

Mr Muir asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail the timescale for commencement of consultation proposals arising from the Operation SNAP initiative.

(AQW 10124/17-22)

Ms Mallon: Implementation of Operation SNAP in Northern Ireland will require amendment of existing road traffic legislation so that the existing offence of careless driving can be discharged by means of a fixed penalty.

I discussed the need for this legislation during my meetings with the Chief Constable in May and June 2020. I recognised the need for action and committed to the development of proposals to consult on the creation of a fixed penalty for careless driving. I will work with PSNI to achieve implementation as soon as possible.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether she will be introducing a compensation scheme for people in North Down whose property has flooded following heavy rain.

Ms Mallon: I understand that an intense band of rain on the evening of Wednesday 11 November 2020 led to flooding impacts across the South East. My Department's Roads and Rivers operational teams responded at the time to reduce the impacts of any flooding but unfortunately some properties were affected.

Homeowners affected by flooding may be able to avail of my Department's Homeowner Flood Protection Grant Scheme, which is designed to encourage the owners of residential properties that are located within known flood prone areas, to modify their properties to make them more resistant to flooding. I also understand that local government colleagues are working with affected households to determine if they are able to avail of the Scheme of Emergency Financial Assistance operated by the Department for Communities which provides a one off payment of £1,000 to assist with making homes fit to live in again as quickly as possible.

Mr Stalford asked the Minister for Infrastructure how her Department determines the locations of cycle lanes.

Ms Mallon: When I took up post in January 2020, I made a commitment to deliver sustainable infrastructure that will transform our communities and lives. With the ongoing COVID-19 emergency, we are now having to adapt to a new way of living, and as part of that, we need to create more opportunities for active travel and make our roads safer for those who want to walk and cycle.

For many of those key workers during this health emergency, this is a preferred option for getting to and from work, so it is important that safe and effective options are in place. The more recently installed pop-up cycle lanes connecting to the three main hospitals go a small way to achieving this.

Cycle lanes are identified as opportunities to build on existing cycling infrastructure to improve the network and take account of key destination, demand and more specifically where road safety issues would deter those choosing to travel by bicycle.

Going forward, the draft Belfast Bicycle Network, which was consulted on in 2017, is intended to guide the development and operation of the bicycle infrastructure in Belfast for the next ten years, and I will publish the final version of this Plan in the coming months.

Mr Stalford asked the Minister for Infrastructure to detail the locations of planned cycle lanes in South Belfast until the end of 2022.

Ms Mallon: The draft Belfast Bicycle Network, which was consulted on in 2017, is intended to guide the development and operation of the bicycle infrastructure in Belfast for the next ten years, and I will publish the final version of this Plan in the coming months.

With the ongoing COVID-19 emergency, we are also now having to adapt to a new way of living, and as part of that, we need to create more opportunities for active travel and make our roads safer for those who want to walk and cycle.

My officials are currently looking at a connection between the newly installed cycle lane on the Donegall Road to the Dublin Road cycle lane, to aid key workers travelling to the Belfast City Hospital by bicycle. My Department is also discussing opportunities with Belfast City Council, the Department for Communities and Universities to develop further opportunities as they arise, to help promote active travel and support the transformation of communities.

As details of these arise during my tenure as Minister I will announce in due course.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether MOT tests cancelled after the latest COVID-19 restrictions will get rebooking priority.

(AQW 10188/17-22)

Ms Mallon: Vehicle testing was not included in the Executive's regulations on businesses that must close between 16 October and 20 November to help stop the spread of Covid-19. Therefore, no MOT tests have been cancelled as a result of this period of increased restrictions.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether practical driving tests will resume on 20 November.

Ms Mallon: Driving instructors are included in the Executive's regulations on businesses that must close until 20 November to help stop the spread of Covid-19. Following this Executive decision, driving tests have also ceased over this period of increased restrictions based on public health and scientific advice. Driving tests will resume on 21 November. Motorcycle lessons and tests were not affected by these restrictions.

The DVA has identified that over 1,000 key workers and customers who had their driving test cancelled from late March to the end of June fall within the group of customers who had their tests cancelled due to the current restrictions. The DVA considers these customers as a priority group and has provided them with advance access to the booking system from 9 November to enable them to reschedule their appointments. The booking system will then open on 23 November to the remaining customers whose tests were cancelled.

To create additional capacity the DVA will open up the booking system for February for the customers impacted by the recent restrictions only. Over 2,000 additional booking slots have also been made available in November, December and January as the DVA increases capacity by recruiting additional examiners. These slots will initially only be available to these impacted customers. Once all customers who had their tests recently cancelled have had the opportunity to rebook their appointments, the DVA is planning to open up the booking service for all other customers in late November/ early December.

When testing resumes the DVA will continue to offer driving tests on a Saturday and following consultation with key stakeholders is planning to offer driving tests for Heavy Goods Vehicles on Sundays, where it is suitable to do so without compromising the integrity of the test. The DVA will also use overtime to rota off-shift dual role driving examiners to provide additional capacity and to provide cover for scheduled driving tests, where due to a variety of unforeseen reasons such as sick absence or the requirement to self-isolate, driving examiners are unable to attend work.

To help further mitigate the impact on customers due to the cessation of practical driving as a result of the latest Covid restrictions, I will be bringing forward further legislation to extend the validity of theory test pass certificates. Theory test pass certificates which have already been extended by eight months and will expire from 1 November 2020 onwards, will have their validity period extended by a further four months. In addition, theory test pass certificates which expire between 1 November 2020 and 30 June 2021, and which have not already benefited from an extension, will have their validity period extended by eight months.

The DVA acknowledges that learner drivers are keen to take their driving tests at the earliest opportunity and will continue to work hard to maximise the availability of test slots. However, all driving test services across these islands are experiencing high demand with longer than usual waiting times. Like all public facing services, the Covid-19 restrictions mean that the DVA has had to adapt its services to ensure that they can be provided safely and they would ask customers for their patience at this difficult time.

It is my priority to ensure that our staff and customers remain safe and the DVA will continue to be guided by the latest public health and scientific advice as we work as quickly as we can to serve all our customers.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Infrastructure for his assessment of what the speed limit should be in rural communities. (AQW 10262/17-22)

Ms Mallon: As Minister responsible for promoting and improving road safety, I want to work actively with partners to reduce death and serious injuries on our roads. I believe that reducing the maximum speed traffic can travel at on some of our roads can help in this regard.

Our system of speed limits uses the presence of street lighting to distinguish between urban and rural environments. Unless signed otherwise and in general, where street lighting is present the speed limit will be 30mph, whereas if street lighting is not present the national speed limit applies, which on single carriageway roads is 60mph for cars.

Most villages will have street lighting and the speed limit will normally be 30mph. However, there are some exceptions across Northern Ireland and these are signed appropriately.

The same general approach as outlined above is used for speed limits through smaller settlements.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Infrastructure what financial assistance is being proposed for Belfast International Airport. (AQW 10277/17-22)

Ms Mallon: My Department's statutory remit in relation to airports is quite limited, but the Airports (NI) Order 1994 does allow it, subject to the necessary funding being made available, to consider grants or loans to airport operators to defray capital expenditure incurred by them.

However, due to the exceptional circumstances that emerged from the COVID 19 pandemic, the Department for Infrastructure was asked to facilitate the distribution of emergency funding on behalf of the NI Executive to George Best Belfast City Airport and the City of Derry Airport.

I am committed to working with both my Executive colleagues in the Department for the Economy and the Department for Finance to identify and put in place any appropriate support for Belfast International Airport. I have accepted an invitation to meet with Belfast International Airport representatives, along with my ministerial colleagues in the Department of Finance and the Department for the Economy, given the different statutory responsibilities we each hold in respect of airports and connectivity.

Ms Dolan asked the Minister for Infrastructure what action has been taken to address the sewerage problems at the Galliagh Shore development in Fermanagh. (AQO 1104/17-22)

Ms Mallon: I would like to express my sympathies to the residents of Galliagh Shore regarding this very distressing situation.

This is a very complex issue in a private development, where a developer has not entered into an agreement with NI Water to adopt the sewers in the development. The developer has subsequently gone into liquidation and the sewerage infrastructure is overflowing and causing pollution. While this matter is not of the residents' making, neither my Department nor NI Water has legal responsibility for addressing this issue.

However, I am sensitive to the residents' extreme distress and I am in discussion with Conor Murphy, Minister of Finance, regarding NI Water's future funding, to enable the company to fulfil its statutory responsibilities and the matter of inadequate private sewerage infrastructure sites, such as Galliagh shore.

I am also keen to work with other Executive colleagues, to find a resolution to the problems in Galliagh Shore and the many other developments which are in a similar situation, and there are an estimated 55 such sites. However, I am aware that there are civil proceedings ongoing and that the NHBC is considering a revised offer to the residents. I would not wish to prejudice those proceedings and will allow those to come to a resolution before making any decisions on the matter.

Mr Middleton asked the Minister for Infrastructure for her assessment of the impact of under-investment in water and sewerage infrastructure in Northern Ireland. (AQO 1103/17-22)

Ms Mallon: There has been historic underinvestment in our water and sewerage infrastructure and we are now reaching a tipping point in terms of the ability to provide water and sewerage infrastructure that will enable our economy to recover, keep our environment safe and protect peoples' health.

The capital funding shortfall for NI Water in the current Price Control period (2015-21), is around £60m, from a total capital determination from the Utility Regulator of £990m in that period. This in itself was a constrained regulatory settlement reflecting the inability of the Executive to provide the necessary levels of funding for water and sewerage services.

The result of this underinvestment in our water and sewerage infrastructure is that there are estimated to be 116 economically constrained areas, which are having a detrimental impact on local development across the North. NI Water envisages addressing 49 of the 116 economically constrained areas during the next Price Control (PC21 2021-27). However, given the increasing pressure on the wastewater and sewer network, NI Water has indicated that a further 30 economically constrained areas may emerge during PC21.

In total, an estimated £2bn is needed from 2021-22 to the end of the next regulatory Price Control (PC21) period in 2027, to finance capital investment in water and wastewater. This figure includes approximately £600m for the Living with Water programme, with further spend on that programme also needed in PC27 (2027-2033).

Ms McLaughlin asked the Minister for Infrastructure for an update on her Department's work to deliver cleaner and greener infrastructure.

Ms Mallon: As Infrastructure Minister, my focus is on using available resources to green our infrastructure and deliver sustainable transport that connects people; unlocks our economic potential; protects our valuable environment and improves health and well-being for all our communities across Northern Ireland.

Earlier this year I was delighted to announce a £4m joint investment in carbon neutral Hydrogen technologies by Translink, Energia, the Office for Low Emission Vehicles, and my Department. I have committed a further £30m to the procurement of Low Emission Buses by Translink.

Supported by my Walking and Cycling Champion, I have been encouraging people to embrace active travel and have announced an array of Active Travel initiatives across Northern Ireland including pop up cycle lanes and trial pedestrianisation of streets.

I have also made £20 million available through a Blue/Green infrastructure fund and I was delighted to announce that some of this allocation will go towards the grant funding to Councils for a total of six greenways this year.

On 11th November, I launched the public consultation process for the Living With Water Programme, Strategic Drainage Infrastructure Plan for greater Belfast, entitled, "Living With Water in Belfast". This strategic plan promotes an integrated approach to the provision drainage and wastewater infrastructure and encourages key stakeholders to work collaboratively to bring forward sustainable blue/green schemes that will not only provide drainage improvements but will also improve the environment in which we live.

Mr Harvey asked the Minister for Infrastructure for an update on the Ballynahinch bypass scheme.

Ms Mallon: In June, I announced my commitment to fund the continued development of a number of Strategic Road Improvement schemes, including the A24 Ballynahinch Bypass, as part of my plan to aid economic recovery and community transformation, while addressing regional imbalance.

The Ballynahinch Bypass scheme is now at an advanced stage of development and preparatory work on contract documentation has been completed.

I have asked officials to complete the work necessary to allow me to make the Direction Order. This includes a review of the environmental reports which is nearing completion and, subject to the outcome of the review, I hope to be in position to make the Direction Order for the scheme in the new year.

I reaffirm my commitment to moving ahead with the Ballynahinch Bypass scheme and I am currently considering the next steps.

Mr Gildernew asked the Minister for Infrastructure for her assessment of how Brexit will impact on cross-border transport.

(AQO 1108/17-22)

Ms Mallon: The British Government's decision to leave the European Union has the potential to have a profound effect on the way we live our lives and go about our business on the island of Ireland.

In that respect, I have great concerns that any movement away from the common standards, practices and regulations which our motorists and transport operators have become accustomed to will have a detrimental impact in areas such as International Haulage Access and Cross Border Public Transport and I will do everything in my power to avoid this happening.

North/South cooperation on transport is one of many clear obligations of the NI Protocol and I expect these obligations to be both delivered and protected.

I have personally written to both the British Government's Minister for Transport and my Executive colleagues to specify my concerns and to seek assurances that our businesses and citizens will be neither impeded nor disadvantaged by leaving the European Union.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Infrastructure what action she proposes to address the funding imbalance for roads maintenance in North Down.

Ms Mallon: My Department allocates funding for roads maintenance on a Council area basis, rather than by Constituency area.

Ards and North Down Borough Council area is allocated funding for Capital Structural Maintenance on the same basis as other District Councils using established criteria, such as road length and structural condition, to reflect need.

I am satisfied that there is no imbalance in respect of the funding allocated to the North Down and Ards Borough Council area.

I will continue to seek funding for all council areas to ensure our vital transport infrastructure is maintained to the standard required.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether she plans to change advisory 20mph speed limit locations to mandatory 20mph speed limits locations in Greater Belfast.

Ms Mallon: As Minister responsible for promoting and improving road safety, I want to work actively with partners to reduce death and serious injuries on our roads. I believe that reducing the maximum speed traffic can travel on some of roads can help.

My Department is committed to introducing measures that reduce the speed of traffic on our roads and improve driver behaviour, in order to reduce the number of collisions, primarily those involving pedestrians and cyclists.

Mandatory 20mph speed limits are normally provided along with traffic calming features which slow traffic and there over 700 locations where such limits apply. Trials have indicated that providing 20mph limits without traffic calming features has only a limited impact on changing traffic speeds and therefore we now only provide mandatory 20mph speed limits where traffic speeds are already close to 20mph.

I believe that there is merit in considering more extensive use of 20mph mandatory speed limits and this year I have allocated £2m for the provision of part-time 20mph speed limits at schools.

I consider this the best starting point for changing driving behaviours and raising awareness. While I have no plans at present to make any of the existing advisory 20mph limits mandatory, I would envisage that through time mandatory 20mph limits will become more prevalent in our residential streets.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister for Infrastructure whether she intends to bring formal proposals for an infrastructure commission to the Executive.

Ms Mallon: I received the final report of the Ministerial Advisory Panel on Infrastructure on 2 October 2020. The report is clear in its recommendation that an Infrastructure Commission should be established in Northern Ireland.

I subsequently shared the report with Executive colleagues, the Infrastructure Committee and the Speaker with a view to undertaking a period of engagement in respect of the Panel's recommendations.

I have already met Ministers Murphy and Poots in respect of the Panel's work and am looking forward to meeting my other Ministerial colleagues in coming weeks. The Chair of the Panel also met the Committee on 11 November 2020.

I acknowledge that the report and its recommendations go beyond the remit of my own Department and recognise the importance of this period of engagement in ensuring that any proposal I bring before the Executive will enable us to consider how we might best move forward to support the long-term planning and delivery of infrastructure, a critical component in the Executive's Brexit planning and Covid recovery.

Department of Justice

Miss Woods asked the Minister of Justice (i) how many prisoners have been committed to Care and Supervision Units (CSUs) within the Northern Ireland Prison Service (NIPS), each year for the last ten years; and (ii) how many prisoners have been committed to CSUs for more than 15 days within the NIPS, each year for the last ten years.

(AQW 8374/17-22)

Mrs Long (The Minister of Justice): The table opposite outlines (i) how many prisoners have been committed to Care and Supervision Units (CSUs) with the Northern Ireland Prison Service (NIPS), each year for the last ten years; and (ii) how many prisoners have been committed to CSU's for more than 15 days within NIPS, each year for the last ten years.

Year	Committed to CSU	Over 15 days
2010	587	25
2011	902	145
2012	885	87
2013	1097	118
2014	1320	115
2015	1258	113
2016	1471	108
2017	1191	168
2018	1320	227
2019	1340	195

Mr Chambers asked the Minister of Justice whether she plans to issue a statement in relation to a matter involving a social media post involving Policing Board member Gerry Kelly MLA that has been referred to her by the Policing Board.
(AQW 9432/17-22)

Mrs Long: This matter regarding Mr Kelly's Tweet has been referred to me by the Chair of the Policing Board for consideration under the powers available to me in the Policing (Northern Ireland) Act 2000 regarding the removal of members of the Policing Board.

I am currently considering this matter and will issue a statement when I have reached a conclusion.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Justice when physical Court and Tribunal Services will be restored.
(AQW 9446/17-22)

Mrs Long: The Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service (NICTS) continues to move forward towards full business recovery following the initial peak of the COVID-19 pandemic.

The work of the courts was initially consolidated into five court hubs in order to facilitate the delivery of urgent matters, whilst maintaining the safety of all users and staff in the courts in line with public health advice. A series of COVID-19 Risk Assessments on operational buildings were undertaken to ensure that they comply with Public Health Agency (PHA) guidelines on managing the risk of COVID-19 and are safe for staff, judiciary and court users.

Currently, all but three of the smallest hearing centre venues are now operational and court business is already being conducted through virtual, physical and hybrid hearings.

In order to provide more capacity, NICTS is working to scope additional accommodation outside of the NICTS estate which could be used for conducting or supporting hearings.

Dedicated courts for new summonses issued by the Public Prosecution Service (PPS) have commenced and jury trials have resumed.

Ensuring the safety of court users is a key priority, particularly for those with life limiting health conditions. NICTS has consulted with the PHA on the approach to physical hearings, including jury trials, so that business recovery can take place while maintaining a secure environment where court users can feel safe and confident.

NICTS and the Office of the Lord Chief Justice will continue to work closely with the justice organisations and other stakeholders to plan how to increase the current levels of business while adhering to the new social distancing controls.

Mr Beattie asked the Minister of Justice how many prisoners have been held in care and supervision units in each of the last five years.

Mrs Long: The number of prisoners held in Care and Supervision Units in each year of the last five years is shown in the table below.

	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019
Total	583	650	611	679	755

Some of these individuals may have been held in the CSU on more than one occasion.

Mr Beattie asked the Minister of Justice how many prisoners in the separated regime have been held in care and supervision units in each of the last five years.

(AQW 9474/17-22)

Mrs Long: The number of prisoners in the separated regime held in Care and Supervision Units in each year of the last five years is shown in the table below.

	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019
Total	5	8	8	5	4

Some of these individuals may have been held in the CSU on more than one occasion.

Mr Beattie asked the Minister of Justice how many prisoners in the non-separated regime have been held in care and supervision units in each of the last five years.

(AQW 9475/17-22)

Mrs Long: The number of prisoners in the non-separated regime held in Care and Supervision Units in each year of the last five years is shown in the table below.

	2015	2016	2017	2018	2019
Total	578	642	603	674	751

Some of these individuals may have been held in the CSU on more than one occasion.

Ms Bunting asked the Minister of Justice, following the publication of CJINI's report on Police Custody, how her Department plans to work with the PSNI to ensure police custody staff are trained to know the signs of human trafficking and what to do if they suspect a person in custody has been trafficked.

Mrs Long: My department works closely with the PSNI Modern Slavery and Human Trafficking Unit (MSHTU) and officials meet regularly with the senior police team to discuss progress on delivering a range of objectives in the Modern Slavery Strategy.

The purpose of the strategy is to raise awareness of modern slavery offences and so to reduce the threat from, the vulnerability to, and the prevalence of, modern slavery in Northern Ireland which brigades ongoing strands of activity including raising awareness, training, and cooperation between relevant partner agencies. Progress on delivery of objectives is monitored through quarterly meetings of the Organised Crime Task Force's (OCTF) sub group on modern slavery.

I understand that a Modern Slavery & Human Trafficking specific eLearning package (CLASSIS) has been developed for delivery to police custody staff as well as other front-line PSNI officers. The PSNI has also established a strategic working group, comprised of staff from a variety of disciplines from across the organisation, in order to further progress the training recommendations contained in the CJINI report.

Ms Bunting asked the Minister of Justice to detail the timeline in which her Department will review the operation of section 22 of the Human Trafficking and Exploitation (Criminal Justice and Support for Victims) Act (Northern Ireland) 2015; and how her Department will assess the impact of section 22 on children and young people.

Mrs Long: I welcomed the recent publication of the Criminal Justice Inspection Northern Ireland's first in-depth assessment on how the criminal justice system in Northern Ireland deals with modern slavery and human trafficking. This report included a recommendation to review the effectiveness of the Section 22 defence to protect vulnerable victims, with a particular reference to children, and its use in Northern Ireland, within one year of the publication of the Independent Anti-Slavery Commissioner's Review.

While I could not commit to the timeframe for this recommendation, I did indicate that a review of the effectiveness of the section 22 defence will be included as part of the development of a longer term Modern Slavery Strategy.

I also indicated that related reviews and experiences of this issue elsewhere in the UK will be taken into account, and while the Independent Anti-Slavery Commissioner's recently published review of section 45 in the Modern Slavery Act 2015 is applicable to England & Wales, it will inform the work I intend to take forward to review our equivalent provisions in section 22 of the Human Trafficking and Exploitation (Criminal Justice and Support for Victims) Act (Northern Ireland) 2015.

Ms Bunting asked the Minister of Justice to detail the timeline in which her Department will review potential barriers to modern slavery and human trafficking victims claiming compensation under the Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme, as recommended by CJINI in their recent report on Modern Slavery and Human Trafficking.

Mrs Long: A facilitated engagement event between relevant NGOs and representatives of the Department's Compensation Services is planned to take place before the end of 2020. This will explore the specific issues regarding victims' access to the criminal injuries compensation scheme. Any agreed further work-streams will be incorporated into future Modern Slavery Strategies, which is important in terms of helping to meet the needs of victims of modern slavery and human trafficking, and the Non-Governmental Organisation (NGO) engagement group plays a central role in this.

Compensation Services within the Department of Justice has removed the requirement for applicants to provide evidence of a National Referral Mechanism decision that they were potential victims of human trafficking. Human Trafficking guidance leaflets will be amended accordingly to reflect this and are available on the Department of Justice website and NI Direct.

Ms Hunter asked the Minister of Justice to detail (i) the average time taken for sexual offence cases involving a child victim from offence reported to case completion in (a) 2018/19; and (b) 2019/20; (ii) the measures that are in place to reduce delays for young victims and witnesses in the criminal justice system; (iii) any additional measures that have been put in place to address delays caused by court closures; and (iv) how measures to reduce delay are monitored and evaluated.

Mrs Long: The average (median) time taken from the date an offence was reported to the police until the time a subsequent case was dealt with at court, for cases where the principal offence was a sexual offence that specified the involvement of a child, for cases dealt with at courts in 2018/19 was 754 days, and in 2019/20, 722 days.

Note:

- 1 Figures relate to the number of calendar days between the listed dates for each table. Court recess dates are not taken into account.
- 2 Figures relate to cases disposed at court during the time period specified. Each period is a financial year, running from 1st April to the following 31st March.
- 3 Figures relate to cases brought on behalf of the PSNI, Harbour and Airport police in Northern Ireland that resulted in a court disposal. Appeals are not included.
- 4 Figures do not include cases where the case was dismissed but a caution was administered, fixed penalty registrations, penalty notices for disorder or cases resulting from a breach of a court order.
- 5 The figures reported relate to cases where the principal offence was as described. Some cases which contained sexual offences involving children but where the principal offence was in a different category have not been included in this calculation. This is because the dataset utilised for measuring case processing time is based on the principal offence in individual cases.
- 6 Case processing time datasets do not contain specific information in relation to age of victims, other than where specified in the offence description. Therefore, some cases where it was not possible to identify that the victim was a child may not have been included in figures quoted.

The speed that cases progress matters to victims and witnesses, their families and their communities and can help offenders to better understand the implications of their actions and create a better opportunity for rehabilitation. Reducing the time it takes to complete criminal cases is a challenging and complex issue and reforms take time to embed and for their impact to be seen.

In addition to the wider programme of measures that my Department is leading to tackle delay in the criminal justice system more generally, in September 2019 Her Honour Judge Smyth established a judge-led pilot to fast track serious sexual offence cases involving children under 13 years old to the Crown Court. The purpose of this pilot is to expedite cases involving very young children in order to maximise the opportunity for them to provide their best evidence and minimise the stress and emotional impact of the criminal justice process. The participating criminal justice organisations have reflected on the first 12 months and assessed that it has been successful in making a difference to the children and their families involved in these cases. As such, the pilot has been extended for a further year.

In relation to additional measures that have been put in place to address delays caused by court closures, the Lord Chief Justice has issued a practice direction which aims to;

- ensure that both the prosecution and the defence take adequate and prompt steps to check witness availability so as to ensure that avoidable adjournments, and hence avoidable delay, can be prevented;
- improve arrangements for the notification of witnesses and checking witness availability in order to avoid witnesses being notified unnecessarily that they will be required to give evidence; and
- ensure the early agreement of non-essential witnesses whose evidence may be read at trial.

The judiciary are reviewing outstanding business and prioritising urgent cases. Under the direction of the judiciary, staff from the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service will agree a plan for trials and listings over the coming weeks and months.

To facilitate Covid-Secure Jury trials, significant construction and digital upgrade works have been progressed at Laganside Courts and five regional venues. NICTS has consulted with the Public Health Agency (PHA) on the approach to physical hearings, including jury trials, so that business recovery can take place while maintaining a secure environment where court users can feel safe and confident. Courtrooms have been specially adapted with the addition of glass screens, as well as a wide range of other PHA-compliant measures. In addition, priority has been placed on victim support accommodation / services and the ability to provide remote evidence as and when required.

The length of time for cases to progress to completion in courts is published annually in an official statistical publication by the Department. Additionally, dashboards based on management information, updated quarterly, containing information on end to end time for case progression, as well as for the individual process stages within the justice system, are provided to the Criminal Justice Board, to allow for monitoring and evaluation of performance of the justice system at more immediate intervals. In addition, new initiatives are routinely evaluated, subsequent to implementation.

Ms Bunting asked the Minister of Justice when she plans to implement the Duty to Notify provisions set out in section 27(5) of the Human Trafficking and Exploitation (Criminal Justice and Support for Victims) Act (Northern Ireland) 2015.

Mrs Long: The 'Protect' section of the draft Modern Slavery Strategy for 2021/22 commits "to proactively identify and report victims of modern slavery". Under this objective, I have proposed to scope the potential for Duty to Notify provisions in Northern Ireland. The 12 week public consultation on this draft strategy was launched on 16 October. Subject to the outcome of that consultation, the Strategy will be formally launched before the end of March 2021 and work to scope the Duty to Notify provisions will commence in April 2021.

It is not possible at this point to provide a definitive timescale for completing the scoping exercise. The draft Modern Slavery Strategy for 2021/22 represents a significant body of work to be taken forward, and updates on progress will be provided as part of the annual progress reports on the delivery of the Modern Slavery Strategy.

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Justice for her assessment of the extent of anti-social behaviour in the Belfast East Constituency; and what plans she has to address the issues.

Mrs Long: Recognising the negative impact which anti-social behaviour has on communities across Northern Ireland, tackling anti-social behaviour is a strategic objective for Policing and Community Safety Partnerships (PCSPs) which are jointly funded by my Department and the Northern Ireland Policing Board.

Belfast PCSP, and the East Belfast District PCSP, have a key role in responding to local concerns regarding anti-social behaviour in the Belfast East Constituency, liaising with the local community and key partners to assess the extent of anti-social behaviour in the area and developing actions to address these findings. Details of this assessment is included in their three year Strategic Assessment 2019-2022 and Annual Action Plans.

