The First Minister: Discussions are ongoing on that matter. I do not know whether it would be to the Executive's advantage to take part of the site now when they may be unable to develop one part in isolation from the whole site. The object of the exercise is to get the best value for the community from the sites and to see that the strategic potential is recognised. Therefore, the Executive must tread carefully. I am not surprised that the Member was not prepared to endorse, or at least he omitted to endorse, his party's decision to participate in this important initiative by nominating to the board.

Mr Speaker: I have just been advised that question 5, which stands in the name of Mr McElduff, has been withdrawn and will receive a written answer.

Executive Meeting Agenda

2. Mr Hamilton asked the Office of the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister to outline the agenda for the next meeting of the Executive. (AQO 1521/01)

The Deputy First Minister (Mr Durkan): It has not been the Administration's policy to disclose in advance the agenda of forthcoming Executive meetings.

Mr Hamilton: Subjects that are to be discussed at Executive meetings are not publicly disclosed, but will the Deputy First Minister inform the House if those discussions are likely to be, or have already been, hampered or soured by Sinn Féin's continuing with organised street violence. That party has two Ministers in the Executive and it does not support the PNSI.

Mr Speaker: If I may clarify for the Minister, I think that the Member was referring to the PSNI rather than the PNSI.

The Deputy First Minister: I had guessed that for myself, Mr Speaker. Thank you.

The Executive's future business has not been marred by the difficulties that have been witnessed on the streets. However, everyone must recognise that the future conduct of the process, the Administration and the future good operation of the institutions will be soured if Members do not move to arrest the difficulties that are manifesting themselves on the streets. Those difficulties include unwanted and unwarranted sectarian attacks on vulnerable communities, difficulties that have seen PSNI recruits being subjected to murderous attacks. All those attacks deserve Members' complete and comprehensive condemnation.

There must be no dissemblance about any attacks. No one should try to create an impression that there is some factor that makes the inexcusable excusable or the unjustifiable justifiable. Members must take care in responding to the attacks; they must show leadership and sensitivity. We must condemn what needs to be condemned without dissembling or suggesting that people who should be blamed and criticised for doing something are not to be criticised or blamed because other people were involved. Members must move beyond that sort of "whataboutery" if they are to give people the clear-headed leadership that is needed in circumstances in which hotheads are trying to drive the agenda.

Mr Gallagher: Will the Deputy First Minister tell the House whether the Executive have sent congratulations to the new Irish Government? If not, will they be doing so at their next meeting?

The Deputy First Minister: The First Minister and I, in a recent meeting with the Taoiseach, conveyed our congratulations on the election outcome. As far as I am aware, individual Ministers have offered appropriate congratulations to Ministers who were appointed when the Cabinet was announced last week. The Executive have yet to meet since that announcement, and I do not wish to pre-empt what the Executive might decide.

Mr McCarthy: I am disappointed in the short response from the Deputy First Minister. As I said the last time the pair were before us, if they have nothing to hide they should let the people know what they are discussing. Now they will not even tell us what is on the agenda.

Will the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister consider at their next Executive meeting a matter that the Assembly agreed last year and which has not yet been implemented: the formation of an interdepartmental working group to tackle the scourge of illegal paramilitary flags, sectarian graffiti and kerbstone painting of all sorts?

The Deputy First Minister: Mr Speaker, if I had not been economical with my answer, the Member would not have been able to ask such a long question.

The Executive do not hide their business, and Committees are informed by their Ministers when issues are likely to be discussed at Executive meetings; there is no attempt to withhold information in that way. Last week, the First Minister and I decided that in the next series of Executive meetings we shall be dealing with the needs and effectiveness evaluations. It is not a matter of our doing business in secret; we also produce press statements on our discussions.

The point that the Member raises is not, as far as I am aware, on the agenda for discussion soon at an Executive meeting. However, that does not preclude consideration of it. The Member suggests an issue on which he feels we should focus. Sectarian displays will be considered, given recent ugly and vicious sectarian attacks.

Euro Referendum

3. Mr McGrady asked the Office of the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister what recent discussions have taken place with the Prime Minister and the Chancellor of the Exchequer in respect of scheduling a referendum for the introduction of the euro into Great Britain and Northern Ireland. (AQO 1507/01)

The First Minister: No joint discussions have taken place with the Government on this matter. The scheduling of a referendum is a matter for the Government.

Mr McGrady: I thank the First Minister for his economic answer to an important economic question. Does he agree that membership of the European Union and the single market is of vital interest and importance to industry, manufacturing and commerce in Northern Ireland, as we export 54% of our production — over £2·04 billion? Does he also agree that the further expansion of industry in Northern Ireland is hampered by the difference in currency in the North and South of the island? Will the First Minister use his best endeavours, and those of the Executive, to alleviate that situation or come to a unique arrangement, similar to that in the Assembly but in an economic field?

The First Minister: Mr Speaker, I like to think that my answers are efficient rather than economical, and not economical with the truth, but that is by the by.

The problem with the Member's suggestion is that the euro will be discussed on a United Kingdom basis; therefore the scheduling of such a referendum is not open to us. However, it is right that we discuss the differential rate between sterling and the euro. There is a consensus among economists that sterling is overvalued against the euro, in which case it is not in the interests of any part of the United Kingdom to go into the euro with an overvalued currency because we would lock ourselves into an economically disadvantageous arrangement. A change to the currencies would be beneficial; however, how does one drive down one's currency in an open market? There is no answer to that; it cannot be done to the benefit of one's own economy. There are some inescapable economic factors at work, even though they cause problems occasionally.

2.45 pm

Mr Shannon: Does the Office of the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister agree that a referendum on the euro in Great Britain and Northern Ireland should take into account the impact that the euro's introduction would have on Northern Ireland's economy? Will the First Minister provide details on how much that would cost the economy? Will he further state whether he is in favour of the introduction of the euro?

The First Minister: In any referendum campaign there will be a debate. The factors that the Member has mentioned would not form part of that debate. I regret that I cannot give him any figures on the matters that he has asked me to quantify. Indeed, I am not sure how one would approach that issue.

With regard to the position that individual parties and persons adopt on such a referendum, no doubt some parties will have to follow the party Whip, and some parties will not. It may be akin to the situation that existed in Northern Ireland at the time of the referendum on the UK's continued participation in the European Economic Community in 1975. Who knows what will happen? At present, it is a purely academic question.

Executive Meetings Outside Stormont

6. Mr O'Neill asked the Office of the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister to outline (a) any evaluation made of holding an Executive meeting outside Stormont and (b) any plans to hold further meetings outside Stormont. (AQO 1567/01)

The Deputy First Minister: The Executive are there to serve all the people of Northern Ireland. It is, therefore, appropriate that they hold occasional meetings outside Stormont. However, the benefits of Executive meetings flow from the work that is done. By their nature, and the decisions that they have taken, the Executive have clearly demonstrated their inclusiveness and effectiveness in serving all the people of Northern Ireland. The Executive will consider the location for each meeting, as and when appropriate.

Mr O'Neill: Bearing in mind the warm public response to the first meeting that was held outside Stormont, and the morale boost and profile provided for the chosen venue — the Verbal Arts Centre in Derry — will the Deputy First Minister and his Colleagues consider holding an Executive meeting at the wonderful Saint Patrick Centre in Downpatrick? Does he realise how important an endorsement that would be, particularly in the current tourist season, in which the number of overseas visitors is falling due to a decline in transatlantic airline passenger traffic?

The Deputy First Minister: As I said, the location for each Executive meeting will be for the Executive to decide. To take the Member's point, the meeting that was held in the Verbal Arts Centre in Derry was a useful demonstration of the Executive's ability to get out and about. It was also notable that we expedited our business in perhaps a more ready manner than we do when we meet in our traditional venue. All Ministers are aware of the benefits and would have an eye to holding further meetings elsewhere in the future.

The Executive will decide on future locations and venues, and any decision would depend on whatever other business Ministers had. The meeting in Derry coincided with several Ministers' having business in the area. It was, therefore, convenient. However, I am not stating that the Executive are open to bids for all sorts of locations and venues to come in from every constituency. I know what used to happen when there was talk about decentralisation. I do not want people to replace the call for Government offices in every district town with the proffering of a list of venues for Executive meetings. We shall consider other locations in the future, and we certainly do not rule out the venue suggested by the Member.

Mr S Wilson: Will the Deputy First Minister inform the House whether Belfast city hall has been considered as a venue for the next meeting of the Executive? If so, has the opinion of the First Minister been sought on such a venue? Has he stated whether he would oppose attending a meeting in such a place, in keeping with his party's decision to veto the Sinn Féin Lord Mayor of Belfast, and to ensure that he is isolated and left to himself alone? Perhaps, when the Deputy First Minister answers that question he might state whether, if Mr Maskey were to be nominated for the position of Minister of Education, the First Minister would boycott the Executive in keeping with the manner in which his party Colleagues have treated Mr Maskey in Belfast City Council?

Mr Speaker: I must advise the House and the Deputy First Minister that that is not entirely a ministerial responsibility. However, I invite the Deputy First Minister to answer the rest of the question if he wishes.

The Deputy First Minister: The answer to the first part of the question is "No"; the answer to the second part is, "No"; and the answer to the third part: "Not for me to speculate".

Meeting with Taoiseach

7. Mr A Maginness asked the Office of the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister to make a statement on their recent meeting with the Taoiseach in Dublin.
(AQO 1555/01)

The First Minister: The Deputy First Minister and I met the Taoiseach and the Minister for Foreign Affairs on 27 May in Dublin, in what was our first formal joint meeting with the Taoiseach since we took office in November last year. We congratulated him on his recent success in the general election and welcomed the prospect of working closely with the new Government in the coming months.

In addition to a general political discussion, we discussed preparations for the forthcoming summit meeting of the British-Irish Council, which will be held this Friday in Jersey, and the progress that we hope to make on aspects of the North/South Ministerial Council. We also outlined our thinking on the reinvestment and reform initiative and how we envisaged that being advanced.

Mr A Maginness: Was there any discussion with the new Government about the establishment of a North/South parliamentary forum for British-Irish consultation, as provided for in the agreement?

The First Minister: The matter was touched on, together with several other aspects of the British-Irish Council and the North/South Ministerial Council. We imagine that the matter will be discussed further at the forthcoming plenary meeting of the North/South Ministerial Council in institutional format. The Member will remember that the issue was debated in the Assembly a few weeks ago, and he should bear in mind the result of that debate.

Mr McClarty: Did the First Minister raise the issue of the ongoing Republican behaviour, both North and South, with the Taoiseach? Will he confirm that the Taoiseach shares my opinion that such agitation is inconsistent with the Mitchell principles of peace and non-violence?

The First Minister: The Member, no doubt, noticed that during the press conference immediately after our visit I endorsed the position that the Taoiseach has taken on the Republican movement. As the Member knows, the Taoiseach called on the Republican movement to complete decommissioning before May 2003 and to advance rapidly the disbandment of the IRA.

Interface Conflict (South and East Belfast)

8. Mr Maskey asked the Office of the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister what steps the office has taken to tackle problems of conflict at interface areas in south and east Belfast. (AQO 1551/01)

The Deputy First Minister: We condemn the recent violence in east Belfast that has terrorised both communities. We stand ready to support any local initiative aimed at allowing communities to resolve their differences peacefully. As in north Belfast, the solution will be found only in dialogue.

Our office has provided support through the Community Relations Council for several groups and projects aimed at improving community relations. Those include the work of the Belfast Interface Project with the Inner East Interface Group, whose members are drawn from both the Short Strand and Newtownards Road communities, and the Ballynafeigh Community Development Association's social energy project and partnership in the five areas advice project, which includes Donegall Pass, the Markets, Ballynafeigh and the lower Ormeau Road.

We utterly condemn sectarianism and we will seek to counter it wherever it occurs. The Executive, in the Programme for Government, have committed to putting a cross-departmental strategy and framework in place for promoting community relations and ensuring an effective and co-ordinated approach to sectarian and racial intimidation.

Mr Maskey: Although I welcome some of the initiatives outlined, much of that work has been ongoing for some considerable time.

It is interesting to note that two Ministers in the Executive represent East Belfast and South Belfast respectively. One wears the culture, arts and leisure hat, and the other has the economic portfolio. There are obvious problems with cultural diversity and how that sometimes manifests itself negatively. There are also problems with areas of disadvantage, which both east Belfast and south Belfast endure. Are the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister embarking on any work with those Ministers at departmental level to mainstream those initiatives? Most of those mentioned are not mainstream but temporary and, like the five areas advice project, last year had to fight for a renewal of funding. They could perhaps be mainstreamed through Departments.

The Deputy First Minister: The answer to the question necessarily reflected initiatives in which the Office of the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister is involved. It is not for us to assume that initiatives are taken because the Members for certain constituencies happen to be Ministers. That is neither a proper and sound basis for steering departmental involvement nor for the commissioning of input from particular Departments. All representatives, be they Ministers, MLAs, councillors or community activists, have a duty to provide clear and responsible leadership in facing down sectarian impulses and practices. We have recently witnessed latent violence and blatant sectarianism in different locations, and we must be united in our unambiguous condemnation and repudiation of those. Apart from sectarian attacks, we must also deal with the concerns of people in various communities and interface areas, where concerted action across the devolved Administration might address and improve their problems. With local representatives, we will attempt to find ways of doing that, but not by contriving something on the basis of finding out which Ministers belong to which constituencies. That would not be the concerted, collective, long-term action rightly recommended by the Member.

I take the opportunity to congratulate the Member on his recent elevation to Lord Mayor of Belfast.

Mr Foster: These are indeed sensitive times. Have the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister any plans to encourage Mr Maskey, in his role as Lord Mayor of the city of Belfast, the capital of Northern Ireland, to realise the first citizen's great responsibility to co-operate, and to encourage co-operation, with the Police Service of Northern Ireland and Her Majesty's security forces to enable them to curtail, control and stop the regrettable riotous scenes in parts of this great city and in other places? That would bring peace, harmony and contentment to many troubled residents.

The Deputy First Minister: People have suffered in many ways in all the recent difficulties. There have been incidents in which the dead have not been allowed to rest in peace, the bereaved have been unable to mourn in peace and people have not enjoyed the peace due to them in their own street and in their own homes. We have seen sectarian confrontation and paramilitary violence, with the use of weapons as well. That must be repudiated. Those situations require police action and intervention. The police should be there properly and competently to uphold the rule of law and, as far as possible, to maintain people's peace and safety in difficult circumstances. They deserve our support in their attempts and, where they fail to perform their functions adequately, they deserve our advice and observations as appropriate.

Dr McDonnell: Will the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister agree that all politicians have a crucial role to play in improving community relations by providing constructive leadership and by working to respect all traditions? Will they further agree that at such sensitive times all politicians, particularly Ministers, have a duty to be mindful of what they say and to avoid inflaming situations?

Mr Speaker: I regret that I shall have to ask the Ministers to give an answer to that in writing. The time for questions to the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister is now up.

3.00 pm

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Mr Speaker: Question 7, in the name of Mr Savage, has been withdrawn and will receive a written answer. [Interruption].

Order.

Strangford Ferry

1. Mr McCarthy asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he will increase passenger capacity on the Strangford ferry, particularly during the early morning. (AQO 1536/01)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr P Robinson): The new purpose-built ferry, MV Portaferry II, which was introduced in December 2001, holds 260 persons and 28 cars. That represents a 33% increase in car-carrying capacity over the MV Strangford, which can carry a similar number of passengers but only 21 cars. Normally, MV Portaferry II operates the service, but, if demand justifies it during busy holiday periods and summer weekends, both vessels operate. I understand that it is only rarely, such as during Portaferry gala week, that pedestrian capacity is fully taken up, and even that would occur only for a maximum of four trips each way on the final evening of the event.

The Roads Service has monitored vehicle capacity since the introduction of the new vessel. It found that a capacity problem occurred at Portaferry only when more than one large vehicle, such as an HGV or a low-loader, turned up at the slipway during the busy morning periods. As that happened only on one or two occasions, additional sailings would not be justified. There were no instances of a lack of capacity for the Strangford departures.

I can advise Mr McCarthy that the customer satisfaction survey due to be carried out later this month contains a question on the potential demand for an earlier sailing each day during the working week. The response will be assessed on completion of the survey.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr J Wilson] in the Chair)

Mr McCarthy: I thank the Minister for his comprehensive reply. The problem lies with the early morning sailings that the Minister mentioned briefly. Residents appreciate the recent introduction of the faster MV Portaferry II, resulting in more local people using the ferry service, which is what we want to see. Those customers depend on the ferry to get to work on time and cannot afford to be left at the quay, even for 15 minutes. Will the Minister consider starting sailings 10 minutes earlier and, given that we have a faster vessel, sailings every 10 minutes? Those measures would, I hope, ensure that all customers could get to work on time.

Mr P Robinson: The Member is right: we want to increase the use of the ferry service. I trust that the results of the customer satisfaction survey will indicate whether customers want either an earlier start, by changing the time of the early sailing, or an additional early sailing. The Department will respond to customer needs, and the survey is one way of determining them.

Mrs I Robinson: Will the Minister outline his contingency plans for days on which the Strangford ferry, for whatever reason, cannot operate?

Mr P Robinson: Fortunately, there have been very few teething problems with the new ferry service. In February, there were some mechanical difficulties about which the hon Member made public comments. That showed the Department that there were circumstances in which the MV Portaferry II might be taken out of operation for a short time. Therefore, we retain the MV Strangford, which can operate in its place, and there is another ferry that can be used if that is also out of operation.

One of the issues raised in February, along with the service being taken out of operation without an alternative being available, was the lack of information. Steps have been taken to ensure that information about any change in the services, whether as a result of mechanical problems or weather conditions, is made available. We hope to have the new signage erected, which will greatly assist in that regard, and we hope to extend that over the coming months and years.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Question 2 has been withdrawn and will receive a written response.

Regional Development Strategy

3. Ms Lewsley asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he intends to widen consultation on the regional transport strategy to include greater representation of groups/individuals affected by disabilities. (AQO 1529/01)

Mr P Robinson: Extensive consultation has been carried out over the two years of preparation of the proposed regional transportation strategy. My Department specifically consulted organisations that represent people with disabilities as well as the public. Consultation on the proposed strategy was completed in mid-April, and the comments received from those organisations and others have helped me to finalise the strategy that I intend to bring to the House before the summer recess. A list of those who were consulted in the development of the proposed regional transportation strategy has been placed in the Assembly Library.

Ms Lewsley: Will the Minister outline how he would make transport more widely accessible — without focusing on the disability aspect? What stage has the Committee for Regional Development reached in its discussions on concessionary fares for the disabled?

Mr P Robinson: I share the Member's view that an extension of the concessionary fare scheme would be welcome. Indeed, my Department has communicated with the Department of Finance and Personnel on the matter. Legislation in Britain includes several disability groups, and we would like to have that facility in Northern Ireland legislation. I hope, subject to finance, that we will be able to put forward proposals on the matter. Ms Lewsley may wish to wait until the regional transportation strategy is brought before the Assembly to see how successful we have been in earmarking funds for that purpose.

Mr Shannon: Has the Department considered or agreed additional or increased funding for the disabled that can be included in the transportation strategy?

Mr P Robinson: The proposed regional transportation strategy recognised that a significant increase in the funds available for roads and transportation was necessary across the board. Indeed, we put forward proposals on how we could meet the additional infrastructural need. The strategy, which will be put to the House, will take on board several comments that disability groups and others made.

I had the pleasure of touring north and west Belfast with disability groups on Friday, and I saw the type of problem confronting them. In many instances, it would be difficult to argue the case for putting resources into that activity on a value-for-money basis. However, when one sees the immense difference that funding makes to individuals' lives, I believe that it can be justified. I ask my Friend to wait for a few more weeks — until the strategy is published — to see what we have been able to do.

Mr McFarland: Is the Minister aware of a report by the Omnibus Partnership that is due out shortly regarding Easibus transport for the disabled in north Down? Will he confirm that his Department approves of continuing financial support for those services that are vital for the disabled in Northern Ireland?

Mr P Robinson: I had the honour of going to north Down to meet that group. I must say that they were persuasive and articulate. I heard stories about people who had been almost prisoners in their houses for several years until the service came along and empowered them.

A strong case can be made. Following my meeting with the group, I spoke to my departmental officials, and the Member will see some flavour of the group's influence when the transportation strategy comes forward.

Several similar groups exist. I visited the Peninsula Community Transport organisation with my hon Friend who has just left the Chamber. These groups pick people up from their doors or nearby and provide a beneficial service that I support. The extent to which I can provide financial support will depend on the support that my regional transportation strategy receives from the Assembly.

Fermanagh Roads

4. Mr McHugh asked the Minister for Regional Development what the projected cost is for the maintenance and repair of roads in Fermanagh in the next two years.
(AQO 1563/01)

Mr P Robinson: Maintaining the structure and surface of public roads and footways is a top priority for the Roads Service. The cost of a proper maintenance regime for Northern Ireland's road network is £86 million a year. Unfortunately, the amount made available to my Department for that work falls far short of what is required. There is, therefore, a structural maintenance backlog amounting to £145 million.

That trend is reflected in County Fermanagh. Using the same method of assessment, it is estimated that the structural maintenance requirement for the Fermanagh District Council area is around £6.7 million a year. Current spending on structural maintenance in the area is around £3 million a year.

The proposed regional transportation strategy recognises the importance of maintaining the highway asset and recommends an additional £250 million for structural maintenance across Northern Ireland over the next 10 years. Meanwhile, I will continue to press for additional resources for structural maintenance at every opportunity. My Department has submitted a bid for £40 million under the reinvestment and reform initiative. I can give an assurance that the Roads Service will continue to make the best use of currently available resources to develop and maintain the roads infrastructure.

Mr McHugh: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for his detailed answer. Cross-border traffic in County Fermanagh makes a big impact and causes much damage to the roads, such as the Roslea road and the A509 from Aghalane to Enniskillen. Is the Minister prepared to meet his Southern counterparts to ask them to contribute to the maintenance or upgrading of those roads?

Mr P Robinson: I would be nervous about the proposition that, because traffic comes from another jurisdiction, the relevant Government should contribute to those roads. I might end up with a bill, rather than sending out an invoice to the Republic of Ireland's Government. We do co-operate with the National Roads Authority in the Republic of Ireland, and I am prepared, at any stage, to meet my counterparts in the Irish Republic, whether for co-operation to our mutual advantage or to exchange information beneficial to people in Northern Ireland. I might get a dusty response if I were to go, cap in hand, to ask for money because visitors from the Republic of Ireland come into Northern Ireland.

Reinvestment and Reform Initiative: Bids

5. Mr McMenamin asked the Minister for Regional Development what was the total amount of bids made by his Department under the reinvestment and reform initiative. (AQO 1557/01)

3.15 pm

Mr P Robinson: My Department entered 38 bids under the reinvestment and reform initiative, amounting to £277 million, of which £99 million related to 2002-03 and £178 million for 2003-04.

The detailed list of bids was made available to the Committee for Regional Development, and I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Assembly Library. The list includes 15 projects put forward for support in April under the infrastructure Executive programme fund. The schemes include strategic road improvements on major routes throughout Northern Ireland. These include upgrading the eastern seaboard corridor, including the A8, the Westlink and the M1; schemes on the A1, including converting the road between Newry and the border into a dual carriageway; the building of the proposed Skeoge link; and the completion of the final stage of the Omagh throughpass. I am also seeking significant investment in new buses and have bid for the funds required to continue work on the railways, including the Antrim to Knockmore railway line.

With regard to water and sewerage, I am seeking resources to replace defective water mains and sewers to reduce leakage, improve water quality and enhance environmental protection measures.

Mr McMenamin: I thank the Minister for a comprehensive answer. It is interesting to note that his Department's financial needs exceed the amount available under the first element of the reinvestment and reform initiative. With that in mind, how will the Minister identify potential sources of funding to undertake necessary infrastructure projects?

Mr P Robinson: The total amount of money available under the present bids is £270 million. The Member is right to point out that £200 million is available under the recently announced package, although £125 million of that is derived from a loan. The rest is our own money, but in addition to that is the combined bid from the Department for Regional Development for infrastructure Executive programme funds under each of those areas. I have made bids for the whole pot because my Department's infrastructural needs are greater than those of any other in Northern Ireland. The Department for Regional Development is responsible for the infrastructural needs of Northern Ireland, so it has the prime claim to these funds. I hope that the Assembly will support my bids and that many of them will be successful.

In the case of unsuccessful bids, I must obtain money from my existing departmental expenditure limit (DEL) funding, through private sector initiatives or by means of a charging mechanism. All those other matters will be seen in the context of the regional transportation strategy, or will soon be seen in the context of the water strategy for Northern Ireland.

Mr Close: The Minister has set some of my constituents' hearts a-flutter with his assurance that the continuation of the Knockmore to Antrim railway line is included in the bids. On behalf of my constituents, I am grateful. May I tease the Minister a little more? He submitted 38 bids, but did he prioritise them? Can he assure me that the Antrim to Knockmore railway line was near the top of that list — preferably at the top?

Mr P Robinson: I have serious reservations about the Member ever becoming the Minister for Regional Development if he really thinks, given all the needs of that Department, that the Antrim to Knockmore railway line is my priority. If it were, it would be more important than the roads maintenance problems that we have heard about today, the leakage problems and the need to implement the water strategy, or the transport needs across the Province, including those for the disabled.

I thought that I would provoke Mr Close to his feet by mentioning the Antrim to Knockmore railway line. Let me make it clear that it is not my Department's top priority. If we are to retain the railway line, we need additional funding — we simply cannot make do with what we have. That is all the advice that I have received from the Department. Whether the Assembly is prepared to fund that is a matter for Members, and principally for the Minister of Finance and Personnel.

We have put in the bid, which will test whether the Assembly wishes to keep the railway line open. If it does not, I will have to make alternative arrangements for the safety of passengers.

Bus Lanes: M1 and Saintfield Road

6. Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he has any plans to study the impact of bus lanes on the build-up of traffic entering Belfast via the M1 and the Saintfield Road. (AQO 1527/01)

Mr P Robinson: Surveys have been carried out on the M1 and the Saintfield Road to ascertain whether there has been any increase in bus patronage due to bus lanes being provided on these routes. The surveys show that at peak periods bus patronage has increased by 7% following the introduction of the M1 hard shoulder bus lane and by 10% following the introduction of the southern quality bus corridor on the Saintfield Road. Vehicle flows have remained fairly constant on both those corridors over the past three years.

Mr Hamilton: I thank the Minister for his answer and for the figures showing that bus usage has increased since the introduction of bus lanes. Several people, particularly those from Strangford who use the Saintfield approach to Belfast, have told me that, in their belief, the introduction of bus lanes has increased traffic congestion. Does the Minister plan to advertise the fact that the introduction of bus lanes is resulting in a decrease in car traffic?

Mr P Robinson: I do not think that there is any argument that the introduction of bus lanes leads to an increase in car traffic. It is theoretically possible to have a reduction in the use of cars and an increase in congestion. Experts in my Department tell me that as bus lanes halt before traffic lights and junctions, there should be no congestion — cars can go into the two lanes at that point. However, experience indicates that some drivers are not keen to move into the inner lane, because other drivers may not be willing to let them out again when they get to the other side of the junction. That can cause congestion. If proper use were made of the bus lanes at the traffic lights, where people could alternatively feed out, there would certainly not be an increase in the congestion, and public transport could move more quickly.

The bottom line is that we are going to have congestion, if not gridlock, in the years ahead unless we can encourage more people onto public transport. One way of doing that is to ensure that public transport has a freer and quicker route into the city centre. I hope that Mr Hamilton and others will encourage the use of public transport for that purpose. The Assembly must also provide the funds to update the vehicles and make it more attractive.

Mr S Wilson: Does the Minister agree that one way of encouraging less congestion on the roads, while at the same time maintaining private transport, is to have people use motorcycles rather than motor cars? As an incentive, will the Minister tell us when he intends to permit motorcyclists to use bus lanes?

Mr P Robinson: I am sure that the Member has no vested interest in this matter or he would have declared it to you, Mr Deputy Speaker.

I accept that a significant section of the community uses motorbikes. Some weeks ago I announced to the Assembly that, in principle, I agreed that motorcyclists should be allowed to use bus lanes. However, the procedures are such that it will probably be another six to nine months before we have completed those procedures, and Mr Wilson will be able to get to the Assembly quicker.

Omagh Throughpass: Third Stage

8. Mr Byrne asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the commencement date for the construction of the third stage of the Omagh throughpass; and to make a statement. (AQO 1508/01)

Mr P Robinson: The commencement date for the construction of the third stage of the Omagh throughpass is dependent on the satisfactory completion of the statutory processes and the funding position at that time.

In May 2001, my Department's Roads Service held a public inquiry into the environmental statement, which examined the effects of the proposed scheme. The departmental response to the inspector's report on the inquiry was published in the local press on 17 May 2002.

The Department is also obliged to hold a further public inquiry to deal with objections received in response to the draft direction order. Unless those objections are withdrawn, it is expected that that inquiry will be held later this year. Subject to the successful completion of the direction order process, statutory procedures to procure the land required for the scheme will begin. It would be inappropriate to pre-empt the outcome of the consultation process, but the scheme has a high level of local support, and I hope that, with a fair wind, the statutory processes can be completed during the 2003-04 financial year.

Mr Byrne: I thank the Minister for his comprehensive answer, but I am deeply disappointed by its content, given that the Omagh throughpass proposal has been on the drawing board for 10 years or more. Does the Minister accept that there is great concern in Omagh and the west Tyrone area about the completion of the throughpass and deep anxiety over undue delays thus far? Can the Minister assure me that all statutory procedures will be expedited so that this significant road project for Omagh can be realised as quickly as possible?

Mr P Robinson: I am sympathetic to Mr Byrne's comments. He will begin to appreciate the frustration that I feel when I want to proceed with road schemes but have to go through all the necessary procedural hoops. I have been considering ways in which we might be able to pull together several of those inquiries. In the future, rather than having several separate public inquiries, we could have one that covers two or three issues. The Member will see that those are legal requirements that we must meet. I will, however, consider issues such as whether preparatory work can be done to save time as soon as the statutory processes are completed. In particular, I will consider the acquisition of land.

Use of Harbour Commissioners' Land

9. Mr Maskey asked the Minister for Regional Development, in the light of recent Executive support for shipbuilders Harland & Wolff, what plans he has for the strategic use of land owned/overseen by the Belfast Harbour Commissioners. (AQO 1550/01)

Mr P Robinson: The Belfast Harbour Commissioners have statutory responsibility for the management and development of the harbour estate, which consists of approximately 2,000 acres of land. Around half of that area is dedicated to port activities; the bulk of the remainder of the land is already leased to tenants for a variety of business purposes or has been zoned for development.

As I explained in my statement to the Assembly on 20 May 2002, my Department will be involved in the master-planning process linked to the Titanic Quarter area. However, primary responsibility for that rests with the Belfast Harbour Commissioners and Titanic Quarter Ltd, the joint developers. The development proposals that emerge are likely to entail mixed land use, but they will be the subject of public consultation and the normal statutory planning process. More generally, future land use within the harbour estate will be determined by the outcome of the current Belfast metropolitan area plan process in the context of the regional development strategy.

Mr Maskey: I thank the Minister for that response. I am particularly interested to know what the link will be between the public consultation and the Belfast metropolitan area plan consultation. I would be concerned that the recent support for Harland & Wolff could allow that company to diversify and, perhaps, to develop the site in a piecemeal way that might be contrary to the Minister's plans — which I have no doubt that he wants to carry through.

Mr P Robinson: For the whole of Belfast, there is massive potential in the port as a whole and the development prospects that now exist. As elected representatives, we must ensure that the development that takes place there is in the best interests of Northern Ireland plc. There are several different ways in which that can be done.

First, my Department has a role, as it is part of the group that considers planning proposals. Secondly, the public interest is secured by the presence of the Belfast Harbour Commissioners, who comprise 50% of the developer partnership in the area. In addition, there are the normal planning processes, and Belfast City Council will also have a major role in the consultation.

ENVIRONMENT

Mr Deputy Speaker: I wish to inform Members that question 7, standing in the name of Mr George Savage, has been withdrawn and will receive a written answer. Question 12, standing in the name of Mr Billy Armstrong, has been withdrawn and does not require a written answer.

Planning Service Assessment

1. Rev Robert Coulter asked the Minister of the Environment whether any assessment or monitoring of the operation and functions of the Planning Service has taken place within the past three years. (AQO 1532/01)

The Minister of the Environment (Mr Nesbitt): In December 1999, my predecessor, Sam Foster, inherited a Planning Service that was underfunded and under increased work pressures. It needed more resources and an overhaul of its policies and processes. We have secured additional resources that have enabled 103 staff to be recruited since devolution, with a further planned increase of 50 more staff during 2002-03. We have put in place programmes to deliver comprehensive and up-to-date suites of area plans and are working on 11 plans.

We have also put in place an ambitious programme to update and revise our planning policy statements completely. Each year, we process 7% more planning applications than we did in 1995-96. In addition, the consultation paper 'Modernising Planning Processes', which is the most comprehensive review of planning processes in Northern Ireland since 1973, was published in February 2002.

I am also streamlining and strengthening the enforcement powers available to the Planning Service and have today introduced a Planning (Amendment) Bill to the Assembly. That is a substantial programme of work to improve the operation and functions of the Planning Service. I shall, however, keep the performance of the Planning Service under review.

Rev Robert Coulter: What impact does the Minister expect the consultation paper 'Modernising Planning Processes' to have?

Mr Nesbitt: We aim to have a simpler, faster and more accessible planning process. There are many tensions in the Administration and in the Planning Service. People want speed but they also want public participation. They want better-quality decisions, yet the quantity of planning applications increases. Above all, we are subject to sustainable development, and that means that we must consider the economic well-being of Northern Ireland as well as the protection of the environment.

Mr Poots: What is the backlog? What was the backlog three years ago? Has there been an improvement in reducing the backlog?

Mr Nesbitt: I do not have those statistics available. However, I draw Mr Poots's attention to the increase in planning applications. There are 24,000 planning applications with the Planning Service, and we do not have resources to match them. The number of planning officials has increased by 25% since devolution; that is a measure of our determination to ensure that we have a Planning Service worthy of Northern Ireland and its people.

Townscape Preservation

2. Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of the Environment what assessment the Environment and Heritage Service makes of the need to preserve areas of long-established townscape in its recommendations to the Planning Service.

(AQO 1531/01)

Mr Nesbitt: My Department's policy on protecting the built environment is set out in 'Planning Policy Statement 6: Planning, Archaeology and the Built Heritage'. The Planning Service seeks advice from the Environment and Heritage Service about historic townscapes where they are relevant to a planning application. The Environment and Heritage Service, together with the Planning Service and the Construction Service's landscape architects, undertake historic settlement appraisal as part of area plan preparation. That includes an evaluation of historic landscape and townscape with a view to identifying local landscape policy areas and local policies for the protection and management of change.

It is the responsibility of the Planning Service to identify areas of townscape character to be included in area plans, and to designate conservation areas.

Mr Hamilton: I note that the Minister made reference to historic townscape issues. What criteria are used to define a historic townscape?

Mr Nesbitt: The criteria are complex. Use is made of a pattern of streets, properties and spaces that have evolved over the centuries as society has developed. Consideration is given to archaeological remains, historic buildings, and industrial, maritime, defence and heritage features. All those elements form part of the historic townscape that must be considered.

Mrs I Robinson: A current planning application from North Down Construction Ltd, awaiting a decision from the Planning Service, includes a four-storey apartment block at the Kiltonga site adjacent to the bird sanctuary in Newtownards, which is an area of outstanding natural beauty. Does the Minister agree that that element of the planning application should be refused?

Mr Nesbitt: For the sake of brevity and speed I can neither agree nor disagree. I am not aware of the details of the matter. If the Member writes to me, a precise answer will follow. If she had wished the question to be answered today, she should have given notice.

Radon in Water Supplies (South Down)

3. Mr M Murphy asked the Minister of the Environment whether private water supplies are being regulated for increased levels of radon found in the south Down area.
(AQO 1562/01)

Mr Nesbitt: Although monitoring for radon is not required by the EC Drinking Water Directive or private water supply Regulations, my Department's Environment and Heritage Service has commissioned some monitoring work in the past. In 1995, Queen's University monitored 34 springs and boreholes. Radon levels in a range of 0.9 becquerels a litre to 87 becquerels a litre were found. Those were well below the National Radiological Protection Board's (NRPB) advisory level of 1,000 becquerels a litre.

The Environment and Heritage Service has also let a contract to the NRPB, in co-operation with Queen's University, to carry out further measurements of radon levels in water supplies to 50 homes in areas of increased radon risk. That may include homes in south Down, although the areas have not yet been fully determined. The study is due to be completed by the end of the year and will include public and private water supplies. The results will be analysed to provide information on the possible level of risk posed by radon in drinking water in Northern Ireland. They will be published when the work is complete.

Mr M Murphy: As south Down is a radon-affected area, I suggest that there should be regular monitoring and control of radon in the water supplies to ensure that the people of south Down are not exposed to further cancer-causing factors.

Mr Nesbitt: The Member's use of the word "cancer" in relation to regular monitoring of the water supply in south Down is emotive. Let me be clear about the water supply: the possibility of cancer exists. However, the level of radioactivity in the water would have to reach 1,000 becquerels a litre. There is a 1% to 3% chance of encountering that in one's lifetime. The south Down area does have high radon levels, higher in the air than in the water.

The presence of radon in the air can lead to lung cancer, but 200 becquerels a cubic metre would be required to create a 3% chance of contracting cancer. Fifty per cent of radon occurs naturally. Eighty-five per cent of radioactivity comes from natural sources; only 0.1% comes from Sellafield.

Mr Kennedy: Can the Minister give an assessment of the risk posed by radon, not only in south Down but throughout Northern Ireland.

Mr Nesbitt: I have addressed those points in my answer to Mick Murphy. I gave the percentage chance of contracting cancer and outlined the becquerel levels that need to be in the water and in the air.

Rural Business Planning Applications

4. Mr Dallat asked the Minister of the Environment what action he intends to take to ensure that planning applications for small rural businesses are less problematic after the implementation of the new area plans.

Mr Nesbitt: The Department recognises the importance of small enterprises in diversifying the rural economy. 'Planning Policy Statement 4: Industrial Development' provides the planning policy framework for determining planning applications for small rural businesses. The Department of the Environment is reviewing and updating that policy framework in the light of the provisions of the regional development strategy. The Department will consult widely on draft policies in due course. It is important that the rural community, and the business community as a whole, responds to that consultation. The area development plan process also provides opportunities for the needs of the rural community to be considered.

The Planning Service consults the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development on all area plans. There are opportunities for the public to comment on the future of their local areas. The processes of preparing area development plans and planning policy statements will enable the needs of small rural businesses to be put to the Department of the Environment and fully considered against environmental and other considerations.

Mr Dallat: I thank the Minister for his positive answer. He obviously agrees with me that there is an urgency to ensure that as few obstacles as possible are placed in the way of industries locating in rural areas.

Does the Minister agree that, given the decline in agriculture and the need to create alternative employment for rural dwellers, he needs to be in regular contact with his Colleagues in other Departments so that they are not only singing from the same hymn sheet but also singing in the same key?

Mr Nesbitt: I agree that agriculture is going through a difficult time. The Department of the Environment needs to be in regular contact with other Departments. I am in regular contact with the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. Indeed, I was due to have a meeting with Mr John Gilliland, the new president of the Ulster Farmers' Union, yesterday, but I was unable to attend.

Seamus Heaney House

5. Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment whether directions under article 4 of the Planning (General Development) Order (Northern Ireland) 1993 were used in respect of the former home of Seamus Heaney. (AQO 1568/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The Department of the Environment did not invoke the provisions of article 4 of the Planning (General Development) Order (Northern Ireland) 1993, which allows the withdrawal of certain permitted development rights, in respect of the former home of Seamus Heaney. Current legislation does not include demolition within the definition of development. Consequently, consent is not required for demolition, except in conservation areas and for listed buildings. The provisions of article 4 did not apply to this property as it was not in a conservation area and was not listed.

Mr M Robinson: The Department of the Environment insisted that it had tried to contact the owner of the Heaney house to facilitate listing. That is not a statutory requirement and is at odds with the listing procedure in England where a building is under threat. Does the Department intend to continue with this practice, bearing in mind the inherent danger of premature demolition?

Mr Nesbitt: There are two parts to the Member's question, so I will be brief. The Member asked whether trying to contact the owner is part of the procedure. It was what I was faced with when I first heard of the likely demolition that Tuesday evening in May. I had one of three choices. I could opt for doing nothing, or, as some people suggested, I could go for a spot listing and test the law. However, as a Minister, I did not think that I should be seen to be testing the law or running the chance of breaking the law. The third option was to try to create space and use a third party.

I viewed it as axiomatic — the developer knew what we were about. He had no direct contact with me but I am confident that he knew what we were doing because we informed him through the third party.

Will the situation continue? Mr Mark Robinson is not aware, and he should be, that I introduced a Planning (Amendment) Bill today, which will include what is euphemistically known as "spot listing". It is a building preservation notice, which enables work to be halted, after which there will be six months to decide, through the proper procedures, whether a building is worthy of listing. Having listened to Members who spoke in the Assembly and outside, I am sure that the provision will be fully approved by the Assembly.

Derry City Walls

6. Mrs Courtney asked the Minister of the Environment whether he will support the application to promote the city walls in the Derry City Council area as a world heritage site, in view of their historical importance.

(AQO 1523/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The Department of Culture, Media and Sport takes lead responsibility in the UK for the World Heritage Convention. In June 1999 the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, Chris Smith, published the current UK tentative list of sites likely to be put forward for world heritage status. The list included 25 sites in the UK and its overseas territories. One Northern Ireland site, Mount Stewart gardens in County Down, was included.

The tentative list has a planned life of five to 10 years, and a review of the list, which may lead to new proposals, will take place no sooner than 2006. I will be happy to consider any case that Derry City Council wishes to make for including the city's walls on the list.

However, world heritage sites are required to have “outstanding universal value”, and the World Heritage Convention has stated that walled cities are already well represented on the world heritage list.

Mrs Courtney: That is a disappointing answer. When Chris Smith first came over here he indicated that the city walls should have world heritage status. I have asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure about this matter, but it is not within his remit.

Derry has put a substantial amount of money aside in trying to gain world heritage site status. The Minister’s answer is disappointing because we had hoped that we would at least have had our foot on the ladder long before 2006.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Does the Member have a question in mind?

Mrs Courtney: Yes, but after the Minister’s answer I am not sure about the question that I was going to ask. This matter will require money. Is the Minister prepared to put money into the initiative once we get the city walls onto the UK tentative list?

Mr Nesbitt: That is a good question. I respect and empathise with the magnitude of Derry’s city walls and the part that they played in history. They were built between 1613 and 1618 during the plantation of Ulster. Londonderry is one of the last walled cities in Europe, and the walls constitute the largest historic monument in care in Northern Ireland. Since 1957 the Department has contributed £10 million towards the upkeep of the walls — so we value them. We are mindful of the terrorist activity during which they have been sustained.

Mr Hay: I support the Member for Foyle, Mrs Courtney, on this matter. The issue has been raised by my council over many years. There is total support for trying to have the city walls designated as a world heritage site. It would be the jewel in the crown for tourism in the city of Londonderry. As the Minister said, the walls have played a historic role in the city, and he is correct in saying that it is the only complete walled structure anywhere in Europe.

Today, it is still possible to walk round the entire length of the walls.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order. Does the Member have a question in mind?

Mr Hay: The Minister’s support for the council’s application to make the walls a world heritage site would be important. If the Minister has not walked the walls, the council invites him to do so. That might give him a better understanding of the walls’ historic importance.

Mr Nesbitt: I see a few smiles in the Chamber at the idea of my walking the walls. I understand the historic and cultural significance of the walls to the city of Londonderry.

However, I want to point out the difficult nature of the application. Twenty-five areas are being considered by the United Kingdom Government, through which Northern Ireland makes its nominations. The gardens at Mount Stewart have been nominated, although the earliest time that it will be considered — if it is considered — is 2003-04. The United Kingdom Government states that they will make only one nomination each year, as about 400 sites have been nominated for designation.

Londonderry must compete against walled towns such as Caernarfon and Verona for designation. These are the criteria for a world heritage site of outstanding universal value.

Mr McClarty: I have a great deal of sympathy with the question from Mrs Courtney, and the speech from Mr Hay. However, does the Minister agree that the walls of Derry have great historic and cultural significance for all the people of Northern Ireland and that they form part of our shared heritage and must, therefore, be accorded fitting recognition?

Mr Nesbitt: I empathise totally with the Member’s comments about the historic and cultural nature of the walls and the shared heritage that they represent. If we all in Northern Ireland shared, understood and empathised with one another’s culture and heritage, we truly would become one community, but a community that respected diversity.

Planning Appeals in North Down

8. Ms Morrice asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (a) the total number of planning applications appealed by property developers in north Down in the past year; and (b) the percentage that were successful.

(AQO 1513/01)

Mr Nesbitt: Between 1 April 2001 and 31 March 2002, 13 appeals were made to the Planning Appeals Commission from property developers for proposed developments in the North Down Borough Council area. Two of those 13 appeals were withdrawn, and five have not been decided to date. Of the six that were decided, all were allowed by the Planning Appeals Commission. The Department has been granted leave for a judicial review of one of the six.

Ms Morrice: I tried to jot down those figures speedily as the Minister went through them. I believe that I am right in saying that most of the appeals were decided in the developers’ favour: two were withdrawn, five were undecided and the others went through. In the light of that majority, would the Minister consider allowing residents to have a say in the matter by introducing a third-party appeal system in the Bill that was introduced this morning?

Mr Nesbitt: The Member is correct. There were 13 appeals — six were decided in favour of the developers, against advice. Queen's University has carried out research for the Department into third-party appeals in the Republic of Ireland and how they might affect Northern Ireland. The result of that tentative research is that third-party appeals seem to add to delays. Third-party appeals in the South can take about 11 months longer to deal with. That would have a considerable resource implication for Northern Ireland.

Our current level of consultation and participation is viewed as reasonably comprehensive. However, we are examining that in more detail. I assure the House that, when the research has been considered in detail, it will be passed as soon as possible to the Committee for the Environment so that it and the Department can interface on the important issue of third-party appeals.

Planning Approval

9. Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of the Environment what steps are taken by the Planning Service to ensure that work carried out is in accordance with the approval given. (AQO 1548/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The Department approved 20,092 planning applications in the last financial year. Given that volume, it is not practicable for all planning approvals to be comprehensively monitored to ensure compliance. Experience confirms that the majority of developers are law-abiding and comply with the regulations. Where deviation occurs, it is within acceptable statutory and policy limits. When members of the public notify the Department of unauthorised development, it is investigated. The Department will seek in the first instance to achieve a satisfactory resolution by negotiation. Where that is not possible, the Department has statutory powers to initiate formal enforcement action.

'Planning Policy Statement 9: The Enforcement of Planning Control' sets out the Department's general policy approach to its enforcement powers. Where the Department considers it expedient to take enforcement action, it is commensurate with the breach of planning control to which it relates.

Today, I introduced a Bill to the Assembly that, among other things, will considerably strengthen the enforcement powers available to the Department. The Department is recruiting additional staff to bolster the development control and enforcement functions of the Planning Service.

Mr McCarthy: I admire and congratulate the Minister on his optimism.

To my knowledge, the Strangford constituency has one enforcement officer to cover a large area. Builders, developers and others are aware of that and seem to get away with chopping and changing the size, shape and design of buildings, to the very great annoyance of the locals, while the individual can be harassed by planning staff. Will the Minister assure us that the plans that are submitted to his Department will be strictly adhered to, if and when a neighbour or a concerned person reports that they are not being adhered to? Does the Minister consider it an offence to commence work without planning permission or building approval?

Mr Nesbitt: I will answer the Member's last question first. The law states that it is not an offence to commence building, provided retrospective approval is sought.

It does no harm to put it on the record that there are six divisions in Northern Ireland that deal with planning. Four of those divisions have three officials dealing with enforcement, and the other two have four each. A total of 20 officials in the Planning Service deal with enforcement. In one year, 2,849 cases were brought before the system, 1,485 of which have been resolved. The number of planning staff has increased by 25%. Such was the measure of resources devoted to the environment and to planning under direct rule. I have said before that it was viewed as a Cinderella.

Since devolution, the budget of £15 million has gone up to £18.5 million. Another £1.9 million is to be used in 2002-03, and 50 more staff will be recruited. We are committed to delivering an efficient, transparent and open planning system and to having the correct laws in place and ensuring that they are enforced.

Seamus Heaney House

10. Mr Close asked the Minister of the Environment to make a statement on his Department's interventions in the case of the house on Ashley Avenue, Belfast, that was once occupied by Nobel Laureate Seamus Heaney. (AQO 1539/01)

11. Ms Lewsley asked the Minister of the Environment to make a statement on the demolition of Seamus Heaney's former home at 16 Ashley Avenue, Belfast. (AQO 1538/01)

17. Mr Maskey asked the Minister of the Environment what steps his Department took to designate the one-time home of Nobel Laureate Seamus Heaney as a building of historic and cultural heritage. (AQO 1549/01)

Mr Nesbitt: With your permission, Mr Deputy Speaker, I will take questions 10, 11 and 17 together, as they are all similar.

Under the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991, my Department may list a building on the basis of its having special architectural or historic interest.

4.00 pm

The Lisburn Road area of Belfast was surveyed during the late 1970s as part of the first survey of all buildings in Northern Ireland. The former home of Seamus Heaney at 16 Ashley Avenue did not meet the listing criteria at that time. In October 1999 the Belfast Civic Trust requested that the building be spot listed. My Department does not have spot-listing powers but seeks them through the Planning (Amendment) Bill introduced earlier today. Notwithstanding that, the Environment and Heritage Service carried out an external appraisal. It concluded that, although it was a fine Victorian house, a full appraisal under the second survey of all buildings, then under way, was not appropriate as the building was not of sufficient special interest to meet the listing criteria.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Time is up.

SUPPLY RESOLUTION FOR THE 2002-03 MAIN ESTIMATES

Debate resumed on motion:

That this Assembly approves that a sum not exceeding £4,962,077,000 be granted out of the Consolidated Fund, for or towards defraying the charges for Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly, the Northern Ireland Audit Office and the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints for the year ending 31 March 2003 and that resources, not exceeding £5,710,516,000 be authorised for use by Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly, the Northern Ireland Audit Office and the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints for the year ending 31 March 2003 as summarised for each Department or other public body in columns 3(a) and 3(b) of Table 1.3 in the volume of the Northern Ireland Estimates 2002-03 that was laid before the Assembly on 31 May 2002. — [The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Dr Farren).]

The Chairperson of the Committee for the Environment (Rev Dr William McCrea): I note from the totals of each Department's Estimate that the Department of the Environment is allocated 1.2% of the total resources available. During the debate on the spring Supplementary Estimates on 11 February 2002, I outlined to the House how the Committee for the Environment scrutinised the Department of the Environment's budget for 2002-03. The Minister of Finance and Personnel said then that he was impressed by that process. Unfortunately, the scrutiny concluded that there was little scope or flexibility in the Department's budget to make savings or to switch resources.

I recognise the case for increasing expenditure in some Departments; however, when will proper funding be allocated to secure and sustain Northern Ireland's environment, its primary asset, before it is too late? A sizeable increase in the Department of the Environment's budget of £115 million would be marginal overall but would have a significant and lasting impact on the protection of the environment. On the estimated figures a fraction of 1% would be meaningful, and I ask the Minister to examine the matter seriously.

Members will recall that the proposal to cut £2 million from the 2002-03 budget grant for local government resources was successfully fought by my Committee. That cut, which would have applied only to the 16 poorest councils, would have been a major injustice. The Committee was therefore horrified to learn in April 2002 that the restoration of the £2 million grant was not rolled forward into future years. I trust that that was an oversight and that the Minister will correct it by recommending that the Department of the Environment's budget meet the restoration of that £2 million. Furthermore, district council resource grant levels have been cut as a result of the impact of the current indicative minima, and it is imperative that a bid for £4.4 million to restore those levels is met. Such cuts are in direct contradiction of the Executive's policy of targeting social need.

In conclusion, and speaking as a Member, I join others who spoke about the wastage of public funds by those who wreck and destroy our country. Every Member should remember that many of those who hold Executive positions have not only a great influence on that but carry a large part of responsibility for it, so I trust that we will call on the thugs and gangsters who are wrecking the Province and costing millions of pounds to stop and that our security forces will be allowed to take the necessary measures to bring those who have carried out such actions to immediate justice.

Mr Morrow: Having listened to Robert McCartney, Sammy Wilson, William McCrea and my Colleague Séamus Close, I suspect that most of what needs to be said has been said. They dealt very adequately with many of the issues that exercise the minds of people who are not Assembly Members. If nothing else is learnt from the debate, I hope that Members will realise that what we have is not acceptable for good government here.

We are told constantly that the Assembly is good news for Northern Ireland and that the ordinary man in the street — although I do not like that term because I do not understand who the ordinary man is — feels that he is better off today than he was three or four years ago. I suspect that if Members told people in the street that today, they would look at them in dismay and think that they were being spoken to in a foreign language, because they do not see the good results that were supposed to flow from the creation of the Northern Ireland Assembly.

Northern Ireland has 11 extravagant and expensive Departments, and most people do not understand why, but then the Belfast Agreement had more to do with political expediency than with good government. It behoves everyone in this country, and especially the major parties, to learn the lesson quickly that we must get back to democracy. We must demonstrate to everyone, whether dissenter or supporter, that good government will benefit everyone.

My Colleague Sammy Wilson touched on that when he said that approximately 75 police officers had been forced out of their homes as a result of the IRA break-in at Castlereagh. That is but the tip of the iceberg — security has been breached, and we do not know where it will end. The cycle has begun again: an attempt was made on the life of a young Catholic police constable when his car was booby-trapped. There are those in the House who tell us that they will cherry-pick the agreement and take all the things that benefit them. However, those same Members will make their presence felt in another way, in respect of issues that they feel that they cannot support.

Rev Dr William McCrea: Does Mr Morrow agree that, in the light of the incident in Ballymena, it is a shame that Sinn Féin/IRA Members of the Executive told people to treat the Police Service in the same way as they treated the RUC? If that is the advice from a party that sits on the Executive, how can we expect anything other than what happened in Ballymena?

Mr Morrow: I thank the Member for that point — I could not agree with him more. In Dungannon at the weekend those who wanted to take the law into their own hands engaged in more brutal activities. Of course, this is not the first time that that has happened; Barney McDonald was recently murdered there. When you ask the police who they think was involved, they say that they are confused and do not know. The dogs in the street know who carries out such atrocities, but the forces of law and order do not, despite the fact that it is patently obvious to anybody with half a head on his shoulders.

Mr McCartney: I am grateful to the hon Member for giving way. I am sure that he and his party would similarly condemn those involved in the attack on St Columbanus's College in Bangor, where tens of thousands of pounds worth of damage was done to a school that has been at the forefront of community education — almost 50% of each of the communities are represented on its roll.

Mr Morrow: I thank the Member for that point and for the useful information that is relevant to the debate.

The infrastructure of our water, sewerage, roads, housing, and so forth is in dire need of capital expenditure. However, every time we have a Budget report and discussion on these issues, the Minister of Finance and Personnel puts his hands up and says that we do not have the money, although I do not blame him for that. When will a concerted programme be put in place to tackle our lack of infrastructure? Can anybody say that we have a better infrastructural base or guidelines that could put a better infrastructure in place than we had under direct rule? The answer is that we do not.

In his earlier address, Mr McCartney gave some of the reasons for that. He highlighted the inadequacies of the Barnett formula, and his points were realistic. Until we get down to tackling that formula, the Minister will continue to speak to the House in the same vein, and he will be continually embarrassed that his hands are tied and that he cannot make the necessary improvements to the infrastructure. I hope that when he makes his winding-up speech he will tell the House clearly that he is not about to introduce a new taxation system. That is not what the people of Northern Ireland want or deserve, and they should not have to carry that burden.

Rev Dr William McCrea: It is true that the Minister tells us that he does not have money, and the chaos with waiting lists means that people's lives are in danger. However, does my hon Friend understand why the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety recently returned more than £30 million because it was unspent? Something is surely wrong with that.

Mr Morrow: I thank the Member for that point, and I have no doubt that the Minister will want to deal with it in detail. I am sure that he listened intently to my Colleague.

This debate is one of the most important to come before the Assembly. Is it not significant that the Benches of the Ulster Unionist Party, for instance, which signed the Belfast Agreement, are empty and its Members are unconcerned about the matter?

4.15 pm

Members of the SDLP, which has been able to muster only one representative for the debate, are not concerned. Sinn Féin/IRA claims that it likes parts of the agreement; it will take the bits that it wants and will leave the rest — but it will still be in government. It has one Member in attendance, part-time, this afternoon.

It behoves everyone to take stock. What is going on among those who claim that they want the agreement? Where are all the bodies? We have empty pews right round the Chamber. That is a downright disgrace. Perhaps the situation reflects an honesty and reality that is creeping in: these parties have no stomach for this; they do not want to be identified with the Minister or to give him moral support. It looks as if they are deserting the ship and leaving the Minister to shore up the unshorable.

How much longer must we tolerate a situation where every excuse under the sun is made to explain why things cannot and will not be done? Even the First Minister could not find it in his heart to attend and back his Finance Minister. He too is conspicuous by his absence. If the debate means anything, the signatories to the agreement should be in the Chamber to give the Minister moral support rather than say “Get out there and get on with it; we know that you have a bad job to shore up, but we cannot help you because we have landed you in it.” At the next finance debate will the Minister ask his Colleagues in the Executive where they were when he was arguing his best case, as none of them was present to lend him moral support? I see that Mr McFarland is returning to the Benches; in fairness to him, he was present earlier.

If anything is gained from the debate, I hope that it is that the present system is no longer acceptable — it is out of date. We expect much better.

Dr Farren: Several Members have regretted the low attendance. I too regret that the attendance is not as good as I had anticipated for such an important motion. However, some of my Executive Colleagues are engaged in important Executive business. The First Minister is attending a meeting with the Minister for Regional Development, from which I have just returned. That meeting is dealing with important issues concerning the First Minister’s strategic vision for his responsibilities and the means whereby that vision could be realised through various forms of funding. We should inform ourselves before accusing other Members for their absence. I defend the prior engagement of the First Minister. We could have asked why the Minister for Regional Development was not present. He is discussing matters in the Supply resolution, given the significant funding allocations made for his responsibilities. I recognise that his involvement in those discussions with the First Minister is important. I caution Members before they make wild allegations and draw inferences about the absence of our Assembly Colleagues.

The Supply resolution before the House marks an important stage in the budgetary process. It is the basis upon which the legislature, in the form of the Assembly, authorises the spending of Departments, the Assembly, the Northern Ireland Audit Office and other bodies to enable them to carry out their functions. The figures before the House are based upon the Budget that we agreed last December. It is important to recognise the stage that we have reached in the budgetary process — we are nearly at the end. If Members were serious about pursuing their suggestions for what could or should have been included, they would have raised them and put them to the House before we voted on the Budget last December.

The authorisation of the spending proposed in that Budget is one of the Assembly’s most fundamental responsibilities. It holds Departments to account as they seek to deliver on their Programme for Government priorities.

(Madam Deputy Speaker [Ms Morrice] in the Chair)

Rev Dr William McCrea: Will the Minister give way?

Dr Farren: I do not think that it is normal to give way during a winding-up speech, but I will.

Rev Dr William McCrea: I am delighted to inform the Minister that it is perfectly normal to give way, but I thank him. The Minister said that Members could have raised some of these points last December. Is he aware that we tried to table 12 amendments, but each one was ruled out of order, and we were not permitted to bring those before the House?

Dr Farren: We agreed on and voted for the Budget last December. Today, we are authorising the expenditure that arises from an agreed Budget.

In many, although not all, respects, this has been a useful and informed debate. Members have made many points, some of which were useful and some of which give cause for reflection and further consideration by my Department, and in discussions, particularly with the Committee for Finance and Personnel. I will try to answer and comment on as many points as possible, and I will follow up in writing any that I am unable to address today.

Several Members expressed concern about the general clarity and the lack of understanding by Members of the format and content of Estimates. I encounter this problem every time such a presentation is made to the House. I accept that this is a fairly complex subject, and for that reason I offered the Committee for Finance and Personnel detailed briefings for Members from my officials. When I reflected on the statement that I made this morning and considered what was alleged to be its jargon, I found that few technical terms were used. Terms that could be described as technical were repeated for the allocations to each Department. My officials provided a seminar on 22 May to help Members to understand the details of the Estimates and to appreciate and understand the technicalities associated with their presentation.

Many Members may feel that they do not need such a session, and I am happy to acknowledge that some comments today indicate that some Members do understand this fairly complex process. However, it is difficult to know how to promote better understanding of the Estimates when initiatives are not supported. I would facilitate a further session were Members to indicate their willingness to attend. I believe that attendance at the seminar was in single figures — and was closer to one than to nine.

Mr Close and Mr McCartney also referred to the difficulty in making year-on-year comparisons in allocations. That is difficult, but we are still in the early days of the new structures introduced through the Good Friday Agreement. We have also introduced resource accounting and budgeting, which has seen a change from cash to resource accounting. I am confident that, over time, that will lead to the production of better information and improved accountability. Committees provide a real opportunity for more considered and detailed examination of such aspects of our budgeting system. Indeed, in the general presentation at the beginning of, and during the course of, the budgetary process leading up to the Vote on Account, comparisons are made between what is to be allocated in the coming year and what was previously allocated, so that Members can appreciate such increases and decreases as may be proposed.

Sammy Wilson suggested that we could finance our infrastructure investment from efficiency savings, or by reducing the cost of government. I certainly agree that we need to look hard at our administration costs as a means of addressing the deficiencies of our public services. That must be an important element of the reform dimension of the reinvestment and reform initiative. Several Members said that there was extravagance in having 11 Departments. The services are essentially the same as those delivered by the previous six Departments, and will continue to need to be delivered. I do not regard those services as an extravagance in any sense. Given that Mr Morrow was a Minister responsible for the delivery of some of those services, I hardly imagine that he would wish to describe any of the services for which he was responsible as an extravagance of any kind.

Mr Morrow: Will the Minister give way?

Dr Farren: I have already given way, and I do not intend to give way any further in the course of this winding-up speech.

The scale of savings that might be realised would fall short of meeting our needs, and that is already made clear by the total volume of bids made by departmental Ministers under the first round of the reinvestment and reform initiative. Almost £1.5 billion worth of bids have been lodged against a total fund of £270 million. Indeed, the Department for Regional Development's bids alone total £417 million, and £277 million in 2002-03 and 2003-04.

It is important to point out to Members that the Treasury has laid down clear principles under which the new borrowing power will operate. If expenditure funded by borrowing is to be treated as falling outside our departmental expenditure limit, a clear relationship must exist between the activity concerned and the revenue stream, so that borrowing is wholly self-financing.

4.30 pm

Therefore, borrowing under the proposed new powers will have to be paid for from additional income by way of local revenues, and it will be up to the Executive and the Assembly to decide whether to borrow and by how much. That does not rule out the need to root out waste and inefficiency as a means of improving our public services.

Several Members have referred to the unnecessary expenditure incurred under the scheme for the purchase of evacuated buildings (SPED). The House will appreciate that SPED is an area that is not amenable to normal forecasting by the Department for Social Development. Normal practice has been that the needs of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive for the operation of SPED are addressed in-year as part of the routine monitoring arrangements by the Executive. As in the past, we will aim to try to avoid disruption to the normal housing programme as a result of SPED, subject to the availability of the necessary resources.

Several Members from all sides of the Assembly have spoken about the serious impact of the current street disorder on our public services. I want to take this opportunity to add my own condemnation of those who are inciting or inflaming the situation. I appeal to those in situations of influence to do all they can to reduce tension and fear. Every pound we must spend on rehousing people, treating the injured or repairing the damage to our buses and houses is a pound less at our disposal for our health, education and other services.

I agree strongly with those who say that we must root out waste and inefficiency. In the Programme for Government we underline the importance of modernising government and of improving the efficiency and effectiveness of public services. With the introduction of resource budgeting, public service agreements and service delivery agreements, we have laid much of the information basis for that change. That should enable us to get better information about the true costs of services and particularly what outputs and outcomes are being achieved.

The review of public administration over the coming months, examining all aspects of administration including the quality of service, should provide a major opportunity for improvement. The Assembly will, of course, have an opportunity to consider the outcome of that review. Likewise, the new strategic investment body should be an important vehicle for helping to deliver public service reform. However, reform must go wider. We must focus more on delivering services and on placing customer service and the needs of front-line staff first.

I do not want to see public sector budgets increase in the future without applying reform as a key condition. The public needs to know that the best management techniques are being used to deliver services, and that the minimum resource necessary is being used in internal administration.

Éamonn ÓNeill spoke of the need for the Executive to learn from their experience and analyse how we might do things better and improve the quality of our public services. Others have spoken of the need to advance the reform agenda and deliver real improvements in efficiency. We are tackling the challenge actively through our programme of needs and effectiveness evaluations. Those six studies cover around 75% of all our expenditure programmes, and the reports, which will be presented to the Executive and the Assembly over the coming weeks, will give a clear indication of the effectiveness of our current spending patterns. We will use the outcome of those studies to inform our decisions when we come to construct the Budget for 2003-04 and beyond in September.

Mr McCartney asked about the rates. I thank him for his long, erudite contribution on this issue, and I look forward to seeing his submission to the rating policy review.

[Interruption].

I am glad to hear that some Members find this rather amusing.

Mr Morrow: It is easier to laugh —

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order.

Dr Farren: I repeat that what happens to the rates here will depend on what the Executive and the Assembly decide over the next number of years. Consultation on the review of rating policy has begun, and that will affect the development of the policy.

Further work is needed to finalise the details of the arrangements for the Executive's access to borrowing in a way that is demonstrably fair to ratepayers here and across the water. The details will be made known when the position is clearer.

There will be no major increases in local revenue until after full consultation and until a fairer system for revenue-raising has been developed to replace the present system. The pace of change will be subject to approval by the Assembly.

The impression has been given that the consultation is closed to forms of revenue-raising other than the rating system. Mr Close is a member of the Committee for Finance and Personnel, and he will have read the consultation document. He will know that it contains a very clear invitation to those who believe that alternatives should be considered to develop those alternatives and put them forward as part of the submissions to the review of the rating system. I look forward to hearing his party's views on that. The same invitation is extended to all other Members and to the public at large. I trust that consultations that are open to all in our society are seen as a necessary part of the democratic process.

I do not subscribe to the view put forward by Mr Close that we should target our consultations only at those whom we believe might have most to offer or be most affected. All consultation needs to be open and transparent, and we need to involve all those who wish to contribute. We must ensure that they can make their contributions. That is part of what the democratic process is about. Any attempt to limit that consultation is a denial of every citizen's right to participate as much as possible in the decision-making process in this society.

The key political concession won by the Executive is the ability to borrow. To what extent and within what time frame we use that power is up to the people of Northern Ireland and will be subject to full democratic debate in the Executive, the Assembly and the wider community.

Mr McCartney spent a long time explaining that we did not require extra resources to pay for services and then went on to recommend an increase in income tax.

Mr McCartney: I did not recommend an increase.

Dr Farren: Mr McCartney certainly made a very strong suggestion in that direction.

Mr Close sought clarification about the funding for road safety and the Environment and Heritage Service. The reduction in road safety funding reflects the transfer of certain enforcement functions to the Driver and Vehicle Testing Agency and some licensing functions to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency. The basic road safety functions have not been reduced.

The Environment and Heritage Service has received additional funds to meet the increasing cost of transposing numerous EC Directives into Northern Ireland legislation. The most notable of those cover air and water pollution prevention and control, and waste management.

We must consider our priorities carefully in the forthcoming spending review. That is what the Programme for Government and the Budget processes are all about. We have the right, if we choose, to spend more on some areas than is spent in England. However, the corollary is that we would have to spend less in other areas than would otherwise be possible. However, we shall not be able simply to ask for more.

I thank Members for their valuable contributions not only in this debate but through the Committees, correspondence and questions posed here on other occasions. If I have not responded to any substantive point I shall be glad to reply in writing or ask the relevant Minister to do so.

The Estimates bring together the effects of the decisions that we have already made. In this case, the basis for the Estimates is the Budget that we agreed in December 2001. Within the time constraints in which we must work, we have made considerable efforts to ensure that the Estimates have been available in time for proper and considered scrutiny. I hope that that has been helpful. We shall continue to improve on our procedures so that Members can feel at ease with the process and familiar with its language, and, by so doing, make the most-informed decisions that can possibly be made.

Madam Deputy Speaker: I remind Members that the Supply resolution motion is subject to section 63 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, which means that the vote will take place on a cross-community basis.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved (with cross-community support):

That this Assembly approves that a sum not exceeding £4,962,077,000 be granted out of the Consolidated Fund, for or towards defraying the charges for Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly, the Northern Ireland Audit Office and the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints for the year ending 31 March 2003 and that resources, not exceeding £5,710,516,000 be authorised for use by Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly, the Northern Ireland Audit Office and the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints for the year ending 31 March 2003 as summarised for each Department or other public body in columns 3(a) and 3(b) of Table 1.3 in the volume of the Northern Ireland Estimates 2002-03 that was laid before the Assembly on 31 May 2002.

Adjourned at 4.42 pm.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

Tuesday 11 June 2002

The Assembly met at 10.30 am (Mr Speaker in the Chair).

Members observed two minutes' silence.

SENIOR CIVIL SERVICE REVIEW

Mr Speaker: I have received notice from the Minister of Finance and Personnel that he wishes to make a statement on the Senior Civil Service review.

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Dr Farren): With your permission, Mr Speaker, I would like to make a statement on behalf of the Executive about the independent review report 'Appointment and Promotion Procedures for the Senior Civil Service of the Northern Ireland Civil Service' and the intention to open it up for public consultation.

The Executive agreed in late 2000 to commission an independent review. The review became a formal commitment in the Programme for Government that signified the importance which the Executive place on ensuring equality of opportunity for all. The review team, under the chairmanship of Lord Ouseley, was formally commissioned by the then Minister of Finance and Personnel, and the team commenced work in March 2001.

Lord Ouseley is managing director of Different Realities Partnership Ltd and a former chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality. The team comprised: Rosheen Callender, national equality secretary of the Services, Industrial, Professional and Technical Union (SIPTU); Dr Trefor Campbell, managing director of Moy Park Ltd; Sir Bob Cooper, former chairperson of the Fair Employment Commission; Judith Eve, chairperson of the Civil Service Commissioners for Northern Ireland; Prof Gerry McKenna, vice-chancellor of the University of Ulster; and Dr Monica Wilson, chief executive of Disability Action.

The team operated under the terms of reference that had been agreed by the Northern Ireland Executive as follows: to review the effectiveness of current policies, practices and procedures concerning appointment to, and promotion within, the Senior Civil Service to ensure that they facilitate the business objectives of Ministers and Northern Ireland Departments by providing for the timely and efficient filling of posts with appropriate staff; to promote the Northern Ireland Civil Service (NICS) goal of being fully representative of the community that it serves by tackling under-representation in the NICS as quickly and as effectively as possible; to address any identified obstacles to fair participation by all sectors of the community; to match best practice in other major public and private sector bodies in Northern Ireland and beyond; to examine the roles of officials and Ministers at each stage of the selection process; to consider the appropriate level of independent involvement, taking account of the statutory role of the Civil Service Commissioners for Northern Ireland, in recruitment and selection processes; and to make recommendations.

Although retirement age is not referred to explicitly in the terms of reference for the review, the then Minister of Finance and Personnel, Mark Durkan, asked the review team to consider that matter and to take into account the possible implications for the entire NICS.

The independent review team submitted the report in March 2002, and the Executive considered it in May. The report is wide-ranging, and I am grateful to the team for the work it has undertaken in presenting its findings and recommendations. The team has conducted a thorough analysis during which it consulted with key stakeholders, called for a range of presentations on NICS practices, sought statistical analysis and external validation of the analyses and called for equal opportunities information from New Zealand to provide a benchmark.

My Executive Colleagues and I welcome the report, which contains 25 recommendations. They include two recommendations on retirement age; given that they have implications for the entire NICS, not only the Senior Civil Service, I have decoupled them from the report and will treat them as a separate issue. Two further recommendations are outside the legislative competence of the devolved Administration, and they will be raised directly with Whitehall Ministers. They are: recommendation 4, that the Secretary of State should seek to ensure that the Civil Service Commissioners for Northern Ireland are fully representative of Northern Ireland society; and recommendation 22, that the UK Government should be urged to introduce appropriate legislative change in relation to the nationality requirements that are imposed on those Civil Service jobs that are classed as public service posts. Therefore, 21 substantive recommendations must be considered. However, one recommendation is overarching as it refers to the need to develop an implementation action plan.

The review lasted longer than had originally been expected. That was due to difficulties in aligning members' diaries for meetings and also to the fact that the task was more complex than had been anticipated.

During the review the team commented on the dynamic nature of the environment in which the NICS operates and the progress that had been made. Consequently, many of the specific recommendations deal with areas where work is already under way or where it is planned to meet legislative change or business need. The Executive agreed that officials should continue to progress, or initiate, action on the majority of the recommendations and that challenging targets for the achievement of those recommendations should be set out in the action plan, which will form an integral part of the further consultation process.

There are two recommendations that we believe need careful consideration through further consultation before any action is taken. The first is the recommendation that all Senior Civil Service vacancies be externally advertised. A range of equal opportunities and business considerations will be identified in the consultation paper, on which various stakeholders will wish to express their views.

The recommendation on early action to reduce the long-hours culture of the Senior Civil Service needs to be considered in a similar way. The review team believes that culture to be a serious obstacle to participation across all the section 75 groups. There are a range of legal and business issues that will be considered in the consultative paper.

The Executive, having considered the report, have decided to issue a consultation paper, which will include a detailed draft action plan on those recommendations on which action is under way and on which comments would be welcome, and request specific comments and views on the two recommendations I have highlighted — external advertising of all Senior Civil Service vacancies and long-hours culture.

At least 12 weeks will be devoted to public consultation, and the report will be published on the Internet. To allow for the holiday period, public consultation will start in July and will be completed by 31 October. I have arranged for copies of the report to be placed in the Assembly Library today. Once public consultation is completed, any equality impact assessment required in respect of proposed policy changes will be taken forward, subject to normal screening.

The Executive welcome the report and wish to make early progress on its implementation. They recognise that many of the issues raised by the review are complex and challenging. It is, therefore, important to hear what interested stakeholders have to say on the issues associated with the recommendations and action plan. Further consultation will enhance and maintain the progression towards equality of opportunity for all in respect of appointment and promotion procedures for the Senior Civil Service.

The Chairperson of the Committee for Finance and Personnel (Mr Molloy): I welcome the Minister's statement on the review and thank the review team for the work that it has done.

In view of that fact that the review has taken longer than anticipated, can the Minister give any indication about the implementation of those aspects of the review that can be brought about immediately? Has he had any indication from Westminster regarding the timescale of the nationality question and how it could be resolved?

Dr Farren: I welcome the Member's compliments to the review team, who worked exceedingly hard. As I said, that work will be recognised in the contents of the report. It has been a complex task.

I said that it is our intention, with respect to many of the recommendations, to develop an implementation plan and to proceed with it as soon as possible. So the answer is essentially about the ongoing implementation of the recommendations that the plan will seek to address from now on. Indeed, as I said, some of the recommendations relate to actions that are already under way. However, I also said that we are not saying that, in the course of the consultation, we do not want to hear views regarding those recommendations that are already being acted on. We welcome views, comments and further recommendations regarding those particular aspects of the plan that might attract the attention of particular groups and individuals.

There is a willingness in Whitehall to address the nationality issue. It is a matter of finding parliamentary time to do so. To underline the urgency with which we want the matter addressed, after today's statement I will be communicating with my Whitehall counterparts to ensure that action is taken to address the issue through the required legislative change as soon as possible.

10.45 am

The Deputy Chairperson of the Committee for Finance and Personnel (Mr Beggs): Does the Minister accept that all Northern Ireland citizens are treated impartially with regard to opportunities within the Civil Service whether they carry a British passport or an Irish one? Given that there is no discrimination against local citizens on grounds of nationality, why should they face additional outside competition from other European countries for appointments to the Senior Civil Service?

How will the Minister ensure that the high reputation of the Civil Service is protected against the perceived poor practice that occasionally occurs in the Republic of Ireland and other European countries?

Dr Farren: To answer the third question, there are adequate controls in place to ensure that the integrity of the Civil Service is maintained to the highest standards. Where any shortcomings are revealed with respect to those controls, steps will be taken immediately to address them. It is my experience that the highest standards do obtain, and I have no reason to question them. Members can rest assured that everything is done to ensure that those standards are maintained.

To answer the first question, arising from the spirit of the Good Friday Agreement, posts in the Northern Ireland

Civil Service should be open to people of nationalities other than British. It is a curious anomaly that Ministers can come from the other part of this island and exercise ministerial authority with no inhibitions on their attaining their posts, notwithstanding their nationality. The same opportunity should be extended to those who seek posts at the highest level in the Civil Service. When, rather than if, candidates of other nationalities can apply, they will have to meet the same standards and criteria as all others who seek appointment at that level.

The statistics contained in the annexes to the review team's report show a fairly dynamic pattern with regard to community affiliation and gender in the Senior Civil Service. The dynamic is in the right direction with respect to the balance between Roman Catholics and Protestants and between males and females. That is to be welcomed. If the Member's question implied discrimination, I would point out that the review team in no way highlights discrimination in any form, and it comments favourably on the dynamic.

Mr O'Neill: The Minister's statement is a clear indication of his, and the Executive's, commitment to ensuring equality of opportunity by opening up the Senior Civil Service to everyone, regardless of religion, gender, physical well-being or ethnic origin.

The Minister said that work is already under way in some areas covered by the recommendations. Given the proposed consultation exercise, is that not premature? How does he propose to deal with the recommendations on the age of retirement, which he has decoupled from the report?

Dr Farren: With regard to the Member's first question, many of the review team's recommendations relate to building on the equality of opportunity work taken forward to date by the Northern Ireland Civil Service. Given that that principle is central to devolution — indeed, it is enshrined in section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 — all of us want to promote the concept of a Civil Service that is seen by all whom it serves to be open and inclusive and which is staffed by those who can best meet the business challenges of providing support to the devolved Administration. That will be facilitated by early action on many of the report's recommendations. It will enable the Northern Ireland Civil Service to build on the work to date in developing what almost all observers regard as robust and equitable processes and procedures.

The draft action plan and timetable will be drawn up to show progress and plans for implementation, and that will form part of the consultation process. Consultees will be provided with a clear indication of the direction proposed to implement the majority of the recommendations made by the review team. As I have already underlined, in adopting that approach consultees will have the opportunity to confirm that the proposals are acceptable, or, if otherwise, that there are other issues to consider in relation to the action plan.

With respect to the recommendations on the age of retirement, I indicated that I decoupled them simply because they affect the Civil Service as a whole. Proposals on the age of retirement for the Northern Ireland Civil Service are currently being formulated and will be brought forward separately to the Executive in the autumn, given that the implications are Civil Service-wide and not exclusive to the Senior Civil Service. The review team's two relevant recommendations will, therefore, be considered in bringing those proposals forward. I stress that the trade unions will be fully engaged in all discussions on the matter.

Mr Poots: It must be put on record that the elusive report has not been made available to Members — copies are neither in the Assembly Library nor in the Business Office. It is therefore difficult to discuss it. Nevertheless, I have some questions.

The Minister referred to the dynamic swinging in the right direction. Between 1985 and 1999, the Civil Service has swung from 58·6% Protestant representation to 53·4%, and Catholic representation has increased from 41·4% to 46·6%. Those figures suggest that Protestants are under-represented in the Civil Service. How does the Minister expect that to impact on the Senior Civil Service? If Protestant representation in the junior ranks of the Civil Service is too low, it will impact on the Senior Civil Service in later years.

Will the Minister tell the House why there was only 42·3% Protestant representation in the former Department of Higher and Further Education, Training and Employment when he was the Minister and why there is only 45·9% Protestant representation in the Department for Social Development; 40·3% in the Social Security Agency (SSA); and 49·4% in the Child Support Agency (CSA)?

It is most inappropriate for a Minister to have so little confidence in his own civil servants that he believes that he must go out of the country to recruit people with the necessary quality and integrity to run Northern Ireland.

Dr Farren: I assure the Member that the appointment of civil servants does not rest in my hands. The Executive must ensure that equality of opportunity is available to all.

The nationality issue is pertinent and must be addressed. The record shows that many people from Northern Ireland have availed of the opportunity to rise to senior posts in the Civil Service in the South of Ireland. I see no reason why we should not open up posts in our Civil Service to people from other jurisdictions, and we should not be afraid to do so. That is a matter of equality and, as the review team recommended, it is being addressed. It is important to remember that my statement was about a report that a review team has submitted to the Executive.

We welcome many of its recommendations and have found that they are in line with our thinking.

Mr Poots referred to the composition of the statistics. It is important that we note the dynamic in the Senior Civil Service and that we welcome a Senior Civil Service that broadly reflects the balance in our community. Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 requires us to consider not only religious affiliation and gender, which are the most significant categories and foremost in people's minds when they address the composition of labour forces, but also other categories. We are obliged to consider disability, sexual orientation, race and other important categories.

The review team examined not only the dynamic of the Senior Civil Service but the composition of lower Civil Service grades. There is an imbalance — incipient, in some respects — in lower Senior Civil Service grades, particularly with respect to Protestant males. There would be concern if that imbalance were to gather momentum. As a member of a political party that was founded in the context of the civil rights movement and was informed by civil rights issues, I would be concerned if there were a dynamic in reverse to that that has emerged recently. Therefore, we shall address the matter as part of the equality agenda of the entire Civil Service.

Mr McCarthy: I welcome the report, but I am disappointed that it has taken so long to present it to the Assembly. The report was not in the Library this morning, and Members have little opportunity to discuss a document that they have not seen. When will the report be available?

Mr O'Neill asked about retirement age, a point that I mentioned to the Minister on several occasions. I cannot understand why the matter was not included in the terms of reference initially, but I am grateful to Mr Durkan for ensuring its inclusion later.

I am concerned that the two recommendations have been decoupled from the report. Will that not delay the resolution of this important matter until a decision is made? In the meantime, people will be forced out of the Civil Service against their will. I hope that Civil Service employees who are approaching the age of 60 will be encouraged to stay at work rather than be hounded out.

Dr Farren: I shall place a copy of the report in the Library today. I trust that Members will study it and express their views, individually or at party level. I do not intend to inhibit debate on the issues. During the forthcoming 12-week consultation period, Members will be able to deliberate on the report and the associated consultation document, which will be published by the beginning of July.

As regards decoupling, I hasten to assure Mr McCarthy that the issue of the age of retirement is not intended to create further delay. That matter applies to the entire Civil Service; however, the review is about the Senior Civil Service in particular.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr McClelland] in the Chair)

The retirement age issue applies to the entire Civil Service, and it is appropriate that the matter should be decoupled. It is not appropriate to suggest that my predecessor belatedly added the issue to the terms of reference — it was there from the outset. The retirement age issue must be considered in that context; it did not suddenly arise when the review was established. There has been lively debate on the matter. It was important to bear the issue in mind, as the review could have, and has, shed some light on it. The matter must be addressed urgently, and I have given a commitment that the Executive will consider the proposals in the early autumn. I hope to be able to come to the Assembly then with proposals on how the issue should be addressed in the future.

Mrs Courtney: The SDLP strongly endorses the report's recommendation that the nationality criterion be dropped. There should be no bar on anyone from entering the Senior Civil Service. The issue has been live for some time, and I urge the Minister to continue to press it with the United Kingdom Government. The Minister said that there is willingness in Whitehall to consider that viewpoint. How does he intend to raise the matter with the Westminster Government?

Dr Farren: The need for change in the nationality legislation has been brought to the attention of the UK Government. They have indicated their keenness to open up civil employment under the Crown. I have commissioned definitive legal advice on the question of nationality from the departmental solicitors' office. It is my intention to write to the Secretary of State without delay to advise him of the recommendation made by the independent review team and to seek his commitment to a change to the nationality legislation being introduced by the UK Government as a matter of priority.

Mr Close: Does the Minister agree that the Executive appear to be indulging in foot-dragging over the report's implementation? The report was commissioned in 2000; the review team submitted its report in March 2002; and it seems to have lain around for a couple of months, as the Executive only considered it in May. It is the middle of June, and the report has only now come to the House.

Paragraph 1.12 of the report states that "Consultation also played an important role. The team consulted with a range of stakeholders, including Ministers, Trade Unions, The Equality Commission, umbrella groups representing the Section 75 categories, the DFP Committee, Permanent Secretaries".

I could go on. Many people have been consulted, and we are now told that there is to be further consultation and that implementation will not take place until goodness knows when. Will it even happen this year? I detect foot-dragging. Would it not be better for the Minister to implement the report straight away?

Dr Farren: I get tired listening to the same hollow complaint from Mr Close. How much consideration has the Committee given to the review team's work? I understand that the Committee — of which Mr Close is a member — met Lord Ouseley once, but he was unable to have a second meeting with it. What does that say about that Committee's consideration of the issues? Mr Close had the opportunity to pursue the matter vigorously. I do not take kindly to being chided by Mr Close, given the — [Interruption].

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order.

Dr Farren: I do not take kindly to that, given the record of the Committee, of which Mr Close is a member, on addressing the issue. It may not have been his fault, but we must consider the way in which the Committee has deliberated on the issue before criticising the review team. The review team was asked to carry out some work. There were some difficulties about the timetabling of meetings. The team thought that the matter required greater deliberation than was at first deemed necessary; hence, the length of time that it took to complete the review. When the review team reported, the Executive deliberated on the matter as expeditiously as possible.

An implementation plan is being prepared on many of the recommendations. Three recommendations in particular are being highlighted for further consultation. The recommendations on retirement age, the nationality issue and the composition of the Civil Service Commissioners for Northern Ireland are being treated separately for reasons that I have already outlined. Progress will not be delayed.

Mr Close raised the issue of wide consultation. Yesterday, he attacked the suggestion that there should be general consultation on issues that concern the working of the Executive and the Administration. His approach to consultation is exclusive and elitist. He believes that only certain sections of society should receive consultation documents and be invited to submit their views.

Yesterday, I rejected the suggestion that we should be anything but fully transparent in the consultation process. I shall remain committed to such an approach as long as I have any responsibility for consultation, especially consultation on such fundamental issues as equality of opportunity. I make no apology for holding a full public consultation, and I reject the suggestion that we should be elitist, selective or include only certain groups, as Mr Close advises us to do.

Mr A Doherty: The Minister made it clear that it is appropriate that the Senior Civil Service be open to all nationalities. Therefore, will he join me in wishing the members of the Republic of Ireland senior soccer service, many of whom perform at the highest level in the English League, all the best in their match today?

Dr Farren: Our Senior Civil Service performs to the highest standards, and I am sure that the Irish team will play to the highest standard today. I trust that the House will join me in extending good wishes to the Irish team, which I understand will take to the pitch in Japan in just over one hour. I trust that there will be some rejoicing over lunch.

BUDGET (NO. 2) BILL

First Stage

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Dr Farren): I beg leave to lay before the Assembly a Bill [NIA 16/01] to authorise the issue out of the Consolidated Fund of certain sums for the service of the year ending 31 March 2003; to appropriate those sums for specified purposes; to authorise the Department of Finance and Personnel to borrow on the credit of the appropriated sums; to authorise the use for the public service of certain resources (including accruing resources) for the year ending 31 March 2003; and to repeal certain spent enactments.

Bill passed First Stage and ordered to be printed.

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Bill will be put on the list of future pending business until a date for its Second Stage has been determined.

11.15 am

I have received notice from the Chairperson of the Committee for Finance and Personnel that the requirement of Standing Order 40 has been fully met in terms of appropriate consultation. It is therefore in order for the Budget (No 2) Bill to proceed with accelerated passage.

STRATEGIC PLANNING BILL

First Stage

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr P Robinson): I beg to lay before the Assembly a Bill [NIA 17/01] to make further provision in relation to the regional development strategy for Northern Ireland.

Bill passed First Stage and ordered to be printed.

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Bill will be put on the list of future pending business until a date for its Second Stage has been determined.

RAILWAY SAFETY BILL

Consideration Stage

Mr Deputy Speaker: To enable Members to speak to the Bill, I shall take the vote on clause 1 separately, by leave of the Assembly. I also intend to group the remaining clauses for the questions on stand part, followed by the two schedules and the long title.

Clause 1 (Safety of railways)

Mr M Robinson: The Chairman of the Committee for Regional Development has asked me to extend his apologies for not being able to attend today's debate. He has asked me to speak on behalf of the Regional Development Committee. I begin by expressing the Committee's thanks to those who gave evidence to the Committee. I also express the Committee's gratitude to the departmental officials who made themselves readily available, often at short notice, throughout the Committee's deliberations.

As Members will be aware, the Railway Safety Bill is primarily technical in nature. It is, none the less, an important piece of legislation that has major safety implications for our railway network. The importance of the legislation cannot be underestimated, particularly when we look at the recent rail accident at Downhill and, indeed, other accidents such as the unfortunate death of a contract worker on the railway track at Sydenham in February of this year. Such accidents serve only to reinforce the need for exacting standards of rail safety.

Mr Deputy Speaker, during the Committee's deliberations on the Railway Safety Bill, it noted that the Bill will enable several important pieces of secondary legislation to be brought forward. In particular, clause 1 of the Bill provides for existing legislation to be used to introduce railway safety regulations. Under article 17 of the Health and Safety at Work (Northern Ireland) Order 1978, the Department will have the power to require rail operators to prepare safety cases. That is to be welcomed. A safety case approach will require Northern Ireland Railways (NIR) to conduct a rigorous audit of all its plant infrastructure and machinery, including its trains. The Minister is to be praised for ensuring that the safety cases will be closely scrutinised. His Department has reached an agreement with the Health and Safety Executive whereby the railway inspectorate will act as agents to scrutinise and approve each risk assessment and safety case. That will undoubtedly contribute to ensuring that safety cases are carefully prepared and closely monitored.

As the basis of the legislation is the requirement for railway operators to provide safety cases, it is important that the safety case regulations are swiftly implemented, particularly in the light of recent accidents. I note that during the Second Stage debate the Minister stated that the safety case regulations will require NIR, in particular, to undertake quite a bit of work before it has prepared a detailed safety case.

Therefore, I ask the Minister to monitor the situation closely to ensure that NIR completes the work as soon as possible. The Committee for Regional Development had no amendments to the Railway Safety Bill and agreed unanimously with all its clauses and schedules.

Mr McNamee: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I do not oppose the Bill, but I wish to make some comments on it. I welcome the principle of introducing railway safety legislation, given that the existing legislation is Victorian-based and does not attend to today's health and safety standards.

Concerns were raised about the Bill, notably by Translink and by Transport 2000. One of the initial concerns was that an opportunity had been missed to introduce substantial legislation. The Bill is enabling legislation; it does not contain detail. Detail will be provided by secondary legislation in the form of Statutory Rules.

I shall make a general comment on the use of Statutory Rules as a means to introduce legislation. Statutory Rules will be used to introduce the detail required to ensure that rail safety is addressed properly by legislation. However, Statutory Rules are not subject to the same level of scrutiny by Committees or the Assembly as Bills that are introduced through the Assembly's legislative process. I question whether that is the correct way for the Assembly to deal with legislation — to pass enabling legislation and then have the detail to be provided by Statutory Rules. I shall comment briefly on the Bill itself.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Mr McNamee, I remind you that we are considering clause 1 rather than the entire Bill.

Mr McNamee: Clause 1 sets out the substance — or lack of substance — of the Bill. It sets out the Bill's overall position. That is what I am speaking to, as opposed to the detail.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Please continue.

Mr McNamee: I am not speaking to any of the other clauses or their content. I am speaking on the general nature of the Bill, which is covered by clause 1.

The Bill generally reflects the system in GB. Some concerns were raised about the application of the safety case system were there to be fragmentation of the rail network. I refer to paragraph 5 of the explanatory and financial memorandum, which states:

"Furthermore effective rail safety legislation would have to be in place before a Public Private Partnership, which would involve the private sector operating trains in Northern Ireland could be introduced. We could not risk the profit motive tempting the private sector to cut corners on safety measures."

The explanatory notes refer to an issue regarding public-private partnerships. Concern was raised that if there is a fragmentation of the operation of the railway, and there are contractors who have sub-contractors, and sub-contractors who have subsequent sub-contractors, a difficulty would arise in identifying who was responsible for safety issues.

It is also clear that the Bill does not identify how safety auditing would be carried out on the safety cases and who would be responsible for ensuring that operators actually carry out the risk assessments, as provided for in their safety case. The Bill also fails to identify who would monitor whether operators are taking remedial action to deal with any problems identified by the risk assessment.

Those are my main concerns. When the detail of the Bill is introduced in the form of Statutory Rules, the Assembly will have an opportunity to study it.

Mr B Hutchinson: I support the Bill. Has good practice in the safety of railways throughout the world been looked at? Japan springs to mind, and the speed of the trains there. Football teams are using the bullet train to get from their bases to the grounds. Will the Minister join with me in supporting England in the match tomorrow against Nigeria? I hope that the team wins and reaches the last 16.

Mr Deputy Speaker: I think that that is stretching it a bit.

Mr B Hutchinson: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. You allowed an SDLP Member to speak in the debate on the Budget (No2) Bill without saying anything about a budget.

Mr Deputy Speaker: I do not take points of order at this stage, Mr Hutchinson, as you well know.

Mr B Hutchinson: I represent the Business Committee —

The Deputy Speaker: I shall not take points of order now, Mr Hutchinson. I call the Minister to respond.

Mr B Hutchinson: You never mentioned anything —

Mr Deputy Speaker: Mr Hutchinson, Order.

Mr B Hutchinson: I raise —

Mr Deputy Speaker: You may raise a point if you wish, Mr Hutchinson, but you will not disturb the business of the House once more. I call Mr Peter Robinson.

Mr B Hutchinson: You should behave even-handedly.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Will you repeat that, Mr Hutchinson?

Mr B Hutchinson: You should behave even-handedly.

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr P Robinson): I thank Mr Mark Robinson for his kind comments and the Committee for its support for the Bill. It was analysed seven times and given clause-by-clause consideration, so it has been looked at thoroughly.

In my statement to the House yesterday on the accident at Downhill on 4 June, I showed how important the Bill is to enhancing railway safety here. Last month's crash at Potter's Bar, which followed another major accident on the mainland, and the recent fatality on the Bangor line show the need for a focused legislative and operational approach to modern, safe travel by railway.

We were fortunate that the outcome of the Downhill derailment was not more serious. The Assembly will agree that we shall not have a culture of complacency on safety matters on our railways. I thank Northern Ireland Railways for its positive contribution to the development of the Bill and the secondary legislation that will follow. I urge it to complete its safety case. Although there have been criticisms about the control of railway safety in Great Britain, none has been directed at the safety case concept. Rather, criticisms have been directed at the fragmented nature of the railway industry there.

Mr Mark Robinson asked about the secondary legislation that will flow from the Bill, and that was also raised by another Member. I assure Members that I have no plans to change the integrated way in which the rail industry is operated here. I am convinced that the best way to ensure safety on our railways is by introducing a safety case regime along the GB model.

The safety case Regulations will follow as soon as possible after the Bill becomes law, allowing NIR the necessary time to finalise its safety case and have it thoroughly examined. I also thank Mr Mark Robinson for his comments on the measures that my Department has taken to ensure that all safety cases developed here are rigorously examined.

11.30 am

I shall deal with the issue of the Bill's being enabling legislation. That is one of its inherent strengths. Those who have had ministerial responsibility may have been — at least, they will be by now — frustrated by the length of the legislative process and how long it takes for a Bill to come before the House. I shall outline the number of Statutory Regulations that flow from the Bill, and I assure Members that the Committee for Regional Development will thoroughly examine all the secondary legislation.

In addition to the Railways (Safety Case) Regulations, my Department will introduce other Regulations that will flow immediately from the Bill and will constitute further steps to assist NIR to provide a safe railway.

The Railways (Safety Critical Work) Regulations will seek to ensure that staff engaged in safety critical work, such as drivers and signalmen, are competent and fit and do not work for periods that are likely to result in fatigue. The Railway Safety Regulations will provide for train protection and warning systems to be fitted to all trains, and at key junctions and other danger points on the network.

As a result of the Railways (Approval of Works, Plant and Equipment) Regulations, new and altered works, plant and equipment, including locomotives and rolling stock, will be subject to approval by the Department.

The Railways Safety (Miscellaneous Provisions) Regulations will replace many old provisions that date back to 1842, covering the prevention of unauthorised access, for example, by fencing, the means of passenger communication on trains, the prevention of collisions and derailments through adequate signalling and braking systems and the prevention of accidents to staff, such as injury to trackside workers caused by moving trains.

The Private Crossings (Signs and Barriers) Regulations deal with the erection of signs and barriers at private crossings and are aimed at further improving the safety of the public at railway crossings.

Amendments will be made to RIDDOR — the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations — to make them applicable to railways. Guidance on that matter will be prepared and published.

Detailed Regulations are being introduced. If we were to take them through by primary legislation, which would require two or three years in each case, many accidents could occur during the period of delay. This is a much speedier way to proceed.

As I said at the Bill's Second Stage, I intend to consult the Committee for Regional Development on each set of Regulations. I shall also consult with other interested parties. The consultation process will commence in early summer.

I thank the Committee and the House for their consideration of this important Bill. I am sure that you, Mr Deputy Speaker, will join me in wishing the England football team every success. We hope that they travel safely to the game. I look forward to the Bill completing its Assembly Stages by the summer recess and to the introduction of the secondary legislation by the early autumn.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Does Mr Mark Robinson wish to respond?

Mr M Robinson: No. Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker.

Question put and agreed to.

Clause 1 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 2 to 9 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Schedules 1 and 2 agreed to.

Long title agreed to.

Mr Deputy Speaker: That concludes the Consideration Stage of the Railway Safety Bill. The Bill stands referred to the Speaker.

AMENDMENTS TO STANDING ORDERS

Mr Deputy Speaker: As the next two motions, to amend Standing Orders 10 and 18, relate to the same issue, I propose to conduct one debate. I shall call the Chairperson of the Committee on Procedures to move the first motion. Debate will then take place on both motions. When all who wish to speak have done so, I shall call the Chairperson to wind up and then put the Question on the first motion. I shall then ask the Chairperson formally to move the second motion and will put the Question on that motion without further debate.

The Chairperson of the Committee on Procedures (Mr C Murphy): I beg to move:

Delete Standing Order 10 and insert new Standing Order:

“10. SITTINGS AND ADJOURNMENTS OF THE ASSEMBLY

- (1) The categories of business to be conducted in the Assembly shall consist of the following:
 - (a) Assembly Business
 - (b) Executive Committee Business
 - (c) Committee Business
 - (d) Questions
 - (e) Private Members' Business
 - (f) Private Business
 - (g) Adjournment Debates
 - (h) Party Business.
- (2) Subject to the authority of the Business Committee to determine the time for commencement of business in plenary session the sittings of the Assembly shall be arranged as follows:

Monday 12.00 midday – 6.00 pm

Tuesday 10.30 am – 6.00 pm

The allocation of time for business within these sittings shall be determined by the Business Committee, except that

- (a) on each Monday on which there is a sitting there shall be a period for Questions commencing at 2.30 pm and finishing at 4.00 pm;
 - (b) at the end of each sitting up to one hour may be set aside for an Adjournment Debate;
 - (c) any private notice questions shall normally be asked immediately before the Adjournment Debate.
- (3) Where business on the Order Paper has not been disposed of by 6.00 pm on Monday, the Speaker may allow business to continue until 7.00 pm or until the outstanding business is completed, whichever is earlier. Consideration of business on the Order Paper not concluded by 7.00 pm shall be postponed until such a time as the Business Committee determines.
 - (4) If at 7.00 pm a division is in progress, or a question is being put and a division or a vote in the chamber results, adjournment of the Assembly shall be deferred until after the declaration of the result of the division or vote in the chamber.

- (5) If Tuesday's business cannot be completed in the allocated time, the sitting may be extended into the evening, into Wednesday, or both.
- (6) Additional sittings may be arranged by the Business Committee according to the exigencies of the Assembly.
- (7) Where statements made under Standing Order 18 impinge upon the time bands specified in this Standing Order the Speaker shall take action under Standing Order 18(5).
- (8) An adjournment of the Assembly shall mean an adjournment until the next sitting day unless the Assembly, on a motion made by a Member of the Executive Committee after notice, has ordered an adjournment to some other definite date.
- (9) A Session of the Assembly shall be that period from the commencement of business following the Summer Recess until the end of the subsequent Summer Recess. The Business Committee shall determine the dates for recess."

The following motion stood in the Order Paper:

In Standing Order 18(5) line 7 delete "Standing Order 10(3)" and insert "Standing Order 10(5)". — [The Chairperson of the Committee on Procedures (Mr C Murphy).]

The two motions form part of the Committee's ongoing work on ensuring that the Assembly's Standing Orders and procedures best meet its needs.

This is not an attempt by the Committee on Procedures to extend by the back door the sitting time on a Monday. Instead, it is intended to clarify existing Standing Orders and to introduce an addition to Standing Orders that will improve the way the Assembly conducts its business. There are two main changes to Standing Order 10. The first and substantive change relates to paragraphs 6 and 7 of Standing Order 10, which require business to be interrupted at 6.00 pm so that the Speaker can put the Question of whether business should continue. Members will know that it has become the convention that that requirement has not been enforced.

That requirement has been in Standing Orders since devolution, and it was taken from the Standing Orders at Westminster. Members will recognise that, at the time of devolution, we had little experience of how business could best be managed, and it was recognised at that time that it would be a case of amending Standing Orders as time progressed and experience highlighted their deficiencies or otherwise. Paragraphs 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10 are examples of Standing Orders that were considered to be necessary at that time, but in practice they have become redundant.

In consultation with the Business Committee and the Speaker about amending Standing Orders, it became clear that the opportunity should be taken to include a facility to allow scheduled business, if it has been delayed, to proceed beyond 6.00 pm. The proposal is to allow business to continue beyond 6.00 pm only on a Monday, and it applies only to scheduled business. That means that the Business Committee must plan business for a Monday on the basis of a 6.00 pm finish.

If the Business Committee decides that pressure of business is such that it will go on beyond 6.00 pm, a suspension of Standing Orders will continue to be required. This amendment to Standing Orders is designed to cater for those circumstances in which, for different reasons, business on the Order Paper has not been completed — for example, when business is unexpectedly delayed.

That may arise when there are a number of divisions, which on average take more than 15 minutes each, or when a Minister decides to make a statement. That is fine on a Tuesday because there is no pressure on time, as business can run on into Tuesday evening. However, on a Monday that is more difficult because business cannot proceed beyond 6.00 pm. Therefore, if a Minister wants to make a statement on a Monday when business is already anticipated to run until 6.00 pm then, because up to an hour can be allocated for questions in addition to the time that it takes to make the statement, some business may fall. Invariably, the business that is likely to fall is the final item on the Order Paper, which is normally the Adjournment debate.

The Committee on Procedures considers that that would be unfair to the Member who brought the Adjournment debate or to any other motion that fell in that way. Therefore, the Committee, with the support of the Business Committee and the Speaker, considers it reasonable that in such circumstances, where there is insufficient time before 6.00 pm to complete the remaining business, the Speaker should have the discretion to allow business to continue until 7.00 pm or until the outstanding business is completed — whichever is the earlier.

The Committee on Procedures also considers that the facility to allow business to go on until 7.00 pm is necessary because, in the near future, it proposes to amend Standing Orders to allow a Member to table, with the agreement of the Business Committee, an urgent motion for debate. The scenario envisaged is that, on a Monday morning, a Member might propose to table a motion for plenary debate on a matter of urgent public importance. The proposed amendment to Standing Orders would help to facilitate that by allowing business to proceed until 7.00 pm. If that facility had been available, it would have been used only once since the start of this session. Therefore, it is to be used only occasionally, when unforeseen business delays the scheduled business.

The second change proposed to Standing Orders is to clarify Standing Order 10(2). The proposed rewording is necessary to clarify the authority of the Business Committee to arrange an earlier start to Monday sittings. At present, Standing Order 10(2) sets out the days and times for which sittings of the Assembly should ordinarily be arranged and provides for the allocation of time for business within those sittings to be determined by the Business Committee. Clarity is required in order to define “ordinarily”. The Business Committee has interpreted the word “ordinarily” to allow the plenary to start earlier than 12 noon on a Monday when the pressure of business forces it, although that has occurred only once during this session. That was endorsed by the Speaker in a ruling he made on 5 November 2001.

Members were confused about why it was necessary to suspend Standing Orders to proceed beyond 6.00 pm, yet it was unnecessary to suspend them to start before 12 noon. I shall not go into the detail of the reasons behind that, but there is currently no flexibility in Standing Order 10 to go beyond 6.00 pm on a Monday, unlike on a Tuesday when Standing Order 10(3) allows business to proceed beyond 6.00 pm and, if necessary, into Wednesday. Hence the suspension of Standing Order 10(2) is required.

It is important that Standing Orders are clear and that Members are in no doubt as to their meaning, and as such the Committee proposes the rewording of Standing Order 10(2), which clarifies the authority of the Business Committee to arrange an earlier start to a plenary sitting on a Monday.

The Committee has taken the opportunity of the consideration of Standing Order 10 to make several drafting changes to it. The first of those is in Standing Order 10(1), where a new category of business — Assembly Business — has been inserted. Items of business in that category would include petitions, Speaker’s rulings, et cetera.

Changes to Standing Order 10(2)(b) are proposed in order to reflect current practice. We have made it clear that at the end of each sitting up to one hour “may” be set aside for an Adjournment debate as opposed to “shall”, in order to reflect the way in which business is managed.

In conclusion, I re-emphasise that changes to Standing Order 10 should not be viewed as an attempt to change the set finishing time of 6.00 pm on a Monday — 6.00 pm will continue to be the standard finishing time for the Business Committee when it plans business for a Monday. If the pressure of planned business is such that the sitting is required to go beyond 6.00 pm, a suspension of Standing Orders will continue to be required.

The second motion on the Order Paper is a consequential change to Standing Order 18. The change is proposed to reflect the new numbering in Standing Order 10.

I commend the motions to the Assembly.

Ms Morrice: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. I have several remarks to make on the motions. However, at this point I am able to speak only to the first motion.

Mr Deputy Speaker: You can speak to the first two motions.

Ms Morrice: Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker. I thank the Chairperson of the Committee on Procedures for outsmarting me by going out of his way to allay the fears that he probably expected me to raise, especially the potential to extend the hard-fought-for family-friendly hours, of which the Assembly, as a modern legislature, can rightly be proud. The Assembly agreed that there should be family-friendly hours, at least on a Monday.

I am pleased that the Chairperson has assured us that an extension beyond 6.00 pm will be used only occasionally, when there is a delay or some unscheduled business. The Women’s Coalition has always accepted that, under exceptional circumstances, time could, and should, be allowed after 6.00 pm. However, the most important issue is the hard-fought-for principle that the Assembly’s family-friendly hours should not be broken or disturbed in any way. Having listened to the Chairperson’s opening remarks, I believe that that is still the case.

At present, we start at 12 noon on a Monday, so rather than an extension beyond 6.00 pm, why can we not start business earlier? When we first sat, and when I was involved in the setting of the Standing Orders in the original Committee, the agreement was a 10.30 am start on Mondays. Travelling distances, party meetings, et cetera on a Monday morning suggested that that time should slip. Again, we are prepared to accept that. However, why slip to 12 noon? Why not have 11.00 am as the starting time, so that that extra hour between 6.00 pm and 7.00 pm could be made up in the morning? The family-friendly hours of the Assembly would, therefore, be preserved. The principle here is that Members have families that they should, could and would like to — whether they are men or women — go home to in the evenings in order to see their children before they go to bed. I am glad that the Chairperson of the Committee on Procedures has said that there is the potential for starting business earlier on a Monday morning and that only on rare occasions will the principle of the 6.00 pm finishing time be breached.

Mr C Murphy: The Committee has made the position clear, and I give the credit for outsmarting Ms Morrice to the Committee Clerks rather than to me, as they prepare the wording on these occasions.

Family-friendly hours are important. They are not only an issue for the Women’s Coalition. They are an issue for all Members. I have a young family. I am sure that many other Members in the Chamber also have young families and are, therefore, keen to continue with family-friendly hours. However, 6.00 pm might mean family-friendly hours for someone living in north Down or in south Belfast. For Mr Gerry McHugh, Mr Tommy Gallagher, Mr Derek Hussey or Mr Pat Doherty, for example, a 6.00 pm finish does not necessarily mean particularly family-friendly hours. By the time those people get home it is closer to 9.00 pm. Family-friendly hours benefit those who live fairly near to the Assembly, but they are not so much of a benefit to those who live far away.

The Committee has always been supportive of the principle of family-friendly hours. It is clear in the proposal that the ability to extend the time beyond 6.00 pm should be used in exceptional circumstances only, when the scheduled business has been delayed or interrupted and it is necessary to continue until it is finished or until 7.00 pm, whichever is the earlier. Certainly, that is the intention of the proposal.

Previously, the plenary did start at 10.30 am on Monday mornings. However, parties were under pressure because they had no time during the week to carry out internal party business, given that Committee meetings are held on Wednesdays and Thursdays and, indeed, on Fridays, when the Committee for Agriculture and Rural Development meets. It is difficult for larger parties to meet at a time when there is no other pressing Assembly business. A trial period was introduced in which the plenary began on Mondays at 12 noon. At the end of the trial period, the Committee on Procedures proposed to make the 12 noon start permanent, with the exception that the Business Committee can decide — as it did on only one occasion — that the plenary should start earlier. At that time, no party objected to business starting at 12 noon. It appears, therefore, that those arrangements are satisfactory, and the Committee on Procedures is still satisfied with them.

Of course, Standing Orders are open to change, and any Member can propose an amendment if he wishes. Standing Orders are constantly under review. Based on experience, the Committee is satisfied that the changes that it has proposed today will allow for the conduct of business on Mondays. The Committee is also content that the changes will facilitate the extension of business and that there is no need to start the plenary before 12 noon, other than in exceptional circumstances when the Business Committee so decides.

Mr Deputy Speaker: I remind the House that because the motion relates to amendments to Standing Orders, the vote requires cross-community support.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved (with cross-community support):

Delete Standing Order 10 and insert new Standing Order:

Monday 12.00 midday – 6.00 pm

Tuesday 10.30 am – 6.00 pm

The allocation of time for business within these sittings shall be determined by the Business Committee, except that

- (a) on each Monday on which there is a sitting there shall be a period for Questions commencing at 2.30 pm and finishing at 4.00 pm;
 - (b) at the end of each sitting up to one hour may be set aside for an Adjournment Debate;
 - (c) any private notice questions shall normally be asked immediately before the Adjournment Debate.
- (3) Where business on the Order Paper has not been disposed of by 6.00 pm on Monday, the Speaker may allow business to continue until 7.00 pm or until the outstanding business is completed, whichever is earlier. Consideration of business on the Order Paper not concluded by 7.00 pm shall be postponed until such a time as the Business Committee determines.
 - (4) If at 7.00 pm a division is in progress, or a question is being put and a division or a vote in the chamber results, adjournment of the Assembly shall be deferred until after the declaration of the result of the division or vote in the chamber.
 - (5) If Tuesday's business cannot be completed in the allocated time, the sitting may be extended into the evening, into Wednesday, or both.
 - (6) Additional sittings may be arranged by the Business Committee according to the exigencies of the Assembly.
 - (7) Where statements made under Standing Order 18 impinge upon the time bands specified in this Standing Order the Speaker shall take action under Standing Order 18(5).
 - (8) An adjournment of the Assembly shall mean an adjournment until the next sitting day unless the Assembly, on a motion made by a Member of the Executive Committee after notice, has ordered an adjournment to some other definite date.
 - (9) A Session of the Assembly shall be that period from the commencement of business following the Summer Recess until the end of the subsequent Summer Recess. The Business Committee shall determine the dates for recess."

Resolved (with cross-community support):

In Standing Order 18(5) line 7 delete "Standing Order 10(3)" and insert "Standing Order 10(5)".

The Chairperson of the Committee on Procedures (Mr C Murphy): I beg to move:

In Standing Order 54(1) after paragraph (l) insert:

- “(m) Those functions relating to the Planning Appeals Commission and the Water Appeals Commission transferred to the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister by The Departments (Transfer of Functions) Order (Northern Ireland) 2001.”

I say at the outset that the motion to amend Standing Orders has been moved at the request of the Committee of the Centre, which has asked for an extension to be made to its remit to allow it to examine certain functions relating to the Planning Appeals Commission and to the Water Appeals Commission.

That is because under the Departments (Transfer of Functions) Order (Northern Ireland) 2001, administrative responsibilities for the Planning Appeals Commission and the Water Appeals Commission transferred from the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure, the Department for Regional Development, the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development and the Department of the Environment to the Office of the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister.

The responsibilities transferred were administrative in nature, centring on the appointment of commissioners, the determination of their remuneration and allowances, the appointment of persons to assist the commissions in the performance of their functions and to determine their remuneration and allowances and the remuneration and allowances for any assessor appointed by the chief commissioner to assist at hearings, the making of rules for regulating proceedings before the commission and the prescription of fees in respect of appeal applications.

I shall not explain the rationale for the transfer, as it is not within the remit of the Committee on Procedures. It has already been the subject of consideration by the relevant Statutory Committees. However, the Committee understands that the thrust behind the Order was to reinforce the independence of the Planning Appeals Commission and the Water Appeals Commission. The Office of the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister has recently initiated a quinquennial review of the Planning Appeals Commission and the Water Appeals Commission.

The Committee of the Centre wishes to be involved in that review. To do so, an amendment to Standing Orders is required, because Standing Order 54, which sets out the remit of the Committee of the Centre, is very specific. Unlike Statutory Committees, whose remit is to advise and assist their respective Ministers in the formulation of policy, the remit of the Committee of the Centre is limited, as it can scrutinise only those functions specified in Standing Orders or any other matter determined by the Assembly.

The net effect is that each time the Committee of the Centre wishes to scrutinise a new role of the Office of the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister, an addition to the list of functions in Standing Order 54 is required; hence this motion to amend Standing Order 54. The proposed wording of the amendment reflects the legal advice that the Committee received to describe the transferred functions.

Ms Morrice: The Chairperson has again responded to my query to a certain extent. However, I would appreciate further information, as the Planning Appeals Commission and the Water Appeals Commission are to be the Office of the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister's responsibility.

The Chairperson said that he should not necessarily comment on that. He said that it was to do with reinforcing the independence of those bodies, which we certainly welcome. Will the Chairperson elaborate on the exact reason for the transfer? If not, will he tell us where we can find it?

Mr C Murphy: The reason for the transfer was not a matter that the Committee on Procedures considered; it was a matter for the Statutory Committees that were involved in the transfer and for the relevant Ministers and Departments. The Departments (Transfer of Functions) Order (Northern Ireland) 2001 came into force last year. I am sure that the reasoning behind that legislation is laid out in the explanatory notes. The Statutory Committees and the Committee of the Centre have considered the matter. The Committee on Procedures's function was simply to table a motion to amend Standing Orders to allow the Committee of the Centre, whose remit is firmly fixed in Standing Orders, to consider matters relating either to the Water Appeals Commission or to the Planning Appeals Commission.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved (with cross-community support):

In Standing Order 54(1) after paragraph (l) insert:

- “(m) Those functions relating to the Planning Appeals Commission and the Water Appeals Commission transferred to the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister by The Departments (Transfer of Functions) Order (Northern Ireland) 2001.”

The Chairperson of the Committee on Procedures (Mr C Murphy): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle.

I beg to move:

Insert new Standing Order:

“75. OFFICIAL REPORT (Hansard)

- (1) A substantially verbatim report of the proceedings at all sittings of the Assembly and Committee meetings that form part of the legislative process or at which evidence that will contribute to a report by a Committee is being taken shall be prepared and published. The report shall be known as the Official Report (Hansard) and shall be a record of the proceedings in the language spoken.
- (2) A revised edition of the Official Report (Hansard) for all Assembly sittings and Committee meetings which form part of the legislative process shall be prepared in bound volume form at such times as the Speaker shall determine. Such bound volumes shall also contain written questions and answers for the period covered.

- (3) Editorial control of the Official Report (Hansard) shall rest ultimately with the Speaker but shall be exercised on his behalf by the Editor of Debates."

The Official Report, or Hansard as it is usually called, is the report of proceedings in plenary. It is a substantially verbatim report, and it performs a vital function in showing the Assembly's commitment to openness, accountability and accessibility. In addition, Hansard offers a unique record for posterity that will help future generations paint a picture of how we lived today and how and why we made decisions.

Standing Orders do not contain official provision for the production and publication of the Official Report. That is at odds with the practice in the Scottish Parliament, the Dáil and the Welsh Assembly. It could leave the Assembly open to the accusation that it is not being seen to give Hansard the standing that it merits. More importantly, it could also be argued that the omission is contrary to the intention of schedule 6 to the Northern Ireland Act 1998, which states that "The standing orders shall include provision for reporting the proceedings of the Assembly and for publishing the reports."

Standing Order 70 makes provision for the printing of the minutes of proceedings, which are the official record of proceedings. Those form the record of decisions made and should not be confused with Hansard, which has a separate, independent role. Moreover, Standing Order 70 is concerned with the Office of the Clerk and with the records of the Assembly. Hansard is a separate entity, with editorial control resting with the Editor, who exercises that responsibility on behalf of the Speaker. It is important that that independence is reflected in a separate Standing Order, rather than by being incorporated it into an existing Standing Order, such as Standing Order 70.

Although the issue has caused no problems to date, the new Standing Order makes formal provision for Hansard and removes any uncertainty as to its role. It gives Hansard the important place that it merits in the operation of the Assembly. I commend the motion to the Assembly.

Mr Fee: I want to talk specifically about the role of the Editor of Debates and the role of the Speaker and about paragraph (3) of the proposed new Standing Order 75, which states that

"Editorial control of the Official Report (Hansard) shall rest ultimately with the Speaker but shall be exercised on his behalf by the Editor of Debates."

I understand from what the Chairperson of the Committee on Procedures has said that we are following the precedent set by Westminster, the Scottish Parliament, the Dáil and the like. On enquiry this morning, however, I have not been able to find any Standing Order of this nature that pertains or applies in Westminster, the Scottish Parliament, the Dáil or in any other Western democracy. There are certainly conventions, custom and practice, and proper procedures that have been built up over centuries, but they do not vest editorial control of the Official Report in the Speaker of any of those Parliaments.

To be fair to the Editor of Debates in this House and to the Speaker, both of whom have provided exemplary performances in recent times, we should not confuse the authority vested in those two positions. From the outset, all of us agree that Hansard has to be a true and accurate account of what happens here. It is a crucially important historical record. Following recent judgements in the High Court in England, it is also a very important legal record from which courts may draw inference. However, to rest the editorial control with the Speaker, who may have to adjudicate on a challenge to the official record, is to confuse his role with that of the Editor of Debates.

It is the role of the Editor of Debates to try to ensure that a true and accurate account of the sittings of this Assembly is recorded and published at an appropriate time. All of us in this place know that the Hansard staff have been wonderful in meeting the deadlines that we have set for them, both before and after devolution. The former Editor of Debates did a wonderful job when he was here, and his successor has followed in his footsteps.

However, to divest the Editor of Debates of the responsibility for editorial control will cause the House substantial problems.

An old journalistic maxim is that the editor of a newspaper will publish such prejudices of the owner as the prejudices of the advertisers will allow. If we allow this new Standing Order, it will open the House to that accusation. If we consider again the procedures and precedences in other places, we will find that the independence of the Speaker guarantees a full and accurate Official Report and that the independence of the Editor maintains the Speaker's role and the accuracy and veracity of the Official Report.

I ask the Committee on Procedures to reconsider the new Standing Order and to implement procedures whereby the Assembly Commission, the Clerk and the Speaker's Office are compelled to ensure that the Official Report (Hansard) is properly published. I beg the Committee not to remove the editorial independence of the Editor of Debates.

Mr B Hutchinson: The Member for Newry and Armagh, Mr Fee, voiced my concerns eloquently.

Mr C Murphy: This Member for Newry and Armagh will try to answer Mr Hutchinson's concerns eloquently also.

All new Standing Orders or changes to Standing Orders brought to the Assembly by the Committee on Procedures are checked by the Assembly's legal adviser, and the Speaker is consulted. The Speaker's view has been sought on this Standing Order. I assure Mr Fee and Mr Hutchinson that the Committee would be happy to consider all queries about Standing Orders. If a Member is not content with the Committee's view, he or she is free to table an amendment.

This Standing Order confirms current practice. In Westminster, editorial control rests with the Speaker, and that arrangement has not caused the problems that John Fee anticipates occurring here. In Westminster, the Speaker is responsible for the Official Report (Hansard) and delegates editorial responsibility to the Editor of Debates. The Speaker, as required by Erskine May and, perhaps, Westminster Standing Orders, appoints the Westminster Editor of Debates.

The Committee on Procedures checks amendments to Standing Orders and proposed Standing Orders with the Assembly's legal adviser. If Members think that that arrangement raises a problem, the Committee would be happy to re-examine it. The proposed Standing Order is, however, legally competent and reflects current practice here and in other legislatures.

Question put.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE FOR CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE: CULTURAL TOURISM AND THE ARTS

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order. Members will leave the Chamber quietly.

The Chairperson of the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr O'Neill): I beg to move

That this Assembly approves the Report of the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure on its Inquiry into Cultural Tourism and the Arts and calls on the Executive to ensure that the Committee's recommendations are evaluated and implemented at the earliest opportunity.

The Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure launched this important and substantive inquiry on 25 January 2001. Its terms of reference were: to determine the status of the existing relationship between the cultural and tourist sectors; to identify areas of the arts with the potential to be incorporated into a cultural tourist product that could be actively promoted by the tourist industry; to identify the support required by cultural activities, including languages, to enable that heritage to be maintained and enhanced; and to report to the Assembly, making recommendations to the Department and/or others on action to strengthen the link between culture and tourism. The Committee also agreed that the inquiry should take particular account of the diversity and unique nature of the cultural tourism product that Northern Ireland can offer its visitors.

I am not exaggerating when I say that the Committee was astounded to receive 82 written submissions from a wide variety of groups and individuals with an interest in every conceivable aspect of culture, heritage and the arts.

These ranged from the North of Ireland Bands' Association to the Ulster Historical Foundation; from the Hilden Brewery Company to the Lyric Theatre; from the University of Ulster to the Somme Association; and from the National Trust to Gael-Linn. We held 39 oral evidence sessions with key organisations representing the main sectoral interests. In addition, the Committee had the opportunity to draw on the experience gained during fact-finding visits to Boston, Paris and Barcelona, which were taken in association with the inquiry. We were fortunate to be able to engage with key public and private sector organisations in those cities.

At the outset, the Committee accepted that Northern Ireland's negative image, combined with the failure to promote and market the region enthusiastically, resulted in lost years of tourist growth compared to other parts of the United Kingdom and Ireland. We certainly cannot promise good weather and warm seas in Northern Ireland, but today's traveller is increasingly seeking more than sun-and-sand destinations. People are living longer, remain more affluent in their retirement, and have a growing interest in visiting places where they can learn about different cultures.

Most people come to Northern Ireland to visit friends and relatives, and although this important market has sustained the industry in hard times, we now have a tremendous opportunity to develop new markets. The growth of a top-quality cultural tourism sector, which will have the potential to attract the general tourist and the high added-value niche market, forms the core of that opportunity. Noting that tourism's contribution to Northern Ireland's gross domestic product (GDP) is less than a third of that in the Republic of Ireland, Scotland and Wales is a stark illustration of how far we have to go to catch up. In fact, it is 1.8 % compared to 6% in the other regions. Also, we cannot rely, at least in the short term, on the North American market as a visitor source. If Northern Ireland's culture and heritage are to remain key attractions, it is essential that targeting customers outside the long-haul market is given priority. The Republic of Ireland, Great Britain and continental Europe must be regarded as critically important.

Nevertheless, the Committee believes the scope for cultural tourism to be immense. Key niche products such as roots tourism and local studies, education and linguistics, literary and other arts-based summer schools, festivals, theatre, music and dance, as well as the many facets of our built and natural heritage, all hold considerable potential for growing a vibrant cultural tourism product. Northern Ireland has a wealth of cultural and heritage attractions that are key elements of the experience that we can offer to the visitor. Over 440 official heritage sites have been identified in recent research by the Academy for Irish Cultural Heritage at the University of Ulster. There are also many unofficial sites.

Culture and arts enrich our lives, build confidence and inspire hope in communities. They must not be seen as elitist pastimes. The Committee also believes that Northern Ireland's approach to the arts and culture as products must embrace the principles of sustainability; long-term viability; limited negative impact; local involvement; and positive social and economic benefits for all communities, groups and individuals involved.

Our inquiry also brought home to us the importance of industrial heritage tourism and its potential, largely untapped in Northern Ireland. That can help to create employment and investment in industrial areas where manufacturing industry has declined. It can also restore pride in communities and improve people's perceptions of their localities. Many local authorities, particularly in industrial towns in the English Midlands, are incorporating industrial heritage tourism into their tourist development programmes.

By comparison, in Northern Ireland, we have largely neglected our industrial heritage and allowed many of its best examples to be destroyed. We now need to commit ourselves to recognising the importance of preserving and reusing it for sound economic reasons, as well as for the education and appreciation of our community and visitors.

Linked to industrial tourism is the story of the Titanic. Several written submissions expressed interest in the development of a maritime museum in the Belfast shipyard. The story of the Titanic has been told across the world, but Northern Ireland has failed to capitalise on the fact that the ship was designed, built and launched in Belfast.

The plans for the Titanic are currently held in the Ulster Folk and Transport Museum at Cultra. The original drafting rooms, Thompson Dock and the keel blocks on which the Titanic rested during its fitting-out still exist. Furthermore, the SS Nomadic, the last remaining White Star Line tender, which was used to ferry passengers to and from the Titanic, is currently located on the River Seine in Paris. The acquisition of that vessel could be a focal point for a Titanic attraction.

It is also evident that we have not developed the arts festival and summer school sector to the same extent as the Republic. While we have a few major festivals that have proven sustainable over the years, there is enormous scope for further developments. We must also consider how to fill the gaps that exist during the summer months with arts- and culture-based activities and attractions for the community and tourists.

We must do more to persuade the promoters of world-class and major international events that Northern Ireland is a good location. However, we must be in a position to back that up with hard cash.

Northern Ireland lags significantly behind England and Scotland as a location for world-class and major international events. It is even further behind the Republic of Ireland. The region's negative image is clearly a major factor for performers, promoters and sponsors.

The Northern Ireland Events Company's budget for this year is just over £1 million. Two years ago, the Government of the Republic allocated an extra £2.5 million a year for three years to bring in extra events. That was in addition to the financial support already provided for four major golf tournaments and a range of other cultural, arts and sports events. For example, approximately £7 million has been allocated to the 2005 Ryder Cup from the public purse, and the return to the Irish Exchequer on this investment alone is expected to be between £50 million and £100 million.

That illustrates clearly the need for that kind of investment. We must persuade promoters that Northern Ireland has good facilities and is a safe, sensible location. We also need to persuade ourselves that we can host major events.

12.30 pm

The devolved Administrations in Scotland and Wales have allocated significant budgets to attract big events. With competition becoming more intense, the key to success is to enable the Northern Ireland Events Company to give a financial commitment sufficiently far ahead in the bidding process.

In the year that we have submitted our bid for European Capital of Culture 2008, it is astonishing that Belfast is the only major city in the United Kingdom without a dedicated public art gallery. The Ulster Museum has a unique collection of Irish art and a collection of British contemporary art that was described by 'The Times' as the finest outside London. Irish art is hugely popular, particularly in America, but the museum cannot display its full collection because it does not have enough space. The development of a museum of creative arts could be, and should be, the key priority for the Department, and the Museums and Galleries of Northern Ireland (MAGNI). That would provide a showcase for the prestigious collection held by the Ulster Museum and enable exhibitions of world-class collections to be staged.

It is worth noting that the Monet, Renoir and the Impressionist Landscape exhibit, which was on show in the new Millennium Wing of the National Gallery of Ireland between January and April this year, attracted an average of 2,000 paying visitors each day, a large proportion of whom would have had a considerable economic impact on the city with overnight or weekend stays.

With 60 million people claiming to have Irish ancestry, there is a worldwide market for roots tourism. However, investment in, and the marketing of, genealogy have been largely neglected. We heard compelling evidence about the impact that a move away from the use of townland names would have on communities and potential roots tourism.

Other issues considered included: the promotion of our linguistic diversity as a unique asset to the tourism industry; promoting and showcasing our tradition of quality band music through hosting international competitions; the cultivation of traditional song and music; providing support for local professional opera; developing dance; reviewing the opportunities which exist to support the independent professional theatre sector; the potential to develop and co-ordinate cultural trails and tours; and the importance of film and television in forging positive images.

The Committee's report sets out 56 recommendations, and their implementation will be essential to improving the quality, cohesiveness and competitiveness of our cultural tourism.

Only two weeks ago Committee Colleagues and I attended a conference on cultural tourism in County Cork.

The theme of the conference was 'A National Asset Awaiting Sensitive Development'. Delegates heard that tourism is undoubtedly Ireland's greatest area of growth, with ever-increasing numbers of tourists interested in culture and tradition. Those tourists are prepared to go out of their way to remote places to find authentic, living culture, much of which is hidden among the hills and valleys and has lived on for generations without disturbance. That is every bit as true in areas such as the Glens of Antrim, the Sperrins or Rathlin Island as it is in Cork, Kerry or Clare.

Our hidden locations need to be developed alongside the better known cultural centres to ensure a wider spread of attractions and, consequently, more tourist spending throughout rural and urban areas. The challenge will be to ensure that authentic culture survives commercialism.

One of the speakers at the conference expressed the view that the extent to which a country's culture is known elsewhere is a defining characteristic of any people. That is a thought-providing statement. He encapsulated the importance of culture for us all by saying that "If you were to meet a man coming along the road who couldn't tell you where he was coming from, it would be a fair bet that he wouldn't be able to say where he was going either".

We all have a stake in the enhancement and development of Northern Ireland's cultural tourism product, and we must take an interest in it.

I wish to express a number of acknowledgements on behalf of the Committee. We were encouraged by the level of involvement in the inquiry. We thank all those who sent in written submissions and those whose appearance before the Committee to give oral evidence provided us with much vital food for thought.

I wish to record the Committee's appreciation of the assistance given by Boston College and the British Council in facilitating our invaluable study visits to Boston, Paris and Barcelona. As Chairperson of the Committee, I pay tribute to my Committee Colleagues, who overcame many traumas to get to where we are and worked exceedingly hard to bring the report to publication. I pay an equally glowing tribute to the Committee staff, the Committee Clerk and its specialist adviser.

Cultural tourism is a broad area, and like the Committee's report on inland fisheries, our recommendations involve several Ministers and their Departments. It is a prime example of an area in which joined-up government is essential and can deliver real benefits for the entire community. My Committee Colleagues will further develop the issues emerging from the report, and I look forward to an interesting debate. I commend the report to the Assembly.

The sitting was suspended at 12.37pm.

On resuming (Madam Deputy Speaker [Ms Morrice] in the Chair) —

2.00 pm

The Deputy Chairperson of the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mrs Nelis): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I support the motion and thank all those who contributed to the report through oral and written submissions. I commend the Committee Chairperson and the members who diligently, and at times passionately, went through the various drafts. They all fought for the cultural and artistic attractions of their constituencies. I am especially grateful to the Committee Clerks, for without their skill we may not have had a report at all. However, the person engaged as special adviser to draft the report failed to address adequately the four stated objectives in a precise or objective manner.

Cultural tourism and the arts, as the Committee learnt, can be anything from the search for local place names such as Lisnamucky, to listening to the tales — tall or otherwise — of the yarn spinners, or engaging with the flautist skills of the local flute band.

Some years ago, a group of Pennsylvanian millionaires came here in search of the Elliot and the Curran clans. They knew the place names from whence their ancestors had come and they managed to find the "auld sod", as some people describe it. We did not capitalise on the interests of those wealthy cultural tourists, and the report suggests many recommendations on how we may attract and service such visitors in the future.

The submissions to the inquiry were exciting, varied and informative. They came from groups as diverse as the National Trust, the Glass Ceiling Theatreworks, the Gortin and District Historical Society and the Hilden Brewing Company, which unfortunately did not provide a sample of its wares with its submission. Despite the wealth of evidence from such diverse cultural, artistic and tourism organisations, the special adviser to the Committee used his own material throughout the report as a source of information and to verify that information. It was disappointing to note that that happened despite excellent submissions.

Most of the special adviser's evidence was generated via the Northern Ireland Tourist Board. It was apparent from the first draft that the special adviser and the Northern Ireland Tourist Board did not understand the intricacies of the definitions and working of "culture" and "the arts". That is best exemplified by the table used by the special adviser, which was sourced from the Northern Ireland Tourist Board. It failed to distinguish between visitors and tourists, and that type of statistic was used intermittently throughout the report without due care and concern for relevance.

The now infamous table excluded the sixteenth century Derry city walls and wiped the city's historic landmark off the cultural and tourism top 20 map at a time when Derry City Council had bid to have the walls declared a world heritage site. The other famous Derry tourist attraction, Free Derry wall, did not get a mention from the special adviser either — such was the limitation and myopia of the expert appointed to draft the report for the Committee.

Most of the places listed in the table, for instance the Pickie Family Fun Park — the second favourite tourist attraction — are unknown to people outside the Belfast and Bangor areas. I cannot imagine cultural tourists from Europe or the United States of America coming to visit a pool surrounded by rocks with the added attraction of a train and a donkey. I can imagine that the Pickie Family Fun Park would provide a great day's outing for families from that area of the east coast. That shows the need to distinguish between the cultural tourists and visitors who come to see friends and relatives and who make up 40% of all the people who come to visit the North.

How do we turn the visitors of family and friends into cultural tourists? That is the major question.

The recommendations, if adopted, show how heritage days, theme tours and trails can become special interest markets that offer specific experiences. More detailed research and analysis of the material submitted was needed in early drafts to help the Committee understand and interpret the widely diverse definitions of cultural tourism and the arts. The Committee is indebted to its Clerk, who produced a better, workable and relevant definition of our stated objectives.

Art is the outworking of those features, and culture is the glue that bonds us together. It impacts on every aspect of our lives. It allows us to celebrate ourselves and show the rest of the world who we are and how we live.

The tourist is the person who comes to experience our uniqueness through the lens we offer. Why tourists come, and how to analyse that, is a major part of our recommendations and requires partnership between the major players. The jury is still out on why so many tourists come to this small island, but we can be sure that it is not for sun, sea and sand. Submissions from various groups and organisations helped us to examine that issue.

Tourists may come in search of their roots and their identity; to seek out the place that produces Irish music, art, or literature; to see monuments of ancient civilisations; to see the artistic splendour of the Book of Kells, the Cathach, and the Broughton Gold; and to see the historic sites of the Boyne, Derry city walls, Newgrange and where the Titanic was built.

It is accepted that many tourists come to look at our wall murals, and most tour operators now include those as part of their itinerary. Those attractions should be considered as specific elements of a cultural strategy proposed in section 5 of the report, but such a strategy should be based on an all-Ireland partnership between the arts, tourists and cultural organisations. Planned, resourced and managed tourist projects, whether they be festivals, events, band concerts or genealogical summer schools, must be co-ordinated in order to reflect the relationship among the visitor, the tourist and the local community.

The appearance of a close-knit community shaped around its culture and art creates a positive image. However, the essence of any cultural tourism and arts strategy must be rooted firmly in the cultural pluralism of the local communities. That would acknowledge that, although we share this island, we have distinctive codes of behaviour and historical identities.

The report establishes that difference can be a key feature. Many of the success stories recorded in the submissions received little or no recognition or financial support from the agencies that have been set up to promote general tourism.

We recommend that all cultural tourism strategies should start with an inventory of resources. The process should include an assessment of how local people feel, as well as the views of the vested interest groups, such as local authorities, statutory agencies and others. Too often, tourism planning strategies are based on a hope and false expectations as opposed to a reliable and technically sound evaluation of potential impacts.

New and innovative partnerships and techniques must be considered — involving trusts, co-operatives and community councils — when implementing a cultural tourism and arts strategy. Our report will be the catalyst for such initiatives. I urge the Minister and the Department to support the motion. Go raibh míle maith agat.

Dr Adamson: I extend my thanks to the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure, chaired by Mr O'Neill. I also thank the Committee Clerk and her staff for the hard work that they have put into this important report, which, I believe, shows the Belfast Agreement at its best.

The greatest of all historians, Gaius Cornelius Tacitus, wrote of the exhortation of the British nobleman, Calgacus, who fought the Roman Empire, when he said of the Romans:

“There are no more nations beyond us; nothing is there but waves and rocks — the Romans more deadly still than these, for in them is an arrogance which no submission or good behaviour can escape...They create desolation and they call it peace.”

As recent events in Belfast have shown, many ordinary people in Northern Ireland have rarely felt so despondent and uncertain of their future. Whether real or imaginary, the perception in the Unionist community in particular, is that the so-called “other side” has gained most from the political process. That has been feeding an increasingly sceptical and negative appraisal of the Belfast Agreement, and what we call “peace”.

The overriding concern most frequently voiced by community activists is that there is an increasing internal disarray and even disintegration in Loyalist areas. The unemployment situation has rarely been so dire. The level of education attainment remains abysmal. The former community infrastructure, even if largely of an informal nature, has taken a severe battering from mismanaged redevelopment, the break-up of old communities and the absence of any long-term strategy for revitalisation and renewal. That is why such reports are so vital to social, economic and cultural regeneration in large areas of Northern Ireland.

The Department should assess the further potential for the development of dynamic cultural quarters in Northern Ireland's cities to promote and showcase local culture and locations in which art and culture can be offered to all. District councils should place greater focus on the historic cores of our cities and towns, through the development of history trails, imaginative interpretation and storytelling in which we excel.

The Department and the Arts Council should assess the position elsewhere, regarding the requirements placed on developers to include public art into major schemes, particularly in urban areas. The Northern Ireland Tourist Board should determine, in each product group network, the extent to which themed tours and trails can be used for the special interest market as well as for the future tourists that we so desire.

In east Belfast, for example, there is ample potential to develop and co-ordinate trails and tours that focus on diverse aspects of culture and tradition. C S Lewis — perhaps the greatest Christian writer of the twentieth century — was born in Belfast in 1898. The C S Lewis tourist trail links the main places in Belfast and north Down that are most closely associated with Lewis, such as St Mark's Church, Dundela; Little Lea, Circular Road; Bernagh, now known as Red Hall on the Circular Road; the Old Inn at Crawfordsburn; the Holywood hills, which were the template and origin for the Narnia tales — the greatest children's stories ever written; Campbell College; Dundela flats and the centenary sculpture at Holywood Arches.

Little Lea and Bernagh, which is owned by the South and East Belfast Health and Social Services Trust, are still under threat of development. That must be reversed. At Bernagh, Lewis wrote his first book as a Christian — the great ‘Pilgrim's Regress’ — an imitation of ‘The Pilgrim's Progress’. That building must be protected from developers at all costs. The Chairperson also spoke in detail about the Titanic Trail, which, of course, has great potential throughout the world.

2.15 pm

The historic cores of our key cities offer a great opportunity for tourism, as has been shown by the promotion of Derry's walls and the O'Doherty Fort in Londonderry. Also, the development of heirskip, or heritage, villages, perhaps centred on the reconstruction of Belfast at the time of the American Revolution, could be created in inner east Belfast to facilitate the promotion of the Ulster-Scots language and culture. That should be done on an equal basis with Ulster and Irish Gaelic language and culture, to revitalise the entire area.

We must require developers to incorporate public art into their major schemes, especially in urban areas, so that they can put something back into the community that they have pillaged for far too long. There is not, to the Committee's knowledge, an officer at either central Government or local government level anywhere in Northern Ireland whose specific responsibility is to encourage the sponsorship and incorporation of artwork in public areas for all the public to see. We who pay the pipers should also call the tune.

Mr Hilditch: As a member of the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure, I am pleased that the ‘Inquiry into Cultural Tourism and the Arts’ report has now been concluded and brought before the House. The inquiry was launched last January, and I, for one, never imagined that the Committee would be subjected to such an enthusiastic response. We received more than 80 submissions. To add further support, the Committee also heard oral evidence from 100 people representing 39 organisations.

The workload was immense, so I join with other Committee members in thanking the Committee Clerk and the support staff for all their work on the inquiry in the past 18 months. I also thank those who took the time and trouble to make submissions, both written and oral, giving the Committee much food for thought on wide and varied issues within the terms of reference.

It was clear from the outset that Northern Ireland was starting on the back row of the grid. Our geographical location on the periphery of Europe and the unreliable climate do us no favours. Those factors, combined with decades of terrorism and civil unrest, ensured that Northern Ireland could not reach its full potential. Regrettably, some figures indicate that, up to 2000, 62% of people who came to Northern Ireland were either visiting friends or relatives or were here on business. That left only 18% who could be considered tourists.

During the inquiry, the bottom fell out of the North American market in the aftermath of the terrorist attacks in the United States on 11 September, leaving another void in an area that had witnessed a fair degree of growth. That, on top of the foot-and-mouth disease outbreak, has taken a severe toll.

The only other negative issue on which I wish to comment was the repeated criticism of the Northern Ireland Tourist Board, which featured time and time again in oral evidence. It has been a bad time recently for the Tourist Board, so I shall not dwell on the subject. However, there was consensus that there had been a failure to promote and market the region and to encourage tourist development of culture and the arts. However, some comfort can be taken from the work of the Cultural Tourism Partnership in placing culture at the heart of the Northern Ireland Tourist Board's corporate plan.

The report contains 56 recommendations that reflect issues from the arts of music, film, drama and dance to visitor attractions, cultural strategies, infrastructure, funding and much more. The recommendations show the depth of the key issues.

I draw the House's attention to the recommendations that highlight the potential for festivals, summer schools and other events, especially recommendation 8 on the development of the festival sector. It has been established that festivals can play an important role at local level, specific to the culture of that area, and also on a wider regional basis. More importantly, they are major economic generators. For example, the highly successful Edinburgh Festival 2001, to which the report refers, redeemed an otherwise devastated Scottish tourism industry in the wake of the last year's foot-and-mouth disease outbreak.

The recommendation states:

"District councils should consider how they could encourage the development of sustainable local community festivals, which would also provide a focus for visitors."

That would complement existing major festivals. However, to develop their potential

"they must be able to offer long-term viability and serve both the host community and the visitor."

One local example is the Carrickfergus Waterfront Festival, held during the past two weeks, which included a re-enactment of the landing of King William in 1690. Every year, local people take pride in proclaiming their history and heritage, and visitors display their hunger to learn of the culture of others and eagerly return to witness the event.

District councils have begun to realise the potential of such festivals, but promotion and co-ordination are essential. It was disappointing that several of the 26 district councils did not reply to the Committee's request for information on local festivals. Those included four of the eight councils whose areas encompass the Causeway Coast and the Glens of Antrim, two of the country's leading tourist attractions.

During our research, it was interesting to learn that a similar policy has been developed in France, where, until recently, 500 festivals were not considered to be tourist products. Those are now specifically marketed, and 15% to 20% of visitors to major festivals are now foreign tourists.

In recommendation 9, the Committee strongly encourages Belfast Festival at Queen's to examine the potential of summer events and to use the broadcasting media to develop an international audience. Representatives of Belfast Festival at Queen's stated in their evidence that they were conscious of the gap that exists during the summer. The festival is in its fortieth year, has proved its sustainability and has capitalised on the focus of Halloween. The Committee would support any proposal to organise events to fill the summer gap and to promote the festival more widely.

Although Belfast Festival at Queen's cannot rival the Edinburgh Festival, there is scope to tap into international coverage through the commissioning of a purpose-made showcase to highlight events during the festival to satellite television audiences worldwide.

I endorse recommendation 13, which calls on the Arts Council of Northern Ireland to liaise with district councils, the professional theatre and others to develop a summer arts programme for local audiences and visitors. Such a programme could serve a dual purpose as a training ground for young actors and as a frequently changing entertainment option.

The Northern Ireland Events Company only scratches the surface in its provision. I commend its efforts, but given our limited resources, we can only glance sideways in jealousy at our neighbouring devolved Administrations in Scotland and Wales, where significant budgets attract major events. We must persuade potential promoters, as well as ourselves, that business can be done in Northern Ireland. However, given the Northern Ireland Events Company's limited budget of £1 million, the key to success will be the positioning of a financial commitment sufficiently far ahead in the bidding process.

Unfortunately, confidence in the Northern Ireland Events Company was recently undermined by a Sinn Féin/IRA Member. That organisation destroyed stability with its campaign of murder and destruction but now has the audacity to portray itself as the minder of the public purse.

Perhaps the Minister could consider another major event. In recent days, it has emerged that the local government auditor has written to Carrickfergus Borough Council, which in 1997 won the right to host the Optimist World Championship in sailing. Despite the fact that that successful event was a good economic generator for the area, the local government auditor has questioned the council's entitlement even to bid to stage it. That bureaucracy is a worry, given our attempts to expand and bring world-class events to Northern Ireland.

I support the motion. I commend the report and hope that its recommendations will be implemented soon.

Mr McCarthy: I support fully the contents of the report on the inquiry into cultural tourism and the arts. As a member of the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure, I am delighted that the report has come to the House.

The Committee worked extremely hard. It listened to many groups and considered many written submissions. I hope that its Assembly Colleagues will support the report's recommendations and that the Executive will act on it, because that can only benefit everyone in Northern Ireland.

We must make up for the lost and wasted years. Northern Ireland has much to offer. I have repeatedly told the Committee's hosts in Boston, Paris, Barcelona, Scotland and Galway that they should visit the Strangford constituency. It has it all — it is the best in the land. Of course, my Assembly Colleagues supported me fully at all times.

Northern Ireland has two important features with which to attract visitors: genealogy, which could be classed as a "roots strategy"; and townland names. Recommendations 19, 20, 21, 22 and 23 cover fully what must be done. The Northern Ireland Tourist Board and other bodies could play a significant part in a roots strategy. The report states that there are "60 million people worldwide claiming to have Irish ancestry".

Those people must be persuaded to visit us. Although they may discover that their relatives live in Cork, Kerry or Waterford, we should, through investment, development and marketing, entice them to Northern Ireland. We can assure them of a welcome and offer them attractions equal to those in other places. Ireland is a small island, and we can benefit if the determination is there.

I recently received information about the Irish Genealogical Congress, which holds a week-long international conference every three to four years that attracts people from all over the world. Plans are afoot to hold the next conference in 2004. Belfast was considered as a venue in the past but, because of its problems, other cities were selected instead. Therefore, at this early stage, I appeal to the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to consider seriously the provision of a real incentive that would bring the Irish Genealogical Congress to Belfast. It is an excellent opportunity that should not be missed.

I pay tribute to the work of our local historical societies, especially the Federation for Ulster Local Studies, which made a presentation to the Committee. The Assembly must support all that work.

The Committee Chairperson mentioned my pet subject, which I have spoken about many times in the Assembly, and I shall continue to stress the importance of maintaining the precious heritage of Northern Ireland's townland names. The previous time that I tabled a motion on townland names I mentioned Ballycranmore, Ballycranbeg, Ballyesborough and Ballyboghilbo. Townland names continue to be an attraction for visitors to Northern Ireland; therefore, they must not be forgotten.

In mirroring recommendation 21, I appeal to all Departments, district councils and other public bodies to include townland names on all correspondence. It is not good enough for Ministers to rely on the community to include townland names on correspondence. Since the early 1970s, townland names have largely been omitted, so an entire generation may be ignorant of them.

2.30 pm

I should like to applaud the staff of the Ordnance Survey of Northern Ireland, based at Colby House, Stranmillis Road, on their progress with the common address file. I understand that it is now called the compass address file. I hope that that will give us a complete list of all the townland names in Northern Ireland, that it will be completed in the autumn and that Departments will have no excuse not to include townland names on all their correspondence.

I should also like to pay tribute to the Chairperson, Deputy Chairperson and members of the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure for concluding this important inquiry into cultural tourism. I should also like to express my admiration and thanks to all the Committee staff for their help, courtesy and invaluable advice during the course of our work.

I appreciate the presence of the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, Mr McGimpsey, in the Chamber. I know he supports our work, and I hope that he can lead his Department and the other Departments to see that our recommendations are fully adopted.

Mr Agnew: I should like to congratulate the Committee staff on the way in which they brought the report together. The Committee Clerk — affectionately known as "Mrs Woman" incidentally — and her staff have been tremendous in ensuring that the report is before us. We should also congratulate the Chairperson on his leadership throughout the inquiry.

It was an interesting exercise, and we had submissions from more than 80 groups and individuals concerned about tourism. We asked all those people questions, and one thing that struck me about their views on the Tourist Board was that no one had a good word to say about it. Some did not comment at all. Although that is not my view, others suspect that rather than promoting a good image of Northern Ireland, the Tourist Board has promoted a bad image of itself — a significant comment. Again, and I may be speaking for myself here, we should analyse the usefulness of the Tourist Board and ask whether it is necessary. Around the Province local authorities provide most of the 450 plus tourist facilities.

I am interested in the industrial heritage aspect, an area that is largely untapped here, unlike other parts of the free world. I was in Phoenix, Arizona, a few weeks ago, and there was a Titanic exhibition in downtown Phoenix. That evening I spoke to a group of approximately 35 business people and asked how many realised that the Titanic was built in Belfast. Only two people raised their hands. The rest did not know that the Titanic was built in Belfast, yet there they were having a Titanic exhibition in the middle of Phoenix. On display were all the artefacts that were found at the bottom of the ocean and brought ashore and that now make up a travelling exhibition.

Belfast should be proud of that. Some people seem to think that Belfast should be ashamed because the ship sank. We know why it sank, and it had nothing to do with the skills of the workers in Harland & Wolff; it sank because the silly captain decided to try to break a transatlantic record and sailed straight into an ice field.

Northern Ireland should capitalise on its great industrial base of linen, agriculture, pottery, crystal, even whiskey — it is all there — to highlight what the Province has to offer. I am not so sure about poteen, but those are all part of our culture.

Newtownabbey Borough Council was faced with the possibility of seeing the demolition of a great mill at Mossley that had played a central part in the industrial revolution in Ireland. The council stepped in immediately and within a week had purchased the mill and decided to turn it into its new headquarters.

Other areas in the UK are preserving their industrial heritage, and it is paying its way. A Lisburn man called Gregg developed the great mills at Hyde on the fringe of Manchester Airport. The National Trust is taking those over and fabricating and manufacturing items for the tourist industry. It is paying its way. The big spinning wheels and the steam turbines are all there and are being restored.

A similar project is going on at the mill village in Lanark, just outside Glasgow. People are still living in tenements in that area, but part of the mill has been converted into a hotel, and other parts have been restored to working order.

A private entrepreneur took over massive mills in Halifax in North England and developed them. They are so vast that one could not walk from one end to the other, but would require transport. An arts centre and all sorts of businesses and attractions, hotels and restaurants have been established there.

In Bradford a large collection of old machinery has been restored — in fact, there is so much that it is being sold off to other museums throughout the UK. All those operations are in place to preserve our industrial heritage.

We are proud of what we have done in Newtownabbey, because the industrial revolution in Ireland took off in the present boundaries of Newtownabbey Borough Council. I had to include that historic fact. We are attempting to preserve part of our heritage. That can be accomplished in many ways. Part of Mossley Mill could be restored and used as a museum. The mills in Benburb have been partially preserved but still need to be developed. These projects could be considered tourist attractions. We have an audience and a product that can be used to attract that audience.

When the Committee was preparing the report, it was discovered that most visitors to Northern Ireland come to see friends and relatives. People must be attracted for other reasons, such as over 450 varied attractions and many worthwhile sites. Leisure centres bring in many visitors, but there are also places of sound historic interest that can be used for tourism.

The Titanic Quarter and the events down at the shipyard can be compared with extensive developments in Liverpool. Those might suggest that the Titanic was built there. The Titanic never visited Liverpool, but the White Star Line was associated with the city. The tender that brought people out from Cherbourg where the Titanic was anchored before it headed off across the Atlantic is now a disused floating restaurant on the River Seine in Paris. That could be brought back here to provide a focal point for tourism. There are many attractions that we could utilise.

I am a believer in community-based tourism. No matter what community we consider, it has something of interest for tourism. It could be an inaccessible hidden path. What is the sense in having such an attraction with no way to get to it? That is a problem throughout Northern Ireland. In my history research I have found that many attractions are not signposted and lie up a country lane or across a field. We must make those more accessible. We need to audit tourist products, both current and potential.

The Northern Ireland Tourist Board will continue to exist in one form or another despite what I have said. It is of the utmost importance that it promote Northern Ireland's attractions comprehensively and accurately. At present, it is not doing so. Last night, I looked at a Tourist Board brochure. As I glanced through it, I was surprised to find that the information on certain historic attractions was not accurate. That is not good. The Tourist Board must ensure that it is accurate in its assessment of the attractions that it includes in its brochures.

The approach to promoting attractions should be more comprehensive. There should be an audited list of all the attractions that bring people to the Province. This is a good little Province. Despite all our problems, this place is worth living in. When King William came to Ireland he said that it was a place worth fighting for — we have been doing that ever since. However, we can put that in context and recognise that we are all citizens of this land. There is so much on offer. We ourselves are a product, and there are many things to attract people who have a genuine interest in some of the areas mentioned today.

I have looked at only one aspect of tourism — industrial heritage. There is a market for that. I and other Committee members saw the evidence of that in a place called Lowell, about an hour's drive from Boston, where they have developed the great mills and put the boat on the old canal. Almost by accident, they decided to install some tiered seating and hold a country and western event. It is now a massive occasion that attracts almost 250,000 people on a weekend.

The significant point about that project is that it is located in a downtown area that was falling apart and inhabited by drug addicts. It was not a place where respectable people would be seen, so something had to be done. The area was developed with the mills as the focal point. The place is tremendous — a basketball arena and an ice arena, which can also host concerts, were built. Facilities were provided to attract people.

Whatever a community has to offer, it will have something that will attract people. It could be a place like Newtownabbey, which was the cradle of the industrial revolution. People are interested in the fact that we have preserved part of that heritage. Unfortunately, some of it has gone. What was perhaps the oldest factory chimney in Ireland was demolished to make way for a Toys 'R' Us store, which was a shame. There was no need to take away that chimney. People are attracted to such things. Do we do enough about that?

The report makes 56 recommendations, including some on visitor centres and museums, in which I have an interest. We should consider those recommendations, which I commend to the Assembly. We recommend taking stock of our visitor attractions, heritage centres and other facilities. I urge the Assembly to accept the report's recommendations, and not only because of the Committee's hard work. However, it is because of that hard work that we have got the report right. The issues that it raises must be taken on board, not ignored or thrown out.

Mr J Wilson: The Chairperson and my Colleagues on the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure have already mentioned many aspects of the background to the inquiry, the need for the inquiry and the report. I wish to say a few words about one section of the report.

2.45 pm

Before I do, I want to join with others in placing on record a word of thanks to the Chairperson. He did a sterling job, keeping us focused on the objective against many competing pressures. It was not easy, and it was a job well done. Also, I want to thank the Committee staff for their hard work and dedication. This was a substantial inquiry — one that was necessary and useful — and all the staff played a big part from start to finish.

I want to say a few words about Northern Ireland's image, which has been mentioned briefly by others, and how that image relates to the task of promoting our culture and, I hope, attracting tourists. As was the case in the angling inquiry, some issues were mentioned again and again by almost everyone who made a submission. Our image was certainly one of those. In short, what came over time and time again was the comment: "How can we compete, faced with the bad news stories about Northern Ireland?" Blame was apportioned over a wide spectrum: the terrorists; the rioters on our streets; the criminality in our communities; and the murders. Even the news industry did not escape criticism.

Many submissions noted that a major barrier to developing culture tourism is the persistence of a negative image of Northern Ireland. On the other hand, feedback from visitors suggests that they are impressed by how different the reality of Northern Ireland is from the image they see, hear and read on television, radio and newspapers.

I draw Members' attention to recommendations 30 and 31. It is not just the media that have the job of telling the Northern Ireland story — it is a Government responsibility, and the responsibility of the Executive and the Assembly. As has been said, it is the responsibility of the Northern Ireland Tourist Board, and the film industry, the Arts Council and district councils also have a role in telling the Northern Ireland story.

Those who made submissions to the inquiry recognised that providing, promoting and marketing culture tourism against a backdrop of terrorism was and, to some extent, still is an uphill battle. However, on the positive side, they also said that when broadcasters and the film industry deal with Northern Ireland culture, they could focus more on its richness, variety, and beauty — tipping the scales so that the positive outweighs the negative. Collectively, all the providers of cultural activity need to work harder, in a cohesive and strategic fashion. Those who promote and manage Northern Ireland need to do more to emphasise the positive if we are to attract more tourists to enjoy our rich and varied culture.

One Member in particular has referred to the Northern Ireland Tourist Board, and there is no doubt that it did come in for some criticism. However, would the tourist boards of Wales, Scotland, England, or just across the border in the Republic of Ireland have done a better job through the 30 plus years of terrorism? I doubt it very much.

I commend this report to the Assembly. I know that the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure will give it serious consideration.

Mr Shannon: We hae a report theday that can chairt the oncum o cultural tourism for a fair fek yeirs ti cum, help forder thrift an mak tourism in our Province yung again. A mukkil betterment can be brocht aboot, but anelie gif a co-ordinate plan is putten thegither an actit on.

The heid raison fowk cums ti Norlin Airland is veisitin feres an freinds, an A believe that's whaur we maun stairt biggin up tourism potential. Awmaist 45% o aw fowk veisitin the Province faws intil that categorie. Monie o us believes that tourism is wantin virr an smeddum at the meinit. Takkin tent til that thocht, that's whitfor it's that importin ti pouss forrit wi forderin furth-o-state cultural tourism insteid o daein it in the fushionless wey the NITB's duin it up til nou. Alang wi tyauvin at forderin tourism, the local mercat maun pley its part wi a qualitie airts sector no blate ti grup the potential for furth-o-state veisitors. Lat's be perfit apen here — veisitors ti Norlin Airland disnae cum luikin a "sand and sun" holiday, for we cannae gie onie uphauuld for the lyke. Whit we can gie thaim in Norlin Airland is cultur, heirskip an the airts, an as a niche mercat it haulds on growein. The NITB haes seen a meiserable failyie in its ettills at forderin an mercatin the Province an maun awn its responsibeilitie for tint yeirs in tourism growthe an oncum. Lat's tak a keek at the feigurs — juist 1·8% o Norlin Airland domestic product cums fae tourism, but the Erse Republic, Scotland an Wales aw cums oot aroun 6%. It's patent that the'r a bittie makkin up ti dae, an, again, the evident is that the'r no mukkil been duin for yeirs. September 11 haes been a catalyst for the USA an, atweill, the haild world, an it's thocht that a focus on the mercats o Europe, Gret Britain an the Erse Republic wad gie us mair o a heft. Still an on, the USA can — an soud — be a pynt for cultural tourism. USA ceitizens haes a hert-hunger for finndin thair ruits an historie, an that mercat cannae be slung a deifie aither.

Today's report can chart the future for cultural tourism for a great many years to come. It can help to bring an economic boost and rejuvenate tourism in the Province. A vast improvement can be made, but only if a co-ordinated plan is put together and acted upon.

The principal reason that people come to Northern Ireland is to visit friends and relatives. That is where we must start to increase tourism potential. Almost 45% of all people visiting the Province fall into that category. Many of us feel that tourism currently has no push or energy behind it. Therefore, it is vital that out-of-state cultural tourism is promoted aggressively and not in the namby-pamby way practised by the Northern Ireland Tourist Board up until now.

In tandem with aggressive tourism promotion, the local market must play its part with a quality arts sector, anxious to seize the potential for out-of-state visitors. Let us be perfectly honest: visitors do not come to Northern Ireland because they are seeking a "sand and sun" holiday; we cannot guarantee that. In Northern Ireland, we offer the growing niche market of cultural heritage and the arts.

The Northern Ireland Tourist Board has failed miserably to promote and market the Province and has been singularly responsible for the lost years of tourism growth and development. Let us look at the figures. Only 1·8% of Northern Ireland's gross domestic product comes from tourism, while the Republic of Ireland, Scotland and Wales all average approximately 6%. It is apparent that there is some catching up to do, and there is evidence that not much has been done for years.

The events of 11 September were a catalyst for the USA and the whole world. It is felt that a focus on the markets of Europe, Great Britain and the Republic of Ireland would be more advantageous. However, the USA can, and should, be a point for cultural tourism. American citizens are hungry to find their roots and hungry for history; that potential market cannot be ignored either.

We need world-class events. The rest of Great Britain has several world-class and major international events. We must see a push to bring at least one or two events to the Province each year. While the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment and the roles of the Northern Ireland Tourist Board and Tourism Ireland Ltd must be clarified, and the benefits for our Province must then be taken advantage of, it is not enough to talk about what must be done. Let us see a clear strategy within specific goals to develop each sector.

It is especially worrying that so many of the organisations giving evidence were critical of their dealings with the Northern Ireland Tourist Board. Most Members have referred to that. There has been a breakdown in the Tourist Board's customer services, and failure to return phone calls or to respond to requests paints a very damning picture of it. District councils have an important part to play in promoting cultural tourism. In fairness to it, the Tourist Board has acknowledged that it could improve on what it is doing. We urge it to galvanise itself, grasp the nettle and actively promote cultural tourism.

We have looked at the diversity of themes and sectors and at the responsibilities we have for our cultural heritage. How can we encourage a good quality of life for the whole community? Promotion and development could be undertaken by the cultural strategy for Northern Ireland.

Cultural tourism can unlock many doors to benefit the entire Province, but that can only happen if the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment and the Tourist Board, as part of that Department, grasp the initiative collectively. Up until now, they have failed to do so. They should accept constructive criticism, accept that things have gone wrong in the past and move forward with zeal and enthusiasm so that all tangible benefits are grasped and made the most of. It is in front of us, like an apple ready to be picked, but we must get it right. That is more vital today than it has ever been. I commend the report's recommendations to the House.

Mr Davis: Reference was made during a debate yesterday to empty Benches, and we have empty Benches again today. All Members in the Chamber, with the exception of Mr Gibson, are members of the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure. This is one of the most important reports to be brought before the Assembly. When we read the papers we cannot fail to see the words “culture”, “arts” and “leisure”, yet we see from the gathering today just how interested Members who are not on that Committee are. Indeed, there are more people in the Public Gallery than in the Chamber. However, I welcome the opportunity to comment on the report of the Committee’s inquiry into cultural tourism and the arts, and I will focus on the strategic planning and development section. That section says that the Tourist Board does not have an overall objective that shows what it is trying to achieve and what its limitations are. Every successful organisation needs to have a purpose, and the work of the organisation should be focused around it.

The Committee took evidence from several organisations that referred to the poor performance of the Tourist Board. I note that its co-operative plan for 2002-05 has a vision of increasing the number of visitors by 7% each year over that period. The Committee hopes that the board will recognise the important part that culture can play in attracting more visitors to Northern Ireland. As a result, recommendation 40 says that

I want to promote recommendation 41. It refers to and what that would offer to tourism. The objective behind such a day would be to emphasise the importance of celebrating the wonderful culture that exists in Northern Ireland.

3.00 pm

It is vital that the Department take the lead in pursuing that matter, working closely with other Departments and bodies. Various groups support the idea of a heritage day, and it has been suggested that the theme of the day could be changed annually to ensure that all cultural groups are supported and represented.

The Tourist Board must undertake research to analyse and understand exactly what attracts visitors to our Province. By so doing, it will be able to determine what will encourage potential visitors in future, and thus it will be able to increase visitor numbers. That task must not be undertaken in isolation but in close conjunction with other relevant tourist bodies in mainland UK and the Republic of Ireland.

Departments, district councils, non-departmental public bodies, attraction operators, accommodation providers, transport undertakings, tour companies and other bodies, such as the National Trust and the Northern Ireland Events Company, must work together more effectively. In that respect, the creation of Tourism Ireland Ltd should promote greater co-operation and allow the Northern Ireland Tourist Board to invest greater energy and resources in promoting Northern Ireland to the rest of the UK and the Republic of Ireland.

The formation of formal local networks of cultural partners and tourist attraction operators is important. Those networks would develop theme-based package tours and trails, and they should be assisted by local tourism action plans, with attraction clusters within a specific locale that would allow visitors to have a range of cultural and heritage experiences.

The report states that the Committee was encouraged by the work of the individual product groups and their working parties in the cultural tourism partnership. Specific action must be taken on the conclusion and strategies outlined in the 2002 progress report, including the development of networks and branding exercises. Recommendation 47 suggests that policies and measures should be monitored, evaluated and reviewed to allow for continual improvement in the industry, and appropriate structures should be established to allow for such improvement.

I thank the members of the Committee, the Chairperson and the Deputy Chairperson for the work that they have put in, and I record my thanks to the Committee staff for their commitment and attention to detail. I hope that the Minister will give the report the serious consideration that it rightly deserves.

Mr Gibson: I am not a member of the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure, but I support the report. I have a long-time vested interest in cultural tourism. Many years ago, perhaps to my own discredit, I promoted, in the Omagh District Council area, the idea of basing a 51-mile trail on the inspirational points and places of W F Marshall, who was one of the first people to broadcast on the BBC in Northern Ireland. He was an academic of great power. He made a special contribution to the literary world by recognising that the area in which he lived in mid-Tyrone had a unique and distinctive dialect. So distinct was it, as indicated by his research, that W F Marshall was commissioned by the BBC to assist in the production of Shakespeare’s great play ‘As You Like It’ in the original language of Shakespeare, which is recognised as being the mid-Tyrone dialect. Given that vested interest and the strong call that was made for the retention of townlands, I commend the Committee on the excellent report.

However, no methodology for retaining townlands was suggested. I have struggled with the issue for many years in my council area, where townlands have been eliminated and replaced by manufactured road names. I live seven miles from Omagh, in the village of Beragh. That seven-mile area is known by one name — Donaghane — but it is made up of 11 townlands. I have encouraged Omagh District Council to insert the names of townlands in red print on road signs. It is a greater expense, but the council receives sponsorship for the project. A practical effort must be made.

I have encouraged other community groups to use local stones to mark out townland boundaries, but permission for that is required from the Department of the Environment and the Department for Regional Development's Roads Service. I know that the Minister would be interested in supporting that idea.

Much criticism has been levelled at the Tourist Board, but everyone can contribute in his own area. Local pride and heritage can be brought to the fore and utilised as an important tourist product. In the town that I represent, the names of such musical geniuses as Dominic Kirwan, Brian Coll and numerous showbands are written large in history. The same applies to local poets such as John Montague, Benedict Kiely, Matt Mulcahy, R L Marshall and W F Marshall. Every area has similarly well-known people. Mid-Tyrone did not have tourism potential until it used the inspirational points of the 51-mile Marshall trail through unspoilt, undiluted, unpolluted countryside. That rural quietude brings tranquillity to visitors from the concrete conurbations.

I support the report, and I advocate that the Minister encourage the practical, rather than aspirational, retention of townland names. It can be done, and I encourage him to treat the matter seriously. Northern Ireland obtained the concept of townlands from Sudan. The idea was imported during the third and fourth centuries, when Coptic traders arrived at the Shannon and other estuary rivers. Townlands are particular to Ireland and north Sudan. Let us retain a custom that is almost unique to Northern Ireland, so that we can give it a special focus as part of our cultural heritage.

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr McGimpsey): I welcome the Committee's report, and I acknowledge its breadth. Its 56 recommendations offer a means to maximise the potential of cultural tourism and the arts in Northern Ireland. It will come as no surprise to the House that, given the substantial number of recommendations and considering the short time that I have had the report, I shall want to give it more detailed consideration before I make my formal reply to the Committee. Moreover, some of the recommendations fall to other Ministers, and I shall wish to consult them before responding. However, by way of early comment, I welcome the Committee's recognition of the importance of the arts in adding value to cultural tourism and of the extent to which the arts can enrich our lives and make positive economic and social contributions to the development of Northern Ireland.

Recognition of culture as an economic generator is not a new concept. It is being employed in parts of Europe — Bilbao and Rotterdam spring to mind. It is a tool — an economic generator — that has been highly successful in those areas, and I am certain that we can use it to good effect in Northern Ireland. Many Members have mentioned the areas that we can utilise to create economic well-being as well as to enhance our image and self-esteem.

I also welcome the Committee's pragmatism in its approach to issues such as sustainability and long-term viability. We have already witnessed the difficulties that have occurred in projects such as the St Patrick Centre in Downpatrick and the Navan Centre in Armagh. The need for financial rigour, as well as intellectual rigour, for projects such as those is essential, and their absence will almost certainly lead to sustainability problems. The importance of properly addressing that issue is essential if some of the opportunities identified in the report are to be brought to fruition. Too often with such projects the capital investment can be found, but not enough consideration is given to the revenue consequences and the fact that many of the projects will create an annual revenue deficit for several years. If the number of visitors is not estimated realistically, we are liable to run into problems, as we have done at the Navan Centre and the St Patrick Centre.

The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure is addressing issues that are particularly relevant to it. Those include the welcome focus on the development of the Titanic Quarter and the telling of the Titanic story. With that in mind, I urge Committee members to visit the Thompson dry dock to see its potential and that of the surrounding area in order to promote Belfast's industrial, maritime and aviation centre. For those who are not familiar with the story, the Thompson dry dock was built in 1910 and is an awesome piece of space. It was extended by 30ft to allow the Titanic to squeeze in, and it sits down there just as it was built. We should look at how we can develop that to retain the dry dock features and the pump house that sits alongside it and at how we can use it to tell the Titanic story. Belfast is the only city in the world that can tell that story.

HMS Caroline is currently in the Alexandra dock. It is a 1914, first world war, light cruiser built for the Royal Navy. It is the last survivor of the Battle of Jutland and is a priceless and irreplaceable artefact. The ship is of the Titanic era and built in Titanic fashion; much of it was rivet built. We have huge potential there, and I urge the Committee to look at that.

Next door to that, the Belfast Harbour Commissioners plan to develop a portion of the wharf to enable large cruise liners to dock in Belfast. We have all that potential sitting cheek by jowl with the science park. The Nomadic has been mentioned. Two tenders were especially built to carry passengers from Cherbourg out to the Titanic, and one of those was the Nomadic. It looks like a mini Titanic, and it would be a wonderful asset if it were situated in Belfast. However, the Department has looked at moving it from Paris, and there are major cost implications. Extra bridges have been built over the Seine, where it sits, and it would mean sinking the ship to take it below the bridges. There would be major engineering difficulties in retrieving the ship from Paris and major resource implications too. When it was being considered I envisaged difficulty in finding resources. However, the Department will keep it in mind.

3.15 pm

Promoting the cultural quarter concept, art and public spaces, accessibility to arts facilities and the development of cultural product in theatre, dance and music are also to be welcomed as is the identification of roots tourism in the international genealogy market. The Public Records Office will play a central role in that. I recently hosted an event in the Long Gallery for overseas visitors for just that type of tourism. Digitising records will play a key role as they become an easily accessible resource through new technology to visitors to the Internet.

Those are ideas that the Public Records Office and other areas of the Department are very much aware of and aligned to. We feel strongly about getting new technology into various areas. The Assembly saw the first part of that initiative with the electronic libraries for Northern Ireland (ELFNI) project early in 2002. That was a £36 million contract to develop computer technology in all our libraries. That is a step forward because those computers will play a major part in future for genealogy and other interests that visitors might have.

Furthermore, the Department is making progress on the development of language and the use of the arts to explore our common heritage, and I welcome, in principle, the identification of the need for a dedicated art gallery. However, that has a major cost implication, to which I shall return. I am pleased that the report acknowledged the importance of specific managed events alongside, for example, locally organised festivals to encourage tourism.

Several Members referred to the importance of district councils. Much work is being done there. The Department is working through the cultural forum to ensure that each of the 26 district councils will have local cultural strategies that complement one another and have the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure's overall aims in its publications. That is happening and is an area of activity that will ensure that councils complement the Department's aims as set out in 'Face to Face', the sector's vision for arts, for culture and for unlocking creativity. The cultural forum has a key role to play in providing a broader approach to help deliver much of what is contained in the report.

Mr McCarthy and others, such as Mr Gibson, talked about townland names. Recently, during Question Time, I referred to the common address file project, which will enable townland names to be added to addresses. The Department now has funding to get the common address file into operation, and that will ensure that Government Departments and councils use it initially and that there will be a ready bridge across from the townland names archive straight into the common address file. The Department has the means to do that — and it has the will to do it.

The report's recommendations on creative industry align with the Department's work and with that of the interdepartmental creativity action group. In particular, support to enable the Northern Ireland Film and Television Commission to develop the sector is being pursued by my Colleagues and me through Executive programme funds. The Arts Council also fulfils a co-ordinating role in the craft sector, which, although it is not featured in the report, is another important element of cultural tourism. It appears that some issues are not covered in the report.

We are all aware that money makes everything possible. The report rightly identified funding as being critical to future development. However, the report stopped short of quantifying any of the costs associated with the areas identified for the development and of offering any practical view on from where future funding might be obtained.

For example, the museum of sea and sky and the museum of creative arts could cost in the region of £100 million, as could the Ulster canal and the Lagan navigation projects combined. If the money were there, we could deliver everything that is contained in the report. However, we must live within our means, and expectations must be realistic.

There are ways to find that money. We must be imaginative and inventive, but we must also understand that the Executive and Government cannot simply write cheques for those amounts. On top of the capital amount is the resource implication after construction. Those areas need careful examination and investigation. It taxes me greatly, but we are actively considering funding options. Unless the resources are found, we cannot deliver what we are talking about and looking for. We cannot satisfy expectations, but we are aware of the value of cultural tourism as an economic driver.

The bid for 2008 Capital of Culture and the potential of sport as a key component of our culture did not feature in the report, nor is there any acknowledgement of the Cathedral Quarter in Belfast and the "hub" concept — something else on which we are actively working. The Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment is also conducting major tourism reviews. Several Members mentioned the Tourist Board. The Department takes the views expressed seriously. A major tourism review is under way, and Belfast City Council is also undertaking a review, but neither is mentioned in the report. I am sure that the Committee will be anxious to look at those reports when they are published.

The report is an important step forward. I commend the Committee for the effort that has gone into it. I shall give the Committee a detailed response to the report in due course, and I look forward to working closely with Committee members to see what might realistically be delivered.

Mr O'Neill: I welcome all the contributions made on the report and thank all Members for their time and consideration.

One issue that sprang to mind from several contributions, especially that of the Deputy Chairperson of the Committee, was the definition of culture. She used the UNESCO definition, which reminded me of the visit that some Committee members made to Kanturk to attend a culture conference in County Cork. At the conference, an academic from Wales described culture as “the central thing”. She also said that in Welsh, the closest interpretation of the word for “culture” describes the move from being wild to being civilised. That is an interesting concept about culture and its meaning.

The enthusiasm with which Committee members have responded to the report in this debate indicates the level of work that the Committee had undertaken. I thank them once again for all that work.

The Deputy Chairperson mentioned a good example of where we, as a community, can fail in dealing with the concept of cultural tourism when she mentioned the Pennsylvanian millionaires.

It is a great pity that such opportunities — and we know of many — go a-begging because we have no facility to take advantage of them.

Mrs Nelis rightly highlighted the Northern Ireland Tourist Board’s annual summary of attractions. Although the Committee was concerned about the clear shortcomings of that important data, it was more concerned about the board’s method of gathering it. The report emphasises that that methodology must be examined and improved. The Tourist Board wrote to various organisations to request information, but it published only the details that it was given. That procedure is hardly suitable to provide an educated and scientific understanding of what is happening.

Ian Adamson’s insight and knowledge made a tremendous contribution to our debate and the preparation of the report. He spoke accurately about the alienation and break-up of communities and the lack of proper regeneration strategies. The definition of alienation as “the absence of culture” was also heard in Kanturk. That is an interesting thought. Dr Adamson highlighted the importance of making an inventory of our heritage, built and otherwise. Without that proper identification, we cannot preserve and care for the most important elements of our heritage. Local trails and tours were among the recommendations that the Committee sought.

David Hilditch referred to the criticism that was made of the Tourist Board. A pattern of criticism ran throughout the report, and it is right that Members should highlight it. The Tourist Board had major problems in addition to the current criticisms of it. The criticism was made by those who gave evidence, rather than by Committee members. Mr Hilditch was correct: almost everyone had a criticism to make. I recall only one positive comment, and that may have come from the Arts Council of Northern Ireland. The report might have included a few criticisms of that body. The Committee reflects the weight of evidence, and it is part of its job to listen to practitioners and other witnesses, put together their views coherently and constructively and present them to the Minister and the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure.

Kieran McCarthy, whom we all recognise as the champion of townland names, again made a good case. Unfortunately, Oliver Gibson is not present, but I thank him for his interesting and valuable contribution. It would be good if townlands could be incorporated into rural road signs to inform a traveller that he is leaving one townland and entering another. Mr Gibson said that our suggestion was aspirational; on the contrary, it was a clear and definite recommendation of usage by all Departments and official organs. That is not aspirational; it is practical. Its achievement would be a major step towards our goal. The Minister correctly referred to the common address file project, and the Committee recommended that that be supported. Once that is in place, there will be no excuse for not using townland names.

3.30 pm

Frazer Agnew spoke with considerable passion about the poor record that we have for preserving and restoring our old linen mills and machinery. A great deal of work is happening elsewhere to preserve such heritage, but we seem to be relentless in our neglect of the infrastructure, and Mr Agnew’s comments reflect the Committee’s concerns.

Mr Agnew also made a telling point about the accessibility of heritage sites. We are not very good at signposting, but if we put our minds to it, we should be able to address those problems.

Jim Wilson concentrated on our image problem. Internationally, what image do people have of us? What films do they see that are made in Northern Ireland about Northern Ireland? What documentaries do they see? Unfortunately, the negative image invariably comes across, and Mr Wilson is right to draw our attention to that. Reported news must be the truth, but the Committee’s report attempts to get people to focus on the positive qualities of life here.

Jim Shannon made an interesting contribution and, once again, demonstrated the wealth of cultural diversity here by using Ulster Scots in his introduction. I thank him for that. He referred to the need for a cultural strategy to set goals and objectives and to galvanise all those involved.

Ivan Davis referred to the low attendance during most of the debate. I was delighted to hear that the Republic of Ireland won 3 – 0, and I congratulate the team. It is hard to blame Members who wanted to watch the match, but we cannot use that excuse every day on which attendance is low. More Members are here now — perhaps something of interest is to begin shortly.

Ivan Davis also highlighted the idea of a heritage day. I hope that people consider that closely as a neat recommendation that could do much to create the image that we want to project, as opposed to the negative image that we have.

I thank the Minister for his full attention. I recognise his interest in the Committee's work and thank him for his support for the majority of our recommendations. He commented on the financial implications of some of them, and it seemed as though he had not considered fully the financial recommendations that we made. However, when the Committee considers them more closely with the Department, the Minister may realise that they contain a lot of financial detail. We hope to widen the possibilities because the funding recommendations contain opportunities for us to consider imaginative approaches. We recognise that the proposals could be expensive, but many of the recommendations could be fulfilled at little cost. We need to focus our resources and commitment better on what we want to achieve. It is possible. I commend the report.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly approves the Report of the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure on its Inquiry into Cultural Tourism and the Arts and calls on the Executive to ensure that the Committee's recommendations are evaluated and implemented at the earliest opportunity.

INCIDENT AT BELFAST INSTITUTE OF FURTHER AND HIGHER EDUCATION, TOWER STREET CAMPUS

Madam Deputy Speaker: I have received notice from the Minister for Employment and Learning that she wishes to make a statement on an incident at the Belfast Institute of Further and Higher Education's Tower Street campus on 7 June 2002.

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Ms Hanna): I wish to make a brief statement about the events at a campus of the Belfast Institute of Further and Higher Education last week.

At around 11.00 am on Friday 7 June, an incident occurred at the Tower Street campus of the Belfast Institute of Further and Higher Education during which staff and students were subjected to disgraceful and degrading behaviour. I understand that the details of the incident are under investigation by the Police Service of Northern Ireland, and for that reason I do not wish to engage in any discussion of them. I am sure that the Assembly will join me in unequivocally condemning the incident and in demanding respect for the essential neutrality of all educational establishments.

