However, I agree with the Member that we had a very thorough and valuable presentation from the City of Culture people. The other delegates were vastly impressed by what had taken place, and they had all been provided with the full programme of activities that will take place over the course of this year. Indeed, one of the delegation leaders remained after the BIC meeting to taste something of it for herself.

Mrs Hale: I thank the First Minister for his statement to the House this morning. I appreciate that he has already touched briefly on the subject of youth unemployment, but can he expand on how our economic achievement compares with that of other areas in the BIC region?

Mr P Robinson: I will place in the Library a paper that was provided to the BIC summit by Alex Salmond, the First Minister of Scotland. While the table that he provides emphasises Scotland, as one might expect, it shows the level of youth unemployment in the European Union. The figures are for March 2013 and range from almost 58% youth unemployment in Spain and 57% in Greece right down to the UK average of 19.5%. Northern Ireland's rate is 19%, and, as I indicated, Scotland has a lower level at 15.2%. Northern Ireland and Scotland are in the lowest quarter. You can see that throughout the European community there are very high levels of youth unemployment. In Spain and Greece, you have youth unemployment at almost 60%, which is a dangerously high level. So it is important that we look at this subject further. We will do that not only within the Executive but with colleagues in the BIC.

Ms Fearon: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the First Minister for his statement. What is his assessment of the presentation given by the Culture Company on Derry's year as the City of Culture? What has been the impact of the City of Culture so far, not just in Derry but in the North as a whole?

Mr P Robinson: The impact goes beyond that, because those most eager to listen to the presentation were from areas that had made bids to be next year's UK City of Culture. They very much wanted to learn from the experience of the Derry/Londonderry company. The Culture Company has shown a ready willingness to share its experiences, the mistakes and the advantages, when the year is over, with whatever area will follow it. The presentation was made by, I think, Mickey Melarkey — is that right?

Mr M McGuinness: Marty Melarkey.

Mr P Robinson: Marty Melarkey? You could only make that name up. He and Shona gave a presentation that contained video elements showing the excitement in the city. If we had got up at about 4.00 am — the deputy First Minister boasts that he did — we would have seen hot-air balloons with music being played from them going around the city. I just thought that the combination of hot air, balloons and politicians was not one that I wanted to mix with.

Mr Cree: The First Minister referred to the all-island approach to energy. Were any particular opportunities identified that could benefit the islands as a whole?

Mr P Robinson: My colleague the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment signed an agreement with the Taoiseach, Enda Kenny, and the First Minister of Scotland because of the link between the Republic Ireland, Northern Ireland and Scotland. That will lead to the carrying out of a study, which will be very useful. It is important that we keep the connectivity of the North/South interconnector and the connection with Scotland. I hope that that not only provides us with greater security in our energy supply but leads to lower costs.

Mr Allister: On that theme and the question of energy security, with Ballylumford B required to close at the end of 2015, Kilroot required to reduce output by 50% by 2016 and the Moyle interconnector limping along, was there any discussion about making improvements and putting the Moyle interconnector on the basis of working all the time at full capacity?

Mr P Robinson: There was not. That is very much a matter for the Northern Ireland Administration to deal with through the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment. The subject matter that we were dealing with was the connectivity between the various parts of the islands. I will certainly draw that issue to the attention of my colleague the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, who may want to reply to him directly.

Health and Social Care: Taking Forward Transformation

Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): With your permission, Mr Speaker, I wish to make a statement to the House on progress taking forward the transformation of our health and social care services.

I want to remind Members about the very real challenges that we face and the reasons why transformation is so critical. In Northern Ireland, as elsewhere, we have a growing and ageing population, a growth in chronic conditions, a growth in demand and an over-reliance on hospital beds. All of that is set against a backdrop of economic and financial constraint. Given the challenges ahead, the way that we work now will not work well in the future.

That is not a criticism; it is a statement of fact. I want to make sure that we are able to make our integrated health and social care system work effectively for us every day and for every patient. It is important that, as we take forward transformation, we keep our service users and patients at the front and centre of the process, in line with our commitments under Quality 2020. We must ensure that good communication and discussion with all those impacted by the proposed changes is at the heart of our work, and that is why I want to take the opportunity today to report on what we said we would do, what we have done and what we will do.

Throughout the transformation process, it is essential that we hold true to the core principles of the National Health Service (NHS). I stated on 9 October 2012, when I was launching the ‘Transforming Your Care: Vision to Action’ consultation, that my belief in the core principles is unchanged. That remains the case. The principles are that health services are generally free at the point of delivery and are based on individual need and not ability to pay, are funded by taxation, and are available without prior restriction on which cost-effective treatments or therapies individuals should receive. Thus, the best available cost-effective services will be provided for all citizens. Those principles remain a fixed point in the transformation process.

Of course, the wider context for the changes remains challenging, with significant pressures in the financial context for 2013-14. My Department, the Health and Social Care Board and the trusts have been working closely to identify opportunities for delivering cash-releasing and productivity improvements to address those pressures. Some £139 million of saving opportunities have been identified at this stage, and those moneys are being re-targeted to those areas in health and social care where priority is greatest. However, that still leaves a significant funding gap this year. I am committed to identifying and implementing saving opportunities wherever possible in the Health and Social Care (HSC). However, that must not be at the cost of quality and standards of services for patients and service users.

I have, therefore, made a bid in this year’s June monitoring round to the Department of Finance and Personnel for £55.2 million, including £28 million for transitional funding to support Transforming Your Care (TYC) and HSC saving initiatives. Those transitional moneys will be important to ensure that we maintain the momentum of transformation across the HSC. No change is not an option. If we do nothing, we will simply not be able to provide the high-quality and safe services that are necessary to meet the needs of people in Northern Ireland. I have also bid for £57 million capital money to allow development of the infrastructure required to modernise the facilities in which services are delivered.

Meeting the challenges of the future is dependent on the effective delivery of Transforming Your Care, which is a key strand of our health and social care transformation. As we work to deliver transformation through the provision of services closer to home and to maximise the benefits of our integrated health and care system, the roll-out of integrated care partnerships (ICPs) will be crucial.

The aim of the new integrated care partnerships is to transform how we work collaboratively to deliver better outcomes for service users locally. I expect ICPs to improve the quality of care, access to care and pathway design so as to improve our service user outcomes and experiences, especially for those who are most in need of early intervention care, treatment and support. There will be coverage across Northern Ireland, with four planned for Belfast, four for the South Eastern Trust area, three in the Southern Trust area, two in the Western Trust area and four in the Northern Trust area.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Dallat] in the Chair)

ICPs are overseen by partnership committees and incorporate multidisciplinary working groups, including health and social care professionals, community and voluntary sector representatives, service users and carers. ICPs are being formed now, and I hope that they can start to make a significant difference to support transformation this year.

The provision of care closer to home requires a step change in the way that we provide care, with the development of improved primary care facilities on a "hub and spoke" basis to be able to respond better to service users' needs. In April this year, I announced the development of two new hubs in Newry and Lisburn. I have decided to progress those facilities through third-party development to allow them to proceed now and to realise the benefits sooner than could have happened if I had had to await the availability of capital in the next Budget period. Work is in hand to address the remaining issues that need to be resolved prior to formal commencement of procurement for both centres, which will hopefully be within the next few weeks.

A prior information notice (PIN) has already been issued to alert the market.

11.00 am

These are exciting developments, complementing the provision of existing health and care centres, such as those at the Holywood Arches and in Portadown, and others that are under way, including those in Banbridge, Omagh and Ballymena. These developments in primary and community care will make a key contribution to enabling patients and service users to manage and maintain their health and well-being as close to home as possible.

TYC included a commitment to nurture new relationships with the community and voluntary sector where that could demonstrably improve patient outcomes. The sector's enthusiasm came through strongly in the recent TYC consultation. The community and voluntary sector has an important role to play in the design and delivery of services, and we need to develop that role further. I am delighted that the Health and Social Care Board, in partnership with Marie Curie Cancer Care, is investing £250,000 over two years in the development of the Delivering Choice programme, with Marie Curie investing a similar amount. That is a good example of real partnership working that brings together all those who are involved in providing care at the end of life. Its emphasis on supporting people to have choice at the end of their life and on enabling them to die in their preferred place dovetails with the vision in TYC to promote care closer to home and enhanced patient choice.

A partnership approach is at the heart of the work that is being taken forward in learning disability services. Evidence from engagement with service users, carers and families shows that day opportunities and alternatives to traditional care provision are increasingly important to people with a learning disability. The HSCB is reviewing how changes to day opportunities and day centres for those with learning disabilities will be implemented across the region. That will ensure that there is a consistent regional framework and full and meaningful engagement with clients, their families, carers and staff. Services would then be designed locally within the framework. It is estimated that the programme for the development of day services and day opportunities may take up to five years to complete in some areas.

Another area that demonstrates how the principles that are set out in TYC are already working in practice is the provision of innovative, cross-sectoral approaches to the challenges of acute care services. I will comment shortly on the reconfiguration of services, but it is important to acknowledge that changes are happening on the ground all the time. For example, there are now more opportunities for direct admission to wards by GPs. That avoids the need for some of our frailest and most vulnerable patients having to be admitted through an emergency department. There are examples of trusts providing targeted support and advice to nursing homes so that patients can be appropriately managed in the care home without having to go to hospital. That benefits patients by allowing them to be cared for in familiar surroundings by staff they know.

TYC highlights the potential for trusts to work more closely with the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service to help to improve services. The appointment of hospital ambulance liaison officers to emergency departments has contributed to the improved management of patient flows from ambulance to emergency department, as well as to improved discharge.

Over the past year, the emergency department improvement action group has worked with trusts on areas including better management of referrals to hospital, the provision of alternatives to hospital, improved effective discharge planning and support from the multidisciplinary teams in the community. There is still a lot of work to be done, but I know that staff are committed to working to improve acute hospital care.

One practical outworking of the transformation and the shift of resources from hospital to the community will be the reduction of beds in our hospitals. That cannot take place in a vacuum. In particular, it must take place with full and transparent engagement with patients and service users so that we know what is changing, when it is changing and why it is changing. As I highlighted in my statement on 19 March, it is essential to listen to the voices of local communities to ensure that we are able to make the best possible decisions about how we develop health and social care services into the future.

Responses to the 'Transforming Your Care: From Vision to Action' consultation exercise indicated a mixed reaction to the proposal for the second location for an inpatient acute mental health unit in the western LCG area. In my statement, I indicated that I wished to consider the issue further before reaching a final decision on the way forward. The completion of a detailed business case, looking at a range of options, will be required. That work is under way, and once it is completed, it will inform my decision. The preferred option will be the one that best meets needs, is affordable and provides best value for money.

I want to secure certainty and stability for the Causeway Hospital, where I know that uncertainty about the future management arrangements has been unsettling for service users, patients and staff. This work is being taken forward by my Department and will include input from the HSCB, the Northern and the Western Health and Social Care Trusts, and others as necessary. At regional level, we will be working extensively to ensure appropriate service reconfiguration. As we undertake this work, we will aim to ensure, first, that our services are as efficient as those delivered in the NHS elsewhere and, secondly, and crucially, to ensure that new models of care are in place and working before stepping down to other services.

Through our quality improvement and cost reduction programme for the HSC, we need to deliver efficiency and service improvement opportunities. There are efficiency savings to be delivered in 2013-14, but we recognise the pressure on the system. To ensure that trusts are provided sufficient time to embed changes to service configuration, I have approved bridging funding of £18 million in 2013-14. There are also transformational changes. The 'Transforming Your Care: Vision to Action' consultation highlighted a potential reduction of 180 beds in secondary care across Northern Ireland. This change will be phased from 2014 to 2017 because we must ensure that the new models of care are in place and working before stepping down the other services. Transitional funding will be essential to support some dual running.

I want better services for all older people, now and in the future. To this end, my Department has asked the HSC Board to lead on a regional project for co-ordination, consultation, engagement and implementation of change in services for older people. I expect all future trust proposals to be part of the new HSC Board oversight arrangements, but with local consultation and engagement.

I want to assure Members that the future of statutory residential care homes will be considered on a case-by-case basis, recognising that we must do what is in the best interests of the current residents. Residents and their relatives have known for some time that some places had already been earmarked for supported living schemes, such as Rathmoyle and Greenisland. Quite understandably, some residents have begun to move out of Rathmoyle, and no residents are left at Greenisland. Where people have made alternative arrangements, I do not wish to cause disruption. However, before there could be any further change at Rathmoyle, I want assurance from the HSCB that the previous processes have been adequate and that suitable alternatives are available in the locality in place of services that were available there.

I understand that two other residential care homes that have had no clients in them since mid-2012, Ferrard House in Antrim and Grovetree House in Belfast, are no longer registered with RQIA. This predated my announcement of 3 May 2013. Therefore, provided that I receive assurance from the HSC Board that suitable alternatives are already available locally, I see no good reason to consult further because such models are unlikely to offer high-quality accommodation. In addition, the Northern Trust has just completed a consultation on the future of its dementia services. Although homes for those with dementia or the elderly mentally infirm fall outside the new process, the outcome of this consultation needs to be analysed, where appropriate, in the context of the new regional process. That will include Moylinney Care Home, which still has residents.

Of course, it is vital that, in thinking about how we can deliver services more appropriately and bring about the transformation that we need, we also keep our focus squarely on improving performance now in our health and social care system. The pressure on our acute hospital services is continuing, with over 1.5 million new and review consultation outpatient attendances a year, and more than 600,000 inpatient and day-case treatments. In addition, there are attendances at nurse-led clinics with care from allied health professionals and for diagnostic tests. Our hospitals also see some 725,000 emergency department attendances a year, 95% of which are new and unplanned attendances. So although the majority of people attending hospital receive a safe and effective service, no one can deny that the hospital system is under pressure. This is most evident in unscheduled care. The latest statistics show that, although performance improved significantly in May, the health service is not meeting the standard that 95% of patients attending an emergency department should be discharged or admitted to a ward within four hours, nor has it met the standard that no one should wait longer than 12 hours in an emergency department.

However, there are signs of improvement in hospital services. Those can be seen, for example, in the waiting times for elective care, where both the numbers of patients waiting and the length of time they wait are being driven down. At the end of March 2013, the number of people waiting for a first outpatient appointment was a little under 100,000, a decrease of 3.2% on the previous March. Significantly, the proportion of people who waited for less than nine weeks has risen to 80.2% — that is, four out of five patients — compared to 72.6% in March 2012.

Regrettably, there are still some patients waiting much longer than they should. Around 1,700 people were waiting longer than the 18-week maximum waiting time for outpatient appointments. That is a big improvement on the figure of nearly 10,000 in March 2012, but it shows that we need to keep focused on further improvement. Performance on the inpatient waiting times shows a similar trend of improvement. At the end of March 2013, 47,000 people were waiting for inpatient or day-case treatment, a 6.9% reduction on the previous March. Around 69% of those patients had been waiting for less than 13 weeks. I have maintained a strong focus on performance management of our system throughout the past year. Where it has been important to take action to address failings, I have not hesitated to take the necessary steps. On 10 June, I made a statement on the report produced by the turnaround and support team, following its analysis of the challenges facing the Northern Health and Social Care Trust. The team's report concluded that, with intensive support, the trust can improve and deliver the highest quality patient care and experience. I am fully committed to ensuring that the trust is provided with the support it needs to deliver improvement.

Looking to the near future, I have bid for £26 million as part of the June monitoring round to support improving waiting times for elective care in our hospitals. I will continue to press the HSC Board and trusts to deliver on the emergency and elective care targets in 2013-14. My Department is also taking forward the development of further information collection to support policy priorities, including future commissioning plan directions. I hope that that new information will further facilitate the benchmarking of Northern Ireland services against those of England

As part of the process of ensuring that we are appropriately monitoring and holding to account our service providers across the HSC, I announced my intention to make changes to the existing arrangements for assurance and accountability for the Department's arm's-length bodies (ALBs). The public needs to have confidence that the bodies are efficient and delivering high-quality services. We need to promote openness and transparency about the functions of the ALBs and the Department's oversight. Therefore, I am introducing public-facing accountability meetings to provide an opportunity for ALBs to be held to account by me on issues of public interest and to serve to raise public awareness of the important work of the ALB. The first public-facing accountability meeting will take place this evening with the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service. It will be the first of a series of meetings in which I hope the public will take a key role.

Although we face significant challenges in health and social care, there have also been many positive service developments that are already making a difference to service users. Over the past year, we have witnessed the opening of a range of new services, including the new molecular pathology laboratory and Northern Ireland Biobank, which supports people with cancer, and the new health centre in Downpatrick. I had the privilege of cutting a first sod at the £4.7 million extension to the Bluestone Unit at Craigavon Area Hospital and the £232 million new ward and acute services block at the Ulster Hospital. I am pleased to see the completion of the new £9 million A&E facility at Antrim Area Hospital, which is due to become operational shortly, and which will aid with patient flows in an enhanced environment. I am delighted that a new round-the-clock urgent assessment unit for surgical patients has been opened at the Royal Victoria Hospital. Feedback from patients indicates that they are happier with the shorter waiting times and the proactivity of the new unit. The new £150 million critical care unit on the same site is due to be handed over in February 2014 and will provide a far better facility than we have at present.

In dementia services, I can also report positive news. Building on the £1 million invested in memory services for people with dementia in 2012-13, I am delighted to announce a further £1 million for that project for 2013-14. The memory services project has emerged from time spent listening to people with dementia and their carers, seeking their views about their experiences. Because of that engagement, investment is now targeted towards psychological support, Alzheimer's support staff attending memory clinics and follow-up support at home, if required.

11.15 am

With respect to children and families, we are committed to learning from those on the ground. We have already embarked on a journey of early intervention, but I want to do more. For that reason, I am working with the Minister of Education, the Minister for Employment and Learning, the Minister of Justice and the Minister for Social Development, and with the First and deputy First Ministers and Atlantic Philanthropies to establish a cross-departmental early intervention fund. I am confident that we will have the fund up and running by April 2014.

The Executive have given a commitment to deliver a range of measures to tackle poverty and social exclusion through the Delivering Social Change framework. My Department is leading on the delivery of two out of the six Delivering Social Change signature projects announced in October 2012. Both projects will provide additional support to families who need our help most: first, by investing £3 million to extend the network of family support hubs across Northern Ireland, which will bring the total number of hubs to 25; and, secondly, by investing an additional £2 million to deliver a range of evidence-based parenting programmes.

I would like to take this opportunity to update Members on paediatric congenital cardiac services (PCCS). My overriding priority is to ensure the delivery of safe and effective services for all of those vulnerable children. I have received the paediatric congenital cardiac services working group's recommendation, endorsed by the Health and Social Care Board, on the future commissioning of the service. The recommended option involves building on the existing service provided by the Dublin paediatric cardiac surgery centre for the Belfast Trust. I met the Republic of Ireland's Minister for Health, Dr James Reilly, on 8 May to discuss whether there was any scope for flexibility in the location for the future delivery of the service. I asked Minister Reilly to consider a two-centre model, potentially providing PCCS services in both Belfast and Dublin. Consideration of the proposal is continuing at official level to determine whether such a model would be feasible.

We are also working to deliver a new primary percutaneous coronary intervention service model for Northern Ireland by 2014-15 to reduce mortality and morbidity arising from heart attacks. The planned introduction of the new service in the Belfast and the Western Health and Social Care Trusts will mean that patients having a heart attack will be taken to a catheterisation laboratory — cath lab — centre that is capable of undertaking the procedure 24/7. The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) and the trusts are preparing for the managed introduction of the service so that patients can be assured of the safe delivery and administration of the new treatment. Implementation is being taken forward in three distinct phases. The first phase was completed in January 2013. It included full commissioning of available lab capacity and an increase in the number of weekly cath lab sessions from 78 to 93. As part of my bid in the June monitoring, I sought funding to progress the Belfast facility in this financial year.

In the area of e-health and connected health, there have been some significant developments at local and international level over the past few months, with more on the horizon. I have explained on many occasions the potential for technology to improve patient care and help address the challenges to delivery in our system. Northern Ireland has much to share and also much to learn from Europe and North America in the development of healthcare solutions, and formal alliances are helpful in focusing those working relationships on areas of specific mutual interest. Earlier this month, we agreed a memorandum of understanding with the city of Oulu in Finland, through which we have undertaken to work together on health and social care transformation. That builds on a similar agreement that we reached last year with the Basque region. A further such agreement is being developed with Catalonia, and I hope that will come to fruition over the summer.

In Northern Ireland, we are working to implement our own regional electronic care record, with technical roll-out expected to be completed before the end of this month. The roll-out to clinicians will commence in the same time frame. I believe that we can build on this to make a valuable contribution to the development of a transnational interoperable electronic health record.

A key aspect of connected health is identifying and reinforcing the link between health and the economy, and that is reflected in the memorandum of understanding between my Department and Invest NI and in the work of the economy and jobs initiative task and finish group. The task and finish group was established by my colleague the economy Minister and I to identify opportunities to support economic development through the health and social care sector in Northern Ireland. It presented its recommendations last month and concluded that health and social care should be recognised as having the potential to be a major driver for innovation and economic growth.

I believe that the importance of that link cannot be overstated. Last week, for example, investment by Terumo BCT brought 416 jobs in health R&D to Northern Ireland. I would like to take this opportunity to record my congratulations to my colleague Arlene Foster on that achievement. I believe that our work in this field, and work on the health and prosperity agenda in general, is making Northern Ireland a place with tremendous opportunity for investment, research and innovation.

In addition to those services, changes and innovations, there are some key areas of policy work that will set the direction of health and social care for the coming years. I feel that it would be helpful to mention those in advance of the summer recess.

In respect of the public health strategic framework, my officials are in the process of finalising the framework, with input from other Departments, prior to submitting it for ministerial and Executive consideration. Subject to the approval process, the aim is to publish the framework in the autumn.

On adult social care reform, the consultation on the discussion document came to a close in March 2013, with 185 responses received and over 600 people attending public meetings and focus group events. My officials are currently analysing the responses and will produce a report on the consultation in the next few weeks.

With respect to the review of paediatric services, I am expecting that consultations on the review will be published in the coming months, with the final document being published early in 2014.

On addiction services, the HSCB and the Public Health Agency (PHA) will be consulting on the future configuration of HSC-based inpatient treatment and rehabilitation services, with the formal consultation process anticipated over the autumn 2013 period.

My statement today is intended to provide Members with an update on the transformation of health and social care. The past year has not been without challenges, but I stand by the commitment that I made when I came to office in 2011, which is that I would not shy away from tough decisions that need to be made in order to ensure that the health service provides for every single person who needs it.

It is in the interests of all the community that we transform our services. Transformation can only be successful when it is embraced fully by those who are leading and those who are delivering the services. In doing so, we must also ensure that existing services continue to be provided without disruption. We need to promote and foster innovation in delivery of our health and social care to meet the challenges ahead. The tasks to be undertaken are not easy, and there will be difficult decisions ahead. However, it is necessary that we pursue transformation to ensure that we have safe, resilient and sustainable services for the coming decades. I am confident that we are on the right path to developing a health and social care service that will be sustainable into the future and that focuses on meeting the needs of our local communities, individual patients and service users. I commend the statement to the House.

Ms S Ramsey (The Chairperson of the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Apologies for being slightly late for the start of the statement. I was outside the Minister's office waiting for a pre-brief, but he stood me up. I will not take it personally.

There is a lot of detail in the statement, and I want to take the opportunity to welcome it. It is like an end of term report. I hope that I am not reading too much into it, but I hope that it is not the last statement that you will ever make as Health Minister. I welcome your commitment in the statement in which you say that you hold true to the core principles of the health service. I raised that with officials last week at the Health Committee, and I am glad that they listen to what members of the Health Committee say. It is important because the unions raised that with us, and, according to the unions, similar statements were made in the Welsh Assembly and in Scotland. Therefore, it is important that that clear message is sent out that you stand by the core principles of the health service.

To get into the detail of the statement, you said that the HSC Board is reviewing how changes to day care for people with learning disabilities are to be implemented across the region. Does that mean that individual trusts have already gone ahead and started to bring in their own changes to day care without a regional approach first being approved?

On the issue of waiting times, you congratulated yourself and your Department on the improvement in waiting times. That is something that the Committee has been looking at. Do you acknowledge that has only been able to be achieved because millions of pounds has been put into the private sector? Do you not accept that that is a quick-fix approach? How will we tackle the issue of waiting lists in the long term?

Mr Poots: On the latter issue, I accept that we have done that by using the private sector. I make no apologies for reducing waiting lists by using the private sector. It is absolutely important and essential that we tackle waiting lists. It may be a little inconvenient for people to travel to Limavady, Dublin or wherever it happens to be. Most people, however, welcome the fact that waiting times are coming down and that we are making a significant dent in them.

We want to see how we can do that better and ensure that we can meet our service needs whilst using the private sector less. We will continue to engage in that work to ensure that we maximise the number and level of services that we provide and that we continue to reduce waiting times.

We came through a difficult situation over elderly care. I certainly do not want to be in a similar situation over our learning disabled community, so I will make it very clear to trusts that we do not expect something similar in that arena. We must ensure that we can provide the care of the learning disabled on a regional basis.

There are concerns around post-19 issues, which touch the Department for Employment and Learning and the Department of Education as well. We designate people who are learning disabled at the age of 18, the same as any other adult. Some will have the capacity of maybe a two-year-old, and some a capacity of an age considerably older than that. Sometimes we pigeonhole the learning disabled into a category and lump them with everybody else. We should be more flexible around that period when we can further develop the capacity of learning disabled people and have them better able to meet the challenges of life that will face them.

Mr G Robinson: What services will be delivered from the new health and care centres?

Mr Poots: The new health and care centres provide us with an exciting opportunity. That is why I am keen that we have a roll-out of them. For example, we will have diagnostics; imaging; district and specialist nurses; health visiting; social care for older people; a children's centre, including Child and Adolescent Mental Health Services (CAMHS); dentistry; allied health professionals, including physiotherapy, podiatry and occupational therapists; speech and language services; a cancer health and well-being centre; and one-stop assessment. We also have the opportunity for voluntary groups to provide services in such facilities.

It is desperately important that we proceed with those centres. We have quite a number in Belfast. There is a centre in Portadown, with new centres going to Banbridge and Ballymena. Those were all procured conventionally. We decided to proceed with Lisburn and Newry as pilot cases, with the potential to roll private sector-funded facilities out to many other places across Northern Ireland. We can deliver real, tangible savings, on the one hand, and huge benefits to the community, on the other, by bringing high-quality care closer to home and ensuring that people can receive a level of care in the primary sector that will avoid hospital admissions. It all makes sense that we go down that route. It is good for people who need care and good for government, and that is why I want to get on with it.

Mr McDevitt: I welcome the statement. However, I do not welcome the fact that we received a little over an hour's notice of it; that it runs, by my word count, to about 4,000 words; that it contains the announcement of at least seven distinct new areas of public policy; and that it will be subject to limited scrutiny because the Whips agreed that we would allow only one Member per party to ask questions during statements so as to expedite the business of today.

My questions to the Minister are: on what grounds of public policy did he override his permanent secretary's advice on the business cases for the proposed new Lisburn and Newry centres? What steps does he intend to take to make sure that decisions that run against the will of the House and against the clear, determined and expressed view of the majority of respondents to the consultation on Transforming Your Care are tested not by means of a statement but by means of a proper, legislation-based, policy-making process?

11.30 am

Mr Poots: First, I did not "override" anybody's decisions. Ministers are here to make decisions; civil servants are here to make recommendations. I think that we as politicians should ensure that that always remains the case.

A recommendation did come forward. Given that government can generally borrow money at a lower rate than the market, the suggestion coming from the economists is that it would work out cheaper to do that by the conventional means as opposed to going to the market. However, what is important here is that the facilities would not be developed any time soon, because we do not have the money. It is as simple as that; we do not have the money in the system.

The Member's party participated in a debate last week in which it wanted all the money to go to roads as opposed to healthcare. I do not make any apology for fighting for my healthcare estate, for seeking to improve my healthcare estate and for seeking to bring services locally to the people. I am sure that the people of Newry and Lisburn will be listening and paying attention to the SDLP saying, "We don't want these excellent new facilities that will bring better services closer to you." The SDLP does not want such facilities in Newry or Lisburn and to then have them rolled out across the rest of the Province. I make no apology for driving the agenda forward and for taking decisions as a Minister, and I will not be afraid to make decisions as a Minister.

Mr Beggs: I too welcome the Minister's statement. He referred in particular to the additional £26 million bid for resource funding. He also referred to enabling GPs to refer directly to our hospitals. Does the Minister accept that that will be problematic when some of our hospitals, such as that in Antrim, have had 95% occupancy, with few free beds? Will he ensure that there is a good flow of patients through A&E, that we do not have trolley waits and that the beds will be available? Does he accept that, until that issue is resolved, there is a continuing need for respite and rehabilitation beds in the community?

Mr Poots: I thank the Member for the question. I believe that direct admissions from GPs will assist our hospitals. That is because a course of work will be done before the person goes to hospital. The problems and so forth will be identified, and the patient will not have to go to an emergency department or go through all those procedures. I think that that is certainly a significant step forward for our frail elderly. Many GPs are now using that service in a much better way, and consequently, things are improving on that front.

I should say that I welcome that the Member raised the matter of Antrim Area Hospital. The new A&E unit will be open this week, the 24-bed facility is opened, and we have a new management team in the hospital. I agree with the clinicians who today said that the building will not do it and that it will take more than that. We changed the management team to ensure that there was a real application on delivering better services in that facility. I do not want to over-egg it, but I think that we have seen a significant improvement over the past seven weeks. I do not believe that there have been any 12-hour breaches, and that is coming from a place where there were hundreds of 12-hour breaches a month. So, there is a lot of work to be done, and there is still the capacity for things to go wrong and for problems to arise, but all the indications and signs are positive, and they show that things are improving in that hospital. That pleases me greatly.

Mr Buchanan: I thank the Minister for his statement. I note that he said that the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust and the Western Health and Social Care Trust are introducing a new cath lab service. Can the Minister elaborate a little more on the outworkings of the cath lab and what it will mean for the future of patient care?

Mr Poots: Cath labs are regularly available now. However, they are often available only between 9.00 am and 5.00 pm. Unfortunately, people have heart attacks between 5.00 pm and 9.00 am. Therefore, 24/7 cath labs are very important. The truth is that the quicker we can get people into cath labs and have their stents installed, the more lives we will save and the more healthy years people will have thereafter. It is believed that, for every hour of delay in getting to a cath lab when someone needs a stent, a person will lose a year of their life. That is why I say forcefully that the local hospital is not the place to go if someone has a heart attack. People say that they want to go to their local hospitals to be stabilised. You do not want to go to your local hospital to be stabilised: you want to go with paramedics straight to a facility that has a cath lab in order to have stents installed as quickly as possible, because you will have many more years of life as a result. I am delighted that we are moving ahead with 24/7 cath labs. They will save many lives, and they will ensure that many people will have more healthy years of life.

Mr McCarthy: This morning's statement was very lengthy, and it was received very late. I refer to the last paragraph, in which the Minister states that the health and social care service will be:

"one which focuses on meeting the needs of our local communities, individual patients and service users."

How can he reconcile that with the decision to close the last health provision facility in my constituency village of Ballygowan, which is a growing village? There is no further health provision in that town. The Minister states that he wants to bring health services to local communities. Can he also give us some confidence that he will ensure that there will be a shift in resources into community-based services to match the proposed changes in service delivery, given what is already happening with shorter hours for carers and, indeed, fewer people qualifying for services because the criteria for meals on wheels, etc, have risen?

Mr Poots: I am aware of the Ballygowan issue. Members have raised it with me. As the Member knows very well, GPs are private contractors to the health service. GPs provide those services and they made that decision. That decision was made outwith my Department and outside its control. The GP private contractor decided to run that service from a site that is a short distance from Ballygowan. In that respect, I have no control over it.

Mr McMullan: I thank the Minister for his statement. He mentioned that Rathmoyle care home is earmarked for closure. That has been the case for a number of months. When the supported living scheme starts, can the Minister clarify what the position will be with regard to day care facilities for children with special needs who attend there? Will he consider the present resource centre in Cushendall as an alternative in order to bring that service back to the community and do away with daily trips of up to nearly 35 miles for those children? Go raibh maith agat.

Mr Poots: I thank the Member for his question. I refer him back to my statement. Quite some time ago, Rathmoyle care home was identified for replacement by a supported-living facility. I deem that to be positive. However, as I said in my statement, I have to be satisfied that all the processes are being followed through, people are being properly consulted and we are taking proper account of everything that is going on. The Member has raised issues. I trust that those issues will be raised through the process and that we will deal with them, identify solutions and seek to meet the needs of all the people who are involved.

Recently, Minister McCausland and I opened a facility in Downpatrick.

I encourage people to visit such a facility. There is also one in Carrickfergus, and there are others elsewhere in Northern Ireland. I encourage Assembly Members to visit those facilities. Residents, carers and families have all said that they are better. That is what we want — better care for our elderly. We want to manage residents in existing facilities in a much better way than was the case a few months ago and to ensure that that situation does not happen again. However, the outcome that we want to have in a number of years' time is better facilities for our elderly population.

Ms Brown: I thank the Minister for the very detailed statement to the House this morning on taking forward transformation. If welfare reform is rolled out in conjunction with or parallel to Transforming Your Care, will the Minister ensure that, if required, extra appropriate support is made available to carers, who are obviously an integral and important part of Transforming Your Care?

Mr Poots: First of all, carers are absolutely critical and essential to us and, more importantly, to the individuals whom they care for and support. We know that many carers' family finances rely on income from carers on disability benefits, and there is a risk that any changes to the benefit system could have an impact on their capacity to continue to provide care. So, I welcome the fact that the UK Government have not announced any plans to change the carer's allowance and that it will remain outside universal credit.

The first step in accessing support services is to have a needs assessment. Carers have a statutory right to an assessment and to be considered for services to meet their own needs. The Northern Ireland carer's support and needs assessment looks at each carer as an individual with their own personal circumstances, identifying any particular needs that they might have as a result, to allow for the provision of targeted support in order to assist the carer in their caring role.

Mr Gardiner: I thank the Minister for his statement this morning. At the time of the Compton review, the Minister said that these changes could be made if supplemented by an extra £70 million of traditional funding. In light of the ongoing significant monitoring bids that he is making, what does the Minister envisage the final transitional cost being?

Mr Poots: We are still looking at around £70 million, but that can be flexible. We might need a few million more; you never know. I am sure that the Finance Minister will be generous if that is required. I might as well put my bid in now. Nonetheless — being serious — I greatly appreciate the support that I have received from the Finance Minister in assisting us with Transforming Your Care and driving an agenda that will change services, so that we can invest to save, improve services to the public and ensure that the public can be part of that change process and make that difference. We will continue to bid for funding as appropriate and seek to ensure that we deliver that change, which will ultimately ensure that we have a more efficient, leaner and fitter health service that is better equipped to meet the needs of the public.

Mr B McCrea: This is a lengthy statement delivered by the Minister in a condescending, complacent and cavalier manner. In response to Mr McDevitt, who had the temerity to challenge him, the Minister said:

"We do not have the money".

Does the Minister now have sufficient resources to deal with his failure to meet the target of 95% of patients being seen within four hours of attending an emergency department, with no one waiting for 12 hours? The Minister was very critical of the previous Health Minister, Mr McGimpsey, when he was looking for additional resources. I would like to know whether he now feels that he has sufficient resources to do his job properly?

Mr Poots: I am not sure how the Member could conclude that I was all the things that he suggested when, clearly, he was not listening to anything that was actually said. He did not hear that waiting lists have gone down —

Mr B McCrea: [Interruption.]

Mr Poots: — that elective times are going down, that there are significant improvements across the health and social care system and that things have actually got better, in spite of the fact that we were told that —

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Minister will resume his seat while I remind Mr McCrea that you do not shout across the Chamber from a sedentary position.

Mr Poots: I was just about to remind him that the previous Minister had been making us aware that we were about to go bankrupt, that we would be in chapter 5 and that there would be 4,000 pay-offs, and Mr McCrea was one of his cheerleaders. I did not pay much attention to Mr McCrea then, and I do not think I will pay much attention to him today.

Mr Allister: The Minister boasts in his statement that there will be a reduction of beds in our hospitals. Through his policy of closure of care homes by stealth, he is going to remove the facility of hundreds of beds in respite and intermediate care. Has the Minister no fear that he is sowing the seeds of further problems in our health service? Delivery is about a lot more than verbose statements to this House.

Mr Poots: I did not boast about anything. What we intend to do is to bring care closer to people's homes. Last week, I was in a home in Randalstown, where a lady who would have been in hospital was with her district nurse receiving antibiotic treatment. The nurse was working with the consultant in the hospital and providing care under hospital at home. The lady was absolutely delighted with the care that she was receiving, and she was not taking up a hospital bed. This is a vision for the future, and I refer Mr Allister to the scriptures:

"where there is no vision, the people perish".

I have a vision for the health service, which is to bring healthcare closer to people's homes, where they will get the appropriate support and service and where they will have the care that they need. That can work and does work. We will face challenges; it will not be without its problems because healthcare is never easy. There has never been a time when there have not been problems, but I am very proud that we are doing many things to facilitate the public to ensure that they get better quality care. I think that many people are recognising that. We have more challenges to face, but we will face those challenges and continue to improve the service.

Ms P Bradley: I thank the Minister for his comprehensive statement and apologise for missing the beginning of it. In the Health Committee last week, I asked some questions about direct payments. I have had experience of those working extremely well and also being absolutely disastrous. What reassurance can the Minister give that direct payments for older people will be a success?

Mr Poots: Direct payment is where a trust service user gets a cash payment in lieu of the services that have been available. In 2004, a statutory duty was placed on trusts to offer direct payments to people assessed as needing services and to whom they had agreed to provide services. Initially, older people were under-represented as a group in receipt of direct payments, but this is changing, with more older people opting to receive their social care support as a direct payment as the benefits of personalisation become more widely recognised. It has to be acknowledged, however, that direct payments do not suit everyone. It is important that the trusts only provide a direct payment with the informed consent of the older person. In order to provide a direct payment, a trust must be satisfied that the services for which the direct payment will be used will meet the assessed needs of the older person and that they will be able to manage their payments appropriately, with assistance where necessary. The trusts need to use care management processes to monitor the delivery of the agreed care plans and to discharge their responsibility to ensure that direct moneys are being used efficiently by the recipients.

Mr Allister: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. As we approach the end of this session, with only two more sitting days, would it be in order to ask whether there is any indication that any of the four Ministers in OFMDFM will find time to come to the House to make a statement on the economic pact that they told us was reached some 10 days ago?

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order. I question whether that is a point of order, but I understand that Ministers may come to the House to make statements.

Mr B McCrea: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. Is it in order to ask whether there is any possibility of looking at the length of statements brought to the Assembly? It is quite difficult to do justice to the oversight and scrutiny of such a lengthy statement.

Mr Deputy Speaker: The length of statements is entirely up to the Ministers. I am sure that they listened carefully to what you said.

Public Service Pensions Bill: Second Stage

Mr Wilson (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): I beg to move

That the Second Stage of the Public Service Pensions Bill [NIA 23/11-15] be agreed.

The object of the Bill is to introduce major changes to public service pensions in Northern Ireland from April 2015. The Bill that I proposed in the Assembly on 26 November 2012 gives effect to the principles of the pension reform agreed by the Executive on 8 March 2012, particularly the agreement to commit to the policy for a new career average revalued earnings (CARE) scheme model, with pension age linked to state pension age to be adopted for general use in the public service schemes; and to adopt that approach consistently for each of the different public service pension schemes in line with their equivalent scheme in Great Britain and not to adopt different approaches for Northern Ireland. The Bill protects the benefits already earned by members of existing public service pension schemes and allows continued membership of those schemes for certain categories of people who are closest to retirement.

The reforms were recommended by the Independent Public Service Pensions Commission in its final report, which was published in 2011. The recommendation to adopt a new revised pension scheme design was viewed as addressing the impact of the long-term scheme costs for taxpayers and employers. The report also recommended that a general increase in pension age across the public service pension schemes, with the exception of those in uniformed services, should be linked to state pension age to facilitate trends for increasing life expectancy.

The Bill is an enabling piece of legislation, with entirely permissive legislative powers. It will have a cross-cutting effect for the devolved public service schemes in Northern Ireland, and it provides a framework containing core provisions for pension reform that will extend across public service schemes made for public service employments in the Civil Service, the devolved judiciary, local government, teachers, the health service, the Fire and Rescue Service and the Police Service.

Mr Allister: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Wilson: Yes.

Mr Allister: Can the Minister say whether it will extend to the North/South bodies and the very lavish pension arrangements that exist for them?

Mr Wilson: It will extend to the North/South bodies. Although they are not listed in the bodies to be covered, there is provision for bodies to be added. North/South bodies will be added; they will have to be included in time for the legislative timetable. I have already had discussions with the Minister in the Republic on this issue. Obviously, it will affect those who work in North/South bodies in Northern Ireland and not those who work in the Irish Republic. I assure the Member that North/South bodies will be included. I was as concerned about that issue as he would have been.

The powers in the Bill will supersede existing powers to create schemes for the payment of pensions and other benefits for the employments and devolved offices listed in the Bill, which are contained in the relevant current legislation pertaining to individual public service pension schemes. The Bill will not contain detail on individual scheme designs. Those designs will be set out in the regulations and scheme rules for each scheme under their secondary legislation, and will provide scope for each relevant Minister to consider what variations may be appropriate in their scheme design. They will also — this is important — ensure that they keep within the parameters of cost and the overall core provisions set out in the Bill.

Adequate time must be provided to develop the scheme designs and to finalise the secondary legislation and processes to meet the commitment to have reformed schemes in place before 1 April 2015. This secondary legislation process may take up to 10 months. Therefore, the primary legislation must be enacted by April 2014.

The Chief Secretary to the Treasury made it very clear, on 3 December 2012, that a proportional reduction will be applied to the Northern Ireland block allocation if legislation to reform devolved public service pension arrangements in Northern Ireland is not concluded to the deadlines contained in the Westminster Public Service Pensions Act 2013. The deadline for reform for the schemes made for public employments listed in clause 1 of the Bill is 1 April 2015, with the exception of the scheme for the local government workers, which has a deadline of 1 April 2014.

The Department has undertaken an analysis of the financial effects of not implementing the core provisions of the Bill to the relevant timescales. A more detailed analysis was requested from the Government Actuary's Department (GAD) by the unions and the Committee for Finance and Personnel. The new estimate — I do not think that they will want to hear the news, because I think that they felt that I was exaggerating the figure — puts the overall projected cost of one year's delay at around £300 million each year, which is an increase from the previous estimate of £262 million. However, we have known all along that there would be a cost and that it would be significant; the important issue is to focus on getting on with the legislative process to avoid this extremely costly financial penalty.

The Department continues to be engaged in central consultation on the Bill between representatives from the Northern Ireland ministerial Departments with responsibilities for the main public service pension schemes and a collective trade union grouping led by the Northern Ireland Committee of the Irish Congress of Trade Unions, which represents each of the public service employments within the Bill's remit. The Department consulted, from 21 January 2013 to 15 April 2013, on the policy carried in the Bill.

I now turn to the provisions of the Bill. The Bill has 37 clauses and 9 schedules; therefore, it would not be appropriate to discuss all specific proposals in detail at this forum. Full details are contained in the explanatory and financial memorandum, although I will provide a brief overview.

The Bill is modelled on the Westminster Public Service Pensions Act 2013. The core provisions are a move to a career average revalued earnings scheme model of pension saving; a direct link to equalise schemes' normal pension ages with the state pension age, except for the police and fire and rescue services; a normal pension age of 60, subject to regular review, for the police and fire and rescue services; a final salary link for any final salary pension accrued prior to the date at which the new schemes will commence; a cost cap with a default mechanism to maintain costs within set floor and ceiling limits; transitional protection for scheme members who were within 10 years of their scheme normal pension age on 1 April 2012; and revised measures for scheme governance.

Clause 30 provides that new pension schemes may be created for those bodies and offices whose pension schemes are restricted for future accrual under clause 31 and whose members cannot join one of the schemes established under clause 1. It also governs the design of pension schemes that are set up in the future or established under future legislation for public bodies, unless future legislation makes specific, different provision.

The policy intention is that all public service employments should be reformed to the same timescales as the main schemes specified in the Bill, although these bodies will not now be mentioned in the Bill.

It will contain certain powers for my Department to specify by order named public bodies that have not been captured by the categories that have been mentioned. Indeed, should the timetable be delayed, clause 1 provides for such bodies to be added. That is the point that Mr Allister raised.

12.00 noon

Clause 3 incorporates a change to the consent regime for the local government pension scheme, as that scheme is now subject to DFP approval. That will provide consistency of approach across all the main public service pension schemes in Northern Ireland by aligning the local government pension scheme here with the other main schemes. The change has also been applied to the Public Service Pensions Act 2013 regarding the consent regime for local government schemes in England and Wales.

Clause 1 provides new provisions that will enable the Department of Justice in future to make pension schemes for holders of devolved judicial offices. Clause 35 makes financial provision for such an eventuality.

The Attorney General has confirmed that the Bill is within the Assembly's legislative competence.

My officials briefed the Finance and Personnel Committee on the Bill, and I look forward to maintaining that constructive working relationship over the coming months.

The Bill provides a necessary reform to manage the long-term costs of public service pension provision. It also provides a framework to ensure flexibility to enable Departments to determine their secondary legislation and to ensure that it is properly implemented in time. It is also an equitable and fair way to ensure a fairer and sustainable distribution of the costs of public service pensions between employees and employers, with employers in this instance ultimately being the taxpayer.

I look forward to the Assembly's support in taking forward the proposals and to Members' comments in the debate.

Mr McKay (The Chairperson of the Committee for Finance and Personnel): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Mindful of the background and context of the Bill, the Committee for Finance and Personnel has been proactively gathering evidence on its policy aims over recent months in advance of its being introduced to the Assembly.

Following the Executive's decision not to agree to the proposed approach of a legislative consent motion (LCM), the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP) set out plans to introduce a Bill to give effect to pension reform here. We heard how, if we are to keep pace with the equivalent Westminster legislation and avoid incurring associated Treasury-imposed penalties, the Department's plans require the Bill to complete the legislative process by April 2014 and for the related subordinate legislation to come into operation by April 2015.

DFP's timetable envisages the Committee Stage concluding by the end November this year, subject to the Bill's principles being agreed today. For its part, the Committee is committed to endeavouring to ensure that the Bill proceeds promptly. To that end, since January last, it has held a series of separate briefings with DFP officials and with a panel from the trade union side, with follow-up correspondence as necessary. That work was aimed at collecting a comprehensive evidence base in advance of the Bill's being introduced, and the output from that exercise was placed on the Committee's web pages to inform the wider Assembly.

Given that we are debating only the principles of the Bill today, I will not go into detail on the full range of issues that was discussed during the three separate evidence sessions with DFP officials and trade union side (TUS). However, the headlines are that the Committee has sought information on the following: the full details of the pension schemes and associated stakeholders affected by the Bill and the implications that it will have for each scheme; clarification on how the drafting of the secondary legislation will be sequenced for the Bill; details of how the initial estimated cost of £262 million per annum to the block grant for a failure to implement the reforms was calculated; and clarification on whether Treasury will impose that deduction from the block grant on the Executive in such circumstances.

The Committee also sought information on the areas in which there would be scope to vary from the Whitehall approach; information on the revised measures for the management, regulation and administration of the various pension schemes; full details of the equality screening that has been undertaken to date; and an assessment of the implications of the agreed amendments to the Westminster Bill; detail of the legislative provisions that allow for the transfer of staff from one scheme to another; illustrative examples of how the shift to career average revalued earnings will be applied in different cases; clarification on whether the proposed ministerial power of direction for scheme valuations will be subject to Assembly control; and detail of DFP communication with other Departments about the full scheme triennial assessments.

On the latter point, to more accurately assess the implications of the proposed reforms locally, including the cost or savings forgone due to any decisions not to implement the reforms at a scheme level, the Committee recommended that the full scheme triennial actuarial assessments are revived and completed, and the findings of those assessments are shared with all relevant parties, including the trade unions; and that the Department take up the offer from the Government Actuary's Department (GAD) to calculate the estimated savings from the proposed reforms in relation to each of the relevant local schemes.

As we have heard from the Minister, the Department agreed to commission the additional work from GAD, which resulted in a revised estimate of £300 million in savings per annum, based on the detail of each scheme. The results of this further work and the Department's willingness to commission it are to be welcomed in assisting the Committee's deliberations. However, we should be mindful that it provides only part of the picture.

From DFP and TUS evidence, and the work of the Assembly Research and Information Service, it was evident that a full macroeconomic analysis or appraisal of the proposed pension reforms has not been undertaken, either locally by the Department, in Britain by the Treasury, or as part of the initial Hutton review. In their evidence, TUS representatives emphasised the need to assess the impact of increasing the age of retirement, particularly in respect of displacing the labour market and the correlation with youth unemployment. The trades union representatives explained that in straightforward terms: if you keep someone in work five years longer, someone else will not get that job for five years or until it becomes free. TUS also indicated that it has done some work itself on macroeconomic analysis. It referred to work done by the Nevin Economic Research Institute on youth unemployment, and expressed a willingness to assist the Department in meeting the cost of a wider appraisal exercise.

In addition to pursuing the issue of more accurate direct cost or savings estimates from GAD, the Committee recommended to DFP that research be carried out to address the absence of a wider macroeconomic appraisal. However, the Department has indicated its reluctance in that regard, emphasising the scale and complexity of such an appraisal. Using the Hutton review as a comparator, the Department suggested that such an exercise could require a similar period of nine months to complete and that the cost could potentially reach several hundred thousand pounds.

Given the significance of the proposed pension reforms in the context of the predominance of the public sector in our local economy, I believe that the absence of an understanding of the full costs and benefits — direct and indirect — of the proposals presents us with a real dilemma. Indeed, it raises the question of why Hutton did not examine the full picture initially. Moreover, perhaps an opportunity was missed to press for Hutton to undertake a full appraisal before considering any Treasury attempt to impose the reforms in an area that is devolved to the Executive and the Assembly.

At its meeting on Wednesday this week, the Finance Committee will consider the options for addressing the absence of a macroeconomic appraisal and, in advance of doing so, has sought clarification from the trade union side on the extent to which it is prepared to support the commissioning of such work. I will not pre-empt the Committee's decision in that regard, but this is clearly the major issue arising from our scrutiny to date.

Other issues remain to be teased out in more detail, not least any equality or human rights implications arising from the proposals. The Committee has invited submissions from the Equality Commission and the Human Rights Commission. Given the issues raised by the trade union side to date, I expect that to be another area of focus at Committee Stage.

As the Minister outlined, the Bill will result in a raft of subordinate legislation to reform the various public sector pension schemes. It will be vitally important, therefore, that the Bill is also considered by the other Statutory Committees, which will be individually responsible for scrutinising the resultant subordinate legislation relating to the particular schemes within their departmental remits. That includes the arm's-length bodies as well, so it is not only an issue for the Department or the Committee for Finance and Personnel. Because of that, the Committee wrote to the other Committees at an early stage to draw attention to that point and to share relevant papers and evidence received to date. Subject to the Bill being referred to Committee Stage, the Finance Committee will be seeking formal written submissions from the other Committees in the period ahead and will be issuing the usual public call for evidence.

I have outlined how the Committee has prioritised the scrutiny of the policy aims of the Bill in its work programme over recent months. Although that has thrown up a number of key considerations that remain to be addressed, I should also point out that the Committee has not, as yet, undertaken any detailed technical scrutiny of the Bill as drafted. Subject to the passage of today's stage, that will be a further area of focus during the Committee Stage scrutiny. In particular, given that it is an enabling Bill, it will be vitally important for the Finance Committee, and, indeed, the other Committees, to examine carefully the delegated powers that will be provided for in the legislation.

To conclude from the Committee perspective, I reiterate my earlier point that the Committee will continue to support the Minister in the process in ensuring that consideration of the Bill is given absolute priority. However, I caution that that should not be at the expense of robust scrutiny. All reasonable steps will need to be taken to facilitate informed decision-making on those significant proposals. Any final decisions need to be on the basis of being cognisant of the full implications for the provision of public services, for the individuals who deliver those services and for the wider local economy.

I will make a few brief remarks as an individual Member. A number of occupations and trade unions have made representation to the Committee, one of which is the Fire Brigades Union. Many firefighters — this has been an issue across the water as well — are opposed to the concept of working until they are 60. The Williams report, which was flagged up by that particular union, found that a large number of members would be unable to achieve pension age. There were also concerns about the fitness standards and the ability of firefighters to work beyond 55. That highlights a question that the Committee needs to consider. How does changing the retirement age for many of those public service organisations, especially those with physical demands, impact on public service delivery?

As I have said in my position as Chair, that is not something that we have found any conclusions on to date, but we need to take a careful look at those types of occupations — firefighters, police and others — and consider the evidence. Hopefully there is some evidence, because the main issue that I have found from our consideration to date is that there seems to be a lack of evidence on all sides, to be fair, in regard to the proposals coming forward. We need to be cognisant of some of the proposals on the retirement age of firefighters and others. We need to ensure that that does not have a knock-on effect on public service delivery, especially emergency services.

To conclude, I look forward to the Committee Stage of the Bill. There is still a lot more detail that the Committee needs to look through. I think it is important to emphasise again that, for all sides of the argument concerning the Bill, the Committee needs to see more evidence, more detailed proposals and detailed background to some of the arguments that are coming forward, because I do not feel that the Committee has got that to date.

Mr Girvan: I too support moving on to the Second Stage of the Pensions Bill, but I do not totally agree with everything that the Chair has said. A number of figures were mentioned. The first figure that came from the Government Actuary's Department was £262 million. When that figure was revised with a little bit more work to break it down on a departmental basis — because that is what the trade unions asked for — instead of going down, it went up to £300 million. I think that the figure was rounded up to the nearest £10 million in each area just to make sure. I understand that the biggest figure was for health, which came out at £110 million, followed by £60 million for teachers, £60 million for the Civil Service, £10 million for the Fire and Rescue Service and £60 million for the police.

In light of the evidence that the Committee received, I have to agree that a very strong case needs to be made for the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service firefighters who have difficulties. Age and fitness are key areas that need to be considered and taken into account. However, as Northern Ireland would lose out dramatically from its block grant by an estimated figure of £300 million, it is important that we move ahead in a positive way.

No one gets anything for nothing, and some people will have to suffer because of some of the changes that have been made to the length of time that people will work or will have to work. However, some of the figures that came from the trade unions were works of fiction, to be truthful. The areas where they indicated that savings that could be created by young people getting into work would cost in the region of hundreds of millions for Northern Ireland, which, realistically, indicated that jobseeker's allowance in Northern Ireland must be the best that is available anywhere, not just in the UK but, probably, around the world. As far as that was concerned, I thought that there were areas that needed to be looked at.

The career average revalued earnings pension scheme, which everyone knows as CARE, is just a new way of calculating what someone has earned on average over their lifetime. We have witnessed this in recent days; many of us have sat on Committees and have heard about people moving into top positions a year or less before they retire. This goes on daily, and we heard about it in the Public Accounts Committee recently. People retire from public-paid positions having virtually doubled their wages in their last year. The consequence of that is a very big increase in the final pension that they receive from the public purse. Those sorts of practices have created a problem that needs to be addressed, and this process goes some way towards that.

There are additional costs that we cannot fund and where we cannot make major changes. We are getting some changes to welfare reform in Northern Ireland, and we are having to find that money elsewhere. In doing so, we cannot continue to sit back. If we are going to make changes that will cost £300 million, where are we going to cut that from? Are we going to cut it from schools or health? If you mention that to the trade unions, they think that we should just print more money and keep it coming. Unfortunately, that is not the case; someone has to find the way forward.

The GAD figures were not playing in their favour. They thought that it would give us a figure that was not right. The Chair said that more evidence is needed in relation to that matter, but the evidence that we have to date shows that an increased amount of money would be coming forward. I understand that if we do not have this process in place, penalties will be imposed on Northern Ireland from April 2015. So, it is vitally important that we move ahead on that basis. The proposal was brought to this House in November 2012: the Minister moved it on 26 November 2012. As a consequence, the consultation took place, as the Minister alluded to, between 21 January 2013 and 15 April 2013. Consultation has already taken place on quite a bit of that.

We have had numerous evidence sessions on this matter. We have heard the caution from those who are in communication with Whitehall and are giving us the detail on what is coming forward in our Budget for further years.

Mr McQuillan: I thank the Member for giving way. Does he agree that the arrogant attitude of the unions and the way in which they present their case is also not helpful?

Mr Girvan: I appreciate that unions have a job to do, which is to represent their members. In doing so, they have probably been facetious. However, they have not come forward with solutions on how we can deliver some of their grandiose ideas to continue on as we are.

With change of any fashion, there will be those who fight against it. It is vitally important that we try to get the best deal for those in the public sector in Northern Ireland. That is what we will be doing, but we cannot do that and fail to deliver services. Services will be cut should we have to make that reduction from our block grant.

I support the Bill passing its Second Stage. This is a very important issue, although there are many people who are not that interested in it going by the attendance in the Chamber. It is vitally important that we make these decisions and move ahead.

Mr Durkan: I will outline the SDLP's opposition to the passage of the Public Service Pensions Bill. The Bill represents a further attack on public sector workers who have already faced pay freezes and a rise in pension contributions as a result of previous legislation. This further attack is being pushed through the Assembly by the Finance Minister at a time when his colleagues, and indeed those from all other parties in the Assembly apart from the SDLP, are seeing their salaries rise. That the Minister can throw around figures threatening the block grant at a time when his colleagues have accepted that pay rise makes me incredulous. I know he did not get one, before he corrects me.

Mr McCallister: I thank the Member for giving way. Does he accept that, while he has not accepted the pay rise, we are talking about pensions and he will get the benefit of the increased pension?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for his intervention. Increased pension contributions will result in a reduced net wage for public sector workers, whom I am standing here to protect and represent.

This legislation means further hardship for a sector that makes every aspect of public life possible. This legislation represents another kick in the teeth for our teachers, health service workers, Fire and Rescue Service workers, civil servants, local government workers, devolved judiciary and members of the Police Service. Those are the women and men without whom we could not function as a society, yet the Executive are content to continue to allow Westminster-led policies to trample all over them. Public service workers will, as a result, have less disposable income due to increased contributions. That will have a harsh impact, especially in these challenging economic times and particularly on those on lower incomes. This is a clear attempt to make public servants carry the can and pay the price for an economic mess that was not of their making.

The SDLP shares the fears communicated to the Finance and Personnel Committee by public service representatives NIPSA that reductions in incomes for public services workers will lead to a greater reliance on welfare benefits and exacerbate pensioner poverty.

Although the Minister can threaten that £262 million will be lost to the block grant — sorry, that figure has conveniently risen to £300 million in time for this debate — without a fully detailed explanation of where those costings were estimated, I fear that there has also been a lack of assessment of the increased reliance on and cost to the Social Security Agency, which leaves the Assembly in the dark as to the real cost of this legislation.

A further, wider problem that this legislation creates is the impact on public service, particularly as the increase in pensionable age will mean that older individuals will be forced to work longer and into what is now, rightly, considered old age. That will have implications for the health of the public service workers and, in some cases, the quality of service. That is not to mention the physical demands of some jobs. A couple of Members have already spoken of firefighters. There is a risk to the safety of such workers themselves and to the safety of the public in forcing people to work in such demanding and important jobs that may be beyond their physical capability.

It is widely accepted that there is a direct correlation between old age and poor health. The SDLP fears that, as the Executive plough ahead with rubber-stamping Tory welfare and pension cuts, the people that the legislation forces to work into old age will have no option but to continue to work even should they become ill, ironically because they have worked all their life, because there will be no support system to fall back on.

Moreover, forcing hard-working public servants to work longer for less could ultimately result in resentment and have a negative impact on the quality of service delivered.

For example, teachers working beyond retirement age out of necessity rather than choice may become demotivated and disillusioned, which will obviously have a negative impact on the education of our children. It will also result in the reduction of labour market opportunities for the unemployed, school and university leavers and those seeking to return to the labour market. Those implications for this region have not been considered fully.

The SDLP has consistently voted against these changes. In Westminster, our MPs voted against this legislation and specifically highlighted our concerns about the retrospective elements of some of the measures. Our Minister, Alex Attwood, has made several written representations to the Minister of Finance and Personnel outlining his concerns about the Bill from a Department of the Environment (DOE) perspective. The SDLP also voted against these measures at the Executive. The SDLP is committed to making devolution work. We are committed to not simply rubber-stamping Westminster policies but, instead, listening to the needs of the public sector and testing the boundaries of parity.

This attack on the public sector represents yet another example of the DUP and Sinn Féin-led Executive's failing to make this Assembly work for the people of the North. Again, it shows a sheer reluctance to fight for a better deal for the North. It is a prime example of lazy government and a shabby attempt to pass the buck again and say, "It is not our fault; it is parity." Parity should not be mistaken for parrotry. What is the point of devolution if we are unwilling to maximise its potential to suit our region and benefit our people? That is particularly important in this region where, proportionately, many more people are employed in the public sector.

Since the Minister's announcement that he was to bring this legislation forward, my party colleague Dominic Bradley has said that it is not good enough for the Assembly simply to replicate the legislation from Westminster. Mr Bradley called for the establishment of the Assembly's own pension legislation, but that may have been too big an ask for the Minister.

These reforms are designed primarily to address cases in which excessively large pensions are generated as a result of a final salary link on very high income. We believe that more progressive and redistributive measures should be considered to save more money at the top end of the scale and protect those on middle to low incomes.

We are not blind to the need for pension reform. We oppose the legislation today because it does not protect those lower-paid public service workers. We do not accept that a full consultation process or impact assessment for this region has been conducted. The SDLP is adamant that DFP could and should do more to test the constraints of parity and has consistently failed to gain a better deal for this region. We see our role as legislators, and we are willing to work, as Dominic Bradley said, to pass our own pension legislation and to guarantee a better deal. If the Bill is passed today, we will table amendments at further stages. We cannot accept the legislation in its current form. We certainly believe, for example, that the local government sector and NILGOSC should not be included in the proposals.

I extend an invitation to other Members to join us in opposing the Bill today, particularly the Sinn Féin Members, who boast of their proud record of standing with and for workers. Here is a chance for you to show that that commitment is real and is not empty rhetoric.

Mr Cree: I welcome the opportunity to make a few comments during the Second Stage of the Public Service Pensions Bill. I note that the Executive agreed to the changes in this legislation on 8 March 2012 and that the Minister announced on 26 November 2012 his intention to bring a Bill to the House. It is important that we are flexible to changing conditions, be they economic, societal or otherwise, and how we approach pension provision should be no different. Therefore, I welcome the Bill as a mechanism that affords us the opportunity to rebalance public sector pension provision, with equity for the taxpayer being central to any changes.

The Bill's policy content is driven by the findings of the Independent Public Service Pensions Commission. It was headed up by John Hutton, and its remit was to bring forward recommendations on how to reduce the increasing cost of taxpayer-funded state pensions while ensuring adequate retirement income. That was necessary not least because of increasing life expectancy.

There are two broad objectives in the Bill. The first is a move towards new career average revalued earnings — CARE, as it has become known — with pension age linked to separate pension age for general use in the public services sector schemes. The second objective is to ensure that we adopt an approach in Northern Ireland that is consistent with that in the rest of the United Kingdom. The financial implications are important, and I will set those out later.

We must not lose sight of the fact that the Bill affects quite a number of people, including civil servants, devolved judiciary, local government workers, teachers, health service workers, fire and rescue workers and members of the Police Service. For that reason, it was key that meaningful consultation took place. A total of 52 responses to the public consultation were received from individuals, organisations and the trade unions. The Committee will continue to take account of the various issues raised by those who made submissions on the proposed changes.

I will touch briefly on cost, because that is important in the context of the legislation. The Finance and Personnel Committee went into some detail on that as we took evidence from departmental officials. Without going over that ground again, I will mention the latest correspondence — it was referred to here today — that I have received from the Government Actuary's Department via the departmental Assembly liaison officer. That letter stated that the overall figure quoted for a delay of one year in the implementation of pension reforms was in excess of £262 million. However, the revised figure received, which was based on the detail of each individual scheme, is now estimated at £300 million. Regardless of the concerns raised by some over the precise detail of how that figure was reached, it is a substantial sum that we simply cannot afford to lose from our block grant. I raised in Committee the issue of transitional arrangements for those who have what has been termed "accrued rights". That is very important. It is not fair to change the expected provision for an individual substantially just before they retire. I am pleased that the Bill provides for a 10-year transition protection, as well as a three and a half-year sliding scale protection before that, as set out in clause 18. As I mentioned at the outset, it is necessary to ensure that an element of fairness is visible throughout the Bill.

My party is happy for the Bill to proceed to Committee Stage for further scrutiny. It is a fairly lengthy Bill, with 37 clauses and nine schedules. Work will therefore be required to ensure that we get it absolutely right. However, I am broadly content with the general principles of the Bill and look forward to considering it in more detail in due course.

Mrs Cochrane: I welcome the opportunity to speak at this stage of the Bill. I apologise to the Minister for not being in the Chamber at the start of his speech. Did you not notice?

Mr Wilson: I will forgive you.

Mrs Cochrane: Many of us find pensions quite technical and difficult to understand. Perhaps those who are closer to the age of receiving their pension — I am not looking at anyone in particular — will be more au fait with the impact that certain changes would mean for them. The Bill is, perhaps, not legislation that we would enact if it were entirely up to us, but, once again, the issue of parity with Westminster raises its head. It is important, therefore, that we look at the context in which the changes are being proposed and try to establish the impact that they will have on those affected. Perhaps, unlike Mr Durkan, I will be a little more realistic in my comments.

Historically, when pitted against the private sector, the public sector was viewed as below par on salary scales. However, because of that disparity, certain benefits were afforded to public sector workers in recognition: significant maternity and sickness arrangements, enhanced financial insurance schemes and superior pension provisions. However, in more recent years, we have seen a role reversal, and a rise in public sector salaries has helped to redress the traditional economic balance between the two. As a result, the public sector is now generally better paid and pensioned, as well as boasting a faster increase in rates of pay. A salary gap has subsequently emerged between the two sectors in the opposite direction. Alignment is still, therefore, necessary. Proposals for reform seek to take into account the sustained ambiguities between the public and private sectors.

Statistics show that life expectancy is going up. People are living longer, and that is not going to change. Therefore, employees in both sectors work longer, which translates into an increased financial commitment that is bearing down on the public purse. We need to address that, not only because it is unsustainable but because it serves as a barrier to rebalancing our economy from its historic over-reliance on our public sector. Reform of the current system is now necessary, and the cost of delaying the Bill would be significant, as the Minister has said.

Under the proposals, individual pension contributions from public sector workers would increase, with a staggered phasing-in period, including a shift away from final salary schemes to a scheme based on average income. It has been suggested that that would, in fact, leave the poorest paid public sector workers better off in the long term. In line with the reform, commitments have been given to retain a form of defined benefit pension and protection of accrued rights to ensure that those within 10 years of retirement would neither have to work longer nor see their pension income reduced. Those are the details that I look forward to going into further at Committee Stage.

As a party, Alliance has been consistent in its position on public sector pensions regulation, as evidenced at Westminster, where our East Belfast MP, Naomi Long, voted against the RPI and CPI uprating changes. We know that public sector workers did not create the financial crisis, yet, to all intents and purposes, it is their benefits and pensions that are being affected to help solve it. However, while we realise that such changes are unfortunate, they are necessary. Even taking into account any increase in personal contributions, those pensions are still markedly superior to those available to many in the private sector. In summary, I support the principles of the Bill at this stage. I look forward to further examining them.

Mr McCallister: Like others who have spoken, I know that we have to face up to this issue and the costs associated with it. Put simply, there are few options for the Minister when faced with such a big bill. Even accepting some debate around the figures, when you are faced with a bill of anywhere between £250 million and £300 million, realism has to kick in, unless, maybe, if you are in the SDLP.

You have to look at what can be done. To be fair to Mr Durkan, I look forward during Committee Stage to questioning whether there are some areas where we can mitigate the effects. For example, is it reasonable to expect firefighters to work to a certain age, given the very physical nature of the job? Those are things that the Committee rightly should look at and challenge the Minister and the Department on what we can do. It should look at how appropriate it is to insist that employees in various jobs work right up to the limit and at whether we can change that and what the cost implications of that would be. It is very much a job for the Committee to question that at the scrutiny stage.

It would be wrong to vote against the Bill at this stage. There is consensus about the Bill proceeding and the principles of it. Ms Cochrane talked about having to reform and the differential between public sector and private sector pay. Like other Members, I worked in the private sector before I came into politics, and I see the difference. I have a private sector pension, and, although I can project and guess what it might be worth, I have no idea what it will be worth or whether I will be working until I am 85 or something.

There are huge differences between those guarantees on what you are getting as a pension and on the financial certainty of this, and it is right that the Government have looked at the issue far enough out to make sure that there is time for people to adjust and decide whether making an increased contribution is an affordable option for them. We have to get a grip on those things. It would be entirely wrong, inappropriate and unrealistic to vote against the broad principles of the Bill. Although I agree with Mr Durkan that there are many things that his colleagues on the Finance Committee will want to challenge in the debate today, the Finance Committee is the place to do it. Consideration Stage is the place to do it when the Bill comes back from Committee, but it would be wholly inappropriate to vote against the Bill today. Therefore, I will vote to let the Bill pass and go to Committee.

Mr Wilson: I thank all of the Members who have taken part in what has been a shorter debate than I had expected on this legislation. I understand that the legislation has caused a degree of controversy, especially among those who work in the public sector. Obviously, no one likes to have pension arrangements tampered with, but, as I hope to show in response to some of the points that have been made, there has been gross exaggeration and misrepresentation of some of the impact of this. Following the last Member who spoke, I think it is good that, when you introduce legislation that is controversial, even the new official opposition does not raise an issue about it. There is a degree of realism about where we are with the costs of public sector pensions. This is not just, as Mrs Cochrane suggested, a result of the financial crisis; this is a result of demographic trends and the future financial impact of those demographic trends, which is why Lord Hutton recommended some of the changes that he made.

I will come now to some of the points that have been made. First, I will address those made by the Chairman of the Committee. Other Members raised this issue as well. There is a cost implication. I want to emphasise that at the very start, because I was a bit disturbed by some of the points that were made by the Chairman, who talked about the work that he wanted to see done on the Bill. Let me make this clear at the start: there is a financial implication if we do not have these reforms in place by 1 April 2015. When I first brought this to the Assembly, people said, "It is a made-up figure", "You are a scaremonger" and "Where did you get it from?". I explained, at that stage, that we had gone to the Government Actuary's Department and asked for a valuation of the cost of delay in respect of the biggest pension scheme, that of the health service. The Actuary's Department gave us a valuation, and then, using the assumptions that it had made, we extrapolated from that and got the figure of £262 million. As the Chairman of the Committee indicated, the Committee asked us to go back to the Actuary's Department. Rather than make an estimate based on the figure for one pension scheme, they wanted us to get an exact figure for each of the pension schemes. The result is that the figure that I had given was not an exaggeration but an underestimation of the cost. The cost for a full year to the Assembly will be £300 million. The Chief Secretary to the Treasury has made it clear — he has emphasised it to me again in the last couple of weeks — that, if there are delays, we will pay the cost of them. I want to emphasise that because there is a process to be gone through. The primary legislation, as I explained in my opening speech, has to have Royal Assent by 1 April 2014, so that the second stage — the detail of the pension regulations for different schemes — can then be gone through. It will take about nine months to do that and have everything in place by 1 April 2015.