Given the new demands created by Covid-19, including an unprecedented rise in anti-social behaviour in the Belfast East Constituency following the introduction of restrictions in March, the PCSP has been actively seeking alternative ways to maintain the operation of their functions and programmes to ensure communities are supported and solutions are delivered to issues of local concern.

I understand, through their ongoing assessment of anti-social behaviour, they have noted an increase in anti-social behaviour in a number of parks and open spaces in the Belfast East Constituency, and have responded by working collaboratively with detached youth outreach providers and the PSNI to target affected areas, with the latest joint operation having taken place over the Halloween weekend.

I also understand that Belfast PCSP is in the advanced stages of rolling out an anti-social behaviour specific project, in partnership with the Education Authority, which will support additional youth engagement provision across the city, including East Belfast.

Ms Dillon asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 9372/17-22, (i) why the projected spend on the Substance Misuse Court for 2020/21 is lower than the previous financial year; and (ii) whether funding will be increased for the Substance Misuse Court in 2021/22.

Mrs Long: The Substance Misuse Court is one of a portfolio of Problem Solving Justice initiatives developed by the Department of Justice, in partnership with other government departments and agencies and the voluntary and community sector.

As a result of COVID-19, there have been necessary changes in service provision through the Substance Misuse Court to clients. The Substance Misuse Court continued to sit throughout the lockdown period, albeit on a remote basis. This led to a reduction in the costs associated with drug testing and judicial cover, resulting in a reduction in projected spend for 2020/21. Hence, the projected spend for 2020/21 is lower than the previous financial year.

Weekly physical court hearings recommenced on 20 August 2020.

Subject to physical court hearings continuing as normal, the projected spend for 2021/22 is as per pre-COVID levels.

Mr Beattie asked the Minister of Justice (i) how many of those within the separated prison regime have been held in Care and Supervision Units (CSU) for each of the last 3 years; (ii) how many days were each individual held; (iii) whether an individual was repeatedly held in a CSU; and (iv) the number of times each individual was held and for how long.

Mrs Long: The number of prisoners in the separated regime held in Care and Supervision Units, the duration and frequency in each year of the last three years is shown below.

Question (i) Table showing total number of prisoners in the separated regime held in Care and Supervision Units for each of the last 3 years.

	2017	2018	2019
Total	8	5	4

Question (ii)

In 2017 there were eight prisoners from the separated regime held in Care and Supervision Units. Of the eight individuals, six were held in the Care and Supervision Unit for two days and two individuals for one day.

In 2018 there were five prisoners from the separated regime held in Care and Supervision Units. Of the five individuals, one was held for one day, three for two days and one for twenty days.

In 2019 there were four prisoners from the separated regime held in Care and Supervision Units. Of the four individuals, two were held for one day, one for two days and one for three days.

Question (iii) & (iv)

Over each of the last three years there was one individual from the separated regime that was held in the Care and Supervision Unit on three different occasions. One instance in 2018 for two days, one instance in 2019 for 1 day and a further occasion in 2019 for two days.

Mr Beattie asked the Minister of Justice (i) to detail the business cases submitted by the Planning Appeals Commission set for an increase in resources for the upcoming year; and (ii) whether a funding stream has been allocated to allow for appointments to be completed from current live recruitment lists, given the pending submission of multiple draft plan strategies from several local councils.

Mrs Long:

- (i) NICTS, in consultation with the Chief Commissioner, has prepared a detailed business case for additional resources to support the Planning and Water Appeals Commission deliver their statutory obligations within Section 10(4) of the Planning Act (NI) 2011. These powers were given effect through the introduction of the Planning (Local Development Plan) Regulations (NI) 2015.
- (ii) The business case has been approved by NICTS and these additional resources are now incorporated within NICTS funding proposals for the full period of the business case, commencing in 2020/2021 and extending to 2023/2024.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister of Justice what her Department is doing to fulfil the Executive's commitment to building a united and shared society through the Together: Building a United Community strategy.

Mrs Long: The Department of Justice leads work on the Interfaces Programme, one of the seven headline actions under the auspices of the Executive's Together: building a united community (T:buc) Strategy.

I am committed to working towards the reduction and removal of interface security structures, wherever they exist, across Northern Ireland.

Working with those most affected by any proposed change to an existing interface structure - typically, those living closest to them - is one of the key principles that underpins the T:buc Interfaces Programme as outlined in the Programme Framework (<https://www.justiceni.gov.uk/sites/default/files/publications/justice/interfaces-programme.pdf>)

People living in interface communities have demonstrated that they are keen to see security barriers or 'peace walls' removed.

Over recent years, the number of DoJ-owned interface structures has reduced from 59 to 45. A number of other structures have been reduced in height or nature and the opening times of interface gates extended to reduce the significant impediment such structures present to local people going about their daily business.

On one particular scheme in North Belfast, the removal of a substantial portion of high interface security fencing made way for a multi-use games area and playpark for local children and opened up shared access to local community facilities.

We rely on political, community and inter-Departmental support to make progress under the T:buc Interfaces Programme. The other aspects of T:buc aimed at fostering reconciliation through changing mindsets also play a key role in creating the conditions for local people to have confidence in the reduction or removal of a nearby physical interface barrier.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice what process or mechanism exists within her Department whereby a written record is kept of any lobbying of the Minister or special adviser in relation to departmental functions, policies or proposals.

Mrs Long: My Department records all correspondence relating to Departmental business using the NICS electronic records management system known as HP Records Manager (HPRM) in line with NICS Records Management policy and in accordance with the requirements of the Ministerial and Special Adviser Codes of Conduct.

Ms Dillon asked the Minister of Justice how many Statutory Rules and Statutory Instruments her Department intends to introduce in relation to Brexit before the end of the Brexit implementation period.

Mrs Long: My Department intends to bring forward three further Statutory Rules before the end of the implementation period, all relating to civil explosives.

Depending on the UK's application to re-join the Lugano Convention on jurisdiction and the recognition and enforcement of judgments in civil and commercial matters, one further Statutory Instrument extending to matters within my Department's remit may be brought forward before the end of the implementation period.

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister of Justice what assessment her Department has made of the concept of parental alienation, whereby one parent is denied access to a child by another.

Mrs Long: Policy on alienation is a matter for the Department of Health and assessment of the concept would be a matter for Minister Swann. Where abusive and damaging behaviours are suspected in family proceedings, it is for social workers to advise the court which will consider evidence alongside all other evidence when deciding what is in the best interests of the child. I understand that the Department of Health has committed to exploring guidance for professionals supporting families experiencing acrimonious dispute and associated negative behaviours as part of work we are progressing to identify means of better supporting the early resolution of parental disputes. I will continue to work collaboratively with Minister Swann to scope and support any future actions.

While the Department of Health has policy responsibility, I am clear that one parent should not be able to use a child to abuse another parent and I consider it appropriate that patterns of this type of behaviour could be deemed to be abusive and potentially captured by the new domestic abuse offence in the Domestic Abuse and Family Proceedings Bill, depending on the particular circumstances of the case and subject to a reasonable person test. Ultimately this will be a matter for the courts to determine.

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister of Justice whether the measures to curb coercive control in the Domestic Abuse and Family Proceedings Bill will apply to any parent who seeks to deny access to their child's other parent.

Mrs Long: I do not plan to include reference to, what is commonly termed, parental alienation in the Domestic Abuse and Family Proceedings Bill. While the Department of Health has policy responsibility for this I am clear that one parent should not be able to use a child to abuse another parent.

I do consider it appropriate though that patterns of this type of behaviour could be deemed to be abusive behaviour and potentially be captured by the domestic abuse offence, depending on the particular circumstances of the case and subject to a reasonable person test. Ultimately this will be a matter for the courts to determine.

I am keen that the guidance relating to the new legislation clearly explains this. A multi-agency Task and Finish Group has been set up to help shape this guidance and work is ongoing to agree the wording to be included within it.

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister of Justice what remedies are currently in place to help those parents and grandparents who are being denied access to their child or grandchild by the other parent; and whether she plans to review these remedies.

Mrs Long: I fully understand the distress experienced by grandparents and parents who cannot see their child as often as they would like but while my Department is responsible for the operation of the courts, the law which is applied in determining arrangements for children, including the law governing rights of contact, is a matter for the Department of Finance. Any review of the legal framework would be a matter for Minister Murphy.

Under the current legal framework, parents or grandparents who wish to have more contact with a child can make an application to the court, and in line with the current framework, the court will make decisions in line with the paramount consideration of the welfare of the child rather than the rights of parents or others. In determining what is in the best interests of the child, the court will consider issues such as the child's physical, emotional and educational needs, their ascertainable wishes and feelings and the likely effect of any change in circumstances such as the breakdown of contact on their wellbeing.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Justice for a definition of emergency court proceedings.

Mrs Long: The phrase "emergency court proceedings" is not used in the justice system: no such definition therefore exists.

At the start of the COVID-19 lockdown the work of the courts was initially consolidated into five court hubs in order to facilitate the delivery of urgent matters, whilst maintaining the safety of all users and staff in the courts in line with public health advice.

The guidance issued by the Office of the Lord Chief Justice at the beginning of lockdown provided a range of examples of urgent matters, such as those which involve the immediate liberty, health, safety and wellbeing of individuals as well as any matters where the legal representative or a party to the proceedings has requested a hearing and the judge considers it urgent or necessary.

Where a party to the proceedings felt that a matter was urgent they could request a hearing by lodging the requisite Form (HR1). On receipt of the form the judge would determine whether the matter was urgent or necessary and if it could be dealt with administratively or would require a hearing. Case listing is a judicial function and the decision ultimately rests with the judge.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Justice how many people are currently waiting on emergency court proceedings.

Mrs Long: There phrase "emergency court proceedings" is not one used or defined within the justice system.

The guidance issued by the Office of the Lord Chief Justice at the beginning of lockdown stated that where a party to the proceedings felt that a matter was urgent they could request a hearing by lodging the requisite Form (HR1). On receipt of the form the judge would determine whether the matter was urgent or necessary and if it could be dealt with administratively or would require a hearing. Case listing is a judicial function and the decision ultimately rests with the judge.

The HR1 form is currently being used for the listing, reviewing and hearing of routine and urgent proceedings so that appropriate arrangements can be made by court staff to manage footfall in courtrooms and public areas of the court building. Cases being determined as urgent are not a decision for NICTS. Related data is not collected and is therefore not available for publication.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Justice for an update on her Department's Sentencing Review Northern Ireland.

Mrs Long: A summary of responses to the consultation on the sentencing review together with a full record of all responses received was published on the 29th September 2020. The documents can be accessed at <https://www.justice-ni.gov.uk/publications/sentencing-policy-review-consultation-responses>.

The report sets out the next steps that need to be taken in this important Review. These include the consideration of sentencing issues which have arisen subsequent to the public consultation, further discussion with stakeholders on a number of issues raised, liaison with other interested Departments, and development of possible costings, all of which may impact on the Review recommendations. The Review Team will continue to take this work forward over the coming months.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of reported incidences of anti-social behaviour (i) since the beginning of lockdown in March 2020; and (ii) for the same period in each of the past two years.

Mrs Long: The recording of information on the number of reported incidents of anti-social behaviour and associated statistics is a matter for the Chief Constable, who is accountable to the Northern Ireland Policing Board. I am committed to respecting the operational independence of the Chief Constable and the role of the Northern Ireland Policing Board.

You may, therefore, wish to direct your question to the PSNI.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Justice whether she has been formally consulted by the UK Government regarding the Covert Human Intelligence Sources (Criminal Conduct) Bill 2019-21; and, if so, whether she will publish (i) her Department's response; and (ii) details of any other correspondence or discussions she has had with UK ministers regarding this.
(AQW 10088/17-22)

Mrs Long: I have not been formally consulted regarding the Covert Human Intelligence Sources (Criminal Conduct) Bill. The Rt Hon James Brokenshire MP wrote to inform me of his intention to introduce the Bill. I have not had any further correspondence or discussions on this matter.

The Covert Human Intelligence Sources (Criminal Conduct) Bill is a UK wide Bill which relates to reserved or excepted matters in Northern Ireland and is therefore outside the scope of the Department of Justice.

Miss Woods asked the Minister of Justice for her assessment of the Northern Ireland Policing Board's report on the Thematic Review of the Policing Response to COVID-19.

(AQW 10179/17-22)

Mrs Long: I have received a copy of the Policing Board's Thematic Review of the Policing Response to Covid-19, which was published on 12 November, and will now take time to consider its findings, though none of the recommendations in the report were directed to my Department.

Miss Woods asked the Minister of Justice when the next recruitment drive for lay magistrates is expected to take place.

Mrs Long: There are currently no plans to run a recruitment scheme for Lay Magistrates.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice how many individuals released under the provisions of the Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998 have been returned to prison, broken down by (i) Republican; and (ii) Loyalist status.

(AQW 10266/17-22)

Mrs Long: The Northern Ireland (Sentences) Act 1998 is a reserved matter and therefore all releases and any subsequent licence revocations are the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Justice for her assessment of the view that the PSNI may have acted in an unlawful way in relation to Black Lives Matter protests on 6 June 2020.

Mrs Long: I have received a copy of the Policing Board's Thematic Review of the Policing Response to Covid-19, which was published on 12 November and I am considering its findings, though decisions relating to the Police Service of Northern Ireland's enforcement of the COVID-19 health protection regulations are an operational matter for the Chief Constable, who is accountable to the Northern Ireland Policing Board, and I committed to respecting the operational independence of the both Chief Constable and the Board.

I note that the report makes reference to apparent inconsistencies in the enforcement approach and a perception of BLM protests being treated differently. However, it does not offer a view on whether the PSNI's approach to policing the BLM protests was lawful since this was outside the scope of the review and is the subject of an ongoing investigation by the Office of the Police Ombudsman for Northern Ireland. I await the Police Ombudsman's report.

Ms Flynn asked the Minister of Justice whether she would consider undertaking a scoping exercise on how death by suicide is recorded by coroners in cases involving an adverse reaction to prescribed medication.

Mrs Long: I am mindful that every loss of life to suicide is tragic, and behind every suicide, there is a person with family and friends, whose life has tragically ended in very sad circumstances.

As defined by the Coroners Act (Northern Ireland) 1959, a Coroner enquires into sudden, violent or unnatural deaths to establish the cause of death and investigates, based on the individual circumstances of each death.

You will be aware that a Coroner is an independent Judicial Office Holder, and that prevents me directing a Coroner in relation to scoping exercises, individual cases, or any other matters.

I can confirm that following a post mortem the State Pathologist provides the cause of death to the Coroner and additionally, discussion regularly takes place between Coroners on coronial matters. Individual Coroner's findings are shared amongst Coroners, with Rule 23 (2) of the Coroners (Practice and Procedure) Rules (NI) 1963, utilised when considered necessary. Consequently, there is an avenue where any concerns raised by a Coroner are reported to the relevant authority, such as the Department of Health.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Justice for an update on a strategy and actions targeted at women in the criminal justice system.

Mrs Long: My officials are currently finalising a draft framework which will form the basis of a new strategy to support and challenge women and girls in contact with the justice system.

To ensure the strategy is effective and meaningful, officials have sought the views of key partners and more recently women and girls who have come in contact with the justice system. Their lived experience has been vital in shaping our approach. We hope this collaboration will continue through the public consultation and subsequent engagement on this important issue.

We intend to launch a consultation in December with a view to finalising the strategy in Spring 2021. An action plan will be developed and published at a later date.

Miss Woods asked the Minister of Justice for an update on proposals to raise the minimum age of criminal responsibility in Northern Ireland.

(AQO 1125/17-22)

Mrs Long: A range of independent reviews and UN Committees have long since advocated raising the Minimum Age of Criminal Responsibility – or MACR as it is known – from its current age of 10 in Northern Ireland to something more in keeping with international standards. As Justice Minister I am fully supportive of doing this, but to date I do not have the buy-in from all political parties to go down this particular route.

Our lack of progress in raising the minimum age has been highlighted to me in my discussions with the Children's Commissioner, the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission and a number of other children's rights organisations, especially as our neighbouring jurisdictions in the Republic of Ireland and Scotland have both raised their MACR to 12.

In an attempt to move this matter forward, I wrote to my Executive colleagues in August to brief them on the issue and seek their views. Unfortunately only three replies have been received to date, but I would be more than happy to raise the issue with them again if I felt there was an opportunity to work together to reach an agreement on implementing the recommendations and complying with our UN Convention commitments.

In the absence of political agreement, my Department is continuing to implement our policy to divert children of all ages – but in particular younger children – from the formal criminal justice system and deal with them through Early Intervention and welfare measures.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Justice for her assessment of the 24 hour Domestic and Sexual Abuse Helpline since it changed provider.

(AQO 1124/17-22)

Mrs Long: The Domestic and Sexual Abuse Helpline changed service provider on 1 April 2019, as a result of a procurement exercise. Delivery of the service, which is funded by the Department for Communities and the Departments of Health and Justice, is closely and regularly monitored against the contract specification. My officials meet regularly with the service provider to review and monitor service provision. I am content, given this close contract management, that the quality of the Helpline Service is being provided to the necessary level.

Ms Ennis asked the Minister of Justice for an update on her Department's work in relation to developing a safe word initiative for victims of domestic violence.

Mrs Long: The national safe code word initiative, aimed at assisting victims of domestic abuse, is currently under development by Home Office. It will offer a safe 'code' word which will allow victims to seek help from specialist or emergency services in an environment in which they feel safe, which for this purpose is a pharmacy.

Additionally, a similar 'Safe Space' initiative was introduced across all UK Boots stores in May. The need for such initiatives arose from the significant rise in domestic abuse related requests for help, since the beginning of the Covid-19 pandemic. It is vital that we find safe ways for victims to ask for help, especially if they feel unable to whilst confined to their home with their perpetrator.

The lead for these initiatives currently sits with the Department of Health given the key involvement of pharmacies at this stage. That said, my officials have been and continue to work closely with the Department of Health on this and other issues throughout the pandemic. They are important strategic partners given the cross-cutting nature of domestic abuse.

Mr Irwin asked the Minister of Justice for an update on work to appoint members to the Victims' Payments Board.

Mrs Long: The Northern Ireland Judicial Appointments Commission (NIJAC) has commenced the recruitment process for legal, medical and ordinary members of the Victims' Payments Board. The aim is that members will be appointed to the Board in early 2021.

The Lord Chief Justice also recently announced the appointment of Mr Justice McAlinden as interim President of the Victims' Payments Board.

Mr Middleton asked the Minister of Justice for her assessment of the effectiveness of the COVID-19 enforcement and penalties regulations.

(AQO 1121/17-22)

Mrs Long: Since the start of the pandemic, health protection regulations have been made by the Department of Health with the aim of reducing the rate of transmission of COVID-19. There are three different sets of regulations: the first deal with restrictions on businesses and gatherings, the second with the wearing of face coverings and the third with requirements placed on individuals entering Northern Ireland if they have travelled outside of the Common Travel Area. Each set of regulations contains penalties for breaching restrictions and empowers appropriate authorities, such as the PSNI, Border Force and local councils, to take enforcement action.

We all have a shared responsibility to adhere to the regulations in order to keep ourselves and others safe. However, where people do not comply, the appropriate authorities will consider taking action. This may at first be advice and guidance, or it may involve a fixed penalty, a fine on summary prosecution or a prohibition notice.

The Executive has established a Strategic Compliance Group which is chaired by the Junior Ministers in The Executive Office. The Group proposed that a review should be undertaken of the existing offences and penalties available in respect of breaches of the public health regulations and that review was led by my Department. On the basis of the review, the Executive decided at its meetings on 8 and 15 October to increase the level of certain existing fixed penalties and to introduce a number of new offences. In bringing this package to the Executive, I advised that there would be a lead-in period to allow the PSNI to create new fixed penalty notices, as had been the case when the previous fixed penalties were being implemented. The Minister of Health subsequently indicated, on 30 October, that he wished to pause any changes to the existing penalties in respect of failing to provide information after international travel.

The regulations to give effect to the changes agreed by the Executive, and amended to take account of the changes passed by the Minister of Health, were made by the Department of Health on 12 November and the new suite of penalties took effect from that date.

Department for the Economy

Ms McLaughlin asked the Minister for the Economy to detail the number of appearances she has made since the restoration of devolution (i) before the Assembly; and (ii) before the Ad Hoc Committee on the COVID-19 Response.
(AQW 8039/17-22)

Mrs Dodds (The Minister for the Economy): Since the restoration of devolution, and up until the 31st Oct 2020, I have appeared before the Assembly a total of 16 times and Ad Hoc Committee an additional 3 times.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for the Economy what support she is providing for travel agents to help protect businesses and jobs in the sector until at least Spring 2021.
(AQW 8411/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: The economic impact of COVID-19 is unprecedented. Huge economic impacts that might normally take months or years to unfold occurred within weeks as a result of lockdown and industry shutdowns.

The travel industry has been impacted particularly hard, both locally and on a global scale. This is as a result of the fact that we have been and are still very much in the midst of a public health crisis. All of the decisions that have been made in relation to foreign travel have been deemed necessary by the NI Executive, based on the very latest health advice and scientific evidence.

The Executive introduced an unprecedented range of financial support to help businesses impacted by Covid-19 with the objective of protecting jobs, preventing business closures and promoting economic recovery.

The Department for Economy has paid out more than £340million collectively across three grant schemes. Travel Agents were eligible to apply for all three Business Support Schemes introduced by the Department.

To date, 11 Travel Agents benefitted from a grant via the £25k Retail, Hospitality, Tourism and Leisure scheme. A further 32 Travel Agents received a grant via the NI Microbusiness Hardship Fund. Travel Agents also benefit from a one year business rates relief introduced by the Department of Finance.

Following the recent decision to introduce a four week restriction period under the revised Health Regulations, the Executive has announced a number of new support schemes to help those businesses and individuals most affected.

The UK Government has also implemented a range of interventions to support business including the Coronavirus Job Retention Scheme (CJRS) and the Self-Employed Income Support Scheme (SEISS), and these have both been extended until March 2021 and possibly beyond.

On 1 October 2020, I met with a representative of the travel agency industry, and I have received and responded to a significant volume of communication from this sector. My Department is receiving calls from a growing number of sectors, all of whom believe that they require additional support over and above that already offered by the Executive.

In considering further interventions, it will be for the Executive collectively to determine how the limited funding available will be allocated to best support economic recovery moving forward.

To this end, I am aware that the First Minister and deputy First Minister, accompanied by the Finance Minister, met with representatives from the Association of Northern Ireland Travel Agents on Wednesday 4th November, and I understand that a number of actions have been agreed as a consequence of this meeting.

I will discuss these with my fellow Executive colleagues in due course, and I have stated on record that I am sympathetic to the requests for help that have been made by this sector.

Miss Woods asked the Minister for the Economy whether she will be submitting a bid to the Minister of Finance for additional support for those who are self-employed in the creative and musical arts sector and continue to be impacted by COVID-19 restrictions.

(AQW 8772/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: The creative and musical arts sector is not within the remit of my Department.

Mr Beattie asked the Minister for the Economy (i) how much is the cost of the separated regime per annum between Hydebank Wood College and HMP Maghabery, combined for the next 3 financial years; and (ii) how this is broken down to each service area.

(AQW 8982/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: This is not within the remit of my Department. It is for the Department for Justice to answer.

Ms McLaughlin asked the Minister for the Economy for her assessment of (i) Invest NI's spending programmes for this financial year; (ii) the likelihood that these will be fully spent within the financial year; and (iii) what prospects there are for underspends from these programmes to become available for reallocation for additional COVID-19 business support packages in the current financial year.

Mrs Dodds:

- (i) Invest NI provides an extensive portfolio of financial support, and non-financial advice to all businesses across NI. The programmes offering financial support can help with job creation, productivity improvement, management skills, R&D and Innovation, technical capability and exporting. Non-financial support includes advisory assistance, support for exporters, best-practice guidance, workshops and business advice through the on-line NI Business Info channel. Invest NI is also delivering programmes helping businesses to prepare for the end of the EU Exit transition period.

Invest NI has supported the work of my Department in delivering the NI Micro Business Hardship Fund and is now administering the new COVID Response Business Support Scheme.

(ii) and (iii)

Invest NI budget allocation for 2020-21 can be separated into three main categories: -

- A. Core resource budget
- B. DfE Covid support Schemes
- C. Invest NI Covid Recovery Programmes

A. Core Resource Budget

Invest NI's assessment is that the core budget allocated to them for this financial year will be fully spent. Invest NI bid for £6 million Resource DEL in October monitoring but this bid was not successful. If additional funding was provided in the January monitoring process this could be fully utilised in the current year.

B. DfE Covid support Schemes

In March 2020 the Small Business Grant Scheme and Hospitality Tourism and Leisure Scheme was launched by the Department for the Economy, followed by the Hospitality Tourism and Leisure Scheme in April 2020, the Microbusiness Hardship fund in May 2020, and the Covid Restrictions Business Support Scheme (CRBSS) Part A in October 2020.

Invest NI has administered the application and payment process for the Microbusiness Hardship Fund and the CRBSS Part A.

The total amount initially agreed by the Executive for the Covid-19 grant schemes was £410 million, of which £190 million fell into 2020/21. £53 million of this was not required resulting in an allocation to Invest NI of £137 million in June monitoring. A further £15.1 million was returned to DoF in October monitoring for the Executive to consider re-allocation. Given the uncertainty over the current restrictions and the potential end date, it is too early to be specific on whether any of the budget that will be fully utilised, or whether there will be additional demand over the initial allocation.

C. Invest NI Covid Recovery Programmes

Invest NI was allocated £27.8 million for Covid related programmes in 2020/21 (£14.5 million Resource DEL (RDEL); £3.3 million Capital DEL (CDEL); and £10 million Financial Transactions Capital (FTC)). The initial budget allocated for these programmes was based on an early high-level assessment of potential business needs. There has now been a full economic appraisal and design of these new programmes and it is forecast that scheme spend will be £16.4 million (£11.6 million RDEL; £1.8 million CDEL; and £3 million FTC) this financial year, with additional demand falling into 2021/22. As a result £2.9 million Resource DEL, £1.5 million Capital DEL and £7 million FTC was surrendered in October monitoring.

The budget allocation for this year was ring-fenced at a programme level. It is expected that the remaining £16.4m allocated will be fully utilised on these specific ring fenced programmes.

However, the tightly ring-fenced budget restricts Invest NI's ability to move between programmes and increases the risk of an underspend in one programme and an inability to transfer that funding to another programme, where it may be fully utilised.

Mr Givan asked the Minister for the Economy to detail the date and time when the current COVID-19 restrictions will be lifted to permit businesses to reopen for services and appointments.
(AQW 9667/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: The Executive reached a decision on Thursday 12th November 2020 to maintain the current COVID-19 restrictions at this time.

All of the current restrictions will remain in place until 20th November 2020.

From that date, close contact services, including hairdressing, beauty treatments and driving lessons will be permitted by appointment only.

Unlicensed premises, including cafes and coffee shops, can also reopen on 20th November, with restricted opening hours to 8pm and no alcohol is to be consumed on the premises

Finally, pubs and bars will be permitted to sell sealed off-sales from this date also.

All other sections of hospitality that are closed under the current restrictions are due to reopen on Friday 27th November 2020.

Ms Dolan asked the Minister for the Economy whether the governance mechanisms used to ensure that Northern Ireland Electricity changes to policy and service delivery are assessed to ensure compliance with the terms of the Rural Needs Act.
(AQW 9850/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: Rebuilding a Stronger Economy Strategy

Ms McLaughlin asked the Minister for the Economy, in relation to being included in the objectives of the Rebuilding a Stronger Economy Strategy presented to the Committee for the Economy in September, (i) why the Economic Advisory Group's terms of reference do not include the objective of achieving a more regionally-balanced economy; and (ii) whether she removed any reference to regional inequality in the process of approving the terms of reference for the Economic Advisory Group.
(AQW 9891/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: The Economic Advisory Group (EAG) has been established to provide me with independent advice on the actions to be taken for the medium and long-term recovery of the Northern Ireland economy.

A key strategic objective in both the medium and long term will be tackling the structural weaknesses in our economy. This was clearly identified in the priorities of "Rebuilding a Stronger Economy" to deliver a more competitive, inclusive and greener economy.