Our society has suffered extensively from civil disorder for over three decades. We should be thankful that during that time, with a few notable exceptions, universities, colleges and schools have been allowed to carry out their task of educating children, young people and more mature students without fear or favour. That has particularly been the case in respect of further education, which by its nature provides educational opportunities to all sections of the community in its numerous campuses and outreach centres.

That neutrality was breached on Friday morning, when staff and students were interrupted by an incursion by people from outside whose interest was palpably not in further education and training. Such behaviour has no place in any decent society and no place in the neutral surroundings of any educational establishment.

At a time when the stresses and strains of examinations should be the only consideration for students and staff, it is unacceptable that any institution should have to close its buildings, reschedule its examinations and help staff and students cope with the experience of sectarian threats. The Assembly should be united in its unequivocal condemnation of the events of last Friday.

I trust that the experiences of staff and students will not deflect any of them from achieving the grades and results that they need for their careers or their educational progress. My thoughts, support and sympathy go out to the management, staff and students of the Tower Street campus.

I appeal to the communities in east Belfast, and, indeed, in all areas, to preserve the essential neutrality of educational establishments, which are designed to meet their needs irrespective of religion or political opinion. I am heartened by the fact that several local community leaders have already visited the Tower Street campus to express their regret that such an incident took place and to demonstrate their support for the staff and students. I will visit the campus when the management and staff consider it appropriate.

I conclude by reiterating my unequivocal condemnation of that action and by underlining the principle of respect for the neutrality of educational establishments.

The Chairperson of the Committee for Employment and Learning: (Dr Birnie) I am very pleased that the Minister has made her statement, and I concur with what she said. I also agree with the statement of one of the relevant teachers' unions, the NASUWT, on 10 June, that the action was reprehensible because of the successful way in which further education colleges have integrated Protestant and Catholic students over many years.

Will it be necessary for the Belfast Institute of Further and Higher Education and other further education colleges around the Province to take extra security measures? If that is the case, what are the budgetary implications, and how would the Department respond to the extra financial strain?

Ms Hanna: I hope that this is an isolated incident. No one wants to make fortresses out of colleges or any educational establishments. All colleges consider their security requirements and take whatever steps are necessary to protect staff and students in their local communities. The college at Tower Street has already engaged one further security person. I am not aware of the financial implications.

Mr Gallagher: The behaviour referred to is completely unacceptable. I draw attention to an incident in the Holy Land area of Belfast where an attack on a young student from County Fermanagh, Marius Rooney, took place. He is still seriously ill, and I am sure all Members hope that he will make a good recovery. Does the Minister agree that that behaviour is reprehensible and that we need to redouble our efforts to bring those who carry out such attacks to justice?

Ms Hanna: Sadly, attacks on individuals are increasing. I know of the attack on that young man about 10 days ago. He is still seriously ill. I do not know the circumstances, but I am aware that some of the attacks have sectarian undertones. Some of them are just a sad reflection of the increase in crime on our streets. I agree with the Member that we totally and utterly condemn all these attacks, regardless of motive.

Mr Poots: We all concur that such behaviour is unacceptable. I would highlight the difference in attitudes between the Minister for Employment and Learning and the Minister of Education when schoolchildren wearing their school uniforms were attacked in Strabane by so-called supporters of the Irish football team.

When schoolchildren could not enter Londonderry city centre because they were wearing certain school uniforms the Minister of Education did not appear before the House. I thank the Minister for Employment and Learning for bringing this matter to the House and making it clear that sectarianism is unacceptable in the school place and that sectarian attacks on schoolchildren are also unacceptable. I wish the Minister of Education would take a leaf out of the book of the Minister for Employment and Learning.

Ms Hanna: Sectarian attacks are wrong and unacceptable, regardless of the location or the person involved.

3.45 pm

Mrs Nelis: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Has the Minister been advised that this is not the first instance of students and staff being threatened at the Belfast Institute of Further and Higher Education's Tower Street campus? The fine arts examination was cancelled. Will the Minister give special consideration to their students who will have to resit their examinations? What measures did the board of governors have in place to protect the students and staff, who had to lock themselves in classrooms for protection?

Ms Hanna: Most examinations were relocated to other campuses. I assume that special arrangements will be made for any students who were unable to sit their examinations.

I am not aware of any other attacks on Tower Street, but I am conscious that, sadly, over the past 30 years there have been at least five brutal attacks on people in education establishments. A headmaster was killed in his classroom, a school bus driver was killed and a classroom was booby-trapped, resulting in the death of a policeman. Lecturer Edgar Graham was killed outside Queen's University, and a lecturer at the Magherafelt campus of the North East Institute of Further and Higher Education was murdered in his classroom. Perhaps even more such sad events have occurred.

Ms McWilliams: I thank the Minister for the statement, but I am concerned that, given the serious nature of the incident, the statement was not made in the House yesterday. The fact that young students were lined up against a wall and asked their religion, no matter what that religion might be, shows the depths to which this society has sunk. Will the Minister co-operate with the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Education because this matter concerns agencies other than her own Department?

Signs are being put up on the walls on the routes to the college and to schools that say "No Taigs from Short Strand beyond this point". If such signs were put up referring to Protestants, every Member would condemn them.

School principals have told me that they are concerned that this September students will not attend the Tower Street campus and that they may have to find courses elsewhere. Principals are concerned that these young students have only one option and that they now have nowhere to go. What arrangements has the Minister put in place to address this problem?

Ms Hanna: Alternative arrangements have been made for staff and students. I expect that special arrangements will be made for all those students. I will personally look into the matter if there is a problem. I apologise that the statement was not made yesterday.

The atmosphere is very tense in some parts of Northern Ireland, especially in Belfast. I will co-operate with all Departments and do anything I can to alleviate that tension.

Dr Adamson: I join with the Minister in condemning the appalling incident at the Belfast Institute of Further and Higher Education in Tower Street. In the light of our common concern for neutrality in our education establishments, what steps are being taken to ensure that Queen's University and its Students' Union become less of a cold house for Protestants and Unionists?

Ms Hanna: It is up to everyone, especially those of us in leadership roles, to work together to ensure that all students feel comfortable in all our establishments.

Mr A Maginness: The incident in Tower Street highlights the whole issue of sectarianism in this city and throughout our society, and this House must take the matter seriously. We must address it vigorously, as if it were a disease that affects us all. It is insufficient to respond to one incident. We must develop a strategy for dealing with sectarianism no matter where it manifests itself — in the classroom, in colleges, or in the street. We must deal with it.

The Minister has emphasised the sacrosanct nature of neutrality in an educational establishment. Is there any danger, as a result of this sectarian incident, that the future of the Tower Street campus might be under threat? Also, will those students whose examinations have had to be relocated get a sympathetic marking to compensate for the trauma that they clearly and manifestly went through as a result of this incident?

Ms Hanna: There is no question of relocating the Tower Street campus, and I would expect any students experiencing difficulties with their examinations because of this incident to get a sympathetic hearing.

Sectarianism is a contagious disease in this society. Unfortunately, we have a certain tolerance of a level of sectarianism in our everyday life, and we must proactively work together if we are to eradicate this disease.

Mr Foster: I apologise sincerely to you, Madam Deputy Speaker, and to the House for my mobile phone ringing unceremoniously this afternoon.

I am heartened, as the Minister is, by the fact that some local community leaders have already visited Tower Street campus to express their regret that such an incident should take place, and have offered their support to all the staff and students. One has to condemn any sort of irresponsibility from whatever gang, or from wherever, and any form of intimidation. If such behaviour escalates, then there is trouble ahead.

This may be beyond the Minister's remit; it is more to do with education. For many years, students from controlled schools in County Fermanagh have suffered intimidation when going home on school buses to border areas. Undoubtedly, this has eased a little, but it has been a difficult situation for many of them.

Is the Minister aware of the intimidation that grammar school pupils suffered recently in Strabane when the Republic won its football match? I congratulate the Republic on the win, but some people are using and abusing the situation.

Ms Hanna: Many of us are aware of issues of sectarianism in our communities. It is not any respecter of place, person, or religion — it happens in all areas and to all people. However, until we work together, seriously and proactively, we will not eradicate this scourge.

Mr Ervine: I concur with the Minister's sentiments. Will she offer to us her knowledge of the police assessment that she must have received on any paramilitary involvement in the attack on the Tower Street campus? Since she is unable to give us details of previous attacks, will she also confirm why we should have had such an occurrence after thirty years of nothing?

Will the Minister look at the constituency in which Tower Street falls? Will she consider that conditions may have existed that certainly do not encourage me to condone what happened, but which may be a symptom rather than a cause? There is a greater cause; is the Minister aware of it?

Ms Hanna: I said that an investigation by the Police Service of Northern Ireland is taking place, so it would not be appropriate to comment on that.

Why is this happening? It is happening because we have a problem with sectarianism in this society. I hope that everyone would join me in condemning unequivocally this outrageous incident, regardless of any background, "what abouts" or "wherefores".

Mr P Robinson: I welcome the Minister's initiative in making a statement on this issue, and I support the content of her statement. Elected representatives have a duty to speak out on issues, whether it is convenient for them to do so or not. The intimidation of people who are attempting to get an education is reprehensible. I am sure that the whole House accepts that that procedure is totally unacceptable in any civilised society. Therefore, I have no reservation in my condemnation.

The Minister has expressed the hope that it would be an isolated incident; that is also my hope. My hope is somewhat raised by the fact that all of my findings suggest that there was nothing organised about this event. There appears to have been no involvement of any paramilitary organisation. It is more likely to be the result of the reaction of people in the area, which is currently tense as a result of the IRA-orchestrated violence in that part of east Belfast. Like the Minister, I trust that there will be no reoccurrence of the incident and that there will be no detriment to the education of the people involved.

Ms Hanna: I welcome the Member's statement and his unequivocal condemnation of this act.

ERECTION OF UNAUTHORISED TERRORIST MEMORIALS

Mr Foster: I beg to move

That this Assembly rejects the offensive trend of erecting memorials throughout Northern Ireland by Republican elements in memory of terrorists who tortured citizens of this state for decades by their campaign of murder, maiming and destruction and calls upon the Executive to take immediate action to remove those memorials which have been erected without permission.

The motion is important to the many relatives of those who were foully murdered by the terrorists who held this land to ransom for many years.

The erection of forms of memorial to those who for decades wrought havoc and destruction on the people of this state is, at least, highly offensive, in-your-face and profoundly insulting. It is uncaring, uncompassionate and grossly irresponsible. It is an offensive taunt to a community which has suffered broken hearts, broken limbs and broken homes and been left with heartbroken widows, mothers, fathers, brothers and sisters and many orphans.

Sinn Féin still lauds, and associates with, the gunman and the murderer, despite the fact that its members now act in Government here in Stormont, as Ministers acting on behalf of Her Majesty The Queen in this part of her realm.

4.00 pm

The preponderance of different types of memorials in Fermanagh intends to rile and hurt. The memorials are not intended for the purposes of respect — only for abuse. The most terrible lie is not that which is uttered but that which is lived.

There will be a plea on behalf of heroes today, but can anyone in the Chamber who professes adherence to a faith and belief in the Living Lord call terrorists “heroes” or “sons of the brave”? Could those who blew two of my colleagues to pieces outside Enniskillen one night many years ago be called heroes? I remember Alfie Johnston and Jimmy Eames well.

What about the terrorists who murdered Mrs Bullock at her doorway, and then went into her home and murdered her husband Tommy? What about those who went into the Earl of Erne County Primary School at Teemore and murdered the school principal, George Saunderson, as he had a cup of tea? What about those who murdered Alexander Abercrombie as he sat on his tractor, or those who murdered Willie Burleigh when he attended an auction? What about those who bravely murdered Tommy John Fletcher at Garrison, or those who murdered John McVitty at Magheraveely as he did his farming chores? What about those who brutally murdered my cousin, Charlie Johnston, in cold blood near St Anne's Cathedral as he, a director of a travel agency in Waring Street, walked to his work? What about those who set off the Enniskillen bomb on Remembrance Day in 1987? I was present at the cenotaph on that day of carnage. Two people died in my hands. I tried to console them as they bled to death. Twelve people died in that atrocity.

What about the terrorists who caused the La Mon House Hotel hell-on-earth inferno? What about the Shankill Road bomb, Teebane Cross, the Ballygawley bus bomb, the murder of the soldiers at Narrow Water Castle, or the Kingsmills murders? What about all the individual murders that have taken place over the years? What about the Omagh bomb activists, who may eventually seek to be called heroes at some time in the future?

We had ethnic cleansing in my constituency of Fermanagh and South Tyrone. I have only referred to some of the many dastardly acts of murder and aggression perpetrated on citizens of that community by terrorists over the years — terrorists who are now being hailed as heroes by Sinn Féin.

Terrorists — either so-called Loyalists or Republicans — can never be accorded hero status by any decent individual. It is grossly offensive and insulting to many people in Northern Ireland.

The Hassard and Love families in the Belleek area of Fermanagh are grievously mortified by the erection of the memorial to terrorists beside where their loved ones were assassinated coming home from doing an honest day's work. Is that action not in-your-face offensive? I must emphasise that point — it certainly is in-your-face offensive.

Since then, another memorial has been erected in Enniskillen to the memory of Bobby Sands. It is on the site where a memorial to those who died during the famine had been solemnly dedicated a couple of years ago. The words "respect", "honesty" and "decency" are not in the thinking of Republicanism — they never were, and they never will be. This is just about Sinn Féin becoming the largest anti-British party in Northern Ireland at the expense of anyone who gets in its way. It has no scruples; it rides roughshod over the feelings of everyone, regardless of the hurt caused.

I appreciate that the blood relatives of those who have lost their lives mourn the deaths of their loved ones. However, it seems that that mourning should only happen when Sinn Féin dictates and in a way that it determines. That is shameful. Does anyone believe that the erection of a memorial to a terrorist on unhallowed ground will ease the pain for the relatives? Is that sacrilege?

Republicanism does that to seek political gain at the expense of the relatives who mourn the death of their flesh and blood. What sacrilege is being played out by those who profess innocence while making lying accusations of harassment in Northern Ireland?

I have been prepared to give those who have sinned in the eyes of the Almighty the opportunity to show repentance and remorse for their association with evil deeds over the past decades — for the well-being of this state and within the family of Britons. They have failed miserably to do so. They have been given a chance to redeem themselves and to show good, honest citizenship. But no — they want their pound of flesh, and they disregard the feelings of those around them.

They have been given the opportunity to serve in Executive positions in the Assembly, despite the fact that over the years they have associated with those who endeavoured to destroy this country, burned its towns and villages, and murdered and maimed our people. I say to them: look at the hands of those you call heroes. They are stained with the blood of our loved ones and their loved ones. Can they have a conscience at all? Can they barefacedly go on with their deceit and unadulterated, undiluted hypocrisy?

Those people have ignored at least three Departments — and, indeed, law and order — in their erection of offensive memorials. However, they expound here regularly, superficially filled with pretence about other issues. The Department of the Environment — my former Department — the Department for Regional Development, and the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development must ensure that their responsibilities are not eroded and overrun by Republican stridency. The Department for Social Development is also involved. Departments cannot be seen to fail their remit or their responsibilities.

Monuments, by their very nature, are political statements. Those wildcat memorials are inimical to the healing process that Sinn Féin purports to espouse. They stir up hatreds, bitter memories, and fears and feelings that we all hoped that we could leave behind.

Evidence of Sinn Féin's being involved in stirring up community strife in places such as north Belfast, its involvement with the terrorists and drug dealers of FARC in Colombia, and its active links with other international terrorist groups, all of which is attested to by independent outside bodies and not only Unionist political comment, points to a real Sinn Féin agenda at total variance with its professed aim of healing our society. It is, unfortunately, an agenda of perpetuating strife. It is war by other means, at the expense of the heartbreak of citizens mourning their loved ones. How shameful can they get? How base can they become? There is an old Spanish proverb that says:

"Tell me who you associate with and I will tell you what you are."

Mr Deputy Speaker: I have received one amendment to the motion, which is published on the Marshalled List.

Mr O'Neill: I beg to move the following amendment: In line 1, delete all after "Assembly" and insert:

“recognises the sensitivities involved on all sides in respect of the commemoration of those who have lost their lives in the conflict here, and calls upon the Executive in consultation with the relevant bodies, including the Victims Unit, the Community Relations Council, the Equality Commission and the Human Rights Commission to provide guidelines so that memorials of whatever kind conform to agreed criteria, and do not give offence.”

I wish to explain to the House what my party finds inadequate in the motion. To begin with, the motion mentions when, clearly, it is not only Republicans who erect offensive monuments.

The motion goes on, in emotional terms, to describe in a one-sided way what we all know to be the suffering of all our people. My party finds that unacceptable. The motion calls on the Executive to take “immediate action”. Our amendment acknowledges that there is more to the matter than asking the Executive to storm in and remove those monuments. That approach is not satisfactory, and, therefore, we cannot support the motion.

Our amendment advocates a more proactive, equal, fair and genuine way of attempting to deal with the problem. If we wish to solve the problem, we must come up with a sensible way to deal with it. That is why we have included the bodies and responsible people listed in the amendment. Our conflict has been unique. It is vital that we consider the sensitivities of all those who wish to remember their dead.

The SDLP has no general ingrained objection to memorials. The problem arises when those monuments cause offence to other people within or without a community. We have a sad tradition in our society of being offended by the actions of others. That is not the way in which the SDLP wants to see our community continue. A serious human rights issue is at stake.

To erect monuments in a manner that is not conducive to the pledges made in the Good Friday Agreement is to fail the commitment to peace; to insist on erecting monuments where they do not have the full support of local people is to be destructive of the Good Friday Agreement’s values; to erect those monuments illegally on public grounds and to ignore the implications is a clear disregard of the principles of the Good Friday Agreement.

Some time ago, a Republican monument was erected in Downpatrick without any reference to the council on whose land it was built. In an attempt to deal with the issue, the council asked someone to take responsibility for it. No one would. It is unfair to put a public body in such a position, and whoever was responsible had no regard for how it would affect others. The council, mindful of the sensitive nature of the situation, decided to deal with it step by step. It consulted the Equality

Commission for Northern Ireland. The commission’s interesting response stated:

“Under Article 28 of the Fair Employment and Treatment (Northern Ireland) Order 1998 it would be unlawful for the council to discriminate in a manner in which it provides services. This would include access to council-owned parks. It is the Commission’s view that the presence in a public park of an emblem or display such as this monument, which is directly linked to the community conflict over the past 30 years, could be regarded as offensive by some members of the community. As such, the council could be challenged under the above Order.”

The commission’s response also stated:

“Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act also requires the council, in carrying out its functions, to have due regard to the need to promote equality of opportunity between certain individuals and groups. Without prejudice to this obligation, councils are also required to have regard to the desirability of promoting good relations between persons of different religious beliefs, political opinion or racial group. The council would need to consider whether the presence of such a monument could be perceived as marking out territory and thus inhibit the use of this park by all of the community. In our view there would be particular problems from a good relations perspective if the council were to allow such displays in its facilities.”

That is a clear statement of the problems that unauthorised, illegal structures create.

A similar monument to the one in Downpatrick was then erected in the town where I live, Castlewellan. Planning permission was applied for. I asked whether it had been proofed against the human rights and equality legislation vis-a-vis the Equality Commission’s opinion that I have just quoted. It had not. The irony was that Sinn Féin members of the council — in a clear contradiction of their responsibility as publicly elected officials — supported that. It was a clear indication that, for them, party politics came before the welfare of the community. They have treated human rights and equality with total contempt despite their supposed allegiance to equality — they are interested in “themselves alone”.

I said that I would support remembrances as part of the healing process, and that is the SDLP’s policy. I also said that I would have no objection to a monument that had the full support of the community, the Human Rights Commission and the equality agenda.

4.15 pm

On a radio programme, I publicly asked the Sinn Féin representative for South Down, Mick Murphy, if he would join me in supporting a monument in Castlewellan to all those who had suffered and died in our area, instead of the one he proposed, and he publicly refused. What else can one say? He was only interested in a monument for “themselves alone”.

If we want to deal with equality as an issue and an agenda to be followed, we must practise what we preach, and we must be seen to do it. There is no point in talking in lofty terms about equality while doing the exact opposite on the ground and, as I have said, treating equality with the contempt of which I have local experience. Therefore, in an attempt to deal with this growing problem it is necessary to bring all those agencies on board in order to get a coherent, sensible, fair and equal way of dealing with that.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Now that I have a fuller picture of the number of Members who wish to speak — and it may yet change again — I advise Members to limit their contributions to eight minutes.

Mr Berry: I support the motion. Individuals, communities and societies like to mark and remember milestones in their history, and that is accepted across the world. However, the misuse of that which is being undertaken by those who any civilised society would look upon as fascist thugs is unacceptable. It is akin to erecting a memorial to Adolf Hitler, whom Sinn Féin/IRA backed, or putting up a memorial to Myra Hindley after her death.

A civil war is not being commemorated — it is not a war in any legitimate sense of the word. Memorials are being erected to common criminals who have killed innocent people across the Province. They are being erected to people who are nothing more than vagabonds who have raped and pillaged their way across the entire community and country and murdered workers, school-teachers, children, women, fathers and husbands in a dirty, grubby, filthy and rotten campaign.

Memorials have been erected for people who have killed the likes of 17-month-old Colin Nicholl and two-year-old Tracey Munn in 1971 — that was a brave act. It is repugnant to decent people that a group of brutal terrorists are commemorated, the sort of thugs who murdered George Saunderson, the school principal, in Erne County Primary School in 1974. My constituency of Newry and Armagh has suffered much of the brunt of Republican Sinn Féin/IRA terrorism — Kingsmills, Glenanne and other incidents have been mentioned today.

Anthony Nolan, an IRA activist who was nothing more than a common thief, accidentally shot himself while planning a bank robbery; he is some hero. Is he the type of person who deserves to be remembered? Bateson, Sheridan and Lee killed themselves while transporting a bomb to kill innocent people. On that occasion, the evil that they planned for others was turned on them.

Memorials erected to cowards who shot people in the dark and crawled up laneways to murder in the dark is not only repugnant and obscene, but a daily affront to everyone who went about their ordinary business decade after decade while those gangsters and hoods did everything possible to murder them in their beds or at work. That is what is being glorified across this country. If we were to erect a memorial to every citizen, soldier and policeman murdered by those thugs, there would not be enough land for them all.

What makes those shrines offensive is the glorification of violence and bloodshed. They are tasteless, tactless and obscene. However, what do we expect from IRA/Sinn Féin? In contrast, the memorial to the nine civilians who were murdered on the Shankill Road consists of a street lamp.

My constituency of Newry and Armagh has borne much of the brunt of IRA terrorism. Outside Belfast, Armagh has had the highest number of deaths. Republicans were responsible for 2,140 of the 3,636 deaths in Northern Ireland up to 1999 — around 60% of those murders. They are responsible for all the deaths, because there would have been no deaths but for them. The Assembly must not forget that for every two Protestants that the IRA killed they also murdered one Roman Catholic.

Whom did those heroes murder? People like Frank Murphy, who was murdered while driving a school bus for Drumsallen Primary School outside Armagh; William Elliott, a post office inspector; Henry Dickson, a train driver; and Tracy Doak. I am sure that none of us can forget the 1995 documentary about Tracy entitled 'No Time to Say Goodbye'. There is not enough paper to record the pain and anguish caused by Republican terrorists. It is, therefore, morally repugnant to remember any of those murderers. The Executive and the Minister of the Environment must take action.

The Assembly must do something to represent the innocent victims: people from both sides of the community who have suffered so much at the hands of terrorists; people who across the Province went about their daily duties and worked to the best of their abilities to look after their families and friends. They were stopped with such cowardice by terrorists across Northern Ireland. I speak to many victims who find it soul-destroying to see those memorials and to see terrorists being glorified for the bloodshed and violence that they caused across the community. Action must be taken to deal with those memorials; the relevant Department must remove them immediately.

I listened to Mr O'Neill with interest. He stated that he would not support the motion. That is a matter of grave concern. It was of greater concern that he suggested that all victims' names could be on the same monument when he spoke about Downpatrick. I assure the House that the victims that I have spoken of do not, in any way, want their loved ones' names beside those of the murderers who carried out such cowardly attacks. I state that clearly.

Action must be taken on behalf of all innocent people who suffered at the hands of terrorists. The motion is about Republican terrorists who have caused so much distress and anguish and who committed many murders across the Province. The last thing that the DUP wants to see is them being glorified for the terrorist, cowardly, bloodthirsty acts that they have carried out throughout the Province during the past 30 years.

Mr McHugh: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. The motion is lopsided: it covers only one side of the story, which is no more than one would expect. Mr Foster is one of the movers of the motion. It seems that he has gone back into councillor mode. He was in that mode the last time that I remember being in such a debate with him. He is obviously spoiling for such a debate.

The amendment says that memorials should “conform” to agreed criteria. What are those criteria? However, there is not as much to argue against in the amendment as there is in the motion. No one to whom equality is important could support the motion. It does not reflect how the Assembly should approach the issue of memorials. The arguments presented so far are not the way to deal with the memorials issue. They can only make matters much worse.

The number of attacks on Republican memorials in Fermanagh and other areas is proof that all we can do is make the situation much worse. Paint has been poured on monuments and cars have been set on fire. One Unionist councillor asked that all monuments be blown to bits — so much for his signature to using non-violent methods. His words were followed by an attack on a monument the following night. There has been one attack only on British war memorials in Moy. If I am wrong, perhaps someone can put me right on that.

It has not been a two-way process. The motion is about one side; it is only about seeing victims as being on one side. That has been the argument on everything relating to victims. We often hear about the conflict of the past 30 years. Anybody who knows his history knows that the reasons behind the conflict go back to the inception of this particular statelet and the way that it was run from the start. Nationalists were entirely left out of the picture and had no part in ruling this part of Ireland. That is the backdrop for all this. It has nothing to do with the past 30 years in particular.

One need only go to any town or village, however small, in the North to see British war memorials in every one. Most of them cost a sizeable amount of money. Recently, £19,000 was spent in Enniskillen to just update the names on a memorial. We in Fermanagh District Council did not oppose that. Who was consulted about the original cenotaphs? Whose permission was asked? Did the original Stormont Government give permission for the erection of those cenotaphs?

Republicans have a right to pay tribute to, and commemorate, their dead like anyone else. There has been conflict over the past 30 years, but, as I said, the conflict has gone on much longer than that. That conflict, as with all wars, was bitter. There is no such thing as clean fighting in a war, despite what the Member opposite almost implied. We need only remember the rape and plunder committed by Cromwell in his early years in Ireland. [Interruption].

It is a reality. The Members opposite seem to have a difficulty in hearing the truth. However, it is the truth, and that is why it hurts. War is war. War was the same wherever it occurred.

Mr Foster: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. Does Mr McHugh equate murder with war? Is he condoning the murders that have been committed over the years?

Mr Deputy Speaker: I consider that to be an intervention, not a point of order. The Member may wish to respond.

Mr McHugh: The British security forces, in collusion with Loyalists, murdered Nationalists on many occasions. Louis Leonard was murdered in his butcher’s shop in Derrylin in 1972. That involved collusion with the security forces. Michael Naan and Andrew Murray were killed in south Fermanagh as part of the pitchfork murders. They were killed by security forces — by soldiers in British regiments, who later admitted it.

There were many other murders in that area. Patsy Kelly from Trillick is one example. There have been many accusations as to which element of the British security forces was responsible for that murder. No one has ever admitted to it. Those are only a few of the murders. Nationalists were murdered, but there seems to be no agreement —

Mr Foster: Will the Member give way?

Mr McHugh: I need to use whatever time I have left, given that we have only eight minutes to speak.

4.30 pm

We have always been prepared to acknowledge that there has been hurt on both sides and that there is no monopoly on suffering and pain. Gerry Adams has consistently told Unionists that Sinn Féin, through the peace process, wants to move to a different position. This type of debate does not encourage that.

Observers can only be encouraged by Unionists’ asking in the Assembly for something completely different for Nationalists and Republicans who want to honour their dead. This is not for their glorification; this is done simply because they believe they have that right. I agree. Most Nationalists and Republicans quietly put up memorials as a mark of respect, a tribute to their dead, to volunteers who gave their lives for a struggle they believed to be right. They were right. They gave their lives for the right reasons, as did anyone who fought in the British wars. Those people believed that they fought for an honourable cause, and that should be recognised by all sides. Unionists especially should not beat the drum that they are the only ones who are right.

Mayhem and slaughter are seen as the backdrop to history in any country in the world where Britain ruled. I am sure that most Unionists here know their history very well, but perhaps they pick and choose the parts to remember. Most Nationalists, however, know their history exactly. We have had 800 years of history here, and we do not need to be told it. The future position of Nationalists must be based on equality. Éamonn Ó'Neill referred to picking and choosing someone to make a particular statement on a monument in his town. We cannot do that. For the conflict to cease, we must go forward on the basis that everyone has a right to honour his dead.

Mr Boyd: I want to place on record my opposition to the erection of illegal memorials by Republicans. Those so-called memorials are deliberately provocative. They are designed to mark out territory and further insult the innocent victims of IRA terrorism. In respect of the SDLP amendment, the distinction between innocent victims, both Protestant and Catholic, and those who set out to destroy lives and property must be clear. It is insulting and disgraceful that some in the Assembly and in the community refer to terrorists and their families as victims when they set out deliberately to plan and execute heinous acts of terrorism that resulted in innocent victims. It is disgraceful that Republicans in the Chamber treat with contempt those gallant Protestants and Catholics who fought side by side and died in wars, including the world wars.

It is a scandal that terrorist families have received Government support and funding, while many innocent victims, including those who laid down their lives in defence of freedom and democracy, have received no compensation and are not even permitted to honour their loved ones. Mrs Thelma Johnston's son David was in the RUC. He was brutally murdered by the Provisional IRA on 16 June 1997 in Lurgan, shot in the back by cowardly scum while serving the whole community. A committee of Belfast City Council recently refused Mrs Johnston permission to lay a wreath on behalf of those brave members of the security forces who had laid down their lives. I hope that those gullible and disgraceful Presbyterians who yesterday embraced Alex Maskey of Sinn Féin/IRA meet the innocent victims of Republican terrorism.

Throughout Northern Ireland, however, many illegal memorials are erected by Republican terrorists. It is a disgrace that many councils turn a blind eye to that and refuse to demolish or remove them. Many of those memorials are strategically placed to cause maximum hurt and pain. They are placed on main roads, close to where many members of the security forces and others were murdered and maimed. It is disgusting that some councils, such as Newry and Mourne District Council, maintain memorials to Republican terrorists.

It is disgraceful that Londonderry city council claimed ignorance of the statue of an INLA terrorist armed with a rifle that was erected in a Londonderry cemetery. The INLA is responsible for some of the worst terrorist atrocities, including the Darkley massacre in south Armagh; the murder of 17 people in the Ballykelly bomb in County Londonderry; the murder of the Conservative Party's Northern Ireland spokesman, Airey Neave MP; and the murders of many other innocent people. Many other Republican memorials have been erected illegally in Northern Ireland, causing heartache for many innocent victims.

My problem with the motion is that it calls for the Executive to take action. The Executive includes Sinn Féin's Martin McGuinness, a self-confessed leader of the Provisional IRA. At a Republican memorial rally in Bodinstown on 23 June 1986, 'The Irish News' quotes the same Martin McGuinness — the so-called Minister of Education — as saying "Freedom can only be gained at the point of an IRA rifle. I apologise to no one for saying that we support and admire the freedom fighters of the IRA."

It would, therefore, add to the hurt of the innocent victims to call on Martin McGuinness when he clearly endorses the Provisional IRA's erection of illegal memorials to Republican terrorists.

The illegal memorials must be removed immediately, and ultimate responsibility for their removal should be placed firmly with the Prime Minister, Tony Blair, and the Northern Ireland Office. The Prime Minister is too quick to remove essential security installations, yet he refuses to remove the illegal memorials to Republican terrorists who were guilty of the most heinous crimes.

One of the worst reminders for the innocent victims of terrorism is IRA/Sinn Féin in the heart of the Government of Northern Ireland. I have spoken to many innocent victims, including some from the constituencies of the Members who proposed the motion. I call on the hon Members Foster and Kennedy to ease the pain of the innocents by removing the Ulster Unionist Party from the power-sharing Assembly with IRA/Sinn Féin. The placing of IRA/Sinn Féin in the heart of Government over the people whom they continue to terrorise compounds the hurt of the innocent victims of terrorism. The innocent victims continue to suffer.

Mr Douglas: I support the motion for two reasons: the memorials are offensive to the majority of decent people; and they are illegal because they were erected without planning permission. An illegal memorial has been erected in the village of Dungiven, three miles from where I live. It is supposedly in memory of the hunger strikers who took their own lives in the early 1980s, but it has caused much hurt to the family of an RUC officer who was shot dead within 50 yards of it and much distress to the parishioners of the local parish church, which is just yards from it. The church's property has been damaged many times, and its hall has been burnt to the ground.

To add insult to injury, the eyesore has been erected on the only open space in Dungiven's Main Street. It is across the road from Dungiven Castle, which was regenerated as a tourism centre using thousands of pounds of public money. There are those in the Unionist community who do not feel that they can visit that historic site because of the intimidating structure opposite.

People who have been deeply involved in terrorist activity in recent years but who now claim to be democrats have been elected to local councils throughout Northern Ireland. It should naturally follow that democrats should not only support and uphold the law of the land but should be seen to do so. However, it is clear that many who claim to be democrats are not. When I raised the issue of the illegal memorial at the council's monthly planning meeting, the majority of the SDLP councillors did not support its removal and none of the Sinn Féin councillors was supportive, which was no great surprise.

The fact that the Planning Service has not taken any steps to remove the memorial is disturbing. Hundreds of people who pay due regard to the process and follow the correct procedures are refused planning permission. Understandably, they find it difficult to understand why others can build whatever they like, wherever they feel. I urge the Planning Service to review its policy on illegal developments and remove these offensive so-called memorials forthwith.

We can all recognise the sensitivities of people who have lost family members. However, with proper planning approval, there is enough space in cemeteries to erect appropriate memorials. It is incumbent on all elected representatives to ensure that these illegal structures are removed. I support the motion.

Ms McWilliams: I shall address some technical points before I consider the more emotive issue of how to deal with this difficult subject.

It would be a good idea if the Executive were to consider the issue, because it will not go away. The Executive should consult the agencies that are cited in the amendment, and also local councils.

Depending on where memorials are erected, they are likely to cause offence. The Women's Coalition is a cross-community party that is made up of Nationalists, Unionists and others. Since Jane Morrice and I were elected to the Assembly, we have tried to understand the perspectives of the opposing sides. We always question ourselves on whether our actions give due consideration to human rights. Are we being inclusive in what we say or do? We may get it wrong at times; if people are brought up in one community, they do not always understand what it is like for the other community. Do we provide equality of opportunity, or are we acting in a discriminatory way?

The test has been difficult, but the same test could be applied to how we remember the dead. The agreement states that there is a right to free political thought and a right to freedom and expression of religion. In this country political identity and religion are often mixed up. The agreement also refers to the right to freedom from sectarian harassment. Although we are debating memorials to the dead, and given the Minister for Employment and Learning's earlier statement, I am concerned about the creation of murals that are dedicated to the living before they are dead.

I shall give you an example of how difficult it is for Departments to reconcile their responsibilities. If a memorial is built on public land, the Department that owns that land is responsible. Councils have had to deal with that problem. If a mural is painted on a wall, the owner of the property is responsible. Lamp-posts and street lights are the responsibility of the engineering and lighting division of the Department of the Environment, and pavements are the responsibility of the Roads Service of the Department of the Environment. I made many phone calls this afternoon, and it takes several hours —

Mr Beggs: The Member referred to the Department of the Environment. Will she acknowledge that those responsibilities were transferred from the former Department of the Environment to the Department for Regional Development?

Ms McWilliams: I acknowledge that it is completely confusing, and I am glad of the intervention.

One area is the responsibility of the Department of the Environment, and another area is the responsibility of the Department for Regional Development. It is good that the Executive may have an opportunity to address the matter. The situation is absolutely ridiculous, the height of nonsense. The Planning Service says that if a memorial is erected without planning permission and is considered unacceptable, it must determine whether formal enforcement action is appropriate.

I may not vote for the amendment. I would like to know who would be responsible for the enforcement of any guidelines that may be adopted. The Planning Service does not apply much enforcement with regard to what is being erected, or where it is being erected. The same Planning Service then says that there are no permitted development rights for memorials or monuments in Northern Ireland, irrespective of size or classification — there is no legislation in place. That may be something for the Executive to address.

4.45 pm

Planning permission is required for the erection of any monument or memorial outside a cemetery. Inside cemetery walls is where they ought to be; if they are being erected anywhere else, they are offensive. It may be that local residents, depending on which community has the majority at a particular time, do not see them as offensive, but if we take the principle that we are dealing with a double minority, then the memorials will offend someone. The Executive should address the fact that legislation is not in place for memorials or monuments outside cemeteries.

I have listened to the debate, and I am disheartened by what I have heard. Ours is a damaged society — the conflict has been a terrible one — but until people get out of denial that there has been terrible hurt and desperate murder committed and take responsibility for that and commit themselves to doing something different in the future, we will go round and round in a vicious circle.

I have much sympathy for the Ulster Unionist motion — the issue needs to be addressed. Memorials are being erected all over the place, and those from the other side need to seriously consider what those memorials mean to people as they are passing by, particularly the relatives of those who have been murdered.

People who are writing sectarian scribbles on the walls of east Belfast should seriously consider how offensive and dangerous they are to people walking past them.

It is time to remember and to change. We are not ready to put up memorials around the country willy-nilly. The Executive should take the issue seriously — although no Minister is present to respond to the debate. When the Business Committee met last week it asked the Executive to decide which Minister would take responsibility. I see that they could not come to any agreement on that matter. Where does the issue go after we have debated it today?

Mrs Carson: I support the motion. As I listened to Members' comments I thought about canvassing in Fermanagh and South Tyrone, where we do not need memorials along the road. We can see the crossroads where someone was shot in the back; the tarmac patch where the bomb exploded and where several people were murdered. We cannot forget that.

I agree with Ms McWilliams that we have to look forward. Here we have an instance of coat-trailing by one side of the community trying to perpetuate the problem.

We have so many insensitive IRA monuments erected in public places, causing great distress to the families of people murdered by those named on the monuments. It is claimed that those named on the monuments were on active service. The term "active service" implies a recognised army or battle situation — not the actions of a sordid terrorist organisation that ambushed and murdered unarmed civilians going about their day-to-day business. The weasel words of "active service" are used to try to cover the fact that IRA members were actively seeking innocent members of the public to murder. Thankfully, many people were saved from further outrages by the security forces.

Remembrance is an important part of our healing process. It ensures that those who went before us, and their contributions to society, are not forgotten. We have monuments to the dead of both world wars, and I emphasise that they commemorate people from both communities. I am a proud Enniskillen person, born and raised in the town. I recognise people from all parts of the community. During the world wars, it did not matter whether someone was a Roman Catholic or a Protestant. People were proud to serve in the two regiments, and their names are on war memorials. Please let it be recorded in Hansard that it was not a sordid campaign.

There are memorials to the dead from both communities in both world wars. There are also monuments to tragedies, but our most common memorial is the headstone of the family grave. Those memorials are dignified and respectful, but to equate a traditional monument with that of an illegal terrorist organisation is repugnant and insulting to all ordinary people. The victims' families have to pass such monuments on the roadside, and it brings back terrible memories each time. The pain endured by the families does not lessen with the passage of time. In Fermanagh and South Tyrone there are too many roadside IRA monuments.

I am concerned by Sinn Féin's inflammatory actions and words. Its members involve themselves in public displays of contempt and hatred, which only further divide society. This is the same party that talks so much about equality and peace. A Sinn Féin Member from Fermanagh and South Tyrone stated in a BBC report that the positioning of a monument at a Belleek crossroads was justified. The same person admitted that those mentioned were on active duty. She also stated that the RUC and Royal Irish Regiment monuments were in public places.

Monuments to the Army, the RUC and the Royal Irish Regiment are kept in churches, graveyards, security buildings or on Government property. The only truly public memorials are war memorials to commemorate — and I say it again — both Protestants and Roman Catholics who died in two world wars. They are poignant reminders to the public of the terrible price paid for fighting fascism for the common good. The IRA is simply an extension of the evil that plagued the world more than 60 years ago. Churches and graveyards are a testament to the price that we paid to ensure that madness did not destroy our freedom.

If terrorist groups wish to have memorials, they should consider asking whether they could place them in the graveyards and churches of their own denomination or allegiance, where they will not cause offence. They should consider that; there are already some in graveyards and burial grounds.

All plaques, memorials and monuments on public sites require planning permission. I call on all the Departments to co-ordinate their efforts to ensure that these illegal memorials, with their pseudo, copycat trappings of conventional war memorials, are removed from our roadsides, forestry plantations and historical graveyards.

Mr Gibson: I support the motion. At times we have been guilty of missing the main point of this debate. I do not call these objects “memorials”. They are wayside platforms for the promotion of the political activists who have supported terror in this country. This is another part of the IRA/Sinn Féin terror campaign. It is a form of political and institutional terror and a way of dominating the landscape.

Every one of these memorials, as they call them — I call them the political platforms for the activists turned political terrorists — are for the draft dodgers, the quartermasters, the suppliers, the finger pointers and all those who have been part of a unique campaign of genocide, particularly in the west of the Province. Let us not forget that the IRA strategists who control Sinn Féin have not changed their great ambition. They view this as part of their campaign to deliver a Republican, united Ireland. This is simply a stepping stone. We have seen how they have changed their tactics over the years.

I was delighted that Gerry McHugh admitted in his speech that it was murder; that is the first time I have heard a member of his party admitting that what was carried out was murder. However, he went back to the old Republican phrasebook when stuck for a little ammunition and talked about 800 years of British misrule. I will pose him some questions. Who murdered at the rate of 27 to one in the Irish civil war of 1921-22 — was it not the so-called Irish who killed the Irish? Will he tell the Assembly whether the 10 who were exhumed by the Southern Government and re-interred recently in Glasnevin Cemetery were pro-treaty or anti-treaty? Had they survived their jail term, would they have been murdered by their own?

It is interesting that Mr McHugh made one slip in all this, supporting the erection of terrorist platforms by the waysides so that almost weekly they could have another campaign to make sure that the Young Turks and the older troops would be ready, accessible and amenable. That is what they are about. Therefore I would never dignify the activities of the IRA and its campaigns of murder with memorials. My constituency has too many bitter remembrances of those occasions. I could mention Teebane and Ballygawley Road, one, two, and three — they are all multiple murders. Most people have forgotten Teebane. I could mention the Royal Arms Hotel murders, the Knocknamoe murders and, of course, the Omagh bomb murders.

This was not just a terror campaign of genocide — it has moved on to domination. Believe it or not, I was surprised at the SDLP, which has again shown tremendous weakness. That party is always urging us to take leadership and move forward. However, Éamonn ONeill said that Sinn Féin treated equality with contempt; that theirs was a “themselves alone” programme. Having admitted that Sinn Féin is all about “themselves alone” and that Sinn Féin treated equality with contempt, that Mr ONeill lacks the courage or wisdom to support the motion displays a terrible weakness in SDLP thinking

We must be wise to the real issue. Terror comes in many forms, such as the physical form of murder; there have been 97 murders in my constituency. It can also come in institutional forms. It can come in the form of the stoning of school buses or of quiet, insolent contempt for everything that is Unionist.

What threat is a small Orange lodge of 22 members to a massive Republican community? The church is in Carrickmore. Twenty-two local farmers and labourers going to a Sunday service — what threat could that pose to the massive Republican stronghold of Carrickmore? It cannot be tolerated; that is what Sinn Féin means by equality. Similarly, Mountfield is a Republican stronghold; out of seven councillors, it produces four Sinn Féin members. What threat would a wee Orange lodge of 27 members be to that community? It cannot be tolerated.

My time has run out. I support the motion.

Mr C Murphy: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I want to make a few comments. I agree with Mr Gibson that the places he mentioned present no threat to anyone. It is an absolute disgrace that anyone would consider them as such. The difference is that I can say that an attack on an isolated Orange hall is absolutely and fundamentally wrong and goes against any Republican principle. I disagree with that entirely.

However, the same people will never speak out about Catholic churches in east Belfast or other isolated Catholic communities that have been under attack. They will somehow always fall back on the notion that such attacks are reactive, that they are a reaction from the community to some greater misdeed that was done to their community. That is the difference. Isolated communities on whatever side should be allowed to live in peace. Mr Gibson, who has since left, should consider some of the actions carried out by people from his community and treat them with the same seriousness.

The motion’s tone has set the standard for the debate, which has been largely predictable. It shows how far we must go if we are to engage in any reconciliation process. Sam Foster spoke about people not having any honesty, integrity or dignity. He reverted to that type of language when talking about us. That struck me because the same people who share Committees with us here and who support the d’Hondt principle — that we will take the rightful places that we are entitled to by the number of votes that we receive — will walk out of a council meeting because a Sinn Féin member is elected chairperson.

There is a lack of integrity in Unionist representatives when they can do business with Sinn Féin and support the elections of its members in Chambers such as this, yet huff and puff in other chambers and walk out when Sinn Féin is elected. When we talk about honesty and integrity, we must look at ourselves first and foremost.

I agree with the sentiments of the amendment. Monica McWilliams —

Mr Foster: When the Member speaks about integrity and otherwise at councils, is he referring to me?

Mr C Murphy: I heard Mr Foster's opening remarks on the monitor. If I heard correctly, he questioned the honesty and integrity of Republicans and Republican elected representatives. In this institution, his party and Unionists support the right of Republicans to the positions to which they are entitled, and they have voted in support of that and d'Hondt. However, recently in Belfast City Council, members of his party, including Ministers who benefit from the d'Hondt mechanism, walked out of a council meeting when Sinn Féin got its just entitlements as the largest party on that council. When talking about honesty and integrity, one should look to oneself first and foremost.

I agree with the sentiments of the amendment. It talks about "agreed criteria", and that term is not defined. Monica McWilliams raised questions about the amendment. An agreed set of procedures for erecting monuments is something that we could go along with.

There was some irony when Éamonn ÓNeill said that the behaviour of Sinn Féin in Downpatrick was hypocritical because it flew in the face of supporting the equality provisions. The irony is that the monument was erected to an unarmed person who had been shot dead by the RUC. He was left to bleed to death in the street, and that was a breach of his human rights. However, the MP for the area at the time said that he felt that the RUC had acted appropriately in the action it took, in allowing an unarmed man to bleed to death in the street. That is a challenge to its support of human rights, which it has lauded over the years.

The Unionists who proposed the motion object to the erection of illegal monuments, and that is what the motion is focused on. On the one hand, I can see that that might be the case. A monument was erected in my village in 1991. Planning permission was sought, a lay-by was built and agreed by the Department of the Environment, and there were no objections from local Unionists.

However, when Republicans in Newry sought the agreement of the council some months ago to find a site for the erection of a monument to commemorate the hunger strikers, Danny Kennedy lodged very vocal objections, even though the people involved had worked with the council to try to identify a site and had located the monument on a site that the council had suggested, not one that they themselves had chosen. That begs the question: are people really worried about whether monuments are legal or illegal or about the fact that there are monuments at all?

Members have said that the location of monuments is insensitive. Gerry McHugh made the point that there are monuments to those who fought in the British Army in every town centre. From the roof of Woolworths in Newry, less than 50 yards from the cenotaph, the British Army shot dead three young men in the early 1970s. No one, as far as I am aware, has objected to the location of the cenotaph in the middle of Newry or has tried to have it removed. It stays there and people are entitled to have their remembrance. However, it is a monument to those who served in an army that murdered people on the streets of that town. Newry is a largely Nationalist town, and no one has objected to the cenotaph.

There is a tradition that people are sensitive to how remembrance is conducted. The media are all obliged to wear poppies in November in remembrance of the British Army, regardless of their political, religious or personal affiliations. I ask the movers of the motion how they think Jean McBride, the mother of Peter McBride, feels when the people providing a service to her are obliged to wear poppies to commemorate the British Army that murdered her son and re-employed those who were found guilty of that murder.

There are sensitivities on the other side to people they consider to be legitimate war heroes, as there are to people engaged in legitimate war on our side of the fence. All the sentiments expressed by Paul Berry could be expressed by someone from a Republican community about the RUC, the UDR or the British Army. They could all reflect the same sentiments of people murdering those who were trying to go about their business, who were innocent or who were not even involved in conflict. Murders have been covered up.

There is talk of sensitivity and monuments being located in sensitive areas. There is hardly a town centre in the North that does not have a monument to those who have fought and served in the British Army.

Mrs Carson: Will the Member give way?

Mr C Murphy: I have very little time, and I cannot give way. However, I will address a point made by Joan Carson. There are monuments at roadsides as well as cenotaphs in towns. There is one on the way to Kingsmills, not far from where Danny Kennedy comes from, and there is one in Castlewellan to UDR members who were killed there.

That does not stop the Unionists who talk about sensitivity from travelling round the South. There is hardly a road or town in the South where there is not a monument to someone from the IRA who was killed during the war of independence. Nationalists and Republicans erect monuments in a different way to Unionists, who erect cenotaphs in town centres.

I have run out of time. We need to address a process of national reconciliation. Unionists seem to be fixated with the idea that they are right and that there is a necessity to prove that they are right. That means running down anything that Republicans try to do. That will not lead us to national reconciliation. I accept that we should be sensitive as to how we commemorate our dead. Unionists must learn that the commemoration of British Army war dead is a very sensitive topic for people on my side of the fence.

Mr McGimpsey: I support the motion. I also want to look at the amendment proposed by Mr Tommy Gallagher. In it he talks about the need for criteria and referring the matter back to various bodies, including the Executive. It is important for Members to reflect that a criterion already exists; it is called the planning law. Any memorial requires planning permission, and the erection of a memorial without planning permission is illegal. Every one of the memorials that have gone up without planning permission is illegal. That is the law.

I have served on the planning committee at Belfast city hall for many years. Many Members are similarly aware of planning law, because they deal with it on a daily basis in local councils. Development, as defined in article 11 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991, is:

“the carrying out of building, engineering, mining or other operations in, on, over or under land, or the making of any material change in the use of any buildings or other land.”

“Other operations” is a catch-all term for any physical operation.

The memorials that we are debating are illegal because they do not have planning permission. The question then is what to do about them legally. Action can be taken by way of an enforcement notice against the person or organisation that erected the memorial and the landowner. That action is available to the Department of the Environment. Planning applications were not submitted for many of those memorials, and no one claimed ownership of them, which makes the enforcement process difficult. However, other action can be taken; the landowner has the right to clear his land of anything that people put on it.

The land on which many of those memorials have been erected belongs to Departments. The point has been well made in the debate that Departments have a duty to ensure that the law of the land and planning regulations are enforced. The issue is an emotive and a difficult one, but that does not excuse the breaking of the law by Mr Conor Murphy’s organisation in each and every one of those cases.

I have spelt out the criteria. There is no need for the amendment. The matter may be difficult, emotive and sensitive, but those are the criteria, and the process of obtaining planning permission and permission from the landowner must be adhered to. That is the way forward.

I support the substance of the motion for reasons that have already been mentioned in the debate. Sam Foster and Mrs Carson referred to the memorial erected in Belleek to IRA volunteers who carried out acts of murder. It is not located where the IRA volunteers died, but it has been erected at the spot where they carried out that act of murder. Two men travelling in their car were singled out and murdered by the IRA. The IRA/Republicans put up a memorial on that spot.

Not only were the IRA saying that those men had no right to exist, which is bad enough; they are now attempting to say that they never existed, which is monstrous. That is the reason I support the motion. That act is not simply insensitive, intolerant or inequitable; it is absolutely monstrous. They are looking to eradicate the existence of those men by erecting an IRA memorial on the spot where they died. That is disgraceful and outrageous.

The place for memorials is often in graveyards. That is recognised by the authorities, because planning permission to erect a memorial in a graveyard is not required. Permission is required from the owner, which, in many cases, is the local council. The Republican plot in Belfast is a case in point. Republicans have the opportunity to erect memorials to their dead in that plot, and it is an appropriate way for them to grieve for and to remember those friends and family members that they have lost.

Mr Conor Murphy referred to war memorials in many towns in Northern Ireland. Those are memorials to the dead of two world wars — the two greatest wars in history, in which millions of people died, including many from both sides of the community in Northern Ireland and people from right across these islands.

Those memorials are different from monuments to people who set out to achieve a political aim that they could not fulfil by democratic means. An overwhelming majority of the population rejected those political aims, so the terrorists resorted to terror in an effort to achieve them. They failed, and that is why Members are here today. The Assembly is trying to rebuild society and to deal with its pain and scars. That will not be done by erecting memorials on roadsides and at inappropriate spots that cause great hurt to the community. A graveyard is the proper place for a memorial.

If planning permission and the landlord’s permission to erect the memorial were obtained, nobody would object; however, that did not happen in the cases outlined. The erection of a memorial in Belleek was monstrous.

The only course of action is to ensure that the landowner and the authorities take the necessary steps. The attitude of Republicans, including those in the Chamber, is a formula for conflict.

Republicans are denying Unionists the right to exist. That is evident in the blocking of roads; for example, Ormeau Road was blocked during an Orange march that consisted of only two or three dozen Orangemen. Those Orangemen's culture, identity and right to exist are being denied. They are being told that they have no right to be there. Republicans have still not learnt that Unionists have a right not only to exist, but to be part of a democratic and free society.

There is no case for the amendment, which should be voted against. There is an overwhelming case for the motion.

5.15 pm

Mr Hay: There have been extremely lively debates on the issue in council chambers across the Province. In the city of Londonderry in the early 1970s, the IRA decided to kill company directors, including the head of DuPont, who was shot dead as he returned from work by gangsters who waited for him outside his house. I know of other company directors in Londonderry who were shot dead by the IRA. The IRA, during those years, felt that it was necessary to "take out" the directors of major companies throughout the Province. The IRA has also murdered young children, mothers, fathers, sons and daughters.

For decades, the Republican movement has carried out a terrorist campaign without shame. In the Foyle constituency the IRA shot dead a young policeman and returned a year later and shot dead his only daughter. This afternoon, Members have heard about people's rights. The Republican movement in the House has tried to equate terrorists' monuments to cenotaphs throughout Northern Ireland.

In my city of Londonderry wreaths that were laid on Remembrance Sunday by many organisations have been torn apart and taken off the cenotaph two hours later on many occasions. We in Londonderry know all about Sinn Féin/IRA's rights, as they call them.

We need to be clear about what the debate is about, and I know some Members equate those monuments to memorials in graveyards. A Republican movement took over a graveyard in Londonderry to erect a terrorist monument, and that movement stayed in the city cemetery for several days. Even today, many Protestants whose relations are buried there cannot go near it. The monument was so high that it was a total insult not only to the many Protestant people there but to many in the Nationalist community. I invite anyone in the House to look at that monument and ask himself whether this is about rights when he sees that monument towering above the other gravestones. A Republican organisation practically takes over a graveyard, threatens the people there and erects a monument, and Sinn Féin/IRA talks to us about rights.

In another instance in Londonderry it has taken over Roads Service land to erect other monuments, and, once again, it has used force. We can have all the planning laws we want, and the Executive can do whatever they want, but those people just take over areas in my city by force and erect monuments. Anyone who enquires about what is happening is threatened.

The problem in Northern Ireland — and it has been so for many years — is that terrorists are happy to threaten and murder people and break the law to erect monuments because they know that they have a weak British Government that will do nothing. There is a feeling among Republicans that they can do anything here, and if they want a monument on any piece of land, they will use whatever brutal force is necessary to ensure that it is erected.

I support the motion. However, I do not know what will happen now, given that there is still an armed wing that is prepared to take over land to erect monuments. There is a serious issue of law and order in Northern Ireland.

Mr Hamilton: I say at the outset that, having listened to Mr Conor Murphy, I know of no spectacle more offensive and ridiculous as the Republican movement in one of its periodic fits of pretentious morality. I support the motion so ably proposed by my Colleague Mr Foster. There is a difference between graveyard monuments and memorials in places where the individuals who are commemorated are buried and monuments in open, shared places of public concourse.

Dublin, for example, has many sites associated with the 1916 Easter Rising. However, the Republican memorial is at the Republican plot in Glasnevin Cemetery. The city is not littered from one end to the other with memorials. Memorials in public places should command broad public support. War memorials to the fallen of forces that represented the legally elected Government of the day are one thing. Custom and practice have meant that war memorials have always been sited in prominent public places — usually town centres.

Monuments for the fallen of an insurgent terrorist force that is responsible for killing many ordinary, innocent citizens in a cold-blooded and premeditated way are offensive to most of the population. If such monuments must exist, they should be confined to the cemeteries and graveyards where those whom they commemorate are buried; they should have the appropriate consent of church authorities. Memorials should not be politically provocative and should not be sited in politically provocative places. It seems that Sinn Féin is hell-bent on deliberately seeking out sites that will be provocative and are designed to hurt. Such sites represent in-your-face Republicanism.

Ordinary planning rules are inadequate to deal with what is essentially a political issue. A judgement on whether a monument is aesthetically acceptable or in some way damaging to local amenities is not enough. Those monuments, by their very nature, are political statements. One is almost tempted to suggest that a solution might be to have such memorials subject to a body like the Parades Commission, because they have the same politically charged nature as many of the parades that are deemed contentious by some people.

Those wildcat memorials run deep against the healing process that Sinn Féin purports to espouse. They stir up hatreds, bitter memories, fears and feelings that we all hoped could be left behind. When considered alongside other evidence, such as Sinn Féin's involvement in stirring up community strife in north and east Belfast, its involvement with the terrorists and drug dealers of FARC in Colombia, its active links with other international terrorist groupings — all of which is attested to by independent external bodies, not only Unionist political comment — all point to a real Sinn Féin agenda that is at complete variance with its professed aim of healing Northern Ireland's society.

It is an agenda for perpetuating strife. It is war by other means, and I support the motion.

Mr Morrow: As my Colleagues have intimated, we will be supporting the motion.

I find the amendment quite offensive. It is despicable that the SDLP should use this opportunity to try to cover again for Sinn Féin/IRA. It is also most regrettable that the Minister of the Environment is not here. Whether he has full or partial responsibility, he should be speaking in this debate, but this is not the first time that that Minister has held the House in contempt, and we know that.

I am quite offended at the SDLP's attempt to amend the motion. Its amendment states that everything after "Assembly" should be left out and the following inserted:

"recognises the sensitivities involved on all sides in respect of the commemoration of those who have lost their lives in the conflict here,".

If ever there were a misnomer, a misuse and abuse of a word, it is the use of the word "conflict". That is highly offensive and insulting. In Northern Ireland, a bunch of hoods, thugs and corner boys became murderers, and that is now described as a "conflict" — it is anything but. It is highly offensive and insulting of the SDLP to say that this was a conflict. It was unmitigated terror, perpetrated by those who made every attempt to overthrow the legitimacy of the state. They have shown in the crudest, rudest and most fascistic manner their disrespect for everyone who does not agree with them.

Is it not time for the SDLP to come clean on these issues? Is it not time that the SDLP stopped giving cover to Sinn Féin/IRA? The time has come for that party to stand up and be counted and demonstrate in clear, unambiguous terms that there is clear water between it and Sinn Féin/IRA.

Mr Dallat: What about the LVF?

Mr Morrow: I have no connection with the LVF. If you want to take me up on that point, I am happy to do so. It gives me no trouble whatsoever to condemn that group. I want no monuments to the LVF, and I hope that you understand that. That is not what your party's amendment says.

Mr Deputy Speaker: The debate will take place through the Chair, not across the Chamber.

Mr Morrow: The amendment says that that party feels that there is a place for these monuments. There is no place to elegise terrorists. I do not care from what side they came. Anyone who knows me in public life — you have not known me long, but you can visit my council and see if I have been ambiguous in my condemnation of terrorism, from whatever quarter. I do not put any ifs, ands or buts into that, as some Members try to. I want no monuments to any terrorists at all. I hope that you, Mr Dallat, fully understand that. If you need it written out in big print, I will do that.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order. I repeat that I will tolerate a certain amount of cross-chat, but the debate will take place through the Chair and not across the Chamber.

Mr Morrow: The brutal campaign of terrorism that has been waged over the past 30 years in Northern Ireland must not be glorified in the monuments that are being erected willy-nilly across the country.

They are intended to offend and insult, and that is what they do. They are intended to carry on the war by another means. As has been said, our graveyards are a poignant testimony to what has gone on here for the past 30 years. We do not have to walk far from the Chamber to find the first monument to terrorism. Step out through the Door of the Chamber and on the right-hand side are two memorial inscriptions dedicated to three innocent people who were done to death by Sinn Féin/IRA. Cross the Great Hall to the Senate, where there was a service recently, and there are memorial inscriptions to Senator Paddy Wilson of the SDLP and Senator Jack Barnhill from Strabane, both brutally done to death. It is right and fitting that their memories should be lasting. I appreciate and applaud the fact that there are memorials by which to remember those two gentlemen. I understand that there will soon be another inscription to remind us of what happened. I am not selective in my condemnation, nor as to who should be commemorated.

Do we need to be reminded of the Shankill Road fish shop, Teebane, Kingsmills, La Mon, Enniskillen, Omagh, Glenanne, the Ballygawley-Omagh road, Ballykelly, Narrow Water or Darkley Pentecostal Church? Those are but a few of the atrocities that we have had to live with and to endure, not to mention the gunning down of many individuals who were going to or coming from work, were at their place of work or were working on their farms.

Sinn Féin/IRA claims to represent working-class people. I am working class. I am neither proud nor ashamed of that. The vast majority of people who were gunned down were working class, trying to earn a living from a hard day's work. Yet those people were seen as legitimate targets and were done to death. Some of them could not afford to buy a car and, as they cycled to work to earn a living in order to bring up their families, the people on the opposite Benches, who are associated with Sinn Féin/IRA, gunned them to death. Yet these are the very people we are told must be remembered.

Another justice was meted out in my town at the weekend. I could go on and on, but my time is up. I support the motion.

Mr Gallagher: I want to deal with a comment from the member for West Tyrone, Oliver Gibson, who referred to a weakness in the SDLP in tabling an amendment. An amendment that recognises that there are sensitivities on both sides of the community is not a sign of weakness. On the contrary, it is a sign both of leadership and a readiness to take up the challenge of dealing with difficult issues. In relation —

Mr Gibson: Will the Member give way?

Mr Gallagher: I will not give way. If Maurice Morrow takes offence from an amendment that recognises that there is hurt and grief on all sides, such comments from an elected representative are an indication that some people in this society have a very long way to travel.

The amendment deals with the problem of memorials and monuments in a logical and sensible way. The motion will not.

The proposer of the motion and the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure referred to the required planning permission for the monuments. Monuments have been erected regardless of planning permission, and, if this motion were passed and the monuments taken down, experience tells us that they would be erected again. Therefore, the amendment, not the motion, will address the problem. If the amendment is passed, it will ensure that the Executive, following consultation, will implement fair and workable guidelines.

It is four years since the Good Friday Agreement, and in that period many people throughout the island, especially in the North of Ireland, have experienced real improvements in their lives. That, however, has not been the case for everyone. There are many bereaved families on both sides, and they must endure daily the pain and loss of a loved one. For them, the relative peace brought by the Good Friday Agreement does not assuage the pain of their loss. Instead, it has brought a heightened awareness and a deep sense of the futility of a conflict that robbed so many of life. For some bereaved families, it is essential to remember the past and to have commemoration rituals.

The amendment recognises each side's need to remember its dead and to commemorate the past. As Members know, a problem arises if monuments are erected in a manner or at a location that offends or hurts others. That is why the erection of the monument to dead IRA men in Belleek, where I live, has become so controversial. The IRA men whom it commemorates were killed many miles from Belleek, but the monument is on the very spot where that organisation murdered two Protestant workmen. The memorial has caused hurt to the families of those workmen and has met with strong disapproval in the local community. For the benefit of those Members who might support the motion, representatives of one of those Protestant families, the Hassard family, have said publicly that they have no problem with Republicans' commemorating their dead. However, they are hurt by the insensitive way in which the Republicans erected the monument.

Northern Ireland has many memorials and monuments, some of which were mentioned, and some of which are controversial. Controversy is inevitable when a divided and hurt community bitterly remembers its dead. It will take time for those memories to fade. It has taken time in every other country that has experienced a conflict such as ours. In the Republic of Ireland, it took 70 years before the civil war could be remembered with a national day of commemoration. No healing can take place while memorials are hijacked for political purposes and there is a complete lack of understanding of the pain and hurt experienced in the other community. With the amendment, we can find a way to undo the damage that has been caused by the erection of some memorials and the way in which the issue has been handled.

My Colleague from Fermanagh and South Tyrone and Conor Murphy asked about the criteria. The criteria have not been drawn up.

However, we know from the consultation outlined in the amendment that criteria will be included that are based on fairness and equality. Ms McWilliams raised the genuine point about who will enforce the criteria, and we need answers to that. I have no doubt that when the Executive are given time to complete their consultations, they will give us answers. However, they must first be allowed to begin those consultations, and the only way in which that they can do that is if we pass the amendment. I ask Members to support the amendment.

5.45 pm

Mr Gibson: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. Is there anywhere in Northern Ireland that supplies yellow marble?

Mr Kennedy: Mr Deputy Speaker, I apologise to you for my non-attendance at the beginning of this important debate. I also apologise to Members and to those who participated earlier. I would also like to record an apology to my co-sponsor, Mr Foster, and thank him for his contribution. Unfortunately other business prevented me from attending, but I am grateful that there have been several contributions. I particularly want to thank those who agreed with the motion.

In recent months and years we have witnessed a determined campaign by Republicans to create memorials in the Northern Ireland landscape that offend decent, law-abiding and God-fearing people. The memorials are placed deliberately and provocatively close to commercial centres and places where people are known to gather. They honour individuals who may at best be described as highly dubious, but more accurately as bloodthirsty murderers.

The groups that erect the memorials do not care about the real emotions of the relatives and friends of those who lost their lives to the so-called Irish patriots whom the statues honour. It often seems that determined efforts are made to maximise the victims' hurt by placing the memorials close to the scenes of the atrocities that those so-called heroes carried out, and we heard evidence of that earlier in the debate.

Those who erect such memorials should be condemned, deplored and exposed as sectarian coat-trailers of the worst kind. I draw a distinction, and right-minded people draw the same distinction, between those whose names are honoured on war memorials and other such tablets in recognition of their service to their country. They carried out their duty as members of the security forces or the emergency services against those who chose to wage war in darkness and to kill without mercy or pity for victims who were given little or no chance.

Memorials are being erected to Republicans in places that bear no relevance to the events that occurred. Recently in Newry, a new memorial dedicated to the IRA hunger strikers was unveiled in a public park. The park is owned and maintained by the local authority. Members of a well-respected local Protestant business family provided the park in good faith to acknowledge their contribution to their community. The imposing nature of the monument is one thing, but it is worth remembering that none of the 10 hunger strikers came from Newry.

Why should the memorial be erected there, close as it is to a Kentucky Fried Chicken outlet and adjacent to the major shopping centre in Newry? There can be only one reason — to offend and intimidate.

The other possible reason is that the erection of the memorial is proof that the unjustifiable Republican war is now over and that, to convince the grass roots that the partitionist settlement agreed to in the Belfast Agreement by Sinn Féin is worth having, with Stormont and Sinn

Féin Ministers of the Crown administering British rule in this part of the UK, a few token monuments should be erected to keep the hardliners happy. How cynical can you get?

Whatever the truth of the matter, these monuments have no place in any decent society that wishes to move on from the conflict and war that nearly destroyed it over 30 years. Whether the monuments are erected in Newry, Castlewellan, County Down, County Fermanagh or anywhere else, they are unacceptable.

The issue is cross-cutting in terms of ministerial responsibility. In addition to the planning and environmental issues put to the Minister of the Environment, I am aware of memorials on land and property owned by the Department for Regional Development and the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development. Examples are the memorial on land adjacent to the Newry bypass, which is presumably owned by the DRD, and the new and impressive defence wall built by the Rivers Agency of DARD at Kilmorey Street, Newry, which contains a memorial tablet to IRA volunteers. I hope that the Ministers responsible will, on receipt of the Hansard report of this debate, take action to remove offensive objects from their Departments' property.

I was gratified by Monica McWilliams's acknowledgement that Unionists had every right to be offended by these memorials. I am grateful for the support of my Colleagues Joan Carson and Tom Hamilton and other Members of the House such as Paul Berry, William Hay and Oliver Gibson.

Conor Murphy seemed to think that Unionists were being inconsistent by objecting to the election of Alec Maskey as Lord Mayor of Belfast. The context in which Belfast City Council operates has to be remembered. The place was almost flattened by the activities of Sinn Féin/IRA during the troubles. Witnessing the activities of Sinn Féin/IRA representatives fostering, and continuing to agitate, civil disturbance in parts of Belfast, it is no wonder that Unionist members of Belfast City Council considered a representative of Sinn Féin to be unfit for the high public office of Lord Mayor.

I remind Sinn Féin that there is no correlation between world war conflicts, commemorated by memorial tablets and monuments which properly indicate service and sacrifice in a worldwide conflict, and the actions of terrorist guerrilla warfare, which can never be considered as war in the true sense.

Several Members mentioned the roadside memorials at Kingsmills and Teebane. Those are memorials to innocent workers and victims who were mercilessly murdered and who therefore have the right to be remembered.

I reject the SDLP's amendment. Once again, the SDLP is trying to cover for Sinn Féin on this issue, which is regrettable. Mr Gallagher asked that guidelines be provided.

The best guidelines would be provided by the Planning Service and the Departments, whose Ministers should not allow the erection of such monuments on Government property.

Dr J Thompson) Researcher,
Northern Ireland Assembly

The Deputy Chairperson: The Committee Clerk has prepared a paper on issues relating to the Health and Personal Social Services Bill. He will summarise those issues for us now.

The Committee Clerk: I prepared the paper for Members' information and to allow them to consider further the evidence taken from Prof Stout, Age Concern and the Belfast Carers' Association.

The witnesses raised several concerns about the part of the Bill that deals with free nursing care. The two key concerns were the separation of nursing from personal care and how nursing care is defined in the Bill. I have outlined various associated concerns that have been expressed, including the effectiveness of any split between nursing and personal care, and the experience of operating the system in England, where nursing homes used the money that was provided for nursing care to cover increased residential fees.

Other concerns include the monitoring arrangements; ensuring that residents in different homes receive equality of treatment; publicity and the entitlement process; the appeal and complaints mechanisms to be put into place, including the possible utilisation of the existing arrangements; and the impact on benefits to residents and their families. There is a detailed note about separation, its definition and the implementation arrangements.

There are several options in the paper that Members will wish to consider. The interdepartmental working group on personal care is not due to report until the end of June. That prevents the Committee from considering the Bill in the context of what, if any, recommendations on personal care would come from the working group.

Personal care has been outlined in the research paper, and Janice Thompson, who is here to answer questions on that, said that the cost of personal care would be substantial — £30 million to £40 million. If it happens, that would have to be met from the Department's budget.

I will briefly go through the options. The Committee could accept the Bill as it stands. There are major benefits for the residents of nursing homes, including increased financial assistance and correcting the anomaly of residents' having to pay for aspects of nursing care that are received free of charge by patients in hospital.

If Members' concerns were significant, the Committee could look at the feasibility of amending aspects of the Bill to widen the definition. Concerns were raised over Alzheimer's disease. The Committee could also look at the monitoring and appeal mechanisms. The most extreme action would be to recommend the rejection of that clause, but that would have to be set in the context of there being a commitment to introduce personal care — something that the Committee is not in a position to know of at present.

If the Bill were to progress on the provision of free nursing care, the Committee would want a firm commitment from the Minister as to how the Bill would be implemented and what Regulations would result. The Bill is quite short, and it essentially just allows free nursing care to be introduced. The guidance that the Department issues to trusts will set out the parameters under which nursing care will be provided. The Committee will want a firm commitment from the Minister about how the assessment process, which is being developed at present, would operate.

The fee mechanism must also be looked at. Will there be a flat rate or a tiered system? My information is that it is likely to be a flat rate similar to that in Wales, rather than the tiered system in England. A flat rate would be simpler to administer.

A question was raised about changing the short title of the Bill. There are difficulties about changing the title. It is difficult to describe the contents accurately and to meet the legislative requirements of a short title.

The Deputy Chairperson: The Committee Clerk has raised the main issues for us — ranging from accepting the Bill, through to the other extreme of rejecting the Bill, and a few things in between that will probably require more detailed examination. It is now over to members.

Mrs Courtney: I should like clarification. You said that we should have formal clause-by-clause scrutiny of the Bill next week. Is that your recommendation?

The Committee Clerk: At present that very much depends on members' views regarding the Bill itself. One option is that, if members were broadly content with the Bill's direction as it stands, I could invite the officials to attend the Committee next week. That would allow us to take forward the formal clause-by-clause scrutiny and ask the officials what each clause means and how the provisions would be implemented, thus reassuring members of the Bill's intent and allowing them to raise further questions if they wish. The opportunity today is to clarify how we go forward in the case of any major concerns which must be investigated and developed.

Mr Berry: The briefing note is most informative about what is happening, and I commend you for keeping us all appraised. In relation to the second option and Alzheimer's disease, under 'Separation and definition' the paper states:

"The Department has explained that the assessment tool will take into account the physical, mental and social needs of people in care".

The Committee Clerk: That is my current understanding, based on the evidence given by the Chief Nursing Officer to the Committee.

Mr Berry: Obviously we could ask them more if we went through the Bill in detail.

Dr Thompson: The Department has said that its assessment tool will cover Alzheimer's disease, but in England concerns were raised that whatever assessment process they had in place was not doing so; Age Concern raised that point. Until anyone has seen the assessment, it is very hard for him to make a hard and fast judgement. I sound the note of caution that it would need to be extremely comprehensive to cover every aspect.

Mr Berry: Neither do we want to be seen as putting everything back by taking the fourth option, which would be quite a big step.

The Committee Clerk: It would have to be very extreme.

The Deputy Chairperson: Is there agreement on that view?

Members indicated assent.

Mr Berry: Perhaps we might work on the top three options to try to agree a way forward.

The Deputy Chairperson: Have we to agree on one of the options before you invite departmental officials along for the detailed clause-by-clause consideration?

The Committee Clerk: It is not so much a matter of agreement on one option. It was the opportunity for members to discuss the issue, and, in the case of a major objection or problem in an area, such as the separation of nursing care from personal care, that would make implementing the present draft of the Bill very difficult. I should need to investigate certain aspects before we reached that stage to ensure that members had sufficient information to question officials and suggest amendments. The clause-by-clause scrutiny will take the first clause and move through the Bill, thus allowing members to determine what each aspect of a clause does so that they are reassured that the provisions laid down meet the Bill's intent.

The key aspect is the separation of free nursing care from personal care, which is what England and Wales have undertaken; Scotland has done things differently. I wanted the Committee to have the opportunity to consider comments such as those of Prof Stout from Age Concern before we took the next step.

The Deputy Chairperson: What has been implemented in Scotland?

The Committee Clerk: Initially, the Scottish Executive were proposing free nursing care along the lines of England and Wales. The Scottish Parliament examined it and decided that it wanted free personal care inclusive of nursing care. That was debated in the Scottish Parliament, and it was put back to the Executive. On the face of opposition to free nursing care, and excluding free personal care, they decided to take the issue forward. England and Scotland have kept the two issues separate, and they have introduced free nursing care. England has a tiered system of payment, and Scotland and Wales have a flat rate payment. Scotland must accept the financial consequences of accepting the need for free personal care.

The Deputy Chairperson: What stage is that at?

Dr Thompson: It will be implemented in July in Scotland. It should have been implemented sooner, but it was delayed for administrative and financial reasons.

The Deputy Chairperson: Has the Scottish Parliament agreed to provide the funding to cover nursing and personal care?

Rev Robert Coulter: It is still costing that.

Mrs Courtney: Can the Committee see the costings before it makes that decision? It is important to get that right.

The Committee Clerk: The research paper that Dr Thompson provided to the Committee indicated the overall cost implications. In England, the Health Department decided that the money that it would cost for free personal care would be better spent on the other pressures that it faced.

Dr Thompson: In England, it was going to cost around £1 billion, but the Department thought that it would be better spent elsewhere. In Northern Ireland, it will cost a minimum of £30 million for free personal care and £9 million for free nursing care a year.

The Committee Clerk: The Royal Commission on Long Term Care looked at it and put forward a proposal. It indicated £1.1 billion, in 1995 prices, rising to some £2.6 billion by 2021 and £4.6 billion by the middle of the next century. On a pro rata basis, if you read that across to Northern Ireland, they are still substantial figures.

Rev Robert Coulter: There is a statement in the paper that, for Northern Ireland, it would cost £25 million to £30 million a year.

The Assistant Committee Clerk: Dr Thompson's research paper notes that the anticipated costs of introducing free personal care in England amounted to £1 billion. It was decided against introducing it there because of the costings and the fact that a similar amount of money could be used to provide 5,000 more NHS beds, to enable an additional 50,000 elderly people to live independently at home and to extend break services that would enable at least 75,000 carers to take a break from their caring role.

The Deputy Chairperson: In their view, those services could be implemented rather than putting the money into personal care.

Rev Robert Coulter: If we accept the Bill as it stands, can we then table amendments to it?

The Committee Clerk: The Committee can recommend amendments to the clauses if necessary during the clause-by-clause consideration.

Rev Robert Coulter: Would the Committee be accepting the Bill in principle?

The Committee Clerk: Provided that its amendments were agreed to, the Committee would accept the Bill in principle. In cases where it becomes clear that the content of the Bill does not meet what the Committee believes to be its requirements, the clause-by-clause process allows the Committee to recommend amendments. We have a number of weeks yet before we have to report to the Assembly. The Committee must report to the Assembly on 7 June; therefore, it has two or three weeks to complete its consideration, and it can recommend amendments as necessary.

The Deputy Chairperson: Are there any questions?

The Committee Clerk: If members are content, I shall invite officials to meet with the Committee to begin the examination of the clauses.

The Deputy Chairperson: Will that begin next week?

The Committee Clerk: Yes.

The Deputy Chairperson: Thank you.

Ms J Hill) Social Services and Public Safety Ms J Thompson)

The Acting Chairperson: We are glad that officials from the Department have come to meet the Committee. I would like to welcome Mr Peter Deazley, Mr Mike Hendra, Ms Judith Hill and Ms Jennifer Thompson. We look forward to hearing your comments on the Bill, and then we will have questions for you.

Clause 1 (Charges for nursing care)

Mr Deazley: Clause 1 amends the Health and Personal Social Services (Northern Ireland) Order 1972, removing any charge for nursing care from residents of either statutory or independent residential nursing homes. Paragraph 4A gives the following definition of nursing care:

“(a) the provision of care, or

(b) the planning, supervision or delegation of the provision of care, other than any services which, having regard to their nature and the circumstances in which they are provided, do not need to be provided by a nurse so registered.”

The Bill removes the recoverable aspect of any nursing home charges that include an element of nursing care cost. It is a simple Bill.

The Acting Chairperson: Do members wish to make any comments?

Ms Ramsey: I would like it to be on the record that the Committee has raised concerns about separating nursing and personal care. I do not want to sound negative, because this is a positive step, but people have concerns. You have heard from individuals, Age Concern and the Belfast Carers' Centre. We must raise concerns with you from the outset, but we must also note the Department's constraints, particularly financial ones. We have heard that the interdepartmental working group is looking at personal care. When does it hope to report?

Mr Hendra: The interdepartmental working group will report to the Executive by the end of June.

Ms Ramsey: Is that definite?

Mr Hendra: Yes.

Ms Ramsey: Will the Committee see the report?

Mr Hendra: That will be for the interdepartmental group and the Executive to decide.

Ms Ramsey: Chairperson, should the Committee not receive that report? I do not know what the procedure is, but the Committee is examining the Bill, and the report is going to the Executive. Should the Committee not have some input into the report or see what it says?

The Acting Chairperson: Are there any further comments or questions?

Ms McWilliams: The Committee must receive the report. If it is to scrutinise the legislation, it must have all the evidence, including that report. Will that report contain the assessment tool?

Mr Hendra: No. The group has been asked to examine the cost and implications of personal care.

Ms McWilliams: OK. As I understand it, the other report relates to the ongoing pilot scheme.

Mr Deazley: That document is almost complete. It will be going to consultation, and we hope to send it to the Minister in a few days. As promised before, we will send a copy to the Committee also. That report will contain the assessment tool, the guidance for its use and all the necessary information.

Ms McWilliams: That makes scrutinising the legislation difficult for the Committee. There are two key issues: the scheme was introduced in England with tiered payment levels, but nursing care was paid for at a flat rate in Wales; and the Committee is unsure about the Department's intentions. Should nursing care be described as free, when only some people will have all their costs covered?

Does the Department intend to make it clear in the explanatory memorandum and any publicity material that not all nursing care is free? “Free nursing care” is a misnomer, because not everyone will get free care, and a memorandum that describes it as such is confusing.

Mr Deazley: Nursing care will be free according to the definition in the Bill. We intend to send proposals to the Minister within the next 10 days. They will say whether payment will be tiered or in a single band along the same lines as the Welsh system. We will publicise the method that is adopted.

Ms McWilliams: You must accept that it is difficult for the Committee, if the decision has not been made. If the payment is tiered, some people will have to top up the amount from their incomes.

Mr Deazley: The English system attempts to grade the level of nursing care required into low, medium or high categories. A pro rata contribution is made towards the costs according to that.

The Acting Chairperson: Therefore, the nursing care is not free.

Ms McWilliams: No. It is not free according to that system.

Mr Deazley: It is free according to the definition in the legislation, which provides for the element of care required in the nursing home that is provided directly by a nurse or for by a registered nurse. That does not include all the care provided by a nursing home — only the nursing care element.

“the planning, supervision or delegation of the provision of care”

Mr Berry: The Committee has taken evidence from many witnesses, and we feel that there is no definition of what constitutes care. Professionals in the field have not had an answer, and the boundaries are unclear. The Chief Nursing Officer has explained the assessment process that has been developed and the training that will be required. However, witnesses have told us that similar tools in England have not worked and that the system there as a shambles. Can you explain that?

Ms Hill: Nurses who have used the tool on the pilot schemes found it useful. It has enabled them to identify the needs of patients and users of the service. Although it has been used to establish nursing care needs in nursing homes, they see the tool that we have been developing and testing as something that could be used to meet nursing needs more widely. They see it as defining the input that is required from nurses to care for the groups of people that they have been assessing.

I accept that the situation in England is giving cause for concern. The approach there will influence how we think and enable us to make recommendations. We want to avoid those difficulties. The scale that we operate on here enables us to be closer to the staff involved and ensure that they have the appropriate training and support to carry out the assessments. Evidence from the pilot schemes shows that nurses are confident about using the tool. It is to be hoped that a training programme can be developed that will allow us to use it more widely.

Mrs Courtney: I have similar concerns. There is no definition of the meaning of the assessment tool. Even the Chief Nursing Officer has spoken about the need to develop the assessment process and the training that will be required. That seems to imply that the tool has not been properly tested. Will we be able to see how that assessment tool is being used before it is put into practice?

Ms Hill: That is the consultation process that Mr Deazley referred to. The pilot schemes have been completed and will go out for consultation.

Mrs Courtney: Where will the pilot schemes take place?

Mr Deazley: The pilot schemes have already been completed. They were carried out in every board area.

Ms Hill: The pilot schemes were carried out in the independent sector as well as in the statutory sector.

Mrs Courtney: Having met the independent sector, I doubt that it is content with the assessment tool as it stands.

Ms Hill: The independent sector is represented on our working group, and it has not said that to us. It will be able to raise concerns in the wider consultation, and we will listen to them.

Mrs Courtney: I am still not convinced.

Ms Ramsey: I have a concern about payments. Prof Stout said that the Royal Commission was not advocating payments for bed and breakfast. There is confusion around the definition of personal nursing care.

Mr Deazley: This is only one response to the Royal Commission, not an acceptance of its recommendation, which was for much more than free nursing care. The response is similar to the response in England.

Mrs I Robinson: Do you accept that the “Defining Personal Care” section of the Royal Commission’s report is an all-embracing, itemised account of the meaning of personal care? Should we be working from its definition of what nursing care is and what personal care is?

Mr Deazley: I will ask Mr Hendra to answer that question, as he is involved with the personal care group.

Mr Hendra: I am involved in supporting the inter-departmental group, though I am not on it. It is looking closely at definitions. The Royal Commission is perhaps a starting point. The group has looked at a raft of other definitions running on from the Scottish care development group work — definitions in legislation that provide the legislative background to this. That is then to be translated into an operational definition for personal care. That work is ongoing.

The Acting Chairperson: I want to ask about the £85 that you have drawn up in the formula. Given that Wales has set a flat rate of £100 a week and the highest English band is £110 a week, why is our one so low?

Mr Hendra: The £85 a week was an indicative cost that was established around 18 months to two years ago when the Government first gave their response to the Royal Commission. That was used for resource bids. It does not necessarily reflect the level of banding that will be used, but it provides the overall level of resources that the bandings will reflect.

The Acting Chairperson: Is there any indication of the banding, which is now being looked at after two years?

Mr Hendra: Peter Deazley spoke about the submission that is going to the Minister for a decision on whether we run with several bands or a single price for nursing care.

Mr Deazley: That will address both issues — the banding issue and the payment at individual level.

The Acting Chairperson: When will we get information on that?

Mr Deazley: We aim to have a submission with the Minister within the next two weeks at the latest.

The Acting Chairperson: That will be useful. Can you explain the assessment method that you will be using?

Mr Deazley: Which assessment?

The Acting Chairperson: How people are going to be evaluated to discover what they should, and should not, pay.

Mr Deazley: The nursing needs assessment will be carried out first. If it is decided that a level of nursing care is required, as defined in the legislation, that element will be removed from the means assessment. There will be no further assessment of the contribution towards nursing care. The personal care and accommodation aspects will remain when a person has the means to address those. However, the nursing care element will simply be removed from the assessment.

The Acting Chairperson: Will we be consulted on your assessment methods?

Mr Deazley: I imagine that the current financial assessment process will continue to be applied when people are assessed for care management. There will be no need to change that system.

Mr Hendra: The Health and Personal Social Services (Assessment of Resources) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1993 apply. The exclusion in clause 1 of the Bill prevents that from being applied to nursing care.

The Acting Chairperson: That will be standard right across the country?

Mr Hendra: Yes.

Ms McWilliams: Given our concerns about the assessment tool, what about the right of appeal? Currently people can make a complaint under the normal complaints procedure about all other areas of health and social services. Is that a fair way of allowing people redress if they have not been assessed accurately, or would a separate appeals system built into the legislation be more appropriate?

Mr Hendra: We have not considered a separate appeals procedure. We have looked at what is done in England, and it relies on the existing local authority and NHS complaints procedures. If someone is dissatisfied with the assessment and that is not resolved by negotiation, he has recourse to local level and then to a higher level of complaint. We propose to do the same at this time.

Ms McWilliams: It may not be appropriate to look at England, as, with our devolved Administration, the structure of health and social services is entirely different there.

Mr Hendra: The health and social services complaints procedure is integrated with social services and health services and is generally the same. The detail of an assessment would be looked at by the appropriate professionals clinicians.

Ms McWilliams: Members of this Committee are fairly familiar with the complaints procedure. It is long, drawn-out, time-consuming and difficult. It is also tiered: as a complaint gets bigger, it goes up a level. It is hard for some people to understand, and it is mainly elderly people who are involved. Some people are disorientated and unfamiliar with the process. A built-in appeals procedure might help those who felt that they had been wrongly assessed in the first place. It might also help us.

Mr Hendra: You are focusing on a fast track, local level complaints procedure that could resolve an issue quickly and would be more formalised than the existing one.

Ms McWilliams: Yes. Some people could be dead by the time we had a complaint resolved. I have been involved in the procedure, and I know how long it can take. The one I am involved in now has taken nearly two years. Elderly people getting nursing care need an urgent assessment, and if they felt that it was not done accurately, they would want to be able to appeal it.

I discovered recently that the nursing assessments some people had were assessments of the care they needed when they went into hospital not of what they needed when they came out. If someone was treated like that, he would want to appeal. Complaining in the standard way can take a long time — between six to 18 months, and not many take less than six months.

Mr Hendra: We will see if we can formalise a fast track in the system. Ultimately a patient would have recourse to the normal complaints procedure, the health ombudsman, et cetera.

Ms McWilliams: How would that be done?

Mr Hendra: It would be part of the guidance document on the implementation paper for free nursing care.

Ms McWilliams: Would it go into the Statutory Regulations?

Mr Hendra: It may be regulated on.

Mr Deazley: It would be more likely to go into directions from the Department to the trusts.

Ms McWilliams: If we vote this legislation through on the Floor of the Assembly, would we know from you that that guarantee was in place or would we be taking your word on a wing and a prayer?

Mr Deazley: There would have to be a process, and the boards would have to monitor it. There would be a registration process of the complaints and tight monitoring to make sure that they were fast-tracked. We would have to ensure that the directions we gave to the trusts were implemented.

Ms McWilliams: You will have a look at that and then come back to us.

Mrs I Robinson: I support what has been said. Many people may feel aggrieved when the Bill is enforced, and they could flood the process by wanting to be reassessed. The ordinary system may not be able to cope. It is logical that each board should be responsible for dealing with its area.

Mr Deazley: Part of the experience in England has been heavily related to its tiering system.

The Acting Chairperson: Concerns have been raised that conditions such as Alzheimer's disease may be excluded from the definition of nursing care. We accept that the Chief Nursing Officer has said that the assessment tool will cover assessment of the physical, mental and social needs of people in care. Can you confirm that nursing care for sufferers of Alzheimer's and those with other mental health needs will be covered? How will providers ensure that such people are identified and assessed?

Ms Hill: We took that into account when piloting the assessment tool. A range of service users has been assessed, and those with mental ill health and dementia will be included in assessment for nursing care. This was raised by the Alzheimer's Society and discussed with it by colleagues. The society awaits wider consultation but appears satisfied that its needs and concerns have been considered.

Ms Ramsey: Much faith has been put in the pilot projects. Can we see the results?

Ms Hill: We must report on them as part of the working group activity. We will check on the feedback and consider what can be made available.

Mr Deazley: The second part of the question Ms Hill was asked dealt with identifying and assessing people with Alzheimer's disease or dementia. The boards will soon be asked to identify all self-funders in independent nursing homes, regardless of their reasons for being there. All those people will be told of their right to free nursing care and offered an assessment of their nursing care needs.

The Acting Chairperson: How will the assessment work with someone in a nursing home who is reasonably healthy but becomes ill, needs nursing care and then returns to reasonable health?

Mr Deazley: Did the person remain in the nursing home throughout?

The Acting Chairperson: Yes.

Mr Deazley: That will depend on the decision regarding single-band or tiered payments. Tiered payments provide an opportunity for review to increase the level of nursing care.

The Acting Chairperson: Who will institute the review?

Mr Deazley: In those circumstances it is highly likely that the nursing home proprietor and manager would do it. The resident — or, if he were unable, his family — could ask for it. The request could come from several areas.

Ms Hill: I understand that there is in any case an annual review which could identify situations.

The Committee Clerk: The Department wishes to respond to members' concerns. Perhaps we might return to clause 1 after it has done so next week.

The Acting Chairperson: Are members content?

Members indicated assent.

Clause 1 referred for further consideration.

Clause 2 (The Northern Ireland Practice and Education Council for Nursing and Midwifery)

Ms Hill: Clause 2 refers to the establishment of the Northern Ireland Practice and Education Council for Nursing and Midwifery (NIPEC) and sets out its duties. These include promoting high standards of practice for nurses and midwives and standards for education, training and professional development. Clause 2 also indicates how NIPEC should take these forward through a range of activities providing guidance and information, exercising its functions in close association with the Department.

The Acting Chairperson: Are there any questions?

Mrs Courtney: If health visitors are no longer included in the title, how are they included in the clause?

Ms Hill: A health visitor must first be a registered nurse, so they are included in the title.

Mrs Courtney: They are simply not named explicitly.

Ms Hill: That is right; it follows decisions made at Westminster about the new Nursing and Midwifery Council (NMC), which is operating across all four countries of the United Kingdom.

Mrs Courtney: Is that simply a matter of standardisation?

Ms Hill: Yes.

Ms McWilliams: You may not be able to answer this question. Recently some non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) have been stood down and brought back under the auspices of the Department, yet we are establishing a new one. Are the provisions for establishing this NDPB the same as for the others?

Ms Hill: They are similar. Ms Thompson has been working on the shaping of the Bill, which reflects the establishment of certain other organisations.

Ms McWilliams: Are there any differences?

Ms Thompson: We have received advice on how the legislation is formulated with regard to the establishment of the body, so I am not aware of any differences. It will be a standard NDPB like the others. It will have the same powers, establishment, functions and accountability to Departments as other NDPBs. It will also be accountable to the Minister for its budget, annual reports and so on.

Ms McWilliams: It is difficult to understand how these bodies operate. On one hand they are independent, and on the other they are public.

Ms Thompson: It can be more rightly described as an "arm's length" body, as it is not fully independent. An NDPB is funded by the Government and accountable to the Department. The NMC is more independent, since it is funded by registrants, meaning it is slightly more removed from the Government.

Ms McWilliams: Will this NDPB replace the NMC?

Ms Thompson: NIPEC is not replacing the NMC. The NMC is replacing the four national boards and the UK Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting. It was clear that we could not set the body up to be funded by registrants, as they would then have to pay two registrant's fees — one to the NMC and one to the new body. That would not have been acceptable, so it had to be funded by the Government.

Ms McWilliams: Do the registration fees go to a separate body?

Ms Thompson: They go to the NMC as the registration body.

Ms McWilliams: So there will be two bodies involved in management, but only one in registration.

Ms Hill: Strictly speaking, it is not management but providing guidance, advice and an opportunity to develop services in a managed approach. It is not management in the way a regulatory body would function; it is very much in partnership with nurses and midwives in the service. The idea is that the development of the profession will come from the service into the body. It will then be tested and shaped, giving us the opportunity to spread good practice which might have been developed in one area across the rest of the service. We shall be able to build on that good practice to the benefit of all service-users.

Ms McWilliams: So it is more policy-oriented.

Ms Hill: Yes. It would be standard-setting and development by agreement with the profession, as opposed to their being imposed by an outside arrangement.

Ms McWilliams: As I am not familiar with how nursing is organised, I am trying to find out what differences there are between the registration body and this body, so that I might be able to explain it to someone. It appears that this body is setting standards, but you would be struck off by the other body if you did not meet them. I am trying to establish the relationship. If this body changes its standards, the other body would need to have a close relationship to know. Am I thinking along the right lines?

Ms Hill: Yes. In essence, the NMC is operating at a four-country level, setting high standards for the operation of the profession. People initially qualifying as nurses must meet those standards. They must also meet ongoing registration standards. We recognise that people could be competent when they qualify initially, but as things change they must continue to demonstrate competence. The function of that central body is to help people gain an initial licence to practise and then maintain it. If they fail in some way, it must remove them from practice.

This body will work much more closely with local health and social services, looking at the roles we desire for nurses within the broad standard framework which the central body is developing. If we seek specialist skills, we can agree locally how we want that to occur, and we can make it happen within the framework of general and local legislation. That is the relationship.

Ms McWilliams: You have a great deal of international experience. Is this how it works everywhere, or do some countries combine the functions of the two bodies into one?

Ms Hill: Yes, some do. Interestingly, the Republic of Ireland has gone for two bodies. It has gone for An Bord Altranais, which is its registering body, and a National Council for Professional Development. They recognise that, in developing roles beyond initial registration, there must be a different, more developmental and participative approach as opposed to the bureaucratic tendencies one finds in the regulatory functions.

Others have tended to look to professional organisations to lead on some of these issues. The Royal College of Nursing or the Royal College of Midwives might have that sort of function in some other countries. Professional organisations would set standards for specialised roles as part of activity in employment and industrial relations. We have tended to keep that separate here.

Mr Berry: Paragraph 17 of the schedule states that the council will be subject to investigation by the Commissioner for Complaints. How will the arrangement work, and what opportunity will nurses, midwives and health visitors have to redress complaints or appeal against decisions?

Ms Thompson: The clause is a standard inclusion in the establishment of an NDPB. It does not refer to complaints against an individual nurse, since the body will not be concerned with the registration or conduct of individual nurses. The clause is included in the legislation so that the body must adhere to a complaints procedure if, for example, a member of staff made a complaint against it. A change to the legislation was required.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Schedule

Ms Thompson: The schedule sets out some of the general arrangements for the functioning of the organisation. More detail will be included in the regulations, which will be submitted to the Committee at a later stage. The schedule sets out the status of the body, its general powers and duties, membership, appointments and procedure.

Ms McWilliams: How many people will sit on the body?

Ms Thompson: The explanatory memorandum states that there will be between 10 and 16 members — we have left it open. Thirteen members have been appointed to the shadow advisory committee. We did not want to appoint 16, since we wanted the committee to be small but flexible so that, if the committee wants 16 members when the legislation has been passed, it will be able to arrange that.

Mrs I Robinson: I note that 60% of the body will be made up of professionals. How do you intend to identify the 40% that will be made up of lay members?

Ms Thompson: Lay members have been appointed to the shadow advisory committee.

Mrs I Robinson: What are their backgrounds?

Ms Hill: The members are: a mother who has done a great deal of work in the voluntary sector; a consultant obstetrician; a retired senior officer from an education and library board; a retired member of Queen's University who has worked in adult education; and a minister from a cross-community church. The obstetrician and the retired member of Queen's University are women, so there are three women and two men in the group.

Ms Thompson: Paragraph 5 of the schedule sets out the general rules for appointing the chairperson of the body. The Department may make regulations on the appointment of the chairperson and other members, the tenure and the constitution, functions and procedures of the committee. Some of this detail will be included in the regulations, which we will have to submit to you as part of the subordinate legislation following the Bill.

Ms Ramsey: The royal colleges are concerned that they and similar groups are unable to nominate people for appointment. They are also concerned about the criteria which the Department will use for selecting those who have been nominated. Does the Department have such criteria?

Ms Hill: The criteria were developed for lay people and professionals. The advert was open so that anybody could respond to it. People were shortlisted according to whether they met the criteria. They were then tested against them at interview. The chairperson and I were part of the interview panel, and there was also an outside assessor. People knew the criteria against which they were being assessed.

Ms Thompson: Appointments to an NDPB are made through the public appointment process.

Ms Ramsey: I am concerned that as a group they were not able to nominate someone to represent them.

Ms Hill: It is not a representative body in that sense. Essentially, everyone becomes a member of a corporate body not representing a constituency.

The Acting Chairperson: Are there any questions on paragraph 6 covering remuneration and allowances?

Mrs Courtney: Have separate proposals been made for the chairperson and members?

Ms Thompson: Yes. The remuneration proposed for the chairperson is £9,252. That is in line with, for example, the Northern Ireland Social Care Council (NISCC), which has similar time commitments. The proposal for members is that it should include expenses and payments for substitute carer allowances but no separate remuneration.

Ms McWilliams: What do you mean by "payments for substitute carer allowances"?

Ms Thompson: I have probably not used the right form of words. It means that, if you have to pay for childminding to attend a committee meeting, the costs are covered for you. Likewise, if you need to pay a carer for an elderly relative, those fees are also payable on top of expenses.

Ms McWilliams: That may have been the case for some time. However, it is an interesting innovation considering what used to be considered expenses.

Ms Thompson: The NISCC has also made that provision.

Ms McWilliams: Is it made by other NDPBs?

Ms Thompson: I do not know. When we were considering arrangements for it, we examined the NISCC's provision. We thought it important and wished to include it.

Ms McWilliams: It is positive in that it may be attractive to younger parents rather than only to retired members of the community — depending on time commitments — and particularly so for lay members.

The Acting Chairperson: Are there any questions on paragraph 7?

Mrs Courtney: Will the chief executive have overall responsibility for the body?

Ms Hill: Yes.

The Acting Chairperson: Are there any questions on paragraphs 8 to 17?

Ms McWilliams: Will the Commissioner for Complaints assume the role of ombudsman? Will the body come under his remit?

Ms Thompson: Yes, and the legislation will require amendment to include NIPEC.

Ms McWilliams: That was not the case under the body which it replaces.

Ms Hill: The national board would have been subject to that legislation.

The Acting Chairperson: We shall now move to paragraphs 18 and 19.

Mrs Courtney: Does NIPEC refer to the extended role of the nurse?

Ms Thompson: It is a standard change to existing legislation, but NIPEC must be included.

The Acting Chairperson: We shall now move to paragraph 20.

Mrs Courtney: I am looking at 20(2) which states:

“This paragraph applies to property, rights and liabilities”.

Ms Thompson: That section of the legislation was required because some of the existing staff and assets of the national board are coming over to the new body. However, as the NIPEC is currently only an advisory shadow body, it does not have the right to employ staff or hold assets. We therefore had to produce a mechanism for those staff to be transferred. They currently come under the remit of the Central Services Agency. Paragraphs 20 and 21 allow the transfer of staff so that their superannuation continues and they have their existing employment. When the legislation is passed, they will be employed by the NIPEC. It allows the transfer from the CSA to the NIPEC.

Mrs I Robinson: In our file there is a letter dated 25 March 2002 from the National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for Northern Ireland. It questions sub-paragraph 21(1)(a). However, the reference to the Nursing and Midwifery Order 2002 is incorrect. It should read “the Nursing and Midwifery Order 2001 Statutory Instrument 2002 No. 253,” which is the legislation establishing the NMC from 12 February 2002.

The Acting Chairperson: I beg to move

That the Committee recommend to the Assembly that paragraph 21(1)(a) be amended as follows: delete “Nursing and Midwifery Order 2002”

And insert

“The Nursing and Midwifery Order 2001 Statutory Instrument 2002 No. 253.”

Question put and agreed to.

Ms Thompson: I have not seen a copy of that letter. We shall check the reference. Thank you.

Schedule agreed to subject to the Committee's proposed amendment.

The Acting Chairperson: We shall leave the remainder of the Bill until the next session. Thank you.

The Chairperson: The Committee welcomes Mr Peter Deazley and Mr John McKeown, who have returned to discuss the Health and Personal Social Services Bill. Matters were raised last week, especially regarding the possible appeals system. If you will update the Committee on what has happened since then, my colleagues will then ask questions.

Mr Deazley: There is a model review process on which the Department has previously consulted. It can easily be developed to take account of the nursing care assessment process. The process is brief and would obviously have to be redrafted to suit nursing care and be put out to professional colleagues and any interested professional bodies, including the Committee.

Essentially, the process requires the assessment to be reviewed within one week to the satisfaction of the service user, the carer, the family or other interested parties. Where it is not satisfactorily sorted out, a panel must be constituted and a further review completed within two weeks. Therefore, the complete process takes three weeks.

The Chairperson: The other point concerned whether the check on feedback can be made available to the Committee.

Ms McWilliams: It would be better to discuss each point one at a time; otherwise, it will be more difficult.

The Department already had that model review for other purposes?

Mr Deazley: Yes. It was used for guidance on continuing healthcare.

Ms McWilliams: Why would you use that model? Because it has been tried and tested, and it works? I am concerned that we are dealing with nursing care, which, in its own right, is a very specific area and for which a particular assessment tool is being produced.

Mr Deazley: I did not say that that particular process would be used. I said that the model could be adapted and developed for nursing care purposes. The consultation for it was done in 1998, so it is out of date.

Ms McWilliams: That was what I wanted to clarify.

Secondly, we expressed concern last week that the primary legislation as it stands does not have a method of appeal in it. Is the Department going to consider the inclusion of an appeal mechanism?

Mr Deazley: We propose to issue a statutory direction to the boards and trusts that will incorporate the guidance and the review process. That statutory direction comes from article 17(1) of the Health and Personal Social Services (Northern Ireland) Order 1972.

Ms McWilliams: Here is where our learning curve must match yours. That is a statutory regulation that will come after the legislation has received Royal Assent. It is part of the legislative process. Why can it not be included in the primary legislation in the first place?

Mr Deazley: We do not see the need to have it in the primary legislation or to have a separate regulation. Article 17(1) of the 1972 Order gives us the right to issue a direction. There is no legal process to go through. We simply issue the direction to the boards and trusts. That carries the force of regulation under the 1972 Order.

Ms McWilliams: So this legislation amends the 1972 Order?

Mr Deazley: Yes.

Ms McWilliams: Are you saying that an appeal process already exists?

Mr Deazley: A legal process exists by which we can issue direction to the boards and trusts. It comes from article 17(1).

Ms McWilliams: My only concern is that on reading the legislation, as we have, it is not immediately clear that there is a right of appeal.

Mr Deazley: That is true.

Ms McWilliams: I am concerned that those in receipt of nursing care should know about this. I might have a concern either as a relative, or as someone wishing to ensure that a person was correctly assessed. If I accessed this legislation, I would not know about the appeal mechanism. However, if I worked for the board, I would know about it. The people with that knowledge might not always want to grant that right.

Mr Deazley: The directions and the guidance that go along with them will be publicly available. We will not prepare the directions and the guidance and simply issue them to the boards and trusts. They will be available through the same media as the legislation itself. It will be publicly available on the Internet.

Ms McWilliams: If you are going to explain the legislation, will the directions and guidance be included? Are you going to disseminate widely the fact that that right is available?

Mr Deazley: We would not make the right available and not publish the fact that it existed.

Ms McWilliams: Are there other pieces of primary legislation in existence that are similar to this one? Is the right of appeal normally dealt with in the way that you have described? Are there precedents where, by whatever means, you have sought to include it in the legislation?

Mr Deazley: Our research shows us that reviews are normally carried out as a result of departmental direction. On some occasions, where there is professional input through the General Medical Council or nurses' bodies, it is also done by regulation and direction.

Mr Gallagher: If an individual is unhappy with his or her assessment and wishes to appeal, how does that happen?

Mr Deazley: The service user, his or her family, or the carer will simply ask for a review of the decision. It will not be a financial decision. The decision is based around the level of nursing care that the patient needs.

Mr Gallagher: Who carries out the review? Is it done within the trust in question, or is it independent?

Mr Deazley: A nurse will do the initial assessment. A different assessor will undertake the first review — it will be a professional nurse, but not the nurse who carried out the first assessment.

Mr J Kelly: That assessment is done on the individual?

Mr Deazley: Yes, on the individual.

Mr J Kelly: Is it on the individual — whether that is a daughter, son or whatever — and not any circumstances around the individual?

Mr Deazley: All aspects of the individual's physical and mental health are taken into account. I have a copy of the assessment tool with me. It is going to the Minister, and as soon as the Minister has cleared it, we will pass it, the guidance and the consultation letter to the Committee.

Mrs Courtney: I want to pick up on what Ms McWilliams said. We were told that the review would take place within three weeks, and, it is hoped, to the satisfaction of the resident or carer, or whoever made the original application for a review. I take it that that includes when the first complaint was made? When a person is on a ward and meets the ward sister, she does the first assessment. The ward sister then has to take that assessment to someone else. Will the whole process take three weeks?

Mr Deazley: Absolutely. It will take three weeks from first complaint to the completion of the second stage.

Rev Robert Coulter: This review on assessment is only for patients. What happens when a nursing home is not happy with the result of an assessment?

Mr Deazley: Nursing homes will have the same right to ask for a review of the assessment.

Rev Robert Coulter: They will have that right as well? It is not just the patient?

Mr Deazley: It is not necessarily aimed at patients. The first people to be assessed under this legislation will be residents in nursing homes who are funding their own care.

Rev Robert Coulter: Will the nursing home have the right of appeal?

Mr Deazley: The nurse manager will have that right.

The Chairperson: You were to check on the feedback that can be made available to the Committee on the work of the pilot projects on the assessment tool.

Mr Deazley: I have copies of the assessment tool, the consultation letter going out with that, and the guidance. I do not have the report on the findings of the pilot study, which has been completed by the University of Ulster. It will accompany all of those documents going to the Minister. It will also be included in the documents coming to the Committee.

The Chairperson: Is everyone happy with that?

Ms McWilliams: Will that be next week?

Mr Deazley: It will be as soon as it is ready. I cannot say that it will be ready next week. I tried to get the missing document this morning, but could not contact the person who has the material.

Ms McWilliams: We are holding up the process to do that. We would like to have it urgently so that we can clear the legislation. We are almost at the final stage, but we would not want to clear it without having access to the document and its evaluation.

Mr Deazley: I expected to be able to tell the Committee today that it was on the way. I hope that that will be the situation between now and next week.

Mrs Courtney: Will we have all the documentation by next week, including the paper you have today?

Mr Deazley: I will attempt to get everything to you by next week.

The Chairperson: It is important to have everything. If the Committee is not satisfied, it will have difficulty in accepting clause 1. We were talking about appeals and the consideration of a fast-track appeals complaints procedure on nursing needs through the statutory regulations. The Department will consider how such a complaints process could be monitored to ensure that trusts implement its directions.

Those are the main points. Do my colleagues want to raise anything? Would Mr Deazley or Mr McKeown like to raise anything?

Ms McWilliams: We have discussed the right of appeal, and you will provide the Committee with information on the tool and its evaluation. Last week, the Committee asked about the payment mechanism. England and Wales have chosen the flat-tier option. The Committee does not know which option the Department prefers, and it would like guidance on that.

Mr Deazley: The Minister will receive the Department's submission on its recommendations tomorrow.

Ms McWilliams: Therefore, the Committee will leave that until next week.

The Chairperson: Thank you very much. We hoped to conclude clause 1 today, but in view of what has been said, we cannot do so. Therefore, we will wait until next week. Clauses 3, 4 and 5 follow clause 1. Therefore, we will leave them as well.

The Chairperson: I welcome Mr Mark McGuckin and Ms Heather Cousins from the Northern Ireland Office (NIO) and Mr David Barr and Mr John McConnell from the Department of the Environment to this meeting.

Mr McGuckin: I am Mark McGuckin, head of the Criminal Justice Services Division of the NIO. My colleague, Heather Cousins, is head of the policy branch of the Community Safety Unit. I thank you for inviting us to discuss the draft community safety strategy, which was published on 10 April and has a consultation period running until 3 July. We propose to give a short presentation on the strategy, which should help to set the context, after which we shall attempt to address any specific questions. I understand that you are considering clauses in the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill, and you will appreciate that, while we can address questions about the community safety strategy, we are not in a position to answer any questions on the Bill.

Ms Cousins: Thank you for the invitation to discuss the strategy with you today. We are trying to consult as widely as possible and are grateful for this opportunity. I have tried to shorten the presentation which we gave when we launched the strategy to fit your timescale, and I have brought copies of slides which are slightly different to those you had.

I shall start with the definition of community safety that we are using in the strategy document and point out certain key aspects. Community safety is a much wider subject than crime reduction, and we are examining the prevention, reduction and containment of social, environmental, and intimidatory factors that affect the right to live without fear of crime, and which have an impact on quality of life. We see this as a much wider subject than crime reduction — it is a quality-of-life subject and must be linked with other such strategies.

We have put together a simple picture of an unsafe community to illustrate the fact that the issue is much wider than merely crime reduction. When you ask members of communities about safety concerns, crime is one of the last things they mention. Fortunately, most people live without experiencing it directly; the things that concern them are lower down the iceberg. The symptoms are truancy, vandalism, difficulties with noisy neighbours, drug and alcohol abuse, graffiti, and so on. This has been borne out by some of the work we have done with the Creating Common Ground Consortium, which has surveyed over 40 communities, particularly in Housing Executive estates. They came up with the same issues, and would like to have them tackled under the heading of community safety.

We have consulted extensively, examining crime statistics and conducting research. From that we have come up with nine key issues in the strategy. We have tried to have every issue come in under one of the headings. Some are quite broad, such as “fear of crime among older people, victims and children”. Our intention is that it will consider wider safety aspects in relation to older people, victims, and children, as well as crime-related issues. We are also examining youth offending and reducing criminality through diversion and education programmes. The last one is “street violence, low-level neighbourhood disorder, and antisocial behaviour”, which is intended to deal with those other issues not specifically crime-focused. Those are our nine issues, which arise from the extensive research we have conducted.

We see community safety as being about local problems. It is about people getting together with service-delivery agencies locally to tackle those problems and develop solutions appropriate to their situations. It must be bottom-up and joined-up — not top-down — and the partnerships need to find ways of involving the community directly. As it is about local problems, the strategy is not prescriptive about how this should work. We anticipate different areas structuring partnerships in different ways and are content with that. It should reflect local circumstances.

With regard to the types of agencies that would be involved in tackling such issues, it is not the job of the police alone to deal with antisocial behaviour. Other agencies will be involved and must think about what services they can offer to support each other in their attempt to tackle the problem of antisocial behaviour. We are considering such groups as the mediation services. Facilities are required for young people so that they are not seen to be hanging around causing a nuisance. Education authorities and local councils can be involved in such provision.

We hope to reduce substantially the fear of crime by working in partnership and giving the problem a higher profile. Improved street lighting has been shown to reduce such fear. A project in an estate in Ballymena has been shown to reduce older people's anxieties. We are also considering the installation of home security systems, particularly for elderly and vulnerable people. A partnership approach can achieve more than individual organisations working in isolation.

In considering structures for partnerships, we established criteria for successful community safety partnerships. We required that the membership and structure of the partnerships allow them to commit resources to partnership working, but that they should also be able to deliver actions. We are not interested in a partnership that will sit around the table and talk. We want one that can do things — with an action plan and people signed up to deliver that programme. It should also be accountable to local people for creating safer communities.

It is vital that community safety be a mainstream activity rather than an aim pursued on the side if there are spare resources. In that way, organisations will come to consider the community safety aspects of any policy that they deliver. It is also important to link that with other strategies related to quality of life. In particular, we are thinking about the strategies on neighbourhood renewal, investing for health and the link to the local policing plan.

We also want a structure that can provide matching funding. We have secured resources for community safety, but we expect other organisations to contribute. Several organisations should be able to move towards achieving their objectives through participation in the programme, so they should also be prepared to provide funding.

Those are the factors we were looking for when we considered models for structures. We decided that we could not be prescriptive, as the partnerships must fit local circumstances. All we have said in the strategy, therefore, is that the partnerships should be based on district council areas. In that way, they will be conterminous with police boundaries.

Our two key concerns are that the partnerships be able to commit resources and deliver services. Community safety should be mainstreamed and become part of the strategic plan for the district. We have not stated that there should be a lead partner. A partnership will decide how it will work when it is formed; it may differ depending on the area.

This slide shows voluntary partnerships already up and running. In Antrim, the community safety partnership is chaired by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. Before that, it was chaired by the district council — the partners take turns. Lisburn has taken a different approach by setting up a charitable company. One reason for doing this is to be able to get access to funding through charitable trusts. All the partner organisations will be directors of the charitable company. That model is working successfully.

The community safety unit has experience of setting up such partnerships and co-operating with organisations, and we are available to do that anywhere in Northern Ireland.

All partners should be equal. There should be collective ownership of the problems and solutions. One partner should not tell everyone else what to do. You will not achieve success without collective ownership. The service-level agreements should formalise the arrangements, so that the partners can agree on their contributions.

The NIO has not asked the district councils to lead the community safety partnerships. It is inviting them to co-ordinate them. It will provide dedicated resources to the partnership for co-ordination. The councils' participation is voluntary, but the NIO is confident that they will see the benefits of working in partnership. Lack of safety in a community will have an impact on all initiatives in the area, such as economic development and health improvement. Engagement in a community safety partnership is therefore to everyone's benefit.

The NIO expects the partnerships to perform several key functions. The vital element in the partnership is its operation. An audit will be conducted to determine the problems through analysis of the information available to all the partner organisations. That will result in the development of an action plan that will set out what they intend to do to tackle the problems. The plan will be monitored, and its results will be reported back to the appropriate strategic group. Individual task groups will implement the planned action either in a specific part of a district, or, when dealing with an issue such as domestic violence, across the whole district. The task groups will report their progress to the operational group.

This is a real opportunity to make a difference. The success of the strategy will be judged by the difference that people say it makes to their lives when they are asked about community safety.

The NIO is interested in maximising the benefit from collective contributions. By pooling resources and working together, we shall achieve more than can be done by individual organisations working in silos. However, that depends on co-operation at many levels. A lack of co-operation will have an impact on the scheme. Joined-up thinking and action are needed, as is investment, and the NIO has secured £2.5 million per annum to start the ball rolling.

It is not a short-term initiative, and that is one of the reasons why the strategy will cover a five-year period. The NIO anticipates that, while there will be achievements in the short term to encourage people, the scheme will take time. It will try to tackle the causes of crime, and that cannot be done quickly.

The Chairperson: You placed emphasis on co-operation and the involvement of each partner. The Community Safety Unit will facilitate the formation of partnerships. However, while we are getting some definitions, clause 7, subsection (2) of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill states:

“The Department of the Environment may by order confer or impose on district councils other functions”.

The imposition of functions does not imply a partnership. Why was that phrase included? It does not sit easily with the aspects of the scheme that you emphasised, which implied that it cannot be forced on the community and that all parties must work together.

Mr McGuckin: I am not sure that we can answer a question about the drafting of the Bill. It is important that as many organisations as possible participate in partnerships. At this stage, the intention is to include them on a voluntary basis; that is correct. However, effective partnerships involving as many organisations as possible are crucial to the success of a strategy to address community safety issues.

The Chairperson: The question may be difficult, but you have not answered it, and someone must do so. The emphasis of Ms Cousins’s presentation was the voluntary partnership and the various groupings working together. However, the legislation says:

“The Department may by order confer or impose on district councils other functions relating to the enhancement of community safety in their district.”

That does not tally with what has been said. Why are district councils faced with an imposition when no one else has been?

Mr McConnell: Community safety is important. There is no intention to coerce district councils to become involved; it is voluntary. If, however, following a review of public administration, the Assembly decides that community safety is such an important issue that councils should, and must, be involved, the power is there to allow the Assembly to make that decision. The Department could not, or would not, impose that without the approval of this Committee and the Assembly.

The primary intention is to ensure that the Assembly can make the condition that councils must become involved in community safety issues if it finds that necessary at some future date.

The Chairperson: Would that not be the appropriate time to insert it? It goes against everything said this morning.

Mr McConnell: The Department has no ulterior motive in its inclusion. It is there to anticipate any future decision of the Assembly.

The Chairperson: If reorganisation of local government took place, and that involved the shifting of power, surely that would involve new legislation. Would that not be the appropriate time to change the legislation?

Mr McConnell: It is there because we wish to allow the Assembly as much latitude as possible, should it later decide that councils should have that responsibility. Councils already have other responsibilities imposed on them, and the Assembly may decide that it is also something that the Department should require.

Mr Barr: It is essentially an enabling power built into primary legislation. It would enable the Assembly to pass subordinate legislation requiring councils and other bodies to engage in compulsory, rather than voluntary, community safety if the voluntary scheme were not working successfully. That would happen only after full consultation with district councils, other relevant bodies, Departments, this Committee and other Assembly institutions.

The Chairperson: Who would make the judgement that it was not working?

Mr McConnell: The phrase “not working” was perhaps unfortunate. If it were considered important and turned out to be as successful and worthwhile as the NIO says — and I have no reason to doubt that — the Assembly might decide that such an important issue is not a matter of choice. People automatically turn to the council when an emergency happens in the district. I cannot conceive of any circumstances where councillors are not first in line for criticism. It is a method of ensuring that, if it were such an important matter, the Assembly could impose the duty.

Ms Lewsley: I welcome that move. It is bottom-up and joined-up for a change.

I have reservations about the funding to be given and the longer-term accountability, monitoring and evaluation. Could you explain how that would happen?

As a Lisburn Borough councillor, I wish to ask about the project in Lisburn; is that the one in the Glasvey area?

Ms Cousins: There is a community safety partnership, which is not currently working on specific projects. That is perhaps the Creating Common Ground Consortium. The project in Glasvey has a community safety aspect, which is concerned with lighting and so on. We have a member of staff working on that project.

Ms Lewsley: Is that the one which you mentioned when you spoke about Lisburn — where the charitable status was set up?

Ms Cousins: Lisburn community safety partnership has received charitable status. It is currently developing its action plans, having completed community consultations. It has not yet started any projects.

Ms Lewsley: Who is part of that community safety partnership?

Ms Cousins: The council, police, health trust and most of the statutory agencies.

The Chairperson: Who chooses the great and the good?

Ms Cousins: They choose themselves. Initially we write to the interested organisations and invite them to a local meeting to discuss forming a partnership. At the meeting they decide themselves who should be in the partnership.

Ms Lewsley: There is another group connected with Lisburn Borough Council called the “adults at risk” group. It has a multi-agency approach and is seeking funding for a co-ordinator. Will that funding be jeopardised because there is already another project, the two being unaware of each other?

Ms Cousins: I cannot comment on the other project, but the mayor currently chairs the community safety partnership in Lisburn. I should therefore hope that those involved would be aware of what was happening.

Ms Lewsley: I am a councillor, and I was not aware of that. I am on the other group, where there is a multi-agency approach. Any agency going into the homes of elderly people or vulnerable adults must go through a checklist to ensure their safety. The group is looking for a co-ordinator so that we can identify and prove the need. We have worked with the local schools; we have such things as safety chains. I do not know whether it is aware of the other group. There must be better communication and co-ordination throughout.

I also wish to enquire about the monitoring and evaluation of moneys that will go into projects.

Ms Cousins: The funding will go to the partnership. It will be given based on the partnership’s action plans. We should like to see evidence in those action plans that the projects are based on an analysis of problems and so on. We want to see that the audit has been completed.

Mr McGuckin: The resources that have been made available to support the development and implementation of the strategy will not be sufficient to meet all the needs. That is not the intention; the intention is to support high-quality projects — to provide seed funding and get projects started. If the partnership is set up effectively, we should also anticipate that — and this relates back to the Chairperson’s question about who selects those people — the partnership will be made up largely of service-delivery organisations. They will have responsibilities for delivering certain aspects.

In the most effective partnerships, those individual organisations’ objectives will be mirrored in the community safety strategy and the community safety action plan.

By contributing to the action plan, they achieve their own objectives. They can therefore target the resources they already have at specific issues identified as being of concern to the local community.

Mr McClarty: I too am concerned about the imposition of responsibilities on councils. Responsibilities are imposed by central Government, and, more particularly, many are imposed by Europe. Councils have to find the money to carry out those responsibilities. I agree with the concept of community safety, and my council has taken advantage of that. It has installed security cameras in town centres, and there has been a significant reduction in crime centrally.

We were recently given a demonstration on the effectiveness of the cameras, and we saw some footage of undesirables creating mayhem in the town centre. Cameras are tremendous for ensuring a community’s safety, and they are relatively inexpensive to install. Monitoring is the real expense and a recurring cost. Can you foresee grants towards those costs continuing for the foreseeable future?

Mr McConnell: I cannot comment about the grants or the imposition of responsibility. I do not want to repeat what I have said to the Chairperson, but if a council is being made to spend money, it is easier to justify the expenditure than if it were voluntary. That is not the purpose here. If it is so important and proves to be successful, the Assembly may, at some point, decide that councils should be responsible for it as they are for other matters such as bin collection. That is the only purpose, and there is no ulterior motive. If the Committee wishes, we can go back to the Minister and say that the Committee does not want it. There is no ulterior motive — it is simply a way of allowing the Assembly a measure of control, should that be necessary.

Mr McGuckin: The CCTV schemes were established as a result of a competition run by the former Police Authority. The grants were purely to cover the set-up costs. It was expected that a partnership would develop in each area, and that that would ensure that they were maintained.

Mr McConnell: Some councils are concerned that money they have spent on CCTVs does not have the necessary legislative cover. Councils can spend up to 5p in the pound on anything they like under section 115 of the Local Government Act 1972. All councils have that money well accounted for. Councils are seeking legislative cover for things such as CCTVs.

Mr Barr: Councils have, through the Society of Local Authority Chief Executives (SOLACE), requested statutory cover to enable them to spend money from the rates on community safety if they so wish. The amount of money that they spend will be a local decision taken in council chambers and will depend on the other priorities and expenditure demands that they have. Each council will still have the power to spend what it wants on community safety.

Mr Poots: I am glad that the NIO is here today, because I am very sceptical about the whole idea. While it is fine for a community to get involved and give support to initiatives, the fact is that NIO is responsible for justice and policing. More visible policing is not possible when more police officers are leaving the service than joining it. That is an ongoing problem. Over the past two years there have been significant problems because there are not enough police officers.

The judiciary is worse: people commit crimes, and the police apprehend them, but they are let off with community service and a slap on the wrist. If the police and the judiciary cannot deliver, it is a joke to expect the community to assist. Nothing good will come of this. Communities will just get more work and more hassle but will see no significant benefits unless the judiciary gets its act together and NIO ensures that there are sufficient police.

The Chairperson: I cannot continue without a quorum, so I will have to suspend the meeting.

Session suspended.

Mr McClarty returned to the meeting.

On resuming:

Mr McGuckin: There are three aspects to this: the Police Service of Northern Ireland (PSNI), the criminal justice system and community involvement. The deployment of the PSNI is a matter for the Chief Constable, so I cannot comment on it. We always consider the effectiveness of sanctions that the courts impose, and evidence of more effective sanctions will be considered.

The criminal justice review, which was the most comprehensive review of the criminal justice system here, identified several new initiatives that are the subject of legislation in Westminster. The youth conferencing process is aimed at providing young people who are engaged in crime with more effective responses, and the Community Responsibility Order and Reparation Order will, I hope, improve overall effectiveness. Those initiatives are designed to get the most effective response from individuals and to have them address the nature of their offences. They are also designed for earlier intervention with more effective disposal.

Although the community safety strategy contributes to that, as Ms Cousins said, it goes further by tackling the causes of the offences. This is about intervening before people commit crime. The community can become involved in mediation services, facilities for young people, improved lighting and other environmental factors. It can say where the needs are and, therefore, influence how statutory agencies respond.

Ms Cousins: We do not expect the community to deliver this alone. It can be involved in identifying the problems and solutions and can work with the statutory agencies that deliver those solutions.

Mr Poots: Our council has already written to the judiciary, with very little response. The judiciary has refused to meet the local authority and wants to keep a hands-off approach as far as talking to public representatives about dealing with criminals is concerned.

You mentioned the causes of crime. Someone who has committed 30 or 40 offences gets a slap on the wrist and is told not to do it again. Some young people have appeared before Lisburn Courthouse on car crime offences and have walked out of the court and stolen a car in which to get home. The community wants a safe environment, and I have no doubt that it will assist in providing it. However, with the best will in the world, there is no point in NIO using the strategy to create a safe environment without putting other, more important, systems in place to achieve it. That point is slightly political and perhaps difficult for you to answer.

The strategy will be meaningless without proper policing. You said that policing is a matter for the Chief Constable — it is not. It is for NIO to give sufficient funds to the Chief Constable. There is a projected £43 million of underfunding in the policing budget for this year, so it is for NIO to get more from the Treasury. This is also a matter for the judiciary, under the direction of NIO.

Mr McGuckin: The community safety strategy cannot stand alone. Mr Poots is entirely right: it is one part of a wider process that, as I mentioned earlier, involves improvements that we are attempting to make in disposals for the young, and that may start to address the car crime scenario.

Mr Armstrong: We may be starting at the wrong place. It is all well and good to have ideas about how to get rid of crime or alleviate it, but the main problem is that funding is not there. We should start with the youth when they are young children and not wait until they are young adults to push money into a scheme when the problem could have been solved at primary school. Education is the way. Young people should be educated about this when they are 10 or 11. That is what you should be looking at. Money will be put into this, and you will expect people, including the police and councillors, to implement it when they have no real authority to do so.

You mentioned improved lighting. Although much crime happens at night, much also happens in broad daylight, when lighting is not needed. Cameras are an obvious deterrent, but we need to educate people from the start. That should have been your starting point.

Mr McGuckin: Education authorities must work effectively with other agencies to identify and address the problems with young people's behaviour, as they do with other areas of the curriculum.

Mr Armstrong: They must do that before young people become absorbed in an unnatural way of life, not afterwards.

Mr McConnell: A councillor who was keen to get involved in community safety projects told me that they were not just an opportunity to deal with the superficial problems that have been mentioned, but a means of encouraging and engaging other partners — all of whom can have a role. I am not an expert on that, like the NIO, but that point was made to me.

Mr Armstrong: I appreciate what you have done, but you must reconsider the matter and take it in hand.

The Chairperson: Rebellion in the heart of man is not unnatural. It is the most natural way of life and must be curbed by a greater power — I am speaking with my other hat on. Rebellion must be broken.

Mr McClarty: That is the shortest sermon that the Chairman has preached in a long time.

The Chairperson: I trust that my point has been made.

I want to make two other important points. Your answer to Mr Poots on the Chief Constable's operational responsibilities was inadequate. Bricks cannot be made out of straw. The Chief Constable does not have enough officers to fulfil his operational responsibilities, and that is NIO's responsibility, so it cannot wash its hands of it. Lack of funding is one thing, but what has happened to the police, and the numbers that are leaving, has left us devoid of persons for the Chief Constable to operate with.

The second matter is of equal importance and concern. Funding was £2.5 million in 2002-03, £2.5 million in 2003-04 and will be subject to a successful bid for £2.5 million in 2004-05. There is 100% funding for the next few years to get the councils sucked in. It will then be dropped to 75%, and the councils will be expected to fund the remainder.

"The NIO will fund councils directly, with the first three years financed at 100%. Thereafter, in the form of grant aid at the rate of up to 75% on approved costs. Councils would be expected to fund the remainder."

Mr McClarty referred to that earlier, and that has serious implications, because once again councils are being given responsibility but not funding to do the job, so who is paying for crime? The answer is ratepayers. That is a concern. Why should the Department put that imposition on a council? Rates are a council's only way of finding money that it does not have. This is important, and everyone has given his blessing in principle. At first we did not know all the details; however, we can now point out practical problems. As mentioned earlier, funding is a major problem.

Mr McConnell: To connect imposition to the funding is wrong, and that is not our intention, although I see how the Committee can draw that conclusion. I assure you that the problem is purely and simply for the reason given earlier. However, the 25% applies to councils and others —

The Chairperson: No. I am sorry. Let me read the words to you — and I did not write them:

"Councils would be expected to fund the remainder."

The words are "would be expected" not "could be expected"; and "others" were not mentioned.

Mr McConnell: I understand.

The Chairperson: I put on my glasses and took them off to ensure that I was reading correctly.

Mr Barr: May I ask the date of that communication?

The Chairperson: It was dated 8 March and came from the Minister's office — it is not possible to go higher.

Mr Barr: We were not fully aware then of the funding arrangements for community safety. We were trying to take that clause through the Justice Bill. Time was limited, and a quick submission had to be made. We were not able to discuss the details with NIO, and the communiqué is perhaps not fully accurate, given that we now have further information from NIO. Councils must address the funding of community safety partnerships with the other partners and NIO.

Currently, councils can decide whether they wish to participate in community safety partnerships. After consultation with NIO, SOLACE said that they wished to be part of it and that they wanted powers to contribute financially. The amount of the contribution would be for them to decide, bearing in mind their priorities and the other claims on their resources.

The Chairperson: I have heard no objection to the principle from around the table, but we want to ensure that councils faced with problem after problem are not left with a financial burden. Mr Brown made the wonderful announcement that we may have three times the rates to pay for everything, a lovely message from the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Now we are being told that there will be a further burden on the rates. That is no reassurance. You say that you have changed paragraph 6; however, I wish to see it in writing — moreover, in bold writing.

Mr McGuckin: The draft community safety strategy was published for consultation on 10 April, and I draw your attention to chapter 5, page 39, which deals with funding. At that stage the proposal was to provide financial support for the employment of a co-ordinator over three years in the manner suggested — 100%, 100% and 75%. Paragraph 5.7 makes it clear that a full evaluation of the co-ordinator role will be conducted in year 3 to inform further funding arrangements. That is the position in the draft strategy, which is at consultation. My point is that funding for the third year might increase to 100% to allow that evaluation to take place.

Secondly, the co-ordinator is a resource for all the organisations in the partnership. To be effective, such a partnership needs a co-ordinator. I assume, if the costs were not met centrally, that they would be met by the partnership rather than by any of its component parts.

Mr McClarty: Community safety is an emotive issue. Councils will be compelled to do this, so it will not be voluntary. Most agencies in the partnership have finite budgets, and if they have to contribute to this, the money will have to come from something else, so funding is a big problem.

The Chairperson: This is a vital matter. Mr McClarty made the point earlier about CCTV. I know from personal experience that two towns committed money to that and then found that the operation was left to the area — that is fact. They got into partnership with the business community, and the business community participated in the debate. However, to the best of my knowledge, it bore only a small part of the financing, and the group left holding the baby was the council.

The paragraph mentioned can mean many things, but it is really saying that 25% is not promised from NIO, so there will be a burden on the councils, and the question is: where will they get the money? They are willing to take the challenge if no one else is, but they have to have money to do the job and they need a lead. In my years in public service, a number of other important responsibilities were given to councils, often with introductory grants of 75% for two years and then nothing — since nobody else wanted the responsibilities, the councils had to finance them. However, councils can only finance anything from the rates, so we must have this clarified — if only because we are dealing with a letter which is now out of date.

Mr McConnell: The update on the letter will simply be to include “and others”. We just want to give an enabling power to councils, but we have no control over funding at all.

Mr McGuckin: The strategy is currently in draft format and has been published for consultation. These are the proposals that we are making, and I will take on board the Committee’s comments. As an initial step, I will certainly be suggesting that NIO funds the third year to 100%.

On Ms Lewsley’s earlier point on this element of funding, this will be significant and will take up 30% of the budgets being set aside for it. It will be incumbent on us to evaluate how effective the use of the money is and see whether we should continue to take that approach.

The Chairperson: This is as far as we can go this morning, but you do sense our concerns. The principle is good, and SOLACE is not turning away from it. We have a public duty to point out any problems, and we ask you to consider them and give us direct answers. Thank you very much.

The Chairperson: I welcome Mr John Clarke, Ms Marion Reynolds and Mr David McGowan from the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety. Please give the Committee a general overview of the Bill and its explanatory notes and financial memorandum.

Mr Clarke: This is a short Bill with nine clauses. It will provide significant resources for young people leaving the care system. The essential backcloth is the Social Services Inspectorate's report, 'Promoting Independence: A Review of Leaving And After Care Services', that was published in October 2000.

Young people leaving care suffer several disadvantages in practically every area compared with their peers, and they have particular problems with education and accommodation. Essentially, the intention behind the Bill is to firm up the existing provision for leaving and aftercare services in article 35 of the Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1995.

The Bill will introduce provision for the assessment of young people's needs. A personal adviser will be appointed for them who will act, as it were, as a good parent would for an older child. A pathway plan will be put into effect. That will be, in a sense, an extension of a care plan. It will focus on helping young people make the transition to independent adult living. That is the background to the Bill. Does the Committee wish to go into clause-by-clause consideration?

The Chairperson: I will leave that up to you, Mr Clarke.

Mr Clarke: I have heard that there has been some confusion about the categories of entitlement mentioned in the equivalent legislation in England and Wales. The Bill mentions eligible children, relevant children and former relevant children. I have a prepared an aide memoire, which I will share with the Committee. Sometimes the wording of legislation can be an obstacle.

The Chairperson: Thank you; that would be helpful.

Clause 1 introduces the concept of an eligible child, which is a 16- or 17-year-old who is, and has been, in care for a prescribed period. Prescribed periods will be set out in regulations made under the Bill. If we follow the same path as England, then the prescribed period will be 13 weeks. The prescribed age will probably be 14. However, although it is subject to discussion at regulation-making stage, it is something that should be considered now.

Trusts will be required to assess the needs of each eligible child with a view to determining what advice, assistance and support they should provide to young people while in care and when they have left care. It is important to realise that this transition activity will begin with an assessment of their needs, and preparations will be made before they leave care. All eligible children will have the right to a pathway plan based on the assessment. The plan will be reviewed regularly and it will cover education, training, career plans and the trust's support in helping young people achieve their full potential.

Do any members have comments on clause 1, or will I move on?

The Chairperson: Please proceed, Mr Clarke.

Mr Clarke: Clause 2 will insert new articles into the Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1995, which will impose new duties on trusts for children and young people that they formerly looked after. Article 34B will introduce the concept of the relevant child as being a 16- or 17-year-old who has left care and was an eligible child whilst in care. Other children who are care leavers would still be entitled to the existing range of aftercare provision.

Clause 2 will also introduce the concept of the responsible authority, which will be the final trust that looked after young people whilst in care: that trust will continue to be responsible for them. That will ensure continuity in the child's life and that they will not be passed from trust to trust and from authority to authority.

The responsible authority will be required to keep in touch with the relevant child and, where contact is lost, it must continue to make reasonable steps to re-establish contact. That will ensure that trusts will no longer be able to forget about children who have left their care; they will have a continuing responsibility.

The responsible authority will be required to appoint a personal adviser for each relevant child if this has not been done already when the child was in care and was, therefore, an eligible child.

Responsible authorities will be required to ensure that the relevant children have regularly reviewed pathway plans based on an assessment of their needs. The Department will be given powers through regulations to prescribe who is to be consulted about an assessment; how it is to be carried out; the recording of results and any other considerations to which trusts must have regard in carrying out the assessment.

Trusts will be required to safeguard and promote the welfare of relevant children by maintaining and accommodating young people, and providing such other support as may be prescribed by regulations.

The Department will also need to prescribe the meaning of “suitable accommodation”. There is a concern about the word “regulation” — and I use that word lightly in this context — as regards the types of accommodation young care leavers can end up in. The Department will have to look closely at this when it is implementing the legislation. It will have to be realistic about what can be provided. However, the Department will have to pay due regard to the standards that must be applied to this type of accommodation because it would not fall within the category of children’s homes or other dwellings that are currently regulated.

Article 34D will introduce the concept of former relevant children; those who qualified for support as relevant or eligible children and who are now aged 18 or over. I hope that my aide memoire explains it fully because the term has been criticised by legal authorities. In fairness, there was probably no other way of wording the term, but perhaps there could be other titles.

The responsible authority’s continuing duties towards care leavers includes keeping in touch, re-establishing contact, continuing the appointment of a personal adviser for each former relevant child and continuing to keep the pathway plan under regular review. Legally, it is a continuation of the role of good parenting.

Assistance in kind, or exceptionally in cash, will be provided for expenses associated with employment, education and training. That will be particularly important to the long-term future of those young people. In assisting young people with education and training, trusts will be required to disregard any interruption in their attendance on a course if resumed as soon as is reasonably possible. In addition, trusts will be required to provide vacation accommodation, or the funds to secure it, where necessary. Vacation accommodation is a very important area, and young care leavers are potentially disadvantaged when compared with their peers. Accommodation during term time in higher education is relatively straightforward, but there is potential for particular difficulties with accommodation in vacation periods.

The duties of relevant authorities will continue until the young person is 21, except when assistance with education and training is being provided. In that case, assistance will continue until the end of an agreed programme, even if it runs beyond the young person’s twenty-first birthday. That is sensible. Throughout that time, trusts will be responsible for keeping in touch with the young people, and providing them with a pathway plan and a personal adviser.

Ms Ramsey: You mentioned the young person’s adviser several times. The written submission from Barnardo’s highlighted the issue of how that role would be resourced and how the adviser would be kept up to date with changes in housing and benefits legislation. How many young people will be affected? How many will slip through the net before the legislation is in place?

Will there be additional finance for this provision? The Committee’s inquiry into children and young people touched on matters such as residential care, and the Committee is aware of the issue about finance to children’s services in general.

I know that the explanatory and financial memorandum is not the be-all and end-all. However, paragraph 16 states:

“While many respondents were attracted by the idea of a single system of financial support for 16-17 year old care leavers, others did not support such an approach.”

Who is not happy with the approach, and why?

Mr Clarke: I cannot say who, but I can say why.

Ms Ramsey: Uniformity of approach across trusts in respect of finance was discussed briefly following Mr McConaghy’s presentation. I agree with that, but has the Department taken on board the issue of the cost of living in different areas here? Many people will have questions about that, and we will return to it next week.

Barnardo’s have pointed out — and I am hearing it from the public — that the benefits system in England for care leavers has not worked well. Barnardo’s will be raising that as an issue. There is definitely a case for a single benefits system. Please explain the impact that the difficulties with the benefits system will have on young people leaving care.

Mr Clarke: Personal advisers will need to be thoroughly trained and be very familiar with the benefits and housing systems. It is a specialist role. Views differ as to who personal advisers should be; the legislation leaves it open. Some people may see it as being essentially part of a social worker’s role, but I do not necessarily agree. The role could be filled by a person with the relevant training — someone with the ability to communicate and empathise with young people and who can provide them with the necessary support. That might take it outside the social work field.

Ms Ramsey mentioned wider considerations in children's services, and there may be an issue as regards the overall supply of trained social work staff. We will need to consider whether it is practical for social workers to take on every conceivable role as regards children.

Ms Ramsey: Young people asked First Key if they would get to choose their adviser: they do not get to choose their social worker.

Mr Clarke: The legislation will not provide for choice. Some young people have told me that they would prefer not to have their social worker. That is their view. Where it is possible to provide choice, it would be reasonable to do so, because we are asking someone to empathise with the young person and whom the young person can be comfortable with. There needs to be an element of choice, therefore, as to whether they want that role to be fulfilled by their social worker or not. It will depend on circumstances. Some young people will want that continuity but others will not. I have spoken to Voice of Young People in Care (VOYPIC) in the past, and some young people were adamant that they did not want their social worker as an adviser. The number of young people involved was mentioned. It is about 200 a year.

Ms Reynolds: The figure would be different if all eligible young people being prepared for independence were included. Some eligible children currently in foster care would not be included in the 'Promoting Independence' report figures. We would need to check that. The number would be greater.

Mr Clarke: There will be a build-up of young people under this legislation. It will immediately affect the 200 young people leaving care at that time. However, there will be an approximate doubling of the numbers in the second and third years as more young people leave care.

You mentioned the comment in paragraph 16 of the explanatory and financial memorandum, which is really about removing benefits. We have not reached that clause yet, but it is about young care leavers — 16-and 17-year olds — and their entitlement to benefit. We are conscious of the divergence of views, and I know that many people commented on the issue.

The Department's intention is to improve the life chances of those young people and that financial support be co-ordinated through a single channel — that is the principle on which the Bill is based. The concern is that it will be perceived that the Department's intention — through the introduction of the young person's advisor and the new legislation — will be to view young care leavers as people who go on to the benefit system. Resources from the benefit system, which would be drawn into the Department under transfer arrangements, must be co-ordinated in a way that will assist young people in education and training designed to get them a job. I am not being critical of the benefit system. Those young people have particular needs, and resources need to be pooled to bring their future more into line with that of other young people.

Ms McWilliams: The Guardian Ad Litem Agency's submission provides an overview of how the Department might involve itself in a comprehensive children's strategy, and it comes to an interesting conclusion. It states that to implement the legislation will require detailed regulations, a significant increase in funding, an infrastructure that can deliver and a considerable commitment from well-trained and well-resourced staff. The submissions from the trusts state that leaving and aftercare service is very underfunded. How will the legislation work given that we do not have a comprehensive children's strategy in mind?

We have been told that £400,000 in the current budget has been committed for the implementation process yet this seems to be a completely different way forward for this age group and will command an enormous amount of resources. If we are to get this right we need to have a completely different type of worker. In the absence of a comprehensive strategy and an infrastructure that can deliver well-trained and well-resourced staff, how can this be implemented successfully? Mr Clarke was present when Down Lisburn Trust gave evidence to the Committee about things that went seriously wrong with a much younger group. Things have gone seriously wrong in the whole area of children leaving care, and the Committee is concerned about huge promises being made but not delivered.

Mr Clarke: I agree. Undoubtedly the legislation must be placed within a wider strategy. In England and Wales the leaving care arrangements are part of the 'Quality Protects' initiative. That links with residential care and fostering because we are saying that children should be prepared for leaving care and should not be just "thrown out". There are links between all of the services.

The resources allocated for the legislative requirements of child and family care this year amounted to £1.5 million. However, those resources are currently allocated to boards for the enhancement of family and childcare services. The Department has assumed that £500,000 of that money would go to this piece of legislation. The £500,000 would not be for residential care; it would be specifically for these legislative requirements.

The resources have been allocated in advance of the legislation and it will be recurring money. It will go towards laying the foundation for the resources that will be required. With a view to implementing the legislation, we have identified an inter-agency group involving the voluntary sector. It is in a preliminary stage at the moment, since the legislation has not been passed. We will have to map out existing provision and future costs. The current information suggests that £500,000 will be required in the first year with higher amounts thereafter, when more people will become eligible.

Ms McWilliams: Have costs for the next three years been calculated?

Mr Clarke: Yes, but only on the basis of assumptions. A great deal of work has to be done to assess the additional requirement. The assessment comprises the baseline provision together with that of statutory and voluntary groups — no separation has been made. We must be careful that the additionality provided by the Department in this area will not be offset by a reduction in funding in another area. The baseline is important.

Ms McWilliams: I am glad we have reached that issue. We must be certain that we shall not lose funding in other areas, which has been a criticism in the past.

Mr Clarke: That is what I fear also.

Ms McWilliams: The Committee, in scrutinising future budgets, would like to be able to see that the money set down for this legislation has been secured. If that is not done then it will leave the Committee in the position of trying to calculate baselines for one year and projections for the next.

Would Mr Clarke provide the Committee with some indication of costs over the next few years? We are about to carry out the comprehensive spending review, which is based on a three-year prediction. The Committee would like to be able to secure funding for this legislation and ensure that money is not sliced from another area.

One evaluation concerning community care makes some interesting suggestions about personal advisers. First, we are assuming that the personal adviser will have to be a trust employee because the trusts, in their submissions, stated that if trust resources are to be committed, the person would have to be a trust employee. Is that correct?

Mr Clarke: I am not sure whether the personal adviser would be a trust employee or if the job could be created through a fee attracting arrangement. There are a variety of options. Trusts might employ people on a contract basis. I am not saying that would be the case, but it is possible.

Several trusts have said that they envisage the arrangement as being solely part of the existing social work set up. The Department would not want it to be as narrow as that because of some of the issues we have been talking about. We may wish to create a more flexible situation. Trusts would be responsible for ensuring provision but it would also be for them to decide the most suitable method.

Ms McWilliams: Could they sub-contract the work?

Mr Clarke: My view, in advance of detail, is that flexible approaches could be used, bearing in mind that the responsibility would be on trusts to ensure that the provision is made.

Ms McWilliams: Social workers will say that this is another duty being added to an already overloaded agenda.

Mr Clarke: I agree. Some trusts have said that the personal adviser must be a social worker. However, knowing the pressures on social workers, I would have thought that the pragmatic point of view suggests that a range of options be considered. It should not necessarily be assumed that every function involving work with children is necessarily for social workers.

Ms McWilliams: Some submissions have outlined the type of skills that would be required and they suggest that skilled negotiators would be required — people ready to work with challenging behaviour. Some people will be working with young people from offending backgrounds.

This will be a very demanding job if it is to be carried out properly. Community care suggests that it may involve two workers. Thirty young people leaving care were interviewed and they suggested that the best proposal might be to have a combination of social services and a second support worker. Have you heard similar imaginative proposals? If this is to be successful there must be continuity. Young people are being passed from pillar to post. They come from many different backgrounds perhaps never having built up solid relationships. Social workers are telling us that they do not have the time to provide such a relationship and that we may need to look at a different arrangement.

Mr Clarke: That is an issue. I spoke earlier about continuity and the importance of continuity of social workers for some young people.

The Chairperson: Clearly we are going to need more appropriately trained social workers.

Mr Clarke: I would not necessarily presume that. The danger in such a presumption is that the job is seen purely as one for social workers.

The Chairperson: I am concerned about the possibility of contracting out the work.

Ms McWilliams: The current wording in the Bill suggests that a young person's adviser would be one person. The Committee may wish to consider an amendment to facilitate the possibility of more than one personal adviser for a child.

The Chairperson: I would like to bring in other Committee members. I am sorry Ms McWilliams, I know what you are saying is very important.

Ms McWilliams: Could I have a response to my question?

Ms Reynolds: One issue that arose during our inspections with young people is how many people are involved with them. Young people seem to resent that. They are asking for one person to look after their needs for an extended period of time.

The turnover of family and childcare social workers has created considerable problems because children not only have to deal with the changeover of placements but also the turnover of staff. There should be a specialist personal adviser who can be a focal point for the child and take care of all of the child's needs rather than introducing the child to an increasing range of people. We should limit the number of people who come into the child's life at this transitional stage.

Ms McWilliams: It has been suggested that there should be a combination of a social service employee working with a second support worker chosen by the young person. Currently there is a conflict because the word "appointed" is in the legislation, but we will return to that later.

Mr J Kelly: How many children would each personal adviser be responsible for? Will the new arrangements apply to young people previously looked after under an accommodation care order but who are in a juvenile justice setting under a juvenile justice order? In such circumstances clear mechanisms need to be established to ensure that trust assessors meet need and create pathway plans in appointing an adviser. How will that be arranged?

Will young disabled people, looked after within trust disability programmes, be eligible under the legislation? In some circumstances "leaving care" should focus less on making a move forward to independence and more on helping the young person make a smooth and successful transition to adult life.

Will disabled children, in receipt of respite care arrangements over an extended period, qualify under the new arrangements? Under the existing legislation, such children are regarded as being protected by social services.

Mr Clarke: The number of children each young person's adviser would look after would have to be calculated; it will depend on the level of involvement.

Mr J Kelly: You mentioned 200.

Mr Clarke: That is across the whole Province, and there are already leaving and aftercare teams involved. Realistically, I cannot quote you a figure on how many children will be looked after by each young person's adviser, especially as there is a range of options in the number of people that would be involved. We would have to ensure, through implementation, that there are enough advisers to provide the necessary support, and that will vary greatly from child to child.

Mr McGowan: It will also depend on the children because they would be involved in the choice. The trust will be able to draw from a pool of advisers. Each adviser will have a caseload, but we have not identified what that will be.

Mr Clarke: The qualification periods for the new arrangements will continue to operate for children being looked after by trusts under a care order. The timescale criteria will apply as long as the care order is in effect.

Mr J Kelly: Do children in juvenile justice care qualify?

Mr Clarke: The child must be looked after by a trust. Where a trust has a care order, that order will still run if a young person is in the juvenile justice system. The qualification relates to the care order.

The Chairperson: This is a general overview of the Bill. We will be going through the Bill in more detail.

Ms Ramsey: Mr Clarke said that the duty is on the trust to provide a personal adviser. The Bill states that no matter where the child goes the trust is required to provide the adviser. If the trust is in Derry and the child moves to Belfast, would the young person's adviser follow the child?

Mr Clarke: The child remains under the care of the trust responsible. That is part of the continuity.

Ms Ramsey: I understand that; but the Department must be careful about how many children are assigned to each adviser because they could be spread over many areas.

Mrs I Robinson: I am concerned about confusion, overlapping and duplication between the young person's adviser and the social worker. I do not understand how the duties will be separated to avoid confusion. It will take a lot of money to introduce this system and I am worried about how the Department will distinguish between the roles. Where will young people's advisers come from? Surely, they would have to be employed by trusts?

Mr Clarke: The trust will be responsible for providing young person's advisers. The important thing is to ensure that there is continuity for a young person before and after leaving care. That is a fundamental principle that everyone is agreed on.

Mrs I Robinson: Is the young person's adviser not really a social worker with added responsibilities?

Mr Clarke: For some young people the continuity could be established through their social worker. However, that may not work for other young people, as some want to break away from social workers. It will be the trust's responsibility to ensure continuity. The young person will have the choice to part from the social worker. However, the obvious person to act as a young person's adviser is the one who has been working with the child while he was in care. However, for a variety of reasons, that may not be practical.

Continuity is important and this will be emphasised by the fact that work on leaving care must start before the child leaves care. The legislation will provide for a pathway plan, among other things, to be started while the child is in care. The young person's adviser will be introduced before the young person leaves care.

Mr Berry: I would like more clarification about the young person's adviser. I understand that trusts will be responsible for appointing the young person's adviser. There seems to be some confusion. In its submission, Armagh and Dungannon Health and Social Services Trust stated:

"Clarity would be needed as to whether the young person's adviser would be a trust employee".

A trust is asking that question — not the Committee. It continues:

"It would not be possible for a non employee to commit trust resources."

That is a concern, because trusts will not appoint non-trust employees. If the young person's adviser is not a trust employee, a trust worker would also have to be involved, otherwise it would lead to possible duplication and confusion. I am worried that trusts are not fully aware of who will act as young person's advisers. Would you comment on that?

Mr Clarke: Trusts will be responsible for providing young person's advisers and will be responsible for providing the services. There is no question of the young person's adviser spending the trust's resources. It will be the responsibility of the trust to provide the young person's adviser and all the necessary resources. All of those decisions lie with the trusts.

Mr Berry: Why are the trusts asking who the advisors will be?

Mr Clarke: One thing we must be clear about is that this is the legislative framework; the implementation will be carried out by the trusts and the voluntary sector. We have been discussing who the young person's personal adviser would be. The legislation simply provides that trusts will be responsible for ensuring that there will be a young person's adviser.

The detailed arrangements that the trusts are getting into will have to be taken forward when the procedures are being implemented. The appropriate regulations and guidance have to be drawn up, and the implementation group will include representatives of the trust and the voluntary sector. The issues will become clearer as we progress towards implementation.

This Bill is a framework; the regulations and guidance will underpin it. Arguably, that is where the meat will be, and that will be the subject of consultation. The Committee will be interested to see the outcome.

Rev Robert Coulter: I am worried when I hear the word "assumption" at this stage. How many extra staff do you assume will be required, and will they be administrative staff?

Mr Clarke: We do not have an answer on the numbers of administrative staff that will be required. Leaving and aftercare services are already subject to statutory provision, and teams are already in each area due to existing legislative requirements. We are talking about enhancing and realigning that.

Rev Robert Coulter: How many extra staff do you assume will be required to implement the legislation?

Mr Clarke: I do not know whether we can make a precise assumption at this stage. Different areas will have to be looked at during the implementation stage, including whether the young person's adviser would be one person or whether support staff would be needed.

Rev Robert Coulter: We are dealing with a Health Service that is already underfunded, overburdened with administrators and strapped for cash in carrying out its remit. Nevertheless, we are looking at more legislation that will add more staff, and we are not being given a definitive statement about the extra burden that will put on the Health Service.

Mr Clarke: We are working on an assumption, and £1.5 million of extra resources will be provided this year towards legislative requirements arising out of the child and family care services. We are already putting in resources.

Rev Robert Coulter: And those resources will be ring-fenced.

Mr Clarke: That is a wider issue, and the Department's position on ring fencing is known. I cannot add anything to that.

Rev Robert Coulter: Clause 5 says:

"35D. — (1) Every authority shall establish a procedure for considering representations (including complaints) made to it".

Will that be standardised across the trusts?

Mr Clarke: We would wish to see that standardised across the trusts. This is largely a restatement of existing representations and complaints procedures. We did not touch on this one because there is already a general representation and complaints procedure for the services provided.

The Chairperson: Thank you. We will be looking at this important subject again.

Mr R McConaghy) Assembly Research Services

The Chairperson: I should like to welcome Mr Rab McConaghy, an Assembly researcher.

Mr McConaghy: This will be a short briefing; I do not intend to look at the Bill clause-by-clause, especially as the Committee is meeting officials later. Everyone should have received the research paper that the Assembly's research section has produced, as well as the explanatory and financial memoranda.

The Children (Leaving Care) Bill was introduced on 4 March 2002, and the Second Stage was agreed on 19 March. On 7 May the Committee sought, and gained, approval for an extension. The period for Committee scrutiny will end on 26 June.

The Bill is aimed at ensuring that children who are 16 or 17 years old and who have been in care are given adequate support that will allow them to adjust to life outside a care environment. The duty extends to the age of 21, but can go beyond that if the young person receives assistance for training and education.

The Bill will amend the Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1995, specifically article 35 of that Order. The 1995 Order allows and requires authorities to offer advice and assistance to young people once they have left care. However, the proposed legislation is a positive step aimed at enhancing that support framework. It will effectively tighten up and formalise the current legislation on the obligations that an authority has to young people leaving its care. Certain things are specified in the legislation, such as a formalised needs assessment; the development of pathway plans to help young people in their last period in care and in leaving care; and the appointment of a personal adviser. There are also specific requirements for the authority, in this case the trust, to look at accommodation needs and the suitability of accommodation in relation to the young person.

A major element of the new legislation, and perhaps one of the more controversial elements, relates to clause 6, which provides for the removal of care leavers' entitlement to standard benefits such as jobseeker's allowance, income support and so forth. Those would be replaced by a package arranged by the trust, using funds that have been transferred from the Department for Social Development. The rationale is that that package would be better tailored to meet a young person's needs. Some people would be excluded from that and would stay on the main benefits system — primarily young care leavers who are lone parents or who are disabled.

The Bill effectively mirrors the Children (Leaving Care) Act 2000 in England and Wales, which amended the Children Act 1989. The background in GB has been quite complex and goes back to the early and mid-1990s, when there were different reports about childcare, such as that on the scandals in north Wales, and so forth. A lot of work that was done at that time was broadened out to focus on what happens to children not only in homes, but also once they leave.

The Social Services Inspectorate produced a report in 1997 that looked at young care leavers' specific problems, and it mentioned a few pointers, such as lack of academic qualifications and consequent higher unemployment rates, greater propensity to go into more serious adult crime, higher levels of homelessness and frequent changes of addresses.

The Utting Report, which reviewed the safeguards for children living away from home, was a key document at that time. It was produced by a committee chaired by Sir William Utting. It confirmed a lot of the findings of the Social Services Inspectorate. The new Labour Government of 1997 looked at other aspects of childcare and social work and introduced the "Quality Protects" programme and the White Paper, 'Modernising Social Services'. A range of things was introduced at that time, and there was a desire for streamlining. A consultation on the needs of carers went out in 1999, and that led to the Children (Leaving Care) Act 2000 in England and Wales.

Although the Utting Report, which was the basis of the legislation, applied only to England and Wales, John McFall, who was the Minister responsible for health in Northern Ireland, welcomed it. The point was made that because Northern Ireland had more recent legislation in the Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1995, there was a lack of urgency, and less perceived need to develop new legislation. However, it was recognised that the position should be monitored.

The Northern Ireland Social Services Inspectorate conducted similar work to its British counterpart and produced the report 'Promoting Independence', which mirrored the GB findings and was essentially a matter of catch-up work. The report recommended the application of the English and Welsh legislation.

Ms McWilliams: Are we able to follow what you are saying in your written paper?

Mr McConaghy: Yes, most things are covered in the paper.

Ms McWilliams: You are speaking from a set of notes prepared on your research paper.

Mr McConaghy: It is just the summary around that.

Ms McWilliams: I am trying to key in and flag up some of the points as you are going through the paper.

Mr McConaghy: I have tried to keep them in sequence. However, some of the issues that I thought might be better for discussion are re-sequenced slightly in the briefing.

Ms McWilliams: OK.

Mr McConaghy: The Social Services Inspectorate report in Northern Ireland directly recommended the application of the GB legislation. A major research project at that time was the Northern Ireland leaving care project, which was initiated in 1996 and which confirmed many of the research findings in Britain. The statistics showed that one in two young care leavers in Northern Ireland left school without any qualifications, compared to only one in 14 in Britain. Six months after leaving care, a young person was four times more likely to be unemployed than the general population average. That represents the background to the Bill. It is paralleling what is happening in England and Wales.

The legislation is only part of the story. Detailed regulations and guidance will be needed if the Bill becomes law, and there will be a further consultation period for that. The regulations must address the basics in the Bill, such as the prescribed age, and how long a child has to be looked after in order to become eligible. The Committee may find that it has a heavier workload when the regulations and guidance go out for consultation. The needs assessments and pathway plans, along with the personal advisers, will also have to be addressed in the guidance and detailed regulations.

The explanatory memorandum with the Bill shows that there was a positive feedback from the consultation phase held by the Department. There has been some criticism about how these provisions operate in England and Wales, although there has not been time for a full evaluation. The primary criticism was that the language used in the legislation, such as "keep in touch" — a trust would have an obligation to "keep in touch" with someone once he or she has left care — is quite woolly. How would that operate in practice? There is a very open tone, and that is probably necessary in social welfare legislation. However, there is a concern that the language lacks rigour. How would individual trusts and authorities follow it up?

Clause 6 is one of the main clauses concerned with the withdrawal of benefits. There has been criticism about how that would be implemented consistently across different trust areas and how other benefit channels would be placed in relation to young people. For example, in cases where a young person is currently eligible for free prescriptions, would that be taken from them? If they lose other income benefits, they will no longer be making national insurance credits. Such issues have been raised in relation to the English and Welsh legislation.

During the consultation phase, some people asked that more time be given to allow evaluative work to emerge from England and Wales. The Committee must strike a balance between waiting for that work and pushing forward with what is generally seen as a strong piece of legislation.

Legislation on this aspect of childcare in the Republic of Ireland is found in the Child Care Act 1991. That Act loosely states that authorities and boards "may" follow up with young care leavers. However, with the resource constraints in the South, there is a feeling that that is not being carried through to the extent desired by the voluntary sector. There has also been a tendency in the South to focus on homelessness; there is a strong homelessness lobby there. Some good legislation and policy guidance is emerging on homelessness prevention strategies and so on.

The Children (Scotland) Act 1995 also allows for trusts and boards to follow up, but it does not put a requirement on them to do so. Research is ongoing to gauge the success of boards and trusts in carrying that through. Section 6 of the Children (Leaving Care) Act 2000, relating to benefits, extends to Scotland. The benefit shift will be away from social security to a package delivered by the appropriate trust.

The feedback seems to be that this is seen as a positive development and that it strengthens existing legislation. The wording is still open, and detailed guidance and regulations must be developed afterwards. During that period, there will probably be a chance to see some evaluative work from England and Wales. Again, there will have to be a balance between the speed of implementation and allowing that work to feed through.

The Chairperson: Thank you.

Ms McWilliams: One of the issues that seems to be coming up — and I do not know how familiar you are with it — is eligibility for benefits. What does that package look like? Has any work been done in Scotland, England or Wales on the support package?

Mr McConaghy: I am not sure that the package is fleshed out in the guidance. It would be up to individual trusts to work on their own to develop specific packages. Thus, one of the criticisms relates to how consistent those packages would be across different authorities. You may wish to check with the Department, but I do not think that that has been addressed in the guidance. There would be quite a bit of freedom for the trusts to develop those packages. In our search for work from England and Wales, we were unable to get details on this.

Ms McWilliams: There are variations between trusts in Northern Ireland depending on what support and resources they have available. That has been demonstrated in community care. Would this lead to huge differentials depending on what trust you were in, or is there some kind of bottom line?

Mr McConaghy: The Department has drawn down £400,000 a year over the next two or three years from the Executive programme funds. That will be used to look at innovative leaving care packages. The Department sees the rest of the funding as coming from within the existing baseline. However, there is £400,000 a year to develop different packages from within the trusts. There is no detail on the allocation of that money between trusts.

Mrs I Robinson: Does that mean that there would be differentials? Would different amounts be paid? We are again talking about postcodes; different trusts could have different levels of payment. Surely, that would be wrong, morally and in every other way?

Mr McConaghy: Certainly, there is the potential for a postcode lottery, and it has been criticised.

The Chairperson: A postcode lottery would be terrible. You can elaborate on that point afterwards.

Ms Ramsey: The explanatory memorandum says that during the consultation period, the issue of uniformity across trusts was raised. The cost of living in some areas must be taken into account. I am not suggesting that because someone lives in a certain area they should get more or less than someone else. We must ensure that there is consistency. For example, it might cost more to live in Belfast than in another area.

The Chairperson: Clarification on that must be sought from departmental officials.

Mr McConaghy: There may be an issue regarding the cost of living. It is clear from the legislation that practical cash assistance would be available for training, education, travel to and from places of training and education, and so on. The cost of living does not emerge specifically. That might be worth pursuing — what the margins are, and what the possible additional allowances for cost of living might be.

Ms McWilliams: I have read some of the submissions — only a few have been sent in — and there appears to be concern about the provision of personal advisers, such as when they would be appointed, and by whom.

Mr McConaghy: Clause 5 of the Bill allows for representations and a complaints procedure. There was criticism in England and Wales that the balance of power always lay with trusts. That was not clarified in relation to representation — how much input a young person would have in the appointment of an adviser, or in a situation in which they were being pushed down a particular road or pathway plan that they did not think was appropriate, but the trust perhaps wanted to pursue because it was cheaper. Although there is an allowance for a complaints procedure, there may be a feeling that it is not strong enough. The balance of the young person might be in the other way.

The Chairperson: Thank you.

Mr P Deazley) Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

The Chairperson: Clause 1 will be considered first, as agreed last week, followed by the remaining clauses. I propose to complete the consideration of the remaining clauses today, if possible.

The Committee welcomes Mr Peter Deazley from the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety. The Committee's concerns are centred on the consultation on the professional assessment tool, the fast-track review and the appeal mechanism and the payment system. Last week, you said that you would give the Committee further information today.

Mr Deazley: I had expected to be able to bring the documentation today, but the Minister is still approving the consultation document. Approval is taking this length of time because the document is large. I had expected it to be approved in time for today's meeting. For it to be of any use, the Committee would need to go through the document.

The Chairperson: Have you anything to add that was not covered last week?

Mr Deazley: No.

Ms McWilliams: We have known about the report for some time. When was it finalised?

Mr Deazley: The final piece of the report had to be written by Prof Brendan McCormack, who designed and piloted the tool. It was completed two weeks ago.

Ms McWilliams: Knowing that the legislation was going through the Assembly and that the tool went hand in hand with the legislation, I am concerned that the Committee has been delayed in completing consideration of the legislation. With the legislation being considered by the Committee, one would have thought that the Department would have issued a timescale in parallel with the legislation so that everything could have been completed by now.

The Chairperson: That is very disappointing. However, we must proceed, as time is passing.

Clause 1 (Charges for nursing care)

The Chairperson: There is an amendment concerning consultation on the professional assessment tool. Mr Deazley has said that he has nothing to add. The Committee was asked to agree to a provision for financial assistance for nursing care costs and to agree the definition of what constitutes nursing care in advance of detailed written information based on the assurances of officials. Members will want to confirm those points with officials, as we discussed last week.

Members may wish to consider whether the Committee should recommend an amendment to the Bill that would require the Department to issue its guidance by means of Statutory Rules. That would ensure that the Assembly and the Committee would have the opportunity to consider and formally agree any guidance or appeal mechanism prior to its being implemented. This would allow the Committee to agree to clause 1 with a greater degree of confidence in advance of the details being made available.

Members should note that the draft amendment is a working proposal that has been drafted without legislative drafting advice, and it may not be technically competent. Advice is also needed on how and where it should be placed in the Bill in the context of the Health and Personal Social Services (Northern Ireland) Order 1972. Members could discuss and agree the amendment even though it may not be technically correct. That has happened before. That could be done at a later stage via Mr Deazley and the relevant people, but is open to discussion.

Ms Ramsey: This issue has probably arisen in relation to every Bill we have discussed. We are all representatives and know the way boards and trusts work; we all know that those entitled to something are not always aware of the fact. We introduced a clause into the Carers and Direct Payments Bill to the effect that responsibility to inform people of their entitlements should lie with the trust. The proposed amendment does not strike me as being in any way different from what we did with other Bills. I know that the question of placing the onus on the Department, the board or the trust to inform people of their entitlements was raised with the Committee Clerk at the start of deliberations on this Bill. Unless I am reading the issue wrongly, I have no problem with placing responsibility on the trust or relevant authority to ensure that it informs people of their exact entitlements, rather than assuming that it will do so.

The Committee Clerk: The proposed amendment, which takes accounts of members' points, is essentially intended to require the Department to provide for guidance, directions and so on by means of a statutory instrument which would have to come through the Assembly and the Committee. The Committee would, therefore, have the opportunity formally to agree whatever guidance or payment arrangements were put into place. It does not specifically identify a requirement on the part of trusts or boards to publicise the information. Based on the evidence given by officials, they are arranging for boards to identify all those residents currently entitled. It is therefore not quite the same as the previous amendment that we made, since it is proactive.

Ms Ramsey: If we ask the Department to bring the guidance to us, we shall at least have another shot at ensuring that the requirement is part of it.

The Committee Clerk: Yes.

The Chairperson: Yes, that is possible. Do we have enough time left?

The Committee Clerk: The Committee must complete the Committee Stage of the Bill by 7 June. We are running late. We need to put the draft report before the Committee for agreement. It must be lodged with the Business Office by 7 June. If we went ahead with an amendment on this basis, it would allow the Committee to consider all the other issues when they come forward from the Department. The Bill is essentially a provision to ensure equity of treatment for nursing home residents. That is in clause 1, and the details will have to follow; the Committee will wish to see them.

The Chairperson: Are members agreed that we should try to amend the Bill? The technicalities of the amendment will, of course, have to be considered further.

Ms McWilliams: Given that the deadline is 7 June, I feel that we have been put in an absolutely ridiculous position. We have neither the tool of assessment nor the payment systems before us for discussion. We are sitting here scrutinising legislation with two massive pieces of information missing, yet the deadline is 7 June. It is absolutely outrageous, and if we continue to act in this manner with other pieces of legislation, we may as well pack up and go home. The amendment is based on the content of two documents that are supposed to come forward to us. We are having an irrelevant discussion about an amendment based on whether what the Department produces is adequate.

The Chairperson: The assessment tool was a key point.

Mr J Kelly: Perhaps I might ask Mr Deazley when he thinks the statutory instrument will be introduced.

Mr Deazley: I would rather not make any more promises. In defence of the Department, I should point out that the assessment tool was entirely in the hands of professionals. It was being run entirely by Prof Brendan McCormack. We in the Department could not move on the issue until we had received the documentation. As far as I can remember, we got the report on the pilot about a fortnight ago.

Mr J Kelly: So you are not going to hazard a guess.

Mr Deazley: As I have said, I expected to be able to lay out the consultation document and the submission on the payment system today. It is a big document for the Minister to go through by herself.

The Chairperson: Our choice is to postpone it again — and it seems terrible to do that — or agree that we are content with the clause, subject to the Committee's proposed amendment.

Ms McWilliams: I propose that we postpone it. If we need to have extra meetings before the deadline, we will do so. We are not in a position to take this forward without two major decisions being made by the Department.

Clause 1 referred for further consideration.

(MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS) BILL

Miss M Finnegan)
Dr T Power)

The Chairperson: The Committee welcomes Mr John McConnell, Mr David Barr, Miss Marie Finnegan and Dr Tracy Power from the Department of the Environment.

At first, we thought that the Bill was straightforward, but it is more complex than we anticipated. Several points, which were raised in recent debates, have caused concern. We must go through the Bill clause by clause. The Committee received a detailed response from the Department and would appreciate departmental officials taking us through it. Have any Committee members an interest to declare as councillors?

The Chairperson, Mr M Murphy and Mr McClarty declared an interest.

Mr McConnell: The two experts from the division will take the Committee through the responses.

Miss Finnegan: We shall go through pages 1 to 14 of the submission. Page 1 deals with clause 2(2)(c), which makes provision for requesting information and gathering data in a particular manner for the formula. The Regulation allows the Department to seek information, by way of expenditure figures, at a particular time and in a particular format from council chief executives. The details of the format will be spelt out in the subordinate legislation.

The information must be complete, which is why we felt it necessary to have a clause to deal with it. A problem arises if a district council fails to provide the data in the manner requested by the Department. If the Department received information from only 25 councils, and not 26, the formula would be incomplete. Clause 4 provides a means for dealing with such a problem should it arise.

Subsection (2)(c) also covers data from sources other than councils, such as the Rate Collection Agency, the Valuation and Lands Agency, census data, et cetera. The source of the data, its nature and its timing will be spelt out in the subordinate legislation.

The Chairperson: Should there be an enabling provision in this clause to stipulate the consequences of not providing the required information at the time and in the manner required?

Miss Finnegan: That is not necessary in primary legislation, as a clause in the Bill stipulates that councils can be penalised if they are inefficient or if they do not comply with the Department's requests.

Not all information comes from councils: some of it has already been published. We do not anticipate a problem. Difficulty would arise only if councils, for whatever reason, were lagging behind and had not produced their expenditure figures — for example, certified figures — by a certain time. If councils had not produced their accounts, they could not be certified in time for us to pick them up. That is the only problem that I anticipate.

The Chairperson: The Department told us that it never stipulated which councils had problems producing data.

Miss Finnegan: Things have improved. Much of what we asked for was new to councils and they presented it to us in the wrong way. There was much toing and froing, which made things difficult. We have been working closely with finance officers at workshops, and councils now know what is required.

Before determining the figures for the last consultation exercise last year, we had great difficulty in getting the adjusted expenditure figures from councils. Some councils were producing one thing while others were producing something else. This year, we have asked for the same information in a pro forma that they understand. I do not think that there will be a problem now.

The Chairperson: The Department came from the opposite side when the Committee was dealing with the best value legislation. It had to include certain things because councils were not providing information. It seems that the Department has come round to the Committee's way of thinking.

Mr McConnell: Trust between councils and the Department is vital. We are certain that work done on the finance side will produce an outcome. Everyone involved in this exercise in the councils has an interest in getting it completed correctly. I am not sure that the same could have been said about best value.

Miss Finnegan: Clause 2(4) relates to the Regulations and it is a definition of the formula:

“the methods, principles and rules of any description.”

It will determine the detail of the formula; it alerts the Assembly that the formula is very detailed and comprises different measures and weightings.

The Chairperson: Page 5, paragraph 5, line 1 of the explanatory and financial memorandum states that clause 2(4) “allows the Department to amend the subordinate legislation”.

Is that right or wrong? Our legal advice is that it does not reflect the wording of clause 2(4). Subsection (4) is a definition only.

Miss Finnegan: The Bill states that it is a definition of “formula” and that stands on its own. In the explanatory and financial memorandum we tried to bring the two clauses together for greater clarity. One could argue that clause 2(4) does not match exactly the explanatory and financial memorandum. Our answer is based on legal advice. However, in the explanatory and financial memorandum we linked subsections (4) and (2). It may be clearer if we spelt out the link between the two subsections in the Bill itself. We would have to return to our legal advisers on that.

Mr McConnell: We have our legal advice and you have yours. Such discussion, however, is nugatory. Perhaps we could have further consideration on the legal advice.

The Chairperson: If the explanatory and financial memorandum reflects the intention to allow the Department to amend the subordinate legislation, should clause 2(4) not be amended to reflect that important point?

Miss Finnegan: According to our legal advisers, subsection (4) is a definition only and the two should be read in conjunction.

The Chairperson: We are guided by our legal advice. It was suggested that if the need to amend clause 2(4) is accepted — and that must be checked with your legal advisers and ours — should the words “of any description” not be removed and replaced with wording similar to “to be agreed within the Regulations made under clause 2(1)”? The words “and rules of any description” is certainly a wide statement.

Miss Finnegan: The words “of any description” were put in to assure Members that all details would be covered in the Regulations, because there is a great deal of data. Any of that data could be replaced over time with better measures. For example, we used the Robson index on deprivation when starting to work on the formula. Midstream, we moved to employment factors, and we ended up with the Noble indices, which seem to be the best measure of deprivation. We use bednights to measure the influx of tourists; councils wanted us to use day trippers, but those statistics are not available. We hope to include them when they become available.

The definition is wide of necessity. At present, we do not know what we may want to change. The Department would not make changes without first consulting councils, particularly those involved in finance and personnel, as they would want to consider the effects. Any change would be made through the subordinate legislation. There would have to be consultation, but the subordinate legislation would come before the Committee for the Environment and the Assembly, because it would be subject to affirmative resolution.

Mr McConnell: It is a response to councils’ concerns. Councils wanted issues taken into account on which we did not have the necessary information and to allow us, if that were the consensus, to use the information in future.

The Chairperson: Would the wording to be agreed in the Regulations made under clause 2(1) not be a more appropriate way of dealing with the matter?

Mr McConnell: We have taken legal advice. However, we do not wish the matter to degenerate into a clash of legal opinions. We should like to marry the two to produce something legally valid that the Committee will accept.

Miss Finnegan: We could have introduced a clause to the effect that the Department desired the power to make Regulations to distribute the resources element of the general grant and left it at that. However, in clause 2 we have provided an outline of the elements that we wished to include in subordinate legislation. The Committee will see an analysis of each section.

The Chairperson: The wording must reflect the reasons for each clause, and that is where our legal advisers have challenged it.

Mr McConnell: Our difference seems to be not in the desired outcome but in the legal ramifications of the Bill’s wording. Perhaps a meeting of both sets of legal advisers could help to resolve the matter.

Miss Finnegan: Would it satisfy the Committee if we outlined a definite link between the two subsections?

The Chairperson: We wish to ensure that the wording is appropriate. It does not help to say that there is a link between the two when the words used mean different things.

Mr McConnell: It would be wrong of us to insist on that when you have received legal advice to the contrary. We shall, of course, check the matter, if the Committee is content.

The Chairperson: We should be more than happy to pass on our legal advice to the Department if that were helpful.

Mr McConnell: That would be very helpful.

Mr A Doherty: What is the legal status of the explanatory and financial memorandum's contents if there is a difference in the interpretation of its wording and that of the Bill?

Miss Finnegan: My understanding is that the explanatory and financial memorandum is not a legal document.

Mr A Doherty: Does it accurately reflect the Bill?

Miss Finnegan: It should match the Bill's clauses, but there is an opportunity in the explanatory and financial memorandum to expand a little.

Mr A Doherty: The important thing is to ensure that the Bill's wording is correct.

Mr McConnell: This is an example of good co-operation with councils. The intention is to ensure that their wants are included.

The Chairperson: The explanatory and financial memorandum gives extensive detail on the formula and the data to be used. Take for example page 1, paragraph 5 and page 5, paragraph 2. If clause 2(4) is to agree with the Regulations — we are suggesting the wording — would that not show that the relevant clauses in the Bill are merely enabling clauses that allow for the introduction of Regulations that will stipulate the full details of the formula?

Miss Finnegan: The Bill's clauses are enabling because they enable the Department to make Regulations. The Regulations will detail the formula; the Bill does not state it.

The Chairperson: Does the Department agree that it is not for the Committee to scrutinise the formula at this time? Should not it do that when it receives the draft Regulations?

Miss Finnegan: Yes.

The Chairperson: When will the draft be available? May the Committee see the working draft as soon as possible?

Miss Finnegan: Yes. The Department has done some work on the draft Regulations and is working closely with departmental solicitors. It plans to make a submission to the Minister for permission to move on the draft Regulations by the end of May 2002. It will then start work on subordinate legislation, which should be before the Committee by the end of June. The Department will then work on a policy memorandum, which should reach the Executive by mid-October. That will be followed by the legislative process of laying the statutory Regulations with the Business Office in mid-November, followed by a debate in mid-December. The timescale is tight. However, the Department hopes to meet all those deadlines.

The Chairperson: As I say, the Committee would like to see the working draft as soon as possible.

Mr McConnell: It is in the Department's interest to ensure that it is made available to the Committee as soon as possible; it is aware that the Committee will not simply nod through legislation. I asked for the Committee's indulgence and as much speed as possible. Issues must be raised and cleared as quickly as possible.

Miss Finnegan: Clause 2(5) refers to Regulations and provides for refinement of the formula. I referred earlier to the kinds of refinement that could be available. The Department accepts that amendment of that subsection may be necessary. The Department must consult, and that could lead to the amendment of subordinate legislation.

The Chairperson: In accepting consultation with others apart from local councils on clause 4(4), will the Department include the Northern Ireland Public Service Alliance (NIPSA) and the Northern Ireland Local Government Association (NILGA)?

Miss Finnegan: The Department does not normally consult those organisations on subordinate legislation. However, it consulted widely on primary legislation because of the equality impact assessment. The Department consults councils on subordinate legislation because they are involved. It also consults other bodies that are interested in councils, such as the Northern Ireland Local Government Association, Northern Ireland's National Association of Councillors (NAC) and the Society of Local Authority Chief Executives (SOLACE).

The Chairperson: Surely it would be appropriate to consult NIPSA and NILGA as well.

Miss Finnegan: The Department could consider that. I am not sure whether it does not already consult those organisations.

Mr McConnell: That should not be a problem, because unless consultation is nugatory the Department should consult all organisations. It must consult on all those issues with all those who are involved in local government. If the Committee considers that to be necessary, the Department will do so until it proves otherwise.

The Chairperson: When will the Committee know whether the clause is to be amended and when will it be informed of the terms of a proposed amendment?