The second point that the Chairman of the Committee raised was the issue about a full analysis of the macroeconomic impact of the Bill. There is an argument put forward by the trade unions and others that, if you actually look at the full cost of this, you might save on pensions but you will have bigger costs for unemployment. The argument is that, if people have to work for two years longer, it gives fewer opportunities to people coming out of school to get a job in the Civil Service or the public sector. Even at a superficial level, it is not difficult to pick holes in that argument because, of course, there will not be a direct displacement anyway. It is usually people who are fairly senior, mature and have advanced levels of expertise which would not be replaced by younger people coming into the system.

There are a number of reasons why I am opposed to going down the route of a macroeconomic analysis. The first and most fundamental reason is this: it really does not matter what the outcome of that macroeconomic analysis may be. As I have made clear already, if we do not implement the reforms, we will have to pay. We can go back to Westminster and say, "We have done a macroeconomic analysis of this. We have worked out, using a model, what the cost of this will be, and we think that you have it wrong". The Chief Secretary to the Treasury will say, "That is very good. We will charge you. You can say 'You have it wrong' all you want. It does not remove the fact that we expect you to have the reforms in place, and, if you do not, whatever the additional cost of pension schemes in Northern Ireland is, it will fall upon the Northern Ireland Executive". That is the most fundamental reason why I am opposed to going down the route of doing a macroeconomic analysis. Even Lord Hutton did not do it. He was concerned. His remit was this: how do we defuse the financial time bomb that lies down the road for public sector pensions and their cost?

The second reason is this: there is a cost attached to this, and it is estimated to be about £100,000. If the Assembly Committee wishes to do it and the trade unions wish to contribute to it, that is entirely up to them. If they believe that that is one of the things that they have to do in order to scrutinise the Bill — the Assembly wastes money on plenty of things, so I am sure that it can waste money on that as well — that is a decision for the Committee to make. I doubt very much whether the trade unions will rush to put too much money into it. However, let us remember that, if it is to be done effectively, it is a long process. It is a technical thing. You have to build up the model, and you have to work the figures through the model. There are various steps. You have to set out the terms of reference — what is it that you actually want to do, what do you want people to do and what technical information do you want included? The next step is deciding who will do it. It will require people with detailed knowledge and expertise. Therefore, you have to look out consultants who can do it. Given the cost of any such model, there will be a public procurement exercise, and then you have to work through it. Lord Hutton's review of pensions took nine months.

If you are going to go through all of that, I warn Committee members of this: even if you decide, unwisely, to spend money on such an exercise, there is a timetable for getting the legislation through. If we are to avoid the financial consequences that I have outlined, we need Royal Assent by April next year. I cannot understand why the trade unions are keen to do it. In fact, in evidence to the Committee, Bumper Graham made it clear that, as far as he was concerned, he would do everything to stop the Bill:

"If I can stop this; brilliant. If I can delay it; good. That is my job. That is the job that I will prosecute to the nth degree on behalf of my members. If that makes life difficult for politicians" and he went on. Do not forget that, as far as the trade unions are concerned — they have been upfront about it — such an exercise is designed to delay. If it delays, well and good. They feel that they have done their job.

However, the delay in terms of the cost to public services here in Northern Ireland would be quite dramatic.

A number of Members raised the issue of the age of retirement for firefighters. I think that nearly every Member who spoke talked about it. There has been a nationally revised offer to firefighters that will make a difference in calculating their pension and, therefore, access to their pension after the age of 55. That may well help to deal with some of the issues. I do not know all the details, but I know that a revised offer has been made recently to them that would increase the access to their pension. Of course, as Mr McCallister pointed out, it may well be that we will also have to look at what happens to firefighters when they reach that age and have to go through the physical rigours of normal Fire Service duties. Can other jobs be found for them, such as fire prevention or whatever? Do you weigh the jobs towards the older members? I accept that there is a challenge there for the Fire Service. However, that does not take away from the general issue of the Bill.

Mr Girvan talked about the discussions with the trade unions and the consultation with them. We have engaged with the trade unions over the period and will continue to do so. This is not about negotiating with them; this is about consulting them on a policy. You do not negotiate with trade unions on a policy that is being followed by the Government, and we will continue to engage with them.

I now come to Mr Durkan. I know that the SDLP is always looking for an opportunity to poke the main parties in this Assembly in the eye. That party especially loves taunting Sinn Féin by saying, "We are more socialist than you are. We are redder than you are." The only redness about Mr Durkan after that speech ought to be his face. I just want to go through some of it. He said that the SDLP is implacably opposed to this attack on workers' rights and that it is a shame and disgrace that I should be coming to the Assembly to push this legislation through at this particular time. He said that I conveniently produced figures that made this an even greater horror story, as if I went over to GAD in London and asked it to fix the figures so that I could go and scare the devil out of Assembly Members.

Mr Hamilton: We would have put the figures higher.

Mr Wilson: The Member says that from a sedentary position, and he is right. If I had been out to scare you, I would have made sure that there was hundreds of millions of pounds more. This is done by the Government Actuary's Department. The figures were not produced conveniently. They were produced at the request of the Committee, and they are here for full public scrutiny.

Mr Durkan cannot even get it right. He talked about the SDLP being particularly opposed to the retrospective nature of this. Had he listened — I think that he was here, unlike Mrs Cochrane, who has apologised for not being here at the beginning of my speech, and I accept her apology; she probably did not miss a great deal anyway — he would know that this is not being applied retrospectively. In fact, any benefits that have been accrued under the existing scheme will be protected, and anyone who is within 10 years of retirement will stay part of the existing arrangements. So if he is going to attack me for bringing something forward to this Assembly, he should get his facts right before he does.

He talked about teachers being disillusioned and demotivated — I was disillusioned and demotivated after listening to him — because they will have to teach until they are 65. Again, if he had done his homework on this, he would know that the retirement age for teachers has been 65 since 2006-07. That is already in place, and it is the same with a whole range of the public service, under the nuvos arrangements now.

The best part about it was when he said that the SDLP would oppose Sinn Féin and the DUP in their fight against public sector working. They are implacably opposed to this, they will not have it and they will seek a better deal. Well, maybe before he wrote that part of his speech, he should have spoken to his party colleague who is the Minister for the Department of the Environment. As I made it clear, one scheme has to be in place before 2015, and that is the local government pension scheme. Who is responsible for the local government pension scheme reform? None other than Mr Attwood, who happens to be a member of the SDLP. Indeed, Mr Attwood has already given me an assurance that there is no issue and the local government reforms will be introduced in advance of the main schemes. What will those changes to the local government pension scheme include? They will include and will fully comply with the regulations of the legislation that is going through the Assembly. So, we now find that, from being implacably opposed to the career average and to linking the scheme with the change in pension age, the Member's party and his Minister are assuring us that reform of local government pension schemes will be in place by April 2014 and will include the core provisions of the Bill.

1.00 pm

I am sure that the Member has written his press release for the local paper. Perhaps before he does so, he ought at least to consider the facts in the Bill and what his party is committed to doing with the pension schemes for which it is responsible. Maybe then we will get a bit more sensible debate in the Assembly rather than rhetoric for a cheap press release that gets a headline for a day: "We are the goodies, and the rest of that crowd in the Assembly are the baddies, wanting to rob you of your pension and everything else", without really considering where were are going with this.

SDLP Members will probably vote against the Bill, because they know that they can do so in safety. They can hide behind the fact that they are a small party. I have to say this about Mr McCallister; he could have taken the same stance. It would have cost him nothing to take a cheap shot during the debate. The Alliance Party and the Ulster Unionist Party could have done the same, knowing that the Bill would be carried through by the two main parties. However, I think there has been a degree of realism around the Chamber that we cannot go on with the existing arrangements and that if we were to do so, there would be penalties involved that would have an impact on the public purse.

I said that Mr Cree accepted the need for reform — as did Mrs Cochrane and Mr McCallister — and I appreciate the points that he made. There will be details during the scrutiny of the Bill, and I expect nothing less from the Committee but that it goes through the Bill in detail. Then, there will be an opportunity for the Assembly, and for a number of its Committees, to discuss, after April next year, the detail of the regulations for the schemes that will be brought forward by the respective Ministers.

I have said that there will be opportunities for variation within the regulations for each scheme, even from what exists in other parts of the United Kingdom. About 80% of the opportunities will be around those regulations, and provided that it is done within the general principles of the enabling legislation, which we are talking about now, and within the funding envelope, there will be opportunities for variations to be made. That is where a lot of the discussion and detail will need to be looked at by Members.

I commend the Bill to the House and ask for support for the Second Stage.

Question put.

The Assembly divided:

That the Second Stage of the Public Service Pensions Bill [NIA 23/11-15] be agreed.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Beggs] in the Chair)

Licensing of Pavement Cafés Bill: Second Stage

Mr McCausland (The Minister for Social Development):
I beg to move

That the Second Stage of the Licensing of Pavement Cafés Bill [NIA 24/11-15] be agreed.

Many of our town and city centres are beginning to develop a cafe culture. Well-managed pavement cafes can add vibrancy to the street scene, increase footfall, boost tourism and contribute to urban regeneration. However, arrangements must be put in place to ensure the controlled expansion of the sector. That is why I am introducing a statutory licensing scheme.

The Bill was drafted after a public consultation, which showed overwhelming support for a statutory scheme. If passed, the Bill will bring Northern Ireland into line with the rest of the United Kingdom, where local authorities have responsibility for licensing pavement cafes.

Under the licensing scheme, owners of relevant premises, such as cafes, restaurants and bars, will be able to seek permission from their district council to place tables and chairs in suitable public areas for use by their customers. In developing the scheme, my objective was to design a licensing framework that gives councils a degree of discretion over premises that may be authorised and licensing conditions to be applied, while avoiding red tape and minimising licensing costs.

It may be helpful to Members if I spend a few minutes outlining the key provisions in the Bill. The Bill provides district councils with licensing and enforcement powers. It places the onus on a council to grant a licence, unless any of the grounds for refusal, which are specified in the Bill, apply. Councils will be able to impose a range of licence conditions and may vary, suspend or revoke the licence in certain circumstances. At their discretion, councils may charge a licence fee to cover the actual costs of administering the scheme.

I have included a number of safeguards in the licensing regime to ensure that any proposal for a pavement cafe is appropriate to the surrounding area. Applicants will be required to fix a notice to their premises stating that an application for a licence has been made, and there will be opportunities to voice objections. When new applications are being considered, the district council will be required to consult with Roads Service.

Consultation with the PSNI will be required where the associated premises has a pub licence. Where alcohol consumption is permitted in the pavement cafe area, relevant conditions of the licensing law will automatically apply. Consultation with those authorities will ensure that any implications for vehicular traffic or pedestrians, public safety issues and environmental impact are properly taken into account.

I turn now to enforcement. The Bill creates three new offences that will be prosecutable by district councils through a Magistrate's Court. The new offences being created are: operating a pavement cafe without a valid licence; intentionally obstructing an authorised person in the execution of his or her duties; and making a statement, known to be false, in connection with an application. Those offences will be punishable, on summary conviction, by a fine of up to £1,000. In addition, councils will have the power to inspect premises in connection with an application and will be able to remove facilities at any pavement cafe operating without a licence.

As councils will have the discretion to impose a wide range of licence conditions, I am not proposing to create an offence for breach of a licence condition. However, councils will be able to vary, suspend or revoke a licence in specified circumstances. Appeals against licensing decisions will be heard by a Magistrate's Court.

Subject to the successful passage of the Bill, district councils will, thereafter, need some time to complete the preparations necessary to administer the new licensing scheme. Therefore, the main provisions of the Bill will come into operation on a date appointed in an order made by my Department, following liaison with district councils.

Leaving aside the vagaries of our weather, over which we have no control, I recognise that the efforts of business owners and local councils will be critical to the successful development of a cafe culture. I believe that the licensing requirements in the Bill provide the right balance in promoting a cafe culture, while ensuring that applications are sensitive to the needs of street users and the surrounding area.

Mr Brady (The Deputy Chairperson of the Committee for Social Development): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. The Committee welcomes the introduction of the Licensing of Pavement Cafés Bill for Second Stage consideration and thanks the Minister for bringing it to the Assembly.

Officials from the Department briefed the Committee on the purpose and contents of the Bill very recently, and it is fair to say that the Committee welcomes the general principles of the Bill. We all realise the pressures that town centres have been under, with vacancy rates for retail space here in the North running at about one in five. Our town centres appear to be in decline, and we need initiatives to halt that decline and to revitalise those key economic areas.

The pavement cafes Bill is the latest in a number of initiatives that the Department has brought forward, and it focuses on the hospitality sector, giving another incentive to develop business opportunities and increase trade.

A LeasCheann Comhairle, Members will be aware that the Committee for Social Development recently considered the Business Improvement Districts Bill, the draft regulations of which are out for consultation. That Bill hands the power to traders to develop proposals to improve their business areas in order to increase footfall.

Indeed, there is sound evidence from other jurisdictions that the establishment of BIDs does provide benefits. We hope that that will be the case here.

Recently, the Committee also held meetings in Ballymena and Coleraine and focused on the work in those council areas to revitalise their town centres. The Committee has been very impressed with the level of commitment by council officials and retailers and their partnership working with the Department in those areas. Indeed, it is evident that partnership working is absolutely key if we are to turn round the fortunes of town centres. Having heard from council officials, traders and bodies, such as the Independent Retail Trade Association, we have come to realise that the sustainable revitalisation of town centres will depend on their becoming multidimensional spaces, incorporating not just retailers, but recreation, entertainment, accommodation and the wider business sector. The Pavement Cafés Bill provides an added dimension to help to facilitate that.

The Bill is required for a fundamental reason, namely that there is currently no legislation in place to regulate that activity. The Committee heard that Roads Service adopts a "toleration policy" towards existing pavement cafes as long as they do not compromise public safety or hinder the movement of pedestrians. However, it considers that to be a temporary measure that is not considered realistic in the medium to longer term.

Comparable legislation exists in other jurisdictions to regulate pavement cafes through a statutory licensing scheme that is run by district councils. It appears appropriate to the Committee that a similar scheme should be developed here.

In discussing the legislation with officials, the Committee queried the definition in clause 1 of "a public area" to mean:

"a place in the open air -

(a) to which the public has access, without payment, as of right".

That suggested to some members that a cafe owner might set up a business some distance from the cafe; for example, in a public square or park. However, the Committee was informed that the Bill gives councils discretion in clause 4(2)(a), in the granting of licences, to determine whether the public area is suitable or not for a pavement cafe. I am sure that that is an issue that the Committee will return to in its future consideration of the Bill.

The Committee also noted in clause 4(2)(d) that a council could refuse a licence if the applicant had had a previous licence revoked. It seemed that that could result in the indefinite refusal of a licence — one strike and you are out. However, the Committee also noted and welcomed the provision of an appeals mechanism in clause 21 where an application has been turned down or a licence revoked. Again, I think that we will hear comments on that issue as we engage with stakeholders.

The proposed legislation will, therefore, formally regulate pavement cafes and require a person who operates such a business to obtain a licence. The Committee queried the potential costs of such a licence given that the toleration policy that is currently exercised does not incur costs for businesses. The Committee was, however, assured by officials that costs would be set at a level that would allow councils only to recover their administration costs, as noted in clause 12. The clause also places a requirement on councils to publicise their fees and make available the details of how they were calculated. Such transparency is important if traders are to buy into the need for a licence fee. The Committee will continue to query that as it takes evidence during Committee Stage. It is important that councils take a consistent approach on the cost of the licence.

One general concern that the Committee had was the potential implications of pavement cafes for those with disabilities, particularly if there is expansion of pavement cafés. Committee members met representatives from RNIB and were made aware of the inconvenience and potential distress that could be experienced by partially sighted individuals when presented with unfamiliar obstacles on journeys with which they are usually familiar. I attended that briefing, LeasCheann Comhairle, and found it very informative. It gave Committee members a very good insight into how people with such disabilities cope daily. Although the Department informed the Committee that councils will have autonomy to select which representative groups they consult with regard to the establishment of pavement cafés, it is the Committee's view that it is important that groups that represent people with disabilities are consulted. It is certainly the Committee's intention to do so during its detailed consideration of the Bill.

Having put those concerns on record, I would like to reiterate the Committee's support for the Bill and the potential positive implications that it has for town centres. The Committee looks forward to scrutinising the Bill in more detail over the coming months. Go raibh míle maith agat.

1.30 pm

Ms P Bradley: As a member of the Social Development Committee, I welcome the opportunity to speak on the Second Stage of the Licensing of Pavement Cafés Bill. Any initiative that improves businesses in our community has to be welcomed. In most of Europe, pavement cafés, in designated pedestrian areas, are almost a part of life. I agree that the current ad hoc tolerance arrangements cannot continue and that many towns in Northern Ireland already have a bustling café culture that continues to rise.

One of my main concerns about the Bill is about licensing. I welcome the fact that the Bill will be subject to the licensing laws already in place. I am also encouraged by the fact that, under the scheme, businesses will be obliged to insure the areas where their furniture is situated and that councils will have the authority to enforce a range of powers and conditions.

It is appropriate that councils have the lead role under the Bill due to their extensive local knowledge. From my time as a local councillor, I feel that councils are the first agency that local people approach when they are concerned about something happening in their area. As such, councils are in the best position to provide feedback to the officer responsible for deciding on the suitability of such a feature in a particular area.

I agree with providing flexibility in the charges that businesses will face under the scheme, as that may enable councils to attract businesses to their area.

I represent a particular area in which there are a large number of businesses in the catering trade. Indeed, it would be difficult not to find somewhere to eat in Glengormley. However, I have heard from other businesses that are concerned that the pavements will become cluttered and that their patrons will be unable to get to them. Nevertheless, I am confident that the provisions in the Bill should decrease the fears of local traders and, indeed, increase footfall and give a boost to many of our town centres.

I support the general principles of the Bill.

Mr Durkan: I support the passage of the Licensing of Pavement Cafés Bill. The Bill will create opportunities for our local economy and complement the development of towns and city centres, which the Minister and the Department are keen to bring forward.

Although the SDLP welcomes the benefits that the licensing scheme will have on the broader economy, we feel that it is important that we get the legislation right and assure local traders that the new scheme will serve their interests rather than inhibit trade.

Some local café owners in my constituency, albeit very few, have flagged up concerns about the cost that will be attached to the licensing fee, in particular. I accept that placing a fee on traders who have been able to trade freely on pavements for some time without incurring any charge can be discouraging. However, traders who have taken such steps to date have done so at their own risk if the land is not their own, and this could cause —

Mr F McCann: Will the Member give way?

Mr Durkan: Certainly.

Mr F McCann: Over the past number of years, café culture, and especially pavement café culture, has become important, with growing numbers of people involved in it. However, some of the difficulties —

Mr Deputy Speaker: I encourage Members to address the Chair to ensure that their comments are picked up by Hansard and that everyone can hear them.

Mr F McCann: Sorry.

In the past, the difficulty has been the attitude of other statutory authorities, and I think that you need to get that right. Although the Department for Regional Development (DRD) has some flexibility, it can be fairly rigid in its approach to such things.

What is also important is the type of furniture that is used outside. It is no use just saying, "You can put tables and chairs outside". For that to mean anything to any city, the furniture has to be uniform and well arranged. The difficulty is not just the additional cost of a licence; there needs to be regulation to ensure that if people take up the licence, they will also invest in the type of furniture required.

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for his intervention, and I take on board and agree with what he said. The licensing scheme should not in any way disadvantage traders. The Department should look at that as well, even if it means providing some sort of small grant. I suppose that councils could look at it as well, in order to assist traders set up their pavement cafés, as they are, as I indicated earlier, so important to the local economy and the vibrancy of towns, villages and cities.

I spoke about the lack of a current scheme and the current situation whereby people are free to have furniture outside. Mr McCann quite rightly pointed out the difficulties that presents for statutory agencies and the difficulties that statutory agencies present for traders. Some are more flexible than others, but this legislation should bring a greater degree of consistency to how pavement cafés are approached.

The benefits of pavement cafés have been seen right across the North in recent times, not least in my own constituency. Derry, the City of Culture, has been transformed with outdoor seating areas at cafes and restaurants, opening the city up and really adding to its vibrancy. While we recognise the growing role of pavement cafes, it is vital that protections afforded to the public and to traders are given a statutory footing. What is also imperative is that any arguments raised by traders who are concerned by the legislation are listened to, and that we work to address them.

While this legislation gives the power to local councils to impose a fee, it is not necessary for a council to do so. It is entirely dependent on their resources and their moulding of the scheme. It is therefore our duty as legislators to make these powers mutually beneficial for the council to administer and the traders to prosper. It is in this vein that we welcome the fact that a fee limit will be placed on all councils and that there will be stipulation in the Bill that councils may not profit from any fee. Councils will also be required to justify their fee and ensure that it is cost-neutral. The SDLP is supportive of these controls being protected in the legislation in order to ensure balance around the licensing fee. It is our duty, once this enabling legislation is passed, to work alongside the Department and councils to ensure the guidance brought forward is not too onerous either on councils to administer or on traders seeking to avail themselves of the scheme.

The Bill gives powers of inspection and enforcement to councils so that they are able to revoke a licence or enforce a fine for operating without a licence; resisting or obstructing an authorised officer in the execution of their duties; and/or making a false application. Councils will decide whether a pavement cafe design is appropriate for an area and will be able to refuse an application if it does not comply with due procedure. While these powers lie with councils, the SDLP welcomes the fact that an appeals process will exist for applicants, who will be able to appeal directly to a Magistrate's Court if they think that the council's decision is wrong. These procedures in the Bill are a welcome balance. Again, it is very important that we work with departmental officials in the production of the guidance for councils to ensure that fairness and balance is promoted throughout the administration of the scheme in its various locales.

The SDLP supports the passage of this Bill to the next stage and welcomes the benefits that the licensing of pavement cafes will bring to local traders and retail areas. We recognise the benefit that the licensing scheme will have for the local economy, and we are eager to ensure that we get it right. We will probably bring forward amendments at the next stage, should the Department not suggest any changes to the Bill before then.

I am particularly concerned at the removal of the duty on councils to consult with Planning Service before approving any licence. I fear that might result in some kind of vacuum of planning assessment, should this Bill be passed before the transfer of planning powers to councils post-review of public administration (RPA). I am sure that this is not a deliberate attempt to disempower the Planning Service; no such thing would ever happen in this House. We will therefore seek assurances from the Minister that no such vacuum will occur, otherwise we will bring forward amendments to the effect that the statutory planning authority, whoever that may be, is a consultee.

I raised concerns in Committee, which Mr Brady, the Deputy Chair, echoed today, about the problems for those with visual impairments and disabilities accessing and, if truth be told, avoiding pavement cafes. Greater consultation with such groups will ensure their safety and make for more appropriate schemes. Therefore, it is our contention that, because of the scale of the legislation and its impact on local areas, an obligation should be placed on councils to consult such stakeholders before any scheme guidance is issued. We hope to explore that further in Committee.

We support the Bill.

Mr Copeland: I speak as a member of the Committee for Social Development. Mr Mickey Brady, in giving the report on behalf of the Committee, covered pretty much all the points that I would have sought to raise. I congratulate the Minister on finally bringing these proposals before us.

It is important to realise that, although it is a wonderful idea, no matter how you try to regulate or encapsulate such an idea in legislation, something comes out of the woodwork subsequently that was not thought of or considered. I have a couple of points based largely on my limited experience of pavement cafes and outside restaurants elsewhere in Europe. I ask the Minister to consider taking note of the positioning of fire hydrants etc on footpaths. I remember a holiday some years ago in Spain, when there was a fire, and it was discovered that a large concrete planter was over the top of the fire hydrant. As it was Spain, it did not take long to shift it, but there are little nuances.

I also ask that we give consideration to balancing the rights of those who wish to enjoy tobacco and currently cannot do so within the confines of an enclosed working space, and those who do not wish to enjoy tobacco but may find themselves sitting beside a table of people who, like me, smoke rather too much. Such things need to be taken into account.

I raised this question at Committee but have not yet received a satisfactory answer: as I understand it, and if my memory serves me correctly, two value added tax regimes affect hot food bars, particularly the likes of fish and chip shops that have a sit-in section and a serve-at-the-counter section. It might be an idea to give advice and guidance to councils when they are licensing premises, as they will, so that someone does not find, 18 months later, that they have been quite happily selling away when they should have been charging value added tax on the portion of their product sold outside.

My grandfather had a great saying: licensing is the wee brother of taxation. I wonder whether the Minister has had any discussions with the Minister of Finance and Personnel. By licence, businesses will capitalise, for want of a better word, on fairly substantial areas of public footpath, which is public property. In some of the ones that I have been in on the continent, the outside area, given the size of the footpaths, can exceed the internal dimensions of the premises. I wonder whether any move will come from the Minister's colleague the Minister of Finance and Personnel to recoup rates income from that use of public realm property and whether we need to give some consideration to that at this stage. However, I welcome, in the main, the legislation and look forward to discussing it more fully in Committee.

Mrs Cochrane: I, too, welcome the opportunity to speak at this stage of the Bill. I will probably repeat many points that have been covered in a lot of detail.

The al fresco cafe culture is becoming a popular attraction in towns and cities across Europe, and it should be encouraged in Northern Ireland to further promote our great hospitality industry. A pavement cafe that is well designed, well located and fits with the local area can add value by increasing the use and vibrancy of a street and creating a feeling of well-being. Although we may not always have the weather of other European destinations, that should not prevent the initiative being successful. Indeed, having been to Berlin in October, I can confirm that it is not just the sunny weather that brings people to the squares and pavement cafes there to enjoy food and drink. They have developed a red blanket culture with outdoor heaters that has most cafes booming even in the coldest of temperatures.

1.45 pm

Businesses can increase trade through pavement cafes not only for their premises but for other businesses in the area by attracting visitors and shoppers. Indeed, established traders' associations, such as the Ballyhackamore Business Association in east Belfast, have begun to plant strong seeds of communal development and co-operative improvement. The business improvement district legislation will also strengthen such initiatives. Ballyhackamore village has a number of excellent bars and restaurants, and I would welcome the introduction of licensed pavement cafes to help it to become an even more vibrant destination and to encourage those who live in the area to put their money where their house is.

Although we recognise the economic benefits and the enhancement of the street scene that these schemes can provide, it is important that they are well designed and set out and do not impinge on safety or inconvenience pavement users. The legislation must ensure that disabled, blind or visually impaired people's needs are taken into account. As Mr Copeland said, smoking in public places may also need to be considered.

There is no doubt that this legislation will remove the current confusion about outdoor seating areas and licensing requirements. It will allow us to ensure that these facilities will be provided to the highest possible standards without any detrimental effect on the community as a whole. I support the Bill's general principles.

Ms Brown: I welcome the Second Stage of the Bill. The Minister promised to introduce the Bill last May, so I am pleased to see its entrance in the House today.

The Roads (Northern Ireland) Order 1993 makes it unlawful to cause an obstruction to a public footway such as those outside local cafes, bars or restaurants. Currently, Roads Service can enforce the unlawful occupation of a road surface if activity restricts the free flow of pedestrians or vehicles or compromises public safety. As has been stated, Roads Service currently operates a toleration policy for pavement cafes, but that is regarded as a purely temporary arrangement.

The Bill seeks not only to clarify the situation regarding the use of pavements but to give local cafes, bars or restaurants the opportunity to legitimately use the pavement for the purposes of their businesses. Although that might all sound a little tedious, it is not only important to clarify and legislate for the existing practice, which Roads Service has tolerated to date, but to ensure that businesses can secure the legal permission to allow customers to sit outside their premises.

The Bill's other hidden benefit is that it will bring Northern Ireland into line with other parts of the United Kingdom and, indeed, with other parts of the world. Opening up public spaces in an urban environment has the potential to attract new customers and to contribute to a cosmopolitan atmosphere that is associated with most town and city centres in other parts of the world.

Although we in Northern Ireland may be the victims of a very mixed and often confusing climate and are, therefore, not always able to benefit from the outdoors, I believe that this legislation and a respective licensing scheme will provide many visible benefits to town and city centres across the Province. Benefits include encouraging people to come out from inside street cafes, bars and restaurants and on to the street, which will add to the hospitable, attractive and vibrant environment.

Since taking office, the Minister has sought to reopen our high streets across Northern Ireland and to revitalise a once vibrant and important part of the local economy. Business improvement district schemes, the legislation for which received Royal Assent in March, coincide with this Bill and the redevelopment of our town centres and local high streets. Therefore, I regard the Bill as a success story for local high streets across Northern Ireland, and I call on everyone in the House to support a speedy passage so that the benefits can be felt on the ground.

Mr F McCann: I made a point to Mark earlier about this. When I was in Belfast City Council, I was a great fan over many years of the creation of a cafe culture. Whenever you travel through Europe, you pick up on the benefits that it could have for the local economy.

Although you need to take a firm approach to the regulations or legislation, you also need a flexible approach to work with the many businesses involved, which Mark touched on. You also have to find a happy medium that enables you to work with groups that deal with people with disabilities. If there is a meeting of minds between all those groups, there can be a speedy move to create a cafe culture across the North.

I tried to touch on this point earlier. There were difficulties in the past when it was illegal because Departments had a flexible approach to certain types of shops but had a fairly inflexible approach when it came to the type of cafe culture that we are talking about.

This should not be dealt with in isolation. There were some problems around how DRD dealt with this, and there are problems in councils. If people are being unreasonable in their demands — I am talking about Departments — about how this should be moved forward, we need to encourage them to reach a speedy resolution. In some cases in the past, delays led to people losing faith in the process, and they were not able to provide a product to customers.

I fully support the Bill. In many towns and cities, we are coming of age, and the cafe culture will add to that. It will certainly add to the tourism product that we are trying push to get people here.

Mr Douglas: As a member of the Committee for Social Development, I welcome the opportunity to speak in the Second Stage debate. I thank the Minister for bringing the Bill forward. I declare an interest: my son runs a pub in Belfast with an associated cafe.

I am old enough to remember the bad old days in Belfast, when there were very few cafes and, in fact, very few restaurants. We now have huge growth across Northern Ireland, and, in Belfast, there has been huge growth in the number of cafes and street cafes. Last weekend, I went out for a cycle at 7.30 am. I sat at a street cafe with my coffee, connected to Wi-Fi and was in touch with my son and grandson in New Zealand. I just thought, "This is heaven". To me, that shows the importance and the attraction of cafes in Belfast.

We talk about the councils taking on these cafes, and it is important that they are well managed. I could take you to another cafe in Belfast that has lots of tables and chairs, but there is a phone box beside it, which means that there is little access for families with prams, people with disabilities or, in particular, people who are visually impaired. The Minister should also remember cyclists, because they also use footpaths, some of which are designated. I know that Mark is looking at me in wonder. Some of the roads are dangerous for cyclists, so let us think about that as well.

I pay tribute to DSD for its investment in the public realm, which I see when I look at what is happening in Belfast. When I look at my own constituency of East Belfast, I see the fabulous job that it has done in the reconstruction of certain areas. This is a huge investment that will help the whole cafe infrastructure.

I am confident that the local councils will step up and look at Belfast City Council and its support for business, including the recent history of the Backin' Belfast campaign. I know that the councils will loom at this and wonder how much it will cost. My research shows that, in England, there is great disparity in the costs that councils charge cafes.

Overall, it is a great Bill. There is tremendous consensus for it, and I certainly support it.

Mr McCausland: I thank all the Members who contributed to the debate, and I will turn to some of the issues that they raised.

Mickey Brady started by recognising the pressure on our town centres and noting that this was one of a number of initiatives, including BIDs, to improve the viability of town centres.

Mark Durkan raised a couple of points, one of which, in fact, he then answered. He said that traders had raised the issue of costs but then said, quite rightly, that it is a matter for the local authority. I am sure that in his case, since it is the city council up there in Londonderry, he will ensure that his members, friends and colleagues on the council will encourage whatever the fee may be in Londonderry to be as modest as possible. As regards the amendment that he spoke of and whether councils will be required to consult Planning Service on new applications, the answer to that is that no permanent or semi-permanent structures will be permitted at a pavement cafe, so planning permission is unlikely to be required. Councils should, however, consult Planning Service in relation to new applications. The placing of advertising boards, barriers or umbrellas would be a matter for Planning Service.

Michael Copeland raised the issue of —

Mr Durkan: Will the Minister give way?

Mr McCausland: OK, very quickly.

Mr Durkan: Thank you very much, Minister, for giving way. It is just that, when we received the evidence to Committee on this recently, my understanding was that that obligation to consult Planning Service was being completely removed from the Bill.

Mr McCausland: Yes, the statutory requirement for consultation with Planning Service has been dropped in anticipation of the function transferring to councils under local government reform. I understand the point in regard to an interim period, but his colleague is pressing ahead so well with the transfer of powers to local government that I am sure that we will be there in good time.

Michael Copeland raised the issue of smoking. Smoke-free legislation will not apply to pavement cafes, so smoking would be possible since it is the open air. In smoking legislation, public premises that are enclosed or substantially enclosed must be smoke-free, but pavement cafes fall outside that definition. However, he was getting at the point that I would encourage councils and cafe owners to take steps to create non-smoking areas, which would address that issue. He touched on taxation, and some people might ask whether hot food supplied from takeaway premises to a pavement cafe will be liable for VAT. That would be a matter between the operator and HMRC. Generally, the licensing scheme regulates the placing of tables and chairs on the pavement. The preparation and supply of food to customers at a pavement cafe would be subject to relevant food safety and tax laws.

I think that those were the main points that were covered. Judith Cochrane gave an excellent promotional advertisement for the attractions of east Belfast and was generally supportive of the Bill, as were the other contributors. We will all now be left with a picture of Sammy Douglas on his bicycle on a Saturday morning. If points were raised that I have not touched on, we will look over that and write separately to the relevant Members.

I am pleased with the general support for the Bill across the Assembly. I look forward to engagement with the Social Development Committee and Members of the Assembly on the detail of the licensing scheme as the Bill progresses through its remaining stages. I commend the Bill to the Assembly for approval.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That the Second Stage of the Licensing of Pavement Cafés Bill [NIA 24/11-15] be agreed.

Mr Deputy Speaker: I invite Members to take their ease for a few moments until the next item of business, which will be Question Time.

Oral Answers to Questions

Enterprise, Trade and Investment

Mr Deputy Speaker: Questions 3, 6, 13, 14 and 15 have been withdrawn and require a written answer.

Economic Recovery: Marginalised Communities

1. Mr Milne asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on measures to ensure that marginalised communities can fully benefit from economic recovery and economic growth. (AQO 4383/11-15)

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): The Executive are seeking to enhance our economic competitiveness as the means to increase employment and wealth by building a larger and more export-driven private sector. The Programme for Government clearly states that the objective behind rebalancing the economy is to improve the wealth and living standards of everyone. We published the economic strategy in March 2012. However, we recognised that we needed to take further action. The subsequent employment and jobs initiative set out a range of additional short-term measures to provide support to people impacted by difficulties in the labour market, businesses facing challenges in key markets and infrastructure investment to support the construction sector.

Mr Milne: Go raibh maith agat. I thank the Minister for her answer thus far. Does she agree that brand Ireland is respected throughout the world and that we have a unique position in that St Patrick's Day, along with the Chinese new year, stands out as an event that is globally recognised or celebrated? How does the Minister propose that we maximise the opportunities of our unique position?

Mrs Foster: We have a unique position, and I was pleased to see the way in which brand Northern Ireland went across the world last week during the G8 summit. May I say how proud I was of the very fact that we showed Northern Ireland at its best and we had the most peaceful summit in the history of G8 summits? That is something that we should be very proud about, as well as the fact that it gives us standout across the global market. One of our difficulties from the past has been the fact that, when people think of Northern Ireland, they do so in a particular way. They think about difficulties with safety and security, even though we know that, according to the police statistics, Northern Ireland is one of the safest places to live in the world. I think that the G8 will have done so much good in relation to those safety and security issues over those two short days last week, and I am very pleased that brand Northern Ireland will go out across the world in a very positive way.

Mr I McCrea: Part of the initial question related to economic recovery and growth. Will the Minister provide the House with an update on the jobs fund and, in particular, how that impacts in the mid-Ulster area?

Mrs Foster: As the Member knows, the jobs fund was launched back in April 2011. I happen to think that the jobs fund has been a very successful element of dealing with the downturn and rebuilding the economy. Between 1 April 2011 and 31 March this year, the jobs fund has promoted over 5,000 jobs, against a target of 4,333, and has created — I know that this is the figure that many Members are interested in — nearly 2,700 jobs, against a target of 2,395, which represents a conversion rate of over 50%. That is a very good conversion rate.

In respect of mid-Ulster, there are currently 56 jobs fund business investment projects at various stages of development. If they all come to fruition, they should lead to the creation of an extra 637 new jobs, 294 of which have already been created. I do not have all the figures in front of me, but I think that mid-Ulster is doing very well in respect of the jobs fund. Obviously, we are pleased about that.

Mr Dallat: I thank the Minister for her answer. She has my full support in attracting inward investment and economic growth. However, does the Minister agree that, at this time, there are more people in marginalised situations who will not benefit by that and that a bill of rights, supported by the Executive, would be a way forward?

Mrs Foster: No, I do not; absolutely not. We would be putting more restrictions on employers instead of freeing up their ability to employ more people. I actually —

Mr McDevitt: [Interruption.]

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mrs Foster: If the Member wants to say something, I would rather that he said it out loud to the House.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order. The Minister has the Floor.

Mrs Foster: If the Member wants to ask a question he should go about it in the proper fashion like everybody else.

In respect of the actions that we have taken in creating more jobs, I think that the jobs initiatives that we took towards the end of 2011 and, indeed, the jobs fund in all its forms, whether it is through creating more jobs or making sure that we use technology better, and all the other parts of Boosting Business have created more jobs. That has happened right across Northern Ireland, including in those marginalised areas, and we are pleased that that has been the case.

Rugby World Cup

2. Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what action she has taken to advance the IRFU's bid to host the Rugby World Cup in 2023 or 2027. (AQO 4384/11-15)

Mrs Foster: I have supported a feasibility study being undertaken by the IRFU. The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure and I will meet the IRFU to discuss the feasibility study. At this stage there is no way of knowing whether a bid will be submitted or whether it will be successful.

Mr Rogers: I thank the Minister for her response. The Rugby World Cup would be a fantastic tourism opportunity for us. I did not catch whether she has already discussed this with the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure.

Mrs Foster: Yes, I have discussed it with the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure. A feasibility study is under way, part of which was to ensure that we had a number of grounds right across the island, so that it would not be concentrated in one part of the island. Obviously, if we in Northern Ireland are going to commit ourselves to this bid — I hope we do — we need to make sure that we get value for the money that we put into the bid.

Part of that was to ask the GAA whether we would be able to use its stadiums, and I am pleased to tell the House that that has been given the go-ahead. Therefore, if in the right circumstances we put a bid in for the 2023 World Cup, we will be able to see it right across Ireland, including Northern Ireland, and we will be able to make sure that we get the appropriate number of games up in this part. We did not want to see them all concentrated in Dublin.

Mr Dunne: I thank the Minister for her answers. Can she give us an update on the planned route for the Giro d'Italia next year?

Mrs Foster: I know that there is much discussion across Northern Ireland on where the Giro d'Italia will go. The Tourist Board and I are keen to make sure that as much of Northern Ireland as possible is showcased, but, of course, that depends on the feasibility as judged by RCS Sport, which controls this huge event.

We have engaged a group that includes local authorities. The group met for the first time on 11 April 2013, with a number of local authorities. The exact route has yet to be finalised, and I know that we will all look forward to that announcement, which will be towards the end of the year. Right across Northern Ireland, regardless of where the route is, it will have a huge impact. We expect around 140,000 tourists to come to this event, which is not to take away from our domestic tourists or the civic pride that will be left as a legacy of such a big event.

Mr Copeland: I thank the Minister for her answers thus far. I presume that she will agree that the potential benefits that would flow from hosting the World Cup at a redeveloped Ravenhill would be significant. Can she assure us that she will, therefore, commit to fully considering and supporting any bid from the IRFU that may come forward in the future and ensure that it strikes a balance between the rights of those who live in the area around the stadium and the pursuit of sport?

Mrs Foster: Of course the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure takes the lead on that, but I am pleased to say today that the RaboDirect launch will take place at Ravenhill in late August. That is an indication of the importance of Ravenhill. I am pleased to see the redevelopment proceeding. The fact that we will now have a capacity of 18,000 will mean that we will be able to host RaboDirect finals in the future. There will be many rugby fans who will be pleased about that. The RaboDirect launch is happening at the end of August. We are pleased to be hosting it, and we look forward to Ulster getting a good pool and moving forward to that all-important final again.

Manufacturing: Mid-Ulster

4. Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for her assessment of the manufacturing sector in mid-Ulster. (AQO 4386/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Manufacturing is vital to the economy of the mid-Ulster region. It accounts for a quarter of all employment, and, although it has suffered as a result of the prolonged recession, we are beginning to see an upturn in the engineering and construction-related products sectors. That suggests that buoyancy is returning to the market.

Invest NI has been working closely with manufacturing companies in mid-Ulster and across Northern Ireland, encouraging increased investment in research and development, focusing on developing a sales base outside of Northern Ireland and helping them to develop their skills base.

Lord Morrow: I thank the Minister for that very encouraging answer. She is right that the engineering and manufacturing sectors are vital to the mid-Ulster area, as they are to Northern Ireland generally. What is the Minister's Department doing to further encourage investment in the manufacturing sector, not only in mid-Ulster but in Northern Ireland generally?

Mrs Foster: I thank the Member for his question. Having been on a number of visits with me to some of those manufacturing companies in and around south Tyrone, he will know that their constant refrain is that they very much need access to appropriate skills. We have to focus our mind on that job of work, and we are doing so with the Department for Employment and Learning (DEL). It is very important that the appropriate skills are present in the areas of Northern Ireland where the opportunities are.

In the mid-Ulster area, the continued growth of manufacturing, both heavy and small-scale, impresses me. These people are working in every corner of the globe, sometimes from quite small premises up a little road in Dungannon. They have great verve, great research and development capabilities, great innovation and, most of all, they are entrepreneurs. We need to encourage them to look to those new markets and help them go to far-flung places and overcome all the barriers that they will face there, whether they are cultural barriers, language barriers or issues with export licences. We will do all that we can.

The visits that I undertake to all of those companies are a great help to me when trying to understand what practical help they need. I will continue to visit as many companies as I can to try to understand their needs.

Mrs Overend: I thank the Minister for her positive comments about the export potential of the manufacturing companies in mid-Ulster. Does she agree that the road infrastructure to the constituency of Mid Ulster is very important? If so, will she support the Executive committing the money that Roads Service needs to upgrade the road infrastructure to that constituency?

Mrs Foster: Sometimes, Members think that I am a Minister for a lot of things, but I am not the Minister with responsibility for road infrastructure. Her party colleague Danny Kennedy is the Minister with that responsibility, and he will bring his priorities to the Executive, particularly for June monitoring, and we look forward to looking at all of those proposals.

Infrastructure is very important: the Member is right about that. However, it is not just road infrastructure; our telecommunication infrastructure is all important. At the risk of inviting Members to have a go about telecommunications, we need to remember that we have the best infrastructure in the UK. That is a fact from Ofcom, and we need to remember it. That is a very useful tool for us when we are selling Northern Ireland as a place to do business in.

Businesses: Border Areas

5. Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline what additional measures her Department can take to address the challenges facing businesses in border areas. (AQO 4387/11-15)

Mrs Foster: By delivering the commitments outlined in the Northern Ireland economic strategy and the Executive's economy and jobs initiative, my Department is responding to the challenges facing businesses, not just in border areas but right across Northern Ireland. We have made considerable progress towards the delivery of the key commitments that we made in the Programme for Government and the Northern Ireland economic strategy.

Between April 2011 and March 2013, Invest Northern Ireland promoted 13,870 jobs and supported projects that will secure investment of more than £780 million and deliver £168 million of business investment in research and development. Over 40% of that research and development will come from small and medium-sized enterprises.

2.15 pm

Mr Hazzard: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for her answer. Can she outline whether she has had discussions with businesses in these border areas? If so, what is the message that they are giving you? What are they asking you to do?

Mrs Foster: Of course I have had discussions with businesses in border areas. Indeed, I was in Newry just last week opening a marvellous new facility for MJM Marine. I was very pleased to do that and to see the way in which it intends to grow its facilities.

I have a border constituency myself, and I engage with all the businesses there if and when they ask me to. They are talking about the capacity to do business in new markets. The challenges that face them are sometimes out of my reach. We have to grapple with the challenge of higher energy costs in Northern Ireland and, of course, with the big one, which is access to finance. Access to finance remains a critical element for small businesses in looking at how they can grow. Businesses are sometimes afraid to go to their banks and do not go to them at all. Those that do go to their banks fear that they will not get the requisite money to grow. As the Member will be aware, we brought in a number of schemes through Invest Northern Ireland to try to bridge that gap.

So, there are challenges in access to finance and high energy costs. It is about ensuring that we have the appropriate skills available and giving support to allow business to go into new markets.

Mr Byrne: I thank the Minister for her answers. Does the Minister agree that, in some border areas, the aggregates tax is distorting trade and having an adverse effect on it, particularly for quarry products and concrete products? Will she do anything that can be done to try to help those who are on the Northern side of the border?

Mrs Foster: My party colleague the Finance Minister has taken a very close interest in the aggregates tax. He has raised the issue with the Treasury in London on very many occasions. I think that it understands that we have a difficulty with the land border, and it will continue to work with us.

I commend the Member and other Members who attended last week's jobs fair launch in Omagh. That was a very practical example of a local enterprise taking initiatives to help those young people who are having difficulties finding a job as it encourages employers to come forward, perhaps not with a permanent job, but with a temporary job, a part-time job or a work placement for a young person so that they can gain experience and then move on into the world of work. It was an excellent launch hosted by the 'Ulster Herald' and the 'Fermanagh Herald', and I look forward to its outcome. I really want to support those kinds of local initiatives.

Mr Cree: The land border with the Republic of Ireland is one of the major drivers for the devolution of corporation tax powers. Given that that issue is now on the long finger and that the Prime Minister announced the devolution of other fiscal powers in the economic pact, what additional powers would the Minister like to see devolved to Northern Ireland?

Mrs Foster: First, I would not say that the devolution of corporation tax powers has been put off into the dim and distant future. It has, of course, been put off until after the Scottish referendum, which has a very definite date in the calendar. Therefore, we are pushing ahead. One of the important things in the economic pact, which I am sure the Member did not miss, is the move to look at to how to implement the whole issue of the devolution of corporation tax. It was not just put on the long finger — the economic pact talks about looking at how to implement that devolution.

If the Member looks at the wording of the economic pact, he will see that we are discussing whether the devolution of other fiscal powers is a possible way forward. I think that you will find that there will be many discussions on that in the coming months.

Tourism: All-island Infrastructure

7. Mr Maskey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on activities aimed at developing an all-island tourism infrastructure. (AQO 4389/11-15)

Mr Maskey: Ceist uimhir a seacht.

Mrs Foster: Is that question 7?

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member indicated question 7.

Mrs Foster: As a Minister of the Northern Ireland Executive, my focus is on developing Northern Ireland's tourism infrastructure. However, in doing so, I am content to consider those areas in which a North/South approach is of benefit to the Northern Ireland economy. Tourism Ireland works across 30 markets to promote the island of Ireland and has a specific remit to promote Northern Ireland overseas.

Mr Maskey: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for her response. Has the Minister had any contact with her counterparts in the South of Ireland to see whether we can build on the relatively good news that came from the recent G8 activities and visits?

Mrs Foster: If the Member had been here for the start of Question Time, he would have heard me talk about the impact of the G8, not just for County Fermanagh but for the whole of Northern Ireland. I pay tribute to our Prime Minister for bringing the G8 to Northern Ireland and for allowing us to have that global standout for two very important days. Indeed, it was more than that because we had so many journalists with us for a prolonged period to find out about the backstory of Northern Ireland. We look forward to working with the Tourist Board, Invest Northern Ireland and Tourism Ireland to make sure that Fermanagh and Northern Ireland get the standout that they deserve after the G8 summit, and that is a job of work that I have tasked those three organisations with.

Mr Newton: Does the Minister agree with me that it is the responsibility of this Assembly to promote Northern Ireland within the boundaries of Northern Ireland and that, in many cases, an all-Ireland approach takes us into the same area as our competitors? Does she agree that we should concentrate our efforts in Northern Ireland to promote all our assets that many in the G8 found so attractive during their experience here for those few days?

Mrs Foster: There are some continuing issues that we discuss at the North/South Ministerial Council. I have another North/South Ministerial Council meeting on tourism tomorrow in Armagh, and one of the issues that we will talk about is the fact that I feel that we need to concentrate more on getting standout for Northern Ireland in the Tourism Ireland campaigns across the world.

The legislation that sets out Tourism Ireland's remit states specifically that it has to give standout to Northern Ireland. I know from having spoken to my counterpart in Dublin that some regions of the Republic of Ireland also feel that they are not getting the standout that they require for their tourism needs. We are looking at all those issues and we will talk about them again tomorrow at the North/South Ministerial Council. I always welcome the opportunity to discuss those matters because we have a marvellous tourism product to sell, and we need to do it right across the world in the most proactive way.

Mr McDevitt: I am sure that the Minister will want to join me in congratulating Tourism Ireland for achieving standout for Northern Ireland in the context of the G8 celebrations and ensuring that the message was heard in all our key international markets. Does she agree that the time has now come to build on that standout and to deepen and widen Tourism Ireland's involvement, because it has led from the front and consistently delivered results for our region?

Mrs Foster: Part of the role of Tourism Ireland during the G8 was to work in partnership with the Northern Ireland Tourist Board, and it has done that on a number of occasions. However, this was really the first time that we had a holistic approach to investment and tourism, and I was very pleased to see the way in which Invest Northern Ireland worked with Tourism Ireland and the Northern Ireland Tourist Board on some of the branding that came out of the G8 summit. That is one reason why I have said to the three bodies that I now want to see how they will take that forward and how they will work more collaboratively in the future.

When we talk to people about investment, they often want to know what type of a place it is to visit and whether there are, for example, good golf courses or nice theatres. We need to get the whole story out about Northern Ireland, not just little bits. If he is asking me whether I am pleased with the work that was carried out by the three agencies, I am very pleased indeed.

Mr McDevitt: Tourism Ireland.

Mrs Foster: I have no difficulty in saying that I am pleased with the work of Tourism Ireland. If he wants me to say it three times, I will. I have no difficulty in saying that Tourism Ireland, along with the other bodies, did a good job on the G8 summit. We cannot sit on our laurels. We have to say what will we do next and how we will further promote our tourism product. I am sure that Mr McDevitt will be delighted that Tourism Ireland has come forward with a bespoke Fermanagh campaign that is being delivered in the Republic of Ireland market to leverage the opportunities that came on the back of hosting the G8 summit. So I am delighted with that and very pleased to see the way in which it all happened.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Dominic Bradley is not in his place. I call Trevor Clarke.

National Trust

9. Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for her assessment of the contribution the National Trust makes to the local economy.
(AQO 4391/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The National Trust in Northern Ireland manages 63 places and spaces covering 120 square kilometres of countryside and approximately 30% of our coastline. Given the location of the majority of those sites, the National Trust is particularly important to our rural economy. In Northern Ireland, the National Trust currently employs nearly 290 permanent staff and a further 240 staff on a seasonal basis.

Mr Clarke: I thank the Minister for her answer giving the numbers in employment with the National Trust. However, would the Minister like to comment on the car parking charges, toilet facilities and entrance fee charges at one of the National Trust's most recent superior investments on the Causeway Coast?

Mrs Foster: I know that there have been complaints. Most recently, I listened to colleagues from across the political spectrum make complaints about car parking at the Giant's Causeway.

The Tourist Board and other funders have convened a project monitoring group, which oversees the conditions within the National Trust letter of offer in respect of the Giant's Causeway visitor centre. We have been made aware, and indeed have made the National Trust aware, that there have been a number of recurring visitor complaints. We want to make sure that, when people go to the Giant's Causeway, one of our premier sites in Northern Ireland, they have a value-for-money experience and one that they remember for all the right reasons. So I very much hope that we can come to a good conclusion on this.

Obviously, there have been a huge number of visitors to the Giant's Causeway, and we are very pleased to see that. Access to the stones is free; you do not have to pay to access the stones. I think that the confusion arises in relation to the car park and car park charges. We hope to get clarity on that. However, ultimately, it is a matter for the National Trust.

Mr Kinahan: I congratulate all involved in the G8 on its huge success. However, on with this question. Has the Minister looked at other ways of increasing the number of people coming to Northern Ireland? In this case, we are talking about Antrim, but it is about getting people to other historic buildings — I must declare an interest there — and, at the same time, getting the cruise liners here more often and for longer.

Mrs Foster: I was absolutely delighted to see that Belfast harbour has now set in train a new terminal for cruise liners. We expect to have in and around 60 this year; I think that we had just over 43 last year. It is a growing market for us. One of my difficulties is that those people are not captured in the tourism statistics; only people who stay in hotels or other accommodation are captured by the tourism statistics. I think that there were about 100,000 of those visitors to Belfast, and indeed some to Londonderry, last year. It is very important that we continue to value those people as well, because they are quite high-spending tourists to Northern Ireland. We want to make sure that they have a quality experience and an experience that they will remember for all the right reasons. They will want to do different things from perhaps some of our other tourists. Therefore, you are right to say that it is important to make sure that they have the correct itinerary for when they get off the ship and have a good choice to make.

Mr Allister: As Minister with responsibility for tourism, does the Minister agree that it is grossly unfair and a disincentive to tourism that, if a carload of four people arrives to park at the Causeway, not intending to use the centre, because they have already seen it, but intending to go to the stones, they are each charged £8.50 — or whatever the precise figure may be — to park? That is an extortionate amount and a gross disincentive. As Minister with responsibility for tourism, will she condemn that and press for change?

Mrs Foster: As I indicated, I think that there are difficulties in and around that. I think that it is disproportionate. I have to ask myself whether I would be happy to pay that amount of money to access the visitor centre if I went with my family. I am not sure that I would. Therefore, I think that the National Trust does need to consider whether its current charging policy is the correct one. I hoped that more people would use the park-and-ride facility from Bushmills and, indeed, enjoy Bushmills, which is a lovely little village that is developing in a good way. I had hoped that the trust would work more proactively with the community in the village of Bushmills, and, if I were to say anything else to the trust today it is that I want to see more working with the Bushmills community.

Environment

Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan

1. Mr Easton asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the Belfast metropolitan area plan. (AQO 4398/11-15)

Mr Attwood (The Minister of the Environment):

I thank the member for his question. I broke with all previous procedures and practice when, over a year ago, I published a draft Belfast metropolitan area plan (BMAP). Previously, draft BMAPs were not published, and I published it to create certainty, avoid doubt, to be decisive and to show people what was outlined in it. I am very anxious to see BMAP adopted, and we are in the final stages of that approach. The only outstanding matter of any significance is the views of the Housing Executive on housing provision in Belfast. Those matters and conversations are about to come to an end, on the far side of which I will submit BMAP to the Minister for Regional Development, who has to issue a certificate of general conformity with the regional development strategy (RDS) 2035. Thereafter, I intend to publish it.

Mr Easton: I thank the Minister for his answer. Does he agree that the Tullymore House group's announcement of a new hotel in Belfast is to be welcomed and that this should not be held up by planning regulations?

Mr Attwood: If you look at the story of hotel applications and other significant applications over the past couple of years, therein lies the answer. In Derry, in the run down to the City of Culture, multiple decisions were taken on hotel and hostel accommodation. Whether those were taken forward by developers is another matter. It is no less the case for hotel developments, potentially, in the centre of Belfast, not least given that it is proposed to develop one of Belfast's most prominent landmark sites. It is a heritage site, a listed building and one that will create profile and opportunity for the people of the city. I also welcome the fact that there will be development of tourism facilities in the city of Belfast so quickly after the Assembly receives a report from me on the new planning policy statement (PPS) for tourism.

Mr Boylan: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as ucht an fhreagra. Minister, following on from the debate yesterday, how long has it taken the process to bring the draft area plan to this point? Does the Minister now see the need for significant economic zones?

Mr Attwood: Once again, the Member is clearly as muddled today as he was yesterday. There has been an historical problem with development plans. No one denies that. There have been historical delays around development plans, not least because developers have taken the Northern Ireland Government all the way to the Supreme Court or to the European Court. That is one of the reasons why there have been delays in rolling out development plans in the North.

Can you explain to me, Mr Boylan, how economically significant zones, as proposed by the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister (OFMDFM), will in one way or another change the developer's mind about challenging the process around planning? There is a muddled view by some Members, thinking that the problem around development plans can somehow be resolved by giving powers to an office that has neither the competence, the calibre, the capacity or the resources to deal with planning applications. That is digging yourself into holes. It seems that one Member continues to dig himself into even deeper ones.

Mr A Maginness: I commend the Minister on bringing BMAP almost to the stage of adoption. What will the principle benefits be for the economy of Northern Ireland once BMAP is adopted?

Mr Attwood: I hope that, in the run down to the review of public administration (RPA), councils will take forward the preparatory work on local development plans for the new council clusters and that, as quickly as possible after RPA, they will take forward the adoption of development plans in their areas. The benefit of that, as BMAP will demonstrate for Belfast, is plan-led development. That is the best development. You gather your resources, map out the shape of your community or council area and, therein, define what should happen with the use of space, including the use of shared space in the future. That is a reference to yesterday's debate. Then you have the best opportunity to maximise development in that area in a high-quality and sustainable fashion.

Look at the South. They have had serious planning issues; nonetheless, 80% of the land mass of Ireland is now covered by local development plans. Look at Clare, in particular, where they recognise that one of their greatest assets is the quality of their wind and tide. The development plan in Clare puts that at the heart of development because it uses the natural assets to create economic and development opportunities for its people and the area. It will be the same for Belfast and for many other areas that, in the future, adopt development plans.

Mr Cree: BMAP seems to have dragged on forever. I congratulate the Minister on taking the initiative last year. However, the local government boundaries are not coterminous with the BMAP boundaries. Does the Minister envisage any difficulties in moving that forward at the same time?

Mr Attwood: No. When BMAP is adopted, it will set the development process for the BMAP area up to 2015 and beyond, but in the run down to 2015 and beyond, it will fall to local councils, as I indicated in my previous answer, to do preparatory work in respect of the next phase of development plans. I expect that Belfast will concentrate its mind on that particular task. I hope that other council clusters will do similarly. That is why some council clusters have already come to the Department and looked for early work to be done in the run down to RPA to ensure, as I said earlier, that councils hit the ground running when it comes to taking forward development plans. There will be boundary issues, but they should not be an impediment to taking forward work in respect of local development plans.

Dereliction Intervention Funding Programme

2. Mr Milne asked the Minister of the Environment whether his Department plans to expand its dereliction intervention programme. (AQO 4399/11-15)

Mr Milne: Ceist uimhir a dó.

Mr Attwood: I thank the Member for his question, and I confirm that, in my bid for June monitoring moneys, I made a further bid for dereliction and decay funds — on this occasion, £1.5 million. The reason why I did that — and I look to all ministerial colleagues to make representations to the Finance Minister — is that, over the last 18 months, from a standing start, with no programme in place or budget line in existence, we have been able to roll out dereliction interventions in nine council areas. I want to see that the remaining council areas — the 17 other council areas — have the opportunity to do what Coleraine, Portstewart, Portrush, Enniskillen, Belfast, Derry and other places have been able to do: tackle eyesore sites, mitigate their appearance and, as a consequence, improve residential amenity and the tourist and retail experience. That is a win-win for everybody, and I hope that Sammy Wilson hears that message.

Mr Deputy Speaker: I remind Members to provide a translation so that all Members are able to follow.

Mr Milne: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as a fhreagraí go dtí seo.

Has Magherafelt District Council applied for the dereliction fund under the original programme? If not, will it be given an opportunity to do so under an expansion programme?

Mr Attwood: My recollection is that, of the 26 councils invited to apply, 22 or 23 did so. I will have to check whether Magherafelt was one of them. If it applied previously or if it wants to apply now, it is welcome to do so, and I encourage it to do so. Each council's bid is assessed against a template because money is not limitless. Nonetheless, the opportunities are significant. As money has gone to Coleraine, Derry, Fermanagh, Belfast, Down, Limavady, Moyle, Lisburn and Newry and Mourne, I would like the other councils, including Magherafelt, to get their fair share.

Councils have a responsibility to deal with dereliction in their area. That is why I held a blight summit three or four weeks ago. I gathered together the relevant officers from all councils and encouraged them to do what Belfast City Council does, which is to audit all dereliction sites, identify the worst eyesores and, under improvement and pollution control legislation, systematically take action against the owners of those sites, with some success. Councils have it within their resources and legal powers to do more, and I encourage all councils to do more.

Mr G Robinson: Does the Minister agree that dereliction intervention can have a very positive impact, as happened in the north coast area in recent months? I hope that the programme can be extended to Limavady in the near future.

Mr Attwood: I would not differ from one syllable of what the Member said, and I hope that Sammy Wilson would not either.

Mr Dallat: While my colleagues queue up for additions to the anti-dereliction scheme, I would like to ask the Minister, as an inspirational member of the Executive, what should happen when the curtains become faded and those happy clowns become miserable?

Mr Attwood: Although there are some healthy signs for the economy, unfortunately, this period will last longer than we might imagine. Consequently, the work on dereliction does not just have to be rolled out across council areas; in my view, it has to be reconfigured. What do I mean by that? When I was in the City of Culture last week, I sat down with colleagues — the retailers, the traders and the representative bodies of Derry City Council — to see how we could take forward the work on dereliction into a vacant spaces project. Not only do you deal with the appearance of the eyesores, you try to reform those sites into the image of something positive. I looked to Derry City Council to produce a template of how to build on dereliction funding that could be deployed across all council areas.

The Member makes a wider and bigger point: these are moderate sums for big impact in many council areas. In my view, we also need to gather together the Department of the Environment (DOE) and the Department for Social Development (DSD), and other funding bodies so that we can make more strategic interventions, as happened in the main Street in Enniskillen in the run down to the G8 in Fermanagh, that maximise the impact of all our moneys. I tried to do that in the development on the north side of the city, given the economic driver that will emerge with the construction of the new university. I understand that demolition of the existing Yorkgate facility is about to commence. I think that the Government need to use that area as a pilot for concentrating minds and resources to create the maximum corporate outcome.

Natural and Built Heritage: South Down

3. Mrs McKevitt asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on his Department's investment in both the natural and built heritage in the south Down area. (AQO 4400/11-15)

Mr Attwood: I thank the Member for her question, which is very important, not least because people in south Down and Down generally think that they are, in some way, the forgotten county when it comes to government attention. That is why, in 2012-13, £1.25 million of DOE money was invested in various projects across the constituency, including historic monuments, listed buildings, natural heritage grants and other funding. However, that does not tell the full story.

In my judgement, there is untapped potential, particularly from St Patrick, in Christian heritage and tourism and job opportunities. That is why we, working through and beyond the development plan produced by the MP for the area, Margaret Ritchie, on the Christian and St Patrick heritage, are attempting to roll out an improvement in facilities around the highest-profile Christian and St Patrick heritage sites in order to grow the St Patrick experience and, as a consequence, increase jobs and opportunities.

2.45 pm

Mrs McKevitt: I thank the Minister for a very detailed and positive answer. Given the importance of the St Patrick-related heritage sites in south Down, are there any plans to carry out any exploratory archaeological work in the future?

Mr Attwood: Work has been done historically on, for example, targeted excavations at the Mound of Down. As people travel into Downpatrick, they will see that the Department has removed a lot of trees and foliage around the mound to expose what is there, which is another natural and historical heritage experience in that part of the world.

There have also been excavations at Struell Wells and at St Patrick's experiences in and around Downpatrick. There will be more. Aerial surveys that have been conducted around Inch Abbey, Dundrum Castle and the Mound of Down have shown that there are further archaeological opportunities. Therefore, the growth of archaeological heritage can grow tourism and tourism jobs.

The St Patrick's experience is the sleeping giant of Irish tourism and, potentially, of Irish life. I have been making the argument in the Department, around the Executive table and at the Tourist Board that, on the far side of all the big investments and various other signature projects, it is now the time for St Patrick, it is now the time for the County of Down, and it is now the time for the town of Downpatrick. We need to grasp that opportunity now and over the next two decades.

Mr Hazzard: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I welcome indeed the Minister's comments. Such investment in our natural and built heritage is very important. We have seen recently around the old part of Newcastle that the built heritage of the harbour has been improved immensely by dereliction funds. You touched on this in the previous answer, but are there any plans in the pipeline to roll that out extensively so that other towns and villages throughout south Down might benefit from such funds?

Mr Attwood: As I indicated, I would like to see moneys released in each of the monitoring rounds in this financial year. If those moneys are released, they will be deployed across other council areas. I have no doubt that moneys will also go to the relevant councils for the constituency of South Down and neighbouring constituencies. The answer is clear, but 18 months after starting to make the argument about dereliction, I hope that others on either side of and across the parties in the Chamber will hear that we believe that, for moderate moneys, there can be a big impact. That impact should be rolled out in many towns, villages and hamlets.

I believe in other strategic interventions. For example, this is probably a comment about me, but this time last year I visited Dundrum Castle for the first time. Given that experience and other representations, including from the area's MP, we are now going to have a lighting strategy around Dundrum Castle, we are improving pedestrian access into the castle from the car park, and we are going to have a small visitors' centre. In my view, people drive by that asset, whereas the experience around Dundrum Castle, the setting, the heritage and the beauty of that site has much more potential. That is why we are putting much more money into it.

Mrs Overend: Thank you very much, Mr Deputy Speaker. I thank the Minister for his responses. There is no doubt that Northern Ireland's natural and built heritage is one of our greatest assets. However, a serious problem for the protection and promotion of that heritage appears to be a skills shortage in contractors to work on such buildings. Is the Minister aware of such a problem?

Mr Attwood: I would welcome hearing precise details of what that might be. Part of the life of the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) is to have a school of people with the skills that are necessary to help with the maintenance of our heritage sites. For example, the reason why the walls of Derry are in the condition that they are in today — arguably, they are the best that they have been for decades — is because of the resource and skills that exist in the Environment Agency and that are deployed for the preservation and maintenance of the walls. So, there are skill sets in the Environment Agency that can be deployed for our heritage assets. If there are examples of a need to upgrade industrial skills to maintain our heritage, I will welcome hearing about them. A dedicated programme, if one does not already exist, whereby the Minister for Employment and Learning works with the Environment Minister to create a programme to upgrade people's skills to maintain and preserve our heritage assets would be well worth looking at.

Planning: Non-farming Rural Dwellers

4. Mr McMullan asked the Minister of the Environment whether he has any plans to provide greater flexibility in planning to enable non-farming rural dwellers to build in the countryside. (AQO 4401/11-15)

Mr Attwood: I thank the Member for his question. There are six ways under PPS 21 whereby a non-farming rural dweller has opportunities to live in a rural area. I will give you three examples: conversion and reuse of non-residential dwellings; replacement dwellings; and newbuild within an existing cluster or ribbon of buildings. The policy was shaped to create opportunities for non-farming rural dwellers.

We looked at five areas of planning policy as part of the operational review of PPS 21 to identify how there can be more consistency, opportunity and flexibility — consistent with the spirit and substance of the policy — to ensure that farming or non-farming rural dwellers have opportunities to live in that environment.

Mr McMullan: Will the Minister accept that a single dwelling in the countryside should be allowed where it integrates with existing vegetation and that there should be a presumption in favour of development if that test is met, whether or not the individual comes from a farming background?

Mr Attwood: I must say to the Member that if there are issues with individual planning applications or the interpretation of the policy, he should come and speak to me. Many other Members do. I cannot recall whether this particular Member has. Some comments are being made on the far side of the Chamber, probably because Members there have come and spoken to me. If I were to press the point to the Member who is nodding in recognition of that, he would probably say that he has experience of working with me in the planning system, where flexibility, consistent with the spirit and substance of the policy, was deployed to the benefit of those who had work reasons for needing a newbuild next to a place of work in a rural area. If there are examples, come and talk to me.

Part of the operational review has been to interrogate five aspects of the planning policy statement — dwellings on farms; new dwellings in existing clusters; replacement dwellings; conversion and reuse of existing buildings; and ribbon developments — to ensure consistency and flexibility. If the case or cases that the Member may wish to refer to me fall within that flexibility, I am sure that the planning system will work to the benefit of the applicant.

Mr I McCrea: I can confirm that I have used the Minister's good offices in respect of planning applications, and I do not apologise for that. The Minister referred to the review that is taking place. When does he hope to provide his decision on that?

Mr Attwood: I thank the Member for his question. He is right to make no apology. In my experience as Minister, it is only by interrogating the individual case, and, in particular, individual cases raised by Members who do not just routinely raise cases with the private office, and by identifying a point where there should be a review, that you can work through to a better outcome. Quite a number of Members will see that.

The operational review is a real-time assessment of what is going on in planning offices in terms of the application, consistency and interpretation of PPS 21. It will continue to be an operational review. Individual cases will be peer reviewed by senior managers in the planning system to ensure that any doubt, inconsistency or gap in interpretation is cleared. That said, it is my intention to table, before recess, a statement on the operational review and its conclusions.

Mr McGlone: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire chomh maith. My thanks to the Minister as well. I share the views of Mr McCrea. On many occasions, the Minister has afforded me the opportunity to discuss cases for applications in rural areas. Like him, I —

Mr Deputy Speaker: Can we have a question, please?

Mr McGlone: It is a big change from the draconian PPS 14, which was overseen by Minister Murphy at the time. My question relates to the harmonisation of opportunity for development in the countryside for those of a non-farming background, since one opportunity is afforded every 10 years to those from a farming background. Has the Minister looked into the consistency of application for those of a non-farming background who have a site, subject to normal compliance with the likes of location, site and design and policy?

Mr Attwood: I am satisfied that the policy is the right policy; I am satisfied that the policy complies with wider European and other obligations. It may be somewhat premature to look at the application of a policy that permits a newbuild every 10 years, given that we are in the early years of PPS 21, but, if the Member thinks that there is something, even in that regard, that needs further consideration, flexibility or adjustment, I will certainly look at it.

Local Government (Reorganisation) Bill

5. Ms Lo asked the Minister of the Environment to outline when he plans to introduce the local government reorganisation Bill. (AQO 4402/11-15)

15. Mr Hamilton asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the local government reorganisation Bill. (AQO 4412/11-15)

Mr Attwood: I thank the Member for her question. As she will be aware, it had been my aspiration that the House would have the opportunity for the First Reading and Second Reading of not only the local government reorganisation Bill but the road traffic amendment Bill. The local government reorganisation Bill has been with the Executive since 8 April. Whilst we have had some conversation in that regard at one Executive meeting, it has not yet come through to full Executive discussion. However, I hope that, by this Thursday, the Bill will be discussed and approved by the Executive. If it is not out of turn to say so — there has been a conversation with the Speaker's Office about having the First Reading next week in order to ensure that the full Bill and its content, which is confidential at the moment, will be publicly available so that people are able to comment on it over the summer, in advance of the Second Reading and Committee Stage thereafter.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Can the Minister confirm his intention to group that question? Indication was given earlier that he would.

Mr Attwood: Sorry, we are grouping the questions.

Ms Lo: I thank the Minister for his response. In light of the continued failure of certain councils to practise power sharing at AGMs over the past number of weeks, what steps is the Minister taking to ensure that there will be equitable power sharing in statutory transition committees and the new councils?

Mr Attwood: The appointment of statutory transition committees, as with voluntary transition committees, is subject to guidance. That guidance lays down requirements in respect of the management and membership of the transition committees, be they statutory or voluntary. Therefore, there is guidance that informs councils of the standards against which they should be judging themselves when it comes to the appointment of members of the statutory transition committees. Given that they will have statutory function and that, for example, they will have the power to appoint chief executives, I trust that councils will look at that guidance and live by it. If, 700 days from local government reorganisation, any council was still clinging to the past, still clinging to the days of exclusion, still not embracing the full outworking of proportionality and power sharing, at this phase of our history in the run down to local government reorganisation, when there will be legislative requirements in respect of power-sharing arrangements and the structures therein, it would send out a profoundly negative message. It would be a sign of the past, not of the future.