The EAG will advise me on the development of "Rebuilding a Stronger Economy" and the future Economic Strategy. Naturally, this will include actions to deliver an inclusive recovery.

Specific references to "regional inequality" have not been removed during the Terms of Reference approval process.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for the Economy for an update on the roll-out of Project Stratum.
(AQW 10191/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: Following a robust and competitive procurement process, the contract for Project Stratum has now been awarded and deployment activities are underway. The project team will be engaging with the successful bidder, Fibrus Networks, to ensure that citizens and businesses can access further information regarding deployment plans and project implementation updates. Department officials will also shortly be engaging with local council representatives to ensure that key aspects of the project are communicated clearly and that all questions relating to deployment are addressed in a transparent manner.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for the Economy what actions she is taking to support university students in Northern Ireland to safely return home over the winter break period.

Mrs Dodds: In Northern Ireland, there are a number of cross-cutting issues related to student travel to be worked through, involving a variety of Departments. For this reason, the Executive Office has been asked to co-ordinate these plans, and a Task and Finish Group has been established to do so.

The various Departments involved are working collectively with other partners to develop and communicate a package of advice and support to help students stay safe, and to travel home safely at Christmas. This includes engaging with the local HE providers to agree a phased end to the semester and the facilitation of a move to online learning. The measures will also involve testing for students; public health authorities are working to agree the operational aspects of a testing programme to inform arrangements for student travel, while the relevant authorities will be engaged to consider the impacts on public transport.

In the interim, students should continue to follow the relevant public health advice in terms of travelling, and self-isolating when required.

Ms Sheerin asked the Minister for the Economy for an update on the roll-out of Project Stratum.
(AQW 10239/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: Following a robust and competitive procurement process, the contract for Project Stratum has now been awarded and deployment activities are underway. The project team will be engaging with the successful bidder, Fibrus Networks, to ensure that citizens and businesses can access further information regarding deployment plans and project implementation updates. Department officials will also shortly be engaging with local council representatives to ensure that key aspects of the project are communicated clearly and that all questions relating to deployment are addressed in a transparent manner.

Mr McHugh asked the Minister for the Economy for an update on Strabane Business Park.
(AQW 10244/17-22)

Mrs Dodds: The development of Strabane Business Park by Invest NI was a long-term investment in the economic infrastructure of West Tyrone.

There are currently two businesses located on Strabane Business Park. . Discussions with other interested parties are continuing and I am hopeful that these will lead to further investments for Strabane in the near future.

Invest NI will continue to market Strabane Business Park to businesses, both indigenous and external to Northern Ireland as an attractive investment location.

Northern Ireland Assembly Commission

Mr Allister asked the Assembly Commission whether any funding has been provided from Assembly allowances in respect of the rates on Unit 3, 1A Melvin Road, Strabane, or any offices at 1A Melvin Road, Strabane, in 2020/21.
(AQW 9503/17-22)

Mr Butler (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): Under Standing Order 76 (2), the details of sums paid by the Commission to its current and former Members are published each year. This information is normally published quarterly. However, this has been delayed due to the introduction of the Determination that was issued by the Assembly Commission on 27 August 2020. Figures are currently being prepared for the year to date and will be published shortly.

In advance of that work being completed it is possible to confirm that no funding was provided for rates for 2020/21 under the provisions of the Assembly Members (Salaries and Expenses) Determination (Northern Ireland) 2016 (as amended) for Unit 3 or any other offices at 1A Melvin Road, Strabane.

Mr Allister asked the Assembly Commission what funding has been provided from Assembly allowances in respect of Unit 3, 1A Melvin Road, Strabane, or any offices at 1A Melvin Road, Strabane, in 2020/21.
(AQW 9504/17-22)

Mr Butler (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): In accordance with the provisions of paragraph 16 of the Assembly Members (Salaries and Expenses) Determination (Northern Ireland) 2016 (as amended), funding has been provided for Constituency Office Operating Expenses for 1A Melvin Road, Strabane. The total claimed in 2020/21 (from April to October 2020) is £2,154.13.

Expenditure Type	Amount
Members' Office - Cleaning	£335.24
Members' Office - Security & Fire Safety	£215.04
Members' Office - Telephones	£1,231.71
Office Utilities - Electricity	£208.04
Office Utilities - Water	£151.83
Recharge: Consumables	£8.27
Sundry Expenses	£4.00
Total	£2,154.13

Mr Allister asked the Assembly Commission what distinctions exist in terms of paying Assembly allowances to offices where the lease is held by the MLA and where the lease is held by a political party or the premises are owned by a political party. (AQW 9505/17-22)

Mr Butler (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): All expenses and allowances are paid to Members under the provisions of the Assembly Members (Salaries and Expenses) Determination (Northern Ireland) 2016 (as amended) (“the Determination”). The Determination not only sets the quantum of what may be recovered by Members, it also establishes the criteria that must be fulfilled in order to recover expenses. Expenses are not paid to offices but are paid to Members, typically in respect of their offices.

Paragraphs 45 and 46 of the Determination define a “connected person” and an “associated person” respectively. Both of these definitions are relevant to the rental of a constituency office. A political party of which the Member is a member is a connected person (paragraph 45 (b)) while any [other] political party is an associated person (paragraph 46 (a)).

As set out in paragraph 8 of the Determination, a Member is not entitled to recover any expense in respect of a payment to a connected person. A Member is required to have a lease in place before rent and rates can be recovered for an office. Paragraph 11 of the Determination further clarifies that no rent can be paid where the office is rented from a connected person. Therefore, if the lessor is the Member’s party, no rent or rates expenses can be recovered as the rental payment would be made to a connected person.

In the perhaps less likely circumstances where the lessor is another political party (i.e. not the party that the Member is a member of), that other political party would be an associated person. Under paragraph 11 of the Determination, the Member would only be able to recover 50% of the rental expenses for the office.

Additionally, where a Member seeks to recover an expense in respect of a payment to an associated person the Member must make and send to the Assembly Commission a declaration stating the name of the associated person, details of the association and the nature and amount of the expense. A Member is not entitled to recover an expense if that declaration is not made and the Member ought reasonably to have known it should have been made, or the declaration is not accurate and the Member ought reasonably to have known it was not accurate.

For other expenses such as Constituency Office Operating Expenses or Establishment Expenses, the ownership of the office or the lease arrangements do not have an impact on a Member’s ability to recover these expenses.

Mr Allister asked the Assembly Commission to detail how many poles from the roof railings are embedded into the roof parapet. (AQW 9618/17-22)

Mr Butler (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): Parliament Buildings has a very complex roof layout including flat roofs at eight different levels and a curved ‘barrel’ roof that replaced the original flat roof over the central portion during the refurbishment in the late 1990s. To comply with current legislation, all accessible roofs are required to have roof edge protection fitted.

The roof project included the installation of a new permanent roof edge protection system in the form of steel safety guard railing. While the perimeter of the building is generally protected by the existing stone parapet, there is a small portion at the rear of the building where the parapet height was insufficient to meet current requirements and steel guardrails were required at this location to supplement the parapet edge protection. For that purpose, fifty-two uprights were erected in core-drilled holes in the top of the parapet, to facilitate the erection of the safety railing system.

Mr Allister asked the Assembly Commission to detail the rules governing control of accounts into which Assembly allowances are paid. (AQW 9706/17-22)

Mr Butler (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): All expenses and allowances are paid to Members under the provisions of the Assembly Members (Salaries and Expenses) Determination (Northern Ireland) 2016 (as amended) (“the Determination”). The Determination not only sets the quantum of what may be recovered by Members, it also establishes the criteria that must be fulfilled in order to recover expenses.

It is the Determination that sets the rules governing the accounts into which Assembly allowances must be paid. Paragraph 23 (2) requires that:

“Where an expense is recovered by the member it must be paid by the Commission into an account in a financial institution –

- (a) for which the member is the sole signatory, or
- (b) for which the member and the member’s spouse, civil partner or cohabitant are sole signatories.”

On nominating an account for payments, each Member must certify that this requirement is met.

Mr Allister asked the Assembly Commission, pursuant to AQW 153/17-22, (i) what the Commission requested the designers to consider in relation to the lighting of the crest; and (ii) what the outcome of the discussions with the designers was. (AQW 9707/17-22)

Mr Butler (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): Following the Member's previous question, officials first met with the external lighting contractor at the beginning of January 2019 to determine if an appropriate way could be found to light the crest and the balcony.

The supplier was asked to consider options to enable the crest and the balcony on which it is mounted, to be better illuminated by means of supplementary lighting incorporated into the existing lighting system, unless that could not reasonably be achieved. The desire to incorporate the illumination of the crest into the existing lighting system, is informed by the likelihood that reverting to a standalone floodlighting system that is independent of the new scheme may cause compatibility and control issues, not least when the coloured lighting is employed.

Further meetings were held in May and June 2019 to consider proposals from the supplier and, when the viewing conditions were favourable, a lighting demonstration was provided in October 2019. However, the desired effect was only achievable with light fittings that were deemed to be inappropriate for the building. Although the supplier returned in February 2020 with a more discrete light fitting, it was still felt that these fittings would look out of place on the façade of Parliament Buildings, particularly during daylight hours. The supplier agreed to return with a more refined fitting that was in development at that time.

Unfortunately, no further progress has been made since then, due to the ongoing pandemic. However, the contractor has now returned to work on another project on the estate and a further meeting has been arranged to try to identify an appropriate solution.

The Commission will endeavour to keep you informed of progress in that regard.

Written Answers to Questions

The Executive Office

Mr McGrath asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how much has been spent to combat direct discrimination on the grounds of age in the provision of goods, facilities and services, in each of the last five years.
(AQW 5503/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill (The First Minister and deputy First Minister): We refer the Member to the answer provided to AQW 5551/17-22.

Mr McGrath asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what work has been done to address direct discrimination on the grounds of age in the provision of goods, facilities and services, in each of the last five years.
(AQW 5504/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: We refer the Member to the answer provided to AQW 5551/17-22.

Mr McGrath asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister when they intend to bring forward age discrimination legislation to the Assembly.
(AQW 5548/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: We refer the Member to the answer provided to AQW 5551/17-22.

Mr McGrath asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how much has been spent to combat harassment on the grounds of age in the provision of goods, facilities and services, in each of the last five years.
(AQW 5550/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: We refer the Member to the answer provided to AQW 5551/17-22.

Mr McGrath asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what work has been done to address harassment on the grounds of age in the provision of goods, facilities and services, in each of the last five years.
(AQW 5552/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: We refer the Member to the answer provided to AQW 5551/17-22.

Mr McGrath asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how much has been spent to combat indirect discrimination on the grounds of age in the provision of goods, facilities and services, in each of the last five years.
(AQW 5598/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: Consideration of extending age discrimination legislation to the provision of goods, facilities and services was commenced under the previous Executive. A decision was not made in respect of the scope of that legislation prior to the end of the last Assembly. The issue requires further work to inform the potential scope of any legislation.

Appendix 1 to the "New Decade, New Approach" document supports the possible outline of a Programme for Government including the bringing forward of an Age, Goods and Facilities and Services Bill. This will be subject to the Executive agreeing a final Programme for Government.

The Commissioner for Older People, appointed by the First Minister and deputy First Minister acting jointly, provides assistance to individual older people who need advocacy or legal support. The Commissioner's team also signpost a lot of enquiries to the right agency or organisation that provides the most relevant assistance.

In addition, the Executive Office sponsors the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland which delivers a range of work aiming to improve equality of opportunity for everyone. Their services include giving free and confidential advice and support to individuals with potential complaints under the anti-discrimination legislation. In some circumstances the Commission can take legal action against individuals and organisations.

Mr McGrath asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how much has been spent to combat other discriminatory behaviour on the grounds of age in the provision of goods, facilities and services, in each of the last five years.
(AQW 5601/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: We refer the Member to the answer provided to AQW 5551/17-22.

Mr McGrath asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what work has been done to address indirect discrimination on the grounds of age in the provision of goods, facilities and services, in each of the last five years.
(AQW 5602/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: We refer the Member to the answer provided to AQW 5551/17-22.

Mr McGrath asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail (i) their plans to fill the post of Head of Civil Service; and (ii) the associated timescales.
(AQW 7719/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: As outlined in the joint statement that we released on 26 September, we are working urgently to put in place appropriate arrangements to fill the HOCS position on an interim basis, and in parallel considering how best to fill this crucial role substantively.

We are not yet in position to clarify the associated timescales but this will be announced in due course.

Mr McGrath asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the timescale associated with making an interim appointment to the post of Head of Civil Service.
(AQW 7820/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: As outlined in the joint Statement that we released on 26 September, we are working urgently to put in place appropriate arrangements to fill the HOCs position on an interim basis.

We are not yet in a position to clarify the associated timescale for this appointment, but an update will be provided as soon as possible.

Mr McGrath asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, in relation to their Written Ministerial Statement on the vacant post of Head of Civil Service and the inevitable delays, due to the COVID-19 pandemic, to detail the timeline of the process from Mr. Sterling's announcement in December 2019.
(AQW 7821/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: Planning for the Head of the Civil Service (HOCS) recruitment campaign began in January 2020. We met with officials on 5 February 2020 to agree a broad outline of the proposed approach for the recruitment exercise, including our specific role (as set out in the agreed policy) in the selection process.

Recruitment for the HOCS appointment comprised an eligibility sift against agreed criteria, an individual assessment by an occupational psychologist and a two stage interview process. From January to mid-March, significant work was undertaken on all of these elements including developing and agreeing all of the recruitment competition literature, advertising and outreach (locally, nationally and internationally with the aim of attracting a wide and diverse pool of applicants) and all arrangements in relation to the first stage panel and its members. We were consulted by officials at regular intervals throughout.

We received bespoke NICS recruitment and selection training on 7 April 2020. While the unprecedented challenges associated with COVID-19 meant that there was some inevitable delay (with considerations having to be given to a range of issues), we met again with officials in June to finalise and agree all aspects of the selection process and the recruitment opportunity was advertised widely in mid-July.

An eligibility sift took place on 3 August, followed in mid-August by the occupational psychologist's individual assessment of those applicants who met the eligibility criteria.

First stage interviews were held on 26 August and those candidates who met the agreed standard progressed to the final interview stage originally planned on 16th and held on 23 September.

Ms Armstrong asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on their commitments to building a united and shared society through the Together: Building a United Community Strategy.
(AQW 9773/17-22)

Mrs Arlene Foster and Mrs Michelle O'Neill: There has been significant progress to date in delivering the T:BUC Strategy including its headline actions.

Over 20,000 young people have taken part in 570 T:BUC Camps and five Urban Villages have been established. Five Shared Education Campuses have been approved and are in progress. 10 shared neighbourhoods, providing 483 new homes, have been completed, meeting the target set in the T:BUC Strategy. Over 5,600 young people have participated in the Peace4Youth programme. Approximately 2,700 young people have engaged with the Uniting Communities through Sport and Creativity Programme, while the number of interface barriers has been reduced by 14.

Within TEO, the Central Good Relations Fund has provided funding of £15m since 2016, supporting over 460 projects, while a further £3m is distributed annually through the District Council Good Relations Programme. These key good relations programmes deliver against the four key priorities of the T:BUC Strategy.

Department of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs

Mr McAleer asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs for an update on Tackling Rural Poverty and Social Isolation initiatives.

(AQW 4959/17-22)

Mr Poots (The Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs): I secured an enhanced budget of £10.8m - £2.5m Resource and £8.3m Capital - for the Tackling Rural Poverty and Social Isolation (TRPSI) Programme in the current financial year. The TRPSI initiatives have played a key role in supporting rural individuals, communities and businesses respond to the challenge and impact of the Covid 19 pandemic.

Details of the initiatives for 2020/21 are set out below.

The Assisted Rural Travel Scheme (ARTS) is delivered in partnership with the Department for Infrastructure (DfI) and the Rural Community Transport Partnerships across NI. The Scheme delivers passenger trips for rural dwellers entitled to a SmartPass and most in need of rural transport (mainly the elderly and disabled).

This Scheme is ongoing with mediocre uptake due to the Covid-19 pandemic. During the initial Covid-19 initial lockdown DfI and DAERA agreed for the Scheme to transition to bring services to people. This service greatly assisted the Council Hubs / Trusts deliver food and essential items to those in need. This service is still available if required.

Community Development funding supports 6 Rural Support Networks covering all of rural NI, with over 1,500 community and voluntary groups availing of advice and assistance. This continuous support for many rural community and voluntary groups helps to build the capacity of rural dwellers and their communities.

Ongoing but flexible arrangements are in place to allow the Networks support and provide practical help to Council Hubs, Trusts, Community and Voluntary Sector and rural dwellers during the ongoing pandemic.

DAERA jointly funds the Regional Infrastructure Support Programme (RISP) (administered by the Department for Communities) to ensure that the rural element of the Voluntary and Community sector has access to the support it needs in order to function effectively. As part of the consortia delivering RISP, both the Rural Community Network (RCN) and Northern Ireland Rural Women's Network (NIRWN) receive funding towards the rural element of RISP.

The Farm Families Health Checks Programme in partnership with the Public Health Agency (PHA) and the Northern Health and Social Care Trust provides access to nurse led Health Checks specifically designed for farmers and other rural community dwellers that historically have been reluctant to attend their GP for a range of reasons. Farm Family Health Checks are usually delivered at Marts and Community events across NI however because of the Covid-19 pandemic a limited service at Marts only is currently being provided. DAERA, PHA and NH&SCT staff will also continue to closely monitor the COVID-19 crisis situation to determine when it would be appropriate to recommence visits to Community settings. Separately, the FFHCP van is assisting with the roll out of the 'flu' vaccine in the NHSCT area.

Rural Support Charity - provides a listening ear and signposting service to farmers and farm families and provides Helpline / Volunteer & Outreach support to rural clients. Rural Support also provides presentations and information sessions to help reduce rural stress and promote positive mental health. They also provide on-farm business mentoring to farmers/family members. Rural Support have recently launched their Winter Programme of events – 'For Farmers by Farmers' to help farm families' deal with increasing internal and external pressures.

Social Farming Support Service - The support service provided by Rural Support staff operates as a hub for Social Farming which provides disadvantaged groups of people in NI with an opportunity for inclusion, to increase their self-esteem and to improve their health and well-being. The Support Service creates a knowledge and ensures the expansion of the initiative across NI. Social Farming Standards have been developed and work towards meeting these Standards are on-going with established Social Farmers.

So Keep Farming: In partnership with the Department for Economy (DfE) and Rural Area Partnership in Derry (RAPID), this European Social Fund project provides people with a disability the opportunity to engage and contribute by choice in farming, training and social activities.

Historic Environment Division Village Catalyst Pilot Project - Short Films: A small resource amount will fund a short promotional film recording the 4 ongoing pilot capital projects. Project partners, DfC and the Architectural Heritage Fund are sharing the costs.

SPRING Social Prescribing – This project is delivered with the support of the Department of Health, the Health and Social Care Board and in partnership with the rural Healthy Living Centres. It aims to link medical care to non-clinical locally delivered support services by enabling medical professionals to refer rural patients to a range of activities and services to support greater independence, reduce reliance on primary healthcare, tackle poverty and isolation issues and deliver better outcomes for rural people and society. With the onset of COVID 19 SPRING staff developed a new delivery model entitled the “Connect Well Service” where Social Prescribers contacted all clients remotely, by telephone, text, social media platforms or through video link. This benefitted 530 vulnerable rural dwellers and 1,800 clients in total.

SPRING Project Management Team undertook an exercise to consider how to transition the project back to its original format bearing in mind impacts of Covid pandemic. A SPRING ‘Transitioning’ document has been developed and DAERA are working closely with SPRING to develop the proposals it contains.

Step Up to Sustainable Employment (SUSE+) - Step Up to Sustainable Employment (SUSE+) is a partnership with FE Colleges and Local Councils in the South West that promotes employment by engaging with unemployed, economically inactive and socio-economically deprived individuals. Since April 46 participants have entered employment.

CFNI Coronavirus Community Fund - Faith Based Applications (RCN) – This initiative in conjunction with DfC and the Rural Community Network allowed for eligible applications received from rural Faith Based organisations, forwarded by the Community Foundation NI Coronavirus Community Fund to the Rural Community Network to receive grant aid. Other non-faith based eligible rural applications received their awards from the CFNI Coronavirus Community Fund which DAERA supported.

Prosper Employability Project: The Prosper Project has two strands. Strand 1 provides Mentoring support to 100 young people engaged in the Southern Regional College’s Schools’ Partnership Programme. Strand 2 provides specific vocational training leading to qualifications identified by local employers. Southern Regional College has extensive links with local employers and provides a comprehensive range of supports to SMEs. These relationships were extended to ensure local businesses have access to a well-trained and qualified workforce that provide the opportunity to survive and thrive economically. Training is available across a range of occupational areas e.g. CAT C lorry driving, forklift driving, Emergency First Aid at Work, Customer Services, AI training, HEIGHTs and SIA door security & CCTV training.

Rural Micro Capital Grant Scheme 2020: Micro Capital grants of between £200 and £1,500 will be made available to rural community-led, voluntary organisations for projects tackling issues of local poverty and / or social isolation. These grants will support the Community and Voluntary sector in their work to recover and reset following the Covid-19 pandemic. 711 applications were received and these are currently being assessed with Letters of Offer due to issue in late November 2020.

Forest Park Enhancement and Community Trail Development Scheme: Six eligible projects that can deliver by 31 March 2021 are currently being assessed following identification through an expression of interest call to Councils and receipt of a Business Case for the proposed scheme. These projects, when complete, will contribute to the health and well-being of the residents of the surrounding areas to the Forests/Trails by developing safe, way marked, off-road cycling/walking trails that will accommodate a wide range of users.

Historic Environment Division - Village Catalyst Pilot Project: This pilot project is a partnership initiative between Historic Environment Division (HED), the Architectural Heritage Fund, DAERA and local community social enterprise groups. It aims to restore disused historic buildings in rural villages, increase opportunities for a range of local social engagement activities by improving access to key services in rural areas through the provision of an enhanced facilities and ultimately act as a catalyst for further regeneration in rural villages. Two further villages (Caledon and Rathfriland) are set to benefit from this initiative in 20/21 while the projects in Ederney and Gracehill will be concluded.

Your School, Your Club: This partnership initiative in conjunction with the Department of Education, Education Authority, Department for Communities, local Councils and Sport NI will contribute to addressing the unmet demand for sporting and recreational facilities across Northern Ireland by opening up educational sites for local community usage outside of normal school hours. The initiative addresses an identified need for a facility identified on the local area plan/community plan to enhance the existing provision and increase participation in sport and physical activity.

In 20/21 it is intended that further projects will be supported at Newtown Stewart PS, St Pat’s PS Eskra, St Pat’s Maghera and St Mary’s Glenview Maghera.

Rural Business Development Grant Scheme: The Rural Business Development Grant Scheme is delivered in partnership with the 11 Councils, to provide Capital Grants of 50% up to a maximum of £4,999. The scheme will provide capital grant assistance to rural micro businesses to bring about improvements towards sustainability with the potential to create employment opportunities. 1545 applications were received and work is currently underway to assess eligible applications with the issue of Letters of Offer due to be concluded by the end of November 2020.

Covid-19 Revitalisation Scheme: £2m has been provided from the TRPSI Budget to support DfC’s Covid-19 Recovery Revitalisation Programme, which is also being implemented by Councils. In Tranche 1, £6m funding (£5m DfC and £1m DAERA) focused on short term needs as identified by Councils through their respective Revitalisation Plans. In Tranche 2, £11m (£1m DAERA, £5m DfC and £5m DfI) has been provided to address medium term needs again identified by Councils.

All Councils are working towards delivering on their Tranche 1 Actions Plans and Councils have received their Letter of Offer for initiatives identified in their Tranche 2 Revitalisation Actions Plans. An Inter-departmental Board involving DAERA, DfC and DfI has been established to implement and monitor this Programme.

The Access and Inclusion Programme is delivered by the Department for Communities, in partnership with DAERA, Public Health Agency (PHA) and local Councils. Its key aim is to improve accessibility to arts, culture and active recreation activities for people with disabilities. Letters of Offer to successful 20/21 applicants have been issued to 39 organisations with DAERA supporting the rural applications.

Crawfordsburn Country Park - Disabled Toilet Facilities: This project involves the refurbishment of the public toilet facility at the beach carpark of Crawfordsburn Country Park. Delivery of this strategic alignment project in conjunction with NIEA Natural Environment Division will provide enhanced contemporary amenities for the public and in particular disabled and severely disabled people. The completed project, in this financial year will significantly promote accessibility and enhance the health and wellbeing of the additional visitors to the Park who can enjoy our open natural spaces.

Social Farming Capital Grant Scheme: The Social Farming Capital Grant Scheme is a capital grant scheme for farmers involved in the provision of Social Farming to adapt and sustain their facilities and improve accessibility to contribute to a higher quality on-farm experience for service users and contribute to a sustainable future for social farming services in Northern Ireland. The grants will be targeted at those Social Farmers who are working towards meeting the recently agreed Social Farming Standards. 13 Letters of Offer, to the value of £54k have been issued.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs how many Tree Preservation Orders are in force across North Down; and the location of these orders.

Mr Poots: Local councils make and enforce Tree Preservation Orders to protect selected trees or groups of trees and my Department is not the authority which enforces this legislation.

Ards and North Down Borough Council has published a web based interactive map showing the location of Tree Preservation Orders in their Council area which can be accessed on the Council's website: <https://www.ardsandnorthdown.gov.uk/resident/planning/trees/tree-preservation-orders#:~:text=Tree%20Preservation%20Orders%20are%20imposed,Ards%20and%20North%20Down%20Borough>.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs (i) whether exemptions from the COVID-19 rule of six restrictions for grouse shooting and hunting with guns introduced in England were also introduced in Northern Ireland; and (ii) if so, do these exemptions remain in place.

Mr Poots: While the Department of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs is not responsible for the legislation governing gatherings in the COVID 19 environment, I am not aware of any exemption having been made for this purpose under the Northern Ireland legislation.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs what role Forest Service has in the protection and management of trees at Portavoe Reservoir.

Mr Poots: The woodlands surrounding Portavoe Reservoir have been managed by Forest Service under a management agreement with NI Water (formerly DOE) since 1978.

Recently, the woodland and reservoir at Portavoe have been disposed of by NI Water as surplus to their requirements.

Consequently, Forest Service now need to consider land management responsibilities falling to the respective parties resulting from the change in land ownership. In terms of protection, the woodland at Portavoe remains subject to the requirements of the Forestry Act (Northern Ireland) 2010 and the Environmental Impact Assessment (Forestry) Regulations irrespective of land ownership.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs for an update on the Forests for Our Future Programme, including how many trees have been planted thus far.

Mr Poots: Since March 2020 I have taken a personal lead in promoting 'Forests for Our Future' which will become a foundation programme within the Green Growth Strategy. I have attended a planting event with school pupils; opened a revised forestry grant scheme, announced the development of a new small woodland grant scheme and established an afforestation forum to make plans for planting suitable public and council land. To date Forest Service has validated that 574 thousand trees have been planted in new woodland by land owners with support from Forestry Grant Schemes and on Departmental land.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs what discussions have taken place with Ards and North Down Borough Council to ensure its share following the announcement to plant 18 million trees across Northern Ireland.

Mr Poots: In response to my invitation to participate in an afforestation forum aimed at planning and creating new woodland on council land to help deliver the 'Forests for our Future' Programme, Ards and North Down Borough Council have nominated a senior official to take part in the forum which will take place in December. My departmental officials have engaged already with Councils helping them to map and record suitable land for planting.

Since I announced the 'Forests for our Future' Programme in March, Forest Service has validated that 11 thousand trees were planted by a private landowner within Ards and North Down Borough Council area with support from the Forest Expansion Scheme. Officials are currently assessing a second application under this Scheme which includes plans to plant a further 17 thousand trees in the Council area this winter.

Ms Bailey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to detail the new planned release date for his Department's consultation on the environment plans, principles and governance aspects of the Environment Bill.

