I would like to see tougher sentencing for all cases, more especially where violence is used, the victim should be able to feel safe in their own home, but unfortunately I know that's not always the case, as the latest figures show, and I strongly disagree that the abuser has the right to ask questions, should be done by legal counsel only, because the poor victim will only feel like they are going through it all again, they will probably will feel it anyway, as legal council will probably be on the abusers side, and I sincerely hope they are not facing a snowflake judge, who will be too bloody soft, in passing sentence.