I assure the Member that I will be looking at the outcomes of the elections for mayors, deputy mayors, chairs and vice-chairs in relevant councils over the past number of weeks to determine whether and where there has been a breach of what I think are the right standards.

Mr Deputy Speaker: That ends questions to the Minister of the Environment. I ask Members to take their ease for a few moments as we change the staff at the Table.

Planning Bill: Consideration Stage

Debate [suspended on 24 June 2013] resumed.

Mr Speaker: We now move back to the Consideration Stage of the Planning Bill. Members will recall that, owing to the tabling of a petition of concern on amendment Nos 21 and 23, proceedings on the Bill were halted yesterday after the Question on amendment No 20. I remind Members that the group 1 and group 2 debates were concluded yesterday. The debate on the group 3 amendments will begin today when we reach amendment No 24.

We will resume consideration of the Planning Bill with the Question that clauses 4 and 5 stand part of the Bill. The remaining group 1 amendments will be moved formally as we go through the Bill, and the Question on each will be put without further debate. Once the group 3 debate is completed, any further amendments will be moved formally as we go through the Bill, and the Question on each will be put without further debate. The Questions on stand part will be taken at the appropriate points in the Bill. If that is clear, we shall proceed.

Clauses 4 and 5 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 6 (Determination of planning applications)

Mr Speaker: I remind Members that I have received a valid petition of concern on amendment No 21, so the vote will be on a cross-community basis.

Amendment No 21 proposed: In page 5, line 23, after “economic” insert “and environmental”.— [Mr Swann.]

Clause 6, as amended, ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clauses 7 to 10 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

New Clause

Mr Speaker: We now come to the third and final group of amendments for debate, which deal with appeals, commencement and technical amendments. With amendment No 24, it will be convenient to debate amendment Nos 25, 26, 28 to 30, 32 and 34. Members will note that amendment Nos 32 and 34 are consequential to amendment Nos 20 and 26. I remind Members that I have received a valid petition of concern in relation to amendment No 24. Therefore, the vote on amendment No 24 will be on a cross-community basis.

Mr Agnew: I beg to move amendment No 24: After clause 10 insert

10A. In Article 32 of the 1991 Order (Appeals) after paragraph (1) insert—

“(1A) The Department may by regulations provide for an appeal under paragraph (1) to be made by a person other than the applicant, subject to such limits as may be specified.

(1B) Regulations under paragraph (1A) shall not be made unless a draft of the regulations has been laid before, and approved by a resolution of, the Assembly.”.

The following amendments stood on the Marshalled List:

No 25: After clause 12 insert

“Appeal in default of planning decision

12AA.—(1) In Article 33 of the 1991 Order (appeal in default of planning decision) for “or 25AA” substitute “, 25AA or 25AB”.

(2) In section 60 of the 2011 Act (appeal against failure to take planning decision) for “or 48” substitute “, 48 or 50”.— [Mr Attwood (The Minister of the Environment).]

No 26: After clause 12 insert

“Review of certain decisions

12A.—(1) After Article 33 of the 1991 Order insert—

“Review of certain decisions

33A.—(1) This Article applies to—

(a) any decision by the Department or OFMDFM to—

(i) grant or refuse planning permission;

(ii) grant or refuse any consent, agreement or approval of the Department or OFMDFM required by a condition imposed on a grant of planning permission; or

(iii) grant or refuse any approval of the Department or OFMDFM required under a development order;

(b) any determination of an appeal under Article 32 by the planning appeals commission, where the decision or determination is one which is specified in, or is of a class of decision or determination which is specified in, an order made by OFMDFM which has been laid before, and approved by resolution of, the Assembly.

(2) Subject to paragraph (3), a decision or determination to which this Article applies shall not be subject to appeal or liable to be questioned in any court.

(3) A person aggrieved by a decision or determination to which this Article applies may, within 6 weeks of the decision being taken or the determination being made, appeal to the High Court on any question of law material to the decision or determination only where the question of law raises matters of—

(a) the compatibility of the decision or determination with the Convention rights; or

(b) the compatibility of the decision or determination with EU Law.

(4) The period referred to in paragraph (3) may be extended if, in the opinion of the High Court, there are exceptional reasons for doing so.

(5) In this Article—

“the Convention rights” has the same meaning as in the Human Rights Act 1998;

“EU law” means—

(a) all rights, powers, liabilities, obligations and restrictions created or arising by or under the EU Treaties; and

(b) all remedies and procedures provided by or under those Treaties.”.

(2) After section 60 of the 2011 Act insert—

“Review of certain decisions

60A.—(1) This section applies to—

(a) any decision by a council, the Department or OFMDFM to—

(i) grant or refuse planning permission;

(ii) grant or refuse any consent, agreement or approval of the council, the Department or OFMDFM required by a condition imposed on a grant of planning permission; or

(iii) grant or refuse any approval of the council, the Department or OFMDFM required under a development order;

(b) any determination of an appeal under section 58 by the planning appeals commission,

where the decision or determination is one which is specified in, or is of a class of decision or determination which is specified in, an order made by OFMDFM which has been laid before, and approved by resolution of, the Assembly.

(2) Subject to subsection (3), a decision or determination to which this section applies shall not be subject to appeal or liable to be questioned in any court.

(3) A person aggrieved by a decision or determination to which this section applies may, within 6 weeks of the decision being taken or the determination being made, appeal to the High Court on any question of law material to the decision or determination only where the question of law raises matters of—

(a) the compatibility of the decision or determination with the Convention rights; or

(b) the compatibility of the decision or determination with EU law.

(4) The period referred to in subsection (3) may be extended if, in the opinion of the High Court, there are exceptional reasons for doing so.

(5) In this section—

“the Convention rights” has the same meaning as in the Human Rights Act 1998;

“EU law” means—

(a) all rights, powers, liabilities, obligations and restrictions created or arising by or under the EU Treaties; and

(b) all remedies and procedures provided by or under those Treaties.”.— [Mr Weir.]

No 28: In clause 20, page 11, line 6, at the beginning insert

“() In Article 72 of the 1991 Order (offence where enforcement notice not complied with), in paragraph (6) after “such an offence” add “or the payment of a fixed penalty under Article 76C(2)(b) in relation to such an offence”.

() In Article 76A of the 1991 Order (enforcement of conditions), in paragraph (10) after “such an offence” add “or the payment of a fixed penalty under Article 76D(2)(b) in relation to such an offence”.— [Mr Attwood (The Minister of the Environment).]

No 29: In clause 20, page 13, line 29, at end insert

“(3) In section 147 of the 2011 Act (offence where enforcement notice not complied with), in subsection (6) after “such an offence” add “or the payment of a fixed penalty under section 153(2)(b) in relation to such an offence”.

(4) In section 152 of the 2011 Act (enforcement of conditions), in subsection (10) after “such an offence” add “or the payment of a fixed penalty under section 154(2)(b) in relation to such an offence”.— [Mr Attwood (The Minister of the Environment).]

No 30: In clause 25, page 16, leave out line 19 and insert

“6(1) and (1A), 7 to 12, 12AA(1), 13 to 18, 19(1) and (2), 20(1) to (4) and 21 to 24.”.— [Mr Attwood (The Minister of the Environment).]

No 32: In clause 27, page 16, line 31, before “15” insert

“(3) Section 3A(7) to (13) and section 12A(2) come into operation on the day on which Part 3 of the 2011 Act comes into operation.”.— [Mr Boylan.]

The question for the House today is whether we are going to choose to provide balance in our planning system or further load the dice in favour of developers. The Green Party believes that communities should be an integral part of our planning system. Third-party rights of appeal would provide communities with the same right to challenge planning decisions as is afforded developers. Not only is that fair, but it will lead to better decision-making. It will incentivise developers to engage with communities from the outset, ensuring that communities have a greater say in how their towns, cities and rural areas are developed in future. It will result in more consistent decision-making because, over time, councils would, through challenge and appeal, learn how better to implement planning policies and regulations when the new powers are devolved.

Third-party rights of appeal would help to maintain the balance of economic and social considerations by putting people at the heart of the planning system. However, it seems that the DUP is so beholden to its developer donors that it has tabled a petition of concern on amendment No 24 to ensure that, even if it is the democratic will of the House to introduce third-party rights of appeal, it will choose to block it, as it has just done to the Ulster Unionist amendment. Let me be clear: this is not even an amendment that introduces third-party rights of appeal. It simply provides for an enabling power to allow the Department to introduce third-party rights of appeal. Even then, it would be able to do so only with the consent of the House. It is a very important amendment, but one that would require further permissions from the Department and the House. So I am disappointed that the DUP has chosen to table a petition of concern on the amendment. Next year, of course, we will come to council elections, and I look forward to debating with my DUP colleagues. They can explain to their constituents why they feel that they do not deserve the right to challenge decisions made about their communities.

Yesterday, unfortunately, in the House of Commons, we had another reading of the Northern Ireland Bill, which seeks to further maintain secrecy around political donations. The issues of political donations and planning cannot be separated, because, with yesterday's amendments and, indeed, with the Planning Bill as a whole, we will give more power to politicians in planning and more power to political parties without knowing how political parties are funded, which developers are funding which parties and which decisions are being made on behalf of communities and which decisions are being made on behalf of developers. That is a fundamental flaw in our system. It is anti-democratic, and, ultimately, it has the prospect of leading to corruption in our system. It is regrettable that we are going forward on that basis and that a number of parties in this House have sought to maintain that secrecy and have sought to deny their voters the opportunity to see how their party is funded. The Green Party publishes all its donations over £500, so that people can see exactly who funds us.

Further to that, the DUP and Sinn Féin seek to deny access to challenge by restricting the scope and, indeed, the timeline for launching judicial review. Challenge is a necessary function of a good democracy and, indeed, a good planning system. If processes are illegal, irrational or improper, there should be the opportunity to challenge those processes through the courts. Amendment No 26 would restrict that right to legal challenge. Again, we see an attempt to speed up planning in a way that, I believe, will ultimately be shown to be unlawful. The right to legal redress is protected under European law in article 13 of the European Convention on Human Rights. Seeking to restrict access to such legal redress is against article 9 of the Aarhus convention, which states:

“each Party ... shall consider the establishment of appropriate assistance mechanisms to remove or reduce financial and other barriers to access to justice.”

This amendment will increase barriers to access to justice and, as I said, further restrict the opportunity of challenge to planning decisions.

The Executive and members of Executive parties are failing to learn important lessons that laws, including EU laws, cannot simply be ignored or rode roughshod over. When Sammy Wilson was Environment Minister, he thought that he could ignore area of special scientific interest (ASSI) protections at Lisnaragh and simply allow development to go ahead because he believed it to be of economic importance. That was challenged in court, and it was found to be unlawful. Edwin Poots thought that he could discriminate against trade unions. Again, he was challenged in court and lost. We are only too well aware of the huge costs of ignoring the EU habitats directive in going ahead with the A5. It is another breach of law and another loss for the Executive in the courts. Again, we are not learning the lesson, and amendment No 26 will be another breach of law. I think that it is likely to be challenged, should it be passed today, and I urge the House to learn from the mistakes of the past and not to pass this amendment.

Sometimes it makes sense to get decisions right from the outset. We need more speed, yes, but less haste. The amendments made to the Bill yesterday, and amendment No 26, which is being debated this afternoon, move Northern Ireland to a more deregulated, Texas-style system. With a Texas-style system, you get cowboy planning and cowboy builders, but what else do you expect from cowboy politicians?

I implore the House to do the right thing by our communities and constituents, and by good planning, and to increase access to challenge for objectors by supporting third-party rights of appeal. I implore the House to reject amendment No 26, which, if made, will restrict legal challenge to our planning processes.

Ms Lo (The Chairperson of the Committee for the Environment): I shall speak initially on behalf of the Environment Committee, and I will follow that with some comments in a personal capacity.

I will begin with Mr Agnew's amendment No 24, which is on third-party rights of appeal. At Committee Stage, the Department told us that it is not its intention to introduce a third-party right of appeal at this time. The Department went on to say that such appeals could undermine the aim of pre-application community consultation, which is to front-load the system to encourage and facilitate greater community involvement in the planning process. The Committee accepted the Department's position on that and, therefore, does not support amendment No 24.

The Minister tabled number of minor and technical amendments, which are amendment Nos 25, 28, 29 and 30. Those were noted by the Committee at its meeting last Thursday. On amendment No 25, the Department reminded the Committee that proposals for pre-application community consultation contain provision that the Department must refuse to determine an application if the applicant or developer has not complied with the consultation requirements set down by the Department. The Department wants to ensure that, if developers or applicants have not complied with the pre-application community consultation requirements, they cannot then make an appeal to the Planning Appeals Commission (PAC), in default of a decision, to have the commission determine the application. To facilitate that, the Department needs to amend article 33 of the 1991 order, which allows for an appeal in normal circumstances. The Department noticed that that loophole also exists in the 2011 Act, so it is taking this opportunity to amend section 60 of that Act. Hence, proposed new clause 12AA amends article 33 of the order and section 60 of the Act, and gives effect to that. The Committee had no objection to amendment No 25.

On amendment Nos 28 and 29 to clause 20, the Department told us that it intends to clarify that payment of a fixed-penalty notice as an alternative to court prosecution, while providing immunity from prosecution for that particular offence, will equate to an initial court conviction. Consequently, where offenders do not remedy a breach of planning control that led to enforcement action being taken, they can be prosecuted through the courts for a second or subsequent offence following a preceding conviction or payment of such a notice. The Committee had no objections to those amendments either.

I will now deal with amendment No 26 on the review of certain decisions, which was tabled by Mr Weir and Mr Boylan. As was the case with amendment No 20, I can offer no comment from the Committee on the substance of the amendment. Again, we have not had the opportunity to come to a position on it. The first that the Committee knew of that amendment was at the end of last week. The Committee does not have a position on it, nor does it know the Department's position on it. Given the significance of the amendment, it is disappointing that the Assembly has to consider it today without the benefit of it having been scrutinised by the Committee.

4.15 pm

If I may —

Mr Weir: Will the Member give way?

Ms Lo: Yes

Mr Weir: I want to check with the Member because I may have misheard her. Did she refer to amendment No 20?

Ms Lo: Yes.

Mr Weir: Amendment No 20 has already been voted on. This debate is on the third set of amendments. I was wondering whether the Member misspoke the number.

Ms Lo: No, all I said was, "as was the case with amendment No 20, I can offer no —"

Mr Weir: I thank the Member for giving way. The Member will appreciate that amendment No 20 has already been voted on, and we are not debating amendment No 20.

Ms Lo: I know. I am saying that it is similar to amendment No 20, and that we could not offer any comment on it because it was not given to us prior to —

Mr Speaker: I remind Members that amendments that have been debated and have gone through yesterday are gone. I know that Mr Agnew alluded to yesterday's amendments. We are debating the amendments that are on the Floor at this moment in group 3.

Ms Lo: Thank you for your guidance, Mr Speaker.

I will move on to speak in a personal capacity about Mr Agnew's amendment on third-party right of appeal. Those Members elected at the time will remember that I tabled a similar amendment to the 2011 Planning Bill. I had hoped that they would be more willing to listen now than they were then. However, a petition of concern from the DUP shows that they are not. I am completely disgusted by the DUP's use of a petition of concern. The amendment will benefit all sections of our community. When I heard that a petition of concern had been lodged by the DUP on this, I really was not shocked, which, in itself, is disappointing. I believe that the petition of concern and other DUP-backed amendments clearly show who pulls the strings for that party.

As a South Belfast MLA since 2007, I have supported countless residents and residents' associations in their objections to planning proposals. Many of them have endured detrimental effects in their residential and conservation areas because of inappropriate development and the cumulative effect of overdevelopment. Just this morning, I met a local councillor and a local resident in Newtownards, and they told me about a proposal that has been passed to build a massive factory — a warehouse — in the Kiltonga conservation area. If people know the area, it is right beside the duck pond. Residents feel so powerless when they see this massive big block being built right at the edge of their favourite local park.

There remains a great sense of anger and frustration that the planning system is always in favour of the developer. Although the developer can appeal against a decision, residents have no such right of appeal. I believe that clauses 2 and 6 of the Bill will also lend more weight to approving applications for planning permission, and, as such, third-party right of appeal is more necessary now than ever. I believe that third-party appeals are a fundamental part of a reformed planning system that is fair and accessible to all, based on principles of equality and genuine engagement — [Interruption.] I am sorry. Thank you. I do not know who pushed the microphone away. Do you need me to say all that again, Mr Speaker?

Some Members: No. [Laughter.]

Ms Lo: OK. I am saying that our planning system needs to be fair and accessible to all, and it needs to be based on principles of equality and genuine engagement. We support amendment No 24.

If I was lost for words at amendment No 20, I was gobsmacked by amendment No 26 on judicial review. I have great pride in our democracy, as we all should. To take away the right to take a judicial review against decisions that you view are wrong, to me, seems like we are taking steps towards a dictatorship. I recognise that the amendment leaves provisions to allow for a judicial review to be taken if decisions are against convention rights or are incompatible with EU law, but to seek to restrict the grounds this much is ridiculously extreme and unfair. To do it once again, as with amendment No 24, with no consultation, and sneaking an amendment in at the last minute, shows clearly that the proposers knew that they would face a backlash against it. I also question whether a Planning Bill is the place to address or amend the process of judicial reviews. However, it is possible that the Minister is open to the possibility of this amendment by attempting to restrict the timeline for judicial reviews in the Marine Bill.

This amendment does nothing other than take away the mechanism by which people can challenge government decisions on planning applications. It takes away people's right to say and do something about major planning issues. There are a number of judicial reviews that could not and would not have happened if this amendment had been in place when they were taken. To my mind, this amendment is nothing short of an attack on democracy, and the Alliance Party will not be supporting it. Further to that, I fully believe that the amendment will not stand up to legal challenge. I ask Members to bear that in mind when voting on the Sinn Féin/DUP amendment. Also in this group, we will oppose the technical amendments in the names of Mr Weir and Mr Boylan and support the technical amendments from the Minister.

Mr Weir: I will endeavour to speak on the amendments that are before us, although I have to say that I was concerned at some of the remarks that were made by the last two Members who spoke. Both made quite snide remarks in relation to my party. I noted remarks about who was pulling the strings, from the last Member, and I note that the proposer of amendment No 24, despite being warned last night about language in connection with the name of my party, chose to repeat those remarks today. Mr Speaker, I ask you to look at the Hansard report in relation to that.

Yet again it seems that the Chair of the Committee was lost for words on our amendment. I have to praise the Chair, as she was remarkably loquacious for someone who was lost for words. Indeed, she seems to have overcome the shock.

I have defended the right of either Member to place amendments. We have followed normal procedure in relation to that. Unless I have picked it up wrong, it was very noticeable that the Chair was critical of the timing of amendment No 26, but she did not seem to have the same level of castigation for amendment No 24, which was also not discussed by the Committee, or, indeed, any of the 11 amendments that the Alliance Party put down. Similarly, there are double standards from the Member when complaining about petitions of concern, as she has signed petitions of concern in the past on issues that are not cross-community issues.

Turning to the amendments —

Ms Lo: Will the Member give way?

Mr Weir: I am happy to give way.

Ms Lo: No other party has tabled more petitions of concern than the DUP. It is the major party to have tabled petitions of concern. [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order.

Mr Weir: The Member seems to have an exceptionally short memory. Not that long ago, she signed a petition of concern to block an issue that had strong cross-community support. If there are parliamentary procedures, let them be followed. If they are to be criticised, let them be criticised on all sides. Let us not pretend that some Members are angels dancing on the head of a pin.

The Minister may not accept this, but perhaps we should pay belated thanks, as Ms Lo indicated, for the idea for the reduction in timescales, which followed on from the Marine

Bill. To be fair though, I would not be being serious if I was saying that.

As was mentioned, there are two amendments of substance in this group. First, I will deal with the others. The DUP has no problem with those in the Minister's name. They will, to a large extent, stand or fall on the outcome of amendment No 26. Amendment Nos 32 and 34 are consequential and technical, so there is no point in talking about those.

I will not reopen yesterday's discussion, but amendment No 26 is consistent with what we did yesterday, in that the primary purpose of the judicial review amendment is to prevent delay in the planning system, which can result in the loss of investment and fewer opportunities for job creation. Concerns were raised that while we try to sell Northern Ireland and ensure that it is as attractive an option as possible, the planning regime has, at times, been a disincentive, sometimes more in perception than in reality when it comes to the timescales involved. Nevertheless, this is one of the steps that we are taking to send a clear-cut signal that we are open for business. There is at least one analogy with amendment No 24: if made today, amendment No 26 would not alter any judicial reviews. It provides an enabling power in a similar way to amendment No 24. Royal Assent will not have any direct impact on any judicial review. This is designed to look at a small number of potential cases and give the power to the Assembly to look at a reduction in future.

The Minister said yesterday that the number of judicial reviews of planning cases was low, and I accept that. However, judicial reviews of planning cases can be significant in nature and have a significant effect on jobs — one need look no further than at the John Lewis decision in the past few years.

Mrs D Kelly: I am grateful to the Member for giving way, but he is talking about an application at Sprucefield, which was well articulated and dealt with thoroughly by the Minister in the Chamber last night. Will the Member please explain how local communities and other interests will be consulted on any of these economically significant zones? Will the Member further explain why his party colleague, the Minister of Finance, refused to sell a small piece of surplus land that is holding up the creation of 400 jobs at Rushmere? [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order.

Mr Weir: With respect, I am not in a position to answer. I suspect that my colleague, who is to my left, may be in a position to answer that question.

I am trying to address the amendments. The Member asked about economically significant zones. There is a danger of some in the House fighting yesterday's battles. I am afraid that you lost that one.

I acknowledge and accept a remark made yesterday by the Minister that the number of judicial reviews of planning cases was relatively small, but the point is that such reviews can have a significant effect.

To that extent, I mentioned that some of this is part of a process to say that the full range of economic tools should be there. Yesterday, I think that Mr Hamilton talked about having another arrow in the quiver. I think that this is of a similar nature. Given the number of judicial reviews, it is, I suspect, an arrow that will be used very infrequently. On the broader level, it will be used a lot less frequently than it will be for the economically significant planning zones, for example.

4.30 pm

It gives a power to the Assembly. It is narrowly defined, and it is for dealing, if you like, with specific problems and classes of judicial review. As the amendment indicates, the Assembly does not, and is not seeking as part of this, to have the power to in any way restrict the opportunity to take judicial reviews on the basis of EU law or, indeed, convention rights. Therefore, from that point of view, this amendment will not cover most of the situations in which there is a European directive, for instance. That is because, largely speaking, they would be covered by a European law.

It restricts the time frames for those. I think that there is a need to set time limits, and we need to get things moving quickly. If a genuine case can be taken on that basis, it should be put forward.

As with the —

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Mr Weir: Yes, I will give way.

Mr Allister: I take it that the Member concedes that his amendment would remove from the ambit of judicial review any challenge on the basis that a decision is unlawful by reason of its being irrational and thereby contrary to public law. I take it that he does concede that that is a major plank that he is seeking to remove from the platform of judicial review.

Mr Weir: No, I do not, because very learned as the Member is — I am sure that we will hear at great length later on his —

Mr Hamilton: He would tell you so himself.

Mr Weir: Yes, I know. As indicated, the Member is very learned, and there is no greater man to tell us that than the Member himself. This amendment would not affect any judicial review; it would not remove any power of judicial reviews. It would enable the Assembly to bring that forward at future dates. Therefore, it would not restrict. Again, the Member —

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Mr Weir: No. The Member will have his chance later on. He has got it wrong on this issue. Again, there is a safeguard in this amendment, and if something is brought forward in the future, an affirmative vote by the Assembly would be required for it.

Mr Givan: I am grateful to the Member for giving way. Does he agree that nine years of process and delay to deal with the application at Sprucefield for Westfield, which included John Lewis, due to successive judicial reviews that were motivated by nothing other than commercially vested interests, were an abuse of the process and have cost the Northern Ireland economy over £100 million of investment and hundreds of jobs? Does he also agree that, more recently, they were aided and abetted by none other than the Minister of the Environment, who put the nail in the coffin with his submission to the Planning Appeals Commission?

Mr Weir: I think that the John Lewis case and the Westfield application is a prime example. The situation with this is, again, partly about sending out a signal. Let us get away from the myth that this is the ordinary citizen walking down the street, who, in other terms, would be referred to as the ordinary person on the Clapham omnibus. This is not an ordinary person seeking a judicial review. This is vested interest; it is commercial interest; they are interest groups seeking judicial review.

Indeed, the key example of John Lewis, which, I think, was initiated by commercial rivals trying to prevent its coming, is a very good case in point. Again, this is something that has also been discussed on a national basis. I believe that it is something that, from that point of view, is lawful, and it clearly sends out a message to vested interests. It sends out a clear message that Northern Ireland is open for business and that we will be working with investment to try to bring that forward.

Mr B McCrea: Will the Member give way?

Mr Weir: Yesterday, while in full razzle-dazzle flow, the Member had no interest in giving way, certainly not to anybody from my side. To use a phrase from earlier, what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. I am sure that we will hear yet another great policy development later from NI21. The Member will have that opportunity.

Amendment No 24 deals with the other issue of substance, which is third-party appeals. Again, the issue was debated previously with regard to the 2011 Bill. From that point of view, we expressed something which I think has been replicated in this amendment. We saw problems with third-party appeals because, if we are looking to have a streamlined Planning Service that makes good, efficient decisions, we did not find favour with the idea of, potentially, putting that level of delay in at the end and adding an additional layer of uncertainty.

There is also concern that a system of third-party appeals is open to a degree of abuse. Indeed, where it has operated, it has been. We are not keen to replicate that. The case for third-party appeals would be stronger if this was some attempt, simply, to divorce the public from that part of the process. I agree, at least, with one issue that was raised yesterday by the Minister, which is that, obviously, given the amount of attention that is applied to a range of amendments, sometimes, a range of clauses in a Bill can, largely, be ignored and not spoken about. What we sought in the 2011 legislation, which is replicated in this Bill, is that the pre-application community consultation was a much better way to do it. The idea is to front-load that level of consultation in order to ensure that if things are wrong with an application, they are put right at the start.

In my experience, having been involved in many applications — on many occasions, representing residents — the problem is that, by the time that you get to a situation of final determination and a potential appeal, essentially, you simply reach a point, first of all, where either the application is wrong or right and any opportunity for a degree of compromise, discussion or change on either side, or to make amendments, tends to be reduced. Also, from the point of view of the attitudes of both the developer and residents who object, by that stage, you often get into a situation where there are very entrenched viewpoints. I have to say that, quite often, that situation, ultimately, does nobody any good.

The provision of a pre-application community consultation — and let us remember that the bulk of applications will be taken at local-council level and, in that sense, will be accountable on that side of it — or the alternative, as we have mentioned with regard to the other side of it, is that there are opportunities, even in the proposals that we have put forward, either for it to go to appeal, and, indeed, that is facilitated through earlier amendments, or the fact that it would be approved by the Assembly as a whole. We believe that pre-application community consultation is the best way forward.

I make no criticism of the Member for bringing forward a late amendment. He is perfectly entitled to that right. However, in the same way that this was discussed two or three years ago in 2010 and 2011, I believe that a third-party appeal is the wrong way forward, and we are much better to front-load the system with pre-application consultation. My view, and that of my party, remains consistent on that issue. Therefore, we will oppose amendment No 24.

Mr Boylan: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Ba mhaith liom cúpla focal a rá. Today, we are into round two. I am waiting to hear what the Members to my left will have to say.

In all of the debate and amendments that we have had, I have not heard too much talk about jobs, communities or how to create any employment. That is the essence of the amendments that have been put forward by Mr Weir and I over the past two days. This amendment is about the review process. Each Department has a responsibility for economics and growth. We have a unique opportunity through this process and the planning system to try to facilitate and attract investment and grow the economy. That is what we are trying to do. For the benefit of those who did not get it yesterday, I will try to outline it today.

Yesterday, we spent several hours debating the issues around the amendments to the Planning Bill. During the debate, some Members tried to say that my heart was not in it or that I was not supportive of it, but nothing could be further from the truth. Unlike other Members who seem to like the sound of their own voice and who go on and on and on — I hope that you will try to keep that under control today, Mr Speaker — I was just trying to put forward, as clearly as possible, what the amendments are trying to do. Anybody who has heard or dealt with me in Committee will know that that is what I normally try to do. It is up to the Bill Office and others to write the legislation and decide how the amendments are composed, and we take advice on that.

Yesterday, we heard the line peddled that our amendments did not offer protection on our European commitments. However, as this amendment makes very clear, any judicial review application in respect of decisions made about economically significant planning zones will be limited to those very commitments. Our amendment very clearly states that, where a person is aggrieved by a decision or determination to which the section applies, the grounds for appeal are restricted solely to:

“(a) the compatibility of the decision or determination with the Convention rights; or

(b) the compatibility of the decision or determination with EU law.”

Furthermore, our amendment spells out that “the Convention rights” has the same meaning as in the Human Rights Act 1998 and that “EU law” means:

“(a) all rights, powers, liabilities, obligations and restrictions created or arising by or under the EU Treaties; and

(b) all remedies and procedures provided by or under those Treaties.”

As the proposer of this amendment said, this is an enabling power, and it will come back to the Assembly.

The reality is this: whether we like it or not, we have a bad reputation when it comes to getting planning applications finally approved. That is not solely the responsibility of the Minister of the Environment; it is a legacy of our legal system. We have all seen business rivals lodge appeals to simply block or impede the progress of others.

Our amendments are not about a numbers game. The Minister of the Environment has put on record the number of appeals taken over the past few years. However, he is missing the point that they have damaged our reputation for getting final decisions made. Some of those who wish to invest and create jobs have had very bad experiences of suffering delays or have witnessed what has happened here, and, as a result, they have taken their investment elsewhere. Our amendments are restricted to Ministers taking joint decisions on economically significant planning applications.

The time limit set out in our amendment and the grounds on which appeals can be made will offer everyone — those with genuine concerns and investors — reassurance that good planning decisions will be made in the best interests of all and that the system will not be open to abuse by those who have a vested interest in blocking planning applications.

Last night, the Minister acknowledged that there were issues with the judicial review process, but said that he felt that it was best left to the judiciary to address those issues. I disagree with him. His approach fails to recognise that the judiciary operates within a framework of law. That framework is set out in legislation that is passed by legislators. That is our primary role here in the Assembly, and I do not believe that the people we represent out there, who are crying out for jobs and for the security that decent jobs bring, would thank us if we failed to address what we all know is a real and pressing issue. Our amendment —

Mrs D Kelly: Will the Member give way?

Mr Boylan: No, I am not giving way. I gave way plenty of times yesterday. I am not giving way.

4.45 pm

Our amendment protects both those with genuine concerns about planning applications and those who will consider investing here — investing in jobs that offer hope to our young people, to people who are struggling to ensure that they can care for their families and to those who want to see us build a prosperous society. I believe that this amendment is an important stepping stone that will allow the Assembly and Executive to deliver on that vision, and I commend this amendment to the Assembly.

I will touch on some of the other amendments. Our party supports the third-party right of appeal. I sat through the whole discussion on the Planning Bill when some Members spoke about front-loading the system, bringing pre-application discussions and allowing communities to get involved in that way. That will be the test of it all. Maybe the Minister would like to respond on how he would like to see that process rolled out; if there are to be reviews or how that would come forward. The other amendments are consequential. With that, I support the amendments in this group.

Mrs D Kelly: Mr Boylan talked about there being wishy-washy debate yesterday. Well, his voice was very wishy-washy because I do not think that his heart was in it. There was no real strength or passion to his voice to tell us that he actually believed in the proposals that his party put forward alongside its colleagues in the DUP this afternoon. It is interesting that, in Mr Weir's contribution, he said that this had been discussed at a national level. One presumes the new coalition of the Conservatives, the Liberal Democrats, Sinn Féin and the DUP is now going to dictate planning powers for the people of the North. I really do not think that that was something that the Irish people voted for in the Good Friday Agreement. Sinn Féin should hang its head in shame for what it is doing here with these amendments.

Anna Lo talked about the petition of concern and the abuse of a petition of concern. Who would have thought that a petition of concern would be used to exclude environmental protection from the Planning Bill? I believe, although perhaps I have been too cynical for too long in politics and in the health service, that the petition of concern is to give their colleagues in Sinn Féin some cover in being able to vote against the DUP. Therefore, they have been able to trail into the Lobbies with the rest of us and it gave them cover. You can just imagine the conversation last night, “Here, boys, wait till I tell you something. We have been very helpful to you all day today, and we need a wee bit of cover here, because a lot of the NGOs and others are calling this the ‘special powers Act’ where people are silenced and have no voice. You need to do something for us tomorrow.” The petition of concern seemed to be the way ahead on that matter. I really am quite convinced that that was the gist of the conversation and the rationale for the petition of concern because there can be no other.

The SDLP supports third-party appeals, and we support the Green Party's enabling amendment. We also commend the Minister for the proposals he has brought forward in the Bill, which will deal much more effectively with enforcement against those who flout planning laws and, of course, include the potential for a higher ceiling of fines to be enforced by the judiciary. I believe that that ought to be welcomed. I hope that the judiciary will use those powers in good measure, unlike in the past where the derogatory fines, in many instances, have not deterred some developers from very clear flouting of planning law.

Some Members have talked about and seek the cover of delays in the planning system, but, as all Members who have served at local government level and, indeed, at Assembly level will know quite well, a number of the other consultees actually cause the delays in the planning system. We have delays from environmental health officers in making some responses, and we quite often have delays from the Roads Service and Water Service in making responses. I have not heard any Members say that any of those amendments are to address the other departmental failures in ensuring that the planning system responds much more quickly and in a more timely way to applications.

Unfortunately, Mr Boylan would not take an intervention from me. He again tried to hide behind the excuse of job creation, yet he has failed to give the House one concrete example of a developer looking to come to the North of Ireland to commence a new business, industry or manufacturing base and being denied through the planning system. We do not see queues of foreign direct investors outside Invest NI or the First Minister and deputy First Minister's offices. As the Minister of the Environment said yesterday, this is a further example of how the British Government use the North of Ireland as their playground. We know what happened in the past.

We know from our other nearest neighbours in the South of Ireland about the risks of zoning land for developers. We saw the scandals leading up to the Flood tribunal and similar inquiries. Neither Mr Weir nor Mr Boylan, the Members who tabled the other amendments, has given us any indication of what safeguards there will be to prevent such corruption. Nor have they given us any insight into their thinking on how areas will be selected and zoned. What will be the main objectives when looking at an area of ground? You have only to recall the social investment fund. I served on the Committee for OFMDFM when that was announced. It was only when a member of the Alliance Party, I think, walked past the Long Gallery that he found out that a select audience of community groups from different parts of the North had been invited to hear that announcement. Other MLAs and members of the Committee were not invited. More importantly, not all community and voluntary sector groups were invited. Will we see a similar economically significant planning zones announcement, with only a select audience being invited to the Long Gallery? How will all that be managed? No one has told us any of that.

I see Mr Hamilton coming back into the Chamber. If they are so intent on looking at jobs, why in my constituency of Upper Bann are 400 jobs being put on the back burner at Rushmere? It is because the Department will not agree the sale price of a surplus bit of car park and a bank opposite the civic centre. In case there is any misconception, I am talking about a bank of land, not a bank. Mr Hamilton might jump to their defence by saying that there was a closed-bid tender. As I understand it, the amount bid and the amount that the district valuers put on it did not match. Since then, however, other patches of ground in the constituency have, strangely enough, been sold at more realistic prices that are in keeping with current market value, unlike the land at Rushmere. The argument about job creation does not stack up. It raises more questions than it provides answers.

The amendments take away not only the right of appeal of other interested parties, including communities, but, in the main, powers from local councils. The reorganisation Bill is set to transfer planning to local councils, and there is a delay with that. We have to wonder why. The Minister said earlier in response to a question that the reorganisation Bill had been with the Executive since 8 April. Anna Lo, as the Chair of the —

Mr Speaker: Order. The Member will know that I have given her quite a bit of latitude. We have almost gone around the houses. I ask the Member to return to the group 3 amendments.

Mrs D Kelly: I was merely pointing out that planning was moving under the reorganisation Bill, yet this Bill has come to the House first with these amendments, which will take that element of planning away from local councils.

It will come as no surprise that our party will support the Minister's amendments and the Green Party's amendment. We continue to have serious concerns about the intent and purpose of the amendments tabled by Sinn Féin and the DUP.

Mr Kinahan: I think that everyone when speaking today has the economy and jobs in mind. The debate comes down to where people place the environment, but it is wrong for anyone to imply that the rest of us do not care about jobs. Jobs are the most important things that we can cause to happen in Northern Ireland.

I want to move to amendment No 24, which deals with third-party rights of appeal. This is déjà vu; we discussed it in the last Planning Bill. When we discussed this last time, we felt that it was necessary to protect individuals, communities and the people whom that Bill seemed to be putting at its centre. Yet, when it came to the vote, once again, a petition of concern was placed in front of us and used for the wrong purpose. I remember saying so at the time and that we should challenge the use of petitions of concern.

As a party, we support the rights of third parties to appeal. We have to find a way to ensure that it is not just the big guns, the wealthy and the developers, who have the chance of going to court and that everyone has their chance to challenge. What was the argument against that? It was that it would delay decisions. It will not do that if you put a good time frame on it, make decisions decisively and deal with things properly. So, there is nothing to be afraid of in supporting third-party rights of appeal. The Ulster Unionists will support amendment No 24, and I hope that others will move and realise that people have rights to challenge things.

Amendment No 26 links us to all that was said yesterday. We think that it will shamefully take away the rights of the individual, even more so. Yesterday, I spoke of there being a sham of a deal. What intrigued me was that those who were part of that deal in the two main parties did not challenge us and say that there was no deal. Indeed, they should be experts on the ceiling and the carpets of this Building, because that was where they were looking for most of the debate yesterday.

We heard yesterday — it is very relevant to amendment No 26 — that OFMDFM is completely the wrong place to pass these decisions. We also heard the comment by Peter Robinson — it is also very relevant to today's debate — that he was concerned about creating economic zones, because they just cause displacement. In my patch, Belfast International Airport, instead of competing with foreign countries often finds itself competing with the City Airport. That is the type of displacement that we are talking about. If you place a longer runway at Belfast City Airport, other than creating more noise for all the residents, you are more likely to take away from the International Airport than from anywhere else. I have yet to hear an answer from anyone on how displacement will be dealt with.

The other fundamental matter when it comes to amendment No 26 is the lack of consultation. If we are to fully understand what is being put into amendment No 26, we should have had consultation. That would have allowed the lawyers and all the other people who understand this to really look at all the matters.

Mrs D Kelly: I am grateful to the Member for giving way. Perhaps the DUP is very worried about the impact of consultation given its experience with the application for Knock Golf Club.

Mr Kinahan: The Member is probably very right that they would be worried about that.

Going back to the subject, we did not consult, so we did not explore all the avenues. We also did not learn what we would have learned in the Committee, which was never presented with the amendments, and by having a chance to discuss the amendments among our parties.

So, it looks like, in the future, we will be able to choose any area of any size, create an economically significant planning zone and do what we like there. If I understand it correctly, under amendment No 26, people will not be able to challenge the creation of a zone unless it happens to be against their human rights or EU law. It is a real shame on both parties that they have agreed this. We will oppose amendment No 26 and support the other amendments.

5.00 pm

Mr B McCrea: I am pleased to have the opportunity to discuss some quite important issues. It seems to me that the two substantive amendments that we have to deal with are amendment Nos 24 and 26.

The argument, as I understand it, that was put forward by those who proposed the generality of the Bill is that we need to do something better with our planning regime because it is not fit for purpose and is detrimental to investment and jobs. Indeed, Cathal Boylan was at great pains to say that that is the main reason why he wants to move forward with the issue. I have to say that although I am sympathetic to the idea that we should try to create a better environment for investment, I am not sure that doing away with some fundamental rights encourages anybody. What I know about most investment opportunities is that people are looking for a stable legal framework in which to operate. In fact, I have often heard it said by Invest Northern Ireland that one of the things that we have to offer in Northern Ireland is just that — in comparison with some other investment locations, we have a significant and stable legal framework.

Let us deal with amendment No 24, in the first instance. It has been suggested by Mr Agnew that we should have a third-party right of appeal. Mr Weir, sadly, is not in the Chamber to hear my response, though he indicated that he would like to hear it; never mind. His argument was that this will unnecessarily delay the appropriate decision-making and that maybe we should look at it in a different way, front-load the entire planning process, get the preconsultations out and go that way. It just seems to me that there is a real problem with the denial of justice. Surely, if a thing is wrong, only then will a judicial review succeed. If a thing is wrong, regardless of whether it was well intentioned, citizens should be allowed to challenge decisions. That must be a good thing for all of us.

I am perturbed by the use of a petition of concern in these matters. Time and again, we have talked about whether it is right or wrong to use a petition of concern, but, to be honest with you, if it is a concern, it is a petition of concern. That is the framework that we have. However, is that actually going to bring us to a decision that is right and appropriate and that the people of Northern Ireland will support?

I have a concern about amendment No 24. If I read the mood of the Assembly correctly, for the second time today we will have a situation where the House will vote in a majority for a particular amendment but that amendment will be overturned by a valid petition of concern. To all those Members — or the two of them who are still here — on the Benches opposite who tell us how democratic it can be when you take it back and say, “Let us put this to a vote of the Assembly” the answer is that there are very interesting procedural motions that can be brought in, and things might be dealt with by negative or positive resolution. These are all things that may be important to Members because we may understand the significance of them, but the ordinary man and woman in the street may wonder whether it really matters. The argument that I wish to advance is that it does matter. If we are to have a stable, prosperous Northern Ireland, we need the common good recognised for all. We need to have a system of government where, of course, the Government are entitled to take decisions. If that Government happens to be defined as the Executive or if it becomes, through political development, some form of voluntary coalition between the DUP and Sinn Féin, that is fair enough if it is the democratic result of a vote. However, if you make decisions, surely it is absolutely appropriate for those decisions to be within the law, valid and right. Members should welcome the opportunity to have those decisions reviewed, if necessary, and the opinion of the court will be impartial and binding.

Some on the Benches opposite mentioned John Lewis, which is of particular concern to me and those in my constituency. Just about everybody I talk to asks, “Can we not, please, get John Lewis? Can we do something?”. There is an imperative to go and get investment in any part of Northern Ireland. The challenge is this: why did the judicial reviews fail or, depending on how you look at it, succeed? Why was there a problem? If there is a failure, it has to be addressed. The court review is not the problem; the process in advance of it is.

Hansard will show that Mr Weir argued that many of the delays in that process came about because of vested interests, as if vested interests are somehow less important than non-vested interests. This cannot be right. Surely, if you have an interest — we should all have an interest in such issues — you are entitled to put your case to the court, and it will decide. So I reject the notion that people take frivolous and non-substantiated judicial reviews that they use inappropriately. They are entitled to have their day in court and put their case.

What may be of interest and what I would have welcomed if we were tabling amendments is finding a way of speeding up judicial reviews. Can we find a way of making sure that there are appropriate time limits? I say that not in any way to constrain people in when they can bring action, merely to observe that we often get a delay in response from statutory consultees or we find that people will come along and say, "You have not considered the EU habitats directive. Will you please go off and have a look at that? ". That may take considerable time, during which, of course, people have to delay, and everybody wonders what is taking so long.

The answer to all of this is a better, more professional approach to planning. In that regard, I looked at the work being carried on by the current Minister of the Environment. I understand that there are some issues with inertia in the system, but surely the real challenge is to get people who are on top of their brief to understand where the logjams are and try to remove them in the proper course of doing business and within the law as it stands.

I will conclude on amendment No 24 by saying that I do not think that the use of a petition of concern is the right way forward. For anybody listening outside the Chamber and trying to understand, this is a fundamental issue. This is where petitions of concern start to overturn the legitimate and expressed will of the House. We have talked about that a lot and about the settled will of the Assembly. The settled will of the Assembly was to agree to a third-party right of appeal. Yet we are using procedural motions — I think that the Chair may have used the language "sleight of hand", and I am sorry if I am putting words in her mouth — and that just does not seem to be the right way to go about it. If you have an argument, make it and win your case. Build alliances and consensus. Explain in good time what the issues are and come forward with some form of alternative that we can all support. As it stands, we will not support the petition of concern. We support amendment No 24.

I will move to amendment No 26. One of the things that I find really disturbing in the body of the amendment is that proposed article 33A(2) states:

"Subject to paragraph (3), a decision or determination to which this Article applies shall not be subject to appeal or liable to be questioned in any court."

That is a fundamental challenge to our democracy and our legal process. Any decision taken by the Government or public authorities, if inappropriate, wrong or not within the provisions of the law, in any circumstances, should be allowed to be challenged. That is a fundamental right. The idea that you can stipulate where you are allowed to use a JR and where you are not, if taken to its extreme in other situations, would be a real problem. That is why I have to say that amendment No 26 does indeed seem to be deficient on many issues.

Other Members mentioned that this is the sort of process that a totalitarian regime might use. I certainly think that it would be better if the amendment —

Mrs D Kelly: Will the Member give way?

Mr B McCrea: I will indeed.

Mrs D Kelly: I support the Member in his description of the regime that we are about to enter into. As you know, yesterday was a power grab from local councils, but is today not a power grab from local citizens in the refusal to allow them any sense of judicial review or appeal?

Mr B McCrea: I thank the Member for her intervention, because I really want to stress this: this is an issue about a challenge to democracy. If the media or the press are listening to this, I say that this is a challenge to free speech. It is a fundamental issue; it is not trivial. Other people in times gone past actually used the opportunity to take control of a legislature by legitimate means and then used the legitimate means in that legislature to turn democracy on itself. That is what we have to be careful about. There is a quotation that, I think, states that the price of democracy is ever vigilance. There is a danger. I am sure that, when Members reflect on it, they will not go down this route, but you have to be aware that, if you end up with such a situation, it is getting close to fascism. I do not say those words lightly. I warn the House that, if we go down that route on this amendment, on any amendment or on any topic, it is tantamount to a totalitarian state in the fascist mode. That is something that citizens of this country really need to take up and take interest in.

While we are talking about how such a thing would come about, I will say that there are occasions when people with opposing views are not treated with the right tolerance. I have heard that from some people, and I know, Mr Speaker, that you do your best to try to encourage a polite exchange of views. The whole idea of an Assembly like this, with the cameras on us, is that people with different opinions can express those opinions without fear of being shouted down, told that they are not right or any of those things. It has happened in different places. I did not call the Speaker's attention to it, because, you could say, I am big enough to look after myself, but is it really necessary to use words such as "razzle-dazzle" and all that? Is that the right way to go about making a serious point of discussion? The Speaker is in control of the Chamber, and he, of course, will decide, but, if you really want a proper, informed debate, why not give us the information in advance, in consultation —

Mrs D Kelly: Will the Member give way?

Mr B McCrea: Just one minute, Mrs Kelly. Would it not be better to give us the information in advance to try to explain what you are trying to do and to try to build consensus rather than just bouncing it through at the last minute and saying, "If you do not vote for this, you are somehow anti-the economy, anti-jobs and anti-the people". That is not the case. People in the House are for the people of Northern Ireland, but we have a job to do.

Mrs D Kelly: I am grateful to the Member for giving way. Will he not go further and say that it was not even the Members in the rest of the House outside their own two parties that they did not give information to? From the weak contributions of both Mr Weir and Mr Boylan, it appears that they have not even been involved in the drafting of the amendments, nor do they understand them. Furthermore, is it not startling that Fracker Flanagan is not here in the Chamber today? He is obviously being silent. He is the only person in the Western World who is opposed to fracking —

5.15 pm

Mr Speaker: Order. I have reminded the House on several occasions that we should call Members by their proper names. That also goes for parties.

Mr B McCrea: Well, having just spoken about the need for good manners and good order in this House, it would be a little awkward for me to say anything other than that it is appropriate for people to put forward their argument in the best manner that they can. They should show some respect to the House by being able to put that argument with conviction, taking the necessary interventions and trying to explain what they think to colleagues here. It is not necessary, if your argument is strong enough, for you to rubbish individuals or their stance. I am really not having a go at Mrs Kelly when I say that, but surely we can put forward an argument and talk sensibly to one another.

I will conclude by saying that this amendment is a really serious and fundamental challenge to the Belfast/Good Friday Agreement and to the way in which this institution and others were set up. It may have seemed like a good idea and may have been well intentioned in trying to create jobs, speed up the process and put forward the right criteria for investment. I do not doubt that Members in other parties are trying their best to do good things. Surely, however, they can see that this amendment has not provoked the reaction that they wanted and that it is counter-productive.

If we get ourselves into a situation where we have legal challenges or, heaven forbid, judicial reviews or other situations where it is used as a precedent, the DUP and Sinn Féin Members will be sorry that they went with this particular approach. I ask them to think again.

I am grateful for the opportunity to speak. The position of NI21 is clear on this matter; I ask those who are listening to think again. This is a really serious issue, not a trivial matter.

Mr Dickson: First, I apologise to the House for not being here for the earlier part of the debate. Interestingly, I was with a visitor to the East Antrim constituency earlier today who takes a great deal of interest in planning matters. In fact, we were looking at proposals for Glenarm harbour and marina and for sensitive development in that area. There are people who take planning matters very seriously.

I want to address the House primarily on the issue of third-party rights of appeal. As a local authority member for over 30 years, I have taken a great deal of interest in the subject. First, however, I will refer the House to the Planning NI website. Under the heading "Who may appeal?", it states:

"Appeals to the Planning Appeals Commission may only be made by or on behalf of the person who made application for planning permission or other approval. There is currently no 'third party' right of appeal against a planning decision. This means that objectors or other parties who may have an interest in the proposal cannot make an appeal if they are unhappy about the decision."

I have spent most of my political life in the council dealing with planning applications as a consultee because, as you know, Mr Speaker, we have no planning authority as councillors, but we were, at least, given the ability to be consulted on planning matters. I have championed the issue of third-party right of appeal on behalf of my constituents over all those years.

Interestingly, however, it was not just about the championing of particular planning applications. It was also about a process of trying to encourage other councillors to come on board with that point of view and get them to see the value of third-party rights of appeal. I can proudly say that Carrickfergus Borough Council has, in the past, unanimously supported third-party rights of appeal. We have also encouraged other councils across Northern Ireland to come to that view as well.

How embarrassing, then, is it for the DUP to have to go back to their councillors, particularly on Carrickfergus Borough Council, to tell them that that which they cherished, which they thought would be of great benefit to their constituents and which they thought would be of good support to the communities that they purport to represent would not continue, would no longer be supported and, in fact, is now thought to be completely and utterly wrong?

The debate about third-party right of appeal is often portrayed as a conflict between large-scale developers and communities or individuals. In fact, most planning applications relate to fairly modest development proposals. Many planning applications are from householders who are proposing nothing more than minor developments in or around their homes. Such a right would give those who consider themselves to be affected by the development the same right of appeal as the applicant. That is often described as a level playing field. I challenge those who are attempting to pull the rug out from under those who wish to have that level playing field to explain themselves. It is to their constituents that they are going to have to explain themselves if this legislation proceeds in the way that has been proposed.

Third-party right of appeal would make the Planning Service accountable for all decisions on planning applications, not just refusals. That would lead to more careful scrutiny of development proposals. It is sometimes argued that the Planning Service is prepared to grant planning permission for a development rather than refuse consent or face possibly lengthy expensive appeals from applicants. If there is a possibility that a proposal could be subject to appeal, irrespective of the decision that is reached, it has been argued that the Planning Service would consider applications more carefully to ensure that it reaches what it believes to be the right and defensible decision. That would also encourage applicants to prepare their development proposals more carefully. We would perhaps have, as the person I met earlier said, fewer carbuncles in our society.

The Planning Service should engage with communities at an early stage about the design, layout and all the consequences of a planning application. It should take the views of local people on board — gosh; that is why I thought I was elected to the Assembly — when drawing up plans that could limit the risk of permission being challenged by third parties.

My call for a third-party right of appeal arises from my concern about planning permission being granted for developments that are out of accord with the local area development plans, and about the quality of the decisions made by the Planning Service. There are interest groups, such as environmental organisations and other local amenity groups, and I pay tribute to those that have worked tirelessly over the years to improve the quality of planning decisions, have challenged the Planning Service where necessary, and taken on developers and pointed out to them that, if they co-operate with community organisations, they have a much higher chance of successfully getting their planning application through and that it will be done with the support of the community, rather than against its will.

This is my great fear with regard to the denial of third-party rights of appeal: it will alienate many people in this community because they cannot be genuinely engaged in a planning application. As I said, that could range from the scale of a major development with a wide-ranging impact, or impact of a very local nature that could nevertheless be of significant concern to local people. Those of us who support third-party rights of appeal are not opposed to the principle of particular developments. Rather, we are opposed to the cumulative effect of development decisions that adversely affect the amenity of an area and deter investment because an area has simply become unattractive.

Others apply the principle of environmental justice, expressing concern that poor areas get more than their fair share of unwanted and poor quality developments, and lack a formal voice to stop that happening. That is a very important area of concern and should be such for the two parties that are proposing to block third-party rights of appeal. It has been and can be clearly demonstrated that communities that do not have a strong voice will not be able to hold back the tide of poor quality planning decisions and poor quality developments and buildings.

It is clear that communities that can articulate their particular points of view can influence developers and planning decisions. We want a level playing field so that everyone can have their say in, and influence over, planning decisions. Third-party rights of appeal, when we get to the appeal stage, are the last resort. What we want is people talking and co-operating. At the end of the day, constituents, residents and communities need to be able to have a say. They need to get to an end point and feel that they have been allowed the opportunity to have a full say in what happens when a planning application comes to the local authority.

I am grateful to an organisation called Scottish Environment Link, which published 10 myths about third-party rights of appeal. I do not intend to bore the House with the detail of all 10 myths. I will simply state that here are 10 myths with very clear and cogent answers as to why that is all that they are — they are myths. The first is that third-party right of appeal:

“would add significantly to delays in the planning system”.

No; it would not. Let us look at the proposed amendment to the legislation, which states:

“subject to such limits as may be specified.”

It would be for the Minister to determine how the process of third-party right of appeal would be developed. Guidelines would be published, undoubtedly, by the Department. Therefore, controls in respect of delays in applications, whether you have to provide a bond to ultimately produce a third-party right of appeal, whether you have to have a certain number of signatures, whether they have to be limited to a geographical area are all left open to the Minister by regulation and, presumably, by discussion with the Committees to come to a conclusion on. The proposed amendment is very open. It allows the Minister, the House and the Committee to ultimately determine how any third-party right of appeal might be introduced.

The next myth is that third-party right of appeal:

“would add to the cost of the planning system”.

No; it would not, if the Minister, the House and the Committee were allowed to put together appropriate rules and guidance.

Another accusation that is thrown at third-party right of appeal is that it is a “meddler’s charter”. It is genuinely about consulting communities. It is about involving the very people who have to work in, live in, drive on and use many of the buildings and constructions that are proposed. Therefore, it is not unreasonable for people to have a say on those planning applications.

There is a myth that third-party right of appeal is:

“a deterrent to investment in the economy”.

That is clearly debunked when you look at the GDP of Ireland, Sweden, Australia, New Zealand and all those countries that have third-party right of appeal. It simply does not deter investors from coming into those countries and developing. After all, it could not be much worse than some of the archaic laws that we have at the moment, which slow up the planning process to the point of nothing happening at all.

It is claimed that third-party right of appeal “would undermine local democracy”. No; it would not. It would involve and include local democracy.

Another myth is that third-party right of appeal:

“would create an unmanageable administrative burden”.

Do we really think that people will be able to get to the final point of having to introduce their third-party right of appeal but not be able to create a committee, a chairperson and all the things that are required to listen to it? There are plenty of ways in which you can get people involved in the planning decision process long before you have to set up the administration of such an appeal.

There is an accusation that supporters of third-party right of appeal:

“are unrepresentative of communities, fundamentally opposed to change”.

That is also untrue. I have been involved with many progressive environmental and other groups, which have been supported by organisations such as Community Technical Aid, that have delivered for communities by proposing quality alternatives to what a developer is proposing and what the Planning Service is prepared to compromise on. If you involve people, you get better decisions.

The next myth, which may have been referred to earlier, is that we should instead pursue:

“Other improvements in the planning system, such as greater front-end consultation”.

We know what consultation on planning applications in the Planning Service is like at the moment. If you are lucky, it is a hit-and-miss process of a letter being delivered to half a dozen houses in a street, telling people that 40 houses are going to be built behind them, that trees are going to be removed or whatever the issue happens to be.

It is small detail like that that exercises communities and makes people concerned about planning applications.

5.30 pm

Another myth is that third-party rights of appeal:

“would block social developments, such as schools and hospitals.”

There is the old Nimby argument — not in my back yard — but people can and do see the bigger picture. If we have clear, articulate and well-developed local development plans and people buy into them, they will see how they can develop further. When the planning application for a specific element of it comes along, people will have already bought into the decision-making process.

The next myth is that third-party rights of appeal:

“would reinforce an adversarial approach.”

Perhaps Mr Allister would like the income that he could gain as a planning barrister through supporting those groups. There are ways other than the adversarial approach to deal with third-party rights of appeal. There is arbitration and there are appeal mechanisms that are perhaps not as costly as resorting to the full force of the law when it comes to third-party rights of appeal.

I know that we are in a sense flogging a dead horse in the House on this matter, because the petition of concern will block it. However, it will not stop me continuing to pursue it on behalf of my constituents. I am a passionate believer in the third-party right of appeal, and I believe that the overwhelming number of people in this House would, if they were given a free vote and if they listened to their constituents and councillors, be supportive of third-party rights of appeal. I do not intend to speak at any length on amendment No 26 except to say that I hear the echo of the jackboot.

Mr Allister: Yesterday, we witnessed a power smash-and-grab raid with amendment No 20. Today, with amendment No 26, the new tool of tyranny is to gag the citizens. To underscore that, the amendment not only gags the citizens but circumvents the courts to make sure that the opportunities that currently exist to challenge executive authority are neutered. For decades, nay centuries, the courts have played a vital role as a restraint on the abuse of executive power, and that is why the function of judicial review has evolved over many years. However, the obvious effect and purpose of amendment No 26 is to remove from the citizen the right to have recourse to that remedy in the manner that he or she currently has.

Mr Weir sought to excuse all that by telling us that no current judicial review will be affected. One might say, “So what?” Future judicial reviews that may unfold will most certainly be affected in a fundamental way. To have a check and balance on the abuse of unlawful or inappropriate exercise of executive power, judicial review provides a remedy that, if the court can be convinced that that which is being challenged is unlawful by reason of being irrational, or is so unreasonable that no reasonable body could have reached that decision, by virtue of its unlawfulness, it will be overturned. That has been a primary function of judicial review down the years. That predates any rights under any European Convention on Human Rights, because that form of judicial review existed long before we had the European Convention on Human Rights.

Therefore, if you say that you can still challenge it if your convention rights are suppressed or some EU legislation is not properly acknowledged, again I say: “So what?” What you cannot challenge any longer under this tyrannical proposition is that a proposal that is unlawful by virtue of being irrational cannot be stopped or challenged by the courts.

Mr Poots: I thank the Member for giving way. Would the Member accept that, in some instances, the judicial review process has been abused and that, very often, it is one developer using technicalities in law against another developer? I could make reference, for example, to cases where that has happened. We have seen cases being drawn out for many years as a result of that. Instead of this being a developers’ charter, as the Member is suggesting, he wants it to be a lawyers’ charter, where fat cat lawyers can make fortunes out of stopping jobs coming to Northern Ireland. That has been the case in quite a number of instances.

Mr Allister: The Minister is the walking embodiment of a little knowledge being a dangerous thing.

If there are problems with judicial reviews or instances of abuse of judicial reviews — and the law, like politics, can be abused; there are instances of that in both — you address the cause of the abuse. You do not liquidate the right. If I recall correctly, the Minister has been judicially reviewed once or twice. His desire is to liquidate the right of judicial review and to say to the citizen: “How dare you challenge what I say? How dare you have recourse to the courts in this land? I am the Minister. What I say is right, because I say it.” That is the arrogance of the attitude that lies behind amendment No 26. That was evident when the First Minister, back on 25 September 2012, was quoted in ‘The Belfast Telegraph’ as saying that he wanted the Executive to investigate how judicial reviews could be limited or avoided. That is a staggering thing to say: that he wants to remove a remedy of centuries of posterity; that he wants to be able to remove the right to challenge the Executive in the courts; that he wants to avoid the possibility of anyone daring to assert that the Executive just might have got something wrong.

Mr Poots: I thank the Member once again for giving way. We had a very important vote last night — actually, it was this morning. The potential for that to be judicially reviewed is very clear. We have a situation in which the House has decided that it is not in support of the redefinition of marriage. Will the Member support that being judicially reviewed and those rights? He knows that there is an awful lot of it going on. However, very often it is a lawyers’ charter being paid for by legal aid. In the instance of planning, very often you have one developer using judicial review, not because they are interested in badgers or newts, but because they are interested in ensuring that someone else does not take up a commercial opportunity that might impinge upon their commercial viability.

Mr Allister: In fact, I do not think that there is any serious threat from a judicial review on the same-sex marriage issue, but even if there were, what any executive, government or legislature does must be capable of withstanding the scrutiny of the courts. To think otherwise, to say otherwise or to do otherwise is to embrace tyranny and dictatorship, and that cannot be right. That is why it is frightening that there are Ministers in this House who are so anxious and so eager to ride roughshod over the rule of law. Access to judicial review is part of the rule of law. Make no mistake about that. Sadly, there are those in this House who are doing the bidding of whoever it is who has that ambition. That is a most retrograde step, and one that reflects most adversely on those who take that stance.

I am particularly surprised — well perhaps “surprised” is not the right word, because I am going to talk about Sinn Féin. Sinn Féin has been the champion of running to the courts at every whim for a judicial review. If it gets a coroner’s decision that it does not like, it judicially reviews it. If it gets a Parades Commission decision that it does not like, it judicially reviews it. Yet, here its Members are as co-signatories of amendment No 26 to shut down, as far as planning is concerned, judicial review. These great libertarians who, when it suits them, proclaim that particular outlook are the fellow conspirators with those advancing the developers’ charter to suppress judicial review. Is that, too, not quite surprising?

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Dallat] in the Chair)

Let us be very clear, Mr Deputy Speaker. This suppression of judicial review does not relate just to the matter that we discussed yesterday, the matter of planning decisions taken in an economically defined zone. This attack on judicial review applies to every planning decision, whether it is made in a couple of years’ time by a council or made by the Planning Appeals Commission or made by the Department. All of them are now going to be relieved of the threat of judicial review. What is that but an invitation to unchallengeable decisions and, therefore, bad and corrupted decisions? If you have no court to look over your shoulder and to say that that is irrational or unlawful, and if you gag the courts and gag the citizen from going to the courts to say that, what sort of a dictatorship are we creating? What sort of a monster are we seeking to introduce in this legislation? I think that it is quite, quite staggering in that regard.

Let us take an example. Let us root it in amendment No 20 of yesterday. Let us say that OFMDFM, in its all-knowing, unchallengeable wisdom, decides that a particular ASSI — something very close to the heart of the Member for South Down Mr Wells, who is not here at present — should, even though it is an ASSI, become a classified zone, where any class of planning permission that OFMDFM decrees can be given, will be given. As I said yesterday, that is without recourse to issues such as location, siting or design. People are exercised, outraged and beside themselves because of the impact that it will have on them, their environment or where they live.

5.45 pm

There are those in the House who are prepared to say that not only should those people have no third-party right of appeal but that they should have no right of appeal to the courts. So they have no recourse to challenge or say that they want someone to look at this independently from the legal perspective to see whether procedures have been followed. One thing that results from suppressing judicial review is that even the procedures followed cannot be challenged, never mind whether the decision is unlawful because it is irrational.

Are we seriously saying to this and future generations that that is the way that we want to shape our planning law? For years, developers have wanted to shape it in that fashion and very much resented how the courts acted, on occasion, as brakes on them. At every turn, developers pleaded that it was for the economy, and, more often than not, they meant their economy. Now, under this charter gifted to them by their friends, they are to have free rein. I think that that is wrong.

May I say —

Mr Poots: Will the Member give way?

Mr Allister: Just let me finish this point. Mr Weir said that we need not get excited about this because any decision about what class of area is to be exempted from judicial review will have to be approved by a resolution of the Assembly. Let us tear away the nonsense that covers that statement. Anyone who knows anything about how the House and the Executive work — this is true of amendment Nos 20 and 26 — knows that the Members who sit in the House did not draft any of these amendments. There are Members in the House who will vote for these amendments tonight, as they voted yesterday, without even reading them. Some, even if they read the amendments, would probably not even understand them, if you do not mind my saying so, but they will vote for them because they are told to vote for them.

How were the amendments drafted? Some special adviser, elected by no one, cooked up the idea with his political masters, instructed the draftsmen and then agreed — as part of some other wider package, no doubt — with special advisers on the other side of the House that this was the way that they would go. Then, hapless individuals such as Mr Boylan are sent in to propose them, and so they dutifully do, yet the Benches are empty because there is no appreciation of or enthusiasm for any of it. It is what they have been told to do. So when Mr Weir tells us that we should not be concerned about any of this because anything that happens will require a resolution of this House, again, the question is this: so what?

A resolution will be cooked up by the DUP/Sinn Féin cabal — by their special advisers — presented as a fait accompli and voted dutifully through the House. There is no protection there — none whatsoever.

Mr Poots, if he still wants to, can intervene.

Mr Poots: I thank the Member for giving way. I think that the Member is not against economic development; I certainly hope that that is not the case. However, over the past number of years, there has been a series of cases where judicial review has stifled economic development. We just heard today, for example, that legal aid for lawyers has risen again on both fronts. We can talk about fat cat developers, but there are fat cat lawyers. We could throw accusations about who people’s lawyer friends are and who is defending lawyers here today. I am not accusing the Member; I am asking a question. Has he no association whatsoever with any law bodies any more? Has he resigned all that and is, therefore, free to speak without declaring any interest whatsoever in those bodies? Planning and other issues have dragged on and have been held back by judicial process for a very long time. In some instances, I am not sure where the added value has come. So I do not think that the planning system, as it has existed, has been good for opportunities in Northern Ireland, vis-à-vis the Republic of Ireland and other places where potential opportunities for development have come. However, the Member may view that differently, and I would like to hear whether he does.

Mr B McCrea: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. Is it not the case that conflicts of interest are for the Member himself to declare and that no other Member should suggest that there is an issue in this matter?

Mr Allister: Without your needing to rule on that, Mr Deputy Speaker, I assure Mr Poots that if I had an interest to declare, I would declare it. Has he any interests to declare? Has his party anything to declare from development donors? Is his party saying to the House that it has no development donors? If so, things must have changed, Mr Deputy Speaker. Is that what he is saying to the House?

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order. The Member will resume his seat. I ask the Member to return to the Bill.

Mr Allister: Mr Poots, again, cannot get his blinkered view past the fact that there have been judicial reviews that did not turn out the way he wanted them to turn out. Therefore, his answer is to abolish them.

I had an interest to declare from another life. I had many clients, and things did not turn out the way that they wanted them to. They ended up in jail, but they could not abolish the courts. They could not say, "Let's have no more judges, let's have no more juries." No — there is such a thing as the rule of law. I am sorry, Mr Poots, there is such a thing as the rule of law in the check and balance on Executive authority. It is called judicial review, and it affects most gravely those people and their attachment to the fundamentals of our system to the extent that they want to shred and remove it. That is what they will vote for tonight. There is no doubt about that. The Health Minister's erudite contribution is now to say, "Nonsense". However, the Minister's actions will show who is talking nonsense, because the Minister's actions will be to vote to suppress — to remove — judicial review. That, of course, comes from someone who might have declared the interest that he has been the object of successful judicial review applications against him.

In that context, I turn to amendment No 24. In its own right —

Mr Givan: He revels in gay adoption.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Member will resume his seat.

Mr Allister: I could not hear it, Mr Deputy Speaker.

Mr Deputy Speaker: I must remind Members that you are not in a position to make remarks across the Chamber. Any contribution that you make will be made through this Chair. Thank you. Continue.

Mr Allister: I did not hear the intervention, but I suspect that I am none the poorer for that.

Mr Givan: Will the Member give way?

Mr Allister: Ah, Mr Givan. [Laughter.] Another walking embodiment.

Mr Givan: I appreciate the Member giving way. Does he want to explain to the public why, for example, he revels in the outcome of a judicial review of the laws pertaining to gay adoption? Why does he revel in the outcome of that judicial review?

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Before the Member responds, can we please deal with the issue before the Assembly, which is the Planning Bill?

Mr Allister: I revel in no such outcome. The problem that the Member has, and this goes back to the point about a little knowledge being a dangerous thing, is that he seems to think that if you believe in a court system, you are bound into every decision that is made. It is on the other hand: you are bound into respect for the rule of law and the fact that there should be recourse to inspection and oversight of Executive authority.

It has nothing to do with the outcome of judicial reviews, gay adoption or anything else. I disagree with that outcome and hope that the appeal is successful. However, the very fact that you can have a judicial review or that the outcome is not what you like is not a reason for abolishing judicial review. If that is the simplicity and mindset of those who are voting for this, I do wonder what their next proposition will be.

I was turning to amendment No 24. In its own right, I support amendment No 24. I believe in third-party appeals. I believe in them as a matter of equality because the planning process is very much an unequal struggle between the big developers who Mr Poots, before he disappeared, mentioned and the little man, and very often — not always, but very often — the objectors are the little man.

When the big developer does not get his way with the planning authorities on his application, he can appeal to the Planning Appeals Commission. However, the little man — oh no; no appeal for him. It is a fundamental question of equality. That is why I have always believed in third-party appeals. However, in the circumstances of this smash-and-grab raid on powers by OFMDFM, and its handmaiden of tyranny — the suppression of judicial review — I find an abundance of extra reasons to believe in third-party appeals.

You cannot say to someone, "Not only will you not have the right to have a third-party appeal, but you now will not have the right even to challenge the decision by judicial review." So the liquidating of the right to have a judicial review is itself an added reason why, in these circumstances, third-party appeals are more necessary than ever. That is why, tonight, I will support amendment No 24, although steps have been taken to make sure that it will not succeed, and, for the reasons that I have outlined, I will oppose amendment No 26.

6.00 pm

Mr Attwood (The Minister of the Environment): I intend to address amendment No 26 to begin with, and to speak on the subsequent amendments later in my contribution. I have been trying to work out what is different about the debate this evening compared with the debate yesterday evening. I have drawn the conclusion that nothing much has changed. The debate is, essentially, still one-way traffic, with all the good arguments about good law, good politics and good government coming from those who oppose amendment No 26; and the weaker arguments, bad politics and bad government coming from those who support amendment No 26. The only difference has been that Peter Weir, unlike his colleague Simon Hamilton last night, did not even try valiantly to defend what the DUP and Sinn Féin were doing. Contrary to last night, Mr Boylan tried more valiantly to defend what the DUP and Sinn Féin were doing. However, as I hope I will explain to him, he only dug himself into deeper and deeper holes in so doing.

What is going on in this debate around the DUP and Sinn Féin amendments? It seems to me that there are three things going on. First, if it is good enough for the DUP, it is good enough for everyone. That is very much the political culture and the character of government that we now have and which we see expressed in these amendments. Secondly, we see that, if it is good enough for the British Government, it is good enough for the DUP. I will come back to that point shortly. Ultimately, what is going on this evening is that, if it is good enough for the British Government and the DUP, Sinn Féin just has to live with it. That is what this debate has been about.