Mr Poots: Publication of the Discussion Document on Plans, Principles and Governance was postponed from 12 October 2020 in order to allow Departmental officials to provide further briefing to the Committee for Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs at its meeting on 15 October 2020. The Discussion Document will be published as soon as it is practicable to do so and will remain open for comment for a period of 8 weeks.

Miss Woods asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs for her assessment of the current statutory protection afforded to trees or woodland under the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991.

Mr Poots: The Department for Infrastructure has responsibility for the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 and the implementation of this legislation is the process by which protection of trees and woodlands is considered.

My Department regulates felling of trees in woodlands under the Forestry Act, however felling of trees required for development authorised by planning permission are exempt from regulation under the Forestry Act as are trees that are subject to Tree Preservation Orders.

Mrs Barton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs what action has been taken to ensure the sufficient supply of veterinary medicinal products following the implementation of Brexit.

Mr Poots: Thank you for your correspondence on 10 November 2020 in relation to what action has been taken to ensure the sufficient supply of veterinary medicinal products to Northern Ireland following the implementation of Brexit.

The Veterinary Medicines Directorate (VMD) is an Executive Agency of the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Defra). VMD is responsible for assuring the safety, quality and efficacy of veterinary medicines in the United Kingdom. VMD regulate on behalf of the Department of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs (DAERA) for veterinary medicinal products.

My officials are actively engaged with VMD to ensure we assess the impact of the Protocol on veterinary medicinal products; are aware of identified issues and work towards ensuring continued supply and access.

I am pleased to inform you that the EU and UK have now agreed on a phased process for implementing veterinary medicines regulation in Northern Ireland up to 31 December 2021. This will ease regulatory burden and provide the additional time needed for businesses to prepare in relation to the movement of veterinary medicinal products from GB to NI. Further guidance will be sent out to businesses shortly.

My officials also continue to work closely with all relevant representative bodies, to ensure that NI vets, farmers and animal owners retain access to the existing range of veterinary medicines to maintain standards of animal health and welfare.

Further guidance is available on the VMD information hub which contains communication on the changes following the end of the transition period and can be accessed at <https://www.gov.uk/guidance/vmd-information-hub>.

Ms Bailey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to detail (i) how many downloads of the Air App there has been since its launch; (ii) the average number of daily users; (iii) the total number of push notifications sent by the app to users in Northern Ireland; (iv) the cost of development and maintenance of this app; and (v) what communication and promotion his Department has undertaken regarding this app.
(AQW 9962/17-22)

Mr Poots: The Northern Ireland Air Quality App gives the public instant up to date information on the air pollution levels across Northern Ireland and a five day air quality forecast. It also provides the public with valuable health advice on the impacts of reduced air quality, to help them make informed decisions about their activities on days when air quality is poor. The pollutants monitored are nitrogen dioxide, particulate matter (PM), sulphur dioxide and ozone.

Since the Air Quality App launch on 7th May 2020 there have been 441 downloads of the iPhone version and 606 downloads of the android version.

Between 7th May 2020 and 8th November 2020, the average number of daily users for the iPhone version was 3.08. For the android version, information is only available on how many devices the App is active on and not the number of daily users.

For both versions of the App, access to information on the number of 'push notifications' is not available.

The cost of the design and build of the app was £30,035. Corrective maintenance is estimated at £3,000 per year.

The App was launched with a DAERA press release on 7th May. It was also promoted on various social media channels including NIEA and DAERA's facebook pages and MyNI.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs what actions his Department is taking to highlight the importance of farm safety.

(AQW 10012/17-22)

Mr Poots: Agriculture is our most dangerous industry and has consistently held a poor safety record in relation to deaths and serious injury, of all the industries in Northern Ireland.

Whilst Health and Safety is the remit of the Health and Safety Executive Northern Ireland (HSENI), I continue to show my commitment to the safety of our farm families and employees through significant work in a number of different ways.

The Farm Safety Partnership (FSP) was established in 2012 and has representation from my Department, HSENI, the Ulster Farmers' Union, the National Farmers' Union Mutual, the Young Farmers' Clubs of Ulster and the Northern Ireland Agricultural Producers Association. As part of the 2020-2023 Farm Safety Action Plan (its fourth Action Plan), the FSP is concentrating on specific 'Farm Safe Essentials' aimed at reducing the number of serious and fatal incidents relating to frequently recurring causes.

The 'Stop and Think SAFE' farm safety multi media campaign, was developed by the FSP to help tackle the high rates of serious accidents and deaths on Northern Ireland's farms. It raises the issues of the four main causes of fatalities on our farms - Slurry, Animals, Falls (from height) and Equipment. My Department continues to provide funding for this ongoing high profile and often hard hitting campaign.

FarmSafeNet, developed by the FSP, is an online learning tool designed to raise awareness about farm safety. It provides a range of useful resources along with practical information, all to encourage farmers and those working on farms to think seriously about safety on their farm. In addition, the 'Making it Safer' tool, included in FarmSafeNet, allows farmers to carry out a simple risk assessment that can help them manage their farm in such a way that it is safer for themselves, families and employees.

These online farm safety tools are an integral part of the application process for the Northern Ireland Rural Development Programme Farm Business Improvement - Capital Scheme. Tier 1 Tranche 3 of this scheme is currently open for applications, however, I strongly recommend that all farmers, farm family members and farm workers access these online tools. They can be found at www.farmsafenet.org

Farm safety is a high priority across all programmes that are delivered through the College of Agriculture, Food and Rural Enterprise (CAFRE) and Health and Safety is a key component of these programmes.

All new full-time, Further Education agriculture students participate in the Yellow Wellies Farm Safety initiative which is delivered by the Farm Safety Foundation. This important training initiative was delivered remotely to students at the start of the 2020/21 academic year. Health and safety is also a key feature of all practical activities undertaken by students during their course at CAFRE. In addition, the education and training provision on the safe operation of machinery at CAFRE has been further enhanced through the use of simulated driving technology.

During July and August each year CAFRE provides a tractor driving training course for 13 to 16 year old young people. This course includes Health and Safety, Legal requirements, Safe use of tractors on the farm, and how to safely use trailers and other implements. The restrictions in place due to COVID-19 prevented the delivery of this training over summer 2020. However, subject to restrictions that may be in place, this course will be offered during summer 2021.

CAFRE also delivers the Rural Development Programme Business Development Groups (BDGs) and Farm Family Key Skills (FFKS) Schemes. Almost 3000 farmers participate in the BDGs and to date 2138 have attended Health and Safety training, which is an integral part of the scheme. In addition, all BDGs participants have Health and Safety as a component part of their Farm Business Development Plan which is reviewed annually.

Within the FFKS Scheme, 771 people have undertaken Health & Safety Awareness training which aimed to create more awareness of the risks that exist on farms and encourage activities and work practices that create a safer working environment for all the farm family. Over 2,370 farm family members have also been trained in First Aid Awareness.

To date, 290 farm family members have participated in a 'Coping with the Pressures of Farming' course. This is delivered by Rural Support and focuses on farmers' mental wellbeing. It was developed in response to a growing body of evidence that stress and anxiety impact on farmers' wellbeing and their ability to do their job and a suggested link between increasing stress levels in farming and increasing risks for farm accidents to occur. The training focuses on helping farm families recognise the signs of stress, the potential causes, the practical steps to address the causes and where to seek help when required.

My Department will continue to ensure health and safety remains embedded within its training provision and will work collaboratively with its partners on the FSP to help drive home the importance of farm safety and develop a safety-first culture on our local farms. It is however, the farmers and those living and working on our farms that must put into practice those actions that are required to minimise or eliminate the risks of serious injury or death on our farms.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs what discussions he has had with his counterpart in the Irish Government on the banning of single-use plastics on the island of Ireland.

Mr Poots: At the 4 November British-Irish Council (BIC) Environment sector Ministerial meeting Minister Ryan and I, along with all of the BIC representatives, had a discussion around the harm posed to the marine environment by discarded fishing gear, plastic pellet loss and general marine litter much of which arises from terrestrial litter sources. We noted the progress to date and reaffirmed our commitment to collaborative work in this area.

I note too that Minister Ryan has launched a circular economy waste action plan including proposals to ban common single use plastic items that Ireland as an EU Member State is required to restrict by the July 2019 EU Directive on plastics. I further note that several of my GB colleagues are also considering options for restricting the supply of single use plastics and I am reviewing what action might be appropriate for Northern Ireland and I will, of course, take into account the actions proposed both in GB and in Ireland. With the proposed introduction of a levy on disposable beverage cups in Ireland, in Northern Ireland we will be considering how best to use powers from the new Environment Bill, once enacted, to implement charges for commonly used single use plastic items.

Mr Blair asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs, pursuant to AQW 7747/17-22, to detail a timeframe in which a ban on the use of wild animals in circuses can be introduced.

Mr Poots: I remain supportive of a ban on the use of wild animals in circuses in Northern Ireland. The Department remains focused on its preparations for the end of the transition period and must ensure the effective implementation of EU Regulation No.2016/429 (the Animal Health Law) which is to apply in April 2021. I have, therefore, instructed my officials to consider the matter as and when resources permit.

It is anticipated that any ban would require primary legislation and, as such, it is likely to take some time to progress. There are no circuses based here and those which have travelled to Northern Ireland in recent years have not used any wild animals in their performances. I am, therefore, satisfied that the absence of a legislative ban is not giving rise to animal welfare issues at this time. The Department will continue to monitor the position.

Miss Woods asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to detail his Department's understanding of the (i) current health status and viability of the freshwater pearl mussel populations of the Owenkillew river catchment; (ii) legal obligations for their protection; and (iii) identified environmental threats to the viability of this protected species.

Mr Poots:

- i The Department's most recent assessment of the freshwater pearl mussel in the Owenkillew River Special Area of Conservation (SAC) shows that the status of the species on that site remains unfavourable, and probably unviable in the long-term due to a fragmented and ageing population with younger age classes being largely absent. A recent commercial survey reported an absence of mussels, but coverage is understood to be incomplete, and the Department will carry out it's own assessment when river conditions permit.
- ii. The Freshwater Pearl Mussel is fully protected by law due to its inclusion in Annex 2 of the EU Habitats Directive. This includes the requirement to designate and manage SACs for the protection and restoration of freshwater pearl mussel populations. It is also protected under the Wildlife (NI) Order 1985 (as amended).
- iii. Identified pressures and threats to freshwater pearl mussels include water pollution from agricultural activities, forestry activities and other sources, and potential modifications/alteration to hydrological flow in water bodies. A Conservation Management Plan for the Owenkillew River SAC is currently being developed which will detail these pressures and threats at a site level and propose specific management actions to address these.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs for an update on plans to upgrade Moorlough, Tyrone.

Mr Poots: My Department provides access and parking for anglers at Moorlough and has plans to resurface the 1.8km in long Loop Lane in stages with asphalt shavings. Some works have already been carried out to part of the lane and another section of 250m is planned over the winter period. This work will improve access for anglers as well as the many other users of the facility such as local residents, cyclists, runners and walkers. My Department will also continue to maintain and enhance this popular angling facility through fish stocking.

My Department leases the fishing rights at Moorlough for the purpose of providing angling to the public. As my Department does not own the lake or the surrounding area, opportunities to use public money to carry out improvement work at Moorlough are limited. There is also a need to prioritise spend from the existing budget to maintain fixtures and fittings at all waters in the Public Angling Estate.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the British Government on the implementation of a UK emissions trading scheme that is linked with the EU emissions trading scheme.

(AQW 10086/17-22)

Mr Poots: Under the Northern Ireland Protocol NI electricity generating installations will remain in the EU Emissions Trading Scheme (EUETS) following the end of the Implementation Period. The remaining ETS installations will participate in either a UK ETS or Carbon Emissions Tax. Consequently, Northern Ireland will have to run a dual system of carbon pricing.

Over the course of this Assembly, I have had regular engagement with Kwasi Kwarteng, Minister of State for Business, Energy and Clean Growth and my counterparts from the other Devolved Administrations on issues relating to emissions trading, through participation in Inter-ministerial Groups and Quadrilateral meetings. I have also corresponded directly on this issue with Minister Kwarteng.

Throughout this ongoing engagement I have stated my preference for a linking agreement between the UK ETS and EU ETS. This would allow NI electricity generating installations to be folded into a linked UK ETS and avoid the requirement for a dual system of carbon pricing.

Mr Robinson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs (i) what has been done to resolve outstanding issues relating to the hydroelectric scheme at Roe Valley Country Park, Limavady; and (ii) whether any outstanding issues with adjacent landowners be addressed as a matter of urgency.

Mr Poots: My officials have confirmed that the outstanding issues relating to the hydro-electric scheme at Roe Valley Country Park cannot be resolved until such time as permission is granted by an adjacent land owner to access their lands in order to allow works to be completed.

Department officials have confirmed a comprehensive proposal has already been made to this adjacent landowner through his legal representatives.

Whilst officials have been notified that the landowner in question considered this proposal unacceptable, Department Officials are still awaiting specific details as to what elements of the existing proposal they are objecting to; the land owner concerned is aware of this.

Department officials continue to work to resolve all issues that arise with adjacent landowners as expediently as is possible, within the relevant financial constraints, probity and terms of accountability required for the expenditure of public monies.

Mr Blair asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to detail the proportion of recycled material for which the recycling process occurs in Northern Ireland.

Mr Poots: In 2019 out of every 100 tonnes of waste material brought onto sites which were authorised and monitored by the Northern Ireland Environment Agency for recycling, 38 tonnes (38%) underwent the full recycling process in Northern Ireland, i.e. waste that has been completely or fully recycled within Northern Ireland. This fully recycled tonnage can be broken down into the following:

- reprocessing of waste into aggregates (22%)
- composting of organic materials (6%)
- anaerobic digestion of organic materials (5%)
- reprocessing of glass (2%)
- other materials e.g. paper/wood/tyres/plastic/metals (3%)

Mr Blair asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs, in order to deter from the use of the waste treatment option and promote the use of alternative technologies, whether he will consider introducing a levy on incineration.

Mr Poots: AQW 10115/17-22, AQO 866/17-22 and AQW 7744/17-22 refer.

There are currently no powers devolved to Northern Ireland that might be used to introduce a levy on incineration. Taxation, including the introduction of levies, is a matter for the UK Parliament.

Mr Blair asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs for his assessment of the introduction of a register of animal welfare offenders in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 10116/17-22)

Mr Poots: I remain open to the possibility of creating a register of those convicted of animal welfare offences. The creation of such a register, however, raises complex issues regarding data protection, human rights and costs. As conviction data is strictly controlled and managed by the Department of Justice, my officials continue to explore these issues with officials in that Department and, following this, I intend to write to the Minister of Justice to seek her views on the matter.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to detail his plans to rewet boglands.

Mr Poots: I recognise that our peatland habitats are important for a number of reasons, in particularly biodiversity and their role in mitigating climate change. As I said in the Assembly recently, one factor that has contributed to the loss of biodiversity is decisions that were made in the past to drain areas in the uplands, which made farmland more productive there. We now know, however, the harm that can be done to our peat bogs from loss of water, both in terms of carbon capture and biodiversity loss. The reality is that we need to rewet our peatlands once again.

With this in mind, a Northern Ireland Peatland Strategy for Northern Ireland is currently being developed which will provide a framework for conserving our intact semi-natural peatlands and restoring degraded semi-natural peatlands, which I hope to consult on in the New Year.

In practical terms, NIEA continues to work with partners on the development, implementation and funding of peatland restoration projects through both direct DAERA funding, current INTERREG funding and by the development of future funding proposals.

Forest Service has also produced a strategy for the restoration of peatland habitats on land which it manages and published this as part of the forestry planning consultation documents.

As part of wider work to develop a new, post CAP, Agriculture Policy, officials have been working in partnership with farmers and farmer organisations to develop future Agri-Environment policy and schemes. Schemes to facilitate peatland restoration are under consideration as part of this policy development as we will need to support farmers financially for the environmental benefit that will be created by wetting the peatlands once again.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to detail the benefits of rewetting boglands in relation to reducing and capturing carbon.

Mr Poots: Peatlands are among the most carbon-rich ecosystems on the planet and as such will play a key role in mitigating climate change. Healthy peatlands in good condition not only store carbon but can actively sequester atmospheric carbon in perpetuity, as well as support biodiversity and reduce flood risk.

Peatland covers a significant part of Northern Ireland, most notably peatland with semi-natural vegetation which covers approximately 12% of the land area. Most peatland here has been modified by man and is considered degraded and in poor condition, emitting significant amounts of stored carbon. These habitats are also highly sensitive to air and water pollution which can damage or kill the peat-forming species and interfere with the peat's carbon storage capacity.

The restoration of peatland is a key nature-based solution which would both mitigate climate change and restore biodiversity, to ensure that they are sufficiently wet to support those moss species vital for peat accumulation and address other pressures and threats.

The Office for National Statistics recently reported that restoring peatland would be a cost effective measure to help tackle Climate Change – the estimated cost of fully restoring all of the UK's peatlands (£8-22 billion) is below the estimated savings of £109 billion in terms of reduced carbon emissions.

With this in mind, a Northern Ireland Peatland Strategy for Northern Ireland is currently being developed which will provide a framework for conserving our intact semi-natural peatlands and restoring degraded semi-natural peatlands, which I hope to consult on in the New Year.

DAERA currently supports remediation of peatland habitats through the Environmental Farming Scheme, through appropriate grazing, scrub removal and other conservation measures.

The Department is also supporting the development of Conservation Management Plans for protected peatland habitats and the roll out of targeted peatland restoration through the INTERREG VA programme, in partnership with local landowners.

Officials are currently scoping a range of nature recovery initiatives, including a potential peatland restoration programme to supplement current provision and provide for more bespoke, landscape-scale restoration efforts. This will be designed to deliver the Department's dual objectives to deliver net zero and restore biodiversity.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs how much rural development funding has gone into (i) Ballintoy; (ii) Balnamore; (iii) Dunloy; (iv) Loughgiel; and (v) Rasharkin, in each of the last five years.

Mr Poots: I refer you to my response to AQW 8150/17-22 which outlined that details of all payments can be found at <http://cap-payments.defra.gov.uk/>.

Mr Blair asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs when he will bring forward a consultation on the introduction of Finn's Law.

(AQW 10177/17-22)

Mr Poots: I am committed to recognising the invaluable work of service animals in Northern Ireland and consider it important that they are provided with the same level of protection here as in England and Wales. My Department intends to bring forward the relevant consultation in early 2021. Work is currently ongoing to develop the consultation document.

Mr McAleer asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs (i) what assessment his Department has conducted regarding the mink cull in Denmark linked to COVID-19; and (ii) whether he is aware of any other potential COVID-19-infected animals nationally and internationally that could potentially impact the north.

Mr Poots: My veterinary officials are continually monitoring and assessing the ongoing developments regarding detections of SARS-CoV-2 (the strain of coronavirus that causes the human disease COVID-19) in animals worldwide, including the recent development regarding mink farms across Europe.

I am aware of reports that mink to human transmission has occurred in some of these farms, and note the actions taken by the authorities in those jurisdictions in recommending the humane culling of mink and introduction of appropriate public health measures. The United Kingdom (UK) government, in response to these reports, initiated the banning of all travel from Denmark, into the UK, from 7 November. Furthermore, an additional requirement was introduced whereby anyone who had arrived in the UK from Denmark, since 23 October, was required to self-isolate with all other household members until two weeks had passed since their date of travel.

A qualitative assessment of the risk that SARS-CoV-2 infection in Mustelinae (mink, ferrets and weasels) presents to the UK human population was carried out by the cross-government, multi-agency body, the Human Animal Infections and Risk Surveillance (HAIRS) group. My officials collaborated on this qualitative risk assessment, which can be viewed here, with the group concluding that the risk to the general population is very low.

In relation to other animals, I am aware of the small number of reports nationally and internationally regarding SARS-CoV-2 detections in cats, dogs, and big cats in zoos. In these animals, it is considered that viral transmission occurred from close contact with infected humans. With the exception of mink, there is no current evidence to suggest that infected animals have transmitted the virus to humans. However, my officials are continuing to work closely with colleagues from across the UK and the Republic of Ireland to consider any emerging potential risks to Northern Ireland and to establish any actions which may be necessary.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to detail (i) all actions taken by his Department and arm's-length bodies concerning the Meenbog peat slippage; (ii) his Department's and arm's-length bodies engagement with their Republic of Ireland counterparts on the issue; and (iii) his plan to mitigate the pollution of local waterways around the wider Castlederg area.

Mr Poots: As this is a cross-border matter, Loughs Agency are the lead Agency in the investigation of Meenbog peat slippage. The incident itself occurred within the jurisdiction of Donegal County Council in Ireland, however the significant affects have crossed far into Co Tyrone in Northern Ireland.

My officials within the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) have been onsite since notification was received on Friday 13 November 2020 and continue to assist in the investigation alongside the lead agency and other statutory bodies.

The wind farm developer has suspended all works at the site with the exception of those that relate to mitigating the impact of the bog slide and reducing the risk of further slides. NIEA are undertaking a water quality sampling programme to monitor water quality and will make an assessment of the impacts on invertebrates once water levels drop. It is not yet possible to assess the impact of the bog slide on the fishery, flora and fauna in the Mourne Beg and Derg Rivers until water levels decrease and the levels of suspended peat reduce.

A cross border multi-agency meeting was held 16 November to co-ordinate the response to the significant pollution event that is impacting the Mourne Beg River and Derg River. Representatives from the Loughs Agency, NIEA, National Parks and Wildlife Service, the Environmental Protection Agency, Donegal County Council and Derry City and Strabane District Council discussed the findings from their initial investigations into the incident.

The multi-agency group will reconvene to review matters and further co-ordinate the response. However the evaluation of the effects of this incident are likely to take some time. Only after a full and extensive evaluation can an attempt be made to determine the full extent of the impact and plan a way forward.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs (i) whether there is a condition that members of the board of the Loughs Agency attend meetings as a condition of receiving remuneration; and (ii) if not, whether he will consider introducing such a condition.

Mr Poots:

- (i) There is no specific provision which specifically states attendance at meetings of North/South Implementation Bodies as a condition of receiving remuneration.

Schedule 1, Annex 2, Part 6 of the North/South Co-operation (Implementation Bodies) (Northern Ireland) Order 1999 makes provision for the Board of the Foyle, Carlingford and Irish Lights Commission (Loughs Agency). Under the legislative provisions, the North South Ministerial Council (NSMC) will appoint the members to the Board.

Schedule 1, Annex 2, Part 6, 10.2 contains a provision relating to resignations and dismissal.

10.2. A person may resign as a member or as Chairperson or Vice-Chairperson by notice in writing to NSMC. NSMC may dismiss a person from his or her office as a member or as Chairperson or Vice-Chairperson, if—

- (a) he or she fails without reasonable excuse to discharge his or her functions for a continuous period of 3 months;
 - (b) he or she is convicted of a criminal offence;
 - (c) a bankruptcy order is made against him or her, or he or she makes a composition or arrangement with his or her creditors; or
 - (d) he or she is unable or unfit to carry out his or her functions.
- (ii) The appointment of Board Members to North/South Bodies and the applicable conditions of appointment are matters for the NSMC.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs (i) how much each member of the board of the Loughs Agency has been paid; and (ii) how many meetings of the board have been attended by each member, in each of the last two years.

(AQW 10324/17-22)

Mr Poots:

- (i) Remuneration for Members of the Loughs Agency Board over the last two years is as follows:

Member	Totals Gross 2019	Totals Gross YTD 2020
P Mahon	£5,235.00	£3,926.25
T McWilliams	£5,235.00	£3,926.25
A Ewart	£5,235.00	£3,926.25
I McCrea	£5,235.00	£3,926.25
A Patterson	£5,235.00	£3,926.25
A Duncan (Vice-Chair)	€9,830.00	€7,372.50
P Gibbons	€7,685.00	€5,771.25
F Walsh	€7,685.00	€5,771.25
H Mackey	€7,685.00	€5,771.25
M McCormick	€7,685.00	€5,771.25

- (ii) Board Member attendance at meetings over the last two years is as follows:

	Meetings Attended 2019	Meetings Attended 2020
Andrew Duncan	4	5
Phil Mahon	5	5
Michael McCormick	4	4
Terry McWilliams	4	5
Allan Ewart	2	5
Alastair Patterson	3	3
Ian McCrea	0	0
Patrick Gibbons	5	5
Fiona Walsh	5	4

	Meetings Attended 2019	Meetings Attended 2020
Heather Mackey	5	5

Mr Middleton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs what recent engagement his Department has had with Derry City and Strabane District Council regarding the Mobuoy waste site.

(AQW 10332/17-22)

Mr Poots: In July 2019 my Department established a Task and Finish Group with officials from Derry City and Strabane District Council (DCSDC) and NIEA's Mobuoy Remediation Project Team to work together and develop a discussion paper for the Site Vision post remediation. This discussion paper presented a co-design methodology for Council and DAERA to develop the future visioning for the site with opportunity for engagement with stakeholders and the local community in developing the design solution.

The paper was presented to, and approved by, the NIEA Board on 8 January 2020 and subsequently presented to DCSDC Environment and Regeneration Committee (ERC) on 22 January 2020. The Mobuoy Remediation Project Team provides monthly reports to the Council ERC, both to address Members' questions and to provide project updates.

A draft Mobuoy Stakeholder Engagement and Governance paper outlining proposals to take forward the site vision with stakeholder and local community engagement while protecting the integrity of the criminal trial, was presented to and approved by my Department's Mobuoy Remediation Project Board on 21 October 2020. This paper was subsequently presented to and approved by the Council's ERC on 11 November 2020 and this is now awaiting full Council approval.

I met with Members of the Council ERC on 28 October 2020 to address their concerns surrounding the Mobuoy site and my Department's next steps in progressing with remediation. I strongly support and promote the opportunity to leave a positive legacy at the Mobuoy site for the local community and future generations through collaboration and joint funding between my Department, the Department of Finance and the Council.

Mr McHugh asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to detail the impact on wild flora and fauna and fishstocks in the Mournebeg River, Tyrone, due to deteriorating water quality as a result of the Meenbog landslide in Donegal on 12 November 2020.

Mr Poots: The rivers Mourne Beg and Derg all form part of a large river system flowing into the River Foyle and then Lough Foyle. This river system is important not only for the species it contains and supports, notably Atlantic salmon, species of Lamprey and Otter, but also because of the range of river and associated habitats such as woodland. The system is protected as an Area of Special Scientific Interest (ASSI) and also is recognised internationally as a Special Area of Conservation (SAC).

It is not yet possible to assess the impact of this landslide on the flora, fauna or fishstocks of the Mourne Beg or Derg Rivers due to high, turbid flows in the rivers. The Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) has set up a programme of water sampling on the Mourne Beg and Derg Rivers to assess the potential impact of the landslide on water quality and will also conduct an investigation into the impacts on invertebrates once water levels have come down sufficiently to allow access to the rivers. NIEA and Loughs Agency staff are working closely with other organisations both on incident response and to try to achieve early restorative actions.

Mrs Barton asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs whether he is continuing with the active farmer criteria in the new direct payments scheme.

Mr Poots: The Active Farmer criteria have been successful in excluding and continuing to exclude non-farming landowners who rent their land out in conacre from applying for funding under the Basic Payment Scheme. I therefore intend to retain the current Active Farmer criteria for the 2021 scheme year.

However during 2021 I intend to review the current Active Farmer provisions to ensure they remain fit for purpose going forward.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to detail (i) any plans he has for pursuing stricter laws regarding the illegal poaching, shooting, hunting and poisoning of native birds of prey and migratory birds; and (ii) the numbers of successful prosecutions made for the above crimes in each constituency, broken down by year for the last five years.

Mr Poots: All wild bird species are afforded protection in Northern Ireland under the Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Order 1985. The PSNI has responsibility to investigate breaches of the Wildlife Order and work closely with DAERA officials with relevant scientific knowledge to gather information which assists prosecutions.

It is an offence to intentionally kill, injure or take any wild bird, including damaging their nests during the process of building or in occupation. Schedule 1, Part A of the Wildlife Order lists bird species that are protected all year round. The Schedule includes native birds of prey and migratory species. Schedule A1 of the Order also lists returning species and protects their nest year round.

