

Sirs, my opinion is that in order to not donate our organs, we should be required to 'opt out' while we are living. Many people are too lazy to register for organ donation, and many lives are lost because of this this apathy. Before you make a final decision, you must inform every person in the country of the desperate need to help those who could live through the giving of organs that will be lost when a potential donor dies. How much more can we give to the living when we die than the gift of life?