The revealing moment in this debate, if there was one, was the comment that was made by Peter Weir and picked up by Mrs Kelly. He said that these issues had been discussed at a national level, to use his words. What he meant was that what is going on in the amendments has been discussed with the British Government. Imagine that. These amendments were discussed with the British Government and published jointly by the First Minister and deputy First Minister, the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. They were discussed at a national level and not discussed at a domestic level. Who is running this country when Peter Weir comes into the Chamber and quite casually says that these have been washed through at a national level? What a withering indictment on our democracy and our devolution if we are now subject to the whim, or the will, perhaps, of the British Government, when it comes to what we decide is good for our economy and good for our planning system. It was a very revealing moment. It reminded me a bit of a comment made by Mr Allister in respect of the SpAd Bill. There is always a moment in a debate when everything becomes clearer and the fog lifts, and it was Mr Weir's corroboration of what I claimed last night, which is that this is about much more than what is going on in Northern Ireland; it is about what is required by the London Government.

What does that say about those who signed this document; who put their names to this document a couple of weeks ago; who put their names down next to those of Mr Cameron and Ms Villiers? It says that they agreed with the London Government; not with the Northern Ireland Government; not with the Northern Ireland Assembly; not with the Environment Committee. They agreed with nobody in this place about what was going to happen in this place.

What a comment about the character of our democracy and the nature of our Government that is expressed in those amendments and confirmed in that document and by Mr Weir's contribution.

I want to deal with the issue of judicial reviews (JRs). It was touched upon in earlier contributions — at least, by one Member. The point was actually a curious one for Mr Allister to make because, in my judgement, he has been — let me put it mildly — overprotective of the use of state power in this part of the world during the past 40 years. Nonetheless, he made the point, a criticism of another party, that it, and people who may have had the same mindset, had used judicial reviews in order to interrogate public policy. It was quite curious for Mr Allister to criticise a party for using JRs when, in my view, he may have been over-defensive of the actions of the state in many previous years. Put that aside for a moment. The point remains a valid one.

When, a number of weeks ago, I sat down with the First Minister and the deputy First Minister, and they began to talk about those issues of judicial review, I said to them what I have said in the Chamber, and what I will keep saying, which is that the capacity of the citizen, community, business or third party to interrogate public policy by applying for leave for judicial review is one that has served this part of the world particularly well.

When no other remedies were open to a grieving family or citizen, a community felt that state power had been abused or a government would not stand with a citizen, community or organisation, and they were left to no other device, wise judges in this part of the world said, "Let us extend the scope of judicial review". That is what they did. They said that if the state would not account for its actions in a proper way, it must account for its actions through the courts. That is the legacy of JR in this part of the world; that, for 20 or 30 years, people — I have to say that, in particular, it was people from nationalist and republican backgrounds, who, rightly, in my view, saw that there was abuse by the state in respect of their legal and human rights — went to court in order to interrogate public policy and have accountability from the state for what it had done. That served our society well. Some might disagree with that. However, in my view, it began to create the principle of accountability around state power that was driven through the political negotiations and the Good Friday Agreement and should be at the heart of all that we do. Judicial reviews have served us well.

Therefore, there is tension and downright conflict between that and, now, sending out a message to citizens and communities. As I will explain in a second, that amendment sends out the message to citizens and communities first: it does not send it out to developers. Does anyone think for one moment that a developer who has looked after his own interests for so long will not find ways and means to try to interrogate public policy under what might be law on the far side of the DUP/Sinn Féin amendment? Of course, he will. It is the citizen, community or third-party organisation — and, indeed, it is the National Trust — that will be restricted from going for JR. That is the consequence of what the DUP and Sinn Féin propose.

It may be that DUP members can justify that in their own minds. However, how Sinn Féin members can justify that in their own minds after the good use to which JRs have been put over the past 20 or 30 years is something that they have to explain to themselves and their communities. That is the message that Sinn Féin is sending out.

When it came to the use of plastic bullets, shoot to kill, the Diplock courts, inadequate inquests or other examples throughout the past 30 years, JRs have been the friend of the citizen, the community and, most of all, those in pain.

If you do not want to look at the history of the past 20 or 30 years, look at the history of the past 20 or 30 weeks. What JRs are going on at the moment? There are JRs around the Parades Commission, the murder of a solicitor, and so on and so forth, and there will be more before the Twelfth of July, I presume, given the determinations that may or may not be made by the Parades Commission.

Therefore, let us understand what we are doing here, and let Sinn Féin in particular understand what it is doing here. It is crossing a line that has been jealously guarded, rightly, to protect the citizen and the community from state power. It has crossed that line apparently with its eyes wide open, because the British Government and the DUP dragged it there. That is what has gone on.

The DUP is using this weapon of the amendment as a huge hammer to crack a nut. Last night, I referred to the number of JRs, and that was picked up on in the DUP contributions today. Before touching on that, in the absence of almost all Members of the DUP, I will make this point: what really surprises me about the weakness of the DUP response to today's debate is that I gave it warning yesterday about some of the stuff that I was going to say today. I essentially gave the party warning about what my legal advice was and what my arguments might be on the profile of JRs in the planning system over the past three years compared with the number of applications that have been decided.

Mr B McCrea: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Attwood: I will in a second.

However, it has been utterly silent. Do you know what that tells me? It tells me that the DUP does not care what the arguments are around this amendment, because it has the will and the power and it will force it over the line. That is what debate in the Chamber has been reduced to. You tell people who are opposed to you what you are going to say, but they do not have the respect or the capacity to respond. In the absence of many of them, they just sit there in embarrassed silence. That is a strange way to conduct debate and democracy.

Does the DUP not have a responsibility to explain itself, given the scale of the amendments that it has visited on the House at this late stage? Does it not have a responsibility under basic democratic standards and principles to explain what it is that it is doing, rather than just impose its will, first on Sinn Féin and subsequently on everyone else? What does it say about the quality of our democracy when the law can be fundamentally rewritten and one person contributes on behalf of the DUP? What sort of democracy is that? To go back to some of the comments that I did not answer last night, what sort of a Government are they?

Let us look at this issue of — sorry, I will give way to Mr McCrea now.

Mr B McCrea: I am grateful to the Minister for giving way. He moved on, but I join him in saying this: look at the Benches opposite. For the cameras here: look how empty the Benches are. The Benches —

Mr Anderson: We have more than you.

Mr B McCrea: Mr Deputy Speaker, I am drawing attention to the fact that I am speaking while on my feet and not from a sedentary position. If the Member wishes to speak, the Minister has challenged the DUP to stand up and be accountable on this issue.

I wish to draw attention to the fact — the Minister has gone through this — that this is a fundamental challenge to democracy, to the Belfast/Good Friday Agreement, to judicial reviews and to the legal system, yet nobody is here to answer the charge.

I want the people of Northern Ireland to see this. This is not democracy; this is people riding roughshod over democracy and I support the Minister in his stance on this.

Mr Attwood: That is twice in two days that the Member has supported the Minister on his stance. I am getting worried now, but I am grateful for that.

6.15 pm

The profile of JRs in the planning system over the past three years is that there were four in 2010-11, 11 in 2011-12 and four in 2012-13. There have been 19 JRs. Around 16,000 decisions were made in 2010-11, 14,500 in 2011-12 and around 13,000 in 2012-13. I passed my maths O level, but as I demonstrated recently in the Chamber, I am not very good at maths. I asked Sean Rogers, who was a school principal, to work out the maths for me, and in year 2010-11, the amount of JRs arising pro rata from the number of decisions was 0.025%; in the subsequent year, it was 0.075%; and in the third year, it was 0.0307%. There were 16,000, 14,500 and 13,000, which is 33,500, planning decisions made and there were 19 JRs around them. Does anyone seriously think that the scale of that justifies the scale of this when it comes to the amendment proposed?

The more curious point is where those JRs came from. We were told by Mr Poots when he was here earlier that we have to deal with these developers. Let me tell you about the developers, although I am not going to name them because others got slightly on the wrong side of things yesterday for so doing. I named them to the First Minister and the deputy First Minister when I met them last Wednesday. I named the four, if there are four, developers who may have had the means to go through the courts in order to interrogate planning decisions for whatever reasons, including, and I have no doubt that this is the case, for commercial self interest.

I said that those people, in my view, are trying to frustrate due process on occasion. They may have had good grounds for taking cases forward on other occasions, but that is not the point. The real point is the profile of those who take JRs. That profile confirms that I have taken one, a council has taken one, green NGOs including the National Trust took one, the developers took four and the rest were taken by citizens in communities who were concerned about what was happening to them. To go back to my earlier point that JRs have been used as a weapon to defend the individual, JRs in the planning system have been used as a weapon to defend the individual and the community much more than by developers.

Turning to the Sinn Féin Benches, we are being told by your colleagues in the DUP that this is all about the developers. No, it is not. This is all about the citizens, the communities and the green NGOs. They are the people who substantially take the JRs. Mr Poots comes into the Chamber and makes an argument about developers and legal costs and the legal aid bill without telling the Chamber that the developers do not get legal aid; it is the citizens and the communities who might get legal aid to take the lead applications for JRs. To come into the House and say that there is some connection between the legal aid bill, JRs and developers is not the case and is not accurate. I will not go any further than that in case I end up being unparliamentary.

The legal aid bill, whatever it is, helps the citizen and the community who otherwise do not have the wherewithal to take judicial review applications. Let nobody complain otherwise.

I am glad that Mr Hamilton has now joined us, because I made these points to him yesterday during the debate on the amendment about economically significant zones. I read into the record some of my legal advice to explain why I thought that what they were doing was outside European and convention law.

I will now do the exact same and read into the record the legal advice that I have received in respect of this clause and JRs. I do so primarily because of Mr Boylan's assertions, which were — and I will come back to it when I find the note — that the clause was keeping open most of the opportunities for JR for those who might wish to make the application to the court. Let me explain to Mr Boylan, in particular. I will then have some questions to ask him.

Let me outline the legal advice. First of all, it says that:

“whilst we consider that the restriction of challenge to six weeks is lawful”

— and I will come back to that point —

“and compatible with EU law and the European Convention on Human Rights, we do not consider the limitations on the basis of JR challenge are likely to be so compatible. Planning decisions are generally regarded as determinative of civil rights.”

Then it quotes a number of recent cases:

“However, judicial review is generally required to secure compliance with article 6 of the European convention since decisions by Government, local or national, are not considered to be independent. That is, not independent of the Executive. PAC decisions may be independent, providing that PAC is the final decision-maker since, unlike the Planning Inspectorate in England or the planning authorities in the North, it is an independent body.”

These are the questions for Mr Boylan, if he cares to answer them. He did speak from prepared notes; he clearly had some advice about what the clause meant. This is the critical bit:

“If JR is restricted to EU and ECHR grounds, then we do not consider that this would secure compliance with article 6 of the European Convention on Human Rights, except in a narrow group of cases.”

This is the critical stuff:

“JRs on traditional common-law grounds of breach of procedural requirements, failures of consultation, Wednesbury unreasonableness and the like would not be within the narrow grounds permitted, unless they overlapped with a permitted ground. Eg, some grounds relating to natural justice might overlap with article 6 of the European Convention on Human Rights. Even challenges based on ultra vires would be sought to be excluded.”

What does that legal advice tell us? It tells us that, on four critical bases for JRs, this amendment does not give the citizen and the community the right to go to court. What are those grounds? Procedural requirements, failures of consultation, Wednesbury unreasonableness and ultra vires. What message does that send to the citizens and communities who, for the past 30 years, be it on planning issues or other issues of public policy, have gone to our courts and have been found to be in the right by our courts. Why? Because there was a breach of procedural requirements. Why? Because there was a failure of consultation. Why? Because some public authority acted ultra vires. Why? Because some person or body did not live up under the standards of Wednesbury unreasonableness.

I ask Mr Boylan, who came with some prepared notes, whether he accepts that the amendment proposed by the DUP and Sinn Féin removes from citizens and communities, whatever about developers, the right to seek JR on breach of procedural requirements, failures of consultation, Wednesbury reasonableness, or because a public authority acts ultra vires. Those are fair questions. We have seen the conduct of the DUP this evening. It does not seem to want to engage in the debate. It does not seem to want to answer the questions. Even though it was given advance notice of what I might say today about my legal opinion, it does not seem to have checked it. Maybe it has, and it does not have answers. That may be for it to answer. I ask Sinn Féin to answer those questions, if not now, subsequently. That is the legal advice, and I stand by it.

For those reasons, I say to the House that the content of that amendment is not competent under domestic or European law. Until I am convinced legally that it is otherwise, I will draw that conclusion. In the absence of people being able to share that legal advice and have it interrogated, that is the only conclusion that people have to draw, and those who act otherwise do so with their eyes wide open.

I want to deal with some other issues raised by Mr Boylan. Maybe he or the other parties do not appreciate this, but I can tell you that the SDLP, the party for which I speak, understands it. It goes back to something that I said yesterday about comments made about the CNCC member who spoke to the Committee. The comment was that you demand the right to dissent because there is:

If it takes a while to explain that in this Chamber or anywhere else, I will defend the right of anybody to take whatever time is necessary to explain it. It really was ungracious for anybody in the House to talk about anybody else in the House. It could be me, Mr Allister or God knows who. It could have been Mr Flanagan, who, in a recent debate on the SpAd Bill, rightly took a long time to explain his party's position on its content. I defended his right to do so and told my colleagues that I thought that he was right to do so. The point is that it is not the sound of your voice but the quality of your argument that is important. Whether it is done short or long, you do not, after the years of democratic struggle to be heard in this part of the world, dismiss it in the way that Mr Boylan chose to do.

The only point raised by any Member was the delay in the decision on John Lewis. Mr Poots is not here, nor is any of my other predecessors as Environment Minister. However, I have taken decisions in the past two years that I think could have been pushed on in the previous four. There were also decisions that I could have taken earlier over the past couple of years that would have sent out a big message. John Lewis does not tell the tale of planning in Northern Ireland. If they want to tell the tale of big planning decisions in Northern Ireland, there is a weight of evidence to do so. Runkerry is the proof that, after a decade of delay, a decision can be made. I defend the right of the National Trust to go to court, but, for all the reasons that I explained earlier, I welcome the fact that the court found that the decision was lawful on every one of the 21 grounds of challenge. That sends a message to the development community that decisions that have been around for a long time can be taken, that they can be taken lawfully, that they can be challenged and that, on the far side of that, they can be proven to be lawful. The National Trust has to get its head around that. We, as a community and as politicians, also need to get our head around that when explaining where the planning system is now. I will come back to that point in my concluding remarks.

As I explained last night, the advice that I gave on John Lewis was the right advice because of the consequences for so many town centres, not just in greater Belfast but beyond. Secondly, is it not a curious fact that when it came to the advice that I gave to the planning inquiry on John Lewis that, for all the frenzy that arose around it, the applicant did not push on with the appeal? Is it not curious that he did not do that when it appeared that he had so much political support, so much so that it was discussed at length at three or four Executive meetings? What did it say about Westfield that it aborted the planning appeal, even though people were saying that I had given the wrong planning advice? I leave people to draw their own conclusion. My general conclusion is that the decision to favour in-town and edge-of-town retail over out-of-town retail is a strategic decision that we have to address, deploy and get right over the next period.

I will move on, because I am sure that people want me to. I will deal with a number of the other amendments that I have to speak to, and then I will make some very quick concluding remarks.

First, I will deal with amendment No 24, which is about third-party appeals. As Anna Lo and others know and as, I think, I even told the Committee, I believe in third-party appeals. I think that they should be part of the architecture of our planning system. There should be equality of arms, just as the right to a JR should not be restricted in the way that it is. As I said yesterday, there are issues around JRs, but, in my view, those are at the point of application for leave and thereafter. The critical point is during that decision and the management thereafter. That is not me interfering with judicial independence; it is just my observation. If there is something around the very small number of planning appeals, especially if they have come from one or two developers, given that there are a small number from that source, there are ways in which we have to look at it. However, this is the wrong way.

I believe in third-party appeals. Mr Allister made a fair point. Given what we have seen happening in the Chamber in the past 24 hours, it cautions us to build more checks and balances into the planning system and the operation of public policy. It does not tell me to lessen the checks and balances; it warns me and a lot of other people to build in more checks and balances. That may be what happens over time with the Planning Bill with economic zones, restrictions and JRs. It is not finished yet; let there be no doubt about that. In the next concoction that the DUP comes up with and Sinn Féin goes along with, you will see a junior planning Minister as part of DFP. What Ministry will the DUP always go for? It will always go for the Finance Ministry. That is where we are going next with this. People can draw their own conclusions about whether that is the right or wrong model, and there could be a debate about that.

I agree with the principle of third-party appeals, and I can understand and have great sympathy for why people might think that third-party appeals are more relevant now, given the shape of the law that is getting passed by the Assembly. However, as Anna Lo also said — I think that I explained this to the Committee — a couple of years ago, my judgement was that there were many issues with the planning system that, I felt, I had to deal with in the first instance. The scale of reform and the need for proper decision-making in a speedy manner was more urgent. As officials will confirm, I remember the meeting where, having got the submissions on third-party appeals, I made the judgement call, rightly or wrongly, that, because there were multiple issues in the planning system, I needed to deal with them. For good or ill, that is what I tried to do to make planning better before it is devolved to the councils. I tried to get this Planning Bill through, because it would reconfigure the architecture of planning in advance of devolution to the councils. It was about getting more PDRs out, which is on a massive scale and which is a great economic driver. I say that because the telecommunications and broadband industry will not go for many further planning applications for new masts; it will upgrade the current masts. In doing so, it will be able to expand the telecommunications and broadband network, especially to the areas where coverage is restricted. It was about dealing with article 31 applications and having more challenging timelines for all the other applications and so on. My judgement was that going hard on those issues, for what good it may or may not have produced, was the better strategy.

I also had a wider concern that third-party appeals, when they are in place as they are in the Republic, are the safety net at the end of the process. The processes in the South mean that there is less involvement for communities and citizens in the pre-application period and during the overall consultation process. Therefore, the experience of other jurisdictions suggests that the practice — whether right or wrong — is to limit citizen input in the consultation because they have the protection of a third-party appeal at the end of the decision-making process. Given that we were building into the planning system a pre-application discussion process under this Planning Bill and the Planning Act and given that that was being successfully piloted, certainly in the proposal for the extension to Windsor Park and in respect of Casement Park, my judgement was whether we put on top of the planning a system a mechanism that I thought was right in principle but did so in the wrong way.

I listened closely to Mr Dickson's thoughtful and well-argued speech. It was well crafted and had a lot of content and stuff to challenge you with, but it did not deal with the fundamental point, which is this: what overall shape of planning system do we need? At the moment, the system is more and more front-loaded rather than one that sees a planning appeal at the back end.

Given that that was my judgement before and that I have to try to make balanced and good law, I advised my Executive colleagues not to support this amendment. I know that parties will think and vote differently. I very much regret that the power of the big can be used to frustrate the will of the many in situations where that is not the proper mechanism, as has been outlined in the debate, but that is where we are.

Amendment No 25 provides for an appeal in default of a planning decision. It is a technical amendment. Proposals for pre-application and community consultation contain provision that the Department must refuse to determine an application if the applicant developer is not compliant with the consultation requirements set down by the Department. The Department wants to ensure that if the developer applicant has not complied with the pre-application community consultation requirement, they cannot circumvent that requirement by appealing to the PAC, in default of a decision, to have the commission determine the application. That is useful because it sends a message to developers that there are new standards and higher thresholds, and, if you do not comply with them, you do not have any short circuit to the PAC. In that way, we send a message to developers who want to hear it. I can tell you that some do not want to hear it. Mr Robinson and Mr McGuinness know who I am talking about. I have told them what the consequences of planning decisions that I have made will be. I am absolutely certain that the consequences will be JRs. In my view, there are people who use the planning system and JRs for the wrong reasons, but those people are not a reason to do what the DUP and Sinn Féin propose. To facilitate what I have talked about, the Department needs to amend article 33 of the 1991 Order, which allows for an appeal in normal circumstances. A similar amendment is made to the 2011 Act to ensure front-loading works effectively. I urge Members to support that amendment.

Amendment Nos 28, 29 and 30 are, again, technical. They do not involve any change in policies. They are intended to clarify a policy that may be applied, and they arose, in part, from comments made by the Environment Committee during Committee Stage and at a stakeholder event hosted by the Committee. These technical amendments clarify that the payment of fixed penalties as an alternative to court prosecution, while providing immunity from prosecution for that particular offence, will equate to an initial court conviction and will not provide ongoing immunity for any subsequent offence. Any offender who pays a fixed penalty should be in no doubt that that is not the end of the matter. I reassure Members that this is not a way of making it easy for the offender; it is a way of ensuring that they do what they had to do in the first place and comply with building control. The technical adjustments for this Planning Bill and the corresponding provisions of sections 153 and 154 of the Planning Act are merely intended to provide clarity in how the policy will be applied.

Amendment No 30 is a technical amendment to facilitate amendments tabled by Members and by me and to allow the repeal of amendments to the 1991 Planning Order and powers transfer. I urge Members to support amendment Nos 28, 29 and 30.

It would appear that we are being told that a flawed amendment that frustrates the citizen and community and will have virtually no impact on the figures for who may take judicial reviews from the developers' side is the way to send out the message that Northern Ireland society and its planning system are changing. There are multiple ways to send out the message about the Northern Ireland planning system. Some have been sent out over a number of years, including the past two, and there are many more to send out, but that narrative is out there and is gathering pace. That is the way to send out the message about the planning system.

Let us be frank with ourselves. What sends out the message about change in this society? It is that we deal with the unfinished business of agreement politics. That is what will give investors confidence. That will embed in the mind of those who might want to create jobs, both indigenous and through foreign direct investment, that the character of this place is all that it should be, that this is not just the best place to invest but the best place to live and to recreate and that, in doing so, you will be part of an English-speaking community — other languages are spoken as well, but the first language of many will be English — and part of one of the biggest trading blocks in the world, with some of the best-educated people in the world and with a quality of life when it comes to our natural and built heritage that is unsurpassed on these islands. That is what will send out the message to the investment community.

What will complement that is if we deal with the unfinished business of agreement politics. When we do not deal with the issues of the past and the disappeared; do not conclusively deal with the issue of healing and reconciliation; do not deal conclusively with the issues of flags, emblems and symbols; and do not accept the rule of law and the authority of the Parades Commission when it comes to parades determinations — in all their shapes and forms, I have to add — that sends out the message to the investor community about what the character and content of our politics and our society are. That is where we have to apply our minds, not to these spurious amendments, driven by London and the DUP, imposed on Sinn Féin and now being imposed on the House.

Mr Agnew: At the outset, to follow on from the Minister's remarks, I will outline clearly that the Green Party intends to support amendment No 24, tabled in my name, and oppose amendment No 26. We will also support the Minister's technical amendments and oppose the technical amendments tabled by Peter Weir and Cathal Boylan, because we see them as augmenting the amendment that we opposed yesterday.

Amendment No 26 has caused some discussion, and rightly so. Seeking to restrict legal redress in that way is regrettable and misguided. If my own instincts are anything to go by and, perhaps more importantly, according to the legal advice received by the Minister, they are not only misguided but potentially not competent. I would certainly argue that that is the case.

It has been consistently argued by those who support amendment No 26 and oppose amendment No 24 that the issue is about delay and achieving faster planning decisions. I will repeat what I said yesterday: we do need more speed in planning, but amendment No 26 promotes haste. As was pointed out by Basil McCrea, improving planning, improving the professional nature of our planning system, modernising that system and making it more efficient — to give credit to the Minister, he has sought to achieve that while he has been in office — are the ways in which we should speed up planning, not by restricting legal challenge or denying rights of appeal to third parties.

John Lewis has been used as an example of the evil of judicial review. I think that it was mentioned by Peter Weir and Edwin Poots that the judicial reviews against the John Lewis application were taken by vested interests or rival commercial operators. Mr Poots suggested that they were a lawyers' charter. However, the Minister highlighted the incredibly low number of judicial reviews. I think that in one year it was 0.025%, if I quote him correctly. They are a process of last resort, but bringing a clause into the Bill that states that planners should take regard of economic advantage and disadvantage does exactly what Edwin Poots was concerned that judicial reviews would do: it pits commercial interest against commercial interest and every planning decision at a lower level will be challengeable on this basis even before a decision has been made. We are bringing the divisive nature of competing commercial interests into our planning system lower down and bringing it more to the fore, which is regrettable. As Peter Weir would have it, Northern Ireland is open for business. I would say that it will be wide open for business, and it will be wide open for business challenges because of changes that have already been made.

Cathal Boylan suggested that the motivation behind amendment No 26 was putting jobs and investment first. I would argue that, in denying people a challenge, whether it be through third-party rights of appeal or judicial review, you are saying that people should be subservient to the economy. That is the flawed analysis and flawed economic short-termism that has led us to the point that, when the economy is doing well, people are not necessarily doing well. Ultimately, our aim should be to ensure that people do well in all this. Again, that is why I spoke so much yesterday about the importance of social well-being.

The role of planning is not to grow our economy, particularly when we look at the growth of the economy by using the simple and somewhat flawed measure of GDP. That is not the role of the planning system. The role of the planning system is to ensure sustainable development that is balanced between the needs of communities, the economy and the environment. It is not the role of planning to create growth or fix our economic woes.

Amendment No 26, which is about the restriction of access to judicial review, has been criticised quite strongly by Basil McCrea, who described it as democracy turning on itself. He noted that the price of democracy was vigilance, and he and Mr Allister described the amendment as a move towards a totalitarian system. Indeed, Mr Allister called it a new tool of tyranny to gag the citizens and circumvent the courts. He noted the importance of restraint on the abuse of power and challenged the arrogance of any Government who seek to refuse the right to challenge their decisions. I concur particularly with that final comment.

To err is to be human, and any government is made up of humans. To deny the right to challenge is to suggest that our Ministers are somewhat other than flawed. As Mr Allister and I have pointed out, enough Ministers' decisions have been challenged and overturned by the courts for us to know that our Ministers get things wrong. We should not seek to restrict that challenge. Ultimately, we should seek to get good legislation from this House that fits within wider law.

I now turn to the Green Party amendment on third-party rights of appeal. I liked the Minister's description of it as "equality of arms" — equality between the applicant and the potential objector. The objector may be the community; indeed, as the Minister pointed out, in the case of a judicial review it is more often than not the community rather than well-funded vested interests.

It is unfortunate that, although the clear will of the House is that we should have third-party rights of appeal in our planning system, we will not because of a petition of concern.

I made note of Mr Dickson's speech. There has been some discussion about whether people have had their heart in this debate. Either Mr Dickson has his heart thoroughly in this debate through his speech or he is a fine actor. I suspect that the former is the case. He talked about championing third-party rights of appeal, and I respect and thank him for doing so. He noted that Carrickfergus Borough Council, including its DUP councillors, has unanimously supported third-party rights of appeal. It is important to note that, because many Members will have served on councils. When you have that intimate knowledge of planning applications, the effect that they have and the consternation that they can bring about in local communities when what appear to be bad planning decisions are made, that can only strengthen your resolve to introduce third-party rights of appeal.

Another comment that Mr Dickson made really struck me. He said that poorer areas get poorer developments. There is a lot of truth in that: it is a wide perception, but it is one that I share. In taking power away from communities and moving it elsewhere, whether to OFMDFM or to political parties whose funding sources are unknown, we only exacerbate the problem of poor development in some of our most deprived areas.

I will now deal with the issue of petitions of concern. As Mr McCrea pointed out, we will have two amendments that are supported by the majority of the House blocked by petitions of concern. One of those petitions of concern will prevent the protection of the environment and the other one will prevent third-party rights of appeal, thereby denying citizens and communities extra rights. That is regrettable. The defence that came was, "The DUP can, so it will." That is a fact and that is a flaw in the processes of the House, because it is not a good way to make or, to be more accurate, not make law.

It is time that the issue was looked at, whether by the Committee on Procedures or the Assembly and Executive Review Committee. Ultimately, the Speaker should judge whether a petition of concern meets the criteria that the mechanism was designed for. There is no doubt in my mind that the petition of concern function has been abused on far too many occasions.

Finally, I come back to Mr Weir, who complained about the disparaging remarks that I may have made about his party. I will certainly apologise if I suggested in any way that the DUP is doing anything untoward, corrupt or illegal. If I suggested anything in that regard, I apologise, because I have absolutely no evidence to support it. I do not know who the DUP makes its decisions on behalf of, because I do not know who funds the DUP. To be fair, it is not just the DUP: I do not know who funds the parties in the House. I have particular concerns about those parties that sought to continue the secrecy and lobbied the Government, as they put the Northern Ireland (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill through its latest stage yesterday, to extend the secrecy of political donations. That has been supported by the DUP, the UUP and the SDLP. It is regrettable that Members of the House have campaigned against transparency and the right of the electorate to see how political parties —

[Interruption.]

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order. The Member will resume his seat. I have picked up remarks from my right that are not parliamentary. If it happens again, I will have to take some kind of action. The Member will continue.

Mr Agnew: I am willing to give way to anyone who wishes to come back.

I want to bring my remarks back to the Bill. Whatever amendments we make to planning, whatever processes we put in place and regardless of whether we seek to improve planning as some amendments do — other amendments seek to create bad planning by deregulating it — whatever we do and whatever the views are outside the House about those amendments and our planning system, there will be no confidence in the planning system until we know, as Ms Lo put it, who pulls the strings, how our political parties are funded, and whether decisions are being made on behalf of voters or funders. To those who are concerned about disparaging remarks being made against their parties, I say this: open up your donations, end suspicion, and bring full transparency to political funding in Northern Ireland.

Mr Deputy Speaker: I remind Members that, as I have received a valid petition of concern in relation to amendment No 24, the vote will be taken on a cross-community basis.

Question put, That amendment No 24 be made.

Carrier Bags Bill: Extension of Committee Stage

Ms Lo (The Chairperson of the Committee for the Environment): I beg to move

That, in accordance with Standing Order 33(4), the period referred to in Standing Order 33(2) be extended to 30 November 2013 in relation to the Committee Stage of the Carrier Bags Bill (NIA Bill 20/11-15).

On Tuesday 11 June 2013, the Assembly referred the Carrier Bags Bill to the Committee for the Environment for scrutiny. The Bill will apply charges to a wider range of carrier bags, including cheaper versions of reusable bags, and will allow the Department to make regulations to increase the amount of the levy charged.

At its meeting on 13 June, the Environment Committee agreed to call for written submissions from interested organisations and individuals. In addition to signposting notices in the local press, stakeholders have been contacted directly, and a number have already indicated their intention to respond to the Committee's request for evidence. The Environment Committee firmly believes that it is essential that all stakeholders are given the opportunity to comment on the Bill, particularly as the call for evidence has been made over the summer months. The Committee is also very much aware that there has not yet been time to gauge the impact on consumers and retailers of the initial charge for carrier bags, which was introduced only a short time ago. Therefore, we cannot afford to rush this through without proper and full scrutiny.

The Committee's public call for evidence does not close until 15 August 2013, and we anticipate a high volume of submissions. After considering these, the Committee plans to invite respondents to take part in a stakeholder event so that members have a wider opportunity to explore the views expressed. The Committee will also wish to bring its concerns to the Department for its response. The Committee believes that it is essential that it is afforded the time to exercise its scrutiny powers to the full, and asks that the House supports the motion to extend the Committee Stage of the Carrier Bags Bill to 30 November 2013.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That, in accordance with Standing Order 33(4), the period referred to in Standing Order 33(2) be extended to 30 November 2013 in relation to the Committee Stage of the Carrier Bags Bill (NIA Bill 20/11-15).

Private Members' Business

IF Campaign and G8 Summit 2013

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Business Committee has agreed to allow up to one hour and 30 minutes for the debate. The proposer of the motion will have 10 minutes to propose and 10 minutes in which to make a winding-up speech. All other Members who wish to speak will have five minutes.

Mr McDevitt: I beg to move

That this Assembly welcomes the principles, aims and targets set by the IF campaign; condemns the fact that two million children die from malnutrition each year; recognises the opportunity that hosting the G8 summit presents to call on the eight global leaders to honour their responsibilities to developing countries and to tackling climate change and the associated injustices of hunger, dispossession and human rights violations; and calls on the British and Irish Governments to realise their pledge to contribute 0.7% of their national income to international aid.

I know that it has been a long couple of days' work in the House, and I shall be as brief and succinct as possible. We in the all-party group on international development wanted to bring the motion so that the House would formally have the opportunity to acknowledge not just the event of the G8 meeting at Lough Erne — an event in which we have all been able to take some pride and some opportunity — but the substance of the meeting and the fact that, when the leaders of those very powerful countries come together, they owe a great duty, in fact, arguably the greatest duty, to those in the world who still go to bed hungry.

The IF campaign was led by non-governmental organisations, many of which were faith-based, which were determined to ensure that that summit was the one that would continue to address head on the tragedy of hunger in our world today. They chose to do that by making four simple asks. Those were not, as in previous decades, simply to ask that the developed world be slightly more charitable to the developing world, either through the cancellation of debt or through actual cash support. They were asks about governments, transparency, taxation and the duties that large companies, the developed world and developing countries have to ensure that, when investment does arrive — something that we talk about a lot in the House in the context of our own little region — it arrives in a way that benefits not just the investor but the society that is giving the investor a great opportunity to profit.

I want, very briefly, if it is OK, to read into the record of the House a few words from Jim Clarken, who is the chief executive of Oxfam here in Ireland and a close confidante of the Deputy Chair of the Committee, Mr Wells. Jim wrote an article for the 'Irish Independent' the week before the G8, and I think that his opening paragraph really sums up the poignancy of why a meeting taking place on the shores of Lough Erne to talk about hunger was significant in many ways. He said:

"On the other side of Lough Erne in Co Fermanagh, in a churchyard dotted with the 400-year-old surnames of Irish, Scottish and English settlers, sits an eerie but distinctive site on the Irish landscape. If G8 leaders do nothing else this month, they should take a ramble from their hotel rooms during their summit and remind themselves of what happens when governments fail. In a pit 120 feet by 14 feet lie the bodies of 200 people, a small fraction of the one million who died during the Irish potato famine of 1845 to 1848."

Jim goes on to talk about the famine being a political tragedy and the fact that 150 or 160 years later, arguably, we continue to allow the same sort of political tragedy to occur in the developing world. We allow countries that are resource-rich and have more than enough food to feed their own to fall into famine. When the House meets to talk about the G8, sub-Saharan Africa, parts of Asia or parts of South America, it meets with a very rich history of understanding and appreciating that Governments can fail and that resource-rich, food-rich places can somehow or other end up unable to feed their own. What is different today from 160 years ago is that if you want to go out of your way to conspire to deny your people food or to cause accidentally people to be denied their food, you have to be pretty sophisticated about it.

A very interesting figure emerged one evening when we had a load of schoolchildren upstairs debating the G8 — most of the colleagues who are in the House this evening were there. Eithne McNulty, who heads up Trócaire and is another champion of the development cause here at a regional level, Linda McClelland, who heads up War on Want, and the people from Save the Children and Christian Aid were talking to the kids about some of the hard numbers at the heart of our hunger crisis today.

In Africa, $129 billion a year in tax is embezzled, avoided and evaded — the bottom line is that it is unpaid — by companies that we hold up as paragons of business, of enterprise and of innovation, yet the price of ending hunger in that very same continent is $33 billion. If the G8 did nothing else but clean up the unacceptable level of tax avoidance and evasion in Africa, it would solve much of the hunger crisis on that continent.

I want the House, even if it is only the committed few, to send out a message tonight that we will continue to challenge the United Kingdom Government, the Republic of Ireland Government — particularly when it is in the presidency of the European Union — and the other global powers to demand not only that democracy live, that accountability exist and that transparency be at the heart of their own societies, economies and democracies but that it be there for the people who need it most — the people who have least.

If they get politics that works, democracies that mean something and economies that have stakeholders, where ordinary people feel as though they can make a future for themselves, we will have done them a fantastic service. We will have given them the opportunity to transform themselves.

Mr Deputy Speaker, I thank my colleagues on the all-party group on international development — the internationalists in the House — for agreeing to the motion. Thank you for calling me to move it.

Ms Ruane: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I want to follow on from what —

Mr Deputy Speaker: Conall.

Ms Ruane: Conall, gabh mo leithscéal; tá mé an-tuirseach anois. I want to follow on from what Conall said. Eight hundred and seventy million people go to sleep hungry every night in our world. That is an awful lot of people. They go to bed hungry because we live in a very unequal world, a world of haves and have-nots, a world in which the economic order is created to favour the interests of elites here in Europe and in North America.

In the 1980s, when I was an aid worker in Nicaragua, I watched as the democratically elected Government brought in policies to create real change for their citizens. They had a literacy campaign that won the UNESCO prize for the best literacy campaign in the world. They had a preventative health campaign that won the World Health Organization gold medal. They tried to provide basic food for every family in their country. It may not sound much, but they ensured that every single family got rice, beans, corn and oil every single week.

What was the response of the then US Administration? It was to impose an economic embargo and fund a right-wing militia and an opposition made up of the wealthy and elite.

In El Salvador, 13 families, known as the oligarchy, controlled millions of pounds; and foreign Governments poured in money.

8.15 pm

In South Africa, the US and British Governments, which should have known better, actively supported apartheid and vicious regimes in which millions of black people had no vote. I was an observer at the first free and fair elections in South Africa, at which Nelson Mandela got elected. I hope that people in the House will join me in sending best wishes to Nelson Mandela who, I read, is in a critical condition as we speak. There were very long election days, and in one area I was in, an elderly woman queued for three days in the hot sun. I went up to her and gave her water. I tried to talk to her, but she did not speak English and I did not speak her language. She just said, in her broken English, "Madiba Mandela".

Last December, I visited Gaza a few days after the indiscriminate bombing by the Israeli Government. I sat with parliamentarians from all over Europe in a new school that had been bombed. The United Nations had built that school. We were told that, to build a school, the United Nations had to supply the Israeli Government with its GPS details. They bombed that school as well a hospital, a house in which an entire family was wiped out, and a football field. Israel is one of the biggest recipients of US Government aid.

I join Conall, as will others in this House, in paying tribute to the aid agencies that do so much work to look at the root causes of poverty and hunger. I worked with Trócaire in 1987 when I returned to Ireland after my years in central America.

I also want to pay tribute to the trades union movement, which organised last week — and I have the programme here — innovative, educational and cultural events to highlight world hunger, the waste of resources on unnecessary and criminal militarisation and the need to spend our resources on ensuring that there is food for everyone in the world, not just for some. I support their key demands on tax, land, aid and transparency. I love the title they have, "They Are G8 — We Are 7 Billion."

Following on neatly from a point that Conall made, I want to pick up on the issue of land. I come from Mayo originally, which was disproportionately affected by the famine and was the place in which the Land League was founded. The Land League was very powerful and supported the peasants in three areas: fair rent, fixity of tenure and free sale. Those were three very important things, which were brought together by one of my heroes, Michael Davitt. He understood the importance of land and food and that there was food for everyone. I want to see resources spent on health, education, food security, housing and shelter. We have a responsibility to the 870 million people who go to sleep hungry.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Will the Member draw her remarks to a close, please?

Ms Ruane: Let us do our bit to eradicate that figure.

Mr Copeland: This is a very timely debate, given the recent events in Fermanagh, where the G8 gathered and, according to reports, held a very successful summit, proving that Northern Ireland is open for business.

The Ulster Unionist Party fully supports the principles, aims and targets set by the IF campaign and has been most impressed with the dedication and lobbying of all those involved in what is such a vital and worthwhile campaign. It is a disgrace, an embarrassment and an indictment of the international community that each day at least one person in every eight goes to bed hungry despite the world producing more than enough food for everyone to eat.

As set out in the wording of the motion, the G8 presented an opportunity for world leaders to honour their commitments to developing countries and the associated injustices of hunger, dispossession and human rights violations. With that in mind, the Ulster Unionist Party is pleased to welcome the G8 communiqué, which, if implemented appropriately across all the G8 nations, will lead to reforms in tax, land and trade, which could further reduce poverty across the globe.

So, while the Ulster Unionist Party welcomes the commitments, we encourage the G8 to look further into developing these commitments and, if possible, to ensure that there is an end to the scourge of world hunger and the shame of tax avoidance and that the West's commitments to developing nations are truly met.

I, personally, welcome and support the last part of the motion, which calls on the UK and Irish Governments to realise their pledge to commit 0.7% of their national income to international aid. Without doubt, austerity has impacted on much of our society. With the public sector cuts across the board, we must not forget our commitment to those around the world who live in dire poverty that threatens their life every day. As has been said, the United Kingdom was among the first to produce the 0.7% of GDP. The advice of even the highest echelons of the army is that it would be short-sighted and foolish to cut this money. Committing that money to international development is not only the right thing to do but the smart thing to do. I find it incredible that, by 2015, aid from the UK Government will have secured schooling for more people than are educated in the United Kingdom for one fortieth of the cost. It will help immunise more than 55 million children, young people and adults against preventable diseases, helping to save a child's life every two minutes.

The truth is that, all over the world just as here, people are born, they live, they laugh, they dance, they meet, they fall in love, they have children, and they die. Very shortly, there will be more mobile phones in the world than people. I do not think that this country, any country or the world should be run for the benefit of the corporations. The world must be run for the benefit of the people — not some of the people, but all of the people. I hope that we, through our support for this, will play a small part in making the world a better place for everybody.

Mr Lyttle: I welcome the cross-party support for the motion. It is reflective of the cross-community support for international development that we have across Northern Ireland. As a member of the Assembly group on international development, I am delighted to have an opportunity to recognise the creativity and commitment of the many people and organisations who united around the IF Enough Food for Everyone campaign and made sure that hunger and, in particular, the key issues around tax, land, aid and transparent government were put firmly on the agenda of the G8 leaders' summit in Northern Ireland.

I want to recognise the hard work of people like Tim Magowan of Tearfund, organisations like Save the Children, Trócaire, Concern and fantastic artists such as Marie Lacey and the Belfast Community Gospel Choir, Duke Special, Two Door Cinema Club, Beyond Skin and the excellent Harry Hamilton, who supported the IF concert that my Alliance colleagues and I and many other people attended at a very, very wet Botanic Gardens in advance of the G8 summit. That was an excellent occasion and one of the many creative ways in which the IF campaign put these issues firmly on the agenda.

I would also like to recognise the work of my Alliance Party colleague and Member of Parliament for East Belfast, Naomi Long, who has worked closely with the IF campaign and was able to raise the concerns of young people from east Belfast directly with the Prime Minister at Westminster. Naomi has also sought to ensure that the UK Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Department for International Development help to create land registries that protect farmers against displacement. The Alliance Party will certainly work to ensure that the Government develop that issue even further.

It was the collective creativity and hard work of everyone involved in the IF campaign and indeed many other campaigns around G8 that contributed to the achievement of a set of commitments set out in the Lough Erne declaration. I believe that the noise of many united voices contributed to a historic statement that called for new rules on tax information exchange to be obeyed. That will help developing countries access the information that they need to receive the money to which they are entitled and that will help them achieve more development.

The IF campaign held the UK to its promise to become the first G8 Government to ever spend 0.7% of national income on aid, despite a difficult economic climate. The Lough Erne declaration does not go far enough in confirming specific details of how measures set out in the summit will be delivered, but we have to ensure that the momentum gathered by the IF campaign is not lost. Progress can be made in these areas as a result of the declaration. It would be a significant step towards addressing hunger and a fantastic legacy of Northern Ireland's contribution to the G8. The G8 communiqué is only the beginning, and a great deal more work will be required to turn the pledges into concrete action. There has been some criticism, and the final agreement could have had more detail. Indeed, the word "should" was mentioned 13 times but the word "will" was not mentioned at all. In my opinion, the detail in the communiqué will help the agenda moving forward.

It is important that we do not lose sight of the challenge before us, but ending global hunger is not as far-fetched as it may sound. One of the world's greatest leaders, Nelson Mandela, reminds us that poverty is man-made and that the solution can be man-made also. John F Kennedy said:

"we have the means, and we have the capacity to eliminate hunger from the face of the earth in our lifetime. We need only the will."

The IF campaign and its thousands of supporters proved that the will is there in Northern Ireland, and it is our collective responsibility to continue the campaign to secure action for those who desperately need it most and to sustain our call on the G8 leaders to take the bold steps necessary to build a world free from hunger and full of hope.

Mr Agnew: In my teenage years, I had the laudable ambition of going to Africa to work to combat poverty, but I soon realised that, as somebody with a philosophy degree, I would probably have little to offer those people in practical terms. Much as asking people, "You feel hungry, but are you really?" might have seemed a clever question to a philosopher, it would not have offered much help.

After taking on the principle that I still hope to adopt today of thinking global and acting local, I worked with the local homeless to tackle poverty in my backyard. I then moved on to politics, and I try, in my politics, to keep that philosophy of thinking global and acting local. In everything that we do in the House, the importance of which cannot be denied, there is no issue greater than global hunger that should occupy any of us. Global hunger is exacerbated by climate change, and we can impact that through our policies in Northern Ireland and in our actions as citizens as well as politicians. Aid agencies will tell you that, when you work in developing countries in the global south, it is not a question of if or when climate change happens; the question is about the impact that climate change is having now on many of our poorest communities around the world.

I support the IF campaign message. There is enough food to feed everyone if we seek to end tax evasion and avoidance. We must be willing to tackle climate change and, most importantly and more challengingly, to look beyond our own economic self-interest as a nation and seek to rebalance global economics and end extreme poverty, particularly in the global south. Over 200 aid agencies, human rights organisations and other campaign groups, including trade unions, have been involved with the IF campaign, and many of them do the real work that I would have liked to do. I pay tribute to their campaigning efforts and to all those volunteers and workers who go out and tackle poverty head-on and see the devastation that our economic policies and way of life sometimes inflict on other parts of the world.

Although there will be some who will say that we are in times of austerity and we have to look after our own, the millions of pounds that our citizens in the UK and Ireland donate to these agencies suggests that that is not the view of the majority. Our citizens will support the call on the UK Government and the Irish Government to contribute 0.7% of their national income to international aid. I welcome that the House will support that call, and I ask the Governments to listen to it and to do it.

8.30 pm

Mr Ford: I do not intend to detain the House too long at this time of night, but I want to add a few words to what has been said. In proposing the motion, Conall McDevitt referred to the history of this island. I suspect that that history is part of the reason why people throughout Ireland, particularly Northern Ireland in our context, are so generous in their giving to development charities. It is also probably why we have such a high number of people who go on either short-term or long-term service overseas, seeking in some cases to take the gospel or in other cases to take education or their skills as engineers or in the medical field. We should certainly be grateful for that, but we have to recognise that, however good that is, there is a further need beyond the charity and the personal service, and it is around political action. That is why it is such a pleasure to have the opportunity to commend the work that the IF campaign has done over recent times. It has highlighted in such a creative, imaginative and positive way what can be done to feed the world, if we answer the many questions.

Having stood beside Chris Lyttle and got soaked in Botanic Gardens a couple of Saturdays ago, I am happy to join him in saying what a worthwhile exercise it was. It was a wonderful mixture of entertainment and serious hard campaigning in recognition of the facts of the world in which we live. Given the global village that we now are and the communications that we have, including the iPads and whatever that a number of Members have in front of them in the Chamber at the moment, there is no excuse for our people not to be informed. A century and a half ago, it may have been that people in one part of Ireland did not know what was happening in another part of Ireland; we now know exactly what is happening in the world. That has to be part of what reminds us all of our responsibilities as those who are among the top 10% — probably the top 2% or 3% — in income, food security and general welfare.

Unusually for me, I want not only to call on the Governments but to praise David Cameron. We saw in the previous Government some good work that Gordon Brown did on the Jubilee 2000 campaign on the cancellation of debt. That had not to stop there but to be a basis for taking things further. The commitment that David Cameron's Government have given to protect the aid budget at a time when a number of other budgets are being cut is a very positive statement about the role that the UK sees itself having on the world stage and about its responsibilities as one of the key nations in the G8. The fact that the Taoiseach was also in Fermanagh to represent the EU is another positive statement of involvement in a slightly wider sphere not only on a cross-border basis but on the basis of persuading other EU countries of their responsibilities. Countries such as some of the Scandinavian countries and the Netherlands are committed to going in line with this call to meet the 0.7% of GDP target for Britain and Ireland, and there is no doubt that we should seek to encourage the EU as a whole to go that way.

Four years ago, I had the pleasure of visiting a village in a remote part of Nigeria where people were becoming sick literally because in many cases the river where they got their water was where they also did their washing. Indeed, cars and children were washed beside where people were accessing drinking water. Last year, thanks to aid from this part of the world, a deep well was dug there, which means that many of the people in that village are now able to access clean water. That is the kind of small-scale project that can make a difference, but we also need the kind of points that were highlighted by the IF campaign: transparency; ensuring that taxes are paid fairly; and ensuring that we build trade as well as aid. One of the crucial things about the IF campaign was the way in which that message was put across and got across to the media during the time of the G8.

I may be back in the House next week talking about the rather more mundane issue of what it cost to stage the G8. However, one of the key things for me was the way that the G8 ran because of the creative and positive way in which those highlighting important issues like the IF campaign did their work.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Will the Member please draw his remarks to a close?

Mr Ford: They got publicity for positive engagement, and it was the kind of positive engagement that we must continue to encourage our two Governments to continue.

Mr Wells: I thank all those who took part in this important debate. I suspect that the only lighter moment in all this was the advice given by one protest group on the mainland of the United Kingdom. Advising protesters on how to get to the Lough Erne hotel, they said, "Take the ferry to Belfast and then the train to Enniskillen". [Laughter.] I am afraid that, unless they did that in about 1964, I do not think that there was any prospect of a train to Enniskillen.

Mrs Foster: Nineteen fifty-seven.

Mr Wells: The year I was born.

Everyone is very pleased at how successful the G8 was, how smoothly it went and the lack of any form of significant disruption or protest. It reflected well on Northern Ireland that that happened. We welcome the various discussions at the G8 on international development. Conall McDevitt outlined the main purpose of the IF campaign and who was supporting it. He reminded us that even County Fermanagh, 160 years ago, suffered deprivation very similar to what is occurring in most of sub-Saharan Africa. He indicated that a mere £30 billion — it sounds a lot but, in the overall scheme of things, is not — would solve the poverty problem in Africa.

Caitríona Ruane spoke about her experiences in Nicaragua and mentioned the importance of the literacy campaign and the provision of food for all in that small central American country. It showed what could be done if government is really pledged to alleviating poverty.

Michael Copeland, on behalf of the Ulster Unionist Party, said that they were enthusiastic supporters of the IF campaign and decried the fact that one in eight people goes to bed hungry every night, which is a terrible indictment of our society. He praised the fact that the United Kingdom had reached the target of 0.7% of GDP. It is worth pointing out that the Irish Republic has come closer to and may, in fact, have met that target. However, unfortunately, because of the significant decline in the Irish Republic's GDP the 0.7% does not represent as much as it used to; in the boom days, it was a far more significant amount of money.

That 0.7% is a very reasonable target. It still means that the Western World and North America have 99.3% of GDP to look after their own needs. So therefore, though it is a very realistic target, it is not overly generous. However, it is significant that, even in difficult and trying economic times, that target has been met. That is to be applauded. I noticed that several Members said that David Cameron, our Prime Minister, was to be congratulated on that, and I would have to say also that Enda Kenny and his predecessors in the Republic made that a priority.

Chris Lyttle, who, like many others, sat through that concert in the rain, felt that it had been a very worthwhile effort, and, certainly, all the artists gave their services, I understand, free of charge. It was a very important way of allowing young people to express their support for the IF campaign and to raise issues of concern about international development in a very peaceful and non-threatening way. There certainly was no trouble at that concert, and it was a testament to the organisers, particularly to my friend Jim Clarkin and all those in the international development agencies who were so active in its organisation. Chris praised the work of Naomi Long at Westminster in raising the profile of international development. He said that the G8 communiqué did not go far enough and that the content was shrouded in words like "may" or "should" rather than "will". We accept that the document could have gone an awful lot further.

Steven Agnew mentioned the fact that climate change is not a matter of "if" — it is happening now, it is with us, and, if we do not deal with it, it will cause tremendous destitution to many communities throughout the world. He also praised the active involvement of the 200 agencies involved in the IF campaign. It was a remarkable piece of organisation to get all those disparate groups together to organise such an effective campaign.

David Ford indicated how generous the people of both Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic were in supporting international development. Indeed, I had very practical experience of that recently. The First Minister, Mr McDevitt and I attended a fundraising event for Fields of Life at La Mon Hotel a few weeks ago and, in one evening, £80,000 was raised for work in Uganda. I think that that is extraordinary in the present economic conditions. Between them, 500 people raised an amazing total, so congratulations to them. Obviously, the First Minister must have put in a very generous cheque that evening. That shows just how committed Northern Ireland people are to this. We saw the huge support that there was for fundraising efforts for the tsunami disaster eight years ago. Northern Ireland people can take some self-praise for what we have achieved. It is something that we do well as a community, and we know that a large number of people in the Province are committed to it.

In August, I had the privilege of going to Tanzania with Jim Clarken and Oxfam to see its work at first hand. There was one rather amusing incident. I went with Pat Breen, who is Chairman of the Oireachtas Committee on Foreign Affairs and Trade in the Dáil. He was representing the Dáil and I was representing the all-party group here in Northern Ireland. One day, the photographer arrived, took my picture and asked for my details. The following day in the Tanzanian press, I was shown as "Jim Wells, Chairman of the Oireachtas Foreign Affairs Committee", which I certainly am not. I can assure you, Mr Deputy Speaker, that I hope that I never have to stand for that position. I do not know how they described Mr Pat Breen, but we all had a laugh when we saw that in the paper, which had clearly got its facts mixed up.

Much more seriously, in Tanzania we saw a community that can feed itself, but that will go absolutely nowhere in terms of international development until it deals with the fundamental issue of how it treats women. In Tanzania, women are treated as mere chattels. We met chieftains who said that they had 35 cows, which entitled them to one wife. Some were up to 69 cows and they were hopeful that they would get a second wife the next week. Their ultimate aim was to have a third wife. The purpose of the wife was to tend the cattle and to produce children to help with the farming activities. What was even more sinister was that we learnt of men who, when a female child was born, went round the huts and booked that child for marriage in 12 years. It is absolutely appalling that that female child's life is determined from the day she is born to be yet another wife to a leading herdsman in the tribe.

Women in Tanzania have no chance of education beyond the age of 13. Those who do are remarkable women: they are incredibly powerful, active and well educated, and they are leaders in the community. Unfortunately, very few of them get the chance to get past education at 13 because, by that stage, they are expected to be either betrothed to be married, or married off already in a polygamous marriage. Tanzania knows that, and it knows that it is going to get absolutely nowhere until it deals with that problem, which is fundamental.

The problem in Tanzania is not food, per se; the problem is that 51% of the population live wretched lives. It is a structural issue. We know that we have the solution to those problems. The first solution is that we have to stop land grabs. We saw huge parts of Tanzania that had been grabbed by multinational companies for game ranching where the native farmers had been driven off.

Secondly, we have to deal with the issue of encouraging all western societies to reach the 0.7% development assistance target. Thirdly, we have to have some form of sensible taxation system in the global economy. It is appalling that Apple has cash reserves of $120 billion that it has built up by using very clever means to avoid taxation anywhere it operates in the world. We have all read recently of Starbucks and other companies, including Google, that manage, by very subtle sleights of hand, to send vast amounts of taxable income offshore. Apple must be selling a phenomenal number of computers in Dublin, because all the receipts go through one office where there is much reduced taxation. Those clever ploys are being used throughout the world. Starbucks has a licensing agreement with Luxembourg. It makes a token loss in the United Kingdom because it pays a huge sum through a Luxembourg-based company for the use of its rights.

8.45 pm

If all those companies throughout the world paid their fair share of taxation, particularly in African countries, that would go a long way to provide the much-needed income for development in those countries. Huge amounts of money are sloshing around the world economy from one tax haven to another and not being used to sustain indigenous communities.

We have the solution but are a long way from it. The G8 was a step in the right direction. I am glad that it found time, among so many other issues, to deal with this important matter. I am hopeful that we are getting there. I congratulate everyone in the IF campaign.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Will the Member draw his remarks to a close?

Mr Wells: It was timely and successful, and well done to all those involved in bringing so many together to hit the target as far as this important issue is concerned.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly welcomes the principles, aims and targets set by the IF campaign; condemns the fact that two million children die from malnutrition each year; recognises the opportunity that hosting the G8 summit presents to call on the eight global leaders to honour their responsibilities to developing countries and to tackling climate change and the associated injustices of hunger, dispossession and human rights violations; and calls on the British and Irish Governments to realise their pledge to contribute 0.7% of their national income to international aid.

Motion made:

*That the Assembly do now adjourn. —
[Mr Deputy Speaker.]*

Adjournment

Economic Development: Down District

Mr Deputy Speaker: The proposer of the topic will have 15 minutes, the Minister will have 10 minutes to respond and all other Members who are called to speak will have approximately six minutes.

Mr Hazzard: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Members who have stayed behind to participate in the debate and, indeed, the Minister. I am grateful to her for taking the time to respond to the debate. Members will be glad to know that I got rid of a few pages from my speech and will certainly not need anywhere near those 15 minutes.

As with any debate of this nature, some of the issues that I will cover undoubtedly fall outside the remit of Minister Foster and her Department. However, I am sure that there is an Executive colleague of others, such as the Minister for Regional Development, who I may touch on, so permit me latitude to set an appropriate context to our discussion.

In recent months, 'The Down Recorder' ran a special feature on what could only be described as the abject failure of local government and associated organisations to build economic prosperity in Down district over the past 20 years. The editorial synopsis was forthright and, to a large extent, long overdue. With the people of Down district bearing the brunt of that failure, the image of another generation of young people maturing under that blanket of economic woe undoubtedly struck a chord with not just the local business community but with the vast majority of local people who are fed up languishing in Down district while watching neighbouring areas progress at what they feel is their expense.

Figures in the local media last week suggested that at 22% below the North's average, Down district average incomes ranked with Strabane and Limavady as the weakest of all local districts in the North. The example of neighbouring Newry and Mourne district was held up as proof that great economic improvements could be implemented with the right leadership and vision, with more than 1,200 foreign investment jobs promoted with the help of Invest NI (INI) in the past five years alone.

We in Down district have had to make do with a meagre 15 foreign investment jobs in five years — a paltry return, no doubt everybody will agree. It is a depressing situation, hammered home by the sight of nearly 4,000 cars leaving the district every morning taking people to work in Belfast. Down district remains the highest commuting district in the North, and with fuel prices going through the roof, the people of Down district know only too well the financial impact of such an inglorious title.

To many, the solution to those failings is an increased relocation of public sector employment. Given the great buzz that emanated from the recent decision to relocate the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development's (DARD) fisheries division to the district, perhaps there is some merit to that argument. Despite the objection by many observers that the decentralisation of public sector jobs to the district is lazy and short-sighted, we must recognise the demographics and dynamics of local employment trends in the district.

A recent Oxford Economics report highlighted the fact that one third of workplace employee jobs in Down district were in the public sector, making the Down economy much more dependent on the public sector than all other surrounding council areas. A further 1,000 indirect jobs are estimated to be sustained locally by that public sector employment. However, a high concentration of public sector jobs in the Downpatrick area meant that the town and adjacent area were most negatively impacted by recent public sector job losses and relocations out of the area over the past decade or so. That negative impact has been felt in direct job losses as well as indirect and induced impacts on sectors from which the public sector procures goods and services.

Without doubt, a sustained and planned relocation of public sector jobs to Downpatrick would achieve a large net impact and could play a huge role in improving economic prosperity for all in Down. With that in mind, I wrote to each Department this week to ascertain what plans it might have to decentralise services and jobs to the area. No doubt it will be very interesting to see what plans are in the pipeline.

In the light of such potential opportunities, I also welcome the establishment of a public sector jobs task force in the Down district area. It has dovetailed well with the local business community and local representatives. This Thursday, I will be hosting the launch of its brochure inviting the decentralisation of public sector employment to the district, as we continue to strengthen that vital aspect of local employment.

However, it is important to stress that, although important, the relocation of public sector employment must not be viewed as the silver bullet to our economic situation in Down district. Compared with surrounding districts, the private sector in Down created relatively few private sector jobs during the past two decades. Indeed, the baseline outlook for Down's private sector has weakened considerably over recent years, and, worryingly, if Down were to lose a significant number of public sector jobs, there does not appear to be any major private sector investment in the pipeline to cushion any blow to the local economy.

Without doubt, we, like most districts across the North, seriously need to strive to grow our private sector economy across the district. It is a scenario that will face all aspects of government in the years ahead. Indeed, the ambitious targets inherent in the Programme for Government commitments, such as the creation of 25,000 jobs, the capture of £375 million worth of foreign investment and the desire to increase tourism revenue to £700 million, suggests that if the appropriate framework and support is established, Down district can be well placed to take advantage of such opportunities.

In that regard, it is worth noting that Invest NI has a total of 112 acres of landholding in the Down district area, 50 of which are available for immediate development on the Clough road on the outskirts of Downpatrick. All that land is apparently held in support of economic development, and we are told that it is proactively marketed to foreign and indigenous investors. Without doubt, the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (DETI) and local government have a huge amount of work to do in order to utilise such holdings, and I will be interested to hear from the Minister tonight of any plans that may be in the pipeline for that sort of thing.

Invest NI is sometimes held up as an easy target. We must praise an organisation when it does well, and, recently, Invest NI has improved massively. It has great potential for helping growth in areas such as Down district, so this should not in any way be seen as any sort of veiled attack on Invest NI.

Furthermore, the development of the Downpatrick Business Centre has stalled in recent years, as Invest NI has been unable to fill a number of its units. Analysis indicates that the present policy dictating that the units must be used for manufacturing business models is limiting the appetite in the park. It is with that in mind that Sinn Féin has called for the policy to be amended to allow for small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) to trade in the park and for Invest NI to promote the area in that regard through a new marketing strategy and a relaunch of the facility's potential.

However, while discussing the challenges facing us in attracting investment into the district, and, indeed, the potential for the continued relocation of public sector employment, we must recognise the single biggest hurdle — the poor transport and connectivity features of the area.

When the Bain review announced its agenda for action in 2008, it identified transport and connectivity as the major constraining factors in any future expansion of public and private sector employment. Once again, the extent of such constraints was revealed last week, when the Minister for Regional Development, Danny Kennedy, confirmed to me that Down district received a mere 2% of all capital investment in road infrastructure in the past five years. When you bear in mind the very dispersed, rural nature of the area and the urgent need to upgrade various main routes, it beggars belief that we in the district of Down receive such a low figure. Priority projects, such as the Ballynahinch bypass and the upgrade of the Belfast to Downpatrick and Downpatrick to Newry roads have clearly fallen off the agenda in Roads Service.

How are we going to grow local business opportunities if we continue to receive such meagre assistance from central government? Down district requires serious investment to improve its roads infrastructure and transport connectivity. For too long, we have been the poor relations, and despite rejections to the contrary, the statistics tell the story.

It is clear that a failed political culture of complacency and a stagnant satisfaction with the status quo has not served the people of Down well over the past 30 years. It is high time that we gave our young people hope for the future and an economically prosperous future at home in Down district.

Mr Wells: I concur with much of what Mr Hazzard said. Down district has many attributes; it has many things going for it. Unfortunately, structurally, it has significant economic problems. First, it has an excellent education system. It has schools such as Down High School and St Patrick's Grammar School, and, more recently, the colleges of further education. We are very fortunate in Down district.

We now have three brand new, state-of-the-art colleges of further education in Ballynahinch, Newcastle and Downpatrick. I have been round all of them. They are doing excellent work to train young people for future employment possibilities. The area has an excellent tourism product.

The fundamental problem with Down district, however, is that the vast majority of people who live there are not employed in the area. In order to see that shown graphically, one just has to stand in the main street of either Ballynahinch or Saintfield on any weekday morning and see the vast number of people leaving Down district to work in the greater Belfast and Lisburn areas. We really need to try to redress that balance.

It reminds me of Newry and Mourne, when I was first elected to this House in 1982 and when Newry was part of my constituency. At that stage, Newry was the ultimate basket case. After Strabane, it had the second-highest unemployment rate in western Europe. The sagebrush was almost blowing down the middle of Hill Street. People despaired. Then, what happened to Newry? Three or four home-grown entrepreneurs from Newry came on board and, basically, pulled that town — or city as it is now — by the bootstraps. People of the calibre of Eddie Haughey, Gerard O'Hare, Feargal McCormack and Gordon Coulter arrived on the scene. They built up manufacturing companies, some of which have survived very well even to this day. I realise that Coulter Construction has faced terrible times as a result of the recession. However, Norbrook Laboratories has come through the recession practically unscathed, although with great difficulties. It now employs well over 12,000 people. Gerard O'Hare invested money in Newry when no one else would touch it. He built the Quays Shopping Centre, which has been a great success.

So, we found local entrepreneurs, who came along and were given support by LEDU and IDB, as they were — more recently, INI. Companies were nurtured with considerable success. What we need to do in Down district is to identify the Eddie Haugheys and Gerard O'Hares. We need to find people who, if they are given a little bit of support from organisations such as Invest Northern Ireland, could take the opportunities that are clearly there to develop those communities. Unfortunately, at present, I do not think that we have identified those people yet. However, I believe that they are out there. The South Eastern Regional College (SERC) and the schools are producing those types of entrepreneurs.

In the meantime, while that is happening, we also need to bring a big state-controlled employment opportunity to Down district. On Thursday week ago, I visited a new police victims unit which has been set up in a palatial multi-storey building in Bedford Street. I asked them how they did their work. They said that it is all done by phone. I asked where they could be based. They said that they could be based in Timbuktu and still do the work. I asked whether they had ever thought about placing themselves in Down district or south Down. They said no: they could not do that. The total disbelief in their faces about the prospect of doing the work from Down district was laughable. It had never occurred to them that that could happen. I believe the catalyst that could move Down district forward until private investment and enterprise really gets to grip in the district is to bring a large public-sector back-office to the area.

I applaud the decision taken to move DARD from Dundonald House, which I always thought was a ridiculous place for it, to Ballykelly in east Londonderry. I think that that will have a most enormous benefit for that community. I think that Down district should be considered for a similar move. For example, do we really need to have hundreds of officials in the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety working from Castle Buildings when their work could be done on the internet or by telephone from any part of Northern Ireland? The movement of 200 or 300 jobs from the congested greater Belfast area into Down district would have a significant pump-priming effect on the economy of the Down district. Yet, time and again, we seem to be overlooked when those decisions are made.

I applaud the decision to move fisheries branch from Dundonald House to Downpatrick. However, although it is very welcome, when one analyses the number of jobs, one sees that its effect is more symbolic than real. At the last count, they were talking about jobs of fewer than double figures. I welcome that. Wherever it moves to — I think that it is moving to the new Down council site at Downshire — I will cut the ribbon there, but we need something much more significant than that. We can now say that we have the premises. I have to applaud the council on the excellent site that it has now established on the Ardglass Road. We now have an Invest Northern Ireland site, with plenty of capacity, on the Belfast Road and the site on the Ardglass Road. The capacity is there to move jobs to Down district.

9.00 pm

Mr Deputy Speaker: Will the Member draw his remarks to a close.

Mr Wells: I believe that if that happens, there is a bright future for that area.

Mr Rogers: I welcome the opportunity to speak in this Adjournment debate. It is good to get Down district on the agenda.

A socio-economic report was commissioned by Down District Council in 2012, and it is going to be used by the council to inform future economic policies. We are in the grip of a recession, and like all the other areas, Down district has suffered heavily. We depend a lot on farming, fishing and construction. Total income from farming has dropped by 50% in real terms. Added to that, we have had higher than average rainfall and heavy snowfall, which devastated many family farms in Down district.

Our Ardglass fishermen, along with their colleagues in Portavogie and Kilkeel, have had to contend with bad weather, quotas, Isle of Man fees and gear changes, but they have received no hardship payments.

The collapse of the construction industry right across the island has had devastating effects on the area, and construction workers have travelled across Ireland and further afield to get work.

The farmers, fishermen and construction workers, and their families, spend their money locally. When they do not have the money to spend, the results are obvious in the towns and villages, with closing down sales and closed-down shops. The report found that there are enough jobs in Down district for one in two of the working population, and one in three of those living in Down district commute out of the area. Downpatrick is ranked sixteenth out of 19 rural hubs for connectivity because of accessibility issues to key transport corridors.

We in south Down do not believe that we need an amendment to a Planning Bill to create preferential economic areas, because they already seem to exist, but Down district certainly is not one of them. However, I believe that we are moving to a new era in the relationship between the council and Invest Northern Ireland. I must pay tribute to Mr Mark Bleakney, southern regional manager, for his help over many years. As you can imagine, I have had many encounters with Invest NI in both council areas. You win some, and you lose some.

There are many good stories from entrepreneurs in south Down. One of the most recent was from a local boat builder who was full of praise for the help he got from Invest NI to develop his business. A Castlewellsan businessman had a similar story. The jobs fund, business investment projects and support for business in neighbourhood renewal areas are all good stories. Then there is the not-so-good news, when jobs promoted do not match up in any way with jobs created, and entrepreneurs are snowed under with bureaucracy and form-filling.

I recently spoke to the chief executive about the promotion of "raising finance" workshops. There is none from Shaw's Bridge right round to Newry, and I hope that that will be addressed in the future. I subsequently met Invest NI staff and found them — from the CEO down — to be very helpful.

I welcome the setting up of an office in Down District Council headquarters so that clients can meet Invest NI there instead of having to go to Newry. There is a great entrepreneurial spirit in Down district, which I witnessed at the recent Down business awards. I welcome the support from Invest NI and others on the night. However, Down district — in fact, right across south Down — needs the same treatment as Belfast or the Causeway Coast.

I believe that there is some joined-up working at a local level to begin to address the lack of economic activity in Down district. Council officers are working with Invest NI to develop a council action plan. Similarly, they are working with the Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) to develop a strategic tourism project. We have so much potential right across Down district, from St Patrick's Trail to Dundrum castle and beyond, but we need input from central government. There are major opportunities in agrifood and renewable energy, but that does not just happen without central government support. In fact, we will only realise the true potential of Down district if we have joined-up government working for all the people. It cannot all be left to DETI, and I am glad that the Minister is here tonight. All Departments have a major role to play.

As Mr Wells said, education and innovation really are key to our economy's recovery. We have good schools in Down district that work closely with SERC. We need to ensure that our young people have the right skills for the world of work. All our businesses, from macro to large employers, need the support of the Executive.

Mrs Dobson: I am pleased to be able to speak in the Adjournment debate this evening. The area of Down district is made up, in the most part, of the South Down constituency. However, as an MLA for Upper Bann, I welcome the opportunity to contribute to a debate about my neighbouring constituency.

The economy, quite rightly, remains the number one priority of the Executive, as set out in the Programme for Government. However, we must ensure that the advancement of that priority happens as fairly as possible on a geographical basis. We should not allow a situation in which all our resources are being ploughed into a selected number of areas. That would result in Down district, for example, suffering a further lack of economic development, as the title of the Adjournment debate suggests.

I would like to focus for a moment on one such area that concerns me, and that is the number of business start-ups across constituencies. Although I fully understand that Invest NI does not seek to target specific geographical areas, it cannot be right that there is a considerable disparity in the number of indigenous business start-ups from one area to another. In Strangford, for example, where Down District Council has some overlap of jurisdiction, there were only 477 start-ups over the past five years. That is less than half the number in constituencies such as Fermanagh and South Tyrone, East Londonderry and West Tyrone.

I also want to take the opportunity to raise the issue of tourism in Down District Council area. The area boasts some of the most beautiful countryside that Northern Ireland has to offer. I am thinking specifically of Delamont Country Park, Castle Ward near Strangford and Slieve Donard, one of the Mourne mountains that has Newcastle at its base. The area caters for everything from fishing, golfing and sailing to many other leisure activities, and this sector is deserving of our continued support. It is fundamental to the economic well-being of the region that the tourism action plan being taken forward by the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment takes full account of what it has to offer.