I am therefore content that there is currently robust legislative protection in place for raptors and migratory birds and I have no plans to introduce new legislative measures. However, I am content to keep this issue under review, and will take additional action if deemed appropriate.

The Department does not hold records on the level of PSNI enforcement action taken in relation to migratory bird incidents. However, I would draw your attention to the latest (2019) report from the Partnership for Action against Wildlife crime (PAWNI) on raptor persecution. This is a comprehensive report which can be accessed at:-

https://80fb1992-4451-40d0-9d4a-ceb85ee8bb71.filesusr.com/ugd/259455_45a771f2750045d2940b099e8a8e58bf.pdf

Ms Bailey asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs, pursuant to AQW 9041/17-22, to detail (i) how many Anaerobic Digestion (AD) plants operating without a waste management licence have been identified, (ii) all AD plants that had been operating and receiving subsidies without a waste management licence; and (iii) whether waste management licences will be granted to plants that do not (a) meet conditions set out in their planning applications; or (ii) have planning permission.

(AQW 10430/17-22)

Mr Poots:

- (i) My Department is currently aware of 37 AD plants operating without a waste management licence. Of these, 14 do not require a licence as they are not accepting waste feedstock and 23 licence applications are currently being determined by NIEA.
- (ii) I assume the term 'subsidies' refers to the Renewables Obligation Certificates (ROCs) issued under the Northern Ireland Renewables Obligation (NIRO) Scheme. Biogas produced by AD plants when combusted in a combined heat and power (CHP) unit can generate renewable electricity. This CHP unit and generator are collectively referred to as a generating station. It is this generating station that is accredited by OFGEM for the purposes of the NIRO scheme and not the AD plants producing the biogas. Importantly, anaerobic digestion plants are not eligible for support under the NIRO scheme.

This is an important distinction as the NIRO legislation and scheme administration is focussed solely on the electricity generating station and ROCs are issued only in recognition of the eligible electricity produced. Therefore no AD plants had been operating and receiving subsidies without a waste management licence.

- (iii) AD plants accepting waste feedstock must have planning permission in place prior to being granted a waste management licence. This is a statutory requirement under Article 8 of The Waste and Contaminated Land (Northern Ireland) Order 1997 which states that a waste management licence shall not be granted for the use of land, plant or equipment, for which planning permission is required, unless such planning permission is in force. My Department therefore requires applicants for all waste management licences to provide evidence that that this requirement has been satisfied before a licence is granted. Compliance with the conditions attached to planning permissions is a matter for the relevant planning authority.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs to detail all assessments carried out on the (i) Mourne Beg River; and (ii) Derg River following the recent peat landslide in Meenbog.

Mr Poots: Further to my response to your question ref AQW 10303/17-22.

The second meeting of the Cross Border Multi-Agency Working Group took place on Thursday 19th November 2020 with representatives from Northern Ireland Water and the Department for Infrastructure Rivers joining officials from Loughs Agency, Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA), National Parks and Wildlife Service, Donegal County Council and Derry City and Strabane District Council.

All agencies shared updates on the various works and investigations they initiated in response to the significant pollution event impacting the Mourne Beg River and downstream catchments, triggered by material from a bog slide entering the river. Details were also shared of further investigations that will be required to determine the impact of the event on the environment. Works are ongoing within the site of a wind farm development in Meenbog, from where the slide originated, to mitigate the impact of the pollution and to reduce the risk of further bog slides. Further meetings of the working group are planned for this week and on an ongoing basis.

The investigation of this incident remains ongoing and NIEA treats all evidence and associated materials as if they are 'sub-judice' during the investigative phase of an incident. That being the case you will appreciate that I cannot provide more specific details of the investigation. I am more than happy to update you on this aspect, at a later date, once I am able to do so.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs whether his Department will establish a programme to introduce fish into the (i) Derg River; and (ii) Mourne Beg River following a recent pollution event.

Mr Poots: As both the Derg and Mourne Beg Rivers are within the Foyle river system, the Loughs Agency will lead on the consideration of any action to reintroduce fish into the river systems. It may be some time before the full extent of the impact of the landslide on fish stocks is understood. My officials will continue to provide advice and assistance as required.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs (i) how legislation regulating evasive species such as Japanese Knotweed compares to the latest legislation in England; and (ii) what plans he has to update the legislation applicable to Northern Ireland.

Mr Poots: The Wildlife (NI) Order 1985 contains powers for controlling the introduction of invasive alien species (IAS) in the wider environment. Under Article 15 of the Wildlife Order, it is an offence to 'plant or otherwise cause to grow in the wild' Japanese knotweed or any other invasive plant listed in Part II of Schedule 9 of this legislation. The current legislative position does not require landowners to eradicate Japanese knotweed.

Similar legislation, the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, is in place in England and Wales. In addition, the Infrastructure Act 2015 introduced a statutory regime of "Species Control Agreements and Orders" (SPOs) in England and Wales. These provisions are intended to be used primarily to remove newly arrived invasive species or those of relatively restricted distribution. It is not envisaged that these powers would be used to control Japanese Knotweed and, to date, I understand that no SPOs have been issued.

I currently have no plans to review legislation related to IAS, including Japanese knotweed or to introduce similar measures to those contained in the Infrastructure Act 2015.

Mr Blair asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs, what assessment his Department has made of the potential merits of supporting producers of plastic-free sanitary products to reduce their environmental impact.
(AQW 10635/17-22)

Mr Poots: Plastic and single-use sanitary products cover a wide range of uses, from items used to support the healthcare sector, particularly in care or hospital settings, to feminine hygiene products and baby wipes, as well as many other items. We therefore must be careful not to demonise all plastics. These items make a great contribution to health and wellbeing in Northern Ireland.

However, I recognise the impact that sanitary products containing plastics are having on our environment and in particular our marine environment. Sanitary products that have been incorrectly disposed of are one of the most commonly found items polluting our oceans and beaches.

My Department spends a significant amount of resource annually on raising awareness and changing behaviours around single use plastics. This includes promoting the use of plastic free alternatives or reusables, where it is possible.

I do have some concerns about some of the alternatives to plastics, which are purported to be less harmful to the environment than plastic for example, cotton which can often be used as an alternative material in sanitary products requires vast amounts of water and intensive farming to produce even small amounts of material. Another example is "eco-friendly" wet wipes, which although described as flushable, compostable or biodegradable, in reality these processes do not happen quickly enough to prevent them becoming a menace in our drains and waterways. Once the alternative product has reached the end of its useful life, options for reuse, particularly in sanitary products, would be limited and the infrastructure for textiles recycling in the UK is not yet capable of handling this type of resource. Many of these items could end up in energy from waste facilities or landfill sites.

It is with this in mind that I have instructed my officials to begin work on life cycle analyses for alternatives to plastic, to ensure that we are making the right decisions and promoting alternatives that are truly sustainable and environmentally friendly in the long term. Until these analyses have been completed, no assessment of the merits of supporting producers of plastic-free sanitary products can be made.

Mr Blair asked the Minister of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs, in light of recent media coverage, what steps his Department has taken to help prevent the occurrence of fire incidents at waste incinerator sites.

Mr Poots: Thank you for your question, my Department is unaware of any recent media coverage of fire incidents occurring at any waste incinerator site that the Department regulates.

The Industrial Pollution Radiochemical Inspectorate within NIEA current regulate three waste incinerators within Northern Ireland. As part of the compliance with their Pollution Prevention and Control permits the operator must demonstrate that they have made adequate provisions to reduce the risk of a fire at the waste incinerator site. This must include having adequate resources onsite such as a sprinkler system in the fuel hall and an onsite fire water tank which is appropriately sized to aid firefighting if such an incident was to occur. This is documented in their Fire Prevention Plan (FPP) and is submitted for review as part of the permitting process.

Department for Communities

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Communities to detail the dates on which she has visited each constituency in her capacity as Minister since taking up the role.

(AQW 7037/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister for Communities): Since my appointment as Minister for Communities on 15 June 2020 I have travelled to the following constituencies for visits or photo calls:

Date	Constituency
7 July 2020	Belfast East
8 July 2020	Belfast West
15 July 2020	Foyle
15 July 2020	Derry East
15 July 2020	Mid Ulster
24 July 2020	Belfast North
27 July 2020	Antrim South
27 July 2020	Belfast West
30 July 2020	Lagan Valley
18 August 2020	Belfast West

Mr Clarke asked the Minister for Communities how she plans to alleviate housing stress in South Antrim.

(AQW 9639/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am acutely aware that the numbers of people currently on the waiting list and those deemed to be in housing stress remains very challenging.

In terms of new social homes in the South Antrim Parliamentary Constituency I have been advised by the Housing Executive that there have been 15 social housing units completed to date in 2020/21, with a further 119 social housing units currently under construction. There are also a further 167 social housing units programmed to start through the Social Housing Development Programme in South Antrim before 2023.

I recently outlined in my statement to the Assembly my plans to address some of the most significant challenges facing our housing system, including lack of supply. I am determined to increase the capacity of the Social Housing Development Programme.

I am working up options to revitalise the Housing Executive and secure homes for those who need them most.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister for Communities to detail the Northern Ireland Housing Executive commitment to publish an action plan for the remediation and upgrade of cavity wall insulation in its housing stock by November 2019; and when the plan will be published.

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Housing Executive is committed to publishing a Draft CWI Action Plan on its response to the British Board of Agrément's CWI report's findings and recommendations. The original presentation of the findings to the Insulation Industry and local political representatives took place on the 8th August 2019, with the intention to publish an action plan in November 2019. However a further round of meetings organised with the Insulation Industry to seek their views on the research and their current operational practices took place and did not conclude until March 2020.

A report was being prepared to take the draft action plan to the Housing Executive Board in March 2020, however the impact of Covid-19 suspended all non-urgent work. A presentation on their likely approach was made to a meeting of the Housing Executive Board in August 2020 and they had intended to publish it in the early autumn. Unfortunately this has been delayed due to some further required analysis of data and further consideration being given on the potential courses of action. The housing Executive have advised that they will publish the Draft CWI Action Plan before the end of this calendar year.

Mr Butler asked the Minister for Communities whether the Gambling Commission can investigate breaches of licence conditions by remote or online gambling operators in Northern Ireland.

Ms Ní Chuilín: There is no provision for licensing online gambling in the Betting, Gaming, Lotteries and Amusements (NI) Order 1985, however, under section 5 of the Gambling (Licensing and Advertising) Act 2014 online operators who wish to advertise their services here must hold a licence from the Gambling Commission. The Statement of Principles for Licensing and Regulation (June 2017) sets out terms under which the Gambling Commission can investigate regulatory breaches of licenses issued by it.

Both local and online advertising of gambling products and services must equally comply with the Advertising Codes issued by the Committee of Advertising Practice (CAP) and administered by the Advertising Standards Authority (ASA).

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Communities when the COVID-19 charities fund will reopen. [R]
(AQW 10023/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am aware of the ongoing financial challenges within the charities sector and my officials are finalising options on how best to address these. I expect to be in a position to inform my Executive colleagues, the Communities Committee and the Assembly of my decision shortly.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister for Communities whether she will intervene to ensure that the Irish and Local Studies Library remains as one unit and is retained in Armagh city.

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am aware of the public consultation that Libraries NI is carrying out on its proposal to relocate the services currently provided at the Irish and Local Studies Library in Armagh. I note the proposal is to retain the collection across three locations within County Armagh, with two of these in Armagh City.

In other library settings an aim of co-location, such as is being proposed by Libraries NI, is to increase accessibility to heritage collections and services.

Arrangements for the provision of heritage library services are largely an operational matter for Libraries NI and I would encourage feedback and comments to be submitted to them in line with the public consultation process which will run until 8 January 2021.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Communities (i) what public accountability measures exist in respect of Conradh na Gaeilge, which has been given authority to administer over £600,000 of COVID-19 support money; (ii) whether Conradh na Gaeilge is subject to any supervision by the Northern Ireland Audit Office; and (iii) what enforceable stipulation exists that the said COVID-19 support money can only be spent in Northern Ireland.

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Covid-19 Culture, Languages, Arts and Heritage Support Programme 2020/2021 has in place accountability measures to ensure value for money is achieved and oversight arrangements to provide assurance regarding delivery partners and all grant awards.

Conradh na Gaeilge is subject to the usual requirements for award of public funds, which are set out in a Letter of Offer and subject to regular review through engagement between DfC officials and Conradh's senior staff.

The Programme's policy framework is specific to supporting the sectors here.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister for Communities whether funding for any Housing Executive new builds will be subject to the same conditions as Housing Association Grant payments.
(AQW 10146/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: We are still in the early stages of looking at how to reform the Housing Executive to enable it to begin construction again. Funding conditions will be carefully considered in due course.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Communities for the community background figures in respect of (i) applicants; and (ii) those appointed in the recent Level 5 Housing Executive maintenance officer competition.
(AQW 10162/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Housing Executive has provided the following table detailing the community background of the applicants and successful candidates for the recent Maintenance Officer competition in its South Region.

2020 09 - Maintenance Officer, TL02, South Region

Advertised – 13 February 2020

	Community Background
	Protestant	Roman Catholic	Not Known	Total
Applicants	22	30	#	#
Successful	#	#	-	#

Please note that there is a protocol that information should not be disaggregated in circumstances where there are less than 10 in any particular group. This ensures that the identities of any individual cannot be inferred from the data provided. Where this information has not been provided, it is denoted by the # symbol.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Communities how, and with what effect, the contractual obligations in regard to fair employment are monitored in respect of Housing Executive contractors, H & C Mechanicals and CFS; and what are the community background figures for each.

Ms Ní Chuilín: All of the Housing Executive's contractors are legally obliged to comply with all employment legislation. All Housing Executive contracts issued contain clauses that remind the contractor of their obligations and that it is the contractor's responsibility to ensure compliance. The Housing Executive do not hold any details of the contractor's workforce.

Mr M Bradley asked the Minister for Communities to outline any planned schemes to help rejuvenate provincial towns, such as Coleraine, which have suffered economically from the COVID-19 restrictions.

Ms Hargey: My Department has developed a £17.6m COVID-19 Recovery Revitalisation Programme, which was launched at the end of July. In addition to the £10.6m provided by my Department, the fund has also received a contributions of £5m from DfI and £2m from DAERA.

The Programme has been designed to be flexible enough to allow councils to address the specific needs of each of their towns and cities. This has included measures such as the provision of hand sanitising stations, signage, town centre infrastructure, and the release of small business grants to allow retailers to adapt their premises to comply with social distancing requirements.

The funding is being paid to councils in two tranches, the first of which issued in August. Letters of Offer for the 2nd Tranche issued at the end of October, and payments to councils are currently being processed.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for Communities to detail the current funding levels allocated to independent advice services; and whether there are plans to review and increase this in light of the COVID-19 pandemic.

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department has allocated in the region of £6.4million in the current year, for the provision of independent community based advice services, including appeals and help with problem debt.

Furthermore, I have allocated just over £1million for the provision of free debt advice and financial wellbeing support for citizens. This additional funding which is being directed through regional and local delivery partners, will enable more people whose finances are impacted by COVID-19, to access the debt advice service. It will also support debt preventative and financial wellbeing measures.

During the current crisis the advice sector has been critical in assisting the most vulnerable in our communities.

I am committed to addressing both the root causes and the impacts of poverty and to protecting those most in need. Access to community based, independent advice services, is critical to meeting that commitment.

My Department has been coordinating a regional response to the COVID-19 crisis, involving a comprehensive package of measures to support those most impacted by the pandemic. To date, £4.7million has been allocated through Councils, enabling a significant community response to those in need relating to food, low income and connectedness.

My officials have worked closely with regional and local frontline advice organisations on a co-design, co-production approach to develop support mechanisms such as the COVID-19 Community Helpline, which refers people into community level supports.

The Community Helpline will continue to connect those most vulnerable people into local support services through our stakeholders in the Voluntary and Community Sector and I have allocated additional funding to support this.

I am dedicated to ensuring that people continue to receive the support that they need.

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Communities whether there are funding streams available within her Department for the restoration of war memorials.

(AQW 10193/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: There are no funding streams currently available within my Department for the restoration of war memorials. Many of these structures are protected as listed buildings and in past years support would have been available through schemes such as the Historic Environment Fund. It has not been possible to open the Fund to new applications in 2020/21 given the operational and financial challenges created by Covid-19.

However, you should note that the War Memorials Trust, an independent charity, administers a number of grant schemes for the repair and conservation of war memorials. My Department has supported this work by advertising it through social media and participating in awareness-raising seminars.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Communities, pursuant to AWQ 7617/17-22, whether provision could be made for Accessible Housing Register data to be made available to the offices of MLAs and Northern Ireland's MPs in the course of their work advising constituents making applications to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Ms Ní Chuilín: Due to the nature of this data and given it is a 'live' system, it is not possible to share AHR data with elected members and their staff. In addition, the AHR contains sensitive information that cannot be shared under GDPR.

I would recommend that staff across constituency offices liaise with the Housing Solutions team in the relevant Area Office for queries of this nature in order to ensure the most up to date position is being reported.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Communities what contact was made with Conradh na Gaeilge in relation to their ability to utilise COVID-19 support money in the three months prior to the announcement of £600,000 support money going to the body.

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Covid-19 Culture, Languages, Arts and Heritage Support Programme 2020/2021 has been informed by regular engagement with a range of cross-sectoral stakeholders and delivery partners, including Conradh na Gaeilge. This engagement included seeking assurances that delivery partners have the capacity to deliver at pace with effective grant accountability measures to ensure value for money and, that those delivery partners have existing grant making expertise and in-depth knowledge of their Sectoral needs.

Mr Muir asked the Minister for Communities whether there are any plans to mitigate the impact if the £20 a week uplift in Universal Credit and Working Tax Credit is ended in April 2021 as planned.

Ms Ní Chuilín: On 9 November I advised Executive Colleagues of my intention to join the Scottish and Welsh Administrations in issuing a joint Ministerial letter to Thérèse Coffey, Secretary of State for Work and Pensions for a new welfare strategy to ensure help is reaching those most in need given the financial pressures many households are likely to be experiencing as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic. This includes a request for the £20 weekly increase to Universal Credit and Working Tax Credit to be made permanent.

On 12 November the Scottish Government's Cabinet Secretary for Social Security and Older People, the Welsh Government's Deputy Minister for Housing and Local Government and I jointly sent a letter to Thérèse Coffey, Secretary of State for Work and Pensions and asked her to make the £20 uplift permanent, and to announce this without delay in order to avoid causing further anxiety.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister for Communities to detail the number of personal independence payment appeals currently in the system, broken down by constituency.

(AQW 10278/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department does not record information based on constituency. However, the following table details the number of Personal Independence Payment appeals pending per town as at 31 October 2020.

Town	Number of Personal Independence Payment Appeals Pending at 31 October 2020
Armagh	87
Ballymena	322
Ballymoney	96
Banbridge	114
Belfast	2,993
Coleraine	226
Cookstown	45
Craigavon	258
Downpatrick	295
Enniskillen	118
Limavady	46
Derry	245
Magherafelt	65

Town	Number of Personal Independence Payment Appeals Pending at 31 October 2020
Newry	314
Newtownards	368
Omagh	142
Strabane	84
Dungannon	140
Total	5,958

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister for Communities how many people in each constituency receive carers allowance; and how many of those carers are also in receipt of Universal Credit or legacy benefits.

(AQW 10286/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The table below shows the number of people who receive a Carers Allowance payment by constituency and who are also in receipt of Universal Credit or a legacy benefit. These figures are from the most recent published data as of May 2020.

Constituency	Carer's Allowance Recipients ¹	Also Claiming Universal Credit or a legacy benefit ²
Belfast East	2,150	1,200
Belfast North	3,960	2,660
Belfast South	1,820	1,080
Belfast West	4,660	3,400
East Antrim	1,990	930
East Derry	2,760	1,430
Fermanagh And South Tyrone	2,360	1,140
Foyle	3,880	2,440
Lagan Valley	1,890	890
Mid Ulster	2,910	1,360
Newry And Armagh	3,220	1,690
North Antrim	2,390	1,170
North Down	1,640	690
South Antrim	2,030	930
South Down	2,950	1,480
Strangford	2,090	940
Upper Bann	3,070	1,560
West Tyrone	2,920	1,580
Unknown ³	140	100
Total⁴	48,810	26,650

- 1 The Carers Allowance figures refer to people who receive a payment and does not include people who have what is known as an underlying entitlement to the benefit but do not receive a payment.
- 2 Legacy benefits included in the above are Jobseekers Allowance, Income Support, Employment and Support Allowance and Pension Credit.
- 3 In producing this analysis, individual records were attributed to a Parliamentary Constituency on the basis of their postcode. Not all records can be correctly allocated using this method, and some cannot be allocated at all.
- 4 Figures may not sum due to rounding.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Communities how many recipients of personal independence payment (i) were informed that their award had been extended to a point in 2021; and (ii) were then instructed to complete an award review by a date prior that point in 2021.

(AQW 10309/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Normally the PIP review process begins 6 months before the award ends when the review form is issued and there is no award extension arrangement in place. However, as an emergency response to the pandemic and in order to ensure the most vulnerable were financially protected, I suspended the issue of Award Review forms for a period of 4 months and extended any PIP awards that were due to expire during this period.

When the Award Review process was restarted in late July forms are now being issued 4 months later than the date they should have been originally issued. In addition, an individual's PIP award was extended for a further 9 months as an additional safeguard due to the uncertainty of Covid.

In these uncertain times it is important to allow the maximum time for the review to be completed without any risk of the existing PIP payment running out and at the same time preventing any knock on impacts on other benefits such as Carers Allowance and Disability Premiums.

The review process only begins when the form is returned and anyone who needs more time to complete the form, including seeking help to fill it in, will be given this if they contact the Department.

Since July 2020, 17,537 Personal Independence Payment Award Extension Letters have been issued, extending awards to various dates in 2021. Similar to the normal process, all of these people will be contacted to complete their Award Review form prior to their extended award ending, which is essential so that the review can be completed before the payment runs out.

The Award Extension Letter is intended to inform people of the current situation on their PIP award as the dates in their original award notification letter have changed.

Mr Butler asked the Minister for Communities what plans she has to treat Fixed Odds Betting Terminals (FOBTs) as gaming machines and make it an offence to operate FOBTs in bookmaking offices.

(AQW 10317/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Article 2 of the Betting, Gaming, Lotteries and Amusements (NI) Order 1985 defines a gaming machine as:

" any machine which—

- (a) is constructed or adapted for playing a game of chance by means of it; and
- (b) has a slot or other aperture for the insertion of money in the form of cash or tokens."

The 2015 Judgement by the Supreme Court (HMRC v Rank Group PLC) confirmed that Fixed Odds Betting Terminals (FOBTs) were covered by this definition.

On 2 November, I published the Outcome report from my Department's consultation into the future of gambling regulation. I will shortly seek the Executive's agreement to my proposed way forward.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister for Communities to detail the timescale for the transfer of land at Hope Street, Belfast, from the Northern Ireland Housing Executive to Radius Housing Association.

(AQW 10319/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The disposal process for the Hope Street site was approved by the Housing Executive Board at its December 2019 meeting with an expected transfer of the site in March 2020 subject to a number of contractual issues being resolved.

Unfortunately a number of legal issues have arisen in the course of the disposal. These are currently being pursued as a matter of urgency between the parties.

As a result the Housing Executive is not in the position to provide the timescales for the transfer at present.

Mr Harvey asked the Minister for Communities to detail the timescale for the recommencement of non-elite level contact sports.

(AQW 10353/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The current restrictions do not permit non-elite level contact sports. These restrictions came into effect on Friday, 16 October and are due to be in place until Thursday, 26 November at 23:59 hours.

The review of the ongoing restrictions are a matter for the Executive and will be cognisant of the medical and scientific advice available at that time.

Mr O'Toole asked the Minister for Communities whether cheerleading groups will be able to return to close contact stunting when the current COVID-19 restrictions are lifted.

Ms Ní Chuilín: The current regulations do not refer specifically to cheerleading but use a definition of “sporting event” which encompasses a gathering for the purpose of exercise, competitive sport, recreational sport or sport training, and dance of any type. The current regulations prohibit indoor group fitness, exercise and dance activity and outdoor activity that involves person-to-person contact.

Guidance on NIDirect is regularly updated to take account of any changes in regulations. Groups engaged in dance, exercise or sporting activity should check NIDirect and follow the up-to-date advice.

Cheerleading groups should check, in particular, for any guidance relating to the permissibility of “contact” before considering a return to close contact stunting.

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Communities to detail the routine evaluation process for the Caravan Act 2011.
(AQW 10377/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Responsibility for the Caravan Act 2011 is shared between the Department for Communities and the Department for Economy (DfE). The Department for Communities’ primary interest in this legislation is in relation to Part 1 of the Caravans Act 2011 and those people who live on a caravan/park site as their permanent residence. However Part 2 of the Caravans Act 2011 contains specific legislation controlling the arrangements between park owners and those renting caravan pitches for more than 28 days.

The primary aim of the legislation is to ensure clarity and transparency in the terms of the agreement allowing caravan owners to station caravans on holiday parks. Although the Act deals primarily with static caravan owners it also deals with touring caravans where the owner enters into an agreement entitling them to keep their caravan on a site for more than 28 days.

The Department for Communities is required by Section 4 of the Act to review Parts 1 and 2 of the Schedule every 5 years. The Act was last reviewed in 2016 and no changes were recommended.

These provisions will be reviewed again in 2021 and will take account of evidence collated since the last review. This will include findings from the Department for Economy on the holiday sector and correspondence with interested parties such as MLA’s, DfE, the Caravan and Camping Forum (CCFNI), National Caravan Council (NCC), site owners, residents, etc. Councils will also be asked to report on any referrals, court action and any prosecutions around illegal eviction or harassment.

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Communities to detail the process of making a change to legislation during the routine evaluation process within her Department.

Ms Ní Chuilín: The legislative response, if any, to a policy review or evaluation will depend on what is to be achieved. It may be necessary to use primary legislation or subordinate legislation. The Steps followed can be found on pages 28 -31 of the following link; <http://drupdocs.intranet.nigov.net/NICS/NICSPL/policy-making-guide-november-2016.PDF>

Mrs Barton asked the Minister for Communities whether there is support available for students who have signed a contract with private landlords at the end of August 2020, and, from mid-September, learned that they will have their lectures delivered by remote learning for the remainder of the academic year and would not be requiring the accommodation.

Ms Ní Chuilín: The obligation to fulfil a contract between individuals is legally binding and it is outside the powers of my Department to change this.

The Department published guidance for landlords and tenants back in April which advised tenants they should continue to pay rent and abide by all other terms of their tenancy agreement to the best of their ability. If the tenant’s ability to pay will be affected, it’s also important to have an early conversation with the landlord to discuss the issues and deal sympathetically with one another.

The main source of support for students facing financial hardship is the Department for Economy led Student Hardship Fund which is allocated to the local Higher Education Institutions (HEI) for distribution to students who can demonstrate genuine financial hardship. Each HEI is responsible for assessing student’s need and issuing support within the guidelines of the scheme.

Any students who may be experiencing financial hardship, should contact their Higher Education Institution to determine if they are eligible to receive support.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Communities to detail the total number of (i) claims; (ii) successful claims; and (iii) unsuccessful claims that have been made for the Discretionary Support Grant up to 13 November 2020.
(AQW 10413/17-22)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department processed 61,086 Discretionary Support applications in the period 01 April 20 to 31 October 20; of which 44,279 awards totalling £9.3 million were paid. A total of 14,625 were found to be ineligible and a further 2,182 awards did not progress to payment where the award offer was declined or contact could not be made with the applicant.

Mr G Kelly asked the Minister for Communities, in light of the house fire in a Housing Executive property in Ardoyne caused by a model of shower unit that was subject to a call-in in 2018, what assurances she can give that other Housing Executive tenants that there are not more of these defective shower units in other properties with the potential to put lives in danger.

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Housing Executive has made me aware of an incident with a bathroom shower unit in North Belfast. They attended and inspected the property on Monday following the incident.