Miss Finnegan: The Department has not yet suggested amended wording for any of the clauses, although a few may need to be amended. The Department has not considered rewording at this stage, as it is waiting for a response from councils. It will then deal with that as one exercise.

The Chairperson: What are the provisions of clause 4?

Miss Finnegan: Clause 4 provides for a reduction of the general grant due to misappropriation of funds or excessive expenditure.

The Department was asked whether it could put a figure on this, but we would have to deal with each case as it arose. The Department would consider the local government auditor's report and submit a report to the Assembly in due course; that is part of the requirement. The wording in the Bill is a pick-up from the existing legislation; we did not change the wording.

The Chairperson: The Department says that it cannot give a precise figure, as that would depend on the circumstances of the council in question. However, clause 4(1)(b) states

"having regard to its financial resources and other relevant circumstances".

That is a much broader statement and could bring any circumstance into consideration.

Mr McConnell: Councils will welcome that, because they wish other circumstances to be taken into account before action is taken. Councils may wish to make representations on matters that they believe should be taken into account, and that would not make it excessive. We will depend largely on the local government auditor and the councils for the information they have for defrayal. Someone may say that it is wrong to the nth degree, but the council may have other things to ameliorate that.

Miss Finnegan: Factors other than finances may be involved — we need the data. A council may have failed to submit its annual reports. That is important. Under the Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 1972, the Department directs councils to submit their reports by a certain date — for example, this year they must submit their reports by 31 July. We are moving towards submission of reports by 30 June. The general grant reduction may be used to achieve that, if necessary. It has not been used to date, but the Department would have to consider it as a means of ensuring that councils comply with the direction.

Mr McConnell: In this exercise we have been dealing with finance officers, and that has been worthwhile in establishing a working relationship. We do not order councils to do this or to do that; we consult them on everything. They will then agree whether this approach is reasonable.

Miss Finnegan: If a report is not submitted by 31 July, there will not automatically be a drastic reduction in the grant. We would liaise with the council about the delay, and we would perhaps set a target after negotiations. However, if nothing happened and there was inefficiency in the council, the Department would have to act.

Mr Ford: You said that the report of the local government auditor would have to be considered. Should subsections (1) and (2) not spell out that it is on the foot of a report from the auditor that the Department takes action? It is implied, but it is not explicit.

I am afraid that I am unclear about the procedure. The Department would "recommend" the amount to be deducted from the general grant. There is no mention of "recommendation" in the Bill; it speaks of Regulations being made subject to negative resolution. If it is a recommendation, presumably the Department can only recommend it to the Assembly. I praised you earlier this week for getting away from negative resolution in most cases. Should this not require an affirmative resolution of the Assembly, as that is the only interpretation I can place on the Department's "recommending" as opposed to the Department's sliding something through while everybody is asleep?

Mr McConnell: The Department has no intention of sliding anything past anybody. I assure the Committee that the past year has demonstrated that, if the Department even attempted to do that, there are too many people around this table to call the Department to task.

Mr Ford: Why not make that clause affirmative, like the others?

Miss Finnegan: We should not have used the word "recommend" in our answer; we should have said that the Department would "determine" the amount to be deducted from the general grant. The clause is one of several that use the wording of the 1972 Act. I do not know whether it is necessary to refer to the local government auditor in the Bill — that is a procedural matter.

The Department would not know about those matters unless the auditor reported them to us. If a ratepayer reported it to the Department, the Department would go directly to the auditor to check the accusation that had been made against the council and to obtain evidence. It could come to light in the annual report. If it does not, the Department can ask the auditor to carry out a special audit. It is understood that the auditor is the Department's source of information.

Mr Ford: I can accept that point somewhat easier that the second point, which you have not answered. Why is the clause a negative resolution when everything else in the Bill is affirmative?

Miss Finnegan: I did not think that that was an issue. We are not making an Order. The Department makes a written report to the Assembly, by way of information, that contains all the details of the case.

Mr Ford: If the Department reports to the Assembly, what is the procedure for somebody taking action on the foot of that report?

Miss Finnegan: By the time the Assembly received the report, the Department would have taken action and determined the amount to be deducted from the council's grant.

Mr Ford: Therefore, the point that matters is that, as the Bill stands, the Regulations made by the Department are subject only to negative resolution. A report issued months after the event is irrelevant if the Department has made Regulations that enforce its decision.

Miss Finnegan: I do not see this as the Department making an Order or Regulations.

Mr Ford: That is what the Bill says. Clause 4(5) mentions Regulations. The Department is making Regulations.

Miss Finnegan: I understand where confusion arises. Regulations made under clause 4 are subject to negative resolution. That relates to subsections (3) and (4) only. It has nothing whatsoever to do with subsections (1) and (2). I missed your point.

Mr Ford: Subsection (5) says: “Regulations under this section”. It does not say: “Regulations under subsections (3) and (4)”. If there is any confusion, it is not on the part of the Committee.

Miss Finnegan: I accept responsibility for the confusion; that will have to be clarified. Subsection (5) does not relate to subsections (1) and (2); it relates to subsections (3) and (4) only.

Mr Ford: Therefore, under subsection (2), a reduction in grant is simply a matter of the Department reporting to the Assembly that it is taking action without having to seek approval from the Assembly to do so.

Miss Finnegan: That is correct. The Department would report to the Assembly stating the case, giving the details of the auditor’s report and stating the amount that the Department had decided is appropriate to deduct from the grant.

Mr Ford: If the Assembly deemed that the Department’s actions were not appropriate, what would be the procedure to reverse that decision?

Miss Finnegan: I do not know that that particular decision could be reversed.

Mr Ford: Will you explain how that would fit in under the European Convention on Human Rights? The concept that the legislature deemed that the actions of civil servants were inappropriate and could not be reversed seems to be a fundamental breach of human rights.

Miss Finnegan: The Department would have to fully justify its decision in its report to the Assembly.

The Chairperson: The Department does not have to justify anything. It has the power to take that action, and whether it justifies it or not, the Assembly can do nothing about it. If it were the Assembly’s opinion that the action taken by the Department was not justifiable, there should be a right of redress.

Miss Finnegan: That is taken from the current legislation, although that does not mean that it should not be changed. There has never been a report, although the legislation was to be laid before Parliament.

The Chairperson: The words “laying before Parliament” mean nothing.

Miss Finnegan: I know that it is a formality.

Mr McConnell: There is nothing in the legislation that allows for that procedure. We need to look at that and ensure that a procedure is in place. Apart from the human rights aspect, we must consider the primacy of the Assembly.

Miss Finnegan: What you want would require the clause to be changed substantially, which is possible. It could be changed so that the Department would make a recommendation to the Assembly, and no deduction would be made until the Assembly approved that recommendation.

Mr Ford: That is what I thought subsection (5) meant, until you told me that subsection (5) did not mean what it says.

Miss Finnegan: As I have said, subsection (5) does not relate to subsections (1) and (2).

Mr McConnell: The point is well made, and it is something that we shall address. All that I have said relates to the primacy of the Assembly, and we want to take that, and the human rights aspect, into account.

The Chairperson: I return to clause 4(1)(a). What measure will the Department use to determine that has been achieved? How is excessive expenditure defined?

“a reasonable standard of economy”

Mr McConnell: Councils are required to seek best value under Local Government (Best Value) Act (Northern Ireland) 2002. Were the local government auditor to suggest that things could be done better by looking at different aspects, that may be one area in which we could look at economy, efficiency and effectiveness.

In clause 4(1)(b), the word “excessive” is taken into account when the local government auditor reports back on what the expenditure has been.

The Chairperson: Do you say that the local government auditor has sole responsibility for determining a reasonable standard of economy and excessive expenditure?

Mr McConnell: Yes.

The Chairperson: It is not the Department’s responsibility?

Mr McConnell: The Department would determine that based on a report from the auditor. If someone writes to us and says — however unlikely this may be — that a district council is behaving badly, the matter is referred to the local government auditor. It would be the auditor’s decision as to whether there was any evidence to support the accusation. The Department would exercise its judgement at that point.

The Chairperson: Is it the Department or the local government auditor that determines the amount of deduction?

Miss Finnegan: The Department would determine the amount of deduction, not the local government auditor. The Department would have to take into account how much grant the council gets. Some councils do not get very much, although others get substantial grant. Could the entire grant, be withheld or, as a warning, could it be reduced by a small amount?

Mr McConnell: That is where the Assembly comes into play. What role does it have to play in the determination of that exercise?

The Chairperson: You have placed so much emphasis on the local government auditor, yet the auditor is not mentioned anywhere in the legislation.

Mr McConnell: The local government auditor is —

The Chairperson: He is a shadowy figure in the background.

Miss Finnegan: The local government auditor's responsibilities are set out clearly in the Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 1972 and in subsequent Orders.

The Chairperson: However, if it is not clearly laid out as his assessment, the Department could carry out the assessment. You are saying that the local government auditor assesses the key areas of the reasonable standard of the economy and excessive expenditure.

Mr McConnell: He will report to us.

The Chairperson: When it is not clearly laid out that you refer to the local government auditor, the Department could make the determination. Is that not correct?

Miss Finnegan: The Department would not have the evidence without obtaining the information from the local government auditor. The Department receives figures, but we do not analyse councils' accounts.

The Chairperson: Why is that not included for clarity?

Mr McConnell: The second part of that would be the follow-on.

The Chairperson: That follow-on concerns the Assembly's responsibility and authority.

Mr McConnell: We shall certainly look at that. I need to check the provisions of the 1972 Act, how they cover this legislation and whether it is simply a reference to that Act.

Miss Finnegan: The words that we have used in the clause are exactly the same as those used in the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1982.

The Chairperson: However, as you know, authority and responsibility have changed dramatically. Therefore, just because the words were included in that Act does not mean that they should remain in this legislation. If something was neglected, that does not mean that we should neglect it in our legislation.

Mr McConnell: Or whether it simply means, from a legal point of view, a reference to earlier legislation.

Miss Finnegan: The questions on the reduction of the general grant deal with much of what we have been discussing. The next area covers economic development and the provisions for the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to issue directions. We discussed those areas with that Department. It does not intend to issue further legislation. It thought that it would issue similar guidance to that which the former Department of the Environment issued in 1992. It also said that it would be non-statutory.

Mr Ford: In that case, I am at a loss as to what the word "directions" means in clause 6(4).

Mr McConnell: The last sentence in the answer —

Mr Ford: The Bill uses the term "directions". You talk about guidance and specifically used the term "non-statutory". What does the word "directions" mean?

Mr McConnell: Mr Ford previously raised that point. The last paragraph of the Department's answer to the Committee says:

"The Department would accept that clarification in the wording of this clause and in the Explanatory and Financial Memorandum will be necessary."

You are correct that directions are not guidance.

Mr Ford: It is more than the wording. Many Departments issue guidance, but if it is non-statutory, surely it should not be mentioned at all.

Miss Finnegan: Councils cannot do what they like in relation to economic development; they must work within parameters. That would be in the form of guidelines issued by the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment. When the Department of the Environment was responsible for it, we always had to be careful when approving projects that our guidelines were being followed. We did not want councils to duplicate what LEDU or the IDB was doing. Guidelines are needed so that there are parameters within which councils can operate.

As Mr McConnell said, we must amend the wording to make clear that they are guidelines rather than a formal direction.

Mr McConnell: In many ways, we are speaking about another Department. I understand that the intention is to ensure that there is no duplication of effort. It is as simple as that. For that purpose, councils should adhere to the Department of Trade, Enterprise and Investment's guidelines.

Mr Ford: Do you suggest that there will be guidelines and that the Department of Trade, Enterprise and Investment will have a role in saying what councils may or may not do? It seems to me that you are still skating somewhere between a formal piece of legislation and informal guidance without being entirely sure which it is. There is also nothing in subsection (4) that relates to consultation with district councils to draw up any guidelines, directions or Regulations.

The Chairperson: Although guidelines sound perfectly simple and helpful, we must know what they are. Clause 6(4) says: “a district council shall exercise”, not “a district council might exercise”.

Mr McConnell: That is why we must examine the wording. The Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment’s primary intention is simply to ensure that 26 district councils are not doing their own thing in economic development willy-nilly.

The Chairperson: Time and time again it has been voiced as a concern in the information that we have hitherto received from district councils. There must therefore be proper and meaningful consultation on what the word “guidelines” means.

Mr McConnell: How that consultation is reflected in the legislation is a matter for us to discuss with the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment. I presume that it would be along the lines of guidelines drawn up following consultation with councils. There must be some way for councils to do what they feel they must do while ensuring that that does not in any way compromise other activities in the area.

The Chairperson: Must the guidelines be backed up by secondary legislation?

Miss Finnegan: The Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment has conveyed to us that that is not its intention.

The Chairperson: I should like to know exactly what its intention is before I approve something of which I have no clear understanding.

Mr McConnell: We must return with the rewording in any case, and the point that you make about consultation is extremely salient. We shall need to consult with the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment about what it intends to do to satisfy the Committee regarding consultation.

Mr Ford: I have another question on clause 6, although not on subsection (4). I raised the issue of vesting land with the Minister in the Chamber. His response was that it was covered not by this Bill but elsewhere. He did not make clear whether the powers laid down elsewhere would extend to economic development. Clarification would be helpful, although it need not come today.

Miss Finnegan: We need legal advice on that, but our understanding is that the provision in the Bill gives councils the power to acquire, hold and develop land. The Minister referred to the Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 1972, which gives general powers to councils to acquire and vest land. There is substantial legislation. Our understanding is that something more may be needed — perhaps a separate clause to allow councils to vest land specifically for economic development.

Mr Ford: That is the apparent lacuna. It is unclear when the economic development powers were granted, and now is surely the time to address that.

Miss Finnegan: Yes. If our solicitors say that what we have is sufficient, councils will have the power to acquire land for economic development. That is now a function of the council. That is acceptable as far as vesting is concerned because it is covered by the 1972 Act. If the solicitors say that, there is nothing more to be done. However, if they say that a separate clause is needed for councils to vest land for economic development purposes, it will have to be included.

Mr McConnell: Mr Ford is correct — it is complex. The Department for Social Development has powers of vesting for the acquisition of land. There is still much to cover on that.

The Chairperson: You will have to return to answer questions that we did not have time to ask today and to clarify several other points. Have councils specifically consulted on the precise terms of clause 6?

Miss Finnegan: The answer that I had submitted to the Committee on whether councils had been consulted on the precise terms of the clause was wrong. The problem is that we are caught between the former Department of the Environment and the former Department of Economic Development. We are trying to piece everything together to see exactly what happened. I understood that the consultation on 27 November 1997 was on the precise terms of the clause. The consultation was, in fact, on the proposals as announced by Lord Dubs at that time. There was, however, a good response to those proposals — 23 out of 26 councils responded — but it was not on the detail of the clause itself. The old Department of the Environment had preferred the clause contained in this Bill.

The Chairperson: That was on 11 September 1997. Several councils have written to the Committee about their concerns. They agree on the need to move in that direction, but they must have the situation clarified to know exactly to what they are agreeing. The letter of 11 September 1997 does not appear to contain anything of note.

Miss Finnegan: A discussion paper, of which you have a copy, went out to councils following that announcement.

Mr McConnell: It is unfortunate, but what Miss Finnegan has said is absolutely true. This piece of legislation fell to another Department. There was then pressure from the councils, mainly because of European Community money and how to obtain and use it. We responded late in the day. There were shortcomings.

The Chairperson: The Committee can help by allowing you to have the responses it has received from councils on the economic development subsection, if that would help.

Mr McConnell: It would.

The Chairperson: It is a guide to the councils' thinking. We can help to get a clear understanding of what local government is saying. The Committee has received 15 responses to its request and more will arrive. Mr Barr, I am sorry that you did not get to speak today.

Mr McConnell: He has been busy with community safety.

The Chairperson: I hope that you listened to the debate on 20 May about community safety, and have taken on board some of the comments made. Many people thought that this was a simple situation that would be accepted without question, but there is much concern. The Department must answer matters that were raised in the debate — for example, duplication and fragmentation of responsibility.

Mr Barr: To be fair, some of those questions might be better addressed to the Northern Ireland Office (NIO) rather than to the Department of the Environment.

The Chairperson: If that is so, we shall get the NIO to come along at the same time to assist you. We are happy to do that.

Mr McConnell: We shall work with the Committee staff to see where the balance lies.

The Chairperson: That is perfectly acceptable.

Mr Barr: The NIO is consulting at present on the community safety strategy, which is open until 5 July. That gives ample opportunity for consultees to raise those particular issues that were raised in the House, and for the NIO to address those issues. If the Committee wishes to raise concerns about the strategy, I am sure that it would be free to do so.

The Chairperson: The Committee must find out the responses to those issues that have been raised in the Assembly. We need to ascertain whether the answers are satisfactory. Those points arose in the debate, and we cannot run away from that. It is better that we do it now, because they will come up again in the Assembly.

Mr McConnell: Some of the issues raised can be answered without further reference to the consultation paper. The NIO may wish to talk about some issues, but that is entirely a matter for that Office.

The Chairperson: Work with the Committee staff, because the Committee will be happy to facilitate you in any way it can.

Mr McConnell: Thank you for that offer. Frankly, it is my strong belief that, if the situation continues, nothing will happen, which is to the detriment of everyone.

The Chairperson: Thank you very much for your attendance.

The Deputy Chairperson: The Committee welcomes Mr Given and Ms Hood from the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development. As you know, the Fur Farming (Prohibition) Bill stands referred to the Committee following completion of its Second Stage in the Assembly this week.

The Committee Stage is a detailed scrutiny of the Bill's provisions and will consist of three phases. The first phase, starting today, consists of policy briefing and evidence taking so that we can decide on possible areas for amendment. The Committee has sent letters to an agreed list of bodies asking for their views. A press release has also been issued, offering other interested parties an opportunity to make a submission. Once the first phase has been completed, we will move to formal clause-by-clause scrutiny and then produce a report.

The Committee will now hear your statement and then ask questions.

Mr Given: I presented the Committee with a paper earlier this week. I do not have much to add.

The Labour Party pledged some years back to introduce a Bill to prohibit fur farming. A private Member's Bill to ban it fell by the wayside, so the Government picked it up, and an Act was passed for England and Wales, where fur farms existed. Scotland followed, although it does not have any fur farms, and we are now doing the same.

The Deputy Chairperson: Paragraph 13 of your written submission says that the decision to prosecute for the secondary offence of knowingly causing or permitting the keeping of animals for a prohibited purpose will be discretionary. What will be the criteria and who will decide when to prosecute?

Ms Hood: Are you referring to the explanatory memorandum or to the paper that was sent earlier?

The Deputy Chairperson: I am referring to the explanatory memorandum.

Mr Given: The Department will investigate if it believes that someone is, by proxy, allowing such practices to take place.

The Deputy Chairperson: Is it possible that people here are running fur-farming businesses that you do not know about?

Mr Given: It is possible, but it is hard to believe that such practices would not have come to our attention in one way or another over the past 20 years. If such businesses existed we would have been told because there are enough people around the country from the Department and the rest of the public sector for such activity not to be noticed.

The Deputy Chairperson: In many parts of the country, there are small businesses that very few know about. What would be your approach if you found that such a business had been around for a long time?

Mr Given: It would depend whether it had to be licensed — for mink or Arctic foxes. It is possible that the business could deal in fur-bearing animals that had not already been legislated for. Until this Bill becomes law, nothing can be done about such cases.

The Deputy Chairperson: Can you close a business that has been in operation for 15 to 20 years?

Mr Given: At the moment, it could be stopped if it was dealing with mink or Arctic foxes, because it would be operating without a licence. Beyond that, nothing could be done.

The Deputy Chairperson: Paragraph 20 mentions a lobby group in London that has been in constant contact with the Department about progress on the proposed Bill. Can you give us contact details of that group so that we can ask it to make a written submission to the Committee?

Mr Given: I cannot tell you off the top of my head, but the information can be made available.

Ms Hood: I may have details of the lobby group. It has not been in contact since it found out that the Bill was going through the Assembly.

The Deputy Chairperson: Is the Bill proposed for Northern Ireland an exact replica of the GB Act, and, if not, what are the differences?

Mr Given: I am not aware of any significant differences.

Ms Hood: The principles are exactly the same, but the GB Bill contains compensation clauses because fur-farming businesses existed there. Our Bill just has an enabling power to create a compensation scheme.

The Deputy Chairperson: Are the fur-farming businesses in GB licensed?

Ms Hood: GB had only mink farms. There were 13 licensed mink farms when the Bill came into effect in December 2000. I understand that there are no longer any such businesses in GB.

Mr Armstrong: Which animals can be used for fur production?

Mr Given: I had not thought of it in those terms, but it would be any animal that was produced, bred and slaughtered for its fur rather than for food. I may not have described that well.

Mr Armstrong: It is not just foxes and mink.

Ms Hood: There are others, including the muskrat, which is also known as the musquash, the chinchilla, and the fisher. The most common are the mink and the Arctic fox. There must have been Arctic foxes in Northern Ireland in 1988, as there was an Order on how to keep them.

Mr Armstrong: Are animals going to be named in the Bill, or will it be a broad spectrum?

Ms Hood: No.

Mr Given: It will be a broad spectrum.

Mr McHugh: It is difficult to ask the right questions to ensure that everything is covered. Members have questioned the need for a compensation clause in the Bill. How can we prevent people from temporarily moving from the South to the North and starting up farms? Will we be safe from that? How long would it take people to start up a new business and get compensation? We do not want to pay out any money. It only takes a legal technicality for that to happen.

Then there is the moral issue. Why are we allowing fur to be sold? Could there be any free-range mink running free and then being trapped?

Mr Given: I am not sure about free-range mink, and catching them would be difficult. Fur farmers would be carrying on a fur-farming business, and that would come within the ambit of the Bill.

The Bill cannot tackle the sale of fur. That is an issue for others. If we accept the public morality argument, we should promote the Bill and show that the practice of fur farming is not a proper thing to do in the United Kingdom. There are a few fur farms in the Republic and further afield, and I do not know if their legislation will go further. We can only spread the gospel of prohibiting the production of fur, and then the sale of fur will be less of an issue.

Setting up fur farms in the interim is possible. The Department will be telling farmers that fur farming is to be prohibited shortly and that no fur farms will be allowed.

Mr McHugh: Would they need a licence?

Mr Given: They would need a licence for Arctic fox and mink. Problems might arise if they started something else. In the absence of legislation we can only say that we are legislating to ban the practice and make it clear that no compensation will be given to anyone who sets up a fur farm. That would be a technical and legal point, and I hope that it does not come to that.

The Deputy Chairperson: One issue arises from the report's information pack, which all Members received. London seems to be the centre of the fur trade. It is big business there, providing employment for many in clothing industries, et cetera. Will they not lobby strongly to try to retain fur farming? It is a major industry in the Netherlands, and we are part and parcel of Europe. Legislation affects all parts of Europe, as we know from beef and so on. It is free trade.

Mr Given: This is past the post in England and Wales; the legislation is in force. Whatever lobbying was done was overcome. The Act is in place.

The Chairperson: However, you would have to agree that the fur trade is a big business in the Netherlands. We are all part and parcel of Europe now. We can stop it here in some areas —

Mr Given: Sure, but if we stop it and present the right arguments, the European Commission may agree. It may take a while, but I hope that the practice will be banned across Europe.

The Deputy Chairperson: Conversely, we could introduce legislation that might not stand up in Europe.

Mr Given: That is correct and a chance that we must take. However, there is a public morality argument in the Treaty of Rome that we are setting our sights on as the basis on which we can bring this legislation into force.

Mr Paisley Jnr: I want to speak about organically raised mink. It must make a person feel better to know that her coat used to run around. If you shot one of those animals, there would not be much left of it. You would probably have to kill five times as many to make a coat. Getting to the serious point of the proposed legislation, is this a morality Bill or an animal welfare Bill? I am looking at paragraph 3 of your paper as I ask that question.

Mr Given: The Government across the water based their arguments on public morality, that it was not right to rear animals and kill them solely for their fur. It is reasonable to take wool or other material off a food-bearing animal and use that for clothing and so on. To that extent, it is not a welfare Bill. I do not know the standards that are required for keeping mink in England, but obviously standards exist. I am not aware of any cases in which those standards have been breached, though it may well have happened. Some people say that you must keep the animals in relatively small cages, and that is not acceptable on welfare grounds. Compassion in World Farming is advancing that argument in the Republic.

Mr Paisley Jnr: It is interesting to hear what the Labour Party did in England, but we are talking about what the Executive or the Minister here intend to do. Is this morality or animal welfare legislation?

Mr Given: It is an issue of public morality. There is no welfare issue.

Mr Paisley Jnr: It is definitely not a welfare issue?

Mr Given: We are banning something that we do not have, so we have never had a welfare problem. I am not sure why that thinking exists.

Mr Paisley Jnr: Your paper says that the ban is sought on grounds of public morality rather than animal welfare, although that too is a consideration. Then you give some instances of the reasons why animal welfare is a consideration. I want to be absolutely clear: is this a welfare or a morality issue? I will come to the point of my question in a moment.

Mr Given: It is a morality issue.

Mr Paisley Jnr: That is definite?

Mr Given: Welfare will only arise down the line.

Mr Paisley Jnr: It was spelt out clearly in the debate in the House on 21 May that this was nothing to do with animal welfare. The Minister's own words were:

"this is not a welfare issue".

Mr Given: Animals are slaughtered every day for food. There is a welfare argument there.

Mr Paisley Jnr: We are not slaughtering mink —

Mr Given: If you were keeping mink and slaughtering them for their fur, there would be a welfare consideration. Welfare standards would have to be set.

Mr Paisley Jnr: There is nothing in the Bill that addresses welfare issues. It is a morality Bill.

Mr Given: That is correct.

Mr Paisley Jnr: It is important to know the nature of the Bill. A few matters arise from that, and because we are not concerned with animal welfare, I shall set some of them aside. You have answered my Colleague's question about specifying animals. You say that you are not interested in specifying animals, that you want the Bill to be a broad brush, making it illegal to raise an animal for its coat. Would that apply to goats?

Ms Hood: No.

Mr Given: Not if they were being slaughtered for their meat.

Mr Paisley Jnr: If I became an entrepreneur and decided to create mink steak, could I raise them for that meat and sell the by-product of their fur?

Mr Given: I do not like the thought of that at all, although I imagine that you could.

Mr Paisley Jnr: I could.

Mr Given: I think you could. I would like to take advice on that question.

Mr Paisley Jnr: I would like to hear that advice, because it is an interesting matter. It might not taste nice, but the value of the fur might make up for the lack of sales of the meat.

In an answer to Mr Savage, you said that selling would become less of an issue. If we succeed in banning the raising of animals solely for fur, we might persuade the rest of Europe that what they are doing is morally wrong. I think that is a fair reflection of what you said. However, 164,000 people are employed in the fur industry in Europe. There are over 6,000 businesses and 129,000 retail outlets, so it is unlikely that a ban here will have a dramatic impact. It might make the product even more exclusive than it is now, more desirable and, therefore, more costly. That could be the result of our good and moral intention.

Mr Given: Is that a reason for not banning it on the grounds of morality? That is the intention of the Bill.

Mr Paisley Jnr: No. I am saying that the hope that it might make Europe take a moral stand is a vain hope.

Mr Given: There is only a little hope of that. I am not saying that the Bill will transform Europe, but we must do what we think is right. It may be that the Commission will take the matter up in due course. It may take many years, but that does not make it unreasonable for us to take that step.

(The Chairperson takes the Chair).

Mr M Murphy: I believe that the mink meat referred to by Mr Paisley Jnr is a delicacy in Japan. How can we overcome that? Has a licence to farm mink ever been granted here?

Mr Given: I think so. However, I have not been able to research that.

Mr M Murphy: Can we get that information?

Mr Given: I do not know. We can try.

Ms Hood: We would be going back a long time, to the late 70s.

Mr Given: We have been trying to find out, but we have not found the file.

Ms Hood: I believe that it was valuable. I presume that a licence must have been granted at some time.

Mr Given: Mr Paisley asked whether mink could be considered a delicacy. I do not know, but stranger things have happened. He suggested that the sale of the meat might become unnecessary because the fur is so valuable. If it came to the bit, we might have to learn to live with it.

Mr Paisley Jnr: Do you mean if it came to the bite?

Mr Given: We might have to legislate again. If the majority of the income generated by an animal came from the sale of its fur that might not constitute proper food farming.

Mr Paisley Jnr: Companies, such as the Lisburn Hide Company Ltd, cannot export beef, so its true market value is not known. If your information is true, the legislation could impact on companies that sell the by-products of animals, such as the hide, at a good price. If the hide became more valuable than the original product, that could put those companies out of business.

Mr Given: Can you explain that further?

Mr Paisley Jnr: You said that if a company were to raise mink on the pretence that it was for its meat, even though it was for its fur, it would meet the requirements of the Bill. You say that the law would need to be amended to ban the raising of mink for meat if the animals' meat was not the main source of income. A result of the devastating BSE ban is that beef is not sold for its true value. However, companies such as the Lisburn Hide Company trade hide for a good price, so those companies would be badly affected if that loophole were closed.

Mr Given: I do not know what I could do about that. Cattle and sheep are killed for food. If it is decided that mink can be killed for food, the fact that its by-product is valuable is irrelevant. I am not sure how the desired end result could be achieved.

Mr Paisley Jnr: Neither am I. There is a problem with morality legislation.

Mr Given: I hope that that problem does not arise.

Mr Douglas: You said that welfare was not an issue; however, it is so on the mainland, where mink farming is commonplace. In the 1960s, the farming community here considered seriously the possibility of mink farming. The industry did not take off because mink, if they escape from farms, can have a serious impact on the welfare of birds and other animals. That is a problem on the mainland. I am not opposed to people wearing fur or fur farming, but I am concerned about the harm that mink can cause.

Mr Given: The welfare of other animals is a wider issue. I was referring to the welfare of the mink, but I take your point, and I have read about that problem.

The Chairperson: Clause 1(2) creates the secondary offence of causing or permitting another person to keep animals for their fur — for example, a person who grants a tenancy of land. Would a person who buys the animals for slaughter, or who is involved in the slaughter, be subject to subsection 2? Does it apply to someone who buys the animals after they have been slaughtered?

Ms Hood: Buying is slightly different from being involved in the raising and keeping of animals. The Department is trying to address that in the Bill. The Department has no control over what is bought in a shop; it is trying to stop fur farming at the source.

The Chairperson: Could subsection 2 apply to someone who buys fur?

Mr Given: That would be going too far. The crux of the subsection is that it can be applied either to someone who allows fur farming to take place, or who is involved in it. The Department could not take it any further. It targets the person who is involved in fur farming, or who allows it to happen.

Mr Paisley Jnr: Is that consistent? Although it may not be an offence to kill an elephant, and to possess, or to sell, its ivory in the country in which it was reared and killed, it may be so in many other countries. The clause deals with the same principle. If, according to the legislation, it is illegal to raise and kill an animal for its fur, surely it should be an offence to sell it. It should also, therefore, be an offence for the daddy of them all — the buyer — to purchase the product that is creating the demand for animals to be killed in the first place.

Mr Given: Those are a range of downstream offences — being in possession and selling.

Mr Paisley Jnr: That is why, perhaps, “morality legislation” does not work. Perhaps animal welfare issues should be addressed separately in a different Bill.

Mr Given: The Bill is intended to prohibit the keeping of animals, and does not address those downstream offences.

The Chairperson: The Committee must deal with the Bill. It cannot change it, because it is at Second Stage. That might not have been the case had the Committee been consulted earlier; however, it must deal with what is on the table now.

There is a conflict between morality and animal welfare. The Government seem to say that there is a moral question. The response to that moral question is similar to the Labour Party's receiving money from the publishers of atrocious photographs, but rejecting funds from Gallagher's on the grounds that it makes tobacco. To enter the realm of morality is to tread on dangerous ground; to try to legislate on grounds of morality leads one on to even more dangerous ground.

Mr Given: Despite the labels that are put on the exercise, its purpose is merely to stop people from keeping animals for the production of fur.

The Chairperson: Clause 2(5) permits a person who claims to have an interest in the animals to apply to the court in order to resist the issuing of a forfeiture order. That implies that those suspected of owning animals for fur farming would be notified, in advance, of the court's intention to issue that order. Is the Department not concerned that that will allow the owner/breeder time to remove animals from the premise before the order is enforced?

Mr Given: I do not think so. There is always a risk that people will remove the animals, but the person will still ultimately be guilty of the offence of keeping them, irrespective of whether they are still there.

The Chairperson: Should there not be a provision to prohibit the removal of the animals as soon as the court announces its intention to make such an order? If the court rules to make an order, should that not be the time from which the animals' removal might constitute a breach? That would avoid premises being found empty.

Mr Savage: That is important.

Mr Given: So you wish to make the removal of the animals an offence once a forfeiture order is in place?

Mr Savage: Someone might have been operating a business in Northern Ireland for some 10 or 15 years, without the Department's knowledge? How could it stop him? Will he be deemed to have been trading illegally for 15 years? That point is very important.

Mr Given: He may not be trading illegally.

Mr Savage: No, but that will be the case once the Bill is enacted.

Mr Given: If such traders exist, we will certainly have to examine compensation arrangements, because their businesses will be closed under the new law.

Mr Paisley Jnr: Might the Department consider an amendment to clause 2(5) to prohibit removal of the animals once the court has announced its intention to make a forfeiture order?

Mr Given: We would be happy to consider an amendment if the Committee so wishes. Obviously, one would need more time to reflect.

Mr Paisley Jnr: Perhaps you could return to report your considered view.

The Chairperson: Clause 4 allows entry into premises to investigate the offence of keeping animals. Is there no power of entry for the secondary offence of knowingly causing or permitting the commission of that crime?

Mr Given: Clause 4 relates to the premises on which the animals are kept. Are you interested in the right to enter any other premises?

The Chairperson: I am interested in why there is no power of entry for the secondary offence of knowingly causing or permitting animals to be kept.

Mr Given: A power of entry would not help, since, in the circumstances you mention, I assume you would be looking for records. You could not enter the person's private dwelling anyway.

The Chairperson: So there is no possibility of inspecting records or correspondence that might provide evidence of causing or permitting the keeping of animals?

Mr Given: Once you start on the premises where fur farming is being carried out, you can probably move on. It would be a question of the police securing a court order to seize records, whether kept on the premises or elsewhere.

The Chairperson: It seems a little loose, with ways of evading responsibility.

Mr Given: Are we back to the question of morality?

The Chairperson: Clause 4(7) defines premises as excluding a private dwelling. Is it the case that animals could therefore be kept for their fur in such a private dwelling?

Mr Given: Yes, in theory I assume that that would be the case.

The Chairperson: That is a very substantial loophole, and I should think it needs re-examining.

Mr Paisley Jnr: It is like growing your own clothes.

Mr Given: You are still not allowed to keep the animals. The fact that the definition of premises does not include private dwellings does not mean that you can keep fur-bearing animals.

The Chairperson: Yes, but who could enter to check if someone is keeping them?

Mr Given: Someone would be bound to let us know if that were going on.

The Chairperson: Clause 5(1) allows for a compensation scheme that will pay for losses incurred as a result of the Bill's enactment. Will any of the 13 businesses in England and Wales be able to relocate to Northern Ireland between now and the Bill's enactment and be compensated for their losses?

Mr Given: I was asked that question earlier. In theory, that is probably true. Having accepted the morality argument, part of the purpose of the Bill is to avoid the relocation here by people from England or elsewhere. If the Bill becomes law, that point will be legally interesting. One could tell anybody trying to relocate here that the practice is banned, or will be banned shortly, that fur farms will not be licensed in Northern Ireland, and that we would not be interested in compensating anybody. Doubtless lawyers could argue for a considerable time about how that would work in practice.

Mr McHugh: I am still interested in organic mink. Does the Department know how many mink or fox are in the wild? Before the introduction of the bounty scheme for foxes, there were fur-farming operations across the border that were almost as big as factories. Under the provisions of the Bill, could people continue to trap mink? The lifting of the bounty on foxes would have a detrimental effect on the welfare of other wildlife, including any mink that escape, because there are so many foxes.

Mr Given: Are there?

Mr McHugh: Yes.

Mr Given: I do not know how many are in the wild in Northern Ireland.

Mr McHugh: The number of foxes is phenomenal.

Mr Given: They are not causing the same problems as they did 20 or 30 years ago.

Mr McHugh: If they are not hunted and trapped, they must eat animals such as duck, pheasant and other wild birds. Given that impact on the countryside, could trapping as part of a fur business continue? Some are happy to do that.

Mr Given: That would be a small-scale business. You might call it a business, but it would be at the low end of a business operation.

Mr McHugh: Would those who keep a couple of those animals as pets be bound to release them?

Mr Given: The animals are slaughtered for their fur, and if people do that, they will be running an illegal business under the new legislation.

The Chairperson: Can the Bill be amended to the effect that once it is announced that the legislation will proceed, there will be a deadline beyond which nobody can start a business?

Mr Given: The legislation has already been introduced. I am unsure of how such an amendment could be tabled. I take the point, and I am happy to consider it.

Mr Ford: Given that you must make a compensation scheme in accordance with the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR), it is reasonable that you should state on the record that any such scheme would not include compensation for anybody who established businesses subsequent to the introduction of the Bill. Otherwise, every member of the Committee could rush out and establish a fur-farming business.

Mr Given: I would be happy to state that, and we established that point in April. The policy paper that went out to all and sundry states:

“No claims for compensation as a result of the ban will be considered for any business which has not submitted a licence application before the date of this letter.”

Mr Paisley Jnr: Does that mean that a fur farmer must have a licence from the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development?

Ms Hood: That is the case for the fur farming involving certain animals, such as mink and Arctic fox.

Mr Paisley Jnr: So, fur farming could not be added on to an existing business without a licence being obtained?

Ms Hood: No.

The Chairperson: Mr Given, will you consider the many points that the Committee has made today and advise us later of whether you intend to make any of the recommended changes?

Mr Given: Yes.

The Chairperson: The Committee must consult with other interested parties, but it wanted to discuss the matter with departmental officials first. Mr Given, would you keep in touch with the Clerk of the Committee and arrange to return to explain which matters you shall take on board, and why. It has been stated that no compensation will be made to parties who begin fur farming in Northern Ireland before the enactment of the Bill; it is important that that statement stand up in law.

Mr Given: No doubt the Clerk of the Committee will remind me of any points that I may have missed.

The Chairperson: We will give you a complete transcript of today's proceedings, which may help.

Mr Savage: For the purposes of the Bill, do rabbits fall into the category of fur-bearing animals? I dined at a top restaurant in Europe recently — not at my own expense, I may add — [Interruption].

The Chairperson: This is on the record.

Mr Savage: One of the top delicacies on the menu was squirrel. In Northern Ireland, the grey squirrel has become a pest, and if nothing is done about it there will be no red squirrels left. There must be a grey area here. We must get the matter right, and the Committee will one day have to make a decision on it.

The Chairperson: I would be very chary about eating squirrels because of the information that I have read about them. They are vermin carriers.

Mr Given: The judgement is that if an animal is being produced primarily for food, its fur can be used as a by-product; otherwise, it cannot be used. The issue is not black and white; it is grey.

Mr Savage: That concerns me.

Mr Given: I am not sure how that can be dealt with.

Mr Savage: I am not sure, either. Someone will have to make a decision, some day.

Mr Given: The Department dealing with the Act will have to judge whether the animals are produced primarily for food or fur. The case for closing the enterprise or not would be based on that judgement. We would have to leave the outcome to the good judgement of the courts.

Mr Armstrong: What is your definition of “farming”?

Mr Given: That question is too hard to answer.

Mr Armstrong: In the light of recent changes, agricultural farmers are wondering how they are defined.

Mr Given: Fur farming is a production business.

Mr Armstrong: Some European countries are discussing the production of food along the canals, at ports and around multi-storey buildings. Is this the direction that farming is taking? Will it soon be carried out without land and agricultural holdings?

Mr Given: That may well be, but if the farmer is in the business of producing fur, he will not be allowed to operate.

Mr Armstrong: Fur production has nothing to do with farming.

Mr Given: It is a production.

The Chairperson: It is a business.

Mr Douglas: The paper that we received states that fur is perceived as a luxury item, whereas meat is a key foodstuff. Beef cattle have been used for centuries but mink, for example, have been used only in the last hundred years. That is a good argument.

Mr Given: In the next 1000 years or so beef or sheep might no longer be eaten.

The Chairperson: There would be no more scrapie, other than scraping the bottom of the barrel. The Committee may have further questions when you return with your final recommendations on what can be done with the suggestions that it made. Thank you very much.

The meeting ended at 11.22 am.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

COMMITTEE FOR HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Tuesday 28 May 2002

CHILDREN (LEAVING CARE) BILL
(NIA 5/01)

Members present:

Dr Hendron (Chairperson)
Mr Gallagher (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr Berry
Rev Robert Coulter
Mr Hamilton
Ms Ramsey

Witnesses:

Ms N Ferris) Barnardo's
Mr B Nellis)

The Chairperson: The Committee welcomes Ms Nuala Ferris and Mr Brendan Nellis from Barnardo's. Thank you for providing documentation.

Mr Nellis: Ms Ferris and I have over 40 years' experience of working with young people in care and disadvantaged young people. It is important to emphasise that ours are practitioners' perspectives. We are standing in for our project officer and policy expert, who was on leave when the Committee invited Barnardo's to give evidence. Our presentation is based on our experience of young people in care.

I want to focus on the point that Sue Ramsey raised about the article, 34C(2), proposed in clause 2(3). The word "appoint" is not about choice; rather, it involves the allocation of work with a young person. Had the word "arrange" been used, as we wanted, it would have allowed the young person an element of choice as to the personal adviser they wanted. As Ms Coyle and Ms Keenan from First Key (NI) said, choice is important for young people, and our work with them is about working in partnership and allowing choice. Young people are experts on themselves. They should have a right to their say, especially on big decisions that affect their lives. They should have a right to choose with whom they need to work.

Today, we will look at those specific clauses in the documentation if the Committee wishes. We thought that the clauses were self-explanatory when we planned this. With Ms Ferris's support, I propose to go through the 10 points of our submission. Those 10 points are in the legislation, and we will try to elaborate on them from our practical experience.

Point 1 in our submission states:

"Access to benefits is a fundamental right for 16 and 17 year olds."

That means that all young people have a fundamental right to equal treatment. Many of our points parallel what First Key (NI) said, so I will not spend time on that, unless you want me to expand slightly.

The Chairperson: I am sorry to interrupt you, but we had problems getting a quorum earlier because other things are going on, such as an Assembly sitting. Five Committee members are present, which is a quorum, and one or two are under great pressure to get to other meetings. I apologise for asking you, but could you make your points in about six minutes? The Committee will otherwise be inquorate and will not be able to sit.

Mr Nellis: Our first point is about stigmatisation: labelling young people to be different. That would happen in the proposed system. We call it the free school meal syndrome. Young people who got free school meals were sometimes seen as different to those who had to pay for school meals.

In point 2, we note:

"If we remove the right of 16 and 17 year olds to benefits then we move them from reliance on an unlimited social security budget where once their basic entitlement has been proven they will receive an entitled amount to a Social Services budget that is limited."

Our point here is that because there is a crisis in the Health Service, resources are finite. There could be tremendous pressure to move resources to areas where need is perceived to be greater — to the primary-care system, for example. We know that that has already happened in some areas of community care, and we worry that it might happen here.

I hope that point 3 is almost self-explanatory. A right of appeal is very different from a complaints procedure. Barnardo's has a complaints procedure of which we are quite proud. It was formulated after cases such as that in Kincora, where young people did not find it easy to say that things were happening. Our complaints procedure is extremely transparent and open. It is very different from a right of appeal.

Point 4 argues for the retention of a basic right to social security for young people in this category, so that social services do not have to worry about basic income, thus freeing them to work as a corporate good parent and help young people financially with their limited resources.

Ms Ferris: Our experience is that 16- to 17-year-olds who have been in care live in absolute and abject poverty. They live on a subsistence income support allowance of £42.70 a week, from which they must pay for food, clothing, transport and leisure. Social services can currently give those young people any extra finance they need. For example, all young people living alone after leaving care at 16 or 17 must buy a TV licence, which costs over £109 a year. They are already living at subsistence level; they cannot even save for clothes. Please do not think that they can, for they cannot.

Social services act as any good parent would, by helping young people buy clothes and with expenses such as TV licences and insurance policies. If the young people have gathered up TVs or other equipment for their homes, and those things are stolen, they have no means of replacing them, since they are living at subsistence level.

In other words, social services can act as a good parent by giving the young people the extra money. If we move the entitlement to income support to social services, that will put pressure on them to provide the young people with a basic income for food, rent and so on, removing the extra allowances that they also need. Even if they want to socialise or travel, young people currently have very little money for it. The role of social services as a good parent giving money whenever needed is indispensable. That is one of the major points that we want to make concerning young people and poverty.

Mr Nellis: Point 5 concerns the question of passport benefits, which is a question that we shall leave with you. Who will pay, and where will the money come from? Perhaps there is an answer, but we do not have it. We are highlighting a matter of great concern to us. If the passport benefit is income support, who pays for the free dental treatment and prescriptions for glasses?

In our experience, you must be on some type of income support to gain access to the social fund. For example, a young person going for an interview can apply to the fund. We always encourage them to try for a grant rather than a loan. If they cannot get a grant, they will get a loan, meaning they can buy a suit for the interview. That facility is to be taken from them, with the result that they will be attending the interview in trainers. That is only one issue regarding passport benefits. We worry about exclusion of these young people.

Point 6 concerns the experience in England and Wales; currently, many social-work departments find their funding inadequate. Like the witnesses from First Key (NI), we worry about funding also.

Ms Ferris: Northern Ireland has received £0.5 million to implement the legislation, while the Scottish Executive were given £10 million for young people's education alone. In England, the quality protection programme brought in several hundreds of millions to back up the legislation. Despite that, colleagues in Barnardo's in England tell us that the funds are already insufficient.

Mr Nellis: On point 7, we argue that the legislation should be seen as an opportunity for young care leavers to get out of poverty. We worry about the discretion as to income levels for care leavers. In times of financial stress, we worry that the minimum subsistence will become the norm, not the exception. For example, if it is promised that income support payments will not go below £42 a week, that amount will become the norm. Therefore, young people who need extra for whatever reason — every young person is unique and their situations will be slightly different — will find limited resources to help them. That is especially worrying in an atmosphere where there is much financial pressure and squeeze on social services and the Health Service.

That brings me to point 8. There, we are talking about ring-fencing the money. In England, they were able to ring-fence it for two years. We worry about what happens after two years, because other money that was not ring-fenced was moved to primary care. If the money is not ring-fenced, young people are definitely going to lose out in the long term.

Ms Ferris: Point 9 is about restriction. If we make social services responsible for paying out the income to young people, that will remove their current flexibility to assist young people as a good parent. We understand that the Bill makes some provision for helping young people in education, but in one of the clauses it uses the word "may": social services "may" help them. It should be made a "duty" that they help them. Otherwise, on a stretched budget, it will not be made a priority for these young people.

Mr Nellis: I understand that your submission does not include point 10; I apologise for that. Point 10 should read:

"Managers and practitioners in Leaving and Aftercare Teams share the concern expressed by young people that the relationships between young people and their workers will be grievously undermined."

Social work is by its very nature a therapeutic process. We are working with young adolescents who have been through care and are coming out the other end at the age of 16. Our experience tells us that many manifestations come to fruition at that point. Young people are hurting from previous experiences. They start to work through that during adolescence. It is crucial that they have a firm working relationship with their social worker and other services to help them through that.

Exclusion from benefits changes their relationship with the social worker, who becomes more like a civil servant — there to deliver benefits and give income. One young person called him the 'bureau man'. That changes the focus of social work.

Ms Ferris: We are practitioners working with real adolescents in real relationships. We are always acting as a parent. You do not always get cosy partnerships with adolescent teenagers. They are sometimes conflictual, confrontational and difficult.

It is important that the social security system can at least offer independent access to income that is not dependent on a compulsory relationship with their social workers.

Mr Nellis: I want you to know about the young person's perspective. Their voice must be heard. This is work that we carried out with our young users, and their chairperson came up with this.

He said that he was against financial support, as young people would become dependent on the social worker for everything. He mentioned the changing relationship that I referred to and the idea of a social worker becoming like a civil servant.

He said that a young person must be allowed to flap his or her wings, make mistakes, be brushed down and helped to move on. At one time in his young life when he moved out of care, he did not have money for electricity because he used it on other things. After that he always kept £5 for an electricity card, having learnt from his experience of living in a cold house with no lights. That is not to suggest that all young care leavers should ever have to do that. However, he is saying that if the legislation is based on requirements of the trusts and social services and personal advisers are appointed, it does not allow for that movement. That is a young person's perspective; it is not necessarily my own, although I endorse it.

We have talked about his next point, which is that aftercare should remain voluntary and not compulsory. He went away and came back after a couple of years for more support, then disappeared and came back again.

There was no compulsory nature to his aftercare, and he thought that that faith was very supportive. He also said that money should not be mixed up with social support. Young people are forced to stay in the care system for longer whether they want to or not, and that ties up limited resources.

Rev Robert Coulter: Thank you. Your presentation has answered my question.

Ms Ramsey: Point 7 states that the minimum income level set for care leavers is at the discretion of social services. Given that the level of funding for social services across all trusts is poor, does that mean that children served by the North and West Belfast Health and Social Services Trust could receive a lower income than children served by the Foyle Community Trust?

Mr Nellis: That is possible.

Ms Ramsey: In the information you sent us you said that the equality impact assessment failed to identify people under section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 such as those from ethnic minorities. In the memorandum that came with the Bill, the Department told us that it does not see any difficulties on the equality issue.

Mr Nellis: That depends on how you define equality. Our definition of equality is that all young people, regardless of whether they are homeless, from ethnic minorities or coming from care, should be treated equally. As Ms Keenan said, the detail of equality is about labelling and stigmatisation as well as resource implications.

The Chairperson: Thank you very much for your documentation and presentation.

Ms D Coyle) First Key

The Chairperson: I welcome Ms Deirdre Coyle and Ms Paula Keenan from the First Key organisation, and I thank them for their helpful documentation. The Committee had a problem getting a quorum, and I apologise for the delay.

Ms Keenan: First Key is grateful for the opportunity to talk to the Committee about the Children (Leaving Care) Bill, as we are concerned about various issues.

You would be forgiven for thinking that First Key is an estate agent — it is not. It is the leaving care advisory service — a voluntary organisation that has worked in Northern Ireland for the past five years. It is totally independent of providers and focuses exclusively on care leavers. You may ask “Why does First Key focus exclusively on care leavers?” I do not want to bombard you with statistics, but one statistic that stayed with me relates to Fred and Rosemary West. You will remember all the stories in England about their reign of horror and terror there. Seven out of their 10 victims were care leavers, and that illustrates how vulnerable such young people are.

First Key is an advisory service. We do not provide direct services to care leavers. Instead, we work closely with care leavers. We train a pool of care leavers in research and evaluation skills, and those people then work alongside us as associates. We mostly work with the boards and trusts, and we advise them on how to develop their services. We provide training, evaluate after-care services and help the boards and trusts to design their services. That is all based on thorough consultation with care leavers. First Key provides a central reference point for all leaving and aftercare services in Northern Ireland, and it is connected to all of them. One of our important roles is to get people talking to each other.

Over the last five years First Key has learnt that that social services alone cannot hope to address or meet all the needs of care leavers, and they should not be expected to. There are needs in relation to housing, education, training, employment benefits, emotional support and community support. The responsible agencies must work together to be effective. That happens through children’s-services planning at board level, but there is a big gap at regional level when looking at the whole of Northern Ireland. That is why First Key is engaged in developing a multi-agency aftercare regional consortium. The Department is supporting us, and all the key agencies have signed up to participate in the consortium. That is an important development.

First Key warmly and enthusiastically welcomes the Children (Leaving Care) Bill. It is very good draft legislation. Strengthening the duties of trusts, focusing on assessment and planning, and appointing advisers are very effective measures. They need to be effective because the situation of care leavers is pretty dire. Statistics show that 50% of care leavers in Northern Ireland leave care with no educational or vocational qualifications, compared to about 6% of their peers who are not in care. Some 50% have moved house at least once six months after leaving care, and 20% of young women leaving care are pregnant or have had a child within six months.

We have consulted widely on the proposals and on the draft legislation. We believe that many of the minor concerns raised with us during our consultations will be addressed in the Regulations and guidance, and we are confident in the Department’s approach to compiling the Regulations and guidance.

We have two major concerns. Unsurprisingly, the first is that additional resources will be necessary if this legislation is to be effectively implemented — you cannot give boards and trusts more responsibilities without giving them more resources. The second involves the financial arrangements for 16- and 17-year-old care leavers, as outlined in clause 6 of the Bill. This idea, as I understand it, came from the English legislation and was designed to address an English problem. In England there are huge problems with 16- and 17-year-old care leavers disappearing out of the system and losing contact with social services. We do not have that problem in Northern Ireland to anywhere near the same extent; it simply does not happen here to that level. The problem here is that 16- and 17-year-olds leaving care have difficulty accessing benefits. That can be addressed by amending social security legislation — not, as is proposed in the Bill, by taking those young people out of the system. Social security legislation should be amended to give young care leavers of 16 and 17 years of age entitlement to income support. I believe that that is feasible and can be done.

The main messages are coming from the young people themselves. They are saying that they do not want to be stigmatised by being taken out of the system that everybody else belongs to. Also, the boards and trusts are saying that the way that they work with young people will be totally skewed if the legislation makes the boards and trusts responsible for deciding how much basic income support young care leavers should get. The danger is that these services in Northern Ireland are voluntary, with young people signing up to engage and get this support. The legislation would introduce a compulsory element if it were to say that young people's involvement in aftercare services is tied in to their basic living money and rent. Boards and trusts are alarmed at the possibility of that happening.

I do not want to take up too much of your time. You have a copy of our paper, which gives more detail about what we are proposing, and I now welcome the opportunity to address your specific concerns and any questions. If we cannot answer them today, I will supply you with a written answer as soon as possible.

Mr Hamilton: In your presentation you mentioned resources — in fact, you seemed to place a very heavy emphasis on that particular point. Bearing that in mind, do you consider that the money available is enough to make the Bill work? If not, what areas would need additional resources?

Ms Keenan: The money currently available for leaving and aftercare services throughout Northern Ireland is not enough. My basis for saying that is that we have visited every trust and board, and we have evaluated services. Boards and trusts, with the best will in the world, are not resourced to meet all the needs that exist. Some young people in Northern Ireland do not get any aftercare service. Therefore, the present money is already inadequate.

This Bill increases the duties on trusts. It is saying that trusts have to take a range of measures in relation to supporting young people, contacting young people and giving financial support for young people in further education. That increases their responsibilities and costs, and, therefore, I believe that extra resources need to be made available.

The Children (Leaving Care) Act in England has been operation since October last year, and additional resources, made available through the 'Quality Protects' initiative, accompanied it. I recently visited some projects in England, and those involved said that if it were not for the extra money from the 'Quality Protects' initiative, which we do not have as yet, they would not be able to manage.

Ms Ramsey: Thank you for your presentation and the papers that you sent to the Committee. The Committee received a copy of the responses that the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety received during the consultation period. Various issues were raised about the Bill. I take on board the fact that First Key broadly welcomes most aspects of the Bill; in my view the Bill has been a long time coming. Although some respondents welcome the employment of young persons' advisers, others are concerned that it might be too intrusive. If the young person lives in Derry when his or her adviser is appointed, does the adviser follow that young person if he or she decides to move to Belfast? That could create problems. I raised that concern with the Department last week. The Department is going to get back to the Committee on that.

You mentioned funding and the benefits based on the English model. I have heard reports that the benefit arrangements are not working in England. I understand where you are coming from, but can you point out where you see problems arising? As I understand it, and I may be wrong, rather than 16-and 17-year-olds applying for benefits from the Social Security Agency, they would apply for them from trusts.

You said that that was a key issue and that young people could be stigmatised. Please outline the process and explain why you see that as a problem. If young people apply to the trusts for benefits, surely they are the only people who will know. In case we have to change any part of the Bill, I would like to understand clearly why you feel that there is a problem. I am not suggesting that a problem does not exist.

Ms Keenan: The Bill states that personal advisers will be appointed for young people. First Key anticipates that those advisers will mostly be social services staff and aftercare workers. Young people already engage with aftercare workers, and the majority of young people are appreciative of the support that they get from those workers. I know of aftercare workers who call on young people at midnight to ask how they are feeling or to help them to move furniture. They do an enormous range of work.

The proposed legislation allows for a young person to choose somebody else to be his or her aftercare adviser. It may be a youth worker that they are close to, a teacher or a member of their extended family — [Interruption].

Ms Ramsey: Sorry to interrupt, but the presentation that the Committee received last week from the Department stated that the Bill would not provide for choice. That is recorded in the transcript of last week's meeting.

Ms Keenan: I am surprised about that.

Ms Coyle: Aftercare provision has to be based on partnership. As Ms Keenan pointed out, it is a voluntary service. These are young people that most need provision, and, if we make the arrangements compulsory and do not provide choice, the service will neither embrace young people nor meet their needs.

My understanding, based on my experience and practice in aftercare, is that choice is a key element in ensuring that young people engage with the workers who are there to support them. Under existing practice, I know of service providers that try to give young people that choice. There are constraints and limits, but the service providers try to accommodate choice as a means of staying in touch with the young people. The Bill states that we should take steps to stay in touch with young people. Therefore, to make the service work, we should make it as user-friendly and flexible as possible.

Ms Keenan: Many concerns were raised during our consultation, and I doubt whether we have heard anything different from what the Committee has heard. The devil is in the detail, and many of those concerns can be addressed through the guidance and Regulations. Our agency will certainly be involved, as will Barnardo's and a range of other agencies. That is where the detailed work will be done. We will not necessarily adopt the English guidance and Regulations wholesale. We, and the Department, intend to ensure that they pertain to our situation in Northern Ireland.

At present, 16- and 17-year-olds are often unable to access benefits. They are very vulnerable. The majority of young people who enter care do so for their own protection because they have been abused or neglected. Often, when they reach the point of leaving care, a great many emotional issues start to surface. Those young people have not had the experience of being raised — as, I hope, our children have — in a loving family environment, and they have never had anyone there for them. They have experienced changes of staff, and different people have dipped in and out of their lives. Suddenly they find that they are 16. They want to leave care, and they never want to see a social worker again in their lives. They must, therefore, have some method of income support.

Care leavers have great difficulty in signing up for a training course and receiving the related benefits — something that you would expect ordinary 16- and 17-year-olds to do. They cannot necessarily cope with getting up at 9 am, and they may not have the discipline to turn up, do the work and deal with everything that it entails. At 16 they are coping with emotional turmoil and an enormous transition — with the consequence that they lose out on benefits. It is very difficult for them to work their way through the maze of benefits and ensure that they get the money that they need.

One solution is to say that they can get the money from social services, but I feel that that is using a sledgehammer to crack a nut. The easiest way to ensure that those young people get a basic income and are able to access housing benefit is to recognise them as extremely vulnerable and change the social security legislation accordingly. Their situation is dire, and we must grant them the same automatic entitlement to income support as applies for young single parents. That will work and be clear to everyone. We need not remove the young people from the system or burden the social services with an additional role that they were not set up to perform.

Mr Berry: Thank you for your presentation. In relation to your last point, should we not seek to improve young people's chances of employment instead of having them depend solely on benefits? Some form of employment might help them to get through their problems. Is that not the best way forward? Can you see a better way forward? It would mean that they would not simply be dependent on benefits. They have experienced difficult times, and they will continue to experience them, but the way forward might lie in training them to enter full-time employment so that they are not dependent on benefits for the rest of their lives. Given that they are 16, there are potentially a couple of years available for such training.

Ms Keenan: You are absolutely right; the best thing is for social services, working in partnership with the Training and Employment Agency (T&EA), to devise schemes to get those young people into the workforce. Social services are directing their efforts towards that. However, we must ensure that there is a safety net for those young people who need additional support. They might be 18 before they reach the point where they can cope, so we advocate a safety net. I do not want to see young people on benefits — nobody wants that — but let us have a benefits safety net available. Young people are currently falling through the net.

Our agency is committed to getting the Housing Executive, the T&EA, the education and library boards and the Social Security Agency round a table together, representing all of Northern Ireland and working to establish protocols and schemes to really support those young people.

Ms Coyle: I take your point about our expectation that young people leave care to be dependent on benefits. I strongly agree with you that other measures can be taken. There is earlier intervention in relation to the in-care experiences of those young people, and what can be done in respect of educational outcomes for young people at age 16. I know that educational audits of young people's experiences while in care are taking place. A forthcoming piece of research in England exclusively looks at that.

The years between 16 and 18 are almost like a transitional period. Young people in care seem to need an extended period of adolescence and young adulthood. Because their starting points are so disadvantaged, they need that extended time to work, ideally, towards employment. That will impact on the whole quality and standard of their lives and their expectations for themselves.

The Chairperson: Can you explain how the English system treats 16- to 17-year-olds differently?

Ms Keenan: It is not so much that the social services system is different but that society is different. There are differences between England and Northern Ireland. One aspect relating to vulnerable young people leaving care in England is the attraction of London. We do not have that to nearly the same extent. London is a Mecca for young people. They think that they all they have to do is leave their small towns and go to London, but when they get there they are swallowed up and lose contact with social services. Belfast does not have quite the same attraction as London as a Mecca for young people. Communities are also tighter in Northern Ireland, and people notice more.

Social services teams and trusts are smaller. Northern Ireland is the same size as one local authority in England. Social workers have smaller areas to deal with, which, coupled with closer relationships and tighter communities, means that the same problem does not arise here.

The Chairperson: Thank you very much for answering our questions. Thank you too for your presentation and helpful documentation.

Mr L Mackle)

The Chairperson: We will now consider the Children (Leaving Care) Bill. The Committee's briefing paper contains submissions from the Children's Law Centre and the North and West Belfast Health and Social Services Trust. I welcome Mr Liam Mackle and Ms Tara Caul from the Children's Law Centre. Thank you for your documentation. I appreciate that this is an extensive topic and that the issues are important, but we would appreciate it if you could give us main headings rather than details. That will give my Colleagues time to ask questions.

Ms Caul: I thank the Committee for asking us to speak this afternoon. My colleague and I are from the Children's Law Centre in Belfast. I propose to briefly address some of the points in our main submission, which we have updated and provided for you today. Mr Mackle will then deal specifically with the proposal to exclude young people from the benefits system.

As you will be aware, the Children's Law Centre is an independent charity established in 1997. We provide training, information, research, advice and representation on children's law. We often advise young people who are looked after, and we thank you for the opportunity to speak to you about these matters.

I want to address our main submission. The first point that we made relates to the consultation process. In our submission to the Department, we said that there should be consultation with children and young people on the Bill. We remain of the view that young people should inform the decision-making process, perhaps particularly in relation to their proposed exclusion from the benefits system.

I will give people the opportunity to look at the document.

The Chairperson: Does anyone wish to comment at this point? It would be better if you finish your points, and then my Colleagues will comment.

Ms Caul: Everyone has the document?

The Chairperson: Yes, we have.

Ms Caul: We welcome the introduction of a duty to assess and meet needs, which obviously strengthens the position of care-leavers under the Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1995. We recommend that that new duty should apply to as many young people leaving care as possible, and that any discretionary element should be removed. There is no detail in the current Bill about eligibility criteria, and it is essential that consultees be given the opportunity to address the detail required for regulation at a later stage in this process. In particular, we recommend that the category of relevant children include children and young people who, when they reach the age of 16, are detained in hospital or in a juvenile justice or young offenders' centre.

We are concerned about the comment, on page 11 of the initial consultation document, that, under the new arrangements, existing spending on aftercare services and benefits would be drawn together and used by trusts to provide support and assistance. In our opinion, the issue of additional resources must be addressed as a matter of urgency before this Bill is enacted. In England, the introduction of similar legislation was supported by new funding from the children's social services special grant, which was set up by local authorities as part of the quality protects programme. In our view, for the proposals in this Bill to be effective, additional funds must be allocated to support its implementation.

My next point concerns emergency assistance. The trust must retain the power to help young people in an emergency or where there has been a breakdown in relations with a social worker. We recommend that it be a duty of trusts to prepare and review pathway plans for all young people leaving care, and that that duty last until the young person is 21, or 24 where the young person is continuing in education. We believe that the current Bill purports to do that.

The task of the young person's adviser appears exceptionally onerous. We therefore ask whether substantial and significant funding will be provided to introduce them. We also recommend that the adviser have an advocacy role on behalf of the young person and should contact an independent advocate or solicitor should matters in relation to pathway plans not be agreed.

The Bill should reflect the need for assessment and planning to be carried out in whatever manner is in the child's best interests, rather than being driven by financial considerations. We are keen to see regulations introduced to govern suitable accommodation for care-leavers. There must be detailed consultation about what constitutes suitable accommodation for a care-leaver. The Bill does not outline minimum standards for financial support, and the term "maintaining" must be defined more specifically.

We shall deal with the issue of exclusion from benefits after we have dealt with the point about education.

We believe that there should be a legal duty on trusts to assist with the costs associated with a young person's education until they are 24, and that the proposed new article 35B should be amended to use the word "shall" instead of "may".

My colleague Mr Mackle will address the issue of exclusion from benefits.

Mr Mackle: One of the Bill's professed aims is to streamline the whole system of financial payments to young people. Under the current system, young people leaving care may be able to claim income support in some circumstances and jobseeker's allowance in others — and, more often than not, allowances for training programmes that they undertake. We support the submission made by First Key that the current proposals are not the best way of streamlining the financial arrangements for children leaving care and that a far more satisfactory provision would be to amend schedule 1B to the Income Support (General) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1987 and add "relevant 16- to 17-year-olds" as a group entitled to income support.

That would remove from the trusts the onerous responsibility of taking care of these people's financial considerations as well as of their welfare. The social security system already has the technical capabilities to deal with this, but a whole new tier of administration would be created by transferring those responsibilities to trusts. The number of people in this group in Northern Ireland is small compared to that in England and Wales. In Northern Ireland, we may be dealing with fewer than 1,000 young people a year. It would not be cost-effective to transfer those responsibilities to the trust, so the Social Security Agency should undertake this work. Removing the financial considerations would leave the young persons' advisers free to concentrate on other aspects of the pathway plans, such as education, building independent living skills and building capacity for coping with adult life. We support First Key's proposals on the financial provisions made yesterday.

The Chairperson: Ms Caul, in your submission you recommend "that the new duty to assess and meet needs should apply to all of the above young people and that any discretionary elements should be removed."

All of your points are important, but that one is particularly so. Following consultation on the Bill, did the Department take your views into account? If not, what are your concerns?

Ms Caul: It is important to say that, overall, we welcome the Bill. We have been involved in the consultation process with the Department, and our document reflects a position that has been updated since the drafting of the Bill, so certain points have been taken into consideration. This document details the matters that have not been changed. We have tried to indicate where the Department has taken on board issues that we raised.

Mr Berry: With regard to former relevant children and education, other submissions have argued that young people leaving care need at least as much ongoing care and support in, for example, education and training beyond the age of 18, as children in a stable family environment do. Given what your submission says about education, you may not think that the Bill delivers in this area. Will the Bill ensure that trusts provide the level of support needed for young people beyond the age of 18? Is that what you are referring to in the section on education?

Ms Caul: Yes. In the section on education, we refer to a change to a proposed new clause in article 35B of the Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1995. We recommend that the word "may", which implies discretion, should be deleted and replaced with the word "shall", which would strengthen the duty.

Mrs Courtney: Exclusion from benefits is one of the key issues. The Department intends the Bill to bring together all of the resources available for children leaving care. It will be the duty of trusts, acting in place of the parent, to safeguard and promote the welfare of a relevant child by providing financial assistance, as well as giving advice and support. This is linked to the expectation that children leaving care move straight on to the benefit system. The aim should be to improve their chances through education and training systems and bring them into full employment, rather than have them rely on benefits. You support the proposal by Barnardo's to delete clause 6 of the Bill and amend the Income Support (General) Regulations 1987 to entitle 16- and 17-year-old carers to claim income support. How would this improve the situation for young people? Surely it is better to keep them out of the benefit system?

Mr Mackle: This provision is supposed to ensure that 16- and 17-year-olds have some financial arrangement for their weekly maintenance. Neither the current system nor the proposals as they stand adequately achieve that. When training placements fail, entitlement to income support is essential. It is also important to cut away much of the current system, as, when such a situation arises, young people and their social workers have to fish through the social security system for something that will provide an income.

The current system places rigorous training demands on vulnerable young people such as care leavers while they are making that transition from care to independent living. When that falls apart the social security system is not there to pick up the pieces. The proposals for income support will provide a stable weekly income through the social security system, which will remove any questions about their entitlement to a weekly allowance rather than social security dependency. It is a weekly allowance at the age of 16 and 17 to get those young people through that transitional period. There seems to be no better proposal for dealing with that, and to place other considerations on top of those that already exist is not the best way to proceed.

Mrs Courtney: I agree with that.

Rev Robert Coulter: Many of your concerns are naturally to do with how the Bill will work in practice. Are you content with the Department's proposal for developing provisions in the Bill such as the use of regulations to define accommodation, the appointment of personal advisers and a complaints procedure? Can you give us some steer on what those definitions should be?

Ms Caul: We are happy with the regulations as long as there is consultation with the appropriate agencies to enable them to comment on, for example, the definition of suitable accommodation. In England, regulations are very detailed on eligibility criteria, accommodation, the role of personal advisers and the complaints procedure. We are particularly concerned about those areas, and we hope that there will be widespread consultation on them.

Mr Gallagher: You seem to be concerned about the role of trusts in emergency situations or protecting the duty of trusts to help out in an emergency. Do you remain concerned about how that has been handled in the Bill?

Ms Caul: Yes, particularly when a young person moves from one trust area to another and perhaps arrangements in that other area fall through very quickly. We would like an emergency provision in the Bill to deal with that and also to deal with financial support.

Mr Gallagher: Would you like a provision to deal with young people who are caught up in an emergency situation?

Ms Caul: Yes, perhaps when accommodation falls through and there is a need to move on, or when payments do not come through for housing benefit.

Mr Mackle: One worrying aspect of the Bill is the absence of a safety net for young people who fall out with their personal advisers or have bad experiences in care, and they become estranged from a trust or do not want to engage with it beyond the age of 16. They are excluded from the benefits system, and if they are not minded to approach the trust there is no support available for them. That is very worrying, and it defeats the whole purpose of the proposed aims of the Bill.

The Chairperson: Your documentation states that people going into care are entitled to a guardian ad litem and a solicitor, and it seems that young people moving out of care would also need that sort of legal advice.

Ms Caul: Part of the young person's adviser's role would be to tell young people that if there is a fundamental disagreement on the content of a pathway plan, they can approach a suitably qualified solicitor or someone to advocate on their behalf. I am thinking, for example, about additional moneys for an education placement that is not agreed by the trust or might cost more than a placement provided by the trust.

Rev Robert Coulter: What happens to a young person of 16 years of age who comes out of care and gets married? Are any provisions made for that instance?

Mr Mackle: There is nothing in the Bill to address that. There may be social security benefits available to a 16-year-old in that situation, but the rules are complex. There may be some way of accessing the social security system, but the rates of benefit for married couples under 18 years of age are very low. The situation is unclear: it is not dealt with in the Bill.

Rev Robert Coulter: There does not seem to be any consideration of any kind for a 16-year-old who leaves care to get married.

Mr Mackle: Involvement with a trust or any other form of support would end if that person were to marry someone over the age of 18. [Inaudible due to mobile phone interference].

The Chairperson: Thank you.

The Chairperson: I welcome Mr Noel Rooney, Mr Tommy Boyle and Mr John Growcott from the North and West Belfast Health and Social Services Trust. Thank you for your documents, which have been very helpful. Please go over the main points so that my Colleagues will have time to ask questions.

Mr Rooney: I thank the Committee for the opportunity to speak about the Children (Leaving Care) Bill. Mr Boyle and Mr Growcott will say something about our response and will be able to answer questions in detail, and I will make several key points about the issues we have raised in relation to the legislation.

We welcome the principles and direction suggested in the proposed legislation and the opportunity that it offers as regards those principles. There are around 380 children in care in our trust area; one of the highest number in any trust area in the Province. It is projected that approximately 10% of those children will leave the care system every year. In other words, around 38 children will leave the care system in our patch annually, and we must make provision for them.

Integrated planning needs, and how we cope with those 38 children leaving care given their life histories and emotional stability and their social and intellectual strengths, are reflected in the legislation. The availability of informal support, including contact with extended families, is a major issue for us.

Given the importance of training and education, our trust particularly welcomes the emphasis on an inclusive, comprehensive, planning pathway for the transition from care to independent living. That emphasis is underpinned in the Children (Leaving Care) Bill by an individualised needs-led assessment model, the promotion of training and educational themes, and the proposed role of the personal adviser.

We are concerned about the proposed financial arrangements and how they could negatively impact on the young person's relationship with the trust. We are especially concerned about the proposal to move income support from the Social Security Agency to the trusts because that will impact on the independence of young people who leave care. We will talk about that in more detail. It also changes the relationship between the social worker and the young person.

The resources that will be required to implement the legislation must be considered. Young people who leave care require intensive, well-resourced, diverse and flexible provision. Research carried out in England suggests that children who leave care find themselves in difficult situations; they may become homeless or find themselves in prison. It is, therefore, important that the correct provision is put in place.

The participation and views of young people are central to ensuring responsible and effective service. An integrated, dynamic and robust collaboration between all agencies, including those that deal with education and housing, is important and will inform the strategic vision that addresses the role of the voluntary sector too. It will also provide an integrated model of service delivery, which is imperative.

Thirty eight children a year leave care in our trust area, which indicates how many young people do so in Northern Ireland each year. Moving a child from care to independent living is a cost-intensive process. Although it is a small number of children overall, it will cost the trusts a substantial amount to fulfil the requirements of the legislation. Therefore, adequate resources are essential.

The Committee will be aware of the problems encountered in the implementation of the Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1995 because adequate resources were not provided. The Committee was involved in the report 'Children Matter: A Review of Residential Child Care Services in Northern Ireland' and in the inquiry into residential and secure accommodation, which both highlighted measures that should have been funded by the Order. We had serious problems as a consequence.

Mr Growcott: Mr Rooney referred to the planning process, which from the trust's perspective is one of the great strengths of the proposed legislation. It mandates a multi-agency inclusive approach that acknowledges the centrality of young people's perspective and their role in planning for themselves. It is a dynamic process that will demand a response from the agencies involved by forcing them to recognise its needs-led dimension. It should be individualised, with a pathway plan developed with the young person.

The key theme that the staff group discovered through talking to young people is the sense of isolation, loneliness and vulnerability that is so typical in young people who leave the care system. The continuum of need is substantial. The trust has experience of exceptionally damaged young people who require intensive support and of young people who have successfully managed their lives and careers. The trust has several young people at university. We must, therefore, provide a service that straddles that continuum of need and is responsive to the circumstances of young people.

We wish to highlight the importance of appropriate accommodation provision and, as noted in the legislation, the significance of employment and education. Young people who are without family and who, in many respects, lack the social competencies and maturities that are expected of young people of their age must have accessible and responsive services available to them on their terms. Those services must respect their autonomy and their right to make decisions about their own lives and seek to provide for their needs through balanced and supportive parenting.

Mr Boyle: I will briefly concentrate on areas where the trust could have difficulties in implementing the proposed legislation.

One area, which I am sure has been commented on, is the transfer of moneys from social security to social services. That is a potential problem, not because of the administrative bureaucracy and difficulties that it would cause the trust, but from a young person's point of view. Young people are already stigmatised when leaving care and may be further stigmatised by their peer group. They will have different circumstances to other 16- and 17-year-olds who claim income support.

We understand why that provision is built into the legislation. Many young people leaving care drift away from the trust or social services, and having an income is a means of keeping them tracked on board; as a corporate parent, it is important to do that. There may be particular difficulties in relation to the income provision in the legislation and linking it with social services. It may also, as Mr Rooney said, cause further difficulties with the social worker/young person relationship. The legislation has a participative theme in that it aims to bring young people along. There is a paternalistic aspect to the income support provision.

Another point worth highlighting is the resource issue. Mr Growcott mentioned the differentiated group — those leaving care. In our trust area around 40 young people leave care every year, and one third of them come from children's homes. Their behaviour can be particularly difficult and demanding, and they may also be in conflict with the law. Some current provision comprises hostels such as the Starting Points Hostel and hostels provided by the Simon Community, which may not be able to meet those young people's demanding behaviour. We will need resources to negotiate with the Housing Executive and other housing providers to have a range of provision for those young people leaving care.

The Chairperson: The Bill will impose extra duties on trusts. How prepared is your trust to meet the needs of young people leaving care? The Homefirst Health and Social Services Trust is well on its way with pathway planning.

Mr Rooney: We support the concept of integrated care and pathway planning, which covers being in care, through the transition to independent living. We have an aftercare team currently operating in north and west Belfast, which is funded by some of the money that the trust received from the Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1995. That aftercare team will help us to facilitate the transition in legislation needed because of the proposed legislation. We are preparing for that.

Mr Growcott: We have a model of review that, in many respects, pre-empts the pathway plan. There is a review structure for each young person in our care, and we are developing a system to capture, regularly review and update the progress of young people who have left our care system. The trust's leaving care team will play a key role in this process. We encourage young people and agencies that work with and represent young people to attend reviews. We want to develop advocacy arrangements for young people to ensure there is an independence element. Hopefully our practice shadows the proposals in the legislation, which capture best practice. We are striving to reach those standards.

Mr Berry: Thank you for your presentation. How will trusts determine when a young person is ready to leave care? Will that impact on your resources? Will the Bill pressurise trusts to move young people out of care before they are ready to make way for incoming young people?

Mr Growcott: The decision to move a young person on is one that must be paced on the basis of the young person's needs. The notion of volition — of a young person acceding to being involved intricately in the decision — is critical. Therefore it is inappropriate and over-paternalistic for someone to decide that a young person's time in care had come to an end. It must be paced to meet and reflect a young person's needs. The review process is in situ and the pathway planning process seeks to reinforce that.

As Mr Boyle and Mr Rooney mentioned, there will be pressure on the current resources to provide appropriate facilities and on the development and expansion of a resource base to meet those commitments. As part of our ongoing residential strategy and the development of services in the trust we wish to address that matter as proactively as we can. As far as any coercive dimension is concerned, it is not our practice to impose a decision on a young person which they were not party to.

Mrs Courtney: Your submission highlighted the resource implications of the Bill. The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety has had to bring together: the existing resources of the trust; the funds from the Department for Social Development; £500,000 to underpin implementation in the first year, with higher amounts in future years; and a further £1.2 million from the Executive programme funds over three years to establish leaving care and aftercare services. Is the money currently available enough to make the Bill work? If not, which areas need further resources?

Mr Rooney: The Committee will be well aware of the problems we have with the implementation of the Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1995. The Committee has been instrumental in bringing us resources to implement that Order over the past couple of years, and we are grateful. We have put several systems in place in the aftercare team; the leaving care team is a recent development based on some of the resources available.

It is the correct way to capture all the resources. Whether it be housing, social security, juvenile justice or social services; we must get together to ensure that young people do not “fall between the stools” when they leave care, which is a problem across the UK. They tend to fall between the different agencies once they reach 17 or 18 years of age. It is a good idea to fuse those resources, and we agree with the principles behind that. However, the difficulty for trusts is that we will develop, for example, different types of accommodation, and we will have to work with the Housing Executive in a different way. The Housing Executive already finds accommodation for older people and adults with mental health difficulties: now they will also have to find accommodation for young people who are leaving care. Resources will be needed so that trusts can work closely with the Housing Executive.

Advocacy on behalf of young people, for example, will create substantial resource implications right across the trusts — and particularly in our patch because of the higher number of young people leaving care. We will need resources over and above the existing pockets that are available, and that has to be taken into consideration.

Mr Boyle: One resource issue involves the young people leaving care with a learning or physical health disability. Although they would be small in number, they would be a huge draw on resources.

Rev Robert Coulter: You have stated that the provision will ensure that trusts do not lose contact with care leavers, but it may promote overdependence and stigmatise them. Is that a realistic expectation? How do we reconcile these opposing outcomes?

Mr Rooney: It is a vital issue for us. On one hand we have a corporate parenting responsibility for the 380 children that I referred to, and we have to discharge that responsibility.

Under existing legislation, once children reach the age of 18 they are no longer our responsibility. They drift off to different places, and all of the evidence shows that there are significant problems. On the other hand there is the issue about how we keep in contact with those young people. The Bill proposes that if trusts were to be responsible for young people's benefits once they reached the age of 18, they would keep in contact with us. However, young people believe that they are entitled to the same independence as everyone else.

The Chairperson: I am sorry to interrupt you, Mr Rooney, but I am afraid that someone's mobile phone is on and it is interrupting the transmission. Would everyone please make sure that his or her mobile is switched off? Thank you.

Mr Rooney: The transfer of funding would ensure that contact between the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety and the young people is not lost. There may be a third way; after all, social security payments are the entitlement of all children, particularly those who leave care. There may be other ways of maintaining the relationship between social services and children after they leave care. For example, an aftercare fund could be established to enable us to provide funds.

Mr Growcott mentioned the example of three children in our care who have gone to university. As corporate parents, we provide support while they are at university. There is no reason why we cannot establish a fund to assist the development of young people who have reached the ages of 17 and 18. It will not necessarily mean that their social security income transfers to us as well. It should be possible to create special circumstances to maintain the relationship.

The Chairperson: Thank you very much, Gentlemen, for your interesting and informative presentation.

The Chairperson: For reasons that have been discussed recently, it is important that we agree the Health and Personal Social Services Bill today. On Monday, Members received a folder containing the results of the Minister's consideration of the issues that were before the Committee last week. The Committee must complete its consideration of the remaining clauses today in order to meet the Committee Stage deadline. Our concerns centre on, first, the consultation on the professional assessment tool; secondly, the fast-track review and appeal mechanism; and, thirdly, the payment system.

I welcome Mr Peter Deazley, Mr John McKeown and Ms Janice Smyth. The document concerning the assessment tool is lengthy. Some Committee members may have received it on Monday, but not have had time to look at it. Perhaps you could outline its central points, bearing in mind what we requested.

Mr Deazley: Ms Smyth will cover the central points, but there are a couple of issues that I must raise first. Prof McCormack has got back to us to change the title of the assessment tool.

The Chairperson: The long title?

Mr Deazley: The title of the actual assessment tool; it is now simply called the "nursing needs assessment tool", as opposed to the "older people's nursing assessment tool", because it applies across the board. That is the only change that has been made in that area.

Ms Smyth: Prof Brendan McCormack and his research associate Paul Slater, from the University of Ulster, developed the nursing needs assessment tool. Prof McCormack is well known for his expertise in the development of assessment tools. The tool was commissioned by the working group established by the Minister and chaired by the chief nursing officer, Judith Hill.

The terms of reference were to review what was available in England, Scotland and Wales and to look at what was available in Northern Ireland. Then, those tools were to be measured against the national service frameworks. A tool was to be developed for Northern Ireland to determine the nursing needs of people who need continuing care in a nursing home setting. That was done.

Once the tool was developed, we piloted it in seven sites across Northern Ireland. We asked all the trusts if they wanted to participate. Seven replied positively, and between them those trusts represented all four health board areas. The assessment tool was used to assess the nursing needs of people who require nursing home care.

The Chairperson: Is there much difference between this assessment tool and the original one in England? Have there been many changes made in order to accommodate Northern Ireland?

Ms Smyth: Changes were made to the tool after the pilot exercise. There were originally 22 assessment domains in the tool. The tool is based on professional judgement; it is not a box-ticking exercise. One must take biographical information from the patients, assess their need under each of the domains and determine how the nursing care is going to meet those needs. It then asks whether that nursing care has to be met directly by a registered nurse or through care supervised by a registered nurse, or whether it is directive, where the nurse teaches someone else to do it.

The review amalgamated two of the domains. It also amended the risk assessment, where assessors were asked whether the patient's condition was stable and predictable or unstable and unpredictable. The nurses felt that some of the clients whom they assessed fell somewhere in the middle of that; it was not black and white. So, that was amended. Some of the language was also amended because the nurses felt it was not user-friendly and that those who were being assessed, or their carers, would not understand some of the terminology. After the pilot exercise, the review made minimal changes to the structure and content of the tool.

The Chairperson: On other aspects, such as the fast-track review and the payments system, we will be using the Welsh system — is that right, Mr Deazley?

Mr Deazley: I must also point out to Committee members that, as stated in the covering letter to the Department's consultation document, the assessment tool is capable of identifying nursing care needs at three separate dependency levels — low, medium and high. That is not a comment on how the nursing care will be paid for; it has been decided that there will be one single rate for nursing care.

However, the nursing tool will still be a major help in the care planning process. It will help care planners to decide where nursing care is best delivered. The fact that a person needs nursing care does not mean that it will best be delivered in a nursing home. The detailed output from the tool will go a long way to assisting that care planning process.

The Chairperson: I assume that there was agreement on the part of the various professionals and trusts involved in this exercise?

Ms Smyth: Yes. The pilot exercise was successful and the comments received about the tool and its ability and suitability to assess people's needs were positive.

Mr Deazley: The Minister has decided that we will apply a single rate for each person who is assessed as needing nursing care in a nursing home. The actual amount has not yet been decided. We have written to the trusts today asking them to survey in detail the number of people who fully or partly self-fund their care in nursing homes. We can then put forward proposals to the Minister on the weekly amount that will be paid towards nursing care.

The Chairperson: Will it be at least £85?

Mr Deazley: It will be no less than £85 a week.

The Chairperson: It is certainly not "free nursing care". I appreciate that you are using a particular definition.

Mr Deazley: We could call it "a contribution towards residents' nursing costs in a nursing home".

The Chairperson: The other matter was the appeal mechanism.

Mr Deazley: I am not sure if Members have had time to look at the documents. I have included a very early version of the departmental directions that will issue along with the other guidance.

The first two paragraphs are as they will appear in the final version. They set out the legislation under which we are issuing the directions to the trusts — article 17(1) of the Health and Personal Social Services (Northern Ireland) Order 1972 — and the action required of boards and trusts to commence health and personal social services payments.

I have outlined what will be included in the directions. There will be a brief outline of the legislation under which nursing care is being introduced, detail on implementation, and directions to go out to the trusts identifying every nursing home resident who makes a contribution towards their nursing care and who will, therefore, be entitled to some contribution from the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety.

We will require trusts to inform those residents of their right to a nursing care assessment. The trusts will be required to seek the consent of those residents for an assessment to be carried out. Nursing care assessments are entirely voluntary and cannot be imposed on residents.

The directions will describe the assessment and review process, which will be set out in detail. If a resident is not satisfied with the first assessment, he or she is entitled to a review assessment by another nurse within one week. If that is not satisfactory, a review panel must be set up and the case heard within a further two weeks. The process will take three weeks from start to finish.

The experience of the review and appeal procedure in England has almost totally revolved around the three tiers: when people are assessed as being in the lower group, the appeals are to get them into the second group, and when they are in the second group, the appeals are to get them into the top group.

In our case, if nursing care need is assessed, people will automatically be entitled to £85, or to whatever contribution they currently make to the cost of their care.

The Chairperson: Are you saying that the fast-track appeal takes three years?

Mr Deazley: No, I am referring to the three tiers. The main volume of appeals in England is due to their three-tiered system. It is not that people have been assessed as not needing nursing care, but rather that the assessment has placed them at the lower level or the intermediate level, and people are inclined to appeal when money is involved.

The Chairperson: Mr Deazley has set out for the Committee the areas to be covered in the departmental directions and guidance, which will be referred to the Committee for consideration. There are different headings, including legislation, implementation and identification. Is the Committee happy with the departmental directions? Has everyone had time to look at them?

Mr Berry: I am concerned about the directions on information. You say that trusts will be required to inform residents. If the matter is left to the trusts, they might inform only the home's owners, not the residents. How can we be sure that all residents and their families or carers will be informed, as well as the home?

Mr Deazley: There are two points. First, the consent of the resident — or their family or carer — to an assessment must be sought. It is a voluntary process. Secondly, it is feasible that someone who is funding their own care will not want social services to be involved. In order to obtain clear consent, the assessments and all other matters are carried out directly with the individual, or, where the individual is incapable of making decisions, with their family, their carer or an appointee. That will be clearly specified in the directions.

The Chairperson: As there are no other queries, I assume that the Committee is happy with the directions. The various headings are detailed. Requiring trusts to identify all nursing home residents who are funding their own care in nursing homes is terribly important.

We have covered information, advocacy and short-term placement. Is the Committee happy, or are there other questions?

Mr Deazley: The identification process has already started. The Department issued the survey request today.

The Chairperson: That goes right across Northern Ireland. Is the Department sending it directly to the trusts, or will it go via the boards?

Mr Deazley: We are dealing directly with the trusts.

The Chairperson: That will be quicker. The Committee wants to clear up clause 1 and the other clauses today. If my Colleagues have nothing further to add, we will move on to that.

Clause 1 (Charges for nursing care)

The Chairperson: Members will be aware that we have a potential amendment to clause 1 in the briefing paper, which can be considered in the context of the evidence given by the officials. Before concluding consideration of clause 1, the Committee will wish to formally record its views on personal care in the context of the introduction of free nursing care as outlined in the Bill.

Members will be aware of the views expressed by witnesses on the introduction of financial assistance for nursing care for self-funding residents of nursing homes. Many witnesses called for the approach to personal care taken in Scotland to be adopted here. If resources were available now, the Committee would wish to see free care covering the nursing and personal care needs of residents. However, the working group on personal care has not yet reported to the Executive on the outcome of its investigation. A decision is not due to be made until late June 2002, and we do not know what position the Executive will take. However, the estimated cost of free personal care is in excess of £25 million a year, in addition to the £9 million a year cost of free nursing care.

If the Committee were to recommend free personal care now, the money would have to come from the block grant allocation at a time when the pressures on funding for key health, education, transport and regional development priorities are preventing many desperately needed projects from being funded. It would mean making hard decisions on how the health budget should be spent.

However, clause 1 is essentially about equity and correcting an anomaly faced by some 2,000 self-funding residents of nursing homes who have been put at a distinct disadvantage. In comparison, nursing care is supplied free, as a health service, to a person in his or her own home or to a resident in a residential care home, if it is supplied externally by a trust via the community nursing service. Adopting clause 1 should be seen as a first, necessary step to meeting basic equity of provision. It will ensure that we will be able to provide similar benefits to those already provided in England and Wales. Although it is limited in its intent, the Committee welcomes the aim of the clause.

The Committee and the Assembly may wish to reconsider free personal care and the conclusions of the Royal Commission on Long Term Care for the Elderly in the future. We will then be able to learn from the Executive's examination of personal care and the experiences of the Scottish Parliament. We will be better able to gauge the benefits and costs of introducing free personal care.

Do members have any further comments to make before we vote on clause 1?

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 5 agreed to.

Long title agreed to.

The Chairperson: There are some outstanding issues that you may want to address before we move on to the other questions.

Ms Finnegan: I shall update you, clause by clause, on what the Department has done. As regards clause 2(4), the Department has accepted that it will amend the explanatory and financial memorandum to match the Bill, but it will not amend the Bill. It will do that on the basis of legal advice. The subsection is simply a definition of “formula”. We have agreed to amend the wording of clause 2(5) to reflect the consultation of district councils and other bodies that represent them.

The Chairperson: As regards clause 2(4), if the explanatory and financial memorandum is wrong — as we drew to your attention in questions (a) and (b) — where in the Bill is the power to amend the Regulations relating to the formula?

Ms Finnegan: I shall clarify the effect of the different subsections of clause 2. Clause 2(1) is an enabling power to make Regulations for the formula; subsection 5 is also an enabling power. It will be used to introduce any supplementary provisions or refinements by Regulation. When we introduce the formula for the first time, it will be on the strength of clause 2(1); however, if we wish to revise the data used in the formula, we will lean on subsection 5. We would consult councils on any changes that we propose, and we would then draft subordinate legislation to bring before the Committee.

Mr Ford: The Department referred today to consultation on subsection 5 solely with district councils and other bodies. The Committee asked about consultation with other interests such as staff. Do you intend to confine the legislative reference to consultation with councils, or will you include other appropriate bodies?

Ms Finnegan: I said “other bodies representative of councils”.

Mr Ford: Yes. However, that is not what I was talking about.

Ms Finnegan: The Department, if it wishes to extend the exercise, could consult with any body.

The Chairperson: The wording of clause 4(4) implies a limit, because it is specific. It refers to “such associations or bodies representative of councils”.

The council will make the decisions. As we asked at a previous meeting, will the consultation include the representatives of council workers, for example, the unions?

Ms Finnegan: The Department will revise the wording of that subsection. It will ensure that consultation extends to bodies such as the Northern Ireland Public Service Alliance (NIPSA).

Mr McConnell: The Department is still discussing the issue, but it could refer to “other interested bodies”, for example.

Mr Ford: I would be happy with that. However, the document mentions only consultation with district councils — not the other relevant bodies.

The Chairperson: That is an important point; the Committee wants to ensure that the consultation includes bodies representative of councils and other interested parties, including those representative of council workers.

Mr McConnell: There was no intention to exclude anyone. It was purely an effort to get those people who had — [Interruption].

The Chairperson: The Committee will take that in good faith, but we would like to see it in writing.

Mr McConnell: You will see it.

Ms Finnegan: The Department accepts the Committee’s view on clause 4 and will re-draft subsections 4(1) and 4(2) to update the existing legislation. The Committee will recall that the draft mirrored the existing provisions; therefore, it will have a different effect. The legislation will spell out the role of the local government auditor with reference to his reporting a case to the Department; the role of the Department in recommending to the Assembly the amount to be deducted from the general grant; and the role of the Assembly in approving the reduction. No reduction will be made without the Assembly's approval. The wording of the Bill will be changed substantially.

The Chairperson: The Committee asked before about the wording of clause 4(1)(b), which mentions "any other relevant circumstances". Would it not be better to make that clearer, by rewording it to "other circumstances relevant to a district council"?

Ms Finnegan: I shall use an example to explain that point. The Department said that it felt the need to retain the wording "other relevant circumstances".

The Chairperson: You misunderstand me. I do not claim that those words should be excluded. However, the Committee suggests that the phrase "other circumstances relevant to a district council" might be clearer. The wording must be examined carefully.

Ms Finnegan: We will reconsider the matter. Would it require a big extension?

Mr McConnell: We will return to the Committee when we have reviewed the matter. Would it help if we discussed a district council's functions or other relevant points?

Ms Finnegan: Some points about clause 4 have not been clarified. They were not specifically referred to in the Committee's letters, but they have since been raised. Clause 4(5), which we discussed last week, states:

"Regulations under this section shall be subject to negative resolution."

Subsection 5 relates directly to subsection 3(a), which contains the wording "specified in regulations". In addition, that provision relates indirectly to subsection 4, which refers to subsection 3 as regards consultation. The Regulations are not referred to in every section; however, subsection 5 states that, where they are referred to, they should be subject to negative resolution.

The preference of negative resolution over affirmative resolution is based on legal advice that, in this instance, negative resolution is the correct procedure. The reason is that the Regulations would not impose financial burdens or raise statutory limits on the amounts that may be borrowed by, or granted to, public bodies. We have been advised that in certain circumstances there must be an affirmative resolution; however, in this case our legal advisers are satisfied that a negative resolution is appropriate.

Mr Ford: Clause 4(5) has been clarified, although I accept that that is subject to the precise rewording of subsections 1 and 2. You have rectified my inability to distinguish between Regulations and reports, a distinction that was unclear last week.

I am still not entirely persuaded by your previous point. Negative resolution may be legally acceptable for Regulations made under subsection 3, but that does not persuade the Committee that it should not prefer affirmative resolution.

Mr McConnell: The Department has no choice; its legal adviser said that we must apply the method of negative resolution.

The Chairperson: It may be helpful if the Committee seeks legal advice on the matter.

Mr McConnell: If the Committee's legal advice conflicts with ours, we should discuss that.

The Chairperson: The Committee can assist in that way.

Ms Finnegan: Clause 6 deals with economic development. The Department conveyed the Committee's views on clause 6(4) to the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment. We will meet departmental officials next Wednesday, the soonest date that we could arrange, to examine the wording and to address the matters of directions and consultation.

Mr McConnell: At our meeting with the Department, we will convey the Committee's view of how the Bill should progress.

The Chairperson: The Committee will have to wait to see the wording of the subsection.

Ms Finnegan: On page nine of the original index of questions, the Department was asked whether councils retained all the proceeds of the disposal of land.

The Chairperson: Can we deal with page seven first?

Ms Finnegan: Yes. I apologise. In response to a question last week, I said that we had not consulted on the specific terms of the clause, but that we had consulted on the proposals of the 1997 consultation. There was a big response from councils, 23 of which supported the proposal to drop the 5p limit and to extend the powers to those councils that could acquire land, et cetera. Comments were made about going further than that, but the two Departments at that time, the former Department of the Environment (DOE) and the former Department of Economic Development (DED), would probably have considered those and did not take anything further on board. The draft legislation is exactly what was agreed then. There are no problems with that, and we will talk to DETI about directions, guidance, consultation, and so forth.

Mr McConnell: Until earlier this year, minimal pressure was put on the Department about this exercise. We tried to take a finance Bill through late, because of Peace II money and other factors. Councils prevailed upon us to fulfil our earlier obligations; that is to say, the responsibilities of all the Departments, not necessarily ours. We agreed that the legislation would be used as a vehicle to alter councils' functions and to enable them to go beyond the 5p limit.

That is the history, and I am trying to get the legislation through so that councils can quickly obtain the Peace II moneys. We are addressing councils' issues with them, but we need to do more work on this.

The Chairperson: What are you doing with the requests for the removal of the 5p expenditure limit?

Ms Finnegan: The existing legislation will be repealed, which will remove the 5p limit. That is not mentioned in the wording of the draft Bill, but it is unnecessary because of the repeal.

The Chairperson: Are you introducing any limit to replace the 5p limit?

Ms Finnegan: No.

A letter from the Committee, dated 23 May, raised the equality impact assessment, which was described in the explanatory and financial memorandum. That memorandum does not cover economic development, as the consultation took place before equality impact assessments were required. We propose to screen the economic development proposals, and we can do that fairly quickly and insert the results in the explanatory and financial memorandum as an amendment. It is possible that there will be no differential impact, but we must go through the procedure to ascertain that.

The Chairperson: The original question was whether councils had been specifically consulted about the precise terms of clause 6(4). Will the councils be consulted?

Mr McConnell: The Department is trying to enable councils to work beyond the 5p limit, and other relevant issues must be addressed. For the purposes of this exercise, the Department assumes that 23 of the 26 councils want to exercise their economic functions more freely. However, that requires more consultation, because some councils want to do more, and others wish to do less.

Ms Finnegan: The Department will be in a better position to assess that situation when it has examined the councils' responses.

Mr McConnell: Some councils say that they want more power — perhaps they should have that. However, the prime function is to enact the legislation. If consultation is required on further issues, it is unlikely that the Bill will be passed. The Department is reflecting councils' need for freedom to go beyond 5p in the pound. However, I will get back to you on the matter.

Ms Finnegan: Page nine asks whether councils retain all proceeds from the disposal of land. Section 59 of the Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 1972 requires that capital receipts derived from the sale of any asset held by a council be initially offset against the repayment of any borrowings in relation to that asset. If there are no borrowings, or if only part of it needs to be offset against the borrowings, the council must come to the Department for approval to use those capital receipts for another purpose.

Last week, we discussed councils' vesting powers in relation to economic development. Does the Committee want those powers built into the draft legislation? At present vesting powers are not allowed.

Mr Ford: I raised that point because a councillor asked me whether vesting powers were included. Last week you implied that vesting powers did not exist for the economic development function, even though they do in respect of other functions of the council. Why is that?

Mr McConnell: That will have to be discussed with other Departments, because problems could arise. For instance, a situation may arise in which a council and the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure wish to vest the same land for development. That will not necessarily be the case, but it will be investigated if the Committee wishes the Department to do so.

Mr Ford: Under the current vesting powers, is a council not required to have departmental approval to vest?

Mr McConnell: I do not suggest that economic development vesting powers are necessarily easy to confer, or that they are similar to other such powers. There are some differences, and departmental officials will explore those and outline them to the Committee later. A Department's vesting powers for economic development may cut across those of a council, thereby creating difficulties. For example, a big development is proposed in Belfast, for which one Department seeks to acquire land. Belfast City Council may not agree to provide that land; it may want it for another purpose. We need to consider such factors.

If the Committee so wishes, the Department will return to confirm whether vesting powers in respect of economic development can be extended.

Mr Ford: There is potential for conflict between different public bodies, but that does not apply solely to councils' economic development powers. That is why I suggested that if the Department's approval is required for a council to vest, in any circumstances, it should negotiate with other Departments. In attempting to extend councils' economic development powers, it would be illogical not to allow them vesting powers for that purpose, given that they have them for other functions.

Mr McConnell: The Department will report back on that issue. We are not opposed to the councils' having vesting powers; we simply want to ensure that we make the correct decisions.

Mr A Doherty: The Department should consider that, according to some councillors, there would be significant benefits in including vesting powers in the Bill, as it would enable them to acquire brownfield sites that might not otherwise have been available to them.

Mr Barr: Thank you for giving me the opportunity to discuss the community safety strategy. In my response, I will review the queries that were raised. Under the Justice (Northern Ireland) Bill there are two forms of community safety partnership (CSP): voluntary CSPs, to be established under section 70 of the Bill, and permanent CSPs, which the NIO suggested should be formed under section 71.

Our Bill is concerned only with empowering councils to engage in voluntary CSPs. We must take care not to commit councils to permanent CSPs, which would have to be fully examined and consulted upon separately if, and when, the time is appropriate. The NIO said in its strategy that it did not propose to introduce permanent CSPs until the review of public administration has taken place. It would be wrong of the Department to advise the Committee, or anyone else, to commit district councils to permanent CSPs.

Clause 7(1) of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill confers on councils the discretionary power to engage in voluntary CSPs. Clause 7(2) is not connected with permanent CSPs; it enables the Assembly to introduce a further dimension to community safety. For example, if provisions in respect of voluntary CSPs do not enable councils to carry out a preferred activity, the Assembly may confer additional powers; hence the use of the term “other” in the Bill. Alternatively, the Assembly may wish to place statutory duties on councils, hence the use of the term “impose”. The Department would not impose any duty on councils without the will of the Assembly, and we made that clear in the Bill. It would be by affirmative resolution. It is important to remember that clause 7(2) does not override clause 7(1).

Ms Lewsley: If a council does not voluntarily create a community safety partnership, I assume that it cannot apply for the available funding?

Mr Barr: That is correct; the NIO is clear on that. It would fund the voluntary CSPs under section 70 of the Justice (Northern Ireland) Bill; therefore, a council would have to engage in CSPs to avail of that funding.

Mr Poots: Should not the “permanent” CSPs referred to under section 71 be described as “statutory” partnerships?

Mr Barr: I used the terms “voluntary” and “statutory” in my response in order to distinguish between the two. A further statutory power may be introduced by the NIO or a devolved Administration later.

Mr Poots: In outlining clause 7(1), you referred to voluntary community safety activity. Do you intend to include the word “voluntary” in the Bill?

Mr Barr: I do not think so, because we define clearly what we mean by CSPs in clause 7(4):

“Community safety partnership” means a body established for an area in accordance with the community safety strategy devised by the Secretary of State under section 70 of the Justice (Northern Ireland) Act 2002”.

That is in response to the provision created by section 70 of the Justice (Northern Ireland) Bill. It is meant to be a so-called voluntary CSP, established under section 70 of that Bill.

Mr Poots: I still do not accept that the word “impose” needs to be included in clause 7(2). If it is a voluntary scheme, “confer” is a strong enough word to introduce additional powers, if that is so desired by local authorities.

Mr Barr: Subsection 2 exists to enable the Assembly to introduce additional community safety powers, which may apply to all councils, if it wishes to do so. Some councils might not enter into voluntary CSPs, but the Assembly may decide that it wants all councils to carry out a certain activity under the community safety strategy. The word “impose” is included because provision is being made in primary legislation that will enable the Assembly to introduce subordinate legislation in the future.

Mr Poots: Does clause 2 refer specifically to section 70 and not to section 71?

Mr Barr: Clause 2 is specific only to section 70 of the Justice (Northern Ireland) Bill.

Mr Poots: The Assembly can choose to impose it; therefore the CSP is not a voluntary function for local authorities.

Mr Barr: If it is the will of the Assembly, it can introduce an additional community safety power. I am not referring to the permanent CSPs, which may follow under section 71.

Mr Poots: That is my concern. You are considering introducing powers to enable the Assembly to impose the “voluntary” CSPs on local authorities, despite the fact that they had not previously volunteered to participate in them.

Mr Barr: We cannot predict what the will of the Assembly will be in a year’s time. Circumstances may change, with the result that the Assembly will wish to introduce an additional community safety power for all councils; hence the creation of the provision. However, that provision will be subject to detailed consultation with all local government interests, including this Committee. It would have to be passed through the Assembly by a process of affirmative resolution.

Mr Poots: I am trying to clarify this: if that provision is included, the voluntary aspect will be removed from section 70, because the Assembly will be able to override local authorities and create statutory obligations.

Mr McConnell: The Assembly can override local authorities in many circumstances; no trickery or deviousness is intended. For example, it was suggested in the NIO’s consultation paper that the community safety exercise and function would be transferred to the Assembly and the Executive. The Department was merely trying to provide for the possibility that the Assembly might wish to take that course; it is not a big issue.

The Chairperson: A more basic question remains. Councils find it difficult to get money for meaningful or urgent functions. I refer you to the Assembly's debate, which I must consider. We hope to seek the opinion of the Society of Local Authority Chief Executives (SOLACE) because the Bill proposes to duplicate a duty that already exists. Councils will be paying for, and looking after, two groupings whose functions are identical — the community safety partnership and the district policing partnership.

Given that public bodies have to fight to acquire finance for major functions, where is the sense in giving councils £2 million to carry out a duplicate function? Councils are not crying out for duplicated functions; they need £2 million to fund their current functions, which they cannot finance. That point was raised in the House, therefore it must be considered, and I fear that the Assembly will vote against the Bill on that basis. The matter was highlighted by MLAs who are not members of the Environment Committee and by MPs at Westminster. The Department should reconsider the matter with the NIO. No council should have two committees that carry out the same function. Members of this Committee have declared their interests as councillors, so we know how difficult it is to get sufficient officers to carry out work, because they are strapped for finance.

Mr McConnell: There is no problem here, and the change did not happen as a result of the Department's discussions with the NIO. The Department might not have been accused of being too helpful in the past; however, it will review the matter and come back to the Committee.

The Chairperson: I refer you to the debate in the Assembly.

Mr McConnell: If the Committee and the Assembly believe that the provision should not be included, we will look at it again and report back on the matter.

The Chairperson: The questions that were asked in the Assembly deserve to be answered. It would be remiss of the Committee to ignore Members' opposition to the provision.

Mr McConnell: The Department was asked to facilitate councils' ability to adopt a community safety strategy, but it does not want to contradict the will of the Committee or the Assembly. Its aim was simply to facilitate councils. I heard about community safety for the first time on 25 February 2002. The Committee has helped the Department to reach this stage of the process, and it will seek to resolve any difficulties.

The Chairperson: The debate in the Assembly raised matters that I had not considered, but they deserved to be reviewed. I ask the Department to do that before continuing to discuss the matter.

Mr Barr: I believed that the Committee was consulting with the NIO, because it led the initiative.

The Chairperson: It is.

Mr Barr: I assume that the Committee deals directly with the NIO.

The Chairperson: Yes.

Mr McConnell: It is our collective responsibility to enact this legislation in order to allow councils to do what they wish. The Department will return to the Committee on that point.

The Chairperson: Your Department is introducing this Bill, while it is facilitating another. The Committee is aware that the provision was to be contained in the Justice (Northern Ireland) Bill. We gave it a general welcome. However, questions that were asked in a recent debate must be answered.

Mr McConnell: Do those questions revolve around the term "impose" in the Bill?

The Chairperson: No. It is the more general point that councils would be given a duplicate function, which they would be duty bound to service.

Mr Barr: Councils would not be duty bound to service those functions. The Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill provides an enabling power to enable councils to enter into community safety partnerships if they so wish. They are not required to do so.

The Chairperson: Yes; however, if they entered into a community safety partnership, they would have to service it.

Mr Barr: The council would become a partner in the CSP. The Northern Ireland Office is providing funding to employ a co-ordinator. That may have been explained to the Committee.

Mr McConnell: Those are issues for the NIO to deal with. The duplication point is not one for the Department to deal with. I mistakenly addressed Mr Poots's point about the term "impose" and missed the other point. The Department cannot decide whether the duplication of functions should be allowed to exist.

When the Committee discusses the matter with SOLACE, it will say that it was pushing for a general power for councils to enter into CSPs. The Department was merely responding to that request.

The Chairperson: That will be clarified when SOLACE comes before the Committee. The question was raised with that body, because it had not considered the duplication either.

Ms Lewsley: Councils wanted the power to enter into CSPs because money was being set aside for it. The problem is that councils will tap into the money if they can. I agree that there will be duplication. In the end, there could be competition between the two groups, especially as regards funding.

Mr McConnell: The Department is being asked to discuss matters for which it is not responsible. The function was proposed because the district councils lobbied the Secretary of State to be given a general power. The Department responded to allow the councils — [Interruption].

The Chairperson: That is why I ask the Department to discuss the duplication of functions with the NIO. The Committee is not asking you to answer questions.

Mr McConnell: We will raise that with the NIO. However, we would prefer if the NIO came back to the Committee. Is the Chairperson happy with that?

The Chairperson: I am happy with that. You have your own sins to answer for, therefore you should not have to answer for another body's — is that what you are saying?

Mr McConnell: You may say that — I could not possibly comment.

Ms Lewsley: Can I have clarification? The key issue is that Mr McConnell has been lobbied to introduce legislation. He seems to be saying that he is blinkered; therefore, he cannot consider any other factor. He is not considering the other possible implications of the legislation. Is that not also part of his responsibility?

Mr McConnell: The Department is responding to a request from councils to introduce legislation. It assumes that, before doing so, councils would be aware of the implications of their request. I agree that CSPs would give councils an opportunity to do something good for communities and to acquire funding for that purpose.

As the Committee is aware, councils could engage in community safety strategies today, if they so wished, without this legislation — they could use 0.5p per pound to do so. The Department does not wish to impose a duty on councils in that regard.

The Chairperson: The Committee was lobbied solely by the Department on this matter. Before the proposal came forward, the Deputy Chairperson of the Committee — I am not certain whether it was Ms Lewsley or Ms Hanna at that time — and I received a telephone call about it from the Minister. The provision should have been contained in the Criminal Justice (Northern Ireland) Bill, but it is now being transferred for inclusion in the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill. In principle, the Committee did not object to the proposal, but it was not lobbied by councils to create the power.

Mr McConnell: I hope that SOLACE will convey the view that it gave to the NIO at the outset. The Department is here on account of that recommendation.

Mr Barr: The Department is not being blinkered in its approach; it has considered all the implications. It has been very careful not to commit district councils to any provision that might fall under section 71 of the Criminal Justice (Northern Ireland) Bill. The Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill is geared towards considering what must be done under section 70.

The Chairperson: The Committee forwarded further general points to the Department.

Mr McConnell: Dr Power will discuss the proposed formula. First, I remind the Committee that on Wednesday 5 June, the Department is holding a briefing session for Mr Poots and other Members who wish to attend. The issue is difficult to grasp, although Members may have been briefed already.

Dr Power: Does the Committee wish me to discuss the subject now? I am aware that you may have run out of time.

The Chairperson: That is correct; the session has run 15 minutes beyond the time allotted. We will return to the matter at a later date.

Mr McConnell: In any case, the detail of the proposed formula could be explained better in an overall briefing.

The Chairperson: Thank you for attending the session. The Committee will consider carefully the points that the Department has made. Also, in the light of today's discussion, the Department will have further matters to take into account.

Mr McConnell: Thank you, Chairperson. Our developing relationship will be very positive as regards the passage of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill. I thank the Committee Clerk and his team.

The Chairperson: We appreciate your presence and the presentation.

Mr D Small) The Department
Mr I Maye) of the Environment

The Chairperson: I welcome Mr David Small and Mr Ian Maye from the Department of the Environment. They will give a presentation, after which Members can ask questions.

Mr Maye: I thank the Committee for inviting us here. It is a pleasure to reach the stage of presenting a Bill to the Assembly, because it seems to be a long time since we first discussed this issue last June. We have achieved our set target, which was to bring the Bill to the Assembly before the summer recess. We are now on target to have the Bill introduced on 10 June, subject to the Speaker's clearance. He received a letter this morning, and we do not foresee any difficulty.

The Chairperson: It is of course also subject to clearance of the Committee.

Mr Maye: Absolutely.

The Chairperson: Do not take anything for granted.

Mr Maye: I will now bring you up to speed on how we reached this juncture, and what we intend doing now. I will then pass over to Mr Small, who will talk in more detail about the timetable for the rest of the Bill.

We received Executive Committee clearance to introduce the Bill yesterday, which is why we were able to go to the Speaker overnight, and also the Secretary of State's clearance for the current provisions. As you saw from the letter, the Minister has entered into discussions with the Secretary of State on issues that this Committee has raised regarding higher fines in Magistrate's Courts, creating a new offence of commencing development without lawful permission, and third-party appeals. Although we do not require the Secretary of State's consent, there is a wider UK interest, since what we do will inevitably influence the other jurisdictions.

The Minister has briefly discussed the principle with the Secretary of State, who now wants concrete evidence and details. That is the process in which the Minister and the Department are now engaged. Over the next few weeks the Minister would like to engage further with the Committee, particularly on higher fines, but also the creation of a new criminal offence. As you know, we are committed to bringing a paper on creating the new criminal offence to the Committee before the summer recess, and we are actively working on it. We want to have the final version of the Queen's University research so that we can polish up the Bill for the Committee. However, we are certainly on target to deliver it before the summer recess — hopefully, as soon as possible.

We want to engage with the Committee on the correct level of fines. At present we are aiming for £20,000, but the Committee has expressed its concern that the figure is too low. Indeed, the original level of £20,000 was set back in 1991, and we will need to take such matters as inflation into account. The Department will soon put a short paper to the Committee on how we might assess the appropriate level of fines in the Magistrate's Court, bearing in mind our commitment to take cases to the Crown Court where appropriate, an arena in which there will be no limit on what fines may be imposed. We wish to strike a balance and are aware of the Committee's concerns, as is the Minister. He is sympathetic to those concerns, and has informed the Secretary of State as such.

At present we are on target to introduce the Bill on 10 June 2002. If we do so, the Second Stage debate may take place on 24 June. Procedures recently agreed by the Assembly would mean that the Bill goes straight to the Committee after the debate on 24 June, so you will receive it before the summer recess. We forwarded a draft of the Bill last week, since we were keen for you to see it before its introduction. We also thought that it would be useful for you to see the letter to the Secretary of State; indeed, we agreed that when we last met.

I have talked about the higher fines and the proposed new offence. The Minister is sympathetic to the Committee's wishes, but wants to discuss the detail, which is why we are bringing forward a paper. The Department is also committed to bringing forward a detailed policy paper on third-party appeals before the summer recess, and we are engaged in discussions with the Minister on what that paper will cover. We await the final report from Queen's University to refine the paper, but once we have done so we aim to present it to the Committee as soon as possible — certainly before the summer recess. When we provide the papers on the new offence and third-party appeals, we also will provide the Committee with copies of the Queen's University research so that you have all the information to hand when considering the issues. When we have done so, we will be at the Committee's disposal to discuss the issues. The Minister has also made it clear that he wants to work with the Committee on these matters.

Mr Small: I have nothing particular to add on the wider issues that Mr Maye has covered, except to explain the anticipated timetable for the Bill. Mr Maye has indicated that the Bill may be introduced on 10 June, and the Second Stage would then be anticipated for 24 June, but that has to be confirmed. It would then pass to Committee Stage and, depending on the duration of that stage, we would then hope to reach Consideration Stage around October. It is difficult to judge how long that process will take, but we would aim to reach Final Stage of the Bill by December or early January 2003, in time to allow Royal Assent to be secured before Assembly is dissolved in advance of next spring's elections.

The Chairperson: This is heavy stuff, and we must ensure that we are getting this right. With the greatest respect, there seems to be great haste, which can sometimes lead to bad examination. You may have your timetable set, but we must get this right because we have a very important duty to fulfil.

Mr M Murphy: I have great difficulty with the £20,000 fine, considering that an entire block of terraced houses was demolished in Portadown. Under the present legislation, how many enforcement actions have been taken, and what way were they dealt with through the courts?

Mr Maye: I will write to you with the precise figures. With regard to enforcement action, the Planning Service deals with about 1,500 cases a year. Most are resolved through negotiation, and the developer puts right what has been done beyond the terms of his planning permission, or does things that he should not have done. Around 50 formal cases are taken each year, and a proportion of those end up in court. The aim of taking enforcement action is to put right what has been done, and, in the majority of cases, we can achieve that without taking people to court. In some cases, however, it is necessary to do so. I will write to the Committee with the precise figures.

Mr M Murphy: If a developer demolishes a row of terraced houses, he is fined £4,000 or £5,000, but there is no way that the houses can be replaced.

Mr Maye: It is absolutely clear that the fine levels being imposed and the maximum fine available to the Magistrate's Court do not match the gravity of the offence or the value of the property that has been destroyed. One of our key aims is to give magistrates more leeway to issue higher fines.

We want to take cases to the Crown Court, as some cases must be treated very seriously. The Planning Service was reluctant to take cases to the Crown Court in the past, but the Department is determined to address that. It is important that the Department sends out the strongest possible message to developers and others — if they mess with the system they will get their fingers burnt.

Mr M Murphy: Your recommended figure is over £20,000, but this has not been stated clearly.

Mr Maye: The Department does not yet feel that it is a position to state it clearly, which is why we want to engage further with the Committee to identify what level of fine we should aim for. You have made it clear that £20,000 is not high enough, so what level of fine should we aim for — £30,000, £40,000 or higher? We must bear in mind that the Department intends to take cases to the Crown Court, where there will be no limit to the fine. The Crown Court will be able to set a fine at whatever level it sees fit. In doing that, it will have to consider the profit that has accrued to the developer by his committing the offence. That is important, because in some cases — the case that you cited is a good example — developers can make several hundred thousand pounds or, in some cases, several million, and a fine of £20,000, £30,000, or £40,000 will not make a dent in their profit.

Mr Small: As well as higher levels of fines, the Bill also proposes the introduction of custodial sentences in cases where listed buildings are demolished. It is hoped that the risk of a custodial sentence will carry more weight, and be a greater deterrent than the higher fines.

Mr Maye: Another issue is the attitude of magistrates and the judiciary to the cases, and recent evidence suggests that the attitude is beginning to change. In the dark days of the troubles, magistrates believed that this type of offence was not that important in the grand scheme of things, but that is changing. In a recent case in Rostrevor, a magistrate imposed the maximum fine of £5,000. He said that he would have imposed a higher fine had he had the authority in statute to do so. Magistrates are taking cases more seriously than they would have done before.

The Chairperson: For clarification, the letter that we received from the Minister contained no evidence that he had asked the Secretary of State to consider fines higher than £20,000. Can you show the Committee the relevant paragraph? The letter states the opposite as it says "up to". There is no mention of fines above £20,000.

Mr Maye: The letter had two purposes. One was to secure clearance for the provisions that are already in the Bill, which was necessary for the Department to bring the Bill before the Assembly. The Minister decided to take it in two bite-sized chunks. His first aim was to get clearance for the current provisions in the Bill, which he has agreed. Secondly, in the final paragraph, he wanted to raise the broader issues that the Committee is concerned about, and on which he has views, such as fine levels, the new offence, and third-party appeals.

He decided to divide it tactically into two stages. First, he would discuss the principles with the Secretary of State and bring to his notice the Committee's concerns and the views of other Members of the Assembly, which had been raised with him in general correspondence. He also wanted to sound out the Secretary of State on the principle of going beyond parity with England and Wales — a point that we have discussed with the Committee previously. Having done that, and judged whether the Secretary of State was warm to the idea, the Minister will now consider concrete proposals. Those proposals are not, and cannot be, on the table at present, because the Department has not decided what they should be. The Department and the Committee must agree the level of fines we are aiming for, and why, so that we can put the case to the Secretary of State.

If a new criminal offence is created, there should be agreement on what that offence should be, what it should cover, what the fines and penalties should be, and in what circumstances it should be applied. That is essentially the Minister's tactic in approaching the Secretary of State about these issues, and I re-emphasise that he wants to work with the Committee on these issues. When he goes to the Secretary of State he wants to put a good case — one that commands the Committee's agreement and support.

The Chairperson: Is the Minister making the case on your acknowledgement that the situation in Northern Ireland is radically different?

Mr Maye: He has made the case that there is strong feeling on these issues across Northern Ireland that will not go away. The public, the Assembly and the Committee for the Environment feel strongly that we should be doing these things.

The Chairperson: You want the Committee to set a figure. From the example that you got this morning, you should know that the Committee could not set a figure for that. Surely a court must be — not may be — made to take regard of the financial benefit. It would be useless for the Committee to set a figure of £35,000 if someone earned £1 million. Rather than tying a court to a maximum, the judgement must consider the financial benefit.

Mr Maye: We are proposing that for the Crown Court.

The Chairperson: I am not talking about the Crown Court; I am talking about the Magistrates' Court. Why can it not be included in the legislation?

Mr Maye: The cases that go to the Crown Court will be included in the legislation. We must take those cases in which the developer stands to make a profit of £1 million out of the Magistrates' Court and into the Crown Court, so that the Crown Court can look at it seriously and set the appropriate fine.

In the UK justice system, magistrates are given a fine level to work with, and, until now Magistrates' Courts have traditionally had limited powers. That reflects the nature of the cases that should be brought before the Magistrates' Court. If they are sufficiently serious to attract a very heavy fine — [Interruption].

The Chairperson: The number of cases that the Department has taken to any court does not give us confidence that any other cases will reach the Crown Court. Frankly, if a case gets to the Magistrates' Court, the Committee would like to know that the person will not get a mere rap over the knuckles, but something that they will fear. It is hard enough getting the Department to bring a case to the Magistrates' Court, but it is another matter to promise the Committee that all will be well when it gets to the Crown Court. I am not confident about that.

Mr Armstrong: It should be calculated on a percentage basis of the value of the property.

Mr M Murphy: In Rostrevor, the contractor was fined £5,000. The same contractor paid £80,000 to the resident to knock down her garage. This issue must be tackled seriously.

Mr A Doherty: You mentioned three policy papers setting out your position on enforcement liabilities and third-party appeals. When do you expect those to be available, and to whom will you make them available?

Mr Maye: We will give them to the Committee. We are committed to doing that before the summer recess, but I want to have those papers with the Committee within the next couple of weeks, to give you an opportunity to consider them before the summer recess.

Mr A Doherty: I asked because the Committee must also examine the consultation on 'Modernising Planning Processes', and the deadline for that is 14 June. Could you meet that date?

Mr Maye: I cannot commit to that, because we are still waiting for the final report from Queen's University. We want to see their final report so that we can build any of that evidence into the papers that come to the Committee. We will present you with the best possible case.

The Chairperson: Being honest, you are not going to introduce it in this Bill.

Mr Maye: I would not necessarily rule that out.

The Chairperson: This Committee forcefully holds this view. It may be just starting to percolate into the Department, but make no mistake; it is not going to go away. The Department can resist it, but the will of the elected representatives will have to be tested and proved if the Department is not willing to deal with that head-on.

Mr Maye: The Minister is under no illusion that that is the case. At present he is not persuaded of the case for the introduction of third-party appeals, but he wants to enter into more detailed discussion on the matter with the Committee. With regard to higher fine levels in the Magistrate's Court, and a new criminal offence, I would not rule those out. We can bring forward amendments, if necessary, during the passage of the Bill, as can the Committee, so I would not rule those out at all.

Mr Ford: I do not want to go over the issue of the fines again. However, I note in paragraph 12 of the explanatory memorandum that there are likely to be some marginal financial implications for the Department with the introduction of the main provisions. What is the point in having enforcement powers, or talking about taking matters to the Crown Court if you are only talking about marginal financial implications? It sounds to me like the Department is not going to take the matter seriously, even with these powers. Surely the point of having these powers is to make use of them. We have had enough instances highlighted in every part of Northern Ireland of the need for much more action on enforcement powers. You have just been talking about the issue of the Crown Court, so is that not a misleading statement?

Mr Maye: We are looking at the whole structure of the Planning Service — how it delivers its work and its Programme for Government commitments. We will not necessarily need much more resources to do a better job on enforcement. We are looking at the balance of how our work is done, and whether we have sufficient resources within the Planning Service already devoted to enforcement work. The Minister is keenly aware that up until now we have not devoted a substantial proportion of our resources to enforcement. This legislation should simplify the whole process, so that with current resources we should be able to do a great deal more because the process will be simpler and more streamlined. It will be much easier to progress, and get to court if we need to get to court. There is an issue about the balance of resources in the existing Planning Service that we devote to enforcement work, and we are working quite actively on that.

In addition, we are currently engaged in a review of planning fees, and propose to bring forward a consultation paper later in the year. We will look at whether enforcement work, or at least a proportion of that work, should or can be funded from the fees paid by applicants. At the moment it is not. The fees cover development control work, but do not cover enforcement, the development of planning policy, or many other things that the Planning Service does. It may well be that we can generate more income through planning fees to devote to enforcement. There would be no greater drain on the public purse if more of the burden were placed on applicants and others. We are looking at a range of issues here.

Mr Ford: In taking that approach, you place more of a burden on those who are going through the planning process properly to deal with those who are making a mockery of the law. That seems to me to be the reverse of what you should be doing.

Mr Maye: We have not reached any decision on the matter, which is why we want to engage in public consultation. However, we are looking at whether we should go along that line, or, indeed, whether we should introduce punitive fees for those who go ahead and commence development without permission. They should pay a higher fee than someone who follows the process.

Mr Ford: That is the exact reverse of what you outlined earlier.

Mr Maye: No. It is one of the options — and they are nothing more than that. Some may be mutually contradictory, but they must all be expounded, discussed and debated with the Committee and the public. We are examining the issue, and you will see what we have in mind when we bring forward the consultation paper. We look forward to the debate.

Mr Ford: Should the concept of punitive fees not be included in the Bill?

Mr Maye: If the policy had been developed, we would have done that. The issue is only now beginning to come to the fore, and it is being explored in Northern Ireland and in England. In England it is part of their review of planning fees. The idea had not been generated before, and would not have arrived in time to build into this Bill, but I should not rule out its being in the next Bill.

Mr Ford: What provisions are there currently for the Department to obtain costs for taking enforcement action through the courts?

Mr Maye: We can ask for costs, and it will be up to the magistrate or judge to decide what costs are awarded against the offender. In some cases they have been awarded, and in others they have not. The judgement is one for the court to make, but we can and do apply for costs.

Mr Ford: It would be interesting to see the current statistics on how successful that has been.

Mr Maye: We do not do very well, since courts and magistrates do not see the Government as needing costs. We press for them in every case.

Mr Ford: Your being so unsuccessful because of magistrates' failure to impose costs proves the case for punitive fees as an additional statutory measure.

Mr Maye: We need many tools in our armoury to deal with enforcement issues and unauthorised development. That is one of the options that I want to explore with the Committee and the public. The issue is being explored across the UK, and in some other jurisdictions.

We should be ready to present proposals for discussion on that and a range of other issues after the summer.

Mr Poots: Mr Ford has taken us well down the road that I wished to take. Where does the money from court fines go?

Mr Maye: It goes back to the UK Government — not the Department of the Environment.

Mr Poots: It goes back to the Treasury?

Mr Maye: Yes. It goes back to the consolidated fund, which is managed by Treasury. We cannot currently get our hands on that money.

Mr Poots: I agree with Mr Ford that it would be wholly inappropriate to increase fees for those making legitimate planning applications to pay for those breaking the law. We should seek some self-sustaining mechanism, whereby the fines imposed on those breaking the law flow back into your own coffers to run the enforcement section properly.

Mr Maye: We shall explore that.

Mr Poots: I look forward to seeing you go down that route.

Mr McClarty: I agree with the provision of third-party appeals in principle, but what do you perceive as the effect of such a procedure on the planning application process? Would it slow it down, and could that be resolved by an increase in fees to enable more personnel to be employed for planning applications?

Mr Maye: We could speed up the initial process to some degree, and that is part of the aim of 'Modernising Planning Processes'. We also intend to recruit new staff so that we can process more applications, more quickly than at present.

The Chairperson: Cut through some of the bureaucracy.

Mr Maye: You are quite right. There is no doubt that, with the best will in the world, third-party appeals will introduce substantial delays for those cases that are appealed, though not necessarily for the others. The evidence so far from our research in the Republic is that it introduces an average delay of around 11.4 months on top of the time it takes to reach the initial decision. The Committee and the Assembly will need to consider this issue, since it could have a substantial impact, not only on the planning system, but also on the wider economy. By their very nature, applications likely to be appealed by third parties are those that are contentious, and attract objections at the outset. We quite often find that applications that invite objections, and which are considered contentious, are those that will help develop the economy if delivered. However, there is a balance to be struck; natural justice speaks for third-party appeals, which allow everyone a "fair crack of the whip".

On the other hand, we must look quite seriously, not only at the impact of such factors as delayed applications and additional costs on the planning system, but also at the potential impact on the Northern Ireland economy as a whole. Other jurisdictions have designed their whole system around third-party appeals. They have examined the initial process to make it as streamlined as possible. The initial decision is made very quickly, after which the applicant — or the third party — has the right of appeal. In those jurisdictions, the majority of applications are determined very quickly. Those that go to the appeals system take longer, but a balance is struck between the two.

In Northern Ireland we are starting from a slightly different position, since we already have a system in place. That system will be examined as part of the review of public administration, and I have no doubt that the review team will consider this issue, which will generate a great deal of debate. The issue has regularly arisen during my visits to councils in recent weeks. Where should power for development control decisions lie? You can imagine that there are various views on the issue, but it is likely to be considered in the review of public administration. There is an opportunity to examine the fundamentals of the whole system and get things right, moving away from the system introduced in 1973, which moved planning from locally accountable representatives on councils to central government. The issue must be seriously examined as part of the review.

The Chairperson: Of course, if you were the offended person, you would like to have natural justice. By all means speed everyone else's cases, but be sure that you get justice for yourself. The issue is justice and human rights for all.

Mr Armstrong: Everything in this world has a lifespan. We expect historical buildings to last — to be renovated and remain for ever. Trees too have a lifespan, and some have orders placed on them so that they cannot be removed. However, a tree might only have a two or three year lifespan left, so what do you propose to fine someone if you can determine the life left in a tree? How will you manage that?

Mr Maye: In taking a case to court, we would have to convince the court that the tree was not dead, dying or dangerous, which really depends on the assessment made by a professional arboriculturalist, on whose advice we would rely. If the tree has or is reaching the end of its natural lifespan, that will have an impact on whether we take action against the person who might have cut it down — provided they can demonstrate that. That is part of the equation that the court, and the Department — as a prosecuting authority — would consider in making a decision. That happens at present.

The Department's suggestion in the Bill is that it is too easy for a person who cuts down a tree to argue that the tree was dead, dying or dangerous, and we want to tighten that up. However, there will be cases where the tree is just about to fall over or has reached the end of its life, and it is perfectly fine to cut it down. The Department wants the landowner to seek permission before he or she cuts it down, because the Department can then consider the evidence presented by the professional arboriculturalist, and make a judgement about whether or not the tree should be cut down.

Tree preservation orders are not necessarily about eternal preservation. They are about the management of trees and woodland. Management takes account of the fact that woodland, by its very nature, changes with time. Trees grow, mature, eventually die and need to be replaced. The orders are the Department's tools with which to manage that process. There will be occasions when a tree is close to, or has reached the end of its natural life, and may become a danger. In that case, if the landowner seeks permission from the Department to cut down the tree, the Department may grant that permission. However, it may also insist on replanting a tree.

Mr Armstrong: In other words, you are saying that it is not the tree that matters, but the area where the tree should be.

Mr Maye: Absolutely. The character and overall "feel" of the area, and the amenity that it provides to the public are important and must be protected. Trees are a limited natural resource. Northern Ireland does not have many trees, so we should protect the ones we have.

Mr Armstrong: Regardless of a tree's condition, is it possible that if it comes down another tree may go up in its place?

Mr Small: That is one of the provisions in the Bill. It is designed for that kind of situation, so that the Department can insist on replacement.

Mr Armstrong: On the point I raised earlier, I believe that the fine should not be £20,000, but a percentage of the value.

Mr Maye: The Department will consider that suggestion.

Mr A Doherty: I hesitate to revisit the third-party appeals issue. However, if the planning policies and procedures were clearer and stronger, and less prone to misinterpretation or to a variety of interpretations, would there be less need for third-party appeals? Having a measure for third-party appeals, but also making them less likely to happen through having clearer policies might resolve the problem.

Mr Maye: I think so, because if planning policy was clearer, and if it commanded widespread support — not only among the political community but also the wider community — and if area plans were correct and up to date, there would be much less opportunity for people to disagree with a decision. The Department hopes that, in those circumstances, it would get the decision right first time, and that it would be defensible. I agree that that would make the case against a decision slightly weaker, though not altogether remove it. However, it would be a step in the right direction.

The Chairperson: You mentioned higher fines, and you talked about drawing up a case. Is it possible for the Committee to obtain a draft copy? To date, the Committee has no knowledge of the case being drawn up, and there was no indication of it in the Minister's letter.

Mr Maye: The Department's next stage is to bring the case to the Committee for discussion.

The Chairperson: Is it possible for the Committee to obtain a draft soon, so that there can be meaningful discussion? We want to feed in our proposals now rather than at the end of the process.

Mr Maye: Much work needs to be done on higher fine levels, particularly given the points raised today. The Department hopes to present it to the Committee soon. However, in its current state it would not be of much help to the Committee.

The Chairperson: The Committee would like to see the draft as early as possible. We will decide whether it is helpful or not.

Mr Maye: It is hoped that you will have all the papers in the next few weeks.

The Chairperson: I would also like to receive the Queen's University research as soon as possible.

I want to mention one other thing before we finish. Even though this is an important issue, I am concerned that you have only sent the Committee responses that date from April 1999. There are no up-to-date papers. The Committee has the proposed amendments to planning legislation, and an analysis of responses to the discussion document. There are a lot of them, but what do they mean? In some instances there is a "yes" or "no" with a general comment, but the Committee has no details of what the concerns were or if they were met. It is doubtful whether or not the responses from 1999 are meaningful because they may be out of date. To make a judgement, the Committee requires more detailed comments and documentation with more than a "yes" or a "no". Relevant analysis is required and the Committee must know what concerns were expressed and how they were addressed.

Mr Maye: The Department will work with your officials to provide that. Would it be helpful in the meantime to give you copies of the responses? Some respondents asked for their responses not to be released, but I can give you details on other responses, and then we may work on the broader analysis.

The Chairperson: In these days of open government and freedom of information, I am not sure if such requests for anonymity are allowed. What is good enough for your eyes is good enough for ours.

Mr Maye: As the responses were made in 1999, the people who made responses were entitled to say that they did not want them to be released. The Department must respect that until the Freedom of Information Act becomes fully effective in January 2005. The Department can, if you wish, write to the respondents informing them of the Committee's request for sight of their response.

The Chairperson: Yes, that would be helpful. The Committee wishes to be sensitive, but we do want the papers.

Thank you for your contribution to this morning's Committee session.

The Chairperson: Welcome Mr McNaney and Mr Quigley from Belfast City Council, and Mr Wilson and Mr Reaney from Craigavon Borough Council. It would be helpful if both groups could make initial statements. The Committee will then ask questions.

Mr McNaney: We are delighted to have the opportunity to make submissions on this matter. I have spoken to my colleague Trevor Reaney before the meeting, and I will lead off. I will not say a great deal about the initial five clauses of the Bill because they do not affect Belfast City Council; that was set out in our letter of 20 May to the Committee. It would be more appropriate for councils that have an interest in those clauses to make their comments. Mr Reaney will speak about that aspect of the Bill.

The aspects of the Bill that we wish to comment on start at clause 6: ‘Powers of district councils in relation to economic development’. We welcome the extension in powers that the Bill offers local government. Some of the issues contained in the Bill are matters that Belfast City Council and many district councils have been advocating for some time. We welcome the initiative shown by the Minister and his officials in introducing the Bill. We commend it to the Committee as a welcome addition to local government powers in this area.

The Committee will be aware that there has been a change of wording, and this is reflected in the Bill. Previously, councils could participate in economic development activities subject to the consent of the Department — that has now been changed. The Bill states that a district council shall exercise its functions

“in accordance with such directions as may be issued from time to time by the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment.”

I am not suggesting that such directions would be inappropriate, but we are concerned that a much more restrictive interpretation will be placed in legislation than previously existed.

When this matter was presented to Belfast City Council — and it was approved last night — the council endorsed our concern that the word “direction” was too strong. We would prefer that councils come up with overall economic development plans for their districts subject to the “consent” or “approval” of the Department. However, we recognise that, with Invest Northern Ireland, it will be important to have a joined-up and integrated approach to economic development activities.

We have found that there is more impact on economic development activities when it is left to local areas to be innovative. We believe that the word “direction” is a tad too strong.

Currently there is no power to acquire land compulsorily for economic development purposes. There is a power to acquire, hold and develop land — and we welcome that very much. Committee minutes show that some consideration has been given on whether Schedule 6 of the Local Government (Northern Ireland) Order 1972 would permit councils to acquire land by vesting. I have a legal background, and the council’s Director of Legal Services, Mr Quigley, is with me today. Our legal advice is that Schedule 6 is purely procedural. For councils to have the power to vest land for economic development purposes, a provision would need to be added to the Bill — paragraph 6(2)(c) perhaps — that would permit councils to acquire land compulsorily. That will be a matter for the Committee and the Assembly to determine.

There would be occasions when it would be helpful to permit a land bank to be assembled in order to enable an area to be regenerated. For example, the purpose of Belfast’s arterial route strategy is to map areas of deprivation on a geographical information system. The result of that is that the council can then concentrate economic development resources to build a critical mass to rejuvenate deprived areas. The power to compulsorily acquire land, perhaps from someone who may have personal reasons to object to the rejuvenation, would be extremely helpful to councils.

Community safety is a more contentious area. Councils are considering the issue in the context of the Northern Ireland Office consultation document on community safety partnerships. Councils have been concerned that they did not have the power to participate in community safety. The extent to which the Bill gives councils power to participate is welcome, though it could be more positively framed: it is framed in a negative way.

Our letter suggests that it would be better if it were framed in the positive way that economic development powers are framed, which state that councils may promote the enhancement of community safety and may incur associated expenditure, subject to whatever restrictions are deemed appropriate.

We are not saying that councils alone should develop individual community safety partnership plans. Such plans should be prepared in the context of a broad partnership, because many people are involved in community safety. Our letter details how it might be achieved; by building in safeguards to allay the concerns of the Committee or the Assembly. I do not intend to repeat the points made in paragraphs 1 to 6 of our letter. However, I am happy to amplify or add detail to any of the comments made if the Committee considers that to be appropriate.

Councils must have the power to participate in community safety partnerships, and they need the Bill in its present form, though they would prefer it to be more positively framed. However, this must be seen in the context of councils having the power to set up district policing partnerships — and Belfast City Council is setting up district policing partnerships.

When one looks at the objectives set out in the Northern Ireland Policing Board's corporate strategic plan, the outcomes that the Police Service of Northern Ireland (PSNI) has to achieve through district policing partnerships are similar to those that must be achieved through community safety partnerships. There needs to be an administrative connection between the partnerships. The secretariat of district policing partnerships will be based in district councils. At the very least, there should be a shared secretariat with community safety partnerships to ensure constancy and integration of advice.

Some councils might go further than that and say that there should be a commonality of membership. I am not advocating to the Committee that councils should not have powers to participate in community safety partnerships, because, as elected representatives, members know that district councillors are concerned with this issue. They want to be involved and use their expertise.

Mr Reaney: Craigavon Borough Council has not endorsed the comments contained in our submission in full council: our policy and resources committee has endorsed them. It is hoped that the council will endorse the comments on 10 June.

Grants to district councils have been the subject of much debate and scrutiny for many years, and a conclusion has not yet been reached: we hope that the Bill will bring the matter to a conclusion. A fundamental flaw in the current system is the difficulty that councils have in planning expenditure for a number of years ahead. The current formula is, in some cases, widely unpredictable. Information is available only very late in the process of preparing rate estimates and leads to very significant adjustments during the early months of the year — particularly in the run-up to striking the rates in February.

Having a much more stable formula, with a three-year planning framework as currently suggested by the Department, is welcome. It will be of great assistance to councils in planning expenditure. For that reason, Craigavon Borough Council would encourage that the new general grant formula be provided for the 2003-04 financial year.

The definitions of the words “reasonable” and “excessive” cause Craigavon Borough Council concern — and I believe that Committee members have also expressed concern about them. We are concerned about how those words will be defined. We would never argue against the need for some oversight of expenditure; however, there needs to be clarity about the words in the context of councils' expenditure.

Our council shares the views of Belfast City Council on powers relating to economic development. We welcome the proposals, but the word “directions” is too strong; “guidance” would be more appropriate. There certainly needs to be close consultation with district councils in the preparation of any guidance or directions.

We welcome the introduction of powers to enable us to participate formally in community safety. However, we are concerned that there are two tracks to the process — one through the community safety partnerships and the other through the Northern Ireland Office/Policing Board district policing partnerships. We are concerned that the end result will be a fragmented approach to community safety — with duplication, overlap, and perhaps contention along the way — arising from two essentially different partnerships tackling 80% of the work that is common to both of them. We feel that the opportunity should be taken to clarify the position and reduce the potential for duplication and contention.

In particular, the Bill refers to councils undertaking community safety activities through a partnership and the action plan prepared by that partnership. There is a need for councils to have some flexibility — to operate in addition to that provision and outside of it. Issues come to councils' attention that either require urgent action, or can be dealt with directly: there should be provision for that. Councils should be able to spend funds directly on community safety activities. As the Committee is aware, Craigavon Borough Council has carried out work such as the installation of CCTV, fencing of properties and so on, which has greatly improved safety in local estates and communities.

We concur with the view expressed by Belfast City Council that there is a need to find a way of structurally integrating district policing partnerships and community safety partnerships. There are two ways in which Craigavon Borough Council envisages that being facilitated given that it appears that we cannot have a single partnership to do both jobs. One way would be through having a commonality of membership; the other would be through having a joined-up secretariat serving both groups. Both ways would reduce the potential for duplication and would assist in a more joined-up approach to the issue.

I wish to comment on behalf of the Society of Local Authority Chief Executives and Senior Managers (SOLACE), which considered the Bill on 31 May. The Committee Clerk contacted me to find out whether SOLACE had any comments. The society generally supports the views expressed by Belfast City Council and Craigavon Borough Council. However, there are two particular points that I want to highlight.

First, in respect of economic development, SOLACE feels that vesting powers in relation to acquiring land for development purposes are needed in the Bill to ensure that councils can fulfil that role fully. Secondly, an issue not covered in the Bill, but which might be, is emergency planning. Councils — and, in particular, chief executives of councils — have an informal role to deal with the co-ordination of a response to an emergency. There is no legislative cover for that particular situation, and it should be given consideration in the Bill. There should be a permissive power — not a statutory or directive power — for councils to participate and spend money. It covers councils and their staff if they undertake activities and spend money in the immediate aftermath of an emergency.

With those two comments, made on behalf of SOLACE, I conclude my remarks.

The Chairperson: As regards your last point, what do you define as an emergency?

Mr Reaney: It is defined extensively in the emergency planning documentation, nationally and through the central emergency planning unit. It is deemed to be a situation beyond the normal competence or capability of organisations to respond. For example, the River Bann might flood at Portadown. If it did, there would be a need to respond. The lead agencies would be the Rivers Agency, Water Service and so on. However, in the past, councils have been involved in providing sandbags and assisting with the clear up. That expenditure would normally be outside a local authority's competence.

Mr A Doherty: Mr McNaney, I take it that you believe that the Bill will be ineffective if clause 6 does not give councils vesting powers. I say that because the Minister made it fairly clear when he spoke to the Committee that it was not the Department's intention to include vesting powers in the Bill.

Mr McNaney: When normal negotiations fail, the ability to undertake a vesting process would considerably assist district councils in pursuing regeneration and promotion of economic development in their districts. In the public interest, a piece of land could be assembled with other land for the purposes of economic development. I am not saying that the Bill would be ineffective; I am saying that it would be more effective if we had the provision.

Mr A Doherty: It has been suggested that councils have sufficient powers under other legislation. Do you agree with that?

Mr McNaney: Councils have powers to vest land in specific circumstances; a specific statutory power must be shown in relation to a statutory function. If we are being given a statutory function as regards economic development, we need a specific statutory power to vest for that. I would defer to Mr Quigley to correct me if I am wrong.

Mr Quigley: The chief executive is correct on the legal position concerning the compulsory acquisition of land, otherwise known as vesting.

A council's vesting power must derive from primary legislation. Throughout the range of local government enactments, from the Public Health Acts to those that regulate environmental control, there is always a specific enabling power to acquire land compulsorily where it cannot be acquired through agreement. In the context of promoting economic development — and if the Committee were to take the view that it was appropriate — a specific power to acquire land compulsorily in default of agreement would be required.

The chief executive covered all the issues relating to economic development except the formation of companies: Belfast City Council mentioned that in its letter. Such a power exists across the water, but not here. In the context of promoting economic development, which is what we are talking about, had we the power to be involved safely in companies, the ability of councillors to undertake the promotion of economic development projects through companies would be guaranteed. That would give some comfort to councils, because the current position is unclear and leads to potential liability for individual councillors. We would like to avoid that.

The issue requires primary enabling legislation. Schedule 6 of the Local Government (Northern Ireland) Order 1972 deals with the procedures for vesting land; therefore, there is no need to worry about further legislation on how vesting operates.

Mr A Doherty: As regards community safety, your letter states that clause 7(1)(d) should include the power to "establish and lead" community safety partnerships. Could you expand on the nature and scope of the leadership you expect from councils in such partnerships?

Mr McNaney: In the context of the consultative document issued by the Northern Ireland Office, if a district council's role were examined and reviewed alongside developments taking place in England, Wales, Scotland and the Republic of Ireland, you would find that the role of a local authority is to be a community advocate. Its role is to speak on behalf of the citizens in its district on the topics that concern them. What grounds a district council in that regard is the representative nature of its members. Councillors are elected to speak on behalf of the citizens of an area, express their concerns and bring those concerns to the legitimate agencies that oversee, or can influence, items such as drugs, burglaries, vandalism and antisocial behaviour.

Belfast City Council feels that that civic and community leadership role is inherent to the operation of a successful community safety partnership. It should be clarified that councils can pursue that role in leading and establishing such partnerships rather than have them hang in the ether of an undefined Northern Ireland Office document suggesting that partnerships can be properly administered by several bodies. The electoral and democratic credibility that councils can bring is essential to the effective operation of such partnerships, though I fully accept that for them to operate effectively there must be a partnership.

Mr Reaney: I support what Mr McNaney has said. We share the views of Belfast City Council on civic leadership, the role of local government and local governance. It is vital to get those roles right.

Ms Lewsley: I have serious reservations about the duplication and the overlap of community safety partnerships and district policing partnership boards. Do you see a defined line where they differ? If you are talking about commonality of membership and joint administration, then why does there need to be two separate committees comprising the same people? Why can there not be one committee? Part of the reason for having two committees is probably due to funding, which comes to them separately.

Mr Reaney: As regards commonality of membership, it would be fair to say that we would not see there being exact commonality. There are interests that need to be represented on community safety partnerships that would not be involved in district policing partnerships. Craigavon Borough Council will be looking towards taking the district policing board membership and adding some of the statutory agencies such as the Housing Executive and Roads Service to form the community safety partnership. We would also bring in the elected representatives and the independent community members from the district policing partnership.

If you are saying to me that I should start with a blank sheet of paper and that there should be one partnership with two functions, then I think that the legislation will not enable us to achieve that. The best we can do is to achieve some commonality of membership and a joint administration that will reduce duplication. We need to ensure at the start of the process that the legislation facilitates commonality so that councils can achieve it locally if they wish to do so.

Ms Lewsley: Are you suggesting taking the district policing partnership board and increasing it by including the wider community?

Mr Reaney: I referred specifically to the statutory agencies because we have community representatives on the district policing partnerships through independent appointments. Particular statutory agencies not represented on the policing partnerships would need to be directly involved in community safety partnerships.

Mr Poots: I am concerned about the methodology for establishing the general grant. It is a fairer methodology than what we currently have but I am surprised to find, as regards the tourism adjustment, that councils such as Coleraine, Down and North Down will lose out. That will be a surprise to most people, and it is regrettable that representatives from Coleraine Borough Council are not here today to speak about it.

Significant tourism is taking place in all those council areas. Did SOLACE raise that issue with the Department? Those councils are losing out under tourism adjustment.

Mr Reaney: Individual councils have raised that issue with the Department, but, to the best of my knowledge, SOLACE has not.

Mr Ford: The number of points of common interest between the councils and the Committee has been interesting. Councils may be aware that the Committee has already raised several of those points with the Department, and it is awaiting a response.

Would it be acceptable to you, as council representatives, if the reference in clause 6(4), "in accordance with such directions", were replaced by "councils shall have regard to guidance issued by Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment"?

Mr McNaney: As a council officer, I would welcome that. There is a need to integrate economic development activities. We have the new economic development body, Invest Northern Ireland, and we do not need duplication. However, local initiative and creativity promotes economic development. Central control can sometimes militate against that. I would welcome the amendment the Committee is considering.

Mr Ford: Is that a view from Craigavon or SOLACE?

Mr Reaney: This is a personal view. There is a need for joined-up governance between local and central government. If you are in a situation where you want to achieve that and have partnership working, words such as "directions" seems to be counter to that. Guidance, formulated in consultation with local authorities, would be the appropriate way forward.

The Chairperson: Mr Reaney, a written submission from SOLACE would suffice instead of you coming back to the Committee to make a presentation. Thank you for coming. Several of the points that you raised have also been raised by Committee members.

Do councils unanimously welcome the removal of the 5p restriction?

Mr Reaney: Yes. It provides local authorities, or district councils, with an opportunity to decide how much they spend. They may choose to spend more or less than 5p, but it is local discretion to meet local needs, and we all welcome that.

The Chairperson: I welcome Dr Tracy Power, Ms Marie Finnegan and Mr David Barr from the Department of the Environment, and Mr Peter McNaney from Belfast City Council.

Dr Power: Mr Poots made a point about tourist adjustment when he was speaking to Mr Reaney from Craigavon Borough Council earlier.

Tourism adjustment is made up of tourist bed nights and also a measure of deprivation. We thought about whether that should be included, and the Office of the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister (OFMDFM) pushed to have it included. Tourism needs to be encouraged into areas that are deprived in other ways.

If the Committee feels that it is not appropriate, there is still time for it to be discussed and removed. If the deprivation aspect were removed, north Down et cetera would gain on the tourism adjustment side.

Mr Poots: Everyone used to go on holiday to Bangor, but unfortunately they no longer go there. I used to go to Portrush. The figures for North Down Borough Council are down by 921 people; Down District Council, which covers the Mountains of Mourne and Newcastle — strategic tourism areas — is down 201 people; and Coleraine Borough Council, which covers Portrush, Portstewart, Castlerock and the north coast is down 81 people. It is outrageous that you have devised a formula that says that the tourism adjustment goes down, on the basis of TSN, for three main tourism areas in Northern Ireland — with respect to other councils and areas.

With respect to OFMDFM and the TSN adjustment, people cannot be persuaded to go on holiday to a deprived area. People want to stay in a pleasant environment. Traditionally, they stayed in those three areas and other areas. It is scandalous that those areas lose out as a result of the methodology.

Dr Power: That is a fair point. We can put that to the other Departments if the Committee feels that that needs to be adjusted. OFMDFM may have to bite that bullet.

The Chairperson: There is sense behind the argument. There is much deprivation in provision in some of those areas. The provision must be enhanced if we want to attract people from overseas.

Dr Power: It is the Committee's call either way, depending on how you want to play it.

The Chairperson: It is important to get clarification.

Ms Finnegan: I shall make two points on clause 6, which covers economic development. The views expressed this morning by the representatives from Belfast City Council and Craigavon Borough Council made it clear that there has been difficulty since the beginning with the word "directions" in clause 6(4). I met yesterday with representatives from the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment. It is supportive of all the views that have been expressed, and it feels that clarification is needed. It wants to issue guidelines within which councils can work, and it wants to work with councils and consult with them to draw up the guidelines to be followed. The Department would like us to reflect that in the legislation and drop the word "directions". That would seem to tie in with what councils have said this morning.

The Chairperson: What are you going to replace it with?

Ms Finnegan: We have not drafted the words yet.

The Chairperson: One word could be replaced only for people to find that word equally objectionable.

Ms Finnegan: It would clearly say that the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment will produce guidelines in consultation with councils.

The Chairperson: Will you comment on vesting?

Ms Finnegan: We did not take that on board. However, following the Second Stage of the Bill in the Assembly, the point was made about vesting powers with regard to economic development. The Department consulted its solicitors, who were of the view that the wording did not give councils vesting powers. From the correspondence that I have read from councils, it seems to be coming through loud and clear that that is something they wish to see. The Department would have no problem with that. However, it would mean inserting a new paragraph in clause 6.

The Chairperson: Would that be clause 6(2)(c)?

Ms Finnegan: Yes. We would consult our solicitors about where best to insert that, but it would go in as a separate item so that no doubt might arise.

Mr Poots: In relation to the community safety function — [Interruption].

The Chairperson: We shall return to that, because Mr Barr is champing at the bit to say something. We shall hold him back for a few moments, because Mr Ford also wants to say something.

Mr Ford: To return to the two points about clause 6 that were raised, I welcome the fact that the Department, councils and the Committee are in agreement, subject to its precise wording.

Ms Finnegan: That is all that I have to say.

The Chairperson: That is a shame — you have charmed us on every other occasion. We shall see whether Mr Barr is just as amenable, or whether he will put the foot out of the bucket.

Mr Barr: I probably have more to say than Ms Finnegan, as community safety was raised more frequently than other issues.

The Northern Ireland Office (NIO) has responsibility for district policing partnerships as it does community safety partnerships (CSPs); they are reserved matters that involve NIO strategy.

The Chairperson: We have already written to the NIO about that.

Mr Barr: We have spoken to NIO officials and relayed the Committee's comments. We have also responded as a Department to the NIO strategy and relayed the concerns that have been expressed about that. I hope that the NIO will respond to the Committee shortly.

Craigavon Borough Council said that councils should be allowed wider powers to engage in community safety; Belfast City Council also mentioned that, and the idea was carefully considered. However, we must be mindful that this NIO strategy is trying to encourage a joined-up approach to community safety activity. The NIO obviously feels that a CSP approach is the best way to deal with that. We shall not discourage councils from engaging in community safety as a single body.

Section 115 of the Local Government Act 1972 provides councils with an opportunity to spend money on matters that they consider to be in the interests of the council, its area and its citizens. Therefore, although it is cash-restricted — half a penny in the pound — some councils may not have much scope with that. However, they still have statutory cover if they wish to spend on community safety in its broadest sense. The Bill is trying to enable councils to engage in community safety partnerships. We must be mindful that that is the situation.

It was asked whether councils should take leadership roles or whether we should make provisions in the Bill that enable them to do that. We must consider that carefully, because the NIO strategy does not specify who should assume leadership or who should select members. If we introduced something such as that into our Bill, we would perhaps override the NIO strategy, which is a reserved matter. I am unsure whether councils would want the power to take responsibility for the leadership of community safety partnerships; only two councils have made that representation. We must be careful that we do not give councils a responsibility that they perhaps do not want.

The Chairperson: The Society of Local Authority Chief Executives (SOLACE) also raised that point. That group represents all councils, not only two.

Mr Barr: I have not read what SOLACE has said on the matter, but I have heard — [Interruption].

The Chairperson: It will be interesting to see SOLACE's response when it arrives. Your point may be superseded if you are basing it on a false premise.

Mr Barr: Perhaps. It is strange that the individual councils did not make the same representation in their submissions. The Bill is discretionary; in other words, it suggests that councils may wish to engage in community safety partnerships. Therefore, several councils may choose not to do that.

The issue of emergency planning was raised, and a fair comment was made that emergency planning is separate from community safety. There is a link in the sense that both require consideration to be given to the safety of citizens. There has been no detailed consultation with councils on emergency planning. We are concerned that the introduction of such a clause at this late stage of the Bill would require further consultation with councils, and we must be careful not to delay the progress of the Bill. We shall not forget about that issue. The Minister has already assured SOLACE that he will consider the matter and address it, and perhaps, develop a further piece of legislation in the future.

The Chairperson: What if an emergency happens before the matter is addressed? It is not a contentious matter. If there were an emergency everyone would wish to assist.

Mr Barr: Emergency planning has been going on for some years — it is not a new concept. The Department issued a circular letter in June 2000 that set out the responsibility of chief executives in emergency planning and response. That letter was cleared through the local government emergency management group, on which SOLACE is represented, as well as the Chief Environmental Health Officer and departmental officials. The letter was agreed by all parties and issued to all councils. The councils have taken on board those responsibilities and are preparing emergency plans in accordance with guidance that the Department issued through the local government emergency management group. Emergency planning is actively taking place.

The Chairperson: Therefore there should be no problem inserting the provision into the Bill.

Mr Barr: We would need to be very careful about the wording. If it were a matter of inserting a simple clause, I would be content to put that in the Bill. However, it is never that simple. We would have to define what is meant by emergency planning, and I would be concerned that there would be a delay. I am happy to take the matter back to the Department to explore it.

The Chairperson: Any delay would be caused by the Department rather than the Committee. We shall see how quickly you respond.

Mr Barr: If it were a case of inserting a straightforward clause, we would consider it. If I felt that it would not delay the Bill, and if the Committee and district councils were content with it, it could be considered.

The Chairperson: It will be interesting to see the outcome.

Mr Poots: With regard to the community safety function, although it may be an issue for the NIO and the district policing partnership boards, councils will have to pay for both. It is important that we get it right, and that the two groups are not tripping over each other and duplicating work. We need greater clarity on the role of the community safety function, how it relates to the district policing partnership boards, and how the two groups can interconnect. I am not satisfied to proceed with the community safety function until we have that clarification.

Mr Barr: Do you suggest that clarification be included in the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill?

Mr Poots: Guidance is needed on what the community safety function is, and how it will fit in with the district policing partnership boards. For example, the Housing Executive has a role in tackling drug abuse, but how will it make that role compatible with the role of the district policing partnership boards? There may be poor lighting in some areas, and Roads Service may be able to help, but, again, how does that fit in with the role of the district policing partnership boards?

Mr Barr: The Department of the Environment cannot answer that question. That is a strategy matter for the NIO to address, and I am sure that it will address that in its submission to the Committee.

The Chairperson: With the greatest respect, Mr Barr, if that is to be included in the Bill, you cannot cop out of answering the question. If it is to be included in your Bill, it must mean something — the Committee must know what it means. It is no use to say that the Bill will include a certain provision, but that no one knows what it means. Is this duplication? I am fed up with quangos — the country is full of quangos. We are establishing two groups to do the same work. Some 80% of the two groups' work will be the same, serviced by the council. That is not good enough. The functions, and how they will be introduced so that there will not be duplication and fragmentation, are unclear. With the greatest respect, Mr Barr, the provision appears in your Bill. Whether you say that it is a matter for the NIO is not relevant; it is in the Bill, and the Bill is coming from the Department of the Environment. We must clarify the meaning.

Mr Barr: The Bill is there to enable district councils to engage in community safety partnerships, if they so wish. The community safety strategy is out for public consultation by the NIO, and, as a result of that consultation, only the NIO can determine what community safety policy it will introduce. I assume that everyone will have the opportunity to respond. The Bill cannot go into the detail of community safety strategy; it is there to enable district councils to engage in CSPs.

The Chairperson: Unless the Committee knows what the provision means, do not expect us to give our seal of approval to it. The provision is balanced between two Departments. If the Committee is to approve a Bill that includes such a provision we shall need to know what we are approving. I do not care where the responsibility lies. Make no mistake: we want to know what we are approving. If you do not come up with the answers, no harm to you, do not expect us to give our seal of approval.

Members are saying that they are not happy with what is being said; that is their prerogative and their duty in scrutinising legislation.

Ms Lewsley: I tried to find out from Belfast City Council and Craigavon Borough Council representatives whether they could identify any defined difference between CSPs and district policing partnerships. They could not, because they said that 80% of the both groups' functions would probably be the same. The only difference was that other statutory agencies would be included at CSP level. No one can tell us what the two defined roles will be. Accepting your point that the district policing partnership boards are a reserved matter and the NIO's responsibility, we do not know your strategy for CSPs. That is the problem.

Mr Barr: The Department of the Environment is not responsible for the community safety strategy. Therefore we do not have a strategy. We can respond to the NIO strategy and we have done so; district councils and others have also provided comment. It is not for me to respond to the Committee about NIO strategy on community safety; it is a reserved matter. Undoubtedly, the NIO will respond to the Committee in due course.

The Chairperson: There is no point asking you questions such as this if you do not have the power to answer them.

Mr Barr: With respect, Mr Chairperson, you are asking me a question about the district policing partnerships and the community safety partnership strategy. The Department of the Environment has no responsibility for those. How do you expect me to answer that question?

The Chairperson: We are asking you that question because the provision appears in the Department's legislation. One of the strategies is being provided for in your legislation.

Mr Barr: If we go back to square one, Mr Chairperson; the Department reacted to —

The Chairperson: We understand where it came from. However, there is still not clarity. Councils will have responsibility for two functions, and there seems to be an overlap. Someone said that there would be an 80% overlap. One has to ask questions about that. I am not trying to take away from your responsibility, but if you cannot give us the answers we shall have to go to the person who can. The Committee will have to get answers before the Bill can pass.

Ms Lewsley: My question was on the general grant. Craigavon Borough Council asked for clarification on clause 4(1)(a),

“a district council has failed to achieve or maintain a reasonable standard of economy, efficiency and effectiveness in the discharge of its functions”, and clause 4(1)(b),

“the expenditure of a district council has been excessive having regard to its financial resources and other relevant circumstances”.

Ms Finnegan: The Committee raised those questions before, and we provided written answers. “Reasonable” cannot be quantified. First, we would have to consider the grant that a council actually receives. For example, there is a wide variation in the payment of grants between Strabane and Craigavon, as Craigavon sometimes does not get any, or very many, grant payments. We have to look at what is reasonable, and, as we made clear at the previous meeting, we intend to change considerably the wording of that clause. At present, we are using the exact wording that is in existing legislation, going back to the 1972 Order. We shall change it substantially so that the local government auditor will have a clearly defined role. He does have a role at present, but it is not expressed in the Bill. We shall clearly set out the local government auditor's role in reporting to the Department on whatever the inefficiency or inadequacy may be.

Secondly, we shall state the Department's role, which again is a reporting role — this time to the Northern Ireland Assembly. The Department will make a recommendation of what we consider to be a reasonable amount to be deducted, taking into account all the circumstances. The Assembly would approve the amount to be determined, and if it did not consider the amount the Department was recommending to be reasonable, the Department would have to accept its decision.

The Chairperson: We must move on as we are running out of time. We have to make one decision before 1.00 pm.

Mr A Doherty: Much has been said today about partnerships, and I feel that there is room for more effective partnership between the different arms of government. Is the NIO's stance on every aspect of the Bill set in stone, or is it open to persuasion? You seem to be indicating that what the NIO says is fixed. Moreover, if the passage of the Bill predates the NIO introducing its community safety partnership strategy, what will be the consequences in that case? The NIO's strategy does not conform to the Bill.

Mr Barr: I shall answer your final question first. Obviously, the two have to run together. The NIO strategy is out for consultation, which confirms that it is prepared to take into account the views being expressed by several important bodies, such as the Committee. The Bill has to be made in time for the general grant to be cleared, and we cannot wait until such times as the NIO strategy is finally defined and cleared.

Undoubtedly, councils are looking to have involvement in community safety and wish to avail themselves of resources that the NIO has secured. Total funding is not going to fall on district councils. The NIO has already secured resources for the next three years and has indicated that it will be funding the feeding system in establishing CSPs. If councils decide to take the lead on that matter, they will want to benefit from it.

I shall make another important point on community safety, which may involve a potential amendment to the Bill. Some councils have indicated that clause 7(1)(d) in the Bill could be more explicit in allowing them to expend money on community safety. It is implied in clause 7(1)(d) that councils, in assisting and facilitating a CSP, could contribute financially to that body in implementing community safety projects. I have taken legal advice on that and, in the interest of legal certainty, perhaps we should include an addition to that clause. It should be amended to read:

“generally assist financially and otherwise and facilitate such a partnership in the exercise of its functions.”

The legislative draftsman will prepare a draft for that, and the Department, in turn, will seek the Minister's approval.

The Chairperson: You said, Ms Finnegan, that you had to consider some legal advice; for example, on the changing of the word “directions”. Will you get those proposed changes to the Committee as soon as possible?

Ms Finnegan: Yes. We wanted to take on board councils’ views. The Department has started to prepare a redraft in which it has considered the wording that Committee members have recommended in the past few weeks. It is hoped that it will be with you next week or, at the very latest, the following week. It depends on our getting clearance from the Assembly draftsman.

The Chairperson: That would be helpful.

Mr McNaney: I shall write to the Committee Clerk with some reflections on community safety. I sympathised with Mr Barr when he was attempting to answer questions for the NIO. Belfast City Council welcomes the Committee’s intervention with the NIO because some rigour needs to be given to consideration of its strategy. The Department wants to give legal powers to councils to participate in community safety, activities for which there is a strong degree of support from all councillors. It is an issue that deeply affects their constituents. Time will be well served in asking the NIO to bring clarity to a document that lacks clarity on how to effect implementation. I support the clause that gives councils the power to participate because without it their ability will be limited and a vacuum will be created.

I shall write to the Committee Clerk with informed views on that. I could also send the Committee the council’s endorsed comments on the community safety strategy, which may strengthen the Committee’s ability to interrogate the NIO.

The Chairperson: The Committee has sympathy for a person presenting something over which he does not have complete control. However, the Committee wants clarity from those who have the responsibility, which is why it has written to the NIO. We await a response from the NIO, and its representatives will probably appear before the Committee shortly. Before the Committee puts its stamp of approval on something it must get clarity.

Mr Barr: I welcome that.

The Chairperson: Thank you.

FUR FARMING (PROHIBITION) BILL
(NIA 8/01)

CONSIDERATION OF RESPONSES TO CONSULTATION

Members present:

Rev Dr Ian Paisley (Chairperson)
Mr Savage (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr Armstrong
Mr Bradley
Mr Douglas
Mr Ford
Mr Kane
Mr M Murphy
Mr Paisley Jnr

The Chairperson (Rev Dr Ian Paisley): We are considering responses to consultation, which are all contained in your document files. The Committee Office has provided a summary comparing the implications on respect for animals and the British Fur Trade Association. A copy of the submission of the Council for Nature, Conservation and the Countryside has also been distributed to members.

We must look at the submissions in the context of possible amendments to the Bill. We have not heard of any amendments, but perhaps members of the Committee will put some. We must also decide the way forward, including options laid out in the summary paper. It states that we need to consider whether we want those people who gave us representations to be examined by the Committee.

We had a fairly long canter over this field at the last meeting, and clarified our views on it. Whether it is a question of morality or expediency is not our business; we are not going to dissect the motives of those who sponsored the Bill.

The summary document notes that economic considerations relating to respect for animals have not been raised. As regards the British Fur Trade Association (BFTA), it notes that the fur trade represents a turnover of over £50 million a year for the UK, with BFTA members responsible for buying the majority of world trade at primary level as pelts. Fur sales have grown in the UK over the past 5 years due to a re-channelling of fur through fashion outlets. Sales of fur, including fur trim, increased by well over 30% in the UK in 1999-2000. The summary also refers to the IFTF (International Fur Trade Federation)/EFBA (European Fur Breeders' Association) paper 'the Socio-Economic Impact of European Fur Farming'.

The arguments put in the representations that have been made to us are for or against the Bill, rather than about the wording of the Bill. It is like a second reading in that respect, rather than a Committee Stage where phrases are added or deleted.

The Committee Clerk: Chairman, I would bring one thing to the Committee's attention. In the submission from the Council for Nature, Conservation and the Countryside, Dr Lucinda Blakiston Houston refers to her comments of 16 May 2001. We have established that those comments were made to the Department as opposed to the Committee, and given what the council goes on to say, the Committee may need to see those comments. The council mentions clause 2(1) and the wording "in respect of animals of a particular description", and asks whether that is clarified anywhere. Members may be minded to pass that on to the Department and ask for it to be included in its response. The Department owes the Committee a response about other issues from the previous session.

The Chairperson: Are we agreed that we send that letter on and ask the Department to answer it while considering its answer to previous representations?

Members: Yes.

The Committee Clerk: The council is also concerned about the legal definition of fur. This coincides somewhat with an issue raised by the Committee last time, as the council wants to know if this would extend to the breeding of rabbits for meat and fur, or to other domesticated animals.

The Chairperson: Also hides, and pigskin?

The Committee Clerk: Precisely.

The Chairperson: Is pigskin regarded as fur?

Mr Armstrong: It all depends on its age.

Mr Savage: I see that fur farming uses 647 million tonnes of waste from the fish and meat industries each year. That is a significant way of getting rid of waste. Is that the figure for Great Britain?

The Chairperson: No, I think it is for the European Union.

This letter needs an answer from the Department. We can back it up with our request for an answer.

Do you have any idea when they are going to reply to our other briefs?

The Committee Clerk: The Department is aware that their officials are due back again on 21 June. They know that they need to reply in advance of that date.

The Chairperson: We now come to the ethical part of the debate. The summary document notes that on these grounds, the Bill can be welcomed “wholeheartedly”, because “fur farming is morally indefensible as it involves an inherently unacceptable element of cruelty to produce a frivolous product for which there are many alternatives.”

As regards the British Fur Trade Association (BFTA), the document states that

“No case (for public morality) [is] made in the Bill or in the Explanatory and Financial Memorandum nor are the wider implications for other sectors explored. The BFTA state that they believe that the real reason behind the GB Act was a £1 million donation made to the Labour Party by the Political Animal Lobby.”

Was that right? The document goes on to say that

“The BFTA express surprise that the policy objective in the Explanatory and Financial Memorandum (which states that it is necessary to prohibit fur farms in Northern Ireland to bring the law in line with that in GB) suggests that the law in Northern Ireland must follow English law.”

There are two sides to the matter. One is an ethical argument; the other economic.

The last time we discussed this matter, the attitude was that if we had had a strong ethical approach, we should never have let the Bill get so far. The Bill is now on its way, and there is no way to stop it. I have not had much correspondence about the matter. Usually, a big issue like this, with great conviction behind it, leads to an overwhelming amount of letters. I do not know whether other Members have been lobbied about the matter.

Mr Douglas: We went through this matter at length and work has been done behind the scenes. I am not sure that it is all that important. There are other more serious matters that we should spend our time on. The fur farming Bill is going to happen anyway. I have no great difficulty with it.

The Chairperson: We certainly had a fair canter over the matter. I do not think that we can add much to that. There was no great opposition from anybody on the Committee.

Mr Armstrong: I agree with Mr Douglas that we should move on to more serious matters.

The Chairperson: Does the Committee wish to take oral evidence from any of the consultees that have provided written submissions?

Mr Ford: We have enough evidence in writing. We have no need to take oral evidence when the mind of the Committee seems to have been determined by the written evidence that we have received.

Mr Savage: I have been reading about foxes in the document. They are increasing in number. Do you remember when there was a bounty?

The Chairperson: You took the tongue of the fox into the police station.

Mr Savage: Foxes are not scarce.

The Chairperson: Those foxes are not in the wild; they are foxes that are being kept for their fur, which is another issue.

We do not want to put all the information into the Committee’s report. It is a waste of money to include copies of every submission that we receive in the report. The Committee could make its main submission and lodge copies of the other representations in the Assembly Library.

Mr Ford: Our staff could adequately prepare a two- or three-page summary, which is all that we require. They have already done that, although other representations that have agreed with the purposes of the Bill, but have not spelt it out in detail, have not been included. Those should be added in.

The Chairperson: We should lodge them in the Assembly Library in case anyone wants to consult them. However, it would be a waste of public money to publish all the submissions. Nobody will read them anyway. We shall move to the next item of business.

Mr Douglas: We should acknowledge the research and work that has been done by our staff. Though the issue was important, we felt that we should not spend much more time on it, and, because the relevant information was available, it was easy to deal with it quickly. I express my thanks.

The Chairperson: We have heard from everyone we wanted to write to us, and their propositions are before us. Only one proposition has yet to arrive, and that is from Newtownabbey Borough Council, which could not reply in time.

Mr Ford: The Committee is to have a further meeting with the Department on 21 June. It is hoped that that will not be a long session. Will it be possible to complete the clause-by-clause scrutiny of the Bill to allow the staff to get it printed over the summer? Given the potential legislative programme, we ought to be able to get a Bill like that out of the way.

The Committee Clerk: Chairperson, you have raised a few items with the Department, which has yet to reply to them. They may require consideration of an amendment. On the other hand, as with the Dogs (Amendment) Bill, the Committee may agree with the Department’s rationale that there is no need for an amendment for those items of business. Until that is known, it is impossible to say.

Mr Ford: A limited number of points remain to be discussed; there should be limited discussion on them.

The Chairperson: That is up to the Committee.

The Committee Clerk: It should be possible to finish taking evidence and to go through the Bill clause-by-clause at the same session. The Committee can then agree that it is content with the clauses or recommend amendments to them.

Mr Ford: We should set that today as our aspiration, unless complexities arise when the Committee meets the Department on 21 June. This business could be completed and signed off by the summer.

The Committee Clerk: A report must be signed off, but that could be done on 28 June.

The Chairperson: All Members are agreed on that.

The Chairperson: I welcome the officials, Mr John Clarke, Mr David McGowan and Ms Marion Reynolds. We must complete our consideration of the Bill by Wednesday 26 June and may need extra meetings. We shall begin with clause 1. Perhaps you will explain it, Mr Clarke.

Clause 1 (Further duties of authorities towards children whom they are looking after)

Mr Clarke: Clause 1 introduces the concept of an eligible child, one of the key terms used in the legislation. An eligible child is one who has been in care for a period and from an age prescribed by regulation. The consultation period indicated that the probable prescribed period was 13 weeks and the probable prescribed age 14. However, those are not mentioned in the legislation itself.

The Bill also provides, under 34A(4), for the Department to include or exclude groups through regulation. It places a duty on trusts to assess the needs of each eligible child to determine what advice, assistance and support a young person will need on leaving care. All eligible children are to have a pathway planned from their sixteenth birthday based on the assessment. A pathway plan is in a sense an extension of a care plan covering the transition to independent adult living.

The Chairperson: Do you intend to specify the required period by regulation? If not, should it not be in the Bill?

Mr Clarke: We intend to prescribe the period by regulation.

The Chairperson: Clause 1 inserts a new article, 34A, into the Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1995 and deals with preparations for their ceasing to be looked after. There are 10 paragraphs. Are members content with paragraph 1?

Ms McWilliams: You are asking us to move through each of the clauses today. Perhaps we might return to them after the officials have given their evidence.

The Committee Clerk: Mr Chairman, the officials have already been before the Committee about the Bill's general intent, along with witnesses. The intention today was to allow Members to consider each clause in turn to ensure that they are content with them and sign them off.

The Chairperson: That is the idea.

Ms McWilliams: That might be the easiest way to do it. Perhaps we could go through them after the officials have given their evidence.

The Chairperson: The Committee Clerk and his colleagues will explain the content of each clause. A lot of the people we consulted were in agreement, but clause 6 is a problem, and we will come back to that.

The Committee Clerk: The Committee has an opportunity, today and next week, to consider the Bill clause by clause. We expect to have that completed by 26 June when we will seek approval of the draft report. The benefit of having officials here as we move through the clauses is that they can answer questions. One of the reasons for scrutinising the Bill now is that the oral and written submissions received by the Committee largely supported it. However, some questions were raised about how it would be implemented and what guidance would be issued. One or two possible amendments have been put forward by witnesses, and they are tabbed. The prime concern was clause 6, "Exclusion from benefits". That was raised by two or three organisations. This opportunity enables members to ask officials about the consequences of, for instance, removing that clause.

The Chairperson: I had hoped that we would get through a few of the clauses today.

Ms McWilliams: That is fine. We will look at the uncontentious clauses and come back to the others.

The Chairperson: Clause 1 is to insert new article 34A after article 34 of the 1995 Children Order. There are 10 paragraphs in article 34A, and, if agreed, we will move through the clause fairly quickly.

Paragraph 1 says that the existing duty of an authority is to advise, assist and befriend a child in its care. Paragraphs 2 and 3 place additional duties on the authority and define an “eligible child” as a 16- or 17-year-old who has been looked after for a prescribed period. Paragraph 4 enables the Department to make regulations to include or exclude particular groups from the definition of “eligible children”, for example, children who normally live at home with their families. Paragraphs 5, 6 and 7 require an authority to assess the needs of each eligible child; to prepare pathway plans for each child; and to review those plans regularly. Any such review may be carried out at the same time as a review of the child’s case under article 45 of the Children Order. Paragraphs 8 and 9 enable the Department to make regulations about needs assessments, and paragraph 10 requires an authority to arrange for a child to have a personal adviser.

Ms McWilliams: Was paragraph 10 contentious?

The Chairperson: Evidence has supported the intent of the clause.

Ms McWilliams: We will come to that later; that is fine.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 2 (Additional functions of authorities in respect of certain children)

Mr Clarke: Clause 2 amends article 25 of the Children Order 1995. It introduces the concept of the “relevant child”, which is a 16- or 17-year-old who has left care. An “eligible child” is a child who has been in care and who fulfils the definition in the proposed article 34A. A “relevant child” has left care, but was an “eligible child” while in it. The clause introduces the concept of the “responsible authority” as being the last trust that looked after the young person while in care.

That trust would remain responsible for the young person wherever he or she moves to live. Some of the duties of the responsible authority towards a relevant child are stated generally in the clause. The authority must keep in touch with him, and, where contact is lost, the trust must continue to take reasonable steps to re-establish it. The intention is to prevent the child drifting away and losing contact with the trust’s responsibility. The clause we dealt with mentioned arranging for a personal adviser, and the trust must appoint one for each relevant child.

Clause 1 says that the responsible trust must ensure that a relevant child has a regularly-reviewed pathway plan based on an assessment of his needs. The Department, by means of regulations, may prescribe who is to be consulted in relation to an assessment, the way in which an assessment is carried out and the recording of the results and any other considerations to which the trust must have regard. Additionally, the responsible trust must safeguard and promote the welfare of a relevant child, supporting, maintaining and accommodating him and providing other such support as may be prescribed by the Department. Prescribing suitable accommodation by the Department is significant, because there is always concern about the accommodation in which young care-leavers find themselves. Again, those regulations are subject to consultation.

Mr Berry: Is it realistic for a trust to take steps to re-establish contact with a relevant child until it succeeds?

Mr Clarke: The trust has a duty to try. It is difficult for legislation to say “you shall maintain contact”. It may be possible. The point is that an attempt must be demonstrated, and if the attempt fails, the trust will not have been failing in its duty. Life is like that.

Ms McWilliams: Much of the representation has concerned appointing as opposed to arranging. The Department must have seen that evidence. What is your view on the amendment?

Mr Clarke: The arrangement is the lead-up to appointment. An appointment is required.

Ms McWilliams: I assume you have seen the amendment suggested by Barnardo’s. It proposes that, instead of appointing a personal adviser for each relevant child, a personal adviser should be arranged for him and a named worker appointed. Why is such an amendment not acceptable?

Mr Clarke: That means a named worker and a personal adviser.

The Chairperson: Barnardo’s proposed amendment seems reasonable.

Ms McWilliams: The concern was that there would be no input into the role of the personal adviser and that some kind of partnership would be preferred.

Mr Clarke: It depends on the exact definition of the role of the personal adviser. There is a possibility of duplication. I have no problem with the suggestion that two people be involved with a child.

Ms McWilliams: One of the good practice pilot projects that I read about suggested that that policy is not ruled out.