As my party spokesperson on agriculture and rural development, I am all too aware of the value of the agrifood sector to our economy, not least in the constituency of South Down. The industry has sustained our economy throughout an extremely challenging recession, and we know all too well the plight of farmers and falling incomes. Indeed, I brought a motion to the House recently on that very issue. We also know that fishermen continue to struggle, not least because of poor weather conditions and little or no help coming from the Agriculture Minister. I am pleased that we now have an agrifood strategy in place that sets challenging targets, which, in Tony O'Neill's words last night, are stretching. I hope that the Executive can be equally stretching when it comes to the £400 million required and meeting all the targets set out in the plan.

In conclusion, I want to mention two significant economic announcements made by the First and deputy First Ministers in recent weeks. First, the 'Together: Building a United Community' document contained a range of measures, including 10,000 placements for young people not in education, employment or training (NEET). Secondly, the economic pact that came from Westminster included the continuation of 100% assisted area status and a variety of other measures that could help business. My desire is that these announcements will lead to positive change throughout Northern Ireland, including the Down

District Council area, and it is therefore the responsibility of the relevant Ministers to ensure that this is the case. Our shared future must be equally shared in all aspects.

Mr Hamilton: I congratulate the Member for South Down Mr Hazzard for securing the debate this evening. I speak as a representative of about a third of Down district, principally, the towns of Ballynahinch, Saintfield and Killyleagh within the Strangford constituency.

I stand to be corrected, but, looking around the Chamber, I may be, albeit only by virtue of having an advice centre in Saintfield, one of the only ratepayers in Down district who is contributing to the debate this evening. I am a born-and-bred Comber man, which is slightly outside Down district, but I have deep family connections to Down district. My mother was from Ardglass and my father was from Killyleagh.

In some ways, those two villages highlight part of the problem that the Member identified. Ardglass is a town that is built on the fishing industry, which has obviously gone into quite deep decline over the past number of years, and Killyleagh is a village that is built on two linen mills and a tannery. In fact, my grandfather worked in the linen mill for most of his working life. All those have gone, as have other mills in other parts of the district, including Drumaness and Saintfield. Undoubtedly, there has been economic decline in Down district over the past number of years.

I do not wish to dwell too much on the doom and gloom. I appreciate that times are tough in Down, as they are in Ards, north Down, Castlereagh and everywhere around Northern Ireland. I thought that the Member was far too young to be so doom-laden and cynical about these things, but it is contagious in this place. Without wishing to gloss it over by saying that there are no problems, I think that there is a lot that we should celebrate about what is going on in Down district. It is worth taking a moment to celebrate some of the great business successes and some of the assets that the district has.

Principal among them — a couple of Members talked about this — is that it is a premier tourism area in Northern Ireland. You can look at the investment that has gone into Newcastle's streetscape, the huge increase in footfall that that has brought about and the resurgence in the economy that has come from that. You can also look at the investment in the likes of the Slieve Donard Hotel in Newcastle. The whole area can and should take advantage of the fact that it is the gateway to the Mournes.

You have other assets, such as St Patrick's Christian heritage trail, which I do not think has been capitalised on half enough. There is certainly positive work to be done on that. The area has great assets. We had a row and dispute by proxy earlier on the Planning Bill with the National Trust. There are places such as Castle Ward and Rowallane, where I officially opened a new visitors' centre last summer. Those are great assets that the area has. Nowhere else has anything like them. Nobody else can stake the claim to St Patrick that —

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr Hamilton: Very briefly.

Mr Wells: Does the Member also accept that Downpatrick has a brand new complex on the Ardglass Road that Down council fostered and that that complex provides a huge capacity for employment? Of course, we also have the benefit of having a large industrial estate run by INI that has capacity to expand dramatically.

Mr Hamilton: Yes. They are both advantages. I have had different reasons to be in both. Ratepayers in Down district should be very proud of both those assets.

There is no huge company in Down district that you could point to and say that that is the premier industry in the area. There are lots of little industries, but some of them are doing absolutely fantastic work. I am thinking of Walter Watson in Castlewellan, which is outside my constituency. All the steelwork in the O2 arena in Dublin came from Castlewellan. That is something that I think that we should be proud of.

Ballykine in Ballynahinch is providing the steelwork for the regeneration of Ravenhill. Again, we should be proud of that. Datum Design in Ballynahinch is working in the growing area of aerospace technology. It is doing some fantastic work on composites. It is about to take off — literally — in the aerospace sector, which is doing very well. Those are small companies. They do not employ lots of people, but they are doing very well. We should be very proud of those companies and of what they are doing in Down district. We need a lot more companies like them in Down district.

I caution Members about hanging their hat too much on attracting public sector jobs into Down district. I think that that is setting our ambitions a little too low. It certainly does no harm to have public sector jobs in the local economy to underpin it and bolster it a little bit. However, it is not the future. There will be some benefits, jobs and spin-offs, such as spend in the area, but it is not the sort of growth economically that we want.

I put on record praise for Down District Council and what it has done through the business programme Beyond. I think that the business awards and the support and mentoring that it helps to provide have been very beneficial. That needs to be built on as we move into the review of public administration (RPA). The RPA will provide the Down district with an opportunity to capitalise on additional powers such as planning, community planning and regeneration.

We need to start to look at the advantages and assets that the area has. We also need to look at our ability to sell those and to partner with friends, perhaps in Newry and Mourne, to develop the economy of the whole area in a way that I and hopefully everybody here believes it can be developed. If Down district can capitalise on powers that come from the RPA and the opportunities brought about by scale and size along with it, I think that the future, economically, can be bright.

9.15 pm

Ms Ruane: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. We badly need strategic investment in Down district and, indeed, throughout south Down. My colleague Chris Hazzard highlighted the failures to date, notwithstanding the successes, and Jim Wells spoke about the lack of investment.

One area that I want to focus on a little bit is tourism, and the previous Member who spoke mentioned it too. We have very little tourism infrastructure in the Down district. What we have is good, but we do not have enough of it. If you go right along the coastline — Members have spoken about how beautiful the area is — we do not have the tourism infrastructure. We do not have the hotels or B&Bs, and we do not have enough hostels. I want to see the development of activity-based and appropriate tourism; I am not talking about tacky tourism. Ironically, given the lack of investment to date, we now have an opportunity to put in the correct investment.

Members talked about a couple of big businesspeople helping to build areas, and big businesspeople can certainly do that. However, I would like to see the development of small and medium-sized enterprises. I would like to see cultural tourism, Irish language tourism and GAA tourism. In all the different areas, the GAA provides a huge benefit to local communities, as do other sporting organisations.

If we are to develop tourism appropriately, one of the things that I would point to is the Great Western Greenway that is in operation and being further developed in my native County Mayo. I urge people to go and look at it because it is well worth seeing. It began as an old railway track between Mulranny and Achill Island and Newport and Mulranny. It now runs all the way from Westport to Achill Island, and it will eventually run from Castlebar to Achill Island. The biggest thing for me is that successful little industries have built up around it, such as bicycle hire shops, B&Bs, hostels and hotels. It is benefiting local small businesses.

There are similar plans, on a smaller scale, for a greenway from Carlingford to Omeath and from Omeath, across the bridge at Narrow Water, into Warrenpoint and up the towpath into Tandragee. That is the type of tourism infrastructure that I want to see being built.

We also need all-Ireland marketing. Ministers have to stop standing with their back to the border. They have to work very closely together at an all-Ireland level. There is no point in spending millions attracting people to Dublin and Newgrange and them turning back to Dublin. We need them to come across the bridge at Narrow Water into Down district and Newcastle. We also do not want those same tourists who come into Newcastle turning back. We want them to come into Newry and Mourne.

We need regional marketing. We need to get them in and to work with people in the Mournes, Carlingford, Slieve Gullion, Omeath and the Cooley peninsula. We need to work together to do that.

We need investment from all Ministers, and I join with Jim Wells in paying tribute to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for the work that she has done. In my small way, I played a role in investing in schools. We put significant money into the south Down area and into schools, such as the “Red High”; Assumption; Shimna Integrated College; and Bunscoil Bheanna Boirche, and the further education colleges that Jim Wells mentioned. Money is now also going to be put into the “Green High”, and the primary schools have also been developed.

I absolutely agree with the Member who spoke previously: RPA is going to make a significant difference. Newry and Mourne District Council, I would argue, has played a huge role in helping to develop the district, along with the east border region through the memorandum of understanding, which was the first one with Louth and one of the first of its kind in Europe. Now that Down District Council and Newry and Mourne District Council are working together, I think we will see big changes. They deserve credit for the role that they have played.

Tá deis iontach againn anois, agus is féidir linn rud iontach a dhéanamh.

We now have a unique opportunity to make real changes for the Down district, but it needs to be done in that district, then through cross-border working between North and South.

Mrs McKeivitt: I am pleased to have the opportunity to comment this evening. I thank the Member for securing the debate, particularly in light of the recent economic study by the well-known independent economist Maureen O'Reilly. The study by Ms O'Reilly recognises that Invest NI had not created the same levels of investment in the Down district as it had in other district council areas. The Public Accounts Committee (PAC) report on the performance of Invest NI, which was published May, also recognised that. The report states:

"There is significant disparity between assistance levels received by individual district council areas (DCA's). For example, excluding Belfast, the six DCA's in receipt of the highest levels of assistance by Invest NI between 2002-03 and 2010-11 were allocated £381 million, which was over nine times greater than the £41 million allocated to the six DCA's with the lowest levels."

Down District Council was listed among those with the lowest levels.

Another startling measurement is the amount of spend on foreign direct investment as of December 2011. In Belfast, it was £604 per head of population; £366 in Derry; and £216 in Antrim. So, what would you imagine it to be in Down district: £100; £20; £50; or £10? Not even close. It was £1. I kid you not: one single pound per head of population in foreign direct investment.

I am informed that Down District Council is taking action to promote investment in the area. It has agreed to the creation of a new economic development post to lead on that issue, and it recently entered into discussions with Invest NI about how the area can be promoted more effectively. I am pleased that the council has shown initiative and adopted a self-help attitude to improve the situation, but I feel that this question needs to be asked: what has Invest NI delivered for the people of the Down District Council area?

I welcome all positive steps taken at local level, but we need a commitment from the DUP and Sinn Féin-led Executive and individual Ministers that more will be done to ensure that Down District Council receives a fair slice of the economic development pie.

With urban regeneration schemes and the east coast master plan, I recognise that there is an appetite for developing the area, but we need more than plans and draft schemes. We need urgent action from the top level.

I must acknowledge the investment that has come to the Down District Council area, including the millions of pounds recently invested in the new hospital, the new South Eastern Regional College and the Down civic centre, which was recently opened. As spokesperson for culture, arts and leisure, I am particularly pleased that funding for the new leisure centre has also been secured, and work will begin in the near future.

In Down district, we have a certain dependence on the tourism product. The Mourne Mountains, which is one of the NITB's signature projects and features St Patrick's country, are significant to the area. Independent economist Maureen O'Reilly said that tourism is one of the areas in which Down District Council should be excelling. It is also being under-exploited, with fewer people visiting the Mournes compared with other major tourist attractions in Northern Ireland. I call on the tourism Minister to ensure fair spend on the Mourne signature project, compared with others such as the Titanic centre and the Giant's Causeway.

I also call on our roads Minister to examine road issues, which have been talked about here this evening, and to explore the potential of creating critical economic corridors to the east. A major road upgrade could be a catalyst for creating economic opportunities for Down district.

Mr McCallister: My apologies to the House for missing the start of the debate. I congratulate Mr Hazzard on securing it.

I was fortunate enough to arrive in time to hear some of Mr Hamilton's contribution. I suppose that, when he is in line to be Minister designate, it is important that he is here to contribute to the debate, and, of course, some of Down district is in the Strangford constituency. He talked about some of the important industries that are in the district, and the message about getting a balance in the economy is important. We do not want to be completely dependent on public sector jobs or for them to be seen as the district's only option. We want to make a strong commitment that, where we feel that we can sell the facilities and trained and skilled workforce that are available in the district, it is well worth making the argument for them and presenting the case to various parts of government as they seek to decentralise. Down district can provide a home with a high-quality workforce to staff those facilities, which is a cause that colleagues and I will, I am sure, continue to advance.

A few months ago, with my South Down colleague Sean Rogers, I attended the Down District Business Awards. Like many of my colleagues, when I attend events such as that, I am sometimes surprised by the amount of activity that goes on in a district, the number of small business enterprises — employing one, two, three people or whatever — that are working hard to come up with innovative ideas and solutions to problems and to respond the challenges out there. Like all businesses, they face the age-old problem that, I am sure, the Minister hears about constantly: access to finance and issues around how they will grow and develop their business. Those are some of the challenges that DETI and Invest NI, whose contribution or lack of it was mentioned by Ms McKeivitt, can help to meet in developing business in Down district. The Minister has to address that.

I was certainly impressed by the sheer drive and determination of some of the businesses in Down district. Despite all the problems in the wider economy, they were determined to keep going. So, we need that mix in the economy. We need to support small and medium-sized enterprises and some of the slightly larger ones. Mr Hamilton talked about Walter Watson, a company that I am also familiar with. Such companies not only make a huge contribution in the area but carry out a huge volume of work across the water and south of the border. It is about getting that balance in the economy, getting the public sector jobs that, we think, we have the skilled workforce to do and encouraging small and medium-sized enterprises and even some of the larger companies.

We will, of course, encourage tourism. We have a good tourist product to sell, from Saint Patrick's Trail to the Mourne mountains and all the work that is going on in places such as Newcastle to really lift the town as a proper gateway to the Mournes. It is about bringing all of that together in a tourism product that continues to evolve and develop through the creation of things such as cycle tracks in Castlewellan Forest Park and across the district. We need a collective effort to get Down district up and running again. The infrastructure will be very important. I know that colleagues across South Down and Strangford have consistently made the case about the Ballynahinch bypass. Mr Wells has been making the case since 1964 apparently. Of course, Downpatrick is in need of help in that department as well. Those are things that we need to look towards and for which we should collectively continue to campaign. With those thoughts and given the lateness of the hour, I look forward to the Minister's response.

9.30 pm

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): First, let me join others in congratulating the Member on his topic being chosen, which allows me the opportunity to speak on what is obviously, given the number of people who have managed to stay in the House until this late hour, a very important issue. Let me also say that, from my own constituency background in Fermanagh and South Tyrone, I am absolutely aware of the challenges facing our more peripheral areas in Northern Ireland. However, I want to be honest and forthright, as you would expect me to be, about economic development in the Down district, particularly when it comes to attracting foreign direct investment.

We had Ms McKevitt making comparisons between our capital city and Down district. Of course there will be differences between those two figures. I find it rather strange that, in one paragraph, the Member talks about the failure of DUP and Sinn Féin Ministers but then goes on to praise the Culture Minister for investing in cultural facilities in the Down district, the funding for which was obviously helped through by the Finance Minister, who is also a member of the Executive. You cannot have it both ways. You either try to work positively for the area or you decide that you will criticise in a negative way.

I want to say to the Members present that, particularly in attracting foreign direct investment, it is important to clarify that the location decisions are of course a matter for individual companies. I want to spend a little time on foreign direct investment, but I do of course want to talk about our indigenous companies as well. There are some very good companies in the south Down area, some of which I recently visited again. To attract inward investment, an area must be able to demonstrate that it can meet the investor's needs. Recent trends indicate that investors favour reducing their risk by locating their business in areas where they can draw on a pool of skilled labour and where, they believe, investment and cost risk will be minimised. Potential inward investors will also typically look at an area with regard to existing investors in the same business sector. Invest NI's key inward investment target sectors are ICT, business services and financial services. It will also look at universities or colleges, and we have heard from Mr Wells about the standard of the schools and colleges in the Down area and what they have to offer the business sector.

ICT skill sets and the infrastructure to support business in that sector are, of course, in high demand. In determining a potential inward investor's requirements and specific preferences, Invest NI offers solutions to meet the investor's needs. Invariably, the situations that will occur will not be area-based; rather, they will be driven by skills availability and cost competitiveness. A company will be attracted to where it perceives most of the talent to be or where increased cost competitiveness exists. Therefore, it is vital — Mr Hazzard made the point in his opening comments — that all the — I do not like the word — stakeholders in the Down District Council area or, indeed, the wider area work together proactively to make sure that the story is told of what Down has to offer to particular inward investors. I note that Mr Rogers said that Invest Northern Ireland was working proactively with the council. I hope that it will work with the other public representatives in the area so that they can put forward the story of Down district council area and what it can offer to inward investors. It is not just about us bringing inward investors in; it is about what you have to offer those inward investors in that area.

Mr Wells: Will the Minister give way?

Mrs Foster: Yes, I will.

Mr Wells: Does the Minister accept that the success of Newry was not based on FDI as such but on entrepreneurs who were Newry born and bred investing their skills and expertise in the Newry area and building indigenous companies with tremendous success? That is what we need to do in Down district; we need to replicate what has happened elsewhere in the constituency.

Mrs Foster: I was going to speak about that. Mr Wells has made a very important point: those people of vision for the Newry area have attracted people into the indigenous cluster that they have created, and people from outside the area are now interested in doing business in it.

Mr Hazzard: Will the Minister give way?

Mrs Foster: Yes, I will.

Mr Hazzard: I want to say, on the back of what my colleague Jim Wells has said, that just this week Down High School celebrated a young pupil who had won a Sentinus innovation award. I am sure that the Minister will agree that it is important to foster an appreciation for role models such as Gordon Coulter and others. Is there something that we can do to foster aspiration and innovation in our young people so that they look up to business-type role models in our society?

Mrs Foster: Again, that is a very important point. Just last week, I visited Kilkeel. I know that Members will be well acquainted with B/E Aerospace. In the G8 advertisements that were seen all over the world, one of the advertisements was for the seats that are made in B/E Aerospace. We should be very proud of the fact that that is the case. As well as that, I visited Kilkeel harbour and spoke to a group that has come together with a vision for working in the renewable energy space. It is a very important space. They are mostly fishermen, but they see that there are opportunities in the renewable energy scene. In fact, they asked me to come down because they wanted to launch a DVD for them. They have tremendous plans for the development of the Kilkeel harbour area, and that is exactly what Mr Wells was talking about — people who have a vision for their area. As a result of that, Invest Northern Ireland has supported the DVD and will make sure that it goes out across the region. They will be able to say that Kilkeel has an offshore renewable energy installations hub, which is very exciting for the Kilkeel area. I will be very involved in promoting that because I see the way in which they have a vision for their area.

Invest Northern Ireland's new FDI app is another positive development. It will present a snapshot to potential investors of the benefits of setting up in Northern Ireland. Both Down and Newry and Mourne district council areas have indicated that they wish to be involved, and Invest Northern Ireland is working with them on that. As the Down offering develops, it can be reflected in the updating of the FDI app and in continuing engagement with Mark Bleakney and his team in Invest NI's southern regional office. Essentially, the idea is that you go into the Northern Ireland app and then find all the other apps for the different areas. In those apps, you will set forward the proposition for your area. That is an innovative way of being able to put forward what the area has to offer.

I know that Alastair Hamilton was in the Down district council area last month. Invest NI's international investment team has offered to spend time with the council's economic development team, and I am sure that that offer will be taken up in order to help them broaden their understanding of the international investment market. I would encourage continuing investment between all the stakeholders, including the private sector. Mr McCallister made the point that we should not over-rely on the public sector. Of course, public sector jobs are welcome, but the growth is in the private sector. It is in those small and medium-sized enterprises that we will be able to grow the economy in Down and in many other parts of Northern Ireland. Indeed, I understand that the Regional Start initiative is going well in south Down and right across the Down area, which I very much welcome.

I think I have answered most of the issues that were raised tonight. In respect of tourism — Mrs Dobson mentioned tourism — of course, one of the jewels in the crown of Northern Ireland is Royal County Down Golf Club, which is always in the top 10 golf courses in the world. My goodness, what a great accolade to have. What a tremendous thing to have to draw people into your area.

There has of course been investment in Newcastle. I have visited many times and seen the way in which that has lifted the whole area. We will work continually with Members in relation to the Mournes and St Patrick's Christian heritage trail, because tourism is a very important part of the south Down proposition. When I was down there last Wednesday, I thought again about how lucky you are to live in such a beautiful part of the world.

Adjourned at 9.40 pm.

Northern Ireland Assembly

Monday 1 July 2013

The Assembly met at 12.00 noon (Mr Speaker in the Chair).

Members observed two minutes' silence.

Speaker's Business

Public Petition: Dickson Plan

Mr Speaker: Mr Stephen Moutray has sought leave to present a public petition. The Member will have up to three minutes to speak on the subject matter.

Mr Moutray: At the outset, Mr Speaker, I thank you for agreeing to accept the petition this afternoon. What I will present to you in the form of almost 5,000 signatures, both online and in paper format, demonstrates clearly the level of local support for the exceptional education system known as the Dickson two-tier system for the Craigavon and Tandragee areas.

The petition was launched back in mid April. From that day forward, support for the Dickson plan and its retention has been demonstrated day after day, with continuous streams of people coming to sign the petition and make their views and support known. We sincerely thank each person who put their name to the petition and supported our campaign thus far.

Politicians are sometimes accused of not listening to the people: on this occasion, we are listening. The message that continues to be sent loud and clear is this: save and retain the Dickson plan.

A very public battle has been raging in recent days. An attempt has been made by the Minister of Education and the Southern Education and Library Board (SELB) to decimate the Dickson plan and destroy the system that we all love and cherish. That system, implemented four decades ago, provides a tailor-made educational experience for children, whether they be academic or vocational, and allows for academic selection at the age of 14 as opposed to 11, which allows time for young people to mature and feel more confident about their lot in life. However, what is planned for Craigavon, which the Minister appears to have a predetermined view on even before consulting the people, is a comprehensive all-ability school that puts children in a one-size-fits-all box. One size does not fit all. Children have different abilities and, as has been noted recently in the Ofsted report in England, comprehensive schools are failing children, particularly the most academic.

Why would we in Craigavon move away from a system that has excellent inspection reports and schools of a high standard? The people have openly rejected this and will continue to do so. The consultation process that the SELB has been involved in has been flawed with preferred options being recommended by the board. There has been a lack of consultation with the local primary schools and a total disregard for the 3,000 people who supported option b.

I will close with a statement made by the Minister of Education in the House on 15 April:

"We know through experience that imposing solutions on communities simply does not work." — [Official Report, Bound Volume 84, p45, col 2].

It is now time for the Education Minister to listen to our community and to retain the Dickson plan for future generations.

Mr Moutray moved forward and laid the petition on the Table.

Mr Speaker: I will forward the petition to the Minister of Education and send a copy to the Chair of the Education Committee.

Public Petition: Envagh Primary School, Omagh, St Francis of Assisi Primary School, Castlederg, and Newtownstewart Model Primary School

Mr Speaker: Mr Joe Byrne has sought leave to present a public petition. The Member will have up to three minutes to speak on the subject matter.

Mr Byrne: I welcome the chance to bring forward a petition on behalf of three primary schools in the Newtownstewart, Dregish and Spamount areas of Castlederg. The undersigned are concerned about the draft Western Education and Library Board (WELB) strategic area plan proposals for the Western Board area and the effect that they will have on all our rural schools and the communities that they support. Rural schools are the focus of their communities, and those communities believe that any proposals that involve change need to be thoroughly investigated before any action is taken.

The petition is presented on behalf of Envagh Primary School, Newtownstewart Model Primary School and St Francis of Assisi Primary School. The petition contains 1,441 signatures of those who share the concerns about the future of rural education in that part of west Tyrone.

On 19 March, the WELB draft strategic action plan was published. It stated that the managing authority had agreed action on the potential closure of Envagh Primary School. That recommendation was made after a review by Mr Andrew Walsh, the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) adviser. The board of governors is very disappointed that the school is not being afforded the opportunity to seek a local area solution in consultation with the other small schools, controlled and maintained, in the immediate vicinity that are in similar circumstances or have been asked to find a local area solution.

The Northern Ireland Executive rural White Paper action plan provides policy on supporting vibrant rural communities. That policy recognises the vulnerability of rural communities; challenges to infrastructure, particularly transport; the need to maintain and develop rural economies; and the need to support the delivery of public services in rural communities to support social cohesion. These local primary schools in the Ardstraw East area of west Tyrone are extremely concerned that, if the 105-pupil criterion is adhered to, it will signal the death knell for many of these primary schools. I call on the Minister to review the damage that the 105 criterion is causing. Even though the Minister has stated recently that he does not want to close rural primary schools, the reality is that parents are making decisions and choices. They want their children to go to schools that will be viable and sustainable into the future, and there is gross concern that, if there is still strong adherence to the 105 number for primary schools, it could sound the death knell for up to 40 primary schools in west Tyrone alone.

Mr Byrne moved forward and laid the petition on the Table.

Mr Speaker: I will forward the petition to the Minister and send a copy to the Chair of the Education Committee.

Public Petition: Westlands Home, Cookstown

Mr Speaker: Mrs Sandra Overend has sought leave to present a public petition. The Member will, once again, have up to three minutes to speak on the subject matter.

Mrs Overend: On behalf of Cookstown O4O — Older People for Older People — it gives me great pleasure to present to you this petition in support of Westlands home. On behalf of its residents and all those in the Cookstown district who are concerned about the future of this excellent provision, I commend Cookstown O4O and especially its president, Margaret Gilbert MBE, for drawing up the petition. I commend its members and all the businesses and community organisations that collected the 5,010 signatures in the space of 14 days. The support of those signatories in the Cookstown district is certainly to be applauded.

I visited Westlands Care Home recently and heard at first hand about the high regard in which its residents hold it, the excellent care that they receive and their concerns about their future. It was unfortunate that the outworkings of Transforming Your Care saw the untimely and badly managed announcement to each resident in Westlands that they would have to look for alternative accommodation in the short space of a few months. This caused terrible anxiety to those residents, and the general health of many suffered as a result.

People in the Cookstown district have felt very strongly not only about the way that changes are handled with regard to Westlands Care Home but about the fact that the home is to be closed. Despite the personal assurances given to individuals by the Health Minister that the home would not be closed, he has yet to repeat those assurances in public, leaving the residents with a real sense of unease and anxiety. It seems that the Health Minister wishes to close the home by stealth, and he and his trust are refusing any new residents into Westlands Care Home while giving false assurances that the home would remain open as long as the number of residents was in double figures. Some of those residents have come to Parliament Buildings today and are watching from the Public Gallery. We hope that the Health Minister's new consultation will be open and transparent and take into consideration the views of the people who will be most affected by the potential closures: the vulnerable people who live in these homes and those in the Cookstown area who wish the Westlands option to remain.

As I present the petition in support of Westlands Care Home, I challenge the Health Minister to take some time today, when residents and family members are here in Stormont, to meet them and take 15 minutes out of his busy schedule to talk to them. Despite having recently received a letter from the Health Minister refusing to meet me on the issue, today I repeat my request that he discuss openly and honestly with the residents his plans for Westlands Care Home.

The residents of the care homes all over Northern Ireland are some of the most vulnerable people in our society. They deserve honesty and respect and to be able to live in a permanent and secure environment of their choosing, which I hope the Minister can guarantee. Mr Speaker, I take pleasure in presenting the petition to you.

Mrs Overend moved forward and laid the petition on the Table.

Mr Speaker: I will forward a copy of the petition to the Health Minister and send a copy to the Chairperson of the Health Committee.

Assembly Business

Extension of Sitting

Resolved:

That in accordance with Standing Order 10(3A), the sitting on Monday 1 July 2013 be extended to no later than 9.00 pm. — [Mr P Ramsey.]

12.15 pm

Committee of the Regions

Mr Speaker: The Business Committee has agreed that this be treated as a business motion and therefore there will be no debate.

Resolved:

That this Assembly nominates Ms Megan Fearon as a full member on the UK delegation to the Committee of the Regions. — [Ms Ruane.]

Ministerial Statements

North/South Ministerial Council: Aquaculture and Marine

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. With your permission, Mr Speaker, I wish to make a statement, in compliance with section 52 of the 1998 Act, regarding the recent twenty-third meeting of the North/South Ministerial Council (NSMC) in aquaculture and marine sectoral format. The meeting was held in Carlingford on Wednesday 3 May. The Executive were represented by Nelson McCausland and me. The Southern Government were represented by the Minister for Communications, Energy and Natural Resources, Pat Rabbitte TD, and Fergus O'Dowd TD, Minister of State, Department of Communications, Energy and Natural Resources. The statement has been agreed with Minister McCausland, and I make it on behalf of us both.

Ministers were informed of the retirement of Loughs Agency chief executive officer, Derick Anderson, and noted that arrangements were under way to recruit a replacement. Ministers recorded their thanks for the enormous contribution made by Mr Anderson in the development of the Loughs Agency during his 13-year tenure and wished him a long and enjoyable retirement. Ministers also noted the death in January of former board member Thomas Sloan. Thomas joined the board of the Foyle, Carlingford and Irish Lights Commission in December 2007 and was an active member of the board's aquaculture and shell fisheries subcommittee. Thomas was a valued member of the commission's board and will be much missed.

The vice-chairperson, Alan McCulla, and the acting chief executive, John Pollock, delivered a progress report on the work of the Loughs Agency. We noted that the first meeting of the third Foyle Area and Carlingford Area Advisory Forum took place on 9 April and that members had appointed Mr Peter Archdale as chairperson and Mr Paul O'Donovan as vice-chair of the forum.

We welcomed the agency's ongoing conservation and protection efforts, including the fact that the agency responded to over 100 pollution incidents in 2012 and seized a total of 136 illegal nets. It was reported that adverse weather conditions at the start of the 2013 season had made redd counting difficult but had also resulted in a reduction of poachers on the rivers. The agency also reported that it had made a declaration of closure on the River Finn in order to continue to protect that special area of conservation. That will make the River Finn a catch-and-release river for the 2013 season and suspend downstream commercial salmon fisheries.

Progress has also been made on increasing marine tourism and angling development. That has been enhanced by the agency's prominent engagement with the City of Culture and the important promotional opportunity afforded by the partnership with Tate and the Turner Prize, which is to take place in Derry later this year and at which the agency is hosting an opening reception. Additionally, the agency highlighted its role in supporting the angling element of the World Police and Fire Games, its involvement with the Flavours of the Foyle seafood festival and its support for the Carlingford Oyster Festival, not forgetting the World Youth Fly Fishing Championship.

We also discussed concerns over the Narrow Water bridge project. However, we welcome the fact that it has now been given the green light. Ministers also discussed the situation regarding the A5 and the Loughs Agency's work with the Department for Regional Development (DRD) to meet commitments under the habitats directive. I reassured Ministers Rabbitte and O'Dowd of the Executive's commitment to the delivery of the A5.

The Council enjoyed a presentation by Dr Ciaran Byrne, chief executive of Inland Fisheries Ireland, on the meeting of the North Atlantic Salmon Conservation Organization (NASCO) that was due to take place in Drogheda from 4 to 7 June. At that event, conservation strategies for North Atlantic salmon stocks and methods to increase the profile of salmon conservation were discussed by managers, scientists and non-governmental organisations from a wide range of countries. The importance of a sustainable Irish salmon population to tourism and the economic benefits that flow from salmon angling were also recognised. The Council acknowledged the engagement between the boards of the Loughs Agency and Inland Fisheries Ireland and their ongoing collaboration.

The Council was also informed about a review of angling involving the Loughs Agency, the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure, the Ulster Angling Federation, the Ulster provincial council of the Irish Federation of Sea Anglers and the Ulster Coarse Fishing Federation, together with sport-related bodies and the Tourist Board, to develop a joined-up approach to demonstrate the social and economic benefits of angling and the development of the angling product.

In relation to the pension arrangements for the Loughs Agency, we noted the recommendation by sponsor Departments that the Loughs Agency should join the North/South pension scheme and that that was being considered by the respective Finance Departments.

The Council approved the procedure to continue to support the Loughs Agency in dealing with emergencies, such as pollution incidents, through regulation. The procedure was approved for another year up to July 2014, and the Council agreed to review its operation on the basis of a report to be completed by the agency and the sponsor Departments before 20 July 2014.

We agreed to meet again in aquaculture and marine format in October 2013.

Mr Frew (The Chairperson of the Committee for Agriculture and Rural Development): I thank the Minister for her statement, but, again, the statement is more about what is not in it and the lack of detail in it. The Committee recently attended the largest seafood trade show in the world when we were in Brussels. Although we were impressed by the stands and the presentations of all our neighbours and competitors — England, Scotland and the Republic of Ireland — only one company was flying the flag for Northern Ireland. Will the Minister explain why the development and marketing of our seafood offering is not on the agenda for the North/South aquaculture and marine sectoral meetings, considering that it is a key target in the 'Going for Growth' chapter on fish and aquaculture? We also hear that there has been a progress report on the Loughs Agency's work, but we have heard nothing about the details or the progress that it has made.

Mrs O'Neill: I thank the Member for his question and, in particular, the point about marketing the great product that we have. It is a challenge. It is wider than the Loughs Agency's remit, in that its job is to promote the Foyle and Carlingford catchment areas. One of the recommendations in the agrifood strategy report looks at the marketing of our products, and we need to enhance that work further in the time ahead. The Loughs Agency is involved in a number of marketing events, particularly around the City of Culture. We have the Foyle seafood festival and the Carlingford Oyster Festival, which are good opportunities to market seafood. There are lots of opportunities, and we need to ensure that seafood is always promoted.

I gave a flavour of the detail of the update report on the Loughs Agency's work. However, if the Chairperson wishes, I am happy to write to the Committee to give it a more detailed breakdown of the Loughs Agency's work over the past number of months.

Mr Byrne: I welcome the Minister's statement. She referred to the A5 and the habitats directive. First, will she give an assurance that the Loughs Agency will do everything in its power to co-operate with DRD to make sure that the commitment under the habitats directive can be dealt with as soon as possible? Secondly, will the Minister give any assurance to rod fishermen who are members of fishing and angling clubs that they can have representation on the Loughs Agency in the future? They feel aggrieved that they have not had adequate representation.

Mrs O'Neill: The Executive are still committed to seeing the A5 project through, and I am happy to guarantee that the Loughs Agency will do everything that it can to clear up the issue that was raised with the habitats directive. There is some confusion over the Loughs Agency's involvement in that issue. The scheme was stopped by the High Court judgement, which found that there had been a failure to carry out an appropriate assessment of the River Foyle and River Finn special areas of conservation under the habitats directive. That judgement was the result of an injunction case taken by the Alternative A5 Alliance, a group of objectors made up of a number of people who live along the route of the proposed scheme. Part of the Alternative A5 Alliance's evidence was a submission by the Loughs Agency to the open public inquiry on the road scheme. The Loughs Agency gave evidence to the public inquiry under its duty to conserve and protect salmon inland fisheries in the area, and its evidence was not challenged. In simple terms, we will make absolutely sure that there is no ambiguity and that everything is cleared up. The Loughs Agency continues to work with DRD officials to make sure that that happens and that this does not become a barrier to the project moving forward as quickly as possible.

Mrs Dobson: I thank the Minister for her statement and answers so far. I also thank my colleague from the Agriculture Committee, Joe Byrne, for stealing the question that I was about to ask. I will go into a bit more detail. Does the Minister accept that the Loughs Agency's evidence led to the derailment of the A5 project and that it bears considerable responsibility, albeit under the Minister's predecessor and the Regional Development Minister's predecessor, Conor Murphy?

Mrs O'Neill: No, I do not agree that that is the case. As I said, there has been some ambiguity and, I think, a lot of confusion about the role that the Loughs Agency played in the judgement and where that sits now. The Loughs Agency has been working very closely with DRD on making sure that everything is cleared up and that there is no barrier to the project moving forward as quickly as possible. The work is ongoing with Roads Service, and it engages weekly to make sure that everything is cleared up. This will not be a barrier to the project going forward.

Mr McCarthy: I thank the Minister for her statement this afternoon. In paragraph 8, she tells us:

"the agency responded to over 100 pollution incidents".

Surely, that is a shocking number in any one year, bringing with it horrendous damage to our waterways. Can the Minister tell how much of that pollution was down to Departments' breaches? Who pays for the pollution?

Mrs O'Neill: I cannot give a breakdown of where the pollution comes from relevant to each Department, but suffice it to say that the pollution came from a range of sources, including the farm waste industry and sewerage-related issues. So there is a combination of pollution incidents, and our tackling of that is ongoing. Relatively speaking, the figures have remained reasonably low. I know that 100 sounds like a lot, but the level of incidents has remained pretty low, and we have had no fish kill as a result of those that occurred, so that is very positive as well.

Mr Buchanan: My question follows on from the previous one on paragraph 8:

"the agency responded to over 100 pollution incidents ... and seized a total of 136 illegal nets."

Will the Minister advise the House how many people were prosecuted, and what was the level of that prosecution?

If the Speaker will allow me, I also want to refer to paragraph 11 regarding the Loughs Agency and its initial report on the A5. How can we be assured this time that the report being done will meet the requirements to allow the A5 to progress?

Mrs O'Neill: I will pick up on the second point first. I give a commitment that I will ensure that the Loughs Agency engages, as it does weekly with Roads Service, to make sure that the issue is sorted out as quickly as possible and that it will not be a barrier to the A5 project going forward.

The detail of prosecutions and seizures is as follows: the agency reports that the seizures for 2012 were 76 fishing rods, 136 nets, 16 boats and two vehicles; and the figures for 2011 were 44 fishing rods, 161 nets and 14 boats and vehicles. So there have been quite a number of seizures. Quite often, the number of prosecutions does not relate to the number of seizures because an individual may be prosecuted on numerous charges based on one incident. I can write to the Member and give him a breakdown of the number of prosecutions over the past year.

Mr McAleer: First, I am glad to note that the A5 was raised at the NSMC meeting. I am also happy to hear the Minister assure us that the Loughs Agency will play its part to enable the Minister for Regional Development to make the appropriate assessment later. Will the Minister give some details of the seizures made by the Loughs Agency since the last meeting?

Mrs O'Neill: I will give you a breakdown of the number of fish and shellfish that the agency has seized: 79 salmon, 10 brown trout, six sea trout, two rainbow trout, 13 roach, one pike, two hybrids and 19 bags of oysters. A large number of fishing equipment and assorted items were also seized, and, in particular, knives, baseball bats, pulley systems and hammers — you name it. The agency has seized quite a number of items.

I am delighted to say that, since the last time that I updated the House on the NSMC, there have been no further attacks on Loughs Agency staff, which we all welcome given last year's serious incidents.

Mr Rogers: I apologise to the Minister for missing the first couple of paragraphs of her statement. On paragraph 10, may I seek an assurance from the Minister that the concerns of the mussel fishermen will be addressed, thus enabling the Minister for Regional Development to sign off on the bridge order?

12.30 pm

Mrs O'Neill: Yes, absolutely. We have been doing a lot of work, including on the design of the bridge, with the fishermen to make sure that we can minimise any impact on them. Those meetings have been ongoing with my Department and with the Department of the Environment (DOE) on the licence. Those discussions are ongoing, and I think that we have militated against any negative impact that there would be on the fishermen.

Mr Milne: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Thank you, Mr Speaker. I also welcome the Minister's statement. In the light of Mr McCarthy's question, will the Minister give us an in-depth update on the pollution incidents in the Foyle and Carlingford areas, le do thoil?

Mrs O'Neill: Further to the answer that I gave to Mr McCarthy, the number of significant pollution incidents that Loughs Agency staff detected or investigated in the catchments has remained statistically low, and there were no recorded fish kills in the catchment in 2012. Agency staff dealt with a total of about 100 pollution incidents in 2012, and, in 29% of cases, no pollution was found. Almost half the incidents related to farm industry and sewage-related pollution.

Public Expenditure: Provisional Out-turn 2012-13 and 2013-14 June Monitoring

Mr Speaker: The Minister of Finance and Personnel wishes to make a statement to the House this afternoon.

Mr Wilson (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): Thank you very much, Mr Speaker. I was not sure whether I was doing the Financial Provisions Bill or the provisional out-turn first. So, I am glad that you clarified that for me.

I thank you for the opportunity to make the statement today on two important public expenditure items. First, I am pleased to inform the House of the outcome of the 2012-13 provisional out-turn and the Executive's June monitoring exercise.

Before going into the specifics of the provisional out-turn and June monitoring, I want to say a few words about last week's UK spending review announcement. The spending review outcome, for us, was as good as we could have expected, given the UK Government's ongoing emphasis on fiscal consolidation. Our resource departmental expenditure limit (DEL) will increase by 0.6% in cash terms, compared with 2014-15. On the capital side, the outcome is even more positive, with a cash increase of 3.3%, again compared with the 2014-15 position. However, some £104 million of that additional capital DEL is ring-fenced for financial transactions funding, and that makes it critically important that the Executive now develop good schemes that can make best use of that funding. I will say more about that later.

That said, it is not all good news. I am increasingly worried about the lack of progress on welfare reform. Just last week, I received a letter from the Chief Secretary to the Treasury on that issue. That letter makes it clear that, if the Executive do not implement relevant welfare reform elements by January 2014, our block grant will be adjusted. The costs are potentially huge. The Chief Secretary has indicated that failure to align our welfare policy with the rest of the United Kingdom is costing the Exchequer some £5 million a month in foregone annually managed expenditure (AME) savings. In the longer term, that could rise to £200 million per annum by 2017-18.

I cannot emphasise enough that we must avoid incurring those penalties. The Executive and the Assembly must therefore make progress in making welfare reform a key priority. Failure to do so would be a great disservice to the people of Northern Ireland, who rely on the public services that our Departments deliver. With that word of warning, I will return to the provisional out-turn and June monitoring.

First, I will address the provisional out-turn. It is critical for the Executive. Not only does it indicate a strong indication of departmental budget management performance during the past financial year but it determines the amount of resources that the Executive can plan to carry forward through the devolved Administration Budget exchange scheme (BES).

The scheme allows the Executive to carry forward end-of-year underspends up to a limit of 0.6% of resource DEL (RDEL) and 1.5% of capital DEL (CDEL). For 2012-13, the Budget exchange scheme limits amount to £49.5 million of non-ring-fenced resource DEL and £13.6 million of capital DEL. Both limits exclude the Department of Justice (DOJ), which is subject to separate end-of-year arrangements. Members should note that any underspend recorded above those amounts will be lost to the Executive. It will simply go back to the Exchequer.

Before I can detail the Budget exchange carry-forward, it is necessary to highlight the individual departmental position. As usual, the Executive's focus is on the non-ring-fenced RDEL. The non-cash ring-fenced RDEL element is handled separately, as it is strictly controlled by Her Majesty's Treasury and cannot be used for any other purpose, so if it is not used for the purpose for which it is designated, it stays with Treasury.

I will start with the departmental outcome. In their provisional out-turn returns, Departments registered total underspends of £27.9 million of RDEL and £25.6 million of CDEL. That is detailed in the tables that are attached to the statement. The Northern Ireland Audit Office (NIAO) recorded the largest percentage of RDEL underspend, at 3.8%. I am sorry that Mr Kinahan is not in the Chamber to hear that message. Although I recognise that, in monetary terms, it is small, it is important to note that the NIAO and organisations like it use up scarce resources that could otherwise be deployed by the Executive to deliver essential front line services. Of course, that is true of all Departments. All the main Departments returned resource underspends of 1.2% or less, with the exception of the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (DETI), which recorded a 7.9% overspend for a somewhat exceptional reason.

Members will be well aware that DETI lodged a bid for an allocation of some £18 million to write off the EU debtor for the Titanic visitor centre. That bid was not considered by the Executive, and that is why DETI has now registered an overspend in its 2012-13 RDEL budget. However, that budget overspend has now been factored into the overall provisional out-turn outcome. Indeed, I can now confirm that DETI and its colleagues in my Department's EU division have since identified alternative projects for inclusion in the EU programme. I will provide further information on that issue when I come to the June monitoring position.

Members will probably not be surprised to hear that capital underspends were greater in percentage terms. That is, of course, due to the fact that it is more difficult to manage capital budgets. However, the most important thing is that the overall departmental capital underspend was low. I will move on to the implications for carry-forward of resources.

The Budget exchange scheme carry-forward is determined at Northern Ireland block level and excludes the Department of Justice. Therefore, DOJ needs to be excluded from the figures, and account also needs to be taken of the various centre items that impact on the overall block position. DOJ accounted for a significant proportion of total departmental underspend. When that was excluded, the total underspend reduced to £20.9 million of RDEL and £11.3 million of CDEL. That corresponds to just 0.2% and 1% of RDEL and CDEL respectively. That is a remarkable spending performance by Departments. It is testament to the sound Budget management that is exercised by the Executive throughout the financial year. In other words, we are spending the money that was allocated, for the purpose for which it was allocated, in the year for which it was allocated. That is important.

I will now deal with the centre adjustments. On the capital side, there was a minor inward adjustment to our reinvestment and reform initiative (RRI) borrowing and a small residual amount impacting on the position. That means that the Executive can now carry forward £12 million of CDEL into 2013-14.

On the resource side, there were four centre adjustments. The regional rate provisional out-turn outcome was £4.4 million higher than forecast at the January monitoring. This was due to a number of factors, but it was mainly because of reductions in irrecoverable losses and an increase in income. There was also £4.4 million carried forward from the outcome of the late reallocation exercise conducted by the Executive in March. The Executive also paid out slightly less in RRI interest payments than forecast, and there was a small balancing adjustment between the ring-fenced and non-ring-fenced categories. The impact of all of these issues is that the Executive can now plan to carry forward £29.9 million of RDEL into 2013-14.

As I indicated, the Department of Justice has separate end-of-year flexibility arrangements covering this spending review period. Under those arrangements, the DOJ can carry forward an unlimited amount of resources from one year to the next. However, any funding carried forward must first be used to address additional security pressures, although certain exceptions apply in each particular year. For 2012-13, the DOJ is allowed to carry forward capital underspend in respect of Desertcreat for drawdown in future years within this spending period. I can confirm that the DOJ will now carry forward £13.2 million of capital DEL underspend in relation to Desertcreat, and that can be drawn down either in this financial year or the next.

Before turning to the June monitoring round, I think that it is worth repeating the exceptional overall spending performance of just 0.2% RDEL and 1% CDEL. On the resource side, that is equivalent to an individual on a median weekly wage having just 92p left over at the end of the week. That is good budgeting, and I think that Departments, Ministers, etc, must be congratulated on that. The Executive's excellent budget management has again meant that no money has been surrendered to Her Majesty's Treasury and that we will have additional resources to allocate in the June monitoring round, which I will say more about next.

Before setting out the resources available and the allocations agreed by the Executive in this monitoring round, I would like to highlight two important strategic issues that the Executive have reached agreement on. The first is the reprofiling of asset management unit (AMU) capital receipts, which I know that Mr Bradley will be interested in, and the second is a new end-of-year flexibility scheme for our further education colleges.

Members will recall that the Executive agreed, as part of their four-year Budget, to task the AMU with delivering an additional £100 million of capital receipts over this Budget period. To date, the AMU is on target to deliver those additional capital receipts. However, the recent decision by the UK Government to switch funding from resource to capital, coupled with delay in some major local capital projects, means that the Executive now have much more capital funding available in this financial year than had been anticipated in March 2011, when the Budget was initially agreed.

That relative abundance of capital funding at the expense of resource funding reduces the pressing need for delivering significant additional capital receipts at this stage, particularly when the realisation of those receipts involves disposal of revenue-generating assets. The Executive have therefore agreed that £23 million of income-generating assets previously earmarked for disposal in 2014-15 should now be retained, with a view to enhancing the value for future disposal.

The Executive also agreed a new end-of-year flexibility (EYF) scheme for our further education sector. It is similar to the scheme that has already been agreed for local schools, which Members will be well aware of. The need for that EYF scheme has arisen due to the recent reclassification of our further education (FE) colleges and Stranmillis University College to the government sector. The impact on our FE colleges is significant, because as NDPBs, they are now required to follow the financial year reporting and budgeting cycle. That imposes significant budgetary constraints on the FE colleges in respect of financial management. The operation of the new end-year flexibility scheme will assist our FE colleges in managing their budgets in this new environment.

I would now like to turn to the specifics of the June monitoring round. The starting point for this monitoring round is the overcommitment position, which resulted from the Budget realignment and technical exercise agreed by the Executive last year. That led to a starting overcommitment on the resource side of £41.8 million, with £20.2 million of capital investment funding available. There were also a number of centre items, which, along with the starting overcommitment, impacted on the overall financial position in this monitoring round. I will explain more about these centre items.

Members will recall that the Chancellor's 2012 autumn statement and 2013 UK Budget had implications for our budget position in this financial year. The impact on our RDEL was a reduction of £18.3 million, whilst there was an increase of £50.9 million in our CDEL. As I have already highlighted, the provisional out-turn position means that the Executive now plan to carry forward £29.9 million resource DEL and £12 million capital DEL under the Budget exchange scheme.

Members may also be aware that in February 2013 the Executive agreed proposals tabled by Minister Farry and Minister O'Dowd on educational maintenance allowances. The agreed way forward left a residual RDEL pressure of £3.4 million to be addressed in this monitoring round. There was also additional £8.5 million resource funding available due to lower RRI interest payment liabilities than anticipated when the Executive's four-year Budget was first agreed. This is primarily due to ongoing low interest rates charged by the National Loans Fund and the fact that the Executive borrowed some £45 million less in 2012-13 than originally planned. That was part of the flexibility that I negotiated in respect of the A5 road scheme.

Members will also recall that the Executive had previously set aside £13 million resource DEL to address the anticipated shortfall resulting from reform to the rates element of housing benefit. The pressure this year will now be £12.2 million and the balance of £0.8 million resource DEL was released for allocation in this round. In total, taking into account all of these items resulted in an overcommitment of £24.9 million in resource expenditure and a significant £83.1 million of capital investment funding available for allocation in this round. This was before departmental reduced requirements were factored in, and I will detail those next.

Departments declared reduced requirements in this monitoring round of £15.3 million resource expenditure and £115.7 million capital investment. Full details are provided in the tables provided with this statement. The significant amount of capital funding surrendered was primarily because of the ongoing delay to the A5 road scheme. The reduced requirements also included £7 million capital DEL from the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (DHSSPS) in respect of baseline funding released through the replacement of conventional capital DEL with EU funding. This reflects use of part of the Titanic funding, which was removed from the EU programme in the 2012-13 financial year. Furthermore, the EU Titanic funding is now also expected to fund part of the A2 road project, and that will free up further capital DEL for the Executive. The exact figures have not yet been firmed up, but they are expected to be in the region of £5 million in this financial year and £8 million in 2014-15. I expect to be in a position to confirm these reduced requirements as part of the October monitoring round.

It is good practice that Departments seek to manage any emerging pressures within their existing allocations before bringing forward bids for additional allocations. The public expenditure control framework stipulates that internal departmental movements across spending areas in excess of the de minimis threshold require the Executive's approval. In this round, the Executive agreed just one such movement, and that is also detailed in the tables.

Departments may also, for a number of reasons, seek to reclassify expenditure from resource to capital or vice versa. All such reclassifications need Executive approval. They are also shown in the tables accompanying this statement. Departments may also, subject to Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP) approval, seek to move budgets between the ring-fenced and non-ring-fenced RDEL categories. The impact of those moves is shown in the tables detailing the ring-fenced RDEL position.

All those adjustments impacted on the total amount of resources available to the Executive in this monitoring round. Once all those issues were taken into account, the Executive had £193.6 million of capital DEL available to allocate but a residual overcommitment of £7.4 million on the resource DEL side. However, the Executive had a £71.3 million resource-to-capital reclassification built into their Budget position for 2013-14. That meant that the Executive had the capacity to reverse this switch, which would provide more RDEL at the expense of less CDEL.

As Members will be aware, it is not possible to utilise the available capital funding on taking forward new strategic capital projects in this financial year. That is because large, complex projects such as roads, hospitals and schools require significant lead-in time. The Executive, therefore, agreed that it would be a better use of resources to meet some of the high priority resource DEL pressures in this financial year. Therefore, the Executive agreed to reverse the £71.3 million resource-to-capital switch, which meant that the Executive had £63.8 million resource DEL and £122.4 million capital DEL.

We have now got to the bit that, I suppose, Members are most interested in. What did we do with the money once we got to that stage after switching it round, moving it round, reclassifying it and all the rest? Against the significant amount of funding available, Departments submitted bids totalling £179 million in respect of resource expenditure and £233.2 million in capital expenditure. The individual bids are also included in the tables that are attached to this statement. The Executive agreed allocations totalling £80.6 million on the resource side and £115.9 million on the capital side.

The individual allocations are detailed in the tables; therefore, I will highlight only some of the main ones. There was £59 million to the Department for Regional Development, of which nearly half was for additional roads structural maintenance. The allocation also ensures that DRD is now fully funded in compliance with the regulator's PC13 final determination in respect of Northern Ireland Water. There was also extra funding for new buses, which will attract £5.3 million of EU match funding and is replacing part of the Titanic funding in the EU programme.

The health service will also benefit from £54.5 million of additional funding. That will contribute towards ensuring that the Transforming Your Care reforms can continue and that our hospitals and medical equipment can be upgraded for the benefit of all who use our health service. The DHSSPS allocation also includes £12.5 million for energy-related schemes that will attract EU match funding. That is also part of the package of projects that will replace the DETI Titanic project in the EU programme.

I am sure that Members will also welcome the boost to local economy of the £19 million allocated to DETI. That will ensure that Invest NI can fund additional selective financial assistance and R&D projects in its pipeline, and will also substantially boost Invest Northern Ireland's access to finance funds. The fact that DETI sought that additional funding provides another indication of emerging optimism in the local economy. The Executive will not hesitate to do all they can to boost jobs and growth in that area. The additional funding will also ensure that the Northern Ireland Tourist Board can maximise the opportunities arising from events such as the G8, City of Culture, World Police and Fire Games, and the Giro d'Italia.

There has been much focus on the cost of the G8 event. The most important thing is that we successfully delivered a safe and secure event, and, for that, I give my sincere thanks to the PSNI.

Of course, the event did not come for free, and, although the UK Government picked up the majority of the costs, the Executive provided some funding in the June monitoring round. The estimated G8 policing and security-related costs now stand at approximately £75 million. However, the UK Government have agreed to cover some £60 million of those costs. That leaves a balance of £14.5 million, which the Executive agreed to allocate to DOJ. In addition to the policing and security-related costs, there were some costs registered by Departments, including DETI, DRD and Health. Those amounted to some £5.1 million and funded road improvements around Enniskillen, a publicity campaign to maximise the economic benefits of the event and pressures on the Ambulance Service and the Fire and Rescue Service.

We must recognise that the G8 event has the potential to generate huge economic benefits for Northern Ireland. That is why the event will be followed by an investment conference in the autumn. Of course, we will not know the full economic benefits for years to come. However, a recent report by Barclays, for example, estimated that there could be significant net economic benefits in the short run, with potential for much greater long-term benefits for Northern Ireland.

The Executive also agreed to provide further help for new homeowners. This resulted in a £10 million allocation to DSD for the co-ownership scheme, which remains oversubscribed. This will help an additional 200 new homeowners on to the property ladder and further boost our construction sector. The construction sector should also welcome the additional £5 million to DE for schools minor works.

The Executive also confirmed previous commitments in respect of the hardship scheme for farmers affected by the severe weather experienced in March and funding for local government reform. The allocation to DARD will enable hardship payments to be made to an estimated 1,250 farmers who lost livestock as a result of the severe weather experienced in March. The allocation to DOE will ensure that the review of public administration transition costs are adequately resourced.

In addition to the many allocations, the Executive agreed to set aside £17 million for the purchase of the Invest NI headquarters. Currently, Invest NI leases the building through a PFI contract. However, the incumbent company went into administration, and Invest NI can now buy back its headquarter building at a very competitive price. This would result in significant resource savings and should, therefore, represent a very good deal for Invest NI and the Executive. I hope to be able to confirm this allocation in the October monitoring round.

Members will be aware that the UK Government recently allocated ring-fenced financial transactions capital funding of £46.8 million in this year, with an additional £59.3 million in the next year. As I mentioned, last week's UK spending review provided a further £104.3 million financial transactions money in 2015-16. That can only be used for private sector loan or equity investment. My officials have been working with colleagues in other Departments and the SIB to develop schemes that may make use of this funding. To date, several emerging schemes have been put forward by Departments. However, it is a complex area, and a number of technical issues must be addressed before allocations can be made. The Executive, therefore, agreed that it would be premature to make significant allocations from this ring-fenced expenditure in this monitoring round.

There were, however, two schemes that were sufficiently developed to ensure that there should be actual spend in this financial year. The first was the agrifood loan scheme. I have mentioned this scheme a couple of times in the Assembly, and we have been working with DETI, the banks and the agrifood industry on it. The scheme would ensure that our agrifood sector would be in a position to maximise the opportunity provided by a recent commitment by the major UK supermarkets to source more of their produce from the UK. The agrifood loan scheme would provide subordinated Executive loans of up to 40% of total build costs, with local banks providing the balance of funding.

The scheme will, therefore, ensure that primary producers can obtain finance without providing full security. That is expected to unlock a significant number of projects that would contribute to substantial increases in output, employment and external sales from the local agrifood sector in the coming years. There would, of course, also be an immediate construction sector boost. The Executive agreed to provide £10 million of financial transactions funding to the scheme and that further funding would be committed in October, should there be completion of the contractual arrangements.

1.00 pm

The second scheme was the existing Get Britain Building initiative, which was launched in January. The Executive agreed to provide a further £7.2 million of financial transactions funding to the scheme. Furthermore, DSD is in the process of finalising two variations on the Get Britain Building housing schemes, and the Executive anticipate funding those in the October monitoring round.

I usually update the House on the latest position on the social investment fund and the childcare strategy, and this year is no different. Members will recall that, as part of Budget 2011-15, the Executive set aside £11 million resource and £15 million capital for the social investment fund in this financial year. The Executive also agreed, as part of the Budget realignment exercise, that Delivering Social Change projects should be funded from that centrally held fund. In addition, the Executive set aside £3 million resource for this year to fund childcare strategy initiatives.

A number of allocations under the Delivering Social Change banner were processed in this monitoring round, including £2 million resource to DHSSPS, £1 million resource to DE, £1.1 million resource to DSD and £0.5 million resource to OFMDFM. Furthermore, there were RDEL allocations from the childcare fund, which included £0.4 million to DHSSPS, £0.2 million to DCAL and £0.8 million to OFMDFM. There was also a transfer of £0.03 million RDEL to OFMDFM under the social investment fund. Since that funding is accessed from existing central funds set aside by the Executive, those transactions were handled as technical transfers. The transfers mean that there is now £6.4 million resource DEL and £15 million capital DEL remaining in the social investment fund for 2013-14. Similarly, there is a residual £1.6 million resource DEL in the childcare strategy.

I want to inform Members of the approach that the Executive have agreed for the 2014 capital position, which has been subject to debate in the Chamber on a number of occasions. The background is that Minister Kennedy recently wrote to me indicating that the ongoing delay to the A5 road scheme was likely to free up capital DEL funding in the 2014-15 financial year. He also set out a number of road schemes that, he suggested, could be advanced in the next financial year to make use of any additional capital funding. Given that all significant capital projects have a considerable lead-in time, the Executive agreed that it would be helpful to consider, as early as possible and in a strategic manner, projects that may be advanced in 2014-15. Pending further consideration of all options and to ensure that valuable time is not lost, the Executive have agreed that the Regional Development Minister can proceed with the Magherafelt bypass project.

The scheme, costing around £40 million, will address a key bottleneck on our road network, and the Executive's proactive approach sends a clear message of confidence to our construction sector at this difficult time. It is anticipated that work on the ground will start in the autumn of next year.

To ensure that all Ministers have an opportunity to put forward proposals, the Executive agreed that my officials would conduct an exercise over the summer seeking capital project proposals for the 2014-15 financial year. The outcome of that exercise will be brought to the Executive for consideration as part of the October monitoring round, and I will update the House on the outcome of our deliberations.

This June monitoring round has been complex, and the Executive have agreed total allocations of £196.5 million. We have also precommitted an additional £17 million of capital funding to be confirmed in the October monitoring round that has been allocated out of £17.2 million of financial transactions funding. Taking into account the £17 million of precommitted allocations, the Executive left this monitoring round with an overcommitment of £16.8 million of resource expenditure and an effective overcommitment of £10.5 million in capital expenditure. That is perfectly manageable at this stage of the financial year.

The allocations made in this round will provide a huge boost for our construction sector. We should welcome the additional funding for road structural maintenance, hospital maintenance and capital works, school maintenance, co-ownership and the financial transactions funding for the Get Britain Building scheme and the agrifood loan scheme. Indeed, those allocations, which will directly boost the construction sector, total £73 million.

The Executive's provision of further resources to Invest Northern Ireland to fund business growth here is good news for the local economy. The Executive's commitment to the agrifood loan scheme also has the potential to support significant growth in this sector, with all the wider economic benefits that that can bring. Our hospitals will also benefit from the injection of funding for the maintenance of the health estate and the purchase of new medical equipment. The allocations confirmed today will have a real and lasting impact on our local economy and on the public services delivered to the people of Northern Ireland. Therefore, I commend the June monitoring round to the Assembly — and thank you very much for the glass of water.

Mr McKay (The Chairperson of the Committee for Finance and Personnel): Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I welcome the Minister's statement and agree with him that some of the allocations are to be welcomed, particularly the hardship scheme payments that will affect some of my constituents.

The G8 costs outlined in the statement total almost £20 million, including £14.5 million to the Department of Justice and £5.1 million to DETI, DRD and the Health Department. What pressures might those costs create in those Departments? The public will want to know what the Department of Finance and Personnel's assessment is of the potential returns from that expenditure.

Mr Wilson: Before the G8 took place, considerable doubt was expressed about the cost of the event and its benefits to Northern Ireland. We always had the begrudgers, the naysayers and the whingers and the negative people looking for the bad news story from it. It has now been universally accepted that we put on a good show — even the weather helped us, for goodness' sake. It was the safest and the most secure G8, and there have already been benefits from it because of the publicity that we got.

Let us look at other places that have had to host the G8. The Scottish Executive, for example, got less than half of their total expenditure covered by central government. We have done very well out of the allocation made for the costs that we had to bear. I outlined the pressures on each of the Departments, which run to a maximum of £1 million or £2 million for any Department, apart from DOJ, to which we have allocated money. I believe that all Departments will be able to manage that within their existing budget.

Of course, we also wish to invest, and some of the money allocated today will be invested in exploiting the opportunities that will come from the G8. Independent surveys — the important thing is that they are independent — by Barclays and others indicate that there should be medium-term and long-term benefits. It is in our hands to exploit those in the future to ensure that we get the maximum return from the event.

Mr Weir: I thank the Minister for his detailed statement. Just to show that all politics is not parochial, has any consideration been given to funding the Armagh jail project, which has the potential to revitalise tourism in Armagh city?

Mr Wilson: There is no reference in the statement to the Armagh jail project. There was, however, a reference to it in the original statement. The original proposal that I made to the Executive contained a recommendation that we would, subject to a business plan, which you would expect, make an allocation to the Armagh jail project in the October monitoring round. It is a very important regeneration project, because, first, it is a historic building and, secondly, the project will provide hotel accommodation in Armagh, where there is a shortage. For some reason or other, Sinn Féin decided that it did not wish to have that recommendation in the statement. I have yet to receive an explanation of why it wanted it dropped. It was dropped because we could not get agreement to have it included in the monitoring round, but hopefully, over the next number of weeks, some of the party's councillors in the Armagh area, who, I understand, support the project, will bring some pressure on the party to make sure that it is included in the next monitoring round.

Mr D Bradley: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as ucht a ráitis. Thank you very much, Mr Speaker, and I thank the Minister for his statement. I will go back to the reduced requirements. In last year's June monitoring statement they amounted to £12 million in resource and £29 million in capital, compared with £15.3 million in resource and £115.7 million in capital this year. How confident is the Minister that what he has set out today indicates that all Departments have fully declared their reduced requirements at this time and that disproportionate amounts of money will not be handed back later in the year when there is less opportunity for them to be reallocated and fully utilised?

Mr Wilson: That is a constant theme that I come to in all these monitoring rounds. Obviously, at the beginning of the year, Departments sometimes have difficulty identifying whether there will be reduced requirements. I thank the Departments that, at an early stage, have indicated that there is some money that they will not be able to spend, because it means that we can reallocate it.

Before I came here this morning, I had a site meeting with some people from Roads Service. That helped to oil the wheels of the decision-making process for me, I hope, in getting a positive decision for my constituent. The point that Roads Service made to me was that getting money for structural maintenance and road maintenance at this time of the year was far more useful, because the work can be done in good weather and you can have more considered projects etc. That is the important thing.

The Member hit the nail on the head: the sooner we know that money will not be spent, the easier it will be to allocate it to good, sound and worthwhile projects instead of having an end-of-year rush. Even worse, if the money is not declared within all the monitoring rounds, we finish up with an underspend. That makes it more difficult to manage the money, because the limits of the budget exchange scheme are very narrow. The one thing that we want to avoid is giving money back to the Treasury. We have successfully avoided that, even though we had some very late underspends declared this year after the February monitoring round. We preach this message to Departments all the time. Hopefully, it will get across that, the sooner you declare reduced requirements, the better the money can be spent.

Mr Cree: I also thank the Minister for his public expenditure report, which is very good. It is particularly gratifying to see that no money was returned to Treasury.

I can see that there has been a problem with the PFI project for the headquarters of Invest Northern Ireland. Will he assure us that that is not a change in policy? The intention was to go in the other way by realising assets and renting buildings.

On the local government side, is the £5 million transition cost all the money that is needed to make this thing go?

Mr Wilson: First, the Invest NI decision does not represent a change of policy or general direction: it is an example of where, with a bit of fancy footwork, we can solve a number of problems with one decision. We had an excess of capital that, for all the reasons that I gave, could not be spent, including long lead-in periods, a lot of capital returned to us and the Westminster Government emphasising more capital expenditure than resource expenditure, which meant that allocations came mostly in the form of capital allocations.

1.15 pm

Secondly, the opportunity arose to buy the building. The rent that we were paying comes from the resource budget, which is getting tighter and harder to find provision within. We had a golden opportunity to purchase the building using capital money and, in the long run, over the next 18 years of what would have been the lease, to save resource money. We estimate that we will save nearly £3 million a year compared with what we have been paying in rent. That is £3 million freed up in the resource DEL, which is where the pressures are at present and where they are likely to be for the foreseeable future. It is not a change in policy in the sense that we want to go back to owning buildings — the Member will know that there are good reasons for that — but an opportunity arose and all the circumstances came together. I think that we did the right thing in grasping that opportunity. The savings over the lease period amount to nearly £24 million of resource money.

As for the RPA transition costs, the figure is what the Executive decided to allocate, and the Minister of the Environment is happy with that. The Member will know, because we have talked about it before, that the costs include a wide range of things — capacity building and all the rest of it. Hopefully, that will smooth the progress of RPA so that it can take place, on timetable, next year.

Mrs Cochrane: I, too, thank the Minister for his statement, and I commend other Ministers on their spending performance to date. What consideration has been given to the initial resourcing of the Together: Building a United Community plans in this financial year?

Mr Wilson: As, I hope, I said at the start of the statement, one of the ways in which the Building a United Community project will be funded is through the additional borrowing powers that we have been given. I outlined the outcome of the spending review and the fact that, next year and the year after that, we will have the ability to borrow an extra £50 million a year. That is part of the way in which the programme will be financed. Obviously, if additional money is required — the Member will be well aware that the detail of the schemes has not yet been finalised — it will be up to OFMDFM to bid for it in next year's monitoring rounds.

Mr G Robinson: Will the Minister explain the internal reallocation of £2 million in his Department for equal pay?

Mr Wilson: That was to ensure that, should we have to pay out money to retired civil servants, we had allocated funds. The Abdulla ruling in Great Britain may have an impact on applications by retired civil servants in Northern Ireland. The allocation was a precautionary step to ensure that we had the money available to make payments.

Mr Milne: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for his statement. I welcome his announcement about the Magherafelt bypass. It is a good news story for the people of mid-Ulster and the Magherafelt District Council area, not just road users and local traders but the people in general. How long will the project take to complete?

Mr Wilson: I am glad that the Member welcomes the announcement. His party and mine received some criticism because we did not support the populist motion that was debated in the Assembly a couple of weeks ago, which called for the funding of the Magherafelt bypass this year.

Of course, the reason for that, as he will well know, is that money cannot be spent on the Magherafelt bypass in this year. The vesting and procurement processes are still to be done. That is why I said in the statement that we expect work to start in autumn next year, not autumn this year.

So that there can be no further excuse by DRD for delaying preliminary work on the project, we have made it clear that money will be allocated. We are not allocating money; we are indicating that money will be allocated when it is capable of being spent. Therefore, the Regional Development Minister does not have to drag his feet any longer on the scheme, and the scheme, which as the Member said is a very important scheme, can be provided.

I met the council and traders in Magherafelt four or five weeks ago. They explained the position to me and I saw it at first hand as we tried to drive through the town. I believe that this is an important strategic project that will actually help to free up a bottleneck and will maybe help the regeneration of the town centre.

Mr Byrne: I thank the Minister for the statement. There are some good items and projects in it. I welcome particularly the roads structural maintenance increase and the Magherafelt bypass.

Does the Minister think that £10 million will be enough for the agrifood loan scheme? Does he hope to increase that amount later? What discussions has he had with the banks? The Agriculture Committee met the banks last week, and they were not that forthcoming in relation to their lending.

Mr Wilson: It is an initial allocation of £10 million. As I said in the statement, we will revisit it once we see how the scheme is progressing, whether we are getting all the necessary structures in place and what demand is like. I suspect that it will be much more than £10 million over the period. The opportunity lies over the next two or three years. If we miss the boat over that period, the supermarkets will source their produce from other places and we will have lost out. That was one reason why Arlene Foster and I felt we had to step in quickly.

It is not the end of the story; £10 million is the initial allocation. As we see what happens with demand and as we get the structures in place, more money can of course be made available. Given the difficulties that we have with financial transactions money, where we see a scheme such as this that can reap huge job benefits as well as having export potential, we will grasp it.

As far as the discussions with the banks are concerned, Arlene, representatives from the agrifood industry, and I, met all the major banks. They are working between themselves on the kinds of security issues they see. We believe that we have given them the ability to give loans to farmers who want, for example, to put up chicken or pig houses or whatever. We are taking some of the risk; up to 40% of the loan for any chicken house will be made available through the loan scheme that we set up, and we will have the last call on it. So, the banks' risk is reduced there.

For the agrifood industry, the banks will be vetting farmers who are going to be suppliers. Therefore, they will know that they are capable of doing the job and maybe even have a track record. Of course, the agrifood industry will bear some of the ongoing cost, because it supplies the grain, etc. If a business fails, because you need to have the supply of chickens, there is always the possibility of taking over and running the thing themselves.

The banks are actually getting quite a good deal out of this. If they were to baulk at this, I think we would then be able to say that, despite all the rhetoric about lending, we do not see that reality on the ground. I do not want to be critical because I want to get them on board with the scheme. They were more than happy to come to a meeting. They said that they would go away and work at this themselves and come back to us. I am hoping that, in the very near future, we will have some positive results from that.

Mr McQuillan: I thank the Minister for his statement. I, too, welcome the setting aside of money for the Magherafelt bypass. I know that my colleague beside me is very keen for that project to happen. Minister, continuing on from the last question, how important do you see the agrifood loan scheme being to the growth of that sector?