Both the Housing Executive and I take the safety of tenants very seriously. They have immediately started investigating the cause of the fire and I have asked them to keep me updated. The manufacturer is also carrying out its own investigation. The findings of these investigations will determine the next steps.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Communities whether the 14,800 successful applications for Discretionary Support grants between 22 March 2020 and 31 October 2020 were all related to circumstances arising directly from the COVID-19 pandemic self-isolation requirements.

Ms Ní Chuilín: Yes, 14,800 successful applications awarded between 25 March and 31 October were in relation to Discretionary Support Self-Isolation grants.

Department of Education

Ms McLaughlin asked the Minister of Education (i) why the contract for Data Scientist to Support 2020 Grading for services to CCEA was awarded to PricewaterhouseCoopers without being tendered; (ii) what services PricewaterhouseCoopers provided; (iii) whether these included providing, amending or reviewing the algorithms on which CCEA grades were awarded; and (iv) for his assessment of the outcome of the contract.

(AQW 8611/17-22)

Mr Weir (The Minister of Education): I am advised that following an initial market review, PricewaterhouseCoopers (PWC) Northern Ireland were identified as the only supplier who could supply the Council for the Curriculum Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) with the specialist resources and appropriate technical skills basis and experience together with the capacity to deliver a service in the extremely limited timeframe required. PWC had already engaged in large data analysis projects from public information, including large data analytics. The approach was reviewed by colleagues in Construction & Procurement Delivery (CPD) which is part of the Department of Finance. CPD were content for the contract to be directly awarded.

Furthermore, PWC were provided with the CCEA developed methodologies. They then independently coded and implemented the methodologies. The results from their independent implementation were compared with CCEA's results at both testing and live implementation phases.

It was not part of the PWC contract to review methodology (the methodology was reviewed by a separate supplier and a peer review group). PWC's role was to independently code and build the models and create results based on the methodology provided by CCEA. This formed a major part of the quality assurance of the implementation of the CCEA models

Finally, CCEA has advised that all aspects of the contract were appropriately delivered.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) the number of digital devices given to children to date; and (ii) the number of devices anticipated to be given to children in the future, since the COVID-19 restrictions started.

Mr Weir: On 21 May 2020 I set out the criteria for the lending of digital devices, with priority given to disadvantaged and vulnerable pupils who are in year groups 12, 14, 7 and 4 in the 2020/21 academic year.

In addition to the devices being provided by schools, 11,664 devices were available through the scheme being managed by the EA. To date 9,995 devices have been requested and delivered to pupils in the priority groups.

The form to request devices remains open on the C2k exchange and the EA is continuing to process requests as a matter of urgency.

The need for further devices is being kept under review.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education whether he has considered a voucher scheme to help low income pupils procure a laptop for blended learning at a discount rate.

(AQW 9784/17-22)

Mr Weir: The current scheme for lending devices aims to ensure that resources are targeted where there is greatest need. The scheme provides an approach which ensures that devices can be procured and appropriately provisioned for safe use by learners, both in schools and at home, in an efficient and cost effective way.

Priority is being given to disadvantaged and vulnerable learners. In addition to the devices being provided by schools, 11,664 devices were available through the scheme being managed by the EA. To date 9,995 devices have been requested and delivered to pupils in the priority groups.

The form to request devices remains open on the C2k exchange and the EA is continuing to process requests as a matter of urgency.

The need for further devices is being kept under review.

Mr McHugh asked the Minister of Education what sites the Education Authority have identified as possible locations to build for youth service provision in Strabane.

Mr Weir: I am advised that, due to the current position on the assessment of possible sites for youth facilities in this area, the information relating to possible sites is commercially sensitive. The Education Authority could not therefore provide details on sites being considered at this time.

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) what happens to children who have not received their special needs assessment, as, without a statement, a place cannot be allocated at a special needs school; (ii) whether special needs schools with less pupils get sufficient funding; (iii) what effect this will have on mainstream schools that will have to provide a place for these children; and (iv) what additional funding will be provided to achieve one-to-one support.

Mr Weir: Under paragraph 4.11 of the Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs (SEN), a child without a statement may be placed in a special school for the immediate commencement of the statutory assessment procedure. Where the assessment procedure leads the Education Authority (EA) to conclude that a statement is not warranted, the EA should take immediate steps, in consultation with the parents, to secure a more appropriate placement for the child.

Funding is allocated to special schools from within the EA's block grant allocation. In addition, a budget is delegated to the Board of Governors of special schools under Article 60 of the 1998 Education (Northern Ireland) Order to meet other costs, e.g. heating, lighting, cleaning, and it is the responsibility of the Board of Governors and the Principal of the school to manage this allocation on a day-to-day basis.

The Article 60 budget is determined on an annual basis and currently includes two elements: (i) non controllable costs and (ii) an amount per pupil. The Article 60 budget is uplifted in line with inflation on an annual basis and the same monetary value is awarded to each pupil enrolled; to this end, all special schools, regardless of size, are funded on the same basis.

Additional provision was set up by the EA in 2020/21 to meet provision for unplaced children with SEN. 17 Interim Specialist Resource Provisions were set up, based on negotiation with Principals, to meet the needs of children. It was the schools who decided whether they would set up the interim provision or not.

For each Interim Specialist Resource Provisions, staffing is as follows:

- 1 teacher and 1 classroom assistant assigned for 4 children;
- 1 teacher and 2 classroom assistants assigned for 8 children.

Funding for Interim Specialist Resource Provisions staffing was provided from the classroom assistant budget (as each unplaced child was entitled to either 25/35 hours) plus £3,000 for administration.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education, given the importance of health and wellbeing and the all-round benefits of physical education; (i) for his assessment of whether current initial teacher training, particularly at primary school level, emphasises this enough and provides trainee teachers with the knowledge base and skill set needed to promote it; (ii) whether the building handbook provides enough indoor and outdoor space both indoor to promote good physical activity; and (iii) for his assessment of the provisions of the building handbook for the future promotion of health and wellbeing in post-primary schools.

Mr Weir: The Northern Ireland Physical Education (PE) curriculum includes opportunities for pupils to develop knowledge, understanding and skills in athletics, dance, games, gymnastics, swimming and outdoor education – these opportunities help pupils to (in addition to other benefits) sustain a healthy and active lifestyle. Within Initial Teacher Education (ITE), and in particular in primary programmes, pupil health and wellbeing is at the core of their learning, and PE already forms an important element of this.

The DE-Northern Ireland School Buildings Handbook Schedule of Accommodation provision provides consistent, physical education accommodation, tailored to the detailed requirements of the curriculum and in line with the guidance provided by Sport NI. However, the Buildings Handbook is currently under review and we continue to aspire to provide the best quality PE, sports and recreation facilities for our schools, supporting the health and wellbeing of all pupils.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education whether the Emotional Health and Wellbeing in Education Framework, when agreed, will be accompanied by (i) changes to the curriculum at pre-school, primary and post-primary levels; (ii) changes to the professional evaluation of teachers, as recommended by Queen's University in 2011; and (iii) changes, in partnership with the Department for the Economy, to initial teacher education training to provide training in emotional health and wellbeing support.

Mr Weir: The Emotional Health and Wellbeing in Education Framework, when published, will be accompanied by an implementation plan, the initial focus of which will be on building effective integrated working between education and health. I fully recognise there are many other areas to be addressed and these will be considered for inclusion in subsequent plans.

I would however like to update you on the position in relation to emotional health and wellbeing within the areas you have highlighted:

- The Curricular Guidance for Pre-School Education includes 'Personal, Social and Emotional Development' as one of the six pre-school areas of learning. Through this, pre-school practitioners are encouraged to help children establish positive relationships, build confidence and self-esteem, problem-solve, talk about their feelings and respect others.
- Mental health awareness, including the management of feelings and emotions, must be covered under Personal Development and Mutual Understanding (PDMU) in primary school and Learning for Life and Work (LLW) in post-primary level. The flexibility of the curriculum provides teachers the opportunity to adapt their teaching to reflect the Emotional Health and Wellbeing Framework.
- The Initial Teacher Education (ITE) providers already include emotional health and wellbeing in a number of ITE modules and review their programmes every year to take into account any significant changes to the educational landscape, which will include the Wellbeing Framework once published, to continue to ensure student teachers receive appropriate development in this important area.

Ms Mullan asked the Minister of Education what measures his Department is taking to increase the supply of available substitute teachers, specifically in the Irish medium sector, during the COVID-19 pandemic.

Mr Weir: The member asked the same question last month (AQW 8708/17-22 refers). The Northern Ireland Substitute Teacher Register (NISTR) remains the mechanism by which all schools, including those in the Irish Medium and Special Schools sectors, should engage substitute teachers. There are 9,302 teachers currently registered on NISTR (November 2020), including over 500 newly qualified teachers who have been added to the register in the past few months to increase the available pool of substitute teachers.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister of Education whether he will bring forward an initiative to raise awareness and educate young people about domestic violence and the importance of respect in relationships.

Mr Weir: I can confirm that these issues are already covered within the Northern Ireland Curriculum under Relationship and Sexuality Education (RSE). Over the last number of years my Department has provided earmarked funding to the Council for Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) to support the production of RSE resources and guidance materials, particularly on a range of sensitive topics including domestic violence and healthy relationships.

In June 2019, CCEA launched its online RSE Hub to facilitate access to these resources. This approach enhances the teaching of RSE by providing teachers with resources and support to increase their competence and confidence in this area. I provided further funding in 2020/21 to enable additional resources to be developed and added to the Hub.

It is of course a matter for schools to decide which, if any, of these resources they use to inform the development and delivery of an RSE programme.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education whether his Department has any plans to expand the definition of vulnerable children to include (i) children who are waiting to be allocated a social worker due to delays caused by the pandemic; (ii) children and young people living in poverty; (iii) children and young people currently in hospital; (iv) young people currently in Woodlands Juvenile Justice Centre; and (v) children and young people who are currently at home while their peers are currently at school.

Mr Weir: The Department of Health has led on the development of a draft cross-departmental Covid-19 Vulnerable Children and Young People's Plan in collaboration with my Department, the Department for Communities, the Department for the Economy and the Department of Justice.

The public consultation on the plan, which ran from 18 September to 13 November 2020, asked consultees if they agree how the Plan has defined vulnerable children and young people and responses will help to inform the definition of vulnerable children within the final plan.

Ms Mullan asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of children and young people waiting on a referral to a speech and language therapist.

Mr Weir: Speech and language therapy, and the referrals thereto, are matters for the Department of Health; and neither the Department of Education nor the Education Authority hold this information.

Ms Mullan asked the Minister of Education for an update in relation to a review carried out by the Education Authority into speech and language units in 2017/18.

(AQW 10346/17-22)

Mr Weir: The Education Authority (EA) did not carry out any review of speech and language units in 2017-2018 rather an internal scoping exercise of speech and language provision across the EA at that time to inform planning. The learning from the exercise is currently being used and will continue to be used in the future to inform both placement arrangements and Area Planning.

Ms Mullan asked the Minister of Education whether additional support, including the use of talking therapies, to address the adverse impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the mental health and wellbeing of children and young people, will also include access to additional language and communication support where appropriate.

Mr Weir: My Department is working collaboratively with the Department of Health, the Public Health Agency, the Health and Social Care Board, the Education Authority (EA) and other Government Departments to develop a Framework for Children & Young People's Emotional Health and Wellbeing in Education. This is progressing well and we are working to complete the Framework by December 2020.

£5m has been made available by DE to enable the implementation of this Framework in 2020/21, and subsequent years. Minister Swann has agreed to provide an additional £1.5m from 2021/22 onwards. A range of proposals are currently being considered – all of which have a focus on promotion, prevention and early intervention, through which Education, Health and Community services can work together in an integrated way. Some of these proposals will include access to additional language and communication support which will help address the adverse impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the mental health and wellbeing of children and young people.

In addition I recently launched the Wellbeing Restart Fund providing £5m in 2020/21 direct to all schools (nursery, primary, post primary, special), as well as EOTAS and Youth Settings to help address Wellbeing pressures arising as a result of Covid-19. By receiving their own allocation, settings will benefit from having the flexibility to use the money to provide health and wellbeing support for their pupils and/or staff.

EA has also provided a range of relevant wellbeing resources for young people on the Education Restart pages of its website: <https://www.eani.org.uk/information-for-children-and-young-people>. These resources are also available to schools via an online portal specifically designed for schools.

Miss Woods asked the Minister of Education (i) what infrastructure would be required to ensure that children could safely travel to school by (a) car; (b) public transport; (c) school transport; (d) foot; and (e) bicycle if Bangor Central Integrated Primary School was to move to a new location at Balloo Road, Bangor; and (ii) in the absence of any infrastructure plans or investment, to detail how safe routes to school for pupils would otherwise be facilitated in the event of the proposed relocation.

Mr Weir: In July 2020 the Education Authority appointed an Integrated Consultant Team (ICT) to undertake the design of the new facilities for Bangor Central Integrated Primary School. The project is now in the early stages of the design process.

As with any major capital development project, the ICT will be required to submit a Planning Application to the relevant Council Planning Office (in this case Ards and North Down Borough Council). Any alterations to existing infrastructure will be identified through this planning process, which will involve consultation with a number of statutory consultees, including Transport NI.

The ICT will capture all relevant data required throughout the process and will ensure that the scheme will comply with the subsequent requirements of the Planners.

Miss Woods asked the Minister of Education (i) to detail the current arrangements for recipients of free school meals if they are required to self-isolate or learn remotely; (ii) whether free school meal packs are being made available; and (iii) what arrangements are in place to have food delivered.

(AQW 10356/17-22)

Mr Weir: The Department has made a number of Temporary Modification Notices (Notice 15 is the most recent) to the Coronavirus Act 2020 which require controlled, maintained and special schools to provide food to those pupils entitled to Free School Meals (FSM) who are unable to attend school for a period of 10 days or more due to Covid-19. This relates to a small number of children who are:

- Diagnosed with a medical condition or illness and who-

- 1 despite their absence from school, are registered by the school as being in attendance on the basis of medical advice that owing to their medical condition or illness it is medically unsafe to be in attendance at school; and
- 2 can demonstrate evidence that they are being educated, or otherwise engaging in learning, whilst not in attendance at school; or
 - self-isolating as a consequence of their own positive test for coronavirus disease; or
 - self-isolating as a consequence of a positive test for coronavirus disease of a member of their household and who are engaging in distance learning; or
 - required by the school, on the advice of the Public Health Agency, not to attend school and who are engaging in distance learning.

The EA school meals catering service will make food provision, by way of a food parcel to the value of a FSM for the required number of days for collection or delivery, in respect of pupils entitled to FSM who fall into the above categories in controlled, maintained and special schools. The food parcels can be collected by the parent, delivered to the pupil's home by a member of the teaching staff as part of pastoral care or delivered by taxi arranged by catering staff.

Individual Voluntary Grammar and Grant-Maintained Integrated schools are responsible for making food provision for pupils entitled to FSM who fall into the above categories in their school.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to answer AQW 9998/17-22, (i) whether the Strategic Insight Lab will take input from families and in particular women who are most economically impacted by the provision or lack of provision of childcare; and (ii) how he will ensure that women's voices will be an integral part of the development of the childcare strategy.

Mr Weir: The Strategic Insight Lab will include input from a number of key stakeholders, including those who represent women and families.

The Insight Lab will provide an opportunity to review the assumptions and actions within the Childcare Strategy, including the commitment to an Early Education and Childcare Offer as referenced in 'New Decade New Approach', and to help inform the development of a roadmap for the way ahead for the Childcare Strategy.

- School Guidance Counsellor

Mrs Barton asked the Minister of Education whether all post-primary pupils have access to a school guidance counsellor at least one day a week.

(AQW 10400/17-22)

Mr Weir: School Counselling is available for all post primary pupils through the Independent Counselling Service for Schools (ICSS) and is allocated according to the pupil enrolment number as follows:

Pupil Enrolment Numbers	Days Per Week	Counselling Sessions per week	'Drop Ins' per week (1 Hour)
1-499	½	3	1
500-999	1	5	1
1000-1499	1.5	8	1
1500+	2	10	1

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the Curriculum Sports Programme survey finding that approximately 26 per cent of girls look forward to physical education.

(AQW 10409/17-22)

Mr Weir: I will want to take time to consider the overall findings of the evaluation, once it has been concluded, and an important consideration will be the difference between the proportion of girls reporting that they look forward to Physical Education (PE) in school, in comparison to boys.

When the Sports Programme was refreshed in 2019/20, the Department placed emphasis on promoting female participation in PE.

Clearly there is more to be done to understand and address the issues raised by the findings in this interim survey.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education whether the Elephant in the Room Youth Mental Health recommendations, including; (i) a youth led mental health campaign; (ii) a mental health dictionary; (iii) a youth mental health website with a 24/7 chat support function; and (iv) explicit reference to mental health in the statutory curriculum are included in the Department of Education Youth Emotional Health and Wellbeing Framework.

Mr Weir: An initial implementation plan has been developed and is based on priorities identified by my Department and its partners in the Emotional Health and Wellbeing in Education Framework.

As you will appreciate, effective integrated working between education and health in particular, is central to the successful implementation of the three tier model. My officials recognise this in itself represents a significant challenge and it has therefore been the initial focus for implementation.

My officials also acknowledge there are many other areas to be addressed, including the Elephant in the Room recommendations, and these will be considered in subsequent Framework implementation plans.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education for an update on the Education and Training Inspectorate review of physical education in schools.

Mr Weir: The Education and Training Inspectorate is not conducting a review of Physical Education provision in schools and therefore no update is available.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education to detail the rationale for his Ministerial Direction on the Strule Shared Education Campus, Omagh.

Mr Weir: The procurement competition for the next phase of construction of the Strule Campus, which is to build five post primary schools and shared facilities, has been delayed as a result of tendering issues and the need for re-approval of the business case.

There are unique challenges inherent in constructing a shared campus comprising multiple schools, which has raised issues not previously seen when constructing standalone schools. This is particularly the case, given the need to repurpose a former military site, which has associated costs not normally part of standard school build projects. Hence, in cost and benefit terms there are no references against which the campus can accurately be compared.

The Strule Campus is the first large scale shared campus of its kind and therefore, given the absence of a comparable benchmark, the latest, second addendum to the SSEC Programme Business Case, completed in 2019, could not be approved on a purely Value for Money (VfM) basis. This has necessitated me to consider issuing a Ministerial direction.

It is important to note that, although VfM for the project could not be demonstrated due to the lack of a comparable benchmark, it does not mean that value for money cannot be achieved.

Following consideration of the issues, I believe that it is in the public interest to proceed with the SSEC Programme given its educational, social and economic benefits and I have indicated my intention to issue a Ministerial direction to advance to the next stage of the Programme.

This is subject to receiving clarity on the arrangements for the release of Fresh Start Agreement funding and engagement is continuing with HM Treasury in that regard.

I remain fully committed to delivering this educationally and strategically significant Programme and my officials and I have been working diligently to progress to the next stage in the procurement process.

The Executive has also recently reaffirmed its commitment to the Strule Programme.

Mr McGrath asked the Minister of Education whether students who are unable to attend school, either (i) due to a positive diagnosis of COVID-19; or (ii) are self-isolating due to being in a classroom bubble, will still receive Education Maintenance Allowance payments.

Mr Weir: Education Maintenance Allowance (EMA) weekly payments are dependent on full attendance at school and are not paid during school holidays or unauthorised pupil absences.

Each school should have an EMA authorised absence policy that is clear and reasonable. It should be in line with both the NI EMA Guidance Notes for Learning Centres and the schools own general attendance and absence policy. The same rules should apply uniformly across all students, regardless of whether they are in receipt of EMA or not.

The Department's Circular 2020/08 'Attendance Guidance & Absence Recording By Schools' gives guidance to schools on the use of Code 8 - Intensive Support Learning Unit / Self-Isolating due to Covid-19 should a pupil be unable to attend school due to a positive diagnosis of COVID-19 or is self-isolating due to being in a classroom bubble. Code 8 is considered an Approved Educational Activity. This means that the pupil's attendance is not affected. Use of code 8 is contingent on sufficient evidence being provided in terms of medical evidence and in respect of learning otherwise the school must record the absence as unauthorised. It is a matter for schools to decide if a pupil has met the requirement for full attendance in any given week to qualify for an EMA payment.

Mr Muir asked the Minister of Education to detail mitigations put in place to assist pupils unable to sit November 2020 examinations due to self-isolation as a result of close contact with a person receiving a COVID-19 positive test result.

Mr Weir: Pupils unable to sit the GCSE exams in the November 2020 examination series will be able to sit these exams in either the March or summer 2021 examination series.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education why there is no special school or special educational needs appointee on the Education Authority Board.
(AQW 10523/17-22)

Mr Weir: The membership of the Education Authority (EA) Board is provided for by the Education Act (Northern Ireland) 2014. During the passage of the Education Bill in 2014, the Assembly agreed that, in addition to a Chair appointed by the Minister, the Bill should provide for a membership of 20 on the Board of the EA. The Assembly agreed that the membership would comprise eight political members nominated by the parties based on their respective strengths in the Assembly; and members appointed after consultation with representative interests, namely four Transferor and four Trustee members, one integrated, one Irish medium, one voluntary grammar and one controlled grammar representative.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) what plans he has for improving sex education in schools; (ii) how sex education in schools would be done; (iii) his assessment on the benefits of improving sex education in schools; and (iv) what discussions he has had with the Minister of Health to improve sex education in schools.

Mr Weir: The delivery of appropriate and informed teaching in Relationship and Sexuality Education (RSE) is a priority area of work for my Department. Over the last number of years my Department has provided earmarked funding to the Council for Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) to support the production of RSE resources and guidance materials. In June 2019 CCEA launched its online RSE Hub to facilitate access to these resources.

This year my Department provided additional funding to CCEA to enable further resources and guidance materials to be developed. This approach provides teachers with the appropriate resources and support to increase their competence and confidence in teaching this area of the curriculum. Providing quality teaching, supported by age appropriate information and guidance material for all children and young people will enable them to make informed decisions, and develop healthy and supportive relationships.

The statutory curriculum for Personal Development and Mutual Understanding (PDMU) at primary level and the Personal Development strand of Learning for Life and Work at post primary level, includes high level prescribed content for RSE at each Key Stage. This is a minimum entitlement that all children must legally receive. Schools and teachers have the flexibility to decide the topics and approaches that best suit the needs pupils and it is a matter for schools to decide which, if any, of these resources they use to inform the development and delivery of an RSE programme.

I have not had any meetings with the Minister for Health on the content of the RSE curriculum; however, in developing resources for the RSE Hub, CCEA has actively engaged with a wide range of professionals, including colleagues in the Department of Health.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education whether more timely and advanced notice of new COVID-19-related school guidance can be issued to school principals.

Mr Weir: I acknowledge the importance of ensuring that school principals have clear information and up to date guidance in relation to operating in the COVID-19 context.

My Department continues to work closely with the Education Authority, the Department of Health and the Public Health Agency during the ongoing pandemic. Guidance for Schools and Educational settings is constantly under review and will be updated as needed and driven by health advice provided by the Chief Medical Officer and Chief Scientific Adviser.

Due to the rapid nature of the developing situation in relation to the impact the COVID-19 pandemic is having on the education sector it is not always possible to provide school principals with advanced notice of new guidance being issued.

Departmental officials will ensure that any revised guidance or information is clearly communicated in a timely manner to school principals.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education when schools will be reimbursed for COVID-19-related expenditure and pay settlement arrears.
(AQW 10605/17-22)

Mr Weir: To help support schools address many of the new pressures arising as a result of COVID-19, I announced significant funding to help support the safe reopening of schools.

Schools have been advised of individual allocations to date and these can be viewed on the Education Authority's website. The detail will continue to be updated as further allocations to schools are made. All of these allocations are to assist schools in mitigating the additional costs due to COVID-19, apart from teacher substitution costs. A fund for teacher substitution costs to support existing staff absences specifically as a result of COVID-19 is being centrally managed by the Education Authority, and initial allocations will be made to schools in January based on verified costs to date.

While my Department has been successful in securing additional funding to tackle COVID-19 to date, there is no guarantee of further additional funding. It is for this reason that schools have been advised to exercise spending restraint in line with their current funding allocations. Notwithstanding this, the Education Authority continues to monitor schools' funding requirements as the pandemic progresses in order to inform potential future Departmental bids for additional resources as required.

The funding for schools to mitigate the cost of the arrears for the teachers' pay award is due to issue to schools in the coming weeks.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education for an update on the review of the Common Funding Scheme.
(AQW 10606/17-22)

Mr Weir: In March 2020, at the outset of lockdown, the Education Transformation Programme, including the Review of the Common Funding Scheme (RCFS) Project, was suspended to allow staffing resources to be redeployed to business critical activity linked to COVID management and response. The RCFS Project continues to be suspended.

I am currently considering timings of restarting the RCFS Project and when it might report.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Education whether schools are taking health and safety advice from a private, unregulated body rather than from the Department of Education, Public Health Agency or Department of Health.
(AQW 10669/17-22)

Mr Weir: The Department issued Coronavirus (COVID-19): Guidance for School and Educational Settings on 29 September 2020.

The guidance was informed by advice provided by the Chief Medical Officer and Chief Scientific Advisor and the Scientific Advisory Group for Emergencies (SAGE) based on the scientific and public health advice available at the time of writing.

The Department is not aware of schools taking health and safety advice from a private, unregulated body. Schools are free to consider all sources of advice. Guidance provided by the Department is non-statutory but is viewed as best practice as it is based on Public Health Agency and Department of Health advice.

The Department continues to work closely with the Education Authority, the Department of Health and the Public Health Agency during the ongoing pandemic. Guidance is constantly under review and will be updated as needed and driven by health advice provided by Chief Medical Officer and Chief Scientific Advisor.

The Education Authority has Education Link Officers who regularly engage with schools to support them as they implement DE guidance in many areas.

Ms Armstrong asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 9997/17-22, to detail (i) where the recruitment for the independent panel is published and being promoted; (ii) how many people will be on the panel; and (iii) whether all members will be independent of government and government departments.
(AQW 10682/17-22)

Mr Weir:

- i) The appointment process for the independent has not yet commenced and will not do so until the Terms of Reference is agreed by the Executive. When the appointment process begins publicity will be designed to ensure a wide range and diverse audience is made aware of the opportunity and encouraged to apply.
- ii) It is my expectation that the Panel will include a Chairperson, a Vice-Chairperson and three Members, so five in total. However, this is to be confirmed.
- iii) It is not appropriate to pre-judge the selection process. Work is underway to develop a suitable approach to appoint the panel.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Education, when the Extended Schools Programme is revamped in the near future; (i) whether overall funding levels will remain the same; (ii) whether additional resources will be provided; and (iii) whether the eligibility criteria for entry to the programme will remain the same.

Mr Weir: The Extended Schools programme has been a key vehicle through which my Department has sought to address educational disadvantage for the past 14 years, enabling eligible schools to provide targeted services before, during and after the school day.

I intend to consult in due course on proposals to introduce a replacement Partners in Education programme. This programme will seek to act on feedback from schools, build on the most successful elements of the Extended Schools programme, and promote the value of collaboration. The timing of the consultation will take into account the evolving Covid-19 situation. The eligibility criteria of any such programme will be dependent on the funding available and subject to the outcome of the consultation process. No funding decisions have yet been taken about future years.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education (i) under what circumstances may a student who has been advised to self-isolate by their school be able to sit their scheduled exam in November, if it falls within the period of self-isolation; (ii) whether, for example, a recent negative COVID-19 test, accompanied by segregation and the use of personal protective equipment, would suffice; and (iii) whether such a student may choose to be awarded either a centre assessed grade based on their recent mock exam or an overall teacher assessed grade instead of taking a scheduled re-sit.

Mr Weir: The Department published Public Health Guidance to Support Public Examinations on 19 November 2020.

This guidance sets out arrangements that schools, education settings and other examination centres should implement when delivering public examinations during November 2020 and the rest of the 2020/21 academic year, enabling them to progress in a way which significantly reduces the risk of coronavirus (COVID-19) transmission.

Schools, education settings and other exam centres must follow the public health advice in the Coronavirus (Covid-19) guidance for schools and educational settings in Northern Ireland (published 29 September 2020) and more general guidance published by the Public Health Agency.