Mr Clarke: No, it is not. Although it has yet to be implemented, the Bill will enhance provisions that already exist. In implementing the Bill, we must be careful to remember that leaving aftercare teams already operate. Barnardo’s and others suggest that the fact that there is an identified person in the trusts responsible for leaving aftercare should be recognised. There is no great difficulty with that.

The Chairperson: Would it be helpful if you were to consider that as a possible amendment?

Mr Clarke: The only problem is that another person with a statutory responsibility would be created whose role we might have to define. The role of a young person’s adviser will be defined in regulations. I do not reject the proposed amendment. Groups and consultees would like to see it included, but we must consider it in a legislative sense.

The Chairperson: So, you are happy to look at that again.

Ms McWilliams: The need for a detailed estimate of costs and the implications for trusts have come up in every piece of legislation that we have looked at so far. Have you made an estimate?

Mr Clarke: We have more work to do on that. We mentioned it generally. We had set up a reserve of £1.5 million against legislative pressures, but, as part of the implementation, we will have to refine it.

Ms McWilliams: Is the £1.5 million set aside for all legislative pressures facing your division or just for this Bill?

Mr Clarke: No. This Bill will have resource implications for trusts. The proportion of the £1.5 million will have to be determined. As a rule of thumb in the lead-up to the introduction of the legislation and before the requirements kicked in, we estimated that £500,000 would be a reasonable amount to cover the legislative pressure. That sum would equate to about 15 personal advisers.

Ms McWilliams: So £500,000 has been set aside for 15 personal advisers. How many children leaving care need a personal adviser?

Mr Clarke: Approximately 200 young people leave care each year. These are enhancements to a system to support care for leavers that already exists.

Ms McWilliams: Will 15 children, out of the 200 leaving care, be selected to have personal advisers?

Mr Clarke: No. Each adviser will deal with several children. It will not just be those 15 extra people who will be dealing with the children. People already work with them in leaving and aftercare teams. The sum of £0.5 million would allow you to enhance the system with 15 extra people.

Ms McWilliams: This is the crunch: it all depends on the cap on the funding, and, given that a substantial sum needs to be found to do that adequately, a lot of children may be attached to one personal adviser.

Mr Clarke: I always imagined several children for each personal adviser. It would never be a one-to-one.

Ms McWilliams: Fair enough. Have you a target for how many children a personal adviser would have?

Mr Clarke: We have not set a target.

Ms McWilliams: Have you set a cap on the funding?

Mr Clarke: We have bid for funding. At this early stage we must make assumptions about what is reasonable.

However, we have bid for £1.5 million to deal with legislative pressures in advance.

Ms McWilliams: Could we do with some money? You have £500,000, which you think will provide for 15 staff, and 200 children leave care each year: that is about 13 young people to each adviser. Am I right?

Ms Reynolds: That would only happen if the services currently provided to the children by leaving and aftercare social workers were stopped. A group of staff already provides aftercare support to these children. The 200 children would not, therefore, all require new personal advisers.

Mr Clarke: It is important to note that this is enhancing something already in place. We are not inventing leaving and aftercare services; these are amendments to those provisions that already exist. That is how we want to enhance the service prior to assessing what is needed in the longer term.

Ms McWilliams: That is excellent, but it will only work if it is well resourced. We will expect the personal advisers to make pathway plans, follow-up and maintain contact, and if we overload them, the spirit of the legislation may never be implemented.

Mr Clarke: There are several matters that we must be careful about. For example, who are the young person's advisers? Some young people do not want social workers as their advisers, and there are issues to do with how that is implemented and how we use the resources. Apart from the financial resources, there is the pressure on social work staff. There is a suggestion in England and Wales that a young person's foster carer could become his adviser, giving a continuing relationship. Most children in care are looked after by foster carers. There is a variety of options.

The Chairperson: Article 34C sub-paragraph 11(b) requires the trust to continue to take steps to re-establish contact with a young person classified as a relevant child until it succeeds. Is that realistic? We are not going to get through article 34C today, but we can clear parts of the clause leading up to that. Subsection (1) of clause 2 amends article 25 to allow an authority to provide accommodation for a child who has left care, and its doing so, classifies the child as still being looked after.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause 2(1), put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause 2(2), put and agreed to.

The Chairperson: Subsection (3) inserts new articles, 34B, 34C and 34D. Article 34B has five paragraphs. Paragraph (1) provides for an authority to have the functions set out in the new article 34C.

Question, That the Committee is content with paragraphs (1) to (5) of subsection (3) on article 34B, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson: We will have to return to the part of the clause that refers to article 34C. We can move on to article 34D, which deals with continuing functions in respect of former relevant children. It sets out the duties of the responsible authority towards former relevant children. It is a similar provision to those set out in article 34C and contains 10 paragraphs. Paragraphs (1), (2), (3) and (10) place similar responsibilities on authorities to those in article 34C, and paragraphs (4) and (5) require authorities to provide financial and general assistance with employment, education and training. Paragraph (6) provides for the duties to last until the person reaches the age of 21.

Question, That the Committee is content with paragraphs (1), (2), (3) (4), (5), (6) and (10) of subsection (3) on article 34C, put and agreed to.

Ms McWilliams: I am trying to follow this. Have we evidence that any of this is problematic?

The Chairperson: No. Evidence from organisations including the Human Rights Commission supports the intent of the clause.

Ms McWilliams: Is it correct to say that concerns have been raised only about article 34C and that we can therefore proceed with clauses that do not cause any problems?

The Chairperson: That is correct. That is why we will return to article 34C at a later date.

The Committee Clerk: If article 34C has an impact on article 34D we will consider that before we agree clause 2.

The Chairperson: Paragraphs (7), (8) and (9) provide for assistance to last beyond the age of 21 where a programme of education or training is already under way and for any interruption to that programme to be disregarded where reasonably practicable.

Question, That the Committee is content with paragraphs (7), (8) and (9) of subsection (3) on article 34D, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson: We will return to article 34C later. We cannot agree clause 2 until we have dealt with that.

Clause 3 (Personal advisers and pathway plans)

The Chairperson: Mr Clarke, can you explain what this clause is about?

Mr Clarke: You have rattled through this very quickly. I am still trying to read the detail of the clause.

The Chairperson: We will return to clause 2 next week to deal with article 34C.

Mr Clarke: The Department may, by regulations, set out details on the provision of personal advisers and pathway plans. Regulations may be made to allow other individuals aged between 16 and 21 to have a personal adviser in addition to those children and young people covered in clauses 1 and 2. Paragraph 2 provides for regulations on the functions of advisers appointed under the Bill. We will give guidance to deal with, among other things, how personal advisers are to be selected and what to do should the relationship between a child and his adviser break down.

Article 34F deals with the content of pathway plans and provides for regulations to give more detail on what they are to cover and how they are to be reviewed. These are enabling powers.

The Chairperson: Evidence has been supportive of the clause's intent, although questions have been asked about the implementation of personal advisers and pathway plans. That is to be covered in the guidance.

Mr Clarke: It will be covered by regulations and guidance.

The Chairperson: Will those regulations be brought before the Committee?

Mr Clarke: I am told that they will. I accept that these are enabling provisions and that they are not saying a great deal. Their meat will be set out in regulations and guidance, and it will be important for the Committee to look at them.

The Chairperson: Who will the advisers be responsible to?

Mr Clarke: The personal advisers will be the trusts' responsibility.

The Chairperson: The trusts that appoint them are responsible for the advisers?

Mr McGowan: The trusts will have a duty to appoint the personal advisers.

The Chairperson: I presume that they are paid posts?

Mr Clarke: Returning to what I said earlier, we want to give people a choice. Some could be foster carers, and they would have to be compensated for carrying out that function. I am trying not to get tied down to their all being more and more social worker posts. It is important for many reasons that they are not just viewed that way.

Mr Berry: Pathway plans should be flexible enough to respond to the often quickly changing circumstances of young people. How will they be involved in that?

Mr Clarke: Pathway plans should be agreed as far as possible with the young people, and there is provision for them to be reviewed regularly. I accept the point entirely. Everyone's life changes quickly, but for this age group changes are frequent, even changes of intent by the young people. They may not have such fixed notions as older people, so it is important to keep the plans under review.

Ms McWilliams: Will it just say that the plans will be kept under review? Is there a timescale for reviewing them?

Mr McGowan: They are to be reviewed at least every six months or earlier if requested.

Ms McWilliams: That will be in the guidance?

The Chairperson: And it will be in the regulations, which will come to the Committee.

Mr McGowan: There will be a review at least every six months, but it can be sooner if a personal adviser or young person requests it because of a change of circumstances.

Mr Clarke: It would be an imposition on a young person if the plans had to be reviewed every month, for example. That would be too frequent, but they will be kept under review.

Ms McWilliams: If many children are attached to one adviser, the adviser could have a backlog. The regulations say that he must carry out a review every six months. What happens if he does not do so?

Mr Clarke: The advisers will be required to do a review every six months. We do not want to burden them and young people with constantly having meetings to review things that do not need to be reviewed. However, if a young person wants the plan reviewed in less than six months, that should be done.

The Chairperson: Clause 3 inserts the new articles 34E and 34F. Article 34E is on personal advisers and has two paragraphs that enable the Department to make regulations to allow individuals aged between 16 and 21 to have a personal adviser and to regulate their functions. Paragraphs 1 and 2 are agreed.

Article 34F describes the pathway plans. Paragraphs 1 and 2 define them and enable the Department to regulate what may be included in the plans and how they will be reviewed.

The Clerk: Barnardo's submitted a consequential amendment to clause 3. In article 34E, line 21, the word "appoint" is used. Barnardo's suggested that the word "arrange" would be better. The Committee should consider that change in the context of article 34C and the earlier proposed amendment, so rather than signing off the clause formally today, we should come back to it next week.

The Chairperson: That is agreed.

Clause 3 referred for further consideration.

Clause 4 (Advice and assistance for certain children and young persons aged 16 or over)

Mr Clarke: Clause 4 restates and amends articles 35 and 36 of the Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1995.

Paragraphs 1 to 3 restate the definition of a person qualifying for advice and assistance, which is contained in the Children Order. Where a young person who has left care qualifies for advice and assistance, paragraph 4 establishes a new duty on the trust that last looked after him to keep in touch with him as it sees fit. That will apply to children who leave care but do not qualify for the full package of support under the Bill. It could be called a "catch-all" for the other children, and it restates a large part of the provisions in the Children Order. It is technical to follow.

Mr McGowan: As Mr Clarke said, clause 4 essentially restates the existing provisions in articles 35, 36 and 37 of the Children Order. However the clause places some new powers and duties on trusts in respect of qualifying persons in relation to education, employment and training and accommodation for higher and further education. So, although the clause is restating certain provisions in the Children Order, it goes beyond the existing provisions and gives additional powers and duties in the four new articles.

Mr Clarke: We must bear in mind that the new provisions relate to young people who must be eligible under the terms of the Bill and that the provisions in clause 4 relate to other young people.

Mr McGowan: It will provide for those who do not qualify because they do not meet the eligibility criteria —

Mr Clarke: They never were eligible.

Mr McGowan: It will also provide for those who were in care after the age of 16 for a short time but do not reach the qualifying period. In many ways it is a safety net for children who may not receive the full benefit of the previous articles.

Ms McWilliams: Did you get evidence on the exceptional circumstances referred to in article 35A, paragraph 5?

Mr McGowan: That provision is not new; it is provided for in the Children Order.

The Chairperson: Which parts are new, as opposed to the provisions in the Children Order?

Mr McGowan: Articles 35 to 35C are similar to current provision. The new provisions are spread throughout those articles.

Mr Clarke: The main point is the difference between the new legislation and the Children Order. What concerns people who qualify for advice and assistance is a repeat of the 1995 Order. That is not new. Responsibility for a young person on the part of the trust that last looked after him is.

Ms McWilliams: Is it presently the case that assistance can be given in cash where necessary?

Mr McGowan: In exceptional circumstances.

The Chairperson: What does exceptional circumstances mean?

Mr Clarke: The point about exceptional circumstances is that the Children Order did not intend them to be a substitute for support. In other words, there was not an ongoing maintenance arrangement. If a washing machine broke, for example, a young person could get money under exceptional circumstances to have it fixed. Trusts did not have a duty to support young people through regular cash payments. That might have raised questions about their responsibilities. The provision is in the Children Order, and that is why the words “exceptional circumstances” are used.

Ms McWilliams: I understand that, but sometimes “exceptional” becomes “normal”, because it happens so often. Is it the case that, although it is in previous legislation, it has turned out to be a frequent occurrence? The evidence that we have suggests that we might do well to drop that.

Mr McGowan: First, the reference to exceptional circumstances refers to the circumstances of an individual young person rather than the general policy.

Ms McWilliams: So it is infrequent?

Mr Clarke: “Exceptional circumstances” are clearly intended in legislation to indicate infrequency.

Ms McWilliams: But is that what happens?

Mr Clarke: It happens that the exceptional circumstance provisions in the Children Order are used and sometimes abused to make regular payments. However, that is not the intention of the legislation. If we did not make it clear that the circumstances were exceptional, we would be placing a duty on social services to provide support for everything. From that point of view, the purpose of the exceptional circumstance provision is to limit responsibility while assisting young people in exceptional circumstances. The words should mean exactly what they say.

Ms Reynolds: The phrase exceptional circumstances does not relate to regularity or frequency but to a young person’s circumstances. The phrase has been carried through from the Children and Young Persons (Northern Ireland) Act 1950 and the Children and Young Persons (Northern Ireland) Act 1968 to the Health and Personal Social Services (Northern Ireland) Order 1972. It is intended to indicate that there is no automatic right to a cash payment. Social Services might want to help a child in kind, so that food is available or a bill paid. The provision allows social services to decide how best to support a child.

Ms McWilliams: I remember some overlap in the past with social security where exceptional circumstances turned out to be a regular occurrence. Exceptional needs payments were not exceptional.

Mr McGowan: Children getting exceptional circumstances payments will still be eligible for social security benefit. Under social security legislation, payments made under these provisions by trusts would be disregarded.

Ms McWilliams: Deducted?

Mr McGowan: No, they would not be deducted, because they were made in exceptional circumstances. One of the reasons for retaining the word “exceptional” is that social security could not deduct the money pound for pound. Any payments made are excluded from income or capital.

The Chairperson: I presume the advisers will have some influence on what constitutes exceptional circumstances?

Mr McGowan: I would have thought so, yes.

The Chairperson: Let us move on to article 35(b), paragraphs 1 and 2, page 7, line 26. Line 30 is to be amended by replacing “may” with “shall”. The word “may” is frequently used in legislation, but “shall” is stronger. It is proposed to replace “may” with “shall” in article 35B, paragraphs (1) and (2).

Mr Clarke: Use of the word “may” could be seen as weakening the provision.

Mr McGowan: Children will qualify for help if they spend perhaps a week in care after age 16, so to place a duty on a trust for a child who has spent an exceptionally short period in care would be rather much.

Mr Clarke: Consider what the use of the word “shall” will mean. To say that the relevant authority shall give assistance to anyone does not create a great entitlement — it could mean giving £5, which is not what the suggested amendment presumably intends. It could still give the trust a discretion.

Ms McWilliams: I differ with you on that. I have negotiated many clauses. When the word “shall” is used, it is much less discretionary than the word “may”, which leaves a provision up to the individual.

Mr Clarke: The intention behind the proposed amendment is clear. A person reading the provision in legislative terms would ask what it entitles someone to. This legislation is not only for individual young people, but for all young people.

Ms McWilliams: The word “may” could be substituted by the word “will”, and the clause would then read “that the relevant authority will give assistance to any person who qualifies for advice and assistance.”

Mr Clarke: The difference between “will” and “shall” is up to the draftsman.

The Chairperson: Could clarification of the words “may” and “shall” be included in the legislative guidance?

Ms McWilliams: It is a very important legislative term.

Mr Clarke: The guidance will address that. However, if people are saying that the provision needs to be strengthened by the word “shall”, including it in the guidance will not address that concern. Trusts would still be given discretion.

Ms McWilliams: If I were a child who qualified for assistance and came to you and the legislation said that you “may” give me assistance, it would be entirely up to you whether you did so. However, if the legislation says that you will give assistance, I will have some legal backing.

The Chairperson: That is an important point. Will you consider that?

Mr Clarke: I will. The intention is clear. By inserting the word “shall”, there will still be discretion. I accept that the word “shall” will strengthen the provision, but it will not create an absolute entitlement to a particular level of support.

The Chairperson: We can come back to clause 4 on that point.

Ms McWilliams: Mr Clarke is not averse to accepting the word “will”, and I take his point about the level of assistance.

Mr Clarke: It does strengthen it.

Ms McWilliams: It gives a ceiling to the level of assistance, but there is at least a basic level.

Mr Clarke: I do not want to argue strongly against it because I know why people are suggesting the amendment. If the word “shall” is used, there may be an element of needs-led legislation that would be running ahead of an assessment of need. That raises a question about how the assessment is conducted and the discretion that will creep in.

The Chairperson: We will come back to that, and you will investigate it for us.

Clause 4 referred for further consideration.

Clause 5 (Representations)

The Chairperson: Clause 5, which concerns complaints, seems to be straightforward. It aims to insert a new article, article 35D, into the Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1995. It requires authorities to establish arrangements for dealing with complaints about its services under articles 34B and 34D and article 35B(2). Paragraph (1) of the new article requires authorities to establish a procedure for hearing representations, including complaints made by young people, while paragraph (2) requires authorities to comply with departmental regulations. Evidence that has been submitted supported the intent of the clause. Do you have any comments to make, Mr Clarke?

Mr Clarke: No. Essentially those additions reflect provisions that are already in the Children Order, but the Bill needs guidance because there are issues regarding complaints about personal advisers, for example. That may make the Bill unique, but it is a restatement of a provision that already exists.

Ms McWilliams: The only concern was that there should be a common approach to the complaints procedures, and paragraph (2) gives the Department discretion to make regulations that require authorities to comply with any procedure for making complaints and representations.

Mr Clarke: The complaints procedures that already exist are Province-wide. Individual trusts and boards implement them while trying to ensure a common approach. They are legally separate, but in practice they are not, and I do not expect that to be so under the Bill. Issues with complaints about personal advisers must be addressed, and existing guidance may not cover that sufficiently.

Ms McWilliams: That raises concerns if the complaints procedure varies depending on where one lives.

Mr Clarke: No, I am saying that the four boards implement those procedures.

Ms McWilliams: I know; I heard that, but they are all different.

Mr Clarke: Although the structures are in place, boards and trusts are legally required to implement the procedures, because they are what we have in practice. They all reflect each other, and they come together. It is a pedantic distinction between the legal requirement and what actually happens.

The Chairperson: Clause 5(2) states:

“In considering representations under paragraph (1), an authority shall comply with regulations (if any) made by the Department for the purposes of this paragraph.”

The words “if any” puzzle me.

Mr Clarke: That seems to give the Department some discretion. I have no doubt that we will be making regulations. I would have no problem with removing those words.

The Chairperson: The words seem a bit odd.

Ms McWilliams: OK; we should remove them.

Mr Clarke: The words “may make regulations” are usually used.

Mr McGowan: That paragraph is not about regulations per se; it states that an authority must comply by considering any representations that are made to it by a child.

The Chairperson: Do you suggest that we leave those words in the paragraph?

Ms McWilliams: No, because the parenthesis comes after the word “regulations”.

Mr Clarke: If people wish to remove the words, I do not see any problem. I have no doubt that we will be making regulations — I cannot see how not making regulations is an option for the Department.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Clause 6 (Exclusion from benefits)

The Chairperson: Clause 6 has caused some acrimony. Perhaps, Mr Clarke, you could explain why it is in the Bill, because those with whom we have consulted have said that it should not be.

Mr Clarke: I was unsure whether we would get to clause 6, but I have written a short note on it. The Department does not think that the Bill would collapse without clause 6, but the Committee should be mindful of those things when considering it. I do not want to push it any further.

The Chairperson: Various bodies are unanimous in asking why clause 6 exists or in saying that it should be removed, so if someone can explain why it should be there, the Committee might agree with it.

Mr Clarke: Even before we brought forward the Bill, voluntary organisations had seen the equivalent in England and Wales, so they raised the issue, and we have always been aware of it. First, we are talking about planning for a young care leaver's future, but do we want to plan for him to go into the benefit system before he has even left care? Is that our expectation for those young people? Secondly, all resources, existing and additional, would be deployed in a way which would assist a young person to progress to independent living. Deleting clause 6 may limit flexibility in how resources are deployed, for example, on arranging further education or training.

If this clause stands, we will have to get resources transferred from the Department for Social Development. If clause 6 is accepted, it is incumbent upon us to ensure that the resources deployed by the Department for Social Development are done so in a way that best meets the needs of young people. I apologise — this seems very trite, but we must look at the holistic needs of young people. There is a possibility that removing clause 6 would lead to a fragmented approach increasing the number of agencies and individuals involved with young people.

With regard to the extent that the needs of young care leavers can be fully addressed in the system, there have been suggestions that care leavers could be made a special case in social security legislation. Again, what does that say about our expectations for young care leavers? With regard to the practical aspects in the Bill, it is not necessarily disastrous, but the provision for the trust to provide a young person with suitable accommodation may be prejudiced by cutting off those funds. Those requirements in the Bill need to be examined carefully because we are placing a statutory requirement on people.

The Chairperson: Having listened to what you have said, there are points that I have not thought out. The information that you have given us has been very helpful, and the Committee will think about it.

Mr Clarke: I got the thrust of the argument, and I do not want to go overboard. I am trying to put to the Committee the arguments that would counter its removal. It is a fine judgement at some levels.

Mr Berry: I am concerned that some people might become dependent on benefits, which is the last thing that the Committee wants. The Committee wants those children to get into a more stable environment, with an education and a job. The children should be taken through a proper system gradually rather than being suddenly cut off from the system, and the Department should work in partnership with the agencies on that.

Mr Clarke: The Department is not taking anything away from them because they would not be entitled to anything.

Mr Berry: It is about the Department and the agencies working in partnership.

Mr Clarke: I can see why clause 6 is there, and also possible implications of its not being there. There are arguments for and against it.

Ms McWilliams: The Department's argument is that the children would still be in receipt of the same amount of benefit. However, evidence suggests that the Department would be putting a dependence on trusts that they may not wish to have. I am also concerned that there may be an increased level of stigma attached to the benefits — and there might already be. Not everyone understands what social security is and that it is a universal benefit. This is just a different way for the children to receive funds from their peers, and they will be immediately identified as having left care.

I have a third concern, which did not arise in evidence sessions. People on jobseeker's allowance can graduate to other forms of allowance. Therefore if the young people have not been on that benefit they may be denied some types of training.

Mr McGowan: I need to check with the Social Security Agency about other allowances. We must remember that sanctions can be applied to young people on jobseeker's allowance who do not take up offers of training or employment. Their jobseeker's allowance could be reduced or extinguished if they do not take up offers of training or employment.

Ms McWilliams: It can work both ways.

Mr McGowan: If a young person did not take up an offer of training or employment, sanctions could be applied by the Social Security Agency. Young people are allowed a couple of refusals, but after that sanctions will be applied which might lead to a withdrawal of benefit.

Ms McWilliams: At present, the young people have some support and assistance. It is hoped that whoever is advising them, and taking care of their assistance in the care system, will make representations on their behalf. Have some young people had their benefits denied to them? Why move to this system? If it is the case that young people are denied benefits and then told by the trust that they may get a benefit because they were in care, then that is a good rationale for moving to this system.

Ms Reynolds: Most children at that age are dependent on their parents. Part of the rationale for the financial arrangements in the Bill is to give effect to the notion of corporate parenting. At present, children in the care of the trust, or who have just left that care, are moving around agencies and social security offices looking for housing and other benefit and then going to the trust for exceptional help. The clause seeks to have those children comprehensively dealt with.

The Chairperson: It is taking a more parental approach.

Ms Reynolds: Yes. It is to underscore the parental duties of the trust. The trust cannot cast aside these children just because they are 16, 17 or 18 years of age, because most children would still be living with their parents or still dependent on them much later than at that age.

The Chairperson: If trusts were totally responsible, the social security aspect would work all right. However, it is this parental responsibility.

Mr Clarke: We have pointed up arguments that we would use in favour of the clause. I know that trusts may view clause 6 in terms of a burden, but another way of saying this is that it places responsibility on them for every aspect of a young person's life. There are two competing arguments, but there is an element of distance between them.

Ms McWilliams: I am concerned about that. In the light of what you have said regarding young people's mobility — particularly when leaving care — dealing with such movement between different areas will entail a great deal of bureaucracy if they are to rely on one trust.

Ms Reynolds: One of the safeguards would be that, because the trust has to keep in touch and fund such children, fewer young care-leavers would be lost in the system. From the Fred West case in England we know that many care-leavers were killed without social services being aware of what had befallen them. Part of the legislation aims to develop a much more comprehensive and long-term strategy so that children do not fall between stools.

Ms McWilliams: I hope that happens with the pathway and the assistance. However, it sounds like the long arm of the state saying that it will keep a tag on someone dependent on it for his or her income.

Ms Reynolds: I hope I do not sound naïve, but these children are very vulnerable young adults who need state assistance. It is not so that they become dependent on benefit or the state, but to ensure that, in moving them on to independence, they have the support and help to make it worthwhile and can achieve quality of life.

The Chairperson: We shall not agree clause 6 today. Your comments have been very helpful, since they have shown us another point of view. There are two strong opposing opinions. My colleagues have read the documentation from the various bodies, and what you have said in addition has been very helpful. Since we shall not agree the clause today, perhaps my colleagues will re-examine the evidence, allowing us to return to the issue next week.

The Committee Clerk: I suggest we conclude consideration.

Clause 6 referred for further consideration.

The Chairperson: Since the matters following are straightforward, we shall do so. Mr Clarke, Mr McGowan and Ms Reynolds, thank you very much. We shall see you again next week. We have made as much progress as we could, taking in all the points.

Ms McWilliams: There is currently another meeting, that of the Ad Hoc Committee on access to justice. That may or may not be quorate, and I apologise in advance if I have to go in and out for that reason.

The Chairperson: I welcome the delegation from the Federation of Small Businesses (FSB) — Mr David Munster, Mr Wilfred Mitchell and Mr Glyn Roberts. Thank you for coming. This is the first formal evidence session in the Committee Stage of the Employment Bill. I thank you for the written evidence that you supplied and the document that you launched recently. Perhaps you could make a short statement before taking questions.

Mr Mitchell: The FSB welcomes the opportunity to contribute to the Committee's consideration of the Employment Bill. We are the largest group representing the interests of the self-employed and those who direct businesses in Northern Ireland. The federation has 170,000 members nationally, of which almost 3,000 are based in Northern Ireland. It is run by businesspeople for businesspeople, and is funded solely by member subscriptions. The membership in Northern Ireland elects a policy committee, which is supported by a full-time policy officer. We also run a full-time press and parliamentary office.

The FSB recognises and welcomes the positive aspects of the Bill. However, it has many concerns about how it will affect the small business community, which is the backbone of Northern Ireland's economy. We are disappointed that the Bill does not distinguish between large and small employers. We are gravely concerned that it does not address the inequalities faced by the self-employed.

There are many ambiguities in the Bill. For example, it does not address how employers can claim back administration costs. Implementing costly regulations on the large proportion of the business community which already recognises and offers flexible working policies over and above the current statutory standards would not be in the best interests of employers or employees in Northern Ireland.

For the purposes of the submission we shall concentrate on the three areas of greatest importance to the small business community: flexible working; simplification advice and guidance; and managing absences.

Mr Roberts: The legislation is intended to give working parents with children under six or disabled children under 18 who have been with their companies for a minimum of six months the right to make written requests for flexible working. Companies can reject the requests, but they must set out a considered business case for doing so. Employees will be able to seek redress from an employment tribunal if they feel that their requests have not been taken seriously. Tribunals will be able to rule only on procedures, facts, and whether a business case has been made.

If employers follow correct procedure, they are unlikely to see their decisions overturned by the tribunal. Nevertheless, the consequence of the proposal is likely to be an increase in employment tribunal applications from employees who feel that their employer has failed to give adequate consideration to their request to work part-time. The measure's implications are directly contrary to the Bill's objective of reducing the number of employment tribunal applications.

We recommend that the resources be geared to educating and supporting businesses that do not already have flexible working policies or the in-house expertise required to implement them. There should be a clear focus on helping those businesses that do not recognise the competitive benefits of doing so.

Cover can easily be arranged in a large company, often from within the same department, and, if needed, a temporary worker can easily be afforded. However, for a small business with, for example, four employees, a member of staff on leave represents 25% of the workforce. It should be recognised that in small firms, each worker plays a key role — one that often requires specialist training. In fact, one worker may constitute a whole department. If a key worker is absent, the owner of the business will not only have to take on cover, but spend time training that temporary employee.

The simplification of current regulations to reduce the complexity of red tape would be welcomed by the business community, since a one-off cost must be more economical than introducing systems with continual costs to both the Northern Ireland economy and the business community. On advice and guidance, we would like to see suggested options available with targeted distribution of flowcharts, maternity leave, contracts and guidance setting out the rights and responsibilities to the business that will benefit from it.

For much of the legislation, the implications of introduction will depend on the payment mechanisms adopted. The worry is that if Government continues to regulate, the burden of administrative costs on the business community will become unbearable. In the context of the Bill, we feel that payment mechanisms are not the key area for focus. We wish to stress that small businesses strongly resent being unpaid tax-collectors. The whole issue of tax collection by small businesses must be addressed by Government.

Our final point concerns managing absences. That is the key to moving successfully towards a more flexible working culture. Advice and guidance on managing absences must focus on supporting the education of businesses so that they develop best practice in the workplace, as well as examining relationships with employment services and private recruitment agencies. If the Department wishes to support the development of flexible working, it must allow individual businesses the opportunity to explore flexible working options that fit the employee but not the company.

If implemented, the legislation would restrict employees' opportunities for flexible arrangements and restrict business development by imposing impractical routines on employers and reducing profits, as well as inflicting unnecessary regulatory costs. The Committee will be aware of the amount of regulation and red tape with which businesses, particularly small businesses, must work; resentment would build. One thing that contradicts the whole idea of the Bill is that it will encourage recruitment discrimination against men and women of childbearing age. It will also discourage the business community from positively embracing the culture of work-life balance.

Mr Munster is our spokesman on this area and deals with the issue as a small businessperson with 26 employees. He can discuss the other day-to-day problems that businesses will face because of the Bill.

Mr Carrick: Small businesses are the unpaid collectors of National Insurance, tax, statutory maternity benefit, statutory sick pay and student loan repayments — the list is long and looks set to grow. How far can small businesses go before the straw that breaks the camel's back?

Mr Munster: That will obviously differ from one business to another. In my experience, a great deal of my time is taken up with ensuring that we comply with all the regulations. My primary focus is to ensure that we sell enough to make sufficient profit to cover wages and the other costs of running the business. I am spending an increasing amount of time dealing with such issues simply to ensure that I am on the right side of the law. That is not productive time, and it will ultimately affect profitability.

It will vary from business to business. I am concerned about us becoming uncompetitive vis-à-vis businesses in the Republic. I am also concerned that I might become uncompetitive against national companies in the same line as ourselves.

Mr Carrick: In the context of administering the Employment Bill proposals, have you any suggestions as to how the Government could deal with that issue without imposing a burden? In the past, the compensation paid to small businesses has been paltry.

Mr Munster: Take paternity pay, for example. When I had children I was an employee, and I wanted to have time off. I used part of my annual leave, and there was no administrative burden on the company whatsoever. I do not see any need to introduce legislation to ensure that the employee gets paid that. No matter how it is done, it ends up being complex, meaning the money must be claimed back through National Insurance. It all adds to the burden. The other option, which we refer to in our paper, is a mechanism whereby the employer is compensated for that extra work. My preference would be for simplicity.

Mr Mitchell: Nationally, the federation does not want to be compensated, since there is an attendant burden of responsibility, and we do not know where that would end. We would rather that the Government took ownership of the matter.

Mr R Hutchinson: We all know the importance of small businesses in Northern Ireland. They employ a large number of people. In the federation, what percentage of businesses have some kind of inbuilt structure for such matters as maternity leave and flexible working hours?

It has been suggested that additional maternity leave should not depend on a woman fulfilling a qualifying service condition. If that were introduced, how would it impact on small businesses?

Mr Munster: You asked whether we have systems in place. I suppose that we all have to deal with such things when they arise, but it is very difficult to have a mechanism in place for every eventuality when you employ a small number of people. In general, there will not be a system as such. We simply have to examine the rules and regulations and deal with them at the time.

On the issue of employees who have not served the existing qualifying period for extended maternity leave, we are concerned about people's increasing right to be absent from work, rather than, in this particular case, the cost of administering it. A key person in my business has taken maternity leave, and I have had to bring in a temporary worker — it must by law be a temporary worker, because you have to keep the job open. When it is a key position, that person has to be trained. It is very difficult to get a temporary worker capable of doing such a key job. The person was in charge of my purchase ledger. There was a disaster when we were paying suppliers whom we should not have been paying, and not paying others whom we should have.

Mr R Hutchinson: You had never done that before.

Mr Munster: You can understand that being of concern to me. That is a cost. The Bill contains an analysis of the actual cost of paying out the money. The cost is not the main issue, however — it is the disruption caused by people being away from the business.

Mr R Hutchinson: Will some businesses decide that it is not worth the hassle and cut their losses? Will it be the straw that breaks the camel's back?

Mr Munster: It is more likely that people will make a negative decision on whether to recruit, where otherwise they would have made a positive decision.

Mr Hilditch: In relation to the impact on colleagues and fellow workers who remain in the workplace, in your own case you envisaged agency workers being brought in. Others may not be able to afford such a luxury, and that may cause stress to the remaining workforce, at which point sickness will kick in. That is a concern.

Mr Munster: Mr Roberts made a point on work-life balance. Flexible working hours are designed to enhance that. However, the stress and strain that it causes to other employees affects their work-life balance, since they are trying to make the business work when it is understaffed.

Mr Hilditch: It therefore imposes a practical and financial burden.

Mr Munster: Unlike a football team, businesses cannot carry an extra 22 people from whom they pick a team of 11. The people required to run the business — and no more — must be employed, and any absence puts a strain on the remaining workers. We are talking about legislating for additional absence, and that will increase the strain.

Mr Hilditch: The compensation factor might kick into the argument if an extra person were brought in.

Mr Munster: If a person is to be absent only for a relatively short period of time, it is not practical to bring in and train someone. It would be worthwhile only if someone were off for a longer period. The difficulty with maternity regulations as they stand is that it is not known until after the baby is born if the employee is coming back at all.

Dr Adamson: I have worked a rota system for most of my life as a medical doctor. On one occasion I worked for six months on a one-on-one rota, which sounds strange, but people were sick or on maternity leave — or simply left the country during the latter part of the troubles.

The proposed legislation gives some people with caring responsibilities the right to request flexible working, but not others, such as parents with disabled offspring over 18 and those caring for elderly or sick parents. Do you consider that discriminatory, especially for small businesses?

Mr Munster: The impact on small businesses will be greater than that on larger ones, where there is an ability to cover absences. Whether the proposals discriminate against other groups of people who might make a valid case for taking time off work is not at issue. My concern is that we keep in mind a new group of people for whom we wish to provide. There have been test cases in relation to equality, which have established that either parent can have time off if a child is sick. Many rules already exist, and any additional regulations make the situation difficult. As employers, we are not unreasonable in helping people or allowing them time off, but there is no protection for the business — the legislation and the protection is directed at employees' interests. If someone is to be away from the business, it might mean losing a new contract. There is no recourse for the business in that case.

Mr Munster: That is where the imbalance lies.

Mr Dallat: When this Employment Bill was debated in the Assembly, I expressed many of the concerns of small businesses — and of course you know my position. I attended the launch of those documents in the Odyssey. I am concerned at certain things that have been said today. Given the abuses against employees on the part of certain of your larger rivals, is a proper Employment Bill not absolutely necessary to protect them against the appalling conditions under which they have had to work?

Mr Munster: Are you speaking historically?

Mr Dallat: I am not going back very far. I speak of some of the recent arrivals, whom I do not wish to name.

Mr Mitchell: We have stated in this document that there should be a difference —

Mr Dallat: They are not members of your federation.

Mr Munster: Such things impact on small employers quite differently from how they impact on large employers. We are not in any way against having some kind of protection mechanism to ensure that those employees are treated fairly. We are concerned about over-regulation and feel there is already too much. All we are doing is making that worse.

Mr Dallat: We have recently heard evidence from employers — many of them small businesses — about their difficulty recruiting. To attract people into the small businesses which you represent, is it not important that they have the best possible working conditions, particularly regarding maternity leave? I was shocked to hear that some members might not recruit women of childbearing age out of fear that they would have a baby. As a mere man, that really —

Mr Munster: You are misinterpreting that remark slightly. The matter does not concern members of the FSB exclusively. It can have the exact opposite effect to that which you desire. I am being devil's advocate here, and I stress that I am not talking about myself or any member of the federation. However, if an employer has a choice between two candidates — one not long married and another slightly older — that might be in the back of his mind. I am pointing out the fact to you rather than suggesting that we should do it.

Mr Dallat: I am asking these questions for my own benefit. You said that you wished to remain competitive against businesses in the Republic. This legislation is all inspired by European law. Is there any evidence to suggest that businesses of similar size in the Republic are not playing the game properly, or that the jurisdiction has no such legislation?

Mr Roberts: That is not a question on which I could provide you with evidence. I was merely flagging up our need to remain competitive. We must examine the experiences of our colleagues in the Small Firms' Association and other small business organisations in the Republic. If the Committee were interested, we could provide the evidence in written form.

Mr Dallat: You are giving evidence to this Committee now, and one assumes that you have done your research.

Mr Roberts: It is not possible for us to know the exact legislative situation in the Republic. We have considerable difficulty keeping track of this Assembly, never mind the Oireachtas.

Mr Dallat: Perhaps enough has been said on the issue. Ultimately, we surely want an Employment Bill which affords employees protection against the rogues, of which there are plenty — not the fine, honourable members of your federation. I know from personal experience that some people believe that they are still in Victorian times, treating employees as they please. The Bill is necessary. However, of the criteria, only three ask for guarantees.

Mr Munster: As I said in my point about maternity leave, the FSB is not convinced that extra regulation is needed in those areas. Mr Dallat said that people have difficulty trading. Therefore, if employers want to retain good employees in the competitive employment marketplace, they will treat them fairly, without regulation.

Mr Dallat: I am not suggesting that men are the rogues in that area. Last night, three young students came to me. They had been unable to attend college for several weeks, and because it is the end of term they were asked to go to college for an extra day. Their employer, who is a woman, sacked them. Therefore, among the employers there are people who abuse employees.

Mr Roberts: The FSB is not completely opposed to the Employment Bill. There are details in the areas it would like to consider which, in its experience, concern its 3,000 members. The FSB urges all employers to respect their employees. The FSB employs 130 staff nationally; its 3,000 members in Northern Ireland employ hundreds of thousands more. Therefore, the FSB encourages businesses to follow good practice, stay within the law and ensure that their employees are given every protection under it.

Mr A Doherty: I am a new member of the Committee and inexperienced in this subject. In your submission you expressed disappointment that the Bill does not distinguish between large and small firms. There is a vast gulf in the scale of the problems faced by a firm that employs up to 10 people and a large multinational. Is there a clear dividing line between what constitutes a large firm and what constitutes a small firm? Is it realistic to think that the Bill could make a fine distinction between the two? Could there be different legislation for a firm that has 1,000 employees; one that employs 100 people; and a self-employed businessman?

Mr Munster: There is scope, without being too complex, to determine what would affect businesses with different numbers of employees. However, the impact on a small business is proportionately higher, and the needs and concerns of small businesses are not taken into account. Small businesses are treated in the same way as those that employ more than 1,000 staff.

Mr Mitchell: The FSB accepts membership from businesses with up to 150 employees, which seems quite large. However, in Europe and the UK, 97% of businesses employ fewer than 10 people. The FSB deals with new starts employing one or two people. It wishes to provide reasonable treatment so that an entrepreneur, who is not an expert in working with employees, will be encouraged to employ people. We do not want entrepreneurs to receive a raft of regulations that they read and decide that they are not interested. For example, if a young electronic engineer thinks of an idea and wants to manufacture a product, he must employ people. The FSB wishes to encourage that.

Ms McWilliams: I want you to take my questions in good spirit. If I went for a job in your company, would you think that I was a woman of childbearing age?

Mr Munster: It is not a case of being of childbearing age; it is a case of whether you are likely to have children.

Ms McWilliams: How do you make that judgement?

Mr Munster: I am not suggesting that a judgement should be made.

Ms McWilliams: I noted your words “encourage recruitment discrimination against men and women”. I will deal with the women first.

Mr Mitchell: ‘Time’ magazine has stated that a certain age group is likely to be infertile.

Ms McWilliams: I know all about that.

Mr Mitchell: A medical position has been stated.

Ms McWilliams: What is it?

Mr Mitchell: ‘Time’ magazine said that 90% of women over the age of 42 would have infertile or defective eggs.

Ms McWilliams: So you would make that judgement?

Mr Mitchell: No, that is what ‘Time’ magazine said.

Ms McWilliams: What about men? Would Dr Adamson be a man of childbearing age?

Mr Dallat: Oh yes.

Mr Mitchell: Fertility also drops off with men according to ‘Time’ magazine.

Ms McWilliams: Do you see the point that I am making? There is variation. You make the point about men of childbearing age and then you reflect on women of childbearing age. There is a big difference when you consider men of childbearing age. The population shrinks further when you refer to women, and it shrinks even further when you refer to people being of high fertility.

I like your statement that employers should deal fairly. That was the view even before legislation was introduced and the reason why it was introduced. The Sex Discrimination (Northern Ireland) Order 1976 and Equal Pay Act 1970 were introduced, and I accept that they have probably increased the regulatory burden on you. However, has that legislation benefited the labour market?

Mr Munster: Are you asking whether it has increased the opportunities for women?

Ms McWilliams: I am thinking of issues such as equal pay for work of equal value.

Mr Munster: The statistics show that there is still a gap between what women and men earn on average, but the gap has narrowed. That would suggest that the legislation has benefited women. However, people are becoming more enlightened and aware of the fact that women are capable of doing just as good a job as men, and that is more likely to have had an effect.

Ms McWilliams: The legislation was introduced because there was such a variation in the way people were being treated. Basic guidelines or Regulations were introduced to deal with that. Comparative studies show that the measures have retained the labour force, that there is a higher level of loyalty in the labour force, and, in some instances, that productivity may have increased.

Mr Munster: That is as a result of retaining more women in the workplace.

We are focusing on legislation that gives people rights to more time off work, as opposed to more time in work. We are focusing on the difficulties that having more time away from the job would cause to a business, rather than on whether women should have equal rights to men.

Ms McWilliams: I accept that. However, would you not anticipate that women might stay longer instead of dropping in and dropping out? With the same employee from start to finish, you would save on training, recruitment and advertising costs. The turnover of staff would not be so high — people would not drop out and not come back, and the situation where those who had shorter maternity leave took time off on sick leave, or did not return at all, could be avoided. Some of the research suggests that it would be beneficial to introduce the proposed measures.

Mr Mitchell: Did your research show whether that applied to a large company or small company?

Ms McWilliams: It suggests both. Obviously, the larger companies can cover matters on a corporate basis. Your argument is that the provisions would result in an extra administrative burden. That is your difficulty, rather than the costs involved, because under the legislation the costs would be recouped.

Mr Munster: It is the administrative burden, and the fact that administering the provisions means being diverted from what you are in business to do. There is also the disruption caused by people not being at work when you need them to be.

Ms McWilliams: Yes, but if they were to give up completely and not come back, you would have a higher turnover — or you would go down the road of employing men only.

Mr Munster: Because of the extended right to come back to work — there is no obligation, for practical reasons, for an employee to make that decision right away — it is extremely difficult to cover a position knowing that you will be bringing someone in on a temporary basis. You have, by law, to keep the job open for the person going off on maternity leave. In that sense, it would be preferable if the individual simply left, because you could then recruit someone to do the job on a permanent basis.

Ms McWilliams: But that is not what is being introduced in this legislation. Those provisions are already in place, so we cannot go back and change them.

Mr Munster: I know that; I just do not want to make the situation worse.

Ms McWilliams: If you bring someone in on a temporary basis, you still have your problem. All that happens is that that person would stay longer when you give extended maternity leave. That might even defeat your own argument.

Mr Munster: I do not think so. If the temporary person were not doing the job in the way that the permanent employee did it — which was the experience that I had — it would be a potentially disastrous situation.

Ms McWilliams: You had a bad experience, but can you envisage circumstances where you would not have such a bad experience? Those provisions are already in legislation.

Mr Munster: It very much depends on the position held by the employee going off on maternity leave. The legislation obviously does not take account of that aspect, but if the job can be done by a vast number of people and does not require a great deal of training or knowledge about a company's needs, then you could bring someone in on a temporary basis. However, if someone is doing a key job and they are away from that job, it could potentially put a company out of business. The smaller the business, the greater the extent to which that would apply.

Ms McWilliams: What worries me is that you are making an argument against paying maternity pay or giving maternity leave at all.

Mr Munster: I am making an argument against making matters more difficult for businesses than they currently are. I am not arguing against maternity leave. People obviously have to have maternity leave, and they have to have protection from being discriminated against because they have a baby. I am simply arguing against making the situation worse.

Mr Roberts: I recognise the points that Prof McWilliams has made. As a business organisation, we work very closely with the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission; we are part of the bill of rights consortium and are involved in the debate about a bill of rights; and we are playing a full role with the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland. We want to be part of the solution to this problem. We are simply giving the collective view of almost 3,000 small businesses in Northern Ireland. We make a huge contribution to the economy, and the Northern Ireland economy is a small-business economy. We are bringing forward views that are based on practical experiences, particularly those of business people working in smaller businesses.

We want to have the Employment Bill. There are parts that we would like to see changed, but, as we said in our submission, we welcome the spirit of the Bill. I am sure that everyone here today wants to see the Northern Ireland small business sector flourishing, developing and contributing to the economy. They would want it to continue to contribute to the Exchequer through income tax, VAT and so on — all the areas where we have contributed throughout the difficulties of the past 30 years. We are a positive and progressive organisation, and we want to ensure that matters will work in practice.

Mrs Nelis: I was going to say that you are very welcome, but, after listening to what you have said, I am not too sure whether you are very welcome or not. At the Second Stage of the Bill in the Assembly last week, practically every member of the Committee expressed concern that the Bill did not clarify sufficiently the distinction between small and large businesses and that there needed to be some flexibility. We all shared those concerns.

In saying that, I must remind you that this is a parity Bill from Westminster. It is not terribly enlightening or supportive of women's rights to work and have children. The Bill concerns business. The Bill is really about the retention of working parents in the market, and the introduction of this legislation will help that. The Bill is not so much concerned with the rights of women to hold down jobs and have their babies or whether they have, as you described, not-so-important jobs or very important jobs.

I cannot believe that in this day and age you said that you were a bit worried about the disruption that a woman having a baby might cause to your business and that you would prefer there to be no absences. Does that mean that, as Ms McWilliams said, you do not want to employ women who might potentially have a baby, or do you want them to have the baby on the premises? I thought that we had left that sort of attitude behind. Do you prefer to employ women who will give you a guarantee, perhaps in writing, that they will not have children? That is what is coming across from you. We must put that out of the way.

I want to give some statistics. Approximately —

The Chairperson: Could you be brief, Mrs Nelis? Do you have a question on the Bill?

Mrs Nelis: With respect, Mr Chairperson, you did not interrupt anyone else so do not interrupt me.

The Chairperson: I also told Roger Hutchinson to be brief, and I was about to tell Monica McWilliams the same.

Mrs Nelis: I want to put the issue into context. Thirty per cent of mothers in the North of Ireland fail to return to employment after maternity leave. Seven thousand women do not return because they are not welcome back and are not given guarantees that their job will be there. They will be doing exactly what you said. Another 80% of economically inactive women do not want a job; their reason is that they want to have a family and look after a home. They would like to have a job, but they need the co-operation of employers to be able to do so.

The Bill is giving them some measure of co-operation. It asks you, as employers, to co-operate in allowing women to be economically active and to have, and be able to look after, a family. That is really what the Bill is about. Can you tell me what legislative flexibility we can introduce to the Bill, given that you have administrative concerns? Tell us about your proposals to overcome your concerns, and we will try to introduce a clause to deal with those.

The Bill aims to enhance your business by allowing women to have their rightful place in the market. It is about allowing parents their rightful entitlement to maternity and paternity leave and allowing them to negotiate with you.

If I were a smart business person and wanted to run a successful business, I would be delighted if an employee said that they had children under six years old, for example, or were looking after an older person but that they valued being in my employment and wanted to come to some arrangement with me so that they could do their work efficiently but also meet their responsibilities at home. That is what the Bill is about.

Mr Munster: I employ quite a number of women who have been off work to have babies and who have asked me if they could work part-time. Where possible, I have agreed to that. I did so without any legislation because it made sound business sense. Our argument today is not that it is not good to encourage people back into jobs after they have had a baby. It is about shackling businesses with more Regulations that will discourage them and make it difficult for them to operate. That is our argument. Questions were asked, and I apologise if we did not answer them particularly well. However, you misunderstand me, and the federation's position, if you think that we are asking to return to the Dark Ages. We are most certainly not.

Mrs Nelis: You are misreading the Bill, if you will forgive me for saying so. You are misreading its contents. The Bill contains safeguards for businesses. It also contains clauses that will enable you to recoup administration costs in advance.

Mr Roberts: It is by no means right to suggest that we are in favour of going backwards. We are here to try to make the situation work. We are not opposing the Employment Bill. We have concerns about red tape and Regulations. We want the situation to work for employees and employers, particularly those self-employed people who have one, two or three members of staff. Many self-employed people earn below the minimum wage.

Many small business people who are not particularly well off struggle to find business. It would be wrong if we did not communicate their concerns, but we want to be positive and make the situation work. We want to work with the Committee, the Department and other business organisations to get a resolution. However, just because we have concerns about red tape and Regulations does not mean that we want to go back to the Dark Ages. Even within the senior membership of the federation, there is a high proportion of women who are successful entrepreneurs — women who have had families and have made a major contribution to the economy. That is what we want to see.

Mrs Nelis: Women who did not disrupt your work?

Mr Roberts: We are working with organisations such as the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission to try to take forward the broader situation about rights, both for employers and employees. That is why we are here today. We are not in favour of going backwards: we want to move forwards. We want to ensure that employees are protected and that there is a dynamic economy where small businesses thrive, where there is prosperity and where people have jobs.

We are not against women having children. We suggested that there may be people who would decide to employ a certain person because of the Regulations. Because of the Bill, people may seek to employ a certain person because it would be easier for them to do so. We are not in favour of that. If they were to take that view, it would be completely wrong. We are trying to prevent that.

Mr Mitchell: Much of what I was going to say has been said. The number of young women who are becoming members of the federation and starting their own businesses has encouraged us recently.

The Chairperson: The Bill seems to make arrangements for financial compensation to companies, particularly small ones. The Bill also attempts to cover some of the administrative costs of processing maternity and paternity pay. You seem to have concerns that those provisions are not strong enough. Do you want to elaborate on that? Are they not definite or clear enough?

Mr Munster: We are concerned that even administrating that will be a problem.

Mr Roberts: That is the problem in a nutshell.

The Chairperson: Are you saying that the provisions will not fully compensate companies? Is the bottom line that they will be out of pocket?

Mr Munster: It is about how to measure the cost of the key person in the small business having to take the time to administer the mechanism used to pay the benefit; to reclaim whatever percentage they are allowed; and also to reclaim what they are allowed for administration.

Ms McWilliams: You do not like the Bill in its entirety. Will you be proposing any amendments?

Mr Roberts: We have highlighted three areas of the Bill, and we have made representations to the Department on this broad area. We need to consider specific practical amendments.

Ms McWilliams: So there may be amendments?

Mr Roberts: Yes. We are not completely opposed to the Bill. If there are practical amendments that we can make to address our concerns, we will go down that road.

The Chairperson: We would be interested to see any ideas on detailed amendments that you come up with. The same will apply to other groups giving us evidence. I want to return to Arthur Doherty's point about definition. The federation seems to be suggesting that it would like the Committee to amend certain provisions to exclude small businesses or to change the way in which they are treated. However, how should the Committee define a small business? Should it be defined as one with fewer than 10 employees, fewer than 25 or fewer than 50?

Mr Mitchell: It would not be one number. There would need to be a graduated approach.

Mr Carrick: I wish to express an interest: my wife is a small employer. Contrary to the impression that the Committee might have given this afternoon, I appreciate the contribution of small businesses to the Northern Ireland economy and the employment that they provide. I hope that they will continue to provide jobs.

Mr Munster: Thank you.

Mr R Hutchinson: I agree with Mr Carrick. Do not be put off by some of the Committee's questions.

Mrs Nelis: According to your statistics, women own only 7.6% of businesses.

Mr Mitchell: Business ownership by women is increasing nationally, according to the latest survey.

Mr Roberts: I presume that you refer to our 'Barriers to Growth' document. We had hoped for a better response rate to our survey.

The Chairperson: On behalf of the Committee, I thank you for your oral evidence and for your written submission. I wish you well.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT
(MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS) BILL
(NIA 7/01)

Members present:

Rev Dr William McCrea (Chairperson)

Mr D Barr) Department of the Environment
Dr T Power)
Ms M Finnegan)

The Chairperson, the Deputy Chairperson, Mr McClarty, Mr Molloy and Mr Poots declared an interest.

The Chairperson: I welcome Mr John McConnell, Mr David Barr, Dr Tracy Power and Ms Marie Finnegan from the Department of the Environment. You have been very helpful in our meetings to date, and we appreciate that. We should like you to make an opening statement, after which we shall ask questions.

Mr McConnell: We shall take you through our working draft. I apologise for its lateness; there is much for us to do before we reach this stage in consultation with the draftsman.

Ms Finnegan: Clause 4(4), which we will come to later, has yet to be finalised. The Office of the Legislative Counsel and Local Government Audit Office have been consulted, but we shall have to go back to them. The Minister has not seen the draft, and will not do so until it achieves its final form. Of the Bill's 11 clauses, four — clauses 2, 4, 6 and 7 — will have to be amended. I shall deal with the first three, and Mr Barr will take clause 7.

I begin with clause 2, which is concerned with subordinate legislation connected with the general grant. We have drafted a new subsection (7). The new subsection makes provision for consultation on the regulations referred to in subsection (6). The wording in 2(7)(b), "such other interested bodies or persons", will allow for consultation with any interested bodies, including the Northern Ireland Public Service Alliance (NIPSA) and other associations or bodies with employee interests. You will be familiar with similar wording used later in the Bill in clause 4. We are also suggesting an amendment to that clause, and we shall come to that in due course. In clause 2, we have removed the words "bodies representative of district councils".

Mr A Doherty: The provision allows the Department to consult "such other interested bodies or persons ... as the Department considers appropriate." If a body or person believes that they have an interest and wishes to be consulted, but the Department considers that inappropriate, does the Department have to defend its decision?

Mr McConnell: Yes, we would have to defend our decision. Although I am speculating, I believe that any body that thought that it had a right to be consulted, and which the Department did not consult, would have recourse to the courts.

Mr Ford: NIPSA has previously suggested that the clause should be phrased to include "bodies representative of council staff". Is that wording used anywhere in other legislation?

Mr McConnell: I am not aware of anywhere that it is used. Indeed, part of our difficulty is in using parliamentary language that the draftsman is comfortable with. Mr Ford highlighted that point. The draftsman is comfortable with the language and believes that the terms do not exclude anyone. However, if a body that thought it should be included were excluded, it would still have recourse to the courts. As the provision is quite wide, it is hoped that such recourse would never be needed.

Mr Ford: I hope that we agree that it is preferable that the Department should presume that the interested bodies included bodies representing staff and that nobody should have to go to court over it.

The Chairperson: There appears to have been a very clear statement that that was the intent. Is that correct?

Mr McConnell: Absolutely. We want to be as inclusive as possible.

Mr Ford: If that is the draftsman's language, and that is your intent, then fair enough.

Ms Finnegan: There is quite a bit of detail in clause 4, which relates to reductions in grant where there has been a failure on the part of a district council. We are proposing substantial changes. There are now seven proposed subsections, where previously there were five. Subsection 4 has not yet been finalised. Further work must be done on that.

Mr McConnell: I shall amplify that. We are trying to reflect what the Committee has asked us to do. It is a matter of getting the wording right, which is not easy. Increased and closer working relationships with the Committee Clerk on such issues, as long as we can reflect the Committee's wishes, will mean that we will not have to continually bother the Committee members.

Ms Finnegan: The Committee wanted us to address the roles of the local government auditor, the Department and the Assembly: specifically, the auditor's reporting role, the Department's recommending role and the Assembly's approving role.

The Office of the Legislative Counsel (OLC) has highlighted some reservations, but has also suggested a solution. The OLC said that our suggestion might not be constitutionally proper. The OLC explained that the Assembly is a legislative body, not a judicial body or one with an administrative role. The OLC said that the proposal appears to set the Assembly in the role of adjudicating authority as to the amount to be deducted from the grant. The district council involved would then be able to have that decision reconsidered through a judicial review.

The OLC has come up with a possible solution that would involve the Assembly as a legislative body. The solution involves a Statutory Rule subject to approval by the Assembly under normal procedures. The Department would lay before the Assembly a draft Order, together with a document setting out the details, which would include the local government audit report and the Department of the Environment's proposal for the amount to be deducted. The proposed redraft contains new subsections (2) and (3) to deal with that arrangement.

As you have received the document for the first time this morning, you will want time to consider it.

The Chairperson: We will have that checked by our legal office.

Mr McConnell: That would be appreciated, rather than having toing and froing if a difficulty or problem arises. It is our intention to reflect the wishes of the Committee in the legislation.

Ms Finnegan: The local government auditor's role is provided for in the proposed subsection (4), which defines "relevant report". Those words are suggested for insertion into subsection (1). Subsection (4) needs to be re-examined in relation to other legislative references to the auditor's duties. We have given one example, but there may be others, and we need to be sure that we are covering all of them.

Mr Poots: Will that enhance the powers of the local government auditor?

Ms Finnegan: We are saying here that the auditor may have these powers already, and we want to make reference to them.

Mr Poots: You use the word "may".

Ms Finnegan: The work is not finalised. There is more to do on it.

Mr McConnell: That is why we have more work to do. Legally, we must consult again to see if the auditor has those powers. I am sorry for using the term "may", but that is all we can say at the present.

Ms Finnegan: One other point on the proposed change is that we must consider whether we should extend subsection (3) to deal with the case where the Assembly does not agree with the amount proposed by the Department of the Environment. That is not covered in the draft, but was covered at an earlier meeting. We will consider that aspect, also.

In paragraph 4(1)(b), members wanted the word "excessive" related to the circumstances of the council in question. That was raised a few times. The legislative draftsman has examined the wording and has amended it slightly. To explain, the proposed wording of the paragraph has two aspects. First, the word "excessive" is linked to "having regard to the council's financial resources". The wording relates excessive expenditure to the council's total budget resources. The draftsman is happy that the wording reflects that.

We consider that the words "other circumstances relevant to the council" are still necessary in this paragraph, as that would address non-adherence to the Department's statutory directions or non-application of the code of practice on local authority accounts. Two separate matters are being addressed there. You will want to consider that further.

The Chairperson: We will now consider clause 4. Have members any specific points they wish to raise? We need to get clarification on the matter. It would be interesting to see that the local government auditor fulfils his current role, before increasing it.

Mr McConnell: The intention is not to do that, but to ensure that we do not cut across existing legislation.

Mr Poots: I am surprised that there is so little clarity on the matter. Has the local government auditor been exercising some of these powers, or not exercising his existing powers?

Ms Finnegan: This power has been in existence since the Local Government &c. (Northern Ireland) Order 1972. According to our records, it has never been applied. A deduction has never been made from a council in relation to general grant. When we were drafting the Bill we felt that the power should be retained, as there was no reason to scrap it. The Committee looked at the matter from a different angle and felt that the Assembly should have a role, so we have proposed fairly dramatic changes.

Mr Ford: We have received one witness submission questioning which aspect of the general grant might be reduced. There was a query about it being applied to the derating element. My reading of it is that this could still apply to the derating element.

Ms Finnegan: That is correct.

Mr Ford: That may, or may not, be valid. You wish to retain that option, given that some councils will only have the derating element.

Ms Finnegan: All councils are entitled to the derating element.

Mr Ford: Yes, but for some councils it is the only grant.

Ms Finnegan: Yes. I take your point. It is intended that it should apply to all general grants.

Mr Ford: Presumably the “other circumstances relevant” in paragraph 4(1)(b) might include equality and environment, for those of us who are keen on the five Es, rather than the three Es named in paragraph 4(1)(a). A council might wish to substantiate any expenditure on that basis, and could make a case to the Assembly that that was the reason why it had incurred certain expenditure.

Mr McConnell: Paragraph 4(1)(b) is wide enough to cover that. It does not prohibit councils from making cases. There are soft cases and hard cases, and the soft issues must be taken into account along with the hard issues. That will be for the Assembly to determine.

Mr Molloy: Over the years, some councils have not maintained small sections of road or pavement. Will that infrastructure and neglect be covered under clause 4? The Department of the Environment does not have that responsibility.

Ms Finnegan: I do not think that it will. The local government auditor would not pick that up.

Mr McConnell: None of these intentions would interfere with any existing powers, or lack of powers, that councils have. The primary legislation would cover that.

Mr Molloy: Other circumstances relevant to the council could justify it in making a payment.

Mr McConnell: The justification that councils would seek to make could only be made on the basis of something that the council had the power to do.

Ms Finnegan: If the auditor detected that councils had spent money on something for which they did not have authority, then that could be looked at and applied. Every case would have to be looked at on its merits.

The Chairperson: We may have to seek clarification from the auditor when we have the final copy of the Bill.

We will move on to the next clause.

Ms Finnegan: Clause 6 relates to economic development powers. In our proposed amendment, there are three new subsections — (3), (5) and (6).

Subsection (3) gives district councils vesting powers in relation to economic development activity. The wording we have used is “acquire it otherwise than by agreement”. That is the standard wording for such a provision.

Subsection (5) makes it clear that district councils must follow any guidance relating to economic development issued by the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (DETI). Subsection (6) is linked with subsection (5), and makes provision for DETI to issue such guidance following consultation with district councils.

Mr McConnell: To clarify that point, the wording is “shall have regard to any guidance”.

Ms Finnegan: DETI has seen the wording of this draft and has this morning confirmed that it is content with it.

The Chairperson: What does “shall have regard” mean?

Mr McConnell: It means that they should take the guidance into account and be able to demonstrate that they have done so.

The Chairperson: There is no mention of the 5p in that clause.

Ms Finnegan: The 5p is automatically removed by the repeals at the end of the Bill.

The Chairperson: I just wanted to clarify that, and also that subsection (3) referred to vesting under the name of “the power to acquire land”.

Ms Finnegan: Yes.

The Chairperson: Do Members have any comments to make on the proposed amendment of clause 6?

Mr Poots: From subsections (5) and (6) it is evident that, should a council wish to go down a certain route and DETI disagrees, the council would be obliged to take the Department’s advice. Is that correct?

Ms Finnegan: That is correct. The council would have to adhere to the Department’s guidelines.

The Chairperson: If, for example, a council had entered into consultation, and felt that the Department had ignored its recommendations, could the council take the Department to court?

Mr McConnell: I do not have the answer to that. We have not examined that possibility.

The Chairperson: Can we find that out? If a council reaches a unanimous decision to do something about economic development, but is advised by the Department to follow its advice, surely it is entitled to some recourse if it feels that the direction of the Department is wrong for its area?

Ms Finnegan: It is not much different from the present arrangements. Councils have to come to the Department of the Environment for project approval. We ask the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for its advice, so that there is no overlap with the activities of LEDU, or of the new agency, Invest Northern Ireland.

The Chairperson: In planning, however, as you know, Planning Service goes to the Department of the Environment, which goes to the Department for Regional Development for advice on roads matters, for example. But the buck stops with the Department of the Environment. It can overrule the advice of the Department for Regional Development, and can give planning permission after it has taken the advice of the relevant Department. What happens in that instance? Your Department takes the advice of the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment.

Mr McConnell: It is a cumbersome matter. The Department of the Environment has no expertise in this field. We have no option but to consult with those that we regard as the experts. We have no expert knowledge to say that they are wrong. That is the situation at present. We will, however, get back to you on the point that you made.

The Chairperson: Equally, it could be said that you have no expert knowledge about roads. The Department for Regional Development and Roads Service could decide that a planning application was not acceptable. In the past, the final say on planning applications has been with the Department of the Environment, which has said that, although it has taken advice, it has still granted applications.

Mr McConnell: I understand what you are saying. I am not sure that we are talking about the same thing. We will certainly consider that point.

Ms Finnegan: The Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment is clear about non-statutory guidelines. It would not class these provisions as statutory guidelines.

Mr Poots: Will this legislation provide cover for councillors? We could be talking about substantial amounts of money being involved in funding economic development. Could a council take decisions that, in hindsight, were not in the community's best interest? If that were so, the council would be squandering money. That has been the case in the past, and in cases where the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment has been consulted. Will this legislation remove the responsibilities from councillors per se and take away the possibility of them being surcharged for making such decisions?

Ms Finnegan: I do not think so. Economic development is a council function, and the acquisition of land or buildings is part of that. It would be for councils to decide how much to spend on that function within their overall budgets.

Mr McConnell: If a council were considering economic development and took advice from the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, which said that the council was going about it in the wrong way, and the council proceeded in spite of the advice given, then its defence would be minimised. That would be the case in any circumstances where advice is taken and the choice is then made to ignore that advice.

It has always been an issue in Planning Service as to where responsibility would lie if advice from Roads Service, for instance, were ignored, planning permission were granted, and an accident took place. It has not happened yet. However, it is a possibility.

Mr Barr: I would like to begin with the broader issues about community safety partnerships that are concerning the Committee. I have contacted the Northern Ireland Office and relayed the message given to us last week by the Committee. I can confirm that a comprehensive response will be sent to the Committee as early as possible. The NIO may accept the Committee's invitation to give evidence if the Committee feels it necessary. I have been asked to relay that to the Committee.

The Chairperson: The Committee has contacted the NIO, but its letter to us has not arrived yet. We wanted to talk to the officials eyeball-to-eyeball on this issue. However, they want to communicate by letter first, and the Committee has no problem with that. It would be helpful for the Committee to see what recognition they have taken of its concerns. Thank you for the part you have played.

Mr Barr: Turning to clause 7, and leaving that issue aside, the only amendment we are suggesting is at paragraph 7(1)(d). We are suggesting the addition of the words "(whether financially or otherwise)". Those words should be inserted, because some councils have suggested that the paragraph was not explicit enough to enable them to spend money, if they wished to do so, within their community safety partnerships. We are happy to add the words, and we are happy that councils will be satisfied with that.

We gave careful consideration to other matters that were discussed by councils, such as giving them the power to take the lead in community safety partnerships (CSPs), and to determine the membership of CSPs. We felt that that would be outside the remit of the Department of the Environment, particularly as the NIO strategy, which is currently being determined, will examine the membership and role of CSPs. It would be wrong for us to suggest that we give councils those powers in the context of the Bill. There is nothing to stop councils from taking the lead if that is the wish of a local CSP. One suspects that that will probably be the case, given councils' representative role for local areas.

The NIO would probably like councils to take the lead role in CSPs, because of their expertise and knowledge of local areas. The NIO will be making resources available for the establishment of CSPs, and it has written to councils to explain that they will be funded if they decide to take the lead in a CSP. The Department felt that it would be inappropriate to give that specific power to councils in the Bill. We would prefer councils to go down the route of deciding themselves if they want to engage in CSPs and making their own case within those CSPs as to whether they want to take the lead role. The membership of a CSP should not be for any one member organisation to determine. That is why we feel that councils should not seek to take on that task.

Another issue that has been raised by the councils is the desire to undertake community safety outside of CSPs. We have explained on other occasions that section 115 of the Local Government Act 1972 enables councils to engage in community safety in its broadest terms, because that could be considered as looking after the well-being of local people. Section 115 is financially restricted to them, but there are some powers for them to engage in community safety if they wish.

When the Executive considered the initial policy paper and draft Bill, they thought that it would be wrong to give councils a wider power for community safety, at least until the community safety programme was bedded in. That is why we have included, under subsection 7(2), the power for the Department to “confer or impose on district councils” any functions aimed at enhancing community safety in their districts.

That will enable the Committee and district councils to be involved in consultation, and it will enable the Assembly to decide if councils should be given a broader power to engage in community safety. Hence, we have not extended to councils the power to undertake community safety outside of CSPs.

Those are the key areas that were raised by district councils. We are suggesting that there should be only one amendment proposed under this clause.

The Chairperson: First, the NIO has to deal with the central part, and then everything else will fall into place. The Committee needs to hear what the NIO says before we comment. However, that in no way detracts from anything that Mr Barr has said. It is genuinely to try to see where the Committee should go on the matter, because the wording will fall into place thereafter.

Mr Ford: You have made no response to the Society of Local Authority Chief Executives (SOLACE) point on emergency planning powers. Is that omission or commission?

Mr McConnell: There has been no consultation on emergency planning. We attend meetings on emergency planning, which are chaired by a member of SOLACE, and there is non-statutory work going on on emergency planning. However, it is my view — with a great deal of evidence to support me — that there is no concerted view in councils as to whether they should take on emergency planning.

As you know, SOLACE represents officers, and at the last meeting of the local government emergency management group (LGEM) that I attended, I asked each whether the chief executives had been requested to put emergency planning issues before their councils. I am waiting for a reply, because I do not think that that request has been made. Some councils favour considering emergency planning issues; others do not. The eastern group recently held a meeting at which the Department of the Environment assisted, and it was clear from that that several councillors were opposed to the idea.

Ms Lewsley, Mr Poots and Mr Ford said that this is an additional cost for councils. We are not sure if SOLACE speaks on behalf of elected members, and once we are clear on that, we will take its views and move into a consultative process in which the Committee will be involved. The Minister, Dermot Nesbitt, is aware of that situation.

The Chairperson: Perhaps we could write to individual councillors about that and request that chief executives put the matter before councils to get their opinions. As you know, elected members are an important part of councils.

Mr McConnell: You smiled when you said that, but in fact, all elected members have a mandate, which we in the Department of the Environment do not have. I take that seriously, and that is why I raised the issue at LGEM. Perhaps the Committee will consider asking SOLACE whether it represents councils' views. However, that is a matter for the Committee.

Mr Poots: Emergency planning is in the remit of the Office of the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister; it is not a matter for the Department of the Environment. It is a function of chief executives to oversee emergency planning in their districts. Some members referred to putting something on paper to ensure that chief executives have more authority than at present to prepare for emergency planning. God forbid that something should happen, but if it did, the chief executive of the local council is the principal responsible officer.

Mr McConnell: In 1979, the Development Office co-ordinated emergency services in councils, and when that service was discontinued, chief executives became responsible. However, that duty was not given to councils, and you are right: chief executives are concerned about spending money, because councils do not cover that expenditure.

Section 115 of the Local Government Act 1972 covers that point. It states that councils can spend money on whatever they like. Although the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister may ultimately become responsible, the Department of the Environment would have to enact that power so that councils could operate it.

Mr Poots: I know.

Mr McConnell: However, the Department of the Environment is willing to do that.

The Chairperson: Councils want emergency planning included because it gives them that cover. That is why they have raised it under the auspices of SOLACE, rather than as councils.

Mr McConnell: That is right, and Mr Barr attended a meeting in Castlereagh at which it was clear that some councillors either did not want to take it on, or wanted to consider it further. That is why consultation in this area is necessary. I have some experience in this. For example, following the Omagh bomb, the chief executive of the council was seen to be in charge. Councillors came to him and asked what was happening and said that they wanted to be seen to be doing something. It was exactly the same in Castlereagh when the forensics laboratory was blown up; the council took the lead, and there was no question of looking round to see who else was taking the lead.

You may be interested to know that councils spent money for which they were not fully accountable. In both instances, money that had been spent on matters that were not the councils' responsibility was refunded to them. We are already working on a protocol to guide councils, should they spend money, in the event of an emergency, that is not properly their responsibility.

The Chairperson: It is important to clarify that.

Ms Finnegan: As a result of the redraft, we must make changes to the explanatory and financial memorandum.

Mr McConnell: May I take this opportunity to thank the Committee? The Bill has improved because of the consultation and the scrutiny. I do not wish to impinge on the Committee's responsibilities, but our timetable seeks to have the Bill in place in time to apply the new formula next year. We are in your hands.

The Chairperson: We shall endeavour to assist. Thank you very much.

Written Answers to Questions

OFFICE OF THE FIRST MINISTER AND THE DEPUTY FIRST MINISTER

North/South Ministerial Council

Mr B Hutchinson asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if local Councils are informed when a meeting of the North-South Ministerial Council is to be held within their area of responsibility.

(AQW 2419/01)

Reply: Local Councils are not normally officially informed when meetings of the North/South Ministerial Council are to be held in their respective District Council area.

However, Mayors / Chairmen of Councils are usually invited to participate where there is an accompanying lunch. Over the last six months invitations have been extended to the Mayors / Chairmen of Leitrim, Antrim, Fermanagh and Ballymena councils.

Female Representation in Public and Political Life

Ms McWilliams asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what steps are being taken to increase female representation in public and political life.

(AQW 2827/01)

Reply: Publicity campaigns about public appointments have specifically targeted groups representing women and other under-represented groups, and a six monthly list of vacancies is issued to a number of organisations and published on the internet at www.ofmdfmini.gov.uk/publicappointments. We are considering a review of public appointments in Northern Ireland to help determine whether the current arrangements are suitable for use by the devolved administration. The review will address a number of issues including ways of ensuring as far as possible that public bodies are as representative as possible.

In terms of increasing female participation in political life, the Sex Discrimination (Election Candidates) Act 2002 permits registered political parties to regulate the selection of candidates in order to reduce inequalities in the numbers of men and women selected as candidates of the party. The Northern Ireland provisions of the Westminster Act apply to parliamentary elections, and elections to the European Parliament, Northern Ireland Assembly and district councils. The Act does not compel parties to use such selection procedures if they do not wish to do so.

North Belfast

Mr A Maginness asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to make a statement on its current work in North Belfast. (AQO 1235/01)

Reply: As we have indicated before, we are fully committed to ensuring that all of the measures announced on 23 November last year are progressed as speedily as possible with both communities fully involved in that process. Substantial progress has already been made on a range of measures in the package and we have had extensive discussions with elected and community representatives.

We met recently with the North Belfast Community Action Project Team. They will report to us by the end of May. We look forward to receiving this report. The Project is supporting community capacity building activity in various parts of North Belfast including both Glenbryn and Ardoyne.

Over the past few weeks we have been discussing with community leaders and elected representatives how we can develop a process resulting in the sequencing of both community dialogue and the road realignment project at the Ardoyne Road/Alliance Avenue interface in the very near future.

We have engaged in an extensive consultation process with both communities on the proposed road realignment project. The consultants' designs have been made available to both communities and officials have obtained their reactions. We now want to move this on. Having given this matter very careful and detailed consideration we would propose to bring the work forward in stages. Work to realign the road and to provide a protective screen to houses in Hesketh Park could be the first stage and this could commence immediately. We also want to have some discussion with both communities on how to provide a protective screen to houses at the Alliance Avenue/Ardoyne interface and to address concerns over sight lines. We want to discuss all these proposals with elected and community representatives and to give them an opportunity to respond. To this end we will be arranging meetings with them later this week.

We have also been exploring how facilitation might be provided to assist with the development of community dialogue. Since we became involved in this area last year, we have continually emphasised that community dialogue is the key to resolving this situation. We recognise that both communities are committed to dialogue and as we have explained in the past, we stand ready to offer assistance to move this forward. We also want to discuss this further with elected and community representatives when we meet them later this week with the expectation that community dialogue can be brought forward in tandem with the road realignment project.

Executive Meetings

Mr McCarthy asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to make a statement on business transacted at the last meeting of the Executive. (AQO 1206/01)

Reply: The last meeting of the Executive was held on 25 April. A copy of the Press Release issued following the meeting has been placed in the Assembly Library.

Bill of Rights for Northern Ireland

Mr Hamilton asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to outline (a) why there has been a delay in bringing forward a Bill of Rights for Northern Ireland; and (b) any discussions which have been held to process this matter urgently. (AQO 1215/01)

Reply: This matter is the responsibility of the Secretary of State. The Belfast Agreement and the Northern Ireland Act require the Human Rights Commission to advise the Secretary of State on the scope for defining, in Westminster legislation, a Bill of Rights for Northern Ireland.

We understand that the Commission, having reflected on its initial advice and the outcome of consultation, considers that more time is required in order to consider the complex and wide ranging issues involved. We have not jointly discussed this matter with the Secretary of State. Ministers Haughey and Leslie plan to meet the Commission early next month.

Review of the Civic Forum

Mr Gallagher asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to make a statement on the Review of the Civic Forum. (AQO 1234/01)

Reply: As indicated in the report to the Assembly on 15 February 1999, a review of the Civic Forum was to be undertaken in close consultation with the membership of the Civic Forum with a view to reporting within 12 months of the Civic Forum becoming operational.

To allow the Civic Forum to have some time to establish its working practices and ensure a more meaningful review we decided that the review should be deferred until Spring 2002.

We have agreed draft Terms of Reference for the review and these are currently with the Civic Forum for consideration.

Freedom of Information Bill

Mr Ford asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail the proposed timetable for the introduction of a Freedom of Information Bill.

(AQO 1209/01)

Reply: There are no plans to introduce a Freedom of Information Bill in Northern Ireland. The Freedom of Information Act 2000 extends to Northern Ireland and will be fully in force by January 2005. The desirability of separate Northern Ireland legislation for the future will be considered in the light of experience of the operation of the Act.

Disability Discrimination

Ms Lewsley asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what steps it intends taking to extend the protection against discrimination offered to disabled people. (AQO 1233/01)

Reply: We recognise that the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 was an important development in outlawing discrimination against disabled people but it fell short of providing comprehensive and enforceable civil rights. We are committed to addressing this shortfall and will achieve this through implementation of the Executive's detailed response to the recommendations made by the Disability Rights Task Force. A report on the consultation on our response is in preparation.

When we have finalised this, we will bring forward appropriate legislation to implement legislative proposals for improving disability rights.

As set out in the Programme for Government, we will establish an Interdepartmental Working Group this year under the Promoting Social Inclusion element of new TSN to develop a strategy to implement the proposals in the Executive's response and any wider issues raised in the consultation.

Furthermore, we have asked the Equality Commission to consider further a range of issues raised by the Task Force.

North/South Ministerial Council Meetings

Mr McNamee asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if the Dublin Government's National Development Plan and the Regional Development Strategy have been jointly considered at any North-South Ministerial Council meetings; and to make a statement.

(AQO 1239/01)

Reply: The National Development Plan and the Regional Development Strategy have not been jointly considered at any North/South Ministerial Council meetings.

Consultation Documents

Mr Poots asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what consideration is being given to reducing the list of organisations which receive consultation documents. (AQO 1224/01)

Reply: Consultation on key policy issues provides an important opportunity for the Executive to listen to and understand the needs and views of the public. Arising from our statutory equality duties we are also required to equality assess the impact of our policies and, as part of that process, to consult with those likely to be effected.

We are committed to ensuring that consultation is effective, inclusive and as meaningful as possible. We are continually looking at ways to improve our methods of consultation. We recognise that the consultation process has given rise to some difficulties both for those consulting and those consulted.

Over the next few months we will be working with officials in the Department for Social Development to explore how the consultation process might be improved. We hope to involve the Equality Commission and the voluntary and community sector in this exercise.

Consultation with the Public

Mr C Murphy asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if the pursuit of open Government necessitates an extensive consultation with the public. (AQO 1237/01)

Civic Forum

Mrs E Bell asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail the circulation list for the minutes of the Civic Forum. (AQO 1201/01)

Reply: We have been advised by the Civic Forum that a copy of all minutes of Civic Forum plenary meetings and standing committee meetings are placed in the Assembly Library when they have been agreed.

A copy of the minutes of plenary meetings and minutes of General Purpose Committee meetings [when agreed] are also made available on the Civic Forum's Internet site. Additionally all members of the Civic Forum receive copies of the minutes of the Civic Forum's plenary meetings.

All members of Civic Forum Committees and Project Groups receive copies of the minutes of those meetings and Civic Forum members, who are not members of Committees or Project Groups, may receive copies of the minutes of those meetings on request.

Refunds of Dairy Exports

Mr Kane asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what representations have been made to secure export refunds of dairy exports; and to make a statement. (AQO 1203/01)

Reply: We have not jointly made representations to secure refunds of dairy exports.

When world dairy commodity markets declined in 2001 we understand the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development and her officials worked hard to secure increases at the EU Milk and Milk Products Management Committee meetings. The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, Bríd Rodgers, raised this matter with the Secretary of State for the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Margaret Beckett) and impressed on her the need to put pressure on the EU Commission to secure an increase in export refunds. In addition, in advance of the crucial EU Management Committee meeting on 24 January 2002 the Department of Agriculture and Regional Development Minister ensured that Commissioner Fischler was made aware of the importance of this matter for Northern Ireland.

We understand that Department of Agriculture and Regional Development officials have continued to lobby on behalf of Northern Ireland on export refunds for skimmed milk powder and whole milk powder and continue to keep the market situation under review in conjunction with the dairy industry.

AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Part-Time Farmers

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the number of part-time farmers in the last 3 years. (AQW 2708/01)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms Rodgers): The numbers of part-time farmers in Northern Ireland in each of the last 3 years, as estimated from the June Agricultural Census, are shown below.

2000	15,386
2001	15,786

The figures refer to farmers who work less than 30 hours per week on their farms.

You may wish to note that these figures, and those for each of the past 20 years, are available in the statistical data sheets on the Department's website (www.dardni.gov.uk).

Food and Hospitality Industries

Mrs Carson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how her Department currently promotes the Northern Ireland food and hospitality industries. (AQW 2947/01)

Ms Rodgers: My Department is involved in generic promotion of Northern Ireland products which includes financial support for the marketing of Northern Ireland red meat on the basis of its quality. In addition financial support for marketing in the pig meat sector has been provided.

I would add that there are very strict EU rules limiting the extent to which Government can support publicity campaigns which promote domestically produced goods in preference to similar goods from other parts of the EU. Consequently public funds cannot be used to endorse food produced on the basis of its region of origin.

My schedule of visits to lend support to various conferences and to local producers and food companies help to keep the characteristics of all sectors at the forefront of my Department's considerations. Active participation at events including the Balmoral Show, the Winter Fair, European Dairy Farmers Congress and the European Seafood Exhibition are especially important as the audience crosses national boundaries. I have also met with major food retailers in Northern Ireland to encourage greater use of locally sourced products.

My Department independently and in conjunction with other Government Agencies and food related bodies promote the Northern Ireland food industry in other ways including:

- Providing a platform for individual companies to display their products at events held in Northern Ireland (IFEX), Great Britain and the Republic of Ireland.
- Sponsoring event organisers, such as local Agricultural Show Associations, to mount displays of Northern Ireland produce and sponsoring launches of events such as Northern Ireland Food Promotion Initiative.
- Producing publications such as the Loughry Food Business Incubation Centre brochure.
- Featuring Northern Ireland produce on the menu for Ministerial receptions such as the DARD breakfast at Balmoral Show.
- Under the Northern Ireland Building Sustainable Prosperity Programme launching a joint Marketing Initiative (Promotions) Scheme for Fisheries and a Marketing of Quality Agricultural Products Grant Scheme.

Targeting Social Need

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail, in each of the past 5 years, (a) the percentage of her budget relating to Targeting Social Need; (b) the actual spend for TSN; (c) the number of people employed relating to TSN; (d) the number of people who benefited from these programmes; (e) the actual and practical benefits as a result of her TSN programmes; and (f) the tasks specifically undertaken and completed. (AQW 2951/01)

Ms Rodgers: New Targeting Social Need is the Executive's main policy for addressing social deprivation and has been integrated into the Programme for Government. New TSN policy is a theme which applies to all relevant programmes and services, and operates by using existing resources to benefit people in greatest objective social need. While a considerable amount of my Department's activities are subject to the constraints imposed by the EU CAP and CFP I am nevertheless wholly committed to ensuring that, wherever possible, resources are directed to where they are most needed. The principles of New TSN feature prominently throughout the decision making process.

New TSN is a long-term approach. By consistently addressing the problems of those who are objectively shown to be in greatest social need, New TSN should, over time, contribute to the erosion of inequalities. In particular, New TSN addresses social need in 3 complementary ways:

- tackling unemployment and increasing employability;
- tackling social need in other policy areas;
- promoting Social Inclusion (PSI).

The Executive adopted New TSN in June 2000, and I took full responsibility for its effective implementation in my Department. My Department has therefore been working hard to implement its New TSN Action Plan which runs for three years from 1 January 2000.

By way of example, New TSN was one of the issues which I took into account in determining that additional milk quota allocation, secured as part of the Agenda 2000 agreement, was allocated to small milk producers in 2000/01 and 2001/02.

During the past year, my Department agreed with the European Commission a new scheme of support for farmers in the Less Favoured Areas (LFA) of Northern Ireland. In meeting the European Commission's requirements, the Department was able to produce a scheme which is consistent with, and contributes to, New TSN objectives. Payments made at 31 March 2002 total £22.98m in respect of 542,688ha of LFA land. Of this £18.17m (79%) was paid to producers in the most disadvantaged areas with the remaining £4.81m (21%) paid to those producers in the less disadvantaged areas.

The Programme for Government contains a commitment to an evaluation of the benefits and achievements of New TSN. The initial evaluation, which will be subject to external validation to ensure objectivity, is currently underway, with initial outcomes planned for the end of 2002. The aim of this interim evaluation is to assess the way in which New TSN is being implemented and to examine its impact with a view to informing future thinking on the policy. My Department will contribute to the evaluation. The final report will be made publicly accessible.

My Department is currently updating its New TSN Action Plan for March 2002 to April 2003.

Department's Estate

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail those parts of her Department's estate not used for departmental or related ancillary purposes. (AQW 2994/01)

Ms Rodgers: Land at:

- (a) Desertcreat, Cookstown;
- (b) Tullyhogue, Cookstown;
- (c) Home Farm estate, Loughry College, Cookstown;
- (d) Fairhill Street, Ballycastle; and
- (e) Carnroe, Lower Bann River.

Buildings:

- (a) Camus store, Coleraine.

Prospect Road, Carrickfergus

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if officials from the Rivers Agency have refused to meet with elected representatives, Council officials and other officials of statutory bodies on a constituency matter at Prospect Road, Carrickfergus. (AQW 3114/01)

Ms Rodgers: Rivers Agency has not refused to attend a site meeting with elected representatives and others to discuss the condition of a watercourse at Prospect Road, Carrickfergus. I can assure you that the Agency wrote on 19 April to Carrickfergus Borough Council confirming that an Agency Representative will attend the site meeting scheduled on 1 May 2002.

Gosford Castle, Markethill, Co Armagh

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 2919/01, to provide a list of those (a) individuals (b) groups and (c) consortia who have submitted bids to purchase or lease Gosford Castle, Markethill, Co Armagh. (AQW 3285/01)

Ms Rodgers: The Forest Service is considering proposals from a number of potential purchasers and has requested more detailed information from each by 24 May. Forest Service is unable to provide a list of those (a) individuals (b) groups and (c) consortia who have submitted bids to purchase or lease Gosford Castle as it is policy on procurements not to divulge the details of commercial negotiations.

Future of Farming in South Down

Mr M Murphy asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to give her assessment of the future of farming in South Down. (AQO 1247/01)

Ms Rodgers: I do not believe that anyone is in a position to predict with accuracy the future of the agricultural industry anywhere in Northern Ireland. We can point to certain trends and challenges, such as the continuing reform of the CAP or changing consumer tastes and demands, which will have a profound influence on the industry. What we cannot predict, of course, are the unexpected events, such as the BSE crisis or the outbreak of Foot and Mouth Disease. The vast majority of the challenges and opportunities that lie ahead are not, of course, unique to the industry in Northern Ireland. Therefore, what will, in large measure, determine our future success is how we respond to these pressures compared with the response of our competitors. That is why it so important that we adopt a strategic approach to our future development and prepare as best we can the meet the challenges that we can reasonably foretell, and that is why I attach such importance to the Vision exercise.

The agri-food industry in Northern Ireland as a whole currently faces many challenges. The Vision Steering Group's task was to identify these, come forward with a Vision for the future development of the industry and make recommendations for the achievement of this Vision. This I believe it has done.

The Vision Steering Group did not attempt any area by area analysis but I believe that, if we get things right at the Northern Ireland level, this will be to the benefit of farmers in all parts of the North including South Down, Mid-Ulster, Fermanagh, Newry and Armagh.

Consultancy Documents

Mr Close asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the cost of producing documents for consultation over the last 3 years, including preparation, printing, distribution and all ancillary costs. (AQO 1213/01)

Ms Rodgers: The figures requested are £74,100 in 1999/2000, £77,800 the following year and £89,350 last year.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas Scheme

Mr McGrady asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline a date for the resumption of the E-Plan element of the Environmentally Sensitive Areas Scheme; and to make a statement. (AQO 1253/01)

Ms Rodgers: I fully recognise the importance of the discretionary enhancement plan element of the Environmentally Sensitive Areas Scheme to many farmers in Northern Ireland. Indeed this has been recognised in the inclusion of a specific recommendation in the recent "Vision for the future of the agri-food industry" report, which calls for the reintroduction of capital enhancement measures.

This report has been the subject of extensive public consultation, and I hope to be in a position to announce my response to the Vision exercise in coming months. Until then, I am not in a position to give a more definitive answer about the reintroduction of this element of the ESA Scheme.

In addition, I do not wish to speculate on a likely re-opening date before all the necessary budgetary and administrative processes are in place. To do otherwise could give rise to some unrealistic expectations and I would not wish to encourage ESA Scheme participants to plan any enhancement type works before the details of what may, and may not, be claimed for are finalised.

Payments Profile

Mr Kane asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to make a statement in relation to her Department's capacity to pay the 'producers' premium balance'. (AQO 1205/01)

Ms Rodgers: In accordance with the Payments Profile which I published last October, balance payments under the cattle schemes are now due to commence and to be completed by the end of June.

My Department is proceeding in accordance with this timetable and will be issuing payments in the date order in which claims were received.

Agenda 2000

Mr McMenamin asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to give an assessment of the major issues facing Northern Ireland agriculture at the forthcoming mid-term reviews of Agenda 2000. (AQO 1227/01)

Ms Rodgers: The Agenda 2000 Agreement contains in-built reviews of cereal support prices, milk quotas and budgetary issues. In addition, the Commission is known to be contemplating widening these reviews to include, for example, the beef regime.

Commissioner Fischler has made no secret of his desire to see a further shift in support from Pillar I (production based) to Pillar II (rural development). Also, with the WTO Doha Round underway, the CAP is likely to come under pressure for further reform of export subsidisation and the level of domestic agricultural support. Issues such as modulation and decoupling therefore are also likely to surface.

Of particular concern to Northern Ireland are:

- the consequences for producers of any further changes to the support prices for beef, cereals or milk;
- the impact on exports to third countries of further reductions in EU export refunds, especially for beef and dairy products;
- the impact on milk producers of any decision to abolish milk quotas after 2008; and
- the effects on farm incomes of any proposals such as modulation or decoupling affecting direct producer payments.

In general, an important priority in future negotiations will be to try to ensure that any re-orientation of the CAP is suitable to the requirements of agriculture and the protection of the viability of local communities in Northern Ireland.

Meat from Third World Countries

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what action (a) she has taken to ensure that no meat from Third World countries enters the food chain and (b) is taken when meat from Third World sources enters the food manufacturing process both in terms of processing and end-product.

(AQO 1252/01)

Ms Rodgers:

- (a) Meat from Third Countries, including that from developing Countries, may enter the Food Chain but must do so in accordance with EU Regulations governing intra-community trade.
- (b) Beef from Third Countries must be labelled in accordance with Beef Labelling Rules.

Farming Co-operatives

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline (a) her support for the development of farming co-operatives; and (b) how she intends to encourage them.

(AQO 1226/01)

Ms Rodgers: I believe the principles of collaboration amongst farmers and the integration of farmers and processors to meet the requirements of a rapidly evolving market place is key to the competitiveness of the agri-food industry in Northern Ireland. To assist the agri-food sector to meet this challenge my Department has in particular encouraged the development of farmers co-operatives. Since 1995 £1 million of financial assistance has been awarded to 16 projects approved under the Marketing Development Scheme for activities involving producer co-operation. Also earlier this month I launched a new EU Marketing of Quality Agricultural Products Grant Scheme. Support under this Scheme is available towards the establishment, expansion or merger of a collaborative marketing group, including co-operatives, and I am seeking to increase the funding available for this purpose.

Future of Farming in Mid-Ulster

Mr J Kelly asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to give her assessment of the future of farming in Mid-Ulster.

(AQO 1246/01)

Ms Rodgers: I do not believe that anyone is in a position to predict with accuracy the future of the agricultural industry anywhere in Northern Ireland. We can point to certain trends and challenges, such as the continuing reform of the CAP or changing consumer tastes and demands, which will have a profound influence on the industry. What we cannot predict, of course, are the unexpected events, such as the BSE crisis or the outbreak of Foot and Mouth Disease. The vast majority of the

Diversification

Dr McDonnell asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline (a) what programmes are currently available to allow farmers to diversify away from intensive livestock production; and (b) what programmes are currently available to promote biomass production (growing of willow coppice for energy purposes).

(AQO 1229/01)

Ms Rodgers: In response to the first part of your question about diversification I can advise you that under the Peace II Programme farmers, and members of farm families, will have opportunity to diversify. This programme, which will open for applications later this year, will be delivered through a change management programme involving re-skilling.

My officials are presently developing a new competence development programme to help farmers and farm families consider and develop alternative enterprises utilising farm resources.

Conversion of land from agriculture to forestry is another diversification option open to farmers. The Woodland Grant Scheme offers grants toward costs of establishing woodland and the Farm Woodland Premium Scheme pays an annual premium over 10 or 15 years to compensate for the loss of income from converting agricultural land to woodland.

There may also be diversification opportunities under the Rural Development Programme, and there is scope for farmers to benefit from the Building Sustainable Prosperity Programme under the Collectives/Co-operatives and sectoral initiatives. The EU LEADER+ Initiative may also be able to provide support to assist certain farm diversification projects.

Likewise, the Natural Resource Rural Tourism Measure may be able to provide support for farmers in the Sperrins, Fermanagh, Mourne, Antrim Glens and Coast and South Armagh to diversify into tourism.

Turning to the second part of your question, I can advise you that assistance is available under the Woodland Grant Scheme for the establishment on suitable sites of approved clones of willow, poplar and alder intended for short rotation coppice for renewable energy purposes. Whether or not the coppice has been cut, the stumps must continue to be present and satisfactorily maintained throughout a 10 year period to qualify for grant. Grant will be £600 per hectare for non set-aside land and £400 per hectare for set-aside.

Future of Farming in Fermanagh

Mr McHugh asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to give her assessment of the future of farming in Fermanagh. (AQO 1249/01)

Ms Rodgers: I do not believe that anyone is in a position to predict with accuracy the future of the agricultural industry anywhere in Northern Ireland. We can point to certain trends and challenges, such as the continuing reform of the CAP or changing consumer tastes and demands, which will have a profound influence on the industry. What we cannot predict, of course, are the unexpected events, such as the BSE crisis or the outbreak of Foot and Mouth Disease. Future of Farming in Newry and Armagh

Mr McNamee asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to give her assessment of the future of farming in Newry and Armagh. (AQO 1248/01)

Ms Rodgers: I do not believe that anyone is in a position to predict with accuracy the future of the agricultural industry anywhere in Northern Ireland. We can point to certain trends and challenges, such as the continuing reform of the CAP or changing consumer tastes and demands, which will have a profound influence on the industry. CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Credit Cards

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail (a) the number of credit cards in use in (i) his Department; (ii) Executive Agencies of his Department; (iii) NDPBs of his Department; and (iv) any other bodies funded by his Department; and (b) how much has been spent on each card in the financial year ended 31 March 2002. (AQW 2952/01)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr McGimpsey): My Department has two credit cards in use. These are held by the Permanent Secretary, and my Private Secretary.

During the financial year ended 31 March 2002, the total amount charged to each card was as follows:

Permanent Secretary:	£3,231.78
Private Secretary to the Minister:	£7,334.23
Total	£10,566.01

There are no other public body credit cards used by my Department, including executive agencies, non-departmental public bodies, cross-border bodies, and other funded bodies.

Department's Estate

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail those parts of his Department's estate not used for departmental or related ancillary purposes.
(AQW 2995/01)

Mr McGimpsey: The Department currently has its headquarters within the Interpoint building in central Belfast. The Accommodation and Construction Division of the Department of Finance and Personnel is responsible for this building and will respond in respect of Interpoint.

DCAL has responsibility for the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland at Balmoral Avenue, Belfast, the Ordnance Survey of Northern Ireland at Stranmillis Road, Belfast, and three Inland Waterways and Inland Fisheries properties at Bushmills, Movannagher Fish Farm in Kilrea and Riversdale in Co Fermanagh, and I confirm that all parts of my Department's estate are used purely for departmental or related ancillary purposes.

Youth Development Programme

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail (a) the budget available to deliver the first year of the £1.6 million Youth Development Programme being administered by the Sports Council for Northern Ireland; (b) the actual budget spend in the first year; (c) any underspend; and (d) how this underspend was allocated.[R]
(AQW 3033/01)

Mr McGimpsey: The total budget available in the first year of the youth development programme (January - March 2002) was £100,000. The actual budget spent was £56,675 and this was used for four main purposes:

- to appoint a development officer at the Sports Council to plan and administer the scheme;
- to help sustain existing high quality youth and community football schemes already in operation in Northern Ireland in the short term;
- to ensure that the Irish Football Association, Irish Football League and senior clubs receive guidance and direction on the long-term management and delivery of successful youth and community football development programmes and;
- to ensure that essential equipment is accessible to youth and community football development centres in Northern Ireland as soon as they are established.

The Sports Council plans to carry over the remaining balance of £43,325 from year 1 into year 2 (April 2002 - March 2003) so that sufficient funding will be available to meet the long-term administration and delivery costs of the scheme which is currently being developed in conjunction with the Irish Football Association.

Youth Development: Sports Council for Northern Ireland

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what assessment can he make in relation to the £1.6 million Youth Development 3-year programme being administered by the Sports Council for Northern Ireland.[R]
(AQW 3034/01)

Mr McGimpsey: I regard the youth football development programme being administered by the Sports Council as an important means of addressing the sporting, health and educational needs of young people and local communities across Northern Ireland. I also believe that the programme, now being established, will contribute significantly to improving the image of football in Northern Ireland and to the development of the sport as a whole, both of which are key objectives identified within the Soccer Strategy process.

The success of the scheme, however, depends very much on the quality of the coaching and community programmes that will be provided at grass roots level, and the extent to which they genuinely reflect community needs. To this end, I would expect that the programme, including any application process, will be as open as possible so that resources are ultimately channelled to those best placed to deliver the most effective results on the ground.

Soccer Strategy

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what assessment can he make in relation to discussions taking place between the Irish Football League and the Irish Football Association in relation to the Soccer Strategy document and the future administration of soccer.[R]
(AQW 3036/01)

Mr McGimpsey: Following my Department's publication of the Advisory Panel's report, the IFA and IFL formed a joint group to discuss how matters might be taken forward in the light of the Advisory Panel's recommendations, particularly those in relation to the governance of football, including the structure and management of the Irish League. More recently, my Department has engaged the services of a consultant to facilitate the group's discussions. I am aware that the group has recently presented proposals to its respective constituent bodies and is currently awaiting responses to these before moving on to finalising a more detailed plan. It would be prudent on my part to await this plan before making any comment or assessment.

Equality Impact Assessment

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what is the criteria used to determine which groups or individuals are consulted as part of the equality impact assessment of any new proposals. (AQW 3045/01)

Mr McGimpsey: The Department's equality scheme lists at annex D the groups and individuals that will be consulted as part of any equality impact assessment. This list was compiled using the criteria determined by the Equality Commission's guidance, approved by a former Secretary of State, on the implementation of the statutory duties, which states: "Consultation must be carried out with relevant interest groups as well as the Equality Commission, other public bodies, voluntary, community, trade union and other groups with a legitimate interest in the matter".

The Department is committed to ensuring that consultation is effective, inclusive and meaningful. The consultation process has difficulties for both those consulting and those consulted. The Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister, in conjunction with Departments, will be exploring how to improve the consultation process. It is hoped to involve the Equality Commission together with the voluntary and community sector in this quest to better the consultation process.

European Charter

Mr Adams asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 2621/01, to make available the policy guidance for the implementation of Part III of the Council of Europe Charter for Regional or Minority Languages. (AQW 3070/01)

Mr McGimpsey: As indicated in my reply to AQW 2621/01 the Charter Group is currently finalising central policy guidance on implementing the European Charter. It had been intended to submit the draft policy guidance to the Executive meeting on 16 May 2002 for approval. Unfortunately, this timetable has now slipped. It will be a matter for the Executive to decide what circulation to give to the policy document.

European Charter

Mr Adams asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 2621/01, to make available an overall position paper on the implementation of Part III of the Council of Europe Charter for Regional or Minority Languages by each Government Department. (AQW 3071/01)

Mr McGimpsey: My responses to AQW 2621/01 and AQW 3070/01 explain the process and time scale for providing a paper to the Executive explaining the action which the devolved administration has in hand to meet UK commitments in relation to the European Charter.

As indicated, it is a matter for the Executive to inform the Foreign Secretary on how the Charter is being implemented by the devolved administration. In the circumstances you will appreciate that it would not be appropriate to make an overall position paper available before the Executive has had the opportunity to inform the Foreign Secretary.

Charter Group

Mr Adams asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure when was the Interdepartmental Charter Group to co-ordinate implementation of Part III of the Council of Europe Charter for Regional or Minority Languages established. (AQW 3072/01)

Mr McGimpsey: The Interdepartmental Charter Group held its inaugural meeting on 8 February 2001.

Navan Centre

Mrs Nelis asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what recent steps have been undertaken to ensure that the Navan Centre is re-opened; and to make a statement. (AQO 1245/01)

Mr McGimpsey: I share the Member's desire to see the Navan Centre reopened as soon as possible, and my Department has been working with the trustees and other interested parties to secure that outcome.

In order to determine if the Centre has a viable future, my Department is supporting the preparation of a business plan that will show how the facility might operate in the future. In addition, we are meeting the Centre's security and maintenance costs for a limited period to defer it going into liquidation.

My Department remains committed to seeing the Navan Centre reopened and continues to do what it can to achieve this.

Guillaume d'Orange

Dr Adamson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if there are any plans to promote our shared European heritage in relation to the early medieval epics of Guillaume D'Orange and the Early Irish Church. (AQO 1220/01)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department is unaware of any plans to promote our shared European heritage in relation to either the medieval epics of Guillaume d'Orange or the early Irish church.

Consultation Documents

Mr Close asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the cost of producing documents for consultation over the last 3 years, including preparation, printing, distribution and all ancillary costs.

(AQO 1212/01)

Mr McGimpsey: Since December 1999, my Department has issued 6 documents for public consultation.

The quantifiable costs relating to the preparation, printing, and distribution of these documents over the period is just under £64,000.

This figure excludes staff costs that cannot be separately identified.

Lottery Funds for Capital Sports Development

Mr McGrady asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what measures will be taken to ensure the continuation of Lottery Funds for Capital Sports Development.

(AQO 1242/01)

Mr McGimpsey: The National Lottery is a reserved matter under the functional responsibility of the Department of Culture, Media and Sport (DCMS). The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure acts as agent of DCMS in relation to the receipt and distribution of the proceeds of the National Lottery by the Sports Council.

Decisions on the allocation of the Sports Lottery fund are a matter for the Sports Council based on recommendations from its Lottery Committee. Such decisions are also made against set criteria drawn up by the Council having regard to Policy Directions issued to it by my Department on behalf of DCMS. Funding decisions by the Sports Council are made independently of myself and my Department and I do not seek any input to the process before decisions are made. My role and my Department's role is in agreeing the strategic context for such decision making whether it be in respect of capital or recurrent grant.

Angling

Mr J Wilson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail (a) his present and proposed financial commitment to angling; and (b) the extent of Peace and Reconciliation funding that will be available for angling development over the next 4 years. [R]

(AQO 1218/01)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department currently spends around £440k per annum on running the Public Angling Estate. This is used to maintain and improve existing angling facilities, develop new facilities and also to stock and bailiff the Department's waters. I have recently obtained funding to employ four additional industrial staff, which will speed up the maintenance programme. I have also submitted a bid to the Executive Programme Infrastructure Fund for £1.5m to upgrade and improve the Public Angling Estate.

Furthermore, to encourage anglers, I have not increased the license fees or permit charges for this year's angling season and concessionary licence fees have been introduced for disabled anglers.

I have also obtained £1.5m from Executive Programme Funds to buyout the Commercial Salmon Nets and while this is primarily a conservation measure to improve salmon stocks, it should also assist angling.

The Department continues to commit funds to the salmon hatchery at Bushmills where angling clubs can bring brood fish from their rivers for rearing of eggs and fry which are then returned to their native river to improve the stock of fish.

The Department has also been successful in obtaining approximately £5m over the next 4 years for a Water Based Tourism Measure under Peace II which will be used for Angling Development and Water Recreation Projects. I cannot be precise about what share of this will be available for angling as that will depend on the quality of the applications submitted.

Minority Languages

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the measures he is taking, consistent with the Good Friday Agreement, to implement Article 12 of the European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages.

(AQO 1211/01)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department through the North South Language Body, the Arts Council, Iomairt Cholm Cille (ICC), Museums and Galleries, and the Education and Library Boards supports a range of measures. These measures contribute to promoting tolerance in relation to linguistic diversity, are in accordance with the Belfast Agreement and meet commitments in respect of culture under Article 12 of the European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages.

They include Arts Councils grant support programmes which have assisted the development of facilities and artistic programmes; Foras na Gaeilge funding for Irish language culture and arts as detailed in its Business Plan; cultural activities organised and funded by ICC, and Irish language collections in libraries.

Sign Language

Ms Lewsley asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to give an update on developments in the recognition and promotion of sign language.

(AQO 1219/01)

Mr McGimpsey: I refer to your Assembly Question (AQO 1219/01) and to my written response of 19 March 2002 to your Assembly Question (AQO 1057/01). Since I wrote officials in my Department have organised a preliminary meeting with the Royal National Institute for the Deaf for 29 April 2002. The intention is to explore terms of reference for the Working Group and begin to draw up a work programme.

Derry City Council

Mrs Courtney asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he has any plans to give a block grant to Derry City Council in order that it can re-distribute the grant to Arts projects. (AQO 1221/01)

Mr McGimpsey: I do not have any plans to give a block grant to Derry City Council for distribution to arts projects. Funding for arts projects is made available through the Arts Council of Northern Ireland and it is the responsibility of the sponsors of each project to make application under the Arts Council's programmes.

Arts projects can also access funding from their local District or Borough Council.

Queen's Parade Development

Mrs E Bell asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to give an update on the provision of a new public library for Bangor in light of the delay in the Queen's Parade Development. (AQO 1202/01)

Mr McGimpsey: When you asked in March 2001 about library provision in Bangor, I reported that exploratory discussions had taken place between the South Eastern Education and Library Board, North Down Borough Council and the developers of the Queen's Parade site about the possible inclusion of library facilities in the development. Since then the developer has made no further approaches to the Board on this matter.

However, the Board is currently finalising an economic appraisal, which will set out the various options for library provision in Bangor including the seafront development, upgrading the existing Carnegie Library on the Hamilton Road and building a new library on a greenfield site. The appraisal is expected to be completed shortly.

EDUCATION

Glastry College, Ballyhalbert

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) the commencement date; and (ii) the completion date for the new canteen at Glastry High School, Ballyhalbert. (AQW 2969/01)

The Minister of Education (Mr M McGuinness): School meals accommodation at Glastry College is a matter for the South-Eastern Education and Library

Board in the first instance. I understand from the Board that its minor capital works budget for this financial year is fully committed and that the upgrade of school meals provision at Glastry is on a list of projects which will have priority next year.

Truancy

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education to outline (a) if he is aware of the anti-truancy schemes in the Republic of Ireland and the rest of the UK; and (b) if he is willing to undertake an investigation into such schemes in relation to formulating a truancy policy in Northern Ireland. (AQW 3020/01)

Mr M McGuinness: My Department does have a Public Service Agreement target to reduce the number of pupils who are persistent non-attenders at school. Action to achieve the target includes developing good practice materials for the primary sector in promoting regular attendance and in early referral of pupils whose attendance patterns give cause for concern. This work will be informed by drawing on the experience of schools here, in the Republic of Ireland and the UK on effective interventions.

Truancy

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education what steps he will take to implement an innovative scheme to build upon existing policies to help prevent truancy in schools, specifically in the Primary School sector. (AQW 3021/01)

Mr M McGuinness: My Department does have a Public Service Agreement target to reduce the number of pupils who are persistent non-attenders at school. Action to achieve the target includes developing good practice materials for the primary sector in promoting regular attendance and in early referral of pupils whose attendance patterns give cause for concern. This work will be informed by drawing on the experience of schools here, in the Republic of Ireland and the UK on effective interventions.

Arts and Culture in Schools

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Education what steps are being taken to promote the arts and culture in schools. (AQW 3038/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The current curriculum allows young people to be taught about the arts and culture through the programmes of study for Art and Design, Music, Drama, Design and Technology, English and Physical Education, and also through the cross-curricular themes of Cultural Heritage and Education for Mutual Understanding.

The Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) is currently undertaking a review of the curriculum here. CCEA's proposals for both primary and post-primary education include curriculum areas covering Creative and Expressive Development which are designed to give children greater access to, and to enhance the status of, arts and culture within the curriculum.

In addition to providing a number of syllabuses for GCSE, AS and A level examinations that focus on the arts and culture, CCEA is also involved in a number of competitions and events which all help to promote and celebrate arts and culture among young people here.

Admissions Criteria

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Education if his Department or Education Board can influence or alter admissions criteria for P1 classes set by the Board of Governors of individual Primary Schools.

(AQW 3042/01)

Mr M McGuinness: Responsibility for drawing up admissions criteria for P1 classes are a matter for the Board of Governors of each primary school but are subject to regulations set by my Department. The regulations specify matters to be included, or not included, in the criteria. My Department also provides advice to schools on issues related to admissions criteria.

Financial Assistance: Criteria

Mr McClarty asked the Minister of Education to outline the criteria for financial assistance for uniformed youth organisations in the Western Education and Library Board.

(AQW 3046/01)

Mr M McGuinness: All part-time voluntary organisations (including uniformed youth organisations) registering for financial assistance in the Western Education and Library Board must have suitable premises; an appropriate constitution; a child protection policy; appropriate cash handling/recording procedures; be in existence a minimum of 6 months; have a membership of 15 in the 4-25 year age range and be open a minimum of 26 weeks per year and a minimum of 2.5 hours per session (if open between 1 hour and less than 2.5 hours per session, grant is reduced by 25%).

Equality Impact Assessment

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Education what is the criteria used to determine which groups or individuals are consulted as part of the equality impact assessment of any new proposals.

(AQW 3047/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The criteria used with regard to consulting on equality impact assessments are set out in my Department's Equality Scheme as approved by the Equality Commission.

Section 4.3 of the Scheme states:

"The nature of the policy under review, and its relevance to any particular body or interest group, will determine which organisations are consulted on any given policy. The Department will consult with the Equality Commission and the Community Relations Council, voluntary, community and trade union groups and organisations representing the various categories included in Section 75 on issues relevant to the fulfilment of the Section 75 obligations. The full list of bodies is set out at Annex F. The list is not exhaustive and may be amended or augmented in light of experience. The Department will consult any representative organisation or group which has an interest in its work and/or the impact of its policies on the promotion of equality and good relations."

In any particular case, therefore, it is a matter for my Department to determine which are the most appropriate groups or individuals to consult as part of the equality impact assessment process.

School Crossing Patrol Personnel

Mrs E Bell asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of (a) vacancies there are for School Crossing Patrol personnel in each of the Education and Library Board areas; and (b) posts which have been vacant for (i) more than 3 months; (ii) more than 6 months; and (iii) more than a year.

(AQW 3073/01)

Mr M McGuinness: I have been advised by the Education and Library Boards that the numbers are as follows:

	BELB	NEELB	SEELB	SELB	WELB
School Crossing Patrol Personnel Vacancies	35	5	10	11	11
Vacant for more than 3 months	-	0	2	2	-
Vacant for more than 6 months	8	0	2	1	2
Vacant for more than a year	27	0	6	8	8

Head Teachers

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education what steps he is taking to maintain differentials for Head Teachers.

(AQW 3137/01)

Mr M McGuinness: I fully appreciate the concerns of principals and vice-principals about their salary arrangements, and the need for appropriate salary differentials to ensure that we have dedicated professionals with the qualities to lead our schools. The terms of reference for an independent inquiry into teachers' pay and conditions of service, which Teachers' Side and Management Side of the Negotiating Committee have agreed, provide for an urgent interim report on the impact of the implementation of the Pay Award 2000 on the salaries of principals and vice-principals. I announced on 23 April that I had decided to establish the inquiry, which will be looking at this matter first.

Teacher Welfare Survey

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister of Education when will the Teacher Welfare Survey undertaken by Price-waterhouseCoopers be published. (AQW 3183/01)

Mr M McGuinness: I refer to my previous answer to AQO 967/01.

EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

Information Technology

Mr McGrady asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps are being taken to allow East Down Institute of Further and Higher Education in Downpatrick to provide a wide range of Information Technology and Software Engineering courses; and to make a statement. (AQW 2931/01)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Ms Hanna): East Down Institute of Further and Higher education had 731 enrolments in Information Technology and related courses as at 1st November 2000, the latest date for which figures are available. This equated to 18% of the institute's total vocational enrolments. There are no restrictions on the number and range of part time or full time FE courses that the institute may offer or indeed the level of part-time higher education (HE) places other than the normal course approval process. Due to financial considerations the number of publicly funded full time HE places is restricted. Should additional resources become available I will review the issue of full-time HE provision on a Northern Ireland basis in line with existing priorities.

Basic Skills Innovation Fund

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to list, by District Council area, (a) all community educational projects supported by the Innovation Fund; and (b) the degree of support given to each project. (AQW 2955/01)

Ms Hanna: The Basic Skills Innovation Fund was established in 1999 as a key function of the Basic Skills Unit to promote and support innovative approaches in the delivery of basic skills to adults within the wider community. A total amount of £154,886 was awarded for the 2 year period ending 31 March 2002. A detailed breakdown of the projects and degree of support has been placed in the Assembly library for your information.

Forbairt Feirste

Mr Adams asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline the steps taken to core fund the work of Forbairt Feirste as the major provider of Irish Medium courses to school leavers. (AQW 3011/01)

Ms Hanna: Forbairt Feirste does not have Training Organisation status from the Department. Consequently funding for the academic year 01/02 has been provided through the Belfast Institute for Higher and Further Education, a recognised Training Organisation under the Jobskills programme and a partner with Forbairt Feirste in the delivery of programmes.

Irish Language Groups

Mr Adams asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to list the groups consulted as part of the review of Irish Language medium vocational, educational and training opportunities. (AQW 3012/01)

Ms Hanna: The Department has recently taken delivery of research work carried out by Gairm and will now develop a scoping paper to form the basis for consultation with interested groups. The Irish Language Groups identified in the Gairm report and others will be included in the consultation. Any policy implications arising from the review will of course be subjected to a specific consultation on equality in line with the Department's published practice.

Irish Language

Mr Adams asked the Minister for Employment and Learning when the review of Irish Language medium vocational, educational and training opportunities will be completed. (AQW 3013/01)

Ms Hanna: The Department has recently taken delivery of a research report from Gairm and will now develop a scoping paper which will form the basis of an initial consultation with interested parties. Following contributions from those interested parties I would intend making a statement on future policy development on this issue. I would expect to have that work completed before the summer recess.

Irish-Medium Education

Mr Adams asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to list the courses to be made available for young people leaving Irish-medium education and seeking further vocational, educational or training opportunities through the medium of Irish in September of this year.

(AQW 3014/01)

Ms Hanna: There are two Irish Medium Secondary Schools in Northern Ireland. There is an expectation that relatively few young people achieving the minimum school leaving age will leave school this summer and seek further vocational, educational or training opportunities. Each of those young people will receive careers education and guidance and make a determination on their choice of career development. The small demand to date for Irish Language Medium vocational education and training for school leavers poses a challenge for providers. However Springvale Training Ltd, North West Institute for Higher and Further Education and other Training Organisations have provision and support in the Irish Language.

Department's Estate

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail those parts of her Department's estate not used for departmental or related ancillary purposes.

(AQW 3022/01)

Ms Hanna: There is no part of the Departmental estate, not used for departmental or related ancillary purposes.

Building Sustainable Prosperity

Mr Adams asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail how the awards of funding under Measure 2.3 'Promoting a Labour Market Open to All' of the Programme for Building Sustainable Prosperity reflect the findings of the Noble Deprivation Index.

(AQW 3119/01)

Ms Hanna: The Department's "New TSN Action Plan for the period April 2001 – March 2003" makes specific reference to the Measures of Deprivation in Northern Ireland, also known as the Noble Indicators. The Plan states: "The central focus of DEL's responsibilities is individuals rather than areas", and "DEL will not be targeting its activities by reference to binary maps which divide Northern Ireland into New TSN and non-NTSN areas". In relation to EU Programmes specifically, the Action Plan says "Projects and actions funded under these programmes will complement and add to the Department's contribution to New TSN". There are eight Measures in Priority 2 of the Programme for Building Sustainable Prosperity, agreed by the Executive and the Commission, that reflect DEL's policy on the Measures of Deprivation in Northern Ireland. To be eligible for assistance projects had to comply with the PBSP Measure criteria which cater for NEW TSN issues.

Building Sustainable Prosperity

Mr Adams asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the total cost of consultants associated with the Economic Appraisals of Measure 2.3 'Promoting a Labour Market Open to All' of the Programme for Building Sustainable Prosperity.

(AQW 3120/01)

Ms Hanna: The Department received 54 applications for assistance under Measure 2.3 of the Programme for Building Sustainable Prosperity. 33 of the 54 applications required economic appraisals. These were undertaken by consultants appointed following a call for tender in line with Government Purchasing Agency requirements. The 33 economic appraisals cost £142,080 exc. VAT.

Building Sustainable Prosperity

Mr Adams asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the process by which applications were assessed for Measure 2.3 'Promoting a Labour Market Open to All' of the Programme for Building Sustainable Prosperity.

(AQW 3121/01)

Ms Hanna: The detailed application forms for the Programme for Building Sustainable Prosperity, PBSP, helped to establish eligibility for the European Social Fund, ESF, compliance with Section 75 requirements as well as containing specific scoring questions. The applicants were told the scoring questions and their respective marks. The scoring questions included ones which asked the applicants to identify why the project is needed, who the project is for and how it would fit the objectives of the PBSP and the overarching Community Support Framework for Northern Ireland. Once eligibility for ESF and compliance with Section 75 had been established selection was carried out. For individual Measures selection panels, of two officials and an independent non civil servant, scored only the answers provided for the scoring questions. On this competitive basis applications were ranked on the basis of their total scores.

TSN Action Plan

Mr Adams asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail how her Department's TSN Action Plan reflects the findings of the Noble Deprivation Index.

(AQW 3122/01)

Ms Hanna: As outlined in my Department's New TSN Action Plan (April 2001 to March 2003, copy available in the Assembly Library) the Central focus of DEL's responsibilities is individuals rather than areas. For example, labour market interventions such as the New Deals and Jobskills Access are designed to meet the needs of specific groups of people wherever they live. Similarly, from the perspective of New TSN, further and higher education are primarily about meeting the needs and aspirations of individuals. DEL, therefore, targets its activities according to the needs of individuals rather than by reference to binary maps which divide Northern Ireland into New TSN and non-TSN areas.

Queen's University Belfast: Students

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail (a) the total number of students registered at Queen's University Belfast for the academic year 2001-02; (b) the number who are classed as mature; and (c) the number who are in their first year of undergraduate study (freshers). (AQW 3153/01)

Ms Hanna:

(a) There are 19,931 students enrolled at Queen's University Belfast for the 2001/02 academic year.

(b) Mature students are defined as those aged 25 years and over, or alternatively those aged 21 years and over.

Of the 19,931 students enrolled at QUB for the 2001/02 academic year, 4,932 were aged between 21 and 24 years inclusive and 6,366 were aged 25 years and over.

(c) Of the 19,931 students enrolled at QUB for the 2001/02 academic year, 6,486 students were in their first year of undergraduate study, of which 606 are aged between 21 and 24 years inclusive and 2,028 are aged 25 years and over.

ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

Invest NI

Mr Gibson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what measures he intends to take to assist entrepreneurs into sustainable business.

(AQW 2907/01)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Sir Reg Empey): [holding answer 25 April 2002]: Invest NI was established on 1 April 2002. The Keynote for Invest NI's activities will be innovation and entrepreneurship. A key element of this approach has been the establishment of a new Entrepreneurship and Start-Up Team within Invest Northern Ireland with responsibility for implementing the Northern Ireland Business Birth Rate Strategy. The Strategy aims to increase the number of people who aspire to run their own business and then progress from thought to action, and to increase and widen the population base for potential business starts, with specific attention to high-growth/technology based ideas and under-represented groups.

Credit Cards

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (a) the number of credit cards in use in (i) his Department; (ii) Executive Agencies of his Department; (iii) NDPBs of his Department; and (iv) any other bodies funded by his Department; and (b) how much has been spent on each card in the financial year ended 31 March 2002. (AQW 2956/01)

Sir Reg Empey:

(a) There are (i) no Departmental credit cards in use in my Department. There are however, two Government Procurement Cards. (ii) My Department does not have any Executive Agencies. (iii) My Department's NDPB's currently hold two credit cards, one in the former Local Enterprise Development Unit (LEDU) and one within the Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB). (iv) InterTradeIreland which is one third funded by my Department and two thirds funded by the Department of Enterprise Trade and Employment ROI, has one credit card.

(b) In the financial year 2001/2002 expenditure on the LEDU card was £92,126.33. NITB had one card in 2001/2002 with spend of £891.39. A second card, issued by the British Tourist Authority to the New York NITB office manager incurred spend of £12,680.68 – this card was cancelled in November 2001. Inter-TradeIreland card totalled £4,229.14. Expenditure on the two Government Procurement Cards was, card one £150,799.44 and card two £7,641.32.

NVQ Level 4

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline, by District Council area, the proportion of the working age population who have a qualification below NVQ Level 4. (AQW 2970/01)

Sir Reg Empey: The latest figures available detailing the proportion of the working age population who have a qualification below NVQ level 4 by District Council Area are included in Table 1 overleaf.

TABLE 1 - QUALIFICATION LEVELS OF PERSONS OF WORKING AGE AT 2000 BY DISTRICT COUNCIL AREA (DCA)

* Too small for a reliable estimate, as below minimum quotation level of 6,000 cases.

Below NVQ level 4 comprises NVQ levels 1, 2 and 3.

NVQ levels 1,2, and 3 are equivalent to A level, AS level, GCSE, Trade Apprenticeships and other vocational qualifications.

Department's Estate

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail those parts of his Department's estate not used for departmental or related ancillary purposes. (AQW 2999/01)

Sir Reg Empey: My Department's estate has, since the former Industrial Research and Technology Unit site in Lisburn moved to Invest NI, been reduced to the Trading Standards Service in Newtownbreda. I can confirm that this property is used only for departmental business.

NIE Critical Care List

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail, by constituency, the number of people currently on the NIE Critical Care List. (AQW 3010/01)

Sir Reg Empey: A total of 2,820 NIE customers are currently on the company's Critical Care Register

- the information is routinely held by NIE by Customer Service Centre area. An analysis by valid postcodes indicates that a total of 2,571 Critical Care registrants can be identified by Parliamentary Constituency, as listed in the following Table:

Parliamentary Constituency	Number of Critical Care Registrants
Belfast East	108
Belfast North	134
Belfast South	94
Belfast West	119
East Antrim	199
East Londonderry	130
Fermanagh and South Tyrone	114
Foyle	144
Lagan Valley	134
Mid Ulster	163
Newry and Armagh	156
North Antrim	173
North Down	133
South Antrim	167
South Down	187
Strangford	139
Upper Bann	144
West Tyrone	133
Total	2,571

The balance of 249 Critical Care registrants cannot be identified by Parliamentary Constituency due either to postcodes which could not be matched during analysis (53) or non-availability of postcodes (196).

IDB Investments in East Londonderry

Mr McClarty asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail all IDB lead investments in East Londonderry in each of the last 3 years. (AQW 3049/01)

Sir Reg Empey: Selective Financial Assistance offered by IDB to client companies in East Londonderry for the years 1998/1999, 1999/2000 and 2000/2001 is shown in the following extract from table 3.4 of IDB's Annual Report for 2000/01. Equivalent data for 2001/2002 is in the process of being compiled and will be available later in 2002.

East Londonderry P.C.	1998/1999	1999/2000	2000/2001
IDB Selective Financial Assistance	£3,200,000	£9,500,000	£7,200,000

Investments in East Londonderry

Mr McClarty asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if he will make it his policy to increase the number of business start-ups and encourage further inward investment in the East Londonderry constituency. (AQW 3050/01)

Sir Reg Empey: Through Invest Northern Ireland, my Department will implement the Northern Ireland Business Birth Rate Strategy incorporating a range of initiatives, which will assist many new entrepreneurs into sustainable businesses thus increasing the number of business starts in Northern Ireland, including the East Londonderry constituency.

The Northern Ireland Business Start Programme, funded by Invest NI, Councils and EU has recently been relaunched. The programme provides support to new locally focused businesses and is delivered in East Londonderry by Coleraine Enterprise Agency.

Invest NI will continue to market Northern Ireland as an investment location. We will encourage perspective investors to visit all areas of Northern Ireland including East Londonderry and promote the capabilities of all our educational establishments including the UU at Coleraine and its science park at major exhibitions and conferences.

Invest NI, the University of Ulster and the Councils of Coleraine and Derry are exploring the possibility of marketing the North West as a Science Park Region.

Equality Commission Guidance

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what is the criteria used to determine which groups or individuals are consulted as part of the equality impact assessment of any new proposals. (AQW 3051/01)

Sir Reg Empey: The criteria used to determine who is consulted is that contained in the Equality Commission's guidance, approved by a former Secretary of State, on the implementation of the statutory duties and states, "Consultation must be carried out with relevant interest groups as well as the Equality Commission, other public bodies, voluntary, community, trade union and other groups with a legitimate interest in the matter ...". The DETI Equality Scheme notes that in consulting on any matter to which this Scheme relates, the Department will write to bodies listed within the Scheme's consultation list. DETI is committed to ensuring that consultation is effective, inclusive and as meaningful as possible and is working with OFM/DFM and relevant organisations in this regard.

Electronic Communications

Mr Gibson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to make a statement on the progress of reaching his target for electronic communications between the public and Government Departments. (AQW 3141/01)

Sir Reg Empey: Electronic communication and service delivery is not just about using IT to deliver existing services but rather to take a fundamental look at what is being delivered, how it is being delivered and what improvements could be made having considered the service from the customers viewpoint. Ultimately e-Business will improve communication, deliver services with wider access, faster and more cost effectively to the public.

We are applying this approach to Companies Registry where a project is underway which will result in transforming the business from a paper-based facility into an electronic registry with the capacity to support the search, registration, filing and updating and regulation of registered documents using 'e' capabilities. A public consultation on the Companies Registry e-Business project will issue in May 2002 and will include a section dealing with equality issues. The project will act as the 'e' exemplar for DETI and will be used to develop a generic framework for implementing change across DETI.

In addition we have developed an Internet presence providing information directly to the public and have established an Editorial Board to ensure that DETI's web sites are developed and maintained with useful and relevant information. We have taken the lead in running a pilot for Electronic Records and Document Management and have published the lessons learned to the rest of the NICS. Implementation of EDRMs is a key plank in DETI's plans to bring structure to information holdings and facilitate the access to information that is guaranteed by the Freedom of Information Bill.

DETI has developed an IT Strategy which ensures that the same technology underpins multiple delivery channels so that solutions can be tested in-house before unleashing on the public. We have consolidated and upgraded our infrastructure, had it successfully security accredited and have trained staff in using the new facilities. In addition we have structured ourselves around the integration of business and technical expertise to create the synergy necessary to make a difference through electronic service delivery.

In summary we are making steady progress with our plans for electronic service delivery. Our approach is very much centred on ensuring that the services and information we provide are designed to meet customer needs and in so doing we expect to meet the targets set.

ENVIRONMENT

Credit Cards

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (a) the number of credit cards in use in (i) his Department; (ii) Executive Agencies of his Department;

(iii) NDPBs of his Department; and (iv) any other bodies funded by his Department; and (b) how much has been spent on each card in the financial year ended 31 March 2002. (AQW 2984/01)

The Minister of the Environment (Mr Nesbitt):

- (a) The number of credit cards in use is as follows:
- (i) other than those in use in Executive Agencies of my Department, the Private Office has one card;
 - (ii) the Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) has one Government Procurement Card in use and Driver and Vehicle Licensing Northern Ireland (DVLNI) has three business credit cards in use;
 - (iii) none; and
 - (iv) this information is not available.
- (b) Expenditure incurred on the cards for the financial year ended 31 March 2002 is as follows:

Private Office	£960.85
EHS	£4331.59
DVLNI	Card 1 £6151.36
	Card 2 £1886.27
	Card 3 £962.44
Total	£14292.51

Testing Water Purity

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment what steps he is taking to share information with other European countries in respect of our methods to test water purity. (AQW 3001/01)

Mr Nesbitt: My Department is taking a number of steps to ensure that information on water testing is shared with European colleagues. The Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) is involved in a wide range of quality assurance schemes in the chemical analysis of marine and estuarine waters, microbiology, and, marine and fresh-water biology. These often have a significant European dimension.

For example, in the area of environmental water quality analysis, EHS participates in the Quality Assurance in Marine Environmental Monitoring in Europe (QUASIMEME) scheme. QUASIMEME regularly organises conferences and technical workshops in particular areas of analysis, which enable information to be shared between participating countries.

On behalf of the UK, EHS supports the technical secretariat of the European Standards Committee working group, (CEN/TC 230 WG 2), which deals with the standardisation of biological and ecological assessment methods. The parent committee, (CEN/TC 230 – Water Analysis) has responsibility for the European standardisation of relevant methods, which automatically become the EU reference methods as required in the EC Water Framework Directive.

Further to the work of the European Standards Committee, a European wide expert network group of over 100 scientists, including EHS representatives, corresponds on specific ecological issues relevant to EU legislation.

EHS is also actively collaborating with Scandinavian scientists in developing ecological assessment methodologies in support of the EC Water Framework Directive.

Department's Estate

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of the Environment to detail those parts of his Department's estate not used for departmental or related ancillary purposes.

(AQW 3023/01)

Mr Nesbitt: There are no parts of the Department's estate not used for departmental or related ancillary purposes.

Meeting: County Hall, Coleraine

Mr McClarty asked the Minister of the Environment to make a statement on the outcome of the meeting held on 11 April in County Hall, Coleraine between officials of the Departments of the Environment and Employment and Learning, and authorities from the University of Ulster at Coleraine. (AQW 3052/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The meeting held on 11 April 2002, which was also attended by a representative from the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, was essentially a fact-finding exercise.

There was an open and frank discussion on the roles of the various interested parties; the relevant policies and current programmes; the issues under consideration, and a general synopsis of the current position.

The meeting concluded with a number of those present being tasked to collate the information they hold and, subject to the provisions of the Data Protection Act, to forward it to the other interested parties in order that an overall picture can be formed. No further meeting is proposed at this stage.

I have asked officials from my Department to keep you informed of the findings of the 'group' and also any developments that may arise out of their deliberations.

Equality Impact Assessment

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of the Environment what is the criteria used to determine which groups or individuals are consulted as part of the equality impact assessment of any new proposals. (AQW 3053/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The Department determines who is to be consulted as part of each equality impact assessment in accordance with the advice in the Equality Commission's Guide to the Statutory Duties. The Department's Equality Scheme gives officials discretion to consult relevant organisations drawn from the consultation list in the Scheme. Consultation lists are prepared for each equality impact assessment on an individual basis drawing from the Equality Scheme consultation list.

The Department is committed to ensuring that consultation is effective, inclusive and as meaningful as possible. We are continually looking at ways to improve our methods of consultation, and have discussed this with representatives of the main Section 75 Groups.

Carrickfergus Castle

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of the Environment why the Environment and Heritage Service does not promote Carrickfergus Castle through the Causeway Coast and Glens Regional Tourism Organisation. [R/]
(AQW 3090/01)

Mr Nesbitt: Further to AQW 2853/00 answered on 18 May 2001, I regret that, because of other pressures, the Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) of my Department was not able to complete during 2001/2 the marketing strategy which, among other things, would have considered the opportunities to promote Carrickfergus Castle.

However, subject to the recruitment of a marketing officer EHS expects to prepare during the current financial year a marketing strategy to promote all its sites and properties.

In developing this strategy, EHS will consider the opportunities for using the Causeway Coast and Glens Regional Tourism Organisation, and similar bodies, to promote Carrickfergus Castle.

Leylandii Trees

Dr Birnie asked the Minister of the Environment to state if it is his intention to introduce legislation to restrict the planting of leylandii trees in residential areas.
(AQW 3124/01)

Mr Nesbitt: I have no plans at present to introduce legislation to restrict the planting of leylandii trees in residential areas.

However, my officials will continue to monitor the position, and consider the need for, and most appropriate means of dealing with leylandii, and other problem trees and hedges.

Ards and Down Area Plan

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment to outline (a) the timescale for publishing the draft Ards and Down Area Plan; and (b) why the launch of the Plan has been delayed until September 2002. (AQW 3134/01)

Mr Nesbitt:

(a) I anticipate that the draft plan will be published during August 2002.

The Ards and Down Area Plan 2015 is the first to be prepared in the context of the Regional Development Strategy (RDS), which was formulated in September 2001.

The Strategic Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1999 requires the Plan to be "consistent with" the RDS. The requirement of consistency has necessitated extensive discussions and additional work to ensure that the Plan will be consistent with all the approaches to sustainable development required by the Strategy.

The Department for Regional Development (DRD) is currently consulting on changes to the Strategic Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1999 to amend the obligation of consistency to one in which plans are required to be "in general conformity" with the RDS.

It is proposed to introduce a formal procedure whereby DRD will issue a 'statement of conformity', to clarify that a development plan conforms with the RDS at draft plan, and at final adoption stage.

Preparation of the Draft Plan Written Statement and supporting technical documentation for the Ards and Down Area Plan is well advanced. Clearance on 'consistency' will require consultations with the Department for Regional Development on the completed draft prior to publication.

(b) As a result of these considerations Planning Service now expects to publish the draft Plan in August 2002.

Cheston Street/Governor's Place, Carrickfergus

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of the Environment what progress has been made regarding Planning Application V2000/0359 at Cheston Street/ Governor's Place, Carrickfergus.

Mr Nesbitt: The application, seeking approval for the demolition of properties at 5-13 Cheston St and 4,5 & 7 Governor's Place, Carrickfergus, the retention of the façade of a listed building at 4 Governor's Place, and the erection of 26 apartments with associated on site parking, was received on 22 December 2000. There are two other concurrent applications for Listed Building Consent and Conservation Area Consent in respect of the development.

Contextual drawings were requested by the Department to ensure a proper assessment of the proposal. After a series of discussions and meetings with the applicant, agent, and officials from the Construction Service and Environment and Heritage Service, it was determined that the Listed Building could be retained without wholesale demolition.

The applicant subsequently agreed at a site meeting on 5 February 2002 to withdraw the application for demolition of the Listed Building, and to submit a fresh application based on retaining the majority of the property.

The current position is that revised sketch proposals have been received, and these have been circulated to consultees for appraisal. A meeting has been arranged between Planning officials and the applicant to discuss the revisions on 9th May 2002.

Land Prices: ASSI

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of the Environment what information is available on the effect on agricultural land prices pursuant to an area being declared of special scientific interest; and to make a statement.

(AQW 3275/01)

Mr Nesbitt: I am not aware of any information on agricultural land values being directly affected as a consequence of the declaration of Areas of Special Scientific Interest. Agricultural land values are known to react to trends and factors within the industry and I am advised by the Valuation and Lands Agency of the Department of Finance and Personnel, that it is not possible to identify the specific effects of an ASSI declaration. ASSIs are declared under Article 24 of the Nature Conservation and Amenity Lands (NI) Order 1985. Article 26 provides for compensation to be paid to any person who shows that the value of his/her estate within the ASSI is less than it would have been if the declaration had not been made. There have been no successful claims to the Department under this Article since the legislation came into operation.

Owners and occupiers of agricultural land within an ASSI may receive payments for income foregone if they chose to enter into a management agreement with the Department. 250 management agreements, many of them in respect of agricultural land, have been successfully negotiated to date.

FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

NICS

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the total number of civil servants in the NI Civil Service in each of the last 10 years. (AQW 2961/01)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Dr Farren):

The total number of civil servants in the NI Civil Service on the 1st July in each of the last ten years i.e. 1992 – 2001, is shown in the table below.

Year	Non-Industrial	Industrial	Total
1992	21591	4453	26044
1993	22111	4227	26338
1994	21609	3838	25447
1995	21208	3526	24734
1996	21369	3421	24790
1997	21228	3223	24451
1998	21146	3047	24193
1999	21513	2889	24402
2000	21947	2866	24813
2001	22953	2825	25778

The figures above include members of the NICS working in the 11 Northern Ireland Ministerial Departments, serving abroad, and on secondment to other organisations.

They do not include staff in - the NIO, NIO Prisons Admin, PSNI (Civilian Staff), Policing Board, NI Audit Office, NI Assembly; or staff on Career Breaks.

NICS: People Recruited

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of people recruited to the NI Civil Service in each of the last 10 years. (AQW 2962/01)

Dr Farren: The information requested is as follows:

1991	1575
1992/93	1650
1993/94	538
1994/95	415
1995/96	711
1996/98	1757
1998/99	2001
1999/00	1972
2000/01	5810
2001/02	3037

Notes

(i) The 1992/93 figure covers the period 1 January 1992 to 31 March 1993. Thereafter figures refer to financial year.

(ii) Responsibility for recruitment passed from the Civil Service Commissioners to DFP on 1 December 1996. No separate figures are available for 1996/97 and 1997/98.

(iii) 2000/01 figure includes some 3,000 temporary Census staff.

(iv) Figures exclude industrial and casual staff.

NICS: Graduate Entry Level

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the rates of pay for graduate entry level to the NI Civil Service in each of the last 10 years.

(AQW 2963/01)

Dr Farren: The information is as follows:

Year	Competition	Entry Salary Range
1992	Administrative Trainee Scheme	£12,640 - £14,701
1993	Administrative Trainee Scheme	£12,640 - £23,263*
1994	Administrative Trainee Scheme	£13,144 - £24,139
1995	Administrative Trainee Scheme	£13,396 - £24,589

* Pay scales for all the grades in the scheme were amalgamated in this year into one continuous pay scale, covering the full range of grades within the administrative scheme that graduates would progress to, following assimilation and promotion etc.

Year	Competition	Entry Salary Range
1996	Management Trainee Scheme	£13,324 - £15,678
1997	Management Trainee Scheme	£13,324 - £15,839
1998	Management Trainee Scheme	£13,737 - £16,330
1999	Management Trainee Scheme	£14,019 - £16,665
2000	Management Trainee Scheme	£14,601 - £17,358
2001	Graduate Recruitment Scheme	£17,714 - £25,034

NICS: Graduate Entry Level

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of civil servants recruited into the NI Civil Service at graduate entry level in each of the last 10 years.

(AQW 2964/01)

Dr Farren: The information is as follows:

1991/92	3
1992/93	4
1996/97	20
1999/00	15
2001/02	46

Information relates to administrative grades: information on graduate recruitment to other grades is not held.

Credit Cards

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (a) the number of credit cards in use in (i) his Department; (ii) Executive Agencies of his Department; (iii) NDPBs of his Department; and (iv) any other bodies funded by his Department; and (b) how much has been spent on each card in the financial year ended 31 March 2002.

(AQW 2980/01)

Dr Farren: (a) The Department of Finance and Personnel, its Agencies and NDPBs had a total of 20 credit cards in use during the Financial Year ending 31 March 2002. The breakdown is as follows:

(a) The Department of Finance and Personnel, its Agencies and NDPBs had a total of 20 credit cards in use during the Financial Year ending 31 March 2002. The breakdown is as follows:

(i) 16

(ii) 3

(iii) 1

(b) The amount spent on each card during the financial year ended 31 March 2002 was as follows:

The Department
Card 1	£118.23
Cards 2-16	£4,872.83
Executive Agencies
Card 1	£1,517.39
Card 2	£437.94
Card 3	£187.80
NDPBs
Card 1	£8,294.09

Equality Impact Assessment

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what criteria is used to determine which groups or individuals are consulted as part of the equality impact assessment of any new proposals.

(AQW 3079/01)

Dr Farren: The criteria used to determine who is consulted are those contained in the Equality Commission's guidance, on the implementation of the statutory duties which states, "Consultation must be carried out with relevant interest groups as well as the Equality Commission, other public bodies, voluntary, community, trade union and other groups with a legitimate interest in the matter ...".

In addition the Department's Equality Scheme states at paragraph 4.8, "Equality impact assessments will therefore concentrate on those categories where impact has been identified. As new policies emerge within a current main policy area, any necessary equality impact assessment will, as a minimum, concentrate on those Section 75 categories where an impact has already been identified. However additional categories will be addressed as necessary".

The Department is committed to ensuring that consultation is effective, inclusive and as meaningful as possible. We are aware of the difficulties experienced by some groups in the voluntary and community sector as a result of the volume of consultation material being issued. As a consequence we have been in contact with all those on our full list of consultees and asked them to confirm that they wish to remain on it and whether there is an umbrella body that would adequately represent their interests.

Redemption of Ground Rents

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (a) the process implemented by Land Registers for the purchase of freeholds of residential properties; (b) the possible causes of delay in completing this process; and (c) any specific problems when freeholds are held by charitable institutions. (AQW 3084/01)

Dr Farren: The voluntary scheme for redemption of ground rents under the Ground Rents Act (Northern Ireland) 2001 will come into operation this summer. At that time, householders who want to secure the freehold to their properties will complete an application form obtainable from the Land Registry and return it with evidence of title, a receipt for the last payment of ground rent, and remittance of the compensation payable under the Act. At the same time the householder will give notice to the rent-owner that the compensation money will be obtainable from the Land Registry. When the Land Registry is satisfied that all the requisite information has been accurately supplied, it will issue a 'certificate of redemption' which will enable the householder to have his or her interest registered as freehold.

The timescale for the Land Registry's part in this process will to some extent depend on take-up, but we hope it will be possible to complete a normal case within a few weeks.

Charitable trusts which receive ground rents will be affected by the Act in the same way as other landowners.

A guidance booklet on applications under the Act will be published nearer its implementation. In the meantime, an Office of Law Reform factsheet on the Act is available at <http://www.olrni.gov.uk/home.htm>

Radon-Affected Areas

Mr Maskey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if he raised the issue of designated radon-affected areas with his counterpart in the Irish Government, and, if so, are there any implications for the amended building regulations, which he now proposes. (AQW 3101/01)

Dr Farren: I have not raised the matter of radon designation with Ministers in the Republic and have no plans to do so at present. However, as my predecessor indicated in a previous written answer on this issue on 14 February 2001, regular contact does take place at official level both on radon and other environmental protection issues.

Barnett Formula Spend

Mr Attwood asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what action he is taking to close the gap between the Barnett formula spend for our health service and the funding needed to match the planned growth in health spending in England. (AQW 3289/01)

Dr Farren: In my Statement to the Assembly on 22 April following the Chancellor's Budget, I highlighted a major discrepancy between what we received via Barnett and what would be needed to match the planned growth in health spending in England.

It has come to my attention that the figures used in our Press Release, and in the Statement to the Assembly, did not reflect the full picture and were inaccurate in that they did not take account of the additions for Personal Social Services in England, which will lead to some further Barnett Consequentials over the planned period. As such, the extent of the disparity has been overstated.

Officials in Treasury, DFP, OFMDFM and DHSSPS are currently checking the details fully and full clarification will be provided as soon as possible. On behalf of my Department I owe an apology to the Assembly for the need to amend and clarify the position and will do so as soon as possible.

HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Cockles: Strangford Lough

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when will the harvesting of cockles resume on the shore of Strangford Lough. (AQW 2676/01)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Ms de Brún): Food Safety and Public Health protection in this area are matters for the Food Standards Agency (FSA). The normal criteria for allowing harvesting of cockles are two consecutive negative results ie absence of Diarrhetic Shellfish Poison toxins from samples tested at the laboratories of the Department of Agriculture and Rural Developments Veterinary Sciences Division.

Following the second negative result the FSA permitted cockle harvesting to resume in Strangford Lough on 19th April 2002.

Herceptin

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much money has been allocated for the drug 'Herceptin'. (AQW 2726/01)

Ms de Brún: Treatment using the drug 'Herceptin' may only be initiated by cancer specialists in a hospital setting. As there is no specific allocation made for hospital pharmacy, it is not possible to say how much is attributable to the prescription of this drug.

Ní fhéadann ach saineolaithe ailse tús a chur le cóireáil i suíomh otharlainne ag úsáid an druga 'Herceptin'. Mar nach bhfuil airgead ar leith tugtha do chógaisíocht otharlainne, ní féidir liom a rá an méid áirithe a thugtar leis an druga seo a ordú.

Physically and Mentally Ill: Funding

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) the amount of funding spent by each Health Trust on the provision of services for the physically and mentally ill for each of the past three years; and (b) this figure as a percentage of the total amount of funding allocated. (AQW 2815/01)

Ms de Brún: The amount of funding spent by each Health and Social Services Trust on the provision of services on the physical and sensory disability and mental health Programmes of Care for each of the past three years is shown in the following tables:

1998/1999

Acute Hospital Services: Fermanagh and Tyrone

Mr Foster asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when she intends to detail her plans for future provision of Acute Hospital Services in Enniskillen and so help alleviate fears of residents in Co Fermanagh that services at the Erne Hospital might be reduced. (AQW 2817/01)

Ms de Brún: The future provision of acute hospital services for the people of Fermanagh and Tyrone will form part of the overall package of acute hospital services being considered as part of the Acute Hospitals Review. Following discussion at the Executive, proposals on the way forward can be put out for full public consultation. It is hoped that final decisions can be taken in the course of 2002.

I have made it clear that, until long-term decisions are made, I expect every effort to be made to maintain existing services at all our acute hospitals.

Beidh soláthar seirbhísí géarotharlainne do mhuintir Fhear Manach agus Thír Eoghain sa toadhchá mar chuid den phacáiste sheirbhísí géarotharlainne a bhfuiltear ag déanamh machnaimh air mar chuid den Athbhreithniú ar Ghéarotharlanna. I ndiaidh caibidil a dhéanamh sa Choiste Feidhmiúcháin, is féidir moltaí ar an bhealach chun tosaigh a chur faoi chomhchomhairle iomlán phoiblí. Táthar ag súil cinnidh deireannacha a ghlacadh i rith 2002.

Chuir mé in iúl go soiléir go bhfuil mé ag dúil go ndéanfar gach iarracht na seirbhísí atá ann faoi láthair a choinneáil inár ngéarotharlanna go léir go dtí go nglactar cinnidh fhadtéarmacha.

Waiting Lists

Ms McWilliams asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 1162/00 and AQW 1168/00, whether the additional funding received by her Department has made a difference in waiting lists; and to make a statement. (AQW 2851/01)

Ms de Brún: There has been a reduction of almost 24% in waiting lists for occupational therapy services in the period December 2000 to December 2001. This is a result of additional funding provided to recruit an extra 20 occupational therapists, and changes in procedures arising from the recommendations of the Joint Housing Executive/DHSSPS review of Housing Adaptations Service.

Tá laghdú chóir a bheith 24% ar liostaí feithimh do sheirbhísí teiripe saothair sa tréimhse ó Nollaig 2000 go Nollaig 2001. Is toradh é seo ar mhaoiniú breise a tugadh chun 20 teiripeoir saothair breise a earcú, agus ar athruithe ar ghnáthaimh a tharla toisc moltaí comhathbhreithniú Feidhmeannas Tithíochta/SSSSP ar Sheirbhís Oiriúnuithe Tithíochta.

Hepatitis C

Ms McWilliams asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what support is currently being offered or may be offered to patient groups suffering from Hepatitis C; and to make a statement.

(AQW 2870/01)

Ms de Brún: My Department has set up a Group to draw up a strategy to deal with all aspects of the disease. Much work has been done on this, and voluntary groups and individuals with the disease have been involved.

Before finalising the strategy, officials from my Department will meet with concerned voluntary groups and individuals in June to discuss in more detail the needs of patients and patient groups e.g. counselling services, care pathways, nursing support services. Meantime individual patients with the disease are referred to a specialist who will investigate and advise on treatment regimes such as “alpha-interferon”

Bhunaigh mo Roinn Grúpa le straitéis a chumadh le déileáil le gach gné den ghalar. Tá cuid mhór oibre déanta uirthi seo, agus bhí grúpaí deonacha agus daoine a bhfuil an galar orthu páirteach ann.

Sula gcuirfear an dlaoi mhullaigh ar an straitéis, buailfidh oifigigh ó mo Roinn le grúpaí deonacha agus le daoine leasmhara aonair a bhfuil inní orthu i Meitheamh le riachtanais othar agus grúpaí othar m.sh. seirbhísí comhairle, agus cosáin chúraim agus seirbhísí tacaíochta altranais, a phlé go mion. Idir an dá linn, seoltar othair aonair a bhfuil an galar orthu chuig saíneolaí a fhiosróidh agus a thabharfaidh comhairle ar chórais chóireála amhail “alpha-interferon”.

Chiropodists

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if there is a lack of chiropodists within the Health Service and, if so, is emergency treatment only being carried out.

(AQW 2923/01)

Ms de Brún: Demand for Chiropody services currently exceeds that which can be fully provided within the existing level of resources. My Department will shortly conduct a Workforce Planning Review for Chiropody services and will make an assessment of the number of Chiropodists needed. Treatment is not restricted to emergency treatment only, however existing service providers prioritise delivery of Chiropody services to those with greatest clinical need, in order to target those most at risk. Those needs identified as non-priority are placed on waiting lists and responded to when possible.

Tá an t-éileamh ar sheirbhísí cosliachta i láthair na huaire níos mó ná mar is féidir a sholáthar go hiomlán laistigh den leibhéal acmhainní atá ann cheana. Stiúrfaidh mo Roinnse go gairid Athbhreithniú Pleanála an Fhórsa Saothair do sheirbhísí Cosliachta agus déanfaidh sí measúnú ar an líon Coslianna atá de dhíth. Níl an chóireáil teoranta do chóireáil éigeandála amháin, tugann na soláthróirí seirbhíse atá ann cheana áfach tosaíocht do sheachadadh seirbhísí Cosliachta dóibh siúd a bhfuil an riachtanas cliniciúil is mó orthu, ionas gur féidir spriocdhírú orthu sin is mó atá i mbaoil. Chiropodists

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what assessment has she made regarding (a) the current number of chiropodists employed by the Health Service compared to the population size; and (b) the numbers pursuing chiropody as a medical career.

(AQW 2924/01)

Ms de Brún:

(a) Currently there are 8.75 whole time equivalent Chiropodists employed by the HPSS per 100,000 of the population here.

- (b) The Total Number of Chiropodists here is currently 175.
- (a) I láthair na huair tá comhionann lánaimsire 8.75 de Choslianna fostaithe ag an HPSS in aghaidh gach céad míle duine den daonra anseo.
- (b) Is é an Líon Iomlán Coslianna anseo faoi láthair ná 175.

Speech Therapy

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail, by Board area, the number of pupils currently requiring speech therapy.

(AQW 2926/01)

Ms de Brún: Information on the number of children currently requiring speech therapy is not available. Information on the number of children currently awaiting assessment by Speech & Language therapists in each Health and Social Services Board is shown in the table below.

Eastern Multifund

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what resources she is taking to safeguard the jobs of staff working within the Eastern Multifund, Belvoir Park, Belfast and other former fundholding practices.

(AQW 2927/01)

Ms de Brún: The jobs of staff employed by the Eastern Multifund and by other fundholding practices to carry out fund management work will inevitably come to an end with the closure of the GP fundholding scheme. There are, however, a number of possibilities for the alternative employment of such staff.

The majority of those who have been employed by practices to manage fundholding also have other jobs within the practice and will continue to be employed by those practices after the ending of the scheme. The Eastern Multifund will also continue to employ a number of its staff for some further months in order to close down the accounts of its constituent practices.

Any members of staff who may be faced with redundancy as a result of the ending of fundholding will have access to a Staff Redeployment Unit that has been in operation for some time within the HPSS. Staff who register with the Unit will be assisted in finding alternative employment within the wider HPSS. A number of staff from the Multifund have registered with the Unit and some have already been found new jobs as a result.

Upwards of 30 new jobs will be created to support the operation of the Local Health and Social Care Groups and the process of recruiting staff to fill these vacancies will start once LHSCG Management Boards have been established. Employees of the Multifund and of former fundholding practices will of course be free to compete for these posts.

Is cinnte go gcuirfear deireadh le postanna oibrithe fostaithe ag an Ilchiste Oirthearach agus ag clinicí cistesheilbhe eile le hobair stiúradh maoinithe a dhéanamh, ag cealú na scéime cistesheilbhe Gnáthdhochtúirí. Tá roinnt féidearthachtaí eile ann áfach lena leithéid de na hoibrithe sin a fhostú i bpostanna eile.

Tá postanna eile laistigh den chlinic fosta ag formhór na ndaoine sin a bhí fostaithe ag clinicí leis an scéim chistesheilbhe a stiúradh agus fostóidh na clinicí go fóill iad i ndiaidh chealú na scéime. Fostóidh an Ilchiste Oirthearach cuid dá oibrithe go fóill le roinnt míonna eile le cuntais na gclíní ina limistéar a dhruidim.

Beidh oibrí ar bith a bhfuil an iomarcacht ag teacht sa bhealach air de dheasca chealú na scéime cistesheilbhe ábalta Ionad Athfhostaithe Oibrithe a bhí ag feidhmiú le tamall maith laistigh de na SSSP a úsáid. Cuideofar le hoibrithe a chláraíonn leis an ionad post eile a fháil laistigh de na SSSP iomlána. Chláraigh roinnt oibrithe ón Ilchiste leis an Ionad agus fuair siad postanna nua dá thoradh.

Cruthófar breis agus 30 post nua le tacú le feidhmiú na nGrúpaí Áitiúla Sláinte agus Cúraim Shóisialta agus tosófar ar an phróiseas le hoibrithe a earcú chun na postanna a líonadh a luaithe is a bheidh Boird Stiúrtha na nGÁSCSÍ bunaithe. Leoga, beidh fostaithe an Ilchiste agus iarfhostaithe chlinicí na scéime cistesheilbhe saor le dul san iomaíocht do na postanna seo.

Targeting Social Need

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail, in each of the past 5 years, (a) the percentage of her budget relating to Targeting Social Need; (b) the actual spend for TSN; (c) the number of people employed relating to TSN; (d) the number of people who benefited from these programmes; (e) the actual and practical benefits as a result of her TSN programmes; and (f) the tasks specifically undertaken and completed. (AQW 2928/01)

Ms de Brún: Information on (a), (b), (c) and (d) is not available. In relation to (e) and (f), my Department has revised and published its New TSN Action Plans for the period April 2001 to March 2003, taking account of progress and new priorities arising through the Programme for Government. The revised Action Plan contains details on progress made towards all of the Department's TSN objectives and targets for the period up to 31 March 2001 and in Section 3, shows the targets and actions achieved in the published "Making it Work" targets for 2000/2002. To date, the achievements include:

- Development of the Investing for Health Strategy;
- Establishing two Health Action Zones;
- Taking forward actions arising from the Drugs Strategy;
- Publishing the report of the Promoting Social Inclusion group on teenage parenthood "Myths and Reality" and consulting on the proposals;
- Ensuring that funding allocations are more equitably distributed according to health and social care need;
- Development and implementation of 23 Sure Start projects aimed at families with young children in disadvantaged areas.

Níl eolas ar (a), (b), (c) agus ar (d) ar fáil. Maidir le (e) agus (f), leasaigh agus d'fhoilsigh mo Roinn a Pleananna Gníomhachta DRS Nua don tréimhse Aibreán 2001 go Márta 2003, ag cur san áireamh an dul chun cinn agus na tosaíochtaí nua a tháinig as an Chlár um Rialtas. Sa Phlean Gnímh leasaithe tá sonraí ar an dul chun cinn déanta ar chuspóirí agus ar spriocanna DRS go léir na Roinne don tréimhse suas go 31 Márta 2001 agus i Mír 3, léiríonn sé na spriocanna agus na bearta bainte amach sna spriocanna foilsithe i "Á Thabhairt i gCrann" don bhliain 2000/2002. Seo a leanas ar baineadh amach go dtí seo:

- Forbairt na Straitéise Infheistíocht sa tSláinte;
- Bunú dhá Chrios Gnímh ar Shláinte;
- Cur chun cinn beart ag teacht as an Straitéis Drugaí;
- Tuairisc an Ghrúpa um Chuimsiú Sóisialta a Chur Chun Cinn ar thuismíocht déagóra "Miotais agus Réalaíocht" a fhoilsiú agus ag dul i gcomhairle ar na moltaí;

- Cinntiú go ndáilfear maoiniú níos cothroime de réir an riachtanais shláinte agus chúraim shóisialta;
- Forbairt agus cur i bhfeidhm 23 scéim Sure Start dírithe ar theaghlaigh le páistí óga a chónaíonn i gceantair faoi mhíbhuntáistí.

Shadow Trust

Ms McWilliams asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) why the Shadow Trust Organisation in South Belfast did not receive funding to continue to support people with mental health problems; and (b) what support they will receive in its absence. (AQW 2937/01)

Ms de Brún: The withdrawal of this funding of the Shadow Trust is a matter for the Minister for Employment and Learning. The Trust already receives some funding from the South and East Belfast HSS Trust and is being helped by that Trust to look for alternative sources of funding to replace that withdrawn.

Is ceist don Aire Fostaíochta agus Foghlama é aistarraingt mhaoiniú Iontaobhas an Fhreastóra. Faigheann an tIontaobhas roinnt maoinithe cheana féin ó Iontaobhas HSS Bhéal Feirste Theas agus Thoir agus tá an tIontaobhas sin ag cabhrú le foinsí malartacha maoinithe a lorg le dul in áit an mhaoinithe atá aistarraingthe.

Child Protection Guidelines

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what measures are in place to protect the children of parents who misuse drugs. (AQW 2958/01)

Ms de Brún: My Department is about to issue revised child protection guidelines to all professionals with responsibility for the protection of children. In cases where there is evidence to suggest that parents or carers may be abusing substances to an extent which may impair their ability to care for the child, the professionals are advised to give consideration to the need for a child protection investigation on the grounds of neglect.

All children who are assessed as being "at risk", including those whose parents misuse drugs, are managed in accordance with the policy and procedures of the four Board Area Child Protection Committees (ACPCs). Each ACPC, which is a multi-agency, interdisciplinary committee, is ultimately responsible for the protection of children in their area, who may be at risk of abuse. Each Committee also has responsibility for the promotion and safeguarding of children's welfare. In cases where risk is suspected, it is policy to notify the Child Care Team of the situation and to work jointly with them thereafter. This includes information sharing and regular attendance at childcare case conferences.

Tá mo Roinn ar tí treoirilnte leasaithe ar chosaint páistí a chur chuig na gairmithe go léir atá freagrach as cosaint páistí. I gcásanna a bhfuil fianaise ann a léiríonn gur féidir go bhfuil tuismitheoirí nó altramaíthe ag mí-úsáid substaintí sa mhéid go bhfuil tionchar aici ar a gcumas le haire a thabhairt don pháiste, moltar do na gairmithe smaoineamh ar an ghá le fiosrúchán chosaint an pháiste a dhéanamh bunaithe ar chúiseanna neamhchúraim.

Déileáiltear le gach páiste, na páistí sin chomh maith a mbaineann a dtuismitheoirí mí-úsáid as drugaí, a mheastar mar “i mbaol” de réir polasaí agus gnáthaimh na gceithre Choiste Bordcheantair Cosanta Páiste (CBCPanna). Tá gach CBCP, ar coiste ilghníomhaireachta agus ildhisciplíneach é, freagrach sa deireadh thiar as cosaint páistí ina limistéar féin ar féidir leo bheith i mbaol drochíde. Tá gach Coiste freagrach fosta as cur chun cinn agus as cosaint leas páistí. I gcásanna a bhfuil amhras baidil ann, is é an polasaí an riocht a chur in iúl don Fhoireann Chúram an Pháiste agus le comhoibriú leo as sin amach. Tá malartú eolais agus freastal rialta ar chomhdhála chas chúram an pháiste i gceist chomh maith.

Methadone

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people are currently prescribed Methadone on a regular basis.

Oral Health Promotion

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what funding has been made available to Health and Social Services Boards for Oral Health Promotion since 1999.

(AQW 2985/01)

Ms de Brún: In 1998/1999 funds totalling £124,000 were made available to Health and Social Services Boards specifically for oral health promotion. For 1999/2000, 2000/2001 and 2001/2002, £500,000 was allocated each year on a capitation basis to Boards to develop, implement and evaluate local measures to address oral health needs and to increase oral health promotion.

Sa bhliain 1998/99 cuireadh maoiniú de £124,000 san iomlán ar fáil do na Boird Shláinte agus Sheirbhísí Sóisialta go háirithe do chur chun cinn sláinte béil. Sna blianta 1999/2000, 2000/2001 agus 2001/2002, dáileadh £500,000 gach bliain ar bhonn ceannsráithe ar Bhoird le bearta áitiúla a fhorbairt, a chur i bhfeidhm agus a mheasúnú le tabhairt faoi riachtanais shláinte béil agus le cur chun cinn sláinte béil a mhéadú.

Dental Health

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what assessment can he make in relation to dental health in each Health and Social Service Board area compared to the Health Authority areas in (a) the rest of the United Kingdom; and (b) the Republic of Ireland.

(AQW 2986/01)

Sub-Fertility

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps she is taking to monitor the impact of her policy for sub-fertility.

(AQW 3000/01)

Ms de Brún: The service established in December is an interim service. A consultation document on sub-fertility services is currently being prepared. The consultation process will inform the provision of a permanent service and in particular the eligibility criteria and equality issues.

Is seirbhís idirthréimhsiúil í an tseirbhís a bunaíodh i mí na Nollag. Tá doiciméad comhairlithe ar sheirbhísí fothorthúlachta á ullmhú faoi láthair. Rachaidh an próiseas comhairlithe i bhfeidhm ar sholáthar seirbhíse buaine agus go háirithe na critéir cháilitheachta agus ceisteanna comhionannais.

Anti-TNF Drugs

Mr Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans she has to make available anti-TNF drugs to sufferers of rheumatoid arthritis. (AQW 3031/01)

Ms de Brún: The approach adopted here to the prescribing of these specialist drugs for the treatment of adults with severe rheumatoid arthritis and children with juvenile idiopathic arthritis, is broadly in line with recent recommendations made by the National Institute of Clinical Excellence. While NICE has endorsed the use of these drugs within clearly defined guidelines, it has identified the need for further assessment to determine their long-term clinical effectiveness.

A recent report by rheumatologists here has also concluded that while these drugs represent a major advancement in the treatment of this illness, it is essential that their use should continue to be strictly controlled and monitored, particularly in light of possible serious adverse effects. My Department is continuing to work with Boards and clinicians to promote a cautious approach to their introduction, within the resources available.

Despite the additional resources I have recently been able to announce for 2002/03, Health and Social Services continue to be under severe financial pressure. I am committed to introducing drugs that offer significant improvement in patient care and I have been able to allocate modest new resources for specialist drugs. Where new drugs are expensive but offer real advances in patient care, I will continue to seek the support of Executive colleagues in securing the necessary resources.

Tá an cleachtas anseo maidir le hordú na saindrugaí seo do chóireáil daoine fásta le géarairtríteas réamatóideach agus páistí le hairtríteas ideapaiteach don óige go ginearálta de réir na moltaí déanta ar na mallaibh ag an Fhoras Náisiúnta um Fheabhas Cliniciúil (FNFC). Cé gur aontaigh FNFC le húsáid na saindrugaí seo laistigh de threoiríní soiléire, ghlac sí leis an ghá le tuilleadh measúnaithe a dhéanamh lena n-éifeachtacht chliniciúil fhadéarmach a fháil amach.

Chinn tuairisc fosta déanta ag réamaitheolaithe anseo ar na mallaibh cé go léiríonn na drugaí seo dul chun cinn mór i gcóireáil an tinnis seo, tá sé riachtanach go rialaítear a n-úsáid go dian go fóill agus go ndéantar monatóireacht orthu go háirithe ag cur san áireamh féidearthacht na seachthorthaí dochracha tromchúiseacha. Tá mo Roinn ag comhoibriú le Boird agus le dochtúirí go fóill le modh cúramach oibre dá dtabhairt isteach a chur chun cinn, laistigh de na hacmhainní ar fáil.

In ainneoin na n-acmhainní breise a bhí mé ábalta fógaire ar na mallaibh don bhliain 2002/03, tá na Seirbhísí Sláinte agus Sóisialta faoi dhianbhrú airgeadais go fóill. Tá mé geallta do thabhairt isteach drugaí a chuireann feabhas mór ar chúram othar agus bhí mé ábalta acmhainní nua measartha a dháileadh do shaindrugaí. Nuair atá drugaí nua costasach ach cuireann siad feabhas ar chúram othar, leanfaidh mé ar aghaidh le hiarraidh ar thacaíocht ó mo chomhghleacaithe san Fheidhmeannas leis na hacmhainní riachtanacha a fháil.

Breast Cancer

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 1083/01, what further funding has been made available for research into the causes of breast cancer. (AQW 3032/01)

Ms de Brún: No new funding has been identified for breast cancer research by the Research and Development Office for the HPSS since my answer to AQW 1083/01.

Funding for research into breast cancer may have become available from sources outside the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, for example the Medical Research Council.

Ní bhfuair Oifig Taighde agus Forbartha na SSSP maoiniú nua ar bith do thaighde ar ailse chíché ó d'fhreagair mé ceist AQW 1083/01.

B'fhéidir go mbeadh maoiniú do thaighde ar ailse chíché ar fáil ó fhoinsí eile taobh amuigh den Roinn Sláinte, Seirbhísí Sóisialta agus Sábháilteachta Poiblí, ón Chomhairle um Thaighde Míochaine mar shampla.

Coronary Heart Disease

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action is being taken to reduce the prevalence of coronary heart disease. (AQW 3040/01)

Ms de Brún: Action is being taken on many fronts. Last year the Health Promotion Agency spent £1 million on initiatives to tackle the risk factors associated with coronary heart disease. These efforts were complemented at local level by the health promotion work of Health & Social Services Boards and Trusts and by general medical practitioners.

I have recently issued the "Investing for Health" public health strategy which aims to address the wider determinants particularly social and economic inequalities which cause ill-health and premature death. A considerable amount of activity under the "Investing for Health" Strategy is being directed at reducing coronary heart disease. In addition I have also recently given a commitment to control tobacco advertising and promotion here.

Tá beart á dhéanamh ar a lán dóigheanna. An bhliain seo a chuaigh thart, chaith an Ghníomhaireacht um Chur

Chun Cinn Sláinte £1 milliún ar scéimeanna le tabhairt faoi fhachtóirí an bhaoil bainteach le galar corónach croí. Ar leibhéal áitiúil cuireadh leis na hiarrachtaí seo trí obair chur chun cinn sláinte na mBord agus Iontaobhas Sláinte agus Seirbhísí Sóisialta agus na ngnáthdhochtúirí.

D'eisigh mé an straitéis sláinte poiblí "Infheistíocht sa tSláinte" ar na mallaibh a bhfuil sé de chuspóir aici tabhairt faoi na factóirí leathana, go háirithe faoi éagothromaíochtaí sóisialta agus eacnamaíochta ar cúis le drochshláinte agus le bás roimh am iad. Tá cuid mhór den obair faoin Straitéis "Infheistíocht sa tSláinte" á díriú ar laghdú i ngalar corónach croí. Ina theannta sin, thug mé gealltanais fosta ar na mallaibh fógraíocht agus cur chun cinn tobac a rialú anseo.

Waiting Times

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) the median waiting time from GP referral to surgery for all forms of cancer, and (b) the equivalent figures for each of the last 10 years broken down by Health Board. (AQW 3041/01)

Ms de Brún: The information requested is not available.

Níl fáil ar an eolas a iarradh.

Fertility Treatment

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of couples currently awaiting fertility treatment who are excluded from free treatment as a result of age. (AQW 3059/01)

Ms de Brún: At the time of writing, 47 couples have been declined fertility treatment solely on the basis of age.

Ag am a scríofa, diúltaíodh cóireáil torthúlachta do 47 lánúin ar bhonn aoise agus ar an mbonn sin amháin.

Data Protection Policy

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) if her Department has a Data Protection policy; and (b) what protection of anonymity it affords to individuals. (AQW 3061/01)

Ms de Brún: The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety complies fully with the Data Protection Act 1998. The Department ensures that personal data about individuals is protected by strict compliance with the eight Data Protection Principles set out in Schedule 1 of the Data Protection Act 1998. All personal information held by the Department is shared only on a need to know basis, and disclosed only in a manner compatible with the purpose for which it is held.

Disciplinary Action: Fire Brigade/Fire Authority Personnel

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail any disciplinary action taken against personnel in the Northern Ireland Fire Brigade or the Fire Authority for Northern Ireland who have been named in cases alleging discrimination in the last 5 financial years. (AQW 3062/01)

Ms de Brún: There has been no disciplinary action taken against personnel in the Fire Brigade or the Fire Authority arising from cases of alleged discrimination in the past five financial years.

Níl aon ghníomh smachtaithe tógtha i gcoinne pearsanra sa Bhriogáid Dóiteáin nó san Údarás Dóiteáin ag eascairt as cásanna de leatrom líomhnaithe sna cúig bliana airgeadais seo caite.

Fire Authority: Compensation for Discrimination

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail, in the last 5 financial years (a) the total amount paid in compensation to members of the Northern Ireland Fire Brigade for alleged discrimination; (b) the number of alleged discrimination cases defended by the Fire Authority for Northern Ireland (FANI) in an industrial tribunal; and (c) the number of alleged discrimination cases settled out of court by FANI. (AQW 3066/01)

Ms de Brún: Over the past 5 financial years the Fire Authority has paid a total of £92,700 in compensation in four cases of alleged discrimination, all of which were settled out of court. The Authority successfully defended a further two cases at industrial Tribunal.

Leis na cúig bliana airgeadais seo caite d'íoc an tÚdarás Dóiteáin £92,700 ar an iomlán i gcúiteamh i gceithre chás de leatrom líomhnaithe. Socraíodh gach ceann acu lasmuigh den chúirt. Chosain an tÚdarás go rathúil dhá chás eile ag Binse tionsclaíoch.

Diabetes

Mr Cobain asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) the percentage increase and (b) the number of children diagnosed with diabetes in 2001 compared with (i) 5 years ago; and (ii) 10 years ago. (AQW 3075/01)

Ms de Brún: This information is not available.

Níl an t-eolas seo ar fáil.

Diabetes

Mr Cobain asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what research is currently being undertaken to determine the cause of diabetes.

(AQW 3076/01)

Ms de Brún: In 2000/01 the R&D Office established an Endocrinology and Diabetes Recognised Research Group and has committed almost £2.5 million to the funding of 9 research studies into various aspects of diabetes. In addition, since 1998, the R&D Office has committed £541,000 to studentships and fellowships in the field of diabetes research. Funding for research into diabetes may be available from sources outside the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, for example Diabetes UK.

I 2000/01 bhunaigh an Oifig T&F (Taighde agus Forbartha) Grúpa Aitheanta Taighde ar Inchríneolaíocht agus ar Dhiaibéiteas agus gheall sí chóir a bheith £2 milliún do mhaoiniú 9 staidéar taighde ar ghnéithe éagsúla de dhiaibéiteas. Ina theannta sin, ó 1998, gheall an Oifig T&F £541,000 do scoláireachtaí agus do chomhaltachtaí ar thaighde diaibéitis. Is féidir go mbeidh maoiniú do thaighde ar dhiaibéiteas ar fáil ó fhoinsí eile taobh amuigh den Roinn Sláinte, Seirbhísí Sóisialta agus Sábháilteachta Poiblí, ó Dhiabéiteas na Ríochta Aontaithe mar shampla.

Diabetes

Mr Cobain asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) if cases of diabetes are clustered in certain areas of the Province; and (b) the number of current cases in each constituency area.

(AQW 3077/01)

Ms de Brún: This information is not available.

Níl an t-eolas seo ar fáil.

Pregnant Women: Smoking

Mr O'Connor asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the annual expenditure to inform pregnant women of the harm caused to their unborn child by smoking.

(AQW 3129/01)

Ms de Brún: The information requested is not available

Níl fáil ar an eolas a iarradh.

Miscarriages: Smoking

Mr O'Connor asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) the number of miscarriages which occurred in 2001 and which were attributed to smoking during pregnancy; (b) the comparable figures for the previous 2 years; and to make a statement.

(AQW 3130/01)

Ms de Brún: No information is available on the number of miscarriages which can be linked exclusively to smoking in pregnancy. While smoking is a critical health issue for both mother and child, it is only one of a number of factors associated with miscarriages.

I established an inter-sectoral Working Group on Tobacco in March last year to develop and oversee the implementation of a comprehensive Action Plan to tackle smoking. The Plan, which will identify pregnant women who smoke as a key target group, is being finalised and will be issued for consultation early in the summer.

Níl eolas ar fáil ar líon na mbreitheanna anabái ar féidir baint dhíreach a dhéanamh le caitheamh tobac amháin i rith iompar clainne. Cé gur ceist thromchúiseach shláinte í don mháthair agus don leanbh níl sí ach ar cheann den roinnt fachtóirí bainteach le breitheanna anabái.

Bhunaigh mé Grúpa idir-rannógach Oibre ar Thobac i Márta an bhliain seo a chuaigh thart le cur i bhfeidhm Plean chuimsithigh Ghnímh le tabhairt faoi chaitheamh tobac a fhorbairt agus a stiúradh. Tá an dlaoi mhullaigh á cur leis an Phlean, a aithneoidh mná ag iompar clainne agus a chaitheann tobac mar eochairghrúpa sprice, agus eiseofar le haghaidh comhairlithe é go luath sa samhradh.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Comber Bypass

Lord Kilclooney asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline (a) the date for inviting tenders for Phase II of the Comber bypass; (b) the closing date for the receipt of the tenders; (c) the date contract work will commence on site; (d) the anticipated date for the completion of the contract; and to make a statement.

(AQW 2774/01)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr P Robinson): I am pleased to advise that the Comber By-Pass scheme is making good progress. The objection to the vesting order has been withdrawn, thus avoiding a public inquiry and the associated delay. This means that all statutory procedures are now complete.

Further ground testing has been undertaken and the design and tender documents are being adjusted in accordance with the findings.

My Department's Roads Service has commenced the tender process and a list of tenderers has been compiled. The exact dates for each stage of the tender programme have yet to be finalised, but I will be making an announcement in due course.

Strabane Bypass

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Regional Development if he is aware of any identified difficulties in relation to the construction of the current stage of the Strabane Bypass. (AQW 2987/01)

Mr P Robinson: I can advise the Member that the construction of Stage II of the Strabane By-pass from Melmount Road to Bradley Way is progressing as programmed.

However, as might be expected with a major scheme of this nature in an urban area, my Department's Roads Service has received and responded to a number of representations from householders adjacent to the new route. These cover a variety of matters ranging from the security of their boundaries to road safety issues.

If the Member is aware of a particular difficulty in relation to the scheme and provides me with the relevant details, I will be happy to have it investigated.

Wastewater Treatment Works at Clady

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (a) the current standard of sewage treatment at Clady in West Tyrone; and (b) any plans he has for the improvement of the current sewage works. (AQW 2989/01)

Mr P Robinson: The existing wastewater treatment works at Clady was constructed in the late 1960s. Due to population increases in the area, the Works is now significantly undersized and is unable to treat the current volume of wastewater from the catchment effectively.

Although the effluent discharge from the Works is presently failing to meet the regulatory consent standards set by the Department of Environment's Environment and Heritage Service, there is no evidence of pollution being caused to the River Finn.

Water Service proposes to construct a new wastewater treatment works on a new site on the Urney Road, to the south of the village. The new Works will be designed to cater for the estimated growth in population in Clady up until the year 2025. The project will also include the provision of new sewers and the upgrading of the existing wastewater pumping station. Work is scheduled to commence in the 2004/2005 financial year. It is expected to take one year to complete at an estimated cost of around £400,000. The commencement date is subject to the availability of funding, planning approval, and land acquisition.

In the interim, Water Service is considering options to effect minor improvements to the operation of the existing Works, in order to improve the quality of the effluent.

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Housing List: Ards Borough

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development how many applicants are on the housing list for Ards Borough in each of the last 3 years. (AQW 2975/01)

The Minister for Social Development (Mr Dodds): The information that you requested is as follows:

April 1999-March 2000	1,235
April 2000-March 2001	1,226
April 2001-March 2002*	1,353

* The figure for this financial year is only available to the end of September 2001.

Housing Development: Clady, West Tyrone

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development to detail any factors that currently militate against new housing development at Clady in West Tyrone. (AQW 2988/01)

Mr Dodds: I am not aware of any factors that would militate against new housing development in Clady. There is still a considerable amount of development land available for housing use.

As far as social housing is concerned, the number of people in housing stress is relatively low. North and West Housing Association proposes to start work in the current financial year on the provision of 5 new houses on a portion of land that is owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and which it is in the process of transferring to the Association.

These houses will be sufficient to satisfy immediate housing need in the village.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr Gibson asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of pensioners who (a) are entitled to the minimum income guarantee; and (b) are not claiming this entitlement. (AQW 2990/01)

Mr Dodds: Just over 75,000 Pensioners receive the Minimum Income Guarantee. The Department does not hold figures for the number of eligible pensioners who have not applied for the Minimum Income Guarantee but continues to actively encourage uptake of the Minimum Income Guarantee to ensure that all pensioners claim and receive all the help to which they are entitled.

E-mail

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development to outline (a) if an employee of the Housing Executive is being investigated for issuing an e-mail to other employees; (b) if the e-mail sent was within working time; (c) if the e-mail was issued via the Housing Executive network; (d) if the e-mail breached the terms of the Housing Executive's contract of employment; and (e) what action is taken when a contract of employment is broken.

(AQW 3006/01)

Mr Dodds: There are currently 3 cases under investigation about inappropriate e mails involving 3 different people. The e mails were all sent during working time over the Housing Executive's network and breached the terms of its Code of Practice, which specifically prohibits staff from sending, forwarding or storing e mails containing inappropriate material. In such cases, which are internal matters for the Housing Executive, I am advised that it treats a breach of its Code of Practice as a serious matter and deals with it through its Internal Disciplinary Procedures.

Charities Commission

Mr McGrady asked the Minister for Social Development if he has any plans to establish a Charities Commission; and to make a statement. (AQW 3007/01)

Mr Dodds: The Department for Social Development is presently monitoring developments in England and Wales and elsewhere with a view to considering whether changes to the existing Northern Ireland charity legislation would be desirable. Any proposed changes will, of course, be the subject of public consultation as well as consultation with interested bodies.

Insurance Claims: Housing Executive Tenants

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the timescale for administering insurance damage claims for Housing Executive tenants.

(AQW 3029/01)

Mr Dodds: The Housing Executive treats damage to property or personal belongings as a public liability claim and seeks to complete the claim process as soon as possible. No time-scales have been set, given the constraints imposed by the diversity and complexity of claims.

Factors affecting time lapse include:

- Accuracy and completeness of information provided by the claimant.

- The need for further research into all claims to establish any negligence.
- The involvement of 3rd parties.

While time-scales vary, all claimants are notified within seven days of receipt, that their claim has been received.

Where claims are legally contested, the time taken to settle the claim is dependent upon the Courts.

Department's Estate

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development to detail those parts of his Department's estate not used for departmental or related ancillary purposes.