Mr Wilson: I see it as being very important. I cannot remember how many million more chickens and pigs need to be produced every year. However, if we are to meet the demand that the supermarkets will have, something has to happen quickly. Most of the farmers who will be involved cannot give the kind of security required. Do not forget that, once you have built a chicken house, you have a chicken house and you cannot use it for anything else. The banks argue that those are really worth nothing if they are not used to produce chickens, hence the degree of risk. If you are to get chicken houses built fairly quickly, you have to put in the finance quickly. You cannot hum and haw and say that it is too risky and that we need more security and have long, protracted negotiations about loans. It has to be done within a very short period. We believe that by de-risking the project in this way — or partly de-risking it, as we carry some of the risk by taking on 40% of the loan and being the last people to be repaid — we will assist the very rapid growth of that part of the supply chain.

Mr Rogers: I thank the Minister for his statement. How will the end-year flexibility affect further education colleges in continuing to play a key role in kick-starting our economy?

Mr Wilson: The problem with further education colleges, and the reason why we have had to introduce this end-year flexibility, is that when further education colleges were independent, stand-alone entities, they could manage their own budgets. Now, their budgets have to work on the financial year cycle. As the Member will know from his experience, the school year is not the same as the financial year, and, therefore, a college might find that it has not spent all its money by April or the end of March because there is still part of the college year to run. If that money is not spent, it is declared as an underspend, which has an impact on us. If that accumulates across all the colleges, it causes a problem.

We have done the same thing that we did with schools. If the college has unspent money at the end of the year, that is held by my Department under end-year flexibility. The relevant Department then bids for it again in the June monitoring round so that it can be allocated to the colleges. The colleges do not need to have it all spent or rush to spend it at the end of the financial year, leaving themselves with that gap between April and the start of the next college year in September. That works very well for schools. Indeed, schools have been able to keep saving at the rate at which they have always done, so that they have resources available for one-off expenses or whatever. I have no doubt that it will work just as well for further education colleges.

Mr Girvan: I thank the Minister for his statement and apologise for being late for the start of it. Given the length of his answers, I thought that the Minister had turned into another Minister; that is Mr Attwood, by the way.

To what extent has the budget exchange scheme assisted in the better financial management that the provisional outcome illustrates?

Mr Wilson: The budget exchange scheme enables us to carry some money forward. We manage our budgets very well. As I said, what we have done this year is the equivalent of somebody on an average income having only 97p left at the end of the month. We have kept spending very tight. Nevertheless, you will always have situations in which not all the money is spent. Before the budget exchange scheme, we had either to find ways of frittering that money away or give it back to the Treasury. As a result of the budget exchange scheme, we now have that flexibility. It is quite tight; nevertheless, we have the flexibility to carry about £60 million a year over from one year to the next. We have not had to do that this year, but that gives us the ability, in the June monitoring round, to consider how best to spend that money rather than rushing in February and saying, "Just spend it on anything; get rid of it", which, of course, is not a good way of managing money in any circumstances.

1.30 pm

Mrs Overend: I thank the Minister for his statement. The DUP can spin its refusal to support the Ulster Unionists' recent motion on road improvements all it likes, but we did not mention in our motion that the money had to be spent in this year.

I welcome the statement. Will the Minister confirm that my colleague the Regional Development Minister has won the argument on starting the construction of the Magherafelt bypass and that funds have now been set aside to move through vesting and on to procurement? Furthermore, will the Minister commit his support to the policy idea of the 10% top-up compensation, similar to the policy in GB, for landowners who are required to release land?

Mr Wilson: First, we do not spin when it comes to projects; we deliver. That is the important thing. The First Minister and I went to Magherafelt and saw the situation. Long before there was any debate in this Assembly, I had spoken to the council and the traders, and the First Minister had spoken to, I think, the traders in Magherafelt. We have had representations from our Assembly Members in the area, and a conscious decision was made to deliver on that important project. So, let us make it quite clear what happened with that situation.

The Member is maybe trying to rewrite history when she talks about not wanting the money spent in this year. In fact, the whole point of the debate was to try to ensure that money was allocated in this year, even though it could not be spent this year. Indeed, I was in somebody's house the other night, and I read an article in the 'Mid-Ulster Mail' or whatever it happened to be and thought, "What is this all about?" The statement had been written at that stage, Mr Speaker, just in case anyone thinks I was influenced by the paper. The question was quite clearly this: why is the money not being given now? The money is not being given now because the money cannot be spent now. Let us make something clear: the Minister always had the ability to start the work on that road scheme. Let us not fall out about it, but let us get the people of Magherafelt the road scheme that they need and that will be important for them.

The Member asked about the 10% top-up compensation. Members always refer to what happens in other parts of the United Kingdom, but the compensation scheme in other parts of the United Kingdom is different from the one that is available in Northern Ireland. If Members want the legislation changed so that we replicate the compensation scheme from other parts of the United Kingdom, landowners would face certain losses compared with what they have under the scheme here. It is swings and roundabouts. Before we go down that route, Members ought to bear in mind that although we do not have the 10% top-up, if people's houses are affected, they have the 10% for home loss and disturbance. We also have different elements of the scheme that do not pertain in the rest of the United Kingdom. Overall, people do just as well.

Mr D McIlveen: I thank the Minister for his statement. Can he confirm whether there is still the same enthusiasm or lack of enthusiasm in the Executive for the A5 scheme?

Mr Wilson: The Executive have committed themselves to building the A5. The problem was not an Executive decision but a decision of the courts and the group of people who lobbied against the building of the scheme. You could perhaps argue that DRD could have covered the planning aspects more fully than it did. Nevertheless, we are where we are, and the Executive commitment is still that, once planning permission has been granted for the scheme, the scheme will go ahead. Of course, we will have to find the resources for it.

Mr Swann: Minister, you said that you will task your officials, over the summer, to seek capital project proposals for the 2014-15 financial year. Will you still give the same commitment for the A26 so that that can be brought forward as soon as possible as well?

Mr Wilson: The point of having a review of all capital projects is that, given the significant amount of capital money that we have, we want to ensure that it is spent on the highest priorities. Other Departments will have priorities as well. Indeed, in the Budget debate, I heard Members from Mr Swann's party talk about capital priorities that they see and which they would like to see financed over the period of this year's Budget, let alone next year's Budget. I do not want to presume what the outcome of the review of capital projects will be, but I have no doubt that the Minister for Regional Development will be putting the roads projects forward, less the Magherafelt one, which we have now said that we will fund out of next year's money anyway. I am sure that the Health Minister will have, under Transforming Your Care, some health proposals. Indeed, he was at a meeting with me on Friday where we were talking about health priorities in the Northern Trust area, which will require capital expenditure. All those things will go into the pot, and decisions will be made. Resources will be available, and the decisions will be made on the basis of which projects are the highest priority.

Mr McAleer: Minister, your statement indicates that the £40 million allocated to the Magherafelt bypass will come out of the A5 budget for the 2014-15 financial year. Can you confirm that the Executive have made that decision? There is a view in the west that the A5 will be well under way in 2014.

Mr Wilson: This statement has been approved by the Executive, so it is an Executive decision. That is the only reason why it is here today. As I said, parts of this statement were left out because they did not get approval, including a part about Armagh jail. Anything that is in the statement has Executive approval. As far as the question of what roads expenditure will take place in 2014-15 is concerned, all the indications from the Minister for Regional Development are that, at the very least, it will be the middle of the year before the outcome of the planning application and the process for the A5 is known. On that basis, there will be a considerable amount of A5 money that cannot be spent — if any of it is spent — in the next financial year.

Mr Givan: I thank the Minister for the statement and the work on his part that has gone into bringing forward these allocations. The public will want some more answers about the £75 million in G8 capital costs. I commend the Minister that Northern Ireland has a better deal than Scotland got when the G8 was hosted there, but can he assure the House that the capital costs that went into the G8 project will be able to be used in future policing operations and that this was not a one-off cost? Can he assure us that there will be a long-term benefit to the police from what they bought?

Secondly, in future monitoring rounds, the Department of Justice will bid again for the Prison Service exit scheme. A small number of officers are waiting to be able to leave the service, and that will finally draw a line under this scheme, which has allowed in the region of 500 officers to be able to leave the service in recognition of the work that they carried out during the darkest times of our Troubles.

Mr Wilson: I will take the second point first. The Executive have, of course, been generous in the allocations to the exit scheme for prison officers. Indeed, in the January monitoring round, we allocated a substantial amount of money. Even after the January monitoring round, when it became clear that Departments would declare some underspends that had not been identified in the January monitoring round, we made a further allocation. The resource end of the budget is always tight, but it is open to the Justice Minister to apply for future moneys for the scheme. It is an invest-to-save scheme, but there will be other competing pressures. However, those two allocations were made at the end of the last financial year.

We fought hard with the Treasury over the policing costs for the G8 summit. Although there was expenditure in paying for police officers to come from other parts of the United Kingdom, to kit them out, to look after them and all the consumables for any such security operation, the Treasury made the point that some of the expenditure was intended for capital equipment, such as surveillance equipment, drones, and so on. Those will not disappear now that the G8 has gone, and they are not redundant. That capital equipment will be available to the police and should, therefore, be part of the normal budget.

The Member makes an important point. It is not as though we paid out this money and there are no long-lasting benefits. Part of our allocation for the security costs was for equipment that the police may or may not have purchased anyway but that they were able to purchase in advance because of the G8 summit. They will be able to use it over the next number of years as part of the normal security equipment that helps them to detect crime and to catch criminals.

Financial Provisions Bill: Second Stage

Mr Wilson (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): I beg to move

That the Second Stage of the Financial Provisions Bill [NIA 22/11-15] be agreed.

This short Bill handles a number of routine financial matters that have no impact on the overall quantum of government expenditure in Northern Ireland. Financial provisions Bills are routine in nature and are required at intervals to deal with minor and/or non-controversial amendments to governing legislation.

On this occasion, the Bill contains six provisions. Clause 1 is a repeal, in its entirety, of the Development Loans (Agriculture and Fisheries) Act (Northern Ireland) 1968. Under that Act, loans were made available at competitive commercial rates of interest for a wide range of agricultural purposes, such as the purchase of livestock, seeds and fertilisers, and the improvement of farm dwellings and buildings. Given the lessening demand for loans and the need to reduce government expenditure, the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development (DARD) ceased to accept those loan applications at the end of November 1979. There is no principal outstanding, and all the loans advanced to the agricultural loan fund from the Consolidated Fund have been paid in full. The legislation is no longer required and needs to be repealed.

Clause 2 seeks to amend the Harbours Act (Northern Ireland) 1970 to permit the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development to provide grant-in-aid to the Northern Ireland Fishery Harbour Authority (NIFHA). The Northern Ireland Fishery Harbour Authority is an executive non-departmental public body (NDPB) sponsored by the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development. Its duties include the improvement, management and maintenance of the three fishery harbours and harbour estates of Ardglass, Kilkeel and Portavogie. Up to now, the Fishery Harbour Authority has generally been able to meet its operational costs from the revenues it generates, but in recent years, as a result of factors largely beyond the authority's control, it is becoming more difficult to achieve break-even consistently on an annual basis. Should the position arise that the authority regularly incurs an annual operating deficit, DARD wishes to be in a position to provide grants to cover the deficit.

I am advised that the authority has already introduced a number of policies to reduce operating costs and is seeking further efficiency savings. However, the environment in which the authority operates — one of reduced fishing opportunities and fluctuating prices — makes it difficult to forecast changes in revenue, and that, coupled with consistent pressure from stakeholders to keep charges as low as possible, makes the authority's trading performance uncertain. As a result, DARD wishes to have the authority to provide support if it is judged necessary to do so.

1.45 pm

Clause 3 amends the Judicature (Northern Ireland) Act 1978 to enable the Court Funds Office (CFO) interest rates to be adjusted by way of departmental direction. The Court

Funds Office is responsible for the management of funds held in court, mainly on behalf of minors and patients who are deemed incapable of managing their affairs. The interest rate applied to those funds can be adjusted only by way of a new statutory rule, which can take between eight to 12 weeks to become operational. Funds are held in accounts that earn interest in accordance with the Bank of England base rates. The difference between the base rate and CFO rates can, therefore, lead either to a surplus or a deficit on the accounts. Although the CFO can recover any deficit from the Consolidated Fund protecting the funds held for individuals, it is preferable to adjust the rates as soon as possible. The proposed provision will allow CFO to react quickly to changes in the Bank of England base rate and is in line with practice in England and Wales.

Clause 4 amends the Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 to provide the Housing Executive with statutory power to charge for its administration and transaction costs associated with general discretionary land transactions. Under article 88 of the Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 1981, the Northern Ireland Housing Executive has statutory authority to dispose of any land held by it that is not required for social housing. Many of those parcels of land are small inconsequential sites with limited market value and are often sold to the owners of adjacent houses or are sites for development as garden extensions, garages or informal open spaces. For each piece of land sold, the Northern Ireland Housing Executive incurs administration and transaction costs but does not have the specific statutory authority to charge the purchaser for those costs. That often means that, in the current economic climate, the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and, therefore, the public purse, are effectively making a loss on many of the small parcels of land that it sells, especially those sold by private treaty. Clause 4 seeks authority, along the lines of section 93 of the Local Government Act 2003, to charge for discretionary services.

Clause 5 amends article 4(d) of the Audit and Accountability (Northern Ireland) Order 2003 in line with the corresponding reference in the Health and Social Care (Reform) Act (Northern Ireland) 2009. The clause will update the definition of a relevant NHS body for the purposes of the Comptroller and Auditor General's data-matching powers. The current position is that, because of the change in definitions, the C&AG, although able to request patient data from Northern Ireland health bodies for a data-matching exercise, can no longer disclose the results. That effectively means that patient data cannot be used in data-matching exercises for the purpose of assisting in the prevention and detection of fraud.

The sixth and final clause establishes the Police Rehabilitation and Retraining Trust (PRRT) and the Northern Ireland Police Fund (NIPF) as statutory bodies. Establishing those organisations in legislation is purely a technical amendment consequential to their transfer from the Northern Ireland Office under the devolution of policing and justice and is necessary to provide a proper legal authority for the Department of Justice to fund them. The matter has been discussed with my Department and the Northern Ireland Audit Office and, in keeping with other arm's-length bodies, it is agreed that a statutory basis for both organisations is required.

In short, Mr Speaker, the Bill provides for a number of routine financial provisions, and I commend it to the Assembly.

Mr McKay (The Chairperson of the Committee for Finance and Personnel): Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for explaining the general principles of this exciting legislation. The Committee recognises that its purpose is to deal with routine financial matters such as minor amendments to governing legislation or regularising an existing practice. It also understands that the legislation is normally required at intervals of every two or three years to adjust statutory limits and handle other routine financial issues, and it is regarded as semi-routine. In that regard, the Department explained that it occasionally surveys Departments, the Audit Office and other bodies to identify any finance-related legislation that needs to be updated or amended, and it gathers those small amendments into a single Bill.

The Department indicated its intention to compile a draft Financial Provisions Bill during 2012, but, due to a reprioritising of the Department's legislative programme, that was delayed. A total of six items were considered suitable for inclusion in the Bill, and the Minister referred to them.

At the Committee's meeting on 22 May 2013, members agreed to seek initial comments from the relevant Assembly Committees about the Bill's applicable provisions. We also wrote to the Department to request clarification on whether powers to access Harbour Commissioners' reserves will be provided for in the Bill. It was since clarified that that has already been delegated to the Budget review group.

The Committee received a pre-introductory policy briefing from departmental officials on the background to the Bill and the approach that was taken when consulting with other Departments. By that time, the Committee for Social Development and the Public Accounts Committee had indicated that they were generally content with the Bill proposals at that stage. Members agreed during that meeting to seek clarification from the Department about any amendments that may be tabled to the Bill.

The Committee further agreed to highlight a number of pertinent issues to the Justice, Regional Development and Social Development Committees. Since the policy briefing, the Committee has received notification from the Department that the Minister intends to bring forward two amendments to the Bill at Consideration Stage, both relating to rating legislation. Although the Committee is still to receive an oral briefing on the details of those amendments, I understand that one is technical in nature and will clarify current provision of the ability of Land and Property Services to request effective dates for occupation. The second amendment will seek to extend the current discount that is allowed for early payment of rates for occupied and unoccupied dwellings.

The Committee looks forward to a briefing in early September from departmental officials on the substance of those amendments, and it will scrutinise them accordingly, subject to the Bill's being referred to Committee Stage today. The Committee has also been advised by the Agriculture Committee that it has considered correspondence from DARD on the rationale for including the relevant provisions in the Bill. The Agriculture Committee indicated that it is content that the provisions be included.

Overall, the Finance Committee was generally satisfied with the briefing and clarification that the Department provided, and members will further engage with officials and other stakeholders on the details of the Bill during Committee Stage. In the meantime, I support the principles of the Bill.

Mr D Bradley: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Thank you very much, Mr Speaker. There is a quotation from Shakespeare, which, I think, comes from 'Hamlet':

"More honour'd in the breach than the observance."

The Bill is probably more interesting for what is excluded from it rather than for what it includes. What the Chairman said sparked off an observation, which is that one item that is missing from the Bill, and which I expected at one time might have formed part of a Bill, is the £40 million from the Harbour Commissioners, which was to be a contribution to the budgetary position. After that announcement had been made, it was realised that legislation would be necessary to release that money, and I expected that arrangements would be made. Subsequently, it emerged that legislation was not being brought forward and that an arrangement had been made between DRD and the Harbour Commissioners that industrial space would be made available to Invest NI in the harbour area. I am not quite sure of the value of the space that has been made available and whether it matches up to the £40 million. So, I would be interested to hear from the Minister whether he agrees that this is an important revenue-raising asset that should be brought within the Executive's control through DRD and whether he will consider it for inclusion in a future financial provisions Bill.

Mr Cree: The Minister has set the scene fairly well, but it is good to see that these miscellaneous pieces of legislation are being regularised in such a Bill. As the Minister said, the Bill is largely technical in nature and deals with routine matters, and I think that it is non-controversial.

I understand that a Bill of this nature is usually brought forward every two or three years, with the last coming into effect on 15 December 2009. I also understand that the Bill was due to come forward during last year. However, as happens all too frequently in some Departments, we were faced with a delay. I am pleased that we have got to the stage at which the Bill is before the House.

The legislation that we are considering today includes a number of provisions, which the Minister outlined. All are considered to be non-contentious. With your permission, Mr Speaker, I will mention a few issues. First, I welcome clause 6, which will allow the Northern Ireland Police Fund and the Police Rehabilitation and Retraining Trust to have a statutory footing. The police fund was created to help injured officers — serving and retired — and their families, as well as police widows. The Police Rehabilitation and Retraining Trust is an organisation to look after ex-RUC officers. It provides retraining in trade, as well as psychological and physiotherapy backup and rehabilitation. It is therefore vital that the Department of Justice have the statutory power to fund both those organisations in the essential work that they do.

Secondly, I want to deal directly with the issue of empowering the Housing Executive to charge the purchaser of land from it for any administration and transition costs relating to that sale. I would be grateful if the Minister can give some overview of the administration and transaction costs that the Housing Executive currently bears, in order to gain some sense of how that provision will affect its budget.

Finally, I welcome the fact that there will be consistency between accounts and audits of the Health and Social Care bodies, as outlined in clause 5. That is necessary to enable the Comptroller and Auditor General to carry out the required scrutiny and accountability function. It also facilitates ease of reference with the rest of the United Kingdom. The Committee will of course be looking at those issues in further detail, as well as at the other measures in the Bill, in due course.

Mr Wilson: I thank all the Members who took the opportunity to make their contributions in this short debate today. Obviously, as the Bill moves on — if it passes its Second Stage, which I have no doubt it will — it will go to the Committee for further scrutiny.

The Committee Chairman raised an issue about the amendments to the Rates Order and the reasons for those. We want to make two changes to the Rates Order. The first concerns early payment discount for empty homes. The current legislation does not provide for that, and Members will know that where early payment is made, a 4% discount is available. The purpose of the amendment would be to enable that discount to be extended to those who have empty homes and are paying rates on them. We estimate that around 18% of people who own empty homes will take up the discount, and the cost to the overall rate income will be about £250,000.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Dallat] in the Chair)

The second change is to require additional information about ownership. As the legislation stands, occupiers are held liable for rates. We need to be aware of when there has been a change in circumstances. The current legislation empowers the Department to require information from owners and occupiers for the purpose of determining their liability in accessing the rate, but the important thing is that those requirements do not include the dates of an ownership change. Of course, the Department and LPS have found it increasingly difficult to get information on that and to establish when liability starts for some dwellings. The purpose of the change will be to require, as part of the information supplied to LPS, any information about the specific date on which a person's interest in the property has begun.

2.00 pm

Mr Cree raised the issue of the power for the Housing Executive to charge for the legal and administrative costs, etc, of the transfer of small parcels of land. That is one issue about which, I have got to say, I have some concern. I hope that the Committee will drill down into it.

As I said in my speech, the Housing Executive currently sells small parcels of land quite frequently. I am sure that many in the Chamber have had occasions when someone has come to us and said that people are dumping on the bit of ground beside their house all the time; that youngsters are playing on it and breaking down a hedge; or that it has become a bit of an eyesore and is not being looked after properly. The person will say that they would like to take that bit of ground into the curtilage of their house, as part of the garden, or that they could build a garage or shed on it, for example. Those transactions are quite common for the Housing Executive. In 2010-11, it actually sold 108 such parcels of land. The transactions are usually fairly small in monetary terms; around £1,500 on average per piece of land sold. However, the transaction costs, which, at present, the Housing Executive bears and does not pass on to the purchaser, usually, amount to around £2,500.

The question that I would ask is whether those transaction costs are unrealistically high. Is that amount of administration necessary? Is it cost effective? Is it being done in the most cost-effective way? If there is a cost for the sale of land, of course, the person who wants to purchase the land ought to pay it. It should not be borne by the Housing Executive. In the future, that would be the result of that provision. I have asked whether it is a realistic cost or whether it is over-inflated and that overheads are far too high, and whether something be done to bring them down.

The Member asked what the implication would be. That is the implication: it would more than double the average price of a piece of land sold by the Housing Executive to a private individual. It is something that I hope will be examined when the Bill goes through.

I thank the Committee Chairman for his remarks and Members for the interest that they have taken. I trust that the Assembly will pass the Bill's Second Stage, so that it can go to the Committee for further scrutiny.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That the Second Stage of the Financial Provisions Bill [NIA 22/11-15] be agreed.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Before we move on, I have been asked to point out that the clock at the back of the Chamber is five minutes slow, which, I am sure, is no reflection on Members.

Pensions Bill: Legislative Consent Motion

Mr McCausland (The Minister for Social Development): I beg to move

That this Assembly endorses the principle of the extension to Northern Ireland of clause 41 of the Pensions Bill, as introduced in the House of Commons on 9 May 2013, relating to the preparation of guidance for pensions illustrations.

The Westminster Pensions Bill, which is currently before the House of Commons, provides for the introduction of a single-tier state pension and consequential matters; the acceleration of the increase in state pension age to 67; the introduction of a bereavement support payment; and miscellaneous changes in respect of private pensions.

Whilst not directly related to today's motion, subject to Executive approval, I anticipate bringing forward an Assembly Pensions Bill in due course. I am sure that we can look forward to some interesting debates, but that is for the future. Today, I am seeking the Assembly's agreement specifically to extend to Northern Ireland clause 41 of the Westminster Bill, which relates to the preparation of guidance for pensions illustrations. That measure requires the approval of the Assembly, as it affects matters that fall within the transferred field.

Perhaps it would be helpful if I explain the background to the provision. Defined contribution pensions schemes must provide scheme members with an annual pensions projection known as a statutory money purchase illustration. In doing so, they are required by law to comply with technical guidance issued by the Financial Reporting Council. Under the Companies (Audit, Investigations and Community Enterprise) Act 2004, regulatory functions of the Financial Reporting Council are exempt from liability for damages arising from those activities. That provision is of UK extent. The understanding was that the technical guidance on statutory money purchase illustrations was caught within that exemption under the umbrella of "actuarial standards" work. However, doubts have arisen as to whether the technical guidance is caught by that term.

Clause 41 puts the matter beyond doubt by specifically including the issue of guidance for pensions illustrations in section 16 of the 2004 Act. The amendment comes into force two months after Royal Assent to the Westminster Bill, and it is important that the law in relation to the Financial Reporting Council's functions is clarified as soon as possible. Clause 41, therefore, proposes a minor technical change to clarify the current law. It does not represent a policy change and does not alter how the statutory money purchase illustrations operate or the council's function in relation to them.

In conclusion, this is not a policy change. It merely clarifies the existing law in relation to a UK-wide body — the Financial Reporting Council. Extending clause 41 to Northern Ireland allows us to achieve legal certainty with the minimum of delay on this somewhat technical issue.

Mr Maskey (The Chairperson of the Committee for Social Development): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. First, I thank the Minister for bringing this legislative consent motion to the Assembly. The Minister outlined that this is essentially a technical provision and is designed to clarify the law, as opposed to changing any substantive policy issue, by extending to here an amendment to clause 41 of the Pensions Bill.

The Committee was briefed by the Department and informed that the Financial Reporting Council issues guidance relating to annual pension projections, which are provided to members of defined pension contribution pension schemes. Under existing legislation, the regulatory activities of the Financial Reporting Council are exempt from liability from damages arising from those activities. The Committee was informed that there are some doubts as to whether that guidance is caught under the term “actuarial guidance” and therefore covered by the exemption. The legislative consent motion will provide clarification on that issue and put it beyond doubt.

The Committee recognises that that should be clarified as soon as possible, and the Pensions Bill offers the earliest opportunity to do that. On that basis, the Committee recommends that the Assembly endorse the legislative consent motion.

Mr McCausland: I thank the Chair of the Social Development Committee for his contribution. Clause 41 will clarify the legislation relating to guidance for pension illustrations and will help to ensure that the important work carried out by the Financial Reporting Council continues as intended. I believe that it is in everyone's interest that the law across the United Kingdom is clarified without delay.

I commend the motion to the Assembly.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly endorses the principle of the extension to Northern Ireland of clause 41 of the Pensions Bill, as introduced in the House of Commons on 9 May 2013, relating to the preparation of guidance for pensions illustrations.

Mesothelioma Bill: Legislative Consent Motion

Mr McCausland (The Minister for Social Development):
I beg to move:

That this Assembly endorses the principle of the extension to Northern Ireland of the Mesothelioma Bill.

The Mesothelioma Bill was introduced at Westminster on 9 May 2013. The Bill addresses an issue that has affected and will continue to affect many people here in Northern Ireland, many of whom are known to Members of this House. Diffuse mesothelioma is a devastating disease that is caused almost exclusively by exposure to asbestos, usually in the course of employment. Each year, around 2,400 people die from mesothelioma across the United Kingdom, and the numbers are expected to peak in the next five years. There are around 40 deaths a year from diffuse mesothelioma in Northern Ireland. At its core, the Mesothelioma Bill is about ensuring that financial help and support gets to those who need it most and who otherwise would not have any access to civil compensation. It aims to avoid the delays associated with tracing a liable employer, and will mean that sufferers will receive payments as quickly as possible at a time when they most need it.

The Bill makes provision for the diffuse mesothelioma payment scheme, which was announced by the Westminster Government on 25 July 2012 in their response to consultation by the Department for Work and Pensions on supporting people who need to trace employers' liability insurance. By way of background, under the Employers' Liability (Compulsory Insurance) Act 1969, most employers carrying on business in Great Britain are required to insure their liability to their employees for bodily injury or disease sustained in the course of their employment. Corresponding provision is made for Northern Ireland in the Employer's Liability (Defective Equipment and Compulsory Insurance) (Northern Ireland) Order 1972.

In the case of employer negligence, the majority of individuals are able to make a claim for injury or disease against their current or former employer, or, where their employer no longer exists, they can claim against the relevant employer's liability insurer. However, in the case of diffuse mesothelioma, the disease may not appear until decades after exposure to the asbestos but, once diagnosed, it is rapidly terminal. Sufferers rarely live more than two years after diagnosis and there is no known cure. By the time of diagnosis, a person's employer may have ceased trading or the relevant insurance records may have been lost or destroyed. In these circumstances, the individuals concerned may be unable to recover compensation.

At present, it can take up to two years from someone being diagnosed with mesothelioma to receiving compensation. All too often, people with mesothelioma have died or are in the advanced stages of the disease before any payment is made.

The Mesothelioma Bill was introduced to address the issue of those who were negligently exposed by their employer to asbestos and were diagnosed with diffuse mesothelioma on or after 25 July 2012 but are unable to recover compensation.

The Bill makes provision for the establishment of a scheme to make payments to people with diffuse mesothelioma and dependants of people who have died from this disease before they could make an application to the scheme. The payment scheme is to be funded by a levy on insurance companies that are authorised to provide employers' liability insurance. The amount of the levy to be paid by each insurer will be determined by reference to the insurer's market share during the relevant period. The Bill also provides for the establishment of a technical committee to decide disputes about whether an employer maintained employers' liability insurance with an insurer at a particular time.

Regulation of financial services, such as insurance companies, is a matter that lies outside the legislative competence of the Assembly, and it is appropriate for Westminster to legislate in that area. However, the rights and duties of employers and employees are devolved matters, which means that the Mesothelioma Bill cannot apply to Northern Ireland unless the Assembly gives its consent. I am therefore seeking the Assembly's agreement to the extension of the Bill, and thereby the payment scheme, to Northern Ireland.

I can reassure members that the Bill has no significant financial implications for Northern Ireland as the cost of the scheme will be met by insurance companies required to contribute to the levy. This will involve a small number of major national and international insurers, and I understand that the scheme is unlikely to have any financial impact on any local businesses.

2.15 pm

In summary, I welcome the introduction of the Mesothelioma Bill at Westminster and the fact that it will be extended to Northern Ireland. It is essential that people here who are suffering from diffuse mesothelioma and their dependants are in a position to avail themselves of the benefits provided by the diffuse mesothelioma payment scheme.

Mr Maskey (The Chairperson of the Committee for Social Development): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for bringing the legislative consent motion (LCM) to the Assembly this afternoon.

The introduction of the LCM will ensure that people here who have been diagnosed with mesothelioma do not lose out on a beneficial scheme that will speed up the delivery of compensation payments. Although broadly endorsing the LCM, the Committee wishes to express concern that, if a person has been diagnosed with mesothelioma and is in receipt of benefits as a result of that diagnosis, the benefit that has been paid is subsequently deducted from the lump sum compensation payment. The Committee has raised that concern with the Department, and it acknowledges that, because it is the aim to speed up the delivery of the lump sum compensation payment, the actual deductions should not be that great. However, the Committee felt that, as a point of principle, given that that does not happen with other compensation payments, it needed to note that and inform the House.

Fundamentally, the Committee welcomes the introduction of the LCM as, due to the nature of the disease, which the Minister outlined graphically earlier, the prognosis for sufferers is not good. It is, therefore, vital that compensation payments are made as quickly as possible following any claim application. The Committee sees the introduction of the LCM as a positive development that will offer some positive outcome to those diagnosed with mesothelioma and their families in what would, inevitably, be a very difficult and traumatic time. With that, on behalf of the Committee, I recommend that the Assembly endorses this legislative consent motion.

Mr Brady: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I speak not as the Deputy Chairperson of the Committee for Social Development but as an MLA for Newry and Armagh. I, too, welcome the Mesothelioma Bill. It is good that people who suffer from that horrendous disease have finally received recognition.

Reiterating what the Chair said, I, too, have reservations about the fact that benefit will be deducted from compensation for people who received that benefit as a result of suffering from the disease, obviously through no fault of their own. Going back to compensation recovery for other conditions and accidents, that is not the case because, essentially, the compensation has been raised to take into account the fact that benefits have been paid for the particular condition or accident. Unfortunately, in this case, that has not happened. Although we have been told that it will affect only a relatively small number of people here in the North, the fact is that it is a general principle that should not really be applied. We had a presentation in the Senate Chamber last week around all this. I could not get a particularly satisfactory explanation from the people involved, but they said that they would take it back to Westminster and look at it. It is unfair, and I just wanted to put that on record.

Mr McCausland: I thank the two Members for their contributions to the debate. I thank the Chair for his general support for the legislative consent motion. With the one qualification, I think that there is broad agreement across the Chamber for the proposal to extend the Mesothelioma Bill to Northern Ireland. It is vital that local people are not excluded from the benefits of the legislation.

I acknowledge the concern about the potential recovery of social security benefits from scheme payments. I understand, from what the Member said that officials said, that it is something that they will take away and look at. It may well be the case that it is something that we are bound by. Nevertheless, it is important that we move ahead with this. The scheme will ensure that sufferers who are unable to trace a solvent employer or insurer can have access to a range of support, including access to compensation.

That is, without doubt, a better situation for those suffering from mesothelioma than not having access to the scheme or any civil compensation. Under the new scheme, it is expected that around 300 people a year from across the United Kingdom could receive an average payment of approximately £100,000 each.

I want to offer some reassurance to Members about the recovery of benefits from scheme payments that only those benefits that are paid directly because of and relating to the diagnosis of mesothelioma can be recouped. It is envisaged that, in practice, there will be a very limited period between the date of diagnosis of diffuse mesothelioma, when an individual would be able to claim relevant benefits, and that individual being able to receive payment under the scheme.

As I said, payments from the proposed scheme should be made much more quickly than the current 16 months to two years it takes for a legal claim to be settled. Under the scheme, it is envisaged that sufferers will usually receive payments within three to five months of making a claim. So, the amount of any relevant benefit paid from the date of diagnosis until the time that a scheme payment is made is likely to be very small. Therefore, it is unlikely that any significant contribution would ever be made from a compensation payment.

I thank Members for their support and seek approval for the legislative consent motion.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly endorses the principle of the extension to Northern Ireland of the Mesothelioma Bill.

Local Government (Statutory Transition Committees) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2013

Mr Deputy Speaker: Minister, I might have to interrupt proceedings for Question Time. However, that depends on you.

Mr Attwood (The Minister of the Environment): I will keep you guessing, Mr Deputy Speaker. I beg to move

That the draft Local Government (Statutory Transition Committees) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2013 be approved.

The regulations are made under sections 15 to 17 and section 24 of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act (Northern Ireland) 2010, which stipulates that they must be laid in draft form and approved by a resolution of the Assembly. The purpose of the draft regulations is to require existing councils to work together to establish statutory transition committees (STCs), which will be bodies corporate for the new local government districts. Let me make it very clear: moving to STCs was a very strong view at a political level within and outside the Chamber. It is an example of creating certainty and deepening political authority in the rundown to the review of public administration (RPA), which is only 700 days away.

The regulations will require statutory transition committees to hold their first meetings within 35 days of the date on which the regulations come into operation, which is anticipated to be this week. Each committee will be permitted to have up to 16 members, with equal representation from their predecessor councils. That means that the STCs should meet in and around and no later than 7 August.

There are exceptions about the make-up of the STCs. The STC for the new district of Causeway Coast and Glens will have up to 20 members, given that four councils are merging, and the STC for the new district of Belfast will have no more than 25 councillors, given the size of the Belfast district. Belfast will be joined by two councillors each from Castlereagh Borough Council and Lisburn City Council, since parts of their council districts are joining Belfast. With the exception of Belfast, all statutory transition committees will contain equal representation from each of the constituent councils. Under guidance, it was decided that the councillors who are joining the Belfast STC from the two sister councils will have to be drawn from areas that are moving into the Belfast City Council area.

Membership of the statutory transition committees should proportionately reflect the political composition of the existing councils. At stakeholder events earlier this year, it was agreed that to specify and strictly apply the methods to be used to achieve proportionality could disadvantage smaller parties and upset the balance that was achieved in voluntary transition committees (VTCs). Therefore, I have decided that, to maintain and allow maximum flexibility, no particular method of selection will be prescribed. However, the Department will recommend in guidance, as it did with the VTCs, that STCs should use d'Hondt, Sainte-Laguë or single transferable vote (STV) mechanisms, with d'Hondt as the default position. That approach is in line with the mechanisms that are set out in the draft Local Government (Reorganisation) Bill. However, if a council wishes to embed a system of proportionality that has a higher threshold and goes further than any of the models that are outlined in the guidance, they can do so with the approval of the Department. One VTC and two councils wish to go there.

The draft regulations provide for the election of a chair and vice-chair. Guidance will state that the presumption is that those roles will rotate. However, an STC may appoint a chair and vice-chair for the duration if they choose to do so. The chair will have a casting vote in the event of a tie, but not when it comes to the appointment of staff. Provision has been made in the regulations for an existing council to pay a member of the STC an allowance for work done on behalf of the Committee. The amount will not exceed £2,700 per annum. Councils will have to decide whether that amount is justified. In my view, it will be.

The draft regulations require predecessor councils to provide a statutory transition committee with premises and facilities, including administrative staff, and to meet reasonable costs incurred by the STC. Costs will be split between predecessor councils in proportion to the number of members that each nominates to the STC. The draft regulations will require the STC to gather information and consider and advise on matters relevant to ensuring that the new council will be able to adapt its full range of powers and functions from 1 April 2015.

The Department has already provided the sector with a list of specific tasks that STCs will need to undertake. That will be supported by guidance, but the crucial tasks, which are already set out in the regulations, include preparing a draft corporate and business plan and a draft budget for agreement of the new council; publishing its corporate and business plan; agreeing with the predecessor councils a budget for the operation of the committee; and arranging the first meeting of the new council.

I come now to the issue that has so far attracted most attention. In the statutory phase, transition committees will be required to arrange the appointment of chief executives to lead the change management process and drive convergence. Though the STCs are short-term bodies, the newly appointed chief executives will transfer to lead the new councils once they are constituted. My preference — I stress again that it is a view widely shared in the Chamber and across the councils and voluntary transition committees — is for those chief executives to be appointed by open and full competition. The draft regulations place a duty on the STC to appoint a chief executive to the new council on the basis of fair and open competition. I believe in that point very strongly. I believe that there is very wide public and political endorsement for it. I hope that, while respecting the interests of all staff, including the chief executives and all the representative bodies, this opportunity to shape councils with new chief executives, whether they come from councils or from outside the councils, will be grasped by all.

It must be remembered that the 11 chief executive posts are not broadly comparable with the existing 26 chief executive posts. The new councils will cover geographically larger areas, serve a bigger population and deliver significant new functions. That latter point is very important. The new chief executives will preside over councils with new powers and duties that include spatial planning, regeneration, community planning and the general power of competence. Councils will also operate within a new governance framework. Therefore, the job specification of a new chief executive will clearly reflect that growth and the changes and challenges inherent in the job of creating and building a new organisation, successfully managing the transition from old to new, and managing the transformation on into creating stability and excellence in a new council.

It is my intention that the process for the appointment of chief executives to STCs should follow the current process and the Staff Commission's code of procedures as far as is practical. I want to stress that point. The Staff Commission will still have its statutory oversight and a joint Department of the Environment/Staff Commission working group is, by following existing procedures and the statutory code as far as is practical, developing the right model to get the right outcome on the right side of the law and the right side of everybody's interests as far as is practical.

At present, most councils delegate the power of appointment of chief executives to an interview panel comprising the council chair, representatives from the Staff Commission, independent observers and between four and seven members of the council. Only elected members have voting rights on the panel, and they make the decision on behalf of the full council. However, in several councils, the decision of elected members is then put to full council for ratification. That is common practice in other jurisdictions. My officials are working with the Staff Commission to design a bespoke process based on the existing model. As a body corporate, an STC may appoint other staff to the new council for its district as it deems appropriate. I am sure that there will be a question on that shortly.

The draft regulations will also require councils to provide information to STCs and will require STCs —

2.30 pm

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order. I have to interrupt the Minister because it is time for questions to the First Minister and deputy First Minister.

Oral Answers to Questions

Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister

Mr Deputy Speaker: Question 2 has been withdrawn and will require a written answer.

G8 Summit

1. Mr Byrne asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for their assessment of the impact of the G8 summit 2013. (AQO 4413/11-15)

4. Mr Campbell asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for their assessment of the potential for inward investment from the members of the G8, following the recent summit. (AQO 4416/11-15)

13. Mr F McCann asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what their expectations are from the proposed G8 investment conference. (AQO 4425/11-15)

Mr M McGuinness (The deputy First Minister): With your permission, Mr Deputy Speaker, I would like to answer questions 1, 4 and 13 together. Again with your permission, I might need some extra time to answer all three questions.

The G8 summit was a tremendous success for us because it generated very significant positive international coverage. We had eight of the world's leaders here, plus the presidents of the institutions of the European Union and leaders from other influential countries and organisations. The First Minister and I were able to engage with them directly to welcome them here and to discuss a number of our priorities, as well as how we might engage with those countries to progress those priorities. We spent time at Lough Erne speaking directly to the G8 leaders about a number of economic, trade and investment issues. We also discussed how we could maximise our science and technology expertise internationally and how we could contribute to stabilisation in areas through sharing our conflict resolution experience. We have been following up on those issues, and we are already seeing the benefits, with the G8 countries and others agreeing to participate in an economic conference later this year.

The G8 has enabled us to raise our profile internationally in a positive way. The world's media were able to see and report at first hand the infrastructure that we have that supports investment and the products and services that our companies can offer to other countries. Everyone who saw the TV and newspaper coverage of the events at Enniskillen will know that the surroundings, the countryside and even the weather were at their best. That will greatly help our international tourism message around the world.

We have all worked hard to ensure that a very positive image has been created internationally. We have made contacts and have discussed practical initiatives for the future that will provide long-term benefits. We now need to capitalise on that and to build a legacy that will increase our exports, bring in investment, enhance our technical skills and bring more people to visit us here. We have made many friends internationally, and we need to maintain and develop those friendships.

I commend those campaigners who took part in the various protests throughout the North. We saw the first peaceful G8 happen here, and that sends a very positive message. I pay tribute to all those who were involved in the preparation and successful planning of the G8 event. Although some costs were associated with hosting this world event, the benefits will be greater in the medium and longer term.

We need to continue to tell our story internationally of how we have managed the transition from conflict to peace. The G8 gave us an opportunity to tell those leaders that we intend to continue to take our community forward in a peaceful and united way.

Mr Byrne: I thank the deputy First Minister for his answer. What legacy in the form of economic and tourism benefits does he expect will result in Northern Ireland in the future?

Mr M McGuinness: First, it has to be said — given the history of where we have lived over many decades — that this was a real opportunity to tell the international community how the situation here has been transformed. Of course, one of the features of our Programmes for Government over the time of the previous Assembly and this one is that we have been proclaiming to the world that we are open for business. I think that that is hugely important. The world has seen at first hand how open we are for business through the success of the G8 summit. The fact that it was peaceful sends a hugely important message to the world about how the situation here has been transformed.

The legacy is that there are all sorts of opportunities, not least in the tourism industry. We could not pay for the airtime that we received and the international coverage that we saw, given the cost of promoting tourism here in other countries. Sending the message that we are open for business gives those who are considering foreign direct investment in this part of the world an opportunity to come here and look at what we have to offer. At the end of the G8, the Japanese Prime Minister came to Belfast and announced the creation of over 400 jobs in Larne at a medical device company. That shows that there are opportunities out there that we have to seize with both hands.

Mr Campbell: I raised this subject last week with the Prime Minister, but can the deputy First Minister indicate the nature of the discussions that will take place with the Prime Minister and the American Administration in the run-up to the investment conference in an effort to make sure that we maximise the opportunities that flow from the success of the G8?

Mr M McGuinness: The First Minister and I have had discussions with David Cameron about that. When we met President Obama in Belfast, before his speech at the Waterfront Hall, we took the opportunity to apprise him of the fact that there will be an economic investment conference later this year, and we got a very good reception. There is a clear understanding that we will be supported in a very dynamic way by both Administrations. Given that we were both involved, with others, in an economic investment conference that was sponsored by President Obama and Secretary of State Clinton at the State Department, it is obvious that the US Administration are still very engaged in attracting investment to this part of the world.

I hope that their joint input and the invitations that have been issued to the other Administrations that arrived here with them will lead to a very dynamic investment conference later this year. I have no doubt whatsoever that a huge effort will be made on our part and that that will be supported by those Administrations.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Mr Fra McCann is not in his place.

Mr Flanagan: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the deputy First Minister for his answers. One of the big issues for discussion at the G8 was trade, although there were a number of other issues that people wanted to see on the table. Will the deputy First Minister outline whether the trade discussions that took place will have a positive impact for local businesses?

Mr M McGuinness: We welcome the launch of talks at the G8 summit to agree a new trade pact between the United States of America and the European Union. After the South of Ireland, the United States is our second largest export market, with £533 million in export sales up to the year ending March 2013. Therefore, any action taken to lower tariffs between the US and the EU can only help us to expand our export market further into the United States.

We recognise that, as it becomes freer and much more open, the global economy must benefit developed and developing nations alike. Trade must not be one nation's success at the expense of another's failure. That can happen only with fair and consistent rules being properly enforced.

To increase our export sales to developing nations, reduced border bureaucracy, improved infrastructure and less protectionism will be necessary. That requires buy-in from the Governments, businesses and civil society on the importance of free trade.

Mr McCarthy: Does the deputy First Minister agree that it was more than coincidental that, after returning home from Northern Ireland, the leaders of the world decided that it would be better to talk to the Taliban, thus saving lives in Afghanistan?

Mr M McGuinness: Far be it from me to involve myself in US foreign policy, but given that we have been receiving reports over the past three years that indirect conversations have been taking place between the US Administration and the Taliban, I find it encouraging that direct talks appear to be on the horizon in the not-too-distant future. Anything that is being done to resolve conflict anywhere in the world will always be welcomed by us. Indeed, we are much in demand because many representatives from all parties in the Assembly have travelled to many of the world's trouble spots at the invitation of others. From my perspective, the engagement is a positive development. The hope has to be that it leads to an end to conflict, violence and death.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Question 2 has been withdrawn.

Magdalene Laundries

3. Ms McGahan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister when they expect to receive a report from the senior official who is examining Magdalene laundry-type institutions. (AQO 4415/11-15)

Mr M McGuinness: With your permission, Mr Deputy Speaker, I will ask junior Minister Jennifer McCann to answer the question.

Ms J McCann (Junior Minister, Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister): As the Member will be aware, the publication of McAleese report into the Magdalene laundries raised questions about the system of Magdalene laundries here and about the situations and experiences of the women who lived in them. In light of that report and representations made to us, we appointed a senior civil servant to draw up a scoping paper on Magdalene laundry-type institutions that operated here so as to inform us of potential actions we might be able to take. We received that report at the end of last week, and we intend to give serious consideration to the options that have been laid out. It is too early at this stage to state whether the options are exhaustive, but we will consider the advice and options in the paper very carefully before deciding the way forward.

Under the terms of reference of the historical institutional abuse inquiry, any woman who entered a laundry before she was 18 may contribute to the inquiry, including recounting their childhood experiences to the inquiry's acknowledgement forum. However, we recognise that there are women who were over the age of 18 when they entered Magdalene laundry-type institutions, and there is a need to provide them with a forum where their issues can be addressed and their experiences acknowledged.

We are appalled to think that women in laundries here could have endured the same harsh conditions and callous treatment as that documented by Senator McAleese. Our thoughts and sympathies are with any women who suffered in such institutions.

Ms McGahan: Go raibh maith agat. In light of the compensation scheme announced by the Government in the South, what plans do the Executive have to make a similar scheme here?

Ms J McCann: In light of the answer that I have just given, it would be a bit premature to outline plans before we look at the suggestions in the scoping report. We have just received that report, and we are very mindful, as I said, of the callous treatment of the people who were in those types of institutions. Indeed, junior Minister Bell and I met some of those victims and survivors, and the stories that they told were horrendous. We do not want to rush to judgement. Once we read the report, we will give very careful thought to the recommendations that the scoping exercise has brought forward.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Question 4 has already been answered.

Age Discrimination: Goods, Facilities and Services

5. Ms S Ramsey asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what advice they have received from the Equality Commission about age discrimination legislation on the provision of goods, facilities and services. (AQO 4417/11-15)

Mr M McGuinness: With your permission, Mr Deputy Speaker, I will ask junior Minister Jennifer McCann to answer the question.

Ms J McCann: The Equality Commission has sent us a report entitled 'Protecting children and young people against unlawful age discrimination in the provision of goods and services'. The report was jointly prepared by the Equality Commission and the Commissioner for Children and Young People. We appreciate that the report has been brought to our attention. It is a detailed piece of work and a thoughtful contribution to the debate. We look forward to studying it more closely and discussing it with the Equality Commission and the Commissioner for Children and Young People.

Ms S Ramsey: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the junior Minister for her answer. I appreciate that the Equality Commission and the Children's Commissioner have sent the report, and that you have said that it is detailed. Can you give us any indication of anything in the report that states that there should be exceptions within the scope of the proposed legislation?

Ms J McCann: The Member will be aware that we made a commitment in the Programme for Government to extend age discrimination legislation in relation to goods, facilities and services. I think that the report states that it is not always appropriate for children and young people to be treated in the same way as adults. However, there is no basis for not providing legislative and enforceable rights.

Some examples of where we would say that children should be treated differently are, for instance, common sense issues around the sale of alcohol and marriage. The report very clearly says that only when a social policy objective is being pursued should that be the case. It recommends that the legislation permits age-based concessions, such as discounts and offers. I know that during the Assembly debate, we had some discussion around that, but a common sense approach needs to be borne in mind. There are some situations in which we have to have differences because of a person's age.

2.45 pm

Mr Eastwood: I recognise the fact that this was discussed in Committee with the Ministers last week. I recognise the candour shown by the Ministers around the lack of agreement by the Department on the final scope of the legislation. It was useful to have that candour. Can the Minister tell us when we can expect agreement in the Department around whether the legislation will extend to young people?

Ms J McCann: The Member will be aware, as we brought up at the Committee last week, that we are looking at that. We are still considering the scope of the legislation before putting it out for consultation. Many different sectors have given us information on how they would like to see the legislation being brought forward. However, as I said, we are still looking at it. It has moved on and is progressing, and we are hopeful that it will be passed by March 2015, as we said at the Committee last week.

Mr Kinahan: I thank the junior Minister for her answers so far. However, she will be aware that the age discrimination legislation is one of many jammed in OFMDFM. Given that we are just about to go into recess, can she give commitments on the publication of the sexual orientation strategy or the racial equality strategy? I know that she has already touched on that, but will she set a date by which time they should be finished?

Ms J McCann: All I can say to the Member is that I cannot give a definitive date today. We are progressing on all those issues. The Member will be aware that there are different views in the sectors and even in this House around all the issues he mentioned. However, we are progressing well on them. We hope that we will have a definitive date. We are very hopeful that the age discrimination legislation is on track for 31 March 2015, but I have no definitive date for the other strategies that the Member mentioned. We are making progress on them.

Mr Lyttle: Has any work been done to assess how Australia has extended age discrimination legislation on the provision of goods, facilities and services to all ages?

Ms J McCann: As part of the process, we have met, for instance, the Ministers with responsibility for children and young people from the Welsh and Scottish Parliaments and the South of Ireland. We are in constant contact with the Children's Commissioner on this. We are looking at best practice, as should be the case. There are specific areas involving young people, particularly around access to mental health services. We have looked at that in great detail. So there is best practice. We are discussing that with people in different jurisdictions to see how it has rolled out in their areas, and we will continue to do that.

China: OFMDFM Visit

6. Mr Ó hOisín asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline any plans the Executive have to follow up on the recent visit to China. (AQO 4418/11-15)

Mr M McGuinness: Our recent mission to China was to strengthen Government-to-Government relationships. We were supported throughout the visit by the Chinese People's Association for Friendship with Foreign Countries, which is responsible for inviting foreign Governments to China. During our meeting with its president, we received an invitation for the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to lead a delegation to a Sino-European conference in China later this year.

There is enormous potential for our agrifood sector in China, and this will be an important step towards opening up the market to our products.

The key meeting for us was with Vice-Premier Liu Yandong, who initially invited us to China during her visit here last year. Madam Liu confirmed that China would like to see a strong relationship developing with us and said that we should be more active in promoting trade, tourism, education and technology. Vice-Premier Liu also asked us to consider establishing a presence in China and more formal partnerships with a number of regions there. Establishing a more permanent presence and partnership with regions was also discussed when we met Foreign Affairs Vice-Minister Song Tao. We agreed that we would establish an office in Beijing, and he confirmed that that would be seen as a very positive step in the relationship with China.

We also met Minister Yuan Guiren from the Ministry of Education to encourage more Chinese students to come and study here and to establish more university partnerships to exchange knowledge.

A key focus of our future work with China will be to promote economic opportunities. We met Director General Sun Yongfu at the Ministry of Commerce and discussed a number of issues, including the removal of barriers and bureaucracy in trade, which will lead to economic benefits and jobs. We also invited the Minister to consider bringing potential investors to Belfast later this year. Some of our local businesspeople who operate in China met us and provided —

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Minister's time is up.

Mr M McGuinness: — a lot of useful advice.

Mr Ó hOisín: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Will the deputy First Minister confirm that any office in Beijing will be similar to those in Brussels and Washington in delivering increased trade connections?

Mr M McGuinness: As I said, it is our desire to open an office in Beijing. We are pursuing that objective very proactively. China is an important and growing export market for our companies, many of which visit China each year with trade delegations organised by Invest NI. In 2010-11, we exported almost £112 million worth of goods to China. That increased to £116 million in 2011-12. Invest NI has had an office in China for many years and is now firmly established in Shanghai. Shanghai was chosen because it has become China's business capital. Invest NI has contracted three full-time advisers, who are based in Shanghai and Taiwan. Their role is to provide bespoke research and advice for our companies and to identify market opportunities.

The commitment to China is evidenced by Invest NI's strategy, which includes two annual trade missions to key business centres such as Shanghai and Hong Kong and other developing cities across China. Over the last six years, 350-plus local companies have participated in the trade visits. As a result of that strategy, that market is worth in excess of £110 million in exports by local companies and is sustaining valuable employment there. Invest NI recently recruited a territory manager for the Asia-Pacific region to place greater emphasis on trade and foreign direct investment. That work continues, and there is no doubt that a determined effort is being made to further develop our relationships in China.

Mrs D Kelly: The Minister will be aware of the Confucius Institute and its particular role in helping to build relationships and that the relationship-building process is a real precursor to doing business. What role, if any, do you see for the Confucius Institute in establishing links and helping to build relationships?

Mr M McGuinness: The Member is absolutely correct that the relationship with the Hanban/Confucius Institute is vital. When Madam Liu Yandong came to Belfast, she was anxious to visit the Jordanstown campus of the new University of Ulster and see the work that is being done there as a result of the Confucius connections. A critical factor in attracting foreign direct investment is building personal relationships not just between the First Minister and me and the politicians we meet, although that is vital, but at an educational level between Queen's University, the new University of Ulster and the institutes in China. That is true for any region of the world, and we have learnt it through our experience in the United States of America. We know that they are hugely interested in the very large number of Chinese students who are being educated here. However, they are also keenly interested to establish whether an effort has been made in our primary schools to teach our children Chinese. Happily, that is now beginning to happen.

Economic Pact: Capital Investment

7. Mr Cree asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline the agreement on the investment plan to deliver £18 billion of capital funding, announced as part of the economic pact with the Prime Minister. (AQO 4419/11-15)

Mr M McGuinness: The economic package 'Building a Prosperous and United Community' was announced on 14 June 2013 and ratified by the Executive on 27 June. The package referenced the government commitment to provide an £18 billion investment package over the period 2005 to 2017. As part of the measures agreed in the economic package, we were able to ensure that the investment agreement was back on course to meet the £18 billion commitment. In May 2007, the then Chancellor, Gordon Brown, made a commitment on behalf of the British Government to an £18 billion long-term investment strategy from 2005 to 2017, and the Executive have been determined to hold the Government to that commitment. The outcome of the 2010 spending review, with the significant capital DEL reductions imposed here, cast much doubt on whether the £18 billion would be achievable. However, the Government have recently prioritised capital investment, and we have benefited and will continue to benefit through the Barnett formula. The additional capital DEL that we have received in recent years, along with the expectation of further increases beyond 2014-15, has meant that we now believe it much more likely that the £18 billion of investment will be achieved by 2017. Our own investment strategy 2011-2021 sets out how we plan to invest some £13.4 billion between 2011 and 2021, of which £8.2 billion is to be invested between 2015-16 and 2020-21. That level of investment was based on the original commitment to provide £18 billion capital investment between 2005 and 2016-17. The announcement will, therefore, enable us to continue to invest in capital projects —

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Minister's time is almost up.

Mr M McGuinness: — as expected in the investment strategy.

Mr Cree: I thank the Minister for his answer. The Minister is aware that a statement should have been made to the House on all the issues involved in the economic pact. Is any strategy in place or being developed on how that capital investment should be focused?

Mr M McGuinness: First, the First Minister will make a statement to the Assembly tomorrow on the economic pact.

Our investment strategy is hugely important as we go forward. People here have a clear understanding that this was a huge issue of discord between us and the London Government. In fact, the First Minister and I had, on countless occasions, raised this issue directly with the powers that be in Downing Street, with the British Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister. We have now got it back on track, and it is a good news story, particularly for our construction industry, which has taken a big hit as a result of the world economic downturn in the past number of years. The investment strategy is hugely important for us, and, as we all know, the public expenditure environment has changed dramatically since the 2010 spending review. In recent years, the Government have prioritised capital expenditure, and the Executive have benefited through the Barnett formula. Following the 2013 Budget, the Executive now have some £367 million of additional capital DEL this year and next year. In addition, the Government have committed to maintaining a higher level of capital investment beyond 2014-15, and, once those higher expected capital budget settlements are taken into account, we are now much more likely to meet the £18 billion deadline by 2017. Indeed, the latest DFP projection suggests capital expenditure at some £17.6 billion by 2017. That will give us considerable flexibility. Major projects have to be taken forward.

3.00 pm

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Minister's time is almost up.

Mr M McGuinness: We are determined that we shall meet the demands that we have set for ourselves.

Finance and Personnel

Fiscal Policy

1. Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline his fiscal policy priorities for addressing current economic challenges. (AQO 4428/11-15)

Mr Wilson (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): We have set a number of fiscal priorities. First, we must ensure that we get for Northern Ireland the absolute maximum amount of money in the block grant and that all the consequential that are due to us come our way. Secondly, where appropriate, we will not only seek additional taxation powers but seek to ensure that Northern Ireland is a low-tax area in the United Kingdom. Thirdly, as we saw with the recent announcement, where additional borrowing powers can be obtained, we will obtain them. Lastly, we must make best use of the resources that we have. That includes making sure that we do not waste money and do not incur penalties — the Chief Secretary to the Treasury has warned us about this — by dragging our heels on some reforms, which will cost the public purse in Northern Ireland substantial amounts of money.

Mr McMullan: I thank the Minister for his answer. Are there any moves in his Department towards a more co-ordinated and planned approach to fiscal decision-making and planning?

Mr Wilson: That is the whole point of the budgetary exercises that we go through and, indeed, the exercise that we went through this morning. We look at the available resources and seek to ensure that they are allocated in the best possible way. We seek to obtain all the additional revenue that we can through the management of our assets and the sale of assets that are surplus to requirements. When it comes to year-on-year budgets, we look at departmental spend regularly to make sure that, if we are not spending money on certain things, we reallocate that money and ensure that there are no underspends. Thankfully, Departments have managed their budgets very well this year, and, as I said in my earlier statement, we manage it to the point that, if we were somebody on an average wage, our weekly underspend would be 97p. I reckon that that is fairly good management of our available money.

Mr D Bradley: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as ucht a ráitis. I notice that, last week, the Minister launched a report by the Northern Ireland Council for Voluntary Action (NICVA) entitled 'Fiscal Powers: A Review of the Fiscal Powers of the Northern Ireland Assembly'. The report concludes that stamp duty, air passenger duty, landfill tax and other taxes could be devolved to Northern Ireland. Will the Minister consider the report's proposals and act on some of them?

Mr Wilson: The Executive's position is clear: we will work with the Government as part of the economic pact that was agreed with the First Minister and deputy First Minister to look at other fiscal powers that might be brought to Northern Ireland. We will decide on the basis of whether we believe that those levers will help us to run the economy in Northern Ireland better. As I pointed out in response to the report, we have to be cognisant of three things: the immediate cost; the ongoing cost; and the destabilising effect that additional fiscal powers devolved to the Assembly could have on the money that is available to us. Tax revenue regularly goes up and down. We are sheltered from that because of our reliance on the block grant at present. The more fiscal powers that are devolved to us, the more open we are to those fluctuations and the more difficult it is to plan budgets and to plan spend for the period ahead.

Mrs Overend: I thank the Minister for his responses so far, which have been interesting. Does he agree that access to cash remains a major challenge for Northern Ireland businesses? Is he satisfied that the Government's ongoing efforts to get liquidity back into the market are working?

Mr Wilson: First, the major source of liquidity for businesses must be the banks. That is why Arlene Foster and I have regular meetings with them to be updated on what is happening to bank lending and to raise issues brought to our attention by various strands and sectors of industry across Northern Ireland. Secondly, we have sought to make finance accessible to businesses. Extra money has been put into loan funds run by the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (DETI) in the spending round that I announced earlier today. Those are important sources of finance for businesses. For one sector of industry — agrifood — I announced today that we will put £10 million into a start-up fund for additional finance for the investment that the sector needs to undertake to expand over the next two or three years. A promise has been made that, if the fund proves popular, we will put more money into it. So we have done our part; the banks need to do theirs. We will keep pressing them to do that.

Mr Deputy Speaker: At the outset, I should have said that question 13 has been withdrawn and a written answer is required.

Defamation Legislation

2. Mr McCartney asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for his assessment of whether the law on defamation needs to be reviewed. (AQO 4429/11-15)

Mr Wilson: I have no plans to initiate a review of the law on defamation at present. With the passing of the Defamation Act 2013, there have been a number of far-reaching changes in the law in England and Wales. In my view, it would be prudent to see how those changes work through before deciding how we want to progress the issue in Northern Ireland.

Mr McCartney: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as an fhreagra sin. I thank the Minister for his answer and his view. He is aware that the Finance Committee discussed the case of John McAreevey v the 'Irish Daily Mail'. We must avoid just following Westminster legislation. We must strike the right balance for here between freedom of speech and the right to a private life, and we must not allow the gap to be exploited by poor or bad journalism. I am encouraged that the Minister will review the matter and perhaps legislate for here.

Mr Wilson: The point that I make to the Member is one recognised by the Minister when the issue was discussed in the House of Lords: it is up to devolved Administrations to look at the situation in their locality and make a decision. A lot has been made about Northern Ireland being out of step with England and Wales, but not all the provisions in the Defamation Act were introduced by the Scottish Administration. They deemed certain things particularly relevant as far as they were concerned and others not as relevant. The Member is right: we ought to look at the situation in our context.

Another point that I would make is this: there is no question of suppressing freedom of speech. Before that Act went through, people were free to express themselves and newspapers were free to carry stories. The idea that, somehow or other, as a result of this Act going through Westminster and us not implementing it, freedom of speech is being suppressed in Northern Ireland is just a lot of nonsense.

Mr Deputy Speaker: I encourage Members to keep their questions brief.

Mr Weir: Does the Minister feel that the current position or the 2013 Act provides sufficient protection to those who are defamed on social media sites?

Mr Wilson: The problem with people being defamed on social media is not so much the lack of powers to go after the people saying these things; it is the enforcement. The Act in England and Wales protects those whose sites are used to make defamatory comments. With social media, there will always be the difficulty of how you enforce the legislation. I do not believe that the changes made in England make that easier anyway.

Mr A Maginness: The Minister said that he would not undertake a review just yet. That is, I think, a wise course. However, if a review were to take place, say, in a year or 18 months' time, how does he see that being undertaken?

Mr Wilson: First of all, I think that we want to see the impact that the change in the law has in England and Wales. We also want to see the impact that it has on the different situations that are in Northern Ireland and in England and Wales. For example, one of the concerns has been that it could lead to libel tourism. Let us see whether that is the case or whether, as a result of our not being in step with England and Wales, the freedom of the press is much more severely curtailed here in Northern Ireland than it would be in England and Wales. Mr Weir asked whether it was easier for social media-type defamation to occur here in Northern Ireland. The other point was whether it has impacted on investment in Northern Ireland.

I do not believe that to be the case either, but I expect that any review would look at that. So, those are the kind of things that we want to look at in undertaking any review.

Mr Swann: At one stage, the Minister considered clause 7 of the Defamation Bill as it went through Westminster, but he was unable to get Executive agreement. Does he still see merit in legislating for those provisions, as regulated in Northern Ireland?

Mr Wilson: It is not a question of whether I see merit in legislating. If we are going to have the legislation, it requires Executive agreement. The Member knows that if legislation is to go through, it requires cross-party support in the Assembly. The Executive were unable to get approval for a legislative consent motion for that clause. That is why I believe that it is prudent to look to see what happens in the meantime. Once we have seen the impact of the differing levels of legislation in both jurisdictions, we can make up our minds on the changes that we wish to make.

Banks: First-time Buyers

3. Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what discussions he has had with banks regarding making low-deposit mortgages available to first-time buyers. (AQO 4430/11-15)

Mr Wilson: In recent times, I have had no direct discussions with banks regarding low-deposit mortgages. However, when we put the extra money into the Co-ownership Housing Association, the Social Development Minister and I met with the banks and pointed out to them that, since 50% of the risk on the price of any of those houses was now being borne by the Co-ownership Housing Association, there was no justification for demanding the 20% deposit. Most of the mortgages — in fact, I think all the mortgages — that are now lent to co-ownership purchases are without any deposit.

I have also spoken recently to the National Asset Management Agency (NAMA) about its 80:20 scheme, whereby people pay 80% of the value of a house, and if the house goes down in value over the next five years, they do not have to pay the other 20% or whatever percentage the price of the house has gone down by. If the price goes up, they do, of course, have to make that payment. I am pleased to say that NAMA is thinking about introducing the scheme that is available in the Irish Republic to the sale of houses on NAMA-owned land in Northern Ireland.

Mr Campbell: I am pleased to hear that the Minister has had meetings with NAMA. I know that quite a few people in Northern Ireland would like to do likewise. Given the discussions that he has had, does he have an estimate of the level of demand for affordable homes in Northern Ireland?

Mr Wilson: I do not have an estimate of the level of demand. However, I know that the Co-ownership Housing Association is well oversubscribed with applications. One of the reasons why we allocated another £10 million to the Co-ownership Housing Association earlier this morning was because we wanted to try to meet that level of demand. People say, "What has the Assembly done to respond to the housing crisis?". By the end of the Assembly term, as a result of money that we have put into affordable housing schemes, 2,400 families will own a house that they would not normally have been able to afford or get access to. I think that that is an indication of how seriously we take the issue.

Mr McKay: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. What discussions has the Minister had with his Executive colleagues on the need to expand loan equity provision?

3.15 pm

Mr Wilson: The Social Development Minister might make an announcement on that before the end of this Assembly term, but the Executive have made money available to other schemes for affordable housing, which have been introduced in other parts of the United Kingdom and for which we got a Barnett consequential. We have discussed that, but it is up to the Social Development Minister to bring forward proposals and announce them to the Assembly.

Mr Gardiner: Does the Minister agree that the Government's new scheme to boost lending to homebuyers with small deposits could push down interest rates significantly?

Mr Wilson: The fact of the matter is that we have benefited from it, and I announced that earlier. Interest rates are as low as they are probably going to get. In fact, base rates are close to zero at the moment. That is a result of the ability of the UK Government to give confidence to the financial markets when it comes to the rates at which we are loaned money. As far as low interest on mortgages is concerned, we have sought, through some of the various schemes that we have introduced, to try to make housing more affordable to low-income families, whether that is done through the kind of money that we pump into co-ownership or the Get Britain Building scheme, to which we allocated some money this morning. All those schemes will bring down the cost of housing to individuals.

Net Fiscal Balance Report

4. Ms Boyle asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline the international standards against which the revenue estimates produced in his Department's fiscal balance report are accredited or recognised. (AQO 4431/11-15)

Mr Wilson: I am sure that the Member would love me to say that, when it comes to the net fiscal balance report, we pluck the figure out of the air, say, "There it is" and stick it down on paper. That, unfortunately, is the naive view held by Sinn Féin when it comes to the net fiscal balance report, because it does not want to believe that if we were out of the United Kingdom, we would be billions of pounds less well off. However, the figures in the net fiscal balance report come from and follow the same methodology as that used for the Government expenditure and revenue Scotland (GERS) report. Those figures are subject to international standards. There is a code of practice that they are subject to, and, as a result, international standards for the compiling of statistics have to be adhered to. These figures are not made up; they are subject to a degree of rigour and international scrutiny. Therefore, wriggle as it will, Sinn Féin will never be able to make the case that, somehow or other, we owe money to the rest of the United Kingdom rather than we get a positive flow of money from the Treasury to Northern Ireland. Therefore, that is the value of being British and part of the United Kingdom.

Some Members: Hear, hear. [Interruption.]

Mr Flanagan: Resign, resign. [Laughter.]

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I will not encourage shouting across the Chamber.

Ms Boyle: Go raibh maith agat. I thank the Minister for that very detailed answer. No doubt, he will pre-empt my supplementary question. All of this is a distraction from the simple fact that there is no statement of revenue here in the North. The figures that we have are not comparable to those available in Scotland. Can the Minister outline how and when he plans to provide accurate figures?

Mr Wilson: How many times do I have to say it, Mr Deputy Speaker? The figures in the net fiscal balance report use the same methodology as is used for the Government expenditure and revenue figures in Scotland. Those are subject to the international code of practice for official statistics. They are not made-up figures. The only point that I will concede to the Member — and it is also true for Scotland — is that for the regions of the United Kingdom, VAT figures, etc, are not compiled on the basis of how much shops a, b, c, d, e, and so on, paid in VAT, with the total VAT bill worked out from that. There is a degree of estimation and apportionment, but the methodology used is accepted internationally as being robust to give a figure that reflects the situation in each region.

I know that Sinn Féin, in pursuit of its political objective, would love to wish away the billions of pounds that come to Northern Ireland from the Exchequer, but even the fairies would not believe that, and I do not think that its own supporters believe it. The fact that 25% of its own voters would not vote for a united Ireland is an indication that it has not even sold the story to its own voters.

Mr Beggs: Some people seem to let their politics get in the way of reality. Can the Minister advise us, when the international standards are applied, what the fiscal balance in Northern Ireland has been in recent years?

Mr Wilson: I should have the figure here, but I do not have it. The net fiscal balance in 2010-11, which is the most recent year for which we have that information, was £10.526 billion, which is an indication of how dependent we are on our association with the United Kingdom and how valuable it is from the point of view of the economy. I think that many of the constituents of the party opposite would be very unhappy, if, as a result of its bankrupt economic, political and constitutional policies, we were to lose that kind of funding.

Mr Allister: If the Minister were to find that he had sufficient spare time to go back to marking economic papers, what mark would he anticipate giving Sinn Féin for its economic submissions?

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order. I have shown great tolerance, but I think that that question goes far beyond what the Minister is here to answer. However, I leave it up to him.

Mr Wilson: I think that I have already marked its paper on a number of occasions. Let us look at the kind of fiscal prowess of the party opposite. It is the party that tells us that if we reduce the fuel duty on petrol and diesel in Northern Ireland to the level pertaining to red diesel, which would be an 80% reduction, we would, somehow or other, sell sufficiently more diesel to actually increase revenue. As I pointed out during the debate on the issue, that would mean that people would have to buy three and a half times more petrol and diesel than at present. First, how will they afford it? Secondly, where are they going to drive to? We will spend all our time driving around Northern Ireland and no time working to earn the money to pay for the petrol in the first place. I think that that indicates the kind of a mark I would give the party. It certainly would not be a pass grade; indeed, I do not know whether CCEA sets a grade that is low enough to reflect the economic knowledge of the party opposite.