- (i) and (ii) Current Public Health Advice in respect of these questions is the student must self-isolate. Students cannot take examinations during their period of isolation. In these cases CCEA will provide advice directly on contingency arrangements.
- (iii) Centre Assessment Grades cannot be utilised in place of public examination outcomes in the CCEA November 2020 series of examinations.

Mr Allen asked the Minister of Education what steps his Department is taking to identify any adverse educational impact on pupils as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic.

Mr Weir: I am confident that school leaders and teachers, using their knowledge, professional expertise and inherent understanding of the children in their school community, are best placed to identify and support those pupils who are experiencing difficulties in engaging with learning as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic.

Using normal formative assessment approaches within the classroom, schools have been working to understand where pupils are in regard to their learning after the period of remote education. The emphasis has been on ensuring children have good emotional health and wellbeing, are engaged and motivated to learn and have the tools and skills they require for learning.

This approach helps pupils feel confident and secure in what they already know whilst ascertaining individual pupil learning needs.

My Department's Engage Programme is providing funding for child centred one to one, small group or team teaching support to those pupils identified by schools as most benefiting from additional support to re-engage with learning

In the Spring, once pupils have been back in school for a sustained period of time, we may as a system need to take stock to more accurately ascertain how much the COVID-19 interruption has affected learning. I will be liaising in the coming months with my professional advisors in CCEA to consider options around this.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Education to detail any plans to review the common funding formula for schools.

Mr Weir: In March 2020, at the outset of lockdown, the Education Transformation Programme, including the Review of the Common Funding Scheme (RCFS) Project, was suspended to allow staffing resources to be redeployed to business critical activity linked to COVID management and response. The RCFS Project continues to be suspended.

I am currently considering timings of restarting the RCFS Project and when it might report.

Ms Dillon asked the Minister of Education whether his Department has initiated a review of the criteria for the funding for new school builds.

(AQO 1176/17-22)

Mr Weir: It is my intention to make a major capital works call in 2021 and planning and preparation for that call will commence in the near future.

The preparation will include the consideration of the Protocol which will be used to assess applications.

Ms S Bradley asked the Minister of Education, given the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic, whether he will suspend school area planning indefinitely.

(AQO 1179/17-22)

Mr Weir: All area planning activity, with the exception of activity relating to special education provision, was suspended from 3 April 2020 and resources deployed within the Department and planning authorities to respond to the immediate COVID 19 emergency and then subsequently to plan for the reopening of schools.

I chaired a meeting of the Area Planning Steering Group on 21 October 2020 at which the decision was taken, formally, to restart area planning.

Area planning is key to delivering a network of viable and sustainable schools that are of the right type, the right size, located in the right place and which have a focus on raising standards.

The resumption of area planning is the right thing to do as we build on the actions we have taken to reopen our schools and address the disruptions caused by the COVID 19 virus to the education of our children and young people.

It is therefore not my intention to introduce any further suspension of the area planning process.

Mr K Buchanan asked the Minister of Education in light of the Centenary in 2021, whether any funding will be available specifically for the teaching of the history of Northern Ireland.

(AQO 1180/17-22)

Mr Weir: In light of the centenary in 2021, my Department is allocating funding of £30,000 to develop curricular resources on the teaching of the history of Northern Ireland. This project will build on materials currently available and will develop bespoke, high quality curricular resources

I believe the centenary will provide interesting and stimulating opportunities for young people to engage with difficult and complex historical issues.

This project will provide resources to support an enquiry based, multi-perspective teaching of history in a divided society. The aim is to encourage young people's development of both critical analysis and empathetic understanding.

Given the current context, the resources will be designed so that they are suitable for use in a remote learning context, with an emphasis on using digital media to support pupil engagement.

Mr T Buchanan asked the Minister of Education to outline the progress made on the development of the Strule Shared Education Campus, Omagh.

(AQO 1181/17-22)

Mr Weir: I remain fully committed to delivering this educationally and strategically significant Programme.

My officials and I have been working diligently to progress the Strule Shared Education Campus to the next stage in the procurement process. However, the Covid-19 pandemic has touched all aspects of business resulting in the projected go live date being revised. Provisional opening of the Campus remains planned for September 2025.

I believe it is in the public interest to proceed with the Programme given its educational, social and economic benefits. The Executive has also recently reaffirmed its commitment to the Strule Programme.

Engagement is continuing with HM Treasury regarding the arrangements for the release of Fresh Start Agreement funding for the Programme through to completion.

The Department continues to work closely with the six school principals and their teams to build on the culture of sharing in Omagh, albeit within a challenging environment as schools continue to recover and adapt to ongoing disruption due to the Covid-19 pandemic.

Work on the Programme has continued and the site preparation works are now complete, in preparation for moving to the next stage of construction.

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Education to outline the number of pupils expelled from schools in East Belfast in each year since 2017.

(AQO 1182/17-22)

Mr Weir: My Department publishes information on the number of pupils expelled in Northern Ireland on the Departmental website annually.

While more detailed information is held on the number of pupils expelled, the Department does not publish the numbers of pupils expelled in local areas, such as East Belfast, as this would risk breaching confidentiality at pupil or school level.

In Northern Ireland the number of statutory school aged pupils expelled was 33, 15 and 30 in each of the school years 2016/17, 2017/18 and 2018/19.

Overall these figures show that it is extremely rare for a pupil to be expelled from school in Northern Ireland. This is also the case in the other UK countries and the Republic of Ireland.

In Northern Ireland the rate at which pupils are expelled from school per 1,000 is approximately 0.1. The equivalent rate is approximately 1 in England, approximately 0.2 in both the Republic of Ireland and Wales, and approximately 0.003 in Scotland.

Ms Ennis asked the Minister of Education to outline a timeframe for the proposed independent review of education provision included in New Decade, New Approach.

(AQO 1183/17-22)

Mr Weir: In March, I temporarily suspended work on the Independent Review so that staff could be redeployed to deal with urgent Covid 19 related matters. I have, however, recently asked for planning work to be recommenced. As a result, in the coming weeks, I will table a draft Terms of Reference for the Independent Review at the Executive for consideration and comment.

The Review itself will commence in 2021, once an open recruitment process has been undertaken to establish an appropriate Panel. I intend to ask the Panel to report within 15 months of taking up post, with an interim report to be prepared within 9 months.

Mr Sheehan asked the Minister of Education, in the context of the current COVID-19 pandemic, to outline any engagement he has had with representatives of the Irish medium education sector regarding curriculum and exam specifications.

Mr Weir: I visited Coláiste Feirste on 3 September where I discussed curriculum and qualifications, among other issues, with the principal and staff. All students in the Irish medium sector will be able to avail of the same opportunities and adaptations as those students taking exams in English.

Mr McCann asked the Minister of Education to outline the current provisions for the teaching of anti-racism in schools.

Mr Weir: The curriculum provides a wide range of opportunities for the teaching of anti-racism in schools.

At primary school level, Personal Development and Mutual Understanding explores topics such as responsibility for self and others; human rights and social responsibility; causes of conflict and appropriate responses; valuing and celebrating cultural difference and diversity; similarities and differences between people; respect for others; and living as members of the community. At post-primary level, Learning for Life and Work covers concepts such as diversity and inclusion and human rights and social responsibility.

There are also opportunities to explore the issue of racism in other curricular contexts.

The flexibility of the curriculum means that schools and teachers can choose to teach topics, such as racism, at a time when they are the subject of debate, thus enabling young people to make explicit connections between what they are learning in school and what is happening in the wider world. The Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment makes a range of resources available across all Key Stages to support teaching of anti-racism.

Department of Finance

Ms McLaughlin asked the Minister of Finance whether she intends to review Northern Ireland legislation related to libel.

(AQW 10126/17-22)

Mr Murphy (The Minister of Finance): Work to review defamation law in this jurisdiction recommenced in February and has included officials from my department liaising with their colleagues in Dublin where defamation law is also currently under review. As insufficient time remains under the present Assembly mandate to amend the existing legislation here, I expect that the work now being undertaken in my department will inform legislative change under the next mandate.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister of Finance whether he has any plans to release a Supplier Relief Grant (PGN 03 / 20) following on from the two previous payments earlier this year.

Mr Murphy: In March the Executive agreed to provide relief measures to support government contractors to protect critical services and ensure that they can resume service delivery when required.

In June, the Executive agreed to extend the period of support to 31 October on the basis that Departments would work in partnership with suppliers to plan an exit from any relief and transition where possible to a new, sustainable, operating model as soon as possible.

There are no plans to extend this support beyond 31 October 2020 but I will continue to monitor the impact of COVID on government suppliers. The British Government and the Scottish and Welsh Administrations provided suppliers with similar support measures. These measures also ended on 31 October 2020.

Mr Muir asked the Minister of Finance what steps have been taken to ensure that civil servants are recording ministerial meetings as outlined in New Decade, New Approach.

Mr Murphy: The primary responsibility for ensuring the recording of ministerial meetings lies with the Private Secretaries and the Permanent Secretaries. The role of the Private Secretary is set out in new Private Office Guidance, issued to all Departments on 09 January 2020. The operation of this guidance has been the subject of two meetings of Private Office Staff and their line management.

A revised NICS Code of Ethics is in preparation. This will include the requirement that civil servants will keep accurate official records, including minutes of ministerial meetings, and handle information as openly and transparently as possible within the legal framework. The Code of Ethics, which is an integral part of the terms and conditions of employment for all civil servants, will be finalised and published shortly.

Mr T Buchanan asked the Minister of Finance how many people have died from (i) cancer; (ii) stroke; (iii) heart problems; (iv) dementia; and (v) suicide in each month of (a) 2017; (b) 2018; and (c) 2019.

Mr Murphy: NISRA publish detailed annual statistics on causes of death. The annual reports and associated tables are available on the NISRA website at <https://www.nisra.gov.uk/statistics/registrar-general-annual-report/registrar-general-historical-reports>.

A monthly breakdown of these statistics is provided in Annex 1 below. Deaths from Dementia in 2019 are due to be released for the first time as part of the Annual Report of the Registrar General, 2019 and as such are not available at this time. The report is scheduled for release in December 2020.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance how many deaths from cancer have occurred in each week in 2020.
(AQW 10228/17-22)

Mr Murphy: The information requested is presented in the Annex below. NISRA publish quarterly statistics on deaths by cause and these are available on the NISRA website at <https://www.nisra.gov.uk/statistics/registrar-general-quarterly-report/registrar-general-quarterly-tables>.

Mr Middleton asked the Minister of Finance whether his Department is considering extending rates relief for businesses beyond April 2021.

Mr Murphy: I very much understand the need to bring certainty to businesses at the earliest opportunity for the next rating year. As I said in my statement to the Assembly on 23 November 2020, I am therefore setting aside £150m for this purpose, while options on further business rates relief are considered as a matter of urgency.

Mrs Barton asked the Minister of Finance whether he is considering extending rates relief for builds that do not have either a bathroom or kitchen fitted.

Mr Murphy: Rates are payable on every domestic property that is in the valuation list unless a rates relief or specific empty rates exclusion applies. In my response to you on 10 November [AQO 1060/17-22] I advised on the treatment for rating purposes of a property that is truly derelict, whether in fact with or without a bathroom or kitchen fitted. I also advised William Irwin MLA regarding dereliction [AQO 931/17-22].

The position regarding the rateability of new but as yet uncompleted dwellings is set out in Schedule 8B of The Rates (NI) Order 1977. Where it appears to the Department that the work remaining to be done on a new building (whether yet with or without a bathroom or kitchen) is such that the building can reasonably be expected to be completed within three months, the District Valuer may serve a completion notice on the person entitled to possession of the building. The Department will establish a completion day, not later than 3 months from the day on which the notice is served. At that time the District Valuer will enter the completed or uncompleted property in the valuation list and rateability is established. Rate exclusions are available on certain empty homes and I do not intend extending this in the way you have outlined.

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Finance what action he is taking to address the parking problems brought about by the increased number of visitors to the Stormont Estate.

Mr Murphy:

- (i) Stormont Estate management regularly monitors the availability of on-site parking for visitors to the Estate. There is one public car park on the estate, located close to the Mo Mowlam play park, which has parking for 60 cars. There is also provision for approximately 12 cars outside the main Prince of Wales entrance and on-street parking immediately outside the Massey Avenue entrance. To manage the availability of on-site parking for visitors to the Stormont Estate the following measures have been introduced:
 - additional overflow parking is available at the NICS Sports Association complex at evenings and weekends;
 - the play park car park has been re-lined with additional parking provision for people with disabilities and the introduction of a one-way system; and
 - signage installed advising visitors of the availability of the additional parking.
- (ii) In addition to these measures further signage will be installed around the estate to inform visitors of the overflow parking. The Department will also use social media channels to further promote the use of the additional parking and to encourage visitors to consider using other means of transport such as cycling, walking or public transport when visiting the Estate.
- (iii) Stormont Estate Management Unit will continue to monitor on-site parking availability for visitors to the Estate.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Finance for his assessment of the length of time taken by Land and Property Services to process applications for the Local Restrictions Support Scheme.

(AQW 10476/17-22)

Mr Murphy: Land & Property Services has worked as quickly as possible to facilitate the rollout of this scheme. It has been a complex undertaking given the targeted nature of the scheme. Large numbers of duplicate applications and applications with incomplete information have been received and this has necessitated a lot of manual checking of applications to verify that the applicants are eligible to receive payment.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Finance how many businesses in North Down have yet to receive payment for their Local Restrictions Support Scheme applications.

Mr Murphy: Data is not available by parliamentary constituency. However, I am able to provide figures for the Ards and North Down District Council area as of 1.00pm on 23 November 2020:

Applications received	795
Applications paid	358
Applications rejected	13
Applications to be processed	437

Payments to the value of £1,280,000 have been issued to businesses in the Ards and North Down District

Please note that 1,311 applications have been submitted with incomplete address information and have not been assigned a Council area. This cohort may include applicants from Ards and North Down District Council area.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Finance how many businesses in North Down have applied for the Local Restrictions Support Scheme.

(AQW 10478/17-22)

Mr Murphy: Data is not available by parliamentary constituency. However, I can provide figures for Ards and North Down District Council area. As of 1.00 pm on 23 November 2020, 795 applications have been received from businesses located in that district.

Please note 1,311 applications have been submitted with incomplete address information and have not been assigned a Council area.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Finance why (i) Nails and Beauty by Jackie, 12c Balloo Drive, Bangor; (ii) Gwendoline Bridal, 108 High Street, Bangor; (iii) Body and Soul Beauty Clinique, 26a New Street, Donaghadee; (iv) Body and Soul Beauty Clinique, 10a Market Street, Bangor; (v) Hair for Men, 35 High Street, Donaghadee; and (vi) Clipperrjacks, 11 Clandeboye Road Bangor, have not received any money after applying for the Land and Property Services' Covid Business Restrictions Support Scheme.

Mr Murphy: LPS has received applications in respect of all of the businesses listed above. These applications are in the outstanding caseload that have yet to be processed. LPS is working through these applications as quickly as possible. However the checking and validation process is taking longer than anticipated due to the large number of duplicate applications and applications with incomplete details.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance to detail the payments made to third parties for the organising or procurement of personal protective equipment, including the recipient and amount of the payment.

Mr Murphy: DoF did not engage any third parties to organise or procure personal protective equipment, therefore no payments were made.

Mr Allen asked the Minister of Finance when Local Restrictions Support Scheme payments for businesses who have received their initial payment will be processed; and when the backlog of applications will be processed and paid.

(AQW 10543/17-22)

Mr Murphy: Top up payments to businesses who have already received an initial payment will be issued automatically. Since some businesses were restricted to 19 November and some to 26 November, LPS needs to identify which businesses fall into each category so they will receive the correct amount of top up. LPS is currently midway through this exercise and hopes to start issuing payments in the week beginning 23 November.

LPS is working through the caseload of outstanding applications as quickly as possible. However it has received large numbers of duplicate applications and applications with incomplete information. These require additional checking and investigation to verify that a payment should be made, which is slowing the approval process.

Mr Muir asked the Minister of Finance how many staff are dedicated to processing Local Restrictions Support Grants.
(AQW 10568/17-22)

Mr Murphy: Understanding of the rating system is required to administer the Localised Restrictions Support Scheme. At present, LPS has 66 staff dedicated to processing the applications submitted under the scheme, with further staff supporting their work in areas such as IT, communications and handling correspondence and complaints.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Finance what contingency is being made for financial support for sectors that will be substantially affected by restrictions in the run up to the Christmas and New Year periods.

Mr Murphy: My Department's Localised Restrictions Support Scheme will be extended to provide financial support to all additional businesses required to close or severely limit operations at their premises under revised Health Protection Regulations that take effect this week. Therefore, any business required to close or curtail their operations for a longer period of time will automatically receive an additional payment for the extra period of restrictions. Any businesses additionally affected by the new restrictions will be able to apply for support from Friday 27 November.

Mr McNulty asked the Minister of Finance when will he allocate funds to support businesses, families and workers from the £500 million allocated from Treasury to support businesses through the pandemic.
(AQW 10675/17-22)

Mr Murphy: I refer the member to my 23 November statement to the Assembly.

<http://data.niassembly.gov.uk/HansardXml/plenary-23-11-2020.pdf>

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of Finance how many grant applications have been received for the Localised Restrictions Support Scheme as of 20 November 2020; and how many staff are processing these applications.
(AQW 10698/17-22)

Mr Murphy: At 20th November 2020 a total of 12,112 applications to the Localised Restrictions Support Scheme had been received. The number of applications does not represent the number of businesses that have applied, as many businesses have applied multiple times for the same premises. Each business is entitled to one grant per premises, if eligible.

Understanding of the rating system is required to administer the Localised Restrictions Support Scheme. At present, LPS has 66 staff dedicated to processing the applications submitted under the scheme, with further staff supporting their work in areas such as IT, communications and handling correspondence and complaints.

Mr Allen asked the Minister of Finance how the £500 million funding received as part of COVID-19 Barnett consequentials will be allocated to support individuals and businesses impacted by current and new restrictions.

Mr Murphy: I refer the member to my 23 November statement to the Assembly.

<http://data.niassembly.gov.uk/HansardXml/plenary-23-11-2020.pdf>

Mr Allen asked the Minister of Finance to detail the additional financial support he intends to bring forward, including a timeline, to support businesses and individuals impacted by current and new restrictions.
(AQW 10704/17-22)

Mr Murphy: The extension of current restrictions will be accompanied by an extension of the current support measures.

The Localised Restrictions Support Scheme delivered by my own department will be extended to ensure that any business required to close or curtail their operations for a longer period of time will automatically receive an additional payment for the extra period of restrictions. Any businesses additionally affected by the new restrictions will be able to apply for support from Friday 27 November. This extension of this support will require an additional £55 million on top of the £35 million already allocated in October Monitoring.

The Executive has provided a full year's rates holiday to sectors worst-affected by the pandemic, namely retail, hospitality, tourism, leisure, childcare and airports. I appreciate these sectors will continue to suffer stress into next year; as such, my department is urgently considering how best to deliver further rates relief and I have set aside £150m for this purpose.

An additional £20 million has also been provided for Manufacturing rates relief to bring this sector in line with what has been already offered to hospitality, tourism, leisure and retail.

The Executive has also considered support for businesses and the wider economy, and has agreed to provide some £140 million to the Department for the Economy for a range of schemes – this is in addition to £60 million previously provided for the DfE-led COVID Restrictions Business Support Scheme. Initial detail on how this will be utilised has been set out in my 23 November statement to the Assembly, and officials will work at pace to process payments to individuals and businesses.

Additional funding has also been set aside to mitigate against the pandemic's impact across our society as follows.

- DfC: £71.5 million including support for Councils, Sport, the Community, Voluntary and Social Enterprise Sector, and a one-off payment to assist the most vulnerable in society with heating costs.
- DE: £26.4 million including support for schools, the childcare sector and holiday meal payments to families in need.
- DfI: £27.5 million to ensure continuity of public services given lost income, and including support for the City of Derry Airport.

In total, the package of support measures announced on 23 November comes to £338.1 million allocated, with £150 million held for longer-term rates support, previously centrally held allocations of £74.8m sectoral support pending development of schemes by responsible departments, and a further £26.6 million being held in reserve.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Finance what proportion of money from dormant accounts does Northern Ireland receive from the UK Treasury.

Mr Murphy: The Dormant Bank and Building Society Accounts Act 2008 enables banks and building societies, who opt into the scheme, to transfer the money held in dormant accounts to a central Reclaim Fund. The central Reclaim Fund is then responsible for managing money, meeting any reclaims and passing on surplus money for reinvestment in the community usually through the National Lottery Community Fund. There is no direct role for the Treasury in this process.

The North receives 2.8% of the total amount of money received by the central Reclaim Fund in a financial year as set out in the Distribution of Dormant Account Money (Apportionment) Order 2011.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance to publish a list of the resources employed in the Civil Service for unconscious bias training.

(AQW 10778/17-22)

Mr Murphy: There are currently no resources employed in the Civil Service for unconscious bias training.

Classroom based Unconscious Bias training was piloted to members of the NICS SCS in November 2016. In addition to the two pilot sessions, a further nine half day sessions were delivered between April and September 2017. In total, this classroom based training was completed by 197 SCS staff. No further classroom training has been delivered since September 2017.

In July 2017 Unconscious Bias e-learning training was made available to all other staff and rolled out on a mandatory basis for line managers up to Grade 6 level. To date 12,311 staff in grades below SCS level have completed this package. This e-learning package was developed in-house by then CAL trainers at no additional cost to the public purse.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance to detail the bids and allocations in respect of the announcement of 23 November 2020 of further COVID-19 support.

Mr Murphy: Details of the allocations are set out in my statement to the Assembly.

All bids from the Department for Communities, Department of Education, Department of Finance and Department for Infrastructure were met in full. A list of bids from the Department for the Economy is set out in the table below.

Mr Muir asked the Minister of Finance why the baseline budget for 2021/22 will be £350 million less than the previous year.
(AQW 10916/17-22)

Mr Murphy: £350 million funding was provided as a single year allocation for 2020-21 in the New Decade New Approach document to address general pressures.

Unlike the majority of funding, this one-time allocation was not carried forward into 2021-22 leaving an unfunded pressure of £350 million for the Executive to address.

This issue will be considered as part of the work to develop a Budget for 2021-22.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Finance how many staff are working on the Localised Restrictions Support Scheme.
(AQW 11023/17-22)

Mr Murphy: I refer you to my response to AQW 10568/17-22.

Ms Sheerin asked the Minister of Finance for an update on the PEACE Plus Programme.
(AQO 1195/17-22)

Mr Murphy: I am pleased to report this continues to progress well.

On the 27th October I attended the PEACE PLUS Programme Development Steering Group and discussed with key stakeholders the need for community engagement and implementation in the programme, a focus on peace building and reconciliation activities, a measureable impact on the border regions and a need to simplify the administrative measures in the programme engagement process.

I also attended the NSMC SEUPB Sectoral meeting on the 30th October with Minister McGrath from DPER and Minister Weir. We welcomed the commitments made by the EU and the Irish and British governments for PEACE PLUS and acknowledged the significant work undertaken on this to date.

SEUPB is continuing to engage with external stakeholders and government departments to help develop a final programme document. It is the intention that this will be ready to go out for statutory public consultation late 2020/early in 2021.

I would be confident that we would see a PEACE PLUS programme open for calls during 2021.

Mr Harvey asked the Minister of Finance what action he has taken to ensure the more timely release of financial support in future grant schemes.
(AQO 1199/17-22)

Mr Murphy: It will always be a challenge to introduce emergency grant support at speed while simultaneously ensuring that money is allocated for the intended purposes and to eligible recipients. My Department will review the lessons learned from both the £10,000 Small Business Grant Scheme and the Localised Restrictions Support Scheme and apply these to any future schemes.

Mr Stewart asked the Minister of Finance for his assessment of the rollout of the Localised Restrictions Support Scheme.

Mr Murphy: My Department has worked as quickly as possible to facilitate the rollout of this scheme. It has been a complex undertaking given the targeted nature of the scheme and a lot of manual checking of applications has been necessary to verify that the applicants are eligible to receive the payment.

LPS has made as much resource available to the administration of the scheme as required and have so far issued payments worth £19.4 million to 5,165 applicants.

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Finance how many applicants to the Localised Restrictions Support Scheme have been paid in East Antrim to date.

(AQO 1194/17-22)

Mr Murphy: Information on applications to the scheme is not collated by parliamentary constituency.

However I can advise that 733 applications have been received from the Mid and East Antrim District Council area and payments worth a total of £1.08 million have been issued to 303 businesses.

Department of Health

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of Health for his assessment on the impact of COVID-19 restrictions on the delivery of cancer services.

(AQW 7285/17-22)

Mr Swann (The Minister of Health): COVID-19 continues to present unprecedented capacity challenges across the cancer pathway which the service is actively managing.

It is likely that the redeployment of staff, staff absences, reduced access to theatres and patient reluctance to attend hospital may contribute to further impacts throughout the current and future waves of the pandemic, particularly on invasive diagnostics and surgical treatment. All possible steps will be taken to maintain services during these periods, including commissioning additional assessments and treatments from independent sector providers, with capacity prioritised for those patients with suspected or confirmed cancer.

I have established a Cancer Services Rebuilding Cell to protect these services as much as possible throughout the pandemic, taking into account existing capacity constraints and the ongoing challenges described above.

One of my primary aims in the difficult weeks ahead will be to ensure the continued delivery of high quality cancer services, providing of course that it is safe to do so.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister of Health what the current process is if a Care Home Provider does not implement or comply with the Care Partner arrangements for residents outlined in the Regional Principles for Northern Ireland Care Home Settings and other guidance issued by the Executive on or around 21 September 2020.

Mr Swann: The HSC is continuously assessing how best to allow residents in all of our care homes to maintain meaningful contact with their families and friends.

My Department's Chief Nursing Officer and Chief Social Work Officer have jointly written to all our Health and Social Care (HSC) Trusts requesting that each Trust provide support to care home providers, who have been tasked to introduce the concept of Care Partners and an assurance to the Department that the Visiting Guidance is being followed appropriately

My Department's Chief Nursing Officer and Chief Social Work Officer have also jointly written to Care Home providers to remind them of the Visiting Guidance and to ask them to facilitate the introduction of Care Partners, given the associated, potentially life changing benefits of such arrangements for their residents. This will require careful planning, with the benefits for residents of having Care Partners facilitated balanced against the need for continuing mitigation of the ongoing risk of transmission of Covid-19 in response to the pandemic, alongside the management of normal seasonal pressures.

Should any Care Home Provider decide against implementing any aspect of visiting guidance, including the introduction of the Care Partner arrangements, the relevant Trust will take the matter up with that Care Home directly, offering suitable assistance to aid compliance.

Mr T Buchanan asked the Minister of Health how many COVID-19 inpatient beds are currently filled by care home residents who have tested negative and have no symptoms, but are unable to return to their care home due to a lack of space for self-isolation requirements.

Mr Swann: The Belfast, Northern, South Eastern and Western Trusts have each confirmed they have no COVID-19 inpatient beds currently filled by care home residents who have tested negative, have no symptoms, but are unable to return to their care home due to a lack of space for self-isolation requirements.

Southern Trust have currently 5 delayed discharges due to covid related issues in the nursing homes they were to discharge to. These patients have been accepted by the nursing homes but they cannot take them at present either due to care home staff being tested or the home itself being temporarily closed because of an outbreak.

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Health whether the proportion of staff who have undergone relevant COVID-19 training, and are currently available for duties, is enough to ensure all operational COVID-19 beds are staffed.

Mr Swann: HSC Trusts do not set aside beds for COVID-19 patients. The number of patients with COVID-19 fluctuates, with information on the number beds currently occupied by COVID-19 patients published daily on the Department's COVID-19 dashboard. Hospital bed stock is managed dynamically in line with best practice in infection control, and the number of ICU, acute and stepdown beds needed is based on the stage of surge as experienced by any Trust or hospital.

Where staff are being redeployed, necessary induction takes place to enable all staff to take on different duties. Staff are only asked to take on tasks within their current level of competence.