(AQW 3030/01)

Mr Dodds: I can confirm that the Department for Social Development's estate is used exclusively for departmental or related ancillary purposes.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr Gibson asked the Minister for Social Development what are his targets for people claiming incapacity benefit returning to work.

(AQW 3048/01)

Mr Dodds: There is currently no target for people claiming Incapacity Benefit returning to work.

Social Housing

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister for Social Development to outline (a) how many units of social housing were built by each local authority in each of the last 3 years; and (b) how many such units are projected to be built by each local authority in each of the next 2 years.

(AQW 3067/01)

Mr Dodds: Responsibility for new social house building has progressively been transferred to Registered Housing Associations (RHAs). The information contained in Table 1 shows the number of units started in each District Council area by RHAs and Northern Ireland Housing Executive over the period requested.

In Table 2, the forward planning information for 2002/03 and 2003/04 is provided on the basis that current budget allocations remain in place.

Parents with Care

Mr J Wilson asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of 'Parents with Care' who will (a) benefit; and (b) be disadvantaged, by the reform of child maintenance due to be introduced in April 2002.

(AQW 3068/01)

Mr Dodds: On 20 March 2002 a decision was made to defer the implementation of the child support reforms as the new IT system was not yet ready. A new date for the introduction of the new scheme has not yet been announced.

There are currently some 35,819 Parents with Care in Northern Ireland. When the new scheme is implemented it is anticipated that most Parents with Care in Northern Ireland could be better off than at present. In the main this will be due to the fact that most Parents with Care receiving Income Support or Income Based Jobseekers Allowance could benefit by up to £10.00 per week from the Child Maintenance Premium. Currently some 58% of Parents with Care are in receipt of these benefits.

Under the new scheme there will be changes in the way earnings will be calculated and revised arrangements on the treatment of cases where care of children is shared between both parents. Some Non resident Parent's liabilities will be less under the new scheme as a result of these changes. However, it is difficult to be precise about the numbers of Parents with Care, those not on Income Support or Jobseekers Allowance, who will benefit or be disadvantaged by the reform of child support. A key factor in determining whether they will be better off or disadvantaged lies in the value of their current maintenance assessment coupled with the extent of the Non Resident Parent's compliance with the determined level of child support.

Equality Impact Assessment

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Social Development what criteria is used to determine which groups or individuals are consulted as part of the equality impact assessment of any new proposals. (AQW 3083/01)

Mr Dodds: The Department for Social Development's Equality Scheme contains a list of around 350 groups and individuals representing the 9 categories of section 75 groups. The 9 categories concern religious belief, political opinion, race, age, marital status, sexual orientation, gender, dependants and disability.

In consulting on equality impact assessments the Department draws from this list, making sure that it consults with all those considered to be affected by the policy. This is in line with the commitment contained in the Equality Scheme.

In particular, the Department ensures that its consultation process embraces representatives of each of the 9 section 75 groups even where there is no evidence that a particular section 75 group would have an interest in the policy being consulted on. In doing so the Department ensures that all section 75 groups have an opportunity to influence the process.

The Department also publishes equality impact assessments in the three Belfast newspapers and posts them on the Internet so that anyone else who wishes to contribute to the consultation process can do so. The Department's consultation list is already a fairly comprehensive one but it can be amended at any time by groups or individuals asking to be added or removed from the list.

In consulting on new or revised policies, even where this is not in the context of the statutory equality duty, the Department would consult the list in its Equality Scheme and would ensure that representatives of all section 75 groups are covered in the consultation exercise, in addition to those known to be affected by or who have an interest in the particular policy.

NIHE: Cleaning Contractors

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Social Development to detail which NIHE District Offices have engaged a specialised cleaning contractor for the removal of rubbish in areas within their responsibility.

(AQW 3117/01)

Mr Dodds: The Housing Executive has appointed specialised contractors to clean void properties in all of its District Offices.

The purpose of the contracts is not solely to remove rubbish from properties but to carry out a specialised cleaning service that includes sanitising and cleaning all hard surfaces, ceilings, walls and floors within the property. This is necessary because of the health and safety implications for incoming tenants and for Housing Executive staff who need to enter the property.

In instances where only household rubbish has been left by an outgoing tenant, there are provisions within existing building contracts that allow the Housing Executive's nominated building contractor to remove household rubbish, when completing remedial repairs. This contract also caters for removal of rubbish from unadopted areas. Rubbish removal from green areas is carried out under existing Grounds Maintenance contracts.

Deductions from Pensions

Mr Gibson asked the Minister for Social Development to make a statement in respect of regulations allowing deductions from pensions of pensioners admitted as in-patients to hospitals. (AQW 3123/01)

Mr Dodds: There is no reduction during the first 6 weeks in hospital and then a limited reduction is made. After 6 weeks in hospital, a person with a standard basic rate pension receives £58 a week, or £44×20 if he has no dependants.

However, although it is considered that the reduction in benefit after 6 weeks strikes a fair balance between what the state should provide financially and the provision individuals should make for themselves, it is also recognised that people have on-going financial commitments while in hospital. Therefore, it has been decided that the period before benefits are downrated will be extended by a further 7 weeks. This will mean that people previously affected by the 6 week rule will be able to keep their benefits untouched if their stay in hospital is under 13 weeks. This change will be introduced to coincide with the introduction of State Pension Credit in October 2003

Pipe-laying: Carrickfergus

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Social Development to detail which agency was responsible for pipe-laying work carried out over land belonging to NIHE at Northlands, Carrickfergus. (AQW 3126/01)

Mr Dodds: I am advised that the work is being carried out by the Rivers Agency.

Winter Heating Allowance

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Social Development to detail any plans he has to extend the Winter Heating Allowance to people with disabilities.

(AQW 3148/01)

Mr Dodds: Winter Fuel Payments are paid to older people who are most at risk from the effects of cold weather. Disabled people who satisfy the qualifying conditions are already included in the scheme. There are no plans to extend the scheme further.

Disabled people can already receive disability benefits, and the disability premium in income-related benefits, in recognition of their extra costs which could include heating costs. Also, Cold Weather Payments are made to vulnerable groups, including people who get disability premium in their Income Support or income-based Jobseeker's Allowance regardless of age, when there is severe weather in their area.

All Works Test

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Social Development how often the All Work test for incapacity benefit is required to be filled in. (AQW 3179/01)

Mr Dodds: In general anyone who applies for Incapacity Benefit is subject to the Personal Capability Assessment, which has replaced the All Works test. There are however, exceptions in respect of people with certain disabilities, the terminally ill and others suffering from specific medical conditions. Following the first Personal Capability Assessment, a decision-maker will take into account the advice from the approved doctor and then decide when the customers incapacity should be reviewed again.

Traveller Encampments

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development what is the proposed timetable for the consultation on legislation to address illegal traveller encampments. (AQW 3200/01)

Mr Dodds: The recommendations of the Working Party on illegal encampments will be part of an Equality Impact Assessment on Traveller Accommodation which it is proposed will issue for consultation in May 2002. The consultation period will be about 2 months, after which a decision will be made on the question of whether to proceed with legislation.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

Friday 10 May 2002

Written Answers to Questions

AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

On-Farm Burial

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail (a) the implications of the European prohibition of 'on farm burial' of fallen animals from 31 January 2003; and (b) her plans to facilitate a sustainable solution to this problem. (AQW 3176/01)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms Rodgers): In response to the first part of your question, I can advise that while on-farm burial has been a permitted method of disposal of fallen stock this option may be significantly constrained when the EU Animal By-Product Regulation comes into force, probably in the first half of 2003. The introduction of the Regulation will have significant implications for Northern Ireland in that it will ban on farm burial except in remote areas. At best only very limited parts of Northern Ireland could qualify as being remote. You will appreciate that this is a UK-wide issue, which will need to be addressed by key stakeholders.

In relation to the second part of your question, the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (DEFRA), together with the devolved administrations, held a meeting in London on 3 April 2002, of key stakeholders to discuss options for the disposal of fallen animals and various funding mechanisms. The Ulster Farmers' Union was represented.

Following discussion of the issues there was general agreement that, recognising that various factors had changed which impacted on the issue, there was a need for a new system or approach to the collection and disposal of fallen animals. It was also agreed that any system should be national rather than regional in its approach, although, given the geographical separation Northern Ireland will likely have to implement its own system. You will not be surprised to learn that funding was the critical issue identified.

On funding it was agreed that there was a need to quantify the cost likely to be involved taking account of the numbers of the different species, start up costs for any new facilities required to fill in the gaps in the coverage of the existing network of disposal facilities and the sources of the necessary funds. These issues are to be taken forward by a smaller stakeholder group which DEFRA will convene.

My officials will obviously be keeping in close touch with DEFRA developments, especially on funding, and will seek to be actively involved in the stakeholder group.

You will appreciate that I will wish to await the outcome of any discussions of the stakeholder group before formulating a sustainable solution to the problem of fallen animals in Northern Ireland.

Rivers Agency

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 633/01, when will the Rivers Agency scheme be implemented. (AQW 3267/01)

Ms Rodgers: The Rivers Agency's scheme to upgrade drainage infrastructure at Glenkeen Avenue/Jordanstown Road, Newtownabbey is now complete. In my response to your earlier question I explained that remaining site reinstatement works were affected by concurrent private development, and would be done with the agreement of the property owners concerned. The agreement with the two property owners, whose garden reinstatement was to be completed in Spring 2002, has now been waived, as the property developer who purchased both properties has commenced building operations on the site. As a result it is no longer necessary for Rivers Agency to complete the reinstatement.

Climate Change

Mrs Courtney asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what provisions are being made to safeguard areas which already have severe flooding each year, given the recent findings on climate change. (AQO 1348/01)

Ms Rodgers: I am conscious of growing concerns about the implications of climate change although the effects are difficult to measure with any certainty at the present time. I can assure you that my Department's Rivers Agency has an ongoing programme of flood and sea defence projects to protect areas currently prone to flooding, where it is economically viable to do so. The Agency is actively monitoring the results of research on climate change in its area of responsibility and is taking account of the potential effects on its design standards for flood defences, and for designated sea defences which it maintains.

CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Youth Development Programme

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the timetable for the implementation of the £1.6 million Youth Development 3-year programme being administered by the Sports Council of Northern Ireland. [R] (AQW 3035/01)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr McGimpsey): It is anticipated that a network of football development centres will be established at football clubs across Northern Ireland over the next two-three years using the monies available under the youth football development programme. Each development centre is expected to house a full time development officer who will be responsible for leading the programme on behalf of his or her respective club. It is envisaged that development officers will be in post by September 2002. The Sports Council ultimately hopes to bring 10,000 children and young people into the programme on an annual basis.

Northern Ireland Events Company

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what assessment can he make of the work carried out by the Northern Ireland Events Company since devolution. (AQW 3037/01)

Mr McGimpsey: The Northern Ireland Events Company plays a crucial role in contributing to the Programme for Government and to DCAL's corporate strategy commitment to contribute to a positive image of Northern Ireland at home and abroad.

Every application for funding is assessed for economic benefit, social cohesion, and the projection of a positive image through media coverage. The company is also required to secure private sector sponsorship to a level of at least 50% of total Events Company spending on events.

Public Libraries

Mrs Nelis asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the percentage of the public libraries' budget directed to the stocking of (a) books by Irish authors; and (b) books and tapes in the Irish language. (AQW 3085/01)

Mr McGimpsey: This information is not available as the education and library boards do not keep separate accounting records for these categories of materials.

A new library management system is being procured under the Electronic Libraries for Northern Ireland project and it will then be possible to obtain information on the amount spent by the education and library boards on books by Irish authors and on items purchased in the Irish language. It is intended that all libraries will be linked to this system by July 2003.

Milk Cup and Foyle Cup Tournaments: Funding

Mrs Nelis asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail all funding awarded in respect of (a) the Milk Cup; and (b) the Foyle Cup tournaments, over the past 5 years. (AQW 3086/01)

Mr McGimpsey: There has been no direct Sports Council funding awarded in respect of the Milk Cup during the last five years. However, I understand that as a condition of grant from the Sports Council, the Irish Football Association provided financial support of £5,000 per annum for the tournament from its own funds up to 2001. In addition, the Northern Ireland Events Company has provided funding of £90,000 for the tournament in 2001 and is currently assessing an application for funding in 2002.

The Sports Council has provided Exchequer funding to the Foyle Cup as follows:

1997/98 £	1998/99 £	1999/00 £	2000/01 £	2001/02 £
Nil	Nil	1,500	2,500	2,500

An application for funding to the Northern Ireland Events Company for 2002/03 is currently being assessed.

I am aware that the Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) provided a total of £21,750 from its Events Support Scheme to both events between 1998 to 2001. This is detailed in the table below. The NITB contribution to the 2002 events has still to be confirmed. In addition the NITB co-hosts and presents 2 trophies at a Welcome Reception in conjunction with Coleraine Borough Council. The NITB contribution to the 2001 reception totalled £1,404.40.

	1998 £	1999 £	2000 £	2001 £	2002 £
Northern Ireland Milk Cup	3,500	3,500	3,500	5,000	To be confirmed
Foyle Cup	1,750	1,500	1,500	1,500	To be confirmed

Misuse of Public Funds

Mrs Nelis asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he is satisfied that agencies in receipt of financial and other support from his Department, are not being used as a cover-up for child sexual abuse or the distribution of pornographic material. (AQW 3087/01)

Mr McGimpsey: It is not possible to provide an absolute assurance in the terms requested. I am satisfied that my Department operates a rigorous policy of ensuring that public funds are not misused through the normal requirements of financial accountability, control and audit. The agencies which are the responsibility of my Department take all reasonable steps to prevent the activities in question, including clear and detailed policies and procedures on child protection. Child sexual abuse and the distribution of pornographic material are most likely to be detected by co-workers of the perpetrator and by the families, friends, teachers and others who know the victim or victims of such abuse. I would strongly urge anyone in possession of information regarding this kind of activity to bring it to the immediate attention of the appropriate authorities.

Football for All

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what assessment can he make in relation to the Irish Football Association Community Relations Programme 'Football For All'; and to make a statement. [R] (AQW 3088/01)

Mr McGimpsey: As I outlined in my response to AQW 1719/01 the Sports Council for Northern Ireland has been working with the Irish Football Association on its community relations programme 'Football for All'.

I also informed you that the issue of community relations was one of those identified as being central to the development of a soccer strategy for Northern Ireland. I would refer you to chapter 10 of the report 'Creating a Soccer Strategy for Northern Ireland'. I hope to be in a position to publish a draft strategy as soon as possible.

Although there is much work to be done, I believe that the 'Football for All' programme, along with the proposed soccer strategy and the broader equality agenda, has the potential to contribute to an improvement in community relations in Northern Ireland.

Sportsmatch

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to consider introducing, through the European Structural Funds, a similar scheme to 'Sportsmatch' which provides matching funding for sports clubs in England and Wales. [R] (AQW 3099/01)

Mr McGimpsey: The introduction of the Sportsmatch scheme is a matter in the first instance for the Sports Council for Northern Ireland. When the scheme was introduced in England and Wales, the Sports Council considered that there were insufficient sponsorship opportunities in Northern Ireland to ensure the success of the scheme. The Council will, however, be reviewing the matter and other potential avenues for private sector funding.

Sportsmatch

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what assessment can he make in relation to 'Sportsmatch' funding available to sports clubs in England and Wales. [R] (AQW 3100/01)

Mr McGimpsey: I have not carried out such an assessment. I understand, however, that since 1992 when the scheme was introduced, Sportsmatch has distributed some £28m to over 3,400 projects in 72 sports throughout England. The projects which attract sponsorship include one of the following elements:

- increased participation at grass roots and/or improved skills;
- new activities or extended/enhanced existing activities;
- links to the local community;
- long term benefits.

MAGNI Report

Mrs Nelis asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what action he has taken in respect of Museums in the Foyle constituency following the MAGNI Report; and to make a statement. (AQW 3149/01)

Mr McGimpsey: I am unaware of the existence of any report called the MAGNI Report, but I assume that you are referring to the Wilson Report, which led to the establishment of MAGNI. The Wilson Report was completed under Direct Rule, and it has no direct relevance for museums in the Foyle constituency as it deals in the main with Northern Ireland's national collections.

However, the Wilson Report recommended a review of local authority museum provision, and this was taken forward through the Local Museum and Heritage Review. My Department has now completed a first draft of a response to the Review, which has to be agreed by the DOE before discussion with key stakeholders. The document will then be published for consultation.

Safe Sports Grounds Scheme

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline (a) the amount of grant received by each of the 20 Senior Irish League Clubs through the Safe Sports Grounds Programme in each of the last 4 years; and (b) his assessment of the current safety standard in sports grounds. (AQW 3186/01)

Mr McGimpsey: The Safe Sports Grounds Scheme has been in existence for two years and details of the funding awarded to football, rugby and Gaelic games are attached. The Scheme will continue for a further year and while there is still a long way to go before all the major sports grounds are up to a satisfactory standard, I am pleased to report that all venues requiring immediate and urgent works have now been dealt with.

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the amount of grant received by (a) rugby stadiums; and (b) Gaelic grounds, in each of the last 4 years, through the Safe Sports Grounds Programme. (AQW 3209/01)

Mr McGimpsey: The Safe Sports Grounds Scheme has been in existence for two years and details of the funding awarded to football, rugby and Gaelic games are attached. The Scheme will continue for a further year and while there is still a long way to go before all the major sports grounds are up to a satisfactory standard, I am pleased to report that all venues requiring immediate and urgent works have now been dealt with.

EDUCATION

Parent Governors

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education what procedures are there for the removal of a Board of Governors Parent Representative, should they withdraw their child or children from the school. (AQW 3106/01)

The Minister of Education (Mr M McGuinness): Parent governors are not required by law to resign from a Board of Governors when their child ceases to attend the school. They may serve out the remainder of their term of office and no procedures have therefore been established for the removal of parent governors in these circumstances.

Cost of Education

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education what is the cost, per pupil, to provide education in each Board area for primary schools in the (a) controlled sector; (b) maintained sector; and (c) integrated sector. (AQW 3107/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The following figures set out the net expenditure per primary school pupil for 2000/01 and have been taken from the latest available out-turn statements.

Teaching Assistants

Mr Gibson asked the Minister of Education how many teaching assistants are employed in schools in Northern Ireland. (AQW 3135/01)

Mr M McGuinness: I have been advised that there were 4, 843 classroom assistants employed in schools in Northern Ireland in 2001/02.

Grammar Schools: West Tyrone

Mr Gibson asked the Minister of Education to make a statement on the future of grammar schools in West Tyrone. (AQW 3136/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The future of controlled grammar schools in the Western Education and Library Board area is a matter in the first instance for that Board. However, my Department is aware that the Board is actively considering the future of Strabane Grammar School. Discussions with school representatives are, however, at a very early stage. The Board is not, therefore, in a position at present to make any proposals for the future of the school to my Department.

Appeals Against Primary School Admissions

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of appeals against Primary School admissions in each Education Board in each of the last 5 years.

(AQW 3187/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The above table sets out the number of appeals and the number of successful appeals against primary school admissions in each Education and Library Board area over the past 5 years.

Claims Lodged: School Trips

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of claims lodged (a) against the Department; and (b) against the Boards, resulting from school trips undertaken by pupils.

(AQW 3188/01)

Mr M McGuinness: There have been no claims lodged against the Department resulting from school trips undertaken by pupils. I understand that the number of claims lodged against the Boards is as follows.

Teachers

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Education to detail (a) the number of teachers employed in the controlled and maintained primary sector; (b) the number of male primary school teachers employed in each of the last 10 years; and (c) any plans he has to increase the number of male primary school teachers employed.

(AQW 3189/01)

Mr M McGuinness:

- The number of teachers employed in controlled and maintained primary schools is currently 8,416.
- The number of male teachers employed in the primary sector, as indicated by the numbers paid in October of each of the past 10 years, is as follows:

2001	1456
2000	1473
1999	1526
1998	1570
1997	1633
1996	1659

1994	1680
1993	1697
1992	1706

(c) I refer the Member to my answer to AQW 2164/01.

Classroom Assistants

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Education to detail (a) the various categories in which classroom assistants are employed; (b) the number of full-time and part-time classroom assistants employed in each Board area for each of the last 3 years; and (c) the cost of providing classroom assistants in each of the various categories for each of the last 3 years. (AQW 3190/01)

Mr M McGuinness: I have been advised that the information requested is as follows:

(a) The categories are -

- General Classroom Assistants;
- Classroom Assistants employed as a result of the Department's 'Making a Good Start P1 Initiative';
- Special Needs Classroom Assistants.

(b) Number of classroom assistants in each Board area:

Model Primary School, Newtownards

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail his plans for the completion of capital works at the Model Primary School, Newtownards. (AQW 3195/01)

Mr M McGuinness: A draft of an economic appraisal prepared by the South-Eastern Education and Library Board which examines various options for improving the accommodation at Newtownards Model Primary School has just been received in my Department. When this document has been examined and agreed with the Board, a scheme will be planned and considered, along with others, for inclusion in a future school capital programme. However, given the number of schemes competing for a place in the programme and the limited available financial resources, it is not possible to state when the school will be included in any future capital funding announcement.

Appeals Against Primary School Admissions

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of successful appeals against primary school admissions over the last 5 years in each Education Board. (AQW 3211/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The following table sets out the number of appeals and the number of successful appeals against primary school admissions in each Education and Library Board area over the past 5 years.

Drinking During Pregnancy

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Education what opportunities his Department provides for children and young people to learn about the harm caused to the unborn child by drinking during pregnancy. (AQW 3221/01)

Mr M McGuinness: There is a statutory requirement for all school authorities to provide drugs (including alcohol) education for all pupils throughout their compulsory schooling (age 4-16). This is delivered mainly through the cross-curricular theme of Health Education but also through programmes of study such as Science where, at key stages 3 and 4, pupils learn about the requirements to maintain healthy bodies and healthy babies during pregnancy, and the effects of alcohol, smoking and drugs. The topic is also being explored in approximately half of the School Age Mothers (SAMs) projects running this school year. Within the Personal and Social Education element of the SAMs programme, the current emphasis is on the effects of alcohol and smoking during the antenatal stage.

Consultancy Firms

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 1954/01, to detail the level of expenditure, in each of the last three years, on consultancy firms/consultants that are based in (a) Northern Ireland (b) the Republic of Ireland (c) the rest of the UK and (d) outside the British Isles. (AQW 3271/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The Department of Education's expenditure on external consultancy firms/consultants within these categories was as follows:

Based in/Year	1999/2000*	2000/01	2001/02
a. Northern Ireland	122,705	190,813	126,893
b. Republic of Ireland	Nil	Nil	Nil
c. Rest of UK	58,946	686,361	52,841
d. Outside British Isles	Nil	Nil	Nil
Total (3)	181,651	877,174	179,734

* Period 2 December 1999-31 March 2000.

Dyspraxia

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Education how many primary school pupils have dyspraxia-related symptoms. (AQW 3295/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The number of pupils in P1-P7 with dyspraxia in their statement of special educational needs is 29.

Transport

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail the arrangements he has made for his Ministerial transport over the past 2 years, in terms of (a) if he used the in-house chauffeur service or a contracted-in service; (b) if he used a contracted-in service, which firms or individuals were employed; (c) how much this contracted-in service cost; (d) if the hire of this contracted-in service was conducted under the public tendering process; and (e) what is the comparative cost of the in-house Ministerial chauffeur service. (AQW 3362/01)

Mr M McGuinness: I do not use either the DFP Centralised Transport Unit or a contracted-out Service. My Department provides me with a car for Ministerial use. It does not have an in-house chauffeur service nor does it contract-out this service.

EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

Dundonald Adult Education Centre

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline (a) her strategy for community education; and (b) how this can benefit the Dundonald Adult Education Centre. (AQW 2998/01)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Ms Hanna): Widening community access to all forms of adult education is at the heart of my Department's lifelong learning policies, including the development of the learndirect network, the Access and Partnership initiatives in the further education sector and new arrangements for Individual Learning Accounts to be announced later this year.

Decisions regarding the Dundonald Adult Outreach Centre are entirely a matter for the Governing Body of Castlereagh College. The College has retained an extensive outreach programme in Dundonald, including activities with groups such as Tullycarnet Family Project, Torbank Special School, the Dundonald Family Centre and the Ballybeen Women's Centre.

Student Drop-Out

Mrs Nelis asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail (a) the number of students who have left higher and further education institutions over the last 3 years before completing their course; and (b) the number who left because of (i) lack of finance; and/or (ii) inability to pay tuition fees. (AQW 3089/01)

Ms Hanna: I refer the member to AQW/1195/01 previously placed by Mr Mark Robinson MLA.

It is not possible to say why individual students leave before completing their course; it can be for a variety of reasons.

Equality Impact Assessment

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what is the criteria used to determine which groups or individuals are consulted as part of the equality impact assessment of any new proposals.

(AQW 3110/01)

Ms Hanna: In line with its Equality Scheme commitments, this Department consults all those listed on its approved list of consultees. The consultation list was, itself, consulted upon as part of the public consultation on the Department's draft Equality Scheme.

A recent review exercise indicated that the majority of our consultees wish to continue to be consulted as our Equality Impact Assessment programme progresses.

Job Centres

Mr Gibson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if she has any plans to address the quality of service offered at jobcentres.

(AQW 3116/01)

Ms Hanna: At present thirty-two out of the thirty-five offices in the JobCentre Network hold the Charter Mark Award, which is a national standard that acknowledges the current quality of the services that JobCentres offer to the public. It is intended that the remaining three JobCentres will apply for the Award this year.

New Deal

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what percentage of those people leaving the New Deal scheme have entered full employment.

(AQW 3142/01)

Ms Hanna: Since New Deal began in April 1998 a total of 60,365 participants had completed the programme by November 2001. Of those whose destination is known 36% found work. It is not possible to distinguish between those who found full-time employment and those who found part-time employment, therefore this figure includes both.

Percentage of New Deal participants who found work within 92 days of leaving the programme.

New Deal Programme	No. of Leavers ¹	Percentage Found Work ²
New Deal 18-24	26,307	49%
New Deal 25+	33,429	27%
New Deal 50+	629	55%
Total	60,365	36%

- Figures given relate to the number of participants leaving the programme rather than the number of people who have left the programme. The reason for this is explained in the glossary of terms attached.
- The percentages given are based on the total number of known destinations. Total known destinations includes all those who found work, those who returned to unemployment, those who returned to other benefits other than JSA, those who went into education or training, those who left the area and those who are economically inactive.

GLOSSARY OF TERMS USED FOR NEW DEAL STATISTICAL PURPOSES

- A participant is defined for statistical purposes as an individual on a single episode of New Deal. This is the preferred way of counting individuals on New Deal. This is because one person may have more than one episode and so to count outcomes it is necessary to count each episode separately. For example, if an individual has been on two episodes of New Deal and gained employment as a result of only one, it is a more accurate reflection of the programme to record this as two participants of whom one has found work.
- The start of a New Deal episode is defined as when an individual has either joined New Deal for the first time or re-joined after a gap of at least thirteen weeks since the end of their last New Deal activity.
- The end of an episode of New Deal is counted as when an individual has left a New Deal activity and not entered another New Deal activity within 13 weeks. Where an individual re-joins New Deal after a gap of less than thirteen weeks they are considered to have re-joined the previous episode.
- Post New Deal employment is defined as where an individual finds employment within thirteen weeks of leaving an episode of New Deal.
- Where an individual has had more than one spell of employment following a New Deal episode only the latest one up to the thirteen week point will be counted. (i.e. no participant can have more than one 'found work' attached to a New Deal episode).

Age Discrimination

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps she has taken to address discrimination towards older people in seeking employment opportunities.

(AQW 3143/01)

Ms Hanna: At present there is no legislation which specifically outlaws discrimination against older people seeking employment. A European Directive outlawing age discrimination is required to be implemented by 2006, and this is a matter for the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister.

However, the former Department of Economic Development in June 1999 issued a non-statutory voluntary Code of Practice aimed at promoting good practice in the employment cycle in Northern Ireland. This Code sets the standard for non-ageist approaches in employment in relation to recruitment, selection, promotion, training, redundancy and retirement.

My Department is responsible for New Deal 50 plus which aims to help older people update their skills and equip themselves for a return to work. But it makes good business sense to base employment decisions on skills and abilities, rather than on preconceived ideas about age. Older workers often have talents and abilities that are in short supply, and employers who ignore them deprive themselves of a valuable resource.

Peace II

Mrs Nelis asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail (a) the cost of consultants employed to carry out economic appraisals on applications for Peace II Programmes; and (b) the number of applications which scored over the 65% quality threshold and were subsequently rejected for approval. (AQW 3154/01)

Ms Hanna:

- (a) The Department has not commissioned any economic appraisals of applications under the PEACE II programme.
- (b) The Department is not responsible for selecting projects under the PEACE II Programme except for Measure 1.4. The selection process for this Measure has not yet been undertaken. So no projects have scored over the 65% quality threshold and been rejected by the Department for PEACE II.

Union Learning Fund

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Employment and Learning when she will introduce a Union Learning Fund for Northern Ireland. (AQW 3427/01)

Ms Hanna: In keeping with the Executive's Programme for Government, I am creating a new Union Learning Fund for Northern Ireland, and am making £250,000 available for it in this financial year.

The Fund will support and expand the role of the trade union movement in Northern Ireland in workplace lifelong learning. It will increase the capacity of trade unions to promote learning among their members and, with partners, to develop innovative projects to attract into learning those who are difficult to reach by traditional provision.

Electronic Engineering: Graduates

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what assessment can she make of the current output of technicians and graduates in electronic engineering considering the potential demands. (AQO 1269/01)

Ms Hanna: Recent research indicates that, in spite of the recent downturn in the sector, there is a possibility of a shortage of electronic engineers, particularly at the graduate and technician level. My Department is addressing this issue by:

- increasing the number of higher and further education places;
- establishing centres of excellence in computing and electronics; and
- establishing a reskilling programme for existing engineers funded by Executive Programme Funds

Student Loans

Mr C Murphy asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail arrangements she has in place to encourage a higher uptake of funds from the budget for student loans. (AQO 1292/01)

Ms Hanna: Students are advised in writing of their statutory maximum loan entitlement determined in accordance with the Education (Student Support) Regulations (Northern Ireland). It is a matter of personal choice for students to decide how much of a loan they need to borrow. It would not be appropriate for my Department to seek to influence them.

Skills Audit

Mr McGrady asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what further action has been taken in respect of the completion of the Skills Audit for the Down area. (AQO 1266/01)

Ms Hanna: The study consists of two stages. Stage one is a detailed examination of the source of recruits to two large Belfast based IT companies and Stage two examines recruitment to a number of IT companies throughout the rest of Northern Ireland. I understand that data collection for the first stage has now been completed and that an interim report will be available within the next few weeks once the analysis is complete.

GCSEs

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning in respect of Further Education Colleges and Institutes to outline (a) any decrease in the number of GCSEs studied in each of the last three years; and (b) any steps being taken to ensure GCSEs continue to be taught as an important second opportunity for school leavers to enhance their grades. (AQO 1272/01)

Ms Hanna: In the 1998-99 academic year there were 9,225 enrolments on GCSE courses at NI Further Colleges. This total decreased to 8,635 in 1999-00 and again dropped to 6,901 in 2000-01.

GCSEs are available in all Further Education Colleges, however my Department does not encourage GCSEs for students who have taken them already at school. Research by the Education and Training Inspectorate shows that there is no significant improvement in GCSE results when repeated. Consequently, Further Education Colleges offer a wide range of vocational qualifications including GNVQs at intermediate level and NVQs which are more appropriate for progression. Further Education Colleges will however, offer the new vocational GCSEs when introduced from September 2002.

Community Relations

Dr Adamson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what funds have been made available to Universities to promote community relations on the campus. (AQO 1263/01)

Ms Hanna: The NI universities are autonomous bodies with a statutory obligation, under Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, to promote equality of opportunity and good community relations. My Department has set aside additional funding of £155,000 in 2001/02 to assist the universities in meeting these statutory obligations.

Community Relations

Mrs Courtney asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps are being taken to encourage good community relations in the Further and Higher Education sectors. (AQO 1285/01)

Ms Hanna: A Working Group set up by my Department is to produce a good practice guide for Further Education Colleges, which addresses issues of cultural diversity, and make recommendations on the development of the further education curriculum to promote community relations.

Universities, Further Education Colleges and University Colleges have a statutory obligation, under Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, to promote equality of opportunity and good community relations.

Research Assessment Exercise Scores

Mr Byrne asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what financial response she will be making to the high RAE (Research Assessment Exercise) scores achieved by NI Universities. (AQO 1283/01)

Ms Hanna: I can give no commitment to increase overall provision for research and development for 2002/03 in light of the improved RAE scores as the Budget has already been set. As to 2003/04 and beyond, my Department will be bidding for additional resources in Spending Review 2002 and university research will be a priority.

Student Debt

Mr J Kelly asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what measures she is taking to address student debt to enable funds reserved for student loans to be reduced; and to make a statement. (AQO 1290/01)

Ms Hanna: While student loans offer students a method of funding their living costs, with very favourable repayment terms, I recognise that some students experience financial difficulties. With this in mind, my Department is introducing means tested non-repayable bursaries of up to £1,500 per year from 2002/03. This will reduce the amount of loans students will claim and ultimately reduce the Departments loans budget.

ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

Northern Ireland Tourist Board: Tourist Visitors

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment why the NI Tourist Board have set a target of 1% increase in the share of all tourist visitors. (AQW 3140/01)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Sir Reg Empey): Forecasts for 2001 indicate that Northern Ireland attracted 19% of all overseas (including GB residents) visitors to the island of Ireland. Tourism Ireland, in consultation with NITB and Bord Failte, have set three year targets for growths of 5% and 8% per annum in overseas visitors to the island of Ireland and Northern Ireland respectively. Achieving these targets would grow Northern Ireland's share by around 1percentage point per annum.

Le Winters Hotel, Newtownards

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what Tourist Board grants have been made available to Le Winters Hotel in Newtownards in each of the last 2 years. (AQW 3169/01)

Sir Reg Empey: No financial assistance has been made available to Le Winters (Strangford Arms) Hotel in the last two years by the NITB.

Northern Ireland Tourist Board: Visitor Attractions Survey

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to the NI Tourist Board Visitor

Attractions Survey in 2000, how many responses were received and was he satisfied with the response rate.

(AQW 3170/01)

Sir Reg Empey: 234 Northern Ireland attractions were invited to participate in the 2000 survey by means of a self-completion questionnaire. A response rate of 70% was achieved, with 164 completed forms being returned. This is a high response rate for this type of postal survey and compares favourably with the 59% response rate achieved for the UK as a whole in 2000.

Down Business Park

Mr McGrady asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQO 660/01, what efforts have been made to locate inward investment projects in the Down Business Park. (AQO 1260/01)

Sir Reg Empey: Considerable efforts are being put into promoting Down Business Park as an investment location and the decision by the Korean company ADT to locate there, promoting 70 new jobs is a welcome outcome of these efforts. Invest Northern Ireland will continue to promote the Park as an attractive location for inward investors.

Visits to USA: Expenditure

Ms Armitage asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the expenditure for visits to the United States of America to promote and attract inward investment. (AQO 1255/01)

Sir Reg Empey: The global travel and subsistence budget for IDB's Inward Investment Group over the three-year period 1 April 1999 to 31 March 2002 totalled some £455,000. Approximately 70% of this was attributable to the United States market based on project activity.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment in relation to the current review of the Export Credits Guarantee Department, what input he has made in order to protect competitiveness for the UK's aerospace industry. (AQO 1301/01)

Sir Reg Empey: There has been widespread consultation by Export Credit Guarantee Department (ECGD) with industry and other representative bodies in relation to its current review, which is aimed at strengthening its risk management systems and evaluating its contribution to the competitiveness of the UK economy. I will continue to, as I did on behalf of Bombardier Aerospace in the aftermath of the events of September 11, make representations to ECGD where I believe it would produce benefits for the UK Aerospace industry and in particular for the Northern Ireland aerospace sector.

Harland & Wolff

Mrs Nelis asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (a) the amount of financial aid given to Harland and Wolff since its privatisation in 1992; and (b) the total cost of privatisation to public funds. (AQO 1256/01)

Sir Reg Empey: Harland and Wolff was privatised in September 1989.

- (a) Offers of financial assistance provided by my Department since that time amount in total to some £105m. This is mainly comprised of contract related intervention aid grant in respect of merchant ship-building projects carried out at the shipyard.
- (b) The net cost of the privatisation in 1989 amounted to some £625m of which £422.5m represented write-off of loans advanced by government during the period when the company was in public ownership.

Promoting Exports: Expenditure

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the expenditure in promoting exports to (a) the Republic of Ireland; (b) GB; and (c) USA. (AQO 1261/01)

Sir Reg Empey: GB, ROI and the USA are the largest markets for exports from Northern Ireland. Support for companies participating in trade missions and exhibitions are the primary means used by my Department's agencies in promoting sales and exports from Northern Ireland to these markets. In the year ending 31 March 2002, the expenditure incurred in such activities in

- (a) the Republic of Ireland was £211,000;
- (b) GB £763,000, and
- (c) USA £304,000.

Science Park

Mr Neeson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what progress has been made in developing a Science Park at Titanic Quarter, Belfast.

(AQO 1257/01)

Sir Reg Empey: Structures have been established under the Northern Ireland Science Park Foundation to progress the project. Outline Planning Permission has been obtained for the site at Queen's Island and detailed planning and funding arrangements have been approved for Phase 1 which includes an Innovation Centre at Queen's Island. Work on the Innovation Centre is expected to begin soon.

Fatalities and Injuries: Building Sites

Mr J Kelly asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of fatalities and injuries on building sites in each of the last 3 years.
(AQO 1295/01)

Sir Reg Empey: In the financial year 1999/2000 there were 6 fatal accidents, 61 major injury accidents and 171 over 3 day accidents.

In the financial year 2000/2001 there were 3 fatal accidents, 60 major injury accidents and 144 over 3 day accidents.

The provisional figures in the financial year 2001/02 indicate that there were 4 fatal accidents, 50 major injury accidents and 150 over 3 day accidents.

Gas Pipeline

Mrs Courtney asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQO 696/01, to outline the current position regarding the North-South/East-West gas pipeline.
(AQO 1300/01)

Sir Reg Empey: OFREG issued a gas conveyance licence to Bord Gais for the North West and South-North gas pipelines on 12 February 2002.

On 5 April 2002 OFREG invited expressions of interest from companies interested in gas distribution and/or supply projects to potential customers outside the Greater Belfast area. These expressions of interest should be submitted before 17 May 2002.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Ulster Way

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment what is his policy on the retention and enhancement of the Ulster Way.
(AQW 3139/01)

The Minister of the Environment (Mr Nesbitt): The Ulster Way was largely brought about through the efforts of the late Wilfred Capper and the support that he received in the 1980s from the Sports Council.

The Access to the Countryside (Northern Ireland) Order 1983 gave my Department the power to grant aid District Councils to create and manage those parts of the route passing through their area.

However, the route has never been fully implemented to a uniform standard and, with the ending of Sports Council support in the early 1990s, there have been increasing questions about its management and overall viability. A report prepared for the Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) of my Department, the Sports Council and the Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) in 1994 proposed the creation of a number of shorter routes. With the support of European and EHS funding, a range of such routes, marketed as Waymarked Ways and spread widely across Northern Ireland, has been established.

There is no single body with over-riding responsibility for the Ulster Way. However the establishment of the Northern Ireland Countryside Access and Activities Network (CAAN) provides an opportunity to address these issues.

CAAN has now established a widely representative Working Group to look at the future of the Ulster Way. The Group has met on a number of occasions and hosted public meetings. CAAN is to produce a report on the Group's work by the end of this calendar year. This will contain recommendations to EHS, NITB and the Sports Council, in particular, on the future of the route.

I will want to consider that report and take the views of my statutory advisers, the Council for Nature Conservation and the Countryside, before I make any further statement on the future of the Ulster Way.

Preservation of Mature Trees

Ms McWilliams asked the Minister of the Environment to outline his policy on the preservation of mature trees in urban areas, and if he regards these measures as sufficient.
(AQW 3182/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The Department's policy in relation to trees and woodlands is contained in Planning Policy Statement 2 "Planning and Nature Conservation" and applies to both urban and rural areas. This policy emphasises the importance of the protection of trees both as habitats and in terms of their contribution to the amenity of a particular locality.

Where any proposed development has the potential to impact upon trees, landowners and developers will be encouraged to retain existing trees, and plant additional trees wherever possible. Trees, woodlands and important hedgerows will be protected by the imposition of conditions on the grant of any planning permission. Additionally, where opportunities arise, the Department will seek to secure new tree planting in development schemes. Where development includes the loss of trees, permission will normally be conditional on a replanting scheme with trees of appropriate numbers, species and size.

Recent Area Plans have also contained policies to protect specific woodlands and groups of trees.

The Department also has a discretionary legislative power under Article 65 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 to make Tree Preservation Orders (TPOs) where it is considered expedient, in the interests of amenity, to do so. The function of a TPO is to bring the trees under the Department's control and the Department's consent is normally required to top, lop or fell trees unless they are considered dead, dying or dangerous. When considering the making of a TPO, the Department will not only have regard to the amenity of the trees considered for protection, but also to the possible financial implications for the Department if a claim for compensation is subsequently made.

While I am satisfied that the measures contained within PPS2, are sufficient in policy terms to ensure the preservation of significant trees, it has become apparent, as planning matters and policy has evolved over the years, that the current legislation needs to be strengthened in order to meet today's requirements. That is why I propose to introduce new measures contained in the forthcoming Planning (Amendment) Bill which will simplify, streamline and strengthen the Department's existing enforcement powers in relation to breaches of tree related planning conditions and TPOs. I also propose to extend enforcement powers to apply to trees not protected by a TPO but within a Conservation Area.

Planning Service: Carrickfergus Borough Council Area

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (a) the work undertaken by consultants on behalf of the Planning Service in the Carrickfergus Borough Council area in the last 2 years; and (b) the cost of this work. (AQW 3193/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The work undertaken by consultants in the last 2 years on behalf of the Planning Service, in the Carrickfergus Borough Council area, related to planning applications for development in the Carrickfergus and Whitehead Conservation Areas.

The total costs of the projects were £171,344.

Ards and Down Area Plan

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (a) the timescale for the publication of the Ards and Down Area Plan; (b) the reason for its delay; and to make a statement. (AQW 3196/01)

Mr Nesbitt:

- (a) I anticipate that the draft plan will be published during August 2002.
- (b) The Ards and Down Area Plan 2015 is the first to be prepared in the context of the Regional Development Strategy (RDS), which was formulated in September 2001.

The Strategic Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1999 requires the Plan to be "consistent with" the RDS. The requirement of consistency has necessitated extensive discussions and additional work to ensure that the Plan will be consistent with all the approaches to sustainable development required by the Strategy.

The Department for Regional Development (DRD) is currently consulting on changes to the Strategic Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1999 to amend the obligation of consistency to one in which plans are required to be "in general conformity" with the RDS.

It is proposed to introduce a formal procedure whereby DRD will issue a 'statement of conformity', to clarify that a development plan conforms with the RDS at draft plan, and at final adoption stage.

Preparation of the Draft Plan Written Statement and supporting technical documentation for the Ards and Down Area Plan is well advanced. Clearance on 'consistency' will require consultations with the Department for Regional Development on the completed draft prior to publication. As a result of these considerations Planning Service now expects to publish the draft plan in August 2002.

Biodegradable Waste

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment what reduction there has been in the amount of biodegradable waste going to landfill sites in each year since 1995, broken down by local authority.

(AQW 3205/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The information requested is not available. District Councils have not undertaken comprehensive monitoring or measurement of biodegradable waste going to landfill sites over this period.

However draft Waste Management Plans will be submitted to my Department by the end of June 2002 by the three District Council Waste Management Partnerships.

Article 23 of the Waste & Contaminated Land (NI) Order 1997 requires District Councils to include in their Plans the types and quantities of controlled waste which they expect to collect, recover, treat or dispose of during the period of the Plans.

The Department will provide guidance to District Councils to ensure a consistent approach and to establish the format for reporting.

Results will be used to monitor progress in meeting the primary target of the Waste Management Strategy to reduce the quantities of biodegradable municipal waste being landfilled to 75% of 1995 baseline levels by 2010, 50% by 2013 and 35% by 2020.

Until the draft Plans have been submitted, and the information they contain agreed, no figures will be available to my Department on the amounts of biodegradable waste going to landfill.

Water Management Unit

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the number of (a) reports of river pollution; and (b) reports which have resulted in a prosecution in each of the last 5 years. (AQW 3213/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The table below shows the total number of pollution incidents reported to the Water Management Unit of my Department's Environment and Heritage Service (EHS), the number substantiated, and the severity of those incidents, by year, from 1996 to 2000. Statistics for 2001 have not been fully validated by EHS and are therefore not included.

Year	1996	1997	1998	1999	2000
Total Incidents Reported	2881	2681	2506	2411	2582
*Substantiated Incidents	2055	1823	1641	1506	1701
High Severity	75	73	54	38	51
Medium Severity	368	401	413	328	336
Low Severity	1612	1349	1174	1140	1314

*Incidents where pollution is confirmed on investigation.

The criteria applied by EHS when assessing the category of severity to be attributed to a pollution incident are set out in an annual EHS publication entitled 'Water Pollution Incident and Prosecution Statistics'. A copy of this report for 2000 has been placed in the Assembly Library.

(b) The table below shows the number of pollution incidents which have resulted in prosecution and also the number of warning letters issued in lieu of prosecution, by year, according to the year in which the pollution incidents occurred.

All high and medium severity incidents are investigated with a view to prosecution, provided the necessary evidence can be obtained. The final decision on prosecution rests with the Office of the Director of Public Prosecutions. Warning letters may be issued where there is insufficient evidence for a prosecution or where there is no negligence involved.

Final statistics for 2001 are not yet available as a number of recommendations for prosecution are still pending in respect of incidents which occurred that year.

Year	1996	1997	1998	1999	2000
Prosecutions	121	86	93	71	78
Warning Letters	42	22	15	16	32

Disposable Nappies

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment what consideration has he given to the environmental impact of disposable nappies in the development of local waste strategies. (AQW 3214/01)

Mr Nesbitt: I am aware that disposable nappies make up approximately 4% of the household waste stream with around 200,000 used nappies disposed to landfill each day in Northern Ireland.

Arrangements for handling disposable nappy waste are the same as those for general household waste. At present facilities do not exist for fully recycling disposable nappies and they can only be managed through disposal or incineration.

As a requirement of the Northern Ireland Waste Management Strategy, published by my Department, the three District Council Partnership Groups are preparing Waste Management Plans for their areas. Draft Plans have been out to public consultation, up to 7 May, and the Groups will submit final draft Plans to my Department by the end of June.

The Plans will detail the arrangements to be made by the Councils to recover, treat or dispose of household waste in order to meet the targets for the diversion of biodegradable waste from landfill set out in the Waste Management Strategy.

As part of the current public awareness campaign, my Department is preparing information leaflets, including one on this subject. The leaflet will outline the different arguments for and against reusable nappies to help parents reach an informed choice for the benefit of their children and the environment.

Disposable Nappies

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment what steps is he taking to encourage the use of reusable nappies in order to reduce the volume of disposable nappies sent to landfill sites in household waste. (AQW 3215/01)

Mr Nesbitt: I am aware that disposable nappies make up approximately 4% of the household waste stream with around 200,000 used nappies disposed to landfill each day in Northern Ireland.

Arrangements for handling disposable nappy waste are the same as those for general household waste. At present facilities do not exist for fully recycling disposable nappies and they can only be managed through disposal or incineration.

Illegal Dumping: Knockagh Road, Carrickfergus/Newtownabbey

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of the Environment what progress has been made in preventing illegal dumping at Knockagh Road, Carrickfergus/Newtownabbey. (AQW 3216/01)

Mr Nesbitt: Further to Mr Foster's previous replies, I can confirm that Enforcement Notices were served on 5th March 2002 on the owners of land adjacent to 56 Knockagh Road, Carrickfergus, under Article 68 of The Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991.

The enforcement notices required:

- (1) that the use of the land for the depositing of waste materials cease within one day of the date on which the notices took effect,
- (2) that all waste materials are removed from the land within 28 days of the date on which the notices took effect,
- (3) that the land be regraded to an even contour within 56 days of the date on which the notices took effect, and
- (4) that the site be covered with topsoil and sown in grass within 56 days of the date on which the notices took effect.

The notices took effect on 5th April 2002 and no appeal has been submitted to the Planning Appeals Commission.

The time periods referred to in (1) and (2) above have passed without the required works having been carried out.

Proceedings are now being brought against the land-owners under Article 72 of The Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 for non-compliance with the enforcement notices. Instructions are currently being prepared for the Departmental Solicitors Office.

Unapproved Developments

Mr Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (a) the number of unapproved developments identified in Fermanagh/South Tyrone during the past 3 years; (b) the number of these developments which were granted retrospective planning approval; and (c) the number of enforcements actioned by his Department. (AQW 3225/01)

Mr Nesbitt: Whilst my Department cannot identify the number of unapproved developments on a constituency basis, I can provide details of such cases dealt with in the Fermanagh District Council area and in the Dungannon and South Tyrone Borough Council area.

- (a) The number of unapproved developments identified in Fermanagh & Dungannon Districts over the past three years ending on 31st December 2001 was 355.
- (b) The number of these developments which were granted retrospective planning approval over the last three years was 63.
- (c) The number of enforcements actioned by the Department for the period 1st January 1999 to 31st December 2001 was:

Cases under investigation	251
Breach remedied/ceased	39
Court action	2

Green Belt

Mr Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment what assessment can he make of the designated 'Green Belt' in the Dungannon and South Tyrone Borough Council area. (AQW 3226/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The need for, and extent of, a green belt for the Dungannon and South Tyrone Council area was assessed recently during the preparation of the new development plan for the area, the South Tyrone Area Plan 2010 Draft Plan, which was published in May 2000.

This assessment concluded that a green belt covering the Dungannon and Coalisland areas was appropriate and necessary to maintain strict planning control in those areas of countryside where development pressure is likely to be greatest.

The Department invited objections/representations to all draft plan proposals during the statutory six week period which ran between 25 May and 6 July 2000. At the conclusion of this period, and following clarification of some objections, it was established that there were no objections to the principle of a green belt or in general to the spatial extent of the designation. Four site specific objections were received requesting amendments to the outer edge of the proposed green belt. These objections will be considered at the Public Inquiry into the Draft Plan which will be held before the independent Planning Appeals Commission. A date for the inquiry has yet to be set.

In view of the above, there are no plans to make any further assessment of the green belt around Dungannon and Coalisland.

Unapproved Development

Mr Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment if he has any plans to increase the powers of the Enforcement Department to deal with unapproved development. (AQW 3227/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The forthcoming Planning (Amendment) Bill, which I propose introducing to the Assembly before the summer recess, will include a number of measures aimed at strengthening the Department's powers to take enforcement action against breaches of planning control, including unauthorised development.

In addition, my Department has commissioned research into further strengthening the Department's planning enforcement powers in respect of unapproved development, which I expect to be available in early June.

Omagh Divisional Planning Office

Mr Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment what assessment can he make of the number of Planning Enforcement Officers currently employed in the Omagh Planning Office in relation to the volume of work anticipated over the calendar year 2002-03; and to make a statement. (AQW 3228/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The enforcement team in Omagh Divisional Planning Office is staffed at its full complement of 1 Higher Professional and Technology Officer and 2 Professional and Technology Officers who report to the Principal Planning Officer in the Development Control Section. In addition, each of the 4 Senior Planning Officers has an important role in contributing to the enforcement of planning control in the 5 District Council Areas covered by Omagh division.

The current workload totals 466 cases. Details of new cases received during the last four years are as follows: 1998 - 122, 1999 - 232, 2000 - 454, 2001 - 282 and 2002, to date, 128.

While it is not possible to predict the actual volume of enforcement work in the Division in the period 2002/2003, it is anticipated this is likely to be similar to previous years. Planning Service will continue to monitor the situation in relation to workload and staff resources in line with the Agency's Human Resources Strategy, particularly any increase in workload arising from changes in Enforcement legislation as a result of the Planning (Amendment) Bill which I propose introducing to the Assembly before the summer recess.

National Trust

Mr Paisley Jnr asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 2536/01, how has this funding been allocated by the National Trust. (AQW 3254/01)

Mr Nesbitt: It is not possible within the time available to provide details of how the Department's funding to the National Trust over the last five years has been allocated.

My officials are working on this and, when the information is available, I will write to the Member

External Consultancy

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 1956/01, to detail the level of expenditure, in each of the last three years, on consultancy firms/consultants that are based in (a) Northern Ireland (b) the Republic of Ireland (c) the rest of the UK and (d) outside the British Isles. (AQW 3273/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The breakdown of expenditure by the Department on external consultancy in each of the last three years is as follows:

	NI (£000s)	ROI (£000s)	GB (£000s)	Outside the British Isles
(Dec) 1999/00	229.5*	-	82*	-
2000/01	1,089.4	-	288.2	-
2001/02	820.5	35.5	319	-
Total	2139.4	35.5	689.2	0

*The figures provided previously in answer to AQW 1956/01 did not reflect the correct period during 99/00 and have been amended accordingly.

Deer Park Area of Special Scientific Interest

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of the Environment, in light of the proposed declaration of Deer Park, Newtownstewart, West Tyrone, as an area of special scientific interest, to detail (a) the consultation process involved (b) the list of consultees (c) those identified by the department as directly affected and (d) any meetings held with those directly affected. (AQW 3283/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The Deer Park Area of Special Scientific Interest (ASSI) was declared by my Department's Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) on 28 March 2002.

Prior to declaration, as many as possible of the known owners and occupiers of land within the site were visited by EHS and informed about the ASSI proposal. These and other interested parties have now been formally notified and given until 31 July 2002 to lodge objections or to make other representations, before the site is confirmed, with or without modifications, or rescinded. As well as all known owners and occupiers, the following parties have received declaration papers to date:

Royal Society of the Protection of Birds
 Ulster Wildlife Trust
 Friends of the Earth
 Rural Development Council
 British Association for Shooting and Conservation
 NI Agricultural Producers Association
 NI Birdwatchers Association
 Ulster Museum
 Ulster Farmers Union
 Conservation Volunteers NI
 Strabane District Council
 British Telecom
 Northern Ireland Electricity

Those directly affected by the declaration are primarily the owners and occupiers of land within the designated site. It is not EHS practice to, make publicly available information which it holds on ownership or other interests in land. In the case of registered land, such information can be obtained from the Land Registry offices. To date there have been no meetings with interested parties in connection with this ASSI, apart from visits by EHS officials to individual owners and occupiers.

The site was identified for EHS through research undertaken by the University of Ulster into key glacial landform complexes throughout Northern Ireland. The site was subsequently surveyed in detail by EHS in accordance with established criteria for the selection and delineation of such sites. The key factor in determining the boundaries of an ASSI is the need to protect the special scientific interest of the site. As part of this process, the Department's statutory conservation adviser, the Council for Nature Conservation and the Countryside, was consulted.

Deer Park Area of Special Scientific Interest

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of the Environment how Deer Park at Newtownstewart in West Tyrone was identified for Area of Special Scientific Interest declaration by the Environment and Heritage Service.

(AQW 3299/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The Deer Park Area of Special Scientific Interest (ASSI) was declared by my Department's Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) on 28 March 2002.

Prior to declaration, as many as possible of the known owners and occupiers of land within the site were visited by EHS and informed about the ASSI proposal. These and other interested parties have now been formally notified and given until 31 July 2002 to lodge objections or to make other representations, before the site is confirmed, with or without modifications, or rescinded. As well as all known owners and occupiers, the following parties have received declaration papers to date:

To date there have been no meetings with interested parties in connection with this ASSI, apart from visits by EHS officials to individual owners and occupiers.

The site was identified for EHS through research undertaken by the University of Ulster into key glacial landform complexes throughout Northern Ireland. The site was subsequently surveyed in detail by EHS in accordance with established criteria for the selection and delineation of such sites. The key factor in determining the boundaries of an ASSI is the need to protect the special scientific interest of the site. As part of this process, the Department's statutory conservation adviser, the Council for Nature Conservation and the Countryside, was consulted.

Deer Park Area of Special Scientific Interest

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of the Environment how the boundaries were established in regard to the proposed declaration of Deer Park, Newtownstewart in West Tyrone as an Area of Special Scientific Interest.

(AQW 3300/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The Deer Park Area of Special Scientific Interest (ASSI) was declared by my Department's Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) on 28 March 2002.

Prior to declaration, as many as possible of the known owners and occupiers of land within the site were visited by EHS and informed about the ASSI proposal. These and other interested parties have now been formally notified and given until 31 July 2002 to lodge objections or to make other representations, before the site is confirmed, with or without modifications, or rescinded. As well as all known owners and occupiers, the following parties have received declaration papers to date:

Royal Society of the Protection of Birds
 Ulster Wildlife Trust
 Friends of the Earth
 Rural Development Council
 British Association for Shooting and Conservation
 NI Agricultural Producers Association
 NI Birdwatchers Association
 Ulster Museum
 Ulster Farmers Union
 Conservation Volunteers NI
 Strabane District Council
 British Telecom
 Northern Ireland Electricity

Those directly affected by the declaration are primarily the owners and occupiers of land within the designated site. It is not EHS practice to, make publicly available information which it holds on ownership or other interests in land. In the case of registered land, such information can be obtained from the Land Registry offices. To date there have been no meetings with interested parties in connection with this ASSI, apart from visits by EHS officials to individual owners and occupiers.

The site was identified for EHS through research undertaken by the University of Ulster into key glacial landform complexes throughout Northern Ireland. The site was subsequently surveyed in detail by EHS in accordance with established criteria for the selection and delineation of such sites. The key factor in determining the boundaries of an ASSI is the need to protect the special scientific interest of the site. As part of this process, the Department's statutory conservation adviser, the Council for Nature Conservation and the Countryside, was consulted.

Acting Chief Constable

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of the Environment to detail what discussions he has had with the Acting Chief Constable in relation to road safety policy and how any reduction in PSNI Traffic Branch would impact on this policy. (AQW 3318/01)

Mr Nesbitt: I have not had discussions with the Acting Chief Constable in relation to road safety policy. However, I have met Superintendent Ian Hamill, Head of Road Policing Development Branch, Police Service of Northern Ireland (PSNI) on 12 April 2002, to discuss the partnership between the Department and the Police Service to deliver road safety improvements.

There is a long established constructive working relationship among the organisations primarily involved in road safety – which includes my Department, the PSNI and the Department for Regional Development's Roads Service. I am keen to see this co-operation developed further within the framework of the Road Safety Strategy to 2012, which I expect to publish in the Summer, in order to maximise the contribution to reducing deaths and serious injuries on Northern Ireland's roads.

The PSNI makes a vital and significant contribution to road safety through the education of road users and enforcement of road traffic legislation. The presence of police officers on the roads also has a beneficial deterrent effect which assists greatly in reducing the number and severity of road casualties.

The deployment of Traffic Branch officers is an operational matter for the Acting Chief Constable. I have been assured that reducing road traffic collisions and deaths and injuries on our roads continues to be a high priority for the Police Service.

Road safety is a responsibility of all PSNI officers. Traffic Branch officers and police officers in all 29 policing districts of Northern Ireland will continue to enforce road traffic legislation, with particular emphasis on the major causes of road casualties – excessive speed, drinking and driving, failure to wear seatbelts and general carelessness.

I was pleased to join with the Police Service recently in launching new advanced digital camera technology which I am confident will enhance the ability of the police to make the roads of Northern Ireland safer for everyone to use. I look forward to continuing close co-operation with the Police Service, within the context of the new Road Safety Strategy.

Air Quality Monitoring

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (a) those areas where air quality monitoring has taken place over the last 2 years, either by his Department or Council Environmental Health Departments; (b) the results of such monitoring; and (c) to make a statement. (AQW 3319/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The most recent comprehensive information on air quality monitoring in Northern Ireland is available in the attached report "Air Quality Monitoring in Northern Ireland - 1999". This report, which was produced by the District Council Chief Environmental Health Officers Pollution Sub-Group (CEHOPSG), provides details, by site, of the results from all District Council and Departmental air quality monitoring sites for 1999.

Other information on air quality in Northern Ireland, and elsewhere in the UK, is available on the National Air Quality Archive web site <http://www.aeat.co.uk/netcen/airqual/>.

My Department's Environment and Heritage Service, has now agreed to fund, in partnership with CEHOPSG, a report on air quality in Northern Ireland during 2000/01, which it is planned to publish by March 2003. This report will draw together all air quality monitoring results and will include trend analysis and discussion in relation to EU limit values and National Air Quality Objectives.

A similar report will thereafter be published annually and will eventually include the data from the new District Council sites, which my Department is funding through its local air quality grant scheme. Copies of the 2000/01 and subsequent reports will be placed in the Assembly Library.

Air quality in Northern Ireland is generally good, however, there are short-lived instances, where from time to time in certain areas, a combination of cold Winter weather and local topography can trap pollutants in natural basins like that created by Belfast hills. Under these conditions, levels of pollutants, such as particulates (smoke and PM10) and sulphur dioxide (SO₂), can rise significantly.

I expect to introduce in this Assembly session a Local Air Quality Management Bill which will give District Councils powers to draw up action plans to remedy local air quality problems. In advance of this legislation, all twenty-six District Councils are undertaking air quality reviews and assessments.

I am pleased that my Department has been able to provide grant-aid to District Councils to assist in this work. Almost £1m was paid out for 2001/02 and a further £1.025m is available for this financial year.

Areas of Special Scientific Interest: West Tyrone

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of the Environment to list current and proposed ASSI designated areas in West Tyrone. (AQW 3320/01)

Mr Nesbitt: ASSIs which have been declared in West Tyrone are as follows:

Corbylin Wood

Silverbrook Wood

Owenkillev River

Owenkillev and Glenelly Wood

Black Bog

Strabane Glen

McKean's Moss

McKean's Moss Part 2

Deer Park

Grange Wood

Drumlea and Mullan Wood

Essan Burn and Mullyfamore

Moneygal Bog

Moneygal Bog Part 2

Fairy Water Bogs

Straduff

Tonnagh Beg Bog

Cranny Bogs

Deroran Bog

Tully Bog

Upper Ballinderry River

ASSIs which have been surveyed in West Tyrone for future possible designation are as follows:

Glenelly River

Boorin Wood and Heath

Gortnasool Glebe and Meenadoan

Sloughen Glen

Lough Corr

Lough Lee

Croagh

Foyle River

Murrins

Dooraa River

Dunnaree Hill

Lisdoo

Any proposals for further designations will be the subject of consultations with all interested landowners and occupiers.

Regional Strategic Plan

Mr Ford asked the Minister of the Environment what proportion of the 9,000 houses designated for the BMAP rural area within the Regional Strategic Plan will be built on brownfield sites. (AQO 1333/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The Regional Development Strategy (RDS) allocates 9000 houses to the rural areas of the 6 District Council areas comprising the BMAP area. BMAP will allocate this total housing growth to locations, taking account of the Strategic Planning Guidelines in the RDS specifically

- the identification of 3 towns in the BMAP rural area for significant growth – Carryduff, Moira and Ballyclare; and
- the ability of the other smaller towns and settlements in the rural area to accommodate
- additional housing will also be assessed.

The Regional Development Strategy sets a target that 60% of urban housing growth must be provided on ‘brownfield’ sites. This target applies to towns of 5000 population and above. In the BMAP rural area it will apply to Carryduff, Moira and Ballyclare – specific sites will be identified through urban capacity studies.

The Regional Development Strategy does not set a ‘brownfield’ target for settlements below 5000 population. Possible sites in the smaller settlements can be considered during the preparation of the BMA Plan. However, it is not possible to state at this stage what the overall proportion of dwellings within the rural area will be.

FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

Hippo Bags

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, pursuant to AQW 2356/01, to list those properties controlled by the NI Civil Service that are not currently using Water Service ‘Hippo Bags’.

(AQW 2814/01)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Dr Farren): [holding answer 23 April 2002]: On the basis of returns from Departments, I have placed a list of all properties controlled by the NI Civil Service that are not currently using Water Service ‘Hippo Bags’ in the Assembly Library. The use of ‘Hippo Bags’ is being promoted by DRD Water Service, which has pointed out that toilets fitted with modern cisterns do not need ‘Hippo Bags’.

Department’s Estate

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail those parts of his Department’s estate not used for departmental or related ancillary purposes.

(AQW 3024/01)

Dr Farren: The Department of Finance and Personnel has a number of specialised buildings for its direct use and within my Department, Office Accommodation

Branch provides and maintains accommodation on behalf of Northern Ireland Departments and Agencies for the conduct of their business.

Those properties are:

We have 3 additional properties which are vacant, including Armagh House and Prince of Wales Gate Lodge which are due for refurbishment and Massey Avenue Gate Lodge which is being considered for new occupants.

Private Healthcare for Staff

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline (a) the number of NI Civil Service staff receiving private health insurance benefits; and (b) the cost of such provision.

(AQW 3145/01)

Dr Farren: The Northern Ireland Civil Service makes no corporate provision for private health care insurance for staff.

Staff are, of course, free to take out private health insurance cover. However, the nature and cost of such insurance is a matter for the individual member.

Civil Servants: Press Statements

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether civil servants are restricted by their contract of employment from making statements to the press. (AQW 3171/01)

Dr Farren: All members of the Northern Ireland Civil Service (NICS) are required to comply with the NICS Pay and Conditions of Service Code. The Code stipulates that a civil servant who wishes to take part in any activity involving the disclosure of official information or the use of official experience must obtain prior authority from their Department. Such activities might include, publication of books or articles, contacts with the press, broadcasts, speeches or lectures and participation in outside conferences.

Civil servants should not make public statements or remarks in terms which their employing Department could find objectionable, about individuals (whether officials, Ministers or private persons) or organisations. In addition, they must not take part in activities, including discussion of matters of current or political controversy, which conflict with the interests of the Department; bring the name of the Department, or the Northern Ireland Civil Service into disrepute; or bring into question the impartiality of the Northern Ireland Civil Service.

Marriage Law

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline (a) the timescale for introducing new legislation to amend the Marriage Law; and (b) if special consideration will be given in any new legislation to address the concerns and views of the Religious Society of Friends (Quakers) in Ireland. (AQW 3203/01)

Dr Farren:

- (a) A draft Marriage Bill is being prepared and it is expected to be introduced in the Assembly during June 2002. If agreed and passed by the Assembly it is estimated that it will receive Royal Assent before the end of the year. When it comes into operation will be dependent on the making of regulations by the Department of Finance and Personnel, but it is envisaged that the new system will take effect during the first half of 2003.
- (b) The Marriage Law proposals have been the subject of extensive consultation and views have been received from a number of bodies including the Religious Society of Friends in Ireland. The views received from all consultees have been given consideration in the framing of the new legislation. The General Register Office has also written to the Society of Friends in Ireland responding to points made by them and offering to provide further assistance if requested. The provisions in the new legislation will detail the civil requirements relating to marriage. The requirements of individual Churches for a marriage to proceed according to their particular rites and ceremonies will be in addition to these and will be a matter for the individual Churches concerned.

Life Expectancy Rates

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what are the birth, mortality and life expectancy rates for (i) males; and (ii) females in each year from 1995 to 2001. (AQW 3207/01)

Dr Farren: The table below shows the birth, death and life expectancy rates for (i) males; and (ii) females in each year from 1995 to 2000.

Males	Crude Birth Rate*	Crude Death Rate*
1995	15.2	9.3

Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency

Mr Attwood asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what performance targets have been set for the NI Statistics and Research Agency in 2002/03.

(AQW 3256/01)

Dr Farren: For 2002/03 the following key performance targets have been set for the Agency:

- To have at least 95% of customers say they are satisfied with the service and products, with at least 55% reporting they are very satisfied.
- To have at least 25% of customers who received NISRA services in 2001/02 report an improvement in 2002/03.
- To produce no fewer than 70 statistical and 16 research publications during 2002/03.
- To process 98% of postal and personal applications for GRO certificates within 8 and 3 working days respectively.
- To produce key statistics from the 2001 Census by December 2002 and Standard Tables by early 2003.
- To achieve a minimum 3% efficiency saving.
- To maintain expenditure within cash limits and approved budgetary plans.

Copies of the Agency's Corporate and Business Plan will be placed in the Assembly Library at the end of June.

Business Development Service

Mr Attwood asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what performance targets have been set for Business Development Service (BDS) in 2002-2003.

(AQW 3400/01)

Dr Farren: The Business Development Service (BDS) is an Executive Agency of the Department of Finance and Personnel. I have set the following key performance targets for the Agency to achieve by April 2003:

- 95% of customers to be satisfied with the services they receive;
- 95% of customers to be satisfied with the way in which services are provided;
- people development to be consistent with the principles of Investors in People (IIP);
- secure on a notional basis and within the context of Service Level Agreements (where they apply), 90% recovery of the cost of its operation from its customers; and
- demonstrate an efficiency saving of 3%.

Copies of the Agency's Strategic Plan 2002-2005 and Business Plan 2002-2003 will be placed in the Assembly Library when they become available.

Peace II

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to urgently investigate a Peace II assumption that core funding is already in place to support the work of victims' groups, which may not be the case, and could result in such groups being unable to continue to retain core outreach workers after 30 April 2002; and to make a statement.

(AQW 3443/01)

Dr Farren: PEACE II makes no assumptions about the existing funding arrangements of its applicants. When submitting applications groups are asked to identify all costs related to their project and assistance can be provided towards all that are eligible under the Measure for which they are applying. The Intermediary Funding Bodies have a role to advise groups on eligible costs under each Measure and to offer advice on project proposals to help ensure that they are presented in a way that best meets that Measures' objectives and eligibility criteria. The 30 April deadline relates to what was the end date for Gap Funding and I have now agreed to extend these arrangements until a decision is taken on Gap funded projects' formal application to the PEACE Programme.

Peace II

Ms Lewsley asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to provide an update on the implementation of the Peace II Programme, including the position on Gap Funding.

(AQW 3481/01)

Dr Farren: The SEUPB has made significant progress in recent months to implement the PEACE II Programme. All Intermediary Funding Bodies have now been appointed and, following calls for projects, the process to select those that best meet the relevant criteria is currently ongoing. All 26 Local Strategy Partnerships were established by the 31 December 2001 target date and most have recently developed and agreed an Integrated Local Area Strategy for their area.

Gap funding arrangements were due to finish on 30 April but, as the SEUPB has now informed me that all of the necessary decisions have not yet been taken, I have agreed that the Gap funding arrangements can continue on the following basis:

- (i) extensions can be offered to projects who have made an early application to the Programme;
- (ii) with the exception of Priority 3 and Measures 2.3 and 2.11, Implementing Bodies will be pressed to take most decisions by 30 June 2002 and to complete their work by 30 September 2002. For the excepted Measures, a target date of 31 December 2002 will apply;
- (iii) extensions can apply only until the date that the relevant Implementing Body informs a project of its decision on their application. Implementing Bodies will inform projects immediately after their decision;
- (iv) where Measures are open and where there is no closing date for applications, projects who have not made an application by 30 April will be advised by the Departments responsible that they are in breach of the condition to make an early application to the Programme. Gap Funding will terminate from that date unless, exceptionally, the reasons for an application not having been made are considered sufficiently strong to merit further consideration;
- (v) where projects have not made an application to open Measures with closing dates after 30 April 2002 the same arrangements as at (iv) will apply. Where closing dates have passed then Gap Funding should have ceased from the closing date for applications;
- (vi) where a project has applied under a different Measure to that for which it received Gap Funding this can be considered as meeting the condition of having made an early application if the project can demonstrate that the objectives of the project application and gap project are substantially similar.

HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Disability Learning Budget

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is the Disability Learning Budget in each Board Area. (AQW 2284/01)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Ms de Brún): Resources are allocated to Health and Social Services Boards on a capitation formula basis and it is then a matter for Boards to decide, on the basis of local priorities, how these resources should be allocated to the various Programme of Cares for the populations in their areas. However, expenditure on the learning disability programme of care, by Board populations, for 2000-01, the most recent financial year for which audited figures are available, was as follows:

Board	£m
NHSSB	22.5
EHSSB	43.2
SHSSB	19.8
WHSSB	13.9

Leithdháiltear acmhainní ar na Boird Sláinte agus Seirbhísí Sóisialta ar bhonn fhoirmle caipitlíochta agus ansin is faoi na Boird a bhíonn sé cinneadh a dhéanamh, ar bhonn tosaíochtaí áitiúla, mar ba chóir na hacmhainní sin a leithdháileadh chuig na Cláir éagsúla Cúraim do na pobail ina gceantair. Is mar seo a leanas, áfach, a bhí an caiteachas ar an gclár cúraim maidir le míchumas foghlama, ag pobail Boird, do 2000-01, an bhliain airgeadais is déanaí a bhfuil figiúirí iniúchta ar fáil ina leith:

Bord	£m
NHSSB	22.5
EHSSB	43.2
SHSSB	19.8
WHSSB	13.9

Learning and Disability Services: Funding

Mr Berry asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the funding allocation for 2001-2002, by Board area, for learning and disability services. (AQW 2484/01)

Ms de Brún: I refer the Member to my answer to AQW 2284/01.

Treoraím an Ball do mo fhreagra a thug mé ar AQW 2284/01.

Learning Disabilities: Funding

Mr Berry asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) her assessment in relation to the level of funding available for learning disability services in the Southern Board area; and (b) any action she proposes to take increase funding to these services. (AQW 2544/01)

Ms de Brún: During 2000-01, the most recent financial year for which audited figures are available, the Southern Health and Social Services Board spent some £19.8m on services for people with learning disabilities. The learning disability programme will benefit from the additional resources made available this year for community and residential care. In addition, my Department will be logging substantial bids in the 2002 Spending review process to fund the implementation of the Learning Disability Strategy which is designed to provide 150 additional community and 150 day care places in the next three years for people in long-stay hospitals, as well as multi-disciplinary community support teams to sustain those resettled and to provide an urgent response when crises occur.

I rith 2000-01, an bhliain is déanaí dá bhfuil figiúirí iniúchta ar fáil ina leith, chaith Bord Sláinte agus Seirbhísí Sóisialta an Deiscirt £19.8m ar sheirbhísí do dhaoine faoi mhíchumais foghlama. Bainfidh an clár míchumais foghlama sochar as an acmhainn bhreise a cuireadh ar fáil i mbliana do chúram pobail agus cónaithe. Chomh maith leis sin, beidh mo Roinnse ag tuairisciú tairiscintí substaintiúla sa phróiseas athbhreithnithe Caiteachais 2002 chun maoiniú a dhéanamh ar fheidhmiú Straitéise Míchumais Foghlama atá deartha chun 150 áit bhreise pobail agus 150 áit chúraim lae a sholáthar sna chéad trí bliana eile amach romhainn do dhaoine in ospidéal fad-fhanachta chomh maith le foirne tacaíochta pobail ildisciplíneach chun iadsan atá athlonnaithe a chothú agus chun freagairt phráinneach a sholáthar nuair a tharlaíonn géarchéim.

Sub-Fertility Service

Ms Lewsley asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much funding she makes available annually for counselling of couples with fertility problems. (AQW 2704/01)

Ms de Brún: As part of the interim arrangements for regional sub-fertility services, I have made available £900,000 annually. This money is to provide a comprehensive sub-fertility service, of which counselling is an integral part. No specific allocation has been made for counselling services in this area.

Mar chuid de na comhshocruithe eatramhacha do sheirbhísí réigiúnacha fo-thorthúlachta, tá £900,000 curtha ar fáil agam go bliantúil. Is ann don airgead sin chun seirbhís chuimsitheach fo-thorthúlachta a sholáthar, a mbeidh comhchomhairliú mar chuid lárnach de. Níl aon leithdháileadh sainiúil déanta do sheirbhísí comhchomhairlithe sa réimse sin.

Sure Start

Mr Close asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the procedures in place to ensure the accountability of Sure Start to the Assembly. (AQW 2760/01)

Ms de Brún: My Department allocates Sure Start funding to each Childcare Partnership through its respective HSS Board. Boards, in turn, make allocations to individual Sure Start projects through one of the project partners designated as the accountable body for the overall project.

Annual progress reports and audited accounts will also be required from each project and reports must identify how resources have been used and set out the outcomes that have been achieved. These reports will be submitted to the relevant Childcare Partnership and my Department within three months of the end of the year to which they relate.

Leithdháileann mo Roinnse maoiniú Sure Start do gach Comhpháirtíocht Chúram Leanaí trína Bord HSS faoi seach. Déanann Boird, ina seal, leithdháiltí chuig tionscadail aonair Sure Start trí cheann de na comhpháirtithe ainmnithe tionscadail a bhíonn mar an foras cuntasach don tionscadal foriomlán.

Éileofar tuarascálacha bliantúla dhul chun cinn agus cuntais iniúchta chomh maith ó gach tionscadal agus caithfidh na tuarascálacha a shainaithint mar a úsáideadh acmhainní agus leagan amach a dhéanamh na cinní a cuireadh i ngníomh. Cuirfear na tuarascálacha seo faoi bhráid na Comhpháirtíochta Chúram Leanaí ábharthaí agus faoi bhráid mo Roinne laistigh de thrí mhí de dheireadh na bliana lena mbaineann siad.

Digital Hearing Aids

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to provide digital hearing aids throughout the Health Service. (AQW 2771/01)

Ms de Brún: Given the limited budget available to health and social services, and the continuing pressures across the whole spectrum of services, it is not possible to provide the funding required to introduce DHAs locally at this time.

Ag glacadh san áireamh an bhuiséid teoranta atá ar fáil do sheirbhísí sláinte agus sóisialta, agus an brú leanúnach fud fad speictream iomlán na seirbhísí, ní féidir an maoiniú atá de dhíth le hÁiseanna Digiteacha Éisteachta (ÁDéanna) a thabhairt isteach go háitiúil ag an am seo.

Out-Of-Hours GP Services

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much money each Health Board received to support the development of out-of-hours GP services in each of the last 4 years. (AQW 3016/01)

Ms de Brún: The amount of money allocated by the Department to each of the four Health and Social Services Boards to support the development of out-of-hours GP services in each of the last four financial years is shown in the table below.

Year	1998-1999 £	1999-2000 £	2000-2001 £	2001-2002 £
Eastern	614,000	675,000	692,000	766,000

Year	1998-1999 £	1999-2000 £	2000-2001 £	2001-2002 £

Eating Disorders

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what information is made available to education authorities to assist in the identification of eating disorders in girls in the 11-18 age group. (AQW 3039/01)

Ms de Brún: In 2000, the Health Promotion Agency produced a series of fact sheets, (Nutrition Factfile: Factsheets on Diet and Health), which was distributed to Heads of Home Economics Departments and Health Education Co-ordinators in all post-primary schools here. This publication included a fact sheet on eating disorders.

Sa bhliain 2000, chuir an Ghníomhaireacht um Chothú Sláinte sraith de bhileoga firici ar fáil, (Nutrition Factfile: Factsheets on Diet and Health), a scaipeadh ar Cheannairí na Ranna Eacnamaíochta Baile agus ar Chomhordaitheoirí Oideachas Sláinte i ngach scoil iarbhuñoideachais anseo. Áirítear san fhoilseachán sin bileog eolais ar neamhoird itheacháin.

Fire Authority: Navigator Blue

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if the Fire Authority for Northern Ireland currently has a contract with Navigator Blue; and, if so, to detail its terms and conditions. (AQW 3064/01)

Ms de Brún: The Fire Authority's current contract with Navigator Blue ends on 31st May 2002. Under the contract, Navigator Blue provides the Authority with media services and acts as an advertising agency. For placing advertisements Navigator Blue does not levy a charge on the Authority but receives a 15% commission from the company with whom they place the advertising. For the sourcing of products and other services, Navigator Blue receives a flat rate commission of 26.5%. There are no additional charges made for their attendance at meetings or in sourcing sponsorship agreements for the Brigade.

Críochnaíonn conradh reatha an Údaráis Dóiteáin le Navigator Blue an 31^ú Bealtaine 2002. Faoín gconradh, soláthraíonn Navigator Blue seirbhísí meáin don Údarás agus gníomhaíonn sé mar ghníomhaireacht fógraíochta. Chun fógraíocht a dhéanamh ní thobhíonn Navigator Blue muirear ar an Údarás ach faigheann sé coimisiún 15% ón gcuideachta lena ndéanann sé an fhógraíocht. D'fhoinsiú táirgí agus seirbhísí eile, faigheann Navigator Blue coimisiún ag ráta cothrom de 26.5%. Ní dhéantar aon mhuirir bhreise dóibh a bheith i láthair ag cruinnithe nó i bhfoinsiú comhshocruithe urraíochta don Bhriogáid.

Departments Policies: Equality Scheme

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if all her Department's policies, interim or otherwise, have been screened for equality of opportunity. (AQW 3080/01)

Ms de Brún: All my Department's existing policies, interim or otherwise have been screened for equality of opportunity. In addition, my Department in its Equality Scheme has stated that it will assess the equality implications of all new policies as they are being developed.

My Department currently has one interim policy, which is the provision of sub-fertility services. A consultation document on the sub-fertility service is currently being prepared. The consultation process will inform the provision of a permanent service and in particular the eligibility criteria and equality issues.

Tá gach ceann de pholasaithe mo Roinne, bídis eatramhach nó a mhalairt scagtha do chomhionannas deiseanna. Chomh maith leis sin, luaigh mo Roinn ina Scéim Comhionannais go ndéanfaidh sé measúnú ar impleachtaí comhionannais gach polasaí nua de réir mar a fhorbraítear iad.

I láthair na huaire tá polasaí eatramhach ag mo Roinnse, ar sholáthar seirbhísí fo-thorthúlachtaá ullmhú. Tabharfaidh an próiseas comhchomhairle faisnéis ar sholáthar seirbhíse buaine agus go háirithe na critéir incháilitheachta agus ceisteanna comhionannais.

Fire Authority: Investors in People

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) if the mark 'Investors in People' has been awarded to the Fire Authority for Northern Ireland; and (b) if any form of staff appraisal/ performance related pay has been introduced by the Authority. (AQW 3091/01)

Ms de Brún: The Fire Authority has not applied for "Investors in People" accreditation.

The Fire Authority operates under the National Joint Council for Local Authorities Fire Brigades Scheme of Conditions of Service, which does not include a requirement for any form of performance related pay.

Níor chuir an tÚdarás Dóiteáin isteach ar an gcreidiúnú "Infheisteoirí i nDaoine".

Feidhmíonn an tÚdarás Dóiteáin faoin gComhairle Náisiúnta i gComhar do Choinníollacha Seirbhíse Scéim Bhriogáid Dóiteáin na nÚdarás Áitiúla, nach gcuireann riachtanas d'aon chineál pá de réir feidhmíochta san áireamh.

Fire Authority: Overtime Payments

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) the cost of overtime payments made to personnel in the Control Room of the Fire Authority for Northern Ireland from 1 November 2001 to date; and (b) the number of personnel in the Control Room of the Fire Authority for Northern Ireland who have worked more than 50 hours' overtime in any given 4-week period during the financial year 2001-02.

(AQW 3093/01)

Ms de Brún: The cost of overtime time payments to the Fire Authority's Control Room staff for the period 1st November 2001 to 31st March 2002 was £ 40,495.20.

During the financial year 2001-2002 there were 11 occasions when eight members of Control Room staff exceeded 50 hours overtime in any period of one month.

Is £40,495.20 an costas íocaíochtaí ragoibre d'fhoireann Sheomra Rialaithe an Údaráis Dóiteáin don tréimhse ón 1^ú Samhain 2001 go dtí an 31^ú Márta 2002.

I rith na bliana airgeadais 2001-2002 bhí 11 ócáid ann nuair a rinne ocht gcomhalta d'fhoireann an tSeomra Rialaithe níos mó ná 50 uair an chloig ragoibre i dtréimhse aon mhí amháin.

Foetal Death

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what research has been undertaken on the link between nutrients and foetal death.

(AQW 3094/01)

Ms de Brún: There have been a number of studies into specific aspects of diet and the relationship with foetal death. These include a study in the US on the relationship between vitamin A and foetal death and a Swedish study on the intake of fish contaminated with organochlorides and stillbirth rates.

Tá roinnt staidéir déanta ar ghnéithe sainiúla d'aiste bia agus an ghaolmhaireacht le bás féatach. Áirítear orthu sin staidéar sna Stáit Aontaithe ar an ngaolmhaireacht idir vitimín A agus bás féatach chomh maith le staidéar Sualannach ar ionghabháil éisc éillithe le horgánaclóirídí agus rátaí marbh-bhreitheanna.

Pregnant Women: Benefits of Eating Fish

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action she has taken to inform pregnant women of the benefits for their unborn child of eating fish in early pregnancy - as reported in the British Medical Journal, 23 February 2002.

(AQW 3095/01)

Ms de Brún: The general health benefits of eating fish as part of a balanced diet are well established and this advice is given to all first time expectant mothers in "The Pregnancy Book". However, it would be premature of my Department to issue specific advice on the low consumption of seafood in early pregnancy as a risk factor for pre-term delivery and low birth weight, based solely on the findings of this Danish study.

Tá sochair ghinearálta sláinte maidir le hiasc a ithe mar chuid d'aiste chothromaithe bia seanbhunaithe agus tugtar an chomhairle sin do gach máthair a bhíonn ag súil don chéad uair in "The Pregnancy Book". Bheadh sé roimh am ag mo Roinnse, áfach, comhairle shainiúil a eisiúint ar chaitheamh íseal bia mara i dtóircheas luath mar fhachtóir riosca do shaolú agus do mheáchan íseal breithe, bunaithe go huile agus go hiomlán ar an staidéar sin ón Danmhairg.

Maternal Diet

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what advice is given to pregnant women on the effect of the maternal diet on the unborn child.

(AQW 3096/01)

Ms de Brún: All first time expectant mothers are given a copy of "The Pregnancy Book", which is produced in collaboration with the Health Promotion Agency and distributed by Health Boards. The Book contains a wealth of information about pregnancy, including advice on healthy eating.

Tugtar cóip den "The Pregnancy Book" do gach máthair a bhíonn ag súil don chéad uair, agus táirgtear an leabhar i gcomhoibriú leis an nGníomhaireacht um Chur Chun Cinn Sláinte agus dailtear é ar na Boird Sláinte. Tá flúirse eolais sa Leabhar faoi thoircheas, lena n-áirítear comhairle ar ithe sláintiúil.

Parentcraft Classes

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) the number of hospitals that provide parentcraft classes to pregnant women; and (b) the average number who benefit from these classes each year.

(AQW 3097/01)

Ms de Brún: Currently 11 Health and Social Services Trusts provide parentcraft classes in a number of different locations, including hospitals, Health Centres and other community settings. Information on the average number who benefit from such classes is not available.

I láthair na huaire soláthraíonn 11 Iontaobhas Sláinte agus Seirbhísí Sóisialta ranganna i gceird na tuismitheoireachta i roinnt suíomh difriúil, lena n-áirítear ospidéal, Ionaid Sláinte agus suímh phobail eile. Níl eolas ar an meánlíon a bhaineann sochar as ranganna den sórt sin le fáil.

Pregnant Women: Vitamin A

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what advice is given to pregnant women about the consumption of Vitamin A.

(AQW 3098/01)

Ms de Brún: “The Pregnancy Book”, which is distributed to all first time expectant mothers, contains advice on vitamin A consumption.

Tá comhairle ar vitimín A sa leabhar “The Pregnancy Book” a dháiltear ar gach máthair a bhíonn ag súil don chéad uair.

Low Birth Weight

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what research is currently being undertaken in Queen’s University Belfast and University of Ulster on the long-term impact of low birth weight on childhood and adult health.

(AQW 3108/01)

Ms de Brún: There is currently one project funded by the Research and Development Office for the HPSS in the general area of low birth weight and health. The study is entitled “Quality of life and health outcomes for those born with low birth weight: a 50 year follow-up study” and is connected with Queen’s University. I am not aware of any other research in this topic area in the two universities at this time.

I láthair na huaire tá tionscadal amháin maoinithe ag an Oifig Taighde agus Forbartha do na SSSP i réimse ginearálta an mheáchain íseal ag am breithe agus sláinte. Is é an teideal atá ar an staidéar ná “Quality of life and health outcomes for those born with low birth weight: a 50 year follow-up study” agus tá sé ceangailte le hOllscoil na Ríona. Ní heol dom faoi aon thaighde eile sa réimse topaice sin sa dá ollscoil ag an tráth seo.

Effects of the Maternal Diet on the Foetus

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what research is currently being undertaken in Queen’s University Belfast and University of Ulster on the effects of the maternal diet on the foetus.

(AQW 3109/01)

Ms de Brún: The Research and Development Office for the HPSS is not currently funding any research specifically into the effects of maternal diet on the foetus. One study entitled “Diabetes, obesity, intrauterine growth and atherosclerosis: the fetal origins hypothesis” is being funded through the Endocrinology and Diabetes Recognised Research Group. The host institution for this research is the Royal Group of Hospitals HSS Trust. I am not aware of any other research in this topic area in the two universities at this time.

Níl an Oifig Taighde agus Forbartha do SSSP ag maoiniú aon taighde sainiúil ar éifeachtaí aiste bia na máthar ar an bhféatas i láthair na huaire. Tá staidéar amháin dar teideal “Diabetes, obesity, intrauterin growth and atherosclerosis: the fetal origins hypothesis” á mhaoiniú tríd an nGrúpa Aitheanta Taighde Inchréolaíochta agus Diaibeitis. Is é Iontaobhas SSS Ghrúpa Ríoga na nOspidéal an institiúid óstach don taighde sin. Ní heol dom faoi aon thaighde eile sa réimse topaice sin sa dá ollscoil ag an tráth seo.

Ultrasound

Mr O’Connor asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) the assessment she has made of the evaluation carried out on the long-term safety of ultrasound exposure on the foetus and new-born; and (b) the studies on which she has based her conclusion.

(AQW 3128/01)

Ms de Brún: Ultrasound imaging has been used as an effective diagnostic tool for over 30 years. It enables assessment of gestational age and detection of multiple pregnancies and fetal abnormalities. I have been advised that there is no verified documented evidence of adverse effects on patients caused by exposure to diagnostic ultrasound.

Research on the use, benefits and risks of ultrasound is conducted at a number of centres worldwide. Results of current and future research will continue to inform clinicians and patients of the benefits and risks of ultrasound examinations.

Tá úsáid á bhaint as íomháu ultrafhuaime mar uirlis éifeachtach fáthmheasa le os cionn 30 bliain. Cumasaíonn sé measúnú a dhéanamh ar aois gine sa tréimhse iompair mar aon le hilthoirchis agus ainriochtaí féatacha a bhrath. Comhairlítear dom nach ann d’aon fhianaise deimhnithe cáipéisithe d’iarmhairtí dochracha ar othair arna chúisiú ag nochtadh chuig ultrafhuaime fáthmheasa.

Déantar stiúradh ar thaighde ar úsáid, sochair agus rioscaí ultrafhuaime ag roinnt lárionad ar fud an domhain. Leanfaidh torthaí ó thaighde reatha agus taighde amach anseo de bheith ag tabhairt faisnéise do chliniceoirí agus d’othair ar na sochair agus na rioscaí a bhaineann le himscrúduithe ultrafhuaime.

Low Birth Weight

Mr O’Connor asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what assessment can she make of the factors resulting in low birth weight of children born to mothers resident in bed and breakfast accommodation and in receipt of income support.

(AQW 3131/01)

Ms de Brún: The information requested is not available.

Níl fáil ar an eolas a iarradh.

Foetal Drug Syndrome

Mr O'Connor asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of babies born with Foetal Drug Syndrome in each of the last 3 years.

(AQW 3132/01)

Ms de Brún: As Foetal Drug Syndrome is not a recognised medical term or diagnosis, it is not possible to provide this information.

De bhrí nach fáthmheas ná téarma aitheanta liachta é Siondróm Druga Féataigh, ní féidir an t-eolas sin a sholáthar.

Private Health Care Insurance for Staff

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) the number of staff within her Department receiving a private health insurance benefit; and (b) the cost of such provision.

(AQW 3146/01)

Ms de Brún: The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety makes no provision for private health care insurance for staff.

Staff are, of course, free to take out private health insurance cover as private citizens. However, the nature and cost of such insurance is a matter for the individual member.

Ní dhéanann an Roinn Sláinte, Seirbhísí Sóisialta agus Sábháilteachta Poiblí aon fhoráil d'árachas príobháideach chúram sláinte don fhoireann.

Tá cead a gcinn ag an bhfoireann, ar ndóigh, clúdach árachas príobháideach sláinte a ghlacadh mar shaoránaigh phríobháideacha. Is ceist don duine aonair féin, áfach, cineál agus costas árachais den sórt sin.

Hospital-acquired Infections

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many beds each year are taken up with treating patients who have hospital-acquired infections (HAIs).

(AQW 3155/01)

Ms de Brún: The information requested is not available.

Níl fáil ar an eolas a iarradh.

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many patients have died in NI hospitals over the past 5 years due to HAIs (hospital acquired infections).

(AQW 3156/01)

Ms de Brún: The information requested is not available.

Níl fáil ar an eolas a iarradh.

Hospital-acquired Infections

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many cases of hospital-acquired infections have been recorded in (a) the last 5 years; and (b) the first 4 months of 2002.

(AQW 3157/01)

Ms de Brún: The information requested is not available.

Níl fáil ar an eolas a iarradh.

Hospital-acquired Infections

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is the comparison of lost 'bed days' due to (a) cases of delayed discharge; and (b) cases of hospital-acquired infections.

(AQW 3160/01)

Ms de Brún: The information requested is not available.

Níl an t-eolas iarrtha ar fáil.

MRSA

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) any plans currently in place to deal with cases of hospital acquired infections, such as MRSA; and (b) any research being carried out to ascertain the seriousness of these infections upon patients.

(AQW 3161/01)

Ms de Brún: Arrangements for the management and control of infection in hospitals have been in place on foot of my Department's circular, HSS 9/2000. These include enhanced surveillance of hospital-acquired infections such as MRSA bacteraemias and surgical site infection. All acute Trusts and other healthcare facilities, including private nursing homes, have plans in place for the management of both MRSA infections and the colonisation of patients with MRSA. My Department has funded the new Healthcare-Associated Infection Surveillance Centre, based at the Royal Victoria Hospital, and provided additional funding to the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre. Data is currently being collected on MRSA bacteraemias at Trust level, which will allow us to adequately quantify the problem and identify further approaches towards addressing it.

Reducing the related problem of antimicrobial resistance is one of my key priorities. In January 2002 I launched my Department's Antimicrobial Resistance Action Plan, which contains recommendations for action by Health Boards, Trusts, and others, to reduce health care acquired infections. All Trusts have participated in a recent survey of their infection control procedures. In addition we are looking at ways to improve hospital cleanliness and have recently earmarked £300,000 to that end. No specific research into the effect of such infections on patients is currently being funded by my Department.

Is ann do shocrúithe do bhainistiú agus do rialú infhabhtú in ospidéal de bhua chiorclán mo Roinne, HSS 9/2000. Áirítear orthu sin faire mhéadaithe ar infhabhtuithe ospidéalfhaighte mar bacteraemias MRSA agus infhabhtú ag láthair máinliachta. Tá pleananna i mbun ag gach Iontaobhas géarliachta agus ag saoráidí chúram sláinte eile, lena n-áirítear tithe altranais príobháideacha, do bhainistiú infhabhtuithe MRSA agus agus coilíniú othar ag MRSA. Mhaoinigh mo Roinnse Lárionad nua Faire Infhabhtuithe Bainteach le Cúram Sláinte, atá bunaithe ag Ospidéal Ríoga Victoria, agus sholáthair sí maoiniú breise don Lárionad Faire ar Ghalair Theagmhálacha. Tá sonraí á dtiomsú faoi láthair ar bacteraemias MRSA ag leibhéal Iontaobhais, a chuirfidh ar ár gcumas cainníochtú dóthanach a dhéanamh ar an bhfadhb agus cur chuig breise a aithint i dtreo aghaidh a thabhairt air.

Tá laghdú a dhéanamh ar fhadhb bhainteach na frithsheasmhachta antaimhiocróbaí ar cheann de na tosaíochtaí tábhachtacha atá agam. I mí Eanáir 2002 sheol mo Roinnse an Antimicrobial Resistance Action Plan, ina bhfuil moltaí do ghníomh ag Boird Sláinte, Iontaobhais agus dreamanna eile chun ionghabhaithe a fhaightear ó chúram sláinte a laghdú. Bhí na hIontaobhais ar fad rannphairteach i suirbhé le déanaí ar nósanna imeachta rialaithe infhabhtuithe. Chomh maith leis sin táimid ag iniúchadh bealaí le feabhas a chur ar ghlaineacht ospidéal agus tá £300,000 leagtha amach chun na críche sin. Níl aon taighde sainiúil ar éifeacht ionfhabhtuithe den sórt sin ar othair á mhaoiniú faoi láthair ag mo Roinnse.

Speech and Language Therapists

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps Trusts have taken to implement the circular for a new band structure for Speech and Language Therapists. (AQW 3172/01)

Ms de Brún: Fourteen of the nineteen Health and Social Services Trusts employ Speech and Language Therapists. Two of these Trusts have implemented the new band structures for this group of staff and seven Trusts are at various stages of discussion with staff representatives. The remaining five Trusts have yet to make formal offers to staff but would hope to be in a position to do so in the near future.

Fostaíonn ceithre Iontaobhas Shláinte agus Sheirbhísí Sóisialta déag as naoi gcinn déag Teiripeoirí Urlabhra agus Teanga. Chuir dhá cheann de na hIontaobhais seo na bannastruchtúir nua i bhfeidhm don mheitheal oibre seo agus tá seacht n-Iontaobhas ag céimeanna éagsúla de chaibidlí le hionadaithe na n-oibrithe. Tá na cúig Iontaobhas eile chun tairiscintí foirmiúla a thabhairt go fóill do na hoibrithe ach tá siad ag súil go mbeidh siad réidh leis seo a dhéanamh gan mhoill.

MMR Vaccine

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what help and assistance is available for parents of (a) autistic children; and (b) children with learning disabilities, to receive the single MMR vaccine instead of the triple vaccine.

(AQW 3197/01)

Ms de Brún: The MMR vaccine is the safest and best option to protect children against measles, mumps and rubella. There is absolutely no evidence to support the use of separate measles, mumps and rubella vaccines and my Department does not recommend them. Neither Autism or learning disabilities are regarded as contraindications to immunisation with the MMR vaccine. Any parent who is concerned about these issues should speak to their GP or Health Visitor.

The single component vaccines currently being used by a few doctors and clinics are unlicensed products and no sound information is available on batch testing results for either purity or potency. Separating out these vaccines leaves children unprotected against serious infections.

Is í an vacsaín MMR an dóigh is sábháilte agus is fearr le páistí a chosaint ar an bhrúitíneach, an leicneach agus ar an bhrúitíneach dhearg. Níl cruthú ar bith ann le tacú le húsáid vacsaíní ar leith na brúitíní, na leicní agus na brúitíní deirge agus níl mo Roinn a moladh. Ní féidir féachaint ar Uathachas nó ar mhíchumais fhoghlama mar sheachthorthaí de thoradh imdhíonadh leis an vacsaín MMR. Ba chóir do thuismitheoir ar bith atá buartha faoi na ceisteanna seo labhairt lena nGnáthdhochtúir nó lena gCúairteoir Sláinte.

Is táirgí neamhcheadúnaithe iad na vacsaíní comhábhair shingil atá á n-úsáid ag beagán dochtúirí agus clinici faoi láthair agus níl eolas cruinn ar fáil ar thorthaí tástála baisece ar a n-ionacht nó ar a láidreacht. Fágann scaradh na vacsaíní seo páistí gan chosaint ar ghalruithe tromchúiseacha.

Hospital-acquired Infections

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) the range of hospital acquired infections; (b) the number of patients and others who have been affected in each of the last five years; (c) if any targets are in place for yearly reductions; and (d) if these targets have been met.

(AQW 3218/01)

Ms de Brún: There is a large range of infections, both bacterial and viral, that a patient in hospital might contract such as pneumonia, urinary tract infections, skin or wound infections, ventilator assisted respiratory infection, MRSA and other bacteraemias. Some of these are a consequence of medical instrumentation while some are secondary to infection from organisms within the individual. In the past winter some patients in hospital acquired viral gastroenteritis, which had been introduced to the hospital by patients and others from the community. However it is often unclear where the infection is sourced. In the case of MRSA, for example, some 30% of people outside hospitals are, usually harmlessly, colonised by it.

Information on the numbers of hospital patients so affected in the last five years is not available and consequently targets would be inappropriate. Enhanced hospital surveillance of MRSA bacteraemias is ongoing and the first annual figures for this infection, by Trust, will be published mid-year by the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre.

Is ann do raon mór infhabhtuithe, idir bhaictéarach agus víreasach, a d'fhéadfadh othar in ospidéal a tholghadh ar nós níúmóine, ionfhabhtuithe na conaire úiríní, ionfhabhtuithe craicinn nó cneá, MRSA agus bacteraemia eile. Tarlaíonn cuid acu sin mar thoradh ar ionstraimiú liachta agus bíonn cuid acu tánaisteach d'ionfhabhtú ó orgánaigh laistigh den duine aonair. Sa gheimhreadh seo caite tholgh roinnt othar in ospidéal gaistreintríteas víreasach, a thug othair agus daoine eile ón bpobal isteach san ospidéal. Ní léir, áfach, cén foinse a bhí ag an ionfhabhtú. I gcás MRSA, mar shampla, bíonn 30% de dhaoine lasmuigh d'ospidéil coilínithe aige, ach de ghnáth ní bhíonn aon dochar ann.

Níl fáil ar eolas ar an líon othar ospidéil a raibh tionchar dá leithéid orthu sna cúig bliana seo caite agus dá thoradh sin bheadh spriocanna mí-oiriúnacha. Tá faire mhéadaithe ospidéil ar bacteraemia MRSA ar siúl go leanúnach agus foilseoidh an Lárionad Faire Ghalair Theagmhálacha na chéad figiúirí bliantúla, de réir lontaobhais, don ionfhabhtú sin faoi lár na bliana.

Single Vaccine

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps has she taken to make a single vaccine available for children with learning disabilities for (a) mumps; (b) measles; and (c) rubella.

(AQW 3306/01)

Ms de Brún: I refer the Member to my answer to AQW 3197/01.

Treoraím an Ball do mo fhreagra a thug mé ar AQW 3197/01.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Bypass: Enniskillen

Mr Foster asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline (a) when he will provide funding for a Southern By-pass for the town of Enniskillen; and (b) the timescale for commencing such a by-pass. (AQW 2821/01)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr P Robinson): You will be aware that my Department's Roads Service is preparing a 10-Year Forward Planning Schedule of major road schemes, which it is expected could be started within the 10-year period of the Department's Regional Transportation Strategy. A Southern Bypass of Enniskillen is one of many schemes being considered for inclusion in this Schedule. Clearly I will not be able to accommodate all of the schemes that have been suggested, but I hope to publish details of the Schedule later this year. In the meantime I am obviously not in a position to comment on the funding or the timescale for construction of specific schemes which may be included in the schedule.

Specialised Buildings

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail those parts of his Department's estate not used for departmental or related ancillary purposes.

(AQW 3028/01)

Mr P Robinson: I can only respond in relation to 'Specialised Buildings' within my Department, that is to say those buildings and assets that have a specialised purpose (for example Roads Service Depots). The control of the remainder of the 'General Office Estate' is the responsibility of the Minister of Finance and Personnel.

My Department has a number of properties that fall within the category of 'Specialised Buildings'. Of these properties, Water Service has identified 68 sites covering 150 acres, which have been declared surplus to requirements as Water Service continues to rationalize the delivery of its services. These surplus sites are being disposed of in accordance with established procedures.

The Department's Roads Service has identified nine properties which fall within the category of specialised buildings and which are now classed as surplus to requirements. The properties are not currently being used for Departmental purposes and largely consist of surplus depots.

The details of those properties are as follows: -

- 2 Clonmakate Road, Craigavon (Birches Depot) - Disused Roads Service Depot – Sale Agreed.
- Maddens Road, Drumnacanver, Craigavon - Disused Roads Service Depot – Sale Agreed.
- Loughgall Road, Armagh - Disused Roads Service Depot – For sale on open market.
- 22 Drumcrew Road, Newtownbutler - Surplus Building – Sale agreed.
- 237 Victoria Road, Sollus, Bready, Strabane - Disused Roads Service Depot – With the Valuation and Lands Agency to place on open market.
- 8 Ballymagowan Road, Crossowen, Clougher – Disused Roads Service Depot – Sale Agreed.

- Arvalee Depot, Omagh – Disused Roads Service Depot – to be place on open market in near future.
- 62 Lackaboy Road, Enniskillen - unused building and yard – In the process of being declared surplus.
- 80 Galbally Road, Drumskinney, Dromore, Co Tyrone Disused Roads Service Depot – On open market since January 2002. No sale agreed as yet.

Equality Commission Guidelines

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Regional Development what criteria is used to determine which groups or individuals are consulted as part of the equality impact assessment of any new proposals. (AQW 3082/01)

Mr P Robinson: My Department carries out consultation in accordance the Department's approved Equality Scheme which requires the Department to consult with those listed in the Scheme's consultation list. This is in accordance with Equality Commission Guidelines.

Woodburn Road, Carrickfergus

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development to provide a pedestrian crossing on the Woodburn Road, Carrickfergus giving safe access to the retail/commercial complex at Clipperstown. (AQW 3103/01)

Mr P Robinson: As you know, following a request from Carrickfergus Borough Council for the provision of a pedestrian crossing on Woodburn Road, my Department's Roads Service carried out a pedestrian/ vehicular survey at the location in question. The survey showed that the number of pedestrians crossing the road was too low to warrant the provision of such a facility. Furthermore, officials conducting the survey observed that there was sufficient gaps in the traffic flow to permit pedestrians to cross the road safely using the pedestrian refuge islands that have already been provided.

In the circumstances, there are no plans to provide a controlled pedestrian crossing at this location. Roads Service does, however, propose to upgrade the lighting units on the refuge islands during the current financial year and are currently assessing the carriageway markings and signing in the area to see if further improvements can be made.

Traffic Speeding Levels: Hilltown, Newry

Mr Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development what progress has been made towards implementing the programme aimed at reducing traffic speeding levels through the village of Hilltown, Newry. (AQW 3104/01)

Mr P Robinson: My Department's Roads Service has advised me that, following a comprehensive consultation exercise involving local groups, Councillors and other individuals, a scheme to provide traffic calming measures in Hilltown was completed in March 2001. The scheme was aimed at reducing traffic speeds through the village and so reduce the likelihood of road accidents. The measures included the provision of entry gateways (red textured surfacing and signage on yellow backing boards), central hatching, kerb build-outs and pedestrian refuge islands.

Roads Service will continue to monitor the success of this scheme and, if necessary, will implement any further measures that are considered to be appropriate.

Comber Bypass

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the timescale for the start and completion of the Comber By-pass. (AQW 3175/01)

Mr P Robinson: I am pleased to advise that the Comber Bypass scheme is making good progress. The objection to the vesting order has been withdrawn, thus avoiding a public inquiry and the associated delay. This means that all statutory procedures are now complete.

Further ground testing has been undertaken and the design and tender documents are being adjusted in accordance with the findings.

My Department's Roads Service has commenced the tender process and a list of tenderers has been compiled. The exact date for each stage of the tender programme have yet to be finalised, but I will be making an announcement in due course.

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Estate Wardens: Carrickfergus

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (a) the number of estate wardens working in the NIHE District Office at Carrickfergus; and (b) the estates for which they have responsibility. (AQW 3118/01)

The Minister for Social Development (Mr Dodds): There are no Estate Wardens working for the Housing Executive in the Carrickfergus Borough Council Area. There are no immediate plans to recruit any Estate Wardens for Carrickfergus, although the need for wardens is kept constantly under review.

Pensioners: Housing Benefit

Mr Gibson asked the Minister for Social Development what steps is he taking to ensure pensioners receive their full entitlement to housing benefit. (AQW 3127/01)

Mr Dodds: The Social Security Agency is working in close partnership with groups who represent pensioners on a range of measures to ensure that all pensioners claim and receive all the help they are entitled to.

The Housing Executive use a number of means to advertise Housing Benefit and to encourage its uptake among elderly people. At the beginning of each tenancy and on an ongoing basis, staff in District Offices provide advice to all tenants, including elderly people, on entitlement to Housing Benefit. Each year an advertising campaign is undertaken in all local papers promoting uptake of Housing Benefit. An advisory leaflet specifically aimed at pensioners has recently been produced and distributed to all the District Offices and will be distributed more widely in due course.

Housing Benefit Fraud

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Social Development what plans he has to further combat housing benefit fraud. (AQW 3147/01)

Mr Dodds: As part of its strategy for combating Housing Benefit fraud the Housing Executive will continue to develop systems to prevent fraud, and to ensure that if it does occur it will be dealt with appropriately.

In addition to its existing preventative and investigative controls the Housing Executive will introduce the following:

- an extension of its data matching programme to identify instances in which information provided for Housing Benefit purposes differs from that held on other systems;
- improved arrangements for the referral of suspected fraud cases to the Social Security Agency for investigation; and
- a series of exercises aimed at targeting high risk categories of claims.

In addition the Housing Executive in conjunction with the Social Security Agency will ensure that full use is made of the powers available to it under the provisions of the Social Security Fraud Act (Northern Ireland) 2001.

Recruitment Drive: Social Security Agency

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (a) the results of the recruitment drive for Administrative Officers in the Social Security Agency circa November 2001; and (b) any mechanism for internal promotion from Administrative Assistant to Administrative Officer during the same period. (AQW 3180/01)

Mr Dodds: There was no specific recruitment drive for Administrative Officers in the Social Security Agency in November 2001. The Social Security Agency fills Administrative Officer vacancies on a continuous basis from the list of suitable applicants held by the NICs Recruitment Service. Twenty-nine Administrative Officers were recruited in November 2001.

The Social Security Agency has established mechanisms for the internal promotion of staff from Administrative Assistant to Administrative Officer. These mechanisms involve the holding of promotion boards which result in successful Administrative Assistants being listed in merit order. Individual officers are then posted to vacancies in accordance with the Social Security Agency's staff placement policy. During November 2001, there were no internal promotions from Administrative Assistant to Administrative Officer.

Incapacity Benefits: Retention of Documents

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (a) how long documents relating to incapacity benefit are kept; and (b) what measures are in place to prevent misplaced or lost documents. (AQW 3181/01)

Mr Dodds: Documents relating to Incapacity Benefits are normally retained by the Department for 14 months. However, when documents are required in connection with compensation recoveries or overpayments, they will be kept until the situation is rectified, regardless of time. Each individual Incapacity Benefit file is kept alphabetically and examined as part of the normal checking regime to ensure that documents are not lost or misplaced.

Code of Conduct

Mr Adams asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 2839/01, to identify the process by which he determines that all requests for meetings are dealt with in accordance to both the Ministerial Pledge of Office and the Code of Conduct with regard to equality of treatment, impartiality and preventing discrimination. (AQW 3194/01)

Mr Dodds: I take all my decisions in accordance with the Ministerial Pledge of Office and the Code of Conduct, as I undertook to do when taking up Ministerial office.

Housing Bill

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development if legislation to transfer responsibility for traveller sites from local councils to the NI Housing Executive (NIHE) includes the provision of facilities other than straight-forward dwellings, eg work areas, animal paddock etc. (AQW 3199/01)

Mr Dodds: The Housing Bill includes provisions which will transfer responsibility for the provision of Traveller sites from District Councils to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. It also includes provisions which will allow the Housing Executive to acquire existing sites from District Councils. Decisions as to which facilities should be incorporated into sites will be made on an individual basis in accordance with need and in line with obligations under the Race Relations (Northern Ireland) Order 1997, and the policies and practices outlined in the New Policy on Traveller Accommodation document.

Housing Bill

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development if legislation to transfer responsibility for traveller sites from local councils to the NI Housing Executive (NIHE) includes responsibility for the provision of transit or halting sites. (AQW 3201/01)

Mr Dodds: The Housing Bill includes provisions which will transfer responsibility for the provision of Traveller sites from District Councils to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. It also includes provisions which will allow the Housing Executive to acquire existing sites from District Councils. The definition of Traveller sites will permit the inclusion of transit or halting sites should the Department agree to the transfer of this specific responsibility to the Housing Executive.

Traveller Sites

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development if legislation to transfer responsibility for traveller sites from local councils to the NI Housing Executive (NIHE) will exonerate management, whether NIHE or a Housing Association, from accusations of discrimination under the race relations 1997 order in the allocation of accommodation to travellers. (AQW 3202/01)

Mr Dodds: The Northern Ireland Housing Executive and Housing Associations will exercise their responsibilities as regards allocation of accommodation to Travellers in accordance with all appropriate legislation and policies.

Grants: Criteria for Voluntary Organisations

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister for Social Development to outline (a) the criteria set for awarding grants to voluntary organisations/charities; and (b) if the criteria changes from year to year. (AQW 3224/01)

Mr Dodds: Good Practice Guidance on Funding from all Northern Ireland Departments was published for consultation within Partners for Change, Government's Strategy for Support of the Voluntary and Community Sector. A final version of that Guidance which takes account of consultation responses will be published by my Department in the near future. The overall criteria for receipt of funding from this Department towards costs incurred by voluntary and community sector organisations are in line with the draft Good Practice Guidance.

Specific criteria for funding are set individually in relation to the business objectives which that funding is intended to achieve, taking account of various factors, including the scale and scope of the funding itself, the number of voluntary and community sector organisations involved and a range of issues put forward from consultations or discussions, internal and external evaluations or other examples of best practice. Given the broad range of funding programmes operated within this Department and the very considerable number of separate criteria which have been established and agreed to take forward these funding programme, it would be a disproportionately large exercise to compile all of that detailed material into one response.

The process of developing and refining criteria is ongoing and can therefore respond to changes in circumstances during the funding programme including revised Audit Office guidelines or new legal requirements.

Housing Bill

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development to outline (a) progress on legislation to transfer responsibility for traveller sites from local councils to the NI Housing Executive; and (b) when he will introduce the Bill in the Assembly. [R] (AQW 3230/01)

Mr Dodds: The consultation period for the Housing Bill ended on 30 April 2002. It is proposed that the Bill will be introduced in the Assembly before the summer recess.

Housing Bill

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development, in light of the proposals contained in the Housing Bill in respect of the housing needs of travellers, to explain why is there a need to continue with those provisions contained in Part IV of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) (NI) Order 1985 that relate to the provision of travellers sites. (AQW 3238/01)

Mr Dodds: Following consultation on the Housing Bill it is proposed to repeal the provisions contained in Part IV of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) (NI) Order 1985 that relate to the provision of travellers sites.

Applications for Home Improvements

Mr M Murphy asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the length of time it takes for the Housing Executive to process a standard application for home improvement. (AQO 1299/01)

Mr Dodds: The Housing Executive sets targets and monitors performance on a number of grants management issues over which it has control. The main results for the end of March 2002, show that against a target of 90%, 87% of all Schedules of Grant Aided Works were issued within twelve weeks of inspection. Additionally, against a target of 100%, 97% of formal approvals were issued within 6 months of completed documentation being received. In respect of payments, against a target of 90%, 86% were issued within 6 weeks of the request for the final inspection to be carried out. Lastly, in 99% of cases, properties were inspected within 20 weeks of a preliminary enquiry being received.

Fuel Poverty

Mr McGrady asked the Minister for Social Development what further action he is taking to eliminate fuel poverty in Northern Ireland. (AQO 1270/01)

Mr Dodds: Northern Ireland is benefiting from one of the most comprehensive programmes in the UK to tackle the scourge of fuel poverty.

My target is to take 20,000 homes, many occupied by elderly people, out of the fuel poverty trap by the end of 2004. The main plank of our attack on this problem is the Warm Homes scheme. This scheme began in July last year and by the end of March 2002, over 4,300 households had benefited from the scheme.

In addition to the Warm Homes Scheme, we have a raft of other measures in place to ensure that new social housing is built to the highest standards of heating and insulation, to provide grants for people to improve their homes and a replacement programme to put more efficient heating into Housing Executive homes. Winter fuel payments of £200 also help the 60's and over with their heating costs.

To build on the substantial work that is already underway I have commissioned work to start on a Fuel Poverty Strategy for Northern Ireland.

I trust you will agree that these measures are a clear demonstration of my Department's commitment to do everything possible to remove the blight of fuel poverty in Northern Ireland.

Protection of Private Properties at Interfaces (POPPI)

Mr G Kelly asked the Minister for Social Development if the guidelines that apply to the Housing Executive to cover their properties per house through the new POPPI Scheme also apply to Housing Associations.

(AQO 1302/01)

Mr Dodds: The Protection Of Private Properties at Interfaces (POPPI) scheme is administered by the Housing Executive, but it is aimed at providing security measures for private properties only. It does not apply to Housing Executive dwellings, which are covered by a separate scheme.

The POPPI scheme is intended provide the same security enhancements necessary for private homeowners as that currently provided for tenants in social housing. The works content will therefore be broadly equivalent to those measures that the Housing Executive undertakes for its own properties.

ASSEMBLY COMMISSION

Credit Cards

Mr Dallat asked the Assembly Commission to detail (a) the number of credit cards it has issued; and (b) the spend on each card in the financial year ended 31 March 2002. (AQW 3159/01)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Dr O'Hagan):

- (a) To date the Assembly Commission has issued a total of 45 HM Government Procurement Cards. This figure includes replacement cards for existing users, for example where cardholders have change duties, and cards which have subsequently been cancelled and not re-issued due to holders leaving office.

HM Procurement cards should be distinguished from personal credit cards in that they provide for greater control such as single transaction limits, monthly transaction limits and blocks on specified merchant categories and on cash withdrawals

- (b) The spend on each card in the financial year ended 31 March 2002 is detailed in the table below:

Stationery and Reprographic Office	£160,730.19
Travel Desk	£29868.41
Head of Administration	£473.46
Research and Information (IT)	£586.02
Assembly Commission Office (2 cards)	£3105.33
Office of the Speaker	£2537.60
Finance and Personnel	£2468.85
Bill Office	£449.65
Business Office	£399.10

Northern Ireland Assembly: Staff

Mr S Wilson asked the Assembly Commission to detail (a) the number of staff employed by the NI Assembly; (b) the number employed who have (i) impaired sight; (ii) impaired hearing; and (c) the number who are listed as disabled. (AQW 3208/01)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Rev Robert Coulter): To date the current number of staff employed by the NI Assembly Commission is 326. This number includes seconded staff and those who have been directly recruited to the NI Assembly.

Of the 326 staff employed, one has declared a visual impairment, three have declared that they have impaired hearing and in total eight have declared themselves as having a disability as defined under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

Friday 17 May 2002

Written Answers to Questions

OFFICE OF THE FIRST MINISTER AND DEPUTY FIRST MINISTER

Children's Commissioner

Ms McWilliams asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister when it plans to introduce legislation to establish a Children's Commissioner; and to make a statement. (AQW 2868/01)

Reply: Work on the drafting of legislation to establish a Children's Commissioner is well advanced and we intend to introduce the Bill to the Assembly this month. This is later than intended, but it was necessary to take sufficient time to ensure that this important and significant piece of legislation fulfils our objective of putting Northern Ireland at the leading edge of best practice.

Credit Cards

Mr Dallat asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail (a) the number of credit cards in use in (i) its Department; (ii) Executive Agencies of its Department; (iii) NDPBs of its Department; and (iv) any other bodies funded by its Department; and (b) how much has been spent on each card in the financial year ended 31 March 2002. (AQW 2981/01)

Reply: There are no credit cards currently in use within our department. However, during the financial year ended 31 March 2002 a Government Procurement Card was used and the total amount spent was £2,687.48.

Four credit cards are currently in use within our Department's non-departmental public bodies or bodies funded by a grant in aid. The Development Office of the Northern Ireland Economic Council has one credit card and the amount spent using this card in the financial year ended 31 March 2002 was £268.04. The Equality Commission has three credit cards and the amount spent on each in the financial year ended 31 March 2002 was £7,260, £4,432 and £1,483 respectively.

The Community Relations Council currently has no credit cards in use but did previously have two cards. The amount spent on each in the financial year ended 31 March 2002 was £3,507.92 and £564.50 respectively.

'Reshape, Rebuild, Achieve'

Mr Berry asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister how much it cost to publish the victims' strategy document 'Reshape, Rebuild and Achieve'. (AQW 2993/01)

Reply: The cost of design, printing, and distribution of "Reshape, Rebuild, Achieve", the Key Contacts List for Government Departments and Agencies, and the posters and leaflets which accompanied those documents, will amount to approximately £42,000, although some invoices are still outstanding. This figure includes the costs associated with the official launch of the documents and the distribution of some 220,000 leaflets through the three main newspapers in order to reach as many individual victims as possible throughout Northern Ireland.

Staffing Levels

Mr Weir asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister, pursuant to AQW 1811/01, to outline (a) if the staffing figures represent the final staffing complement; (b) if not, when do they expect to reach full staffing complement; and (c) the expected final staffing complement. (AQW 3069/01)

Reply:

STAFFING LEVELS FOR NORTH SOUTH IMPLEMENTATION BODIES

Bodies	(a) Final staffing complement	(b) Date for reaching final complement	(c) Expected final staffing complement
Waterways Ireland	Not final	End of 2002	381
North-South Language Body	Not final	End of 2002/ early in 2003	65
-Foras na Gaeilge		End of 2002/ early in 2003
-Tha Boord o Ulster Scotch	Not final		12
Special Eu Programmes Body	Not final	End of May 2002	31
InterTradeIreland (ITI)	Not final	End of 2002	42
Food Safety Promotion Body	Not final	On - going	Not yet approved
Foyle Carlingford and Irish Lights Commission (FCILC)	Not final	On - going	Not yet approved

Age Discrimination

Mr Gibson asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister, pursuant to AQO 835/01, what targets have been set to tackle age discrimination.

(AQW 3133/01)

Reply: We intend to issue our proposals for legislation to address age discrimination early next year. We will ensure that this legislation is in operation before the 2006 deadline imposed by the European Employment Framework Directive.

Department for Regional Development: Ombudsman Complaints

Mr M Murphy asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister how many complaints the Ombudsman has received in relation to the Department for Regional Development.

(AQW 3163/01)

Reply: The Assembly Ombudsman is independent of the Assembly and of government departments. The inquiry should be addressed to the Assembly Ombudsman, 33 Wellington Place, Belfast BT1 6HN.

Economic Policy Unit

Mr Byrne asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to give an update on the progress of the Economic Policy Unit in devising an economic development strategy for Northern Ireland.

(AQO 1320/01)

Reply: The Assembly endorsed the Executive's second Programme for Government for the 2002/03 financial year and beyond in December 2001. The Economic Policy Unit worked with all departments to co-ordinate the work for the Programme.

The Programme sets out two priorities- "Securing a Competitive Economy" and "Investing in Education and Skills" which will contribute to achieving our economic development goals. Within these two priorities, the Programme proposes a wide range of actions which will contribute to the achievement of a modern, high-skilled, knowledge-based economy. These include actions on infrastructure; attracting inward investment; promoting enterprise and innovation; regenerating the rural economy; and improving the education and training of our young people. This approach builds on the proposals in the first Programme for Government, published in March 2001, focusing on the right conditions for economic growth and involves actions across a range of departments.

There is a major role for government in ensuring that the essential infrastructure necessary for economy growth is in place. The new borrowing powers which will be available to the Executive, as part of the Reinvestment and Reform Initiative, should help to ensure that we can make major improvements in our infrastructure.

Women's Advice Centres: Funding

Ms E Bell asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to make a statement on the funding of Women's Advice Centres.

(AQO 1319/01)

Reply: Women's Centres can obtain funds from a range of sources. Particularly important among these sources are Government Departments, European Funds, and the National Lotteries Charities Board. This mix of funding sources is a reflection of the broad range of services which these centres provide to their local communities.

Departments make funding available through specific programmes which have particular aims and objectives in line with Departmental priorities. To access these funds, voluntary and community organisations, which includes the women's centres, are invited to bid, on a competitive basis, against set criteria

World Summit: Sustainable Development

Mr Hussey asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister, in light of the recent press reports on climate change and its effect on Northern Ireland, what steps are being taken to ensure Northern Ireland is represented at the World Summit on Sustainable Development later this year.

(AQO 1308/01)

Reply: Since we last answered questions on this matter, the UK Government has indicated that places will be available within its delegation for each of the devolved administrations. In view of this we are presently considering this administration's representation.

Programme for Government

Mr A Maginness asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what plans the Executive has to stimulate private equity to fund key elements of the Programme for Government.

(AQO 1360/01)

Reply: As stated in the Programme for Government, we initiated last spring the Working Group Review on the opportunities for Public Private Partnerships/Private Finance Initiative (PPP/PFI) in all major public service programmes. The report is to be published later this month to enable us to consult on "financing our future". This will include consideration of and comment on the full range of possible sources of funding and help in the development of a future policy framework on PPPs that takes account of our local context.

The Executive is actively encouraging investment by the private sector to strengthen the economy and generate new employment. The Reinvestment and Reform Initiative, announced on 2 May, provides an opportunity for a substantial infrastructure investment programme, beginning with £200 million of investment in the next two years. Using this package in conjunction with other sources of finance will enable the renewal of essential assets.

As part of the Initiative we intend to establish a new strategic investment body which would be able to take and use the mix of sources of financing – be it from the new borrowing power, from traditional public sector finance or from PPPs. It would link this to the best procurement methods, whether involving the public or private sectors or a combination. By using the new body the Executive hopes to provide the best possible opportunities to promote the effective use of all the various means available.

The Executive's current approach to stimulating private equity to contribute to our broader economic goals is to leverage increased venture capital provision in the market place where there is clear evident of market failure via venture capital funds financed by a combination of public and private sector finance.

In conclusion, we need to look at all possible sources of funding to help improve our public services and bring together contributions from all sectors including the private sector.

Executive: IRA Activities in Colombia

Mr K Robinson asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if the Executive has discussed the alleged activities of the IRA in Colombia.
(AQO 1361/01)

Reply: Business transacted at Executive meetings is confidential and is only made public as and when agreed by the Executive.

Statutory Economic Advice

Mrs Courtney asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what plans it has to review the statutory economic advice it receives.
(AQO 1313/01)

Reply: In September 2000 the Executive Committee initiated a 'Review of the Northern Ireland Economic Council and the Provision of Economic Advice and Research'. A Steering Group, comprised of academics, researchers and departmental representatives, was set up to carry out the task. The review looked at both the demand for and supply of economic advice. .

Following completion of the review the Executive has agreed that it should propose to set up a single research body to replace the Northern Ireland Economic Council and Northern Ireland Economic Research Centre and we will be consulting on this proposal with the NIEC and NIERC, with the Committee of the Centre, the Enterprise, Trade and Investment and Finance and Personnel Committees.

Meetings with the Prime Minister

Mr Beggs asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail any recent meetings with the Prime Minister.
(AQO 1305/01)

Reply: The First Minister and Deputy First Minister met the Prime Minister on 2 occasions in the last 6 months. In addition, the First Minister and Deputy First Minister met with the Prime Minister and the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Odyssey Arena on 2 May when the Reinvestment Reform Initiative was announced. Both the First Minister and Deputy First Minister have each had 2 separate meetings with the Prime Minister during this period.

Discrimination: Disabled People

Ms Lewsley asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to make a statement on any plans to further extend protection against discrimination for disabled people.
(AQO 1311/01)

Reply: I refer the member to the response provided to AQO 1233/01 on 29 April.

Convention on the Future of the EU

Dr Birnie asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what arrangements are in place to ensure a Northern Ireland input to the current convention on the Future of the EU.
(AQO 1321/01)

Reply: Measures are being put in place to raise the profile of the Future of Europe debate in Northern Ireland, including a conference to be held in June or early July 2002. The conference will include representatives of all major sectors and organizations which have involvement in European issues. The Convention will take account of the views expressed by the wider community through the conference and other measures. Meanwhile we are keeping in touch with the development of the debate at the Convention.

Women's Organisations: Funding

Ms McWilliams asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to make a statement on the inter-departmental group that has been formed to explore issues related to the funding of women's organisations; including when it will report. (AQO 1307/01)

Reply: Mr Haughey along with Ministers de Brun and Farren met with representatives of Women's Centres. As a result of this meeting Ministers considered that the best way to begin the process of looking at this was for officials to look at the issue in a general way and initially report back to them.

Our officials convened interdepartmental meetings with departmental representatives and undertook research to explore issues relating to core funding for the women's voluntary organisations.

It is important that the funding difficulties of the Women's Centres be resolved in a strategic context as their problems are not unique within the Voluntary and Community Sector. This was recognised in a recent review (The Harbison Review) led by the Department for Social Development who have responsibility for funding the sector as a whole.

Officials are presently finalising a position paper on the funding of women's organizations generally. They are also liaising with officials in the Department for Social Development with a view to identifying how these funding problems can be most effectively addressed. The position paper will be sent to Ministers for their consideration within the next few weeks.

Community Relations Policy

Mr Ford asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to make a statement on the review of Community Relations policy. (AQO 1318/01)

Reply: The Community Relations Policy Review Report has been completed and submitted to us for consideration. It is a lengthy and comprehensive document which offers a number of options as to the form of and approach to be adopted in a new community relations strategy. We want to give those serious and detailed consideration before reaching any conclusion in relation to this crucial area.

Executive Programme Funds

Mr Maskey asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if it will consult with the Committee of the Centre before submitting any bids for funding from the Executive Programme Funds. (AQO 1316/01)

Reply: We recognise the importance of consultation between departments and their committees in respect of Executive Programme Fund bids and confirm that we will consult with the Committee of the Centre on potential executive Programme Fund bids before they are lodged.

AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Brucellosis

Lord Kilclooney asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail (a) the number of cases of brucellosis in cattle recorded in each of the last 5 years; (b) the number of cases in the months of January and February 2002; and to make a statement.

(AQW 2763/01)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms Rodgers): The number of cases of Brucellosis in cattle recorded in each of the last 5 years was

1997	91 reactors
1998	357 reactors
1999	607 reactors
2000	587 reactors
2001	726 reactors

(b) The number of cases in the month of January 2002 was 44 reactors and the number of reactors in February was 111.

Brucellosis continues to be a serious problem in Northern Ireland with some 284 herds currently being restricted. As the figures demonstrate there has been a significant increase over the last five years in the number of reactors detected and of course the situation was exacerbated by the FMD outbreak last year which resulted in the diversion of resources and the suspension of Brucellosis testing.

That said we have taken steps to deal with the problem through moving from biennial to annual blood testing in the high incidence Divisions of Enniskillen, Newry and Armagh as well as introducing cull cow blood sampling in both of the OTMS slaughter plants and a bulk milk sampling scheme for dairy herds both of which are helping to pick up infection at an early stage.

I have also arranged for more veterinary manpower to be made available for Brucellosis as the remaining FMD controls are further relaxed.

Apart from these ongoing measures a formal review conducted by my officials looking at options for dealing with Brucellosis is nearing completion and in due course I will be considering their recommendations and consulting with industry on the way ahead.

Northern Ireland Potato Sector: Policy Review

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development when will the Report into the Potato Industry, which was compiled by a consultant and forwarded to the Department in November 2001, be published and placed in the public domain.

(AQW 3164/01)

Ms Rodgers: The Consultancy Report on a Policy Review of the Northern Ireland Potato Sector was commissioned by me to enable me to consider future support arrangements for the Northern Ireland Seed Potato sector in particular. I intend to put out for public consultation the Recommendations arising from the Report, so that I can take account of the industry's views on the range of options identified. I would have done this at an earlier stage but felt it prudent to await decisions by the present promotional body, Seed Potato Promotions Ltd (SPP), on its own future, given the recent and continuing difficult situation facing that Company.

As you may be aware, SPP decided, at an Extraordinary General Meeting on Monday 22 April, that it would cease to trade from the end of June 2002. In light of that decision, the way is now clear to begin the consultation phase. I shall be writing shortly to the Assembly Agriculture and Rural Development Committee to begin the consultancy process. I would hope to be able to make final decisions on the way forward in August or September following consultations.

Honeybees: Varroa Mite

Lord Kilclooney asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline (a) if the Varroa Mite has been discovered amongst bees in Northern Ireland, (b) can this infection be controlled, (c) if this will have an impact on pollination in apple orchards; and to make a statement.

(AQW 3266/01)

Ms Rodgers: I can confirm that the parasitic mite Varroa has been discovered in Honey-bee hives in eight locations in north County Down. Infestations are presently under chemical treatment to control the mite populations on site at each of the apiaries. Bee Inspectors will monitor this treatment to the end of the exposure period. This treatment does not guarantee 100% elimination of the mites but reduces numbers to below a manageable threshold over the summer months. Treatment is applied in autumn if monitoring dictates necessity. Standstill Notices are in operation until the Department is satisfied that the risk of spread is negligible.

Infestations can be effectively treated, but once the mite becomes widespread, there is little doubt that there will be re-occurrences. You are probably aware that, up to now, Northern Ireland has been the only area of the British Isles considered free from this mite, and its presence has obvious implications for bee keepers in leading to loss of honey production and fruit pollination. However, it is of no great surprise that infestation has now occurred here since it is widespread in Great Britain and infestations have been increasingly detected in the Irish Republic, gradually moving north, with two border counties affected in recent years. The extent of the infestations in Northern Ireland will only be known when the annual Spring Survey of hives, which is currently underway, is complete.

Freedom from the mite has enabled Northern Ireland to maintain Protected Zone (PZ) Status within the EU, enabling us to control imports of Queen Bees and bee semen, and contingency arrangements have been put in place to deal with this outbreak. Notices have been served on the hive owners with regard to the isolation, treatment, and if necessary, destruction of the affected hives, and restrictions have been imposed at all bee-keeping locations within a 5km radius of each of the sites. Furthermore, my officials had earlier arranged for wide distribution of a comprehensive booklet dealing with the detection, management and treatment of Varroa.

My officials are currently considering, in consultation with the industry, whether or not PZ status is sustainable. A decision on this issue will also influence whether the present outbreaks will require destruction of the hives or whether measures can be confined to simply treating the bees.

There is no restriction on beekeepers providing pollination services as long as they are not served with a Standstill Notice.

Rural Development Programme: Financial Assistance

Mr Paisley Jnr asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many farmers have applied for financial assistance under the Rural Development Programme.

(AQW 3287/01)

Ms Rodgers: The measures currently open under the Rural Development Programme do not apply to individual applications. However, groups or collectives of farmers may bring forward projects for consideration. The measures open are under the Northern Ireland Programme for Building Sustainable Prosperity (BSP) and the Peace II Programme.

To date, 87% of the applications under the "for profit" element of the BSP Programme have come from farmers' groups or collectives. Only 5% of the applications under the "not for profit" element of that Programme have come from farmers' groups or collectives. Likewise, 5% of applications under the Peace II Programme have come from farmers' groups or collectives.

Individual farmers may bring forward projects under the LEADER + Programme. It is expected that LEADER + Action Groups will be in a position to call for project applications around August / September 2002.

Fishing Vessels

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail (a) the number of registered fishing vessels in each of the last 10 years; and (b) the number which have been decommissioned in each of the last 10 years. (AQW 3292/01)

Ms Rodgers: (a) Registration of fishing vessels is the responsibility of the Registry of Shipping and Seamen at Cardiff. My Department does not retain information on the number of vessels whose registration denotes a port in Northern Ireland. However, the information available on the number of vessels locally licensed by my Department, is as follows:

NORTHERN IRELAND LICENSED FLEET FROM 1991

At December	10m & Under	Over 10m
1991	225*	264
1992	227*	264
1993	139*	238
1994	154	215
1995	161	206
1996	166	184
1997	158	187
1998	161	190
1999	164	181
2000	166	179
2001	172	177

*Records of FCU vessel numbers may not be complete for these years. Licensing was not extended to 10m and under vessels until 1 May 1993

- (b) During the last ten years, there have been five Decommissioning schemes and a total of 84 vessels have been permanently removed from the Northern Ireland fishing fleet as a result of these schemes. 15 vessels were decommissioned in 1994, 13 in 1995, 20 in 1996, 5 in 1997 and 31 in the 2001 scheme.

Burns Report

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQO 1214/01, to detail the contact her officials have had with the Department of Education to ensure that rural issues are taken into consideration in regard to the Burns Report. (AQW 3358/01)

Ms Rodgers: The Burns Report is not a set of policy proposals. DARD officials have not been involved in consideration of the Report. DARD officials will however be consulted, as appropriate when later this year the Department of Education is drafting policy proposals for post-primary education and, if necessary, will assist in the Rural Proofing of those proposals.

Hayes Review

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQO 1214/01, to detail the contact her officials have had with the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to ensure that rural issues are taken into consideration in regard to the Hayes Review. (AQW 3359/01)

Ms Rodgers: Consultation on the issues surrounding the Acute Hospitals Review Group Report will start in the coming weeks. DARD officials will be consulted, as appropriate when DHSSPS is drafting proposals for changes to existing policies and, if necessary, will assist in the Rural Proofing of those proposals.

Review of Public Administration

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQO 1214/01, to detail the contact her officials have had with the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to ensure that rural issues are taken into consideration in regard to the Review of Public Administration. (AQW 3360/01)

Ms Rodgers: Even though this Review is in its early stages DARD officials have already been involved in consideration of the draft Terms of Reference for the Review. The Office of the First and Deputy First Minister has already identified the need to apply Rural Proofing to Service Delivery. DARD officials will be consulted, as appropriate when OFMDFM is drafting policy proposals for Public Administration and, if necessary, will assist in the Rural Proofing of those proposals.

Regional Development Strategy

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQO 1214/01, to detail the contact her officials have had with the Department for Regional Development to ensure that rural issues are taken into consideration in regard to the Regional Development Strategy. (AQW 3361/01)

Ms Rodgers: DARD officials, at many levels and in all key work areas, have been closely involved with their colleagues in the Department of Regional Development in the development of the Regional Development Strategy. The contribution from DARD is evident from the extent to which rural issues are reflected in the Strategy Document. The Section on Rural Northern Ireland is comprehensive, and rural issues are reflected in all the other key sections of the document.

DARD officials are members of the Inter-departmental Steering Group set up to monitor the implementation of the Strategy. This will ensure that rural issues continue to be fully considered in the future development of policies that support the Strategy.

Consultancy Firms/Consultants

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 1911/01, to detail the level of expenditure in each of the last 3 years on consultancy firms/consultants based in (a) Northern Ireland; (b) the Republic of Ireland; (c) the rest of the UK; and (d) outside the British Isles. (AQW 3367/01)

Ms Rodgers: In response to AQW 1911/01, DARD expenditure on external consultancy and consultancy reports in the period since devolution was confirmed as follows:

Financial Year	Cost
1999/00 (wef 2/12/99)	£158,346
2000/01	£538,171
2001/02 (to 18/1/02)	£632,499
This expenditure can be apportioned as follows:
Financial Year	Base	Cost
1999/00 (wef 2/12/99)	Northern Ireland	£133,186
	Rest of UK	£25,160
2000/01	Northern Ireland	£422,227
	Rest of UK	£51,169
	Outside British Isles	£64,775
2001/02 (to 18/1/02)	Northern Ireland	£540,787
	Republic of Ireland	£24,667
	Rest of UK	£60,720
	Outside British Isles	£6,325

Accommodation Review

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQO 1214/01, to detail the contact her officials have had with the Department of Finance and Personnel to ensure that rural issues are taken into consideration in regard to the Accommodation Review. (AQW 3371/01)

Ms Rodgers: This Review is in its early stages. DARD officials have been involved in consideration of papers including an Interim Report from consultants identifying strategic issues relating to the Review. DARD officials will be consulted, as appropriate when DFP is drafting proposals for the Review and, if necessary, will assist in the Rural Proofing of those proposals.

Integrated Administration and Control System

Mr Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline (a) the proposed timetable for the distribution of Integrated Administration and Control System (IACS) 2002 Aid application forms; and (b) any contingency plans in place for applicants that fail to meet the final date due to the delay in receiving the forms from her Department. (AQW 3395/01)

Ms Rodgers: In Northern Ireland the annual information packs for Area Aid applications under the Integrated Administration and Control System (IACS) are issued in mid-March each year for return on or before 15 May. In 2002 some 25,000 IACS application packs were issued on 18 March 2002 to all producers who submitted an Area Aid application 2001. Blank application forms and information packs have also been available at all County Agriculture Offices since that date for producers entering the scheme in 2002 for the first time.

The issue and ongoing return of 2002 declarations is consistent with previous years. The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development is not aware of any problems in Northern Ireland relating to either the distribution or receipt of IACS application packs and the closing date for receipt of applications (without penalty) remains 15 May 2002. Under normal rules late applications, which will be subject to penalty, can be accepted until 9 June 2002.

Flooding

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline (a) those areas that are prone to flooding; (b) the assessment which has been made of such areas; (c) any steps being taken in regard to flood prevention; and (d) the financial cost of such. (AQW 3407/01)

Ms Rodgers: I am aware of concerns about flooding in the light of recent reports of studies on climate change. I regret however that it is not possible to provide a simple and definitive response to the first part of your question. My Department's Rivers Agency has historic records of individual flood events over many years and can provide localised information if requested. However these records do not indicate the frequency or significance of the event. In particular in urban areas flooding may result from blockages of pipes or grilles and is unpredictable.

I can assure you however that Rivers Agency has a robust system for analysing flooding events to identify the causes and scope for remedial action, whether in the form of removal of a simple blockage in a culvert system, or a full scale study of the financial viability of a capital works scheme to provide or upgrade flood defences.

Many households in Northern Ireland currently benefit from major flood alleviation schemes undertaken in towns across the Province and a major scheme to address flooding in Newry is nearing completion. Rivers Agency has a full programme of capital works to alleviate flooding risk where such works are financially viable.

The Agency also has a scheduled maintenance regime for open watercourses, urban culverts and grilles to minimise the risk of flooding.

Additionally Rivers Agency has a vital advisory role in its liaison with DOE Planning Service in seeking to avoid inappropriate development eg development in floodplains.

The annual Rivers Agency budget is in the order of £20 million which includes capital works, maintenance and enforcement.

Foot-and-Mouth Disease: Expenditure

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the total expenditure during the Foot-and-Mouth outbreak to (a) farmers; (b) veterinary surgeons; and (c) valuers. (AQW 3454/01)

Ms Rodgers: The total expenditure to

- (a) Farmers - £7.4 million
- (b) Veterinary Surgeons - £1.5 million
- (b) There was no expenditure in respect of external valuers as Departmental Valuation Officers carried out all valuations. As there were no disputes at the time of valuation, it was not necessary to employ independent valuers.

CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Her Majesty The Queen's Golden Jubilee

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the uptake of grants available for the celebration of the Queen's Golden Jubilee. (AQW 3178/01)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr McGimpsey): The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure released notification of two rounds of non-Lottery funding for the Golden Jubilee celebrations in November last. This information was circulated to community groups, schools, churches and network organisations, offering a small grant of £500 to £5,000 to groups organising events to celebrate the Golden Jubilee.

The first round had a closing date of November, and the second a closing date of February. Over 600 application forms were requested for both rounds, with a total of 274 returned. The total amount of funding which was granted through the Golden Jubilee Non-Lottery Scheme was £366, 834.80, spread over 199 groups.

These figures only relate to the Golden Jubilee Non-Lottery Scheme operated through the Department.

Funding for Jubilee events is still available through Awards for All, the Lottery distributors' small grants scheme and through some district councils.

The important feature of this occasion, as I stated in the Assembly on 19 February, is that it is not about money. People want to celebrate, whether they get a grant or not and they will do so. The Jubilee is about small events, people coming together and celebrating, and a sense of community. The grants scheme in itself will not be an indicator of how many events take place. Ultimately there will be far more events than awards, because of the enthusiasm that exists in the province.

Salmon Fishing: River Bush

Mr Morrow asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail (a) the number of salmon caught on the special stretch of the River Bush last season; (b) the number of daily permits issued last season; and (c) how do those figures compare with the previous 5 years. (AQW 3234/01)

Mr McGimpsey: The Special stretch of the River Bush is a common term used for three individual stretches of water namely the Leap, New and Town stretches.

The statistics requested in respect of the above stretches are as follows:

The number of salmon caught on the Special stretch in 2001 was 174 (116 Town, 34 New and 24 Leap).

The number of salmon daily permits issued in 2001 was 392 (212 Town, 103 New and 77 Leap).

The figures for the previous five years were:

NUMBER OF SALMON CAUGHT

	Town	New	Leap	Total
2000	82	23	17	122
1999	125	26	34	185
1998	195	56	88	339
1997	106	59	42	207
1996	80	35	17	132

NUMBER OF DAILY PERMITS

	Town	New	Leap	Total
2000	289	127	55	471
1999	401	144	173	718
1998	392	150	420	962
1997	276	139	187	602
1996	286	132	134	552

Both the number of salmon caught and day tickets issued in 2001 were below the six-year average but this can be attributed largely to the outbreak of foot and mouth disease, which curtailed angling.

Two and Four Wheel Motorsport

Rev Dr William McCrea asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the number of responses received by the Sports Council NI during the public consultation exercise on the draft Strategic Plan for 2 & 4 wheel motorsport 2002-07. (AQW 3268/01)

Mr McGimpsey: A total of seven responses were received as follows:

- Marketing Solutions
- Antrim Borough Council
- Lisburn Borough Council
- Fermanagh District Council

Consultancy Firms/Consultants

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 1940/01, to detail the level of expenditure in each of the last 3 years on consultancy firms/consultants based in (a) Northern Ireland; (b) the Republic of Ireland; (c) the rest of the UK; and (d) outside the British Isles. (AQW 3293/01)

Mr McGimpsey: The figures on the attached table include actual expenditure by my core Department, Ordnance Survey of Northern Ireland (OSNI) and the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland (PRONI) for each of the last three years, and a breakdown of where the consultants and consultancy firms used are located.

DEPARTMENT OF CULTURE ARTS AND LEISURE – USE OF CONSULTANTS

Financial Year	Total Cost	Spend in relation to location of consultant/consultancy firm
		NI	RoI	UK	Outside of British Isles
1999/2000	£8,000 (Core Department)	£8,000	Nil	Nil	Nil

Irish Language: NICS

Mrs Nelis asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail his plans for the promotion of the Irish language within the NI Civil Service. (AQW 3316/01)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department will continue to provide policy advice, support and guidance to Ministers, officials in the Northern Ireland Civil Service and others on linguistic diversity, which includes Irish. DCAL chairs the Interdepartmental Charter Group which was set up to advise on implementing and reporting on the European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages. My Department, on behalf of the Charter Group, has drawn up draft policy guidance on meeting UK Government commitments in respect of Irish in the European Charter. DCAL is currently considering the issue of language training and awareness seminars and will put proposals to the Charter Group for consideration in due course. My Department is also leading a project to put in place a central translation service for Irish and has set up an expert advisory group to develop a house style for use in public sector Irish translations in Northern Ireland.

Two and Four Wheel Motorsport: Development Officer

Rev Dr William McCrea asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail (a) any finances which have been made available to facilitate the appointment of a 2 & 4 wheel motorsports development officer and (b) when such an appointment is likely to be announced. (AQW 3269/01)

Mr McGimpsey: No decisions on the appointment of a development officer for two and four-wheel motor sports have yet been made. The strategic plan for the sport is still under consideration following the recently completed consultation exercise. I expect, however, to receive the final version shortly when the way forward will be considered in consultation with the governing bodies of the sport.

Rugby League

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline the funding made available by his Department to develop Rugby League in Northern Ireland. (AQW 3384/01)

Mr McGimpsey: The Sports Council for Northern Ireland has statutory responsibility for the development of sport within Northern Ireland, and this includes the allocation of funding. Funding is allocated through the appropriate governing body for each sport.

The Sports Council for Northern Ireland does not provide financial support to rugby league as there is no formal rugby league structure or governing body in Northern Ireland. A number of approaches have been made to the Sports Council in recent years but there is no formal pattern emerging to suggest the imminent emergence of a robust and active governing body for rugby league in Northern Ireland.

Orange and Institutional Halls

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he, in consultation with his Ministerial colleagues, would consider designating Orange and Loyal Institution Halls as community centres for the purpose of fostering the culture and heritage of the Unionist tradition in the community so that areas where no separate community halls exist were not disadvantaged in this regard. (AQW 3402/01)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department has no powers to designate halls as community centres in the manner that you suggest, nor does it have the resources to fund their development in this way.

There is, however, nothing to prevent the Orange Order taking action on its own to make its halls available for cultural activities. Indeed, it is for the Order alone to determine the usage of its halls.

Community Amateur Sports Clubs

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what steps he has taken to provide charitable status to community amateur sports clubs to bring Northern Ireland into line with legislation on the mainland. (AQW 3423/01)

Mr McGimpsey: It is not a matter for me to provide charitable status to community amateur sports clubs. Clubs seeking charitable status must make application through the Inland Revenue, which, in turn, bases its decisions on charity law. I understand that, in making decisions on the charitable status of an organisation, the Inland Revenue refers to the guidelines of the Charity Commission and the decisions of the courts in England.

Killyleagh FC

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if he will consider (a) to publicly recognise the achievements of Killyleagh FC, who, as a junior football team, reached the semi-finals of this year's Irish Cup; and (b) presenting the team with some type of memento from his Department in recognition of their commitment and determination in their field. (AQW 3424/01)

Mr McGimpsey: I fully recognise Killyleagh Youth Club's outstanding achievement in reaching the semi-final of this year's Irish Cup, and I would be grateful if you would convey my warmest congratulations to the club. I am sure you will appreciate that it would not be appropriate for me to provide a memento to mark this success. This would be a matter for the Irish Football Association as the governing body for football.

EDUCATION

Exemption from Fair Employment Legislation

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Education why are employees within State Controlled, Catholic Maintained and Integrated Sectors of Education exempt from fair employment legislation. (AQW 3241/01)

The Minister of Education (Mr M McGuinness): Teaching has been an excepted employment since 1976, first under the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act, and now under the current legislation, Article 71 of the Fair Employment and Treatment (Northern Ireland) Order 1998. The exemption derives from the largely denominationally segregated types of education here, and a recognition that the majority of parents wish their children to be taught in schools where full regard is given to their religious denomination. It does not apply to non-teaching employees. The Equality Commission for Northern Ireland, which has powers to re-examine the position, now has a review of the teaching exemption underway.

Northern Ireland Task Group on Autism

Ms Morrice asked the Minister of Education to outline (a) his policy on the scheme provided by Applied Behaviour Analysis (ABA) for individuals with autism; and (b) to make a statement on the number of cost-benefit analyses which exist in the UK and the USA. (AQW 3251/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The Member may be aware that the report of the Northern Ireland Task Group on Autism was launched on 7 May 2002. A copy has been sent to all Assembly Members.

The report makes recommendations on educational provision for young people with autism. Chapter 3 examines a range of therapies available, including ABA. The report does not find a preference for any single approach and emphasises that intervention programmes should address the unique needs of the child. I understand that, where it has been the wish of the parents that children with autism remain at home and undergo an ABA programme, the ELBs have, on occasion, made a contribution to the cost.

I will wish to consider the recommendations of the Task Group carefully, in order to determine the most effective educational interventions, which can be made to support the needs of these pupils. To assist this, the report will be circulated widely and I shall convene a conference in the autumn to discuss the way forward.

I do not propose, at this time, to make any statement on the number of cost benefit analyses undertaken in the UK and USA.

Autistic Spectrum Disorders: Centre of Excellence

Mrs Carson asked the Minister of Education to detail (a) the tenders placed in the public domain regarding the siting of the Centre of Excellence for Autistic Spectrum Disorders; (b) other centres that were considered for the location of the Centre of Excellence for Autistic Spectrum Disorders; (c) the criteria used to locate the Centre of Excellence for Autistic Spectrum Disorders at St Joseph's Adolescent Training Centre in Middletown and (d) the total cost of this project to the Department.

(AQW 3282/01)

Mr M McGuinness: A full economic appraisal, which presented a range of options, accompanied the proposal made to the Executive Programme Funds for the establishment of the Centre on a North-South basis. The favoured option was for the purchase of the former St Joseph's Adolescent Centre, Middletown, in line with a valuation provided by the Valuation and Lands Agency. The economic appraisal was scrutinised and endorsed by the Department of Finance and Personnel. This did not identify any other existing premises as an option. Since the Centre will be acquired by the purchase of existing premises, a tendering process was not appropriate.

The criteria used to locate the Centre were that:

- the services provided should be cost effective;
- it should be situated within a reasonable distance of both jurisdictions, North and South;
- it should be accessible to the main centres of population in the area;

- it should be able to provide a mix of residential, non-residential, long term and short term placements for children with ASD; and
- it should enable the development of professional expertise in the area of ASD among educationalists.

The cost of purchasing the centre to my Department is £1.5M which is, of course, subject to contract. Details of the full running costs of the centre are in the process of development.

Dyspraxia

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Education what is the current policy/guidelines for primary schools regarding the detection of pupils with symptoms of dyspraxia. (AQW 3294/01)

Mr M McGuinness: All schools, having concern about any type of special educational need which a pupil may have, operate the five stage approach as outlined in the Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs. At Stage 3 the school may seek external support from the appropriate Education and Library Board's Educational Psychology Service which, if dyspraxic tendencies are suspected, will make a referral to the Community Paediatrician and may also involve an Occupational Therapist. The various professionals involved with a pupil would then give the school advice and guidelines on how best to support the pupil.

In addition all Boards offer school training on dyspraxia and refer to the excellent publications and websites on dyspraxia.

Post-Primary Review

Mrs Carson asked the Minister of Education to make it his policy that whatever Post-Primary Education Review recommendations are adopted, they will not be implemented until their financial viability has been ascertained. (AQW 3331/01)

Mr M McGuinness: I want post-primary arrangements which will achieve equality, access, choice and excellence for all pupils. I will carefully consider the financial implications of any new arrangements before final decisions are taken.

Post-Primary Review

Mrs Carson asked the Minister of Education to make it his policy that whatever Post-Primary Education Review recommendations are adopted, pilot schemes will be used to ascertain their workability before implementing the recommendations Province wide. (AQW 3332/01)

Mr M McGuinness: I have invited comments on the Burns proposals; suggestions for modifications or for alternative arrangements. Decisions on new arrangements will not be taken until I have considered the responses. I cannot comment about piloting any new arrangements before decisions are taken on the form they will take.

Child Protection

Mr Gibson asked the Minister of Education what mechanisms are in place to ensure that schools have a policy on child protection. (AQW 3335/01)

Mr McGuinness: All of my Department's Circulars on child protection have made it quite clear to schools that they should have a child protection policy. A survey of schools in 1997 asked if they had a policy and those schools which did not or failed to reply were followed up to ensure compliance. The inspection of pastoral care arrangements in schools provides a further monitoring mechanism, as does the annual updating of designated child protection personnel in schools by the Education and Library Boards.

Counselling Services

Mr Gibson asked the Minister of Education what measures are in place to improve counselling services for young people in schools. (AQW 3336/01)

Mr McGuinness: The Education and Training Inspectorate is currently undertaking a review of the counselling support which is available to pupils. The report will be published in late Autumn and will inform a strategy for the improvement and expansion of provision as resources permit. A limited expansion of provision, under the aegis of the Education and Library Boards, will take place over the next two years with resources which have been made available from the Executive Programme Children's Fund.

Pupils: Peanut Allergy

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Education what education programmes are available to teachers to identify cases of peanut allergy in pupils. (AQW 3337/01)

Mr M McGuinness: Peanut allergy is a medical condition and as such teachers are dependant on medical professionals for identification and diagnosis.

Once a school has been made aware of a pupil with this condition, the school's medical support team is contacted and medical staff give training for individual teachers where it is deemed appropriate.

In addition the Education and Library Boards and Health and Social Services Trusts circulate advice and guidance to schools.

Early in the next school year, the Department of Education will be issuing guidance to schools on how to support pupils with medical needs

Pupils: Epileptic Attacks

Mr Morrow asked the Minister of Education what training is provided for (a) teachers; and (b) other school staff, to assist children who may suffer an epileptic attack at school. (AQW 3365/01)

Mr M McGuinness: Epilepsy is a medical condition and as such teachers are dependent on medical professionals for identification and diagnosis.

Once a school has been made aware of a pupil with this condition, the school's medical support team is contacted and medical staff give training for individual teachers, where it is deemed appropriate. This will include training in the monitoring and administration of medication to control the condition and the steps to take, should an attack occur.

In addition the Education and Library Boards and Health and Social Services Trusts circulate advice and guidance to schools.

Early in the next school year, the Department of Education will be issuing guidance to schools on how to support pupils with medical needs

School Visits

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Education to list all the schools he has visited since taking Office. (AQW 3373/01)

Northern Ireland Council for Integrated Education

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Education to outline (a) the funding allocated to the Northern Ireland Council for Integrated Education (NICIE) for each year since 1999; and (b) the number of staff employed by NICIE both full-time and part-time. (AQW 3396/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The funding allocated to the Northern Ireland Council for Integrated Education (NICIE) by the Department of Education since 1999 is as follows:

Year	1999/2000	2000/2001	2001/2002	2002/2003
Amount Allocated	412,550	414,361	429,500	431,000

NICIE has 23 staff of which 6 are part-time. The Department of Education provides funding for 11.5 full time equivalent posts in the current financial year.

Irish Medium Schools: Grant Aid

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Education to outline (a) the number of Irish Medium (i) primary; and (ii) secondary schools which receive 100% grant aid; (b) the number of Irish Medium (i) primary; and (ii) secondary schools registered with the Department but do not qualify for grant aid; (c) the number of pupils attending Irish Medium (i) primary; and (ii) secondary schools; and (d) the percentage that attend Irish Medium schools who receive 100% grant aid. (AQW 3397/01)

Mr M McGuinness:

- (a) Irish-medium schools may either receive grant aid for both recurrent and capital costs or recurrent costs alone. The number of Irish-medium schools receiving 100% grant aid is as follows:

	Primary	Secondary
Both Capital and Recurrent	12	2
Recurrent Only	3	-

- (b) There are currently 9 Irish-medium primary schools registered with the Department that do not receive funding.
- (c) There are at present 2,223 pupils being educated in the Irish-medium of which 1,828 attend primary and 395 secondary schools.
- (d) 92% are educated in schools that are receiving 100% grant aid for at least recurrent costs.

Schools: Grant Aid

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Education to outline (a) the number of integrated (i) primary; and (ii) secondary schools which receive 100% grant aid; (b) the number of integrated (i) primary; and (ii) secondary schools registered with the Department that do not qualify for grant aid; (c) the number of pupils attending integrated (i) primary; and (ii) secondary schools; and (d) the percentage that attend integrated schools who receive 100% grant. (AQW 3398/01)

Mr M McGuinness:

- (a) Integrated schools may receive either grant aid for both recurrent and capital costs or recurrent costs alone. The number of Integrated schools receiving 100% grant aid is as follows:

	Primary	Secondary
Both Capital and Recurrent	26	15
Recurrent Only	3	2

- (b) All Integrated schools are receiving grant-aid.
- (c) There are at present 14,626 pupils being educated in Integrated schools of which 5,379 attend primary and 9,247 secondary schools.
- (d) 100% are educated in schools that are receiving 100% grant aid for at least recurrent costs.

Irish Medium Promotional Body

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Education to detail (a) the funding allocated to the promotional body for Irish/Gaelic medium education for years 1999-00, 2000-01, 2001-02; (b) the number of staff the promotional body employs both full and part-time; (c) the number of students studying Irish in English medium schools; and (d) the cost of such. (AQW 3409/01)

Mr M McGuinness:

- (a) The Irish-medium Promotional Body was established in August 2000 and has received funding as follows:

Year	Funding Allocated £
1999/2000	Nil
2000/2001	123,604
2001/2002	210,000

- (b) The Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta currently employs five full-time members of staff.
- (c) Irish is offered in all secondary schools under Catholic management and also at some integrated schools. The number of pupils studying Irish is not available. In 2000/01 some 2,407 Year 12 pupils in English medium schools entered for GCSE Irish.
- (d) It is not possible to provide a breakdown of expenditure associated with a single subject area.

Pupils: Behaviour

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Education to outline (a) the number of incidences of (i) violent behaviour; and (ii) abusive behaviour by pupils against teachers in each of the last 10 years; (b) any representation that has been made to his Department on this issue; and (c) the number of teachers on sick leave due to violent or abusive behaviour by pupils. (AQW 3410/01)

Mr M McGuinness:

- (a) The Department does collect information about suspensions notified to the ELBs and about expulsions. To date this information has been about the numbers of pupils involved, not about the reasons. However, a set of standard definitions for reasons for suspensions has recently been agreed with ELBs and CCMs and work is in hand to encourage schools to use them from the beginning of the 2002/03 school year.

Information about any representation, by letter or in meetings, over the last 10 years, on this issue could only be provided at a disproportionate cost, as it would involve a physical search of all Departmental records relating to that period.

Data on the number of teachers on sick leave due to violent or abusive behaviour by pupils is not available as the Department records sick leave according to the nature of the illness rather than the cause.

Burns Report

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Education to detail which of the recommendations of the Burns Report (a) require primary legislation for their implementation; (b) can be introduced by means of Statutory Rules; and (c) can be implemented by a policy change within his Department. (AQW 3411/01)

Mr M McGuinness: I have invited comments on the Burns proposals, suggestions for modifications or for alternative arrangements. Decisions on new arrangements will not be taken until I have considered the responses. I cannot comment on the detailed implications of introducing any new arrangements before decisions are taken on the form they will take.

Her Majesty The Queen's Golden Jubilee

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Education to detail (a) any plans he has to celebrate the Queen's Golden Jubilee; and (b) what measures he has put in place to ensure staff from his Department can celebrate this event. (AQW 3493/01)

Mr M McGuinness: Events to celebrate the Golden Jubilee are being promoted by the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure. I have no plans to initiate any other activities. The staff of the Department of Education, in common with Civil Servants in other Departments, are receiving one additional day's holiday on 4 June to mark the occasion.

EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

Student Exchanges

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what assistance is available for student exchanges between Northern Ireland and USA. (AQW 3105/01)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Ms Hanna): A Northern Ireland student on an exchange to the USA can be considered, in certain circumstances, for support in respect of fees, supplementary allowances and loans under the Student Support Regulations.

Support is also available through the Business Education Initiative for travel, living costs, books, insurance and personal allowances for a number of Northern Ireland students studying in US colleges.

Queen's University, Belfast: Students' Union Bar

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the financial turnover in the Students' Union Bar at Queen's University, Belfast for the financial year 2000-01. (AQW 3152/01)

Ms Hanna: Queen's University, like all UK Universities, is a legally independent body with a large degree of autonomy in managing its own affairs including interfacing with its student body. I have no information on the financial turnover in the Students' Union Bar at Queen's University for the financial year 2000/01. During this time, the bar licence was held by the Queen's Union Club; the bar finances were separate from those of the University.

Queen's University, Belfast: Land & Property

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to list all land and property owned and registered to Queen's University, Belfast and the total value of this property. (AQW 3165/01)

Ms Hanna: Queen's University, like all other UK Universities, is a legally independent body with a large degree of autonomy to manage its affairs. As regards estates it is obliged to comply with certain prescribed procedures but these do not require notifying the Department of individual asset values. However the total value of the University's assets is reflected in its Annual Accounts a copy of which may be obtained from the University.

Queen's University, Belfast: Register of Addresses

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if Queen's University, Belfast maintains a register of addresses where all students are living during term-time. (AQW 3166/01)

Ms Hanna: Queen's University, like all other UK Universities, is a legally independent body with a large degree of autonomy in managing its affairs including contact details relating to students. I have therefore no locus in this matter which is internal to the University.

Queen's University, Belfast: Accommodation

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the total number of places available in University-owned/controlled accommodation to undergraduate students at Queen's University, Belfast. (AQW 3167/01)

Ms Hanna: Queen's University, like all other UK Universities, is a legally independent body with a large degree of autonomy to manage its affairs including the provision of student accommodation. I have therefore no locus in this matter which is internal to the University.

Queen's University, Belfast: Attendance

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail (a) if Queen's University, Belfast take a roll-call at lectures; and (b) to list the attendance at lectures of undergraduate students by (i) year groups; and (ii) Faculty. (AQW 3168/01)

Ms Hanna: Queen's University, like all other UK Universities, is a legally independent body with a large degree of autonomy in managing its affairs including student attendance. I have therefore no locus in this matter which is internal to the University.

Catering Colleges

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline (a) the number of students enrolled in each of the catering colleges in each of the last 5 years; (b) what representations have been made to the Department in relation to the future of these colleges and the courses they offer; (c) her assessment in relation to the future of these colleges; (d) the geographical spread of students who enrolled in each college in the last 5 years; and (e) where students have gained employment in the last 5 years. (AQW 3191/01)

Ms Hanna: The Northern Ireland Hotel and Catering College (NIHCC) is the only college which specialises specifically in hospitality and catering. The remaining 16 colleges offer a range of full-time and part-time courses in hospitality and catering as part of their provision.

I have arranged for tables detailing enrolments in hospitality and catering across the FE sector, the country of domicile for students and the destination of students leaving hospitality and catering, for the last 5 years, to be placed in the Assembly library. Figures relating to the academic year 2001/2002 are provisional.

My Department has recently consulted on a proposal to merge the NIHCC with the University of Ulster (UU) and representations have been made by a number of interested parties; these representations are currently being considered.

New Deal: Self-employment

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail (a) the self-employment route available through New Deal; (b) the numbers who have availed of that route; and (c) how many have returned to claiming benefit since inception of the programme. (AQW 3210/01)

Ms Hanna:

- (a) The self-employment route available within New Deal provides initial awareness training in self-employment issues and the opportunity to try out a business idea for up to 26 weeks while in receipt of a training allowance.
- (b) Since its introduction (April 1998) by the end of March 2002 a total of 980 participants started the self-employment option - of whom 217 were still participating at that time.
- (c) To date 367 participants have returned to benefits after completing the self-employment option. The destination of participants is counted as the last known destination within 3 months of leaving the programme.

Adult Literacy

Mr Gibson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what progress is being made to reduce the number of adults lacking basic literacy and numeracy skills. (AQW 3278/01)

Ms Hanna: My Department published a Framework and Consultation Paper on Adult Literacy entitled 'Essential Skills for Living' on 17 April 2002. This paper is out for public consultation until the 21 June 2002. After the consultation period my officials will analyse all responses received and produce by September 2002 an action plan to tackle the problems of adults with low levels of literacy and numeracy.

Adult Literacy: Curriculum

Mr Gibson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the Northern Ireland Curriculum for teaching adults basic literacy and numeracy skills.

(AQW 3279/01)

Ms Hanna: There is at present no agreed curriculum to guide the work in Essential Skills in Northern Ireland. The Department is currently piloting a number of projects to test how the Adult Core Curriculum can best be applied in Northern Ireland. The aim will be to develop a curriculum, which is sufficiently flexible to meet the different learning styles, the different prior achievements and the different goals of learners. Northern Ireland will have a regional curriculum in place for Essential Skills at Entry Level by September 2002 and for all levels by September 2003.

Further Education: Funding

Mr Gibson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what recent representations she has received in respect of funding for universities and further education colleges.

(AQW 3280/01)

Ms Hanna: In respect of further education, there have been a number of recent representations received from MPs and MLAs. These include: requests about progress on proposals for major capital works at specific further education colleges; details of financial support available for students; details of colleges which are facing financial difficulties; and the use of further education funding vis-à-vis match funding for European Social Fund projects.

As regards higher education, the issue of funding has been raised at recent meetings with the Vice-Chancellors of Queen's University, Belfast and University of Ulster, the Assembly Committee and the Association of University Teachers.

Further Education: Funding

Mr Gibson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what plans she has for increasing funding to further education colleges; and to make a statement.

(AQW 3281/01)

Ms Hanna: Total funding of £154 million has been made available, in the 2002/2003 financial year, for the Further Education Sector. The majority of this funding is in support of further education colleges and is provided to colleges through their main recurrent block grant and through various earmarked funding initiatives.

Lecturers: Workload

Mr Gibson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps she is taking to tackle the excess workload placed on lecturers.

(AQW 3284/01)

Ms Hanna: The terms and conditions of service of Further Education lecturers are a matter for governing bodies of Colleges, after consultation with teacher unions. Duties in excess of contractual hours are voluntary. Likewise, Higher Education institutions are responsible for their own employment policies and practices.

Consultancy Firms/Consultants

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 1934/01, to detail the level of expenditure in each of the last 3 years on consultancy firms/consultants based in (a) Northern Ireland; (b) the Republic of Ireland; (c) the rest of the UK; and (d) outside the British Isles.

(AQW 3296/01)

Ms Hanna: The details requested are as follows:

Financial Year	NI	Other UK	ROI	Outside UK/ROI
1999/00	£626,058	£81,673	0	0
2000/01	£550,730	£15,099	0	0
2001/02	£527,477	£8,058	0	0

The 2001/02 figures represent spending for the year to March 2002.

The Northern Ireland figures included contracts with large international companies with offices in Northern Ireland.

Meetings with Lecturers' Unions

Mr Gibson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what recent meetings she has had with lecturers' unions to discuss excess administration placed on lecturers.

(AQW 3338/01)

Ms Hanna: I met with a delegation from the National Association of Teachers in Further and Higher Education on 26 March 2002 to discuss a range of issues including Further Education lecturers' pay and conditions. Regarding the workloads of FE lecturers, I would refer you to my response to your question AQW/3284/01 on the same topic.

University Applications: Lower Socio-Economic Groups

Mr Gibson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps she is taking to encourage university applications from pupils from lower socio-economic groups.

(AQW 3339/01)

Ms Hanna: Following a review of Student Support arrangements in NI a £65m package was introduced to encourage participation in Higher Education, particularly from students from low income families. My Department is funding special projects that aim to stimulate demand for HE from underrepresented groups by raising aspirations, improving student attainments and thereby increasing progression rates into HE. Further, my Department provides a funding premium to the universities to assist with retention of students from these groups.

Apprenticeships

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps she is taking to increase the numbers participating in apprenticeships. (AQW 3399/01)

Ms Hanna: The Department is actively publicising the benefits of Modern Apprenticeships, and raising awareness of apprenticeships generally, amongst careers advisers, young people, parents, employers, employer representative bodies and training organisations.

As part of this campaign, the Department, in conjunction with the NI Training Councils Association, is currently promoting a competition to select the NI "Modern Apprentice of the Year".

Non-European Labour

Mr Carrick asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline any plans she has to assist employers with the importation of non-European labour, to help meet the needs of local industry within the short-term, particularly in the (i) food manufacturing; and (ii) processing sectors; and to make a statement. (AQW 3412/01)

Ms Hanna: Employers may be permitted to fill vacancies with non-European nationals if they can demonstrate that recruitment within EEA countries has been unsuccessful. Under the Immigration Act 1971 potential employees must possess the skills, qualifications and experience necessary for the job. Work permits are not issued for low-level or unskilled jobs.

European Union Labour

Mr Carrick asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline any plans she has to assist employers with the importation of European Union labour to help secure the production capacity of the food manufacturing; and (ii) processing sectors; and to make a statement. (AQW 3413/01)

Ms Hanna: My Department has, as part of its JobCentre network, a European Employment Service and has been working successfully with a number of employers in the food production and processing sector to recruit labour from the European Union.

Funeral of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth The Queen Mother

Mr Wells asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to make a statement on the arrangements made to enable staff at (i) Queen's University; and (ii) University of Ulster, to mark the funeral of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth The Queen Mother. (AQW 3414/01)

Ms Hanna: The Northern Ireland universities, like all other UK Universities, are legally independent bodies with a large degree of autonomy in managing their affairs. I have therefore no locus in this matter which is internal to the universities.

Fair Employment Tribunals: Chairpersons

Mr Ford asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many additional Chairpersons have been appointed to Fair Employment Tribunals and Industrial Tribunals in the last 2 years. (AQW 3549/01)

Ms Hanna: There were no new Chairpersons appointed to the Fair Employment Tribunals and Industrial Tribunals between May 2000 and May 2002.

ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

National Insurance

Mr Morrow asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what assessment can he make in relation to the proposed 1% increase in national insurance and its impact on (a) the level of employment (b) the economy; and to make a statement. (AQW 3235/01)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Sir Reg Empey): The thresholds and rates for National Insurance contributions are a reserved matter for which Her Majesty's Treasury is responsible across the UK. The increase in the amount of employers' NI contributions was one of a number of measures affecting business including, for example, a reduction in small companies' corporation tax rate and an R&D tax credit for larger companies. The combined impact on the level of employment and the economy in general of all these measures is uncertain and depends on decisions made by individual firms.

Consultancy Firms/Consultants

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 1952/01, to detail the level of expenditure in each of the last 3 years on consultancy firms/consultants based in (a) Northern Ireland; (b) the Republic of Ireland; (c) the rest of the UK; and (d) outside the British Isles. (AQW 3297/01)

Sir Reg Empey: It would not be possible to supply this information except at disproportionate cost to the Department.

Viasystems EMS, Antrim Road, Ballynahinch

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline the steps he is taking to protect jobs at Viasystems EMS, Antrim Road, Ballynahinch. (AQW 3298/01)

Sir Reg Empey: Invest NI maintains a close working relationship with management at Ballynahinch and has recently completed a "competitiveness assessment" of the company. As a result Invest NI has agreed a programme of business improvement activity, to take place over the next few months.

Whilst the Telecoms market remains depressed, in the short-term, the company will continue to monitor business conditions closely and react to the situation in matching its workload and employment levels to market demand. Invest NI will continue to liaise closely with the company

Regulatory Burden on Business

Mr Gibson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what steps he is taking to reduce the regulatory burden on business. (AQW 3374/01)

Sir Reg Empey: On 10 December 2001 I received the agreement of my Executive colleagues to a number of proposals to help reduce regulatory burdens on business. The proposals, which are being implemented by Northern Ireland Departments, include the introduction of revised Regulatory Impact Assessment requirements for new legislation, prior notification periods for all new legislation affecting business and the formal introduction of an Enforcement Concordat for Departments, agencies and local authorities.

Tourism Facilities: Lough Neagh

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if he has any plans to encourage tourism facilities in and around Lough Neagh in the Upper Bann area. (AQW 3390/01)

Sir Reg Empey: The Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) is currently administering a further funding programme under the EU Programme for Peace and Reconciliation 2000-2004. Under Priority 4 of this initiative grant assistance will be made available to marketing projects that will assist Northern Ireland to position itself in the global marketplace and on infrastructure-type projects that will promote and develop, in a sustainable manner, the region's natural and cultural attributes. Grant applications under the International Fund for Ireland's (IFI) Visitor Attraction Scheme will also be available from June 2002. This scheme is aimed at the improvement of facilities at existing visitor centres and amenities.

Applications for assistance under the EU and IFI initiatives, as well as NITB's ongoing Tourism Development Scheme, will be welcome from the Lough Neagh area of Upper Bann.

In addition all existing tourist accommodation businesses located in the area which have been certified by the NITB are eligible to apply to Invest Northern Ireland for Selective Financial Assistance grants.

Ulster Way

Mr J Wilson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail his commitment to securing the future of the Ulster Way. (AQW 3415/01)

Sir Reg Empey: The Countryside Access and Activities Network (CAAN), on behalf of the DoE's Environment and Heritage Service, the Northern Ireland Sports Council and the Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) are currently undertaking a review of this long distance walking route. CAAN's final report, which is due to be available towards the end of this year, will include recommendations and an action programme for the future of the Ulster Way. NITB (and the other bodies involved) will take on board the contents of this final report in considering the future of the Ulster Way.

NITB recognises walking as a key product area. It annually produces a dedicated information guide to "Walking in Northern Ireland" and both chairs and co-ordinates a Walking Product Marketing Group that discusses both the development and marketing of walking routes throughout Northern Ireland.

UK Coal Industry

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, in light of the European Commission granting €6.5 million to the UK coal industry to cover operating losses in 2001, to outline if NI businesses could fulfil the same criteria and thus benefit from similar central government intervention (IP/02/616).

(AQW 3495/01)

Sir Reg Empey: The Department of Trade and Industry announced on 24 April 2002 that four coalmines in England and Wales were to receive over £4m of Government aid under the UK Coal Operating Aid Scheme, following European Commission approval. The grant applies to UK coal produced between 17 April 2000 and 23 July 2002 and is designed to allow UK coal mines with a viable future to overcome short term market problems. As there is no coalmining industry in Northern Ireland, no businesses in Northern Ireland are eligible to apply for aid under the Scheme.

ENVIRONMENT

Consultants: Environment and Heritage Service

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (a) the work undertaken by consultants on behalf of Environmental Heritage Service in the Carrickfergus Borough Council area in the last 2 years; and (b) the cost of this work. (AQW 3192/01)

The Minister of the Environment (Mr Nesbitt): The work undertaken by consultants in the last 2 years on behalf of the Environment and Heritage Service (EHS), relevant to the Carrickfergus Borough Council area, dealt with the management and promotion of EHS properties throughout Northern Ireland. This work involved three projects: a review of the exhibitions at EHS's properties; a review of the management and maintenance of six of EHS's major properties; and a review of charging and commercialisation at EHS properties.

None of the work related specifically to the Carrickfergus Borough Council area. However, Carrickfergus Castle, one of EHS's most important sites, was included in all three projects.

The total costs of the projects were £67,850.

Drinking Water Pipe-Work: Lead Solder

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment what assessment can he make regarding the use of lead solder in drinking water pipe-work in domestic residences. (AQW 3212/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The Water Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1991, which were made under The Water and Sewerage Services (Northern Ireland) Order 1973 and came into operation on 25 March 1991, prohibited the use of contaminating material, which includes solder containing lead, in the installation of fittings conveying or receiving water supplied for domestic purposes.

No comprehensive assessment has been carried out of the use of lead solder in the water pipework of domestic residences. However, inspections of domestic plumbing, carried out by Water Service, indicate that the use of solder containing lead is not a significant problem. Although solder containing lead is still available in the market place, plumbing contractors and suppliers are aware that it must not be used in the installation of drinking water pipework.

A new European Union Drinking Water Directive, which imposes higher standards for a number of drinking water parameters including lead, comes into force at the end of 2003. Action being taken by Water Service to ensure compliance with the Directive includes the introduction of orthophosphate treatment to reduce the amount of lead in drinking water. In consultation with the Department of the Environment's Drinking Water Inspectorate, Water Service has prioritised sites throughout Northern Ireland for the introduction of orthophosphate treatment. Construction of the treatment facilities started in March of this year and are due to be completed in March 2003.

Apartments: Shore Road, Carrickfergus

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of the Environment what assessment can he make in relation to the growth in apartment type accommodation on the Shore Road, Carrickfergus. (AQW 3217/01)

Mr Nesbitt: I am aware of the concerns expressed on the growth of apartments in this area.

In recent years there has been a significant increase in the demand for small unit housing, including apartments.

All applications for apartment development are assessed under the current Area Plan, Planning Policies and Guidance and due regard is paid to the impact the proposal will have on the character of the area to which the member refers, and to normal planning considerations.

Current policy for housing is set out in Planning Policy Statement 7 - Quality Residential Environments. This requires developers to provide high quality housing proposals which are sympathetic to the existing character of an area, in order to avoid a level of intensification which can adversely affect local townscape character and identity. Particular emphasis is placed on ensuring that proposals are sympathetic to their context, and this is an important consideration when applications for apartment developments are being considered.

In addition, Development Control Advice Note 8, Small Unit Housing, which the Department expects to publish in final form shortly, will provide specific guidance on proposals for small unit housing within existing urban areas. While it does not set policy, it gives guidance on the physical form of housing development, including apartments, and on the relationship with surrounding properties.

I can assure you that all proposed developments will be considered against prevailing planning policies and the concerns expressed by elected representatives and the public will be fully taken into account.

Devaluation of Property

Mr Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment what plans he has to compensate those whose property has been devalued by unapproved development; and to make a statement. (AQW 3229/01)

Mr Nesbitt: There is no provision in planning legislation to pay compensation to third parties for alleged devaluation of property arising either from development which has received planning permission or from unauthorised development, and I have no plans to introduce such compensation.

My Department's procedure when it becomes aware of unauthorised development is to have the matter investigated and to form a judgement of whether the development is acceptable or unacceptable in planning terms. An important factor in this consideration is the effect of the development on the amenity of the adjoining residents, and whether this is acceptable in planning terms. The Department will then initiate appropriate action to remedy the breach of planning control.

Where unauthorised development is likely to be acceptable in planning terms, my Department will advise the person responsible to submit an application without delay. Applications will then be processed taking into account any views expressed by members of the public, the comments of consultees and the views of the District Council. A retrospective application is dealt with in the same way as a 'normal' planning application and approval will only be granted where normal planning policies and considerations are met.