Senior Civil Service: Pay

5. Ms McCorley asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how much the recent changes to Senior Civil Service pay arrangements will cost between 2011 and 2016. (AQO 4432/11-15)

Mr Wilson: The costs of changes in the Senior Civil Service pay arrangements from the introduction of the Senior Civil Service pay strategy, with effect from 1 April 2012, were 3·5% in 2012-13, which covered a 16-month period, and 2·8% for 2013-14, which covers 12 months.

Ms McCorley: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as a fhreagra. I thank the Minister for his answer. Why did he not inform the Finance Committee of those changes, which will see millions being paid to already highly paid senior civil servants?

Mr Wilson: First, when it comes to pay remits, that is the responsibility of the Minister. All pay remits do not go to the Finance and Personnel Committee; in fact, I sign them off on an almost weekly basis for different parts of the public sector, and they do not go to the Committee.

I would point out that the Committee endorsed the decision that when we introduced equal pay, we would undertake revision and review of pay across the public sector. That was part of the review. There was review at EO2 level as well. Therefore, there was endorsement by the Executive and the Assembly of the policy that saw the review of Senior Civil Service pay. Of course, it was done by the pay review body, which is totally independent. It made recommendations on the way to avoid, for example, age discrimination cases and certain other anomalies that had crept into the system.

Mr Elliott: Will the Minister confirm that no bonuses are now paid to senior civil servants, who are on high pay grades, and that no additional payments of any description are made to those senior civil servants?

Mr Wilson: As far as the pay review was concerned, bonuses have been done away with at that level. We did a number of things. We set maxima on the pay grades. We also took away the overlaps between the various pay scales. When people are promoted, they go onto the bottom of the next scale. The leapfrogging that occurred in the past is avoided. In return for certain changes, we introduced the pay regime, which I have outlined. It has cost us 3·5% over 16 months.

Dormant Accounts: Ulster Community Investment Fund

6. Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for an update of the consultation on 'Dormant Accounts - Proposed Appointment of the Ulster Community Investment Trust'. (AQO 4433/11-15)

Mr Wilson: As the Member will be aware, consultation was undertaken by the Department on the proposal to appoint the Ulster Community Investment Trust as the administrator of the dormant accounts fund. That consultation closed in November 2012. There were eight responses. Of those, five were silent and one was supportive. Some respondents indicated that they believed that others could supply the service, and because of that and the fact that we were aware that others were interested in supplying that service, we have agreed to put the administration of dormant accounts out to public tender.

Mr D McIlveen: I thank the Minister for his answer. I am sure that, like me, he will welcome the £3·2 million that is coming into local communities. Can he outline the spending priorities for the fund?

Mr Wilson: There are two spending priorities. The first is young people and the second is faith-based groups. First of all, the Executive want to concentrate an awful lot of our activities on young people, who, at present, face a lot of disadvantage and pressures that, perhaps, they did not face in the past, such as youth unemployment, drug problems and a whole range of other things. Secondly, I was aware of many faith-based groups that do fantastic work in the community, yet, for ethical reasons, would never have applied to the Big Lottery Fund and, therefore, lost out on resources that could have helped them to deliver some of the services that they provide in some of the most difficult circumstances. For that reason, we have made them a second priority group.

NAMA: Assets

7. Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline the nature and extent of NAMA's assets. (AQO 4434/11-15)

Mr Wilson: The eventual size of the Northern Ireland portfolio in its acquisition value, not what it was worth at the start, was €1·3 billion. That comprised 18% office accommodation; 17% retail; 10% residential; 5% development, and 3% hotel and leisure assets. The balance was made up of land and other investment assets. Most of NAMA's undeveloped land portfolio in Northern Ireland is situated in the east of the Province. NAMA has also indicated that 70% of its Northern Ireland portfolio is either completed property or is producing income for it at present.

Mr Deputy Speaker: I am afraid that there is no time for a supplementary question. Time is up. That concludes Question Time.

3.30 pm

Question for Urgent Oral Answer

Suspected Drug-related Deaths

Mr Deputy Speaker: Mr Phil Flanagan has given notice of a question for urgent oral answer to the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety. Before I ask the Clerk to read the question, I remind Members that if they wish to ask a supplementary question, they should rise continually in their place. The Member who tabled the question will be called automatically to ask a supplementary. I will then call other Members who are on their feet to ask a supplementary, taking account of the same issues that I take account of at Question Time.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Health, Social Services and Public Safety how his Department and its agencies are responding to prevent further loss of life following the reported deaths of at least eight people from the suspected consumption of an illegal drug currently in circulation.

Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): I am very concerned to hear that there have been a number of sudden deaths across Northern Ireland that might be linked to drug use. I pass on my condolences to anyone who has lost a loved one or a friend in these difficult circumstances. It is important to stress that investigations into these deaths are ongoing. At this stage, we do not know whether they are drug related or what, if any, substance was involved. However, I believe that it is vital that we take a precautionary approach.

Since we were made aware of incidents last week, my Department has been liaising closely with the Department of Justice and the PSNI. We have also been working closely with the Public Health Agency (PHA) and the local community. On Friday, the Chief Medical Officer issued an alert letter to health, community and alcohol and drugs services, bringing the matter to their attention. The letter asked people to highlight the risk to vulnerable groups and encourage them to dispose of any drugs safely. The PHA also issued a press release highlighting the risks associated with drug misuse generally.

My Department and the PHA will continue to work with community and voluntary services to provide help and support to those in need. I encourage anyone with information on these deaths or, more generally, anyone who is aware of any individual involved in the supply of controlled drugs, to contact their local police on 0845 600 8000. Information can also be passed to the independent charity Crimestoppers on 0800 555 111.

Mr Flanagan: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for his answer. I share his condolences to those bereaved or affected by the sudden deaths. The point that I would like to make to the Minister is that this issue is not only for the city of Belfast, although there are strong allegations about from where the drugs are being sourced. I am hearing that those drugs are freely available not only in Belfast and the north-west but in places such as Fermanagh. Will the Minister give me an assurance that all trust areas will be involved in the measures that are being taken to best prevent further loss of life?

Mr Poots: I think that the first preventative measure is to get the message out. It is a message that we have been preaching to people for a long time: drugs, other than those prescribed by a GP and received from a pharmacist, can be dangerous. The ingestion of drugs is something that people do at their own peril. There can be complacency about drugs among people who have been taking them for a while, because they think that they are not a problem. Unfortunately, that is not the case. Certainly, it may be the case in a number of these deaths, which are unexplained at this point, that people ingested drugs. Therefore, the message should go out in a very forceful and clear way to members of the public that they should avoid drugs at all costs and that drugs can take people's lives and be very dangerous.

Ms S Ramsey (The Chairperson of the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Like the Minister and the Member who spoke previously, I send my sympathy and condolences to the families and, indeed, the wider community affected by these recent tragedies.

Minister, I think that you are right: taking either illegal drugs or drugs that are not prescribed to you is dangerous. We need to get that message out there about drugs that have not even been prescribed.

Minister, the message needs to go out from today that there is a bad batch of drugs out there, whether legal or illegal, that are killing our people. Can you give us as much information as you can and let us know some of the symptoms that people need to look out for? Have our A&E departments been made aware of the symptoms, so that, if somebody presents at an emergency department, they will be brought through the system quicker and without having to wait? What work have the Department and the PSNI done to date to ensure that this message gets into communities through the local community infrastructure?

Mr Poots: There has been a very high profile around this issue today. As to the work that is being done, toxicology reports are being carried out on the individuals who have had the unexplained deaths. I am aware that one family has said that their loved one had not been taking drugs, and I think that we need to show respect and restraint to families at this time. We have no evidence to suggest that any of these people had taken drugs. However, there have been eight unexplained deaths — five of them in one area — and there is an indication that that may be the case. It could well be that someone has had their drink spiked with drugs, and we need to be careful about that. There are very important messages to get out to members of the public about drugs, about not taking drugs full stop, and, if they are drinking alcohol, about ensuring that they are not taking alcohol from strangers or people whom they cannot completely trust. Those are important messages, as someone may have ingested drugs with no intention of actually doing so because someone else has spiked their alcoholic drink. That is very important.

Toxicology tests are also being carried out on the drugs themselves, as drugs have been found. A course of work is being done there. Our staff in our emergency departments are trained and equipped to deal with a wide range of scenarios, including people who have taken drugs, drug overdoses and so forth. It may be possible that the drugs were bought off the internet, but it is probably unlikely given the fact that a number of people died in one particular area. There is a range of areas that we need to look at, and the message needs to keep going out that, if you have not been prescribed drugs by your GP that have been obtained from a pharmacist, you should not be taking them.

Mr Newton: I thank the Minister for his answers so far. I join the Minister in his words of condolence to those who have been bereaved in what are very difficult circumstances. You will understand, Minister, the concerns of east Belfast parents, relatives and friends of the five young people who have died in this area over the past number of days. This problem seems to be concentrated in east Belfast, and I take the point you make about a lack of evidence as to the final cause and the fact that you are seeking that evidence. You recently opened what are referred to as drugs bins, I understand, in the Connswater Shopping Centre. Is there any judgement on the success of that initiative as yet? If it is successful, do you intend to run that out into other areas?

Mr Poots: I thank the Member for his question. I did open such a box and encouraged people to use it. In the first week, over 400 items were left in that box, so, clearly, there are people who want to get rid of drugs from their community. There are also boxes at the Glandore GP surgery, the pharmacy on the Serpentine Road in north Belfast, the GP surgery on North Queen Street, the Grove centre, the Today shop on Sandy Row, Boots in Connswater and in Kilcooley in Bangor. Therefore a series of these facilities has been opened, and I would like to see more of them. We are working on the roll-out of that with FASA, but there may be others who are prepared to step up to the mark.

I should say that, while there are good people in our communities who work with us to take drugs out of the community, unfortunately, there are bad people in our communities supplying people with drugs. The truth is that, on many occasions, the bad people who supply the drugs are protected by people who claim to be protecting their community. The bottom line is that the likelihood is that people in our communities have died because they have been given materials by individuals who are being protected by people who would suggest that they are protecting communities. People need to look at themselves and reflect on that. We do not need drugs in our communities. People who are engaging in supplying drugs to our communities do not belong in our communities. The best way to get rid of such people from our communities is to speak to the police, give them all the relevant information and put those people where they belong — behind bars. I hope that the courts will step up to the mark and make sure that they are behind bars for a very long time.

Mr McDavitt: Given what the Minister has just said, does he agree that those who peddle so-called recreational drugs are in fact peddling poison and need to be brought to justice? What conversations has he had with the Chief Medical Officer in recent days about ensuring that all potential lines of enquiry about the recent areas of concern are subject to police investigation?

Mr Poots: The Chief Medical Officer will issue warnings on occasions such as this. Earlier today, I met the Justice Minister. I have also spoken to the Chief Constable and to key people throughout the Department. There is a series of things happening to ensure that we take the right steps and that everybody works in a concerted way. Minister Ford and I agreed that our officials would share all relevant information, which will then be shared with us, and that we would work together to seek to inform the public. We have to inform the public in a way that does not heighten any alarm or concern that is not based on facts. We also need to ensure that the public are concerned enough to take actions to ensure that such deaths do not happen in our communities. If the unexplained deaths are a consequence of ingesting illicit drugs, it will be the communities who will deliver on this, not the Assembly. It will be when people on the ground say, "We have had enough. We do not want our children, young people or families to be poisoned with these drugs. We want to rid our community of these people" that they will take action and give the police the information.

It is not kids who are involved; the deaths have involved adults in their 20s and 30s. That should drive out a very important message: drugs are never safe. We do not need to be encouraging young people to participate in drug taking. As people get a little older and are still taking drugs, they really should take stock of what they are doing with their life. Taking drugs can be a dangerous business.

Mr Beggs: I thank the Minister for his statement. Will he confirm that there is no testing on illegal drugs? They do not go through the detailed National Institute for Health and Care Excellence (NICE) testing that any prescribed medicine undergoes. Furthermore, does he agree that the people profiting from this are profiting from the death and ill health of many young people and those in other age groups?

Mr Poots: I agree with the Member. The drugs could be made in a make-up lab or in someone's kitchen. We do not know where the drugs are made. They have certainly not gone through pharmaceutical testing and, consequently, do not have the safety standards that we would expect with drugs received from a pharmacist with their advice. That is obvious.

The second element is also obvious: people do not sell drugs for the good of a community. People sell drugs because they can make huge profits. They do not care for the individuals to whom they sell the drugs or whether they can afford them, whether it has an impact on their family or what hurt, harm and damage it does. That is why I say very clearly today that communities need to hand these people over. They are poisoning our communities. We do not need drug dealers, we do not want drug dealers, and we do not want their drugs. The best means of getting rid of them is for people to stand up and say, "We have had enough" and hand over to the police all the relevant information, which can be taken to the courts. Between the police and the justice system, those people should be put where they belong — behind bars — for a long time.

3.45 pm

Mr Agnew: I extend my condolences and those of my party to the families affected by the eight deaths and to the wider community. I accept that no anti-drugs campaign will ever be 100% successful, but what consideration has the Minister given to harm-reduction facilities, for example, drug testing?

Mr Poots: We have established a drug and alcohol monitoring and information system. It is an early warning system between DHSSPS, the Department of Justice, the PSNI and local community and voluntary groups. A number of different substances have been mentioned, including “Green Rolexes”, “Red Es” and “Pink McDonalds”, but that is not an exhaustive list of what may be dangerous. Although people may want to avoid those drugs, that is not to say that others are safe — far from it. We are aware that these drugs could be very dangerous, but other drugs may also be very dangerous at present. At this stage, we are not sure whether one or more of these substances is involved, but the best thing that people can do is to take a precautionary approach. The PSNI is leading on the investigation, and we understand that it has asked that tests be undertaken as quickly as possible. As yet, we do not know for sure about these drugs, but we will supply that information as and when it becomes available.

Mr Maskey: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Member for raising this question. I also thank the Minister and support his very robust comments about the people who may be behind the drug-dealing business. I add my voice to those offering condolences to the bereaved families.

As the Minister suggested, I want to be very sensitive because we do not know the precise circumstances in which a number of these young people have lost their life. However, we all know that too many people suffer as a result of the drug trade. I wholeheartedly support the Minister in his call for a very robust challenge. The fact is that people are not just dealing poison in our community; they are dealing death. That is an ongoing problem.

As well as the information that the Minister has committed to giving us as early as possible, we need an early statement from the Chief Constable and the Minister of Justice. The public and every party in the House are well aware that people well known in the community are dealing in death through the drugs trade and are polluting our communities. If now is not an optimum time for political parties and other community leaders to mobilise against these death dealers, I do not know when would be.

We owe it to the bereaved and those who have suffered in the past from the drugs trade to ensure that we make a clear statement today. We want to give people information that could save their life and save them from falling into harm, but we also need to make sure that we send out a message that no quarter will be given to drug dealers. All steps must be taken to have them locked up behind bars as soon as possible. I would like to hear a statement from the Minister of Justice in the House as soon as possible.

Mr Poots: I am not exactly sure what the question was. Nonetheless, there was a lot there that I can agree with.

Normally, toxicology reports on bodies take 30 to 60 days. I know that the PSNI has asked for that information to come back as quickly as possible. Hopefully, we will get that sooner rather than later and it will help with the inquiries.

The very important message is that communities need to turn on these individuals. I will also drive home today the very important message to our judges and our courts that, when the communities stand up to these people, which is not easy to do — they are often nasty and violent individuals — they will stand shoulder to shoulder with them and give those people appropriate prison sentences and not a slap on the wrist. The community and often people in the House are fed up with judges treating criminals with kid gloves.

Local Government (Statutory Transition Committees) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2013

Debate resumed on motion:

That the draft Local Government (Statutory Transition Committees) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2013 be approved. — [Mr Attwood (The Minister of the Environment).]

Mr Attwood (The Minister of the Environment): Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker. I will continue my statement.

The draft regulations will also require councils to provide information to statutory transition committees. They will require STCs to provide information to the new council for its district, to share information with other committees and to provide any necessary information to predecessor councils. Each STC must have due regard to any guidance that the Department issues.

Provision has also been made in the regulations for STCs to wind up and therefore cease to exist 28 calendar days after the local government elections in 2014. The draft regulations to establish STCs mean that a key milestone has been reached as the 11 committees join in the robust implementation structures already in place. To drive the programme, I have already established the regional transition committee (RTC), which I chair, to act as the main driver for reform and to provide high-level political leadership. When necessary, I convene the political reference subgroup, which is made up of members of each party, as well as representatives from within and from outside the Assembly. There have been three meetings of that group. There are members here who can speak for themselves, but I have to say that, although we have touched on some difficult and sensitive matters, I have been impressed by the insight and, indeed, the wisdom that I have observed in that group.

I have also established the regional transition operational board (RTOB), which comprises government officials and council officers, to support the RTC and to co-ordinate the operational delivery of the reform programme. There is a vast mountain and streams of work on that to ensure that we get it done and get it done right. Finally, I have established a number of task-and-finish working groups to focus on key areas of transferring functions; finance; HR; legislation; pilots and community planning; programme delivery; and communications and systems convergence.

The progress of the STC regulations will be timely and will sit alongside the fact that the Executive, as Members know, agreed the package of functions that will transfer to local government on 1 April 2015. That enables Departments to provide certainty to staff and to draw up transfer arrangements. Secondly, the local government Bill has been drafted and circulated to ministerial colleagues for some time. I had hoped to introduce it before the summer recess, but I still await Executive approval. I have applied to the First Minister and deputy First Minister for urgent procedure for that, so it might yet be on the Order Paper for tomorrow. If not, the Bill will be introduced as early as possible in the next session. A significant programme of subordinate legislation is also required to complete the legislative framework and to give effect to the Bill, when enacted.

As of 1 May, a remuneration panel has been established to conduct a review of councillors' remuneration and to advise on a system and level of allowances that are appropriate for the new councils. The panel has been asked to reflect the roles and responsibilities that councillors will take on in the new councils, and it has six months to submit its final recommendations. I have made it clear to the panel that it has to submit those recommendations within six months to inform the minds of members — sitting members and potential new members of councils — on issues that they may have to decide on, not least severance.

As Members also know, the consultation on the proposed arrangements for a councillors' severance scheme has been completed. If I recall rightly, I understand that the summary of the responses to the consultation was shared with the Committee last week. It is expected that the regulations will be laid in the Assembly shortly, with councillors being able to apply for the scheme in August this year. The scheme will be on a one-off basis and for councillors who decide not to stand for election in the future. The scheme will be very much in the image of what we consulted on. Although it is not within the scope of the scheme and I do not think that it is right that it should be, I also acknowledge the many councillors who are not now in councils who served this part of the world very well for many years and have left the political stage before now. I do not think that I have done that properly and fully before. Arguably, they should have some recognition as well. I made a political judgement that that was not where we should go, but I want to acknowledge the members, including those from my party and other parties, who have contacted me about the overall scheme.

At the Executive meeting on 20 February, ministerial colleagues accepted the view that some financial support was required to deliver reform and agreed a package of £47.8 million. Officials in my Department and in DFP have been working to develop administrative and legislative arrangements for the distribution and management of the funding. As Members know, the Finance Minister confirmed to the House in his statement on the June monitoring round that the allocation of the first tranche of moneys from the Executive package was agreed at last Thursday's Executive meeting as part of the overall monitoring outcome.

Liaison is also ongoing between my Department and the NIO on the provision of shadow arrangements for the new councils, which is the transitional period that will run from the date of the next local government elections in 2014 until 1 April 2015, when the new councils will adopt their full role, responsibilities, powers and functions. The process will require legislation to be made at Westminster and in the Assembly, as the elections are an excepted matter that is the responsibility of the Secretary of State, while local government is a transferred matter.

In that regard, after the summer, one set of regulations will be tabled here to enable Westminster to take forward three sets of subordinate legislation for which it is responsible; namely the appointment of returning officers, the shape of the DEAs and a third set, which has suddenly gone out of my head. I will come back to it.

As I stated earlier, the regulations are a key step forward in the reorganisation of local government and a step closer to the establishment of 11 new, strong councils to address the needs of all our citizens. I ask the Assembly to approve the draft regulations.

Ms Lo (The Chairperson of the Committee for the Environment): As Chairperson of the Committee for the Environment, I support the motion to affirm the Local Government (Statutory Transition Committees) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2013.

The regulations will begin the process of reorganising local government and will implement the establishment of statutory, rather than voluntary, transition committees. The regulations also set out the powers and functions of the committees, in particular the power to appoint a new chief executive or clerk, as the position has been traditionally titled.

The Department initially provided the Committee with an outline of the anticipated provisions of the legislation in October 2012 and returned more recently to brief its members when the statutory rule was laid in the Assembly. The Committee asked the Department for some clarification of the guidance to be provided on the nomination of representatives by councils to the new statutory transition committees. Committee members were very aware that there were differences in how that was carried out at local level in the appointment of the previous voluntary transition committees.

The Committee welcomed the Department's intention to refresh the original guidance to specify three methodologies that should be used for those appointments, with the d'Hondt procedure to be employed where councils fail to agree on the selection of a methodology.

The Committee also expressed concerns over the procedures to be applied by the Department in the appointment of clerks to the eleven new councils. The Minister has written to me outlining the new process based on open competition that he proposes to use for these appointments. Although the Committee fully supports openness and transparency in such high-level appointments and the use of an assessment centre to ensure the high calibre of candidates, the final stage of the process does not appear to have been fully determined. The legislation indicates, at clause 18, that the appointment of a person to the office of clerk must be approved by a two thirds majority of the membership of the statutory transition committee. At this point, the Department has been unable to confirm whether the transition committee will consider more than one candidate and whether, if that candidate is rejected, a second candidate will be considered or the competition rerun.

4.00 pm

The Committee also expressed concerns about the legal implications of what is effectively a power of veto if the first candidate is rejected by the transition committee. Would the transition committee be liable to possible industrial tribunal proceedings? After considerable discussion, the Committee was prepared to accept the Department's assurances that it would bring back the details of the appointment procedures as soon as they were developed.

The Committee also supported the Department's intention to work closely with the Local Government Staff Commission in devising procedures. The Committee encourages the Department to address the commission's serious concerns.

I would like to add a few words as MLA for South Belfast. As the Minister has just mentioned, we will not see the Local Government (Reorganisation) Bill this side of recess. My party and I are very concerned at the lack of progress on the Bill. With the elections to the shadow councils scheduled for May, we are running extremely tight on time. We need the Bill to be introduced soon after the summer recess to allow for proper scrutiny to ensure it is passed ahead of time and that we are not rushing at the final minute. Perhaps the Minister will outline to the House what is holding the Bill up. As he said, we have only about 700 days to go, and, as he said during his most recent Question Time, the Bill has been with the Executive since April. Will the Minister elaborate on the points that the Executive need to discuss further or require clarification on.

We note that the statutory transition committees will have responsibility for appointing chief executives to the new councils. There was much discussion on that in Committee, and more light needs to be shed on the appointment process. There is still a bit of confusion and ambiguity, and the Minister might like to elaborate on that. However, more importantly, it is necessary that we have assurances from the Minister that the chief executives will not be appointed in a vacuum and that there will be a role for them in what will be very well paid posts.

Also, it is incredibly important that the Minister keeps a close eye on the proportionality of the statutory transition committees. I welcome the assurances we have that d'Hondt will be the fallback position. However, the Minister must ensure that, in councils where agreement is reached without d'Hondt being applied, it is done along the lines of proportionality. I am keen to hear from the Minister about what steps, if any, can be taken if councils ignore proportionality in their appointments.

Mr Weir: During the Chairperson's remarks, the clock in the Chamber went round 10 hours. I appreciate that the Member was not speaking for that length of time. Sometimes, when the Minister is on his feet, it feels like he has been speaking for 10 hours, but thankfully the Minister was the very soul of brevity, if not wit, today.

I start by declaring an interest as a member of North Down Borough Council. I am also a member of the North Down and Ards voluntary transition committee and the political reference group. I am not sure whether Members will see that as a declaration of interest or almost a confession at Nuremberg, such is the approach that some take to those of us who are still involved in local government.

Before I address the issue of statutory transition committees, I welcome the broader update that the Minister has provided on the RPA process. I particularly want to associate myself with his remarks about those who served on councils but are no longer with us, in many cases because they have retired and, in other cases, sadly, because they are no longer with us in any shape or form on this earth. Those men and women played a very significant role over the years in protecting democracy in Northern Ireland, often in very difficult circumstances.

I welcome the regulations that are before us. As the Minister indicated, there is broad agreement on them. The regulations were welcomed by the political reference group and were unanimously supported by the Committee for the Environment, and that is not the case on every matter. The legislation has been sought by those in local government for some time.

I welcome the regulations for two reasons in particular. The Minister referred to some of the other steps. First, they reaffirm and send out a clear-cut signal to all in the local government sector that RPA is moving ahead and being put in place. Perhaps because of the length of time that the RPA process has taken — it was first mooted more than a decade ago — there is, at times, some scepticism in the sector about time frames and implementation. To be fair to the Minister, on pretty much every occasion that I have heard him address any group of councillors and council officials, he has been very clear that RPA is going ahead and will be implemented. Often, it seems that, despite whatever assurances the Minister gives, very soon we are back at square one, with people asking whether it is really going to happen. I hope that today's decision on the statutory transition committees sends a very clear signal that we are moving ahead.

The regulations are also important because they give the necessary powers to the statutory transition committees. Due to the lack of those direct powers, there has been a sense among many members of the voluntary transition committees of marking time. That is understandable. However, at times, that has been used as an excuse by some. Perhaps there should have been a faster pushing ahead on the part of voluntary transition committees, but if anyone had any excuses, those have been largely removed.

There has been mention of the issuing of departmental guidance on a range of issues, and that is welcome and helpful. Essentially, the purpose of the statutory transition committees is to build a platform for the new councils: to take the steps that are required. A lot of that will not be party political in nature; it will be putting in place a lot of the necessary administration. There is a large volume of work to be done, and it is good that the green light has been given.

The power that most will focus on is the appointment of the chief executives. That is a key preparation step that needs to be taken. Those new chief executives can, in many ways, act as change managers in the statutory transition committees as we head toward the establishment of shadow councils. It is important that they be put in place. I appreciate that there was some discussion at Committee and elsewhere on whether their appointment was premature and whether there was a level of democratic deficit because they will be servicing new councils and it will be the statutory transition committees that will appoint them. My view is that there is relatively little difference between that and the situation for people when they enter local government, or even the Assembly. In many ways, they are bound by various decisions that have been made before they arrive. I think that quite a sensible approach is being taken.

The Minister referred to his very strong preference for open competition for those posts. I strongly concur with him. This is going to be an enormous challenge for councillors and staff who will be dealing with much larger organisations. We will need leadership in councils at chief executive level that is 100% fit for purpose. As such, in many ways, it seems a no-brainer to say that we should have open competition to have the best possible men and women running those organisations. I suspect that, in a lot of cases, many of those who are currently chief executives may well end up being appointed chief executives of the new councils. However, we lose absolutely nothing, and indeed have everything to gain, by having that open competition. There seems to be an argument that the 11 new chief executive posts should essentially be ring-fenced for the people there at present. That seems to me as absurd a notion as saying that, when we have the elections next year for the new councils, those eligible to be councillors in 2014 should be ring-fenced as the councillors who are there at present; that may be something that would be welcomed by some councillors. Clearly, that is an absurd notion, which no one would accept as correct. A process that enables the best possible people to come forward to be judged and selected on merit is, I think, one that is very much to be welcomed.

Departmental officials gave us a considerable briefing on the process, which gave us a reasonable level of assurance. However, there is one outstanding issue. Indications were given that, in tweaking the details of this over the summer and as we move into the autumn, departmental officials will take advice, particularly from the staff commission and other organisations, to ensure that the process is got right. I can understand the notion of a ratification of a new chief executive. In many ways, that is what happens for staff appointments at present, even if it is a formality.

I still have a degree of reservation. I appreciate that this is an attempt to try to ensure that there is a maximum level of buy-in. The two-thirds majority is something that I think needs to be looked at. From a practical point of view, where you have a process that has councillors at the centre of it with selection that is done on merit, it would be a very brave or perhaps a very foolish transition committee that would say, "You can either accept or reject that recommendation on the basis of a two-thirds majority. We have had a perfectly legitimate process that has produced someone top of the merit tree, but we do not accept that person for whatever reason and are going to reject them and either try to appoint the second-place person or start the competition again." I suspect that, in practical terms, councillors on the transition committees would see that as leaving themselves legally very vulnerable under those circumstances. I understand the motivation behind the two-thirds majority. However, I wonder whether that might be something that will have to be looked at, because I see a degree of vulnerability with it.

That one caveat aside, I think that the Assembly as a whole should welcome the progress being made by the statutory transition committees and the regulations before us today. I am certainly happy to lend my support to the regulations.

Mr Boylan: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Cuirim fáilte roimh na rialacha. I welcome the rules and regulations today. I want to share in some of the comments that the Minister made in recognising the contribution of councillors. Many good contributions have been made down through the years, and I share in those views. I congratulate the work of the voluntary transition committees up to now and those who have made a positive contribution to that. I commend the Minister on the political reference group, and I apologise that I did not make the last meeting. There has been a lot of good work and contributions, and it has closed some of the gaps around the fears and concerns that councillors have over the process. There has been good engagement in working with councils, and I hope that that will continue. As others said, this is one piece of the jigsaw to assist in the reform process, and it is most welcome today. It allows for the establishment of the statutory transition committees and outlines the procedures and provisions incorporated in that.

I do not want to go over everything that the Minister and Chair mentioned, but I want the Minister to clarify a couple of points. It was a wee bit noisy in the Chamber when the Minister was speaking on this matter earlier, and I could not pick him up.

4.15 pm

As regards methodology, the Minister outlined three measures. He talked not only about d'Hondt being the default mechanism but about proportionality. I want to touch on that element a wee bit. Councils have asked me how you define agreement. Will it be, as some councils have indicated, done in a way outside of those three methods? Will the Minister elaborate on how he sees that process working?

I also want to talk about Castlereagh Borough Council and Lisburn City Council. Will the people who are appointed to the statutory transition committee from those areas represent the relevant wards? Another key point that has come up in Committee relates to the appointment of the clerk or the chief executive. Minister, if we go through an open process and you appoint somebody, how will that stand up legally? If they go through an open competition and are appointed under proper procedure and it then has to go to the transition committee to be overseen, how will that stand up legally? Can that be challenged?

With those comments made, I welcome the rules.

Mrs D Kelly: I, too, welcome the establishment of transition committees being put on a statutory footing. However, I have to say that, similar to the Chairperson, I have concerns relating to the reorganisation Bill, which we believed would be before the House before summer recess. I understand from questions in the House and elsewhere that it has been before OFMDFM since the end of April. I would be grateful if the Minister would shed some light on that matter.

We would all do well to remember the ethos and principles behind the review of public administration. It was, ultimately, aimed at saving ratepayers money. One of the first tests of any new council will be how those savings are realised. Although I welcome the Minister's quest for funding for local government to facilitate RPA, I urge him to challenge his Executive colleagues for further financial assistance in the transition from 26 to 11 councils so that ratepayers are not further burdened by the cost of change.

The Minister referred to previous meetings of the political reference group that he established. He will recall, as others may, that one of the main concerns was about the checks and balances in the making of some of the pertinent, early decisions on the appointment of senior staff and the culture and ethos of local councils. Can the Minister, having reflected on the comments of councillors and others at the last political reference group meeting, give us any further indication of how he can allay some of the concerns that were raised?

The Minister, quite rightly, paid tribute to former elected representatives in the years of conflict. That was very timely given that it is only a few days since the fortieth anniversary of the death of our party colleague Senator Paddy Wilson, who lost his life because he stood up for democratic institutions. He was not alone in that sacrifice. It is right and proper that we remember that many people put their head up when others brought violence to our streets.

I am very much of the view that all the senior-level posts must be appointed through open competition. I am encouraged by the attitude of all the parties represented in the political reference group. There seems to be broad support for the principle of open competition. There also has to be a change in the mindset and attitude in leading councils, hopefully, to a new beginning, particularly following the planned autumn workshops on dealing with the past, sectarianism and some of the more emotive subjects such as parades. There seems to be a demand from the public and an attitude of generosity in the political reference groups so far to deal with those more complex issues. I am pleased that the regulations are before the House today and look forward to the introduction of further legislation to enable the change to happen.

Mr Elliott: Much of this legislation has centred on the appointment process for chief executives for the new councils. The Ulster Unionist Party and I support the concept of open competition. Departments may wish to look at much more open competition, but that is not for the Minister today. I welcome that aspect, which allows for a much wider pool of candidates.

When the issue was being discussed in Committee, I asked about the title and position of "clerk" as opposed to "chief executive". Departmental officials told us that the position of clerk and not chief executive is in the current legislation. It may be an appropriate time to look at that terminology because, to me and to most people in the community, the title "chief executive" is the norm as opposed to "clerk", which is still sometimes used. Perhaps the Minister should look at that in the near future. It is not an issue for this legislation but, as the reform continues, the Minister might want to look at it.

It is not a good basis for the statutory transition committees to appoint the new chief executives. The Ulster Unionist Party and I believe that the shadow councils should have that role when they are elected. They will have a year to bed in, and those are the types of decisions that the shadow councils, as opposed to the statutory transition committees, should take. We are well aware that a number of members and councillors on the statutory transition committees will not serve on the new councils. I accept that, when a chief executive retires and you need to appoint a new one coming up to the end of a term, councillors who appoint a new chief executive may not be councillors in the next term. However, those are one-off issues. In this case, all 11 chief executives will be appointed, and the shadow councils, as opposed to the statutory transition committees, should make those big decisions. I am firmly of that belief, which is why I voted against the issue in Committee.

It is quite interesting that the Local Government Staff Commission believes that the appointment process that is outlined for chief executives in the regulations is in conflict with its procedures and processes. I was hugely disappointed to hear in Committee that the Department had not even opened discussions with the Local Government Staff Commission. That is a Department of the Environment body that was established for the very purpose of those appointments, and the Department has not even entered into any discussions with it. I understand that, since the Committee meeting last week, there have been initial discussions with the commission, but I am not sure whether an agreement can be reached. Members said that the entire statutory transition committee deciding the final appointment and requiring a two-thirds majority is not in the guidelines or resolution of the Local Government Staff Commission appointment process. They state that the powers of appointment are delegated to a small group of councillors, and they will make that decision. I assume that the Local Government Staff Commission is not currently in a position to support this. That is for the commission to say, but that is my assumption at present. I believe that this will leave the process very open to challenge. Over the past couple of years, the commission has worked very diligently to ensure that the options and opportunities for challenge were very limited, and I am concerned that this will once again open up the prospect of significant challenge. If the process indicated that a statutory transition committee required a two thirds majority, I could say that the process was OK but not the appointment. I believe that the final appointment will be subject to huge challenge if a statutory transition committee decides against the recommendation of the appointment team.

Although I welcome some aspects of the legislation, overall, the Ulster Unionist Party and I cannot support it because of those significant difficulties. Hopefully, the Minister will take on board our concerns.

Lord Morrow: We are where we are with this whole process. If we were starting with a clean sheet of paper, we would not start from here because there are a lot of disappointments and a lot that I suspect and feel could and should be done differently.

I declare that I have been a member of Dungannon and South Tyrone Borough Council since 1973. I think that I joined at the age of nine or 10, but I cannot recall — [Laughter.] It seems that long anyway.

I want to place on record my appreciation, and the Assembly should, I think, do the same, of the fact that councils were the only democratic forums in this country over the long, hard years of what are now called the Troubles. The Minister and other Members were not neglectful of that. There were those who were prepared to put their head above the parapet, and, as already intimated, some paid the ultimate price and made the ultimate sacrifice. I pay tribute to those people, irrespective of where they came from or their background, for doing their duty. They wanted to play a part in the public life of their council area. Society went through difficult years, but I believe that it could have fallen apart had it not been for the local councils and councillors who gave of their best to try to keep some semblance of democracy and normality in this country. At a time of local government reform, I say to people who went through the difficult years that their efforts have not gone unnoticed and that there are those who very much appreciate what you have been doing.

There are those who, as they come to the end of their term in local government — many have spent long years there — will no longer be allowed to stand in that democratic forum because of new regulations. Whether you agree or disagree with that, the fact remains that there are many people who would have been invaluable in the new system that will take over in the not-too-distant future, but we will not be able to draw on their experience or knowledge should they also want to be in the Assembly. They have to decide where they want to be.

4.30 pm

I do not think that that exists in any other region of the United Kingdom, if my memory serves me right. This is the only region of the United Kingdom where you have to decide one way or the other. Sometimes, it is nearly put out that those who are in both tiers of government are not elected to both, but, lo and behold, all of them have been elected to both. Anyway, I am just making the point that many valuable, experienced councillors are going to be discarded as a result of this. I might say that I am not speaking of myself, because others out there have given long service to the community. I think that important things have often been done down at that grassroots level. However, now that we have the Assembly, which is another tier of local government, it has been decided that people cannot be in both places at the same time.

It is a disappointment that we do not have a Bill, and I think that we have to put that on record. At that stage, I will start to put in the question marks. Is there another stalling exercise? Are we holding back or drawing back again, or is this due to other reasons? I am sure that the Minister will elaborate on that when he gets up to speak.

I happen to believe, and I am speaking more in a personal capacity here, that the procedure that we are going through for the transition across is totally unnecessary. It is far too elaborate and is not needed at all. You can go back to the days of the Macrory report in 1973 and look at what happened then. I do not think for a second that this all happened in 1973 to bring matters across during the reform of local government.

We are but just round the corner from the election. When we come back to the Assembly in September, the elections for local government will virtually be upon us but we still do not have a Bill. I know that there is another procedure a little later than that, but I think that it would have been good had we had the Bill before us before the recess, rather than have to wait until after.

The transition committees are also a year too late, but I suppose we have to be thankful for small mercies, and, at long last, it seems that we will get transition committees. Some of us advocated that the transition committees should have been established at least 12 months ago. However, we are where we are, and the Minister tells us today that that at least is now going to happen.

Mr McCarthy: I thank the Member for giving way. I listened very attentively to what has been said around the Chamber. I declare an interest, in that I have been a valued member of Ards Borough Council, which is a superb council in Northern Ireland. The issue is that if the Bill does not come through the House, the possibility is that the election may have to be deferred until after 2014. If that is the case, some radical thinking will have to take place about why that has happened and who is responsible.

Lord Morrow: I take the Member's point that he is a valuable member of one of the local councils. I trust that all his colleagues are valued members, as indeed, I hope, all councillors are valued members of their local council. I take the point that the Member is trying to make: yes, it might be good just to ascertain why, in the course of events, we have no Bill. I have little doubt that the Minister will tell us — before 5.00 pm today, probably — why we do not have a Bill. We will not have to wait that long. I take the point that the Member is trying to raise.

I think that it would be wrong to let the transition committees make the appointments of chief executives for the new councils. I ask the Minister to take another look at that one. Over the summer recess, when he has a wee bit more time on his hands, he might just want to reflect on that and see where it takes us.

Mr McCarthy said that the elections will perhaps have to be postponed again, and that would not be good either. We have had one six-year period of local government, and we are well into the next one. I do not think that it would be good for local government to have another postponement of elections. However, time may well catch up with us. As I said earlier, we are where we are, but it is not looking good. I suspect that the Minister will want to put as much power behind this as he possibly can to ensure that the process travels at the time and speed that hopefully we all want.

I come from an area that had a transition committee in operation, although I was not a member of it. However, the Mid-Ulster transition committee operated very well. I suspect that a better way to put it would be to say that it operated better than most. Now that this is going to happen, I hope that the Minister and his Department will keep a watching brief on the different transition committees as they set about doing their job, because they have an important job to do. They have the job of propelling this forward, and they may well end up carrying the can at the end of the day if things do not happen, and that would be unfair. The Committee will give whatever support that it can to encourage the whole process to keep going, with the proviso that the appointment of chief executives might need to be looked at long and hard before we give over the entire responsibility for their appointment to the transition committees. That would not be good, and I hope that the Department will look again at the whole process.

However, with some reservations, I support what is in front of us today. It is up to the Minister now to prove us all wrong. Let us see that we need not be cautious that things will fly from this day forth and go past us like a whirlwind. Let us see the Minister holding on tight and carrying the whole thing through. I wish him well.

Mr Attwood: I thank all Members for their contributions, and I thank the Committee for all its work. I will try to deal with the points succinctly.

I confirm to Anna Lo and Mr Boylan that guidance will state that we encourage people to use d'Hondt, Sainte-Laguë or single transferable vote for the proportionality requirement around membership of the STCs, because we cannot put this into law for various reasons. However, if a cluster of councils comes to the Department to say that there is an enhanced model of proportionality that moves beyond any of the three recommended models, the Department will not desist. If that is the case, the more the better. Larne Borough Council has abandoned all those models of proportionality and has a model of proportionality that drives and embeds in the life of the council the allocation of positions and the payment of allowances. That model is proportionality is plus, plus, plus. If people want to go there, they will have the full encouragement of the Department.

The appointment of chief executives is very demanding stuff. You are walking on eggs, and you may well be walking on legal eggs. Anything that has been proposed has been interrogated legally, not least because there is a political consensus around this room and other rooms that there should be open and full competition for the post of chief executive in the new councils. That has been widely endorsed, but there is legal opinion from others to suggest that it cannot be done, is problematic, or might open up legal challenge, so I have been very cautious and highly vigilant in taking legal and other advice on the process. On the far side of that legal advice, given my own judgement and that shared in many places, we believe that open competition for the post is right. What will be done? How will it be done? I do not know what this comment is that the staff commission has not been involved. I get various pieces of correspondence from the commission and have had various pieces of correspondence from it in recent times. The Environment Committee has also had pieces of correspondence from the commission in recent times, and it seems to me that it is a bit contradictory, but that is for them to explain.

Nonetheless, there have been conversations with the commission, and there will be more conversations with it, because it has a statutory role, it will continue to have a statutory role, and we are not trying to usurp that statutory role.

Mr Elliott: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Attwood: I will give way in a second. The commission will have a statutory role in the process, but what is the process for the appointment of the chief executives? Some details are still being worked through. It is proposed that there will be one competition, and that those who apply for the post of chief executive will indicate the post in which they are interested. Maybe they will be interested in 11 posts, or maybe they will be interested in one, but the statutory transition committees in a cluster will appoint an interview panel.

There will be the normal processes and legal processes for the assessment of those who might be subject to further assessment, and those who are identified for that purpose will be subject to an assessment centre. After that assessment centre, there will be an interview, and, on the far side of that, there will be a decision.

The decision will be that one person, and one person alone, will be nominated from the interviewing panel to the statutory transition committee, and the statutory transition committee will have to make the judgement. If they choose not to ratify, and if they are not satisfied that the process has been fair and open, they can reject that person; in which case, the competition will be rerun. If they reject somebody, and, in my view or the Department's view, they have not acted properly, in that the process has been fair and open and that there was no reason not to ratify, if a council decides not to ratify in those circumstances, the Department will step in.

Mr Elliott: I thank the Minister for giving way. My point was merely about his comment in relation to the staff commission not being involved or not having discussions with the Department. I made my comment when I referred to that coming from the basis of your departmental officials who had indicated at the Committee last week that there had not been any discussions with the Local Government Staff Commission around the process that was being used. That was merely my comment.

Mr Attwood: There have been discussions with what is known as the joint forum, and there have been discussions, if not latterly, certainly recently, with the staff commission, not least because it has forwarded various pieces of correspondence, and we have been trying to understand fully what people may be indicating. Issues about human resources, be they legal, operational, or the relationships between ourselves and other organisations, are dealt with on a rolling basis, and I have not been informed that the staff commission heretofore has had some big headaches about how the Department has conducted itself in that regard.

On the far side of all those processes, people have to take legal advice and decide what their legal options are. My sense is that people know that this is a once-in-a-political-lifetime opportunity to get council reform right, and that has been touched on by a lot of people in this discussion. I do not like some of the details of council reform. I still do not like having 11 rather than 15 councils. I would much prefer it had that piece of advice prevailed earlier, as managing all this would have been more straightforward. Nonetheless, if you look at what has been achieved over the past 18 months compared to what was done in the previous 18 years, or even in the previous mandate, the scale of what has been achieved is far in excess of what happened before. I think that, at political, official, management and leadership levels in the councils, people do not want to see this process derailed. Whatever its fault lines and flaws, whatever its challenges and demands, they do not want to see it derailed.

4.45 pm

I will give you a small example. In the past few weeks, my senior planning team has spent a lot of time going around all the divisional planning offices to explain to planning staff not only more about the character and content of the planning system, and its role in Northern Ireland, but where we are going over the next 700 days in the run down to local council reform. What has been the consequence of that? I am getting reports of planning staff being enthused and encouraged on the transition by council staff. I will not name the chief executive of one of the local councils, for example, arising from one of the meetings last week — maybe a chief executive who is not going to apply for appointment to the new clusters — who was enthusiastic in saying to planning staff that the planning function cannot come soon enough within the life of a council, because of what it might mean for councillors shaping their own communities. So, I do not think that there is any sense that people are going to gather now and try to derail any bit of this process, including the process that has been proposed in respect of chief executives. I hope that that spirit will prevail over the next number of months.

Mr McCarthy: I thank the Minister for giving way. To my mind, training for future councillors on the new councils will be vital as we go forward, but, to my knowledge, that process has not even started.

Mr Attwood: I am sorry to correct the valued member of his local council —

Mr McCarthy: I am always open to being corrected.

Mr Attwood: I hope, then, that the Member will take kindly this correction. Here I go, and this is why I am a bit surprised about some stuff about the staff commission, but the NAC, NILGA and the staff commission came into the office together, about six weeks ago, to make their contribution to shaping the training of councillors, senior managers and other staff in the run down to RPA. That is only one example of a process that has been going on for a number of months, and which will conclude by the end of July. We have been scoping out what the training requirements and other requirements of councillors, management and officials might be across the range of DOE functions. I will give you a small example. I believe that there is an urgent need to have proper training in the run down to community planning being part of the life of the new councils going forward. Community Places, the community-planning organisation that is citizen-focused, is taking forward that work. It is working with the chief executive of Ballymena council in order to ensure that, when it comes to community planning, which is somewhat abstract at the moment, that function is shaped properly, so that the councils are fully empowered and enabled to take that forward in 2015. I could go on. I hope that the Member will take those comments in the spirit in which they are intended.

I was asked why we did not have a local government Bill before the House. I think it is probably too late now, because we are not sitting tomorrow, but DOE has an ambition to introduce 10 Bills in the lifetime of this mandate. That is not precluding something that might come out in the run down to 2016, which will be the end of this mandate, if the Northern Ireland (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill is passed by Westminster. I hope it is not, in that regard, because I do not think you can usurp democracy in this part of the world. However, in my view, there was an attempt to usurp the full outworkings of democracy in the Chamber last week with regard to the Planning Bill. Putting that aside, there are at least 10 Bills that DOE has ambition to get through the Assembly in the lifetime of this mandate, regardless of whether it is four or five years.

It was my hope, and I have always said, that we would have, at various stages, a Marine Bill, a road traffic Bill, a local government Bill, a Planning Bill and the Second Stage of the Carrier Bags Bill in the legislative process of this mandate before the summer. A road traffic (amendment) Bill and a local government Bill have been circulating among the Executive for a number of weeks — a lot of weeks — and, despite my expectation, even on walking into Executive meetings, that they would be on the agenda, they have not appeared. As Members might know, others perhaps see the agenda of Executive meetings before some parties do, but for me and other parties, including the Member's party, the first sight we have of an Executive agenda is when we walk into the meeting and sit down.

Mr Eastwood: Team players.

Mr Attwood: As the Member has just pointed out, that suggests that there is a lot of team playing going on round the Executive table. Putting that aside, there was ample opportunity for the local government Bill to go through the Executive and come to the Floor, not just for its First Stage but for its Second Stage, so that it could go to Anna Lo's Committee in advance of the summer.

The mind of Executive members who are transferring functions have, historically and currently, been concentrated on the issue given that their Departments are transferring. Therefore, it seems to me that, in those Departments, when it came to an Executive paper's being circulated, they were more nimble on their feet with regard to what its contents might be and they responded very promptly.

There was a legislative issue. I think that I indicated that in the Chamber previously. It arose in respect of — and we need to get this right — TUPE obligations. That required some last-minute work, four or five weeks ago, with the Office of the Legislative Counsel. However, it was corrected.

I have to say that although I understand, given the volume of papers around the Executive, that Ministers might respond late to certain matters, last Thursday, one Minister responded to matters. We tried to give that Minister immediate reassurance. I am glad to say that the Minister indicated that he was satisfied. I also have to say that I hope that no game-playing is going on with respect to the local government Bill. I hope that, given that, for example, a process has been established by the FM and dFM to address the issue of flags, no Minister is now trying to parachute the flags issue into the local government Bill at this stage. It may come to pass that the flags issue will have to be dealt with on the Floor of the Chamber through the Bill. It is not sustainable to walk into the formation of the new councils in 700 days' time without the issue of flags having been resolved satisfactorily. Otherwise, the first item of business in too many councils will be the display of flags. That will not be a very healthy start to the life of the new councils given the ambitions of councillors and the needs of local ratepayers. I want to put it on record that I hope that no Minister is now looking for the issue of flags to be dealt with at this stage through the local government Bill.

Mr Weir, Mrs Kelly and Mr Boylan, who referred to it, and other Members sit on the political reference subgroup. As they are aware, I raised the issue of the display of flags in the context that I just outlined at two recent meetings. We stepped back from that issue because a process, whatever its character might be, has now been initiated by the FM and dFM to deal with some legacy issues, including that of flags. That is where it should be dealt with for now. If that does not lead to a satisfactory outcome, it should be dealt with in another way. However, the local government Bill should not be derailed by any issue around flags at this stage.

With regard to Mr Weir's comments, I think that there is relentless momentum now towards RPA. That momentum has been gathering because of decisions around money, the transfer of functions, STCs, council severance, and so on. Regarding the potential for more money from the Executive, which Mrs Kelly touched on, I want to say very clearly that I do not want to hold out any hope or expectation that that will happen. The previous position had been that there would be no central assistance. Then, close to £50 million was allocated. I cannot offer any hope or expectation that that situation will be revisited.

Over the weekend, I wrote a letter to the chief executives and chairs of councils further to a recent meeting that I had with ICE representatives, which is the sharing and collaboration team of local councils, expressing explicitly my dissatisfaction with their response to sharing and collaboration opportunities in the next 18 months. Further to a meeting that I had with them two months ago, a letter had come back that said very little. Basically, it said that any more or significant sharing and collaboration of substance would have to wait until after 2015. It is not the message to send out to ratepayers that sharing and collaboration will, substantially, be done in two years' time or later.

I made it very clear to them that I expected a lot more good authority from the councils. That is why I wrote the letter not just to the chief executives but to the chairs of the councils. As Mr Weir and others will confirm, at the political reference subgroup, I raised the point that councils have to take the lead in driving forward sharing and collaboration.

Mr Weir also raised a question — Anna Lo touched on this — about whether there will be a vacuum between the function of the incoming chief executive and the existing one. No, there will not. The new chief executive will be tasked under the regulations to take a lead in key responsibilities, including the preparation of a business plan, a corporate plan and a financial plan. Those are major undertakings. At the same time, the existing chief executive will have ongoing operational responsibility for the delivery of services in the run-down to March 2015. So, whilst they will have to have good relations, they both have defined, demanding jobs. In my view, there will be no vacuum. The issue is that the roles are different under the law, so multiple responsibilities will fall to both, and they will need to apply themselves diligently to those responsibilities.

Ms Lo: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Attwood: Yes.

Ms Lo: What will happen if the existing chief executive is appointed as the new chief executive for the new council?

Mr Attwood: Once we have worked through all these issues, I will give you the definitive answer. The point of principle remains that there will not be a vacuum. Existing and incoming chief executives will have a lot of work to do. The roles will be defined differently — one is operational, and one is about shaping the life of the future council. In my view, that will work satisfactorily. However, the Member makes a fair point. Will you have a person who is master of neither house, and will there be a tension in that regard? Once all that has been worked through, we will get an answer to the Member.

Mr Boylan raised a question about Castlereagh and Lisburn councils. There might be a slight confusion. I think that there are two issues behind that question. The first is that there is a dispute between Castlereagh and Lisburn councils about the balance of membership on the STC. Both have been looking at me. I have to point out that half of Lisburn City Council's members are from the ranks of the DUP and that all but half of Castlereagh Borough Council's members are from the ranks of the DUP. So, if they cannot work that out at a party and council level, I do not think that I can work it out for them. With all due respect to them, that is why I have resisted meeting them separately or together, because they need to work out that issue at a local level. If they cannot work it out or accept the fact that there will be equivalent members from both councils, whatever the disproportion in population size, and agree that that needs to happen, in my view, neither is sending out very good authority, and the party that seems to have a leadership role on those two councils is sending out some strange messages.

The other point that the Member makes is that Castlereagh and Lisburn councils will transfer areas to Belfast City Council. In the guidance that will be issued further to the regulations, there will be a requirement for the people who sit on the Belfast STC to be elected members from the DEAs or wards that are transferring into Belfast. Therefore you cannot have a person from a political tradition that is contrary to the political tradition of, for example, Poleglass sitting on the statutory transition committee in Belfast.

Tom Elliott made the good point that there should be more open competition, and I agree with that. In my own time in the Department, I remember getting advice on the appointment of the Environment Agency chief executive. That is a grade 3 post, so there is really only one post above that in the Civil Service hierarchy. As far as I recall, the advice was to have an internal competition, but I said, "No. Let us have an open and full competition. If there are strong internal or external candidates, let us test all that". We ended up with someone who came to Belfast from Australia. That sends out a strong message that we recognise that there are a lot of good people within and a lot of good people outside. We are taking that model forward for the competition.

5.00 pm

There is the issue about town clerks and chief executives. Under the legislation at the moment, it is town clerk. It would be a logistical nightmare to delete or redact references to chief executives, never mind the confusion that Belfast, Lisburn and Newry are cities, and they all have town clerks. It may be better that we do not go there, although I understand the sentiment behind what was said. I assure people that we will work with the Local Government Staff Commission as we go forward.

I am sure that I have not touched on a number of points, but I aimed to finish by 5.00 pm. I agree with the sentiment of the comments made by Lord Morrow. I recognise that those who are leaving may not want to leave council life, never mind those who have already left and those who have gone to other places. All those people need to be recognised, and nothing is intended as any criticism of them.

I outlined my plan for the Bill. I regret that the Bill will not even have its First Reading before the summer. Lord Morrow's final remark was "Who will carry the can?". I am not into "Who will carry the can?". Even with my reservations, I am into getting this done right and on time. Who will carry the can if this does not live up to all those standards? The ratepayers. They will have a reduced or worse service than expected or a service that is too costly or does not live up to the requirements of the transfer of functions, especially in planning. They will carry the can, and, as democrats and public servants, we say that the last people who should have to do that are the public.

Standing Orders 10(2)(a), 19, 20 and 20(1)

Mr Deputy Speaker: The next four motions relate to amendments to Standing Orders, so I propose to conduct the debate as follows. I propose to group motions (a) to (d) as detailed in the Order Paper and conduct a single debate. I will call the Chairperson of the Committee on Procedures to move the first motion in the group. Debate will then take place on all four motions. When all who wish to speak have done so, I will put the Question on motion (a). I will then ask the Chairperson to move formally motions (b) to (d) in turn, and I will put the Question on each motion without further debate. If that is clear, we will proceed.

Mr G Kelly (The Chairperson of the Committee on Procedures): I beg to move

After Standing Order 20 insert

“20A. Topical Questions

- (1) Topical questions for a Minister shall be taken during the first 15 minutes of the time allocated for questions for oral answer by that Minister.*
- (2) No topical questions shall be asked of the Assembly Commission.*
- (3) A member who wishes to ask a topical question of a Minister at a particular sitting shall submit his or her name in advance to the Speaker who shall select 10 members by ballot.*
- (4) The Speaker shall determine, by means of a random selection, the order in which questions are taken.*
- (5) The Speaker shall inform –*
 - (a) members; and*
 - (b) the Ministers to whom the questions will be addressed at the sitting;in advance, of the names and order in which questions are to be taken.*
- (6) Answers may not be debated, but the member asking the question may ask a supplementary question. A supplementary question may contain no more than one enquiry.*
- (7) Where a member is not present to ask a topical question, the Speaker shall move to the next member in accordance with the order determined under paragraph (4).*
- (8) Paragraphs (1)(a) and (2) of Standing Order 19 and paragraphs (2), (8A), (10) and (11) of Standing Order 20 shall apply to topical questions as they apply to questions for oral answer.”*

The following motions stood in the Order Paper:

- (b) In Standing Order 10(2)(a) leave out “and 20A” and insert “to 20B”. — [Mr G Kelly (The Chairperson of the Committee on Procedures).]*

(c) Leave out Standing Order 19(3) and insert

“(3) A question may be –

(a) for oral answer (see Standing Order 20);

(b) a topical question for oral answer (see Standing Order 20A);

(c) for urgent oral answer (see Standing Order 20B); or

(d) for written answer (see Standing Order 20C).”

In Standing Order 19(4) line 1, after “question” insert “(other than a topical question)”. — [Mr G Kelly (The Chairperson of the Committee on Procedures).]

(d) In Standing Order 20(1) leave out sub-paragraphs (a) and (b) and the hyphen immediately preceding them and insert

“2.00 pm and 3.30 pm on those Mondays and Tuesdays”. — [Mr G Kelly (The Chairperson of the Committee on Procedures).]

Mr G Kelly: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. On behalf of the Committee on Procedures, I am pleased to bring these motions to amend Standing Orders to the House today. On 15 April, the Assembly approved the Committee on Procedures' report on its inquiry into topical questions. The motions will give effect to the recommendations in the Committee's report. Motion (a) inserts a new Standing Order that sets out the topical questions procedure. Motions (b), (c) and (d) are consequential amendments.

I will make a few comments about motion (a), which proposes new Standing Order 20A. If the amendments to Standing Orders are agreed, topical questions will form part of the existing Question Time rota, with Ministers now having 45 minutes each time they are scheduled to answer oral questions. The Minister will answer topical questions during the first 15 minutes and, at the end of that time or when all topical questions have been asked, whichever is earlier, business can move immediately to the 30-minute Question Time for the same Minister.

Members will recall that the Committee's report had recommended a deadline of three working days in advance of the relevant Topical Question Time for submission of names to the Speaker. Although new Standing Order 20A(3) does not specify this deadline, it states:

This is in line with established convention and mirrors the current wording of the Standing Orders regarding questions for oral answer. As exists for current Standing Orders, a Speaker's ruling will be issued in respect of the new Standing Orders that will set out the detailed arrangements, including the deadlines to be adhered to. For the same reasons, new Standing Order 20A(5) does not specify the 1.00 pm deadline for notifying Members and Ministers of the names selected and the order in which questions are to be taken. The time frame for this will also be set out in the Speaker's ruling.

Motion (d) extends Question Time to include 15 minutes for answering topical questions and gives effect to the Committee's recommendation that starting times for Question Time on Mondays and Tuesdays should be synchronised. In short, that means that questions to the relevant Ministers, including topical questions and oral questions, would run for 45-minute slots from 2.00 pm to 3.30 pm on Mondays and Tuesdays.

Further to the proposed Standing Orders before the House today, an important recommendation in the Committee's report was that the new arrangements should be reviewed by the Committee on Procedures following a six-month trial period. That will ensure that the objectives of introducing topical questions are being met and that the process can be revised if necessary. Subject to the approval of the Standing Orders before us today, this requirement has been built into the Committee on Procedures work programme for early in 2014.

The introduction of topical questions provides a real opportunity to improve spontaneity and will give Members the chance to pursue issues that matter to them. The hope is that questioning will be more relevant, timely and more interesting for our constituents. It is the Committee's view that these Standing Orders accurately reflect the recommendations, which were agreed by this House, in the Committee's report. Therefore, I commend the motions to the House.

Mr Lyttle: On behalf of the Alliance Party I support the proposals before the House on the introduction of Topical Question Time. As a member of the Committee on Procedures, which proposed the inquiry into topical questions, I am very pleased to see this business before the Assembly today.

It is my hope that the introduction of topical questions will lead to a more spontaneous and relevant questioning of Ministers in the Assembly. I know that it is hard to please everybody in the House and the Back-Benchers behind me may not totally agree, but I hope that this will improve the accountability of many of the Ministers to the public whom we are here to serve.

I also hope that this will be one way for MLAs to get answers from Ministers who, increasingly, seem determined to avoid answering written questions in a timely manner. I know that Alliance Party Ministers welcome the introduction of topical questions and look forward to responding to them.

This will be a positive step for the Assembly in improving the way in which our legislature operates. I hope that the public will welcome the introduction of topical questions.

I thank the staff of the Committee on Procedures, who worked diligently in helping Committee members to conduct our inquiry, and all the contributors to the inquiry. It may take some adjustment to start with, but I am confident that over time it will be viewed as having provided MLAs with a beneficial tool to uphold good government and democracy in the interests of the public in Northern Ireland.

Mr Deputy Speaker: No other Members have indicated that they wish to speak in the debate. I call the Deputy Chairperson of the Committee on Procedures, Mr Trevor Clarke to conclude and make a winding-up speech.

Mr Clarke (The Deputy Chairperson of the Committee on Procedures): As there have been only two contributors to the debate, whose speeches have been very short, it leaves me with little to say other than to thank, as did Chris Lyttle, the Committee staff for the support that they provided throughout the Committee's inquiry.

It is also worth noting that, although some Members might suggest that there could have been friction with Ministers, the proposals were sent to the Executive, which had no hesitation in supporting them. The Chairperson has pointed out that there will be a six-month trial period. We look forward to the principles taking effect and hope that there will be spontaneous questions that will satisfy the appetite of some Members who believe that, maybe, questions are not spontaneous. I support the motions, as they accurately reflect the recommendations of the Committee.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Before we proceed to the Question, I remind Members that each motion requires cross-community support.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved (with cross-community support):

"20A. Topical Questions

Mr Deputy Speaker: The remaining motions in the group will be moved in turn and voted on without further debate.

Resolved (with cross-community support):

In Standing Order 10(2)(a) leave out "and 20A" and insert "to 20B". — [Mr G Kelly (The Chairperson of the Committee on Procedures).]

Resolved (with cross-community support):

(Mr Speaker in the Chair)

Leave out Standing Order 19(3) and insert

Private Members' Business

North/South Co-operation

Mr Speaker: The Business Committee has agreed to allow up to one hour and 30 minutes for this debate. As two amendments have been selected and published on the Marshalled List, an additional 15 minutes have been added to the total time. The proposer of the motion will have 10 minutes to propose and 10 minutes to make a winding-up speech. The proposer of each amendment will have 10 minutes to propose and five minutes to make a winding-up speech. All other Members who wish to speak will have five minutes. Before we begin, the House should note that the amendments cannot both be made as they are mutually exclusive. So, if amendment No 1 is made, the Question on amendment No 2 will not be put.

Mr McDevitt: I beg to move

That this Assembly reaffirms its commitment to the ambition, values and institutions borne out of the Belfast Agreement; notes the improved working relationship between the Governments on this island including through the North/South Ministerial Council and British-Irish Council; welcomes the recent progress on the Narrow Water bridge project; and calls on the Executive, in conjunction with the British and Irish Governments, to complete urgently the review of the St Andrews Agreement to allow further progress on North/South co-operation in order to bring benefits to all of the people of this island.

As we have been remembering frequently in recent months, 15 years ago our region was given the opportunity to start over. This institution was founded on power sharing, equality and respect for the diversity between our people. We have grown this institution. We have found ways of being able to ensure that the people in this region of Ireland have stable government and have the capacity to hold that government to account within the rules, as they are today.

5.30 pm

That was one part of what we voted for — those of us who voted yes. I am very pleased that the vast majority of the House is still full of parties that voted yes and supported not just the working of the institutions of our agreement, but took the brave decision back in 1998 to set aside a period of conflict and division, and to start over by establishing institutions that, today, everyone is capable of supporting.

It is important that we understand that these institutions were never meant to — and do not — exist in isolation. As John Hume used to say, there are three broken sets of relationships in our conflict.

Mr Campbell: Oh, please.

Mr McDevitt: First, a broken relationship between the people of Northern Ireland, which, despite the heckles from my colleagues and some friends in the DUP, we are slowly working to restore. Secondly, a broken relationship between the peoples of Ireland, and, thirdly, broken relationships between Britain and Ireland.

I know that everyone in this House was particularly pleased to note and appreciate the significance of the Queen's recent visit to the Republic of Ireland. I know that everyone in the House was aware, more than most, of the importance of healing the division and mistrust, and restoring full relationships between the two sovereign Governments that we all hold dear.

Mr Campbell: Will the Member give way?

Mr McDavitt: I will in a second, Mr Campbell, if I could just get my preliminary remarks out of the way.

We have a great duty not to simply fall back on the Governments to show leadership but to continue ourselves, as an Assembly, in co-operation with the Government in Dublin, to build on the common ground on this island: on the areas of common interest. We have a duty to deepen our relationships not because we are pursuing some political agenda, but because it is in the interests of all our people.

The co-operation that is now blossoming in the area of health is a product of the infrastructure and institutions of the Good Friday Agreement, but it is made to work because of the leadership of a DUP Minister. That is leadership that no one should be afraid to celebrate. I want to thank the Health Minister, as I have many times in this House, for taking the right decisions in the interests of the people of Northern Ireland to co-operate and deepen co-operation with the rest of the island in the interests of our people.

I also want to acknowledge the leadership that the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment has shown in the area of tourism. Only last week, she noted in this House that the G8 summit was not only known around the world for not having had a big riot, but for the work that Tourism Ireland did to ensure that the message about Fermanagh as a destination reached everywhere we needed it to reach. The beauty and majesty of Lough Erne, our heritage and our land was showcased to every single journalist who came here. That would not be possible without the Good Friday Agreement. Those opportunities would not have existed without these institutions, and these institutions would not work except in the context of British-Irish institutions and North/South institutions. I give way to Mr Campbell.

Mr Campbell: I thank the Member for giving way. Unfortunately, at the moment, he is coming close to saying that these institutions would not be here unless the SDLP's prerequisites had been met, which would be a very invidious position to take. Had a unionist taken such a position, I think that he would have something to say.

Is it not the case that his argument in the debate today would be far more progressive if he simply indicated that what is done is done, whatever our various opinions on it? We should be talking about 2013 and how we will make progress from here on, rather than going back to something that happened 15 years ago and over which most people have drawn a veil and said, "That's done and dusted. Let's have a good future, rather than the failures of the past."

Mr McDavitt: This is progress indeed, Mr Speaker. Maybe I could acknowledge Mr Campbell's determination to look forward, and I wish to do so. In fact, the purpose of the motion is not to be retrospective about the decision and mandate that the people gave us all to establish these institutions in 1998, but to look forward to how we develop co-operation on the island of Ireland, and to do so specifically within an agreement that the two major parties of this House are party to — the St Andrews Agreement — and to acknowledge that that agreement included a commitment, set out with terms of reference, to review properly, intelligently, soberly and in an objective way the opportunities for future development on North/South co-operation. For the benefit of the House, I will read into the record the terms of reference of the St Andrews Agreement review:

"1. To examine ... the efficiency and value for money of existing Implementation Bodies;

2. To examine objectively the case for additional bodies and areas of co-operation within the NSMC where mutual benefit would be derived; and

3. To input into the work on the identification of a suitable substitute for the proposed Lights Agency of the Foyle, Carlingford and Irish Lights Commission."

Those are challenging terms of reference. They are about taking "North/Southery" to another level that is not anything to do with the political aspirations of one side or other represented here; it is to do with maximising the opportunity for that co-operation for our people. The reason the motion is before us is that, some not insignificant number of years since that agreement was reached and those terms of reference established, we are still awaiting the outcome of the St Andrews review.

It is timely that we should be debating this today. On Friday, the North/South Ministerial Council will meet in plenary session. Our appeal, and I would hope the appeal of the House through its democratic decision, if it chooses to support the motion, is to say to the Irish Government and the Northern Executive that the time to see the review is overdue. Our wish is not to play "North/Southery" like a political football across our border. Our wish is to seize on the fantastic, real and positive work that is going on and to accept that now is the time to allow that work to deepen, where it needs to; to change, where it makes sense to change it; to be added to, where it makes sense to do so; and to allow it to be held up to all our people, not in some threatening way, but as a real way of being able to get your operation quicker, to get better transport links, to better protect our environment, to better manage our sustainable and energy opportunities into the decades ahead, and to make our island safer. It is for that reason that the SDLP has come here today to ask colleagues on all sides not to look back — I think that Mr Campbell is absolutely right — but to look forward and say loudly and clearly that North/South co-operation, like east-west co-operation and like making these institutions work, is not something we do because we have to, but something we do because we know we need to, we want to and the people require us to.

Mr Moutray: I beg to move amendment No 1:

Leave out all after "Assembly" and insert

"notes the working relationship between the Northern Ireland Executive and the Irish Government, including through the North/South Ministerial Council, the British-Irish Council and other bilateral contacts; and welcomes ongoing, practical co-operation that is beneficial to the people of Northern Ireland."

We are living in a time of financial hardship. Every day, when we turn on the news or pick up a newspaper, we hear of hardship, job losses and struggles, whether on our own shores, in the European Union or across the world. Indeed, we all know individuals, families and businesses that are struggling. That said, I believe that it is important that we open up and explore all methods of improving our business competitiveness, particularly in exporting goods, whether it be to the Irish Republic, given that we share a land border, or further afield. Hence, our amendment reaffirms the DUP's commitment to working with whoever to try to benefit the people of Northern Ireland. Devolved government in Northern Ireland has and continues to deliver for the people. Although I mentioned the difficult times, I believe that local Ministers making decisions, particularly around economic issues, are best placed. The benefits far outweigh direct rule.

We have to think only of the level of job creation brought about by Invest NI and Minister Foster. I think of the recent announcement of 279 jobs at Almac in Craigavon. That is what political stability is about, and that is the course that we, as a party, are on.

Constitutionally, Northern Ireland is in the United Kingdom; let us be clear on that. Mr McDevitt and Mr Bradley are endeavouring to do some political grandstanding with the motion, but they have to be mindful that attempts to bring about a united Ireland are failing miserably. Northern Ireland continues to be an integral part of the United Kingdom. Given the more peaceful environment that we have enjoyed in recent years, it has become a serious player worldwide. We have seen great interest from China, America and, recently, Japan, which recognise our superb skills base, excellent work ethic and infrastructure benefits.

It is only now that we in Northern Ireland are confident enough to show our wares and promote this region as an economic hub. Our place within the United Kingdom gives us greater credibility on the world stage. We have only to consider that, 20 years ago, the G8 summit would just not have happened here. It gives us a greater economic trading base and a highly regarded and renowned economy that is known and respected worldwide. We have a currency that is buoyant, unlike the euro. We have a healthcare service that is free at the point of use, and our block grant from Westminster is certainly a welcome benefit. However, we share a land border with the Republic of Ireland, and we must use it to the benefit of our people. It is necessary, in the coming months and years, to build on the practical co-operation that already exists. I commend the co-operation between the Northern Ireland Executive and the Irish Government. Indeed, I believe that that co-operation has benefited and will benefit both jurisdictions in the world marketplace.

The current First Minister and the previous First Minister have always been consistent in their view that there is a need for practical co-operation rather than the often unnecessary structural and politically motivated relationship that has been and is preferred by others in the House. Each Member knows that closer collaboration in areas such as improved workforce skills and productivity, better transport links and improved public sector infrastructure in other areas should benefit consumers in both countries. To that end, I support practical co-operation. Obvious examples are electricity and gas network co-operation and the creation of better transport links to facilitate trade and labour mobility, all of which will enhance our attractiveness to foreign investors. We all know the benefits of the A1 in accessing Dublin and vice versa; that is a positive example of economic co-operation.