The availability of staff to respond to the increased demand is extremely challenging and this is exacerbated by the number of staff absent because of COVID-19. While we are taking all possible steps to address this, including relaunching the workforce appeal, we know that operating at peak surge levels, particularly in ICU, is not sustainable for long and will have a major impact on HSC services, including complex elective surgery.

Ms Anderson asked the Minister of Health whether he will introduce updated visitation guidance for palliative care patients, including those with COVID-19, to allow a family member or friend to be with them for extended periods before and during death, taking account of relevant precautions.

Mr Swann: On 2 November 2020, my Department published an appendix to its visiting guidance with specific focus on the appropriate measures for allowing patients with actively advancing life limiting conditions to benefit from a palliative care approach, intended to provide the best quality of life in their final weeks and days.

This updated guidance is available (at Appendix 7) here: <https://www.health-ni.gov.uk/Covid-19-visiting-guidance>.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister of Health for an update on the availability of ear syringing and ear vacuuming services at GP surgeries.
(AQW 9498/17-22)

Mr Swann: Under the terms of their contract all GPs are required to provide essential primary medical services to their registered patients. As well as providing essential services GP Practices can also contract with the Board to provide additional services to their patients, for which they would receive additional remuneration; there is no obligation on GP Practices to provide those additional services.

Neither ear syringing or ear vacuuming are regarded as essential services and therefore GP Practices are not required to provide those services unless they have specifically agreed, as part of their contract, to do so.

In 2018 the National Institute for Clinical Health Excellence (NICE) issued guideline 98 which recommended that the manual syringing method should no longer be used.

It recommended that GPs should offer ear wax removal using an electronic irrigator, micro-suction or another method of earwax removal (such as manual removal using a probe) for adults in primary or community ear care services, if the practitioner, such as a community nurse or audiologist:

- has training and expertise in using the method to remove earwax;
- is aware of any contraindications to the method, and
- the correct equipment is available.

If the GP is not able to provide this service because they do not meet the NICE recommendations they would make the necessary referrals to ENT/Audiology in a Health and Social Care Trust, for which there will be no charge. However, rather than wait, patients may prefer to seek, and pay for, private treatment.

Mr Gildernew asked the Minister of Health to detail the formal correspondences he has had with his counterpart in Dublin on Brexit.
(AQW 9526/17-22)

Mr Swann: Formal correspondences with the Minister of Health in Dublin cover a range of issues relating to the delivery of Health and Social Care in Northern Ireland.

Engagements with the Department of Health in Dublin at official level are frequent, and cover all areas in relation to EU exit following the end of the Transition Period.

My officials brief me as to progress on these matters, and in turn, I and my Department provide regular updates to both the Northern Ireland Executive and the Northern Ireland Assembly Committee for Health.

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Health whether he will consider introducing a wage for student nurses undertaking placement on the frontline against COVID-19, similar to that which was in place during the first wave of the pandemic. (AQW 9607/17-22)

Mr Swann: My Department's overarching priority is to protect the learning of Health and Social Care students so that they can successfully complete their studies on time and be able to join the workforce as registrants.

The Nursing and Midwifery Council's (NMC) emergency standards, which enabled student nurses and midwives in their final six months of study to undertake their last six months in clinical practice as paid members of staff, were withdrawn at the end of September. They have been replaced with the NMC's recovery standards which are focused on enabling universities to best support students in their learning so that they can graduate when expected. Student nurses and midwives will maintain their supernumerary status.

My Department provides a comprehensive range of support to nursing and midwifery students through their training. This varies according to individual circumstances but includes the payment of tuition fees, provision of non-means tested bursaries, and other means-tested allowances.

Student nurses and midwives are also eligible for free public transport during this period of pandemic. I can also confirm that my recent announcement of the provision of free car parking to HSC staff, until 31 March 2021, includes student nurses and midwives.

Mr McCrossan asked the Minister of Health to detail the current staff absence rates in each hospital. (AQW 9856/17-22)

Mr Swann: Due to the variable nature of working patterns across Health and Social Care (HSC), the metric used to measure absence is the percentage of hours lost.

Information on the percentage of hours lost due to staff absence in the month of September 2020 in each hospital is detailed in the table below. Includes staff absences due to sickness absence, COVID-19 related absences including self-isolation/shielding, maternity/paternity/adoption leave, career break, parental leave, time off for dependents, unpaid leave, term time, work break and suspensions.

HSC Trust	Hospital / Location	Percentage hours lost due to staff absence (September 2020)
Belfast	Belfast City Hospital	12.58%
	Foster Green Hospital	14.75%
	Knockbracken Healthcare Park	9.85%
	Muckamore Abbey Hospital	14.40%
	Mater Hospital	13.30%
	Musgrave Park Hospital	10.87%
	Royal Hospitals	12.56%
Northern	Antrim Hospital Site	13.71%
	Braid Valley Site	12.13%
	Causeway Hospital Site	13.52%
	Dalriada Hospital Site	12.27%
	Holywell Hospital Site	10.27%
	Mid Ulster Hospital Site	15.71%
	Moyle Hospital Site	14.96%
	Robinson Hospital Site	10.64%
	Whiteabbey Hospital Site	12.66%
South Eastern	Ulster Hospital	11.46%
	Lagan Valley Hospital	12.46%
	Downe Hospital	14.31%
	Downshire Hospital	10.20%
	Ards Community Hospital	10.70%
	Bangor Community Hospital	9.01%

HSC Trust	Hospital / Location	Percentage hours lost due to staff absence (September 2020)

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Health (i) to detail the number and nature of assaults on nursing staff in the Iveagh Centre, South Belfast by patients or residents, in each of the last three years; (ii) whether these assaults were reported to the PSNI; (iii) whether staff required medical treatment; and (iv) what measures have subsequently been put in place to protect staff.

Mr Swann: Responses to your individual queries are outlined below. It should be noted that Belfast Trust have advised that due to the way their system records the data, they are unable to isolate detail in relation to nursing staff. Detail provided therefore is in relation to all staff roles in Iveagh.

- (i) To detail the number and nature of assaults on nursing staff in the Iveagh Centre, South Belfast by patients or residents, in each of the last three years.
- November 2017 – October 2018: 629
 - November 2018 – October 2019: 672
 - November 2019 – October 2020: 672

The breakdown of incidents does not categorise the nature of assault, this would be recorded in the body of each incident report and would require a manual trawl of all files and so could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

- (ii) Whether these assaults were reported to the PSNI.

At least 6 incidents have been reported to the PSNI. To confirm if any other incidents were reported would require a manual trawl of all files and so could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

- (iii) Whether staff required medical treatment.

This information is not readily available and would require a manual trawl of all files and so could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

- (iv) What measures have subsequently been put in place to protect staff.

Staff members:

- Attend training in the Management of Actual or Potential Aggression (MAPA) to advanced level which includes personal safety and disengagement;
- Have a personal alarm which is checked prior to commencing duty and worn at all times whilst on duty;
- Are provided with PPE which may include hair nets, jackets and bite guards to prevent hair pulling, scratching and biting causing harm;
- Attend training relevant to their role e.g. Positive Behaviour Support (PBS);
- Attend handover meeting prior to commencing direct patient care;
- Will read patient care plans and PBS plans and ensure they are understood; and
- Notify the nurse in charge of any precipitating factors which may require consideration.

Post incident, staff are encouraged to participate in incident debriefs, PBS meeting and reflective/learning practice. Training needs are also established through the Staff Development Review Process with line manager. They can also be referred to Occupational Health or can self-refer. Confidential counselling is provided by the Trust and staff are also given support if they wish to report assaults to the PSNI.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health what is the estimated timescale for receipt of a potential COVID-19 vaccine. (AQW 9975/17-22)

Mr Swann: The UK is expected to receive its initial share of the Pfizer vaccine in December. It should be noted however that the vaccine will not be deployed until it has received authorisation from the MHRA.

A large workforce of trained vaccinators will be in place to enable a COVID-19 vaccination programme to begin once an authorised vaccine is available. This will be based on the normal vaccination workforce as well as volunteers from across the Health and Social Care Service. Final training for the vaccinators cannot be completed until full details of the vaccine(s) become available from the manufacturers.

Trusts and GPs are still finalising their vaccination plans but it is likely that there will be vaccination sites across Northern Ireland during the COVID-19 vaccination programme.

Vaccination policy in Northern Ireland is guided by the recommendations of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation (JCVI), an independent expert advisory group. JCVI will recommend which COVID-19 vaccine(s) should be used, and on the priority groups to receive the vaccine based on the best available clinical, modelling and epidemiological data. JCVI have published an interim prioritisation list which is available at:

<https://www.gov.uk/government/publications/priority-groups-for-coronavirus-covid-19-vaccination-advice-from-the-jcvi-25-september-2020>.

It has been agreed that the Barnett formula will be used to allocate vaccine share across the 4 nations. The Barnett formula split for Northern Ireland is 2.85% and therefore NI should receive a 2.85% share of whatever amount of vaccine is received into the UK.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health how many people are in place and trained to administer a COVID-19 vaccine. (AQW 9976/17-22)

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Health when GP practices will receive their next supply of flu vaccines.
(AQW 9982/17-22)

Mr Swann: Depending on the amount of vaccine they have received to date, GP practices have continued to receive supplies of flu vaccine used for those aged 65 and over and for children. GP ordering of vaccine used for those aged 18 to under 65 years of age has now recommenced as additional vaccine stock was delivered into Northern Ireland during the week commencing 16th November.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Health what plans he has to ensure that frontline staff who cannot get parking spaces on Trust or Department sites will not be subject to car parking charges.

Mr Swann: On 29 October I announced that with immediate effect, all Health and Social Care (HSC) staff would receive free car parking to 31 March 2021. Trusts have worked exceptionally hard in a short space of time on the required operational arrangements to implement this commitment.

Staff who have had to use on-site public car parks are entitled to reclaim the cost until free parking arrangements have been put in place.

As patients and visitors continue to access services, there are some sites where demand for parking exceeds the available supply. Therefore, where necessary and to balance the needs of patients, visitors and staff, in addition to free on-site parking, extra off-site parking provision and free park and ride facilities have been made available, and this provision can be expanded as required.

I would also encourage staff where possible to avail of the free transport which is kindly provided by Translink.

Ms Bradshaw asked the Minister of Health what preparations have been made for storing the COVID-19 vaccine; and what is the available budget.

(AQW 10091/17-22)

Mr Swann: Four ultra-low temperature control freezers are now in place at a facility in Northern Ireland. These freezers will be used for taking delivery of the Pfizer vaccine, once it is approved for use in the UK, before the vaccine is distributed to vaccination sites.

There is no specific COVID-19 vaccination programme budget. Work is ongoing to refine the estimated costs of the programme but we anticipate that sufficient funding is already available within the current allocation to Health for COVID.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Health to detail his plans to fill the staffing gaps in intensive care units.

Mr Swann: While during the first wave of COVID-19 there was a mass standing down of services, I want to provide as much protection as possible to non-COVID-19 services during this second and any future waves. Therefore, the flexibility and commitment of our workforce is more important than ever, with staff willing to work extra hours to ensure HSC is able to respond to the demands that are being placed on our services. This is helping to ensure the safety of our patients and clients and enabling us to maintain business continuity.

It is important that we value and recognise the significance of this extra effort from staff willing to work beyond their core/contracted hours; therefore, HSC Trusts have established, in conjunction with Trade Unions, a Rapid COVID Response Protocol, which provides a financial incentive for such staff.

We are also exploring all options to bring in additional staff as quickly as possible, including through the re-opened Workforce Appeal, which has again seen a phenomenal response. It is important to note, however, that the availability of staff to respond to the increased demand is one of the most challenging aspects of the pandemic, exacerbated by the impact COVID-19 continues to have on our own staff.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Health what assessment has been made of whether staff in intensive care units are getting appropriate breaks at work.

(AQW 10201/17-22)

Mr Swann: Appropriate arrangements are in place to ensure that Intensive Care Unit staff get their breaks across all Trusts. Given the fluid and rapidly-changing context of critical care, emergency situations do arise that may delay a staff member's break, however the break is then facilitated at a later time.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health how does the amount of payment for administration hours to on call watch commanders and crew commanders in the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service compare in each month of this year compared with last year.

Mr Swann: The table below sets out the monthly total amount paid to Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service retained watch commanders and crew commanders for administration hours in 2019 and 2020 to date.

Month	2019 £	2020 £
January	13,285	15,160
February	11,949	13,681

Month	2019 £	2020 £
March	13,705	14,730
April	13,445	14,496
May	13,603	17,089
June	13,658	15,638
July	12,840	13,963
August	13,792	14,176
September	13,700	14,833
October	13,520	-
November	14,315	-
December	13,009	-
Total	160,821	133,766

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, in light of the reduction in some Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service activities during COVID-19, for example, home fire safety visits, what savings have resulted; and what surplus has been returned to his Department.

(AQW 10230/17-22)

Mr Swann: The impact of COVID-19 has factored in Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Services financial planning requirements throughout 2020/21. There have been both savings and additional costs for the Service as a result of the pandemic. The net effect has meant that there has been no surplus identified or returned to the Department of Health at this stage.

Mr Gildernew asked the Minister of Health to detail the budget for (i) all addiction services; (ii) drug addiction services; (iii) alcohol addiction services; (iv) drug and alcohol addiction services; (v) gambling addiction services; and (vi) social media and or mobile device addictions services.

Mr Swann: The requested figures are set out below:

		£m
(i)	all addiction services	24.25*
(ii)	drug addiction services	n/a
(iii)	alcohol addiction services	n/a
(iv)	drug and alcohol addiction services	24.25*
(v)	gambling addiction	n/a
(vi)	social media and or mobile device addictions services	n/a

* Note figures have been rounded to two decimal points.

It should be noted that substance use services in Northern Ireland cover both alcohol and other drugs.

There are no services specifically commissioned for gambling addiction or social media and/or mobile device addictions. Where compulsive gambling or social media and/or mobile device addiction is a symptom of an underlying mental illness the behaviour will be addressed as part of the treatment plan with core mental health or psychological therapies services.

Mr McHugh asked the Minister of Health what programmes are available within the Western Health and Social Care Trust to promote healthy living.

Mr Swann: The Western Health and Social Care Trust (WHST) has a suite of programmes to support healthy living across all sectors, these are developed based of local need and in collaboration with our Statutory, Voluntary and Community partners. These are reviewed and monitored regularly to ensure accessibility and reach to our most vulnerable target groups. In addition, WHST work with partners in the Fermanagh and West Tyrone geographical areas to specifically tailor a range of programmes based on models of good practice and local need as part of their Pathfinder work.

The following training courses are delivered by the WHSCT:

- Mental Health First Aid training
- Self-care programme
- “Using aromatherapy to manage your emotions”
- Self-care programme
- “Reflect and Recharge”
- Walk Leader Training
- Moving More Often Training
- Arts Care 4 U Training
- Falls Prevention
- Diabetes Prevention Programme
- Nutrition Matters
- Nutrition Webinars
- Trauma and Mental Health-Informed Communities Training

The following healthy living programmes are provided by WHSCT:

- TWIST West
- Leading the Way
- Step by Step
- Street Exercise
- The Daily Mile
- Mindfulness in schools
- Support the wellbeing of teachers via a 6 week mindfulness programme
- 4 day Mindfulness facilitator training for teachers
- ‘Mindfulness for resilience’

- Mental Wellbeing and Resilience for Looked after Children
- Self care for practitioners and first responders
- ROE
- Smoking cessation service
- Time for you to connect and relax programme
- Weight Management Programme
- Slow cooker Programme

On a regional basis, the Public Health Agency (PHA) proactively promote healthy living and address the causes and associated inequalities of preventable ill health and lack of wellbeing. While embarking on this process to change the focus of our health services to prevention, extensive investment and partnership work is currently underway with both statutory and community organisations in the WHSCT area.

In addition to programmes funded by the WHSCT, the following programme areas and specific programmes in the WHSCT area are funded by the PHA:

Ms McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health whether babies and toddlers under two years old are counted within the calculations for numbers of people gathered together under COVID-19 regulations; and to detail the rationale for this decision. (AQW 10259/17-22)

Mr Swann: Babies and toddlers under two years old are counted as part of the total for indoor or outdoor gatherings.

A gathering indoors in a private dwelling which consists of persons from more than one household is not permitted. This includes visitors e.g. friends or relatives from areas within or outside of Northern Ireland. Indoor meetings between two households in a bubble is limited to a maximum of 10 people, including children, at any one time.

Further guidance is available on my Department's website at:

<https://www.health-ni.gov.uk/publications/guidance-accompany-health-protection-coronavirus-restrictions-no-2-regulations-northern-ireland-2020>

The rationale is to minimise close contact between a large number of individuals as the risk of transmission of the virus increases the longer individuals gather and spend time together.

The Executive maintains an ongoing process of review of the coronavirus restrictions regulations, which considers both the current level of the pandemic and the impact the restrictions are having, and it is the Executive's clear intention not to retain the restrictions for any longer than is absolutely necessary.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Health to detail the category of recipients when the first stage of a COVID-19 vaccine programme is rolled out.

(AQW 10272/17-22)

Mr Swann: Vaccination policy in Northern Ireland is guided by the recommendations of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation (JCVI), an independent expert advisory group. JCVI will recommend which COVID-19 vaccine(s) should be used, and on the priority groups to receive the vaccine based on the best available clinical, modelling and epidemiological data. JCVI have published an interim prioritisation list which is available at: <https://www.gov.uk/government/publications/priority-groups-for-coronavirus-covid-19-vaccination-advice-from-the-jcvi-25-september-2020>.

Once more details regarding the safety and efficacy of the vaccines becomes available JCVI is expected to produce a final prioritisation list.

Mr Carroll asked the Minister of Health to detail his plan for community pharmacy involvement in the roll-out of COVID-19 vaccines.

(AQW 10276/17-22)

Mr Swann: Discussions are ongoing between my officials and Community Pharmacy representatives to determine what role this sector will play during the roll out of the COVID-19 vaccination programme.

Mr McCann asked the Minister of Health how many care partners are in place in care homes.

(AQW 10290/17-22)

Mr Swann: Care Partner arrangements have been available since late last year. Each care home submits a weekly return via an app to the RQIA, and this includes details of the care partner arrangements in place in their home.

The most recent figures, from the start of November 2021, suggest that there are currently 3,139 care partners in place here. RQIA is currently reviewing the use/ accuracy of the app as a reporting tool going forward.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Health what impact the prohibition of grassroots youth sports training and matches has on the COVID-19 transmission rate.

Mr Swann: The Executive, when making decisions on restrictions, takes into account not only the scientific and medical evidence but also the evidence of impacts of the restrictions on the economy and society, including education. The Executive weighs up the totality of the effect each restriction can have in combination with other restrictions in reducing the rate of infections of COVID-19. It is very difficult to disaggregate the precise impact on virus transmission of each restriction on its own.

In light of the high rate of spread of the virus which causes COVID-19, and the pressure this is placing on vital health and social care services, the Executive considered a wide range of activities which could impact on the rate of transmission of the virus. The Executive's decision was that certain businesses and activities, including gatherings such as grassroots youth sports training and matches, would have restrictions placed on them to help to suppress the transmission of the virus within the population. The current combination of restrictions allows other essential services to be maintained, protects the elderly and the vulnerable, and reduces the pressure on our health services during the current pandemic.

The Executive maintains an ongoing process of review of the coronavirus restrictions regulations, which considers both the current level of the pandemic and the impact the restrictions have on the economy and society, and it is the Executive's clear intention not to retain the restrictions for any longer than is absolutely necessary.

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of Health what assessment he has made of the impact of potential administrative obstructions from EU regulations and the Protocol on Ireland/Northern Ireland on the roll out of a COVID-19 vaccine.

Mr Swann: It is not expected that there will be any administrative obstructions as a result of the EU Ireland/Northern Ireland protocol as there has now been a 12 month grace period agreed, which should enable the vaccine supplies to be received throughout 2021 without any additional checks.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health whether Dr Fiachra McLaughlin was paid for the claims submitted for work that he had not done; and whether any and all money paid has been repaid.

Mr Swann: The Southern Health and Social Care Trust has confirmed that no money was paid to Dr McLaughlin for any work not undertaken, as the Trust's claim validation and checking procedures picked up this claim before any payment was processed, therefore recoupment was not necessary.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health (i) what is the annual bill payment of administration hours to on call watch commanders and crew commanders in the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service; (ii) what audit has been conducted of this expenditure; and (iii) with what result.

Mr Swann:

- (i) In 2019/20 £165,453 was paid for administration hours to (retained) on call watch commanders and crew commanders by Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service (NIFRS).
- (ii) NIFRS Internal Audit function conducted a review titled 'Payroll – Management of overtime and claim forms for retained officer payments'. The report finalised in April 2020.

NIFRS conducted two internal reviews in September 2020 and October 2020 into payment of administration hours to retained officers.

- (iii) The Internal Audit review titled 'Payroll – Management of overtime and claim forms for retained officer payments' received limited assurance. NIFRS is addressing these audit recommendations.

NIFRS internal reviews in September 2020 and October 2020 found no evidence of fraudulent payments to retained officers for administration hours.

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Health, following his appeal during the first lockdown for people to apply to work in health services during the pandemic, (i) how many people were utilised and for how long; and (ii) how many people have been utilised in the last four weeks; and (iii) what types of functions have they been carrying out.

Mr Swann:

- (i) My Department initiated the Workforce Appeal back in April to assist HSC Trusts tackle the virus and we were overwhelmed by the response. There were over 11,000 applications covering a wide range of roles, including over 3,000 clinical applications.

- 899 people were appointed and deployed in Trusts;
- 515 Clinical Appointments were made across a range of professions; and
- 384 Non Clinical Appointments.

The appointments were short-term in nature lasting for varying lengths of time.

- (ii)& (iii) My Department has now re-opened the Workforce Appeal in an effort to try and build capacity again with particular focus on certain roles and positions across hospitals and community care. The total number of appointments made to Trusts to date, as at 18th November, is 296, covering both Health & Social Care (137 appointments) and Clerical & Admin (159 appointments). An additional 30 appointments have also been made by the BSO on behalf of the PHA bringing the total appointment figure to 326.

Mr Gildernew asked the Minister of Health what modelling was undertaken for COVID-19 Surge Planning for (i) inpatient COVID-19 beds; and (ii) intensive care unit beds.

Mr Swann: A modelling group chaired by the Chief Scientific Officer was established as the pandemic took hold during spring. With an increasing amount of data available, the modelling group is now better placed to track the trajectory of the virus. In addition, the Health and Social Care Board now maintains a hospital bed modelling tool that allow for short term modelling of the impact of COVID-19 on hospital inpatient and ICU patient numbers.

However, HSC Trusts do not set aside beds for COVID-19 patients. The number of patients with COVID-19 fluctuates, with information on the number beds currently occupied by COVID-19 patients published daily on the Department's COVID-19 dashboard.

The available number of ICU beds is determined by the critical care surge plan, on which the Critical Care Network for Northern Ireland reports daily to the Department. The plan provides the ability to flex critical care capacity to a maximum of 158 ICU beds across the region.

Mr Muir asked the Minister of Health to detail the rationale for the time lag in the reporting of HIV Infections.

(AQW 10358/17-22)

Mr Swann: The Royal Victoria Hospital GUM clinic collate the Northern Ireland HIV data for new HIV diagnoses and also for people receiving HIV care. Public Health England (PHE) collate the data for the United Kingdom and complete a number of validation and deduplication checks.

The Public Health Agency (PHA) usually receives an annual Northern Ireland dataset from PHE in September. Due to COVID-19 this was delayed to 3rd November. The Northern Ireland country HIV data tables were published by PHE on the same date along with the UK report.

PHA have always published the NI data report later, normally 1st December which is World AIDs day.

Mr O'Toole asked the Minister of Health what research his Department has undertaken into the effects of long covid; and the numbers of people with the condition.

Mr Swann: There is accumulating evidence to suggest that people who have had both mild and severe symptoms of COVID-19 can experience long-term health effects such as problems with breathing, chronic fatigue and stress.

Research to evaluate the long-term health and psychosocial effects of COVID-19 in affected persons is ongoing. Major studies include the Post-Hospitalisation COVID-19 study which is a consortium of researchers and clinicians from across the UK working together to understand and improve long term health outcomes for patients who have been in hospital with COVID-19. Northern Ireland clinicians are sited as Chief Investigators and are actively engaged in this study.

The National Institute for Care and Health Excellence (NICE) is developing a guideline on long Covid which is due to be published by the end of the year. The guideline will address, among other things, a formal definition of the disease, how to identify on-going symptoms and a definition of best practice investigation and treatment options to support the management of the condition across diverse communities.

When published, the guideline will be fully considered alongside the wider body of emerging research to inform future policy and service decisions in Northern Ireland.

As there is no formal definition of long Covid it is not possible to accurately state how many people are affected in Northern Ireland.

Ms Flynn asked the Minister of Health for a monthly breakdown of the total amount of calls to the COVID-19 psychological support helpline for health and social care staff.

(AQW 10366/17-22)

Mr Swann: I refer you to the answer in AQW 9347/17-22.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health what plans have been implemented to deal with the second surge of the COVID-19 virus.

(AQW 10369/17-22)

Mr Swann: I published the Surge Planning Strategic Framework on 6 October. This sets the overarching context for individual Trust surge and winter planning. Alongside the framework, I also published individual Trust surge plans, ensuring comprehensive plans are in place to address both further COVID-19 surges and winter pressures.

The Surge Planning Strategic Framework highlights important learning from the first wave; sets out the approach to surveillance and modelling; reviews actions to minimize COVID-19 transmission and impact; summarises key regional initiatives to organise health and social care services to facilitate effective service delivery; highlights actions around the key issues of workforce, medicines and testing; and confirms a number of principles for our Health and Social Care Trusts to adopt when developing their individual surge plans.

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of Health what data is gathered on the number of people seeking help from Health and Social Care and general practice for gambling disorder.

Mr Swann: Data on gambling addiction is not generally collected by Health and Social Care Trusts. Some information on referral rates is, however, collected by the Southern Health and Social Care Trust.

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of Health, pursuant to AQW 9496/17-22, what plans he has to introduce legislation to require gambling operators to include explicit and prominent public health warnings about the harms associated with their products and services in their advertising and marketing.

(AQW 10416/17-22)

Mr Swann: Gambling legislation is the responsibility of the Department for Communities. The Department for Communities have recently brought forward proposals to reform gambling law in Northern Ireland.

I have no intention of bringing forward separate legislation relating to gambling at this stage.

Mr Muir asked the Minister of Health when he will bring forward proposals to the Executive concerning further COVID-19 public health restrictions.

(AQW 10462/17-22)

Mr Swann: I have brought forward proposals to the Executive on a number of occasions, including the meeting of Thursday 19 November 2020. Any proposals brought to the Executive meeting are guided by the advice from Chief Medical Officer and Chief Scientific Advisor and reflect the current position and modelling of the pandemic. Any proposed restrictions are to manage the increased pressure on our health services during the current pandemic, protect the elderly and the vulnerable and allow other essential services to be maintained.

All scientific evidence is now publically available and published on my Department's website: <https://www.health-ni.gov.uk/covid-19-scientific-evidence>

Ms Flynn asked the Minister of Health to detail the number beds (i) available; and (ii) occupied in each hospital, on each day of September and October, for each year since 2017.

(AQW 10473/17-22)

Mr Swann: This information is not available for all of the specified periods.

Data is however available on a quarterly basis. Information on the number of available and occupied beds for the Quarters Ending September and December 2017, 2018 and 2019 is provided in Tables 1-3. My Department publishes annual information on the number of beds available and occupied at:

<https://www.health-ni.gov.uk/articles/inpatient-and-day-case-activity>

Daily data on beds available and occupied for the period 1st September to 31st October 2020 can be viewed on the Department's COVID-19 Dashboard and downloaded from the Department's website at:

<https://www.health-ni.gov.uk/publications/daily-dashboard-updates-covid-19-november-2020>

It should be noted that the beds data provided in Tables 1-3 will not be directly comparable to the daily data available at the link provided as they are derived from different sources.