Where unauthorised development is unacceptable in planning terms, my Department will attempt initially to resolve the matter by negotiation; if this is unsuccessful, then formal enforcement action will normally follow to remedy the situation and any harm or adverse effects on adjoining property.

I recognise that enforcement is a key element in providing a credible approach to the application of planning policy and my officials pursue enforcement action against unauthorised development as actively as possible within the current powers and resources available, particularly where harm and adverse impact on public amenity has occurred. As the Member will be aware, I propose to bring a Bill before the Assembly soon which, among other things, will considerably broaden and strengthen the enforcement powers available to the Department. My Department is also in the process of recruiting additional staff to bolster the development control and enforcement functions in the Planning Service.

Wetlands: Protection

Mr Wells asked the Minister of the Environment to outline steps he is taking to protect wetlands from damage by infilling. (AQW 3245/01)

Mr Nesbitt: Where Planning Service becomes aware of unauthorised infilling of wetland areas or receives a complaint about such activity, investigations are carried out to establish the nature, and extent of the operations carried out.

Advice is also sought from the Environment and Heritage Service (Natural Heritage) on whether any protective status applies to a particular site or whether the integrity of the wetland site is at risk. EHS would also provide advice on any remedial activity required to restore a site.

Planning Service would initially seek to secure the restoration of the site by agreement with the landowner.

In the absence of an agreed resolution, Planning Service would, where it considers it expedient to do so having regard to the provisions of the development plan and to any other material considerations, issue an enforcement notice requiring the breach of planning control to be remedied under Article 68 of Part VI of The Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991.

Planning Service is presently taking these steps in relation to a number of sites within the area lying to the south of Lough Neagh.

The Environment and Heritage Service has no statutory power to take action in respect of unauthorised dumping unless it affects designated lands, for example Areas of Special Scientific Interest (ASSIs), or if there is good reason to believe that it may cause a water pollution incident.

Under the Pollution Control and Local Government (NI) Order 1978, district councils have powers to prosecute landowners and waste carriers involved in the unauthorised dumping of waste. The Council can also issue a notice requiring the landowner to remove the waste. If the landowner fails to comply with the notice, the council can do the work and recoup the cost from the landowner.

In 1999 the Department issued a Code of Practice to assist councils in dealing with fly-tipping incidents.

Within all wetland ASSIs, infilling or dumping would be a notifiable operation. This means that landowners must seek prior consent from EHS before carrying out this activity within the designated site. It is most unlikely that EHS would give consent to infilling and would seek to negotiate a management agreement with the owner.

Apartments: Development

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of the Environment has he any plans to introduce controls on the development of apartments type accommodation resulting in significant change of character of the area. (AQW 3264/01)

Mr Nesbitt: In recent years there has been a significant increase in the demand for small unit housing, including apartments. My Department has been seeking clarification on the planning policy context for dealing with these proposals.

The Member will be aware that the Regional Development Strategy provides a new strategic context which encourages more housing, including apartments, within existing urban areas by a process of densification which can be delivered without cramming or spoiling the environment. The Strategy also requires the promotion of more housing in urban areas, however, this should not be allowed to result in damage to areas of distinctive townscape character. In established residential areas an overriding objective will be to avoid any significant erosion of the local character and the environmental quality, amenity and privacy enjoyed by existing residents.

Current policy for housing is set out in Planning Policy Statement 7 Quality Residential Environments.

This requires developers to provide high quality housing proposals which are sympathetic to the existing character of an area, in order to avoid a level of intensification which can adversely affect local townscape character and identity. Particular emphasis is placed on ensuring that proposals are sympathetic to their context, and this is an important consideration when applications for apartment developments are being considered.

In the primarily residential parts of Conservation Areas and Areas of Townscape Character, proposals involving intensification of site usage or site coverage will only be permitted in exceptional circumstances. In other established residential areas, proposals for housing development will not be permitted where they would result in unacceptable damage to the local character, environmental quality or residential amenity of these areas.

My Department has also issued in draft Supplementary Planning Guidance in the form of Development Control Advice Note 8 - Housing in Existing Urban Areas – and intends to publish this in final form in the near future. This provides more detailed specific guidance on proposals for small unit housing within existing urban areas. While it does not set policy, it gives guidance to developers on the physical form of housing development, including apartments, and on the relationship with surrounding properties.

Apartments: Shore Road, Carrickfergus

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of the Environment what assessment can be made of the planning policy and the increase in apartment applications on the Shore Road, Carrickfergus and Jordantown area of Newtownabbey.
(AQW 3265/01)

Mr Nesbitt: I am aware of the concerns expressed on the growth of apartments in this area.

In recent years there has been a significant increase in the demand for small unit housing, including apartments.

All applications for apartment development are assessed under the current Area Plan, Planning Policies and Guidance and due regard is paid to the impact the proposal will have on the character of the area to which the member refers, and to normal planning considerations.

Current policy for housing is set out in Planning Policy Statement 7 - Quality Residential Environments. This requires developers to provide high quality housing proposals which are sympathetic to the existing character of an area, in order to avoid a level of intensification which can adversely affect local townscape character and identity. Particular emphasis is placed on ensuring that proposals are sympathetic to their context, and this is an important consideration when applications for apartment developments are being considered.

In addition, Development Control Advice Note 8, Small Unit Housing, which the Department expects to publish in final form shortly, will provide specific guidance on proposals for small unit housing within existing urban areas. While it does not set policy, it gives guidance on the physical form of housing development, including apartments, and on the relationship with surrounding properties.

I can assure you that all proposed developments will be considered against prevailing planning policies and the concerns expressed by elected representatives and the public will be fully taken into account.

Planning Applications: Objections

Ms McWilliams asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (a) the average response time to letters of objection from residents regarding planning applications and (b) if there are any plans to speed up the process.
(AQW 3288/01)

Mr Nesbitt: On average, all letters of objection are acknowledged within 4 days. The acknowledgement confirms that the objections are taken into account as part of the decision making process.

In addition, all objectors are informed in writing about the decision, which includes an explanation of the reasons for that decision. The timescale depends on the complexity of the application and the relevant issues raised.

There are plans to speed up the process and ensure that objectors are better informed, as part of the Modernising Planning Processes consultation paper.

Fly-Tipping in the Countryside

Mrs Courtney asked the Minister of the Environment to outline (a) the legislation that prevents ‘dumping’ in the countryside and along road sides; and (b) penalties which could be introduced to stop this unseemly practice.

(AQW 3317/01)

Mr Nesbitt:

- (a) Under Article 5 of the Pollution Control and Local Government (Northern Ireland) Order 1978 it is an offence to deposit controlled waste or cause or knowingly permit controlled waste to be deposited on any land other than in accordance with the terms of a waste disposal licence. Enforcement against anyone suspected of committing such an offence (generally referred to as fly-tipping) is a matter for district councils. Anyone found guilty of fly-tipping is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £5000 or on conviction on indictment to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 2 years or to an unlimited fine or both. The fines and jail term may be increased where the waste in question is of a hazardous nature.

District councils also have powers under Article 16 of the 1978 Order to serve a notice requiring the occupier of land on which waste has been unlawfully deposited to remove the waste from the land and to take any necessary remedial action. Failure to comply with such a notice is an offence punishable on summary conviction by a fine not exceeding £2500. Continued failure after conviction to comply with the terms of a notice is deemed to be a further offence punishable on summary conviction by a further fine of £1000 for each day that the offence continues.

The 1978 Order also provides district councils with powers to remove waste illegally dumped and to seek to recover its costs from the occupier or from the person responsible for the illegal dumping, if known.

- (b) The provisions of the 1978 Order are to be replaced by similar provisions in the Waste and Contaminated Land Order (NI) 1997. These latter provisions will come into operation with the introduction of a new waste management licensing system, under Waste Management Regulations, expected to be made in autumn 2003. The penalties for fly-tipping under the 1997 Order are in some respects more severe than under the 1978 Order. For example, the maximum fine penalty on summary conviction under the 1997 Order is £20,000 compared with £5000 for a similar offence under the 1978 Order.

While I expect these harsher penalties to act as a greater deterrent to fly-tipping, the problem which remains is how to make those responsible for this activity, which is by its nature furtive, amenable to the enforcement powers of District Councils.

Pollution: Rivers & Lakes

Mr J Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (a) his present and proposed financial commitment for measures aimed at reducing pollution in rivers and lakes and (b) the nature of such measures.

(AQW 3327/01)

Mr Nesbitt: My Department's Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) is responsible, under the Water (Northern Ireland) Order 1999, for the regulation of effluent discharges to waterways and underground strata and also for the investigation of pollution and the instigation of enforcement action, where necessary.

The resources allocated to this work are as follows:

Year	Expenditure	Staff in Post
1998/1999	£2.37 m	36 *
1999/2000	£2.80 m	39 **
2000/2001	£2.85 m	48 **
2001/2002	£2.88 m	56 **

* August 1999

 at the end of the financial year

In addition, I have also put forward bids in my Department's Position Report of £3.5m, £3.5m and £3.7m for 2003/04, 2004/05 and 2005/06 respectively to implement relevant EC Directives, including the Water Framework Directive and the Nitrates Directive.

EHS plays a major role in the implementation of legislation related to the protection of surface and ground waters. The key Primary Legislation and Regulations transposing the relevant European Directives into Northern Ireland law are shown at Annex A. Additional legislation proposed, for which consultation papers have been issued, includes:

Regulations on Anti-Pollution Works Notices,

The Silage, Slurry and Fuel Oil Storage Regulations, and

The Water Framework Directive.

Planning Application: X/2002/0423/F

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment, with reference to planning application X/2002/0423/F (formerly X/2000/0226/RO), to outline (a) if the new planning application must progress through planning procedure from step one of Outline Planning Permission; and (b) if the previous planning application pertaining to the same proposed development will play no part in the processing of the new planning application.

(AQW 3375/01)

Mr Nesbitt: Application X/2002/0423/F was received by Downpatrick Divisional Planning Office on 12 April 2002. The application seeks planning permission for a change of house type to Site Nos 1-6 and alterations to previously approved access road at 39 – 41 Main Road, Cloughey. Previous approval had been granted on appeal on 16 November 2001 for the approval of reserved matters for housing development at No 41 Main Road and to the rear of Nos 33-55 Main Street Cloughey (X/2000/0266).

Comparison of the new application with the approved drawings indicated that there are no changes in the house type previously approved. The application is therefore purely for a change to the previously approved layout. The application is to be re-advertised on 16 May 2002 as “Alterations to layout on Sites Nos 1-6 and alterations to previously approved access road.” Neighbours and objectors will be renotified.

The new application will have to go through the full planning process, including consultation with the public, consultees within Government and the public sector, and consultation with the District Council. The previous planning approval, for an access road and a layout for the 6 houses remains valid. As the current application is for “alterations”, the previous approval will be taken account by Planning Service in the determination of the current application.

Planning Application: X/2002/0423/F

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment to outline (a) any impact the recently assigned ASSI on the eastern board of the Ards Peninsula has upon the planning applications for the area; and (b) any implications for planning application X/2002/0423/F which was submitted since the creation of this ASSI.

(AQW 3376/01)

Mr Nesbitt: Planning applications for development which may affect the Outer Ards Area of Special Scientific Interest (ASSI), the proposed Special Protection Area and Ramsar site, will be referred to my Department’s Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) for assessment and expert advice. In assessing individual applications the Department will be guided by advice received from EHS and by the policies outlined in its Planning Policy Statement 6, Planning and Nature Conservation.

Should the Special Protection Area Status for the Outer Ards Area be confirmed, my Department will be obliged to ensure that its qualifying features, i.e. its breeding and overwintering bird populations, will not be adversely affected by any development.

With regard to planning application X/2002/0423, this is a current application received on 12 April 2002 for a change of house type to Site Nos 1-6 and alterations to previously approved access road on a site at 41 Main Road, Cloughey. EHS has been consulted and the presence of the ASSI and proposed SPA will be a material consideration in the determination of this application.

Access for the Disabled

Mr Gibson asked the Minister of the Environment to make a statement on the progress of ensuring that offices in his Department are accessible to the disabled.

(AQW 3377/01)

Mr Nesbitt: There is a rolling programme of work in place to bring DOE’s general office accommodation up to the necessary standard. Approximately 75% of all offices have been visited and inspected and the necessary work has commenced.

As well as this, two of the department’s agencies have “specialised buildings”.

The Environment and Heritage Service’s Country Park and Countryside Centres have been constructed quite recently and most have been adapted to provide full access for people with disabilities. Historic Monuments present difficulties, but EHS endeavours to provide as much access for people with disabilities as is reasonable. For example Carrickfergus Castle is to have a lift installed to facilitate access to the exhibitions in the castle’s keep.

The Driver and Vehicle Testing Agency has commissioned Accessibility Audits at all of its centres. An implementation plan is currently being drawn up with a view to having all centres compliant with the Disability Discrimination Act by October 2004.

Enforcement Officers

Mr Wells asked the Minister of the Environment to outline (a) the number of enforcement officers employed in each of the Divisional Planning Offices; and (b) the number of enforcement officers employed in areas with equivalent populations to Northern Ireland in the rest of the United Kingdom.

(AQW 3378/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The number of posts purely devoted to enforcement within the Planning Service is 20. This is made up of 6 Higher Professional and Technology Officers (HPTOs), 8 Professional and Technology Officers (PTOs) and 6 Administrative Officers (AOs). All Divisions except Omagh and Londonderry have 1HPTO, 1PTO and 1 AO. Omagh and Londonderry each have an additional PTO to enable them to cover the Divisional Sub-Offices. In addition, a proportion of senior management time in each Division is devoted to enforcement work.

With regard to the number of enforcement officers employed in areas with equivalent populations to Northern Ireland in the rest of the United Kingdom, the information requested is not readily available, and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost to the Department.

Ulster Way: Future

Mr J Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment to detail his Department's commitment to securing the future of the Ulster Way. (AQW 3416/01)

Mr Nesbitt: No one body has overall responsibility for the Ulster Way. The Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) of my Department has a statutory function in approving 'long distance routes'. It also grant-aids Councils and the National Trust in the provision of access routes. Individual stretches are the responsibility of the relevant District Council. EHS has commissioned the Countryside Access and Activities Network (CAAN), to review the future of the Ulster Way. To assist with this, CAAN has established an Ulster Way Working Group which is representative of a wide range of user bodies, statutory agencies and farmers and landowners. The review is due to be completed towards the end of this year. Its findings will be considered by the three relevant government bodies, the Environment and Heritage Service, the Sports Council for Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Tourist Board, with a view to agreeing the way forward.

I will want to consider CAAN's report and take the views of my statutory advisors, the Council for Nature Conservation and the Countryside, before I make a fuller statement on the future of the Ulster Way.

PFI Contracts

Mr McNamee asked the Minister of the Environment to outline (a) any plans he has to introduce legislation to enable District Councils to enter into public/private finance contracts; and (b) when he intends to introduce this legislation. (AQW 3417/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The Local Government (Contracts) Act 1997 allows local authorities in Great Britain (GB) to enter into Private Finance Initiative (PFI) contracts. This Act does not extend to Northern Ireland. The nature of contracts targeted by GB local authorities would tend to come within the responsibilities of central government here. No immediate plans are in place to introduce legislation equivalent to that in GB. A number of district councils has, however, indicated that there is sufficient scope for PFI, to develop some of their major capital projects. These proposals will be considered, with a view to introducing suitable legislation as soon as possible thereafter.

Planning Permission

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment to clarify in the case where outline and detailed planning permission have been granted, and where environmental factors have prevented development, will new plans including land outside of the original planning application be subject to the full planning procedure. (AQW 3429/01)

Mr Nesbitt: Where outline planning permission and approval for all the reserved matters have been granted on a site, effectively full planning permission has been granted for the development to proceed. If unforeseen environmental factors prevent the development going ahead as approved, and a revised scheme materially different from that given permission is required, then a fresh application, either for outline permission, followed by a reserved matters submission, or for full planning permission, is needed.

Road Haulage: Revoked Licences

Mr Dalton asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of road haulage operator licences revoked in each year since 1998. (AQW 3446/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The Department has revoked no road haulage operator licences during the period from 1998 to date.

Prior to revocation or suspension of an operator's licence, the Department issues warning letters to licensed operators who, in any 12 month period, have accumulated four convictions for minor road traffic offences. Warning letters have been issued as follows:

1998	14
1999	10
2000	7
2001	10
2002 (to date)	6

Road Haulage: Licences

Mr Dalton asked the Minister of the Environment to outline any plans to (a) bring forward proposals to govern and control alleged malpractice within the local haulage industry; and (b) tighten up the conditions under which a Road Haulage Operators' Licence is awarded. (AQW 3448/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The Department issues road freight operator licences under the Transport Act (NI) 1967 in line with EC requirements. To qualify for an operator licence to carry goods for hire and reward an applicant must satisfy standards of repute, professional competence and financial standing. Convictions for serious offences and repeated road traffic offences are used to determine repute and can lead to the refusal, suspension or revocation of a licence.

I have no plans currently to revise the requirements for the issue of a Road Freight Operator Licence. When priorities and resources permit I would intend to review the proposals issued for consultation in 1998 by the former Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland on the regulation of the road haulage industry in Northern Ireland. These included proposals to extend regulation to the own account sector.

Planning Permission: Downpatrick

Mr McGrady asked the Minister of the Environment to outline (a) if the Environment and Heritage Service has issued a directive to the Planning Service that no further planning permissions of any nature, individual or multiple, will be granted in Downpatrick because of the capacity problems at Downpatrick Waste Water Treatment Works; and (b) what urgent action is being taken to correct this situation. (AQW 3548/01)

Mr Nesbitt:

- (a) Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) has not issued a Directive to Planning Service but has recommended that no more development be connected to the Downpatrick sewerage system until operational problems at the inlet to the town's sewage treatment works are resolved.

These problems have led to unauthorised discharge of sewage to a downstream waterway, with subsequent water pollution.

- (b) EHS is prepared to consider proposals by developers and/or the Department for Regional Development (DRD) for alternative means of servicing development in order to allow building to proceed.

These matters will be discussed between DOE and DRD officials, including what measures DRD can take in the short and long term to address the situation. Ultimately, it is the responsibility of DRD Water Service to determine what action needs to be considered in relation to the operational problems at the inlet to the town's sewage treatment works.

Road Safety Strategy

Mr McNamee asked the Minister of the Environment, in relation to the road safety strategy, to detail (a) the targets he has developed for the reduction in road deaths and serious injuries, and (b) the measures that are being put in place to ensure that those targets are achieved. (AQO 1358/01)

Mr Nesbitt: One of the key elements in the development of the new Northern Ireland Road Safety Strategy is the establishment of long-term targets for road casualty reductions to be agreed with the principal agencies involved in road safety – the Police Service of Northern Ireland and the Department for Regional Development's Roads Service.

I am writing this week to the Acting Chief Constable and to the Minister for Regional Development seeking their views on the proposed targets prior to finalisation of the draft strategy which is imminent. When the targets are agreed with the Police Service and the Roads Service, I will announce them in the context of the publication of the strategy.

In relation to the second part of the question, the Road Safety Strategy will describe the actions to be taken by the road safety agencies, to deliver the strategic objectives set out in the consultation document, published by my Department in May 2001. This document detailed the education, enforcement and engineering measures being taken and proposed by the road safety agencies to reduce road deaths and injuries. It also identified three specific initiatives which together have the potential to make a significant contribution to reducing road deaths and serious casualties.

These initiatives, which will be taken forward within the new Road Safety Strategy, are

- to increase the wearing of seatbelts,
- to extend to Northern Ireland, the scheme to use income from fixed penalties to fund increased deployment of safety cameras, which is currently operating very effectively in areas of Great Britain, and
- to provide further traffic calming measures.

While government and its agencies have a vital part to play in improving road safety, I would emphasise that the achievement of significant reductions in road deaths and serious injuries depends largely on all road users behaving responsibly on our roads.

Taxi Drivers: Diabetes

Ms Lewsley asked the Minister of the Environment what action is taken by his Department when a taxi driver is diagnosed with diabetes. (AQO 1355/01)

Mr Nesbitt: Under the Motor Vehicles (Taxi Drivers' Licences) Regulations 1991, new applicants for taxi driver licences, and existing taxi drivers over 45 years of age applying for renewal, are required to provide my Department with a medical report. Should the medical report confirm that the applicant suffers from insulin dependent diabetes, the application will be refused, unless the applicant held a taxi driver licence when the legislation changed on 21 October 1991, and the Department knew of the disability before 1 January 1991. If the diabetes is managed by means other than insulin, the medical report will be sent to the Occupational Health Service which, as the Department's medical advisors, will make a recommendation as to the individual's suitability to hold a taxi driver licence. Similar procedures are followed if diabetes develops during the currency of a licence. It is a condition of the taxi driver licence that any change in the holder's medical circumstances must be brought to the Department's attention.

Waste Management Strategy

Mr Poots asked the Minister of the Environment to detail anticipated capital and recurrent costs associated with the implementation of the Waste Management Strategy. (AQO 1351/01)

Mr Nesbitt: It is not possible to put a precise cost on the implementation of the Waste Management Strategy. The Strategy has implications for all those who produce, manage or treat waste. It has a long-term planning horizon. Capital and recurrent costs of implementing the strategy will depend on how much waste is produced over time, and on decisions to be made about treatment and related facilities. There will be economic benefits, to offset the costs, from the re-use, recycling and recovery of waste, depending on the levels achieved and the markets available.

The principal costs of implementing the Waste Management Strategy will lie in the establishment of an integrated network of waste management facilities across Northern Ireland. The main vehicle for decisions on the nature and location of these facilities will be District Council Waste Management Plans. However, final decisions will depend on consideration of the outcome of the recently ended public consultation on the draft Waste Management Plans, which were published by the 3 District Council Partnership Groups in February.

Final draft Plans are to be submitted to my Department by 28 June. These are to include detailed implementation action plans which will contain details of the capital and recurrent costs involved. At that stage the cost of developing and operating the network of facilities, of establishing reprocessing capacity, and of creating markets for recycling that will deliver the objectives of the Waste Management Strategy, will become clearer.

In addition to an indicative baseline of £8.5m for waste management, I have also put forward bids in my Department's Position Report of £5.1m, £4.8m and £4.5m for 2003/04, 2004/05 and 2005/06 respectively, to assist District Councils and others in the implementation of the Waste Management Strategy.

Pollution: Landfill Sites

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment to outline (a) the risk of pollution to rivers from landfill sites; and (b) any measures and safeguards in place to reduce any such risk. (AQO 1343/01)

Mr Nesbitt: Landfill sites can pose a pollution risk if they are not properly engineered and managed. The Environment and Heritage Service of my Department is responsible for investigating reports of pollution incidents from any sources which affect, or may affect, ground or surface waters.

Records show that, in the 4 year period from 1 January 1998 to 31 December 2001, EHS received 200 reports alleging that the source of pollution was a landfill site. Of the 200 reports received, six were subsequently categorised as serious pollution incidents.

In relation to the second part of the Question, EHS is consulted by the Planning Service about all planning applications for landfill sites. In all cases, EHS advises that construction and operation should be carried out in accordance with the guidelines contained in Waste Management Paper 26B. This requires a full hydro-geological survey and risk assessment to be carried out in relation to the site.

In addition, any direct discharge of treated leachate to a waterway from a landfill site is subject to discharge consent control under the Water (Northern Ireland) Order 1999. Consent from EHS is necessary for both the discharge of treated leachate and for the disposal of materials on the site. Discharge consent is granted only where EHS is satisfied that there will be no resulting pollution of surface or ground waters.

EHS also undertakes surveys of landfill sites. These surveys include monitoring of groundwater boreholes around the site, leachate monitoring and surface water monitoring.

EU Directives

Mr Maskey asked the Minister of the Environment what are the implications of current infraction proceedings initiated by the EU with regard to the implementation of EU Directives. (AQO 1345/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The main instrument available to the European Commission to enforce Member State compliance with Directives is through instigation of infraction proceedings in the European Court of Justice. If the ECJ finds against the Member State, and depending on the action taken by the Member State to achieve compliance, the Commission may seek the imposition of a fine.

Recently the Commission has taken steps to speed up the infraction process and a much more vigorous enforcement approach is now evident.

Currently there are several infraction cases being brought by the Commission against the UK, including Northern Ireland, in relation to failure to transpose into domestic legislation, or otherwise to implement, the requirements of environmental Directives. For the main part, these are the result of a backlog of untransposed Directives inherited from the period of Direct Rule.

Apart from the fact that these legal proceedings undermine Northern Ireland's environmental standing in Europe, there is also a risk that some of these cases will proceed to the stage where fines are imposed against the UK. Any fines are likely to be substantial and, where the fines result in whole or in part from lack of compliance by Northern Ireland, the Treasury may seek for some or all to be paid by the Northern Ireland Administration

Because of these financial risks to Northern Ireland, both my predecessor and I have sought to secure the additional staff needed to expedite the transposition and implementation of EU environmental Directives. My Department received extra resources for 2001/02 and 2002/03 for this purpose and I am seeking a further increase for 2002/03. This will be reflected in an increased flow of infraction-related primary and subordinate legislation which will come before the Assembly in the remainder of this session and next. I am working closely with the Environment Committee and look forward to its co-operation in the urgent processing of the relevant legislation. However, even more needs to be done if we are to clear the backlog and move to a position of being able to transpose and implement environmental Directives in a timely way. This is reflected in further the bids for 2003/04 onwards which I have included in my Department's Position Report for the 2002 Spending Review.

Planning Permission: Landfill Sites

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of landfill sites which have been refused planning permission in the last 2 years.
(AQO 1354/01)

Mr Nesbitt: A total of 16 landfill planning applications have been determined in the last two years. Of these, 3 applications have been refused and 13 applications approved.

Ulster Way: Future

Mr Davis asked the Minister of the Environment if a working group has been established to review the future of the Ulster Way.
(AQO 1342/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The Countryside Access and Activities Network has been commissioned by the Environment and Heritage Service of my Department to undertake a study of the future of the Ulster Way, on behalf of all the interested parties. These include the many District Councils through whose areas the route passes, as well as the Sports Council and Northern Ireland Tourist Board.

The Network has established an Ulster Way Working Group. The Group is representative of a wide range of user bodies, statutory agencies and farmers and landowners.

I understand that the Group has held several meetings, including two public consultation meetings.

The study is due to be completed towards the end of this year. Its findings will be considered by all the relevant parties, with a view to seeking agreement on the way forward.

Climate Changes

Mr J Kelly asked the Minister of the Environment what contingency plans are in place to deal with climate changes particularly in coastal areas; and to make a statement.
(AQO 1349/01)

Mr Nesbitt: Responsibility for coastal matters falls to several Departments, including the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, the Department for Regional Development and my own Department.

The Scotland and Northern Ireland Forum for Environmental Research recently published a study, commissioned by my Department, entitled "Implications of Climate Change for Northern Ireland: Informing Strategy Development". The objectives of the study were to investigate, in broad terms, the likely impacts of climate change on the environment, economy and natural resources of Northern Ireland. A copy of the study report is available in the Assembly Library.

Although the study's conclusions demonstrate that the impact of climate change on Northern Ireland is likely to be considerably less dramatic than some recent media headlines suggest, the report nevertheless outlines possible impacts across a number of sectors. These include sectors relevant to the coastal area, such as coastal and flood defence and fisheries. In these sectors climate change could have implications for intertidal areas, for dune coasts and for fish productivity, possibly affecting catch size and composition.

It is important to acknowledge, however, that this was a scoping study outlining a range of possible outcomes in a number of different scenarios. While it represents an important first step towards developing a Northern Ireland strategy for climate change, a more detailed programme of research will need to be undertaken, in conjunction with relevant stakeholders, in order to determine more precisely the adaptation measures that will need to be put in place for the coastal area and other sectors.

Review of Local Government

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment to provide an update on the Review of Local Government.
(AQO 1359/01)

Mr Nesbitt: There is no separate review of local government. However, the administration of local public services will be examined within the context of the Review of Public Administration, which is due to be launched in the coming weeks. Responsibility for taking forward that review rests with the Office of the First and Deputy First Minister.

Planning Permission: Policy

Mr J Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment to make it his policy that planning permission should not be granted to any substantial housing, commercial or industrial development where the local infrastructure, be it roads or sewerage, is deemed to fall short of an acceptable standard. (AQO 1344/01)

Mr Nesbitt: Planning Policy Statement 1-General Principles (PPS 1) makes it clear that the availability of infrastructure is an important material consideration in the determination of a planning application.

Planning Service consults Water Service of the Department for Regional Development, the Water Management Unit of Environment and Heritage Service of the Department of the Environment and Roads Service of the Department for Regional Development, as necessary, on proposals for commercial, residential and industrial development for advice on the adequacy of existing water, sewerage and roads infrastructure. Where consultees advise that the requisite infrastructure is not in place to facilitate the proposed development, it is the policy of the Department normally to refuse planning permission as being premature.

Where proposals exceed the capacity of existing infrastructure, developers may offer to provide the necessary infrastructure to service their proposals or to make a contribution towards its provision. In such circumstances Planning Service may grant planning permission subject to a negative condition relating to the progress of the development and to the provision of the works to facilitate it, such as road widening or other infrastructural improvements.

Sustainable Development Strategy

Mr Ford asked the Minister of the Environment to give an update on the publication of a Sustainable Development Strategy for Northern Ireland. (AQO 1352/01)

Mr Nesbitt: I am pleased to say that a discussion paper on proposals for a Northern Ireland Sustainable Development Strategy has now been agreed by Executive Ministers. I plan to publish the document and begin the consultation process later this month.

My Department will oversee the consultation process. However, the Sustainable Northern Ireland Programme, an organisation part-funded by the voluntary and local government sectors and by my Department, has been asked to organise a number of seminars across Northern Ireland. These are intended to provide an opportunity for a more participative approach to gathering views and comments. The outcome of these seminars will be fed into the consultation process.

It is intended that the consultation period will run to 30 September 2002. The responses will help form the basis for drawing up a Sustainable Development Strategy which, depending on other priorities and pressures that may arise, I hope to publish by the end of this year.

Planning Service: Enforcement Officers

Ms McWilliams asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (a) the number of Enforcement Officers currently in employment in the Planning Service, Belfast office; and (b) the number of cases currently waiting to be assessed for enforcement orders by the Belfast office. (AQO 1347/01)

Mr Nesbitt: There are currently 3 full-time Enforcement Officers in the Belfast Planning Office – 1 Higher Professional Technical Officer (HPTO) and 2 Professional Technical Officers (PTOs). In addition, a proportion of senior officers' time, at Senior Professional Technical Officer (SPTO), Principal Professional Technical Officer (PPTO) and Divisional Planning Manager level, is devoted to enforcement work. I have recently moved to strengthen the management of the development control and enforcement sections within the Belfast Division and other Divisions, and that should have a positive impact on the Belfast Division's ability to deal with enforcement casework.

The Enforcement Section in the Belfast Divisional Planning Office is currently investigating 777 cases any or all of which could end up in formal enforcement action being taken.

The Planning Service approach to enforcement is set out in Planning Policy Statement 9 – The Enforcement of Planning Control. The Planning Service generally seeks in the first instance to remedy any breach of planning control through co-operation. In considering whether formal enforcement action is the best remedy for unauthorised development, the Department takes into account whether the breach would be contrary to planning policy or unacceptably affect public amenity; the extent of the breach; the willingness of the offender(s) to remedy the breach voluntarily, and the statutory time limits for enforcement action.

FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

Strategy Partnership Boards: Selection Procedure

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline the selection procedure for the community sector to have representation on the local Strategy Partnership Boards. (AQW 3301/01)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Dr Farren):

Participation on the Local Strategy Partnerships is made on the basis of an equal partnership between two strands, Local Government and the main Statutory Agencies operating at local level; and the four pillars of Social Partners: private sector, community sector, voluntary sector and agricultural and rural development sector.

In accordance with this guidance Local Strategy Partnerships in each district council area were required to configure to represent the balance of local interests and the principles enshrined in the Peace II Programme.' Guidance on the formation of and operation of Local Strategy Partnerships was issued by the Special EU Programmes Body (SEUPB) in its capacity as Managing Authority for the PEACE II Programme.

In accordance with the guidance, the SEUPB consulted with the Northern Ireland Regional Sectoral Partners Group (Concordia) and agreed with Concordia a formula applied at local level and protecting the principle of local selection while simultaneously ensuring regional endorsement as follows:

Local selections and nominations for each of the social partners (business, trade unions, agriculture and voluntary and community sector) to be made in consultation with and endorsed by the regional sector.

Dependant upon the size and nature of Partnership arrangements ensure that an acceptable number of places are equally apportioned to each of the social partners for endorsement.

Additional places to be allocated by local social partners.

Concordia group members would oversee and guarantee the process ensuring that where possible selections were made locally by their constituent members.

To ensure continuity in the transition process 50% of the social partner representation was drawn from existing Partnership members and would be endorsed by their own sectors.

In order to ensure renewal of representatives over the lifetime of the programme, a transparent and periodic process of renewal will also be agreed.

Government Buildings: Fire Protection

Mr B Bell asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel will his department require companies who install passive fire protection equipment into government buildings to have third party accreditation, in order to ensure compliance with BS 476, as will be required in England and Wales. (AQW 3325/01)

Dr Farren: There are no proposals at present to require companies who install passive fire protection equipment into Government buildings to have third party accreditation, in order to ensure compliance with BS 476.

I understand that this issue is currently under review in England and Wales. When the outcome is known consideration will be given to its impact for Northern Ireland.

Consultancy Firms: Expenditure

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, pursuant to AQW 1939/01, to detail the level of expenditure in each of the last 3 years on consultancy firms/consultants based in (a) Northern Ireland; (b) the Republic of Ireland; (c) the rest of the UK; and (d) outside the British Isles. (AQW 3368/01)

Dr Farren: The level of expenditure in each of the last 3 years on consultancy firms/consultants based in (a) Northern Ireland; (b) Republic of Ireland; (c) the rest of the United Kingdom and (d) outside the British Isles is as follows:

	Northern Ireland	Republic of Ireland	Rest of the United Kingdom	Outside the British Isles	Total
1999/ 2000	1,068,955.00	124,849.00	296,998.00	0	1,490,802.00
2000/ 2001	1,642,191.00	48,179.00	378,110.00	0	2,068,480.00
2001/ 2002	2,184,175.40	17,997.00	665,605.40	0	2,867,777.80

HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Family and Child Care: Expenditure

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to explain the large disparity in the percentage of personal social services budget spent on family and childcare services between the Trusts in Northern Ireland, as listed in the Social Services Inspectorate's Personal Social Services and Related Statistics 2001; and to make a statement.

(AQW 2344/01)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Ms de Brún): Differences in the percentage of Trusts' expenditure on family and child care are caused by several factors. The particular age profile of a Trust area will account for some of the difference, with a younger population requiring a greater funding commitment. There will also be differences in the level of relative need and this, too, will ultimately be reflected in budget deployment.

Bíonn roinnt fachtóirí mar chúis le difríochtaí i gcéatadán caiteachais na nOntaobhas ar chúram teaghlaigh agus leanaí. Tugann próifíl aoise ar leithligh limistéar Iontaobhais míniú ar chuid den difríocht, mar go dteastaíonn tiomantas maoinithe níos mó ó phobal níos óige. Beidh difríochtaí chomh maith i leibhéal an riachtanais ábharthaigh agus léireofar sin, chomh maith, i ndeireadh thiar i leithdháileadh buiséid.

Learning Disability: Expenditure

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to explain the large disparity in per capita expenditure on people with a learning disability, aged 18-64 between the Trusts in Northern Ireland, as listed in the Social Services Inspectorate's Personal Social Services and Related Statistics 2001; and to make a statement. (AQW 2345/01)

Ms de Brún: Differences in expenditure levels are explained by a number of factors. The age profile of the relevant population will differ across Trusts, as will levels of need. The cost of delivering a service can also vary as between urban and rural areas. A fourth significant reason for variance is that some Trusts not only serve their own areas but supply regional services to people living outside their boundaries.

Tugann roinnt fachtóirí míniú ar dhifríochtaí i leibhéil chaiteachais. Beidh próifíl aoise an phobail ábharthaigh difriúil ar fud na nOntaobhas, faoi mar a bheidh leibhéil na riachtanas. Is féidir leis an gcostas a bhaineann le seirbhís a thabhairt i gcrích athrú chomh maith idir limistéir uirbeacha agus limistéir thuaithe. Ní amháin go ndéanann roinnt Iontaobhas freastal ar a limistéir féin ach soláthraíonn siad seirbhísí réigiúnacha do dhaoine a chónaíonn lasmuigh dá dteorannacha, agus bheadh sin ar cheathrú cúis shuntasach d'éagsúlacht.

Sure Start

Mr Close asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if the Sure Start Initiative has the support of the Executive; and to make a statement. (AQW 2761/01)

Ms de Brún: My colleagues and I within the Executive share a vision to have happier, healthier children who are better equipped to grow into confident adults who feel that they have a real stake in society and an ability to influence its future.

The investment in Sure Start outlined in the Programme for Government 2001-2004 is one example of our commitment to translate that vision into reality by helping to take steps to break the cycle of deprivation through early, sustained measures to promote healthy social and emotional development.

Tá an aisling chéanna ag mo chomhghleacaithe agus agam féin laistigh den Fheidhmeannas go mbeadh leanaí níos sona agus níos sláintiúla agus iad a bheith feistithe níos fearr le fás agus forbairt ina ndaoine fásta a bhíonn muiníneach agus a mhothaíonn go bhfuil leas ceart acu sa sochaí agus cumas tionchar a bheith acu ar an todhchaí.

Is sampla amháin den infheistíocht in Sure Start a dtugtar imlíne air sa Chlár do Rialtas 2001-2004 dár dtiomantas leis an aisling sin a fhíorú trí chabhrú le céimeanna a ghlacadh chun an timthriall díothachta a bhriseadh trí bhearta luaithe, inbhuanaithe chun forbairt shláintiúil shóisialta agus mhothaitheach a chothú.

Acute Care: Funding

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what funding has she made available for acute care in each of the Health Board areas, in each of the last 3 years. (AQW 2883/01)

Ms de Brún: I allocate resources to each Board on a capitation formula basis and it is then for the Boards themselves to make detailed funding allocations. In the years 1998-99 to 2000-01, Boards made available the following amounts for expenditure on the acute Programme of Care:

	1998/99	1999/00	2000/01
NHSSB	109,079,121	120,952,919	137,887,258

Acute Care: Patients

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline, by Health Board, the number of acute care patients in each of the last 3 years. (AQW 2912/01)

Ms de Brún: Information on the number of inpatients in the Acute Programme of Care in each Board for the last three financial years is detailed in the table below. This information is also published in the annual Hospital Statistics publication, which is available in the Assembly Library and on my Department's website.

Acute Care: Funding

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what funding has she made available for acute care in the EHSSB area. (AQW 2913/01)

Ms de Brún: I refer the Member to my answer to AQW 2883/01.

Treoraím an Ball do mo fhreagra a thug mé ar AQW 2883/01.

Credit Cards

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) the number of credit cards in use in (i) her Department; (ii) Executive Agencies of her Department; (iii) NDPBs of her Department; and (iv) any other bodies funded by her Department; and (b) how much has been spent on each card in the financial year ended 31 March 2002. (AQW 2957/01)

Ms de Brún: The figures in the table below represent the number of credit cards in use by HPSS Boards, HSS Trusts, Agencies, NDPBs, and the total expenditure on those cards in the financial year ended 31 March 2002.

Body	No of Credit Cards	Expenditure on Credit Cards £
DHSSPS	-	-
HPSS Boards	-	-
HSS Trusts	12	£15,763.10
HSS Agencies	2	£1,872.80
NDPBs	6	£27,356.10
Totals	20	£44,992.00

The above excludes purchase cards which are used for the procurement of certain supplies. For example, the government procurement card is a method of payment for goods and services without credit or cash facilities and is available to all Departments and Agencies.

Léiríonn na figiúirí sa tábla thíos an líon cártaí creidmheasa in úsáid ag Boird an SSSP, ag Iontaobhais SSS, ag Gníomhaireachtaí, ag NDPBanna, agus taispeántear an caiteachas iomlán ar na cártaí sin sa bhliain airgeadais dár críoch an aonú lá is tríocha de Mhárta 2002.

Foras	Líon Cártaí Creidmheasa	Caiteachas ar Chártaí Creidmheasa £
DHSSPS	-	-
Boird HPSS	-	-
Iontaobhais HSS	12	£15,763.10
Gníomhaireachtaí HSS	2	£1,872.80
NDPBanna	6	£27,356.10
Iomlán	20	£44,992.00

Níl cártaí ceannaigh a bhíonn in úsáid chun soláthairtí áirithe a sholáthar san áireamh thuas. Mar shampla, is modh íocaíochta d'earraí agus do sheirbhísí gan aon saoráidí creidmheasa ná airgid tirim é cárta soláthair an rialtais agus tá sé ar fáil do gach Roinn agus Gníomhaireacht.

Breast Cancer

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what measures are being taken to address the increase in the level of breast cancer. (AQW 3017/01)

Ms de Brún: While figures show that breast cancer is on the increase, there is a decrease in the mortality rates for this disease. The successful Breast Screening programme can identify cancer at an early stage, which means earlier treatment, which in turn improves the outcome, therefore leading to a reduction in the mortality rates.

In line with the Campbell Report, a large number of the features of a good breast cancer service are in place, including one-stop clinics, timely admission for surgery, multi-disciplinary team working, specialist breast care nurse team and close links to Oncology. The recent appointments of a plastic surgeon and a surgeon skilled in breast reconstruction have enabled an important addition to the service at Belfast City Hospital. The surgical team has been further strengthened by the inclusion of a breast surgeon at Lagan Valley Hospital.

Cé go léiríonn na figiúirí go bhfuil ailse chíce ag méadú, tá laghdú ar rátaí mortlaíochta i dtaca leis an ghalair seo. Is féidir leis an chlár Scagtha Cíche bhfuil ag éirí go maith leis, ailse a aimsiú ag céim luath, a bhfuil coireál luath mar thoradh air, a fheabhsaíonn an toradh dá bharr, ina a mbeidh mar sin laghdú ann sna rátaí mortlaíochta.

Ag cloí le tuairisc Campbell tá líon mór de shainghnéithe seirbhís mhaith ailse chíce i bhfeidhm, clinicí aon aonaid, iontraíl thráthúil mháinliachta, foireann ildisciplíneach ag obair, sainfhoireann altraí cúram ailse agus dhlúthnaisc d'Oinceolaíocht. Chuir na ceapacháin le gairid máinlia plaisteach agus máinlia oile in atógáil chíce deis ar fáil daoine breise don tseirbhís a shaoradh ag Otharlann Chathair Bhéal Feirste. Cuireadh leis an fhoireann mháinliachta arís trí mháinliachta cíche a thabhairt isteach ag Otharlann Ghleann an Lagáin.

Fire Brigade: Substantive Promotion

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the current background of substantive promotion in the Northern Ireland Fire Brigade for (a) full-time; and (b) part-time posts. (AQW 3054/01)

Ms de Brún: Substantive promotions for uniformed staff in the Fire Brigade here are governed by the agreements reached by the National Joint Council for Local Authorities Fire Brigades.

Promotion opportunities for non-uniformed staff are filled through open competition. This procedure is followed by the Fire Authority to comply with Fair Employment legislation and to address any imbalance in the make up of the work force.

Is comhshocruithe a dtagtar orthu ag an gComhairle Náisiúnta i gComhar do Bhriogáid Dóiteáin na nÚdarás

Áitiúil a rialaíonn arduithe céime substaintiúla don fhoireann faoi éide sa Bhriogáid Dóiteáin.

Líontar deiseanna arduithe céime don fhoireann nach mbíonn faoi éide trí chomórtas oscailte. Leanann an tÚdarás Dóiteáin an nós imeachta sin chun an reachtaíocht um Fhostú Cothrom a chomhlíonadh agus chun aghaidh a thabhairt ar aon mhíchothromas i gcomhdhéanamh an fhórsa saothair.

Fire Brigade: Substantive Posts

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the operational impact if all substantive full-time and part-time posts were filled in the Northern Ireland Fire Brigade. (AQW 3055/01)

Ms de Brún: Filling the current vacancies would enhance the operational effectiveness of the Fire Brigade, as it would allow for improvements in its managerial and operational efficiency through the consistency resulting from being fully staffed. The Fire Authority is actively recruiting and training new staff to fill these vacancies.

Chuirfeadh líonadh na bhfolúntas reatha go mór le héifeachtacht feidhme an Bhriogáid Dóiteáin, mar go gceadódh sé d'fheabhsúcháin ina éifeachtacht bhainistíochta agus feidhmíochta tríd an gcomhleanúnacht a bhíonn mar thoradh ar lánfhoirmiú. Tá an tÚdarás Dóiteáin go gníomhach ag earcú agus ag oiliúint foirne nua chun na follúntais sin a líonadh.

Royal Victoria Children's Hospital: Funding

Mr Cobain asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) the number of nurses required; and (b) the total funding needed to fully operate all intensive care beds in the Royal Victoria Children's Hospital. (AQW 3074/01)

Ms de Brún: The number of paediatric intensive care beds, at the Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children, which are open each day is dependent on clinical requirements and staffing levels.

If all 7 Paediatric Intensive Care Unit and 4 High Dependency Unit beds are open, then the nursing staff requirement would equate to 63.40 (whole time equivalent) nurses. The total funding needed to provide nursing staff for these beds is £1.7 million, which has been made available.

There are also significant costs associated with the Consultant Anaesthetic Service and support costs, however, to quantify these would prove disproportionate to cost.

Braitheann an líon leapacha dianchúraim péidiatraiceacha, ag Ospidéal Ríoga Bhéal Feirste do Leanaí Breoite, a bhíonn ar oscailt gach lá ar riachtanais chliniciúla agus ar leibhéil foirne.

Dá mbeadh gach ceann den 7 leaba san Aonad Dianchúraim Péidiatraiceach agus den 4 leaba san Aonad Ard-Spleácha ar oscailt, ansin bheadh an riachtanas foirne altranais comhionann le 63.40 (comhionann lánaimsire) altraí. Is é an maoiniú iomlán atá riachtanach chun foireann altranais a sholáthar do na leapacha sin ná £1.7 milliún, suim atá curtha ar fáil.

Baineann costais shuntasacha chomh maith leis an tSeirbhís Chomhchomhairle Ainéisteach agus bheadh costais tacaíochta, ar scor ar bith, chun iad sin a chainníochtú diréireach le costais.

Fire Brigade: Temporary Promotion

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) the number of uniformed and non-uniformed employees in the Fire Brigade who are currently on temporary promotion; (b) the length of time each employee has been on temporary promotion; and (c) if these promotions were carried out within the parameters designated by the Codes of Practice as espoused by the Equality Commission.

(AQW 3092/01)

Ms de Brún: The numbers of staff at 31 March 2002 on temporary promotion within the Fire Brigade were 280 uniformed and 3 non-uniformed.

The attached table indicates the length of time the personnel have been in temporary promotion.

TEMPORARY PROMOTIONS AT 31.03.02

Temporary promotions are carried out in accordance with the Fire Authority's "Code of Procedures on Recruitment and Selection" which are within the parameters designated by the Codes of Practice of the Equality Commission.

Is é an líon foirne ag an 31 Márta 2002 ar ardú céime sealadach laistigh den Bhriogáid Dóiteáin ná 280 faoi éide agus 3 gan a bheith faoi éide.

Léiríonn an tábla a ghabhann leis seo an tréimhse ama a chaith an pearsanra in ardú céime sealadach.

Déantar ardú céime sealadach de réir "Cód Nósanna Imeachta ar Earcú agus Roghnú" an Údaráis Dóiteáin atá laistigh de na paraiméadair a ainmníonn Cóid Chleachtais an Choimisiúin Chomhionannais.

Ulster Hospital A&E Unit: Clerical Officers

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what assessment can she make in relation to clerical officers working in the Ulster Hospital A&E Unit being recruited at a grade lower than their counterparts in the City Hospital, who have similar responsibilities and duties.

(AQW 3111/01)

Ms de Brún: The appointment and grading of staff is a matter for local management in both of these Trusts. Whilst clerical officers may have similar responsibilities, their range of duties may vary considerably and, therefore, impact on the grade attributed to the post.

Is ábhar don bhainistíocht áitiúil sa dá iontaobhas sin ceapadh agus grádú foirne. Cé go bhféadfadh freagrachtaí cosúla a bheith ag oifigigh cléireacha, d'fhéadfadh a raon dualgas athrú go mór agus, dá bhrí sin, tionchar a bheith aige ar an ngrád a luaitear leis an bpost.

Sub-Fertility Services

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when will the Eq1A on Sub-Fertility Services begin. (AQW 3112/01)

Ms de Brún: The Equality Impact Assessment will be circulated for public comments at the same time as the consultation document on sub-fertility, which is expected in the summer.

Scaipfear an Measúnú Tionchar Comhionannais chun tuairimí poiblí a fháil ag an am céanna leis an gcáipéis chomhchomhairlithe ar fho-thorthúlacht, a bhfuil súil leis sa samhradh.

Speech and Language Therapists

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail any plans she has to stop the flow of newly-qualified Speech and Language Therapists to GB. (AQW 3173/01)

Ms de Brún: I am aware that some newly qualified speech & language therapists from the University of Ulster take up employment in England, Scotland or Wales. Details of the numbers involved are set out below:

Year	Number of Graduates to England/Scotland/Wales
1998	2
1999	0
2000	3

(Information on 2001 Graduates is not yet available).

My Department has undertaken a comprehensive review of the speech and language therapy workforce; this includes an assessment of recruitment issues such as the effect of graduates not taking up immediate employment here and also the balancing effect of recruitment from other places. This report is being finalised and its findings and recommendations will inform decisions on any further recruitment initiatives.

Tá a fhios agam go nglacann roinnt teiripeoirí nuacháilithe urlabhra agus teanga ó Ollscoil Uladh le postanna i Sasana, in Albain nó sa Bhreatain Bheag. Tá sonraí ar líon na dteiripeoirí i gceist leagtha amach sa tábla thíos:

Bliain	Líon na gCéimithe i Sasana/in Albain/sa Bhreatain Bheag
1998	2
1999	0

(Níl eolas ar Chéimithe sa bhliain 2001 ar fáil go fóill).

Thosaigh mo Roinn ar athbhreithniú cuimsitheach a dhéanamh ar an mheitheal urlabhra agus teanga; cuimsíonn sé seo measúnú ar cheisteanna earcaíochta chomh maith, amhail tionchar drogall na gcéimithe le postanna a ghlacadh anseo láithreach agus tionchar cothrom na hearcaíochta ó áiteanna eile fosta. Tá an dlaoi mhullaigh á cur ar an tuairisc seo agus tabharfaidh a torthaí agus a moltaí eolas ar bhearta faoi thuilleadh scéimeanna earcaíochta eile.

Voluntary Hospital and Community Carers: Support Groups

Rev Robert Coulter asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps she has taken, or proposes to take, to promote the growth of voluntary hospital and community care support groups.

(AQO 1274/01)

Ms de Brún: Partnership initiatives in accordance with the Strategy for Support of the Voluntary and Community Sector, as detailed in Partners for Change, are already well established between statutory agencies and voluntary and community organisations in the health and social services. My Department provides grant aid to regional voluntary and community organisations, as well as financial assistance through the Social Services Inspectorate's Training Support Programme for voluntary organisations in the social services. Information and advice is also available to organisations from the Department's policy units and the Social Services Inspectorate. Boards and Trusts have developed comprehensive volunteering policies and effective partnerships have been established with voluntary organisations in the provision of services, and in other joint initiatives.

Tá tionscnaimh chomhpháirtíochta de réir Straitéis do Thacaíocht na hEarnála Deonai agus Pobail, mar a mhionsonraítear in Comhpháirtithe don Athrú, bunaithe go maith cheana féin idir gníomhaireachtaí reachtúla agus eagraíochtaí deonacha agus pobail sna seirbhísí sláinte agus sóisialta. Soláthraíonn mo Roinnse cabhair deontais chuig eagraíochtaí deonacha agus pobail, chomh maith le cúnamh airgeadais trí Chlár Tacaíochta Oiliúna Chigireacht na Seirbhísí Sóisialta d'eagraíochtaí deonacha sna seirbhísí sóisialta. Tá eolas agus comhairle ar fáil chomh maith d'eagraíochtaí ó aonaid pholasaí na Roinne agus ó Chigireacht na Seirbhísí Sóisialta. Tá polasaithe cuimsitheacha deonaithe forbartha ag Boird agus ag Iontaobhais agus tá comhpháirtíochtaí éifeachtacha bunaithe le heagraíochtaí deonacha i soláthar seirbhísí agus i gcomhthionscnaimh eile.

Foetal Alcohol Syndrome

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of babies born with foetal alcohol syndrome in each of the last 5 years.

(AQW 3222/01)

Ms de Brún: There have been no recorded instances of babies born with foetal alcohol syndrome here in the last five years.

Ní raibh aon chás taifeadta de naíonáin a rugadh le siondróm alcóil féataigh anseo sna cúig bliana seo caite.

Anti-Tumour Necrosis Factor Drugs

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the cost of funding anti-TNF drugs for arthritis through the health service.

(AQW 3237/01)

Ms de Brún: During the financial year 2001/02, Boards allocated over £900,000 towards anti-TNF drugs for arthritis sufferers.

Le linn na bliana airgeadais 2001/02, dháil Boird breis agus £900,000 ar dhrugaí frith-TNF dóibh siúd a bhfuil airtríteas orthu.

Wheelchairs

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of (a) wheelchairs and (b) electrically powered (i) indoor and (ii) outdoor chairs provided by the health service in each of the last 3 years.

(AQW 3249/01)

Ms de Brún: The information is not available in the form requested. The Regional Disability Service advises that in each of the last three years the numbers of non-powered and powered wheelchairs issued was as follows:

Year	Non-Powered Chairs	Powered Chairs
1998 / 1999	1651	955
1999 / 2000	2730	576
2000 / 2001	1523	252

Níl an t-eolas ar fáil sa dóigh ar iarradh é. Cuireann an tSeirbhís Míchumais Réigiúnach in iúl gur eisíodh cathaoir rotha cumhachta agus neamhchumhachta gach bliain le trí bliana anuas mar a leanas:

Bliain	Cathaoireacha Rotha Neamhchumhachta	Cathaoireacha Rotha Cumhachta
1998 / 1999	1651	955
1999 / 2000	2730	576
2000 / 2001	1523	252

Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder

Mr Davis asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of (a) adolescents waiting a mental health assessment (b) assessments carried out last year and (c) those diagnosed as having Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD). (AQW 3250/01)

Ms de Brún: Information is not readily available in the form requested and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Níl eolas ar fáil go réidh san fhoirm iarrtha agus ní fhéadfaí é a fháil ach ar chostas díreireach.

Osteoarthritis

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) the number of (i) males and (ii) females diagnosed with osteoarthritis and (b) the number who have used a health service facility for osteoarthritis. (AQW 3259/01)

Ms de Brún:

- (a) This information is not available.
- (b) In the financial year 2000/01, there were 1,871 inpatient admissions to local hospitals for a diagnosis of osteoarthritis. Of these, 381 were male and 1,490 were female.
- (a) Níl an t-eolas seo ar fáil.
- (b) Sa bhliain airgeadais 2000/01, bhí iontráil de 1,871 othar cónaitheach chuig otharlanna áitiúla le haghaidh diagnóisithe d'oistéairíteas. Astu seo, bhí 381 fear agus 1,490 bean.

Osteoporosis

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) the number of (i) males and (ii) females diagnosed with osteoporosis and (b) the number who have used a health service facility for osteoporosis. (AQW 3260/01)

Ms de Brún:

- (a) This information is not available.
- (b) In the financial year 2000/01, there were 5,340 inpatient admissions to local hospitals for a diagnosis of osteoporosis. Of these, 1,783 were male and 3,557 were female.
- (a) Níl an t-eolas seo ar fáil.
- (b) Sa bhliain airgeadais 2000/01, bhí iontráil de 5,340 othar cónaitheach chuig otharlanna áitiúla le haghaidh diagnóisithe d'oistéapóróis. Astu seo, bhí 1,783 fear agus 3,557 bean.

Diabetes

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of (a) people diagnosed with diabetes and the various categories and (b) people who have visited a health service facility for diabetes in each of the last 3 years. (AQW 3261/01)

Ms de Brún:

- (a) This information is not available.
- (b) Information is available on numbers of inpatient admissions to local hospitals for diagnoses of diabetes, and is detailed in the table below.

Year	Admissions
1998/99	10,836
1999/00	12,904
2000/01	14,954

- (a) Níl an t-eolas seo ar fáil.
- (b) Tá eolas ar fáil ar líon n-iontrálacha chuig otharlanna áitiúla le haghaidh diagnóisithe de dhiabéiteas, agus léirítear seo sa tábla thíos.

2000/01	14,954

CoaguChek

Rev Dr William McCrea asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what consideration she has given to the test strips used in portable machines such as the coaguChek system by cardiac patients being admitted to the drug tariff; and to make a statement. (AQW 3276/01)

Ms de Brún: CoaguChek reagent test strips were added to the Drug Tariff here with effect from 1 May 2002 and are now available on prescription.

Cuireadh na stiallacha teist imoibrí CoaguChek ar an Taraif Drugaí anseo ó bhí 1 Bealtaine 2002 ann agus tá siad anois ar fáil ar oideas.

CoaguChek

Rev Dr William McCrea asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of cardiac patients in each board area in possession of a coaguChek self-monitoring system. (AQW 3277/01)

Ms de Brún: The information requested is not available.

Níl fáil ar an eolas a iarradh.

Dyspraxia: Detection

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) any means of detection available to identify pre-school age children suffering from dyspraxia; and (b) any forms of detection planned for the future. (AQW 3302/01)

Ms de Brún: The Child Health Surveillance Programme is the primary means of detecting physical and developmental abnormalities in children at an early stage, including Dyspraxia.

The content and timing of the Child Health Surveillance programme is currently under review by the National Screening Committee and my officials will consider the findings of the review when these become available.

Is é an Clár Faire Sláinte Leanaí an bealach príomhúil chun mínormáltachtaí forbartha agus fisiceacha a bhrath i leanaí ag staid luath. Áirítear Diospraicse orthu sin.

Tá athbhreithniú á dhéanamh faoi láthair ar ábhar agus amú an chlár Faire Sláinte Leanaí ag an gCoiste Scagthástála Náisiúnta agus breithneoidh m'oifigigh cinní an athbhreithnithe sin nuair a bheidh fáil orthu.

Dyspraxia

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many children are currently receiving treatment for symptoms of dyspraxia. (AQW 3303/01)

Ms de Brún: The information requested is not available.

Níl fáil ar an eolas a iarradh.

Dyspraxia

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) the number of people currently receiving treatment for symptoms of dyspraxia; and (b) of those how many are severely affected by the condition. (AQW 3304/01)

Ms de Brún: The information requested is not available.

Níl fáil ar an eolas a iarradh.

Ulster Hospital: Trolley Waits

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of trolley waits at the Ulster Hospital for the period 14-23 April 2002 inclusive. (AQW 3305/01)

Ms de Brún: Over the period 14-23 April 2002 inclusive, there were 118 trolley waits at the Ulster Hospital.

These figures refer to the total number of patients waiting for inpatient admission at 9.00 a.m. each morning.

Le linn na tréimhse 14-23 Aibreán 2002 uile san áireamh, bhí 118 fanacht ar thralaí ag Otharlann Uladh. Tagraíonn na figiúirí seo d'uimhir iomlán na n-othar a bhí ag fanacht le hiontráil othar cónaitheach ar 9.00 a.m. gach maidin.

Health Promotion Agency Campaign on Smoking and Health

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) the cost of the Health Promotion Agency campaign on Smoking and Health for each of the last 3 years; and (b) to make a statement on the effectiveness of this initiative.

(AQW 3308/01)

Ms de Brún: Expenditure by the Health Promotion Agency on the public information campaign on smoking in each of the last 3 years was as follows:

1999/2000	£283k
2000/01	£137k

South Tyrone Hospital: Operating Theatres

Mrs Carson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) has the South Tyrone Hospital two state-of-the-art operating theatres; and (b) if one of the operating theatres has laminar flow facilities designed by orthopaedic work. (AQW 3321/01)

Ms de Brún: South Tyrone Hospital has two modern theatres opened in 1994 and one of the theatres is equipped with a Laminar Flow air conditioning system.

Tá dhá obrádlann nua-aimseartha ag Ospidéal Dheisceart Thír Eoghain a osclaíodh i 1994 agus tá ceann de na hobraídlanna sin feistithe le córas aerchóirithe sreafa lannaigh.

South Tyrone Hospital: Routine Surgery

Mrs Carson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail if any consideration has been given to (a) reinstating routine surgery to South Tyrone Hospital; and (b) creating South Tyrone Hospital as a 'Centre of Excellence' for routine surgery.

(AQW 3322/01)

Ms de Brún: The future range of services to be provided at South Tyrone Hospital will be determined in the context of the decisions to be made on overall acute hospital provision here.

Cinnfear an raon seirbhísí a chuirfear ar fáil amach anseo ag Ospidéal Dheisceart Thír Eoghain i gcomhthéacs na gcinní atá le déanamh ar sholáthar foriomlán na n-ospidéal géarliachta anseo.

Eastern Multifund

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 2927/01, to outline (a) any action being taken to redeploy staff employed solely by the Eastern Multifund; and (b) the options used by the Staff Redeployment Unit to serve notice of redeployment opportunities to HPSS staff.

(AQW 3342/01)

Ms de Brún: Staff employed solely by the Eastern Multifund have been given the same opportunity as all other fundholding staff to register with the Health and Personal Social Services Redeployment Unit.

The Staff Redeployment Unit does not serve notice of redeployment opportunities to HPSS staff. Individuals provide their personal details to the Redeployment Unit and the unit provides the opportunity for employers, on a voluntary basis, to match the skills and experience of registrants with vacancies they may have. Employers may use the personal details of matched registrants for short listing and interview purposes, or ask the Redeployment Unit to bring the vacancies to the attention of the registrant who would then be expected to complete the relevant application forms and take part in the normal recruitment process.

Car Lease Schemes

Mr Adams asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail, by year and Trust area, the cost of HPSS Senior Executive car leases and car allowances, since the establishment of Trusts.

(AQW 3379/01)

Ms de Brún: My Department commissioned an evaluation of car lease schemes available to Senior Executives in HSS Trusts for the period April 1997 to March 2001. A copy of the evaluation report will shortly be made available to the Public Accounts Committee and will be placed in the library.

Car Lease Schemes

Mr Adams asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the guidelines of the HPSS Senior Executive car lease and car allowances schemes.

(AQW 3380/01)

Ms de Brún: There are a number of car leasing arrangements in operation for HPSS Senior Executives. The details of these schemes will shortly be made available in the evaluation report commissioned by my Department. A copy of this report will be placed in the library.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Ministerial Visits: Costs

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the total amount spent on Ministerial visits outside Northern Ireland in each of the last 3 years.

(AQW 2126/01)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr P Robinson): No money was spent on Ministerial visits outside NI during my first period in office from 1 December 1999 to 12 February 2000.

During my second period in office from 25 October 2001 up to 4 March 2002, the total amount spent on Ministerial visits outside NI was £722.37.

This information has been calculated for periods of devolution. The "total amount spent" covers the costs of all officials who accompanied the Minister. It does not include salary costs.

New Targeting Social Need

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail, in each of the past 5 years, (a) the percentage of his budget relating to Targeting Social Need; (b) the actual spend for TSN; (c) the number of people employed relating to TSN; (d) the number of people who benefited from these programmes; (e) the actual and practical benefits as a result of his TSN programmes; and (f) the tasks specifically undertaken and completed. (AQW 2929/01)

Mr P Robinson: New TSN does not have a separate budget and the information is not available in the form requested.

My Department's New TSN Action Plan for the period April 2001 to March 2003 illustrates progress at 31 March 2001 and revises and updates the objectives for the period to 2003. A copy of the plan has been placed in the Assembly library and can be accessed on my Department's website www.drdni.gov.uk. An evaluation of the implementation and impact of New TSN will commence shortly and this will help inform future consideration of the policy.

Road Damage: Ballylumford Power Station

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development to give his assessment of damage caused to roads and adjacent properties in the Islandmagee area in Larne by the transportation of heavy loads and excess traffic going to the projects at Ballylumford Power Station.

(AQW 3125/01)

Mr P Robinson: My Department's Roads Service has worked closely with the Ballylumford Power Station staff to keep disruption and damage to roads to a minimum during the ongoing major development works at the site. Inevitably, however, the works have led to a significant increase in vehicle movements, particularly heavy and abnormal loads, along the B90 route through Islandmagee.

An agreed haulage route for construction traffic was therefore put in place by Roads Service along the B90 route using Lough Road, Low Road, Brown's Bay Road and Ferris Bay Road. With regard to abnormal loads, I should explain that Roads Service can authorise the carriage of abnormal heavy or wide loads (over 40 tonnes or 4.3 metres wide respectively) on the public road by way of a permit, provided it is satisfied that the proposed route to be taken by the haulier is capable of accommodating the load in question. Abnormal loads travelling to the Power Station are required by their permits to turn off Browns Bay Road onto Hollow Road, because of the road alignment at this crossroads, and then use the B90 Ballylumford Road to the works.

Officials have also advised that investigations are ongoing into 5 incidents of damage caused by the road verge subsiding into adjacent land along the B90 route. Two of these were attributed to abnormal loads, one directly to a delivery of construction materials to the site and two to the general volume of traffic using the roads. Where damage to the public road can be attributed to third parties, Roads Service will seek to recover the cost. I also understand that my Department's Central Claims Unit is currently investigating 2 claims for structural damage to properties along Hollow Road.

As to the general wear and tear on the B90 route, it would be impossible to distinguish between construction traffic, abnormal loads or traffic normally using the roads. However, there has been a noticeable increase in maintenance costs to the B90 over the last 3 years from £4,177 in 1999/2000 to £23,498 in 2001/2002. I understand that, according to the Power Station staff, a major reduction in lorries supplying the plant is expected from this July onwards and by November 2002, the work at the plant should be completed. In the meantime, Roads Service will continue to carry out regular inspections of the B90 route to ensure any detected defects to the road surface or structure are quickly repaired.

Water Meters: Installation Costs

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (a) the cost of installing water meters for all households in Northern Ireland; and (b) the timescale to implement such an exercise. (AQW 3150/01)

Mr P Robinson: Water Service estimates that it would cost in the region of £120 million and take at least some 5 to 10 years to install water meters in all domestic properties.

These estimates are provided for information only. I have no intention of introducing water metering for domestic customers.

Adshel

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline, in respect of Adshel's contract with the Roads Service Agency, (a) the number of advertising shelters currently agreed for each District Council area in the next 9 years; (b) the criteria for allocating an advertising shelter; (c) the number of non-advertising shelters currently agreed for each District Council area; (d) the criteria for allocating a non-advertising shelter; and (e) the criteria for future shelter site identification.

(AQW 3198/01)

Mr P Robinson: In January 2001, my Department's Roads Service and 23 of the country's district councils entered into a 15-year contract with the bus shelter provider, Adshel, for the provision of approximately 1500 bus shelters throughout the council areas at no cost to the Department or the councils.

The contract provides that Adshel have to replace their existing advertising shelters within each council area and provide a number of advertising shelters. An estimate of the minimum number of advertising shelters is included in the attached table (ie, the total of columns (ii) and (iii)). The contract also provides that, in addition to the number of new advertising shelters included in the table, Adshel may erect others at locations where there is a public need and Adshel feel there are advertising opportunities.

Whilst the contract is quite complex, in broad terms it requires Adshel to erect one new non-advertising shelter for every existing advertising shelters to be replaced or new advertising shelter to be provided. The number of new non-advertising shelters to be provided in each council area is shown in column (1V) of the attached table.

In liaison with Translink and the councils, Roads Service will identify, on the basis of public need, the most suitable locations for new shelters. Details of these locations will be forwarded to Adshel to decide if they represent advertising opportunities. Where they do not, Roads Service can request that non-advertising shelters are erected.

Translink: Securing Property

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development what action has been taken by Translink to secure their property and thus prevent easy access to those who are carrying out attacks on residents and property in the Dillon's Court/Avenue Area of Whiteabbey.

(AQW 3219/01)

Mr P Robinson: Translink has advised that it was aware of the recent upsurge in the number of trespass incidents which have culminated in attacks around the Dillons Court area of Whiteabbey. As a result the Company conducted a detailed inspection of its fencing, which revealed a breach that was immediately sealed and strengthened, and it is also currently examining the possibility of raising the fencing behind Dillons Court.

Translink has also enlisted the help of the Police Service of Northern Ireland and six people have now been arrested for trespass.

Translink has advised that perimeter fencing is checked on a continual basis using overseers from Northern Ireland Railways. District Managers also check fencing from outside Railway property where possible and any breaches found are repaired. Translink's main priority in doing so is to keep trespassers off the railway line because of the risk they cause to both NIR passengers and themselves.

Roads Maintenance

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline (a) the net revenue expenditure on roads maintenance; and (b) the gross capital expenditure on roads maintenance in each constituency for each of the last 5 years.

(AQW 3220/01)

Mr P Robinson: My Department's Roads Service does not maintain details of expenditure on a parliamentary constituency basis. However, the tables attached show the expenditure incurred by Roads Service on maintenance activities and on capital (major and minor) road improvement schemes in each District Council area during the 5 year period 1996/97 to 2000/01. All expenditure on roads is stated as gross rather than net revenue.

In providing this information, I should make it clear that Roads Service does not simply split its total budget for capital and maintenance expenditure across district council areas. In particular, major road improvements are prioritised on a country-wide basis, not on a district council basis, taking account of a broad range of criteria such as strategic planning policy, traffic flows, number of accidents, potential travel save times, environmental impact and value for money. While the actual spend on a major works scheme may be within one council area, the benefits of such schemes are not confined to the district council area or constituency in which they are located.

The resources available for minor capital schemes are allocated to the 4 Roads Service Divisions and, in turn, apportioned across district council areas on a needs-based priority approach using indicators such as population, weighted road lengths and the number of accidents. This ensures, so far as possible, an equitable distribution of funds across the country.

Similarly the resources available for each maintenance activity (e.g., resurfacing, patching, gully emptying, grass cutting etc) are apportioned to district council areas using appropriate indicators of need.

Motor Scooters: Public Service Vehicle Accessibility

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development has he any plans to allow those with disabilities to take their mobility scooters on public transport similar to prams and cycles. (AQW 3262/01)

Mr P Robinson: The Rail Vehicle Accessibility Regulations, which took effect on 2 July 2001, require all new trains to be capable of carrying wheelchairs up to a specified reference size. The Public Service Vehicle Accessibility Regulations which are due to be made by the Department of the Environment later this year will require all new buses to be capable of carrying wheelchairs of the same reference size.

Translink has advised that currently most wheelchairs can be carried on all trains and all low floor buses (which comprise 14.4% of its total bus fleet). However mobility scooters, which are larger than reference sized wheelchairs, cannot be carried on either trains or buses. Unfortunately it would be impractical to carry such oversized equipment on public transport vehicles.

Water Efficiency Measures

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline (a) any water efficiency measures which have been introduced; and (b) his assessment on their impact. (AQW 3353/01)

Mr P Robinson: Water Service's Water Efficiency Plan, which was published in April 2000, aims to reduce water demand by the actions of Water Service and its customers. The main elements of the plan include education and awareness, the issue of water saving devices known as Hippo bags, leakage reduction, water audits, and extended metering of commercial properties.

During 2000 and 2001 water efficiency leaflets were issued to every property in Northern Ireland. These explained how to use water wisely and the steps that can be taken by individuals to save water, both in the home and in the garden. The use of Hippo bags has also been promoted in customer information leaflets including water audit leaflets for the home, school, business and agricultural premises. These leaflets are being displayed in public buildings including libraries and post offices. Water Service operates a specially equipped and decorated bus "The Water Bus". This visits schools to enhance the awareness of pupils about water and wastewater services, and emphasises the importance of water efficiency. Hippo bags are issued to all pupils who visit the Water

Bus. Schools are encouraged to carry out a water audit prior to visits to demonstrate how water savings can be achieved. Exhibitions at agricultural shows, garden festivals and the Ideal Home Exhibition have also been used to raise public awareness and promote the water efficiency message.

Over 37,000 Hippo bags have been issued since 1997. Hippo bags are currently being issued to all government buildings. Water Service will continue to examine opportunities to further promote their use. A leaflet, which provides advice on dealing with bogus callers and using water wisely, has recently been distributed to every property in Northern Ireland.

The water industry in general, and the water regulators, acknowledge that assessing the impact of water efficiency measures on demand for water, is extremely difficult. Reductions in water demand as a result of education and awareness programmes will inevitably only become manifest in the longer term. There are, however, a number of indicators, which suggest that the water efficiency measures taken by Water Service are proving to be successful. Examples of these are a reduction in leakage since the freeze/thaw in January 2001, the results of Water Service's latest customer survey which indicates that there is an increasing awareness of water efficiency, and the demand from customers for Hippo bags. The extension of metering to additional business and commercial customers will encourage them to use water efficiently and monitor its use.

While the gains made to date are encouraging, Water Service recognizes that there is a need to continue to actively promote the efficient use of this precious resource.

Water Efficiency Measures

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Regional Development what economic assessment can he make of enhanced water efficiency measures against capital investment in new supply sources; and to make a statement. (AQW 3354/01)

Mr P Robinson: As part of its Water Resource Strategy, which will be published for consultation next month, Water Service has taken account of demand management measures. Based on an economic assessment, Water Service intends to reduce leakage, which is the key element of demand management, to the economic level by 2006. This will involve an investment of £25 million over the next 4 years, in addition to the £22 million invested in leakage reduction over the past 4 years. Water Service will also continue to promote the benefits to customers of water efficiency measures.

In seeking to meet the demand for water by all customers in the future, Water Service has adopted a twin track approach of seeking to reduce demand through a wide range of water efficiency measures, while at the same time planning for the timely implementation of additional supplies. This approach ensures best value for money, without compromising the security of the supply of water, either now or in the future.

Water Smart Programme

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline (a) what assessment can he make of the 'Water Smart' programme; and (b) if he is considering introducing it to Northern Ireland to promote greater water efficiency. (AQW 3355/01)

Mr P Robinson: The Watersmart programme is being promoted by Eaga-Services Ltd. It involves an audit of water consumption within selected domestic premises and the provision of water savings measures such as replacement of showerheads, plumbing repairs, rain water containers and trigger hoses. Information on water efficiency is also provided to each household.

Water Service officials have met representatives of Eaga-Services Ltd and are aware that the programme has been piloted by the Essex and Suffolk Water Company. The results indicate that the costs of the programme are likely to be more than 10 times the cost of comparable leakage reduction measures currently being undertaken by Water Service and would not, therefore, represent good value for money. However, Eaga-Services Ltd has agreed to provide more information on the economic benefits of the programme. This additional information will be carefully considered by Water Service.

Water Efficiency Measures

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline any discussions he or his officials have had with the Department for Social Development in respect of generating greater value through combining water efficiency measures with energy efficiency measures, especially on domestic premises; and to make a statement. [R] (AQW 3356/01)

Mr P Robinson: Water Service officials have had discussions with representatives of Eaga-Services Ltd about the Watersmart programme. The initial indications are that the cost of introducing the programme, in Northern Ireland, would not represent good value for money.

Water Service is aware however, that the company is assisting the Department for Social Development in an energy efficiency scheme. My officials will consult with their colleagues in the Department for Social Development to establish whether or not combining the energy efficiency and Watersmart programme would reduce costs to a more economic level.

Kilclean Road

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Regional Development if Roads Service have undertaken an assessment of the adequacy of provision for surface water dispersal on the Kilclean Road from the Donegal border into Castlederg; and, if so, what conclusions were reached on water incursion on to this road. (AQW 3369/01)

Mr P Robinson: My Department's Roads Service recently carried out improvements, costing some £65,000, to the structure and surface of approximately half the 4km rural section of the Kilclean Road. The works included resurfacing and drainage improvements, involving the cleaning of outlets and the provision of gullies at the southern end of the road.

Roads Service considers that the 500m urban section of Kilclean Road is also in need of improvement and proposes to resurface it in conjunction with drainage and footway works which are the responsibility of the developer of adjoining land. Officials are in contact with the developer regarding the timing of these works and it is hoped that a satisfactory solution can soon be reached.

Roads Service is not aware of any other significant problems on this road but if the member provides me with details of any specific location where water incursion is causing concern, I will gladly have the matter investigated.

Planning Applications: Downpatrick

Mr McGrady asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQO 1142/01, if he is aware that the processing of planning applications for planning permissions for single and multiple dwellings in the area served by the Downpatrick Water Treatment Works has been stopped. (AQW 3472/01)

Mr P Robinson: I am aware of reports in the media about the processing of planning applications in the area served by Downpatrick Wastewater Treatment works, and concerns about this matter were raised in writing by the Department of the Environment with my Department last week.

The Downpatrick Waste Water Treatment Works is not overloaded. There is spare treatment capacity within the Works and the effluent discharged consistently complies with regulatory discharge standards set by the Environment and Heritage Service.

Aside from routine problems such as sewer blockages, Water Service has, in general, had no concerns about the operation of the local sewerage infrastructure. However, the Environment and Heritage Service has indicated recently that it has concerns about the inlet to the Treatment Works. Water Service is seeking further details about these concerns and will take appropriate action in conjunction with Environment and Heritage Service.

Sewage Works: Downpatrick

Mr McGrady asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQO 1142/01, to ensure that immediate action is taken to install the new inlet screening equipment at the Sewerage Works in Downpatrick in order that conditional planning approvals for developments in the town can be permitted. (AQW 3508/01)

Mr P Robinson: Preliminary work has already commenced on the installation of the new screening equipment at the inlet to the Downpatrick Waste Water Treatment Works. It is expected that the work will be completed within the next 4 to 5 weeks. The work will improve the reliability and efficiency of the treatment process by more effectively removing rags and other debris which have led to occasional blockages in the past.

Congestion Charging or Road Tolling

Mr Hay asked the Minister for Regional Development if he has any plans to introduce congestion charging or road tolling. (AQO 1341/01)

Mr P Robinson: My Department has no immediate plans to introduce congestion charging or road tolling on roads in Northern Ireland. In developing the 'Proposed Regional Transportation Strategy for Northern Ireland', published in February 2002, my Department considered a range of travel demand management and revenue raising mechanisms.

Studies undertaken on the introduction of road user charging in Belfast suggest that it is technically feasible, and this will be considered further during the development of the Belfast Metropolitan Transport Plan. In the meantime, my Department will closely monitor the impact of any such road user charging initiatives when they are introduced in other parts of the United Kingdom.

Knockmore/Sprucefield Link

Mr Poots asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans are there to complete the Knockmore/Sprucefield link in conjunction with the development being proposed at Sprucefield by Stannifer/ Snoddons. (AQO 1338/01)

Mr P Robinson: In keeping with the principle that developers should pay for the transport infrastructure needed to support their developments, this application was subject to a Transport Assessment. As a consequence, the developers of the Sprucefield Regional Centre are required to provide a road link from the A1 Hillsborough Road to the M1 motorway to ensure safe and convenient access to this very significant commercial development.

My Department's Roads Service does not, however, have any current plans to continue this road link to Knockmore Road.

The benefit of the Sprucefield/Knockmore link would be to open up an area for major development and to form a section of an outer distributor road around the city of Lisburn. In keeping with the overarching objectives of my Department's Regional Development Strategy and draft Regional Transportation Strategy, the future need for this road, along with other strategic road proposals, will be subject to examination within the current Belfast Metropolitan Transport Plan process which, in turn, will inform the Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan.

I hope that Roads Service will have published the Belfast Metropolitan Transport Plan by the end of the current financial year.

Water and Sewerage Systems: Belfast

Dr McDonnell asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline any progress on the renewal of the water and sewerage systems for Belfast; and to make a statement. (AQO 1325/01)

Mr P Robinson: Much of the sewerage system in the Greater Belfast area dates back to the turn of the Century. Upgrading of the system is, therefore, a major priority. Following a detailed study of the system, it is planned to invest some £50 million on hydraulic and structural improvements and a further £55 million on a storm management system. Work on these projects is programmed to commence in October 2004. Interim solutions have been identified to alleviate the risk of flooding at 12 areas in Belfast that are considered particularly vulnerable. Work has already been completed at 5 of the areas and is either underway or imminent at the remaining sites.

The water supply network in the Greater Belfast area contains significant lengths of old cast iron mains, which are susceptible to bursts, leakage, dirty water and inadequate water pressure. A water main rehabilitation strategy for the Belfast area has identified an investment need of around £65 million. The work will be implemented on a phased basis, commencing in 2003. Each year, around £2 million is spent on water main replacement in the Belfast area, simply to deal with urgent remedial work identified by operational staff.

Harland & Wolff Land

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development what progress has been made on the proposed enlarged and upgraded Clonty Clay Sewage Treatment Works at Clonmore road, Dungannon; and to make a statement. (AQO 1334/01)

Mr P Robinson: As I indicated in response to an earlier Assembly Question on 15 April 2002, my approach to the issue of the surplus Harland & Wolff land has been guided by two key principles. First, that the proposed agreement between Belfast Harbour Commissioners and Titanic Quarter Ltd for the development of the lands should be justifiable in its own right; and second to ensure that the public interest is fully safeguarded.

As a result of the negotiations which have taken place with the company and BHC I am now satisfied on both these counts, with the result that I expect to be in a position shortly to convey my departments' formal approval to BHC under the terms of the Memorandum of Understanding with the Harbour Commissioners.

This will enable BHC to conclude the proposed agreement with Titanic Quarter Ltd, and so trigger an injection of finance in to Harland & Wolff Heavy Industries Ltd by its parent company, which will be used to fund its new Business Plan.

I consider that this is a good outcome not only for the company and BHC, but also the wider public interest since it will lead to the early re-development of these lands, contribute to the regeneration for the surrounding area, and the creation of new job prospects.

Clonty Clay Sewage Treatment Works

Mr Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development what progress has been made on the proposed enlarged and upgraded Clonty Clay Sewage Treatment Works at Clonmore road, Dungannon; and to make a statement. (AQO 1324/01)

Mr P Robinson: A study has been carried out of the sewerage systems in Tamnamore, Mullenkill and Clonty Clay areas. The study has recommended the rationalisation of the sewerage systems by upgrading the Wastewater Treatment Works at Tamnamore, and pumping the wastewater from Mullenkill and Clonty Clay to Tamnamore. This will allow the Works at Mullenkill and Clonty Clay to be closed. The scheme, which is estimated to cost £775,000, is programmed to commence in late 2003, subject to the availability of finance. It will take a year to complete.

Wastewater Treatment: North Down

Mr McFarland asked the Minister for Regional Development what progress has been made on improving wastewater treatment in North Down. (AQO 1337/01)

Mr P Robinson: A substantial programme of work is underway or planned to improve wastewater treatment facilities in the North Down area to ensure compliance with regulatory standards including The Urban Wastewater Treatment Regulations (NI) 1995.

I announced in the Assembly, on 26 February 2002, that the new Wastewater Treatment Works, to serve the Bangor, Donaghadee and Millisle areas would be located adjacent to the Donaghadee carpet factory. The planning documentation, including the detailed environmental statement, is now complete and the planning application will be submitted this week to Planning Service. The planning approval, land acquisition and project procurement procedures will be complex and lengthy. Subject to satisfactory progress on all of these areas, it is hoped to commence work in 2005. It will take 2 years to complete the scheme at an estimated cost of £35 million.

Major improvements are underway to the sewerage system in the Crawfordsburn and Helen's Bay areas to ensure full compliance with the regulatory standards. This involves the upgrading of sewers and the construction of a new pumping station to transfer the wastewater to the existing Seahill Wastewater Treatment Works. The scheme, estimated to cost £3 million, is underway and should be completed by end 2003. The upgrading of Seahill Wastewater Treatment Works is now expected to commence in August 2003 and the latest estimated cost is £2 million.

Road Repair:

Public Accounts Committee Recommendations

Mrs Courtney asked the Minister for Regional Development if he intends to implement the recommendations of the Public Accounts Committee regarding road repairs. (AQO 1330/01)

Mr P Robinson: I presume the Member is referring to the report on 'Road Openings by Utilities', published by the Public Accounts Committee last month.

My Department's Roads Service has already responded positively to many of the issues highlighted in the associated Northern Ireland Audit Office report on the same subject, published in February 2001. Roads Service has developed an Action Plan which addresses the main issues arising from this report. This plan includes a number of performance indicators agreed with utilities, which will be monitored on a regular basis.

I was pleased that the recent Public Accounts Committee report welcomed many of the actions taken by my Department since the publication of the Audit Office report. This good progress will be reflected in the Department's Memorandum of Reply to the Public Accounts Committee.

Water Treatment and Sewerage System

Mr J Kelly asked the Minister for Regional Development what assessment can he make of (a) the flexibility of the water treatment and sewerage system; and (b) the capacity to deal with possible increases due to global warming. (AQO 1327/01)

Mr P Robinson: Water Service has, over the years, developed its water source and treatment facilities through a series of strategic resource studies taking account of future demand, population growth, potential for leakage reduction and the economical use of existing and new resources. The current review of the water resource strategy, for the period up to 2030, also takes account of the flexibility between resources. The review is nearing completion and will be published for consultation before the end of the summer.

Water Service's major wastewater treatment works are designed for a 30 year life expectancy. The design incorporates a degree of over capacity, in the form of storm storage tanks, to enable the works to function effectively in periods of extended rainfall.

Climate change is an issue that will have to be addressed by the water industry nationally, when there is more certainty about its impact. In the meantime, Water Service is participating fully in the industry's approach to this issue through its membership of United Kingdom Water Industry Research Limited. Water Service is also involved in a "Climate Change Impact Study for Northern Ireland" through the Scotland and Northern Ireland Forum for Environmental Research. Water Service will adopt any changes which will be required in best practice arising from this research.

Greyabbey Sewage Treatment Works

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister for Regional Development if building has commenced at Greyabbey Sewage Treatment Works prior to being granted planning permission. (AQO 1332/01)

Mr P Robinson: The capacity of the existing wastewater treatment facilities at Greyabbey is restricting development in the area and the Works will have to be upgraded to meet the requirements of the Urban Waste Water Treatment Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1995 by 31 December 2005. The Department obtained outline planning permission for the replacement of the existing Works at Greyabbey on 23 March 2001. A reserved matters planning application has been lodged with Planning Service but has not yet been approved.

A contract to upgrade both the Kircubbin and the Greyabbey Works was let earlier this year and work commenced at Kircubbin in April 2002. It was proposed to commence work at Greyabbey, on the construction of a temporary treatment Works to allow for the demolition of the existing Works. However, concerns have been expressed by residents about the design of the proposed new Works. At a meeting with Water Service on 1 May 2002, residents and public representatives agreed that work on a temporary treatment Works could proceed, while discussions on the final appearance of the new Works continued. Water Service has confirmed that any amendments to the appearance of the new Works will be submitted to Planning Service as a revision to the reserved matters application.

Trunk Roads: Overtaking Opportunities

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans the Roads Service Agency has to improve overtaking opportunities on trunk roads. (AQO 1335/01)

Mr P Robinson: Guaranteed overtaking opportunities can be provided by dual carriageways. My Department's Roads Service has therefore a number of dual carriageway schemes in its Preparation Pool, e.g. Toome Bypass, Loughbrickland to Beech Hill, and a section of the Belfast to Larne road, and others are being considered for inclusion in the 10-Year Forward Planning Schedule. However these types of road are expensive.

Roads Service recognises that restricted overtaking opportunities on rural routes with relatively high traffic flows give rise to driver frustration. In an attempt to provide improved overtaking opportunities on those sections of road where the traffic volumes do not justify a dual carriageway standard, Roads Service is proposing the use of 2+1 layouts on single carriageway roads. These provide two lanes in one direction to allow overtaking and one lane in the opposite direction. Schemes like this have recently been constructed at Leckpatrick near Strabane, on the A26 south of Ballymoney and others are being constructed at Tattykeel near Omagh and Burntollet near Londonderry. Roads Service has identified a number of further possible locations on the key transport corridors where it would be possible to construct wide single 2+1 layouts and these are being considered for possible inclusion in the 10-year Forward Planning Schedule.

The size of the future capital works programme which would fund such schemes will be informed by the proposals for the Regional Strategic Transportation Network in the Regional Transportation Strategy.

Water and Sewerage System: Investment

Mr O'Neill asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the investment backlog and future investment needs in the water and sewerage system. (AQO 1326/01)

Mr P Robinson: Water Service needs to make substantial investment in the water and wastewater infrastructure in order to satisfy public health requirements, comply with European Union Directives, replace out of date infrastructure and meet increasing demands for new development. An assessment of need carried out in 1994, known as the Asset Management Plan, qualified this investment as £2.5 billion over 20 years. This included a backlog of some £460 million. Since then actual capital investment has averaged £80 million a year, compared to requirement of £125 million a year. Consequently, the backlog is now estimated to be in the region of £800 million.

The Asset Management Plan is currently being updated and is expected to be completed by the end of 2002. Present indications are that investment of almost £3 billion will be required over the next 20 years. Although this would represent an average investment of some £150 million per year, investment over the next 5-10 years will have to be significantly higher in order to address the backlog and the requirements of the EU Directives.

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Improvement and Repair Grants: Expenditure

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the expenditure by each local district council for improvement and repair grants in private sector houses in (a) 1999-2000; and (b) 2000-2001. (AQW 3223/01)

The Minister for Social Development (Mr Dodds): The information requested is set out in the tables below.

Voluntary Groups: Grants Awarded

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister for Social Development to list (a) voluntary groups which were awarded grants in (i) 2000-01 (ii) 2001-02; (b) the amount each group was awarded; and (c) the voluntary groups which have been allocated funding for 2002-03.

(AQW 3233/01)

Mr Dodds: I have made this information available to the member and placed a copy in the Assembly Library.

Air Quality Monitoring:
Springhill Park, Strabane

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development what are the implications for the Housing Executive in respect of the results to date from the on going air quality monitoring at Springhill Park, Strabane by the Environmental Health Department of Strabane District Council.

(AQW 3239/01)

Mr Dodds: Strabane District Council has been monitoring the level of smoke in the atmosphere for a couple of years and the current monitoring may be as a result of European Union guidelines. The Housing Executive has not seen the results of any monitoring reports. It will consider the full findings of any environmental survey, when available, and factor this into the prioritisation of its heating replacement programme. The Housing Executive has an ongoing heating programme in progress, which will result in the phased replacement of solid fuel heating, and contribute to better air quality. However, the delivery of the programme will take several years at current funding levels. Accelerating the programme would require substantial additional funds and even if those were available, delivery within a much shorter time frame would depend very much on the capacity of the plumbing and heating industry.

Consultancy Firms/Consultants

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 1955/01, to detail the level of expenditure, in each of the last three years, on consultancy firms/consultants that are based in (a) Northern Ireland (b) the Republic of Ireland (c) the rest of the UK and (d) outside the British Isles. (AQW 3274/01)

Mr Dodds: The level of expenditure, in each of the last 3 years, on consultancy firms/consultants that are based in (a) Northern Ireland (b) the Republic of Ireland (c) the rest of the UK and (d) outside the British Isles is set out in the table below. The difference of £137,378 over the figures previously supplied is due to a typographical error amounting to £117,800 in respect of the figures for 2000/2001 and additional expenditure of £15,652 for 2000/2001 and £3,926 for 2001/2002, which due to an oversight, was not included in my earlier reply.

Financial Year	Northern Ireland	Republic of Ireland	Rest of the United Kingdom	Outside the British Isles
1999-2000	£1,136,628	£6,000	£1,269,474	Nil
2000-2001	£1,370,888	Nil	£1,890,254	Nil
2001-2002	£789,095	Nil	£1,304,941	Nil

DLA Claimants: Diabetes

Mr Wells asked the Minister for Social Development to detail, by constituency, the number of DLA claimants aged over 18 which have diabetes as the main disabling condition. (AQW 3315/01)

Mr Dodds: The table below provides the information requested as at 28 February 2002.

1. The computer scan contains missing postcodes. No electoral ward can be assigned in this circumstance so these have been grouped a "missing postcode".
2. In producing these analyses, individual records were attributed to wards and Board on the basis of their postcode. Not all records can be correctly allocated to a ward using this method, and some cannot be allocated at all.
3. Past investigation has demonstrated that mis-allocations and non-allocations do not necessarily occur randomly between areas, and at ward level the proportion of records mis-allocated or unallocated can be substantial.
4. At present, it seems likely that a higher than average proportion of the records that cannot be attributed to a ward are in the following areas: Fermanagh District Council, Derry City Council and parts of Belfast City Council.

Pollution Control: Carrickfergus

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (a) the results of Housing Executive controlled areas inspected every 6 months in the Carrickfergus area, (b) the number of pollution control notices served by the Housing Executive in Carrickfergus and (c) the number of requests to contractors to remove rubbish. (AQW 3333/01)

Mr Dodds: The most recent controlled areas inspection in the Carrickfergus area, completed in January 2002, resulted in 49 requests to contractors to remove rubbish.

The Housing Executive does not serve Pollution Control Notices, this is a matter for the local district council.

Tenants Charter

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development, in light of the 'Tenants Charter', what action is the Housing Executive taking to address the shortfall in the number of contractors available to carry out minor repairs. (AQW 3349/01)

Mr Dodds: There is no shortfall in the number of contractors currently available to carry out minor repairs for the Housing Executive. All contracts have contractors currently allocated to them. When contracts expire, contractors go out of business or are forced to cease work in particular areas because of circumstances beyond their control, the Housing Executive appoints "caretaker" contractors to cover necessary work until the situation can be resolved.

Maintenance: Response Times

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development if the Housing Executive monitors the response times for maintenance carried out by contractors on their behalf. (AQW 3350/01)

Mr Dodds: The Housing Executive has a comprehensive monitoring system in place to report on the performance of all its contractors in terms of response times. The report is presented to a monthly meeting of Area Managers for appropriate action.

Maintenance Repairs: Ards Borough

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development how many maintenance repairs have been carried out by the Housing Executive in the Ards Borough in the last 12 months. (AQW 3351/01)

Mr Dodds: During the financial year, April 2001-March 2002, a total of 15,339 maintenance repairs were completed in the Ards Borough Council area.

Tenants Charter

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development how many maintenance repairs carried out by the Housing Executive were completed within the specific time allocated according to the 'Tenant's Charter'. (AQW 3352/01)

Mr Dodds: During the financial year, April 2001 - March 2002, there were 473,016 response maintenance jobs carried out by the Housing Executive. The breakdown of these jobs and the percentage completed within the published timescales are:

	No. of Jobs	Allocated timescale 'Tenants Charter'	Completed within published timescale
Emergency	100,589	Within 24 hrs	91%
Urgent	115,615	Within 4 working days	87%
Routine	231,334	Within 4 weeks	90%
Change of Tenancy	25,478	Dependant on category of repair	85%

Domestic Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr Douglas asked the Minister for Social Development to outline (a) the uptake of the various measures under the Domestic Energy Efficiency Scheme; and (b) the estimated energy saving benefits achieved. (AQW 3381/01)

Mr Dodds: The Domestic Energy Efficiency Scheme (DEES) ended on 30 June 2001 and in its final year some 17,000 homes had basic insulation measures installed. However, the Domestic Energy Efficiency Scheme did not address the problem of fuel poverty. Consequently it was replaced by the Warm Homes Scheme from July 1 2001 and from then to 31 March 2002, over 4,300 homes received substantial heating and insulation measures to lift householders out of fuel poverty.

The estimated energy savings benefits achieved will vary from household to household, depending on the condition of the dwelling and the measures installed. National Energy Action (NI) has been commissioned to undertake an independent evaluation of the Warm Homes Scheme, which will not only identify the energy saving benefits but also the improvement to health and quality of life.

Oil-fired Central Heating

Mrs Nelis asked the Minister for Social Development to detail, by constituency, (a) the number of applicants who have been assessed for oil-fired central heating and have been waiting more than 6 months; and (b) the number who have applied and are awaiting assessment. (AQW 3406/01)

Mr Dodds: The information on the number of applicants who have been assessed for oil-fired central heating and have been waiting more than 6 months is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. The reason for this is because there are a number of schemes within the remit of my Department and the Northern Ireland Housing Executive which provide domestic central heating, but which do not differentiate between oil-fired or natural gas heating.

The numbers who have applied and are waiting for assessment are as follows: -

The Housing Executive's Welfare Adaptations Scheme

Five hundred and fifty requests have been received and are either awaiting or undergoing assessment.

The Disabled Facilities Grants Scheme

This information is not readily available in the format requested and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Private Sector Grants

Central heating may also be provided under the Housing Executive's renovation/replacement grant system. However, the information requested could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Scheme for the Purchase of Evacuated Dwellings

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Social Development if Housing Executive discounts given under the Right to Buy Scheme are reclaimed from owners selling under the SPED Scheme. (AQW 3456/01)

Mr Dodds: Paragraph 3.7 of the SPED scheme specifically requires repayment of any discount given under the House Sales Scheme, where a Housing Executive tenant who has bought his home subsequently sells it back within 3 years of purchase.

Scheme for the Purchase of Evacuated Dwellings

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the (a) SPED Scheme; and (b) uptake, per constituency, over the last 3 years. (AQW 3457/01)

Mr Dodds: The purpose of the Scheme for the Purchase of Evacuated Dwellings (SPED) is to assist owner-occupiers who are forced to leave their dwellings because of threat or intimidation. The Housing Executive has the discretion to acquire houses from owner-occupiers, where they, or any member of their household residing with them, have been threatened or intimidated. Applicants under the Scheme are required to satisfy all of the following conditions:

- The house must be owner-occupied and must be the applicant's only or principal home.
- A certificate signed by the RUC Chief Constable, or authorised signatory, must be submitted to the Housing Executive, stating clearly that it is unsafe for the applicant or a member of his/her household residing with him/her to continue to live in the house, because that person has been directly or specifically threatened or intimidated and as a result is at risk of serious injury or death.
- The applicant must qualify for Full Duty Applicant status (accepted as homeless) under the Housing Executive's Common Selection Scheme.

Application forms are available from the Housing Executive's Land & Property Section which is located in the Housing Centre, Belfast.

The numbers of those who have taken up the scheme is not available by constituency but the table below provides the information by Housing Executive District office.

Estate Wardens: Appointment

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 3118/01, (a) to detail the criteria used to keep 'constantly under review the appointment of estate wardens'; and (b) who is responsible for this task.

(AQW 3506/01)

Mr Dodds: The criteria which determine whether or not the appointment of an Estate Warden might be a useful estate management measure are the volume and variety of problems, as identified by staff, tenants and other representatives. The introduction and funding of a warden is considered against other competing priorities for expenditure. The local District Manager is responsible for producing operational plans, including the need for estate wardens and, subsequently, agreeing these with the Area Manager.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

Friday 24 May 2002

Written Answers to Questions

OFFICE OF THE FIRST MINISTER AND DEPUTY FIRST MINISTER

Non-Executive Bill Unit

Mr Ford asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what discussions have taken place with the Assembly Commission regarding the establishment of a Non-Executive Bills Unit similar to that established by the Scottish Parliament. (AQW 2781/01)

Reply: The establishment of a Non-Executive Bill Unit is a matter for the Assembly Commission and we have not discussed this with them.

‘Reshape, Rebuild, Achieve’

Mr Berry asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail how much of the £3 million budget allocated to the ‘Reshape, Rebuild, Achieve’ cross-departmental strategy will be (a) spent on administration; and (b) allocated to victims’ groups across Northern Ireland. (AQW 2991/01)

Reply: To support the actions contained in “Reshape, Rebuild, Achieve” a £3 million Strategy Implementation Fund has been created with funding coming jointly from the Northern Ireland Executive and the Northern Ireland Office. This £3 million fund is for use by Departments and Agencies to fund projects and services of direct benefit to victims and will not be allocated directly to victims’ groups. The administrative costs of allocating and distributing this fund will be met by the Victims Unit of our department. It is anticipated that administrative costs associated with any project funded will be kept to a minimum.

Equality Impact Assessment

Mr Beggs asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what criteria is used to determine which groups or individuals are consulted as part of the equality impact assessment of any new proposals.

(AQW 3078/01)

Reply: The criteria used to determine who is consulted is contained in the Equality Commission’s guidance on the implementation of the statutory duties which was approved by a former Secretary of State. The Equality Commission guidance states, “Consultation must be carried out with relevant interest groups as well as the Equality Commission, other public bodies, voluntary, community, trade union and other groups with a legitimate interest in the matter...”

Our department’s Equality Scheme gives officials discretion to consult relevant organisations drawn from the Scheme’s consultation list. We are committed to ensuring that consultation is effective, inclusive and as meaningful as possible. . We recognise that the consultation process has given rise to some difficulties both for those consulting and those consulted and are looking at ways to improve our methods of consultation.

Consultancy Firms/Consultants

Mr Weir asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister, pursuant to AQW 1941/01, to detail the level of expenditure in each of the last 3 years on consultancy firms/consultants based in (a) Northern Ireland; (b) the Republic of Ireland; (c) the rest of the UK; and (d) outside the British Isles. (AQW 3290/01)

Reply: The level of expenditure spent by the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister on consultancy firms/consultants in each of the last three years is as follows:

Year	(a) £	(b) £	(c) £	(d) £
1999/2000	128,389.60	Nil	70,999.31	Nil
2000/2001	199,514.58	Nil	195,465.60	Nil
2001/2002	183,477.51	53,803.35	104,711.21	10,700

Non-Departmental Public Bodies

Mr S Wilson asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to outline (a) the number of non-departmental public bodies under its control; (b) the location of these bodies; (c) the number of staff employed by each body, both part-time and full-time; and (d) the budget allocated to each non-departmental public body.

(AQW 3420/01)

Reply: Our department has responsibility for four non-departmental public bodies, these are: -

- The Northern Ireland Economic Council;
- The Statute Law Committee for Northern Ireland;
- The Planning Appeals Commission; and
- The Water Appeals Commission.

The Equality Commission for Northern Ireland is an Executive non-departmental public body of the Northern Ireland Office, however our department has responsibility for allocating its budget.

The Cabinet Office Publication “Public Bodies 2001” contains information on Non-Departmental Public Bodies including their location, the number of staff employed and their expenditure. Copies of this publication are held in the Assembly Library and are also available on the Cabinet office website www.cabinetoffice.gov.uk/quangos.

AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Fishermen: Fishing Vessels

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the number of people who are employed as fishermen on registered fishing vessels in each of the last 10 years. (AQW 3291/01)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms Rodgers): My Department does not retain information on the number of people employed as fishermen on fishing vessels registered in Northern Ireland. However, the information available on the number of people employed in the fishing catching sector is as follows:

	Part Time	Full Time
1992	296	1036
1993	272	957
1994	228	938
1995	226	933
1996	148	815
1997	131	850
1998	115	892
1999	90	845
2000	74	612
2001	90	845

Third-World Meat

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 2693/01, to outline (a) how regularly the independent third party verifier carries out an audit of beef imported from Third World countries; and (b) what happens to Third World meat which is processed by the food manufacturing sector of which beef is a constituent part. (AQW 3393/01)

Ms Rodgers:

- Under EC beef labelling rules non-compulsory labelling claims for beef, including beef imported from Third Countries, are required to be approved by my Department and are subject to verification by a Government recognised beef labelling verification body. Verification audits are carried out annually or at more regular intervals at the discretion of the verification body.
- Where beef, including beef imported from third countries is mixed with other meat the beef labelling rules apply only if the beef constitutes 50% or more of the meat. The rules do not apply to beef sold in the form of processed beef products such as sausages, ready made meals or canned beef. All meat and meat products including meat imported from other member states or third countries are required to be processed in licensed premises under the control of either the Department's Veterinary Service or Environmental Health Officers of the local District Councils as appropriate.

Area of Special Scientific Interest: Deer Park, Newtownstewart

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQO 1214/01, to detail the contact her officials have had with the Department of the Environment to ensure that rural issues are taken into consideration in regard to the proposed declaration of an ASSI at Deer Park, Newtownstewart in West Tyrone. (AQW 3422/01)

Ms Rodgers: Environment and Heritage Service (EHS), an Agency of the Department of the Environment, wrote to DARD on 12 April 2001 to advise that they were proposing to declare Deer Park as an Area of Special Scientific Interest (ASSI). In accordance with longstanding procedures between EHS and DARD in relation to ASSI designations, a map and associated documentation were enclosed with the EHS letter. DARD formally responded to EHS on 10 May 2001 to apprise them that Forest Service, an Agency within DARD, had lands within the area proposed for ASSI declaration.

EHS wrote to Forest Service on 28 March 2002 to advise that they had on that date declared Deer Park an ASSI and providing an opportunity to make any representations or objections before confirmation of the designation. On 9 May 2002 Forest Service responded to inform EHS of its plans for future timber harvesting operations.

I understand that while the main intention of the Deer Park ASSI designation is to protect glacial deposits and underground features from damage, normal agricultural activities or forestry operations are unlikely to be affected. It is expected that communication between EHS and DARD will continue in coming weeks.

Imports of Animals: Disease Testing

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what tests for disease are currently carried out on live animal imports. (AQW 3455/01)

Ms Rodgers: Imports of animals from other Member States and Third Countries into NI must comply with the animal health conditions laid down in the respective Commission Decision or Council Directive, and be accompanied by a health certificate which conforms to the model laid down in the respective Decision or Directive, and which must be signed by an official veterinarian of the veterinary authority in the country of origin.

Furthermore, animals originating in Third countries must enter the Community via a Border Inspection Post (BIP), but since there is no approved BIP for live animals in NI, such animals may only be imported into NI via a BIP in GB or another Member State.

Although normal trade in imported animals from GB has not resumed, at the commencement of trade such animals will be required to be imported in line with EU requirements.

In most cases, provided animals meet the import conditions as laid down in the relevant Directive/ Decision, the Directives do not require the need for post import physical checks. However, all imported animals are subject to documentary and identifications checks.

The tests or treatments currently carried out for disease on live animal imports are:

The treatment with an approved warble fly preparation of bovine animals, not for immediate slaughter, imported from a region not free from warble fly;

Cattle from Canada from non Canadian Health Accredited Herds (CHAH) must be isolated for 6 months after import and tested for Enzootic Bovine Leukosis (EBL) after 2 months and again 4 months later with negative results.

Based on veterinary risk analysis, the Department may decide on occasion to conduct particular post import (physical) check eg Maedi Visna in sheep, Equine Viral Arteritis and Equine Infectious Anaemia in horses.

Northland Stream Drainage Improvement Scheme, Carrickfergus: Reinstatement Works

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 3126/01, when will reinstatement of the area be completed. (AQW 3487/01)

Ms Rodgers: The Northland Stream drainage improvement scheme in Carrickfergus undertaken by my Department's Rivers Agency, was completed by the Agency's contractor on 27 February 2002. However, it was necessary to defer reinstatement of the grassed verge owned by NIHE until the growing season. I am pleased to confirm that the reinstatement works were substantially completed on 29 April 2002.

Rivers Agency

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to make a statement on her Department's policy on the attendance of Rivers Agency officials at planning site meetings organised by District Councils.

(AQW 3567/01)

Ms Rodgers: Rivers Agency, as the Drainage Authority, has a consultative role in liaison with DOE Planning Service on drainage and flood risk aspects of Areas Plans and Planning Applications referred to it. In pursuance of that role Rivers Agency is prepared to facilitate requests from Planning Service for attendance at planning site meetings to support/explain advice given by it to Planning Service. I would stress that Rivers Agency has no statutory function in determining Planning Applications and it would be inappropriate for the Agency to attend all planning liaison meetings organised by District Councils, where there may be no drainage or flood risk implications. The Rivers Agency Chief Executive has written to your District Council clarifying its position on attendance.

CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Credit Cards

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail (a) the number of credit cards in use in (i) his Department; (ii) Executive Agencies of his Department; (iii) NDPBs of his Department; and (iv) any other bodies funded by his Department; and (b) how much has been spent on each card in the financial year ended 31 March 2002. (AQW 2952/01)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr McGimpsey) [supplementary answer]: I wish to advise that it has since been brought to my attention that there was an omission from the information supplied to you in response and I therefore include amended information as follows.

My Department currently has two credit cards in use. Two other cards previously held by the Ulster-Scots Agency had been cancelled during the early part of the financial year ending 31 March 2002. The two cards still in use are held by the Permanent Secretary, and my Private Secretary.

During the financial year ended 31 March 2002, the total amount spent on each card was as follows:

Permanent Secretary:	£ 3,231.78
Private Secretary to the Minister:	£ 7,334.23
Ulster-Scots Agency	£17,051.30
Total	£27, 617.31

There are no other public body credit cards used by my Department, including executive agencies, non-departmental public bodies, cross-border bodies, and other funded bodies.

Consultancy Firms/Consultants

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 1940/01, to detail the level of expenditure in each of the last 3 years on consultancy firms/consultants based in (a) Northern Ireland; (b) the Republic of Ireland; (c) the rest of the UK; and (d) outside the British Isles. (AQW 3293/01)

Mr McGimpsey [supplementary answer]: The figures on the attached table include actual expenditure by my core Department, Ordnance Survey of Northern Ireland (OSNI) and the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland (PRONI) for each of the last three years, and a breakdown of where the consultants and consultancy firms used are located.

DEPARTMENT OF CULTURE ARTS AND LEISURE – USE OF CONSULTANTS

Financial Year	Total Cost	Spend in Relation to Location of Consultant/Consultancy Firm
		NI	RoI	UK	Outside of British Isles
1999/2000	£8,000 (Core Department)	£8,000	Nil	Nil	Nil

	£21,980 (PRONI)	£21,230	Nil	£750	Nil

Sport and Leisure Facilities

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to conduct an audit of sport and leisure facilities in Northern Ireland. (AQW 3579/01)

Mr McGimpsey: The Cultural Forum, a group established by my Department and representative of district councils and the cultural agencies, has initiated work on a cultural facilities audit, which includes an audit of sport and leisure facilities in Northern Ireland. Work is at a very early stage, and it will be some time before it is completed.

EDUCATION

Irish-Medium Schools

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Education to detail (a) the annual recurrent grants to Irish Medium schools since 1998; (b) the funding allocated for the provision of new permanent accommodation for Irish Medium schools since 1998; (c) the funding allocated to the development of Irish Medium units for years 2000-01 and 2001-02; and (d) the funding allocated for Irish Medium A level syllabuses and teaching materials since 1999.

(AQW 3408/01)

The Minister of Education (Mr M McGuinness): (a)

1998/1999	£3.2 m
1999/2000	£3.8 m
2000/2001	£4.3 m (provisional)

(b) capital funding of £4.3m has been made available for permanent accommodation in such schools since 1998;

(c) funding of £28,560 was allocated to Irish-medium units in the 2000/2001 financial year and £59,223 in the 2001/2002 financial year; capital grant of £21,138 was provided in respect of one Irish- medium unit.

(d) the Department of Education does not directly allocate funding for any examination syllabuses or teaching materials, but does so through the Northern Ireland Council for the Curriculum Examinations and Assessment (CCEA), who have responsibility for funding the costs of translating A level examination papers and pupil materials in the medium of Irish. The Department has augmented CCEA's budget by £30k for each financial year from 1999/00 to 2001/02, for the development of Irish medium A level syllabuses.

Irish-Medium Dimension: Funding

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Education to outline the total expenditure allocated for projects with an Irish Medium dimension under the EU Special Support Programme (Peace I). (AQW 3425/01)

Mr M McGuinness: A total of £2,425,964.86 was approved by the Department of Education and its Intermediary Funding Bodies under the EU Special Support Programme for Peace and Reconciliation in Northern Ireland and the Border Counties of Ireland 1995-1999 (PEACE 1) for projects with an Irish Medium dimension.

Temporary Teachers

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 2308/01, to detail (a) the number of teachers on a temporary contract for each of the last 10 years by Board area; and (b) the number as a percentage of the total number of teachers employed in each of the last 10 years. (AQW 3426/01)

Mr M McGuinness: (a) The number of teachers who received pay for temporary service during each of the last ten academic years, by Education and Library Board area, is as shown in column (a) and in column (b), this number is expressed as a percentage of the total number of teachers on temporary and permanent contracts who were paid in August of each year.

Nursery School Places

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail (a) the number of full-time nursery school places currently available for children of working parents; and (b) the number of such places available in (i) 1999-2000; and (ii) 2000-2001. (AQW 3444/01)

Mr M McGuinness: All nursery places, both full- and part-time, are open to all children whether their parents are working or not. The admissions criteria set by the Department give priority to children from socially disadvantaged backgrounds, who tend to experience more difficulty at school than other children, and on the 4-year olds with July and August birthdays who, if they failed to gain a pre-school place, would not have any educational experience until after their fifth birthday.

The total number of full-time nursery places is as follows:

	1999-2000	2000-2001
No. of full-time places	5,928	6,552

Formula Allocations: Grammar and Secondary Schools

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Education to detail the unit of resource made available to grammar and secondary schools for all secondary age groupings by Board area. (AQW 3461/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The figures below set out grammar and secondary school per capita allocations for each Education and Library Board based on their formula allocations. Notes

The figures include amounts made available under LMS Formulae in 2001/02. (2002/03 information is not yet available) Information on preparatory departments has been excluded.

Figures obtained from the LMS Budget Statements published by the Boards in respect of controlled and maintained schools and by the Department in the case of Voluntary Grammar and Grant Maintained Integrated schools.

The figures also exclude centrally retained funds provided in-year to schools for certain items of expenditure, such as substitution costs and allocations for earmarked initiatives and other centrally held resources, such as Home to School Transport, CASS, School Meals and Central Administration, as these are not costed to individual schools.

Numeracy and Literacy Strategy Reviews

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education to outline (a) if the Review of the Numeracy and Literacy Strategies has been completed; and (b) when the findings of the Review will be published.

(AQW 3468/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The report on the Literacy Strategy review is currently being finalised and the report on the Numeracy Strategy review is to be submitted to the Department by the end of June.

Members of the Assembly Education Committee will receive a copy of the reports once the Minister has had the opportunity to consider the recommendations made.

European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Education to outline (a) the obligations the UK Government's signature and ratification of the Council of Europe's Charter for Regional and Minority Languages places on his Department concerning (i) Irish Gaelic; and (ii) Ulster-Scots; and (b) how these obligations are being fulfilled.

(AQW 3474/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages was signed by the UK Government on 2 March 2000 and subsequently ratified on 27 March 2001. The provisions of the Charter came into effect on 1 July 2001 and the obligations placed on the Department of Education are as follows:

- in respect of Irish, in accordance with Article 2, paragraph 2 and Article 3, paragraph 1 of the Charter the following provisions apply for the purposes of Part III of the Charter –

Article 8, paragraphs 1 (a) (iii), 1 (b) (iv), 1 (c) (iv), 1 (g) and 1 (h)

Article 10, paragraphs 1 (a) (iv), 1 (c), 2 (b), 2 (g), 3 (c), 4 (a) and 5

- in respect of Ulster-Scots, in accordance with Article 2, paragraph 1 of the Charter Ulster-Scots is recognised as meeting the definition of a regional or minority language for the purposes of Part II of the Charter in relation to Articles 2 and 3. No specific obligations arise as a consequence.

The obligations in respect of Irish are met through support for the provision of Irish-medium education and the inclusion of Irish as a named language in the 11-16 curriculum. In addition, the Department facilitates the use of written Irish and of Irish place names and family names by correspondents, and in subsequent responses. The Department would endeavour to facilitate the use of spoken Irish if requested to do so. As for Ulster-Scots, there has been no demand for the provision of teaching through this medium, nor has there been any demand to facilitate the use of Ulster-Scots in written or oral communications with the Department.

The Department has facilitated a meeting between the Ulster-Scots Agency and the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment to discuss the possibility of appointing a member of staff to oversee Ulster-Scots educational methods. The issue of funding such a post has still to be resolved, and will depend upon the outcome of discussions between DE and CCEA officials in the context of other funding pressures.

Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Education to outline (a) if he has received a request from CCEA for the appointment of a staff member to oversee Ulster-Scots educational methods; and (b) if he has agreed to support this request.

(AQW 3475/01)

Mr M McGuinness: CCEA officers have met with the Ulster-Scots Agency to discuss the possibility of appointing a member of staff to oversee Ulster-Scots educational methods. The issue of funding such a post has still to be resolved, and will depend upon the outcome of discussions between DE and CCEA officials in the context of other funding pressures.

Catholic Teaching Certificate

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Education to detail (a) the percentage of full-time and part-time teachers employed within the Catholic maintained sector who do not possess the 'Catholic Teaching Certificate'; (b) the criteria for receipt of this qualification; (c) the number of Protestants or other non-Roman Catholic teachers currently in receipt of this qualification; (d) the percentage of non-Roman Catholic teachers employed within the Catholic maintained sector; (e) the percentage of Roman Catholic teachers employed within (i) the state controlled; and (ii) the integrated sectors of education; and to make a statement. (AQW 3490/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The Department of Education does not hold such information. Provided requirements as to age and health are satisfied, the Department requires a professional teaching qualification, normally a Bachelor of Education degree or a Postgraduate Certificate in Education, for a person to be eligible to teach in any grant-aided school. It is then a matter for employing authorities, including the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools, to set any specific criteria for particular posts, such as, where appropriate, the possession of the Catholic Religious Education Certificate;

As this qualification is not required for the purposes of being eligible to teach, the Department does not have any information as to the requirements for entry to the course or its content. This information is available from the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools whose address is: -

160 High Street
Holywood
Co Down
BT18 9AZ

The Department of Education does not hold any information on teachers who have this qualification as it is not required for the purposes of eligibility to teach;

(d) & (e) The Department does not hold information on the religious denominations of teachers.

Statement of Special Educational Needs

Mr Morrow asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of children who have a statement of special educational needs in each primary and post-primary school in the Fermanagh/South Tyrone constituency. (AQW 3492/01)

Mr M McGuinness: In the following schools, five or more pupils had a statement of special educational needs:

PRIMARY SCHOOLS

Castlecaulfield (2) Primary School	5
Dungannon Primary School	31
Enniskillen Model Primary School	13
Holy Trinity Primary School	6
Howard Primary School	5
St Patrick's Primary School, Dungannon	30

Every other primary school in the constituency had fewer than five children with a statement of special educational needs. In line with the Department's policy on release of statistical information, numbers smaller than five have been suppressed in order to avoid potential disclosure of personal information.

Relationships and Sexuality Education: Funding

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Education what funding is available to statutory and voluntary organisations that contribute to relationship and sexuality education in schools. (AQW 3523/01)

Mr M McGuinness: Statutory and voluntary organisations can make a valuable contribution to the teaching of Relationships and Sexuality Education (RSE) in schools, however, my Department does not directly fund work of this kind. It is a matter for the Board of Governors and the Principal of each school to decide which organisations offer appropriate support for the teaching of RSE and to take due account of any financial implications.

Schools: Ancillary Staff

Mr McGrady asked the Minister of Education what efforts have been made to ensure that ancillary staff in schools, such as classroom assistants, will have their annual contracts of employment fully honoured and implemented; and to make a statement. (AQW 3562/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The terms and conditions of service of ancillary staff in schools are matters for their employing authorities. I am not aware of any employing authority reneging on an agreed contract of employment for such staff. However, before agreeing contracts with staff, an employing authority must satisfy itself that it can meet the cost of such contracts from within its approved resources.

Special Educational Needs

Mr C Murphy asked the Minister of Education to (a) list the different diagnostic categories recognised by the various Education and Library Boards for the purpose of statementing children with special educational needs; and (b) indicate how many children have been statemented in each of these categories by Education and Library Boards in each of the last 5 years. (AQW 3564/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs outlines eight categories of learning difficulty or disability as follows;

1. Learning Difficulties
2. Specific Learning Difficulties e.g. Dyslexia
3. Emotional and Behavioural Difficulties (EBD)
4. Physical Disabilities
5. Sensory Impairments: e.g. Visual Difficulties
6. Speech and Language Difficulties
7. Medical Conditions

The School Census data on a range of special educational needs is collected under the following headings:

8. Blind	9. Asperger's syndrome
9. Partial Sight	10. Emotional and Behavioural Difficulties (EBD)
10. Deaf	11. Moderate Learning Difficulties (MLD)
11. Partial Hearing	12. Severe learning difficulties (SLD)
12. Speech and Language	13. Epilepsy
13. Dyslexia	14. Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD)
14. Physical Disability	15. Dyspraxia
15. Autism	16. Other

For the number of children in each category in the last five years I refer the member to the answer given to AQW 2410/01.

Speech and Language Funding

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education what funding is available for speech and language, per Board area, for each of the last 3 years. (AQW 3580/01)

Mr M McGuinness: Boards do not separate funding for individual types of special educational need. For funding details on special educational needs in general, over the last five years, I refer the member to the answer provided to AQW 2408/01.

It is the responsibility of the Department of Health and Social Services and Public Safety (DHSSPS) and ultimately the Health and Social Services Boards and Trusts to provide speech and language therapy. Although the need for speech therapy is specified in some children's statements of special educational needs, this is as recommended and supplied by the Health and Social Services Trusts.

Speech and Language Assistance

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education how many children, per Board area, have received speech and language assistance in each of the last 3 years. (AQW 3581/01)

Mr M McGuinness: This information is not held in the format requested. However, statistics from the school census are held in terms of the number of children with speech and language difficulties identified in their statement of special educational needs. For the last three years these are:

Board area Year	Belfast	West-ern	North-Eastern	South-Eastern	South-ern	Total
1999/2000*	596	511	590	637	331	2665
2000/2001	660	623	747	827	623	3480

Board area Year	Belfast	West- ern	North- Eastern	South- Eastern	South- ern	Total
2001/2002	695	641	759	896	717	3708

*Data on categories of statement in respect of nursery and primary schools are not included. This data was not collected centrally in 1999/2000.

Teachers: Job Evaluation

Ms Lewsley asked the Minister of Education, in respect of job evaluation for teachers in Education and Library Board Schools and voluntary Grammar Schools, (a) to explain the differences in job evaluation for these two sectors; (b) is he aware that there is discrimination against teachers in Grammar Schools through non-compliance with the scheme set down by the Boards; and (c) will his Department consider this issue under equality legislation. (AQW 3595/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The threshold assessment scheme is the same for teachers in all grant-aided schools irrespective of the sector in which they work. Accredited external assessors carry out the assessments and work in teams with lead assessors, who ensure a fair and consistent approach. In addition, a quality control team, which reports directly to the Regional Manager, monitors their work, including accompanied assessment visits, and each school principal is invited to complete feedback reports on their experience of the process. If the facts are put to me about non-compliance with the scheme in specific cases, I will have them looked into.

School Sports Facilities

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Education to make a statement on the potential for greater community use of school sports facilities. (AQW 3601/01)

Mr M McGuinness: Education legislation encourages schools to consider making their premises available to the community when not in use by the schools themselves. I would hope therefore that schools will, as far as they are able, be responsive to the needs of local communities for facilities, including sports facilities.

I am pleased to say that the New Opportunities for PE and Sport Programme will greatly enhance opportunities for the community use of school sports facilities. The Programme is making available a total of £33.75 million to: build new and refurbish existing sports facilities for school and community use; support the development and promotion of these facilities for community use; and build or refurbish outdoor adventure facilities.

The funding will be split between five area partnerships, led by the Education and Library Boards, who will facilitate schools in developing projects in association with the local community and sports clubs.

Civil Service Office Accommodation

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education if he has any plans to relocate civil servants employed in Rathgael House to sites West of the River Bann. (AQW 3650/01)

Mr M McGuinness: A Strategic Review of Civil Service Office Accommodation, which includes an examination of the scope for decentralisation of Civil Service jobs is currently underway. Pending the outcome of this Review, I have at this time no specific proposals for any further relocation of my Department's functions and the position of the Department of Education remains therefore as set out in Chapter 5.4 of the Interim Report of the Strategic Review.

Ministerial Car

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 3362/01, to outline (a) the costs involved in acquiring a Ministerial car; (b) the costs involved in acquiring a driver; (c) the tendering process for acquiring this car and driver; (d) the number of persons tendering for both; (e) the selection criteria used for both; and (f) if the unsuccessful tenders in both cases were notified of the reasons why their tender had been unsuccessful. (AQW 3660/01)

Mr M McGuinness:

- The cost to my Department in acquiring a car was £21,821.26.
- As my driver is not an employee of the Department, no expenditure was incurred in his recruitment.
- The Ministerial car was provided through formal Government Purchasing Agency (GPA) tendering procedures.
- Three companies submitted tenders.
- In acquiring the Ministerial car my Department agreed with GPA that tenders should be judged on:
 - price;
 - compliance with specification;
 - suitability of security measures; and
 - after-sales service
- GPA offered both of the unsuccessful tenderers a debriefing on the reasons why their tender had not been successful. I understand that only one took up this offer.

Teachers' Health and Well-being Survey

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 3183/01, to outline (a) whether the findings of the Teachers' Health and Well-being survey have been discussed with Teachers' Side; (b) when the discussions took place; (c) when the survey 'Teachers' Health and Well-being' will be published. (AQW 3678/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The Staff Support Research Working Group is presenting its report to Management Side at the end of June. The discussions with Teachers' Side are expected to start no later than the beginning of the next school year, and the report will be published on their completion.

Primary Schools: Local Management of Schools Funding

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education what steps he has taken to improve the budgetary position of Primary Schools under LMS funding. (AQO 1379/01)

Mr M McGuinness: My Department's consultation document on the common funding formula for all grant-aided schools, published last year, proposes a skewing of resources to the primary sector. The cumulative effect of the proposals is to increase primary sector funding by around £12m or 4% and the balance between funding attracted by primary schools compared to post-primary schools will rise from 65% to 67%.

Pupil Selection following the 11-Plus Exam

Mrs Courtney asked the Minister of Education to outline (a) if he is aware that certain Grammar Schools use enhanced criteria in their pupil selection following the Eleven Plus Exam and (b) if this procedure has his approval. (AQO 1372/01)

Mr M McGuinness: I am aware that grammar schools use such criteria. Grammar schools must admit pupils according to their grade in the Transfer Procedure test but many are oversubscribed with applications from pupils with the same grade. It is therefore necessary for them to distinguish between these pupils down to the last available place within their admissions number. The use of additional sub-criteria, for example, giving priority to those pupils with sibling relations at the school, enables a school to do this. Within the legislation these decisions are entirely a matter for the Board of Governors of each school.

Expenditure per School Pupil

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 2389/01 and AQW 2390/01, to outline the variations in net expenditure per school pupil between educational sectors and education board areas. (AQO 1391/01)

Mr M McGuinness: Information supplied by Boards shows that the primary school per capita varies across the Education and Library Boards from £1,964 to £2,294.

The secondary school per capita varies from £3,066 to £3,620. There are also differences between the controlled and maintained sectors.

These variations occur not only because of different spending priorities of Boards and the make-up of their LMS formulae but also because of the differences in the profiles of schools within individual Boards, in particular, the incidence of small schools and relative levels of social deprivation. For these reasons it is difficult to obtain true like for like comparisons across Boards.

The LMS Common Formula, planned for implementation in April 2003, will ensure that schools of similar size and characteristics will receive similar levels of funding.

Governing Bodies Association: 11-Plus

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Education to detail the proposals the Governing Body Association has presented to him for matching pupils to schools when the Eleven Plus is abolished. (AQO 1406/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The GBA gave a public commitment to identify an acceptable method of matching pupils to schools but no proposals have been produced. If the GBA has been able to develop acceptable proposals I would urge the association to make its proposals available for public scrutiny and to clarify its position on academic selection before the end of the consultation period.

Post-Primary Provision

Ms Ramsey asked the Minister of Education to detail the outcome of his meetings with key interested parties on the consultation on post primary provision. (AQO 1392/01)

Mr M McGuinness: Sixteen meetings have already taken place and others are planned for the coming weeks. The key issues emerging from the meetings are:

- Agreement that the 11 plus should be abolished;
- widespread acceptance of the adverse effects of academic selection at 11 and agreement that it should be ended;
- significant and increasing numbers of our young people are progressing to our two universities from non-grammar and non A-level routes;
- children from low income families in disadvantaged areas, particularly Protestant areas, have little prospect of obtaining a place in a grammar school;

I have also met with the Progressive Unionist Party and have offered meetings to all other political parties. So far, the Alliance, Sinn Féin, SDLP and Women's Coalition have accepted this offer.

Bus Transport Policy

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Education to make it his policy to intervene where the operation of a bus transport policy by an Education and Library Board results in a restriction on the rights of parental choice, to ensure that equity and equality between different children is delivered. (AQO 1380/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The existing transport arrangements were the subject of consultation with the education and library boards before being approved by my Department.

The arrangements were subject to a Policy Appraisal and Fair Treatment analysis as part of the consultation exercise. The analysis revealed that the policy did not discriminate against any group or restrict the rights of parents.

It is for the boards to deliver home to school transport within the approved arrangements, and I have no plans to intervene in the operation of the service. Parents who feel that their rights may be restricted, or that they are being treated inequitably, should contact their education and library board to seek an explanation of any decision.

Salary Differentials: Principals and Vice-Principals

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister of Education what timescale will be set for the Independent Inquiry Team to produce the interim report on salary differentials for Principals and Vice-Principals. (AQO 1390/01)

Mr M McGuinness: I fully recognise the strength of feeling among principals and vice-principals about their salary arrangements, and the importance of resolving this issue quickly. This, therefore, will be the Inquiry's first task. While it would be premature to set a time limit at this point, I would expect the timescale to be short because the various interests, who will be submitting evidence to the Inquiry, have already undertaken a lot of groundwork.

Burns Report

Mr J Kelly asked the Minister of Education to outline the steps he is taking to ensure proper consultation on the Burns report, given the significance of the recommendations it contains. (AQO 1409/01)

Mr M McGuinness: My Department is using a variety of methods to make sure that everyone has the opportunity to contribute to the review of post-primary education. Today I launched a Household Response Form which will be issued this week to every household giving information about the review and seeking the views of the public on the key issues. A more detailed response booklet was issued at the start of May to all schools, further education colleges, community groups and training organisations to facilitate consideration of the key issues and to help structure responses. The views of the public will also be gathered through a household survey and we are considering how best to get the views of young people.

A summary analysis of the responses received will be published around the end of September.

I am currently engaged in a series of meetings involving the key players in our education system to listen to suggestions, build consensus and stimulate discussion of the issues during the consultation period.

The massive scale of this consultation reflects the importance of the issue. I want as many people as possible to take part in the debate and submit their comments to my Department.

Funding to Offset the Cost of Vandalism to Schools

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Education what financial assistance is available to individual schools to offset the costs of vandalism. (AQO 1378/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The Local Management of Schools (LMS) scheme operated by each Education and Library Board sets out the arrangements for compensating schools for the cost of work arising from vandalism. In most Boards these arrangements provide for schools to be reimbursed for costs above a certain threshold. Voluntary grammar schools and grant-maintained integrated schools carry their own insurance to meet the cost of repairs arising from vandalism.

Teacher/Pupil Ratio: Funding

Mr Armstrong asked the Minister of Education has he any plans to reorganise financing of schools bearing in mind the importance of setting the correct teacher/pupil ratio. (AQO 1373/01)

Mr M McGuinness: My Department's consultation document on the common funding formula for all grant-aided schools, published last year, set out proposals which will bring funding allocations to a consistent level and will ensure that schools of similar size and characteristics receive similar levels of funding.

Under Local Management of Schools (LMS) arrangements, schools are provided with an unhypothecated budget and individual Boards of Governors make spending decisions in light of their own policies and priorities. Decisions on the number of teachers to be employed are therefore a matter for each school to determine in light of their individual school circumstances, particularly changes in enrolment. It is important that schools achieve the appropriate Teacher Pupil Ratio and the Department is endeavouring to support schools in their efforts to achieve this. In 2000/2001, the PTRs in all sectors (apart from Special Schools) improved. The Primary figure fell by 0.2 to 20.2 and the Secondary figure fell by 0.2 to 14.5.

However, it would run counter to present LMS policy, for the Department to exercise a direct control over teacher numbers and pupil/teacher ratios.

EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

Credit Cards

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail (a) the number of credit cards in use in (i) her Department; (ii) Executive Agencies of her Department; (iii) NDPBs of her Department; and (iv) any other bodies funded by her Department; and (b) how much has been spent on each card in the financial year ended 31 March 2002. (AQW 2983/01)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Ms Hanna): There are currently no credit cards held by this Department.

One Government Procurement card was used by my Department in the financial year ending 31 March 2002 with a total of £10,650 having been spent.

My Department's Non-Departmental Public Bodies (NDPBs) which use credit cards and expenditure in the financial year ending 31 March 2002 are as follows;

Non-Departmental Public Bodies (NDPBs)	No. of Credit Cards	Expenditure (Financial Year ended 31 March 2002)
Labour Relations Agency (LRA)	1	£1,422.36
Ulster Supported Employment Ltd. (USEL)	13	£16,042
Enterprise Ulster (EU)	30	£42,487.66
Construction Industry Training Board (CITB)	1	£6,000

Other bodies funded by my Department which use credit cards and expenditure in the financial year ending 31 March 2002 are as follows;

Other Bodies funded by DEL	No. of Credit Cards	Expenditure (Financial Year ended 31 March 2002)
Tourism Training Trust (TTT)	1	£965
Northern Ireland Business Education Partnership (NIBEP)	1	£1,200

Other Bodies funded by DEL	No. of Credit Cards	Expenditure (Financial Year ended 31 March 2002)
FE Colleges;
Belfast Institute	6	£5,637.72
Castlereagh	2	£2,110.00
East Antrim	1	£3,427.95
Newry & Kilkeel	1	£4,087.00
Northern Ireland Hotel Catering College	1	£2,435.35
Skill NI	2	£1,833.72
Workers Educational Association	2	£1,001.47
Queen's University Belfast	1	£4,000
Stranmillis University College	3	£37,947

Women Returning To Work

Mr Gibson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what recent studies have been undertaken to identify obstacles facing women returning to work. (AQW 2997/01)

Ms Hanna: Women and men share many of the same barriers to employment. Evidence presented to the Taskforce on Employability and Long-Term Unemployment, which I chair, has identified a lack of affordable, accessible, and flexible childcare as a specific barrier for many women.

DEL, the Equality Commission and the Childcare Partnerships in NI have commissioned research on the use of, demand for and supply of childcare in Northern Ireland. It is anticipated that the final research report will be available by the end of 2002.

Applied Behaviour Analysis

Ms Morrice asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline (a) any steps she is taking to contact local university based Applied Behaviour Analysis (ABA) professionals and (b) any resources she will make available to support them in setting up training courses that meet international standards as outlined by the Association for Behaviour Analysis International. (AQW 3252/01)

Ms Hanna: I have not had any contact in this context. In terms of funding for training courses, the universities here, as elsewhere in the UK, are autonomous bodies entirely responsible for their own policies and practices, including course provision. Accordingly, I am not in a position to intervene.

Information Technology Skills

Mr Gibson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what proposals she has to improve IT skills among mature students. (AQW 3340/01)

Ms Hanna: My Department has a wide range of initiatives aiming to improve IT skills among mature students. In the Further Education sector these include: The Skills Fund (£2.5 m), The Access Initiative Fund (£2.3m), an additional 600 Higher Education places in areas of skills need, and a compact with the Worker Education Association. They have been introduced to widen access and increase participation in IT and other skills need areas.

During 2001/2002, 83% of courses undertaken through learndirect were ICT related. Financial support will continue to be provided through the Northern Ireland learndirect Network.

From 1999 to 2002, my Department provided 300 additional university IT places. This year, we will be providing a further 330 additional HE places, to be allocated to economically relevant areas, including IT. Eight full-time Foundation Degree pilots are currently running which focus specifically on IT. A further 50 IT Foundation Degree full-time equivalent places will be provided in 2002/2003.

Disability Awareness: Medical Undergraduates

Mr Wells asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline the training given to medical undergraduates in disability awareness; and to make a statement. (AQW 3343/01)

Ms Hanna: The training given to medical undergraduates in disability awareness is a matter for Queen's University.

Food Handling: Health and Safety Issues

Mr Carrick asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline any consultations she has had with the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development regarding relevant accredited training courses in Food Handling and Health and Safety issues within the (i) food manufacturing; and (ii) processing sectors; and to make a statement. (AQW 3385/01)

Ms Hanna: Whilst I meet regularly with my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, this specific subject has not been raised. My Department liaises regularly with the relevant Sector Training Council for the food manufacturing and processing sectors, the Food and Drink Training Council.

This Council includes representation from employers in the sector and all training issues are discussed.

The Government supports a wide range of courses in the sector and these include Food Handling and Health and Safety issues. These courses are provided across the province by most Further Education Colleges, by the Food and Drink Training Council, by private training providers, and by Loughry College.

“Benefit Trap”

Mr Carrick asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline any consultations she has had with the Minister for Social Development regarding the adverse impact that the ‘Benefit Trap’ is having upon the ability of the (i) food manufacturing; (ii) processing sectors to attract sufficient labour to the industry; and to make a statement. (AQW 3386/01)

Ms Hanna: Whilst I meet regularly with my colleague, the Minister for Social Development, we have not discussed this specific issue. I consider that any effects of the ‘Benefit Trap’ would be the same in these sectors as in other sectors of the labour force with a similar wage structure. They are therefore a matter of wider economic policy which I will address in the context of the Employability Task Force which I chair.

Social Security System

Mr Carrick asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline any consultations she has had with the Minister for Social Development regarding any abuse of the social security system by workers within the (i) food manufacturing; and (ii) processing sectors; and to make a statement. (AQW 3387/01)

Ms Hanna: I meet regularly with my colleague, the Minister for Social Development and, whilst we have not discussed this specific issue, I have no reason to believe that there is any abuse of the social security system which is related to these particular sectors. Any such abuses which were brought to light would be dealt with in the same manner regardless of sector.

Potential Loss of Industrial Investment

Mr Carrick asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline any consultations she has had with the Minister for Enterprise, Trade and Investment regarding the potential loss of industrial investment in the (i) food manufacturing; and (ii) processing sectors because of the inability to secure workers; and to make a statement. (AQW 3388/01)

Ms Hanna: Whilst I meet regularly with my colleague, the Minister for Enterprise, Trade and Investment, we have not discussed this specific issue. I am not aware of any potential loss of industrial investment in these sectors because of the inability to secure workers. My Department will liaise closely with DETI to ensure the success of any such potential investment proposals and will make full use of our preparation for work programmes if required.

Special Educational Needs

Mr Gibson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to make a statement on special needs teaching in Northern Ireland with reference to the number of specialist teachers available in adult education.

(AQW 3462/01)

Ms Hanna: It is a matter for the institution or organisation concerned to ensure that staff have the appropriate skills and competencies to deliver programmes to the students, including those with special needs.

It is the Department for Employment and Learning's policy to widen access and increase participation in further and higher education for students with learning difficulties and/or disabilities. A range of initiatives have been put in place to support this policy. The Department also supports vocational training for young people with special needs through a range of organisations.

Engineering

Mr Gibson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what plans she has to promote engineering as a career; and to make a statement.

(AQW 3476/01)

Ms Hanna: My Department liaises with the Engineering Training Council to promote engineering as a career through school-based projects and skills competitions. The Department's Careers Service provides impartial guidance to young people and adults and works with the full range of professional bodies in engineering to provide timely and accurate careers information.

Further Education: Maintenance Support

Mr Gibson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if she will make a statement on the system of maintenance support available for students in further education.

(AQW 3477/01)

Ms Hanna: Students undertaking full-time further education courses can apply to their local Education and Library Board for means-tested discretionary awards. An award made under these arrangements provides for the payment of tuition fees, a means-tested grant towards living costs of up to £1,633 and supplementary grants. From September 2001 a new award in the form of a means-tested bursary of up to £1,500 to cover living costs was introduced. The bursary includes remission of tuition fees and the payment of supplementary grants. In addition, students who face financial difficulties in meeting their living costs have access to Support Funds, which are administered by the colleges.

Further Education Colleges: Inspections

Mr Gibson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what assessment can she make of the results of the recent inspections of further education colleges.

(AQW 3478/01)

Ms Hanna: I receive regular reports from the Education and Training Inspectorate on the quality of teaching and learning in further education colleges, illustrating a standard which is at least satisfactory; with a significant number of lessons good or better. These reports demonstrate a high level of consistently good practice in the colleges which provide a wide range of educational programmes.

Employment Bill

Mr Gibson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what assessment can she make of the impact of the Employment Bill on small businesses.

(AQW 3494/01)

Ms Hanna: The implementation cost to small businesses of the adoption, paternity and maternity proposals is estimated at £0.5m annually. This is not unreasonable. Firms eligible for small business relief may claim back 100% of leave pay, plus an element of compensation (currently 5%).

In the first year, the flexible working proposals are expected to cost employers between £10.4m and £29.6m. These costs are likely to level off to between £2.61m and £7.39m in subsequent years. The Department recognises that small businesses will need particular assistance in implementing the proposals and will address their needs through comprehensive guidance.

Employment

Mr Ford asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline (a) the number of new places created in 2001 under the (i) Access to Work Scheme; (ii) the Employment Support Scheme; and (iii) the Job Introduction Scheme; and (b) how this compares with the targets set in the 2001-2002 Programme for Government.

(AQW 3551/01)

Ms Hanna: In 2001/2, 362 new offers of support were given under the Access to Work (AtW) Scheme; 50 additional employment places were provided under Employment Support; and 97 work trials were approved under the Job Introduction Scheme. This compares with the targets in the Programme for Government of an additional 400 offers under AtW; an additional 50 places under Employment Support; and 60 work trials under the Job Introduction Scheme.

ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

Public and Employers' Liability Insurance

Mr Morrow asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, in light of the difficulties Co Fermanagh-based businesses involved in the leisure/ activity tourism services are having in obtaining public and employers' liability insurance, what advice and assistance can he give to such businesses. (AQW 3389/01)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Sir Reg Empey): I am aware that a number of businesses in Northern Ireland are having difficulty in obtaining public and employers liability insurance. As a result, I have drawn it to the attention of the Economic Secretary to the Treasury and written directly on behalf of a number of businesses to the Association of British Insurers. This includes one Fermanagh based activity business.

I have also tasked my officials to undertake research to better quantify the scope, nature and scale of the problem as a prelude to developing a strategy to seek to address the causes of high insurance costs – or even its non-availability – and to help stabilise or reduce the rate of increase in premiums.

In the meantime, I would encourage any businesses experiencing difficulty in obtaining insurance to write directly to the Association of British Insurers, 51 Gresham Street, London EC2V 7HQ to obtain details of potential sources of cover.

Employment in Belfast

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline (a) the number of people employed in each constituency in Belfast for the last 5 years; (b) the rate of unemployment in each for the last 5 years; and (c) any steps he is taking to encourage employment in East Belfast. (AQW 3511/01)

Sir Reg Empey:

- (a) Estimates of the number of employee jobs below Northern Ireland level are only available from the biennial Census of Employment and the most up to date figures relate to September 1999. Employee jobs estimates for September 1997 and September 1999 for each Parliamentary Constituency Area in Belfast can be found in Table 1.

- (b) Unemployment data at Parliamentary Constituency level are only available from the claimant count. Claimant count unemployment rates in each constituency in Belfast for the last 5 years are given in Table 2.

- (c) Invest Northern Ireland, through its local office in Belfast, is undertaking a range of enterprise awareness activities and business development programmes in East Belfast. This will encourage new business start-ups and help existing businesses to grow, thereby creating additional employment. I also welcome the recent announcement by Irish Bonding that it is investing almost £9 million at its Marshalls' Road plant, which will see employment increase from 90 to 187. I have also been working closely with the Minister for Regional Development, in relation to the land proposals by Harland and Wolff, which will provide the opportunity for further economic regeneration at Queen's Island.

Small Businesses

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (a) what assessment he has made regarding the provision of incubator space in East Belfast; (b) any plans he has to increase such; and (c) any meetings he intends to have with East Belfast Enterprise Ltd in relation to rising unemployment in East Belfast. (AQW 3512/01)

Sir Reg Empey:

- (a) Invest Northern Ireland in consultation with its partner organisations and the business community will continue to assess potential gaps in the market place for small businesses. This would include the provision of workspace for businesses. Discussions are ongoing with a number of organisations in East Belfast concerning future provision.

- (b) Discussions are ongoing with a number of groups and individuals in East Belfast with regard to looking at future provision and identification of possible commercial sites. Invest Northern Ireland have also offered support to private developers for the provision of managed workspace. These units are now in existence and are actively marketed through Invest Northern Ireland and the enterprise network.
- (c) Invest Northern Ireland's Eastern Local Office is in regular contact with the Chairman and Manager of the East Belfast Enterprise Park. I am aware of the nature of the discussions and understand that further meetings are planned, where obstacles to future workspace provision will be discussed.

Business Registrations

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline (a) the number of business registrations in the last 5 years in (i) Belfast; (ii) Northern Ireland; (iii) GB; (b) his assessment of the number of business registrations in Belfast over this period; and (c) any steps he is taking to increase the number of business registrations. (AQW 3513/01)

Sir Reg Empey:

- (a) The number of business registrations recorded under the Companies (Northern Ireland) Orders 1986 and 1990 and the Companies Acts (GB) 1985 and 1989 were:

Reporting Period 1 April to 31 March Incorporated in Belfast	Total Number of Companies Incorporated in NI	Total Number of Companies Incorporated in GB	Total Number of Companies
1997/98	297	1,718	205,000
1998/99	340	1,959	218,000
1999/00	372	2,325	225,000
2000/01	366	2,240	236,000
2001/02	474	2,335	227,000
Total	1,849	10,577	1,111,000

- (b) The current Business Birth Rate in Northern Ireland is approximately 30 per 10,000 of the economically active population per annum which compares to the UK average of 40 per 10,000 of the economically active population.

Another way of expressing the current level of entrepreneurship is that 1 in 50 people are currently in the process of starting a business whereas in the UK as a whole it is 1 in 25 and in the USA it is 1 in

10. It is therefore imperative that the N. Ireland rates (including Belfast) are raised in absolute and objective terms. This is one of the main objectives of Invest NI. Specifically Invest NI will promote a more enterprising culture so as to raise the overall level and quality of new business starts.

Only firms wishing to trade as limited companies are required under the legislation to register therefore the figure of 1,849 refers only to limited companies registered over this period.

There are other companies that operate under either sole trader or partnership status. This figure does not therefore give a true reflection of the total number of new business start ups throughout Northern Ireland.

There is still however the need to increase the number of business start ups in Belfast and indeed across the whole of Northern Ireland.

- (c) Recognising the weak performance of business birth rates throughout Northern Ireland, Invest NI working with partnership organisations is developing a business birth rate strategy designed specifically to increase entrepreneurship and promote new business starts.

This will be rolled out later this current year.

Invest Northern Ireland is working with Enterprising Belfast, Belfast City Council, Princes Trust and other organisations to actively promote and increase the number of individuals in East Belfast setting up in business.

Invest NI has funded two enterprise development officer posts, one based at East Belfast Enterprise and one at East Belfast Partnership. The development officers have been involved in a number of activities to promote enterprise in the local areas, these include;

- Exhibitions
- Information days
- Leaflet drop to all householders in East Belfast
- Seminars to key influencers
- Ideas workshops

Belfast City Council along with Invest NI are launching a week of enterprise activities beginning 27th May 2002 consisting of enterprise awareness and training. East Belfast will feature prominently in all events.

Fish Processing

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline his plans to retain employment in the fish processing sector in Kilkeel following the announcement of the closure of Young's/ Bluecrest Seafood Limited. (AQW 3524/01)

Sir Reg Empey: Invest Northern Ireland currently has 11 client companies operating in the fish processing sector in Kilkeel. These companies employ 506 employees with a combined turnover of £31.1 million, representing 46.4% and 41% of the fish processing sector levels respectively.

Invest NI and preceding agencies have been active in this sector in developing companies and supporting applications for European funding and will continue to work with the fish processors in Kilkeel in implementing the fish sector strategy (2000-2006). This was developed in conjunction with DETI agencies, the Industry and DARD. Equally and more recently the Scampi sector review independently commissioned by LEDU and DARD.

In practice, the implementation of these strategies mean encouraging growth by investing in capability, market development, people development and product innovation. Invest NI also plans to repeat the successful export trade initiative that was carried out in April 2002 at the Brussels International Seafood Exhibition, where three companies of the six represented on the Invest NI group stand were based in Kilkeel. Many of the other Kilkeel based companies visited the exhibition and were assisted by Invest Northern Ireland to exploit this valuable European export marketing opportunity.

Northern Ireland has also recently supported three business expansion proposals from companies in the fish processing sector in Kilkeel and is currently assisting in a significant research project.

With regards to the retention of employment in Young's Bluecrest, the company has offered employment to the entire workforce, however this is impractical as it involves relocation to Scotland. Equally other Northern Ireland food processing companies, facing the difficulty of labour shortages, have offered alternative employment to part of the workforce. Again this has proven to be impractical. However there is a strong demand for skilled labour in this sector and I understand that other Kilkeel fish processing companies will be able to offer employment to approximately 35 employees of the Young's Bluecrest workforce.

Currently discussions are ongoing to endeavour to minimise the potential employment losses in Kilkeel.

Rating System

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what assessments have been made of the effects of charging rates to the manufacturing industry. (AQW 3552/01)

Sir Reg Empey: The cost of industrial derating, in terms of revenue foregone, is around £64 million a year. A consultation exercise on the future of the rating system will take place soon, and this will provide an opportunity for all arguments and issues to be fully aired before any decisions are taken. Opinions vary as to what the effects of changing the current derating arrangements would be; but I will ensure that the interests of the Northern Ireland economy are kept to the fore in reaching a decision.

Broadband Access

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (a) those areas currently covered by broadband access; and (b) those areas expected to be accessible to broadband in the next (i) 6 months; and (ii) 12 months. (AQW 3566/01)

Sir Reg Empey: Currently a range of broadband technologies is available throughout Northern Ireland from a number of telecommunication operators. However this is often at a cost which small to medium sized companies consider to be unaffordable. To encourage SMEs to take up broadband I announced on 15 January a support programme to assist the installation and first year running costs associated with satellite broadband. Satellite broadband services, available from a range of operators, wholly cover Northern Ireland.

ENVIRONMENT

Carrickfergus Borough Council Area

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (a) the work undertaken by consultants on behalf of the Planning Service in the Carrickfergus Borough Council area in the last 2 years; and (b) the cost of this work. (AQW 3193/01)

The Minister of the Environment (Mr Nesbitt): The work undertaken by consultants in the last 2 years on behalf of the Planning Service, in the Carrickfergus Borough Council area, related to planning applications for development in the Carrickfergus and Whitehead Conservation Areas.

The total costs of the projects were £171,344.

Carrickfergus Borough Council Area Planning Service: Consultants

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (a) the work undertaken by consultants on behalf of the Planning Service in the Carrickfergus Borough Council area in the last 2 years; and (b) the cost of this work. (AQW 3193/01)

Mr Nesbitt [supplementary answer]: Unfortunately, the information contained in my previous answer to you in relation to the total costs of the work undertaken by consultants in the Carrickfergus Borough Council area over the period in question was incorrect.

The total costs of the projects were £2,085.50 and not £171,344 as previously stated.

I apologise for any inconvenience.

Anonymous Objections: Planning Applications

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the status accorded to anonymous objections lodged to planning applications. (AQW 3430/01)

Mr Nesbitt: Material planning matters raised in all letters of objection, including anonymous objections, are taken into account by the Planning Service in the determination process for planning applications.

The status accorded to the material issues raised by objectors is therefore similar. The material issues raised are the most important factor, not the number of objections, either identified or anonymous. However, all interested parties, including objectors, are encouraged to identify themselves in order to ensure that the proper weight is attached to the representations.

Environmental Problems: Plastic Bags

Mr Bradley asked the Minister of the Environment what policy he will pursue in relation to addressing the ongoing environmental problems caused by the extensive use of plastic bags by supermarkets. (AQW 3445/01)

Mr Nesbitt: I am grateful to the Member for raising an issue in which I have taken a personal interest. I have taken particular note of the success of the recently introduced levy on plastic carrier bags in persuading consumers in the Republic of Ireland to reduce significantly their use of plastic bags.

In the UK as a whole, around ten billion plastic bags are given away each year. That constitutes a significant source of landfill and an equally significant source of litter. Unfortunately, because taxation is an excepted matter, Northern Ireland does not have the necessary legal powers to allow the introduction of a levy here independently of the rest of the UK. I am aware that Michael Meacher at the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (DEFRA) has given notice that he intends to press for the introduction of a similar levy. I can confirm that it is my intention to support DEFRA in this, and to encourage the Welsh and Scottish Devolved Administrations to do likewise. In particular, I will raise the issue at meetings of the Environment Sector of the British-Irish Council.

In the meantime I have asked my officials to explore any options which might have an equivalent effect to the levy. They are engaging in discussions with the super-market sector, to look at the possibility of developing a voluntary scheme to encourage consumers to reduce the current profligate use of plastic bags.

As the experience of the Republic of Ireland has shown, people are willing to act with greater environmental responsibility when given appropriate encouragement. I am hopeful that we can build constructively on the heightened public awareness of waste issues brought about by my Department's recent 'Wake up to Waste' campaign.

Road Haulage Industry

Mr Dalton asked the Minister of the Environment if he has plans to appoint a Commissioner, in line with UK-wide practice, to investigate and monitor malpractice in the local haulage industry. (AQW 3447/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The Department of the Environment carries out equivalent functions in Northern Ireland to those of Traffic Commissioners in Great Britain. I have no plans at present to propose changes to the legislation in order to establish a Traffic Commissioner for Northern Ireland.

However, when priorities and resources permit I would intend to review the proposals issued for consultation in 1998 by the former Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland on the regulation of the road haulage industry in Northern Ireland. At that time I will consider whether there should be a Traffic Commissioner for Northern Ireland.

Area of Special Scientific Interest: Deer Park, Newtownstewart, West Tyrone

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of the Environment to outline (a) the legislative process necessary to declare an area as one of Special Scientific Interest; and (b) the stage currently reached in regard to the proposed declaration of Deer Park, Newtownstewart in West Tyrone as an ASSI. (AQW 3479/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The legislative provisions relating to the declaration of Areas of Special Scientific Interest (ASSIs) are set out in the Nature Conservation and Amenity Lands (NI) Order 1985 (as amended). Article 24 of that Order requires my Department to consult with the Council for Nature Conservation and the Countryside on proposed ASSI declarations, and to make a declaration specifying: (i) the scientific features which make it of special interest, and (ii) potentially damaging activities.

That Article also requires my Department to give notice of this declaration to the relevant district council and to every owner/occupier affected by it. The notice sets out the terms of the declaration and the time within which representations or objections concerning the declaration may be made, which is not less than three months from the date of the notification.

Such representations or objections must be considered by the Department within a further period of three months and the declaration either confirmed, with or without modifications to the boundaries, or rescinded. Notice of the Department's decision must be issued to the district council and the owners/occupiers.

Deer Park ASSI was declared by my Department's Environment and Heritage Service on 28 March 2002. EHS has identified 39 owners and occupiers of land within the proposed ASSI and they, together with certain other interested parties, have received notification in accordance with the legislation. All parties have been given until 31 July 2002 to make representations or submit objections.

Millmount Whitelands

Mr Ervine asked the Minister of the Environment what has the Department gained by releasing the Millmount Whitelands site at Dundonald for private development. (AQW 3497/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The Department is currently considering 5 planning applications for development at Millmount, Dundonald.

The principle of development of these lands was established in the Belfast Urban Area Plan 2001 which identified lands at the edge of the Belfast Urban Area (BUA) as a development reserve to meet anticipated housing growth beyond 1993. These lands are referred to as 'Whitelands'.

17 planning applications for housing development on the Belfast Urban Area whitelands were submitted during the latter half of 1996. These included 4 of the current Millmount applications. These applications were subject to Public Inquiry.

In a press statement issued on 7 September 1998, the then Minister, Lord Dubs, announced that he was minded to grant planning permission to fourteen applications for a total of 3700 houses in line with the recommendations of the PAC following the public inquiry.

This included approval of 1080 houses on the 4 Millmount sites. The Department subsequently wrote to the applicants on 7 September 1998 stating that it was minded to approve, in line with the recommendations of the Planning Appeals Commission. Approval of the applications is subject to Article 40 agreements involving each of the landowners. That Article 40 agreement is currently being finalised with solicitors acting for each of the parties.

An application for lands which were not available at the time of the Inquiry, but which constitute the remainder of the Whiteland in the area, has been submitted and the Department has considered this additional land as part of the overall development.

The site at Millmount has already been considered suitable for housing as part of the Public Inquiry process and the Planning Service has been working with the land owners and developers to ensure that the scheme put before the Inquiry can be implemented.

Her Majesty The Queen's Golden Jubilee

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (a) any plans he has to celebrate the Queen's Golden Jubilee; and (b) what measures he has put in place to ensure staff from his Department can celebrate this event. (AQW 3514/01)

Mr Nesbitt:

- (a) Driver Vehicle Licensing Northern Ireland (DVLNI) (an agency within my department) will provide a small exhibition of vehicle photographs and vehicle and driver documents over the last 50 years, which will tour each local office. DVLNI will also be holding one fundraising event to raise funds for nominated charities.
- (b) The NICS has awarded the additional Bank Holiday set for Monday, 3 June to celebrate the Queen's Golden Jubilee.

Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991: Article 31

Ms Lewsley asked the Minister of the Environment if Article 31 of the NI Planning Order 1991 was invoked in consideration of an application to develop land known as Shane Park, Stockman's Lane, Belfast, and if not, to explain the reason why. (AQW 3515/01)

Mr Nesbitt: After careful consideration the Department decided not to declare the Shane Park applications as major applications under the provisions of Article 31 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991, as the proposals did not meet any of the statutory criteria for such designation as they:

- did not involve a substantial departure from the Development Plan for the area to which they relate. The land is zoned in the Belfast Urban Area Plan 2001 for Industry and Commerce and is presently disused/underused recreation space;
- would not be of significance to the whole or a substantial part of Northern Ireland;
- did not affect the whole of a neighbourhood. The proposals do not depart from the Development Plan and the whole neighbourhood would have been considered at Development Plan stage. Environment and Heritage Service were consulted as one of the statutory bodies and they raised no material issues; and

- did not consist of or include the construction, formation, laying out or alteration of a means of access to a trunk road or of any other development of land within 67 metres of the middle of such a road, or of the nearest part of a special road. It was considered that the road network could accommodate the development albeit with some possible works. The main access to the retail warehousing proposed for the site was onto Boucher Road.

Taxi Drivers: Diabetes

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment what steps he is taking to bring legislation in Northern Ireland in line with other parts of the UK in relation to taxi drivers who have been refused their licence due to being diabetic. (AQW 3525/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The Department of the Environment is responsible for taxi driver licensing in Northern Ireland. Insulin dependent diabetics are refused taxi licences. This is prescribed in Regulation 14(1)(b)(iv) of the Motor Vehicles (Taxi Drivers' Licences) Regulations (NI) 1991.

An applicant suffering from diabetes who controls the illness by diet or tablet will usually be granted a taxi drivers licence but all such cases are referred to the Department's Medical Advisors for an opinion. Any applicant refused a licence has the right of appeal to the courts.

There is no comprehensive legislation in place in Great Britain similar to that operating in Northern Ireland. Local Authorities (LAs) in Great Britain are responsible for taxi licensing and issue licences under the appropriate By-laws. My understanding is that the LAs follow the central guidelines promulgated by the Department of Transport, Local Government and the Regions (DTLR) whose Medical Commission on Accident Prevention recommended that "Taxi, emergency ambulance and emergency police drivers should be required to meet Group 2 standards". In practice this means that an insulin dependent diabetic in GB would be refused a taxi licence.

In 2001, DTLR launched a research programme into individual assessments for Group 2 vehicles and this is anticipated to take the form of a 3-year multi-centre study. I will consider the recommendations from the review when it is published.

Vehicle Registration Plates

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment to outline (a) if he will consider vehicle registration plates having 'NI' printed on the plate as standard; and (b) if he will allow owners to have their own vehicle registration plates printed with 'NI'. (AQW 3535/01)

Mr Nesbitt: Though I am keeping this issue under review, it is outside the legislative competence of the Northern Ireland Assembly to make provision for vehicle licensing and registration including the display of vehicle registration marks (i.e. number plates). These are ancillary to the collection of Vehicle Excise Duty which is an excepted matter under the Northern Ireland Act 1998. Regulations relating to number plates are made by the Department of Transport, Local Government and the Regions under the Vehicle Excise and Registration Act 1994 which applies to the whole of the United Kingdom.

Current legislation provides for the optional display in Northern Ireland of the Euro-symbol – a circle of 12 stars with the United Kingdom national identification letters below on a blue background – on the left-hand side of the plate. This permits Northern Ireland motorists, who choose to use the Euro-plate, to dispense with the need for a separate national identification sticker when using their vehicles in other EU countries.

"GB" is the appropriate symbol for the United Kingdom when used for the purpose of international travel by car.

Demolition of Buildings

Mr Wells asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 1986/01, why the Planning Service is unable to provide information on the number of buildings demolished as a result of enforcement action.

(AQW 3544/01)

Mr Nesbitt: Planning Service's database does not hold this specific information. To obtain the details requested would have involved the manual checking of all the Planning enforcement files since 1991. You will be aware that the cost limit for an Assembly Question is £500.

Removal of Sheep Grazing: Mournes

Mr Wells asked the Minister of the Environment to make a statement on his assessment of the ecological impact of the removal of sheep grazing from the inner Mournes. (AQW 3545/01)

Mr Nesbitt: From the beginning of 2000, sheep were excluded from lands, within the Mourne Wall, belonging to Department of Regional Development's Water Service, to prevent contamination of the water supply. This area is within the Eastern Mournes Area of Special Scientific Interest (ASSI) and candidate Special Area of Conservation.

My Department's Environment and Heritage Service undertook an initial assessment of this measure. It concluded that the exclusion of grazing was unlikely to have a serious adverse impact upon the condition of the habitats in the short term, and should allow some areas damaged by a combination of erosion and grazing to recover.

During 2004, as part of my Department's monitoring programme for designated sites, the condition of the vegetation within the Eastern Mourne ASSI will again be assessed. This will provide scientific evidence of the impact of the removal of sheep from the inner Mourne and provide a pointer towards sustainable grazing levels.

Fridge/Fridge-Freezer Disposal Facility

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the commencement date for the operation of a fridge and fridge-freezer disposal facility in the United Kingdom capable of removing such substances from the insulating foam, as demanded by EC Regulation 2037/2000. (AQW 3554/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The Department For Environment, Food & Rural affairs have advised that two mobile units have recently commenced operations in GB, located in Northamptonshire and in the south of England at Lewes, whilst two static facilities located in south Wales and London are likely to come on-line at the end of June.

It is expected that a further 5-10 facilities will be in operation throughout GB by the end of the year.

Estimates of the numbers of waste refrigerators arising in Northern Ireland indicate a falling short of that required to make the establishment of a facility here economically viable, although the critical mass could be obtained on an all-island basis.

It is for this reason that I announced in my statement on 29 April to the Assembly on the 6th meeting of the Environment Sector of the North/South Ministerial Council that my officials are working with the councils to investigate the possibility of a contract for the disposal of waste units on an all-island basis. This would have the advantages of economies of scale and would reduce the financial burden on the local authorities. The timescale for the establishment of such a contract would be of the order of 6 to 9 months.

Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of the Environment to extend the deadlines for submissions on the issues paper to allow the outcomes from the outreach programme to inform the Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan. (AQW 3573/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The Planning (Development Plans) (Amendment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1994 allows 14 weeks for the receipt of representations in relation to Development Plans. This period applies to the submission of representations in response to the Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan Issues Paper.

I have no plans to extend the time allowed for making representations, but will continue to work closely with the 6 Councils throughout the Plan preparation process. In addition, the report on the consultation process, which has yet to be completed, will be considered in bringing forward policies and proposals for the Draft Plan.

Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of the Environment to set up a community outreach and support programme to assist and inform community discussion on the issues involved in the Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan process. (AQW 3574/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The publication of the Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan (BMAP) Issues Paper on the 7 December 2001 was intended to provide a focus for consultation with community, voluntary and environmental groups, the trade and industry sector, elected representatives and members of the general public. In order to further assist the debate and facilitate response, the Department appointed, through an open tendering process, Price-waterhouse Coopers, in association with staff from Queens University School of Environment and Planning and the Urban Institute of the University of Ulster, to undertake a comprehensive and wide ranging public and community consultation on the Issues Paper. To ensure widespread community involvement in the consultation process, the Issues Paper was circulated free of charge and, in addition, a pamphlet setting out the consultation arrangements was published. To further inform the public of the consultation process and the issues that needed to be addressed, 10 information meetings were held throughout the plan area. These information meetings aimed to inform the general public of the plan preparation process and explain the format and role of the Issues Paper. All who attended received a free copy of the Issues Paper and were asked to read it prior to attending the main public consultation meetings.

In total, 37 public meetings were held and attendance was monitored. The BMAP team, in conjunction with the appointed consultants, are reviewing attendance with a view to holding additional workshops and focus groups to address parts of the BMAP area which might need additional attention.

To promote equality of opportunity in the consultation process, the consultants have also been asked to hold specific focus groups and workshops for particular groups such as youth, the elderly, ethnic groups, travellers and people with disabilities.

As well as the consultation which has taken place since the Issues Paper was published, members of the BMAP team were involved in extensive discussions and meetings with a wide variety of groups between January 2001 and the date of publication of the Issues Paper on the 7 December 2001.

I believe that the consultation being undertaken in relation to the Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan is both wide ranging and comprehensive.

Development of the Metropolitan Area

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of the Environment to publish a Spatial Options Paper outlining a range of planning scenarios for the development of the metropolitan area to facilitate public debate on future options.

(AQW 3575/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan (BMAP) will be developed within the context of the Regional Development Strategy (RDS) for Northern Ireland which sets out a clear structure for the future development of the Metropolitan Area.

During the preparation of the RDS, options for the development of the Metropolitan Area have already been considered. The Department, therefore, considers that a spatial options paper outlining a range of planning scenarios is not required and its introduction would not add meaningfully to the plan preparation process. Rather it would delay the production of the Plan and hence delay the putting in place of up-to-date Plan coverage for the Metropolitan Area. An up-to-date plan is essential to ensure that there is sufficient development land to sustain the growth of the local economy. The Department therefore has no plans to publish a BMAP Options Paper but will of course continue to consult with the six Councils during the preparation of the Plan.

Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of the Environment to make it his policy to raise the profile of the Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan process through a wide-ranging and multi-media approach.

(AQW 3576/01)

Mr Nesbitt: Since the then Minister of the Environment Mr Sam Foster MLA announced in January 2001 that work had commenced on the preparation of the Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan (BMAP) the Department has been promoting public awareness of the Plan preparation process and encouraging everyone to become involved in helping to shape the policies and proposals for the Draft Plan. The January 2001 launch was reported widely by the local regional and national media and the then Minister and BMAP team manager took part in live radio interviews. In addition, Press Notices inviting the public to submit their views were placed during 2 consecutive weeks in 12 local and regional newspapers.

Following the launch of the Plan a pamphlet setting out the background to BMAP and listing some of the issues which needed to be addressed was published and widely circulated. In addition, a dedicated BMAP website was established and this has proved an effective means of communication. In December 2001 alone this website was accessed by more than 3,700 people.

The launch of the BMAP Issues Paper on the 7 December 2001 also received widespread media coverage and was accompanied by media briefings including television and radio interviews. A conference on BMAP entitled "Successful Metropolitan Areas", which was held on the 1 February 2001, was attended by almost 200 people and again received widespread media coverage. The publication of the BMAP Issues Paper provided a focus for public consultation which involved 37 public meetings throughout the plan area. In association with these public meetings a second pamphlet was produced and widely circulated. Press Notices were also placed over a 3 week period inviting the public to both attend the consultation meetings and submit their views. To-date more than 3,000 written submissions have been received.

Members of the BMAP team have also spoken at 3 major conferences, all of which were widely reported in the media.

As I hope the above demonstrates the Department is already promoting, and will continue to promote public awareness of the plan preparation process. I will continue to take every available opportunity to do so.

Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of the Environment to publish the Consultant's report on the Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan consultation process as soon as it is available.

(AQW 3582/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The report on the consultation process has not yet been completed. When the report is completed by the Consortium of Consultants commissioned to undertake the consultation process.

FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

Fire Safety: Government Buildings

Mr B Bell asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline (a) if all government buildings meet required fire safety standards as laid down in Building Regulations (NI) Fire Safety 1994 and (b) the procedures his department has in place in order to ensure that all fire certificates issued on government buildings meet prescribed standards.

(AQW 3324/01)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Dr Farren): The building standards, including those relating to fire safety, which apply to Government buildings are those which were extant at the time of construction, alteration, extension or change of use. The Building Regulations (NI) 1994 therefore only apply, in the manner prescribed in Regulation A4, Transitional Provisions, to those premises which were constructed, altered, extended or changed in use after the date on which the regulations came into operation. In 1995 a decision was made to bring all Government owned or occupied buildings, that are designated buildings, under the Fire Services Order (NI) 1984, up to modern fire certificate standard. Details of these standards are set out in the relevant Home Office publications on fire precautions in places of work, hotels and boarding houses. Some 264 premises fall into this category, of which 249 have been brought up to the certification standard and arrangements are in hand to bring the remaining premises up to the standard. Occupying Departments are responsible for ensuring that designated buildings and any change of use, occupation, structural alteration or extension of a certificated building are properly identified. This arrangement is complemented by a rolling programme of inspections, at all Government buildings, by officials from both the Department of Finance and Personnel and the Health and Safety Executive, which is the Crown certifying authority.

Courier Service

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many people have been employed in the Department's Courier Service in each of the last 5 years.

(AQW 3431/01)

Dr Farren: As the Courier Service and Car Pool, for the purposes of the personnel record, are held as one branch, Centralised Transport, the information is not held in the format requested. I can, however, provide the information for Centralised Transport which I have detailed below.

The total number of staff employed in Centralised Transport during each of the last 5 years is as follows:

Year	Number of Staff
1997	11
1998	17
1999	13
2000	14
2001	22

Courier Service

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what is the average length of training given to a new member in his Department's Courier Service.

(AQW 3432/01)

Dr Farren: After basic first day induction the Courier Service provides further on the job training to new recruits. It is estimated that new recruits would be sufficiently proficient in the work of the Courier Service within two months. However, this is largely dependent on the individual and their detailed knowledge of Belfast and Stormont Estate.

Courier Service

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many people have left or been transferred from his Department's Courier Service in each of the last 5 years.

(AQW 3433/01)

Dr Farren: As the Courier Service and Car Pool, for the purposes of the personnel record, are held as one branch, Centralised Transport, the information is not held in the format requested. I can, however, provide the information for Centralised Transport which I have detailed below.

The total number of staff who have left or been transferred from Centralised Transport during each of the last 5 years is as follows:

Year	Number of Staff
1997	2
1998	6
1999	1
2000	2
2001	3

Courier Service

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many vacancies have occurred in his Department's Courier Service in each of the last 5 years.

(AQW 3434/01)

Dr Farren: As the Courier Service and Car Pool, for the purposes of the personnel record, are held as one branch, Centralised Transport, the information is not held in the format requested. I can, however, provide the information for Centralised Transport which I have detailed below.

The following table lists the number of vacancies within the Centralised Transport during each of the last 5 years and this therefore corresponds with the number of vacancies.

Year	Number of Staff
1997	0
1998	8
1999	2
2000	2
2001	10

Courier Service

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many jobs have been publicly advertised in his Department's Courier Service in each of the last 5 years. (AQW 3435/01)

Dr Farren: As the Courier Service and Car Pool, for the purposes of the personnel record, are held as one branch, Centralised Transport, the information is not held in the format requested. I can, however, provide the information for Centralised Transport.

Vacancies for Messenger/Driver (Support Grade 1) in the Northern Ireland Civil Service are normally filled by redeployment of surplus staff, lateral transfer for career development purposes or by internal promotion. Should the Department of Finance and Personnel be unable to fill vacancies through internal procedures external recruitment is considered.

The Department publicly advertised for Messenger/Drivers for Centralised Transport in October 2001. However, the advertisement was not specifically for the Courier Service.

Disabled Civil Servants

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, pursuant to AQW 2961/01, to detail the number of civil servants who are listed as disabled. (AQW 3436/01)

Dr Farren: Monitoring of NICS staff indicates that at January 2001, 5.4% of those who provided details about their personal circumstances, declared themselves as having a disability as defined by the Disability Discrimination Act 1995.

This information, and that relating to previous years, is contained in the regular reports of the NICS Equal Opportunities Unit, the most recent of which, the Seventh Report, was published in April 2000 with supplements in November 2000 and June 2001. Copies of the report are available in the Assembly Library and on the internet at <http://www.dfpni.gov.uk/>.

INTERREG III

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the source of the €44.8m of National and Regional co-financing within the Community Initiative Interreg III (IP/02/602). (AQW 3437/01)

Dr Farren: The €44.8m National and Regional co-financing is the matching funding from Ireland and Northern Ireland towards the INTERREG IIIA Community Initiative. The total value of the INTERREG IIIA

Programme (Ireland and Northern Ireland) is almost €180m for the period up to 2006. The EC Regulations designate Northern Ireland and the Border Region of Ireland as an area in transition from Objective 1 status and as such receives a 75% EU contribution towards the Programme. The EU contribution is €53.6m for Ireland and €80.8m (£52m) for Northern Ireland with matching funding (25%) being €17.9m for Ireland and €26.9m (£17.4m) for Northern Ireland. Both matched funding elements total €44.8m.

The Executive agreed in February 2000 that the Northern Ireland contribution will, in the first instance come from Departmental baselines.

Peace II Funding

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline (a) the timescale for Peace II funding; (b) the current position of the Ards Local Strategy Partnership's bid; and (c) the funding allocated for the Ards Borough Council area through Peace II. (AQW 3464/01)

Dr Farren:

- (a) The PEACE II Programme runs from 2000-2004. All monies must be committed by 31 December 2004 but project expenditure can be incurred up to 31 December 2006. The Special EU Programmes Body have set a final closure date of 30 June 2006 to allow 6 months before the final Commission closure date of 31 December 2006. The PEACE II Programme consists of over 50 Measures, the majority of which are now open.
- (b) Ards Local Strategy Document has been approved and the launch of their element of the Programme is a matter for the Local Strategy Partnership. The SEUPB have informed me that they have now reached agreement in principle with Ards LSP on the terms of its contract and that a formal Letter of Offer will be issued before 31 May 2002.
- (c) The agreement that has been reached in principle with Ards Local Strategy Partnership offers funding as follows:
 - £926,000 under Measure 3.1 – Local Economic Initiatives for Developing the Social Economy (NI) (ERDF);
 - £852,000 under Measure 3.2 – Locally-based Human Resources Training and Developing Strategies (NI) ESF; and
 - £300,000 under Technical Assistance to cover administration costs of the Local Strategy Partnership.

Potential projects from the Ards area can of course apply to any Measure of the Programme.

Marriage

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what steps he has taken to strengthen the institution of marriage since devolution. (AQW 3465/01)

Dr Farren: The most pertinent reform in this regard is the forthcoming Marriage Bill. Whilst maintaining the solemnity of the marriage ceremony, this Bill aims to afford couples a greater freedom of choice in relation to the venue in which they may get married. Evidence from other jurisdictions which have adopted similar reforms has shown an increase in the number of people subsequently choosing to get married. If the Bill is passed, those who do not choose or are unable to undergo a religious ceremony may marry in a location other than a Registry Office, and will have to undertake a less onerous system for notification. The system of notification and registration of those who may officiate at a marriage will be equalised for smaller churches and faith communities. Consultation on the matter has indicated that such changes are welcomed within both religious and secular circles in Northern Ireland.

Courier Service

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of people who have obtained jobs within his Department's Courier Service who were previously employed by the NI Civil Service in each of the last 5 years. (AQW 3480/01)

Dr Farren: As the Courier Service and Car Pool, for the purposes of the personnel record, are held as one branch, Centralised Transport, the information is not held in the format requested. I can, however, provide the information for Centralised Transport.

24 staff have been employed in Centralised Transport over the last 5 years. All were previously employed within the NICS and appointed through redeployment of surplus staff, lateral transfer or by internal promotion.

Spending Review

Mr O'Neill asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to provide an update on the Spending Review. (AQO 1368/01)

Dr Farren: The outcome of the national Spending Review is expected to be announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in July. As regards the local process, I outlined the timetable to which we are working in my Statement to the Assembly on 4 March. Work on the first significant stage of this - the Executive's Position Report - is ongoing, with publication due in early June.

Reinvestment and Reform Initiative

Mr McMenamin asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how the short term funding arising from the Reform and Re-investment package will be used. (AQO 1369/01)

Dr Farren: We will be working with Departments over the coming weeks to identify suitable infrastructure projects for funding from the Reinvestment and Reform Initiative. We are planning to allocate the £125m short term borrowing from Treasury alongside the £70m that is available from our own Executive Programme Infrastructure Fund to address some immediate investment needs in accordance with our Programme for Government priorities.

Review of the Rating System

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if the review of the rating system will include an examination of exemptions under specific circumstances. (AQO 1365/01)

Dr Farren: The Review of Rating Policy will consider the continuing appropriateness of reliefs and exemptions currently available. These are too numerous to mention here in detail but they range from relief for people with disabilities, through public and charitable uses, amateur sport and recreation, community halls to industrial derating. Revenue forgone on these reliefs is equivalent to about 20% of the revenue raised. Furthermore agricultural property is not rated nor valued, though this is not an option being considered.

It will examine the need for additional reliefs and exemptions. This may include consideration of issues such as the single adult discount, relief for pensioners as a group, hardship relief for the Non-Domestic sector, small business relief and relief both for disadvantaged areas and declining town centres.

Rates: Vacant Properties

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline the value of rates lost as a result of vacant property in the (a) commercial sector and (b) residential sector in the last financial year. (AQO 1394/01)

Dr Farren: The Rate Collection Agency is responsible for the collection of rates in Northern Ireland.

Under rating legislation vacant unoccupied properties do not normally attract liability for payment of rates. Rates on vacant unoccupied properties are classed as rates foregone.

Agency records show that in the financial year ended 31 March 2002 the potential rate revenue which could have been raised from:

- (a) vacant commercial property throughout Northern Ireland was £35,841,708.15; and
- (b) vacant residential property throughout Northern Ireland was £12,296,337.59.

The Rate Collection Agency has a continuous programme of vacancy inspection to ensure that property that becomes occupied is identified and that a rate bill is issued.

HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Health Trusts: Purchase of Services

Mr Gibson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many Health Trusts purchased services outside their region in the last 12 months. (AQW 2287/01)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Ms de Brún): Responsibility for purchasing services rests with Health and Social Services Boards rather than the Trusts. All four Boards have purchased treatment for their residents outside the region over the last twelve months. Such cases may arise in the normal course of diagnosis and treatment protocols, where residents are referred for a specialist opinion or service not available locally, or where they have required emergency hospital admission when on a visit outside the region. In addition, patients may be referred to other centres as part of a waiting list initiative, to ensure that they are treated earlier than would otherwise be possible.

Based on past experience, approximately 1,300 patients would have been treated outside the region in the past year. Most of these would be subject to referral for specialist advice or emergency admission. As part of the special 2001-02 waiting list initiative, however, treatment was also arranged for 268 patients to undergo cardiac surgery.

Luíonn an fhreagracht do sheirbhísí ceannachta leis na Boird Sláinte agus Seirbhísí Sóisialta seachas leis na hIontaobhais. Tá cóireáil ceannaithe ag gach ceann de na ceithre Bhord do chónaitheigh lasmuigh den réigiún thar na dá mhí déag seo caite. D'fhéadfadh cásanna den sórt sin tarlú i ngnáthchúrsa na fáthmheasa agus na bprótacal cóireála, áit a gcuirtear cónaitheigh ar aghaidh do thuairim speisialtóra nó do sheirbhís nach mbíonn ar fáil go háitiúil, nó áit is gá iad a ligean isteach san ospidéal ar bhonn éigeandála agus iad ar cuairt lasmuigh den réigiún. Chomh maith leis sin, is féidir othair a chur ar aghaidh chuig lárionaid eile mar chuid de thionscnamh liosta feithimh, lena chinntiú go ndéantar cóireáil orthu níos túisce ná a d'fhéadfaí sin a dhéanamh seachas sin.

Bunaithe ar an taithí ón am a caitheadh, bheadh cóireáil déanta ar isteach agus amach le 1,300 othar lasmuigh den réigiún sa bhliain seo caite. Bheadh an chuid is mó de sin faoi réir chur ar aghaidh do chomhairle speisialtóra nó do ligean isteach in ospidéal ar bhonn éigeandála. Mar chuid de thionscnamh speisialta liosta feithimh 2001-02, áfach, socraíodh cóireáil freisin do 268 othar le dul faoi mháinliacht chairdiach.

Diabetic Outpatient Clinics

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what funding was allocated to diabetic out-patient clinics by each Health Board in each of the last 3 years. (AQW 2574/01)

Ms de Brún: The information requested is not available.

Níl fáil ar an eolas a iarradh.

Primary Care: Number of Nurses

Ms McWilliams asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of nurses employed in Primary Care in Northern Ireland. (AQW 2871/01)

Ms de Brún: Currently there are 680 (403.7 whole time equivalent) Treatment and Practice Room Nurses employed in Primary Care here. At December 2001 there were a total of 531 Health Visitors (447.61 whole time equivalent) and 342 District Nurses (318.37 whole time equivalent).

Tá 680 (403.7 coibhéis lánaimseartha) Altra Seomra Cóireála agus Cleachtaidh fostaithe le haghaidh Príomhchúraim anseo. Ag Mí na Nollag 2001 bhí 531 Cuairteoir Sláinte (447.61 coibhéis lánaimseartha) agus 342 Altra Dúiche (318.37 coibhéis lánaimseartha) in iomlán.

Infertility Treatment

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of couples, with children living with them who are being denied infertility treatment as a result of the new interim arrangements on fertility. (AQW 3060/01)

Ms de Brún: As of 13 May 2002, a total of 53 couples had failed to qualify for sub-fertility treatment because they have children living with them.

Ó 13 Bealtaine 2002, theip ar 53 lánúin ina n-iarratas le cóireáil fhothorthúlachta a fháil mar go raibh páistí ina gcónaí leo.

Fire Certificates

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to state the number of fire certificates issued by the Fire Authority for Northern Ireland in the six-month period 1 October 2001 to 31 March 2002.

(AQW 3065/01)

Ms de Brún: Over the six month period 1st October 2001 to 31st March 2002 the Fire Authority issued 17 Fire Certificates.

Thar an tréimhse sé mhí ó 1 Deireadh Fómhair go dtí 31 Márta 2002 d'eisigh an tÚdarás Dóiteáin 17 Teastas Dóiteáin.

Prescription Charges

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) if any assessment has been made of the criteria which determines the diseases that are exempt from prescription charges; and (b) if any changes will be made to reflect the clinical needs of chronically ill patients.

(AQW 3232/01)

Ms de Brún: The list of medical conditions conferring exemption from prescription charges was introduced in 1968 after being agreed in discussion with the medical profession. These conditions are readily identifiable, permanent, life long conditions that require regular or extensive medication. The list has been reviewed on a number of occasions, most recently in 1998 by the Department of Health in England, but no clear-cut case for extending it has emerged.

I have no current plans to extend the list of medical conditions that confer exemption from prescription charges, to include any other medical condition. In 1968 only 42% of all prescription items were dispensed free of charge, whereas it is now some 90% here.

Tugadh liosta riochtaí míochaine isteach i 1968 a fuair díolúine ó mhuirir oidis i ndiaidh dóibh bheith comhaontaithe i bplé le gairm na míochaine. Is riochtaí inaimsithe go maith, buan, a mhaireann ar feadh an tsaoil iad a dteastaíonn leigheas rialta nó suntasach uathu. Athbhreithníodh an liosta ar roinnt ócáidí agus ba í an ócáid is déanaí in 1998 nuair a d'athbhreithnigh an Roinn Sláinte i Sasana é ach níor éirigh cás follasach as lena mhéadú.

Níl pleananna láithreacha agam an liosta riochtaí míochaine a mhéadú chun riocht eile míochaine a chur san áireamh a fhaigheann díolúine ó mhuirir oidis. Níor tugadh amach i 1968 ach 42% de gach mír oidis saor in aisce i gcomparáid le 90% éigin sa lá atá inniu ann anseo.

Anti-Tumour Necrosis Factor Drugs

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans she has to make anti-TNF drugs for arthritis available through the health service.

(AQW 3236/01)

Ms de Brún: Remicade has been made available here since November 1999, for a number of patients with this illness who have failed to respond to existing drug therapies.

The approach adopted here to the prescribing of these specialist drugs for the treatment of adults with severe rheumatoid arthritis and children with juvenile idiopathic arthritis, is broadly in line with the recent recommendations made by the National Institute of Clinical Excellence (NICE). While NICE endorsed the use of these drugs within clearly defined guidelines, it has identified the need for further assessment to determine their long-term clinical effectiveness.

A recent report by rheumatologists here has also concluded that while these drugs represent a major advancement in the treatment of this illness, it is essential that their use should continue to be strictly controlled and monitored, particularly in light of possible serious side effects. My Department is continuing to work with Boards and clinicians to promote a cautious approach to their introduction, within the resources available.

Cuireadh Remicade ar fáil ó Shamhain 1999 do roinnt othar a raibh an tinneas seo orthu nár éirigh leis na teiripithe drugaí dul i bhfeidhm orthu.

Cloíonn an cur chuige a tugadh isteach anseo maidir le tabhairt amach na saindrugaí seo ar mhaithe le cóir leighis a chur ar aosaigh a bhfuil géarairtríteas réamatóideach orthu agus páistí a bhfuil airtríteas ideapaiteach aosánach orthu a bheag nó a mhór le moltaí a rinne an Foras Náisiúnta d'Ardchaighdeán Feabhais Cliniciúil le gairid (FNAFC). Cé gur cheadaigh FNAFC úsáid na ndrugáí seo laistigh de threoirilnte soiléire, d'aimsigh sé an gá le haghaidh measúnaithe bhreise lena n-éifeacht fhadtéarmach chliniciúil a mheas.

Is é a toradh a bhí ar thuairisc le gairid a rinne réamaitheolaithe anseo ná cé gur dul chun cinn suntasach ar choireáil an tinnis seo na drugaí sin is éigeantach gur chóir go fóill a n-úsáid a shrianú agus a mhonatóireacht go righin, go háirithe agus an fhéidearthacht ann go mbeidh géar-sheachthorthaí ann. Tá an Roinn s'agam ag leanúint le hobair leis na Boird agus le cliniceoirí chun cur chuige faichilleach a chothú i dtaobh a dtabhairt isteach, ag obair laistigh de na hacmhainní ar fáil.

Strategy for Reducing Alcohol-Related Harm

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to make a statement on the progress of the September 2000 strategy to reduce alcohol related harm. (AQW 3242/01)

Ms de Brún: Since its launch in September 2000, my Department has worked to establish appropriate implementation structures to ensure coherent and consistent delivery of the aims of the Strategy for Reducing Alcohol Related Harm.

In April 2001, a paper entitled 'Model for the Joint Implementation of the Drug and Alcohol Strategies' was presented to the then Ministerial Group on Drugs for consideration. The Ministerial Group approved the model, and on 17 May it received endorsement from the Executive. The structures include all key interests including local communities and allows for a concerted approach.

The joint implementation of both strategies is now underway and the new model includes the formation of six working groups to cover the following areas: Treatment, Education & Prevention, Communities, Information & Research, Social Legislation and Criminal Justice. The six Working Groups have developed Regional Action Plans based on the key output areas detailed in the Joint Implementation Model. These key outputs are based on the targets contained in the Drug and Alcohol Strategies. There are over 115 activities in the Regional Action Plans and all are time-bound. The Regional Action Plans have been finalised and Working Groups are due to meet in May to begin the task of taking the activities forward.

The four local Drug and Alcohol Coordination Teams have also developed Local Action Plans based on the Regional Activities. The Local Action Plans are presently being considered and will be finalised by the end of May.

All Action Plans will be published and available by early summer.

Óna lainseáil i Meán Fómhair 2000, d'oibrigh mo Roinn le struchtúir chuí fheidhmithe a chur i bhfeidhm a chinnteoidh go gcomhlíonfar aidhmeanna na Straitéise um Laghdú sa Dochar Bainteach le hAlcól go céillí agus go rialta.

In Aibreán 2001, cuireadh páipéar dar theideal 'Creatlach le hAghaidh Chomhchur i bhFeidhm na Straitéisí Drugaí agus Alcóil' faoi bhráid an iar-Ghrúpa Aireachta um Dhrugaí le haghaidh machnaimh. D'fhorbair an Grúpa Aireachta an chreatlach, agus ar 17 Bealtaine ghlac an Feidhmiúchán léi. Cuimsíonn na struchtúir na heochairpháirtithe leasmhara go léir chomh maith leis na pobail áitiúla agus cuireann siad cur chuige comhbheartaithe san áireamh.

Tá comhchur i bhfeidhm an dá straitéis faoi lánseol anois agus sa chreatlach tá bunú sé ghrúpa oibre le déileáil leis na réimsí seo a leanas: Cóireáil, Oideachas & Cosc, Pobail, Eolas & Taighde, Reachtaíocht Shóisialta agus Dlí Coiriúil. D'fhorbair na sé Ghrúpa Oibre Pleananna Réigiúnacha Gnímh bunaithe ar na réimsí príomhaschur léirithe go mion sa Chreatlach Chomhfheidhmithe. Tá na príomhaschur seo bunaithe ar na spriocanna sna Straitéisí Drugaí agus Alcóil. Tá breis agus 115 gníomhaíocht sna Pleananna Réigiúnacha Gnímh agus tá teorainn ama orthu. Cuireadh an dlaoi mhullaigh ar na Pleananna Réigiúnacha Gnímh agus tá na Grúpaí Oibre le bualadh le chéile i mí na Bealtaine chun tús a chur le forbairt na ngníomhaíochtaí seo.

D'fhorbair na ceithre Fhoireann áitiúla Comhordaithe Drugaí agus Alcóil Pleananna Áitiúla Gnímh fosta bunaithe ar na Gníomhaíochtaí Réigiúnacha. Tá machnamh á dhéanamh ar na Pleananna Áitiúla Gnímh faoi láthair agus cuirfear an dlaoi mhullaigh orthu faoi dheireadh mhí na Bealtaine.

Foilseofar na Pleananna Gnímh go léir agus beidh siad ar fáil go luath sa samhradh.

Low Birth Weight

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what statistics her department hold on the causes of low birth weight. (AQW 3243/01)

Ms de Brún: The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety does not hold any statistics on the causes of low birth weight.

Níl staitisticí ag an Roinn Sláinte, Seirbhísí Sóisialta agus Sábháilteachta Poiblí ar na cúiseanna atá le meáchan íseal breithe.

Smoking During Pregnancy

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps she has taken to reduce the number of women who smoke during pregnancy. (AQW 3244/01)

Ms de Brún: All pregnant women receive advice from health care professionals, including, where appropriate, advice on the effects of smoking in pregnancy. In addition, all first time expectant mothers are given a copy of "The Pregnancy Book", which is produced in collaboration with the Health Promotion Agency and distributed by Health Boards. The Book contains a wealth of information about pregnancy, including advice on the benefits of giving up smoking.

I established an inter-sectoral Working Group on Tobacco in March last year to develop and oversee the implementation of a comprehensive Action Plan to tackle smoking. The Plan, which will identify pregnant women who smoke as a key target group, is being finalised and will be issued for consultation in the summer.

Tugann gairmithe cúraim shláinte comhairle do gach uile bean ag iompar clainne, agus más ceart í, comhairle ar sheachthorthaí chaitheamh tobac i rith iompar clainne fosta. Ina theannta sin, tugtar cóip den leabhar “The Pregnancy Book”, curtha amach i gcomhar leis an Ghníomhaireacht um Chur Chun Cinn Sláinte agus scaipthe ag Boird Shláinte, do mhná atá ag dúil lena gcéad pháiste. Sa leabhar tá cuid mhór eolais ar thoircheas, agus tugann sé comhairle ar na tairbhí bainteach le héirí as tobac chomh maith.

Bhunaigh mé Grúpa idir-rannógach Oibre ar Thobac i Márta an bhliain seo a chuaigh thart le cur i bhfeidhm Plean Chuimsithigh Ghnímh le tabhairt faoi chaitheamh tobac a fhorbairt agus a stiúradh. Tá an dlaoi mhullaigh á cur ar an Phlean, a aithneoidh mná ag iompar clainne mar phríomhspríocdhream, agus cuirfear amach le haghaidh comhairlithe sa samhradh é.

Foetal Abnormality Syndrome

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what assessment can she make of the research conducted world-wide into foetal abnormality syndrome and its connection with the consumption of alcohol during pregnancy. (AQW 3246/01)

Ms de Brún: Foetal alcohol syndrome is a very serious disorder that can result in growth retardation, multiple physical abnormalities and severe learning disability. Research indicates that although maternal age and health as well as specific foetal susceptibility may contribute to the outcome for an infant whose mother drinks alcohol while pregnant, the potential harm to the foetus is much stronger with large amounts of maternal alcohol consumption than with smaller amounts. Pregnant women and those planning to become pregnant are advised to stop drinking or to limit alcohol consumption to one unit or two units of alcohol once or twice a week.

Is neamhord iontach tromchúiseach é siondróm alcól an fhéatais ar féidir le moilliú i bhfás, le hilmhínormáltachtaí fisiciúla agus le míchumas géar foghlama teacht as. Léiríonn taighde cé gur féidir le haois agus le sláinte na máthar chomh maith le claonadh ar leith chun galar an fhéatais bheith ina bhfachtóirí sa todhchaí maidir le saol an naíonáin a n-ólann a m(h)áthair alcól agus í ag iompar clainne, tá an dochar ionchasach don fhéatas níos láidire má ólann an mháthair méid mór alcóil ná méid beag. Moltar do mhná ag iompar clainne nó ag iarraidh le bheith ag iompar clainne gan a bheith ag ól alcóil, nó an méid alcóil a ólann siad a theorannú go haonad amháin nó go dhá aonad d’alcól uair amháin nó dhá uair sa tseachtain.

Drug Treatment Programmes

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps are being taken to encourage drug users to participate in drug treatment programmes. (AQW 3248/01)

Ms de Brún: My Department is currently funding 23 projects that are either health or community orientated. This includes a Needle and Syringe Exchange Scheme, which has the potential to bring drug users into contact with health professionals who are available to offer a range of advice as well as distributing clean materials. A 10-bed in-patient unit in Ballymena is also being funded and additional resources are being used to establish counselling services for young people in partnership with the Community Addiction Teams and specialist counselling agencies from the voluntary and community sector. Other projects funded aim to divert young people at risk of drug misuse into healthier pursuits and reintegrate recovering addicts into training and employment.

Cross-departmental and multi-sectoral working groups have recently developed a Regional Action Plan. The plan has a number of targets relating to treatment that will help to improve current services. Four local Action Plans, specific to Health Board areas have also been developed and will help to ensure that the targets contained in the Regional Action Plan are actioned locally.

Tá an Roinn s’agam faoi láthair ag maoiniú 23 tionscadal bunaithe ar an tsláinte nó ar an phobal. Tá Scéim Mhalartaithe Snathaide agus Steallaire, trínar féidir úsáideoirí drugaí a chur i dteagmháil le gairmithe sláinte atá ar fáil le réimse comhairle a thabhairt chomh maith le hábhair ghlana a scaipeadh. Tá aonad 10 leaba othar cónaitheach á mhaoiniú ar an Bhaile Meánach agus tá acmhainní breise á n-úsáid chun seirbhísí comhairliúcháin d’ógánaigh a bhunú i bpáirtíocht le Foirne Pobail Andúile agus sainghníomhaireachtaí comhairliúcháin ón earnáil dheonach agus pobail. Is é an aidhm atá leis na tionscadail eile ógánaigh i mbaol mí-úsáid drugaí a threorú i dtreo caitheamh aimsire níos sláintiúla agus andúiligh a bhfuil biseach orthu a mhealladh isteach sa traenáil agus san fhostaíocht arís.

D’fhorbair grúpaí oibre tras-roinne agus ilearnálacha Plean Gníomhaíochta Réigiúnach le gairid. Tá roinnt spriocanna ag an phlean a bhaineann le cóireáil a chuideodh le seirbhísí láithreacha a fheabhsú. Forbraíodh ceithre Phlean Gníomhaíochta áitiúla, a bhaineann le ceantair na mBord Sláinte áirithe agus a chuideodh le cinntiú go bhfuil na spriocanna sa Phlean Gníomhaíochta Réigiúnach curtha i ngníomh ar bhonn áitiúil.

Scoliosis

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why are children needing urgent surgery to rectify Scoliosis being sent to Glasgow for their treatment. (AQW 3253/01)

Ms de Brún: I refer the Member to my answer to AQW 3286/01.

Treoraím an Ball do mo fhreagra a thug mé ar AQW 3286/01.

HIV Infection

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) the number of people diagnosed with HIV in each of the last 3 years (b) the number of people who contracted the disease through (i) heterosexual activity (ii) homosexual activity and (iii) blood transfusion. (AQW 3258/01)

Ms de Brún: This information is detailed in the table below.

FIRST DIAGNOSES OF HIV INFECTION

Route of infection	1999	2000	2001

Scoliosis

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why are two surgeons from Northern Ireland travelling to Scotland to operate on children with Scoliosis. (AQW 3286/01)

Ms de Brún: Scoliosis is a spinal deformity that may require very complex surgery undertaken by an expert in spinal surgery. The clinical condition of a number of children suffering from scoliosis was such that the opportunity for appropriate treatment was diminishing and the capacity to treat the number of children involved within a relatively short timescale was not available here.

While the unit in Scotland was able to provide facilities for scoliosis surgery, they were not able to provide the specialist surgical input. This necessitated the active participation of two local surgeons.

Is míchuma dromlaigh é Scolóis ina bhféadfadh go mbeadh ar shaineolaí tabhairt faoi mháinliacht chasta i máinliacht dromlaigh. Bhí an bhail chliniciúil a bhí ag dul do roinnt leanaí a raibh scolóis orthu sa chaoi is go raibh an deis a bhí ann cóireáil oiriúnach a fháil ag laghdú agus ní raibh sé ar ár gcumas anseo cóireáil a thabhairt don líon leanaí a bhí i gceist laistigh den amscála a bhí réasúnta gearr.

Fad is a bhí an t-aonad in Albain ábalta saoráidí a sholáthar do mháinliacht scolóise ní raibh siad ábalta ionchur máinliachta speisialtóireachta a chur ar fáil. Dá bharr sin bhí sé riachtanach go mbeadh beirt mháinlia áitiúla páirteach go gníomhach ann.

Smoking During Pregnancy: Effects

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what proposals she has to increase awareness of the long-term effects of smoking during pregnancy. (AQW 3309/01)

Ms de Brún: I refer the Member to my answer to AQW 3244/01.

Treoraím an Ball do mo fhreagra a thug mé ar AQW 3244/01.

Ulster Hospital Refurbishment: Timescale

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is the timescale for the new building refurbishment of the Ulster Hospital. (AQW 3310/01)

Ms de Brún: The Strategic Development Plan for the Ulster Hospital is in four Phases. Phase 1, addressing deficiencies in critical medical equipment was implemented in early 2001.

Phase 2, comprising nine projects addressing critical problems of capacity and continuity, started in mid-year 2001. Each of the projects will follow a different timescale and it is anticipated that all will be completed by September 2006.

Phases 3 and 4 will be kept under review in the light of the report of the Acute Hospitals Review Group and, following a period of public consultation, the Executive's decisions on the long-term future of acute hospital services. The projected construction periods are three years for Phase 3 and four years for Phase 4.

Tá ceithre Chéim le Plean Forbartha Straitéiseach Otharlann Uladh. Céim 1, ag tabhairt faoi easnaimh géarthrealamh míochaine rud a cuireadh i bhfeidhm go luath i 2001.

Céim 2, ina raibh naoi dtionscadal ag tabhairt faoi ghéarfhadhbanna acmhainne agus leanúnachais, ar cuireadh tús leo i lár na bliana 2001. Beidh clár ama difriúil ag gach tionscadal agus táthar ag súil go mbeidh gach ní críochnaithe faoi Mheán Fómhair 2006.

Céimeanna 3 agus 4, beidh siad coinnithe faoi athbhreithniú mar gheall ar thuairisc an Ghrúpa Athbhreithnithe ar Ghéarohtarlanna agus, i ndiaidh tréimhse comhairlithe phoiblí, ag brath ar chinní an Choiste Feidhmiúcháin ar thodhchaí fadtéarmach seirbhísí géarotharlann. Is é trí bliana an tréimhse tógála tuartha do Chéim 3 agus ceithre bliana do Chéim 4.

Hospital Appointments: Waiting Times and Waiting Lists

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) the average waiting time in days for a hospital appointment, and (b) the number of people on a waiting list, per 100,000 of the population. (AQW 3328/01)

Ms de Brún:

- (a) Information on waiting lists and waiting times is collected on the basis of time bands. It is not possible to derive an average from this information.
- (b) In December 2001, there were 57,704 people waiting for inpatient admission to local hospitals, which equates to 3,398.8 per 100,000 of the population. At the same time, there were 131,166 people waiting for a first outpatient appointment at local hospitals, which equates to 7,725.8 per 100,000 of the population.
- (a) Bailítear eolas ar liostaí feithimh agus ar amanna feithimh de réir bandaí ama. Ní féidir an meán a áireamh ón eolas seo.
- (b) I Nollaig 2001, bhí 57,704 duine ag fanacht le dul isteach in otharlanna áitiúla mar othair chónaitheacha, is ionann sin agus 3,398.8 duine an 100,000 duine den daonra. Ag an am chéanna, bhí 131,166 duine ag fanacht ar a gcéad choinne éisothair in otharlanna áitiúla, is ionann sin agus 7,725.8 duine an 100,000 duine den daonra.

Medical Professionals

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of (a) consultants (b) GPs and (c) nurses, per 100,000 people in Northern Ireland. (AQW 3329/01)

Ms de Brún: The information is given in the table below:

Attention Deficit and Hyperactivity Disorder

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the research undertaken on the causes of Attention Deficit and Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD). (AQW 3344/01)

Ms de Brún: Neither the Research and Development Office nor the Department have funded any research into Attention Deficit and Hyperactivity Disorder.

Níor thug an Oifig Taighde agus Forbartha ná an Roinn maoiniú ar aon thaighde i leith Mí-ord Easnamh Airde Hipirghníomhaíochta.

Sure Start Programme

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) the number of current Sure Start Programmes; and (b) the number of additional Programmes which are at the planning stage. (AQW 3345/01)

Ms de Brún: There are currently 23 Sure Start programmes operating here. In July 2000, 15 Sure Start projects were approved for funding. However, as there were still some highly disadvantaged areas with no Sure Start projects, I made an additional £1.8 million available for April 2001 to allow the creation of a number of new projects. I asked the Childcare Partnerships to identify areas where they wished to see additional Sure Start projects and support applicants in those areas to submit suitable proposals. A further 8 projects were subsequently approved for funding.

The introduction of the second round of projects completed the allocation of all of the funding available for the Sure Start programme.

Faoi láthair tá 23 clár Sure Start ag obair anseo. In Iúil 2000, ceadaíodh maoiniú do 15 tionscadal Sure Start agus chuir mise £1.8 milliún breise ar fáil d'Aibreán 2001 le go mbeifí ábalta roinnt tionscadal nua a chruthú. D'iarr mé ar Chompháirtíochtaí Cúraim Leanai réimsí a aithint inár mhaith leo breis tionscadal Sure Start a fheiceáil iontu agus tacaíocht a thabhairt d'iarratasóirí sna réimsí sin chun moltaí oiriúnacha a chur ar aghaidh. Ceadaiódh maoiniú do 8 tionscadal eile ina dhiaidh sin.

Cuireadh críoch leis an leithdháileadh ar an maoiniú ar fad a bhí ar fáil don chlár Sure Start leis an dara babhta tionscadail.

Alcohol-Related Injuries

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to make a statement on the progress of the September 2000 Strategy to reduce alcohol-related injuries. (AQW 3346/01)

Ms de Brún: I refer the Member to my answer to AQW 3242/01.

Treoraím an Ball do mo fhreagra a thug mé ar AQW 3242/01.

Bed Blocking

Rev Robert Coulter asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the percentage of beds that are bed-blocked within the Health Service. (AQW 3357/01)

Ms de Brún: The information requested is not available.

Níl fáil ar an eolas a iarradh.

Speech and Language Therapy Services: Waiting List

Ms Morrice asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action is she taking to address the waiting list for speech and language therapy services in the Bangor area. (AQW 3366/01)

Ms de Brún: My Department's Priorities for Action 2002/03 requires Health and Social Services Boards and Trusts to develop the range of therapy provision to reduce waiting times for children and adult services. Some of the additional funding allocated to Boards to develop community services in 2002/03 will be available for this purpose.

In addition, a current review of the health and social services workforce is being undertaken by my Department, which will identify training, recruitment and retention issues to be addressed within the various therapeutic professions.

Éilíonn Tosaíochtaí do Ghníomh 2002/03 mo Roinnse go bhforbródh Iontaobhais agus Boird Seirbhísí Sóisialta agus Sláinte réimse soláthar teiripí do sheirbhísí daoine fásta agus leanaí. Beidh roinnt den mhaoiniú breise a leithdháileadh do Bhoird chun seirbhísí pobail a fhorbairt i 2002/03 ar fáil dó seo.

Chomh maith leis sin, tá athbhreithniú á dhéanamh faoi láthair ag mo Roinnse ar an líon lucht oibre sna seirbhísí sóisialta agus sláinte agus aithneofar ceisteanna oiliúna, earcaíochta agus coinneála nach mór a phlé laistigh de na gairmí teiripeacha.

Craigavon Area Hospital: Decompression Chamber

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline her Department's plans to modernise the decompression chamber presently situated in Craigavon Area Hospital. (AQW 3418/01)

Ms de Brún: The Craigavon Area Hospital Trust, has recently had an independent assessment of the Hyperbaric Unit carried out and is awaiting a report on the facility. My Department, in conjunction with the Southern HSS Board and Trust, will consider the findings carefully once they are available.

Bhí measúnú neamhspleách déanta ar an Aonad Hipearbarach ag Iontaobhas Otharlainne Cheantar Craigavon agus tá sé ag fanacht ar thuairisc ar an áis. Déanfaidh an Roinn s'agam i gcomhair le Bord agus le hIontaobhas SSS an Deiscirt machnamh ar na torthaí go cúramach agus iad ar fáil.

Promoting Social Inclusion Working Group

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to list the names of the current members of the PSI working group on tackling the problems of teenage parenthood. (AQW 3438/01)

Ms de Brún: The current membership of the PSI Working Group is as follows:

Child Therapists

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) the number of professional child therapists employed by the Health Boards; and (b) the average waiting time for a consultation with a therapist in each Board area. (AQW 3441/01)

Ms de Brún: Information is not available in the form requested.

Níl an t-eolas ar fáil ar an dóigh iarrtha.

Infertility Treatment

Dr Adamson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the eligibility criteria applied to the provision of infertility treatment in Northern Ireland under the recently announced interim arrangements.

(AQW 3442/01)

Ms de Brún: Eligibility criteria for the provision of sub-fertility treatment, under the interim arrangements that I announced in October 2001, are as follows:

- Couples should have no children living with them;
- Couples should have had fewer than four previous unsuccessful treatment cycles;
- The woman should be under 38 years of age; and
- There must be a medical reason for the sub-fertility, lasting for over three years.

Seo a leanas na critéir intofachta do sholáthar cóireála fothorthúlachta, faoi na socrúithe idirthréimhsiúla a d'fhógair mé i nDeireadh Fómhair 2001.

- Níor chóir do lánúineacha páistí bheith ina gcónaí leo;
- Ba chóir do lánúineacha níos lú ná ceithre shraith mírathúla cóireála bheith déanta acu roimh ré;
- Ba chóir don bhean bheith níos óige ná 38 bliain d'aois; agus
- Ní mór cúis mhíochaine bheith ann don chóireáil fhothorthúlachta, a mhaireann níos mó ná trí bliana.

Anti-Depressant Prescriptions

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) if there has been an increase since 1997 in the number of anti-depressant prescriptions; and, if so, (b) what this increase has been.

(AQW 3449/01)

Ms de Brún: I can confirm that the number of anti-depressant drugs items dispensed on Health Service prescriptions increased from 706,451 in the calendar year 1997, to 1,096,255 in 2001.

Tig liom dearbhú gur mhéadaigh líon na bhfrithdhúlagraín dáilte mar oidis na Seirbhíse Sláinte ó 706,451 sa bhliain 1997, go 1,096,255 sa bhliain 2001.

Long-term Care for the Elderly: Criteria

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what criteria are currently set in the Health Service for assessing entitlement and access to long-term care for the elderly. (AQW 3450/01)

Ms de Brún: Care and services in the community are provided to older people on the basis of an individual assessment of need. Proper assessment of need and good case management are the cornerstones of high quality care.

HSS Trusts are required, under assessment and care management arrangements, to undertake individual needs-based assessments for community care services.

Boards and Trusts are expected to set criteria which will reflect local priorities and available resources. Where the Trust has assessed a person's needs they will discuss the options available, which may involve residential or nursing home care, or domiciliary care to enable the individual to remain in their own accommodation or a similar tenure.

The assessment procedure should reflect the nature of the individuals needs so that people with complex health and social care needs, including the need for residential or nursing home care, will require a comprehensive, usually multidisciplinary assessment, whereas others may only require a prompt response to an immediate practical need. This assessment of need should take place before any decisions are taken about services.

Individuals and their carers should be involved fully in the assessment and account must be taken of their own assessment of their needs and the type of support they would prefer to receive. However, while preferences will be taken into account, it is perhaps inevitable that in some instances some people will not receive exactly the type and level of service they might wish.

Cuirtear cúram agus seirbhísí sa phobal ar fáil do dhaoine níos sine bunaithe ar mheasúnú indibhidiúil riachtanas. Is iad measúnú ceart riachtanas agus bainistiú maith cáis dúshraith cúraim d'ardchaighdeán.

Ní foláir d'Iontaobhais SSS, faoi shocruithe measúnaithe agus bainistithe cúraim, tabhairt faoi mheasúnuithe indibhidiúla bunaithe ar riachtanais do sheirbhísí cúram pobail. Táthar ag súil go leagfaidh Boird agus Iontaobhais critéir síos a bheidh ag teacht le tosaíochtaí áitiúla agus le háiseanna atá ar fáil. Nuair a bhíonn measúnú déanta ag an Iontaobhas ar riachtanais duine pléifidh siad na roghanna atá ann, d'fhéadfadh cúram teach cónaithe nó cúram teach altranais bheith i gceist ansin, nó cúram baile le cur ar chumas an duine aonair fanacht ina lóistín féin nó ina mhacasamhail de thionacht.

Ba chóir don phróiseas measúnaithe bheith ag fóirtean do chineál riachtanas an duine aonair sa dóigh go mbeidh measúnú cuimsitheach, de ghnáth measúnú ildhisciplíneach, de dhíth ar dhaoine a bhfuil riachtanais chasta sláinte agus cúraim shóisialta orthu, lena n-áirítear an gá le cúram cónaithe nó cúram teach altranais, cé nach mbeidh de dhíth ar dhaoine eile ach aisfhreagairt ghasta ar riachtanas láithreach praiticiúil. Ba chóir don mheasúnú riachtanais seo tarlú sula ndéantar socruithe ar bith faoi sheirbhísí.

Ba chóir go mbeadh aonáin agus a gcúramóirí iomlán páirteach sa mheasúnú agus ní mór a measúnú féin ar a riachtanais agus an cineál tacaíochta a b'fhearr leo a fháil a chur san áireamh. Cé go gcuirfear roghanna san áireamh, áfach, féadtar go dtarlóidh sé i gcásanna áirithe nach bhfaighidh roinnt daoine go díreach cineál agus leibhéal na seirbhíse a bhfuil siad ag dúil leo.

Diabetes

Rev Robert Coulter asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) the current statistics on the number of people suffering from diabetes; and (b) the percentage increase this represents over the last 10 years. (AQW 3470/01)

Ms de Brún: This information is not available.

Níl fáil ar an eolas a iarradh.

Autism

Rev Robert Coulter asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when will she be instituting a training programme for the early detection of autism for (a) health professionals; (b) teachers; and (c) all those in contact with young children. (AQW 3471/01)

Ms de Brún: A training programme will be developed in partnership with the Department of Education. This will also take account of the recommendations in the report of the Task Group on the Education of Children and Young People with Autism, launched by the Minister for Education on 7 May. The Department for Education has issued the report for consultation, the aim being to hold a conference for policy makers and service providers in the Autumn on implementing its recommendations.

Meanwhile, my Department is co-operating in a Department of Education project to produce an Autism awareness raising video for parents and a CDROM for teachers.

Forbrófar clár traenála i gcomhar leis an Roinn Oideachais. Cuirfidh sé san áireamh na moltaí i dtuairisc an Tascghrúpa ar Oideachas Páistí agus Ogánaigh le hUathachas, a sheol an tAire Oideachais ar an 7 Bealtaine. D'eisigh an Roinn Oideachais an Tuairisc le haghaidh comhairlithe, agus tá sé mar aidhm aici comhdháil a réachtáil do dhéantóirí polasaithe agus soláthróirí seirbhíse san Fhómhar ar a moltaí a chur i bhfeidhm.

Idir an dá linn, tá mo Roinn ag comhoibriú i dtionscadal an Bhoird Oideachais le fiseán a ardaíonn feasacht Uathachais a sholáthar do thuismitheoirí agus CD ROM do mhúinteoirí.

Smoking-Related Illness: Deaths

Mr Davis asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many deaths have occurred in the past three years, in each Health Board Area, as a result of smoking related illness or disease. (AQO 1387/01)

Ms de Brún: Estimated numbers of deaths attributable to smoking related illnesses for the years 1998, 1999 and 2000 (the latest year for which information is available) are detailed in the table below.

Hospices

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) the level of financial support provided per bed to hospices; and (b) the estimated cost to her Department of providing the same level of care under the Health Service. (AQW 3482/01)

Ms de Brún: Information on the costs of providing hospice services is not collected by my Department, as these services are provided on a voluntary basis by a number of different organisations. My Department provides funding towards the central administration costs of the NI Hospice. A grant of £109,930 has been allocated in the current financial year.

Ní bhailíonn mo Roinn eolas ar na costais a bhaineann le soláthar seirbhísí ospáise, mar go soláthraíonn roinnt eagrás éagsúil na seirbhísí seo go deonach. Tugann mo Roinn maoiniú le haghaidh costais lárnacha riaracháin Ospís TÉ. Dáileadh deontas £109,930 uirthi sa bhliain reatha airgeadais.

Hospices

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what proportion of the costs of running hospices is met by (a) grants from her Department; and (b) charitable donations. (AQW 3485/01)

Ms de Brún: I refer the Member to my response to AQW 3482/01.

Treoraím an Ball do mo fhreagra a thug mé ar AQW 3482/01.

Complaints

Mr Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of complaints currently being investigated relating to the Southern Health and Social Services Board area. (AQW 3498/01)

Ms de Brún: Information is not readily available in the form requested and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Níl eolas ar fáil go réidh san fhoirm iarrtha agus ní fhéadfaí é a fháil ach ar chostas díréireach.

Complaints Procedures

Mr Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what resources are currently made available to each Board area to service existing complaints procedures. (AQW 3499/01)

Ms de Brún: Each Board area is allocated resources to cover general administration. The amount which should be used to service the existing complaints procedures, is not specified. Under current Directions and Guidelines however, Boards are required to make the necessary arrangements to provide for the complaints procedures. This includes the appointment of complaints officers to administer the procedures and Non-Executive Directors to act as convenors at the review stage.

Dáiltear acmhainní ar gach Bordcheantar le riarachán ginearálta a chlúdach. Ní thugtar mionchuntas ar an méid a ba chóir a úsáid leis na gnáthaimh láithreacha ghearán a fheidhmiú. Faoi Threoracha agus Threoirilínte i láthair na huaire áfach, tá ar Bhoird na socrúithe riachtanacha a dhéanamh leis na gnáthaimh ghearán a fheidhmiú. Cuimsíonn siad seo ceapadh oifigeach gearán leis an gnáthaimh a riar agus ceapadh Stiúrthóirí Neamh-Fheidhmeannacha le hoibriú mar thionólaithe ag an chéim athbhreithnithe.

Occupational Therapy

Mr Bradley asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) the number of outstanding assessments the Occupational Therapy Department at Daisy Hill Hospital, Newry currently have on their waiting list; and (b) the earliest referral date relating to a case on the outstanding list. (AQW 3501/01)

Ms de Brún: There are 149 people currently on the occupational therapy general community waiting list at Daisy Hill Hospital. Newry and Mourne Health and Social Services Trust has indicated that the earliest referral date on the waiting list is 7 March 2002.

Tá 149 duine ar liosta feithimh teiripe saothair an phobail ghinearálta ag Otharlann Daisy Hill faoi láthair. Thug Iontaobhas SSS an Iúir agus Mhúrn le fios gurb é 7 Márta 2002 an dáta atreoirithe is luaithe ar an liosta feithimh.

Diabetes

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people have been diagnosed with diabetes in each of the last 5 years per age group (i) 10-20 years; (ii) 20-40 years; and (iii) 40+ years. (AQW 3502/01)

Ms de Brún: The information requested is not available.

Diabetes

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the expenditure for those diagnosed as having diabetes, who have attended

(a) health centres; (b) clinics; and (c) hospitals in each of the last 5 years. (AQW 3505/01)

Ms de Brún: The information requested is not available.

Níl fáil ar an eolas a iarradh.

Her Majesty The Queen's Golden Jubilee

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) any plans she has to celebrate the Queen's Golden Jubilee; and (b) what measures she has put in place to ensure staff from her Department can celebrate this event. (AQW 3517/01)

Ms de Brún:

(a) I have no plans to celebrate this event.

(b) All Departments, including DHSSPS, have been awarded the additional Bank Holiday set for Monday 3 June.

(a) Níl aon phleananna agam chun an imeacht seo a cheiliúradh.

(b) Tá an tSaoire Baine breise atá leagha amach don Luan 3 Meitheamh tugtha do gach Roinn lena n-áirítear an DHSSPS.

Counselling: Funding

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) the total amount of funding currently provided for counselling services; and (b) the projects that receive such funding. (AQW 3519/01)

Ms de Brún: This information is not collected centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Ní chruinnítear an t-eolas seo go lárnach agus níorbh fhéidir é a fháil ach ar chostas díréireach.

Patients: Waiting Lists

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of patients waiting 13 weeks or more to see a consultant on (a) 31 March 2002; and (b) 31 March 1997. (AQW 3520/01)

Ms de Brún: Information on patients waiting for first outpatient appointments is collected on the basis of 3 monthly intervals. At 31 December 2001 (the latest date for which information is currently available) there were 73,298 people waiting for first outpatient appointment for 3 months or more. At 31 March 1997, the figure was 21,801.

Bailítear eolas ar othair ag fanacht ar a gcéad choinní éisothair gach ráithe. Ar 31 Nollaig 2001 (an dáta is déanaí a bhfuil eolas ar fáil faoi láthair) bhí 73,298 duine ann ag fanacht ar a gcéad choinne éisothair ar feadh 3 mí nó níos faide. Ar 31 Márta 1997, 21,801 duine ba ea an figiúr.

Cancelled Operations

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many cancelled operations there were in the last calendar year. (AQW 3521/01)

Ms de Brún: Information is not readily available in the form requested and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Níl eolas ar fáil go réidh san fhoirm iarrtha agus ní fhéadfaí é a fháil ach ar chostas díréireach.

Children for Adoption

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety the number of children under the age of one year placed for adoption for each of the last 5 years. (AQW 3527/01)

Ms de Brún: There were 19 children under the age of one year placed for adoption in the financial year 2001-2002, 15 in 2000-2001, 15 in 1999-2000, 5 in 1998-1999 and 9 in 1997-1998.

Bhí 19 páiste faoi aon bhliain d'aois curtha ar an chlár le haghaidh uchtaithe sa bhliain airgeadais 2001-2002, 15 i 2000-2001, 15 i 1999-2000, 5 i 1998-1999 agus 9 i 1997-1998.

Complaints Procedure

Mr Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the procedure presently adopted when a complaint is received. (AQW 3532/01)

Ms de Brún: The current HPSS Complaints Procedures are set out in The Health and Personal Social Services Complaints Procedures Directions (Northern Ireland) 1996 and in "Complaints Listening...Acting...Improving: Guidance on Implementation of the HPSS Complaints Procedure March 1996 and Guidance on Handling HPSS Complaints April 2000. Under these procedures service users are encouraged to make a complaint to the staff in the Trust or GP Practice dealing directly with them. All written complaints must receive a substantive written reply from the Trust's Chief Executive within 20 days or from the GP Practice within 10 days.

If the complainant is still dissatisfied, he/she may ask for a review of the complaint by an Independent Review Panel. The Board convenor will decide if a review is warranted and if so, an independent lay panel will be appointed to investigate the complaint. Independent clinical assessors assist panels in the investigation of clinical matters. A complainant who remains dissatisfied with the outcome of the review can take the complaint to the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints (the Ombudsman).

Tá Gnáthaimh láithreacha Ghearán na SSSP leagtha amach i The Health and Personal Social Services Complaints Procedures Directions (Northern Ireland) 1996 and in "Complaints Listening...Acting...Improving: Guidance on Implementation of the HPSS Complaints Procedure March 1996 and Guidance on Handling HPSS Complaints April 2000. Faoi na gnáthaimh seo moltar d'úsáideoirí seirbhísí gearán a dhéanamh leis an fhoireann san Iontaobhas nó sa Chleachtadh GD atá ag déileáil go díreach leo. Ní mór do Phríomh-Fheidhmeannach an Iontaobhais nó don Chleachtadh GD freagra mion scríofa a thabhairt do gach uile ghearán scríofa laistigh de 20 lá, agus laistigh de 10 lá faoi seach.

Muna bhfuil an gearánaí sásta go fóill, is féidir leis/léi iarraidh go ndéanfaidh Painéal Neamhspleách Athbhreithnithe athbhreithniú ar an ggearán. Cinnfidh tionólaí an Bhoird má bhíonn athbhreithniú de dhíth agus má bhíonn, ceapfar painéal neamhspleách tuata leis an ggearán a fhiosrú. Cuidíonn measúnóirí neamhspleacha clínicíúla le painéil i bhfiosrú cúrsaí clínicíúla. Is féidir le gearánaí nach bhfuil sásta go fóill i ndiaidh toradh an athbhreithnithe an gearán a dhéanamh le Coimsinéir Thuaisceart Éireann um Ghearáin (Cosantóir an Phobail).

Complaints Investigations

Mr Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of staff dedicated to investigating complaints in the Southern Health and Social Services Board area. (AQW 3533/01)

Ms de Brún: The following staff are employed in investigating complaints. The whole time equivalent (wte)¹ is shown against each entry as some staff have other duties as well. In addition each of the Trusts listed below will have administrative and secretarial staff who, as part of their duties, will undertake tasks related to the investigation of complaints.

Pay Awards: Health Service Staff

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, following the pay deal announcement for NHS staff in England on 9 May 2002, what plans does she have to keep salaries of Health Service staff in Northern Ireland in line with their counterparts in England. (AQW 3555/01)

Ms de Brún: Pay awards from 1 April 2002 announced for NHS staff will be awarded to similar groups of staff employed in the Health and Personal Social Services.

Bronnfar duaiseanna pá ó 1 Aibreán 2002 a fôgraíodh le haghaidh fhoireann na SSN ar ghrúpaí den chineál céanna foirne fostaithe sna Seirbhísí Sláinte agus Sóisialta Pearsanta.

North Belfast: Injuries

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) the number of people injured in riots in North Belfast since 1 January 2002 that were treated in Hospital Accident and Emergency Departments; (b) the number who required in-patient treatment; (c) the number who required beds in High Dependency Units; (d) the number who required beds in Intensive Care Units; and (e) the financial cost of treating these patients. (AQW 3556/01)

Ms de Brún: The information requested is not available.

Níl fáil ar an eolas a iarradh.

Major Acute Hospitals

Mr O'Neill asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is the optimum population figure that is required for a major acute hospital in Northern Ireland to ensure the most efficient and effective use of staff and capital resources. (AQO 1370/01)

Ms de Brún: There is no specified population figure that can be regarded as the optimum for a major acute hospital and the Acute Hospitals Review Group did not recommend a specific catchment size. In England, some professional bodies have recommended between 450,000 and 500,000 to provide a full range of facilities and acute specialities, although they recognise that, in practice, most acute hospitals will continue to serve populations of around 200,00 – 300, 000. In planning acute services, other issues would need to be taken into account, including the needs and circumstances of rural populations.

Níl aon fhigiúr sonraithe daonra is féidir a mheas ina uasfhigiúr do mhór-ospidéal géarchúraim, agus níor mhol Grúpa Athbhreithnithe na-Ospidéal Géarchúraim méid ceantair sonrach. I Sasana, mhol roinnt foras gairimiúil daonra idir 450,000 agus 500,000 le réimse iomlán áiseanna agus speisialtóireachtaí géarchúraim a sholáthar, cé go n-aithníonn siad, dáiríre, go bhfreastalaíonn ospidéal ghéarchúraim ar dhaonraí de thart ar 200,000 agus 300,000. Agus seirbhísí géarchúraim á bpleanáil, caithfidh ceisteanna eile a chur san áireamh, lena n-áirítear riachtanais agus cúinsí daonraí tuaithe.

Timescale for Answers

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to advise on the timescale for the receipt of answers to AQW 2344/01 and AQW 2345/01 which were due for answer on 13 March 2002.

(AQW 3584/01)

Ms de Brún: The Answers to the Questions referred to were issued on Tuesday 14 May.

Eisíodh freagraí na gCeisteanna ar tagraíodh dóibh Dé Máirt 14 Bealtaine.

Residential Homes

Mr Gibson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of beds for elderly people in residential homes in (a) May 1997; and (b) April 2002.

(AQW 3585/01)

Ms de Brún: Information is available on the average number of places in residential homes for elderly people at 31 March 1997 and 31 March 2001 (the latest date for which information is available) and is detailed in the table below.

Laser Therapy

Mr Gibson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action she is taking to promote the use of laser therapy to assist smoking cessation.

(AQW 3586/01)

Ms de Brún: None. The most recent available research found no clear evidence that laser therapy was effective as an aid to smoking cessation.

Cruthúnas ar bith. Fuair amach an taighde is déanaí atá ar fáil nach raibh cruthúnas soiléir ann go raibh teiripe léasair éifeachtach mar áis le héirí as caitheamh tobac.

Cancelled Operations

Mr Gibson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many operations were cancelled in the last financial year.

(AQW 3588/01)

Ms de Brún: Information is not readily available in the form requested and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Níl eolas ar fáil go réidh san fhoirm iarrtha agus ní fhéadfaí é a fháil ach ar chostas díréireach.

Consultants

Mr Gibson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many consultants were working in the Health Service in 1997, and what is the current figure.

(AQW 3589/01)

Ms de Brún: The information is given in the table below:

Chronic Fatigue Syndrome/ME

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of (a) adults and (b) children being treated for Chronic Fatigue Syndrome/ME.

(AQW 3611/01)

Ms de Brún: Information is not available in the form requested.

Níl an t-eolas ar fáil ar an dóigh iarrtha.

Fire Brigade

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) the number of permanent posts for the Control Room of the Fire Brigade advertised recently; (b) the number of applicants for these posts; (c)

if any additional marks are allocated to temporary staff applying for these posts. (AQW 3673/01)

Ms de Brún: The Fire Authority received 591 applications to its advertisement to fill twelve vacancies in the Control Room. Of these applications, 516 candidates were shortlisted for assessment and 156 candidates called for interview.

Candidates' suitability for the posts will be determined by the assessment of their application and at interview. No additional marks will be allocated to any of the current temporary staff applying for the posts.

Fuair an tÚdarás Dóiteáin 591 iarratas tar éis a fhógra chun dhá fholúntas déag a líonadh sa Seomra Rialaithe. As na hiarratais sin cuireadh 516 ar ghearrliosta le measúnú agus glaoth ar 156 iarrthóir chuig agallamh.

Cinnfear oiriúnacht iarrthóirí le aghaidh na bpost trí mheasúnú ar a n-iarratais agus ag agallamh. Ní leithdháilfear aon mharcanna breise chuig aon fhoireann shealadach reatha a bheidh ag déanamh iarratais ar na postanna.

Arson Awareness Dogs

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) if a request was made for the deployment of arson awareness dogs at a recent bonfire incident in Ballymena; and (b) if the dogs were available. (AQW 3675/01)

Ms de Brún: A request was made to the Control Room for the deployment of a Hydrocarbon Detector Dog to an incident at a bonfire in Ballymena on 11 May. Unfortunately the dog handler was unavailable due to illness.

Rinneadh iarratas chuig an Seomra Rialaithe chun Madra Aimsithe Hidreacarbóin a chur chuig eachtra tine chnámh ag an Baile Meánach an 11 Bealtaine. Ní raibh láimhseálaí an mhadra faraor ar fáil de bharr breoiteachta.

Review of Community Care

Mr J Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, following the publication of the report of the first phase of the Review of Community Care, how does she propose to monitor the development of multi-disciplinary teams to provide community care services. (AQO 1401/01)

Ms de Brún: The 'First Report' of the Review of Community Care identified a number of innovative schemes and practices which will help Trusts to develop local solutions to the pressures they are experiencing.

My Department is now consulting with the Health and Social Services Boards on how best the recommendations can be implemented. Implementation plans will include a monitoring and reporting process which will allow my Department to satisfy itself not only that recommendations are being taken forward but that they are achieving the required results.

D'aithin 'Chéad Tuairisc' an Athbhreithnithe ar Chúram Pobail scéimeanna agus cleachtais nuálacha a chuideoidh le hIontaobhais teacht ar réitigh áitiúla ar na brúnna a bhfuil siad fúthu.

Faoi láthair, tá mo Roinn i gcomhchomhairle leis na Boird Sláinte agus Seirbhísí Sóisialta faoi conas is fearr na moltaí a chur i bhfeidhm. Ar na pleananna forfheidhmithe beidh próiseas monatóireachta agus tuairiscithe a shásóidh mo Roinn go bhfuil na moltaí á gcur i bhfeidhm agus go bhfuil siad ag baint amach na dtorthaí a theastaíonn fosta.

Attacks on Staff

Mr C Murphy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what measures are being taken to tackle the problem of attacks upon health and social services staff. (AQO 1404/01)

Ms de Brún: The health and safety of staff employed in the HPSS is an important issue which I take very seriously. Protection of staff is a matter for individual employers and they are required by my Department to have policies in place to deal with abuse and violence.

To assist them my Department has issued a number of documents containing guidance on dealing with violence. These include the NHS Zero Tolerance Resource Pack, which was commended to all. Some HPSS employers have already put a number of security measures in place to improve safety. A working group comprising representatives from Trusts and Staff Side organisations has been established to review current guidance and consider the issue of further best practice guidance.

Is tábhachtach liom sláinte agus sábháilteacht na foirne sna Seirbhísí Sláinte Sóisialta agus Pearsanta. Tá cosaint a chuid foirne faoi chúram gach fostóir, agus éilíonn mo Roinn ar fhóistóirí polasaithe a bheith i bhfeidhm acu le déileáil le droch-íde agus le foréigean.

D'eisigh mo Roinn cáipéisí ina bhfuil treoir ar conas déileáil le foréigean le cuidiú leo, agus bunaíodh grúpa oibre ar a bhfuil ionadaithe ó Iontaobhais agus ó eagraíochtaí Foirne le treoir reatha a athbhreithniú agus le breis teorach den chleachtas is fearr a bhreithniú.

Waiting List: Heart Surgery

Mr Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of patients waiting for major heart surgery in both the Southern and Western Health and Social Services Board areas.

(AQO 1389/01)

Ms de Brún: As of 30 March 2002, there were 100 patients from the Southern Health and Social Services

Board and 73 patients from the Western Health and Social Services Board on the waiting list for cardiac surgery.

Ar 30 Márta 2002, bhí 100 othar ó Bhord Sláinte agus Seirbhísí Sóisialta an Deiscirt agus 73 othar ó Bhord Sláinte agus Seirbhísí Sóisialta an Iarthair ar liosta feithimh do mháinliacht chardiach.

Waiting Lists

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many specialities are currently not accepting referrals for waiting lists.

(AQO 1386/01)

Ms de Brún: Two specialities are currently not accepting routine GP referrals for waiting lists - Child and Adolescent Psychiatry at the Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children, and Rheumatology at United Hospitals Trust. These specialities are, however, continuing to accept referrals for urgent and emergency cases.

Faoi láthair, tá dhá speisialtóireacht ann nach bhfuil ag glacadh le gnáthchoinní othar ó liachleachtóirí do liostaí feithimh — Síciatracht Leanaí agus Ógánach ag Ospidéal Ríoga Bhéal Feirste do Leanaí Breoite agus Réamaiteolaíocht in Iontaobhas na n-Ospidéal Aontaithe. Tá na speisialtóireachtaí seo, áfach, ag glacadh le coinní ó Ghnáthdhochtúirí i gcásanna práinne agus éigeandála.

Diagnoses in Utero

Dr Adamson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety which illnesses and disabilities can be diagnosed whilst the child is in utero.

(AQO 1377/01)

Ms de Brún: The main conditions that can be diagnosed in utero are Downs syndrome, neural tube defects and other foetal anomalies such as lesions of the heart, kidneys and abdominal wall. It is also possible to detect some conditions that have a genetic link, for example, cystic fibrosis.

Is iad na príomhriochtaí is féidir a fháthmheas sa bhroinn Siondróim Down, éalanga feadáin néaraigh agus aimhrialtachtaí eile féatais ar nós loit an chroí, an duáin agus bhalla an bhoilg. Is féidir fosta riochtaí a bhfuil nasc géiniteach ag baint leo a aimsiú, an fhiobróis chisteach mar shampla.

New Primary Care Arrangements

Mr Neeson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what progress has been made since 1 April 2002 in implementing the new primary care arrangements.

(AQO 1376/01)

Ms de Brún: The new arrangements in primary care involve the setting up of 15 Local Health and Social Care Groups. The new Groups will be run by Management Boards made up of primary care professionals, community and service users, as well as representatives from Health and Social Services Boards and Trusts. Since the 1 April 2002, a great deal of work has gone into the recruitment and selection process which has resulted in suitable candidates being identified for almost half of the 270 Management Board positions. Efforts are continuing to fill the remaining vacancies. Meantime, work is continuing to ensure that the new Groups become operational as soon as possible.

Baineann na socruithe nua sa chúram phríomhúil le bunú 15 Grúpa Áitiúil Sláinte agus Cúraim Shóisialta. Déanfaidh Boird Bhainistíochta, ar a mbeidh gairmithe cúraim phríomhúil, úsáideoirí seirbhíse agus pobail chomh maith le hionadaithe ó na Boird agus na hIontaobhais Sláinte agus Seirbhísí Sóisialta na grúpaí nua a bhainistiú. Ó 1 Aibreán 2002 i leith, rinneadh go leor oibre ag earcú agus ag roghnú iarrthóirí oiriúnacha do bheagnach leath den 270 post ar na Boird Bhainistíochta. Táthar ag iarraidh na folúntais eile a líonadh. Idir an dá linn, táthar ag obair ar an chúlraid lena chinntiú go mbeidh na Grúpaí nua ag feidhmiú a luaithe is féidir.

Acute Services: Tyrone County Hospital

Mr Byrne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if she will give a commitment that acute services in the Tyrone County Hospital will not be allowed to deteriorate in advance of her decision on the recommendations of the Hayes review on acute services.

(AQO 1395/01)

Ms de Brún: No decisions have yet been taken on the way forward on the Acute Hospitals Review, including the Tyrone County Hospital. Until longer-term decisions have been made, I will expect Boards and Trusts to make every effort to maintain existing services. My officials are working closely with the Board and Trust to assist them in sustaining services in the Tyrone County Hospital and the position is being closely monitored.

Níor glacadh cinntí ar bith go fóill ar an bhealach chun tosaigh ar an Aithbhreithniú ar Ghéarospidéal, lena n-áirítear Ospidéal Chondae Thír Eoghain. Go dtí go nglacfar cinntí fadtréimhseacha, beidh mé ag súil le Boird agus le hIontaobhais a ndícheall a dhéanamh leis na seirbhísí atá ann cheana a choinneáil. Tá mo chuid feidhmeannach ag obair go dlúth leis an Bhord agus leis an Iontaobhas ag cuidiú leo seirbhísí in Ospidéal Chondae Thír Eoghain a choinneáil agus tá monatóireacht ghéar á déanamh ar chúrsaí.

Eastern Multifund

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant AQW 2927/01, how many staff working within the Eastern Multifund have been offered new positions. (AQO 1383/01)

Ms de Brún: The Department does not have a record of the number of staff who have been offered new positions in the Health and Personal Social Services. I understand, however, that to date one member of staff previously employed within the Eastern Multifund has taken up a new position within the HPSS.

Níl taifead ag an Roinn ar an líon foirne ar tairgeadh poist nua dóibh sna Seirbhísí Sláinte, Sóisialta agus Pearsanta. Tuigim, áfach, gur ghlac ball foirne amháin, a ba ghnáth leis oibriú in Iolchiste an Oirthir, post nua sna Seirbhísí Sláinte, Sóisialta agus Pearsanta.

“Managing your Medicines” Scheme

Mr Maskey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how is she encouraging community pharmacies to participate in the “Managing your Medicines” scheme. (AQO 1405/01)

Ms de Brún: My Department’s Chief Pharmaceutical Officer has promoted this initiative and engaged the active support of the Directors of Pharmaceutical Services in each of the four Health and Social Services Boards to develop this service for patients. I have set ‘Priorities for Action’ targets for the Boards of 20% of pharmacies delivering this service in 2001/02 and 30% in 2002/03, and these are being achieved.

Chuir Príomhoifigeach Cogaisíochta mo Roinnse an tionscnamh seo chun cinn agus bhain sé tacaíocht ghníomhach Stiúrthóirí na Seirbhísí Cogaisíochta amach i ngach ceann de na Boird Seirbhísí Sóisialta agus Sláinte chun an tseirbhís seo a fhorbairt d’othair. Tá spriocanna ‘Tosaíochtaí do Ghníomh’ leagtha amach agam do na boird go mbeadh 20% de chogasalanna ag soláthar na seirbhíse i 2001/02 agus 30% i 2002/03 agus tá siad sin á mbaint amach.

Measles, Mumps and Rubella Immunisation

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether or not there has been a significant reduction in the number of children receiving “MMR” immunisation. (AQO 1402/01)

Ms de Brún: There has not been a significant reduction in the numbers vaccinated. In 1995/96, 22,500 children received MMR vaccination by age two. In 2000/01 the number vaccinated was 21,500. However, there was a reduction of almost 1000 in the number of children eligible to receive the MMR vaccination over that period.

Níor tháinig laghdú suntasach ar an líon leanaí atá á vacsaíniú. I 1995/96, fuair 22,500 (fiche is a dó míle cúig chéad) leanbh vacsaín MMR faoi aois a dhá mbliain; i 2000/01, vacsaíníodh 21,500 (fiche is a haon míle cúig chéad). Bhí laghdú, áfach, de bheagnach 1,000 ar an líon leanbh a bhí i dteideal an vacsaín MMR a fháil thar an tréimhse sin.

Personal Care in Nursing Homes

Rev Robert Coulter asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to provide a breakdown of the cost per person for personal care in nursing homes. (AQO 1388/01)

Ms de Brún: The information requested is not available.

The Interdepartmental Group on Personal Care set up by the Executive to examine the costs and implications of introducing free personal care is working to establish a detailed breakdown of care costs and is to report to the Executive by the end of June 2002.

Níl an t-eolas a hiarradh ar fáil.

Tá an Grúpa Idir-Rannach ar Chúram Pearsanta a bhunaigh an Coiste Feidhmiúcháin le scrúdú a dhéanamh ar chostas agus ar na himpleachtaí a bhaineann le cúram pearsanta saor in aisce ag obair le briseadh síos sonrach a fháil ar chostas cúraim, agus tá sé le tuairisciú don Choiste Feidhmiúcháin faoi dheireadh mhí an Mheithimh 2002.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Roads Service Depots

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the budgets and expenditure of all Roads Service Depots for (a) road repairs; and (b) road maintenance. (AQW 3204/01)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr P Robinson): My Department’s Roads Service does not retain information of expenditure on road maintenance on a depot basis. The funds available for road maintenance are allocated to the 4 Roads Service Divisions who, in turn, apportion their budgets on the basis of need across district council areas. The attached table details the expenditure incurred by Road Service on a district council basis for road repairs and total road maintenance for the 2000/2001 financial year.

Tourist Attractions: Road Signage

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Regional Development pursuant to AQW 2882/01, and in regard to road signage to tourist attractions and facilities, to detail the criteria used to reference visitor numbers and road classification. (AQW 3240/01)

Mr P Robinson: Under current policy agreed between my Department's Roads Service and the Northern Ireland Tourist Board provides that tourist signs may be provided as follows:

- on motorways for attractions that draw more than 75,000 visitors per annum (up to a maximum of 20 miles from attractions);
- on primary routes (ie roads having green direction signs) for attractions that draw more than 20,000 visitors per annum up to a maximum of 20 miles from attractions;
- on nearest main roads (ie, A or B class roads) for attractions drawing less than 20,000 visitors per annum; and
- on nearest main roads (ie, A and B class roads) for tourist accommodation in rural areas (ie, on roads where the national speed limit applies) up to a maximum of 5 miles from the accommodation. Such signing is not permitted from motorways.

The current policy also provides that:

- where clear directions are given to destinations or areas by existing traffic signs, tourist signs to attractions are not necessary until the general destinations or areas are reached;
- tourist attractions and accommodation must be approved by the Northern Ireland Tourist Board; and
- signs to tourist accommodation in urban areas are not permitted.

As I indicated in my answer to your earlier Written Assembly Question a review of the policy on the provision of tourist signs is currently under way and is being led by the Northern Ireland Tourist Board.

Metered Water

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (a) financial receipts from those customers who pay for water supplied by his Department; (b) such receipts; and (c) the cost of collecting such receipts. (AQW 3323/01)

Mr P Robinson: Total income from metered water customers amounts to some £35 million per annum. Unfortunately, the existing IT system used for billing metered water customers does not enable this income to be broken down by the various categories of customer, and the information could only be obtained manually at disproportionate cost. However, the upgrading of the IT system, which is to be carried out next year, will enable such information to be provided.

The cost of collecting metered water receipts in the 2000/2001 financial year was just over £2.5 million.

Water Quality: Rivers and Lakes

Mr J Wilson asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (a) his present and proposed financial commitment for measures aimed at reducing pollution in rivers and lakes and (b) the nature of such measures. (AQW 3326/01)

Mr P Robinson: My Department's Water Service needs to make substantial investment across a wide range of infrastructure improvements. Protecting water quality in rivers and lakes is seen as a high priority to be met as soon as practical within available resources.

While my first priority remains the provision of highest standards of public health protection by upgrading Water Treatment Works, my Department is now also able to programme significant investment in Waste Water Treatment Works upgrading to meet higher standards of effluent discharges. Over the next five years expenditure totaling over £160 million has been programmed to upgrade 180 Waste Water Treatment Works across Northern Ireland.

In the longer term improvements to sewerage networks are also planned across all areas, particularly with regard to the retention and control of storm water which presently discharges to rivers during heavy rainfall. A major investment programme totaling £100 million between 2004 and 2009 is planned to improve storm water retention and management in Belfast. This will be followed by progressive sewerage networks improvements across all areas. Expenditure of up to £40 million per year is envisaged with resourcing commitment likely from 2008 onwards. The programme of sewerage networks upgrading is seen as a priority for advancement if additional funding can be secured.

Sewage Treatment Works: Ballyclare

Mr J Wilson asked the Minister for Regional Development when will work designed to enhance the Ballyclare Sewage Treatment Works and the sewerage infrastructure in the Ballyclare area commence. (AQW 3334/01)

Mr P Robinson: Water Service proposes to construct a new Wastewater Treatment Works on the site of the existing Works at Ballyclare. Discussions with other statutory bodies on issues influencing the detailed design of the Works have taken longer than anticipated. An application for outline planning approval was submitted to Planning Service in February 2002, and initial work has commenced on the procurement procedures with the publication of a Notice in the EC Journal. Water Service will shortly be inviting applications for a Restricted List of contractors who will be invited to tender for the project later this year. Construction is now expected to commence in April 2003 and will take 18 months to complete at a cost of over £5 million. Improvements, costing some £1 million, will be made to the sewerage system in Ballyclare at the same time.

Cost of Providing Water

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (a) the present annual cost of delivering water to Northern Ireland customers; and (b) a breakdown of these costs. (AQW 3347/01)

Mr P Robinson: The cost of providing water to customers in the 2000/2001 financial year, on an accrual accounting basis, was £109 million. This figure excludes the cost of capital expenditure. The breakdown of these costs is as follows:

Item	£ million
Staff and related costs	31
Operating costs including power, rates, materials and consumables	39
Depreciation of assets & loan	39
Charges	109

Roads: South Down

Mr McGrady asked the Minister for Regional Development when will funding be provided for the substantial improvement of the roads network in South Down; and to make a statement. (AQW 3348/01)

Mr P Robinson: In recent years, my Department's Roads Service has invested significant resources in the improvement of roads in the South Down area. Expenditure has, with the agreement of Down District Council, largely been concentrated on the improvement of main routes, particularly the A7 linking Downpatrick with Belfast, which was identified as a Link Corridor in my Department's Regional Development Strategy. Investment has also extended to the introduction of a new ferry on the Strangford to Portaferry ferry service which provides an important link in the roads network of the area.

As you will be aware, Roads Service has been engaged in consultation as part of the ongoing preparation work on the 10-Year Forward Planning Schedule of major road schemes, which it is expected could be started within the 10-year period of the Department's Regional Transportation Strategy. Until work on the Schedule is complete, I am unable to detail the potential schemes that are likely to be carried out in the South Down area. I hope, however, to be in a position to publish the Forward Planning Schedule later this year, following publication of the Regional Transportation Strategy.

Flooding

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline (a) those areas that are prone to flooding;

(b) the assessment which has been made of such areas; (c) any steps being taken in regard to flood prevention; and (d) to state the financial cost of such. (AQW 3403/01)

Mr P Robinson: A number of factors influence whether or not particular areas are prone to flooding arising from the sewerage system. These factors include the intensity and duration of rainfall, and the capacity, condition and operational effectiveness of the sewerage system. Water Service does not have a definitive list of all areas in Northern Ireland, which are prone to flooding. It is of course aware of those areas where flooding has occurred in the past. Many of the incidents of severe flooding were directly attributable to the lack of capacity in the sewerage infrastructure arising from the under-investment over many years.

Water Service is currently carrying out detailed studies on 105 drainage areas across Northern Ireland. These studies are examining the condition and effectiveness of the current sewerage systems, and will result in recommendations for upgrading the sewerage systems to meet future capacity and environmental requirements. These improvements will considerably reduce the risk of flooding from the sewerage system in future. The studies will be completed by 2004, and the total capital investment required for the upgrading work is expected to be in excess of £300 million. Given current funding levels, it is unlikely that the entire programme of improvements will be completed this decade. However the major upgrade of the Belfast sewerage system, costing some £100 million, is programmed to commence in late 2004.

Pending the commencement of this major programme of upgrading the sewerage systems, I was able to secure £5.5 million of Executive Programme Funds for investment over a three period in interim flood prevention schemes in particular areas which been subjected to repeated flooding in the past. To date, approximately £1.2 million has been invested on these interim measures, mainly in the Greater Belfast area. Work is presently ongoing or has been completed at more than 25 locations in the Greater Belfast area. These include Brentwood Park, Carrington Street, Southview Cottages, Cooldaragh Park and Kings Avenue in Belfast; Doagh Road in Newtownabbey; Marine Parade in Whitehead; Sunnylands and Ransyven Park in Carrickfergus; and Mountpleasant and Lenamore Park in Jordanstown. At Carrington Street a pumped relief overflow was provided last year at a cost of £286,000 and work at the River Terrace Pumping Station and Balfour Avenue should be completed by November 2002. Contractors are on site, or are about to commence work, in a number of other locations in Belfast including Cavendish Street, Oldpark Road, Divismore Park, Somerton Road, Premier Drive and Camberwell Terrace. In addition there are many other locations where remedial work is planned including Cambrai Street, Barnett's Road and Woodland Grange in Belfast, and Joymount in Carrickfergus.

There are also a number of major schemes outside of the Greater Belfast area which are ongoing or have been completed. Expenditure on these schemes is additional to the Executive Programme Funds. Work in Ballycastle at Moyle Road, Fairhead View and Clare Road was completed in March 2002 at a cost of £505,000. A sewer study scheme is programmed to commence in Cookstown at a cost of £675,000. Flood alleviation schemes are planned for Aldergrove, at a cost of £115,000 and at Bushmills Road in Portrush, at an estimated cost of £105,000. Work at Moneygran Road, Kilrea, is due to commence in the summer of 2002, with further work scheduled in association with Roads Service. In the Southern and Western areas, £150,000 will be spent on flood relief schemes this year, and another 13 schemes have been identified for remedial works in the future at a cost of £450,000.

Water Charging Policy

Mr Wells asked the Minister for Regional Development how many farmers benefited as a result of the decision by the Water Service to abolish standing charges for low volume water consumers. (AQW 3404/01)

Mr P Robinson: In April 2001, my predecessor, Gregory Campbell, announced changes to the Department's metered water charging policy, which exempted certain classes of customers served by a supply pipe of 20 millimetres diameter or less from standing charges.

Some 16,400 farmers have benefited from this change in charging policy and no longer pay any charges for their metered water supply. This represents some 35% of all farmers who have a metered water supply.

Sewerage: Crawfordsburn Village

Mr McFarland asked the Minister for Regional Development what is his assessment of the effectiveness of the sewerage system in Crawfordsburn Village, following the recent installation of new pipework. (AQW 3405/01)

Mr P Robinson: The replacement of the sewer through Crawfordsburn Village was completed last December. The new sewer is operating satisfactorily. Several low lying properties in the village cannot be connected to the new sewer until a small pumping station is constructed. Negotiations for the acquisition of the proposed site for the pumping station are continuing.

In the interim, Water Service is continuing to use a tanker to remove the wastewater from these properties.

Traffic Calming

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the amount spent to date in Fermanagh

District Council area on the following traffic calming measures (a) speed cushions; and (b) 20 mph zone gateways. (AQW 3644/01)

Mr P Robinson: My Department's Roads Service has invested some £370,000 in the Fermanagh District Council area over the past 5 years on traffic calming schemes at Maguiresbridge, Newtownbutler, Lisnaskea, Derrylin, Kesh and Derrygonnelly. A number of site specific traffic calming measures were provided as part of these schemes including, mini-roundabouts, central hatching, pedestrian refuges, speed cushions and gateway signs.

Only the traffic calming scheme for Kesh village, completed during the 1999/2000 year, incorporates speed cushions, which are located on the Crevenish Road. The total cost of this scheme was £101,000. The speed cushions element cost approximately £5,000.

Presently, there are no 20-mph zone gateways in the Fermanagh District Council area. However, in the current financial year, Roads Service plans to implement a 20-mph zone as one of the measures included in the proposed traffic calming scheme for the Derrin Road, Loughview Drive, and Corban Avenue area of Enniskillen. The public consultation on these proposed traffic calming measures is expected to commence by July of this year.

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Housing Executive Properties: "Peace Lines"

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Social Development how many Housing Executive properties are currently vacant along the so-called 'Peace Lines'. (AQW 3458/01)

The Minister for Social Development (Mr Dodds): There are currently 135 vacant Housing Executive properties situated at 'Peace Lines'. Of these 127 are in Belfast and 8 in Portadown.

Housing Associations

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development what action Housing Associations are taking to provide more housing in the Ards Borough area. (AQW 3467/01)

Mr Dodds: The published new build housing programme for the Borough is detailed in the table below. Housing associations currently have 15 new homes under construction and plan a further 57 over the 3-year period 2002/2003 to 2004/2005.

The annual review of the Housing Associations programme is due to take place in December. This will afford an opportunity to look afresh at the waiting list information and to reprioritise the new build programme as appropriate.

PROVISION OF SOCIAL HOUSING – ARDS BOROUGH COUNCIL AREA

Year	Location	Units	Type of Housing
Currently on site	Weir Court, Comber	11	Elderly
	Mill Street, Newtownards	4	Young People at risk
2002/03	Landsowne Gardens, Newtownards	3	Learning Disabilities

Grounds Maintenance Contractors: Carrickfergus

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 3117/01, what work has been carried out by the Grounds Maintenance Contractors in the Carrickfergus area for the last 3 months.

(AQW 3507/01)

Mr Dodds: In the last 3 months, the Housing Executive's Grounds Maintenance Contractors have carried out the following work in the Carrickfergus area:

- The completion of cutting shrub beds throughout the Carrickfergus estates.
- Formal grass cutting, which started on 1 April 2002.
- Regular litter removal from grass areas, shrub beds, rough grass and the base of hedges.
- The application of pesticide to shrub beds.
- Tree removal and pruning.
- The cleaning of culverts and water-courses.

Internal Promotions

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 3180/01, to detail the criteria used for internal promotions including relevant service.

(AQW 3557/01)

Mr Dodds: All permanent staff in the Administrative Assistant grade who are assessed as being "fitted" or "exceptionally fitted" for promotion are eligible to apply for internal promotion to Administrative Officer. Candidates are assessed at a competence-based interview against four job-related criteria to demonstrate the ability or competence to be effective at the Administrative Officer grade. Length of service in the NICS is not a specific criterion used in internal promotions.

Scheme for the Purchase of Evacuated Dwellings

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development how many people have been moved under the SPED Scheme due to the theft of documents from Castlereagh Police Station.

(AQW 3627/01)

Mr Dodds: This information is neither required by, nor available to, the Housing Executive, which operates the SPED scheme. Under the scheme, if the Chief Constable issues a certificate confirming that a threat or intimidation is real, this is sufficient for the Housing Executive to invoke the scheme, without the need for further background as to the actual incident concerned.

Sites: West of the River Bann

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development to outline (a) site locations West of the River Bann that have been (i) visited; and (ii) appraised for possible use by the Social Security Agency Pension Service; and (b) how such sites are identified.

(AQW 3677/01)

Mr Dodds: I can confirm that officials in the Social Security Agency are undertaking an economic appraisal on how services could be delivered to pensioners in Northern Ireland following the introduction of State Pension Credits in October 2003. The appraisal, which is being taken forward in accordance with the guidance issued by the Department of Finance and Personnel has considered a number of suitable locations based West of the River Bann. Following advice from the Valuation and Lands Agency and Development Offices, and also taking into account of the need to have a site operational for advance claims to State Pensions Credit from April 2003, the agency initially visited 3 sites. There are a further 9 sites which are subject to detailed consideration and economic appraisal. As this has not yet been completed I am not in a position to confirm the details of locations which are being considered. No final decision on the precise location has yet been taken.

ASSEMBLY COMMISSION

Hippo Bags

Mr Beggs asked the Assembly Commission to detail (a) the information that has been supplied to the Assembly Commission with regard to the use of 'Hippo

Bags' to ensure efficient use of water; and (b) the estimated volume of water and financial savings that could be made by the use of the bags throughout Parliament Buildings. (AQW 3536/01)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Rev Robert Coulter):

- (a) No information has been supplied to the Assembly Commission with regard to the use of Hippo bags as their use is not recommended in the type of low-flush cisterns installed in Parliament Buildings;
- (b) As Hippo bags are not recommended for use in low-flush cisterns the question of water and financial savings does not arise.

Hippo Bags

Mr Beggs asked the Assembly Commission to outline the number of 'Hippo Bags' that (a) have been installed to date; and (b) could be installed, to conserve water usage within Parliament Buildings. (AQW 3537/01)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Rev Robert Coulter):

- (a) No Hippo bags have been installed to date in Parliament Buildings.
- (b) On the basis of advice from Water Service and Construction Service, Hippo bags should not be installed in cisterns in Parliament Buildings.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

Written Answers to Questions

OFFICE OF THE FIRST MINISTER AND DEPUTY FIRST MINISTER

Community Relations

Mr Shannon asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what steps are being taken to address the deterioration in community relations.

(AQW 3162/01)

Reply: The Executive's Programme for Government contains a number of actions by various Departments aimed at improving community relations. These include the putting in place by the end of the current year a cross-departmental strategy for the promotion of community relations and to ensure an effective and co-ordinated response to sectarian and racial intimidation. Where sectarian tensions have been manifest such as in North Belfast and Larne, officials and voluntary groups have sought to work with local communities to address problems and find solutions.

North Belfast

Mr Hilditch asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail any progress on the Executive's initiative to bring an end to the street violence in North Belfast.

(AQW 3177/01)

Reply: We refer the Member to the reply we gave to AQO1235/01 on 30 April 2002.

Since this answer was issued we have devoted considerable time and effort to seeking a resolution of this issue. We have had two series of meetings with elected and community representatives.

Last Friday (17 May) we wrote to each of the local MLAs and the key community interests in Ardoyne and Upper Ardoyne. We proposed two programmes of work for progress on community safety and community dialogue that we expect to operate simultaneously but separately. We believe that progress on these programmes will benefit both communities, provide assurances for all the interests involved and create mutually conducive progress.

To set the context for and to underpin the process, we also proposed that both communities at the outset should sign up to a Statement of Principles on Building Trust and Confidence.

Copies of the work programmes and the Statement of Principles are attached for the MLA and have been placed in the Assembly Library.

We have asked the MLAs and community interests to come back to us this Friday 24th May with comments and views after which we will endeavour to take into account any reasonable concerns of either community.

Disability Discrimination

Mr Hilditch asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what targets have been set to tackle disability discrimination.

(AQW 3184/01)

Reply: We recognise that the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 was an important development in outlawing discrimination against disabled people but it fell short of providing comprehensive and enforceable civil rights. We are committed to addressing this shortfall and this will be achieved in a number of ways. The disability discrimination law will be further strengthened when the final phase of the Act's access to services provisions comes into force on 1 October 2004. We will also implement the Executive's detailed response to the recommendations made by the Disability Rights Task Force. A report on the consultation on our response is in preparation.

When we have finalised this, we will bring forward appropriate legislation to implement legislative proposals for improving disability rights.

As set out in the Programme for Government, we will establish an interdepartmental Working Group this year under the Promoting Social Inclusion element of New TSN to develop a strategy to implement the proposals in the Executive's response and any wider issues raised in the consultation.

Furthermore, we have asked the Equality Commission to consider further a range of issues raised by the Task Force.

Equality Commission

Mr Hussey asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what assessment it can make in relation to the religious and gender composition of Equality Commission staff as published in the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland Annual Report 2000-2001 (page 39) as to whether this is a fair reflection of the religious and gender composition of the Northern Ireland workforce as at January 2001; and to make a statement.

(AQW 3421/01)

Reply: The most recently published figures for the composition of the Northern Ireland workforce were those presented in the Equality Commission's 11th Annual Monitoring Report. These showed the position at 1 January 2000. At that date, the composition of the Northern Ireland workforce was

Protestant	Roman Catholic	Non-determined	Female	Male
57.5% [60.4%]*	37.8% [39.6%]*	4.7%	47.3%	52.7%

*The percentages in square brackets exclude those in the Non-determined category.

The Equality Commission's 12th Annual Monitoring Report on monitoring figures for 2001 will be published later this year.

The composition of the Commission's workforce at 31 January 2001, and reported in its 2nd Annual Report was

Protestant	Roman Catholic	Non-determined	Female	Male
40.9% [43.4%]*	53.3% [56.6%]*	5.8%	75.2%	24.8%

*The percentages in square brackets exclude those in the Non-determined category.

These figures show that both Protestants and men are under-represented in the Commission's workforce. The Equality Commission is currently using affirmative action measures, such as welcoming statements in job advertisements to help increase the numbers of job applications from the Protestant community and from men.

The Equality Commission for Northern Ireland's first review under Article 55 of the Fair Employment and Treatment (NI) Order 1998 will be conducted later this year. This review will consider the Commission's workforce composition and identify an appropriate affirmative programme to address these issues.

The Commission will continue to use lawful affirmative action measures to address under-representation in its workforce.

Hate Crimes

Mr Neeson asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to give an update on plans to introduce legislation to tackle hate crimes.

(AQO 1425/01)

Reply: We deplore all racially motivated and sectarian attacks which have no place in a civilised society.

The responsibility for criminal justice, including criminal law on racially motivated and sectarian crime, is a reserved matter.

The Secretary of State has announced his intention to consult on the scope for strengthening the law in this area, and we await with interest the publication of his proposals.

Children's Commissioner

Mr O'Connor asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister, pursuant to AQO 1028/01, to make a statement on the progress of the Children's Commissioner.

(AQO 1446/01)

Reply: The Executive approved the draft Bill at its meeting on 16 May 2002.

On 24 May, we wrote to the Speaker enclosing the draft, together with the Explanatory and Financial Memorandum. A Statement on the legislative competence of the Assembly in relation to the bill will follow today.

We have proposed that the bill should be introduced to the Assembly on 5 June.

Travellers' Report

Mr C Murphy asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to outline progress on the implementation of the PSI Working Group on Travellers Report.

(AQO 1411/01)

Reply: Work on the development of the Executive's response to the PSI Working Group Report on Travellers is at an advanced stage.

The Executive will publish its response shortly.

Executive Meetings: Venue

Mrs Nelis asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to outline the benefits accrued from holding Executive meetings outside Stormont.

(AQO 1437/01)

Reply: The Executive is there to serve all the people in Northern Ireland. It is therefore appropriate to hold Executive meetings outside Belfast. However, the benefits of Executive meetings flow from the work that is done. By its nature and the decisions it has taken, the Executive has clearly demonstrated its inclusive nature and effectiveness in serving all the people of Northern Ireland.

European Summit

Mr A Doherty asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what steps are being taken to ensure an input into the forthcoming European Summit.

(AQO 1431/01)

Reply: We will attend a meeting of the Joint Ministerial Committee (Europe) on 11 June, along with Ministers from the other devolved administrations and Whitehall Departments. UK policy positions for the European Council at Seville on 21-22 June will be discussed at this meeting.

New Irish Government: Meetings

Mr Bradley asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to indicate the schedule of NSMC meetings planned following the formation of the New Irish Government. (AQO 1432/01)

Reply: A number of North/ South Ministerial Council Meetings have been scheduled to be held following the formation of the new Irish Government. Meetings in the following Sectors have been arranged to take place before the end of June:

- Language
- Special European Programmes
- Tourism
- Food Safety/Health
- Waterways and Trade

Further meetings may also be arranged.

Racism

Mr Molloy asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister the date it expects to publish its racism strategy; and to make a statement. (AQO 1438/01)

Reply: In fulfilling our Programme for Government commitment we are currently developing a strategy to tackle racial inequality with the assistance of departments, statutory agencies, and voluntary bodies through our PSI Working Group on Ethnic Minorities.

A number of recommendations made by the Group have already been introduced which include the establishment of a Race Equality Unit and the introduction of a funding scheme for Minority Ethnic Voluntary Organisations.

We are making arrangements to meet with the PSI Working Group in the very near future to discuss the draft race strategy and formulate a plan to take our work forward.

We intend to have a full and open consultation on the document, before it is finally agreed by the Executive Committee and it is anticipated that the strategy will be issued for consultation over the summer period with the final strategy published later this year.

AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Imported Meat

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development is she aware of any illegal cash sales to retail outlets of minced beef of Third World origin or constituted from parts of the animal not normally used in the manufacture of mince. (AQW 3394/01)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms Rodgers): Meat may only be imported into the EU from establishments and countries specifically approved by the EU through Food Veterinary Office inspections. The meat must comply with the import conditions of the EU and be certified as doing so. An import certificate must accompany all consignments and the meat marked with the country and establishment of origin.

Inspections of imported meat from Third Countries are carried out at the Border Inspection Posts in accordance with EU regulations. Where discrepancies are discovered in the accompanying documentation or physical problems with the consignment observed a detention notice is issued under the Products of Animal Origin (Import and Export) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1998. Consignments not in compliance with the requirements for entry into the EU may be ordered to be destroyed, re-exported or referred for processing for animal feed.

Controls and conditions for the production and sale of minced beef are prescribed in the Minced Meat and Meat Preparations (Hygiene) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1997. These Regulations are enforced by the Department's Veterinary Service, or in certain circumstances by District Council Environmental Health Officers, on behalf of the Food Standards Agency (FSA).

Neither my Department, nor the FSA is aware of any illegal activity in relation to the production or sale of minced beef to retail outlets or to any other establishments. If any illegal activity involving the production or consignment of minced beef is known to be taking place, details should be reported to the FSA or to the appropriate enforcement authority so that appropriate legal action including prosecution can be taken.

Her Majesty The Queen's Golden Jubilee

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail (a) any plans she has to celebrate the Queen's Golden Jubilee; and (b) what measures she has put in place to ensure staff from her Department can celebrate this event. (AQW 3489/01)

Ms Rodgers: As part of the plans to celebrate the Golden Jubilee I welcomed the Queen to the DARD exhibition at the Balmoral Show where I took the opportunity to outline the important contribution that agriculture makes to the life and economy of Northern Ireland. I also attended a Reception in Parliament Buildings, hosted by the Speaker of the Assembly, Lord Alderdice, to mark the Golden Jubilee.

The Northern Ireland Civil Service has awarded the additional Bank Holiday set for Monday, 3 June to celebrate the Queen's Golden Jubilee.

Northern Ireland Housing Executive

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQO 1214/01, to detail any contact her officials have had with the Department for Social Development to ensure that rural issues are taken into consideration in regard to the NI Housing Executive's 'Places for People' rural housing policy.

(AQW 3558/01)

Ms Rodgers: DARD officials contributed to the extensive consultation exercise which was carried out as part of the rural housing policy review. Following that exercise, the Northern Ireland Housing Executive established a Rural Steering Group to oversee the implementation of the rural policy review. That Group included members representing DARD, DSD, the Rural Development Council, the Rural Community Network, and the Federation of Housing Associations. Progress made in implementing this policy was highlighted in a Report published by the NIHE as recently as 15 May at the Balmoral Show. This report acknowledges the role played by rural representatives in taking the policy forward.

Northern Ireland Housing Executive

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQO 1214/01, to detail any contact her officials have had with the Department for Social Development to ensure that rural issues are taken into consideration in regard to the NI Housing Executive's Homelessness Strategy and Services Review.

(AQW 3559/01)

Ms Rodgers: The Northern Ireland Housing Executive is the Agency with statutory responsibility for homelessness. DARD officials contribute to NIHE policy development in several ways including having representation on the 'Rural Housing Estates Programme'. An NIHE Rural Homelessness Survey is planned for later this year and DARD officials will contribute as appropriate to policy considerations following on from that Survey.

Housing Bill 2002

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQO 1214/01, to detail any contact her officials have had with the Department for Social Development to ensure that rural issues are taken into consideration in regard to the Housing Bill 2002.

(AQW 3560/01)

Ms Rodgers: The consultation period on the Housing Bill has just ended, 30 April 2002. DARD officials were consulted as part of that process and will be consulted again, as appropriate, when the Department of Social Development has considered the results of the consultation process.

Farmers' Early Retirement and Loan Scheme

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail (i) names; (ii) terms of reference; and (iii) reporting date of any consultants she has appointed to look into the Farmers' Early Retirement and Loan Scheme proposed in the Assembly on 5 December 2000.

(AQW 3696/01)

Ms Rodgers: As you are aware, I commissioned a research project into Early Retirement and New Entrants Schemes last year. The research is being carried out by Queen's University, Belfast in association with University College, Dublin and the final report is to be with me by the end of July 2002. I attach a copy of the Terms of Reference for the study.

I did not appoint consultants specifically to look into the scheme proposed in the Assembly on 5 December 2000 but the researchers from Queen's University and University College, Dublin are aware of your proposal. Indeed, I understand that they discussed it at some length with you a couple of weeks ago.

I commissioned the research project (and an earlier consultancy study, the outcome of which was inconclusive) because there are issues of value for money surrounding early retirement and new entrants schemes. I have to be satisfied that there is a benefit to the economy and to the Northern Ireland taxpayer if I am to consider introducing either scheme. Such evidence is best obtained from an examination of the structural and other issues involved, and a review of experiences in some other Member States, rather than by investigating just one possible model of a scheme.

I will make the research report available to the Assembly Committee once I receive it.

Agrimonetary Compensation

Mr Molloy asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what steps have been taken to ensure regional status regarding agri-monetary compensation.

(AQO 1445/01)

Ms Rodgers: Under EU regulations, decisions on the payment of optional agrimonetary compensation could be taken only at Member State level. There was no discretion for regions within Member States unilaterally to make compensation payments which were not available throughout the Member State. The agrimoney compensation mechanism itself expired at the end of December 2001. The recent debate on the availability of agrimoney compensation to the livestock sector related to the 2nd and 3rd tranches of compensation which had previously been triggered. The disappointing decision by the UK Government not to avail of this compensation means that the system has now come to a complete end.

Brucellosis

Mr Gibson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the incidents of (a) TB; (b) Brucellosis; and (c) BSE in West Tyrone in each of the last 4 years. (AQO 1414/01)

Ms Rodgers: In relation to Brucellosis and TB my Department holds the figures in Divisional Veterinary Office area rather than constituency area. The following are therefore the figures for the Omagh Divisional Veterinary Office

- (a) The following figures on TB reflect the number of reactors as a percentage of the number of animal tests.

Year	TB Incidence
1998	0.22
1999	0.19
2000	0.31
2001	0.37

- (b) Brucellosis

During 1998 there were 7 restrictions as a result of brucellosis. In 1999, 1, in 2000, none and in 2001, 1.

- (c) Information on the incidence of BSE in West Tyrone is not available. However the number of clinical cases of BSE in Co Tyrone for the last four years are 7, 2, 4 and 8 respectively, with 5 further cases to date this year. For surveillance cases, 0, 0, 13 and 12 with 9 further cases to date. This gives a total of 7, 2, 17, 20 and 14 to date.

'Investing for Health' Strategy

Mr J Kelly asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline how the Agricultural Colleges will contribute to the 'Investing for Health' Strategy. (AQO 1455/01)

Ms Rodgers: My Department's Colleges offer full-time and part-time Further Education and Higher Education courses to students aged from 16 years in a range of land based and agri-food areas. Delivery of this education incorporates a strong focus on the promotion and development of a healthy behaviour and environment amongst students and staff.

Examples include:

"Healthy Eating" promotions to encourage students and staff to consider their diet and nutrition.

Student Counselling Services which offer a confidential service on a wide range of physical and emotional issues affecting the health of individuals.

a robust "Pastoral Care" policy which promotes an ethos of health promotion, care and well-being.

A range of Clubs and Societies designed to improve the social networks of students.

A no-smoking policy in all but designated rooms in all the colleges.

Fully equipped and modern fitness suites and a wide range of recreational activities encourage physical activity.

regular drug and alcohol awareness seminars held in collaboration with the local Police Service.

Specific health and safety training for students and the completion of risk assessments in all areas of study.

All these activities are consistent with and complementary to the principles of the Investing for Health Strategy.

Brucellosis

Mr C Murphy asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline progress in her efforts to eradicate Brucellosis in the South Armagh area. (AQO 1419/01)

Ms Rodgers: My concerns at the level of Brucellosis in South Armagh and elsewhere led me to announce some additional measures recently. Those measures included the allocation of additional manpower and treating Brucellosis as the highest priority thereby maximising the use of our existing resources. Additional staff have been moved into the three high incidence areas of Armagh, Newry and Enniskillen and my Department is in the process of re-organising staff at markets and abattoirs in order to provide extra resources for Brucellosis duties. In addition the use of the bulk milk sampling programme in dairy herds has allowed additional staff to be allocated to the above high incidence areas.

It will, however, take some time for the results of these extra measures to become apparent.

Countryside Management Scheme

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development when she expects to re-open the Countryside Management Scheme; and to make a statement. (AQO 1441/01)

Ms Rodgers: The Countryside Management Scheme opened for a third round of applications on 20 May 2002. This application period will close on 31 July 2002.

By 22 May 2002 a total of 883 farmers, who had made application to join the CMS in the two previous application periods, had already entered into management agreements with DARD. However, other farmers have been invited to enter into management agreements with DARD and I therefore expect that this figure will rise to over 1,000 CMS participants within the next few weeks.

I intend that the CMS will re-open to new applications on an annual basis.

CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Schools: Sports Facilities

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to make a statement on the potential for greater community use of school, college and university sports facilities. (AQW 3600/01)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr McGimpsey): The Sports Council is responsible for the development of sport in Northern Ireland and I am fully supportive of the Council's initiatives in this important area. These include:

- The Play Sport Programme, which aims to enable as many young people as possible, in areas of deprivation, to take up and obtain a quality start in sport, by creating locally available, high quality sporting opportunities on or near to primary school sites for school and community use.
- The Sport Share Programme, which aims to establish well-managed sports facilities for post-primary and structured community use.
- The Sports Institute for Northern Ireland, which is located at the University of Ulster and aims to provide world-class training and support services for talented performers. The facilities will also be available for community use.

Cultural Diversity

Mr Maskey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what steps he is taking to engage with the Community Relations Council in respect of cultural diversity. (AQW 3608/01)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department has a well-established interest in promoting cultural diversity through, for example, the Diversity 21 programme. More recently, my officials have been considering how best to develop cultural diversity policy following from the recommendations published in the vision document for arts and culture, Face-to-Face.

I must emphasise that this work is still at an early stage of development independent of any direct Community Relations Council input.

The Department has not at this stage taken any specific steps to engage with the Community Relations Council in respect of cultural diversity. Having said that, I do recognise that the Council is an important player in this field and would expect engagement with them in the future along with other key interests as the development of cultural diversity policy progresses.

Odyssey Arena

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, in light of urgent works outstanding at the Odyssey Arena, what steps is he taking to address the problems within the Odyssey Trust. (AQW 3621/01)

Mr McGimpsey: The relationship between the Odyssey Trust Company (OTC) and Sheridan Millennium Ltd is that of landlord and tenant, and resolution of the outstanding works at the Odyssey Arena are to be resolved in that context. I have been advised that OTC has provided Sheridan with a report on the various construction issues. My officials have had a series of meetings with both parties and I have discussed the issue with the OTC and intend to meet with representatives from Sheridan in the near future.

Her Majesty The Queen's Golden Jubilee

Mr Gibson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what events are being funded to celebrate the Golden Jubilee in West Tyrone. (AQO 1413/01)

Mr McGimpsey: A total of 49 applications for Golden Jubilee funding from groups within Co Tyrone has been approved by the Northern Ireland Golden Jubilee Advisory Panel. Nearly £98,000 has been allocated to Co Tyrone, representing 27% of the total funding allocation.

Approximately 30 of these groups are located in West Tyrone with a funding value of £56, 500.

Ulster Grand Prix

Mr Paisley Jnr asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the total expenditure available for organising the Ulster Grand Prix in August 2002. (AQO 1417/01)

Mr McGimpsey: £160K is already available for organising the Ulster Grand Prix in August 2002. This was raised over several months, by the organisers of the Grand Prix, the Dundrod & District Motorcycle Club.

The Dundrod & District Motorcycle Club still require a further £43K to hold the competition in August and an application for funding of £40K, to help stage this year's race, has recently been received from the Club by the Northern Ireland Events Company. It is too early to say whether or not this application will be successful, but the outcome will hopefully be known in June.

Ulster Way

Mr J Wilson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail his commitment to securing the future of the Ulster Way. (AQO 1416/01)

Mr McGimpsey: I understand that the Minister for the Environment provided you with a written answer on 20 May 2002 to a similar Assembly Question (AQW3416/01) regarding his Department's commitment to securing the future of the Ulster Way.

From this answer you will have learned that the Department of Environment has commissioned the Countryside Access and Activities Network to carry out a review of the future of the Ulster Way which is due to be completed towards the end of this year. Once that review is published, the recommendations will be considered by the three relevant statutory bodies with an interest in the Ulster Way, the Environment and Heritage Service of DOE, the Northern Ireland Tourist Board and the Sports Council.

As Minister for Culture, Arts and Leisure, I have no direct responsibility for the Ulster Way.

EDUCATION

11-Plus

Mr McNamee asked the Minister of Education, regarding the Transfer Test in each of the last 5 years, to detail (a) the number of pupils overall who sat the test and their various grades, broken down in English-medium and Irish-medium schools, giving the numbers who sat the test through English or through Irish in each group; (b) the total number of pupils who opted out from doing the test overall, broken down in English-medium and Irish-medium schools; (c) the breakdown of grades for the 'English language' paper in the English-Medium Transfer Test; and (d) the breakdown of grades for the 'Gaeilge' paper in the Irish-Medium Transfer Test.

(AQW 3565/01)

The Minister of Education (Mr M McGuinness): Grades are only awarded for the test as a whole and not for individual components within the papers. Accordingly, the information requested at (c) and (d) is not available. The number of pupils who sat the test by grade and the number of pupils who opted out in Irish Medium and all other grant aided schools for the last five years is detailed below.

Unit of Resource

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail the unit of resource available to (i) primary; (ii) secondary; (iii) grammar; (iv) special; and (v) integrated schools, across each Board area. (AQW 3647/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The figures below set out primary, secondary, grammar and integrated schools per capita allocations across each Education and Library Board area based on formula allocations. The grammar school figures include both controlled and voluntary grammar schools. The figures for the integrated sector include both the primary and secondary phase.

	Primary (excluding Controlled Integrated)	Secondary (excluding Controlled Integrated)	Grammar (including Voluntary)	Integrated (Controlled & Grant Maintained)
BELB	£1,695	£2,831	£2,655	£2,462
NEELB	£1,608	£2,631	£2,638	£2,438
SEELB	£1,618	£2,594	£2,699	£2,398
SELB	£1,689	£2,610	£2,831	£2,394
WELB	£1,689	£2,665	£2,810	£2,981

Notes

1. The figures include amounts made available under LMS Formulae in 2001/02 (information for 2002/03 is not yet available).

2. Figures for controlled and maintained schools were obtained from the LMS Budget Statements published by the Education and Library Boards and from the Department's published Budget Statements in the case of Voluntary Grammar and Grant Maintained Integrated schools.
3. The figures exclude centrally retained funds provided in-year to schools for certain items of expenditure, such as substitution costs and allocations for earmarked initiatives and other centrally held resources, such as Home to School Transport, CASS, School Meals and Central Administration, as these are not costed to individual schools.

The figures below set out the per capita costs for special schools based on the Resource Allocation Plans for each Education and Library Board in 2001/02. Special schools are not funded through LMS Funding Formula and the costs are not therefore directly comparable with other types of school.

Special Schools	£000
BELB	11.3
NEELB	9.5
SEELB	11.0
SELB	13.2
WELB	12.7

Notes

1. Figures are based on the estimates of expenditure contained in each Education and Library Board's Resource Allocation Plan, (RAP), for 2001/02 and the October 2001 Department of Education School Census figures for pupils attending special schools.
2. The figures, include not only direct expenditure on special schools, but also costs associated with the administration of special education, the educational psychology service and other support services.

Catholic Maintained Schools

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education to outline the unit of resource for all types of schools controlled by the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools. (AQW 3648/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The figures below set out per capita allocations for Catholic Maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools based on their LMS formula allocations.

Maintained Nursery	£2,204
Maintained Primary	£1,678
Maintained Secondary	£2,693

Notes

1. The figures include amounts made available under LMS Formulae in 2001/02. (information for 2002/03 is not yet available).
2. Figures obtained from the LMS Budget Statements published by the Boards.
3. The figures exclude centrally retained funds provided in-year to schools for certain items of expenditure, such as substitution costs and allocations for earmarked initiatives and other centrally held resources, such as Home to School Transport, CASS, School Meals and Central Administration, as these are not costed to individual schools.

11-Plus

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail (a) the number of pupils receiving grade A at Key Stage 2 (11+) who progress to Grammar School and receive less than grade A at GCSE; and (b) this number as an absolute number and as a percentage of the total.

(AQW 3649/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The information requested is not available, and could only be collected at disproportionate cost.

Nursery Places

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 2805/01, to detail (a) the number of nursery places for children within North Down; and (b) the location of these schools.

(AQW 3658/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The location and number of nursery places available in North Down is set out below:

School	Location	Full-time places	Part-time places
Bangor Central Nursery School	Bangor	26	52
Hollywood Nursery School	Hollywood	-	52
Trinity Nursery School	Bangor	26	52

North Eastern Education and Library Board: Staffing

Mr Dalton asked the Minister of Education what measures he proposes to safeguard employment within the North-Eastern Education and Library Board.

(AQW 3662/01)

Mr M McGuinness: It is a matter for the North Eastern Education and Library Board to determine its staffing needs within the totality of its approved budget.

North Eastern Education and Library Board: Finance

Mr Dalton asked the Minister of Education what measures he intends to take regarding the financial difficulties being experienced by the North-Eastern Education and Library Board.

(AQW 3663/01)

Mr M McGuinness: I am aware of the financial difficulties being faced by the North Eastern Education and Library Board this year and have already met with the Vice-Chairman and Chief Executive to hear of their difficulties at first hand. Following that meeting, at my request, my officials have commenced working with Board officers in a detailed examination of the Board's financial situation in order to determine whether there is room for further flexibility within its current budget, and to report their findings to me.

North Eastern Education and Library Board: Finance

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education what action he proposes to take in respect of the current financial situation facing the North-Eastern Education and Library Board; and to make a statement.

(AQW 3664/01)

Mr M McGuinness: I am aware of the financial difficulties being faced by the North Eastern Education and Library Board this year and have already met with the Vice-Chairman and Chief Executive to hear of their difficulties at first hand. Following that meeting, at my request, my officials have commenced working with Board officers in a detailed examination of the Board's financial situation in order to determine whether there is room for further flexibility within its current budget, and to report their findings to me.

North Eastern Education and Library Board: Finance

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education, in light of the financial situation of the North-Eastern Education and Library Board, will he ensure that no school-children will be disadvantaged by a diminished unit of resource for schools in that Board area.

(AQW 3665/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The level of resources delegated to its schools is primarily a matter for the NEELB. I am aware of the financial difficulties that have been identified by the Board in relation to its schools and my officials are currently working closely with Board Officers to examine the position in detail.

Burns Report

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education what plans he has to consult with groups that do not agree with the Burns proposals for restructuring secondary schools.

(AQW 3666/01)

Mr M McGuinness: I want to hear the full range of views on the Burns proposals and I have been engaged in a series of meetings with key interests. Differing views have been expressed at these meetings.

I have met with the Governing Bodies Association, which has expressed its opposition to the Burns recommendations, and a meeting is being arranged with representatives of grammar school principals. I am prepared to meet any other groups that wish to discuss the issues.

I have also invited all the political parties to discuss the review with me and I hope they will accept this invitation.

Youth Education Social Inclusion Partnership: Funding

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education what projects, including constituency area, were successful in achieving funding through the Youth Education Social Inclusion Partnership for minor capital works.

(AQW 3687/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The Youth Education Social Inclusion Partnership has not yet approved funding to any projects for minor capital works.

Burns Report

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education if he has any plans to implement pilot schemes for the Burns proposals.

(AQW 3691/01)

Mr M McGuinness: I have invited comments on the Burns proposals, suggestions for modifications or for alternative arrangements. Decisions on new arrangements will not be taken until I have considered the responses. I cannot comment about piloting any new arrangements before decisions are taken on the form they will take.

Burns Report

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education what plans he has should top grammar schools decide to opt for independent status as a result of the Burns proposals.

(AQW 3692/01)

Mr M McGuinness: Decisions will not be made on the Burns proposals until I have considered all the responses to consultation. However, grant-aided schools cannot simply opt to change their status: proposals for such changes are subject to a statutory defined process.

Youth Education Social Inclusion Partnership: Funding

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education to detail, in each of the last 3 years, (a) the funding available through the Youth Education Social Inclusion Partnership for minor capital works; and (b) the number of applications received by YESIP for minor capital works.

(AQW 3697/01)

Mr M McGuinness: No applications were sought and no funding was made available by the Youth Education Social Partnership for minor capital works in the last three years.

EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

East Down Institute: Funding

Mr McGrady asked the Minister for Employment and Learning when will funding be made available for the new building at East Down Institute in Downpatrick; and to make a statement.

(AQW 2930/01)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Ms Hanna): An economic appraisal which addresses the accommodation needs of the East Down Institute's Downpatrick Campus has been approved. However my Department is currently examining recently presented economic appraisals in respect of the Ballynahinch and Newcastle campuses of the Institute. Funding cannot be considered for the Downpatrick Campus until the economic appraisals for the Newcastle and Ballynahinch campuses have been cleared.

New Deal

Mr Gibson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what assessment she has made in relation to the impact New Deal has had on long-term unemployment in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 3115/01)

Ms Hanna: From the introduction of New Deal in April 1998 in Northern Ireland, the total number of people in the New Deal target groups claiming Jobseekers' Allowance (JSA) has fallen from 25,792 to 9,138 in March 2002, a decrease of 65%.

Over the same period the total number of long-term unemployed has fallen from 25,805 to 10,369, a decrease of 60%.

By contrast the total number of people claiming JSA in Northern Ireland (target and non-target group) has fallen from 56,749 to 37,105, a decrease of 35%.

Further Education: Funding

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline (a) what assessment she has made of the financial support given to further and higher education; and (b) if she intends to increase the current rate over and above inflation. (AQW 3428/01)

Ms Hanna:

Higher Education & Further Education Core Funding

In 2002/03 the universities will receive £132m and the further education sector £147m. These are considerable investments of public money. I have, nevertheless, bid for additional support in the budget 2002 process to cover inflation and to promote other developments.

Student Support

In relation to student support:

- (a) My predecessor, Dr Sean Farren, carried out a thorough review of student support measures, in 2000, which resulted in a £65m package of additional support over 3 years.
- (b) The Department for Education and Skills is currently carrying out a similar exercise in Great Britain and I will not be considering any additional modifications here in Northern Ireland until I have studied the GB proposals, which should be announced in July.

Her Majesty The Queen's Golden Jubilee

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail (a) any plans she has to celebrate the Queen's Golden Jubilee; and (b) what measures she has put in place to ensure staff from her Department can celebrate this event. (AQW 3509/01)

Ms Hanna: The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure is the lead Department for Golden Jubilee Celebrations.

I am pleased to have participated in the events which took place during the Queen's recent visit to Northern Ireland to mark her Golden Jubilee. In addition, 20 staff from my Department were nominated to attend the Queen's Garden Parties and our offices will be closed on 3 June to enable staff and customers to celebrate the Queen's Golden Jubilee.

Further Education Sports Facilities

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to make a statement on the potential for greater community use of college/university sports facilities. (AQW 3602/01)

Ms Hanna: To encourage greater community use of college sports facilities by community groups, my Department has written to all colleges of Further Education encouraging them to negotiate with outside organisations such as District Councils and youth clubs in order to promote the availability of their PE/sports facilities.

I understand, also, that the universities make their facilities available to other organisations and to the general public at a charge.

Medical Students: Training

Ms Lewsley asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline (a) how many days of child protection training do medical students receive during their studies at Queen's University, Belfast; and (b) the content of such training. (AQW 3622/01)

Ms Hanna: The duration and content of child protection training given to medical undergraduates at Queens University is a matter for the university, as an autonomous institution.

Students' Religion: Universities

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of students by religion for each of the last 5 years in (a) The University of Ulster; and (b) Queen's University, Belfast. (AQW 3645/01)

Ms Hanna: The breakdown of students by religion for the University of Ulster and Queen's University Belfast has been placed in the Assembly library.

Degree Courses

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of applications for degrees in (a) mechanical engineering; (b) civil engineering; and (c) electrical engineering at higher education institutions in each of the last 5 years. (AQW 3653/01)

Ms Hanna: Information on applications to degree courses is collected by UCAS. Information on subject of study is only available at subject group level. All requested subject areas fall under the Engineering and Technology group. Information on subject group by domicile and institution is only available for the 2000/01 and 2001/02 academic years.

Private Sector Training

Mr Carrick asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how does she ensure that private sector training providers are given equal opportunity in the provision of training; and to make a statement.

(AQW 3668/01)

Ms Hanna: The Department's Training Programmes are, in the main, delivered by a variety of training providers, both public and private sector. Contracts for this delivery are awarded as a result of open competition, having due regard to considerations of cost, quality and effectiveness.

Construction Industry Training Board

Mr Carrick asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if she satisfied that the Construction Industry Training Board has the capacity to fully meet current demand for skills training; and to make a statement.

(AQW 3669/01)

Ms Hanna: The purpose of the Construction Industry Training Board is to encourage the appropriate training of persons employed in, or intending to be employed in, the construction industry. This is achieved by direct training, using CITB facilities, by grant aiding participation in approved courses, or through work based training. Training in construction skills is also available through the Department's training programmes. I am satisfied that, overall, there is sufficient capacity to meet the demand for skills training in the industry.

Private Sector Training

Mr Carrick asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what plans she has to encourage the development of the private sector training facility; and to make a statement.

(AQW 3670/01)

Ms Hanna: The Department encourages the provision of cost effective, quality training provision, from public and private sectors alike, by openly contracting for the delivery of its training programmes.

Construction Industry Training Board

Mr Carrick asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if she has received the report of the Review of Services conducted by the Construction Industry Training Board; and to make a statement.

(AQW 3671/01)

Ms Hanna: I understand from the Construction Industry Training Board that no such report exists. There is an annual report published by the CITB and this is in the public domain.

Construction Industry Training Board

Mr Carrick asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what percentage of Northern Ireland skills training is provided by the Construction Industry Training Board; and to make a statement.

(AQW 3672/01)

Ms Hanna: Because of the volume of training provided "on the job", it is impossible to calculate accurately the percentage provided by the Construction Industry Training Board (CITB). However, in the last full training year for which figures are available, 2000/01, a total of 3645 persons received direct training in construction skills by the CITB. This represents 57% of the total number of people whose training was either provided or grant aided by the CITB. In addition, the CITB provided health and safety training to 4630 persons in the same year. These figures do not include unemployed people undertaking construction related training courses.

Programme for Building Sustainable Prosperity

Mr Adams asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 3120/01, to detail (a) the scores awarded as part of the economic appraisals by the consultants; and (b) the respective score awarded by the Department for each application.

(AQW 3698/01)

Ms Hanna: A table which shows the relevant projects ranked in order of their selection panel scores, along with their economic appraisal scores has been placed in the Assembly Library for your information.

Subject to a satisfactory appraisal the purpose of the selection scoring was to identify those projects which best met the policy objectives of the measure.

Programme for Building Sustainable Prosperity

Mr Adams asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the process for handling appeals challenging the decisions made in the allocation of funding under Measure 2.3 'Promoting a Labour Market

Open to All' of the Programme for Building Sustainable Prosperity, with particular reference to the sums set aside in the case of successful appeals and the make-up of any appeal panel. (AQW 3699/01)

Ms Hanna: Following my announcement on 21 March 2001 of the outcome of the selection process unsuccessful applicants were given until 12 April 2002 to appeal. Organisations had the right to appeal on one or both of the two grounds outlined in the detailed guidance to applicants, as follows;

- The outcome was a decision no reasonable person would make on the basis of the information provided in the application; and/or
- There was a failure in adherence to procedures or systems.

Following the initial selection the full annual allocation was awarded to projects under each Measure. Funding for any successful appeals would be sought through a bid to in-year monitoring.

The Appeal Panel consisted of two Civil Servants from this Department and a representative from the Managing Authority for the Programme. The Appeal Panel had access to the same papers as the Selection Panels and the correspondence from the appellants outlining the ground(s) on which they wished to appeal.

Programme for Building Sustainable Prosperity

Mr Adams asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if anyone involved in the original decision for awarding funding under Measure 2.3 'Promoting a Labour Market Open to All' of the Programme for Building Sustainable Prosperity was involved in the appeal process. (AQW 3700/01)

Ms Hanna: None of the persons on the Appeals Panel sat on either of the two selection panels for the above Measure, or were otherwise involved in the selection process for that Measure.

Employment: Age Discrimination

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what measures she is taking to encourage businesses to employ older people. (AQW 3706/01)

Ms Hanna: It might be helpful if I began by setting out the legal context regarding age discrimination. At present there is no legislation specifically outlawing discrimination against older people seeking employment. A European Directive outlawing age discrimination is required to be implemented by 2006, and this is a matter for the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister.

However, my Department encourages employers to follow guidance in the voluntary Code of Practice on Age Diversity in Employment, which was issued by the then Department of Economic Development in 1999. The Code sets the standard for non-ageist approaches in employment in relation to recruitment, selection, promotion, training, redundancy and retirement.

My Department is also responsible for New Deal 50+, which aims to help older people gain employment.

Finally, as I have said previously, it makes good business sense to base employment decisions on skills and abilities, rather than on preconceived ideas about age. Older workers often have talents and abilities that are in short supply, and employers who ignore them deprive themselves of a valuable resource.

ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

Her Majesty The Queen's Golden Jubilee

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (a) any plans he has to celebrate the Queen's Golden Jubilee; and (b) what measures he has put in place to ensure staff from his Department can celebrate this event. (AQW 3510/01)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Sir Reg Empey):

- Whilst there have been no official plans within my Department to celebrate the Queen's Golden Jubilee, I as Minister of Enterprise Trade & Investment, had the great honour of accompanying HRH Prince Philip to Fisher Engineering, Ballinamallard, Co Fermanagh during the Queen's Golden Jubilee Trip to Northern Ireland.
- The NICS has awarded its entire staff the additional Bank Holiday, set for Monday 3rd June 2002, to celebrate the Queens Golden Jubilee. Staff will also enjoy the normal Spring Bank Holiday, which has been moved to 4 June this year to coincide with the Jubilee celebrations.

Trade Missions

Mr Adams asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline the number of departmental supported Trade Missions for each year since 1997. (AQW 3540/01)

Sir Reg Empey: IDB's Trade International had lead departmental responsibility for trade missions and the figures below are based on these activities. While former non-departmental public bodies, which are now part of Invest NI, may have supported other trade missions the relevant statistics are not considered to add substantially to those provided and could only be compiled at disproportionate cost.

The number of IDB supported trade missions for each year since 1997 are therefore:

Year	No of Trade Missions
1997/98	13
1998/99	13
1999/00	11
2000/01	16
2001/02	16

Trade Missions

Mr Adams asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline the number of departmental supported Trade Missions on which West Belfast based businesses were present for each year since 1997. (AQW 3541/01)

Sir Reg Empey: IDB's Trade International had lead departmental responsibility for trade missions and the figures below are based on these activities. While former non-departmental public bodies, which are now part of Invest NI, may have supported other trade missions the relevant statistics are not considered to add substantially to those provided and could only be compiled at disproportionate cost.

The number of IDB supported trade missions in which West Belfast based businesses participated from 1997/98 is therefore as follows:

Year	No of Trade Missions
1997/98	8
1998/99	5
1999/00	4
2000/01	8
2001/02	7

Trade Missions

Mr Adams asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline, by constituency, the number of businesses which took part in departmental supported Trade Missions for each year since 1997. (AQW 3542/01)

Sir Reg Empey: IDB's Trade International had lead departmental responsibility for trade missions and while former non-departmental public bodies, which are now part of Invest NI, may have supported other trade missions the relevant statistics to answer this question could only be compiled at disproportionate cost.

I would refer the Member to the answer contained in his related question 3543/01.

Trade Missions

Mr Adams asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline, by constituency, the number of businesses which took part in IDB supported Trade Missions for each year since 1997. (AQW 3543/01)

Sir Reg Empey: The number of businesses, by constituency, that participated on IDB supported trade missions for each year since 1997 is therefore as follows:

Constituency	1997/98	1998/99	1999/00	2000/02	2001/02
East Belfast	5	5	5	7	10
North Belfast	12	10	10	13	15
South Belfast	21	16	20	17	14

Commercial Insurance

Mr Dalton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to make a statement on the effect on small courier businesses of the doubling of commercial insurance. (AQW 3592/01)

Sir Reg Empey: I am not aware of the specific problems referred to in the Honourable Member's Question.

I am aware however that a number of businesses in Northern Ireland are having difficulty in obtaining public and employers liability insurance. As a result, I have drawn it to the attention of the Economic Secretary to the Treasury and written directly on behalf of a number of businesses to the Association of British Insurers.

I have also tasked my officials to undertake research to better quantify the scope, nature and scale of the problem as a prelude to developing a strategy to seek to address the causes of high insurance costs – or even its non-availability – and to help stabilise or reduce the rate of increase in premiums.

In the meantime, I would encourage any businesses experiencing difficulty in obtaining insurance to write directly to the Association of British Insurers, 51 Gresham Street, London EC2V 7HQ to obtain details of potential sources of cover.

Contex

Mr Dalton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to make a statement on the closure of Contex and whether he believes anything else could have been done to save the company. (AQW 3593/01)

Sir Reg Empey: Competition from the Far East resulted in a sizeable cost undercutting of Contex's products and the Transpo organisation in reviewing all of its businesses worldwide has decided due to these cost advantages to source all die for diode manufacture externally.

Contex local management presented a plan to Transpo to sustain die manufacture only at the Antrim facility that would have retained a core number of jobs. This would have resulted in all die production from Contex being sent to Orlando for diode manufacture, however Transpo rejected the on going cost viability of this proposal based on the savings they had identified from moving to 3rd party supply.

Invest NI had been in discussion since late December 2001 with both the local Company and the parent regarding sustaining the Antrim operation. However Transpo's plans to move to 3rd party supply, and the reliance of Contex on its internal sales to Transpo, mean that the Antrim operation does not have a viable future.

I do not believe anything further could have been done by Invest NI to save the company.

Commercial Insurance

Mr Dalton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if he will initiate a review into commercial insurance and the perceived financial difficulties imposed upon small businesses. (AQW 3596/01)

Sir Reg Empey: I would refer the honourable member to my answer to AQW No 3592/01. While the regulation of financial services, including insurance, is a reserved matter, I am keen that my department should examine the evidence of high commercial insurance costs and, if appropriate, take the lead in developing a strategy to address its causes.

Commercial Insurance

Mr Dalton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what incentives are available to make commercial insurance rates more appealing to small businesses. (AQW 3597/01)

Sir Reg Empey: There are no incentives available specifically for this purpose. I would however refer the Honourable Member to my answers to AQW No 3592/01 and AQW No 3596/01

Tourism

Mrs Carson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the impact on business and tourism in Fermanagh due to the closure of St Angelo airport, Enniskillen. (AQW 3617/01)

Sir Reg Empey: We would hope that the impact of the closure of St Angelo Airport on the Tourism sector would be minimal, given that the Northern Ireland Tourist Board, Derry Visitor and Convention Bureau and City of Derry Airport have been working closely with IT Ireland Tours to secure the charter flight which the company operated into St Angelo airport each summer since 1998.

I am pleased to say that from May 2002, the charter service has been successfully re-routed to the City of Derry Airport and arrangements are in place to transfer tourists to the Fermanagh area. Negotiations are continuing to consolidate and expand the service for future years.

Therefore, businesses in the area should not suffer unduly as a result of this closure.

Tourism

Mrs Carson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the options he is considering to help business and tourism due to the closure of St Angelo airport, Enniskillen. (AQW 3618/01)

Sir Reg Empey: I would hope that the impact of the closure of St Angelo Airport on the Tourism sector would be minimal, given that the Northern Ireland Tourist Board, Derry Visitor and Convention Bureau and City of Derry Airport have been working closely with IT Ireland Tours to secure the charter flight which the company operated into St Angelo airport each summer since 1998.

I am pleased to say that from May 2002, the charter service has been successfully re-routed to the City of Derry Airport and arrangements are in place to transfer tourists to the Fermanagh area. Negotiations are continuing to consolidate and expand the service for future years.

Therefore, businesses in the area should not suffer unduly as a result of this closure.

Invest NI provides a wide range of support to manufacturing, tradeable services and tourism businesses and works closely with the Fermanagh Local Action Group, the Fermanagh Enterprise Agency, the Fermanagh Local Strategy Partnership and the Fermanagh District Council – all of whom are key players in the development and long term success of the county.

A number of major investments within the area are currently being considered. Should these investments proceed a significant number of jobs will be secured and additional jobs created.

Enron

Mrs Carson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the involvement of Enron in the development of renewable wind energy in Northern Ireland. (AQW 3637/01)

Sir Reg Empey: There is no record of any involvement by Enron in the development of renewable wind energy in Northern Ireland. However, a separate company called Enron Wind is involved with Airtricity in the proposed development of two wind farms in Northern Ireland. Earlier this month Enron Wind was taken over by a US company called General Electric and has been renamed GE Wind Power. This renamed company will be providing turbines to the two proposed wind farms at Binn Mountain, Co Tyrone and at Tappaghan Mountain, Co Fermanagh for which planning approval is currently being sought.

Wind Farm Developments: Lightning Strikes

Mrs Carson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of lightning strikes attracted by wind turbines at wind farm developments in Northern Ireland. (AQW 3638/01)

Sir Reg Empey: All wind farm developments are commercially operated and there is no requirement to record or inform Government of any lightening strikes. However according to operators, there are no instances of lightening strikes on wind turbines in Northern Ireland in the past 6 years.

ENVIRONMENT

Plastic Bags

Ms Morrice asked the Minister of the Environment, in light of the Republic of Ireland's decision to place a levy on the use of plastic bags, if he has any plans to implement a similar policy. (AQW 3626/01)

The Minister of the Environment (Mr Nesbitt): I have taken particular note of the success of the recently introduced levy on plastic carrier bags in persuading consumers in the Republic of Ireland to reduce significantly their use of plastic bags.

In the UK as a whole, around ten billion plastic bags are given away each year. That constitutes a significant source of landfill and an equally significant source of litter. Unfortunately, because taxation is an excepted matter, Northern Ireland does not have the necessary legal powers to allow the introduction of a levy here independently of the rest of the UK. I am aware that Michael Meacher at the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (DEFRA) has given notice that he intends to press for the introduction of a similar levy. I can confirm that it is my intention to support DEFRA in this, and to encourage the Welsh and Scottish Devolved Administrations to do likewise. In particular, I will raise the issue at meetings of the Environment Sector of the British-Irish Council.

In the meantime I have asked my officials to explore any options which might have an equivalent effect to the levy. They are engaging in discussions with the supermarket sector, to look at the possibility of developing a voluntary scheme to encourage consumers to reduce the current profligate use of plastic bags.

As the experience of the Republic of Ireland has shown, people are willing to act with greater environmental responsibility when given appropriate encouragement. I am hopeful that we can build constructively on the heightened public awareness of waste issues brought about by my Department's recent 'Wake up to Waste' campaign.

FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

Payment of Rates

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many households, per constituency, (i) pay their rates directly; and (ii) have their rates paid by social security. (AQW 3466/01)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Dr Farren): [holding answer 22 May 2002]: The Rate Collection Agency is responsible for the administration of Housing Benefit for those ratepayers who own and occupy their own homes. The Agency has no responsibility for award of Housing Benefit in the public or private rented sectors and accordingly the information provided relates only to the owner-occupier sector.

The Agency records information on Housing Benefit awards by District Council Area. A schedule showing the number of households by District Council Area, those receiving Housing Benefit and those paying rates direct is attached at Appendix 1.

The number of households in Appendix 1 excludes properties owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and properties that are vacant. Rates are foregone on vacant property.

Chastisement

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what assessment he has made of the impact on religious liberties of the proposal to remove the defence of reasonable chastisement for the physical punishment of children by parents included in the consultation document 'Physical Punishment in the Home - Thinking about the Issues, Looking at the Evidence'. (AQW 3538/01)

Dr Farren: The removal of the defence of reasonable chastisement was one of a number of options explored in the consultation document 'Physical Punishment in the Home - Thinking about the Issues, Looking at the Evidence'. That document considered the human rights and equality context of the debate, including the issue of religious liberty. As work following the consultation moves forward, and taking into account the consultation responses received, I shall be further considering all the human rights and equality implications of the options presented, including the implications for the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion under Article 9 of the ECHR, in the light of relevant judicial consideration of its scope.

Collection of Rates

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the total amount of rates collected from the following categories of buildings in Northern Ireland for each of the last 3 years (a) Orange Halls; (b) Apprentice Boys Halls; and (c) Hibernian Halls. (AQW 3546/01)

Dr Farren: The Rate Collection Agency is responsible for the collection of rates in Northern Ireland.

Agency records list properties by broad description with one such description being 'Hall'. There are 3600 halls listed but it is not possible to easily or comprehensively identify these as Orange Halls, Apprentice Boys Halls or Hibernian Halls.

Therefore, I regret that I am unable to supply the information as requested.

Relationship Counselling: Funding

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (a) all the organisations funded by the Executive that provide the following services (i) promoting marriage; (ii) marriage counselling; (iii) provide mediation services; and (iv) research into the causes of marital breakdown; and (b) the total funding for each service in each of the last 3 years. (AQW 3603/01)

Dr Farren: Relate NI and Accord are funded through the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety. Relate NI is a non-profitmaking, registered charity, which has been in existence for over fifty years. It provides a range of confidential services such as relationship counselling, family mediation and education and training, aimed at helping those experiencing relationship difficulties. The organisation was awarded a grant of £170,930 in 2000/01 and £175,200 in 2001/02 and in addition received a grant of £26,260 in 2001/02 to facilitate a premises assessment. The Department has made available core funding amounting to £179,580 in 2002/03.

Accord is an agency of the Catholic Church providing a nationwide service to couples preparing for or seeking a deeper commitment within the sacrament of marriage. The Department awarded Accord core funding of £68,132 in 2000/01 (plus £4,295 slippage) and £69,840 (plus £2,600 slippage) in 2001/02 and is making available a grant of £71,586 in 2002/03.

I am aware that there is much further potential for the use of family mediation services in Northern Ireland. I intend that the forthcoming Family Law Bill will contain specific provision for the courts to refer family proceedings for mediation, and the matter of encouraging further service provision is currently the subject of inter-departmental discussions.

Northern Ireland Civil Service: Nationality Requirements

Mr Maskey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what steps he is taking to address the current nationality requirements within the NICS.

(AQW 3609/01)

Dr Farren: I will continue to press the Secretary of State and his colleagues for early legislative action to amend these requirements, which the Government has acknowledged are out of date.

Local Strategy Partnership: District Council

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what measures are in place to avoid duplication between Local Strategy Partnerships and the functions of District Councils.

(AQW 3630/01)

Dr Farren: All LSPs are required to develop and agree Integrated Local Area Strategies to give a strategic context to their work. This process should ensure the development of activities that complement the work of District Councils and avoid duplication. The make up of the Local Strategy Partnerships (LSPs) also includes representatives from District Councils which together with working relationships between Councils and LSPs will avoid duplication. In addition, in the context of the delivery of Measures 3.1 and 3.2 of the PEACE Programme, they will address specific consequences of the conflict and its impact in each particular District.

Local Strategy Partnership: District Council

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what role will Local Strategy Partnerships play in respect of the statutory functions of District Councils.

(AQW 3631/01)

Dr Farren: Local Strategy Partnerships do not have a direct role in respect of the statutory functions of District Council. However, in developing a broader strategic and partnership approach, they may through their own activities complement and in this way help contribute to the wider delivery of services by local District Councils in terms of physical, economic and social regeneration in their District. It is also possible that District Councils could contract with or work in partnership with LSPs to deliver statutory services.

Peace II Programme: Funding

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what measures are in place to ensure Local Strategy Partnerships are sustainable after Peace II funding ceases.

(AQW 3632/01)

Dr Farren: Local Strategy Partnerships (LSPs) will administer significant funds from the PEACE II Programme for the implementation of the two Programme Measures (3.1 and 3.2) for which they are responsible and for the production of Integrated Local Strategies to provide the strategic context for their work. The requirement that each LSP produce an Integrated Local Strategy is one mechanism that is intended to help them become more sustainable. This will ensure that their activities are closely linked to other statutory, private and voluntary sector activities in their areas. All LSPs are also being strongly encouraged to look beyond the implementation of the two PEACE Measures for which they are responsible to influence other PEACE II and mainstream funding decisions that relate to their area. The development of this wider role is crucial to their future sustainability. Another important feature is that each LSP has been agreed at a local level and this strong partnership approach will bring benefits that can easily be recognised and will attract future roles for them.

Rates Review

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to provide an update on the current position of the Rates Review; and whether the present business exemption for manufacturing rates relief will be retained.

(AQW 3685/01)

Dr Farren: I announced in the Assembly on 27 May 2002 the launch of the Consultation Paper on the Review of Rating Policy. The consultation period ends on 16 September 2002 and the results will be analysed before any decisions are taken on the way forward including that on the future of Industrial Derating.

Civil Servants

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to provide a comparison of where civil servants live and work by District Council area. (AQW 3701/01)

Dr Farren: Information on the home and work location of NICS staff in the 11 Ministerial Departments, who are living and working in N. Ireland, as at 1 January 2002 is contained in the table on the following page.

Building Regulations Advisory Committee

Dr O'Hagan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline (a) the date the Building Regulations Advisory Committee last met; (b) the date of its next meeting; and (c) its proposed programme of work. (AQW 3702/01)

Dr Farren: The Northern Ireland Building Regulations Advisory Committee (NIBRAC) last met on 15 October 2001.

Since that meeting, NIBRAC's 3 year term of office has expired and officials are currently seeking to appoint a new committee. I expect to be in a position to appoint a reconstituted committee in the very near future. It is anticipated that the first meeting of the new committee will take place towards the end of June.

During the next 3 years the Department will be reviewing the Building Regulations (Northern Ireland) Order 1979, the Building (Prescribed Fees) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1997 and parts C, E, F and L of the Building Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2000 together with their supporting technical booklets. The views of NIBRAC will be sought at both consultation and final proposals stages in all cases.

Subsequently, the Department expects to carry out reviews of parts D, G and R of the regulations.

Coronary Heart Disease

Mr Ford asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of deaths from coronary heart disease aged between 65-74 per 100,000 population in each of the last 3 years. (AQW 3719/01)

Dr Farren: The numbers of deaths from heart disease (International Classification of Diseases, Version 9, codes 390-429), per 100,000 population for people aged 65-74, were 834, 802 and 716 in 1998, 1999 and 2000 respectively.

HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Business Support Unit

Mrs Carson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 2335/01, to detail (a) the recommendations by the Business Support Unit regarding the posts reviewed over the last 3 years; (b) the current position of those posts reviewed; (c) the grades of the posts reviewed; and (d) if there was any reduction in the duplication and bureaucracy due to the review of these posts. (AQW 2685/01)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Ms de Brún): The Business Support Unit role is to look at business needs to establish that the correct staffing numbers in terms of grading and loading are in place and to establish that the work being carried out is required to meet the business needs. It also ensures that the work is carried out in the most efficient and effective way to achieve value for money and this may identify any duplication of work and reduce bureaucracy.

Over the three year period the unit has made recommendations about the grading and loading of some 400 posts identifying where work was being carried out at too high and too low a grade. The recommendations also covered the need for additional posts and the need to increase or reduce workloads to ensure adequate job weight. Issues such as the need to cease doing work that was neither adding value nor necessary for the business and the rationalisation of work where different branches were doing similar tasks were also addressed.

The grades of posts reviewed over the last three years are as follows:

- Senior Civil Service – bands 1-9
- Administrative Assistant, Administrative Officer, Executive Officer 2 and 1,
- Staff Officer, Deputy Principal, Principal, Senior Principal
- Professional and Technical grades – Professional and Technical Officer (PTO), Higher PTO, Senior PTO, Principal PTO, Chief Clerk of Works, Clerk of Works 1 and 2, Technical Grade 1,
- Senior Pharmaceutical Officer, Pharmaceutical Officer
- Dental Officer
- Deputy Principal Accountant
- Personal Secretary
- Senior Personal Secretary
- Assistant Statistician
- Nurse Grade D

The Department does not, however, hold centrally a detailed analysis of the specific recommendations or the action which was taken.

Is é ról an Aonad Tacáíochta Gnó féachaint ar riachtanais ghnó chun a bhunú go bhfuil an líon ceart foirne ó thaobh grádála agus lódála socraithe agus a fháil amach go bhfuil gá leis an obair atáthar a dhéanamh chun freastal ar riachtanais ghnó. Cinntíonn sé freisin go bhfuil an obair á déanamh ar an mbealach is éifeachtaí agus is éifeachtúla chun luach an airgid a fháil agus d'fhéadfadh sé sin aon dúblú oibre a aithint agus maorlathas a laghdú.

Le linn na tréimhse trí bliana tá moltaí déanta ag an aonad faoi ghrádáil agus lódáil thart ar 400 post ag aithint obair a bheith á déanamh ag grád ró-ard nó ró-íseal. Chlúdaigh na moltaí freisin an gá atá le riachtanais bhreise agus an gá méadú nó laghdú a chur le hualach oibre le meáchan oibre leordhóthanach a aithint. Tugadh aghaidh ar cheisteanna freisin faoin ngá éirí as obair nach raibh ag cur luach breise ar fáil nó nár ghá don ghnó agus réasúnú oibre sa chás go raibh brainsí éagsúla ag déanamh tascanna cosúil le chéile.

Seo a leanas grádanna na bpost a athbhreithníodh le trí bliana anuas:

- An Státseirbhís Sinsearach - bandaí 1-9
- Cúntóir Riaracháin, Oifigeach Riaracháin, Oifigeach Feidhmiúcháin 2 agus 1, Oifigeach Foirne, Leas-Cheannasaí, Ceannasaí, Ceannasaí Sinsearach.

Diabetes

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if the new diabetic drug Losartan is available through the NHS and on which occasions is it prescribed. (AQW 2879/01)

Ms de Brún: Losartan was first licensed for use in the treatment of hypertension (high blood pressure) in 1994. It is available on prescription here in different strengths and in combination with another medicine. It is not licensed for the prevention of diabetic complications. However, it may be beneficial for certain patients who have both diabetes and hypertension. The choice of medicines used in the overall management of a diabetic patient, is a clinical one taking account of the needs of the individual patient and evidence of effectiveness.

In order to prevent or delay the risk of complications, which can arise from diabetes, it is essential that there is close control of both blood sugar levels and blood pressure.

Rinneadh ceadúnú ar dtús ar Losartan chun cóireáil a dhéanamh ar hipeartheannas (ardbhrú fola) in 1994. Bhí sé ar fáil ar oideas anseo i láidreachtaí áirithe agus i gcomhar le míochaine eile. Níl sé ceadúnaithe chun castachtaí diabiatais a chosc. D'fhéadfadh leas a bheith ann áfach do roinnt othar a mbíonn diabiatas agus hipeartheannas araon ag gabháil dóibh. Is rogha clínicíúil an rogha míochaine a mbaintear leas astu do bhainistíocht iomlán othair le diabiatas a thugann aird ar riachtanais aonair an othair agus ar fhianaise a n-éifeachta.

Chun riosca castachtaí a chosc nó a mhoilliú, cinn is féidir teacht as diabia teas tá sé riachtanach go gcoinnítear dianrialú ar leibhéil siúcra san fhuil agus ar bhrú fola.

Provision of Wheelchairs

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what criteria are used by the health service in the allocation of (a) wheelchairs and (b) electrically powered (i) indoor and (ii) outdoor chairs. (AQW 3247/01)

Ms de Brún: My Department's Policy for the provision of Wheelchairs is:

"A person should be provided with a wheelchair if he or she is permanently disabled and requires the use of a wheelchair on a regular basis and is assessed by an occupational therapist as meeting agreed criteria".

The Eligibility Criteria for provision of particular wheelchairs are developed by the Commissioning Trusts and by the Regional Wheelchair Forum. Details have been placed in the Assembly Library.

Is é polasaí mo Roinne i dtaobh soláthar Cathaoireacha Rotha ná:

"Ba chóir cathaoir rotha a chur ar fáil do dhuine má tá sé nó sí míchumasach go buan agus úsáid cathaoir rotha de dhíth ar bhonn rialta agus go gcomhlíonann siad na critéir i ndiaidh do theiripeoir saothair measúnú a dhéanamh orthu."

Forbraíonn na hIontaobhais Choimisiúnaithe agus an Fóram Réigiúnach Cathaoireacha Rotha na Critéir Theidlíochta do chathaoireacha rotha ar leith. Cuireadh na sonraí i Leabharlann an Tionóil.

Scoliosis

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is the comparison in cost of sending a surgical team and patient to Scotland for treatment of Scoliosis with having the treatment carried out in Northern Ireland. (AQW 3255/01)

Ms de Brún: Scoliosis surgery here is carried out at Greenpark Health Care Trust and the Royal Group of Hospitals Trust.

The average cost per patient for 2000/01 was £6093 at Greenpark and £7600 (paediatric) at the RVH.

In an effort to reduce waiting times for clinically urgent patients, arrangements have been made for a small number of patients to travel to another unit for surgery. The estimated cost per patient is £23,260.

Déantar máinliacht scolóise anseo in Iontaobhas Cúraim Sláinte Greenpark agus in Iontaobhas Ospidéal an Ghrúpa Ríoga.

Ba é an meánchostas i 2000/01 in aghaidh an othair ná £6093 i Greenpark agus £7600 (péidiatraic) i Otharlann Ríoga Victoiria.

In iarracht chun amanna feithimh a laghdú d'othair faoi phráinn clinice tá socrúithe déanta chun go mbeidh líon beag othar ábalta taisteal chuig aonad eile do mháinliacht. Is é an costas meastaithe in aghaidh an othair ná £23,260.

Ulster Hospital

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when will the new wards be opened and available for use at the Ulster Hospital. (AQW 3257/01)

Ms de Brún: When I announced my endorsement of the Ulster Hospital Strategic Development Plan (SDP) in July 2001, I also approved the business case for the reinstatement of 20 adult inpatient beds in Jaffe Ward. This was the first of 9 projects comprising Phase 2 of the SDP, to address critical capacity and continuity issues. The beds should be available by November 2002.

Also included in Phase 2 is a business case to create an additional 48 beds, 20 in Ward 12 and 28 in the Care of the Elderly Unit. My officials are working actively with the Trust and the Eastern Health and Social Services Board to conclude the business case process. I am hopeful that the Trust will be given approval to proceed with the project soon. That being the case the 20 additional beds in Ward 12 should be available by April 2004 and the 28 in the Care of the Elderly Unit by June 2005.

Nuair a d'fhógair mé formhuiniú Phlean Forbartha Straitéiseach Otharlann Uladh (PFS) mí Iúil 2001, cheadaigh mé cás gnó le haghaidh 20 leaba aosach othar cónaitheach a thabhairt ar ais chuig Barda Jaffe. Ba é seo an chéad tionscadal de 9 tionscadal ina raibh Céim 2 den PFS ann, mar atá tabhairt faoi ghéaracmhainn agus ceistanna leanúnachais. Ba chóir go mbeadh na leapacha ar fáil faoi Shamhain 2002.

Áirítear chomh maith i gCéim 2 cás gnó chun 48 leaba bhreise a chruthú, 20 acu i mBarda 12 agus 28 agus Aonad Chúram na Sean. Tá mo chuid oifigeach ag obair go gníomhach leis an Iontaobhas agus le Bord Sláinte agus Seirbhísí Sóisialta an Iarthair leis an chás gnó a thabhairt i gcrích. Tá súil agam go dtabharfaí cead don Iontaobhas leanúint ar aghaidh leis an tionscadal gan mhoill. Más é sin mar atá ba chóir don 20 leaba bhreise i mBarda 12 bheith ar fáil faoi Aibreán 2004 agus 28 in Aonad Chúram na Sean faoi Mheitheamh 2005.

Maternal Alcohol Consumption

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the research currently being undertaken on the effects of maternal alcohol consumption on the health of the foetus. (AQW 3307/01)

Ms de Brún: The Department is not currently funding any research specifically into the effects of maternal alcohol consumption on the health of the foetus.

Níl an Roinn ag maoiniú sainthaighde ar bith faoi láthair ar thionchair ólachán alcóil na máthar ar shláinte an fhéateas.

Laboratory Services

Mrs Carson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) the cost to the Southern Health and Social Services Board of laboratory services at South Tyrone Hospital for the three year period before transfer to Craigavon Area Hospital and (b) the cost of provision of laboratory services to Southern Health and Social Services Board since the transfer of laboratory services to Craigavon Area Hospital. (AQW 3330/01)

Ms de Brún:

(a) The cost to the Southern Health and Social Services Board of laboratory services at South Tyrone Hospital for the three year period before it was transferred to Craigavon Area Hospital was:

• 1998/99	£414,906
• 1999/00	£373,971
• 2000/01	£342,106

(b) The cost of provision of laboratory services to the Southern Health and Social Services Board since the transfer to Craigavon Area Hospital in 2001/02 is £169,202.

- (a) Is é an costas a bhí ar Bhord Sláinte agus Seirbhísí Sóisialta an Deiscirt i leith seirbhísí saotharlainne ag Ospidéal Dheisceart Thír Eoghain don tréimhse trí bliana roimh an aistriú go hOspidéal Limistéar Craigavon ná:
- 1998/99 £414,906
 - 1999/00 £373,971
 - 2000/01 £342,106
- (b) Is é costas na seirbhísí saotharlainne ar Bhord Sláinte agus Seirbhísí Sóisialta an Deiscirt ó thráth an aistrithe go hOspidéal Limistéar Craigavon in 2001/02 ná £169,202.

Peanut Allergy

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) the number of people who have a peanut allergy; and (b) any measures used to highlight associated problems. (AQW 3341/01)

Ms de Brún:

- (a) The information requested is not available.
- (b) The Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment (COT) has delivered two major reports on food allergy to Government. A report on peanut allergy, published in 1988 and a major report on food intolerance & allergy was published in July 2000. The Food Standards Agency has published leaflets aimed at the catering sector to raise awareness of food allergy. The Agency has recently commissioned research to look at problems associated with foods sold loose at catering establishments. The Agency has research work in progress looking at the problems associated with the use of advisory labelling of nuts. Proposals to make important changes to the rules on food labelling are under discussion in the European Commission. The Food Standards Agency has been instrumental in bringing these proposals forward. The changes are aimed at ensuring all consumers are given comprehensive ingredient listing information, and people with food allergies are able to identify ingredients they may need to avoid.
- (a) Ní an t-eolas a heiliodh ar fáil.
- (b) Tá an Coiste ar Thocsaineacht Ceimicí i mBia, Tairgí Tomhaltóirí agus Comshaoil tar éis dhá thuairisc mhóra ar ailléirge bia a sheachadadh don rialtas. Foilsíodh tuairisc ar ailléirge pise talún i 1988 agus mórthuairisc ar choll bia agus ailléirge in Iúil 2000. Tá bileoga eolais foilsithe ag an nGníomhaireacht um Chaighdeán Bia atá dírithe ar an earnáil lónadóireachta chun feasacht maidir le ailléirge bia a ardú. Tá taighde coimisinúnaithe ag an nGníomhaireacht le gairid chun féachaint ar fhadhbanna a bhaineann le bia a dhíoltar leo féin in ionaid chócaireachta. Tá obair thaighde ar siúl ag an nGníomhaireacht chun féachaint ar na fadhbanna a bhaineann le húsáid na lipéidí comhairleacha ar chnónna. Tá moltaí chun athruithe tábhachtacha a dhéanamh ar rialacha a bhaineann le lipéadú á bplé i gCoimisiún na hEorpa. Tá ról lárnach ag an nGníomhaireacht um Chaighdeán Bia i dtabhairt chun cinn na moltaí seo. Tá na hathruithe dírithe ar a chinntiú go bhfuil eolas cuimsitheach ar liosta comhábhar ar fáil do gach tomhaltóir agus go mbeidh daoine le ailléirgí bia in ann comhábhair nach mór dóibh a sheachaint a aithint.

Food Safety Legislation

Mr Carrick asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) if she is aware of inconsistencies by local authorities in applying Environmental Health legislation within the (i) food manufacturing; and (ii) processing industry; and to make a statement.

(AQW 3391/01)

Ms de Brún: I am not aware of any such inconsistencies. However the Food Standards Agency, which has responsibility for the preparation of food safety legislation, has also a key role in overseeing district council food law enforcement and has been instrumental in the introduction of measures intended to ensure high standards and consistency of application.

The Agency, with the co-operation of local authorities in Great Britain and here, has developed a framework agreement on Food Law Enforcement by which the Agency sets and monitors standards of enforcement by district councils as well as regularly auditing their performance.

Nílímse ar an eolas maidir le haon neamhréireachtaí den chineál sin. Tá ról tábhachtach ag an nGníomhaireacht Caighdeán Bia, a bhfuil sé de fhreagracht uirthi reachtaíocht sábháilteachta bia a ullmhú, maoirsiú a dhéanamh ar fheidhmiú dlí bia chomhairle ceantair, agus bhí páirt lárnach ag an nGníomhaireacht i mbearta a thabharit isteach chun ardchaighdeán agus leanúnachas maidir le feidhmiúchán a chinntiú.

Trí chomhoibriú le húdaráis áitiúla sa Bhreatain Mhór agus anseo tá comhaontú creatoibre ar Fheidhmiú Dlí Bia forbraithe ag an nGníomhaireacht trína leagan an Ghníomhaireacht amach caighdeán fheidhmithe na gcomhairlí ceantair agus a ndéanann sí monatóireacht orthu chomh maith le hiniúchadh a dhéanamh ar a bhfeidhmíocht.

National Health Service

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) the number of vacancies currently existing in each of the clinical professions in the National Health Service; and (b) the shortfall that exists between the current number and the target needed for each. (AQW 3401/01)

Ms de Brún:

- (a) The following vacancy information is the most recent date available to the Department:

VACANCY INFORMATION

	Date of Information	Total Number of Vacancies
Speech and Language Therapy	June 2001	51
Occupational Therapy	September 2001	53
Physiotherapy	December 2001	42
Radiography	December 2001	37

- (b) Health and Social Services Boards and Trusts are responsible for ensuring that there are sufficient staff to provide the level of service to meet the assessed need of their populations. However, in order to address recruitment and retention issues throughout the HPSS, my Department is engaged in a workforce planning initiative that will produce detailed plans for each of the main health and personal social services groups. These plans will inform future decisions on student intake levels.

- (a) Is é an t-eolas folúntais seo a leanas an dáta is déanaí atá ar fáil don Roinn:

EOLAS FOLÚNTAIS

	Dáta an Eolais	Líon iomlán follúntas
Teiripe Urlabhra agus Teanga	Meitheamh 2001	51
Teiripe Shaothair	Meán Fómhair 2001	53
Fisiteiripe	Nollaig 2001	42
Radagrafaíocht	Nollaig 2001	37

- (b) Tá Iontaobhais agus Boird Sláinte agus Seirbhísí Sóisialta freagrach as a chinntiú go mbíonn dóthain foirne ann chun an leibhéal seirbhíse a sholáthar chun freastal ar riachtanas measta na bpobal. Ionas gur féidir tabhairt faoi cheisteanna earcaíocta agus coimeádta ar fud an SSSP, áfach, tá mo Roinnse i mbun tionscnaimh phleanála fórsa saothair a chuirfidh pleananna mionsonraithe ar fáil do gach ceann de na príomhghrúpaí sláinte agus seirbhísí pearsanta sóisialta. Tabharfaidh na pleananna seo faisnéis ar chinn amach anseo ar leibhéal ionghabhála mac léinn.

Teenage Pregnancy and Parenthood

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the total expenditure allocated as a result of the ‘Myths and Reality’ report published by her Department in November 2000. (AQW 3439/01)

Ms de Brún: My Department made available a funding package of £250,000 in 2001/02 for projects aimed at reducing unplanned teenage pregnancy and supporting young parents. The Department is allocating £300,000 in this financial year towards implementing the “Teenage Pregnancy and Parenthood” Strategy and Action Plan.

Chuir mo Roinn pacáiste airgid de £250,000 ar fáil i 2001/02 do thionscadail a bhfuil sé de chuspóir acu toircheas neamhphleanáilte i measc déagóirí a laghdú agus tacú le tuismitheoirí óga. Tá an Roinn ag dáileadh £300,000 sa bhliain airgeadais seo le Straitéis agus Plean Gníomhaíochta “Toircheas agus Tuismíocht Déagóra” a chur i bhfeidhm.

Teenage Pregnancy and Parenthood

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the PSI working group tackling the problems of teenage parenthood.

(AQW 3440/01)

Ms de Brún: My Department issued the Report of a Working Group on Teenage Pregnancy and Parenthood entitled “Myths and Reality” for public consultation in November 2000. Following the consultation, a Working Group was established to consider the responses and develop the Strategy and Action Plan. The Group is currently finalising the document which is due to be published next month.

Chuir mo Roinn amach Tuairisc an Ghrúpa Oibre ar Thoircheas agus ar Thuismíocht Déagóra dar theideal “Miotais agus an Réalachas” le haghaidh comhairlithe phoiblí i Samhain 2000. I ndiaidh an chomhairlithe, bunaíodh Grúpa Oibre le machnamh a dhéanamh ar na freagraí agus leis an Straitéis agus an Phlean Gnímh a fhorbairt. Faoi láthair, tá an Grúpa ag cur na dlaoi mullaigh ar an cháipéis atá le foilsiú an mhí seo chugainn.

Omagh Day Centre

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to make a statement on the availability of places at Omagh Day Centre for Young Adults with special needs. (AQW 3473/01)

Ms de Brún: Sperrin Lakeland Health and Social Services Trust has advised that there are currently 75 places in Omagh Day Centre, 20 of which are in the Special Needs Unit. The Trust advises that there is currently one person waiting for a place in the Day Centre. An allocation of funds from the Western Health and Social Services Board to meet ‘in year’ pressures will be used to address this need.

My Department’s Priorities for Action 2002/03 requires Boards and Trusts to continue to expand the provision of day care and respite care places for people with a learning disability.

Some of the additional funding allocated to Health and Social Services Boards for the development of community services in 2002/03 will be available for this purpose.

Tá sé curtha in iúl ag Seirbhísí Sóisialta agus Sláinte Lakeland Sperrin go bhfuil faoi láthair 75 áit in Ionad Lae na hÓmaí, 20 acu ata san Aonad do Riachtanais Speisialta. Tá sé curtha in iúl ag an Iontaobhas go bhfuil, faoi láthair, duine amháin ag fanacht le háit san Ionad Lae. Bainfear leas as leithdháileadh cistí ón mBord Seirbhísí Sóisialta agus Sláinte an Iarthair chun freastal ar bhrúnna “laistigh den bhliain seo” chun tabhairt faoin riachtanas seo.

Éilíonn Tosaíochtaí do Ghníomh 2002/03 mo Roinnse go leanfadh Boird agus Iontaobhais ag leathnú soláthar áiteanna cúraim lae agus cúraim faoisimh do dhaoine faoi mhíchumas foghlama.

Beidh roinnt den mhaoiniú breise a leithdháileadh do Bhoird Seirbhísí Sóisialta agus Sláinte d’fhorbhairt seirbhísí pobail i 2002/03 ar fáil dó seo.

Local Health and Social Care Groups: Appointments/Nominations

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline if the process for appointment/nomination of members to local health and social care groups, whilst as open and inclusive as possible, will ensure that the system attracts people with the most appropriate competencies. (AQW 3530/01)

Ms de Brún: Health and Social Services Boards are charged with the responsibility of establishing the Management Boards of the new Local Health and Social Care Groups. Guidance issued by my Department on 12 February 2002 on the arrangements for selecting Management Board members for the new Groups stressed the need to appoint those best suited to the job. To this end, Boards were required to draw up a competency framework taking account of the Local Health and Social Care Group Management Board roles outlined in the guidance. In the nomination or selection of members for the Management Boards, a common job description and personnel specification was used. A competency-based series of questions were used at interviews to identify those candidates with the knowledge, skills and experience to successfully carry out the job.

Tá an fhreagracht ar Bhoird Seirbhísí Sóisialta Boird Bhainistíochta na nGrúpaí nua Sláinte Áitiúla agus Chúram Shóisialta a bhunú. Leag an treoir a d’eisigh mo Roinnse an 12 Feabhra 2002 béim ar na socruithe do roghnú comhaltaí do Bhord Bainistíochta do na Grúpaí nua chun iad is siúd is oiriúnaí don obair a cheapadh. Chuige sin éilíodh ar na Boird creat inniúlachta a tharraing aníos ag glacadh san áireamh rólanna Bhord Bainistíochta Ghrúpaí Sláinte Áitiúla agus Chúraim Shóisialta mar atá leagtha amach sa Treoir. Agus comhaltaí don Bhord Bainistíochta á roghnú nó á n-ainmniú baineadh leas as tuairisc poist nó sonraíocht phearsanra choitianta. Baineadh leas as sraith ceisteanna bunaithe ar inniúlacht ag agallamh chun teacht ar na hiarrthóirí sin leis an eolas, na scileanna agus an taithí le go n-éireodh leo an obair a dhéanamh.

Rheumatoid Arthritis

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) the number of sufferers of rheumatoid arthritis who have requested the use of Enbrel in each of the last 2 years; (b) the number of sufferers who have been prescribed Enbrel; and (c) to make a statement on her plans to make Enbrel available to all rheumatoid arthritis sufferers. (AQW 3547/01)

Ms de Brún:

- (a) This information is not available. Anti-TNF drug treatments such as Enbrel are not made available on request, but only after a full assessment of the patient’s condition by a consultant rheumatologist.
- (b) The number of patients currently prescribed Enbrel and Remicade is 99.
- (c) Rheumatologists here have had the opportunity to prescribe this treatment for appropriate patients since November 1999.

The approach adopted here to the prescribing of these specialist drugs for the treatment of adults with severe rheumatoid arthritis and children with juvenile idiopathic arthritis, is broadly in line with recent recommendations made by the National Institute of Clinical Excellence. While NICE has endorsed the use of these drugs within clearly defined guidelines, it has identified the need for further assessment to determine their long-term clinical effectiveness.

A recent report by rheumatologists here has also concluded that while these drugs represent a major advancement in the treatment of this illness, it is essential that their use should continue to be strictly controlled and monitored, particularly in light of possible serious adverse effects. My Department is continuing to work with Boards and clinicians to promote a cautious approach to their introduction, within the resources available.

- (a) Níl an t-eolas seo ar fáil. Ní chuirtear cóireáil le drugaí fhrith-TNF amhail Enbrel ar fáil ar iarratas ach i ndiaidh do réamaiteolaí comhairleach measúnú iomlán a dhéanamh ar riocht an othair.
- (b) 99 is ea líon na n-othar a dtugtar na hoidis Enbrel agus Remicade dóibh faoi láthair.
- (c) Bhí an deis ag réamaiteolaithe anseo an chóireáil seo a shocrú d’othair chóra ó Shamhain 1999.

Tá an modh oibre a dhéantar anseo i dtaca le hordú na saindrugaí seo le daoine fásta a bhfuil airtríteas géar scoiltigh orthu agus le páistí a bhfuil airtríteas ideapaiteach don óige orthu a chóireáil, go ginearálta de réir na moltaí déanta ag an Institiúid Náisiúnta um Fheabhas Cliniciúil (NICE) ar na mallaibh. Cé gur aontaigh NICE le húsáid na ndrugaí seo laistigh de shainthreoirlínte soiléire, chuir sí béim ar an ghá le tuilleadh measúnuithe a dhéanamh lena dtionchar cliniciúil fadtéarmach a fháil amach.

Chríochnaigh tuairisc déanta ag réamaiteolaithe ar na mallaibh fosta cé gur cruthúnas iad na drugaí seo ar an dul chun cinn mór atá déanta i gcóireáil an tinnis seo, tá sé riachtanach gur cheart a n-úsáid a stiúradh go dian agus monatóireacht dhian a dhéanamh orthu go fóill, go háirithe agus ag cuimhneamh ar na seachthorthaí dochracha féideartha. Tá mo Roinn ag obair go fóill le Boird agus le dochtúirí chun modh cúramach oibre dá dtionscnamh a chur chun cinn, laistigh de na hacmhainní ar fáil.

Reinvestment and Reform Initiative

Mr McGrady asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the type of health and social services projects eligible for funding from the investment initiative announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in Belfast on Thursday 2 May 2002.

(AQW 3561/01)

Ms de Brún: The Reinvestment and Reform Initiative represents a significant and much-needed opportunity to increase our capital budget. As a result of years of underinvestment, the HPSS has a large backlog of essential maintenance and refurbishment work, together with a need to construct new facilities and procure modern equipment for twenty-first century standards of treatment and care. In my initial bid for RRI money, I am including both types of work. Among the new facilities for which I shall be seeking funding will be the Cancer Centre.

Tugann an Tionscnamh Athinfheistíochta agus Athchóirithe deis shuntasach a bhfuil géarghá léi lenár mbúiséad caipitil a mhéadú. Mar thoradh ar na blianta easpa infheistíochta, tá riaráiste mór d'obair éigeantach chothabhála agus dheisiúcháin ann, chomh maith leis an ghá le háiseanna nua a thógáil agus trealamh nua-aimseartha a fhóireann do chaighdeán chóireála agus chúraim an aonú haois fichid a fháil. Iniata le m'iarratas d'airgead TTA, tá mé ag cur an dá cineál oibre san áireamh. Beidh an tAonad Ailse i measc na n-áiseanna nua a mbeidh mé ag cuardach maoinithe dó.

Royal Victoria Hospital: Accounts

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the total number of invoices remaining unpaid to suppliers to the Royal Victoria Hospital for (i) 30 days after receipt; (ii) 45 days after receipt; (iii) 60 days after receipt; and to make a statement on the performance of the Accounts Department of the Royal Victoria Hospital in the payment of invoices received from suppliers. (AQW 3577/01)

Ms de Brún: During the month of March 2002, the total number of invoices remaining unpaid to suppliers to the Royal Victoria Hospital were as follows:

- (i) 30 days after receipt – 4018 (or 42.6% of invoices)
- (ii) 45 days after receipt – 2127 (or 22.6% of invoices)
- (iii) 60 days after receipt – 1347 (or 14.3% of invoices)

The majority of purchases by the Royal Group of Hospitals are made under standard contracts, which affirm the Trust's obligation to pay suppliers at the end of the month following the month in which the invoice is received or the goods are delivered, whichever is the later. Under these standard terms, payment to suppliers will be due anywhere between 30 and 61 days.

The Department monitors the performance of all Trusts in relation to prompt payments on a monthly basis and has raised the prompt payment performance of the Royal Group of Hospitals with its senior management. Improvements have been achieved in the last year but further improvements are necessary and the Department will be monitoring this in the course of 2002/03.

I rith mhí an Mhárta 2002, seo a leanas méid na sonrasc nár íocadh go fóill do sholáthraithe Otharlann Ríoga Victeoiria:

- (i) 30 lá i ndiaidh a nglactha – 4018 (nó 42.6% de shonraisc)
- (ii) 45 lá i ndiaidh a nglactha – 2127 (nó 22.6% de shonraisc)
- (iii) 60 lá i ndiaidh a nglactha – 1347 (nó 14.3% de shonraisc)

Tá bunús na n-earraí ceannaithe ag Grúpa Ríoga na nOtharlann ceannaithe faoi ghnáthchonarthaí, a dheimhníonn dualgas an Iontaobhais na soláthraithe a íoc ag deireadh na míosa i ndiaidh na míosa ina bhfaightear an sonrasc nó ina seachadtar na hearraí, cibé ceann is moille. De réir na ngnáth-théarmaí seo, íocfar soláthraithe ag am ar bith idir 30 agus 61 lá.

Déanann an Roinn monatóireacht ar fheidhmiú na nIontaobhas go léir i dtaca le híocaíochtaí láithreacha in aghaidh na míosa agus chuir sí feidhmiú Ghrúpa Ríoga na nOtharlann le híocaíochtaí láithreacha a dhéanamh i dtreis lena bhainistíocht shinsearach. Baineadh amach feabhsuithe sa bhliain seo a chuaigh thart ach tá tuilleadh feabhsuithe de dhíth go fóill agus beidh an Roinn ag déanamh monatóireachta orthu seo i rith 2002/03.

Ards Community Hospital

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why was the flag-pole and flag removed from the Ards Community Hospital.

(AQW 3583/01)

Ms de Brún: The flagpole was removed due to deterioration and damage in an act of vandalism. I understand it will be replaced as soon as possible.

Baineadh an crann brataí ar shiúl mar thoradh ar mheath agus ar dhamáiste de dheasca gníomh loitiméireachta. De réir mar a thuigim déanfaidh é a athsholáthar a luaithe is féidir.

Consultants: Waiting Lists

Mr Gibson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people were waiting 13 weeks or more to see a consultant at (a) 31 March 2002; and (b) 31 March 1997.

(AQW 3587/01)

Ms de Brún: I refer the Member to my answer to AQW 3520/01.

Treoraím an Ball do mo fhreagra a thug mé ar AQW 3520/01.

Sure Start

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the steps taken to strengthen family life since devolution.

(AQW 3598/01)

Ms de Brún: The main initiative taken to help strengthen family life since the establishment of the institutions has been the introduction of the Sure Start programme. Sure Start recognises the importance of children and families and aims to strengthen families by encouraging early bonding between parents and their children. One of the core services to be provided under any Sure Start project is “support for families and parents.”

The Sure Start programme aims to help parents develop more confidence in their own abilities and respond to their children more positively. By learning better parenting skills, parents can help to improve their child’s health and educational attainment, as well as their own confidence and self-esteem.

Is é an príomhghníomh a rinneadh le saol teaghlaigh a neartú ó bunaíodh na hinstiúidí ná tionscnamh na scéime Sure Start. Aithníonn Sure Start tábhacht pháistí agus teaghlach agus tá sí d’aidhm aici páistí agus teaghlaigh a neartú trí cheangal luath idir tuismitheoirí agus a bpáistí a spreagadh. Is í ceann de na croisheirbhísí atá le soláthar faoi scéim Sure Start ar bith “tacaíocht do theaghlaigh agus do thuismitheoirí”.

Tá sí d’aidhm ag an scéim Sure Start cuidiú le tuismitheoirí níos mó muiníne a bheith acu ina gcumais féin agus freagairt níos dearfaí dá bpáistí. Trí níos fearr scileanna tuismíochta a fhoghlaim, is féidir le tuismitheoirí sláinte agus éachtaí oideachais a bpáiste a fheabhsú, agus a bhféinmhuinín agus a bhféinmheas a fheabhsú chomh maith.

Family and Parenting Institute

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to make a statement on the Executive’s views on the work of the Family and Parenting Institute which seeks to increase the profile of parenting and encourage the development of support for all parents.

(AQW 3599/01)

Ms de Brún: The Executive has never specifically addressed the work of this group.

Ní dheachaigh Coiste an Fheidhmiúcháin i ngleic le hobair an ghrúpa seo ar bhonn leithleach riamh.

Prescription Charges

Ms Morrice asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if she will consider extending help with prescription charges to people with incomes just above the exemption level, similar to her Ministerial counterpart in Wales; and to make a statement.

(AQW 3604/01)

Ms de Brún: My Ministerial counterpart in Wales has not extended help with prescription charges in the manner that you have suggested, and I understand there are no plans to do so. However, the National Assembly for Wales decided in April 2001 not to increase their prescription charges, but to hold them at £6 for a period of 3 years, and also to extend exemption to all persons under the age of 25. I do not intend to extend Health Service prescription charge exemptions here in such a way. Almost 90% of all Health Service prescription items are dispensed free of charge here. Also, patients who need regular medication can make considerable savings by purchasing a pre-payment certificate to obtain as many prescription items as necessary for a set fee.

Níor thionscain mo chomhghleacaí Aireachta sa Bhreatain Bheag cuidiú le táillí oidis a íoc sa dóigh ar mhaigh tú, agus tuigim nach bhfuil sé beartaithe sin a dhéanamh. Chinn Tionól Náisiúnta na Breataine in Aibreán 2001, áfach, gan a dtáillí oidis a mhéadú, ach iad a choinneáil ar £6 ar feadh tréimhse 3 bliain, agus gach uile dhuine faoi 25 bliain d’aois a shaoradh uathu chomh maith. Níl sé ar intinn agam díolúintí ó tháillí oideas na Seirbhíse Sláinte a thionscnamh anseo ar a leithéid de dhóigh. Tugtar amach beagnach agus 90% d’oidis na Seirbhíse Sláinte saor in aisce anseo. Is féidir le hothair a bhfuil cógas rialta de dhíth orthu cuid mhór airgid a choigilt fosta trí theastas réamhiocaíochta a cheannach a ligfidh dóibh a mhéad oideas a bheidh de dhíth orthu a cheannach ar tháille shocraithe.

GP Fundholding

Mr Berry asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of staff employed by GP fundholding who have been successful in securing other employment as a result of contacting the Department's Redeployment Unit. (AQW 3605/01)

Ms de Brún: The Redeployment Unit is not operated by the Department, but by the Central Services Agency. It provides a mechanism whereby staff who may potentially be made redundant due to the ending of GP fundholding may register their details with a view to re-employment in the Health and Personal Social Services. I understand that to date 6 staff previously employed within GP fundholding have taken up new positions within the HPSS, as a result of registering with the Redeployment Unit.

Níl An tAonad Athlonnaithe faoi stiúir na Roinne, ach faoin Lárgníomhaireacht Seirbhísí. Cuireann sé meicníocht ar fáil sa dóigh go dtig le hoibrithe, ar féidir go ndéanfar iomarcach iad mar thoradh ar dheireadh curtha le cisteshealbhú GDanna, a sonraí a chlárú le haghaidh athfhostaithe sna Seirbhísí Sláinte agus Sóisialta Pearsanta. De réir mar a thuigim, go nuige seo ghlac 6 oibrí a d'oibrigh laistigh de chisteshealbhú GDanna le poist nua laistigh den SSSP, mar thoradh ar chlárú leis an Aonad Athlonnaithe.

Chronic Fatigue Syndrome/ME

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what assessment can she make of the medical provision for sufferers of Chronic Fatigue Syndrome/ME. (AQW 3610/01)

Ms de Brún: The broad range of symptoms and disabilities associated with this condition means that to address sufferers' needs, care must be determined on an individual basis. Close co-operation between patients, carers and the relevant health and social care professionals is therefore essential for ensuring that sufferers obtain the most suitable treatment for their needs.

Is é is ciall leis an an réimse leathan airíonna agus míchumas bainteach leis an riocht seo nach mór cúram a shocrú de réir an duine aonair le freastal ar riachtanais an fhulangaithe. Mar sin de, tá comhoibriú dlúth idir othair, feighlithe agus na gairmithe cuí sláinte agus cúraim shóisialta riachtanach le cinntiú go bhfaighidh fulangaithe an chóireáil is fóirsteanáí dá gcuid riachtanas.

Chronic Fatigue Syndrome/ME

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if Chronic Fatigue Syndrome/ME is treated as a recognised illness. (AQW 3612/01)

Ms de Brún: I recognise that Chronic Fatigue Syndrome/ME is an illness which can vary across a broad spectrum of symptoms and disabilities, and acknowledge the difficulties faced by clinicians and patients alike as a result of the lack of specific disease markers and a clear understanding of the cause and disease process.

Close co-operation between patients, carers and the relevant health and social care professionals is therefore essential for ensuring that sufferers obtain the most suitable treatment for their needs.

Aithním gur féidir le hairíonna agus le míchumais éagsúla bheith bainteach leis an tinneas Siondróm Ainsealach Tuirse/ME, agus aithním na deacrachtaí atá ag dochtúirí agus ag othair araon de dheasca na heaspa sainairíonna ar leith bainteach leis an ghalair agus an easpa tuisceana soiléire ar chúis agus ar phróiseas an ghalair.

Mar sin de, tá comhoibriú dlúth idir othair, feighlithe, agus na gairmithe cuí sláinte agus cúraim shóisialta riachtanach le cinntiú go bhfaighidh fulangaithe an chóireáil is fóirsteanáí dá gcuid riachtanas.

Orthopaedic Services

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps she is taking to address the waiting lists for those needing orthopaedic operations. (AQW 3613/01)

Ms de Brún: There has been a general increase in demand over recent years for orthopaedic services, and waiting lists have grown as a result. A number of measures are being taken to deal with this increase in demand, including increasing the number of orthopaedic surgeons in training and purchasing operations in Scotland.

My Department, in liaison with Boards and Trusts, is also exploring options for increasing theatre capacity for orthopaedic surgery, and for ensuring that existing facilities are used to maximum efficiency.

Le blianta beaga anuas bhí meadú ginearálta éilimh ar sheirbhísí ortaipéideacha, agus d'fhás liostaí feithimh dá bharr seo. Táthar ag cur i bhfeidhm roinnt beart le dul i ngleic leis an mheadú ar an éileamh seo, ina measc táthar ag cur le líon na máinlianna ortaipéideacha i dtraenáil agus obráidí a cheannach in Albain.

Tá an Roinn s'agam, i gcomhar le Boird agus le hlontaobhais, ag fiosrú roghanna le hacmhainn obrádlainne don mháinliacht ortaipéideach a mheadú, agus le cinntiú go mbaintear éifeachtúlacht is mó as na háiseanna atá ann cheana.

Hospital Cleanliness

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) her assessment of the standard of cleanliness in Health Service hospitals; and

(b) how individual hospitals are assessed in regard to standard of cleanliness. (AQW 3641/01)

Ms de Brún:

(a) All Trusts have a duty to ensure that high standards of cleanliness in hospitals are being met and maintained. As levels of cleanliness vary between hospitals, my Department is currently working with the service to develop a common set of standards to which all Trusts will have to adhere.

(b) Regular inspections on the standards of hospital cleanliness are carried out by Trusts.

(a) Tá dualgas ar gach Iontaobhas le cinnítú go mbíonn glaineacht d'ardchaighdeán bainteach amach in otharlanna agus go gcoinnítear sin. Toisc go mbíonn éagsúlacht de ghlaimeacht ann idir otharlanna, tá an Roinn s'agam ag obair leis an tseirbhís chun caighdeán choitianta a fhorbairt nach mór do gach Iontaobhas cloí leo.

(b) Déanann Iontaobhais cigireacht rialta ar chaighdeán ghlaimeacht otharlainne.

Alcohol/Drug Misuse

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much funding was allocated by each Health Board for schemes to tackle (i) alcohol misuse; and (ii) drug misuse in each of the last 3 years. (AQW 3655/01)

Ms de Brún: The information requested is not available.

Navigator Blue

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 3063/01, to detail the goods and services for which credit notes totalling £102,803.08 have been issued by Navigator Blue. (AQW 3676/01)

Ms de Brún: Details of the goods and services for which Navigator Blue issued credit notes are shown below. The majority of the credit notes were issued by Navigator Blue due to amounts paid for Fire Safety advertising being subsequently reduced by receipt of sponsorship funding and V.A.T. adjustments.

Ophthalmological Surgery

Mr McGrady asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action is being taken to reduce the waiting time for ophthalmological surgical procedures. (AQW 3680/01)

Ms de Brún: In order to reduce waiting times and improve access to services, cataract surgery is now provided at Lagan Valley Hospital and at South Tyrone

Hospital, augmenting the service at the Royal Group, Altnagelvin and Mater Hospitals.

Following a regional review of ophthalmology services, a group of professionals in the field has been working with my Department to develop proposals for the future of these services. I expect to receive their report shortly and I will then consider what action should be taken to improve services.

Le hagai feithimh a laghdú agus leis an rochtain ar sheirbhísí a fheabhsú, soláthraítear máinliacht fhinn anois in Otharlann Ghleann an Lagáin agus in Otharlann Thír Eoghain Theas, mar sin de, ag cur leis an tseirbhís in Otharlanna an Ghrúpa Ríoga, Alt na nGealbhan agus an Mater.

I ndiaidh athbhreithnithe réigiúnaigh ar sheirbhísí oftairmeolaíochta, bhí dream gairmithe a oibríonn sa réimse seo ag obair le mo Roinn chun moltaí ar thodhchaí na seirbhísí seo a fhorbairt. Tá mé ag súil lena dtuairisc a fháil ar ball agus ansin déanfaidh mé machnamh ar an bheart a ba chóir a dhéanamh le seirbhísí a fheabhsú.

Diabetes

Mr Byrne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) the number of people in West Tyrone diagnosed with diabetes; and (b) the number of psychologists in West Tyrone providing support to people suffering from diabetes. (AQW 3741/01)

Ms de Brún:

- (a) This information is not available.
- (b) At present there is no psychologist dedicated to the diabetes care team in this area. The Western Health and Social Services Board are currently examining their priority developments for 2002/03 and hope to be able to develop dedicated clinical psychology input for diabetes care. However, this is dependent on the finalisation of an investment plan and the availability of funding.
- (a) Níl an t-eolas seo ar fáil.
- (b) Faoi láthair, níl síceolaí ar bith ann tiomnaithe don fhoireann cúraim diaibéitis sa réimse seo. Tá Bord Sláinte agus Seirbhísí Sóisialta an Iarthair ag scrúdú a bpríomhfhorbairtí don bhliain 2002/03 faoi láthair agus tá súil acu go mbeidh siad ábalta ionchur síceolaíochta cliniciúla tiomnaithe do chúram diaibéitis a fheabhsú. Braithfidh sé seo, áfach, ar thabhairt chun críche plean infheistíochta agus ar infhaighteacht maoinithe.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Road Improvements: Funding

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail, by District Council area, the expenditure allocated by the 4 Roads Service Divisions on major and minor road improvements during the years (a) 1998-1999; (b) 1999-2000; and (c) 2000-2001. (AQW 3004/01)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr P Robinson): The attached tables show how the financial resources allocated to my Department's 4 Roads Service Divisions, for capital expenditure on major and minor road improvements, were spent across each district council area over the 3 year period.

However, I want to make it clear that Roads Service does not simply split its total budget for capital expenditure on roads across all the district council areas. In particular, as I explained in my response to your written Assembly Questions AQW2591/01 and AQW2592/01 on 8 April 2002, major road improvements are prioritised on a country-wide basis and not on a Roads Service Divisional or District Council basis taking account of a broad range of criteria such as strategic planning policy, traffic flows, number of accidents, potential travel save times, environmental impact and value for money. While the actual spend on a major works scheme may be within one district council area, the benefits of such schemes are not confined to the District Council or constituencies in which they are located. In this context, while the £4.5M soon to be spent on the Comber Bypass will be revealed as expenditure within the Ards Borough Council area, the scheme will also greatly benefit through traffic from other council areas in terms of reduced journey times.

Roads Service expenditure on minor road improvements includes minor works, accident remedial schemes, transportation measures and minor bridge strengthening. The resources available for such works are allocated to the 4 Roads Service Divisions and, in turn, apportioned across District Council areas on a needs-based priority approach using indicators such as population, weighted road lengths and the number of accidents. This ensures, so far as possible, an equitable distribution of funds across the country.

Domestic Water Charges

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline (a) if he has assessed the cost of an administrative process necessary to assess and collect water charges from households in Northern Ireland; (b) the expected cost; and (b) the timescale necessary to establish such an administrative process.

(AQW 3151/01)

Mr P Robinson: I have made no such assessments since there are currently no plans to introduce domestic water charges.

However, I understand that the Review of Rating Policy, led by the Department of Finance and Personnel, will consider future funding options for water and sewerage services.

Grass Cutting: Carrickfergus

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline (a) the reason for the new commencement date of the Road Service grass cutting programme in the Carrickfergus area and (b) the date it will begin.

(AQW 3263/01)

Mr P Robinson: My Department's Roads Service has advised me that its grass cutting contract for Carrickfergus expired at the end of the 2001 summer season and that it invited tenders for the 2002/2003 contract in March 2002.

The criteria for selecting the winning contractor was the lowest tender total received based on a Bill of Quantity priced by tenderers. The conditions of the contract used by Roads Service were the Institution of Civil Engineers Conditions of Contract (Fifth Edition). The contract conditions require £10 million for Public Liability / Employers Liability and Contractors All Risk. The contract was awarded on 10 April 2002.

Subsequently, when carrying out the normal insurance checks it was discovered that the winning contractor did not have Contractors All Risk cover. This type of insurance is mainly to cover against damage to the civil engineering works during construction. After reviewing this matter, Roads Service concluded that this type of insurance was not appropriate for grass cutting operations. The contractor was informed of this decision and he commenced grass cutting on the 29 April 2002, perhaps a week or so later than would otherwise have been the case.

Consultancy Firms/Consultants

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 1912/01, to detail the level of expenditure, in each of the last three years, on consultancy firms/consultants that are based in (a) Northern Ireland (b) the Republic of Ireland (c) the rest of the UK and (d) outside the British Isles. (AQW 3270/01)

Mr P Robinson: The breakdown of expenditure by the Department on external consultancy in each Of the last three years is as follows:

	NI (£000s)	ROI (£000s)	GB (£000s)	Outside the British Isles
Dec 1999/00	374.4	0	186.5	0
2000/01	627.6	0.2	834.2	0
2001/02	1,605.3		1,005.9	0
Total	2,607.3	0.2	2026.6	0

Note:

AQW1912/01 erroneously included some proposed expenditure to 31 March 2002 causing a difference of approx £10,000 between the 2001/02 figures reported above and the previous figures supplied.

Grass Cutting: Carrickfergus

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the tender criteria, including insurance provision, for grass cutting contractors. (AQW 3311/01)

Mr P Robinson: My Department's Roads Service has advised me that its grass cutting contract for Carrickfergus expired at the end of the 2001 summer season and that it invited tenders for the 2002/2003 contract in March 2002.

Grass Cutting: Carrickfergus

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development to explain the delay in grass cutting in the Carrickfergus area. (AQW 3312/01)

Mr P Robinson: My Department's Roads Service has advised me that its grass cutting contract for Carrickfergus expired at the end of the 2001 summer season and that it invited tenders for the 2002/2003 contract in March 2002.

Subcontractors

Mr McFarland asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline if contracts issued by his Department include clauses requiring subcontractors to dispose of excavated material through legal means. (AQW 3313/01)

Mr P Robinson: Contractors working for my Department's Roads and Water Services are expected to fully comply with all statutory legislation and it is not considered necessary or advisable to single out any particular piece of legislation in their contracts.

However, the Institution of Civil Engineers (ICE) Conditions of Contract which frequently form part of the contracts used by my Department require that:

"the Contractor shall ascertain and conform in all respects with the provisions of any general or local Act of Parliament and the Regulations and Bye-laws of any local or other statutory authority which may be applicable to the Works and with such rules and regulations of public bodies and companies as aforesaid..."

The ICE Conditions of Contract also require that when consent is given to a contractor to employ subcontractors, such consent shall not:

"relieve the Contractor from any liability or obligation under the contract and he shall be responsible for the acts defaults and neglects of any sub-contractor his agents, servants or workmen as fully as if they were the acts, defaults or neglects of the Contractor his agents servants or workmen".

In addition, the contracts used by Water Service for capital construction contracts require the main contractor, and any subcontractors, to dispose of excavated material using a waste carrier registered under the Controlled Waste (Registration of Carriers and Seizure of Vehicles) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1999.

Water Service carefully monitors the performance of contractors to ensure compliance with all contract specifications including the requirement to dispose of excavated material to approved sites. In the case of capital construction contracts, monitoring includes the assessment of monthly construction waste returns completed by main contractors and, where appropriate, subcontractors. These returns require the quantities of waste produced to be recorded and the disposal locations identified.

Subcontractors

Mr McFarland asked the Minister for Regional Development how does he ensure that subcontractors working for the Roads Service and Water Service use legally established landfill sites to dispose of excavated material when carrying out work for his Department.

(AQW 3314/01)

Mr P Robinson: Contractors working for my Department's Roads and Water Services are expected to fully comply with all statutory legislation and it is not considered necessary or advisable to single out any particular piece of legislation in their contracts.

However, the Institution of Civil Engineers (ICE) Conditions of Contract which frequently form part of the contracts used by my Department require that:

In the case of capital construction contracts, monitoring includes the assessment of monthly construction waste returns completed by main contractors and, where appropriate, subcontractors. These returns require the quantities of waste produced to be recorded and the disposal locations identified.

Public Transport: Funding

Mr Dalton asked the Minister for Regional Development to make a statement comparing the rate of funding for public transport in Northern Ireland with that in the rest of the United Kingdom, and to give his assessment of whether Northern Ireland is underfunded.

(AQW 3451/01)

Mr P Robinson: An analysis of revenue support for public transport in Northern Ireland and Great Britain, discounting subsidised travel to school, which supports education and comes from the education budget, shows that funding per capita in Great Britain in 2000/01 was £28.58 compared to £21.09 in Northern Ireland. Information on public transport capital investment in Great Britain is not available in a form which enables a meaningful comparison to be drawn with Northern Ireland, but I consider that it is likely that the overall level of funding for public transport is lower in Northern Ireland than in the rest of the United Kingdom.

Traffic Scheme: Newry

Mr Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development what is the proposed timetable for the commencement and completion of the approved traffic scheme at the Rathfriland Road/Upper Damolly Road (Newry) junction. (AQW 3452/01)

Mr P Robinson: My Department's Roads Service is progressing this scheme in 3 stages.

Stage 1 involved the permanent stopping up of Elmwood Park and the two Beechmount Parks. Work on this stage commenced on site in early January 2002 and is now complete.

Stages 2 involves signalling the junction and widening Upper Damolly Lane to provide a left turning lane for traffic exiting on to Rathfriland Road. The design of the works is complete and Roads Service is currently negotiating with the adjacent landowner to acquire the necessary land. The timescale for implementation of the full scheme is dependent on the satisfactory completion of the negotiations with the landowner.

In the interim, the installation of the traffic lights at the existing junction in advance of necessary land acquisition is being considered. However site constraints mean that the available sightlines between the traffic lights are restricted and engineers are currently assessing the implications of this restriction.

To minimise delay once the above matters have been resolved, the traffic lights controller, poles and heads have already been purchased and much of the necessary civil engineering work, including cable ducting has been completed.

Stage 3 involved the introduction of legislation necessary to permit the extension of the 30 mph speed limit zone on the Rathfriland Road. This legislation became effective on 15 May 2002 and new signs to identify the new limits will be erected within the next two weeks.

Beech Hill Dual Carriageway

Mr Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline (a) the progress in relation to the Beech Hill Dual Carriageway (A1 route) contract; and (b) an estimated start date for the project. (AQW 3453/01)

Mr P Robinson: The Member will be aware that my Department's Roads Service has already held public inquiries into the Environmental Statement and the Direction Order for this scheme from the 13 to 15 November and on the 8 January 2002 respectively.

Road Service are considering the modifications to the scheme recommended in the Inspector's Reports for both inquiries and a formal statement on the final outcome of the inquiries will be published within the next two months. Following this the next stage will be the publishing of a 'Notice of Intention to Make a Vesting Order' to facilitate the acquisition of the land necessary for the scheme. It is anticipated that all the statutory procedures could be complete by early 2003 with construction starting as soon as possible afterwards.

Street Lighting

Mr Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will undertake to (a) enquire into the ongoing scheme to replace electricity poles at Victoria Square, Rostrevor; and (b) give an assurance that the replacement poles/lamps will be in keeping with the Victorian character of the Square. (AQW 3534/01)

Mr P Robinson: Officials from my Department's Roads Service have advised me that NIE is currently involved in an extensive project in the Rostrevor area, including Victoria Square, to replace its existing overhead equipment with underground services. As a direct consequence of this work, Roads Service is installing its own street lighting cables and columns to replace the existing lighting on NIE poles.

I understand that, whilst the street lighting ducting has now been installed in Victoria Square, the columns and lanterns cannot be erected until NIE has de-commissioned and removed its overhead equipment. The remaining street lighting work will be timed to coincide with NIE's de-commissioning and removal work, which is expected to commence in the autumn.

Unfortunately Roads Service is only funded to provide standard street lighting columns and lanterns. Where there is a requirement to provide decorative or period fittings the additional cost has been met in the past through Environmental Improvement Schemes (funded by DSD and administered by DOE Planning Service) or local District Councils. In the absence of such additional funding the lighting in Victoria Square will be by means of standard equipment.

Road Signage

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline any consultation he has had with his counterpart in the Irish Government to ensure the correct reference for Northern Ireland cities and towns on road signage. (AQW 3553/01)

Mr P Robinson: I understand that the city and town names displayed on traffic signs in the Republic of Ireland have remained unchanged since before the establishment of the Northern Ireland Assembly.

To date, no problem regarding the way by which Northern Ireland towns and cities are referred to on such signs has been brought to the attention of my Department's Roads Service. As such it has not been necessary to consult with the Irish Government on the matter.

Pedestrian and Vehicular Movement

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he is taking to improve pedestrian and vehicular movement at the traffic lights at the Square, Comber. (AQW 3590/01)

Mr P Robinson: My Department's Roads Service is currently working on a scheme to improve pedestrian movement and safety at these traffic signals. This will provide additional facilities to assist pedestrians wishing to cross the road at the Bridge Street and Killinchy Street legs of the junction. Design work is now complete and the scheme is due to start in late summer/autumn.

In addition, as you are aware, the Comber Bypass scheme is making good progress. All the statutory procedures are now complete and Roads Service has commenced the tender process. It is anticipated that, when completed, this major scheme will significantly reduce vehicular movements at the signal controlled junction at The Square, Comber.

Road Signs

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Regional Development how many road signs have been stolen in the last 12 months within the Ards Borough Council area. (AQW 3614/01)

Mr P Robinson: Although road signs do occasionally go missing, it is not always the case that they have been stolen. In some cases they have been struck by a vehicle, vandalised or the fixing mechanism has come loose and the sign has fallen. However, the theft of road signs is not perceived by my Department's Roads Service to be a major problem and their best estimate of the number of such signs stolen during the last twelve months in the Ards Borough Council area would be in the low single figures.

I am aware the Member has already discussed this matter with local officials and that some of the missing signs he highlighted were not the responsibility of Roads Service, but were erected by the local Council who provide and maintain all town and street name signs. If he is aware of any other missing signs and supplies me with the details, I will be happy to have the matter investigated.

In the meantime, I can assure the Member that Roads Service will continue to be vigilant in maintaining existing road signs which are provided for the safety and information of road users.

Roads Service

Mrs Carson asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 2559/01, to detail (a) if Roads

Service had scheduled the date for the inspection prior to 28th November and if so, (b) the revised date. (AQW 3619/01)

Mr P Robinson: Roadways are not usually scheduled for inspection individually but, for practical purposes, are grouped together in sectors. The inspections for the sector including Far Circular Road were programmed to be completed by Friday 24 November 2000. Various factors can create slight delays, however, for example, paint to mark out a defect may not adhere properly to the roadway during very wet weather. Also, the inspectors have other duties to undertake in addition to inspecting the roadways and sometimes that has to be prioritised.

On this occasion, the inspectors were running about 2 days behind schedule, discounting the weekends. The sector to be inspected immediately prior to the Far Circular Road sector was completed on Monday 28 November 2000 leading to inspection of Far Circular Road on 29 November 2000, a delay of 2 days. As I stated in my reply to AQW 2559/01 such slight variances has been accepted as reasonable by the Courts in Northern Ireland.

Roads Service

Mrs Carson asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 1553/01, to detail the target time for the processing of claims where (a) the Roads Service are responsible; and (b) a third party are responsible. (AQW 3620/01)

Mr P Robinson: The Department aims to make a decision on all vehicle damage claims within an average of 6 months from receipt regardless of who may be considered responsible.

NI Health and Social Services Estate Agency: Targets 2002/03

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development to list the top ten two-lane single carriageways according to the Mean Peak Hourly Flow in (a) Eastern Division; (b) Southern Division; (c) Western Division; and (d) Northern Division. (AQW 3642/01)

Mr P Robinson: My Department's Roads Service routinely monitors traffic flows using a network of some 180 census points across Northern Ireland. The data from these census points has been analysed and details of the top ten flows on two-lane single carriageways (ie 1 lane in each direction) is given on the following page for each division.

Aquarius Mourne Water Project

Ms McWilliams asked the Minister for Regional Development if work on the Aquarius Mourne Water Project Phase II at Alderwood Hill, Purdysburn commenced before planning permission was granted; and to make a statement. (AQW 3643/01)

Mr P Robinson: Water Service is presently undertaking work related to the Aquarius Mourne Water Project in the Purdysburn and Alderwood Hill areas. The work includes a major refurbishment of Purdysburn Reservoir, the completion of the replacement pipeline and major cross connections to the existing watermain infrastructure within the Purdysburn site. This work does not require planning permission.

It is proposed to provide an energy recovery installation at the Purdysburn service reservoir. A planning application has been submitted, and is under consideration by Planning Service. Work has not commenced and will not commence until planning approval is received.

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Reinvestment and Reform Initiative: Funding

Mr McGrady asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the type of regeneration initiatives which would be eligible for funding from the investment initiative announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in Belfast on Thursday 2 May 2002. (AQW 3563/01)

The Minister for Social Development (Mr Dodds): The Chancellor's initiative presents both opportunities and challenges for all Government Departments. It will take some time for each Department to consider its priorities in terms of the type of regeneration and public service improvement schemes that might best be funded under the initiative, particularly in the short term.

However, the decision to transfer a number of ex-prisons and security bases to devolved control within Northern Ireland, free of charge, presents an opportunity for my Department, through its Comprehensive Development Scheme powers and associated urban regeneration instruments, to unlock the development potential of a number of the key sites earmarked for release. My Department therefore expects to play a valuable and significant role in the Chancellors initiative and to act as a catalyst for major physical, economic and social development that meet the needs of local people.

Air Quality

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 3239/01, to outline (a) if his officials are aware of the "UK Smoke and Sulphur Dioxide Network" summary report for January-December 2000 prepared by the National Environmental Technology Centre as part of the air quality research programme of the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, The Scottish Executive, The National Assembly for Wales and the Department of Environment in Northern Ireland, published in October 2001 and (b) if he will undertake to factor this into the prioritisation of the Housing Executive's heating replacement programme. (AQW 3607/01)

Mr Dodds: My officials are aware of the "UK Smoke and Sulphur Dioxide Network" summary report for January-December 2000. The Housing Executive's continuing heating replacement programme, which is providing natural gas or oil heating, will contribute to better air quality throughout Northern Ireland. However, the prioritisation of the programme is based on a phased replacement of those solid fuel heating systems which have reached the end of their useful life.

SPED Scheme

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development how many people have been moved by the SPED Scheme in the last 12 months. (AQW 3615/01)

Mr Dodds: The purpose of the SPED scheme is to provide a ready buyer, in the form of the Housing Executive, for people who have been intimidated or are under threat, and who wish to sell their home quickly to move away from the threat. For the period May 2001 to April 2002, the number of applications made to the Housing Executive was 323.

Northern Ireland Housing Executive Charter

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development to outline (a) the timescale for house sales from the Housing Executive and (b) if this is in line with the Housing Executive Charter. (AQW 3616/01)

Mr Dodds: The main performance indicator associated with the Housing Executive's House Sales scheme and published in its Business Plan is the time taken to make an offer. The performance target is to do so within 10 weeks of application in 95% of cases. Performance is monitored by both the Housing Executive and my Department. Due to continued unprecedented demand, exacerbated by a dramatic increase in applications since the publication of proposals for change in the scheme, the achievement rate during the year just finished was around 73%. Additional staff resources have been allocated and other changes have been made to try and improve matters in the current year. The Housing Executive will be informing applicants that due to the exceptionally high levels of applications, processing may take longer in some instances than the above target times, but all applications will be dealt with in date order. It will continue to monitor performance and take action as necessary.

‘Tenant Charter’

Mr Shannon asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the number of maintenance repairs that were not carried out within the ‘Tenant Charter’ guidelines for April 2001-March 2002. (AQW 3628/01)

Mr Dodds: During the financial year, April 2001 - March 2002, there were 473,016 response maintenance repairs carried out by the Housing Executive. Of these, 51,038 were not completed within the timescale allocated in the ‘Tenant’s Charter’. The breakdown of these jobs and the percentage not carried out within the ‘Tenant’s Charter’ are as follows:

	No. of Jobs	Allocated timescale ‘Tenants’ ‘Charter’	Not carried out within the ‘Tenant Charter’ (no. of jobs)
Emergency	100,589	Within 24 hrs	9% (9,053)
Urgent	115,615	Within 4 working days	13% (15,030)
Routine	231,334	Within 4 weeks	10% (23,133)
Change of Tenancy	25,478	Dependant on category of repair	15% (3,822)

ASSEMBLY COMMISSION

Research and Library Services: Advisers/Experts

Mrs Nelis asked the Assembly Commission to detail (a) the method and criteria used by Research & Library in drawing up lists of advisors/experts, (b) how this pool of advisors/experts is evaluated and (c) who evaluates the advisors/experts. (AQW 3623/01)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Rev Robert Coulter): I am responding to you on behalf of the Assembly Commission.

- (a) For work that is expected to exceed a total cost of £10,000, the committee should undertake an open tender exercise. For work that is not expected to exceed a total cost of £10,000, Research and Library Services (R&LS) will provide a list of suitable candidates.

The method used at present comprises all of the following:

- (i) Reference to a list of advisers used in the past and the CV’s volunteered to the R&LS by persons wishing to be considered as advisers.

- (ii) Reference to research material related to the area of committee concern
- (iii) Research networking – particularly with the two NI universities
- (iv) Internet and bibliographical searches

Application of the above methodology results in the production of a list of several potential advisers. Information is then sought from each of these to assess whether they meet the set of specific pre-defined criteria established by the committee.

- (b) The evaluation criteria used for identifying suitable candidates includes the following:
- evidence, based on CV, that experience/qualifications are relevant and sufficient to enable them to be regarded as specialist on the issue(s) being considered;
 - evidence, based on references from previous client(s), that previous work was of satisfactory quality, including achievement of deadlines;
 - availability to deliver project specification within time allotted.

R&LS require terms of reference for the inquiry and specific terms of reference for the work to be undertaken by the specialist adviser before approaching potential candidates for a CV together with information on fees, experience, availability and any possible conflicting interests. This information is then passed to the committee along with any other relevant information to facilitate the final selection process.

- (c) The Research and Library Service carry out the initial evaluation of potential advisers. This evaluation assesses compliance with the criteria set by the committee drawn from its terms of reference. The committee is responsible for the final evaluation and selection of the specialist adviser and will decide in advance on the most appropriate criteria to be used in the process.

Once an appointed specialist adviser has compiled a final report the committee then evaluates it. A committee may request the Research and Library Service to assist in the assessment of a report.

A Good Practice Guide to providing an effective research service to committees has been issued by the Research and Library Service and the Committee Office. This is available through the Committee Office.

Equality Commission: Code of Practice

Mr J Kelly asked the Assembly Commission, pursuant to AQW 2631/00, to outline (a) whether or not the recruitment of non-civil servants on a negotiated reduction of their former salaries fully complied with equality legislation and the Equality Commission’s Code of Practice; (b) whether or not such compliance was adhered to; and (c) what procedures were adopted to ensure that the process did not entail disproportionately adverse effects in terms of gender and/or religion.

(AQW 3751/01)

The Representative of the Assembly Commission (Rev Robert Coulter): I am responding to you on behalf of the Assembly Commission.

(a) The Assembly Commission is content that the recruitment of non-civil servants on a negotiated reduction of their former salary is not contrary to current equality legislation or the relevant Equality Commission codes of practice.

(b) All action taken to date is in compliance with the relevant Equality Commission codes of practice.

(c) All persons involved in the recruitment process have been trained in non-discriminatory criterion based recruitment and selection techniques including the content of the Equality Commission's Code of Practice. From the information currently available, there is no evidence that any process used, or currently in use, has had a disproportionate affect in terms of gender and/or religion. The affects of the negotiation processes on the starting pay policy applied to some early recruitment competitions is under review to ensure fairness and consistency of approach.

NORTHERN IRELAND ASSEMBLY

Friday 07 June 2002

Written Answers to Questions

OFFICE OF THE FIRST MINISTER AND DEPUTY FIRST MINISTER

Commissioner for Children

Mr Wells asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what progress has been made on the legislation for the Commissioner for Children and Young People's Bill. (AQW 3231/01)

Reply: Work on the drafting of the legislation for the Commissioner for Children and Young People's Bill is well advanced and we intend to introduce the Bill to the Assembly in June.

Commissioner for Children

Mr Beggs asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what additional functions are being proposed for a Children's Commissioner for Northern Ireland compared to (a) Wales; (b) Norway; and (c) Republic of Ireland (Ombudsman). (AQW 3383/01)

Reply: Ultimately the functions of the Commissioner for Children and Young People will be a matter for the Assembly to decide.

The consultation paper, which was issued last year, however envisaged the Commissioner having functions in four main areas: advocacy; legal representation; complaints; rights promotion and research.

This can be compared to Wales and Norway where the respective Commissioner and Ombudsman have no power to bring legal proceedings in their own name or to intervene in legal proceedings.

In the Republic of Ireland, the Bill to establish an Ombudsman for Children does not contain powers in relation to assisting children or intervening in relation to legal proceedings nor bringing test proceedings in his own name.

Civic Forum

Mr Wells asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail the costs associated with the establishment and running of the Civic Forum since its inception. (AQW 3539/01)

Reply: The cost of establishing the Civic Forum was approximately £75,000. This covered the cost of filling the post of Civic Forum Chairman and the costs to nominating sectors.

The Civic Forum's running costs since its establishment in October 2000 until 24 May 2002 have been as follows:

October 2000	March 2001 £145,000
April 2001	March 2002 £450,000
April 2002	24 May 2002 £ 40,000

Civic Forum

Mr Shannon asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail the costs for the Civic Forum in the last 12 months for (a) building; (b) Secretariat; and (c) Members. (AQW 3578/01)

Reply: The running costs of the Civic Forum from April 2001 until 24 May 2002 were approximately £490,000. This includes £207,000 for Secretariat salaries and expenses and £50,000 for members' travel and accommodation.

The Civic Forum currently occupies offices in a property, which is leased by the Department of Finance and Personnel and thus is part of the Government estate.

Euro

Dr Birnie asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what position, if any, has the Executive adopted on the possibility of the UK adopting the Euro. (AQW 3591/01)

Reply: This is a matter for the UK Government but we would anticipate there would be consultations with the devolved administrations before any developments take place.

Rural Post Offices

Ms Morrice asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to outline (a) if it will undertake to support rural post offices as they are fundamental to the local community, and (b) if it will support their financial assistance. (AQW 3634/01)

Reply: Responsibility for the postal service is a reserved matter and support for rural post offices subsequently falls to the Department of Trade and Industry.

The Cabinet Office Performance and Innovation Unit Report "Counter Revolution" in June 2000 placed a formal requirement on the Post Office to maintain the rural network.

The Post Office Regulator Postcomm has provided advice to the Department of Trade and Industry on support to the rural network following the transfer of Social Security payments to bank accounts from January 2003.

A £2m capital funding project has been established by the Department of Trade and Industry to assist community and voluntary groups maintain or re-establish rural post offices. To date funds have been provided in respect of Stranagawilly Post Office, Co Tyrone and Ballyward Post Office, Co Down.

Review of Public Administration

Mrs I Robinson asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister, pursuant to AQO 1133/01, to outline (a) any plans it has for the Review of Public Administration; (b) the date for its commencement and completion; and (c) the proposed timescale for its implementation. (AQW 3635/01)

Reply: As stated in response to AQO 1133/01, the proposed terms of reference for the Review of Public Administration were debated in the Assembly on 25 February 2002, and in the subsequent weeks we engaged in a pre-consultation process with a broad spectrum of stakeholder interests.

We are now in the process of finalising the terms of reference, taking on board points raised during the pre-consultation. The revised terms of reference will then have to be quality assured by high-level independent experts before we launch the Review. We expect to launch the Review in the coming weeks, and the main phase is expected to take eighteen months to complete.

The length of time necessary to implement the recommendations emerging from the Review will depend on the nature of those recommendations. It is not possible to be definitive about the time needed at this stage.

AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

'Taste of Ulster' Initiative

Mrs Carson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail funding and other support the Department has given to the 'Taste of Ulster' initiative, over the past 5 years. (AQW 3785/01)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms Rodgers): The Department's financial contribution to the 'Taste of Ulster' initiative over the past 5 years was £93,787. Officials have also supported the work of the Management Board of 'Taste of Ulster' and provided technical support to the 'Taste of Ulster' Speciality Food Group.

Review of the Horticulture Sector

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline (a) the completion date of the Review of the Horticulture Sector; and (b) the date it will be made available to the public. (AQW 3820/01)

Ms Rodgers: The consultants appointed to undertake a strategic review of the Commercial Horticulture Sector now expect to present their report at the end of June. Given this timescale and the forthcoming holiday period, I would anticipate that it would be early autumn before I will be seeking the industry's views on their findings and recommendations.

Review of the Horticulture Sector

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what steps will be taken to implement the Review of the Horticulture Sector following publication. (AQW 3821/01)

Ms Rodgers: I will not be in a position to respond to your question until I have received the Consultant's report on the review of the Commercial Horticulture Sector and have had the opportunity to consider its content and recommendations, and indeed have taken account of the industry's views on the latter.

Greenmount College: Vacancy

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline (a) the current position regarding the vacant post of 'Top Fruit Advisor' for the apple industry; and (b) the timescale for an appointment to this position. (AQW 3868/01)

Ms Rodgers: The position of Top Fruit Adviser within Technology and Business – Crops and Horticulture Division at Greenmount College is currently vacant due to the promotion of the member of staff who previously filled this post.

Arrangements have been made for the previous incumbent to provide part-time cover until such times as the post can be filled. This will take some time due to the very specialist nature of the post and funding constraints. The post may not be filled on a permanent basis until April 2003.

I realise the importance of this sector and assure you that my Department will endeavour to provide the necessary expertise to ensure its sustained development.

CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Signage: Irish Language

Mrs Nelis asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what steps he has taken to ensure that all signage in buildings and workplaces within the Department's responsibility are in the Irish language. (AQW 3679/01)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr McGimpsey): Research commissioned by my Department to inform work on implementing the European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages has shown a degree of general public support for some signage in indigenous languages.

My Department has tri-lingual signs in English, Irish and Ulster-Scots at the entrances to the Interpoint Centre. It is a matter for the Department's Agencies and other Associated Bodies to determine wider dual practice on Irish and/or Ulster-Scots signage.

European Capital of Culture 2008: Belfast Bid

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how much is being spent on consultation fees in respect of Belfast's bid to become European capital of culture in 2008. (AQW 3707/01)

Mr McGimpsey: The total amount spent on consultation fees to date in respect of Belfast's bid to become European Capital of Culture 2008 is £21,282.56.

EDUCATION

Education and Library Boards: Staffing Levels

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail the total number of staff in all categories currently employed by (a) each Education and Library Board; and (b) all Inter-Board services. (AQW 3651/01)

The Minister of Education (Mr M McGuinness): The latest information available is at 30 September 2001 and is as follows:

Nursery Teachers

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Education how many full-time posts of 4½ hours are available for Nursery Teachers within each Board area in each of the last 3 years. (AQW 3652/01)

Mr M McGuinness: It is not possible to provide the information on the basis requested.

As all full-time teachers have the same working time contract irrespective of the phase in which they teach, the number of full-time teachers in nursery schools over the last 3 years is set out in the table below. It does not include teachers in nursery units attached to primary schools, as the Department does not hold this information separately. The figures have been extracted from the teachers' payroll.

NEELB: Staffing Levels

Mr Dalton asked the Minister of Education to detail current staffing levels within the North Eastern Education and Library Board. (AQW 3661/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The latest information available is at 30 September 2001 and is as follows:

School Teachers

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education if he has any plans to commend the achievement of the Province's grammar schools in placing high numbers of students in 'Ivy League' universities throughout the UK. (AQW 3667/01)

Mr M McGuinness: I frequently commend our schools and our teachers for their dedication and commitment to ensuring that all our young people are helped to achieve their full potential. I am happy to reiterate my gratitude to our teachers but I think it would be invidious for me to single out any one sector for special commendation.

Burns Report

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Education to outline (a) the completion date of the recently announced public postal consultation on the Burns Report; (b) the cost of this exercise; and to make a statement.

(AQW 3690/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The closing date for responses to the consultation exercise, including completion of the household response form, is 28 June 2002. The estimated cost of this exercise is £185,000 but the final cost will depend on the level of response. I want as many people as possible to let me have their views and all responses will be considered. I intend to publish an analysis of the responses received from all the strands of consultation around the end of September.

Primary and Secondary Schools: Funding

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Education to detail (a) any proposed changes to the common funding formula for primary schools; and (b) any steps he is taking to address the current funding imbalance between primary and secondary education. (AQW 3744/01)

Mr M McGuinness: My Department's consultation document on the common funding formula for all grant-aided schools, published last year, proposes a skewing of resources to the primary sector. The adjustment to AWPU weightings and changes in other factors, such as premises, small schools protection and teacher salary protection, proposed in the consultation document will contribute to the shift in the share of resources received by primary schools. The cumulative effect of all the proposals, planned for implementation in April 2003, would be to increase primary sector funding by around £12m or 4% and the balance between funding attracted by primary schools compared to post-primary schools would rise from 65% to 67%.

Summer Literacy and Numeracy Schemes

Mr Ford asked the Minister of Education to outline (a) the number of summer literacy and numeracy schemes that were established for children in each of the last 3 years; and (b) the number he anticipates in place for summer 2002. (AQW 3752/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The number of summer literacy and numeracy schemes in each of the last 3 years was 61, 106, 131 respectively. The Department has made available funds for 161 schemes for summer 2002.

EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

University Equality Schemes

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what measures local universities have taken to fulfil their obligations under section 75(1)(a) of the NI Act 1998. (AQW 3871/01)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Ms Hanna): The universities have produced Equality Schemes which set out how they will meet their duties under Section 75. These have been submitted to the Equality Commission for approval. The institutions have also carried out extensive staff awareness training on issues such as obligations under the legislation, dealing with complaints and the implementation, monitoring and evaluation of Equality Schemes. They have also employed a Research Officer and Research Assistant to support Equality Impact Assessments.

University Awards

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether local universities should have concern at any proposal to name university awards after persons who have been linked with paramilitary activity by Garda Síochána informers or other security personnel. (AQW 3885/01)

Ms Hanna: The local Universities are, like all UK Universities, legally independent bodies with a large degree of autonomy in managing their own affairs including the awarding and naming of scholarships and bursaries. I have, therefore, no locus in this area which is internal to the respective Universities.

Further and Higher Education Institutes: Disabled Access

Ms Lewsley asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to give an update on what steps have been taken to ensure adequate access for people with disabilities, not only to buildings but to all services and facilities, in Institutes of Further and Higher Education. (AQO 1496/01)

Ms Hanna: Institutes of Further and Higher education currently have duties under the Disability Discrimination Act to disabled employees and when providing non educational services to the public. There are also a number of initiatives already in place at Further Education colleges which promote access for students with disabilities or learning difficulties, including specific support for individuals. The Department will be adding to these measures shortly by taking forward, with the Department of Education, new legislation which will provide comprehensive and enforceable rights to education for all disabled people on the same basis as the rest of the United Kingdom.

Investors in People

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how does the uptake of 'Investors in People' awards in Northern Ireland compare to Great Britain. (AQO 1466/01)

Ms Hanna: There are currently in excess of 25,000 recognised 'Investors in People' organisations in GB accounting for 23.8% of the workforce. Northern Ireland has 570 recognised organisations employing 20.4% of the Northern Ireland workforce.

University Funding

Mr J Kelly asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what assessment can she make as to whether research and training at our universities is suffering as a result of shifting resources to widening access.

(AQO 1500/01)

Ms Hanna: Funding of research and training and funding towards widening access to higher education are separate aspects of my Department's grant allocation to the universities. There has been no shift in resources from one area of activity to the other. Indeed, additional resources have been provided for both SPUR £43 million and the Student Support package £65 million.

Further Education Colleges

Rev Robert Coulter asked the minister for employment and learning to detail the total cost of senior management salaries as a proportion of the total allocated budgets of further education colleges.

(aqo 1491/01)

Ms Hanna: The total cost of service management salaries was approximately 3% of the overall expenditure by colleges in 2000/01, the latest year for which figures are available.

Further Education Colleges: Centres of Excellence

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline (a) the centres of excellence which exist within further education colleges; and (b) the criteria normally used for determining a centre of excellence.

(AQO 1492/01)

Ms Hanna: In 2000/2001 colleges bid for recognition as centres of excellence in one or more of six key vocational areas significant to the regional economy. This resulted in the creation of eight centres of excellence across six colleges - in four key vocational areas: Information and communication technology; electronics; manufacturing engineering; and tourism and hospitality.

The criteria for the assessment of the centres of excellence bids focused on the quality of teaching and learning and the links with the relevant local business.

'Roberts Report': Postgraduate Studies

Mr Foster asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what assessment can she make of the recent

'Roberts Report' on postgraduate studies in science and engineering.

(AQO 1481/01)

Ms Hanna: The Roberts Report, commissioned by the Treasury, the Department for Education and Skills, and the Department of Trade and Industry was published very recently on 15th April. The report examines the reduction in the supply of science, technology, engineering and mathematics skills in the UK and its adverse impact on the economy. The Department's postgraduate advisory board will consider the report at its June meeting and will advise me of its recommendations.

Student Grants

Mr Gallagher asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps is she taking to increase the number of students receiving grants.

(AQO 1503/01)

Ms Hanna: The aim of the recent Student Support Review was to increase participation in third level education. Grants of up to £1,500 pa were introduced in September 2001 to support further education students from low-income families. A similar level of assistance will be available to higher education students from September 2002. Also in place from September 2001 are childcare grants and an increase in the level of parental income at which a contribution towards tuition fees becomes due.

Further Education Courses

Mr McGrady asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps she will take to ensure the provision of software engineering and information technology at a higher education level at East Down Institute in Downpatrick.

(AQO 1463/01)

Ms Hanna: Subject to the normal course approval process East Down Institute is free to develop higher education level provision in software engineering and information technology on a part-time basis. Due to financial considerations the level of publicly funded full-time higher education provision is subject to restriction.

Unemployment

Mr Fee asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how the task force on Employability and Long-Term Unemployment will address those areas of Northern Ireland with the highest incidences of long-term unemployment.

(AQO 1482/01)

Ms Hanna: The taskforce is giving careful consideration as to how it will deal with those areas of Northern Ireland with the highest incidences of long-term unemployment. Its action plan is currently undergoing rigorous drafting to bring it to the final draft stage. I intend to issue the draft action plan to the Assembly Committee and subsequently to report to the Executive before the summer recess. Until this has been achieved I am not in a position to announce details of proposed initiatives.

Adult Literacy Strategy

Mr McHugh asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, in relation to the adult literacy strategy, to outline (a) targets she has developed for the reduction of low levels of literacy skills; and (b) measures being put in place to ensure that those targets are achieved.

(AQO 1498/01)

Ms Hanna:

- (a) The long term aim is, by 2012, to reduce by half the number of people with low levels of literacy and numeracy.
- (b) I will establish and lead an essential skills committee who will drive the essential skills for living strategy forward and implement the key recommendations to achieve the targets detailed in the strategy.

ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

Wind Turbines

Mrs Carson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the health and safety record of wind turbines located at wind farm developments in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 3636/01)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Sir Reg Empey): HSENI has not received reports of any dangerous occurrences, accidents, or cases of disease at wind farm developments in Northern Ireland as required by The Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1997.

Health and Safety Practices

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how many companies as a result of accidents at work were (i) fined; (ii) penalised in some other way; or (iii) ordered to implement changes in health and safety practices.

(AQW 3683/01)

Sir Reg Empey: The numbers of companies fined following prosecutions for breaches of health and safety at work legislation during each of the last 3 years, and the numbers required to make improvements to health and safety at work practices/procedures as a result of formal enforcement action, are as follows:

Enforcing Authority	1999/2000	2000/01	2001/02
Health and Safety Executive for Northern Ireland
Prosecutions	11	8	10
Enforcement notices	43	121	219
District Councils
Prosecutions	11	10	3
Enforcement notices	158	93	81

The figures for 2001/02 are provisional. Figures provided above relate to the total number of prosecutions and enforcement notices. Separate figures are not available for prosecutions and enforcement notices which would have resulted following accidents at work.

Injuries at Work

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline, in each of the last 3 years, (a) the number of people injured at work with (i) minor injuries; and (ii) major injuries; (b) the average time off work due to injuries; and (c) the cost of injuries to industry and business.

(AQW 3684/01)

Sir Reg Empey:

- (a) Based on information reported to the enforcing authorities under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1997, the number of people injured at work with minor and major injuries in each of the last three years is set out in the following table:

Year	Specified major injuries	Other injuries resulting in more than 3 days absence from work
2001/02	525*	3,152*
2000/01	644	3,832
1999/00	605	3,843

* These figures relate solely to injuries reported to the Health and Safety Executive for Northern Ireland (HSENI). Details of injuries reported to district councils during 2001/02 are not yet available.

- (b) A recent research study commissioned by the Health and Safety Executive for Northern Ireland indicated that the average time employees are off work due to injuries is 5.5 days.
- (c) The study also estimates the annual cost of workplace accidents to the Northern Ireland economy to be almost £500 million of which some £370 million represents the costs to employers.

Renewable Energy Resources

Mr Savage asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if he is considering any proposals for improving green and renewable energy sources.

(AQO 1486/01)

Sir Reg Empey: My Department, together with DTI and NIE, are sponsoring the completion of an important network study which will determine the maximum potential which NI can realise for generating electricity from renewable energy sources. This study will help form renewable energy policy and indicate what target should be set for 2010.

Fish Processing Industry

Mr McGrady asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what support will be provided to sustain the fish-processing industry in Ardglass and Kilkeel; and to make a statement. (AQO 1464/01)

Sir Reg Empey: My Department is currently implementing a development strategy for the fish-processing sector for the period of 2000-2006. This was completed in conjunction with the industry, the trade body — Northern Ireland Seafood Ltd and DARD. This strategy sets out my Department's continued and sustained approach to the development of this important sector.

Imports and Exports

Mr McHugh asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what is the value of imports and exports from/to (a) Republic of Ireland, (b) England; (c) Scotland; and (d) Wales. (AQO 1499/01)

Sir Reg Empey: For the calendar year 2001, total imports from Republic of Ireland to Northern Ireland were £965 million and total exports from Northern Ireland to the Republic of Ireland were £981 million. These statistics are produced by HM Customs and Excise and only refer to goods that have crossed the UK frontier. Comparable information for England, Scotland and Wales is not available.

Biomedical Research

Rev Robert Coulter asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline the current level of commercial activity in the Province which is based on biomedical research. (AQO 1487/01)

Sir Reg Empey: There is an emerging cluster of commercial operations within Northern Ireland based on biomedical research. At present there are 7 companies, which are clients of Invest NI, and together these are generating a turnover of over £20m.

ENVIRONMENT

Planning Application: Killyleagh

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of the Environment to outline (a) the current stage of the proposed Gocean

Development at Killyleagh; and (b) the timescale for the completion of the planning application. (AQW 3629/01)

The Minister of the Environment (Mr Nesbitt): The Department is awaiting additional information from the applicant in the form of an addendum to the Environmental Statement submitted with the planning application on 24 November 2000.

The additional information, which was requested from the applicant on 11 January 2002, was identified by Environment and Heritage Service, which noted a number of deficiencies in the Environmental Statement, such as the impact of the proposed development on the Strangford Lough Area of Special Scientific Interest/Ramsar site.

The Department is currently engaged in discussions with the applicant in relation to the outstanding information. Until that information is received, the application cannot be taken any further forward.

Once the outstanding information is received, I will ensure that the application is determined as quickly as possible.

Planning Applications

Mrs Carson asked the Minister of the Environment to detail his current policy in respect of planning applications for wind farm developments at Garrane, Rosslea and Callagheen, Belleek. (AQW 3639/01)

Mr Nesbitt: I am combining the answers to the above questions as they overlap in relation to the Department's planning policies for wind farms.

The relevant planning legislation, including European Directives is:

- (a) The Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 which requires that an application for such development is submitted and determined in accordance with legislative requirements.
- (b) Planning (Environmental Impact Assessment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1999. This legislation transposes EU Directive – Annex III to Council Directive 85/337/EEC (c) as amended by Council Directive 97/11/E C (d) into Northern Ireland law. A determination of whether an application requires to be accompanied by an Environmental Statement is made by the Department where the installation of more than 2 turbines, or the hub height of any turbine or other structure exceeds 15 metres in height.

The planning policies, which are used to consider planning applications for wind farms, are:-

- (a) PSU12 - of the planning strategy for Rural Northern Ireland 1993, which is the policy relating to Renewable Energy.

- (b) Planning Policy Statement 1 – General Planning Principles.
- (c) Planning Policy Statement 2 – Planning and Nature Conservation, in so far as it is relevant to a particular site.
- (d) Planning Policy Statement 6 – Planning Archaeology and the Built Heritage, in so far as it is relevant to a particular site.
- (e) Planning Policy Statement 3 – Planning & Roads Considerations regarding access and traffic generation.
- (f) The relevant Development Plan for the area in which the proposed wind farm is located. In the case of the Garrane, Rosslea and Callagheen proposals, this is the Fermanagh Area Plan 2007.
- (g) Supplementary guidance is also provided in:

Development Control Advice Note 15 – Vehicular Access Standards.

Development Control Advice Note 10 – Environmental Impact Assessment.

I can assure you that the Department will give careful and detailed consideration to the wind farm proposals at Garrane and Callagheen against the policies and regulations outlined above.

Planning Applications

Mrs Carson asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 2125/01, to detail the planning legislation, including European Directives, and planning policies used to consider a planning application for a wind farm. (AQW 3640/01)

Mr Nesbitt: I am combining the answers to the above questions as they overlap in relation to the Department's planning policies for wind farms.

The relevant planning legislation, including European Directives is:

- (a) The Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 which requires that an application for such development is submitted and determined in accordance with legislative requirements.
- (b) Planning (Environmental Impact Assessment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1999. This legislation transposes EU Directive – Annex III to Council Directive 85/337/EEC (c) as amended by Council Directive 97/11/E C (d) into Northern Ireland law. A determination of whether an application requires to be accompanied by an Environmental Statement is made by the Department where the installation of more than 2 turbines, or the hub height of any turbine or other structure exceeds 15 metres in height.

The planning policies, which are used to consider planning applications for wind farms, are: -

- (a) PSU12 - of the Planning Strategy for Rural Northern Ireland 1993, which is the policy relating to Renewable Energy.
- (b) Planning Policy Statement 1 – General Planning Principles.
- (c) Planning Policy Statement 2 – Planning and Nature Conservation, in so far as it is relevant to a particular site.
- (d) Planning Policy Statement 6 – Planning Archaeology and the Built Heritage, in so far as it is relevant to a particular site.
- (e) Planning Policy Statement 3 – Planning & Roads Considerations regarding access and traffic generation.
- (f) The relevant Development Plan for the area in which the proposed wind farm is located. In the case of the Garrane, Rosslea and Callagheen proposals, this is the Fermanagh Area Plan 2007.
- (g) Supplementary guidance is also provided in:

Development Control Advice Note 15 – Vehicular Access Standards.

Development Control Advice Note 10 – Environmental Impact Assessment.

I can assure you that the Department will give careful and detailed consideration to the wind farm proposals at Garrane and Callagheen against the policies and regulations outlined above.

Exotic and Wild Animals

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment to outline (a) what assessment he can make in relation to the availability of expertise and suitable premises in Northern Ireland to look after exotic and wild animals; and (b) if he intends to give responsibility to the USPCA for seized exotic and wild animals. (AQW 3681/01)

Mr Nesbitt: My Department has policy responsibility for regulating the keeping of dangerous wild animals by private individuals. What is categorised as a dangerous wild animal will need to be established by legislation but is unlikely to include all exotic and wild animals.

My Department has been working on primary legislation in this area. A Bill was to have been introduced in the Assembly last December, but work has had to be deferred for a number of reasons. One reason is to allow for the development of proposals for a centralised regulatory regime, to take account of concerns expressed by the Assembly Environment Committee about the original policy proposal to have the regime administered by district councils.

The development of the new proposals will include consideration of the options for securing the expertise necessary to undertake the inspections that would form an essential part of the process for processing applications for licences to keep dangerous wild animals. This work will also involve examining the options available for dealing with any seized animals, where this action is deemed necessary.

I acknowledge that both expertise and premises suitable for accommodating seized or unwanted dangerous wild animals, particularly the larger species, are very limited in Northern Ireland. Work to consider the options is at an early stage and no decisions have yet been made. Any proposal for an organisation such as the USPCA to provide expertise and/or accommodation facilities in support of the operation of the proposed regulatory regime will need to take account of established procurement policies.

ASSI: Strand Lough and Killough

Mr McGrady asked the Minister of the Environment what assessment he can make of the impact on the environment and farming activities of the new ASSI designation for the Strand Lough and Killough areas.

(AQW 3682/01)

Mr Nesbitt: My Department's Environment and Heritage Service declared Killough Bay and Strand Lough as an area of special scientific interest (ASSI) on 14 December 2001. Our aim is to safeguard the plants and animals of this coastal site along with its associated swamp, fen and wet grassland for the use and enjoyment of present and future generations.

The past management of this area has ensured the survival and wellbeing of the many special plants and animals found throughout the ASSI. Continued careful use of the area should allow current activities to be sustained at levels that do not threaten the important features of the ASSI. Landowners, and those who hold rights within the designated area, who wish to undertake certain potentially damaging operations specified in the declaration documents, are legally obliged to seek consent from my Department. If the operation is judged likely to have an adverse effect, a management agreement will be offered in order to protect the conservation interests of the site. To date, Environment and Heritage Service has received only one application from a private landowner at this site and this is currently being assessed.

Planning Permission

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment in what circumstances would a new planning application be permitted to bypass the outline planning stage of the Planning Service's planning procedure.

(AQW 3693/01)

Mr Nesbitt: When seeking planning permission applicants have the option of making an outline or a full planning application. The purpose of outline planning permission is to determine in principle, the acceptability of a proposal to build on any particular site. Where an outline planning permission is granted, it is conditional on the subsequent approval by the Department of the details of the proposed development, which is known as 'reserved matters'.

Where an application is made for full planning permission it should include all the particulars needed to describe the development. In this way the principle of the development is determined along with the details of the proposal.

It is up to the applicant to decide which type of application that he wishes to submit. Reserved matters applications submitted following an outline consent will only be approved where they comply with the conditions of the outline permission. Where a submission of reserved matters is clearly not in accordance with the outline planning permission to which it relates, the application will be refused. The applicant will be advised to submit either a new full application or a new reserved matters application, in accordance with the terms of the existing permission.

If a new application is required in the above circumstances, the principle and the detail of the proposal will again be judged for their acceptability in planning terms. This determination will also take into account any previous site history as a material consideration.

Therefore, there are no circumstances in which the 'outline planning stage' is bypassed by a new planning application.

Deer Park, Newtownstewart, West Tyrone

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 3300/01, to detail the representations received from the Council for Nature Conservation and the Countryside, in respect of the Deer Park, Newtownstewart, West Tyrone.

(AQW 3731/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The Council for Nature Conservation and the Countryside (CNCC) was consulted by my Department's Environment and Heritage Service on the proposed Deer Park area of special scientific interest (ASSI) in February 1998. The council's scientific committee was presented with the documentation that subsequently formed the designation package, together with a description of the site, its importance and the management considerations.

The committee supported the proposed designation and this was endorsed by the full council at its meeting on 6 March 1998. The research contract with the University of Ulster ran for three years, from September 1994. The work programme involved identification, mapping and interpretation of the main glacial landform complexes. Over 30 discrete areas were identified and described. The many reports and maps generated by this research are not suitable for placing in the Assembly Library but are available for inspection at the offices of the Environment and Heritage Service. Critical localities, selected on the basis of scientific importance and landscape significance, were then identified in discussion between the University of Ulster and EHS. EHS's subsequent survey work had two aims:

- to determine what elements of the Deer Park moraine would merit inclusion in the designated site, and
- to identify a specific boundary for the proposed ASSI.

This work ensured that only the most significant element of the landform feature was included within the designated site and that it had a site boundary that would be easily identifiable.

Deer Park, Newtownstewart, West Tyrone

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 3299/01, to outline (a) the research paper undertaken by the University of Ulster into key glacial landform complexes throughout Northern Ireland and to lodge this paper in the Assembly Library; and (b) the survey undertaken by the Environmental Heritage Service in regard to the Deer Park, Newtownstewart, West Tyrone. (AQW 3732/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The Council for Nature Conservation and the Countryside (CNCC) was consulted by my Department's Environment and Heritage Service on the proposed Deer Park area of special scientific interest (ASSI) in February 1998. The council's scientific committee was presented with the documentation that subsequently formed the designation package, together with a description of the site, its importance and the management considerations.

The committee supported the proposed designation and this was endorsed by the full council at its meeting on 6 March 1998. This work ensured that only the most significant element of the landform feature was included within the designated site and that it had a site boundary that would be easily identifiable.

Equality Impact Assessments

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment to outline (a) the number of equality impact assessments (EIA) carried out by his Department to date; and (b) the total cost of (i) research; (ii) consultation; (iii) printing; and (iv) dissemination, for each EIA. (AQW 3773/01)

Mr Nesbitt:

(a) The Department has carried out 6 equality impact assessments (EIAs) to date; of which 2 are complete and 4 are at consultation stage.

(b) The total costs are set out below:

- Research, £25,824
- Consultation, Nil
- Printing, Nil
- Dissemination, £1857

These figures do not include staff costs or departmental overheads which constitute a large proportion of the total cost of producing the EIAs.

HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Local Health and Social Care Groups

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) what steps are in place to ensure that health and social care groups (LHSCG), when established, will be adequately resourced; and (b) that budgets delegated to LHSCG will be based on a weighted capitation approach reflective of the need of communities. (AQW 3529/01)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Ms de Brún): I am making over £5million available to cover the management and administration costs of the local health and social care groups. I believe this will be sufficient for the initial stages of the groups' development, but it will be kept under review. Staff resources at health and social services board level will also be available to provide professional, administrative and management support to LHSCG. As the groups take on greater responsibility, I also expect resources to move to them from the boards.

LHSCG will also receive budgets for primary care development and, increasingly, for commissioning. I can confirm that the delegation of these budgets to groups will be informed by the weighted capitation approach, which takes account of the relative need of communities. Prescribing budgets for LHSCG will also be calculated using a weighted capitation formula.

Tá mé chun níos mó ná £5 mhilliún a chur ar fáil chun costas bainistíochta agus riaracháin na nGrúpaí Sláinte Áitiúla agus Cúram Sóisialta a chlúdach. Creidim gur leor é seo do chéimeanna tosaigh i bhforbairt na nGrúpaí, ach coinneofar súil air. Cuirfear acmhainní foirne ag leibheál Bhord Sláinte agus Seirbhísí Sóisialta ar fáil chomh maith chun tacaíocht ghairmiúil, riaracháin agus bainistíochta do na LHSCGanna a sholáthar. De réir mar a ghlacann na Grúpaí le níos mó freagrachtaí, tá mé ag súil go dtabharfar acmhainní dóibh ó na Boird.

Gheobhaidh na LHSCGanna buiséid chomh maith d'fhorbairt chúram phríomhúil agus do choimisiúnú de réir a chéile. Is féidir liom a dheimhniú go roinnfear na buiséid do Ghrúpaí de réir an chur chuige ceannsráithe ualaithe, a chuireann riachtanas coibhneasta na bpobal san áireamh. Déanfar comháireamh i moladh na gcostas le haghaidh LHSCGanna ag baint úsáide as foirmle ceannsráithe ualaithe.

Orthopaedic Surgery: South Tyrone Hospital

Mrs Carson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 3321/01, if the two modern operating theatres in South Tyrone Hospital have been used for orthopaedic surgery since the service was transferred to Craigavon Area Hospital. (AQW 3709/01)

Ms de Brún: The two theatres in question have not been used for orthopaedic surgery since acute services were temporarily transferred to Craigavon Area Hospital.

Níor úsáideadh an dá obrádlann atá i gceist le máinliacht ortaipéideach a dhéanamh ó aistríodh géarsheirbhísí go sealadach go hOtharlann Cheantar Craigavon.

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Housing Executive: Houses in Multiple Occupation

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister for Social Development how many properties were converted into houses in multiple occupation by local authorities in (a) 1999; (b) 2000; and (c) 2001. (AQW 3657/01)

The Minister for Social Development (Mr Dodds): The Housing Executive does not convert properties into houses in multiple occupation (HMO). It provides grant-aid which allows the owners of properties to do so. The number of grants awarded to convert properties to HMO is shown in the following table.

Year	Grants Awarded
1999	17
2000	18
2001	8

Disability Living Allowance

Mr Wells asked the Minister for Social Development to outline, in each of the last 3 years, (a) the number of requests for a review of a decision to refuse (a) disability living allowance (DLA) applications which were successful; and (b) the number of decisions to refuse applications for DLA which were overturned at appeal. (AQW 3695/01)

Mr Dodds: The number of people who requested a review of a refusal of disability living allowance and were successful over the last 3 financial years are as follows:

Year	Number Allowed
1999/2000	676
2000/2001	1,991
2001/2002	2,346

The number of people who appealed decisions not to allow disability living allowance and were successful over the last 3 financial years are as follows:

Year	Number Overturned
1999/2000	287
2000/2001	455
2001/2002	771

Request for Meetings

Mr Adams asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 3194/01, how he monitors all requests for meetings to ensure that they are dealt with in accordance to both the Ministerial Pledge of Office and the Code of Conduct with regard to equality of treatment, impartiality and preventing discrimination. (AQW 3711/01)

Mr Dodds: I decide on all requests for meetings with me, and as explained in my written response to AQW 3194/01, I take all my decisions in accordance with the Ministerial Pledge of Office and the Code of Conduct, as I undertook to do when taking up Ministerial office.

Housing Grants

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister for Social Development how many grants aimed at (a) reducing unfit housing; and (b) improving private sector housing conditions, have been awarded in each of the last 3 years. (AQW 3712/01)

Mr Dodds: The information requested is as follows:

Grant Type	1999/2000 No	2000/2001 No	2001/2002 No
Remedying unfitnes
Renovation	1,370	1,584	1,435
Replacement	351	373	340
Houses in Multiple Occupation	146	174	183
Total	1,867	2,131	1,958

Grant Type	1999/2000 No	2000/2001 No	2001/2002 No
Improving housing conditions including those for a disabled occupant
Disabled Facilities	1,388	1,564	1,600
Minor Works Assistance	1,944	2,378	2,413
Repairs	3,529	3,820	3,382
Total	6,861	7,762	7,395

Full Duty Applicants

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the percentage of applicants, accepted as statutorily homeless, who have secured permanent tenancies within three months of application, in each of the last three years. (AQW 3713/01)

Mr Dodds: The Housing Executive measures performance in respect of full duty applicants from the date of acceptance as homeless rather than the date of application. From that perspective, performance, within 3 months, in the last 3 years is as follows:

1999/2000	67%
2000/2001	60%
2001/2002	51%

Social Housing Sector: New Homes

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister for Social Development how many new homes have been built in the social housing sector in each of the last 3 years. (AQW 3714/01)

Mr Dodds: I refer the member to my response to AQO 1271/01 which is contained in the Official Report for 7 May.

Adaption of Properties

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister for Social Development how many properties have been adapted to meet the needs of occupants such as the elderly or those with disability in each of the last 3 years. (AQW 3715/01)

Mr Dodds: The information requested is as follows:

1999/2000	2000/2001	2001/2002
5,439	6,471	8,073

The figures relate to work carried out to Housing Executive, housing association and private sector properties. The Housing Executive also carries out a significant number of minor works for people with disabilities. These include the provision of handrails, ramps, lever taps and lowering of cupboards. However, it does not routinely gather statistics on such works.

Housing Executive Properties: Heating

Mr Ford asked the Minister for Social Development how many Housing Executive properties have been converted to oil or gas heating in each of the last 3 years. (AQW 3717/01)

Mr Dodds: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Gas	Oil
1999/00	2,950	4,291
2000/01	4,232	3,604
2001/02	3,597	4,939
Total	10,779	12,834

Gambling Laws: Casinos

Mr Berry asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the legislation which relates to the establishment of casinos in Northern Ireland and to ensure that a casino will not be established at the Gosford Castle site, Markethill. (AQW 3865/01)

Mr Dodds: The law on gambling in Northern Ireland is contained in the Betting, Gaming, Lotteries and Amusements (Northern Ireland) Order 1985. The 1985 Order does not permit facilities for high stakes gaming such as are provided by commercial gaming clubs (casinos) in Great Britain and similar establishments elsewhere. A casino cannot, therefore, operate lawfully anywhere in Northern Ireland.

Benefit Entitlement

Ms Lewsley asked the Minister for Social Development what are his plans to further the uptake of benefits. (AQO 1475/01)

Mr Dodds: My Department is committed to ensuring that everyone claims and receives their proper benefit entitlement. The Social Security Agency has a range of measures in place designed to encourage people to claim social security benefits. These include undertaking regular publicity campaigns to signal the arrival of new benefits or increase awareness of existing ones. For example:

- the minimum income guarantee campaign has resulted in just over 8,000 additional successful claims;
- information days have been held recently in a number of towns across Northern Ireland; and
- A to Z guides for pensioners and for farmers have been widely distributed.

The agency also works closely with a number of voluntary sector organisations to identify and address barriers to benefits, including provision of interpreting facilities for some ethnic minority groups:

- a teleclaims service for new pensioners was introduced last year and the pension advisers are being evaluated in 2 social security office areas; and
- finally the agency provides comprehensive information, advice and assistance to people through each of the social security offices and the Benefit Shop in Castlecourt.

Work will continue in this area and will take account of emerging uptake issues from the agency's welfare reform and modernisation programme.

Housing Executive: Sale of Land and Property

Mr J Kelly asked the Minister for Social Development to outline (a) land or properties the Housing Executive sold off in the last 10 years and then re-purchased; (b) the amount of money received for such land and property; and (c) how much was involved in the re-acquisition.

(AQO 1497/01)

Mr Dodds: The information requested is not held centrally, and could only be collected at a disproportionate cost. In general terms, there have been occasions when land has been sold by the Housing Executive and compulsorily purchased at a later stage to form part of an urban renewal area or a redevelopment area. In addition, houses sold through the Housing Executive's houses sales scheme have been bought back, either through the acquisition of satisfactory houses scheme, commonly called the ASH scheme, or the Scheme for the Purchase of evacuated dwellings, known as SPED.

There will often be differences between the sale proceeds and the re-purchase costs, both of which are dependent on overall market changes and the time scales involved. The sale and the repurchase prices are determined by the Valuation and Lands Agency or other valuers.

Housing: Interface Areas

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Social Development what housing action he plans to undertake to improve interface areas in towns outside Belfast.

(AQO 1506/01)

Mr Dodds: I am conscious of the impact that inter-community strife has on housing and particularly on the lives of people residing in interface areas. I deplore violence in any shape or form but especially when it impinges on such a basic human right as one's home. Clearly there is a security dimension to this which falls outside my responsibility but, where possible, I would encourage community leaders to work together to try to resolve difficulties. If there are specific housing issues to be addressed I will endeavour to facilitate resolution of these through the Housing Executive and other housing agencies. For example, I have recently introduced a scheme to provide protective security measures for homes at interface areas.

Housing Executive: Economy 7

Mr McGrady asked the Minister for Social Development what plans he has to discuss with the Housing Executive the need to review the eligibility criteria for financial assistance for the installation of Economy 7; and to make a statement.

(AQO 1465/01)

Mr Dodds: I have no plans to discuss with the Housing Executive the need to review the eligibility criteria for financial assistance for the installation of Economy 7.

There are no specific eligibility criteria for financial assistance in the private sector for the installation of Economy 7 heating; qualification for such assistance is the same, no matter what type of heating is installed.

Written Answers to Questions

OFFICE OF THE FIRST MINISTER AND DEPUTY FIRST MINISTER

Women's Centres: Funding

Ms McWilliams asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to detail (a) the core funding which has been awarded to women's centres; and (b) any action the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister will be taking to address recent funding problems encountered by these centres. (AQW 2826/01)

Reply: Generally Departments only consider core funding for groups operating on a regional basis and relatively few organisations receive such funding.

In the current financial year, the Department for Social Development through its Belfast Regeneration Office have just recently approved £190,000 from their Making Belfast Work Action Plan budget to secure management and administration posts and to provide running costs for 2 Women's Centres (Ballybeen and Windsor). In the last financial year the same two centres received £167,597 from the same source. The Department for Social Development through its Londonderry Development Initiative also provided funding of £39,026 to three Women's Centres in the city, because these centres deliver services relevant to that Initiative.

Our officials are presently finalising a position paper on the funding of women's organizations generally. They are also liaising with officials in the Department for Social Development with a view to identifying how these funding problems can be most effectively addressed.

Children's Commissioner in Northern Ireland

Mr Beggs asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to outline (a) the current number of children who will be monitored by a Children's Commissioner in Northern Ireland; and (b) the comparable number in (i) Wales; (ii) Norway; and (iii) Republic of Ireland under the current proposals. (AQW 3382/01)

Reply: The number of children living in Northern Ireland is 460,484¹, approximately one third of the total population.

In Norway, there is a total child population of 1.16 million, approximately one quarter of the total population.²

There are 671,300 children living in Wales, which make up about one fifth of the total population.³

There are approximately 1.1 million children living in the Republic of Ireland, making up 29% of the total population.

Electronic Service Delivery: Online Transactions

Mr Gibson asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what has been the percentage increase in take-up of on-line transactions between the public and Ministerial Departments in the last 12 months. (AQW 3419/01)

Reply: Online transactions are a key priority for all Northern Ireland Departments although they are only one, albeit important, aspect of electronic service delivery.

In the main such transactions are currently related to requests for information, publications and assistance. It is important to note that for many Departments key services include the provision of information and advice and electronic access to that advice is rightly considered to be a transaction. The under-pinning principle is that having contacted government electronically, the customer is satisfied at the end of the interaction.

At present, not all Departments are routinely capturing take-up figures for these transactions although plans to introduce a formal monitoring regime are under consideration as part of the overall e-Business programme.

Nevertheless, a number of Departments have already acknowledged encouraging increases in the uptake of electronic transactions for example Department of Enterprise Trade and Investment have recorded increases as high as 30% month on month and the overall expectation is that this upward trend will continue, particularly as the number of transactions available online grows.

³ 1999 figures

Background statistics which are available for some of the Northern Ireland Civil Service websites also give an indication of the interest in, and usage of, online Departmental information. These, too, have shown encouraging growth in the use of the Internet as a means of interaction between the public and Government Departments and services. For example, job vacancies viewed at Department of Employment and Learning's 'JobCentre Online' increased from 28,128 in April 2001 to 213,129 in April 2002, an increase of 758%.

Reinvestment and Reform Initiative

Mr Shannon asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister, in light of the Prime Minister's announcement last week on borrowing monies from the Exchequer, to outline (a) the terms for borrowing; and (b) if there will be a consultation process for political parties and the general public. (AQW 3460/01)

Reply:

- (a) As part of the Reinvestment and Reform Initiative the Executive will be able to borrow from Treasury at highly advantageous interest rates which would be below commercial rates. There are two aspects to the borrowing arrangements. In the short term the Executive would be able to borrow up to £125 million from the Treasury under existing legislation. This loan would be repaid from revenue income currently planned. The Initiative also provides for new borrowing arrangements for the Executive in the longer term which, subject to the progress with the Review of Rating Policy, could come into operation from 2004/05.

Terms of borrowing. The loan, like any other loan, needs to be repaid. The interest rates for borrowing will be very keen – GILT market based from National Loan Fund.

- (b) It will be up to the Executive and the Assembly to decide whether to borrow and by how much to fund public services, though there will be no major changes in local revenue until after full public consultation and until a fairer system for revenue raising has been developed to replace the present system. The extent to which the borrowing power is used will be the subject of full debate within the Executive and the Assembly. There will be major public consultations launched shortly on Public Private Partnerships and the Rating Policy Review, both of which have a relevance to the longer term borrowing under the Reinvestment and Reform Initiative. Consultation will also take place with the Assembly and the public on proposals for the Budget allocations for the coming years.

Reports Commissioned

Mr Poots asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to outline (a) the reports commissioned on community relation issues over the years (1999-2000; 2000-2001; 2001-2002); and (b) which of these reports have been published.

(AQW 3646/01)

Reply: The table provided contains details of research commissioned over the period 1999 to 2002 and whether or not it has been published. Some of the research is currently in progress and where this is the case a publication date or time period is indicated. The table shows that on one occasion research has not been formally published in terms of a hard copy report. However, this work has been disseminated within the former Centre for the Study of Conflict at the University of Ulster and is available on request.

Additional publications have been produced which are not listed in the table because they were commissioned outside the time period specified. These are either already on the OFMDFM website (www.ofmdfmi.gov.uk) or will be placed there in due course.

Civic Forum: Vacancies

Mr Bradley asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what steps are being taken to fill the vacancies allocated to the Agriculture and Rural Development sector on the Civic Forum.

(AQW 3743/01)

Reply: The report to the Assembly in February 1999 identified the ten sectors from which membership for the Civic Forum would be drawn. The Ulster Farmers' Union, the Northern Ireland Agricultural Producers Association and representative organisations from the fishing sector were to nominate 3 members for the agriculture and fisheries sector. However, a member representing NIAPA was not appointed due to internal difficulties within the organisation. We also understand that the member representing the Ulster Farmer's Union has recently resigned.

The difficulties within NIAPA have now been resolved and officials have begun the process to obtain nominations to fill both the vacancies within the agriculture sector.

Exclusion of Ministers

Mr Paisley Jnr asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what consideration it has given to excluding Sinn Féin Ministers from Office under Section 30 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998.

(AQO 1458/01)

Reply: We have not jointly considered the exclusion of Sinn Féin Ministers under Section 30 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998.

Freedom of Information

Mr Ford asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister if consideration has been given to the 'Freedom of Information' legislation being introduced to the Scottish Parliament in formulating the proposed Freedom of Information Bill for Northern Ireland.

(AQO 1424/01)

Reply: The Executive previously agreed that the Freedom of Information Act 2000 should extend to Northern Ireland and it will be fully in force by January 2005. We will also be reviewing the desirability of separate legislation for Northern Ireland.

We are of course aware of the legislation being introduced in Scotland and we will take account of this in considering the desirability of separate legislation for Northern Ireland.

Reinvestment and Reform Initiative

Mr McMenamin asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to outline plans and timescale for the development of their Re-investment and Reform Initiative.

(AQO 1434/01)

Reply: We explained to this House on 7 May that a lot of work now needs to be done to implement the Reinvestment and Reform Initiative. An Executive sub-Committee is being established to oversee the work.

We have already put in hand action to make early progress. We need to decide in the coming weeks how best to utilise the £200 million which will be available to us over the next two years. Departments have already been asked for their proposals. A new regional cancer centre has been identified as a possible project which could benefit from the short-term package.

We are also working to establish the new strategic investment body as soon as possible to help us take a more strategic approach to investment in our infrastructure. The Executive has agreed to set up a Project Board, with members nominated by parties in the Executive, to advise on the most appropriate remit and status for the new body. The Project Board is expected to meet for the first time shortly.

On the use of the sites at Ebrington and the Maze, Members will be aware that work to develop proposals for the use of Ebrington has already commenced. We are establishing a partnership and regeneration panel involving central and local government, community and business sectors, to bring forward proposals for the Executive's consideration. We want to use local experience and expertise to advise us on how best to use this strategically important asset. We also want local community and business groups to be consulted and involved in developing ideas for the use of other such sites including the Maze.

These extensive estates offer us many possibilities for major economic and social regeneration. We will want to consider the options carefully so that we achieve dynamic development, working in partnership with local communities.

NSMC

Mr Bradley asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister when and where is the next plenary NSMC scheduled to take place. (AQO 1556/01)

Reply: The next plenary of the NSMC is scheduled to take place on Friday 28 June in Armagh.

Reinvestment and Reform Initiative

Mr McMenamin asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister when will the project board for the Re-investment and Reform Initiative be established. (AQO 1558/01)

Reply: The first meeting of the Project Board took place on 11 June.

A key function of the Project Board, which comprises members nominated by Ministers from the parties in the Executive, will be to advise on the role, remit and status of the new Strategic Investment Body.

We have nominated the chairs of the Project Board and the UUP, SDLP, DUP and Sinn Féin Ministers have nominated members.

HMP Maze

Mr Close asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister what factors will determine when ownership of HMP Maze will pass to the Northern Ireland Executive. (AQO 1537/01)

Reply: These are, of course, mainly matters for the Northern Ireland Office.

We understand that the timing of the release by the Northern Ireland Prison Service of the Maze will be determined by operational factors including the availability of adequate contingency accommodation within the Prisons estate (currently restricted by an extensive refurbishment programme at other prison establishments) and the need to relocate a number of operational units from the Maze to other sites. It is not, therefore, possible at this stage to put a precise timescale on the site's release.

Tourism

Mr Dallat asked the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister to outline their plans for developing tourism between Britain and Northern Ireland, with particular reference to the British-Irish Council agenda. (AQO 1569/01)

Reply: At the second British-Irish Summit Council meeting in November 2001, it was agreed that tourism was of significant importance to all members in terms of jobs, revenue, culture and heritage and that benefit would be derived from greater co-ordination across this industry. The Council decided that Guernsey should take the lead on the Tourism Sector and a progress report will be made to the next British-Irish Summit Council meeting which is scheduled to take place in Jersey on 14 June.

The lead responsibility for taking work forward within this sector in Northern Ireland lies with the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment. A representative from the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment has attended Tourism senior officials meetings held on 1 March and 21 May 2002, with a view to agreeing a future work programme which would be of most benefit to all members.

AGRICULTURE AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

Common Fisheries Policy

Dr Birnie asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what input her Department had to the recent negotiations on the new EU fisheries policy, scheduled to be published in May 2002. (AQW 3688/01)

The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (Ms Rodgers): My Department conducted a consultation, locally, on the European Commission's Green Paper proposals for reform of the Common Fisheries Policy, and fed these through by way of contributions to the Commission's Green Paper consultation. Through regular ongoing communication with UK Ministerial colleagues, I have ensured that issues specific to Northern Ireland, such as the long term future of our nephrops industry, and recognition for the capacity reductions which we have made, have been maintained at the forefront of Member State thinking and communicated at European level negotiations.

The process of consultation on the Commission's substantive legislative proposals, which were published on 28 May 2002, has now begun. I shall continue to pursue Northern Ireland's regional interests at Member State and European Level, and by pressing our interests at Fisheries Council meeting. I attended the June Fisheries Council in Luxembourg on 11 June to ensure, through meetings and representations to UK Ministers, that Northern Ireland's interests are were represented in these negotiations.

I attach particular importance to local consultations with fisheries interests, to ensure that all important aspects of the future viability of Northern Ireland's fisheries industry are appropriately covered in our response to the Commission's legislative proposals. I am pleased to say that the Commission's "Blue Team", which is spearheading their consultation with visits to various locations throughout Europe, will visit Northern Ireland on Thursday 13 June, where the European Commission's representative office in Belfast will host a seminar for fisheries interests, which will both present the Commission's proposals, and allow stakeholders to ask questions and put their views directly to Commission officials. I will meet the team during their visit.

Equality Impact Assessments

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline (a) the number of Equality Impact Assessments (EIA) carried out by her Department to date; and (b) the total cost of (i) research; (ii) consultation; (iii) printing; and (iv) dissemination, for each EIA.

(AQW 3769/01)

Ms Rodgers: Equality Impact Assessments have been carried out on the following policies:

Less Favoured Area Support

Payment of Agricultural Grants and Subsidies (which included the Implementation of Agenda 2000); and

Natural Resource Tourism Measure (Peace II)

Cost of Research £	Consultation	Printing £	Dissemination £
Nil	Nil	80.00	110.00

Imported Meat

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the amount of beef imported from (i) Argentina; and (ii) other countries, in the last 12 months.

(AQW 3780/01)

Ms Rodgers: There have been two imports of consignments of corned beef from Argentina in the past 12 months. There have been no other imports of beef from Third Countries within this period.

From the introduction of the European Single Market 1992, the conditions for trade in most products between Member States have been harmonised. This means that, regardless of whether a product is destined for the UK market or another Member State of the European Union, certain basic trade requirements have to be met. With regard to personal imports, general import licences apply which mean that importers can bring small quantities of meat and dairy products into Northern Ireland, without any additional conditions applying. Therefore, no records are kept on the import of beef from Member States.

Imported Meat

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline (a) the effect imported beef has on the level of local beef sales; and (b) any steps she is taking to increase the level of local sales.

(AQW 3781/01)

Ms Rodgers: Inspections of imported meat from Third countries are carried out at Border Inspection Posts in accordance with EU Regulations. Once such meat enters the EU it can be traded freely in the same way as EU beef. It is therefore not possible to maintain statistics on the quantity of beef imported into NI, nor is it possible to assess the effect imported beef has on the level of local beef sales.

Market research would however indicate that beef is being imported from the ROI, other EU countries and Third countries with beef from Third countries going to the catering and institutional sectors. It is also understood supermarkets continue to source the majority of their beef from local suppliers. All beef must comply with EU import conditions and with EC beef labelling requirements by having the beef marked with the country and establishment of origin.

I continue to encourage supermarkets and others to make greater use of local produce, including beef, through my attendance at suppliers conferences, company visits and at other events.

Livestock Dealers

Mr Bradley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if she will undertake to establish a unit to provide a registration system for livestock dealers.

(AQW 3795/01)

Ms Rodgers: The Department has made provision under the Animals and Animal Products (Import and Export) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2000 to ensure dealers that import livestock from other Member States and sell them on, are registered.

However, the introduction of the 30 day standstill requirement following the Foot and Mouth outbreak, has meant that the requirement for dealers to be registered has been overtaken by the fact that animals are not able to move through registered dealers premises at present.

It is recognised that standstills contribute significantly to preventing the spread of exotic animal disease and that the principal trigger for spread of animal disease is animal movement, particularly repetitive movement as through dealers premises or movement involving multiple source contacts or destinations. It is therefore the Department's intention to maintain the 30 day standstill requirement in Northern Ireland for the foreseeable future.

Dairy Production

Mr Gibson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what assessment has she made of the levels of egg production in 2001. (AQW 3796/01)

Ms Rodgers: There were 65.8 million dozen eggs graded and packed in registered NI egg packing stations during 2001. This represents a 6% increase on the 62.2 million dozen recorded for the previous year. The laying flock also increased by 1% to 2.63 million birds in the year 2001.

Freedom of Information

Dr Birnie asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what measures she has taken to ensure that the publication schemes required under the Freedom of Information Act will be completed by November 2002. (AQW 3845/01)

Ms Rodgers: My Department will comply fully with the provisions of the Freedom of Information Act including the preparation of a publication scheme in time to meet the November 2002 deadline. I am also in the process of appointing an Information Manager who will have specific responsibility for Freedom of Information matters. I have asked senior officials within my Department to detail all the information they publish or intend to publish and this will form the basis of the Publication Scheme.

CULTURE, ARTS AND LEISURE

Foyle Fisheries

Mr Byrne asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what plans he has to develop the tourism potential of the Foyle Fisheries area. (AQO 1440/01)

The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (Mr McGimpsey): [holding answer 27 May 2002]: The Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) administers a number of financial assistance schemes- the EU Programme for Peace and Reconciliation 2000-2004, the International Fund for Ireland Visitor Attractions Scheme, the Tourism Development Scheme and Events Support Scheme- which are aimed at developing existing visitor attractions and amenities, marketing projects and events support. Applications for assistance under these initiatives will be welcome for projects located in the Foyle Fisheries area.

In addition, all existing tourist accommodation businesses located in the area which have been certified by the NITB are eligible to apply to Invest NI for selective financial assistance. Invest NI can also provide support for a range of management disciplines including marketing, finance and operations.

I am also aware that the Foyle Carlingford and Irish Lights Commission (FCILC), a cross-border body sponsored by the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, is currently preparing a marine tourism strategy which will set out the Agency's plans for the development of marine tourism in these areas. As part of this strategy the Agency is in the process of commissioning a marine tourism audit with a view to ascertaining the level of facilities currently available in the Foyle and Carlingford Areas. The Agency hopes to be in a position to publish its marine tourism strategy later this year.

National Soccer Stadium

Mr Gibson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure when will a decision be made regarding the national stadium project for Northern Ireland.

(AQW 3797/01)

Mr McGimpsey: The national stadium issue is currently being considered in the context of my Department's work on developing a Soccer Strategy for Northern Ireland.

I hope to make a statement in the near future about the Soccer Strategy and this will include my views on the way forward on the national stadium issue.

Equality Impact Assessment

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline (a) the number of Equality Impact Assessments (EIA) carried out by his Department to date; and (b) the total cost of (i) research; (ii) consultation; (iii) printing; and (iv) dissemination, for each EIA.

(AQW 3822/01)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department has not as yet carried out any equality impact assessments but has contributed £10k to the Electronic Libraries for Northern Ireland project carried out by the education and library boards in compliance with the equality schemes of the five boards.

Freedom of Information

Dr Birnie asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what measures he has taken to ensure that the publication schemes required under the Freedom of Information Act will be completed by November 2002.

(AQW 3846/01)

Mr McGimpsey: My Department has taken steps to ensure that it fully complies with the provisions of the Freedom of Information Act. To this end, a dedicated resource has been identified to oversee the production of a 'Publication Scheme' which will cover my core Department and our Executive Agencies, Public Record Office of Northern Ireland and Ordnance Survey of Northern Ireland.

I have also established an informal Working Group to ensure we meet the November 2002 deadline.

EDUCATION

Consultants/Consultancy

Mr Close asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 427/01, to provide a breakdown by (a) project; (b) period of project; and (c) expenditure, the consultancy work carried out by PricewaterhouseCoopers on behalf of his Department and the Education and Library Boards over the past 5 years. (AQW 3488/01)

The Minister of Education (Mr M McGuinness): PricewaterhouseCoopers (PWC) has only been in existence as a company since July 1998 as a result of the merger between Price Waterhouse and Coopers and Lybrand; the following information relates only to the period since the merger.

Information in relation to specific a) projects and b) period of project is provided below. However, the value of individual contracts awarded to consultants can not be provided as this would breach commercial confidentiality.

Primary Schools: Composite Classes

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Education what assessment can he make of the effect of composite classes on (a) primary school pupils; (b) teachers; (c) resources; and (d) value for money. (AQW 3745/01)

Mr M McGuinness: Inspections conducted during the current school year in individual schools indicate that such classes do place important demands on teachers in terms of organisation, planning and approaches to teaching and learning but also provided evidence that, in general, teachers are responding well to the differing learning needs within their classes and that children experienced a programme of activities appropriate to their individual needs.

Primary School Classes

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of primary school composite classes (a) per constituency; and (b) per Board area. (AQW 3746/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Per Constituency
Belfast East	22
Belfast North	30
Belfast South	17
Belfast West	27
East Antrim	66
East Londonderry	103

(a) Per Constituency
Fermanagh South Tyrone	206

Total	1808

NEELB: Funding

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Education what assessment he can make in relation to (a) the 1.8% inflationary rise given to schools in the NEELB area; and (b) the 3.5% salary increase awarded to teachers.

(AQW 3747/01)

Mr M McGuinness: While the level of resources delegated to its schools is primarily a matter for the NEELB, I am aware of the financial difficulties that have been identified by the Board in relation to its schools and have initiated a full review of the Board's expenditure plans across its total allocation, in order to inform decisions on what further action can be taken. My officials are currently working closely with Board Officers to examine the position in detail.

Allocation of Resources

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Education what directives have been given at Board level to save money on administration.

(AQW 3748/01)

Mr M McGuinness: When Boards allocate resources across their services they take due cognisance of the Department's allocation letter which requires Boards to keep administration costs to the minimum levels required to maintain core services. It is particularly important that Boards keep administration costs to a minimum with the ever-increasing emphasis on maximising resources that go to the classroom.

Equality Impact Assessment

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Education to outline (a) the number of Equality Impact Assessments (EIA) carried out by his Department to date; and (b) the total cost of (i) research; (ii) consultation; (iii) printing; and (iv) dissemination, for each EIA.

(AQW 3770/01)

Mr M McGuinness: (a) There has been one Equality Impact Assessment (EQIA) carried out by the Department of Education to date to the formal consultation phase. This was in respect of the Consultation Document "A Common Funding Formula for Grant-Aided Schools" which was launched on 5 April 2001.

(b) This EQIA formed an integral part (ie Chapter 21) of the Consultation Document and it was prepared in accordance with the Equality Commission's "Guide to Statutory Duties" document. Therefore, in these circumstances, the specific costs in relation to research, consultation, printing and dissemination in relation to this EQIA were subsumed in the overall cost of the Consultation Document.

Primary Schools: Data

Mrs Carson asked the Minister of Education to detail, by primary school in Belfast City Council area for the past 5 years, (a) the number of schoolchildren entitled to free meals in each school; (b) the Transfer Test results for each school; (c) the numbers of schoolchildren in P7 in each school; and (d) the total enrolment in each school.

(AQW 3786/01)

Mr M McGuinness: As the information requested is extensive, I will arrange to have it placed in the Assembly Library. I enclose a copy for your personal use.

Transfer Test

Mrs Carson asked the Minister of Education how many schoolchildren, over the past 5 years, were not required to sit the Transfer Test due to transfer through the Dickson Plan or other direct transfer procedure.

(AQW 3788/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The Transfer Test is not compulsory therefore no pupil is required to sit the test.

Over the past five years the number of pupils opting out of sitting the test is as follows:

2001/02	8,956
---------	-------

2000/01	8,856
1999/00	8,398
1998/99	8,591
1997/98	8,518

Non-Grammar Schools

Mrs Carson asked the Minister of Education how many children, over the past 5 years, entered non-Grammar Schools which provides tuition up to and including 'A' Level. (AQW 3789/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The information, in respect of non-Grammar schools which had pupils entered for A-level or equivalent examinations in June 2001, is as follows:

YEAR 8 PUPILS

1997/98	10,641
1998/99	10,572
1999/00	10,594
2000/01	10,181
2001/02	10,062

Comber Technical College

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Education if money generated through the sale of land at the site of the former Comber Technical College will be re-invested in the Comber area. (AQW 3798/01)

Mr M McGuinness: I understand that the South-Eastern Education and Library Board has advised the Ards Borough Council that any receipts accruing from the sale of this land will be used for expenditure on capital development in the Comber area.

Number of Pupils: First Year

Mrs I Robinson asked the Minister of Education to detail (a) the number of pupils accepted into the first year of (i) Down High School; and (ii) St Patrick's Grammar School, Downpatrick, respectively, for the year 2002-03; and (b) a breakdown of the 11+ results obtained by these pupils. (AQW 3844/01)

Mr M McGuinness:

- (a) The number of pupils accepted into Year 8 for the 2002/03 school year in Down High School and St Patrick's Grammar School, Downpatrick, is as follows:

Down High School	128
St Patrick's Grammar School	110

- (b) A breakdown of the Transfer Procedure results obtained by these pupils is set out below:

Breakdown by Grade	Down High School	St Patrick's Grammar School
A	103	57
B1	21	14
C1	0	13
D	0	1
Other	2	0
Total	128	110

Publication Scheme: Freedom of Information Act

Dr Birnie asked the Minister of Education what measures he has taken to ensure that the publication schemes required under the Freedom of Information Act will be completed by November 2002. (AQW 3847/01)

Mr M McGuinness: The Department of Education has appointed an Information Officer whose responsibilities include the preparation of the Department's Publication Scheme. An Implementation Plan has been drawn up to ensure compliance with the November 2002 deadline and an information audit of the Department is currently under way.

Burns Report

Mrs Carson asked the Minister of Education to detail (a) the cause of the delay in the public receiving the response form in relation to the Post-Primary Education Report; and (b) any plans to extend the period of consultation on the Report due to this delay.

(AQW 3899/01)

Mr M McGuinness: This is the largest consultation ever undertaken on an education issue and the household response form is being distributed to over 670,000 households. Distribution has taken longer than was originally anticipated due to the massive scale of this exercise. However all forms will be delivered within the next few days.

The deadline for comments is 28 June 2002 and I believe this allows sufficient time for everyone to respond.

Driver: Minister of Education

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 3660/01, to outline (a) who employs his driver; (b) if his driver is paid from an Executive budget;

(c) how was he selected for the position; (d) if there was open competition; and (e) the selection criteria for the position. (AQW 3972/01)

Mr M McGuinness:

- (a) My driver is an employee of Sinn Féin
- (b) The driver salary is met by Sinn Féin, which is in turn reimbursed by the Department of Education
- (c), (d), & (e) I consider these queries to be internal matters for my Party.

Attack on School Transport: Strabane

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Education to make a statement in light of the recent attack on a school bus in Strabane following Ireland's World Cup game with Germany on Wednesday 5th June 2002. (AQW 3980/01)

Mr M McGuinness: I have said, on a number of occasions in the past, that children should be able to travel to and from school without fear of attack or abuse. I therefore totally deplore the attack which took place in Strabane on 5 June. Any attack on pupils, or vehicles used to transport pupils, when travelling to and from school, is totally unacceptable and there can be no possible justification or excuse for this recent incident.

EMPLOYMENT AND LEARNING

Higher Education Sector

Mrs Carson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail (a) the number of entrants to the Higher Education sector who came from non-Grammar School backgrounds; and (b) this figure as a percentage of the overall number of entrants to the Higher Education sector. (AQW 3787/01)

The Minister for Employment and Learning (Ms Hanna): The Department for Employment and Learning does not have information available on the type of school attended prior to enrolment on higher education courses.

Equality Impact Assessment

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline (a) the number of Equality Impact Assessments (EIA) carried out by her Department to date; and (b) the total cost of (i) research; (ii) consultation; (iii) printing; and (iv) dissemination, for each EIA. (AQW 3799/01)

Ms Hanna: To date, a total of 14 Equality Impact Assessments have been carried out by my Department.

Identifiable invoiced costs are as follows:

Student Support Review (printing and distribution costs)	£3,400
Changes to Employment Legislation 13 Equality Impact Assessments (Research and Consultation costs)	£17,110

My Department makes every effort to keep the costs of conducting Equality Impact Assessments to a minimum. The Department does not routinely collate information in relation to in house preparation and ancillary costs associated with the completion of Equality Impact Assessments.

Post Graduate Certificate of Education

Mrs Nelis asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail, in the past 5 years, (a) the number of places in the Post-Graduate Certificate of Education (PGCE) (Secondary) full-time at the University of Ulster campus at Coleraine; (b) the number of successful applicants in the PGCE course; and (c) the number of successful applicants for the PGCE from the Republic of Ireland. (AQW 3823/01)

Ms Hanna:

- (a) The University of Ulster provides a number of places on PGCE (secondary) courses and the decision on how they are split over the various disciplines at both the Coleraine and Jordanstown campuses is at the discretion of the university. All places on the courses are normally filled.

Freedom of Information

Dr Birnie asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what measures she has taken to ensure that the publication schemes required under the Freedom of Information Act will be completed by November 2002.

(AQW 3848/01)

Ms Hanna: My Department will seek to ensure that it complies fully with the provisions of the Freedom of Information Act. To this end, an Information Manager has been appointed to oversee all corporate information matters. This includes preparation of the Publication Scheme in time to meet the November 2002 deadline.

Individual Learning Accounts Scheme

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline if there has been any progress towards launching a replacement for individual learning accounts.

(AQW 3860/01)

Ms Hanna: I will complete my review of the operation of the Individual Learning Accounts scheme as it applied in Northern Ireland, and announce my intentions for the future as soon as possible. It is important to absorb fully the lessons from the original ILA national framework, and in particular to take account of the work of the Employability Task Force, in shaping new arrangements to encourage and widen participation in adult learning.

Employment: Kilkeel

Mr Bradley asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline (a) his assessment of the announced closure of Dunnes Supermarket, Kilkeel; and (b) any initiative he will pursue in relation to finding alternative employment for those who may be made redundant.

(AQW 3982/01)

Ms Hanna: I have noted with regret the announcement of the closure of Dunnes Stores in Kilkeel with the loss of 36 full and part time jobs.

My local JobCentre manager in Kilkeel has already been in contact with local Dunnes Stores management and has put in place arrangements to offer the full range of JobCentre services to all staff affected by the closure.

ENTERPRISE, TRADE AND INVESTMENT

Renewable Energy

Mrs Carson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (a) the types of renewable energy under development; (b) the amount of public money invested in the development of renewable energy; (c) the amount of public money invested in the development of renewable wind energy; (d) the amount of public money invested in the development of renewable solar energy; and (e) the amount of public money invested in the development of renewable wave energy. (AQW 3659/01)

The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (Sir Reg Empey): [holding answer 5 June 2002]: The development of renewable energy projects is a matter for the private sector. My Department would only generally become aware of the development of projects when planning permission is being sought and/or an application is made for a generating licence. It is known, however, that planning permission is currently being sought for 2 wind farms (one in Co Tyrone and the other in Co Fermanagh).

Public funding for renewable energy projects is provided through EU grants, and various UK and Northern Ireland support schemes. In the 5 years ending March 2002 a total of £2,781,995.72 was paid to developers of a range of eligible projects in Northern Ireland. Within this total the amounts allocated to wind, solar and wave projects is as follows:

- £447,302.85 for wind energy;
- £97,224.80 for solar energy; and
- £126,985 for an integrated wind/wave project.

Tourism: European Funding

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline (a) the amount of European funding received for tourism purposes; and (b) to whom such funding has been distributed, in each of the last 3 years.

(AQW 3704/01)

Sir Reg Empey:

- (a) Over the last 3 years, the Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) has secured a total of £21,087,682.75 from the European Structural Funds for tourism purposes.
- (b) The funding secured and details on how it was distributed for each of the last three financial years is as follows:

	1999/00 £	2000/01 £	2001/02 £
Total EU funds secured	5,749,556.46	7,376,717.01	7,961,409.28

	1999/00 £	2000/01 £	2001/02 £
Allocations
(i) Selective Financial Assistance to third party tourism projects	5,410,235.21	6,971,106.11	7,891,001.36
(ii) NITB Core Marketing Activities	266,000.00	-	-
(iii) NITB International Marketing Activities	73,321.25	236,726.90	15,291.92
(iv) NITB E-commerce Initiative	-	168,884.00	55,116.00

For the years ending 31 March 2000 and 2001, the full listings of the third parties who received selective financial assistance are published in the NITB annual accounts contained in the NITB Annual Reports. These Reports are held in the Assembly Library. The Annual Report for 2001-2002 is not yet available

Economic Potential: Waterside

Mrs Courtney asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to ensure that a major economic facility is established in the Waterside area of Derry City Council which will recognise its regional status as outlined in 'Shaping our Future' document.
(AQW 3726/01)

Sir Reg Empey: My Department and Invest NI recognise the potential of Londonderry and the North West to develop as an economic hub as envisaged in the Regional Development Strategy.

We are committed to working with local partners to help those in the North West progress from the high level vision for the region towards conceiving solid new Developmental ideas that will help the region to fulfill its potential.

We believe that the availability of the Ebrington site is of major strategic importance to the overall economic potential, not only of the Waterside but of Londonderry and indeed the wider North West. We are supportive of the partnership concept being proposed to look at how the site could be best developed and would be eager to play a role in the consultations that will undoubtedly occur regarding the site. The development of the site needs to be set in the context of other opportunities such as Atlantic Cross at Dupont, the plans of the Londonderry Port & Harbour Commissioners for Fort George, the plans for development of the University of Ulster and North West Institute for Further & Higher Education and, of course, those of a number of private developers in the city.

Small and Medium Enterprises: West Tyrone

Mr Byrne asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the percentage of Invest NI's budget in the current financial year that has been allocated towards the promoting of Small and Medium Enterprises [SMEs] in West Tyrone.
(AQW 3740/01)

Sir Reg Empey: Invest NI's remit is for all of Northern Ireland. Part of this remit is to encourage an increase in the overall level and quality of new start up businesses and to stimulate growth in established businesses through a range of initiatives and services.

The budget allocated for those initiatives and services is based on anticipated demand and need and covers all of Northern Ireland rather than at sub-regional level.

Invest NI

Mr Byrne asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline the percentage of Invest NI's budget in the current financial year, that has been allocated towards attracting inward investment to West Tyrone.
(AQW 3742/01)

Sir Reg Empey: Invest NI's remit is for all of Northern Ireland. It encourages new inward investment to locate in appropriate areas based on a range of criteria including availability of labour skills and infrastructure. Particular focus is given to New TSN areas which include West Tyrone.

Leaf Technologies, Mallusk

Mr Dalton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail any plans he has to safeguard employment at Leaf Technologies, Mallusk.
(AQW 3771/01)

Sir Reg Empey: As the company is currently in Administration, the Administrator is responsible for running the affairs of the company. Invest NI is awaiting the Administrator's proposals for re-establishing the business on a viable footing, and this will enable Invest NI to determine what role it may be able to play in facilitating the future development of the business.

Leaf Technologies, Mallusk

Mr Dalton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what assessment can he make of the long-term commercial viability of the Leaf Technologies plant in Mallusk.
(AQW 3772/01)

Sir Reg Empey: The company is currently in Administration and we are awaiting proposals from the Administrator on the way forward. I hope these proposals will establish a basis for re-establishing the business on a commercial footing, but until these are to hand it is not possible to provide an assessment of the long-term viability of the company.

Equality Impact Assessment

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline (a) the number of Equality Impact Assessments (EIA) carried out by his Department to date; and (b) the total cost of (i) research; (ii) consultation; (iii) printing; and (iv) dissemination, for each EIA.

(AQW 3794/01)

Sir Reg Empey: DETI has issued four EQIA's to date for consultation. The following table details these EQIAs and their associated costs:

EQIA	(i) cost of research	(ii) cost of consultation	(iii) & (iv) cost of printing and dissemination
1. Bill for Restructuring of the DETI Agencies	*Nil	*Nil	£5,280#
2. IDB policies relating to support for existing industry and for the attraction of inward investment	*Nil	*Nil	£1,123+
3. IRTU policies relating to research and development	*Nil	*Nil	£791+
4. BSD policies relating to the promotion of management development	*Nil	*Nil	£717+

* There were no external costs associated with research and consultation.

This figure is in relation to both the draft and final documents.

+ These documents are currently out for public consultation in draft form.

IRTU - Industrial Research & Technology Unit

BSD - Business Support Division

Equality Impact Assessment

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the cost of producing the Equality Impact Assessment of LEDU's Policy Area 1 document, published in March 2002.

(AQW 3825/01)

Sir Reg Empey: Costs associated with producing LEDU's Equality Impact Assessment (EQIA) document of it's Policy Area 1, "To maximise the sustainable growth of small businesses in Northern Ireland (through increased competitiveness)" are shown in the following table.

£ Research/Creation of Document	£ Printing	£ Dissemination
* NIL	£700	£260

There were no external costs associated with research/creation of this document.

Tourism

Mr Byrne asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what percentage of the NI Tourist Board's budget in the current financial year has been allocated to promoting tourism in West Tyrone.

(AQW 3826/01)

Sir Reg Empey: The Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) administers the EU Programme for Peace and Reconciliation 2000-2004 which includes funding for marketing projects that will assist Northern Ireland position itself in the global marketplace. To date in 2002-2003 no allocations have been made to projects in the West Tyrone area but applications are under consideration by NITB. Further applications for assistance under this initiative will be welcome for projects located in the West Tyrone area.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to give his assessment on the current state of the manufacturing industry.

(AQW 3834/01)

Sir Reg Empey: The problems of the global economy have impacted on Northern Ireland's manufacturing sector. The latest available data shows that manufacturing output fell by 8.8% over the year to December 2001, and by 3.5% over the quarter September 2001 to December 2001.

It does not appear that the recent decline of Northern Ireland's manufacturing output will be reversed in the short term. The latest CBI/Business Strategies Limited Regional Trends Survey (May 2002) reports continued pessimism amongst Northern Ireland's manufacturers concerning the general business situation. The survey indicates that total orders recorded a pronounced decline in the last quarter (to March 2002) and a further, albeit smaller, fall is expected in the coming months. Despite this general pessimism, it is pleasing to note that export optimism has turned positive for the first time in over a year.

It is also worth noting that despite the decline in industrial manufacturing the small firms sector in Northern Ireland continues to outperform its counterparts in GB. In fact, the recent Engineering Output Survey from the Engineering Employers Federation indicates that Northern Ireland is the only region in the UK that projects an increase in total output over the next 3 months.

Freedom of Information

Dr Birnie asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what measures she has taken to ensure that the publication schemes required under the Freedom of Information Act will be completed by November 2002. (AQW 3849/01)

Sir Reg Empey: In anticipation of the demands of Freedom of Information (FOI) legislation, and of other emerging requirements relating to records management, my Department appointed an Information Manager to coordinate the necessary preparatory measures.

DETI has also established an internal network of local information managers, comprising representatives from the Department's main business areas and NDPBs. This provides us with a channel for disseminating information and guidance on FOI and other matters and for coordinating action required at branch and division level.

To meet our obligations in respect of publication schemes, a programme of work has already been completed to gather required inputs from the various business areas of the Department. A draft publication scheme incorporating these inputs has been produced and is currently being reviewed by senior officials within the Department. Work is also ongoing to format a web version of the scheme.

In summary, we are on course to meet the November 2002 deadline for completion of this work.

Credit Cards

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline if his Department has reprimanded the Manager of the New York office of the NI Tourist Board for credit card irregularities given that the Manager has issued a denial in the Belfast Telegraph on Thursday 30 May 2002. (AQW 3896/01)

Sir Reg Empey: The Manager has been given a verbal and written reprimand about his failure to produce appropriate documentation.

He has also been given a written warning about his conduct in relation to duplicate and personal claims. This stressed the need for absolute accuracy when submitting expenses claims and the need for full supporting documentation.

Camlough Lake, Co Armagh

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (a) the number of outstanding cases in relation to the purchase and transfer of land at Camlough Lake, Co Armagh; (b) the reasons for the delay in these outstanding cases; and (c) the timescale for completion. (AQW 3945/01)

Sir Reg Empey: The lands, in question, were acquired by the then Electricity Board for Northern Ireland, in the 1970s, to facilitate a pump storage electricity generation scheme which did not proceed. They are therefore being disposed of by Northern Ireland Electricity plc (NIE) in accordance with a Disposal Strategy drawn up by the company and approved by the electricity Regulator under the terms of a formal Consent granted by the Regulator. The strategy involves offering the lands back to their original owners or their successors in title.

I am informed by NIE that: (a) at 31 May 2002, there remained 17 outstanding cases in which individuals have applied to purchase lots of land; (b) in 7 of the cases the company is waiting for the purchaser to complete the contract, in 8 cases negotiations between the company and the prospective purchaser are ongoing on a variety of matters, for example, clarification of rights of way, one case is the subject of litigation, and in the remaining case a number of members of the same family have applied to purchase the same portion of land; and (c) it is not possible to give a timescale for completion of all outstanding cases, since this depends on the legal process and the complexity of each case, and is not within the company's direct control.

Young's Bluecrest, Kilkeel

Mr Bradley asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what progress has been made to avoid closure of Young's Bluecrest Fish Factory, Kilkeel.

(AQW 3983/01)

Sir Reg Empey: Since the closure announcement of Youngs Bluecrest, Kilkeel on Thursday 2nd May Invest NI officials have been in ongoing contact with a wide range of interested parties in an attempt both to avoid closure, if possible, and to address the ramifications if Youngs Bluecrest do indeed cease trading in Kilkeel.

Invest NI has written to Youngs Bluecrest on two separate occasions to set up a meeting to discuss the following issues:

To understand the basis of the closure decision and to investigate if there is any possibility of Youngs Bluecrest (UK) Limited reconsidering or amending their plans.

To investigate alternative usage for Youngs Bluecrest, Kilkeel and to discuss the possibility of non-competing usage, and

To discuss any other possible solutions.

I regret to say that Invest NI is still awaiting a response from Youngs Bluecrest.

There is a strong demand for skilled labour in this sector and I understand that other Kilkeel fish processing companies will be in a position to offer employment to approximately 40 employees of Youngs Bluecrest in the event of closure.

Currently Invest NI officials are involved in discussions with other interested parties in an attempt to minimise the potential employment losses in Kilkeel.

ENVIRONMENT

Fly-Tipping

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment what action is being taken to ensure that laws and regulations governing litter and flytipping are enforced. (AQW 3708/01)

The Minister of the Environment (Mr Nesbitt): The enforcement of the legislation governing litter and fly-tipping is a matter for district councils.

The Litter (NI) Order 1994 provides district councils with powers to serve fixed penalty fines (currently £25) for littering. The provisions of the Order are further enforceable through the courts, where littering offences carry a maximum fine of £2,500.

The practice generally referred to as fly-tipping is an offence under Article 5 of the Pollution Control and Local Government (Northern Ireland) Order 1978, liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding £5000 or on conviction on indictment to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 2 years or to an unlimited fine or both. The fines and jail term may be increased where the waste in question is of a hazardous nature.

District councils also have powers under Article 16 of the 1978 Order to require the occupier of the land to remove fly-tipped waste and to take any necessary remedial action. Failure to comply with such a notice is an offence liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding £2500 and to a further fine of £1000 for each day that the offence continues.

The 1978 Order also provides district councils with powers to remove fly-tipped waste and to recover its costs from the occupier or from the person responsible for the fly-tipping, if known.

Similar provisions in the Waste and Contaminated Land Order (NI) 1997, replacing those in the 1978 Order, will come into operation when new Waste Management Regulations are made, probably in autumn 2003. The 1997 Order penalties for fly-tipping are in some respects more severe; for example, the maximum fine penalty on summary conviction will be increased from £5000 to £20,000.

While I expect that the penalties for littering and fly-tipping act as a deterrent, the problem which remains is how to make those responsible for these activities, who can be very difficult to trace or apprehend, amenable to the enforcement powers of District Councils.

Downpatrick Wastewater Treatment Works

Mr McGrady asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 3548/01, who is responsible for the unauthorised discharge of sewage to a downstream waterway, with subsequent water pollution. (AQW 3728/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The unauthorised discharge, referred to in AQW 3548/01, originates from the Downpatrick Waste Water Treatment Works (WWTW), which is the responsibility of the Water Service, an Agency of the Department for Regional Development.

The discharge, which occurs intermittently particularly in periods of heavy rain, is a result of sewage surcharging through a manhole cover inside the works, and flowing through the site fence, directly into a downstream waterway.

EU Waste & Packaging Directives

Mr Gibson asked the Minister of the Environment to make a statement on discussions between his Department and the European Commission regarding the implementation of European Waste and Packaging Directives. (AQW 3800/01)

Mr Nesbitt: No specific discussions have taken place with the European Commission in relation to the implementation of Waste or Waste Packaging Directives. In the general context, and to the extent that resources permit, my officials provide advice to Whitehall Departments on the Northern Ireland position within the overall UK negotiations on new European Community Directives and on discussions between the UK and the Commission in relation to the transposition and implementation of existing Directives. This is part of the ongoing development of EC law.

Apart from this ongoing indirect communication, senior officials from my department met with senior European Commission officials in February this year to discuss issues around the transposition and implementation of environmental Directives. The purpose of that meeting was to fully inform the Commission of the efforts being made by the Department to deal with the large backlog of untransposed Directives inherited from the period of Direct Rule. In the course of the visit an invitation to the Director General to visit Northern Ireland was issued. It is hoped this invitation will be taken up later in the year.

As the need arises and on a case by case basis, officials also raise detailed transposition or implementation issues with their counterparts in the Commission. Discussions on the implementation of the Nitrates Directive are a recent example of this.

Sea Pen

Mr McHugh asked the Minister of the Environment to outline (a) if the species of 'sea pen' are colonising in Carlingford Lough; (b) to what extent they are colonising;

(c) if any survey has been completed; and (d) the date the survey will be published. (AQW 3816/01)

Mr Nesbitt:

- (a) The sea pen Virgularia mirabilis is found in Carlingford Lough. It is found on all British and Irish coasts but is less frequent in the south. There are three species of sea pen found in the British Isles, but this is the only one found in Carlingford Lough.
- (b) The upper part of the Lough is shallow and the seabed consists of a plain of fine muddy sand. The sea pens are found in dense colonies in the shallower waters (0-5m).
- (c) There have been two surveys undertaken on behalf of my Department's Environment and Heritage Service (EHS): - (i) the Northern Ireland Sublittoral Survey published in 1986; and (ii) the Estuarine Classification Monitoring Program published in 1997. The former was a diving project and the sea pens were recorded at six of the sites. The latter was a "grab sampling" programme which found examples of the species but did not indicate the extent of the colonies.
- (d) In August 2001, EHS commissioned Queen's University to undertake a project entitled 'Marine Survey and Mapping (Benthic Habitats) of Northern Ireland'. The object was to provide information on the extent and distribution of benthic communities and species around our coasts. This work will help identify sites of national and international conservation importance and inform the selection and management of sites under the Habitats Directive. A report is due in March 2003 and will be published shortly thereafter.

Fatal Road Accidents

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of the Environment to give his commitment to investigate contributing factors to the causes of fatal road accidents. (AQW 3824/01)

Mr Nesbitt: My department and other local road safety agencies and departments are committed to using research and analysis of the causes of road collisions involving deaths and serious injuries in guiding our efforts aimed at road casualty reduction.

The investigation of road traffic collisions and the attribution of cause and responsibility is a matter for the Police Service of Northern Ireland (PSNI). The PSNI annual report, "Road Traffic Accident Statistics", provides a summary of the road traffic injury accidents reported to the police including the main causes of collisions and the types of road user responsible for them.

In some collisions, other factors which contribute to the cause of the collision, in addition to the principal cause, may be identified. However, the principal focus of PSNI's statistical analysis is on the identification of the main causes of collisions to inform road safety policy and assist targeting resources at road casualty reduction.

The PSNI's statistical information on collision causation factors is used by my Department in the development and direction of road safety education and publicity, by the Department for Regional Development in developing road engineering measures, including accident remedial and traffic calming schemes, and by the PSNI for targeting its education and enforcement activities.

Research and statistical analysis of the causes of road fatalities also underlie the development of the Northern Ireland Road Safety Strategy to 2012, which will be published in Summer 2002.

I am advised that the PSNI is monitoring a current Transport Research Laboratory (TRL) examination of collision investigation methodology in Great Britain and will consider the findings of this examination with a view to providing more accurate determination of the causes of road collisions in Northern Ireland.

Freedom of Information

Dr Birnie asked the Minister of the Environment what measures he has taken to ensure that the publication schemes required under the Freedom of Information Act will be completed by November 2002. (AQW 3870/01)

Mr Nesbitt: A dedicated unit has been established within my Department to take forward the requirements of the Freedom of Information Act, of which the Publication Scheme is one element. Work on the Scheme has commenced and it is anticipated that it will be sent to the Information Commissioner for approval around the beginning of September.

Haulage Industry

Mr Dalton asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 3448/01, to detail (a) when he intends to review the proposals issued for consultation in 1998 by the former DOE on the regulation of the local haulage industry; and (b) how robust and widespread such a review would be. (AQW 3882/01)

Mr Nesbitt:

- (a) As indicated in my previous answer, I intend to update the review of the regulation of the road haulage industry in Northern Ireland undertaken in 1998 when resources and other departmental work priorities permit. It is not possible to be precise at this stage about when that might be.
- (b) I can, however, confirm that this review, when it takes place, will be comprehensive, robust and inclusive of the areas addressed in the 1998 consultation.

Wind Turbines

Mrs Carson asked the Minister of the Environment if the Planning Service consults with the Northern Ireland Tourist Board in relation to Wind Turbine Farm planning applications. (AQW 3928/01)

Mr Nesbitt: I refer the Member to my colleague, the Minister for Enterprise, Trade and Investment's reply to AQW 3927/01 of 14 June 2002

Areas of Special Scientific Interest

Mr Savage asked the Minister of the Environment if he has had any communication with his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, over the designation of areas of special scientific interest. (AQO 1533/01)

Mr Nesbitt: My Department's Environment and Heritage Service routinely consults with the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development on all proposed nature conservation designations, including Areas of Special Scientific Interest. This consultation ensures that any agricultural, forestry and fishery interests in the area to be designated are brought to the attention of my officials and, if necessary, to me.

This close working relationship between the two Departments continues after declaration. The Environment and Heritage Service consults the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development on all prospective management agreements with landowners and occupiers of Areas of Special Scientific Interest.

There are also consultations between the two Departments on policy and legislative matters connected with Areas of Special Scientific Interest and other statutory designations. In particular, the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development was consulted on my Department's proposals for a new Areas of Special Scientific Interest Bill, which I plan to introduce into the Assembly in the next session.

Planning Application: Strangford

Mr McGrady asked the Minister of the Environment what steps he has taken to ensure that the halt placed on processing planning applications for the village of Strangford is removed. (AQO 1511/01)

Mr Nesbitt: There are no current planning applications for new housing development in Strangford. My Department's Environment and Heritage Service has advised that they wish to discuss the level of treatment in the Strangford Waste Water Treatment Works with the Department for Regional Development's Water Service. These discussions are in hand to see if a satisfactory solution can be achieved.

Plastic Bags

Mr McHugh asked the Minister of the Environment if he intends to introduce a levy on the use of polythene bags at Supermarkets and other retail outlets similar to that imposed by the Government in the Republic of Ireland. (AQO 1545/01)

Mr Nesbitt: In the UK as a whole, around 10 billion plastic bags are given away each year. That constitutes a significant source of landfill and an equally significant source of litter.

Taxation is an excepted matter, so we do not have in Northern Ireland the powers that would enable us to introduce a levy independently of the rest of the UK.

I am aware that Michael Meacher at the Department for the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (DEFRA) has given notice that he intends to press for the introduction of a similar levy. It is my intention to support DEFRA in this. In particular I will raise the issue at meetings of the Environment Sector of the British-Irish Council.

In the meantime I have asked my officials to explore any option which might have an equivalent effect to the levy. They are engaging in discussions with the supermarket sector to look at the possibility of developing a voluntary scheme to encourage consumers to reduce the current excessive use of plastic bags.

The experience of the Republic of Ireland has shown that people are willing to act with greater environmental responsibility when given appropriate encouragement. I am hopeful that we can build constructively on the heightened awareness of waste issues brought about by my Department's recent 'Wake up to Waste' campaign and by District Councils' consultations on their draft Waste Management Plans.

Seamus Heaney's Former Home

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment, in the light of the demolition of the Nobel Laureate Seamus Heaney's former home, if he would take immediate action to freeze all contentious planning applications pending legislation consequent on the review of local government and public administration. (AQO 1530/01)

Mr Nesbitt: It would not be lawful for me to impose a moratorium on planning applications, as my Department has a statutory duty to process and determine any valid planning application which it receives.

Accordingly, once all material planning information relating to a proposed development has been received and fully considered, including consultation replies together with any other representations received, my Department is under a legal obligation to determine that application. That obligation could not be set aside during the lengthy period required to undertake the Review of Public Administration.

The member may also be aware that Article 33 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 provides an applicant, in all but major cases designated under Article 31 of that Order, with the right to appeal to the Planning Appeals Commission on the grounds that his or her application has not been determined by my Department within laid down timescales.

[In any case it would not be practicable to define "contentious" in a manner which would not be open to abuse.]

EU Environmental Directives

Mr Ford asked the Minister of the Environment what discussions his officials have undertaken with the European Commission regarding the implementation of EU Environmental Directives. (AQO 1541/01)

Mr Nesbitt: In the general context, resources permitting, my officials provide advice to Whitehall Departments on Northern Ireland perspectives within the overall UK negotiations on new European Community Directives. This is part of the ongoing development of EC law.

Apart from this ongoing indirect communication, senior officials from my department met with senior European Commission officials in February this year to discuss issues around the transposition and implementation of environmental Directives. The purpose of that meeting was to fully inform the Commission of the efforts being made by the Department to deal with the large backlog of untransposed Directives inherited from the period of Direct Rule. It is hoped that senior Commission officials will visit Northern Ireland later in the year to continue the dialogue opened up in February.

As the need arises and on a case by case basis, officials also raise detailed transposition or implementation issues with their counterparts in the Commission. Discussions on the implementation of the Nitrates Directive are a recent example of this.

Planning Permission: Rosses Quay, Rostrevor

Mr Bradley asked the Minister of the Environment what assessment he can make in relation to the planning approval granted to develop the site known as Rosses Quay, Rostrevor. (AQO 1534/01)

Mr Nesbitt: The Rosses Quay private residential development to the rear of 24 Warrenpoint Road, Rostrevor, was granted full planning permission on 2 March 2000.

The residential development has been substantially completed in accordance with approved plans. However works have been undertaken to the shore and beach which have raised concerns about the impact of the development on the adjoining Area of Special Scientific Interest. Concern has also been expressed that these works impinge on third-party lands and affect an existing right-of-way.

The Divisional Planning Office has discussed these matters with the developer, and an application for retrospective permission for these coastal protection works involving a wall and rock armour has been submitted and is currently under consideration. Progress on this application will be influenced by the resolution of the land-ownership and right-of-way issues.

The planning approval for the residential development is a valid permission, which has been substantially implemented. I have no basis for making any fresh assessment of it. My officials are currently considering the application for the coastal protection works.

Seamus Heaney's Former Home

Ms Lewsley asked the Minister of the Environment to make a statement on the demolition of Seamus Heaney's former home at 16 Ashley Avenue, Belfast.

(AQO 1538/01)

Mr Nesbitt: With the Speaker's permission I will take Questions 1538/01, 1539/01 and 1549/01 together.

Under the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991, my Department may list a building on the basis of it having special architectural or historic interest. The Lisburn Road area of Belfast was surveyed during the late 1970s as part of the First Survey of all buildings in Northern Ireland. 16 Ashley Avenue, the former Heaney home, did not meet the listing criteria at that time.

In October 1999, the Belfast Civic Trust requested that the building be spot-listed. My Department does not have spot-listing powers but is seeking such powers in the Planning Amendment Bill, which I introduced into the Assembly today. Notwithstanding this, the Environment and Heritage Service carried out an external appraisal. It concluded that, although it was a fine Victorian house, a full appraisal under the Second Survey of all buildings, then under way, was not appropriate as the building did not have sufficient special interest to meet the listing criteria. Later requests to consider listing the property, received in 2000 and 2002, were given a similar response.

When my Department was told recently of rumoured plans to demolish the house, I instructed my officials to approach the developer seeking an opportunity to undertake a full Second Survey appraisal, with a view to re-considering the case for listing. The developer chose not to do so and demolition began on the eve of the survey. I must emphasise that, as the house was neither listed nor in a Conservation Area, no statutory approvals were needed for its demolition.

Seamus Heaney's Former Home

Mr Close asked the Minister of the Environment to make a statement on his Department's interventions in the case of the house in Ashley Avenue, Belfast, once occupied by Poet Laureate Seamus Heaney. (AQO 1539/01)

Mr Nesbitt: With the Speaker's permission I will take Questions 1538/01, 1539/01 and 1549/01 together.

Seamus Heaney's Former Home

Mr Maskey asked the Minister of the Environment what steps were taken by his Department to designate the former home of Poet Laureate Seamus Heaney as a building of historic and cultural heritage. (AQO 1549/01)

Mr Nesbitt: With the Speaker's permission I will take Questions 1538/01, 1539/01 and 1549/01 together.

FINANCE AND PERSONNEL

Her Majesty The Queen's Golden Jubilee

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (a) any plans he has to celebrate the Queen's Golden Jubilee; and (b) what measures he has put in place to ensure staff from his Department can celebrate this event. (AQW 3516/01)

The Minister of Finance and Personnel (Dr Farren): The information you requested is as follows:

- (a) the Department of Finance and Personnel has no plans to celebrate the Queen's Golden Jubilee. The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure is the lead Department for Golden Jubilee Celebrations.
- (b) the NICS has awarded the additional Bank Holiday set for Monday, 3 June 2002 to celebrate the Queen's Golden Jubilee.

Collection of Rates

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the value of lost rates due to vacant property, by District Council area, in relation to (a) commercial and retail property; and (b) residential property. (AQW 3526/01)

Dr Farren: The Rate Collection Agency is responsible for the collection of rates in Northern Ireland.

Under rating legislation, vacant unoccupied properties do not normally attract liability for payment of rates. Rates on vacant properties are considered as rates foregone.

The total amount of rates foregone in the year ended 31 March 2002 was just over £48m.

A schedule showing the amount of rates foregone in each district council area on vacant property in the commercial and residential sectors, for the year ended 31 March 2002, is attached at Appendix 1. Amounts have been rounded to the nearest thousand pounds.

APPENDIX 1

Air Travel

Mr Ford asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail, for each of the last 3 financial years, (a) the number of flights made between Northern Ireland and Great Britain by him or his officials; and (b) the total number of flights made on each airline. (AQW 3703/01)

Dr Farren: The table below details the number of flights booked through the Northern Ireland Civil Service

Travel Agent's (Business travel Management) by the Department of Finance and Personnel for the last two financial years.

Data for 1999-2000 is not available from the Travel Agent's computer system nor is it possible to identify individual journeys.

It should also be noted that these figures do not include any journeys undertaken which were booked through other channels.

Bowel Cancer

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of people who died from bowel cancer in each of the last 5 years in each Health Board area. (AQW 3749/01)

Dr Farren: The table below shows the number of cases in each Health Board area, in each of the last 5 years, where Bowel Cancer was recorded as the main cause of death.

Health Board Area	Year of Death
	1996	1997	1998	1999	2000

Coding of deaths registered in 2001 is not yet finalized.

Energy Report

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, in light of the Public Sector Energy Committee's 1st Annual Energy Report 1999-00, to outline (a) what assessment he can make of the Public Sector's commitment to energy management; and (b) if performance targets will be introduced in regard to public sector energy management. (AQW 3765/01)

Dr Farren:

- (a) The Northern Ireland public sector encompasses a diverse range of organisations of varying sizes, many of which have been pursuing energy efficiency programmes for several years. The Government's Climate Change Programme introduced new targets based on appraising individual buildings. This requires a more detailed approach to energy reporting, to which some organisations did not give sufficient priority. However, I am satisfied that, given the necessary co-operation, the appropriate structures are in place to take this important work forward.
- (b) Performance targets are already in place, having been laid down under the Government's Climate Change Programme, as set out in the report.

Energy Report

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the percentage of returns, relating to the number of buildings per Government Department, of information requested by the Public Sector Energy Committee as reflected in their 1st Annual Energy Report 1999-00.

(AQW 3766/01)

Dr Farren: For the purposes of the 1st Public Sector Energy Committee Report for 1999 - 2000, Government Departments and their associated agencies, boards, trusts etc returned information on the buildings which they occupy as set out in the table below. However, not all this information was usable. (Figures relate to the year ending 31 March 2000; in some cases information was supplied for earlier years.)

Department	Estimated Number of Buildings	Number of buildings for which data was returned	Percentage Complete

Energy Report

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline those public bodies which failed to provide routine information to the Public Sector Energy Committee as reflected in their 1st Annual Energy Report 1999-00.

(AQW 3767/01)

Dr Farren: The following organisations failed to return information or provided data which was incomplete, unusable or returned too late for inclusion in the Public Sector Energy Committee's 1st Annual Energy Report 1999 - 2000. (These failures relate to year ending 31 March 2000; in some cases information was supplied for earlier years.)

- 8 Government Departments
- 7 District Councils
- 1 University
- 6 Further Education Colleges

Equality Impact Assessment

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline (a) the number of Equality Impact Assessments (EIA) carried out by his Department to date; and (b) the total cost of (i) research; (ii) consultation; (iii) printing; and (iv) dissemination, for each EIA.

(AQW 3801/01)

Dr Farren: To date a total of 5 Equality Impact Assessments (EIAs) have been completed in the Department of Finance and Personnel. Unfortunately it has not been possible to provide a breakdown of costs as requested. The information available to me in respect of each EIA is shown on the following page.

Aggregates Tax

Mr McHugh asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if he intends to instigate an impact assessment to be carried out on the likely damage to our roads, particularly in border areas, as a result of increased traffic by HGV lorries caused by the introduction of the Aggregates Tax.

(AQW 3819/01)

Name	Research £	Consultation £	Printing £	Dissemination £	Total £
Quinquennial Review of Rate Collection Agency	N/A	N/A	N/A	N/A	9 750
Managing EU Programmes – Structural Funds	-	19 387	-	1 000	20 387
Procurement Review	-	-	-	-	Nil
Physical Punishment of Children Bill	-	-	-	-	Nil
Divorce Bill	-	-	556	1 057	1 613

Dr Farren: Discussions with Treasury are continuing at an official level on how the effects of the tax could be reduced within Northern Ireland. I will be writing shortly to the Financial Secretary to Treasury to outline the outcome of these discussions and to determine whether a significant discount from the Aggregates Tax for Northern Ireland is achievable based on the environmental objectives of the tax being met through alternative means. An impact assessment on the damage to roads caused by the introduction of the Aggregates Tax may constitute further evidence as to the negative and disproportionate impact of the tax in Northern Ireland but the current focus must be on securing a version of the tax that better reflects the needs of the local quarrying industry.

Burial Tomb: Parliament Buildings

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if there are any plans to restore the burial tomb of Viscount and Viscountess Craigavon in the grounds of Parliament Buildings. (AQW 3839/01)

Dr Farren: In addition to its programme of annual maintenance to hedging and soft landscape the Department proposes to:

- (i) treat and power-wash the steps and hard standing areas around the tomb;
- (ii) regrout the paving;
- (iii) repair and repaint the gates; and
- (iv) clean the plinth.

The Department will also be consulting with the Environment and Heritage Agency on whether the inscription on the tomb should be re-cut to improve its definition.

Rate Collection Agency

Mr Attwood asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to provide an update on the quinquennial review of the Rate Collection Agency. (AQW 3979/01)

Dr Farren: I have considered the findings of the report into the first stage of the quinquennial review, together with the replies to the consultation, and I have decided to proceed with the main recommendations. In particular, I have decided that a Public Private Partnership procurement project to support rate collection services should be initiated with the aim of securing a strategic business partner to help implement and manage the RCA's replacement IT systems and processes.

HEALTH, SOCIAL SERVICES AND PUBLIC SAFETY

Food Standards Agency

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action is she taking to clarify the Food Standards Agency announcement that prawns originating from south-east Asia should be removed from sale. (AQW 2709/01)

The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (Ms de Brún): On Friday 15th March the Food Standards Agency, which has responsibility for food safety and related public health protection matters, issued a statement advising against the consumption of particular batches of prawns and shrimps from South East Asia and also calling for them to be withdrawn from sale because of the detection of residues of nitrofurans, a potential carcinogen, in some of the samples.

I am satisfied that the action taken by the Food Standards Agency was appropriate and commensurate with the problem.

Ar an Aoine 15 Márta d'eisigh an Ghníomhaireacht um Chaighdeán Bia, atá freagrach as sábháilteacht bia agus ábhair bhainteacha chosaint sláinte poiblí, ráiteas ag comhairliú i gcoinne chaitheamh baisceanna áirithe cloicheán agus ribí róibéis ó Oirdheisceart na hÁise agus d'éiligh sí go n-aistarraingeofaí ón margadh iad mar gur aimsíodh iarmhair nítrefúráin, carcanaigin fhéideartha, i gcuid de na samplaí.

Táim sásta go raibh an gníomh a ghlac an Ghníomhaireacht um Chaighdeán Bia cuí agus ag teacht le tromchúise na faidhbe.

Ministerial Transport

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the arrangements she has made for her Ministerial transport over the past 2 years, in terms of (a) if she used the in-house chauffeur service or a contracted-in service; (b) if she used a contracted-in service, which firms or individuals were employed; (c) how much this contracted-in service cost; (d) if the hire of this contracted-in service was conducted under the public tendering process; and (e) what is the comparative cost of the in-house Ministerial chauffeur service. (AQW 3363/01)

Ms de Brún: I do not use either the DFP Centralised Transport Unit or a contracted-in service. The Department initially rented and subsequently purchased, with the approval of the Department of Finance and Personnel, a car for use by me on official business. The normal tendering procedures were followed in the purchase of the car. The hourly rate paid in respect of the driver is based on the rate paid to drivers in the DFP Centralised Transport Unit.

Ní bhainim úsáid as Aonad Lárnaithe Iompair an DFP ná as seirbhís ar conradh. Fuair an Roinn carr ar cíós ar dtús, agus ceannaíodh ina dhiaidh sin é, le cead na Roinne Airgeadais agus Pearsanra, do m'úsáidse ar ghnó oifigiúil. Leanadh na gnáthnósanna imeachta tairisceana i gceannach an chairr. Is mar seo a leanas an costas iomlán, lena n-áirítear tiománaithe, i ngach bliain airgeadais. Tá an ráta in aghaidh na huaire a íoctar maidir leis an tiománaí bunaithe ar an ráta a íoctar le tiománaithe Aonad Lárnaithe Iompair an DFP.

Epilepsy

Mr Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what resources have been allocated, by Board area, in terms of (i) staff; and (ii) research facilities, to treat those patients suffering from epilepsy. (AQW 3364/01)

Ms de Brún: Epilepsy is treated as a neurological condition and it is not possible to disaggregate the amount of staff time within this specialty which is spent specifically on treating patients suffering from epilepsy. No neurology services are provided by Trusts within the Northern HSS Board area and residents of this Board's area receive their services from the Royal Group of Hospitals HSS Trust.

My Department provides financial support for research through the HPSS Research & Development Office for implementation of the HPSS Research & Development Strategy. There is currently one fellowship with the title "Clinical and molecular genetic investigation in familial idiopathic epilepsy".

Tugtar cóireáil ar eipileipse mar bhail néareolaíoch agus tá sé dodhéanta scagadh a dhéanamh ar am a chaitheann foirne laistigh den speisialtóireacht sin go sonrach ar choireáil othair a bhfuil eipileipse orthu. Ní chuireann Iontaobhais laistigh de cheantar Bhord SSS an Tuaiscirt aon seirbhísí néareolaíocha ar fáil agus faigheann áitritheoirí i gceantar an Bhoird sin a gcuid seirbhísí ón Grúpa Ríoga Ospidéal Iontaobhas SSS.

Cuireann mo Roinnse tacaíocht airgeadais ar fáil to thaighde trí Oifig Forbartha agus Taighde SSSP d'fheidhmiú Straitéis Forbartha agus Taighde SSSP. Faoi láthair tá comhaltacht amháin ann leis an teideal "Clinical and molecular genetic investigation in familial idiopathic epilepsy".

New Cancer Clinic

Rev Robert Coulter asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, in view of the availability of increased funding, when will work begin on the new Cancer Clinic. (AQW 3469/01)

Ms de Brún: I have submitted a bid for Executive Programme Funds as the major element of my funding strategy for the Regional Cancer Centre. I cannot be specific on the start date for the work until the outcome of that bid is known. The Executive has yet to take decisions on these funds, including the enhanced funds under the Reinvestment and Reform Initiative, but, as I have said previously, I hope to make an announcement before the Summer Recess.

Tá tairiscint curtha isteach agam ar Chistí Chlár an Fheidhmeannais mar phríomhghné de mo straitéis maoinithe don Ionad Réigiúnach Ailse. Ní féidir liom a bheith sonrach faoi dháta tosaigh na hoibre go dtí go mbeadh toradh na tairisceana sin ar eolas agam. Tá cinneadh le déanamh ag an bhFeidhmeannas maidir leis na cistí sin go fóill, lena n-áirítear na cistí feabhsaithe faoin Tionsnamh Athinfheistíochta agus Leasaithe, ach, mar a dúirt mé cheana, tá mé ag súil le fógra a dhéanamh roimh Bhriseadh an tSamhraidh.

Adoption

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) the number of children available for adoption; (b) the number of children adopted in each of the last 5 years; and to make a statement. (AQW 3483/01)

Ms de Brún: Adoption is the care plan for 162 children who are currently looked after by HSS Trusts. A total of 140 adoption orders were made in 2001 compared with 172 in 2000, 144 in 1999, 121 in 1998 and 150 in 1997. Priorities for Action places an increased emphasis on adoption as a means of securing permanency for children in care and has set a target for 4% of looked after children to be adopted in 2002/03.

Is é uchtú an plean cúraim do 162 páiste atá ag fáil cúnaimh ó na hIon taoibh SSS faoi láthair. Rinneadh 140 ordú uchtaithe ar an iomlán sa bhliain 2001 i gcomparáid le 172 sa bhliain 2000, 144 sa bhliain 1999, 121 sa bhliain 1998 agus 150 sa bhliain 1997. Cuireann Tosaíochtaí do Ghníomh béim níos treise ar uchtú mar mheán le haghaidh buaine a bhaint amach do pháistí atá faoi chúram agus tá sprioc leagtha síos acu go mbeadh 4% de pháistí atá faoi chúram uchtaithe sa bhliain 2002/03.

Targets: Mental Health

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) the current targets set for mental health services; (b) how such targets are evaluated; and (c) any improvements in mental health services since 1997. (AQW 3522/01)

Ms de Brún: The mental health targets which Boards have been asked to deliver on this year are those set out in Priorities for Action.

I have required Health and Social Services Boards to set out clearly and transparently the services they intend to secure to meet the needs of their local population and deliver on the actions set out in Priorities for Action and have introduced quarterly monitoring to track progress towards achieving the targets.

The quarterly monitoring reports will be followed up by meetings between my officials and the Boards to tackle areas of underperformance.

Information on the range of improvements in mental health services since 1997 could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Is iad na spriocanna meabharshláinte ar iarradh ar na Boird gníomhnú orthu na cinn atá leagtha amach in Tosaíochtaí do Ghníomh.

D'iarr mé ar na Boird Sláinte agus Seirbhísí Sóisialta na seirbhísí atá ar intinn acu a dhaingniú chun freastal ar riachtanais an phobail áitiúil a leagan amach go soiléir agus go follasach agus na gníomhartha atá leagtha amach in Tosaíochtaí do Ghníomh a thabhairt i gcrích chomh maith le monatóireacht ráithiúil a thabhairt isteach chun cuntas a choinneail ar an dul chun cinn i mbaint amach na spriocanna.

Leanfaidh cruinnithe idir m'oifigh agus na Boird na tuarascálacha monatóireachta ráithiúla chun dul i ngleic le réimsí de thearcfheidhmíocht.

Ba ar chostas díréireach a fuarthas tuairisc ar aon fhorbairt ar sheirbhísí meabhairshláinte ó 1997.

Local Health and Social Care Groups

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if initial and ongoing training and development will be available to local health and social care group members when LHSCGs are established.

(AQW 3531/01)

Ms de Brún: Introductory workshops have already been held for management board members of the two Local Health and Social Care Groups based in the Western Health and Social Services Board area. The other three Boards have plans for similar type workshops for their Groups. Work is progressing well on the development of a training and development strategy for the Groups which will encompass both local and regional training needs.

Training and development will be an important feature of the new Groups' first year. They will be learning organisations and will be encouraged and assisted to develop to their full potential. This means shared development, multidisciplinary training and team building. Those involved in the Groups will be given opportunities to develop the appropriate skills, and identifying their training and development needs will be one of the early priorities. In developing training and development programmes, Health and Social Services Boards will work closely with Local Health and Social Groups in their areas as well as linking with others who may be able to make a contribution.

Rinneadh réamhcheardlanna cheana do bhaill ar an bhord bainisteoirí den dá Ghrúpa Cúram Sláinte agus Cúraim Shóisialta Aitiúil lonnaithe i gceantar Bhord Sláinte agus Seirbhísí Sóisialta an Iarthair. Tá pleananna ag na trí Bhord eile faoi choinne ceardlann dá macasamhail dá nGrúpaí. Tá ag éirí go maith leis an obair ar straitéis oiliúna agus forbartha do na Grúpaí a chuirfidh riachtanais áitiúla agus reigiúnacha araon san áireamh.

Beidh oiliúint agus forbairt mar ghné thábhachtach de chéad bhliain na nGrúpaí nua. Eagraíochtaí foghlama a bheidh iontu agus spreagfar iad agus cuideofar leo lena lánacmhainneacht a fhorbairt. Ciallaíonn sé seo comhfhorbairt, oiliúint ildhisciplíneach agus tógáil foirne. Tabharfar deiseanna dóibh siúd a bheidh páirteach sna Grúpaí na scileanna cuí a fhorbairt, agus beidh aimsiú a riachtanais oiliúna agus forbartha ar cheann de na tosaíochtaí luatha. Leis na cláir oiliúna agus forbartha a chur chun cinn, oibreoidh Boird Sláinte agus Seirbhísí Sóisialta go dlúth le Grúpaí Áitiúla Sláinte agus Sóisialta ina gceantair chomh maith le nasc a dhéanamh le grúpaí eile a d'fhéadfadh cuidiú leo.

Health Spending: Statistics

Dr Birnie asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to confirm the accuracy or otherwise of the statistics on health spending as a percentage of GDP (based on OECD, Health Data 2001) published in the Daily Mail (15 April 2002, page 15) which indicates the percentage for Northern Ireland is 9.2%, France 9.3% and Republic of Ireland 6.8%.

(AQW 3594/01)

Ms de Brún: It is not clear how these figures were derived. The calculations made in respect of Scotland, Wales and here were not, presumably, drawn from OECD data since the Organisation does not hold expenditure disaggregated in this way. Nor does it seem that the figures are up to date.

Apart from their precision or currency, however, there is a more fundamental point to be made about figures that express health spending as a percentage of GDP. An important determinant of the need for health care is deprivation. All things being equal, regions of greater deprivation will have to spend more on health care. Given that such regions have (by definition) lower than average GDP, their expenditure on health will account for a higher than average percentage of their local GDP.

Níl sé soiléir faoin dóigh ar thangthas ar na figiúirí seo. Níor tarraingíodh na háirimh maidir le hAlbain, leis an Bhreatain Bheag agus thall anseo, is dócha, ó dháta an OECD (Foras um Chomhoibrithe Eacnamaíoch agus Forbartha) mar ní choinníonn an Foras caiteachas neamhthathagaithe ar an dóigh seo. Níl an chuma air go bhfuil na figiúirí cothrom le dáta ach oiread.

Taobh amuigh dá bheachtas nó dá mbainteacht, áfach, tá pointe níos suntasaí le déanamh faoi fhigiúirí a léiríonn caiteachas ar shláinte mar chéatadán den GDP (Olltáirgeacht Intíre OTI). Is deitéarmanant tábhachtach den ghá le cúram sláinte an dith. Agus gach ní eile mar a gcéanna, beidh ar réigiúin faoi mhórdhíth níos mó a chaitheamh ar chúram sláinte. Ós rud é go bhfuil olltáirgeacht intíre níos lú ná an meán ag a leithéid de réigiúin (de réir sainmhínte), is amhlaidh go mbeidh a gcaiteachas ar shláinte ina chéatadán dá n-olltáirgeacht intíre áitiúil níos airde ná an meán.

GP Fundholding

Mr Berry asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many staff have been made redundant since the end of GP fundholding.

(AQW 3606/01)

Ms de Brún: The known position to date is as follows. Seven members of staff who were previously employed by GP fundholding practices to carry out fund management work have been made redundant. Two of these staff are understood to have already found other jobs. In addition, a further 31 staff have been issued with redundancy notices. The majority of these staff have registered with the Redeployment Unit and it is anticipated that there will be new employment opportunities of some 30 posts in the Local Health and Social Care Groups in the coming weeks, for which these staff will be able to apply.

Seo a leanas cúrsaí mar is eol go dtí seo. Rinneadh seachtar oibrithe, a bhí fostaithe ag cleachtais chistesheilbhe GDanna roimhe sin le hobair stiúrtha maoinithe a dhéanamh, iomarcach. Tuigtear go bhfuair beirt de na hoibrithe seo poist eile cheana féin. Ina theannta sin, tugadh fôgraí iomarcachta do 31 oibrí eile. Chláraigh bunús na n-oibrithe seo leis an Ionad Athlonnaithe agus táthar ag súil go mbeidh deiseanna nua fostaíochta ann le 30 post ar fáil sna Grúpaí Áitiúla Sláinte agus Cúraim Shóisialta sna seachtainí atá le teacht, a mbeidh na hoibrithe seo in inmhe iarratas a chur isteach dóibh.

Corporate and Business Plan

Ms Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what performance targets have been set for the Northern Ireland Health & Social Services Estates Agency for 2002/2003. (AQW 3624/01)

Ms de Brún: The targets, which have been set for 2002/2003, are based on the corporate aims and objectives of the Agency as set out in Section 5 of its Corporate and Business Plan. These have been placed in the Assembly library.

Tá na spriocanna, atá leagtha amach do 2002/03, bunaithe ar na haidhmeanna agus cuspóirí na Gníomhaíochta mar atá leagtha amach i gCuid 5 dá Plean Gnó agus Corparáide. Cuireadh iad siúd i leabharlann an Tionóil.

Neurologists

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the (i) target; and (ii) current waiting times for a neurological examination by a consultant neurologist in each NHS Board area.

(AQW 3654/01)

Ms de Brún:

- (i) A specific target has not been set in regard to waiting time for a neurological examination by a consultant neurologist. The Charter standard for outpatient treatment is that patients should have their first outpatient appointment within three months.
- (ii) The number of people waiting for their first outpatient appointment in the Neurology specialty in each HSS Board area is broken down into time bands and is detailed in the table on the following page. The latest figures relate to the quarter ending 31 December 2001.

Fire Brigade: Staffing

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, in relation to temporary personnel employed in the Control Room of the Fire Brigade, to outline (a) the number employed; (b) their rank; and (c) the number of years employed. (AQW 3674/01)

Ms de Brún: There are currently five temporary Fire Control Operators employed in the Control Room, one since September 1996 and four since October 1998. One of the Operators is currently on temporary promotion to Leading Fire Control Operator.

Tá cúigear Oibritheoir Rialaithe Dóiteáin sealadacha fostaithe sa Seomra Rialaithe faoi láthair, duine amháin acu ó Mhéan Fómhair 1996 agus ceathrar ó Dheireadh

Upgrading and Residential Care Premises

Rev Robert Coulter asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQO 1164/01, what is the timescale and cost involved to upgrade all Residential Care Premises to the Health Technical Memorandum 84 (HTM84) regulations regarding fire safety. (AQW 3710/01)

Ms de Brún: The information available is in two parts: that applicable to Trust owned premises and that for non-Trust owned premises.

For Trust owned premises the timescale and cost involved to upgrade all Residential Care Premises to the Health Technical Memorandum 84 (HTM 84) regulations regarding fire safety is the end of 2006 at a cost of £1.3m.

Non-Trust owned premises are working towards compliance with Health Technical Memorandum 84 (HTM84) standards. A number of homes are experiencing problems in achieving compliance, particularly because of the cost (of compliance) and their current difficult financial situation. Timescales and costs of compliance are not all available at present.

Tá an t-eolas atá ar fáil i dhá chuid: an chuid sin a bhaineann le háitrimh faoi úinéireacht na nÍontaobhas agus an chuid sin d'áitrimh nach leis na hiontaobhais iad.

I gcás áitrimh faoi úinéireacht na nÍontaobhas, is é an costas ag deireadh 2006 a bhain le gach Áitreabh Chúram Cónaitheach a uasghrádú chuig rialacháin Mheabhrán Teicniúil Sláinte 84 (MTS 84) maidir le sábháilteacht dóiteáin ná £1.3m.

Oibríonn áitrimh nach leis na hÍontaobhais iad i dtreo chomhlíonadh chaighdeán Mheabhrán Teicniúil Sláinte 84 (MTS 84). Tá fadhbanna ag roinnt tithe i gcomhlíonadh a bhaint amach, go háirithe mar gheall ar an gcostas (comhlíonta) agus a ndeacracht reatha i dtaobh cúrsaí airgeadais. Níl amscálaí ná costais chomhlíonta ar fáil i láthair na huaire.

Acute Hospital Review

Mrs Carson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 3322/01, when decisions on overall acute hospital provision in Northern Ireland will be completed. (AQW 3716/01)

Ms de Brún: Proposals on the way forward on the Acute Hospital Review have been discussed at the Executive, and will shortly be issued for public consultation. It is hoped that final decisions can be taken in the course of 2002.

Tá plé déanta ag an bhFeidhmeannas ar thograí maidir leis an mbealach chun cinn ar an Athbhreithniú ar na hOspidéal GEARLIACHTA, agus eiseofar na tograí sin go luath i gcomhair chomhchomhairliú poiblí. Táthar ag súil gur féidir na cinní deiridh a ghlacadh i rith na bliana 2002.

Child Immunisations

Mr Ford asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the percentage of children given primary immunisations in the first year of life in each of the last 3 years. (AQW 3718/01)

Ms de Brún: Information is available on the percentage of children immunised before their first birthday against diphtheria, tetanus, pertussis, polio, MMR (measles, mumps and rubella) and HiB, and is detailed in the table below.

Specialist Medical Staff

Mr Ford asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many extra specialist medical staff have been employed in the last 2 years to improve provision for those with (i) breast; (ii) lung; and (iii) colorectal cancer. (AQW 3720/01)

Ms de Brún: Information is not available in the form requested. However, between April 1999 and March 2001, 26 doctors, 87 nurses and 97 other staff were appointed to provide cancer related services.

Níl eolas ar fáil sa leagan amach a iarradh. Ceapadh 26 dochtúir, 87 altra agus 97 d'fhoireann eile, áfach, idir Aibreán 1999 agus Márta 2001 chun seirbhísí a bhaineann le hailse a sholáthar.

Nurse Training

Mr Ford asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many nurses are expected to complete their training in the year 2003-04. (AQW 3724/01)

Ms de Brún: The total number of pre-registration nursing students expected to enter the final year of study in the 2003/04 Academic Year is 767.

This figure comprises the September 2001 intake of 411 students and March 2002 intake of 215 students by Queens University and the September 2001 intake of 141 students by University of Ulster.

All students have the potential to graduate but this can be influenced by academic progress, temporary withdrawals or permanent withdrawals for a variety of reasons.

Is é an líon iomlán mac léinn altranaís réamhchláraithe a bhfuiltear ag súil go rachaidh siad isteach sa bhliain deiridh staidéir i mBliain Acadúil 2003/04 ná 767.

Sa líon sin tá glacadh isteach 411 mac léinn i Meán Fómhair 2001 agus glacadh isteach 215 mac léinn i Márta 2002 ag Ollscoil na Ríona chomh maith le glacadh isteach 141 mac léinn i Meán Fómhair 2001 ag Ollscoil Uladh.

Tá de chumas ag gach mac léinn céim a bhaint amach ach d'fhéadfadh dul chun cinn acadúil, aistarraingtí sealadacha nó aistarraingtí buana ar chúiseanna éagsúla tionchar a imirt air sin.

Down Lisburn Trust: Funding

Mr McGrady asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety pursuant to AQW 2943/01, to outline any action being taken to ensure (a) the restoration of equitable funding to Down Lisburn Trust; and (b) the allocation of funding reflects retrospective inequities.

(AQW 3727/01)

Ms de Brún: I understand that the Eastern HSS Board are currently undertaking a three month communications process to brief interested parties on the approach used in producing the latest findings on locality equity shares. After this the Board will make proposals about how the issue might be addressed and this will be subject to public consultation.

Tuigim go bhfuil Bord SSS an Oirthir ag tabhairt faoi phróiseas cumarsáide trí mhí i láthair na huaire le páirtithe leasmhara a chur ar an eolas faoin mhodh oibre úsáidte leis na torthaí is déanaí ar scaireanna cothromais ceantair a chur amach. Ina dhiaidh seo, déanfaidh an Bord moltaí ar an dóigh ar féidir tabhairt faoin cheist seo agus beidh seo faoi réir comhairlithe phoiblí.

Attention Deficit and Hyperactivity Disorder

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) if she will support the Northern Ireland Attention Deficit and Hyperactivity Disorder application for funding for a support centre; and (b) what assessment she would make on the long term cost of not providing such a centre.

(AQW 3729/01)

Ms de Brún: I will be considering this application for funding in the context of both the budget allocation which will be determined by the Executive in the Spending Review and the other bids for resources which have been made to me. No information is collected centrally on this disorder and therefore it is not possible to assess the long term cost of not providing such a centre.

Beidh mé ag déanamh machnaimh ar an iarratas seo le haghaidh maoinithe i gcomhthéacs dháileadh an bhuiséid a chinnfidh an Feidhmiúchán san Athbheithniú ar Chaiteachas agus na dtairiscintí eile le haghaidh acmhainní a tugadh dom. Ní bhailítear eolas ar bith go lárnach ar an neamhord seo agus, mar sin de, ní fhéadtar measúnú a dhéanamh ar chostas fadtéarmach gan a leithéid d'ionad a sholáthar.

Attention Deficit and Hyperactivity Disorder

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the financial implications to Social Services of non-diagnosis or late diagnosis of young people with Attention Deficit and Hyperactivity Disorder.

(AQW 3730/01)

Ms de Brún: No information is collected centrally on this disorder and therefore it would be impossible to assess the financial implications to Social Services of non-diagnosis or late diagnosis of young people with Attention Deficit and Hyperactivity Disorder.

Ní bhailítear eolas go lárnach ar an neamhord seo agus mar sin de, bheadh sé dodhéanta impleachtaí airgeadais neamhfháthmheas nó fháthmheas mall daoine óga le Neamhord Easpa Aire agus Hipirghníomhaíochta a mheasúnú do na Seirbhísí Sóisialta.

Diabetes

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what measures are in place to ensure that those with diabetes receive (a) annual eye examinations; and (b) annual blood pressure checks.

(AQW 3733/01)

Ms de Brún: People with diabetes are routinely managed in primary care, at hospital or shared care between hospital and primary care. Good quality diabetes management would involve regular assessment of the patient's health so that early signs of any complications can be detected and managed appropriately. Part of this care should include monitoring of blood sugar, blood pressure and regular examination of eyes for signs of diabetic retinopathy.

Déantar bainistíocht go rialta ar dhaoine a bhfuil diabéiteas orthu i bpríomhchúram, san otharlann nó cúram roinnte idir otharlann agus príomhchúram. Bheadh measúnú rialta ar shláinte an othair i gceist le bainistíocht mhaith diabéitis sa dóigh go dtiocfadh luathchomharthaí aimhréidhe ar bith a thabhairt chun solais le go dtig bainistíocht chuí a dhéanamh orthu. Mar chuid den chúram ba chóir go mbeadh monatóireacht ar shiúcra na fola, brú fola agus scrúdú rialta na súl le teacht ar chomharthaí reitineapaite diabéití.

Bowel Cancer

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is the ratio of bowel cancer consultants per head of population, in each health board area.

(AQW 3734/01)

Ms de Brún: On the basis of the amount of time oncologists devote to bowel cancer as part of their care for cancer patients in general, the following figures have been derived:

CONSULTANT ONCOLOGISTS WHO SPECIALISE IN BOWEL CANCER – MAY 2002

	Headcount ¹	Whole Time Equivalent	Ratio per 100,000 population ²
Eastern Health and Social Services Board	4	1.4	0.21
Northern Health and Social Services Board	1	0.2	0.05
Southern Health and Social Services Board	1	0.2	0.06
Western Health and Social Services Board	1	0.2	0.07

¹ Some consultants provide services in more than one Board area.

² The 2000 mid year population estimates were used.

De réir an mhéid ama a chaitheann oinceolaithe ag cóireáil ailse inne mar chuid dá gcúram d'othair le hailse i gcoitinne, a fuarthas na figiúirí seo a leanas:

OINCEOLAITHE COMHAIRLEACHA A DHÉANANN SPEISIALTÓIREACHT AR AILSE INNE – BEALTAINE 2002

	Líon ¹	Coibhéis Lánaimeartha	Coibhneas an daonra 100,000 ²

² Úsáideadh na meastacháin lárbhlíana 2000 ar an daonra.

Bowel Cancer

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline her policies and targets for the early detection, diagnosis and treatment of bowel cancer. (AQW 3735/01)

Ms de Brún: My objective is to build on the significant progress which has been made in recent years in the diagnosis and treatment of all cancers, including bowel cancer. My Department is at present awaiting information on a colorectal cancer screening pilot scheme established in England in 2000. These results should be available late 2002. For those patients with bowel cancer, Trusts are required to use guidelines produced or endorsed by my Department's Regional Advisory Committee on Cancer (RACC), which include specific guidance on improving outcomes in colorectal cancer. Additionally, my aim is to ensure that treatment is provided by multidisciplinary cancer teams and that lead clinicians in a range of conditions, such as breast, lung and colo-rectal cancers, are identified.

Is é an cuspóir atá agam ná tógáil ar an dul chun cinn suntasach atá déanta le blianta beaga anuas i bhfáthmheas agus i gcóireáil gach cineál ailse, ailse inne san áireamh. Tá mo Roinnse ag feitheamh ar eolas i láthair na huaire ar scéim píolóta scagthástála ailse drólann-reictí a bunaíodh i Sasana sa bhliain 2000. Ba chóir go mbeadh na torthaí sin ar fáil i ndeireadh 2002. I gcás na n-othar sin a bhfuil ailse inne orthu, éilítear ar na hIontaobhais úsáid a bhaint as na treoirlínte a chuireann Coiste Réigiúnach Comhairleach ar Ailse (RACC) mo Roinnse ar fáil, nó na treoirlínte sin a aontaíonn sé leo, lena n-áirítear treoir shainiúil ar na torthaí in ailse drólann-reicteach a fheabhsú. Chomh maith leis sin, is í an aidhm atá agam a chinntiú go soláthraíonn foirne ildisciplíneacha ailse an chóireáil agus go sainaitheann cliniceoirí ceannródaíocha i réimse riochtaí mar ailsí brollaigh, scamhóg agus drólann-reicteach.

Bowel Cancer

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people diagnosed with bowel cancer in each of the last 5 years, in each health board area. (AQW 3737/01)

Ms de Brún: The information requested is as follows:

Sure Start Programme

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many children under 4 years of age are currently included in the Sure Start Programme. (AQW 3753/01)

Ms de Brún: The 23 Sure Start projects which are now operating here provide a range of services for approximately 17,500 children under the age of 4 and their families.

Soláthraíonn na 23 scéim Sure Start atá ag feidhmiú anseo anois, réimse seirbhísí do thimpeall is 17,500 páiste faoi 4 bliain d'aois agus dá dteaghlaigh.

Community Care

Mr Ford asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many additional community care packages have been agreed in each of the last 3 years. (AQW 3754/01)

Ms de Brún: Increases in the number of care packages in effect over the last three years are detailed in the following table.

CARE PACKAGES IN EFFECT, 1999 - 2001⁽¹⁾

Year	Packages in effect	Increase on previous year
1999	14,756	+ 814

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) the number of additional residential care places for children provided in each of the last 3 years; and (b) the number she expects to be available in March 2003. (AQW 3756/01)

Ms de Brún: The numbers of additional residential care places for children which have been provided in each of the last three years have been as follows:

Year	Number of Additional Places
1999/2000	NIL
2000/01	24
2001/02	17

The 17 extra places provided in 2001/02 count towards fulfilling the commitment in the Executive's Programme for Government to increase by March 2003 the number of residential child care places by 52 above the level of provision at July 2001. At present there are several projects being developed by Health and Social Services Boards and Health and Social Services Trusts which will enable this commitment to be achieved.

2000/01	24
2001/02	17

Tá na 17 áit bhreise curtha ar fáil i 2001/02 mar chuid de chomhlíonadh ghealltanas Clár Rialtais an Fheidhmiúcháin le líon na n-áiteanna cúraim chónaithe do pháistí a mhéadú go 52 áit faoi Mhárta 2003, níos mó ná leibhéal an tsoláthair i mí Iúil 2001. Faoi láthair, tá roinnt scéimeanna á bhforbairt ag na Boird Sláinte agus Seirbhísí Sóisialta agus ag na hÍontaobhais Sláinte agus Seirbhísí Sóisialta a chuirfidh ar a chumas an gealltanas seo a chomhlíonadh.

Inpatient Psychiatric Beds

Mr Ford asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many additional child and adolescent in-patient psychiatric beds have been created in each of the last 3 years. (AQW 3757/01)

Ms de Brún: There were no additional child and adolescent in-patient psychiatric beds created in the last 3 years. Funding has been secured to provide 10 additional adolescent psychiatric inpatient beds and it is planned that these beds will be operational by September of this year.

Níor cruthaíodh leapacha breise síciatracha othair chónaithigh do pháistí agus d'óganaigh sna trí bliana deireanacha. Fuarthas maoiniú le 10 leaba breise síciatracha othair chónaithigh a chur ar fáil d'ógánaigh agus tá sé beartaithe go mbeidh na leapacha seo in úsáid faoi Mheán Fómhair na bliana seo.

Long-Stay Patients

Mr Ford asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many long-term stay patients have been re-settled in the community in each of the last 3 years. (AQW 3759/01)

Ms de Brún: This information is detailed in the table below.

NI Hospice

Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if she has any plans to help the Northern Ireland Hospice with their financial problems. (AQW 3760/01)

Ms de Brún: I recently received a request from the Hospice for an emergency loan to help with financial difficulties. My Department is currently considering this request.

Fuair mé iarratas ar na mallaibh ón Ospáis le haghaidh iasachta práinní le cuidiú le deacrachtaí airgeadais. Tá an Roinn s'agam ag déanamh machnaimh ar an iarratas faoi láthair.

Hayes Review of Acute Hospitals

Mr Byrne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) the number of formal invitations she received to meet district councils in respect of the Hayes Review of Acute Hospitals, in the last 12 months; (b) the number of invitations she accepted; (c) the district councils she met; and (d) the dates of such meetings. (AQW 3761/01)

Ms de Brún: In the last 12 months, in relation to the Acute Hospital Review:

- (a) I received invitations from 5 district councils;
- (b) I accepted all the invitations;

(c) I met with Omagh, Fermanagh, Magherafelt, Cookstown and Down District Councils;

(d) I met with Omagh District Council on the 30th October 2001; with Fermanagh District Council on the 21st November 2001; with Magherafelt and Cookstown District Council (jointly) on the 6th December 2001; and with Down District Council on the 9th January 2002.

Sna 12 mí deireanach, maidir leis an Athbhreithniú ar Ghéarocharlanna:

- (a) Fuair mé cuirí ó 5 comhairle ceantair;
- (b) Ghlac mé leis na cuirí go léir;
- (c) Bhuaill mé le Comhairlí Ceantair na hÓmaí, Fhear Manach, Mhachaire Rátha, na Coirre Críochaí (le chéile) agus an Dúin;
- (d) Bhuaill mé le Comhairle Ceantair na hÓmaí ar 30 Deireadh Fómhair 2001; le Comhairle Ceantair Fhear Manach ar 21 Samhain 2001, le Comhairlí Ceantair Mhachaire Rátha agus na Coirre Críochaí (le chéile) ar 6 Nollaig 2001; agus le Comhairle Ceantair an Dúin ar 9 Eanáir 2002.

Operation Waiting Lists: West Tyrone

Day Care and Learning Disability Needs: Funding

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, in light of the reduction of EU funding for day-care and learning disability needs, what discussions have taken place with the Minister for Employment and Learning to ensure alternative funding is made available.

(AQW 3782/01)

Ms de Brún: Officials in my Department are in discussion with their counterparts in the Department of Education and Learning to assess the impact the reduction in ESF funding will have on health and social services.

Health and Social Services Boards and Trusts are already aware of the retraction of European funding in the coming years, and the pressures this will put on their own voluntary activity support budgets. It will be for them to assess the value of current projects and to decide whether to continue funding them, taking into account the impact withdrawal may have on the well-being of the service users involved. This will involve careful assessment of priorities, opportunity costs and available resources.

Tá oifigigh ó mo Roinn i mbun caibidlí lena gcomhghleacaithe sa Roinn Oideachais agus Foghlama le measúnú a dhéanamh ar an tionchar a bheidh ag an laghdú i maoiniú ESF ar na seirbhísí sláinte agus sóisialta.

Tá a fhios ag na Boird agus ag na hIontaobhais Sláinte agus Seirbhísí Sóisialta cheana féin faoi aistarraingt an mhaoinithe Eorpaigh a dhéanfar sna blianta atá le teacht, agus faoi na brúnna a chuirfidh sí seo ar a mbuiséid thacaíochta féin do ghníomhaíochtaí deonacha. Fúthu féin a bheidh sé measúnú a dhéanamh ar fhiúntas na scéimeanna reatha agus cinneadh a dhéanamh iad a mhaoiniú go fóill nó gan iad a mhaoiniú, ag cur san áireamh an tionchar a d'fhéadfadh an aistarraingt a bheith aici ar leas na n-úsáideoirí seirbhísí lena mbaineann sí. Beidh measúnú cúramach ar thosaíochtaí, ar chostais deiseanna, agus ar na hacmhainní ar fáil i gceist.

Day Care and Learning Disability Needs

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps is she taking to develop a long-term strategy for those with day-care and learning disability needs.

(AQW 3783/01)

Ms de Brún: The provision of day services is a shared responsibility between statutory providers in the fields of education, training, employment and health and social services, and voluntary sector providers. The aim is to enable people with a learning disability to access the service most appropriate to their needs at a particular point in time. Health and Social Services Boards and Trusts have developed the necessary multi-agency networks and protocols to meet identified local need.

My Department's Priorities for Action 2002/03 require Boards and Trusts to continue to develop the range of day care and respite services for people with a learning disability. Some of the additional funding allocated to Boards for the development of community services in 2002/03 will be available for this purpose.

Idir soláthraithe reachtúla i réimsí oideachais, oiliúna, fostaíochta, na seirbhísí sláinte agus sóisialta agus soláthraithe na hearnála deonaí atá an chomhfhreagracht as seirbhísí lae a sholáthar. Is í an aidhm ná cur ar chumas daoine le míchumas foghlama an tseirbhís is oiriúnaí dá riachtanais a fháil ag am ar leith. D'fhorbair na Boird agus na hIontaobhais Sláinte agus Seirbhísí Sóisialta na gréasáin agus na prótacail riachtanacha ilghníomhaireachta le riar ar riachtanais aitheanta áitiúla.

Éilíonn Tosaíochtaí le hAghaidh Gnímh 2002/03 mo Roinne ar Bhoird agus ar Iontaobhais réimse a seirbhísí cúraim lae agus faoisimh a fhorbairt go fóill do dhaoine le míchumas foghlama. Cuirfear cuid den mhaoiniú breise dáilte ar Bhoird le haghaidh forbairt seirbhísí pobail i 2002/03 ar fáil don chuspóir seo.

'Arimidex'

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if the cancer drug 'Arimidex' is available on prescription; and, if not, when will it become available.

(AQW 3802/01)

Ms de Brún: Arimidex has been available on prescription here for ten years and is widely prescribed for the treatment of advanced breast cancer. It is not yet licensed for use in the precautionary treatment of patients who have had surgery and/or radiotherapy for curable breast cancer. The results of clinical studies to date are not sufficiently matured to conclude that Arimidex provides a clear survival advantage in the long term in these cases.

Tá Arimidex ar fáil ar oideas le deich mbliana anuas anois agus moltar mar chóir leighis go forleathan é chun aile brollaigh forbartha a leigheas. Níl sé ceadúnaithe go fóill i leigheas réamh-aireach na n-othar a chuaigh faoi mháinliacht agus/nó a raibh radaiteiripe d'aile brollaigh inleigheasta acu. Níl torthaí na staidéar cliniciúil go dtí seo aibí/forbartha go leor chun teacht ar an gcinneadh go bhfuil buntáiste soiléir san fhadtearma ag Arimidex ó thaobh marthanais de sna cásanna seo.

Fire Stations: Cover

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many occasions in the last year has fire cover in adjacent station areas been requested in order to provide fire cover for those stations under-resourced. (AQW 3803/01)

Ms de Brún: The information requested is not available.

Níl fáil ar an eolas a iarradh.

'Arimidex'

Mr Shannon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (a) the results of the new cancer drug 'Arimidex'; and (b) the role the Ulster Hospital had in its trials over the last 5 years. (AQW 3805/01)

Ms de Brún: Arimidex has been available here for at least ten years and is widely prescribed for the treatment of advanced breast cancer. Preliminary results from a large multi-centre study comparing the use of Arimidex with the traditional agent Tamoxifen show that it is too early to say if Arimidex provides a clear survival advantage in long term use for patients who have had surgery for early breast cancer.

A number of patients from the Ulster Hospital's Breast Clinic have been included in this study, in which the health service here has been a major contributor.

Tá Arimidex ar fáil anseo le deich mbliana anuas ar a laghad agus molar go forleathan mar chóir leighis é chun aile brollaigh atá forbartha a leigheas. Léiríonn réamhthorthaí ó staidéar mór ilionad a chuir úsáid Arimidex i gcomparáid leis an oibreán traidisiúnta Tamoxifen go bhfuil sé róluath a rá an bhfuil buntáiste amach is amach san fhadtearma ag baint le Arimidex ó thaobh marthanais de maidir le hothair a chuaigh faoi mháinliacht d'aile brollaigh go luath.

Áirítear roinnt othar ó Chlinic Brollaigh Ospidéal Uladh sa staidéar sin agus ba mhó an cúnamh a bhí sa tséirbhís sláinte ansin dóibh.

Acute Hospital/Minor Injuries Unit

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail which constituencies have neither an Acute Hospital nor a Minor Injuries Unit. (AQW 3809/01)

Ms de Brún: Belfast East, East Antrim and North Antrim constituencies have neither an Acute hospital nor a Minor Injuries Unit.

Níl Géarotharlann nó Ionad Mionghortuithe i dtoghlaigh Bhéal Feirste Thoir, Aontroma Thoir nó Thuaidh.

Attention Deficit and Hyperactivity Disorder

Mr Davis asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) any plans being considered for improving the diagnosis system for detecting Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD); and (b) what support is available for both the individual diagnosed and their family. (AQW 3817/01)

Ms de Brún: It is not possible to assess the present standards of diagnosis of young people with Attention Deficit and Hyperactivity Disorder. Continual Professional Development of GPs and psychiatrists is designed to ensure increased awareness and to keep professionals up to date with developments in this area.

Support for the individuals diagnosed with ADHD is provided via the child and adolescent services. Support for the families and carers is available through a range of mental health carer support services provided by the statutory and voluntary sectors.

Ní féidir caighdeáin láithreacha fháthmheas dhaoine óga le Neamhord Easpa Aire agus Hipirghníomhaíochta (NEAH) a mheasúnú. Tá sé de chuspóir ag Forbairt Leanúnach Ghairmiúil Ghnáthdhochtúirí agus síciatraithe níos mó eolais air a chinntiú agus gairmithe a choinneáil ar an eolas faoi na forbairtí sa réimse seo.

Tugtar tacaíocht do na daoine aonair fáthmheasta le NEAH tríd na seirbhísí páistí agus ógánach. Tá tacaíocht do theaghlaigh agus d'fheighlithe ar fáil trí réimse seirbhísí tacaíochta d'fheighlithe sláinte meabhrach soláthraithe ag na hearnálacha reachtúla agus deonacha.

Attention Deficit and Hyperactivity Disorder

Mr Davis asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps are being taken to educate psychiatrists on Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder (ADHD). (AQW 3818/01)

Ms de Brún: Psychiatrists are educated about ADHD during their general professional training as part of child and adolescent mental health subjects. Child and adolescent psychiatrists, who undergo higher professional training in this sub-specialty prior to becoming consultants, would focus on relevant areas such as ADHD in considerably more depth. Post graduate Continual Professional Development of psychiatrists would ensure increased awareness of ADHD and that professionals keep up to date with developments in this area.

Múintear ábhar an NEAH do shíciatraithe le linn a n-oiliúna gairmiúla ginearálta mar chuid d'ábhair sláinte meabhrach an pháiste agus an ógánaigh. Dhíreodh síciatraithe páistí agus ógánach, a dhéanann oiliúint ghairmiúil níos airde san fhospeisialtacht seo sula ndéantar comhairleacha díobh, i bhfad níos mine ar réimsí cuí amhail NEAH. Chinnteodh Forbairt Leanúnach Ghairmiúil larchéime na síciatraithe go mbeadh níos mó eolais acu ar NEAH agus go gcinneodh gairmithe súil ar fhorbairtí sa réimse seo.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Roads Maintenance: West Tyrone

Mr Byrne asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the percentage of the Roads Service budget for West Tyrone in the current financial year, that has been allocated for roads maintenance. (AQW 3739/01)

The Minister for Regional Development (Mr P Robinson): I can advise that the expenditure on roads maintenance in West Tyrone represents 9.0 % of the total spend on roads maintenance in Northern Ireland during 2001/2002.

Wastewater Treatment Works

Mr Douglas asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the type of sewage treatment in each sewage and wastewater treatment works throughout Northern Ireland. (AQW 3776/01)

Mr P Robinson: Water Service has 918 wastewater treatment works and sea outfalls. The treatment processes used are as follows:

- primary treatment which removes suspended solids in the wastewater prior to discharge to the receiving waters;
- secondary treatment which provides an additional stage of treatment involving some form of biological process which removes soluble and colloidal organic matter prior to discharge; and
- tertiary treatment which employs further processes designed to remove residual suspended solids and reduce ammonia, nitrogen or phosphorous.

Discharges from sea outfalls are normally provided with screened treatment to remove large floating solid material.

The treatment process used is determined by the effluent consent standards, which are set by the Environment and Heritage Service. The following table provides a breakdown of the number of wastewater treatment works by treatment process.

Type of Treatment	Number of Works
Primary	98
Secondary	684
Tertiary	30
Sea Outfalls	106
Total	918

North Coast Wastewater Treatment Works

Mr Douglas asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail any additional costs which would be incurred to treat waste water by tertiary, rather than secondary treatment in the proposed 'North Coast Wastewater Treatment Works' project. (AQW 3777/01)

Mr P Robinson: The provision of secondary treatment processes at the proposed North Coast Wastewater Treatment Works will ensure that wastewater discharges comply with the standards set by the Department of the Environment's Environment and Heritage Service. These standards take account of European Community Directives and United Kingdom standards, together with local environmental requirements.

The site of the proposed works is large enough to permit the construction of tertiary treatment facilities, should standards be made more rigorous in the future. The additional capital cost would be in the order of £2 million and the additional running costs are estimated to be around £53,000 per annum.

Given the current underfunding of Water Service, and the pressures on its capital investment programme, I could not sanction spending an additional £2 million on treating wastewater to standards higher than those set by the regulatory authorities.

North Coast Wastewater Treatment Works

Mr Douglas asked the Minister for Regional Development to make a statement on the proposed 'North Coast Wastewater Treatment Works' project, including an indicative timetable for the scheme. (AQW 3778/01)

Mr P Robinson: The proposed North Coast Wastewater Treatment Works is a substantial project. The works will be constructed at Craigtown More and treated effluent will be conveyed 1 kilometre out to sea through a submerged pipeline to be laid off Rinagree Point. This will enable existing wastewater treatment works at Coleraine to be downgraded, removing the present discharge of treated effluent to the River Bann. Wastewater from Castlerock and Articlave will be pumped to a storm water holding facility at the Coleraine site. New pumping stations, to be constructed at Portrush and Portstewart, will transfer flows to the new North Coast Works and permit the removal of effluent discharges to the Articlave River and the sea at Castlerock, Blackrock and Ramore Head. The project will accommodate future residential, tourist and commercial growth for the next 30 years.

Water Service recently applied for outline planning permission for the Works and the timetable for its construction is presently under review. The earliest possible date that the construction could commence would be 2003, however, the actual date will be subject to the availability of funding. It is estimated that construction of the works will take 4 years to complete.

North Coast Wastewater Treatment Works

Mr Douglas asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the capital costs involved in the proposed 'North Coast Wastewater Treatment Works' project.
(AQW 3779/01)

Mr P Robinson: The current estimate of the capital cost of the North Coast Wastewater Treatment Works project is in the region of £36 million. This comprises £18 million for the treatment works, £6 million for the sea outfall and £12 million for sewers and pumping stations.

Salt Boxes

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the criteria for the provision of salt boxes for use in inclement weather.
(AQW 3790/01)

Mr P Robinson: I am answering Question numbers AQW 3790/01, and AQW 3791/01 together.

I should explain that in certain circumstances my Department's Roads Service may provide salt bins on adopted roads, which are not included in the salting schedule. The salt bins are provided for use by local residents on a self-help basis during periods of icy weather conditions.

To qualify for consideration for the provision of a salt bin, the gradient of a road should be equal to, or greater than, 5% (i.e. 1 in 20) and where a reasonable alternative route on the salting schedule is not available. Other criteria taken into account are the road geometry, residential and commercial usage and community welfare reasons. A point scoring system is then applied.

From November to March inclusive the salt boxes are inspected and filled as required. If necessary, during the summer months some boxes are removed in case they would be stolen or damaged. Normally the boxes would not be provided within 100 metres of one another.

I am advised that there are 25 salt boxes within the Carrickfergus area. Details of the locations are detailed on the table below.

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (a) the number of salt boxes; and (b) their location, in the Carrickfergus area.
(AQW 3791/01)

Equality Impact Assessment

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline (a) the number of Equality Impact Assessments (EIA) carried out by his Department to date; and (b) the total cost of (i) research; (ii) consultation; (iii) printing; and (iv) dissemination, for each EIA.

(AQW 3813/01)

Mr P Robinson: My Department has published one final EIA and issued a further one for consultation. The costs (including staff costs) are detailed below:

Costs	Proposed Discontinuance of Antrim-Knockmore Railway Line (EIA completed) £	Regional Transportation Strategy (Draft EIA issued for consultation) £
Research (including staff costs)	46,000	25,000
Consultation	Nil	Nil
Printing and Dissemination	3600	1600

Freedom of Information

Dr Birnie asked the Minister for Regional Development what measures he has taken to ensure that the publication schemes required under the Freedom of Information Act will be completed by November 2002.

(AQW 3879/01)

Mr P Robinson: A dedicated unit has been established within my Department to take forward the requirements of the Freedom of Information Act, of which the Publication Scheme is one element. Work on the Scheme is well advanced and it is anticipated that it will be sent to the Information Commissioner for approval in September.

Farmers/Landowners: Compensation

Mr Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development if he will undertake to introduce a scheme that will offer additional compensation to farmers and landowners who lose small parcels of land for road development, to reflect the open market prices for small parcels of land as opposed to the price per acre of agricultural land currently paid.

(AQO 1522/01)

Mr P Robinson: I have currently no plans to introduce a scheme that will offer additional compensation to farmers and landowners who have small parcels of land acquired for road development. The Department of Finance and Personnel, Valuation and Lands Agency is responsible for the agreeing of compensation in such cases and I am informed by that Agency that compensation is based on open market value.

Reinvestment and Reform Initiative

Mr Savage asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the bids he has made to the Executive under the Re-investment and Reform Initiative.

(AQO 1528/01)

Mr P Robinson: My Department entered a total of 38 bids under the Reinvestment and Reform Initiative amounting to £277 million of which £99 million relates to 2002/03 and £178 million to 2003/04.

The detailed list of bids was made available to the Regional Development Committee and I have arranged for a copy to be put in the Assembly Library. The list includes 15 projects put forward in April for support under the Infrastructure Executive Programme Fund. The schemes include strategic road improvements on major routes throughout Northern Ireland, upgrading the Eastern Seaboard Corridor – i.e. the A8, Westlink, the M1 and various schemes on the A1 including the dualling of the road between Newry and the Border – Skeoge Link and the final stage of the Omagh through-pass. I have also sought significant investment in new buses and have bid for the funds necessary to continue work on the railways including the Antrim – Knockmore railway line. In respect of water and sewerage I am seeking resources to replace defective water mains and sewers, to reduce leakage, to improve water quality and enhance environmental protection measures.

Road Improvement: Belfast to Larne

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development to update the progress on the improvements to the A8 Belfast to Larne road.

(AQO 1535/01)

Mr P Robinson: The A8 Belfast to Larne Road forms a key link in Northern Ireland's Strategic Transportation Network and is part of the Trans European Network. My Department's Roads Service intends to carry out a package of improvements costing some £12 million to the A8 Belfast to Larne road.

The current position on each of the 5 components is as follows:

- 2 climbing lanes at Ballynure – the climbing lanes are under construction and should be complete by October 2002;
- Doagh Road to Coleman's Corner dualling – all statutory procedures will be completed when the Vesting Order becomes operative on 24 June 2002. It is expected that the tender documents will issue in July 2002 and that the contract will be awarded in the autumn, with work commencing before the end of this year;
- New roundabouts at Millbrook and Antiville – this scheme has already completed the Environmental Assessment and Planning Approval (Direction Order) stages of the statutory procedures. I am pleased to be able to announce today that the single objection to the Vesting Order is being set aside without recourse to a Public Inquiry; this will allow the land acquisition phase to be completed shortly. Roads Service has already initiated the tender process with a view to making a start on site later this year.

- Link road and roundabout scheme at the A57 junction, Ballynure – the Notice of Intention to Make a Vesting Order is being prepared and should be published this summer;
- Traffic calming measures at Ballynure – these will be implemented as part of the new link road and roundabout scheme at the A57 junction, Ballynure.

Downpatrick Wastewater Treatment Works

Mr McGrady asked the Minister for Regional Development what actions will he take to ensure that the network investigation of the sewerage system at Downpatrick Wastewater Treatment Works is undertaken as soon as possible.

(AQO 1510/01)

Mr P Robinson: Officials of Water Service and Environment and Heritage Service met recently to discuss Environmental and Heritage Service's concerns about the pollution of waterways in the Downpatrick area, and the operation of the Downpatrick Wastewater Treatment Works.

In addition to installing new inlet screens, Water Service intends to carry out some modifications at the Works which will address Environment and Heritage Service's concerns. This work is due to be completed before the July holidays and Environment and Heritage Service has advised that it will enable the present restrictions on development, in the area served by the Works, to be lifted.

Water Service has a major ongoing and planned programme of detailed investigations into the sewerage networks across Northern Ireland. The aim of these investigations, which are known as drainage area studies, is to determine the improvements necessary to enable the sewerage networks to meet future capacity and environmental requirements.

The study into the Downpatrick sewerage network had been scheduled to commence in 2003. However, it has been agreed with Environment and Heritage Service, that it will be brought forward and will now commence in the Autumn of 2002. The study will take 2 years to complete.

East Antrim Railway Line

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Regional Development what improvements are planned for the East Antrim Railway line over the next 12 months?

(AQO 1518/01)

Mr P Robinson: Translink has advised that it is currently considering options for the upgrading of the East Antrim Line. The extent of the upgrading will depend on the availability of funding.

Among the options being considered is the conversion of two level crossings at Jordanstown and Troopers Lane from automatic half-barrier to a manually controlled barrier with CCTV, and the re-lay of the line.

Translink has advised that work planned is in line with ongoing improvements. During the past 12 months, over £1m was spent on sea defences; Carrickfergus station was refurbished and new Park and Ride facilities were built at Whitehead station.

Infrastructure

Rev Robert Coulter asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans exist to foster the growth of all of Northern Ireland's ports through the provision of infrastructural links. (AQO 1526/01)

Mr P Robinson: The Regional Development Strategy (RDS) designates sea and air ports as regional gateways and highlights the need to develop the Regional Strategic Transport Network, based on Key Transport Corridors, to connect a number of towns and provide links to the major regional gateways. The Regional Transportation Strategy, which I will bring to the Assembly before the summer recess, will identify the transportation priorities and level of investment required, including that for the Regional Strategic Transport Network, over the next 10 years to progress significantly towards that vision.

Transport Strategy

Mr Wells asked the Minister for Regional Development to make a statement on the level of investment needed to bring the key transport corridors up to the standard required for a modern and vibrant society.

(AQO 1553/01)

Mr P Robinson: To achieve the longer-term transportation vision for Northern Ireland, set out in the Regional Development Strategy, would require additional investment of around £2.5 billion over the next 25 years. The Regional Transportation Strategy, which I will bring to the Assembly before the summer recess, will identify the transportation priorities and level of investment required, including that for the Regional Strategic Transport Network (which includes the KTCs), over the next 10 years to progress significantly towards achievement of the vision.

Bridge Strengthening: Tillysburn

Mr M Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline any progress on the Tillysburn Road/Bridge realignment project; and to make a statement. (AQO 1509/01)

Mr P Robinson: My Department's Roads Service has advised me that currently this £5.5M scheme is 4 weeks ahead of schedule and is due for completion in September 2002.

The Tillysburn Bridge carries the Sydenham Bypass over the Bangor to Belfast railway line. It carries 56,000 vehicles per day and is being replaced as part of Roads Service's bridge strengthening programme. One element of the scheme is the provision of an underpass to service Belfast City Airport part-funded by the airport authorities. It will allow vehicles leaving the airport and intending to turn right, to pass under the Sydenham Bypass before joining the Belfast-bound carriageway via a slip road.

I hope the Member will agree that this project has been managed very efficiently and, due to considerable traffic management arrangements put in place by Roads Service and the contractor, disruption to road and rail users has been kept to a minimum.

Roads Service and Water Service: Expenditure

Mr Gibson asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the current level of expenditure by the Roads Service and Water Service in West Tyrone. (AQO 1544/01)

Mr P Robinson: Roads Service expenditure in West Tyrone, which comprises the Omagh and Strabane District Council areas, was just over £15million in the 2001/2002 financial year. This includes some £4.5 million on major road improvement schemes, £1.5 million on other improvements including accident remedial and traffic calming schemes and £9 million on road maintenance including winter service, grass cutting and street lighting.

In the current financial year Water Service proposes to invest £14 million on upgrading water and sewerage infrastructure in the Omagh and Strabane District Council areas. Some £12 million of this is to be spent on the upgrading of Lough Macrory Water Treatment Works, Strabane Wastewater Treatment Works and Omagh Wastewater Treatment Works.

Water Service operational expenditure, which includes items such as wages, salaries, materials, hired and contract services, is not available on an Assembly constituency or District Council basis. However, operational expenditure in the Service's Western Division, which includes the West Tyrone area, was almost £22 million in the 2001/2002 financial year. It is envisaged that a similar amount will be spent in the current financial year.

Traffic: Kilkeel

Mr M Murphy asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline (a) any plans he has to address the traffic problems in Kilkeel, particularly on a Friday afternoon and (b) when such measures will be implemented. (AQO 1561/01)

Mr P Robinson: My Department's Roads Service has taken several steps to address the traffic situation in Kilkeel. Traffic calming works at Knockchree Avenue and Rooney Road, Kilkeel, have recently been carried out in response to public requests to reduce vehicle speeds and improve safety on these roads. The effectiveness and impact of this scheme will be monitored over the coming months.

A number of dropped kerbs have also been provided in Kilkeel during the last financial year to facilitate the movement of pedestrians and my engineers have made further provision within this year's programme for similar work to be carried out at sites which will be selected in consultation with representative groups in the area.

In regard to traffic congestion in the town centre, a recent survey did not indicate significant delays during weekdays. It was noted, however, that inappropriate parking and delivery vehicles had an adverse affect on traffic flows particularly during peak times. I am pleased to inform you that where necessary Roads Service plan to refurbish the markings and signage associated with existing waiting restrictions in order to assist enforcement and improve traffic progression. This work will be completed within the next quarter.

Consultancy Firms/Consultants

Mrs Nelis asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the level of expenditure in each of the past 3 years on consultancy firms/consultants, on all road scheme projects. (AQO 1516/01)

Mr P Robinson: The level of expenditure on consultant fees on Roads Service projects in each of the past 3 years is as follows:

1999/2000	£3,012,000
2000/2001	£3,285,000
2001/2002	£3,833,000

This includes road and bridge schemes, and work associated with Area Planning and Development Control.

Upgrading Road Network: Scotland

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development what negotiations he has had with members of the Scottish Executive in respect of upgrading the fast road link between Stranraer and the M6. (AQO 1525/01)

Mr P Robinson: My colleague Gregory Campbell and I have both had correspondence with members of the Scottish Executive to emphasize the importance to the Northern Ireland economy of upgrading the network of roads linking with the Scottish Ferry ports. I also took the opportunity to raise this issue with my counterpart in the Scottish Executive during a meeting earlier this year on another matter.

A planned meeting to discuss a range of issues including the upgrade of the Scottish roads network was subsequently postponed and as a result of changes within the Scottish Executive has not yet been reinstated.

Arthur's Bridge, North Belfast

Mr G Kelly asked the Minister for Regional Development if he would consider implementing a pilot scheme to place a protective covering over the Arthur's Bridge, North Belfast; and to make a statement. (AQO 1512/01)

Mr P Robinson: Over the last few months there has been a spate of attacks from bridges and all such attacks must be condemned by the whole community. Unfortunately they are not new, nor are they confined to bridges over the M2 such as Arthur's Bridge. There is also a widespread problem of stone throwing from the roadside, which can have equally serious consequences for those using the roads.

My Department's Roads Service and the police treat these incidents very seriously and the matter is kept under constant review. A protective covering for Arthur's Bridge to try to deter such attacks would be a very large structure, requiring a headroom of some 5.3 metres high. Setting aside issues of cost, such engineering measures will only reduce but not eliminate the risk of this particular type of attack. They will be seen as a challenge to vandals who will find other modes of attack, possibly from the roads running beside the motorway.

There are also serious reservations about the visual amenity of such fortifications, with signals being sent of a community in decline. In particular, the M2 downhill approach is one of the most attractive gateways into Belfast and to fortify bridges along this route would not be conducive to the image we would like to portray for such a major entrance into our capital city.

Our conclusion at present, therefore, is that engineering measures such as the erection of screens on bridges should only be implemented as a last resort. This is also the view of our counterparts in Great Britain where similar problems have existed in various locations for some time.

Essentially the throwing of objects from bridges is a matter for the Police and enhanced enforcement together with strong community leadership may well be the best way forward. I therefore welcome the recent announcements by the Security Minister, Jane Kennedy, that Arthur's Bridge will be one of the locations where a CCTV camera will be erected as part of the overall NIO CCTV initiative for North Belfast.

SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Co-Ownership Scheme

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister for Social Development how many applicants have accessed home ownership through the Co-Ownership scheme in each of the last three years. (AQW 3723/01)

The Minister for Social Development (Mr Dodds): The information is as follows:

Financial Year	No of new Co-ownership participants
1999/2000	587
2000/2001	510
2001/2002	645

Local Government Boundaries: Newtownabbey

Mr K Robinson asked the Minister for Social Development if local government boundaries between North Belfast and Newtownabbey inhibit his ability to improve the housing situation in both areas. (AQW 3725/01)

Mr Dodds: Local government boundaries are not major influencing factors in improving the housing situation, either by programmed improvement schemes or in assessing housing need for new build.

The social newbuild programme is determined by housing need, primarily based on an analysis of waiting lists, which again are not constrained by local government boundaries. When assessing housing need, recognition is given to both the local and wider housing markets in North Belfast and Newtownabbey, including those which straddle local government boundaries.

The Department has recently changed the method for determining the threshold levels for Co-ownership participants. These are no longer based on local government boundaries but are now calculated on the basis of broader area bands which reflect, more accurately, house price fluctuations. This means that there is an opportunity for participants to purchase housing in areas where house prices have risen markedly over the past few years.

Social Security Benefits: Staffing

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Social Development to outline (a) any plans of introducing the private sector into the Social Security system; (b) the impact this would have on established jobs; (c) the impact on the current number of Social Security Offices throughout the province; and (d) the potential these plans would have in taking jobs out of the province. (AQW 3793/01)

Mr Dodds: There are no plans for the private sector to become involved in the direct delivery of social security benefits in Northern Ireland. A significant investment programme is currently taking place in all Social Security Offices across Northern Ireland which will result in major improvements in the range and quality of services available to the public. I can therefore confirm that no plans exist to reduce the number of Social Security Offices.

In common with other government departments, the private sector is engaged by the Social Security Agency to provide specific technical support. The use of the private sector in such circumstances does not have any impact on the number of civil service jobs in Northern Ireland.

Equality Impact Assessment

Mr S Wilson asked the Minister for Social Development to outline (a) the number of Equality Impact Assessments (EIA) carried out by his Department to date; and (b) the total cost of (i) research; (ii) consultation; (iii) printing; and (iv) dissemination, for each EIA.

(AQW 3814/01)

Mr Dodds: Since the introduction of Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, the Department for Social Development has issued five equality impact assessments for consultation. These are:

- Provision of relevant, accurate and timely information and advice about social security benefits
- Child Support, Pensions and Social Security Bill
- Child Support Agency Northern Ireland Field Operations
- Private Sector Grants
- Partners for Change – Government's strategy for the support of the Voluntary and Community Sector.

The table below sets out the cost for each equality impact assessment (EQIA).

COSTS ASSOCIATED WITH EQUALITY IMPACT ASSESSMENTS

Equality Impact Assessment	Research Costs	Consultation Costs	Printing Costs	Dissemination Costs
Provision of relevant, accurate and timely information and advice about social security benefits	None	£936.90	£30.46	£476.70
Child Support, Pensions and Social Security Bill	None	None	£20.00	£100.00
Child Support Agency Northern Ireland Field Operations	None	£1549.21	£34.93	£237.24
Private Sector Grants	None	£1792.04	£88.40	£12.35

Equality Impact Assessment	Research Costs	Consultation Costs	Printing Costs	Dissemination Costs
* Partners for Change – Government's strategy for the support of the Voluntary and Community Sector.	None	£200.60	£450.54	£258.38

* The EQIA costs for "Partners for Change" were bound up with the wider cost of consultation on the full strategy. The EQIA was therefore not issued as a stand alone document. The pro rata costs of the EQIA are provided.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr Poots asked the Minister for Social Development has he any plans to review the procedures for awarding Disability Living Allowance. (AQW 3833/01)

Mr Dodds: The current procedure for deciding a customers entitlement to Disability Living Allowance is set to ensure that all decisions are made in accordance with Social Security legislation. The processes for making awards are constantly being reviewed and it is intended to introduce a new computerised process in the Autumn.