The Republic of Ireland clearly remains an important market for Northern Ireland firms. Although good work is being done by the Northern Ireland Executive and the Irish Government, I would like more competition and co-operation between firms in both countries. That means continuing to upgrade the infrastructure in both jurisdictions, including the key transport corridors. Investment is also needed in the skills of our workforces to ensure that those skills are transferable and are recognised in both jurisdictions. That does not require political meddling but simply requires the business sector to become more closely involved with our FE colleges and universities.

We have come some distance in Northern Ireland. We have become more outward-looking, more innovative and more productive. Undoubtedly, co-operation between Northern Ireland and the Republic can continue to be beneficial to both jurisdictions. There will be times when we are in competition. However, we must continue to talk to our counterparts in the Republic to improve our position further in the world economy while keeping our separate identity and autonomy when bidding and doing business worldwide.

Mr Allister: I beg to move amendment No 2:

Leave out all after "commitment" and insert

"to practical cross-border co-operation but regards the elaborate North/South bodies established under the Belfast Agreement as neither necessary nor value for money."

Members will note that the amendment does not take issue with practical, pragmatic, mutually beneficial cross-border co-operation. It takes issue with the squander of the elaborate North/South arrangements and challenges whether those are necessary for that practical co-operation and whether they are value for money. On both counts, they fail the pragmatism test.

We live in a time when all of us are very familiar with the pressures that our constituents live under and the pressures that our economy operates under. In a time of austerity, we are constantly being told of the requirement for savings, and we had more indications of that earlier today. Yet, within that framework, there seems to be a group of North/South bodies and arrangements that are immune, by and large, from all of that and cost us, according to the current Northern Ireland Estimates, a total of £33 million a year. Where, I ask, is the £33 million of added value from those institutions that would not equally be available at the end of a telephone or in a conference call? The reality is that, for practical and pragmatic co-operation, you need the respective Ministers, where there is a mutual interest, to simply have a working —

Mr Clarke: Will the Member give way?

5.45 pm

Mr Allister: When I get into this point, I will give way.

They simply need a working relationship whereby they can, at any time, speak about and resolve an issue. That does not require spending over £1 million a year on a vanity project such as the North/South Ministerial Council. It does not require us spending £32 million a year on all the intergovernmental structures of "North/Southery". It simply requires a common-sense approach.

How many times have we been in the House and got reports from some of these institutional meetings in which the typing is double-spaced to make it look as though something actually happened? If you took out the coffee breaks or the lunch, the meeting was probably over in 20 minutes because there was nothing to talk about, yet we pour millions upon millions into those structures. Meanwhile, in my constituency and in others, care homes are to be closed, schools are being closed and hospitals are crying out for expenditure. However, when it comes to the sacred cows of the North/South bodies, we have squander and no limit to the lavishing upon them of funding to the extent that I have spoken of. Then, we are told that they are accountable.

Mr Clarke: I thank the Member for giving way. We have heard today about going backwards and going forwards, and it is nice to see that the Member for North Antrim has changed his stance and supports North/South work. Given his support for the North/South institutions and the mutual benefit from those, if he had a place on them, would he make a case on the basis of mutual benefit about how the Garda Síochána is now advertising for recruits and the default position is that the person applying must have Gaelic as one of their languages, not only English?

Mr Allister: First, this Member has made no change in his position on North/South co-operation. I have always recognised that, where it is practical and sensible, you do it, but you do it at a ministerial level without the need for any of this whatsoever.

As for the Garda Síochána, I have trouble enough trying to keep up with what the PSNI is trying to do sometimes, but, if the honourable Member is right about that, it is indicative of how one-way a process this is. That has been a trend of much of this "North/Southery". It serves a political agenda, not a practical agenda. It ticks boxes of sentiment for the SDLP, Sinn Féin and others, but it adds no value and gives no practical return to anyone.

The degree to which the bodies are sacred cows is illustrated by a number of financial issues, one of which is their pension arrangements. They are in a pension scheme in which the employer can, as in the case of the Special EU Programmes Body (SEUPB), pay up to 31.2% of salary into a pension fund and the employee pays 1.5%. Compare that with the Civil Service in Northern Ireland, where we have rising employee contributions and falling employer contributions. Yet, because and for no reason other than that they are North/South bodies, they have this special treatment and this special provision. Think of it: paying almost a third of salary into a pension fund under the North/South arrangement. It is that sort of squander that has given them the bad name that they already deserve because of the fact that, practically, they do very little for anyone.

We are supposed to now then have them in an accountability state. They are supposed to be accountable. Look at today: we had a statement earlier from the Agriculture Minister on a meeting that took place on 3 May. Here we are on 1 July, two months later, before the Minister thinks that the House even needs to hear such little as did go on at that meeting. That shows the contempt for accountability. Likewise, we had inland waterways and the language body institutional meetings on 19 June. When is the House to hear about them? September. It is certainly not on the list for us to hear about them tomorrow. We had the trade and the tourism meetings on 26 June. When will the House hear about them? In September, presumably. So, there is not even the fundamental accountability that there ought to be.

Take the Food Safety Promotion Board. It does not employ a single person in Northern Ireland. It is based in Cork and Dublin exclusively, and not a single job is provided. Under these accounts, we have contributed almost £25 million to its upkeep. We are supposed to sit back and sanguinely say, "Isn't it doing a great job?", when, in fact, it is doing nothing for anyone in employment terms on this side of the border.

Mr McDevitt: I thank Mr Allister for giving way. I am listening carefully to what he has to say. He is raising issues around how we hold North/South bodies better to account and how we review their efficiency and ensure that they deliver better value for money. Those are the issues that are the terms of reference of the St Andrews review. I appeal to Mr Allister that his political objective may well be best achieved by supporting the St Andrews review and challenging "North/Southery" to be more efficient, more accountable and more open, not by letting the DUP away in the smoke and ignoring it.

Mr Allister: My problem with the St Andrews review is that it anticipates an increase, not a decrease, in the functions and numbers of the North/South bodies. That is the premise of the St Andrews review, and, therefore, I am certainly not looking for an increase in functions or numbers of bodies that, as sacred cows, have been a bottomless pit for Northern Ireland taxpayers' money with no return of practical consequence for anyone. The SDLP needs to address the issue the next time that it tells us about its conscience on care homes, schools or the need for public expenditure. It needs to remember why it is the most avid supporter in the House of pouring £33 million a year into the black hole that is the North/South bodies. It has to put practical politics above its political ideology. That is what my amendment seeks to do.

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is almost gone.

Mr Allister: It seeks to say that, in these times, yes, there should be practical co-operation but not at any price and certainly not at the price of the elaborate arrangements that we have and the £33 million a year that they cost us.

Ms Ruane: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Tá Sinn Féin ag tabhairt tacaíochta don rún. We support the motion, and we are opposed to the two amendments.

First, the results of North/South working, whether they are practical, formal or institutional, are obvious. We live on a small island of five million people, and it makes sense for us to plan our schools, hospitals, agriculture and agrifood industry together. I welcome the North/South Ministerial Council and the resources spent on North/South co-operation because I believe that we get added value. I was a member of the North/South Ministerial Council and was at many of the meetings that dealt with a wide variety of issues from education to language to waterways. Anyone who has attended a presentation by Waterways Ireland understands the economic benefits of developing our waterways and working together to do so. We have heard the same old diatribe from people, from one Member in particular. Let them explain to the towns and villages why waterways are not supported.

Look at the work that is done in education for some of our most vulnerable children, including special needs children. That is very good North/South work. It looks at best practice, North and South, learning from each other. Some of the best work that I did and best meetings that I attended involved watching professionals from the North and the South working together on special needs, developing best practice for Traveller children or developing Irish language materials for use in primary and post-primary schools, rather than the South developing some and the North developing others. The Members who regularly speak out against the Irish language would be the first to tell us that we are wasting resources through duplication. In this instance, we are now not duplicating and have very good materials.

Mr Clarke: It is a dead language.

Mr Speaker: Order.

Ms Ruane: Look at the INTERREG money. Newry and Mourne District Council and Louth County Council deserve huge mention here for developing one of the first memorandums of understanding in Europe. The reason that we are going to have a bridge at Narrow Water is "North/Southerly", as some people call it. That bridge will benefit everyone: people from the nationalist community and people from the unionist community. People in Kilkeel support it as much as those in Warrenpoint, Omeath or Carlingford. Therefore, I welcome projects such as the Narrow Water bridge and all tourism infrastructure. We do not have enough of it, so let us see more. We need much more working together between North and South.

I welcome the work of DCAL on Foras na Gaeilge and Waterways Ireland. I welcome the North/South Inter-Parliamentary Association. We had a full house in the Senate, in the Houses of the Oireachtas in Leinster House. We have a North/South gateway initiative that benefits Donegal and everyone in Derry, not just one community.

In agriculture, we have an all-Ireland animal health strategy. Diseases do not stop at artificial borders. We maintained fortress Ireland to try to keep out brucellosis and to look at the issues of foot-and-mouth disease and ash dieback. The agrifood sector was referred to by Stephen Moutray, and I agree with him: it is the fastest growing sector at a time of economic recession on this island.

What we must do is get rid of red tape and bureaucracy when we are exporting or moving goods from Dundalk to Newry. Right now, if you want to work on one side of the border and live on the other, the red tape is nonsensical. If you are a teacher and want to move North or South, moving your pension is very difficult. We need to remove all those obstacles.

I agree that practical co-operation is good, but where I disagree with the DUP is that I believe that co-operation needs to be institutionalised. It needs to happen on the formal basis on which it is happening.

Health is showing the way. Let us give credit where credit is due. Specialist operations for children must be provided for. Who would deny a child with congenital heart disease the right to life? Specialist practice should be promoted on an island of five million people. Who says that someone in Derry should have to drive all the way to Dublin when that person can get dialysis north of the border or vice versa?

Mr Speaker: The Member's time has almost gone.

Ms Ruane: I support North/South institutions. Yesterday, with other Members, I was proud to be part of the Assembly team in the Mourne mountains with the Oireachtas team.

6.00 pm

Mr Kinahan: I welcome the opportunity to speak on the issue. The good relations between Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland, as well as building on the already strong links between Northern Ireland and the rest of the United Kingdom, are fundamental in continuing the peace process here. In that regard, it is good to have this debate today.

I am happy to reaffirm commitment to the ambition and the values of the Belfast Agreement, and I wish everyone would do so. We brought a motion to the House doing just that in the aftermath of the flag protests. However, we must all realise that the Belfast Agreement was a transitional one. Institutions must change, adapt and grow. For example, Ulster Unionists have called for an official opposition to be created in the House. That was not part of the Belfast Agreement, but it is something that must and will happen in time.

I return to the wording of the motion. It is true that there are improved working relationships between Stormont and the Dáil, and that is to be welcomed. However, that is mainly down to the important changes in the Belfast Agreement, specifically the removal of articles 2 and 3 and the principle of consent. The Republic of Ireland no longer has an aggressive claim over the territory of Northern Ireland written into its constitution, and the principle of consent means that the constitutional position of Northern Ireland is settled well into the future. That has created the conditions for this new and improved relationship far more than the establishment of any body.

I also note the change in the DUP's position from opposing the institutions to actual implementation of them. In its 2003 manifesto, the DUP stated:

"Uncontrollable all-Ireland bodies are the starting point for a united Ireland",

Yet it now works together with Sinn Féin to enact the North/South parliamentary forum, which met for the first time in October 2012. It really has very little moral authority on any of these issues.

It must be said that the Narrow Water bridge project does not have much to do with the debate. It was, of course, taken forward by the Finance Minister, who provided the necessary funding in the region of £2.6 million. Of course, we support any economic benefit flowing from this, but I suspect that its mention in the motion is part of the ongoing fight between Sinn Féin and the SDLP over who should be credited with securing the project. We will leave that for them to sort out.

I agree with the SDLP that the St Andrews review should be published as soon as possible. Value for money must be demonstrated by the cross-border bodies. They should not exist simply to create an illusion of links to one place or another. We should have more confidence in our identity than that. We should all support the urgent completion of the St Andrews review, as that may bring more clarity to these questions. How much value do the North/South bodies actually add? Are improved relationships really down to them? What have they achieved? Are they financially viable?

As I have stated, further progress and co-operation is not necessarily brought about through cross-border bodies. Therefore, if the review shows inefficiencies or a lack of delivery or shows that any particular body is redundant, that body should be modified or scrapped. That is the approach that we should take to quangos across government, as we are vastly overgoverned as it is. Just think about it: three MEPs, 18 MPs, 108 MLAs, 582 councillors, scores of commissioners, quangos and arm's-length bodies and, on top of all that, we have our North/South and east-west bodies. They must all be capable of demonstrating value.

As for the amendments, I note that the DUP is trying to remove all mention of the Belfast Agreement. However, the truth is that the DUP continues to operate that agreement every day, albeit with the meagre changes that, we are told, were secured at St Andrews. Let us look at those for a moment: no solo runs for Ministers — that has not stopped O'Dowd in education; protection of academic selection — O'Dowd is in the process of dismantling the Dickson Plan; a new way of governing parades — we still have an impasse in parading and the unacceptable Parades Commission in operation; Sinn Féin signing up to the rule of law, police and courts — [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order.

Mr Kinahan: — with Policing Board member Gerry Kelly —

Mr Speaker: Will the Member bring his remarks to a close?

Mr Kinahan: — obstructing the police in the course of their duties in north Belfast. Utter failure from the DUP. [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order.

Mr Kinahan: We stand against the motion and the amendments.

Mr Lunn: I support the motion, which is timely and relevant, and I thank Mr McDevitt and his colleagues for bringing it to the House today. I also acknowledge the DUP and TUV for their amendments and will deal with those first. We will not support Mr Allister's amendment. His ongoing hostility to anything that mentions North/South is well known. I take his point about the figures that he gave us. Expenditure of £33 million and a 31% contribution towards a pension scheme seem excessive. The arrangements may or may not represent value for money, but they remain an essential component of an overall deal, which, in my opinion, benefited unionists and nationalists, and there is no way that they are going to be set aside.

The DUP amendment has more to recommend it, but it removes the important reaffirmation contained in the first line of the motion and the call for urgent completion of the review of the St Andrews Agreement. Therefore, we prefer the unamended motion and will not support the DUP on this occasion.

On an island the size of Ireland, the argument for intelligent co-operation across both jurisdictions has been well made; it should be beneficial to all of us. Others have mentioned the health service, and the Health Minister recognises the benefit, as hospital facilities, such as Daisy Hill, Altnagelvin, Enniskillen, and, I am sure, some on the other side of the border, attract custom from both jurisdictions. Likewise, in the area of children's paediatric services, which Ms Ruane mentioned, there is a recognition that an all-Ireland solution is the obvious and safest outcome, hopefully, involving some services being retained at the Royal Victoria Hospital, but we will have to see. It is intelligent co-operation.

I could mention many other examples of an all-Ireland approach: the single electricity market; the mutual recognition of penalty points; marine management; inland waterways; co-operation on illegal dumping; co-operation between the PSNI and an Garda Síochána; the education corridor along the border; Middletown autism project; and transport links. You could go on and on. I wonder how many of those things would have happened in the absence of agreement between the two countries. We will never really know.

The motion highlights the Narrow Water bridge, which is another necessary and economically justifiable decision that will benefit two beautiful areas — south Down and the Cooley peninsula — which complement each other so obviously. For the record, the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment spent £6.5 million improving the tourism infrastructure in south Down recently. So, why anybody would oppose a bridge to get people to that area is quite beyond me, and I am glad that the Finance Minister has now endorsed it. He took his time over it but he got there in the end.

Politically, the Good Friday Agreement and the St Andrews Agreement are still evolving. They are in transition, as Mr Kinahan said, just like our own institutions, just like this place that we are sitting in. Progress is slow, but it is sure, and we can look at events that might not have happened if the agreements had not been established. Those include the repeal of the Government of Ireland Act and recognition of Northern Ireland's constitutional position; the pardon for Irish Free State soldiers who fought for Britain in the world wars; attendance at Remembrance Day events by senior Irish politicians; the apology for Bloody Sunday — you will see that I am trying to be even-handed here, Mr Speaker — and the monumental achievement of the Queen's visit to Dublin, which others have mentioned. It is amazing how a few words spoken in Irish can soften the hurt of a century of hostility.

I do not believe that any of these things could have been brought about without practical co-operation, given the deep wounds that existed. We needed an international agreement, and we still need it. The Good Friday Agreement remains the bedrock of our achievements and our hope for the future. I hope that the House will acknowledge the benefits that have flowed from those agreements, look to the future, as Mr Campbell said before he left, have a think about this and try to move on. I support the Good Friday Agreement. I support the motion, and I ask the House to do the same.

Mr G Robinson: I will speak to amendment No 1. It has to be stated that there are economic benefits to Northern Ireland from cross-border co-operation. The North/South and British-Irish Councils can bring benefit to the Northern Ireland economy by encouraging that co-operation. Having said that, we must all remember that we in Northern Ireland are part of the United Kingdom, which is where we derive a lot of our economic benefits from. Whatever bodies are in place, they must be of benefit to Northern Ireland, be seen to be accountable to the Northern Ireland Assembly and be value for money. No additional bodies should be created for political reasons, as creating bodies can sometimes be a hindrance rather than a help to good relations, as well as being a burden on an overstretched public purse.

There is a good working relationship between the Assembly and the Government of the South, and that is to be welcomed, as Northern Ireland benefits from that day-to-day co-operation. Due to that bilateral approach, and the benefits to Northern Ireland, unnecessary change is not required. I encourage further use of the existing bodies in the belief that they are more than adequate in continuing the excellent work that has been done for the benefit of Northern Ireland and all its people. I support amendment No 1.

Mr McAleer: Go raibh maith agat, a Chathaoirleach. I rise to support the motion and to speak in favour of the concept of North/South co-operation. Basically, as someone who represents a constituency that is right on the border, I see in such areas as Strabane and Lifford, many impediments to, but certainly a lot of benefits of, cross-border co-operation. We see some of the impediments, such as the difficulties in the likes of recognition of teaching qualifications, for example. My colleague Pat Doherty raised the matter in Leinster House recently when he said that the A levels in the North of Ireland are not properly recognised by institutions in the South, which means that only 1% of students from the North head South.

There are other issues, such as international postage costs for posting mail just a few miles down the road, roaming charges and other such matters.

However, we have seen a great deal of benefit from cross-border activity. In deprivation hotspots, such as Strabane, for example, there is a great deal of trade, which has helped keep the economy, which is in a poor state, going.

As we are on the outer edge of Europe, it is important to have a proper strategic infrastructure network in line with the TEN-T commitments. We have seen that most recently with DRD imploring the Irish Government to retain the N16 as a strategic route, so that we may benefit from future TEN-T funding. Indeed, we can see the implications that the A5, which is often spoken about in the Chamber, no earlier than today, in fact, has for the N14 and the N15, which take us to the most westerly parts of the country and, indeed, the EU.

An area in health that has been mentioned is the importance of an all-Ireland solution for services, such as children's heart surgery. We have also seen it with the radiotherapy unit in Altnagelvin in Derry, where, as part of the business case, it is essential that you have input from patients from Donegal and parts of the north-west to keep the service alive.

The message that should be going out from here today is that North/South co-operation makes sense and threatens no one. I speak in favour of the motion.

Mrs Hale: I welcome the opportunity to speak on the amendment, which my party colleagues tabled. I unreservedly believe that any North/South bodies or bilateral contacts must provide real tangible benefits for the people of Northern Ireland. Any future developments or further co-operation must be on that principle. The DUP is not in the game of creating further strands of needless bureaucracy at a time when decision-making needs to be efficient and effective.

One of the greatest challenges to the development of further North/South dimensions lies in the remit of the Irish Government in convincing their citizens of the strategic importance in the future. Having better co-operation, increasing trade and sharing some of the key services can be achieved without the need of further expansion to the North/South bodies. With both Governments faced with the question of tougher financial constraints, and forced to find budgetary savings, I question whether it is beneficial to the people of Northern Ireland and, indeed, the Republic of Ireland, to further fund North/South developments in the current economic climate.

Ministers can, and do, talk on a regular basis, and they raise issues on where duplicated services on border issues can be better organised to promote greater efficiency savings — all of that, without the need to expand the current arrangements.

The development of the specialist cancer unit at Altnagelvin is one of the ways in which that process is underpinned, and it illustrates how cross-border relationships can benefit the people of Northern Ireland, while ensuring that finances are being used efficiently.

I hold reservations about developing some joint services, and I echo the earlier statement of the Finance Minister: one must be careful to ensure that we, the UK taxpayer, are not providing services without receiving payment. To do so, would mean that cross-border services were becoming a net cost to the UK taxpayer.

6.15 pm

A number of weeks ago, the Assembly welcomed the economic package that had been agreed between the Prime Minister, the First Minister and the deputy First Minister. In that context, all effort in the Chamber must be directed at finding jobs and creating stronger trading links in the UK and Europe while ensuring that people can afford to sustain themselves and their families. Although North/South co-operation is important, one must ensure that our focus is directed at not only short-term but long-term economic prosperity for all people in Northern Ireland.

The DUP has consistently argued against any increase in bureaucracy, be it North/South or even internally in Northern Ireland. We will simply not allow the SDLP's political agenda to dictate what it believes to be in the best interests of the people of Northern Ireland at a time when government cuts are being made. Indeed, we have seen evidence of that in the House today. Any form of further bureaucracy and draining of stretched public finances is not welcomed or supported on this side of the House.

I welcome and support the DUP amendment.

Mr Maskey: I support the motion and oppose both amendments. In the first instance, I oppose the amendment from Jim Allister because he is absolutely opposed to all aspects of the Good Friday Agreement and, indeed, subsequent agreements and, for that reason, will take every opportunity to speak against the potential and real benefits that flow from those agreements. I have to say that the DUP amendment simply falls very short of what is either desirable or, in fact, the reality. Virtually all matters in the House are politically sensitive. In that amendment, there is almost an element of, "You say potayto, I say potato." When somebody talks about practical co-operation, I am fine with that. However, we also have to understand that we have institutional arrangements. Those arrangements are important and beneficial. For Sinn Féin, the lesson has been that the more co-operation there actually is — whether it be practical, as it might be described, or institutional through the North/South Ministerial Council — the better because all of it is beneficial and helpful. We argue that when you tot up the money and the potential — there is still a lot of work to be done on that — and quantify the benefits of all areas of co-operation, it is, clearly, a net absolute benefit to all citizens; not only those whom we represent directly, but people right across the island.

Earlier, my colleagues Caitríona Ruane and Declan McAleer itemised areas of co-operation and joint activity that happens between the Governments. Other Members have identified a range of initiatives that have been beneficial. I have to say that that has come from all parties. Everybody who has spoken so far has identified an area or areas of co-operation, if you call it that, or other manifestations of working together that have been beneficial. That is a good thing. As a party, we are encouraged by contributions this afternoon, with the exception, perhaps, of Danny Kinahan's, which is regrettable. That having been said, what we are getting more and more from the Ulster Unionist Party seems to be that every contribution that it makes in the House is negative. I suppose that it has become the biggest "No" party in the Assembly. Danny's contribution failed to recognise one very simple thing: at the time of the Good Friday Agreement, his party's then leader, David Trimble, almost single-handedly — and we challenged Bertie Ahern, the then Taoiseach — agreed the detail of the North/South bodies that flowed from the Good Friday Agreement. The Ulster Unionist Party had a significant role in that. Now, the Member is just dismissing the contribution that his then party leader made. Then again, that is the daily diet — I might say diatribe — that we get from the Ulster Unionist Party in the House; negative against everything and supportive of nothing.

As I said, my party welcomes the contributions that we have heard from all the other Members because, even if they support one amendment or the other, they have all identified areas of co-operation that have been beneficial to people whom we represent. Anybody under God who can then go on to say that we should not have that, or that we should minimise it or pretend that it does not happen, is foolish. What we want is to get to the point where we do not only say that the institutions are there. I do not care what people call an institution; they can call it whatever they wish. We have had the "Belfast Agreement" and the "Good Friday Agreement". The fact is that we are working it and working through all those institutions. More are still to be delivered, and hopefully we can do that in time. It was agreed and endorsed by people right across this island at the time, after an awful lot of hard work and sacrifice by people in communities who wanted people, parties and Governments to come together and make agreements that will last, will benefit people and will take us away from the instability, violence, conflict and repression of the past to a place where we co-operate with each other.

The Good Friday Agreement and the subsequent arrangements provide for all parties in the Chamber to work together and share power. As I stand here, I know in my heart that if we did not have the institutional arrangements, we would not have power sharing. So, let us work with what we have — the institutions and agreements. Whether we like them or not, or whether we like bits of them or not, they are there, and they are institutionalised. Other party Members and representatives identified areas of co-operation that people have pragmatically adopted because they know in their heart of hearts, with the evidence to underpin their arguments, that those arrangements are beneficial to the people we all collectively represent. What we need to do —

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is almost gone.

Mr Maskey: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. What we need to do now is make sure that we work to maximise the benefit of all these institutions and use them as tools to make life better for all the people whom we represent.

Dr McDonnell: I am glad to support the motion and oppose both amendments. I oppose the amendments because, quite simply, they seek to undermine, weaken, reduce and minimise the importance of North/South co-operation in the context of the Good Friday Agreement, which is its true and proper context.

The amendments are strong in their praise of practical co-operation, which is welcome, but after all that, what sensible person would oppose co-operation that is undoubtedly beneficial to all our people? Not so long ago, many opponents of the Good Friday Agreement did just that. They condemned cross-border co-operation in all its forms, however harmless or beneficial, on the narrowest of political grounds. We have moved on a little, but not too far. The public have moved on much further.

Ordinary people are conducting their own forms of cross-border co-operation every single day of the week, and anyone trying to erect new barriers on the island would be laughed out of office. Yet even now, when the benefits of co-operation are manifold, when world leaders come here to commend and encourage co-operation and when we are being held up as an example of progress to the world, there are still those who contrive to sound as mean-spirited as possible about the whole concept.

They — the opponents of the Good Friday Agreement — still seek to limit co-operation on political grounds or, at the extreme end, even to try to abolish it. Above all, they seek to deny and diminish the fact that North/South co-operation is an expression of the will of the people on this island, North and South. They seek to separate the positive, practical outworkings of co-operation from its grounding in the 1998 agreement. They seek to hide the political reality that has the backing of the largest mandate that ever existed on this island, but no one can claim to have any mandate to diminish it.

Our motion locates the working relationship between our devolved institutions and the Irish Government firmly and clearly within the ambitions, values and institutions borne out of the Belfast Agreement. Here is the bit that one-time and ongoing opponents of the agreement have trouble facing up to: we all in the House — each and every one of us, supporters and opponents of the agreement alike — exist because of that agreement, and we all draw our salaries on the basis of that agreement.

Mr Clarke: [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order.

Dr McDonnell: Some in the House may have fought elections based on questioning, opposing or seeking to limit the outworkings of the agreement, such as North/South co-operation, but that changes nothing. It is still the founding document of these devolved institutions that we enjoy. It sets the shape and contours of our representation of the electorate, who have already signed up in unprecedented numbers for a programme of power sharing and partnership.

Mr Givan: Will the Member give way?

Dr McDonnell: Sorry; no. I have a lot to get through. Thank you.

Fifteen years on, there are still those who remain in denial about the nature and significance of that agreement. There are still some who peddle the fiction that it was in some way superseded at St Andrews, when, in reality, the St Andrews Agreement was a mere footnote that threw a few concessions here and there in one or two directions. It did not limit the ambition of the original agreement for co-operation, but we believe that the time has come to begin to realise the full ambition of the Good Friday Agreement. The time has come for the two Governments to complete urgently the review of the St Andrews Agreement so that we can widen and deepen co-operation and reap its full potential for economic and social benefit. We have been waiting for over six years for that review, and whether the delay is borne of political hostility or political doubt, political certainty must now be forthcoming at the North/South Ministerial Council.

We will continue to push for that political certainty. We will continue to welcome progress where it is made, and we will never cease to challenge in the interest of building peace and prosperity on this island. I therefore appeal to Members on all sides of the House to approach co-operation from the viewpoint of mutual benefit and appraise all proposals on their merits, except perhaps at the most basic of tribal levels.

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is almost up.

Dr McDonnell: There is in fact little or no politics in the concept any more.

I will leave it at that, Mr Speaker.

Mr McCallister: I voted yes in 1998 and have never changed my mind about the Good Friday Agreement. I supported it and continue to support it, and I will not apologise for bits of it to get cheap applause. I am not suggesting that anyone else do that, because I think that if you sign up to and believe in something at the time, you should stick to that, and I have had no reason to be proven wrong. When I look across the Chamber, I see the many, as Dr McDonnell rightly said, who derive their salaries from being here. They do so because of the institutions set up by the Good Friday Agreement. They may not like that, but they derive their salaries from it. I notice that Mr Givan is pointing across the Chamber. He may want to remember the old saying, "When you point a finger one way, there are three pointing back at you."

Several points came up in today's debate. The one part that stands out for me is that, despite the debate on the motion and the amendments, we have all agreed that we want sensible, practical North/South arrangements that deliver for all the citizens whom we represent — indeed, for all citizens across the island of Ireland, whether North or South — and can make a difference to their life. There was one very practical example of this, when we all urged Minister Poots that if it made sense to do children's cardiac surgery in Dublin and it was a practical, sensible way of moving forward while retaining as much of the service in Belfast as possible, that was to the good of everyone. It did not harm anyone, and it worked towards a sensible outcome for all the people whom we seek to serve. That is the kind of sensible, practical outworking that we want.

The SDLP motion refers to a review. We should not fear a review of the agreement. I say to colleagues in the SDLP that they must also accept that a review might mean that we scrap certain bodies or change the way in which they operate, if that means that they evolve and move to a more practical level. We should not look at the agreement as though it was set in tablets of stone. It was always meant to evolve and move on.

Mr Kinahan mentioned opposition. Certainly, when I was a member of the Ulster Unionist Party, very few people advocated opposition more strongly than I did, within the party and outside it. I want these institutions to evolve, a subject that we will debate tomorrow. I want the North/South element of the agreement to evolve and look at practical and sensible ways of working.

Mr Allister gave us some very stark figures about the cost. All Members will be aware that some of the reports back from North/South meetings have been very light on details of what has been achieved. There are always things that we should do and that we want to look at to keep pressure on, North and South.

6.30 pm

I served for a number of years on the Health Committee. It is difficult to pursue people across the border for crimes or, indeed, to monitor sex offenders in a different jurisdiction. Those are practical things that we need to look at. Those are practical benefits that, wherever you live, safeguard our children and vulnerable adults, and they are things that we have to do. That is why I have the confidence to support the SDLP motion and to oppose the amendments. I think that it is right that we review this, look at the practical outworkings and try to deliver what is best for the people in Northern Ireland.

Mr Allister: The most interesting part of the debate is that it turns out that those who are caught in a time warp are the biggest advocates of the Belfast Agreement. Their blind, unquestioning loyalty to the Belfast Agreement means that they cannot even embrace issues such as efficiency and sensible change. They are so wedded to those institutions that they have no concern that they are costing us £33 million a year and no concern that some of the meetings are farcical and that they have to spin out a report to make it sound like anything. They also have no concern that money is being wasted hand over fist when the very same level of co-operation could be attained down the telephone, by a conference call or by a face-to-face meeting without the apparatus and all that goes with the Belfast Agreement. It is unfortunate that the time-warping of some is such that they just cannot — will not — look at any of that.

Someone said that the arrangements are part of a balanced settlement. Let me remind the House that we were told that it was imperative that there were North/South arrangements. We were also told that there would be east-west arrangements of equal validity. How has it turned out? Since the restoration of devolution in 2007, there have been 152 North/South meetings in sectoral, institutional or plenary format under the North/South Ministerial Council. What of the British-Irish Council? There have been but 28 meetings in its various formats in those same six years. Yet, we are told that it is supposed to be a balanced arrangement. For every one of the British-Irish Council meetings, there have been more than five North/South meetings. What about the cost? The most recent figures show that the British-Irish arrangements cost £170,000 a year, to which we contribute £15,000. That is £15,000 as opposed to £33 million.

Mr A Maginness: Will the Member give way?

Mr Allister: We are told that this is all part of some sort of equitable settlement, but it is quite clear that the politicising that is afoot is driving the “North/Southerly”. The mere window dressing of the British east-west co-operation is exactly that: window dressing. I will give way to the Member.

Mr A Maginness: The Member talked about east-west relations. I think that those are a good example of how positive relationships between Ireland and Britain have come about. Could the Member imagine that happening without the Good Friday Agreement?

Mr Speaker: The Member has a minute added to his time.

Mr Allister: The Member contradicts himself. The good improvements in east-west relations have come with none of that apparatus. There are no institutional bodies that parallel the North/South bodies. If it can be done, and, according to the Member, it has been done on an east-west basis without that apparatus at a price of £15,000 a year, why on earth does it take all the apparatus and grandeur of the North/South bodies, and £33 million to boot, to get a response in that direction? The Member answers his own question.

It is time that the House looked seriously at the squander on the North/South bodies. The House should recognise that they can longer continue to be that sacred cow. They must be addressed, and there must be a cull in that expenditure. That cull is something that the taxpayers require, because there is no return to match it. It is a one-way process of squander, and it is time that the House faced up to that.

Finally, I do not draw my salary because of the Belfast Agreement. I draw my salary courtesy of the electorate, who sent me here. That is how I draw my salary. I am beholden to no one but the electorate, and I am certainly not beholden to the iniquitous, partial Belfast Agreement.

Mr Givan: It seems that — I agree with Mr Allister on this point — we are stuck in a time warp. The SDLP in particular is stuck in a time warp, and it brings to mind —

Mr A Maginness: What time warp is Mr Allister in?

Mr Allister: Two thousand and thirteen.

Mr Speaker: Order.

Mr Givan: It brings to mind the line of the song:

“Let’s do the time warp again”.

Interestingly, that line is taken from the musical ‘The Rocky Horror Show’. One could say that it is very apt that it is taken from that particular musical when we look at the Belfast Agreement. Of course, the Ulster Unionist Party and the SDLP were signatories to that agreement. They were the leading parties that negotiated it.

I understand that Members from the SDLP want to ensure that it is seen as the party that delivered that agreement so that they can sell that to their electorate. They are entitled to do so. However, the Belfast Agreement was not as it has been eulogised by them. It did not create some form of perfection. It had political instability. Need I remind the SDLP that, under its watch and that of the Ulster Unionist Party, this place was suspended on numerous occasions because they were unable to carry out the work that they had started. Previous leader of the SDLP Mark Durkan said that we needed to dismantle the “ugly scaffolding” of the Belfast Agreement. Scaffolding that the SDLP and the Ulster Unionist Party created. Perhaps SDLP Members want to go back to one of their previous leaders and tell him that he got it wrong. Conall McDevitt’s navel-gazing has now resulted in his realising that Mark Durkan was wrong to say that it was “ugly scaffolding”. He wants to protect the agreement, and he thinks that it was the right thing to do. Clearly it was not, and changes need to be made.

The Belfast Agreement that the Ulster Unionist Party also signed up to created the discrimination against Protestants who wanted to join the police force. It denigrated the contribution that was made by the Royal Ulster Constabulary. [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order.

Mr Givan: The Ulster Unionist Party also signed the Belfast Agreement. As Members from that party spend their contributions trying to do a Pontius Pilate, washing their hands and being the hypocrites that they are, they need to remind themselves that they were also signatories to it. They are the ones who created the mess that those who followed from the Democratic Unionist Party had to clear up. It was through the St Andrews Agreement that we brought in accountability. [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order, Members.

Mr Givan: Therefore, whenever Mr Kinahan talked about uncontrollable North/South bodies, he was right. We made it very clear that the Belfast Agreement created uncontrollable bodies. It did, and the St Andrews Agreement changed that, and we brought accountability back into it. That is why, in his contribution, Mr Allister did not mention that the North/South institutions are an embryonic all-Ireland. He did not mention that once, because we effectively neutered the agenda that the Belfast Agreement had created. That is why the Member for North Antrim did not mention that. However, he was right to say that we need to focus on the costs of the North/South bodies.

Mr Speaker: Order.

Mr Givan: We do need to make sure that they operate efficiently and effectively, but I think it is notable that Mr Allister indicated that he supports practical North/South arrangements, as does this party.

We support accountable North/South bodies, unlike the Ulster Unionist Party, which supported those North/South bodies that had no accountability to the Assembly. That is why now we only deal with statements that come to the Assembly two months after. I agree that they should have come much earlier, but if that is the extent of the criticism of what now happens within "North/Southery", I think that people can rest assured that this party has effectively dealt with the all-Ireland agenda that was contained in the Belfast Agreement.

Mr A Maginness: Will the Member give way?

Mr Givan: I will give way to Mr Maginness; I need another minute.

Mr A Maginness: I thank the Member for giving way. Will he note that today a Minister from the Irish Government laid a wreath at the cenotaph in Belfast in commemoration of the Battle of the Somme? Is that not a positive aspect arising directly out of the Belfast Agreement? Could you have imagined that happening without the Belfast Agreement?

Mr Speaker: The Member has a minute added on to his time.

Mr Givan: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I welcome it. I do not think that the Belfast Agreement was necessarily the catalyst that made it happen, but I welcome it nevertheless. [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order. Allow the Member to be heard.

Mr Givan: It is right that we develop relationships on a North/South basis to ensure that we have a peaceful and harmonious society. It might be useful if the leader of the SDLP tried to build relationships with this party, rather than calling us bigots. That would be a good place for him to start trying to build a harmonious environment in this place. Nevertheless, this party does support practical co-operation. Our amendment deals with the British-Irish Council. Mr Allister, quite rightly, put Mr Maginness right in saying that we have had "good improvement in east-west relations" without the costs that you can attribute to the North/South bodies. Our amendment highlights that.

I think it would be useful to build the North/South relationships for the Republic of Ireland to rejoin the Commonwealth. That would be a good step for the Republic of Ireland to take to show that it is genuine and that it responds to how Her Majesty the Queen conducted herself in that way in the South. Let us build relationships with people in the Republic. I will be honest: there are issues in which I have a much closer allegiance to the Republic of Ireland than to the United Kingdom. I take the protection of the unborn child as the prime example. I have a much greater allegiance to people in the South when it comes to that particular issue.

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is almost gone.

Mr Givan: That is why Members in this place have sent a letter to the Taoiseach in respect of it.

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr Givan: Let us build good relationships where it is practical and where it benefits all our people.

Mr D Bradley: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Fáiltím roimh an deis cainte ar an rún thábhachtach seo. Thank you very much for the opportunity to make a winding-up speech on the motion. I think it was a useful debate and generally, apart from one or two exceptions, quite even-tempered. I welcome that.

For the motion, Conall McDevitt began by congratulating two DUP Ministers for the good work that they had done on North/South co-operation. He mentioned in particular the work of the Minister of Health, and gave the example of the cancer centre at Altnagelvin as a useful example of North/South co-operation. He also mentioned the words of Arlene Foster, the Enterprise, Trade and Investment Minister, in relation to celebrating the spin-offs of the G8 conference, particularly for North/South tourism. He said that those opportunities would not be there were it not for the institutions of the Good Friday Agreement.

He also agreed with Mr Campbell that the purpose of the motion was not to look back but to look forward. He said that the St Andrews Agreement allows for an objective review of the whole area of co-operation. He said that the St Andrews Agreement offered a challenge that had not yet been met. He made the point that it is not a question of making a political football out of co-operation but it is about deepening co-operation where it needs to be deepened and changing it where it needs to be changed. He said that we do this for the good of all our people. Mr McDevitt also said that we need to approach the review in a positive manner, with an eye to the future.

Stephen Moutray accused me and Mr McDevitt of political grandstanding. You can see that I am very dismayed by that. Had he listened to Mr McDevitt's speech, however, he would have heard clearly that what Mr McDevitt said was far from the substance of that accusation. In fact, what Mr Moutray had to say about transport and infrastructure was positive and in keeping with the terms of the SDLP motion. He was arguing for expanded and developed co-operation, which we in the SDLP also welcome.

Mr Allister, on the other hand, challenged the usefulness of the North/South bodies against what he described as practical co-operation, but he failed to recognise the role of the North/South bodies in improving, encouraging and developing practical co-operation. He was eloquent in underlining the need for more work to be done by the North/South Ministerial Council, and I agree with him that it needs to do more work. That is certainly implied in our motion. I most sincerely thank Mr Allister for reinforcing that point for me and for my party.

Mr Allister also made the point that there needs to be more prompt reporting on North/South Ministerial Council meetings. I would not take issue with him on that. In fact, Conall McDevitt pointed out to him that the St Andrews review would allow for improvement in accountability and for many of the improvements that Mr Allister seems to seek.

Dr McDonnell said that the time had come for the two Governments to complete urgently the review of the St Andrews Agreement so that we can widen and deepen co-operation and reap its full potential for economic and social development. He appealed to Members on all sides of the House to approach co-operation from the true viewpoint of mutual benefit and to appraise all proposals on their merits. He said that except for, perhaps, at the most basic of tribal levels, there is little or no politics in the concept anymore.

He would, I am sure, give the example of the Narrow Water bridge, which is mentioned in the motion. I sincerely hope that that will shortly arise as a symbol and, indeed, an icon of co-operation. When that project was first discussed, there were various strands of opposition, some of which, perhaps, were not thought through very well, and others were extremely local in nature.

However, when it became clear that the project could be completed in a short time frame, almost all the opposition melted away because of the sheer positive logic of the project. It is so simply, clearly and obviously beneficial to the immediate area and, indeed, to a large part of Northern Ireland that people were quickly converted, and that support was unquestionably cross-community as well as cross-border.

There were a few voices heard in opposition to anything cross-border on political or what we would call constitutional grounds, but they were like a dim echo from a distant and unpleasant past, which half our population does not remember and the other half would very much like to forget.

We heard from Caitríona Ruane and other contributors from Sinn Féin who supported the motion. They pointed out the good sense of co-operation across such a small island. Ms Ruane outlined the practical projects in education that had helped to prevent duplication of services, North and South, and she spoke about the need to remove obstacles to the free flow of workers across the jurisdictions.

I thought that Trevor Lunn made very good points. He pointed out that co-operation arising out of the Good Friday Agreement goes far beyond mere practical co-operation. He mentioned the apology for Bloody Sunday, the visit of the Queen to Dublin, the amnesty for Irish soldiers who fought for Britain and the attendance, as Mr Maginness pointed out, of Irish Ministers at remembrance ceremonies. Those examples go far beyond practical co-operation and are direct products of the Good Friday Agreement.

Mr Kinahan mentioned the good relations that have arisen on a North/South basis and the need to build on the peace process. He recognised that all the major parties in the Assembly now support the Good Friday Agreement, although his own party's support for it is somewhat in question. Some Members pointed out that his party was one of the main parties that negotiated the agreement. One is left wondering whether that party has done yet another U-turn. [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order. The Member has the Floor.

Mr D Bradley: Mr Kinahan said that he would not be supporting the motion, which indicates that the Ulster Unionist Party has deserted the Good Friday Agreement, which I very much regret. It seems that the DUP is now the champion of the Good Friday Agreement and that the UUP has retreated from that position and is more eager to align itself with the type of attitudes expressed by Mr Allister. That is to be regretted.

What the SDLP and the other parties that support the motion have argued today has been rational, sensible and based not only on practical co-operation but on the other benefits that arise from North/South co-operation, some of which I mentioned. I urge all parties to support the motion.

Mr Speaker: Before I put the Question on amendment No 1, I remind Members that if it is made, I will not put the Question on amendment No 2 as that amendment will have been overtaken by the decision on amendment No 1.

Question put, That amendment No 1 be made.

Northern Ireland Assembly

Tuesday 2 July 2013

The Assembly met at 10.30 am (Mr Speaker in the Chair).

Members observed two minutes' silence.

Assembly Business

Mr Speaker: The Minister of the Environment has informed me that he will not make a statement on Planning Policy Statement 21 this morning. I believe that his intention is to issue a written ministerial statement in due course. Members will note that revised indicative timings have been issued.

Ministerial Statements

Building a Prosperous and United Community

Mr P Robinson (The First Minister): I welcome the opportunity to make a statement to the Assembly about the economic package Building a Prosperous and United Community, announced by the Prime Minister, the deputy First Minister and me in Downing Street on 14 June. This important initiative contains a range of measures to help rebalance the local economy and secure a shared future for everyone in Northern Ireland. The Assembly will be aware that this package was in development over the last two and a half months and was only finalised just ahead of the G8 conference.

There have been some criticisms that the significant economic pact, which affects the House and the Executive, was agreed without a statement to the Assembly. The facts are that the pact was subject to Executive approval, and indeed the Executive ratified it at the very next meeting following the G8 last Thursday. Today, at the first available opportunity, I am now in a position to provide Members with the details.

As regards the package itself, the Government and the Executive are committed to working together to tackle the important issues of rebalancing the economy to meet the challenges of promoting investment and jobs here and to addressing the chronic entrenched divisions in this society. Progress on both of those is vital if Northern Ireland is to maximise its potential.

The measures in the economic package ratified by the Executive complement the proposals in the Together: Building a United Community strategy that we announced on 9 May. It was aimed at tackling divisions and building a shared future. I am delighted that ministerial colleagues, at our meeting last Thursday, regarded the 'Together: Building a United Community' document as a positive starting point and unanimously committed the Executive to its delivery. Northern Ireland needs the right economic plan to promote a stronger private sector, and it needs the right social plan to help build a more cohesive, shared society. This package requires the Government and the Executive to work imaginatively to help Northern Ireland move in that direction.

Many of the measures in the economic package sit well alongside actions already being taken to grow the local economy and increase employment opportunities and prosperity for all. Even so, it is important to note that the measures in 'Building a Prosperous and United Community' are not a substitute for the Executive's aim in relation to corporation tax. The Executive will, therefore, continue to push for corporation tax powers to help provide the necessary stimulus for economic growth. I believe, like the many hundreds of people who responded positively to the public consultation on the issue, that this measure, above all others, has the ability to deliver the necessary economic step change. Devolution of this power would allow the Executive to meet their shared objective of rebalancing the local economy more quickly than if they were reliant on the policy levers currently available alongside those outlined in the package.

As the package on its own is not enough, pressing the Government for the devolution of corporation tax remains the Executive's key priority, and officials are examining the actions that could be taken forward now, so that a devolved rate could be implemented as soon as possible after what, it is hoped, will be a positive decision by the UK Government in the autumn of 2014. Although it is obviously disappointing that the Prime Minister does not intend to make a decision on the devolution of corporation tax until the autumn of 2014, the Executive remain committed to securing these important powers and welcome the Government's commitment, should they take a positive decision, to implement that decision during this parliamentary term.

Before looking at the detail of the package, it is worth highlighting the Executive's own proposals aimed at building a united community. The Executive are determined to work to achieve that goal and, by acknowledging the 'Together: Building a United Community' document as a positive starting point, are emphasising that there are a number of elements of the plan that individual parties consider do not represent the height of their ambition. Importantly, every Minister has committed to the delivery of the strategy.

Good relations across all parts of our community are an essential ingredient of building a prosperous, peaceful and safe society that is enriched by diversity and is welcoming to all. Specifically, tackling the twin blights of sectarianism and racism, in addition to other forms of intolerance, is essential in shaping a shared and cohesive community equipped to face the challenges of an ever-changing world. The Executive's vision is of a united community based on equality of opportunity and the desirability of good relations and reconciliation, a community strengthened by its diversity, in which cultural expression is celebrated and embraced and in which everyone can live, learn, work and socialise free from prejudice, hate and intolerance.

A substantial new package of measures to build this shared future was announced on 9 May. The proposals included a programme to reduce and ultimately eliminate all the peace walls by 2023; 10,000 United Youth programme cross-community placements for young people; 10 shared educational campuses in five years; and 10 shared neighbourhood developments. The blueprint, 'Together: Building a United Community', which was published on 23 May, set out a detailed framework for Executive action; the measures in the economic package complement that plan.

Moving on to the package itself, there are a number of significant measures to note. The Executive welcome the UK Government's clear commitment to take a decision on the devolution of corporation tax powers by autumn 2014. They welcome the opportunities provided by the additional resources that are being made available through additional EU funding and the increase in the RRI borrowing limit. The Executive also welcome the commitment that all of Northern Ireland will continue to enjoy assisted area status post 2013. The commitments to establish a joint ministerial task force to examine whether tailored support is required for our local banks is also of significance. The Executive welcome the UK Government's pledge to work together to improve the uptake of UK-wide schemes aimed at improving business access to finance in the local economy.

I will now examine the detail of each of the main measures in turn. The package commits the Government to take forward further work on the devolution of corporation tax powers and to make a final decision on their devolution no later than the autumn statement of 2014. The Executive note and are grateful for that clear commitment. The package also indicates that, if a positive decision is made on corporation tax rate powers, the Government would introduce a stand-alone Bill in the normal way, with the aim of its becoming law before the prorogation of Parliament prior to the 2015 general election. Again, the assurances that the necessary legislation can be introduced before the end of the current Parliament are to be welcomed.

The package also commits the Executive and the Government to examine the potential for devolving specific additional fiscal powers. That work will include looking at the opportunities for a corresponding and ongoing increase in the Executive's annual capital borrowing limit proportionate to any additional revenue-raising powers and considering wider issues of affordability. The Executive and the Government recognise that decisions around any further fiscal devolution require careful consideration. Following that examination, recommendations for further devolution will be put to Executive and Government Ministers by autumn 2014.

The UK Government are to make available up to an additional £50 million in 2014-15 and 2015-16 in borrowing powers. The Executive welcome that short-term boost to our capital borrowing. Any enhanced ability that allows the Executive to commit to additional capital projects is a positive step, and the additional RRI borrowing will be used to help to support specific shared housing and education proposals for the benefit of our citizens.

The Executive and the Government recognise the important role that Peace funding has played in supporting cross-community projects to promote reconciliation and in tackling inequalities and disadvantage. As a result of the EU budget negotiations, the Peace programme has now secured €150 million funding for a future Peace IV. Under that package, the Executive are encouraged by the Government's commitment to allocate a further €50 million from the UK's European territorial co-operation allocation, subject to confirmation of the UK's allocation. The Executive have agreed that they will seek, where appropriate, to use that additional funding to support the United Youth programme announced on 9 May. They will also seek North/South Ministerial Council agreement to ensuring that submissions to the Special EU Programmes Body put building a shared and integrated society at the heart of the Executive's objectives for the Peace IV programme.

EU structural funds play an important role in promoting competitiveness and enterprise and have the potential to support cross-cutting programmes to build a shared and cohesive society. The Executive and the Government recognised the concern that the EU criteria for the allocation of structural funds for 2014-2020 would have led to a 43% reduction in funding for the local economy. Under the terms of the new package, the Executive welcome the confirmation that the UK Government are committed to revising the allocation of post-2014 structural funds across the UK. The increase in our allocation to €457 million, reflecting an additional €181 million for the investment for jobs and growth objective, will enable additional spending on the Executive's priorities for research and innovation, SME competitiveness, renewable energy, employment, skills and social inclusion.

As Members will be aware, the Executive face unique challenges in rebalancing the local economy and in addressing disadvantage and continuing divisions. The current 100% assisted area status enables them to provide targeted support to a range of private sector-led projects throughout Northern Ireland. Selective financial assistance provided through Invest Northern Ireland, for example, has helped to promote more than 3,000 new jobs here in the past three months alone. As part of the economic package, the Government will continue with 100% assisted area status coverage for this region, and the policy will be retained for at least the medium term. The Executive, therefore, welcome the decision to maintain 100% assisted area status. The ability to continue to provide regional aid has been recognised by all parties in the Executive, and that decision will enable the Executive, working through Invest Northern Ireland, to continue to offer selective financial assistance (SFA) beyond 2014. The outcome will be to help drive continued investment and business expansion in the local economy. In the most recent financial year, ended March 2013, Invest NI promoted almost 7,400 new jobs and levered nearly £608 million of investment on the back of the support provided through SFA. The Executive will continue to support the UK Government in their ongoing discussions with the European Commission about finalisation of the regional aid guidelines post 2013.

10.45 am

These tough economic times point up the significant challenges facing local banks. The Government and the Executive recognise that difficulties in accessing finance remain a major concern for local businesses. In particular, a significant number of local businesses are currently constrained by the repayments required on loans taken for past property investments. That property overhang means that those businesses can no longer access the working capital they need to operate or to develop new opportunities, and that presents a risk to economic recovery. The ability of businesses to access necessary finance is a key challenge facing the local economy at the present time. The Executive have taken measures, principally through Invest Northern Ireland, to develop alternative sources of funding for local businesses. Ministers continue to press the banks that operate locally to increase lending and to make full use of the range of UK-wide schemes that have been introduced to help.

The Executive have noted the Government's recognition that UK-wide schemes to improve the flow of finance to businesses have not been as effective in Northern Ireland as they have been elsewhere. They welcome the commitment to ensure that UK-wide schemes are better promoted and deliver a positive impact in the local economy. That includes extension of the start-up loan scheme and a potential pilot extension of the enterprise finance guarantee scheme here. The creation of a joint ministerial task force to examine how access to finance can be improved is a necessary step. That is an issue that is critical to the Province's economic recovery and rebalancing efforts, and only through such formal engagement will it have a real chance of tackling the problems facing the local banking sector.

The Finance Minister met the Economic Secretary to the Treasury last month to discuss what he believed needed to be done, including some quite fundamental changes to enable increased lending to businesses. The Executive are pleased that the Government now recognise that a regional response to our banking issues is required. The point of this is to make sure that Northern Ireland's particular circumstances are fully taken into account when national schemes to improve access to finance are being designed.

Importantly, the package also contains measures for increased support for trade and investment, and the Executive are delighted by the Prime Minister's decision to return to Northern Ireland for the Executive's G8 investment conference in October. In particular, the Executive welcome the associated commitment to further champion jobs and growth locally by strengthening and deepening the linkages between UKTI and Invest NI.

The Executive are encouraged by the UK Government's commitment to work with them to identify improvements that can be made to various export finance support mechanisms. The continuing UK Government commitment to support R&D projects in the aerospace sector is also very much appreciated, as those measures will complement the priority that the Executive have given to growing the local economy through export-led growth and investment in R&D and innovation.

In the area of tourism, the proposals in the package to develop visa waiver arrangements between the UK and Ireland have considerable scope for impact. In the longer term, the measure will allow visitors from a range of overseas destinations to enter Northern Ireland and Great Britain on an Irish visa. The development of a pilot scheme will provide the platform to help realise the Executive's ambition to make tourism a £1 billion industry by 2020. The visa arrangement will make it easier for tourists and businesspeople visiting the Republic of Ireland who are travelling only on an Irish visa to include Northern Ireland in their trip. It is hoped that that measure will provide an important boost to the Executive's drive to increase tourism revenue and visitor numbers.

Mr Speaker, you will appreciate that the economic package is quite wide-ranging and contains more detail than today's business will allow, so, if I may, I will finish by itemising the measures very briefly in the time that is left.

The Government have made it clear that they are willing to designate enterprise zones here, and the Executive have the option of proposing such sites by October this year, if they so desire.

The Government have also said that they will support the Executive in undertaking a review of business red tape in Northern Ireland. Meanwhile, the package also includes commitments to support the unlocking of key local infrastructure using UK Government guarantees. As previously highlighted, the package also supports the Executive's new process for economically significant planning applications. The Government are also to support the Executive in examining how the financial potential of Belfast port might be unlocked. Then, there are measures to unlock revenues from the Executive's asset base. The potential provision of further MoD surplus assets is detailed. The package also includes measures to build on the local economy's strong communications infrastructure.

The Executive are also exploring what can be done to improve Northern Ireland's air connectivity. Among the proposals is one to establish monitoring mechanisms at ministerial and official level to ensure that measures implemented by the UK Government are having maximum impact in the local economy. That includes exploring scope for DETI's independent economic advisory group to have a role in monitoring the effectiveness of UK-wide economic policies. We will work to examine how we can contribute to supporting the drive for economic growth here and the creation of a shared society with equality of opportunity for all.

I think that all Members should be able to recognise the progress that has been made. The world leaders came to Fermanagh several weeks ago. They admired a society that has been transformed. At the G8, Northern Ireland showed the world that it is an increasingly outward-looking society, open for business, focusing on the steps needed to succeed in a competitive global economy and ready to address its divisions.

The economic and social pact that was unveiled by the Prime Minister in recent days is a potent symbol of the Executive's vision. Under their custodianship and direction, the Northern Ireland of the future will be a genuinely shared society that is able to fulfil its real economic potential and lay permanent foundations for continued peace, stability and prosperity. The script has been written. Now, the words must be translated into action. I commend the package to the Assembly.

Mr Speaker: Before I call Chris Lyttle, the Deputy Chair of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, I warn the House that quite a number of Members want to make a contribution on the statement. I understand that because of the importance of the statement, but I warn Members that they should not make a long preamble before they come to their question. I believe that we can allow everybody to make their contribution. Of course, the Deputy Chair of the OFMDFM Committee will have quite a bit of latitude, as will other Chairs and Deputy Chairs.

Mr Lyttle (The Deputy Chairperson of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister): I thank the First Minister for the statement and welcome what appears to be a long overdue acknowledgement that the economic well-being of people in Northern Ireland is absolutely linked to the delivery of a shared and integrated society here. I hope, therefore, that the Assembly will see a detailed action plan for the delivery of the Together: Building a United Community strategy without delay.

I ask this question as Deputy Chairperson for the OFMDFM Committee: how will the additional €50 million committed by the UK Government to Peace programmes in Northern Ireland be used by the United Youth programme and over what period does the First Minister envisage the 10,000 placements being created? I ask this question as a Member of the Assembly: to what extent will the use of the economic package to deliver 10 shared education campuses over the next five years without reference to integrated education improve a system that the First Minister believes is fundamentally wrong and does it adequately reflect the hopes of our community to see our children educated together?

Mr P Robinson: Mr Speaker, we were not quite clear on this side, when you referred to "preamble", whether it was a "preamble" or a "preramble" that we were talking about.

I will deal with some of the issues that were raised by the Member for East Belfast. First, it is not long overdue. The deputy First Minister and I have consistently seen having a stable and shared society as a fundamental part of bringing prosperity to Northern Ireland. As far as the action plan that arises out of the strategic document is concerned, each of the Departments, having now agreed to the delivery of the plan — I am pleased to say that it was agreed unanimously at the Executive that we would deliver on the plan — will, obviously, look at their own responsibilities in it and bring forward action plans. I hope that each of the Committees will question their Minister and ensure that the Department makes the necessary progress. Following the particular proposals that the deputy First Minister and I announced on 9 May, Departments are already working on detailed proposals. As each comes forward, we will announce it, and we will be happy to answer questions on those issues in the House or in Committees.

On the €50 million designated by the UK Government as additional to the Peace IV funding and specifically linked to the United Youth project, when detailed proposals come from officials on how that proposal is to be taken forward, I imagine that they will likely seek the engagement of community, charitable and business organisations. No doubt, as part of that, proposals will go before the SEUPB for Peace funding specifically to take forward projects for the United Youth project.

As far as the campuses are concerned, the document that we produced makes it very clear that our ultimate goal is one educational system in Northern Ireland. We recognise that that cannot be done overnight, in one step or in one visit to the table. It must be an ongoing, gradual, step-by-step process, however tiring and hard on the patience it may be for the Member to see progress being made more slowly than he and, indeed, I would like. Nonetheless, it is a significant step forward. It is important that actual proposals start to be constructed on the ground. As the Executive recognised, it is the starting point. It is not the Executive's full ambition for shared or integrated education. The Member will know, from the visit that the deputy First Minister and I made to the Committee, that we identified other areas relating to integrated education where, we believed, further work was necessary. That conversation will continue, and consideration will be given to what further steps can be taken to encourage the sector.

Mr Moutray: I welcome the positive and timely statement by the First Minister this morning. How does he believe the economic pact and Together: Building a United Community sit together as we move forward?

Mr P Robinson: We have consistently identified that the one critical element to having a stable and prosperous future for the people of Northern Ireland is that the peace is embedded, there is cohesion in our community and we seek to reconcile different traditions so that they can live together, side by side. Unless we have political and community stability, we will not be an attractive place for people to invest or visit. It has consistently been our policy that there are two key priorities for the Executive: the economy and building a shared society. The fact that the programme has been endorsed by the United Kingdom Government, the Irish Government, the US Government and the European Governments indicates that this is the right way to travel. I think that any sensible person looking at where Northern Ireland is and at its potential will recognise that it is the right way forward.

Ms Fearon: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I thank the First Minister for his statement this morning. What is his assessment of the benefits of the North continuing to have assisted area status?

Mr P Robinson: When it was first mooted that there was the potential for it to be removed, there was considerable concern from every party in the Executive. The deputy First Minister and I went to Brussels and spoke to a wide range of commissioners, parliamentarians and others, including the two presidents, about how important it was for Northern Ireland to continue to have that status. Without that status and without having the power to set our own level of corporation tax, Northern Ireland would be very vulnerable, and it would have been difficult for us to attract the same level of investment as we have been successful in bringing to Northern Ireland over the past number of years. So, from our point of view, it was a vital issue and one that we are delighted has been satisfactorily resolved, albeit for the short and medium term. I suspect that that is at least to take account of what the outcome in 2014 might be of the United Kingdom Government's decision on corporation tax. If we have those tax-setting powers, obviously, other criteria will have to be considered in terms of assisted area status.

11.00 am

Mr Eastwood: I welcome the potential for further military sites to be transferred. However, given some of the experiences that we have had, will the potentially significant cost of decontaminating such sites be left to the Executive's resources, or will it be covered by the additional borrowing powers?

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Beggs] in the Chair)

Mr P Robinson: I suppose that depends largely on which military sites we are talking about or, indeed, which parts of military sites. If, for instance, as, I think, was indicated in the document — it certainly was in our discussions with the Prime Minister — we were talking about sites that included existing housing, clearly, there are not decontamination issues where there is such housing. On some of the sites that we have taken over, the decontamination relates to only a small part of the overall site. Cleverer planning use of the site's overall footprint might avoid the necessity to spend significant amounts of money on decontamination. Ultimately, however, where decontamination is required, it will be a matter of negotiation at the time on a particular site between the Executive and the UK Government.

Mr Cree: I welcome the statement this morning. The First Minister referred to the UK-wide schemes to improve the flow of finance, with which there certainly have been problems. What new tools that have not existed before are envisaged for that? I welcome the assisted area status extension and the selective financial assistance going beyond 2014. Can the First Minister give us some indication about how far ahead they may go?

Mr P Robinson: I think that every one of us will have had conversations with people in our constituency about the difficulty getting access to finance, in particular for small businesses. The banks have been a significant problem. Of course, every time you meet the banks, they throw figures at you about how excellent their lending has been and how it has increased. What they do not tell you is what they have reined in at the other end. They do not tell you about the increases that there have been in the terms and conditions of loans. So, there have been difficulties, and it is more difficult in Northern Ireland than elsewhere in the United Kingdom, because none of the four main banks is indigenous to Northern Ireland. That has given us considerable problems.

Many of the significant schemes that the UK Government have brought forward on the flow of finance are of such a scale that they do not have the same impact in Northern Ireland. I remember that, several years ago, the deputy First Minister and I wrote to the Chancellor drawing attention to the fact that the Northern Ireland banking scene was entirely different and could not be treated in the same way as that elsewhere in the UK. We asked them to look specifically at that. It has taken them some time to come around to that position. I am delighted that they now have and that they are going to sit down with us and look at those issues. I am glad that we have a mechanism in the pact that allows us to have periodic meetings where we can raise these issues to see what progress has been made.

We have the assisted area status guarantee for the short and medium term. I suspect that that really means that, if, at a later stage, we get the power to set our own level of corporation tax, we will look again at assisted area status.

Mr G Robinson: I welcome the additional borrowing of £50 million a year for the next two financial years to be spent on society projects. Is the First Minister confident that the necessary processes are in place to allow that money to be spent in the available time?

Mr P Robinson: That touches on an issue that I mentioned during the OFMDFM Committee session. It is challenging to be told that there are two years and you will have the ability to borrow £50 million in each of those years.

The processes of government — getting through the preparation, the planning and the legal and procurement requirements — make that very challenging. That may be one of the good reasons why there should be a fast-track planning system. The borrowing ability also requires the Finance Minister to look again at how we can speed up the procurement system and make it more favourable to local companies. Those are issues that have to be looked at.

The Department of Finance and Personnel has indicated that it is confident that we can use the money within the timescale. As the Member knows, some schemes — Lisanelly, for instance — have already been identified. It is good to see that we now have six schools signed up to the memorandum of understanding to move forward on the Lisanelly site. A lot of the preparation is already under way for that site. There are also two schools in Moy that want to come together in one building. As soon as there is willingness on the part of those who would be your partners, it becomes a lot easier to go through the processes. I am confident that we can meet the schedule.

Ms McGahan: Go raibh maith agat. I thank the Minister for his statement. Can he give an indication of what shared future projects could benefit from the economic package? Is there something in the document that could fast-track the Lisanelly project?

Mr P Robinson: There are several funding elements. First, there is the commitment by the Executive to the overall shared future projects. That means that those projects come high on the list for government expenditure when it becomes available. I will come to the pact in a moment or two, but, on our own terms, that means that we will look to the priorities that we have set ourselves in monitoring rounds and so forth.

I have already spoken about Lisanelly, and it is ahead of the pack in terms of shared education campuses because a lot of work has been done and there seems to be an agreement to go on to the site. All the projects that we have outlined in the proposals of 9 May are capable of receiving funding through the pact because the reinvestment and reform initiative (RRI) borrowing increase can be used for any of them. The increase in Peace IV funding through the top-up allows the United Youth programme in particular to be advantaged.

The Executive have made it clear to the Treasury and others that we have the programmes that can move us forward to build a united community in Northern Ireland. Those programmes will run at a pace consistent with the available finance, so, if there is enthusiasm on the part of the Government to help us with them, they know how they can help us. The more money and the more available borrowing we have, the more we can do to advance the projects. I am encouraged that there is a lot that can be done. My only concern is as it has always been: with capital funding, there is a long lead-in time for procurement, legal and planning purposes.

Mrs Hale: I thank the First Minister for his statement and answers and welcome the positive news in the statement. The economic pact indicates that consideration will be given to additional fiscal powers for the Assembly. What powers are likely to be considered, and how likely is it that there will be further devolution?

Mr P Robinson: I tense up when people talk about additional fiscal powers, simply because I think that, very often, people have a different view of the outcome from what is envisaged in the pact. The pact talks about the additional powers as a consequence of wanting to increase our borrowing capacity. It states that we can increase our borrowing as long as we increase our revenues, and, if the revenue stream is increased, that can pay off whatever additional borrowing we do. However, when most people talk to me about taking additional fiscal powers, they talk about things such as stamp duty, landfill tax and the aggregates level, and I know full well that they are talking about reducing the tax paid on all of those, which would do nothing to pay for additional borrowing. Whether we pay for additional borrowing through increasing the regional rate or through some other mechanism is something that we will consider in the days ahead. I am concerned that the only ideas that I have been hearing from people are, I suspect, ones that, just like air passenger duty (APD), involve bringing the tax to zero.

Mr Byrne: I generally welcome the thrust of the statement. It is positive in its concentration on developing a more balanced regional economy. Given that we have secured better structural funds, that selective financial assistance is retained and that, hopefully, we will benefit from the regional guidelines, will the First Minister and the Executive consider seeking from the Treasury corporate tax credits that will allow greater allowances on capital investment? That was announced in 1998 by the then Chancellor Gordon Brown for two years, and we benefited from it. Given that the whole argument about corporation tax is still in the melting pot, that may be a way of reducing net tax on our —

Mr Deputy Speaker: I think that the Member has asked his question.

Mr Byrne: — corporate businesses.

Mr P Robinson: I agree entirely. I assure you that we have already been attempting to entice the Government to assist us in that regard. We will continue to do so. It is fair to say that, to date, the Treasury is not biting.

Mr Weir: I thank the First Minister for his detailed and very positive statement. Is he confident that the necessary work to allow a decision on the devolution of corporation tax to be taken in the autumn of 2014 will be done? What significance is there to the decision to legislate by way of a stand-alone Bill?

Mr P Robinson: The Government have committed themselves to doing that work and completing it so that they can take a decision. We keep talking about the autumn of 2014; more accurately, we are talking about after the Scottish referendum. We have done a considerable amount of the preparatory work jointly with the Treasury, the Northern Ireland Office and the Prime Minister. However, the report submitted to the Prime Minister left him with options in at least three areas. Therefore, he will have to decide which of those options to take forward. Needless to say, the options favoured by the Executive and not by the Treasury are those that are best for Northern Ireland and the Executive financially. When we get close to the decision-taking stage, we will attempt to convince the Prime Minister that that is the right way to go.

The second part of the Member's question —

Mr Weir: It was about the stand-alone Bill.

Mr P Robinson: I think that it is reasonably well known that the initial proposal was to make a decision in the autumn of 2014 and use the Finance Bill of 2015, which would be the normal way of dealing with these matters, as the means of taking forward the proposal if it were approved by the Government. Of course, those of us who have some knowledge of how the last Finance Bill of a Parliament operates will know that, because nobody is absolutely certain which party will be in government after the election, it has to be an agreed Finance Bill. I think that we all know that the Labour Party has not been positive about having a devolved corporation tax-setting power for Northern Ireland. That being the case, leaving it to the Finance Bill of 2015 would have meant that there would be a veto. The Conservative Party and Liberal Democrats in coalition could have brought forward a proposal to provide Northern Ireland with tax-setting powers that would have been vetoed in the Finance Bill by the Labour Opposition. That would not have been satisfactory from our point of view. The pact, as finally published, commits the Government, if they take a decision in favour of allowing Northern Ireland to have tax-setting powers in 2014, to introducing a stand-alone Bill that they will seek to take through Parliament before the elections in 2015.

11.15 am

Mr Anderson: I also welcome the First Minister's statement. Undoubtedly, the G8 was a massive success for Northern Ireland. Does the First Minister believe that there will be a long-term legacy from the G8 and the G8 investment conference?

Mr P Robinson: I think that everyone, even our pessimists in the press, recognised that the G8 was successful in Northern Ireland terms. Although we will attempt to indicate the extent of the advantage to Northern Ireland in the longer term in the report that will be carried out by the Executive, it is difficult to know that. At the moment and from our angle of vision, we see it being beneficial not just in reputational enhancement for Northern Ireland. People around the world will have seen that Northern Ireland is a bright, sunny and peaceful place and the kind of destination that one might want to go to on holiday or to invest in. That is good for Northern Ireland, but I am not sure what figure anybody could put on that.

It is also important that the Prime Minister committed to supporting our economic conference in October and encouraged his G8 colleagues to do likewise. That could realise considerable benefits as previous events of that type have done. In the long term, the G8 will be a tool for Invest Northern Ireland, Tourism Ireland and the Northern Ireland Tourist Board to use to show that Northern Ireland is a welcoming and inviting place. All of that has to be to our advantage, and only time will tell the extent to which we take advantage of it.

Lord Morrow: I, too, thank the First Minister for his comprehensive statement to the House. I want to bring him back to an issue that he dealt with to some degree when Mr Robinson asked his question. It relates to the creation of 10 shared educational campuses in five years' time. How many of those campuses have been identified? Is he confident that 10 campuses will be identified within the five-year period?

Mr P Robinson: I hope that they will be more than identified within that five-year period; I hope that we will see work commence on 10 of them within that period. Of course, there are those that are publicly known, and Lisanelly has been referred to. The Moy project is also known, and I welcomed the opportunity to go along with the Member to speak to the two schools in Moy. It is always so much easier when you have willing partners and people who want to make a project work. That will help Lisanelly and Moy. I understand that proposals are also being put forward in Armagh. I think that a trend is being set and you will see others following.

It will be the responsibility of the Education Minister to bring the proposals to his Executive colleagues. I hope that we end up having to choose 10 campuses, rather than having to go out and twist arms to get 10. I honestly believe that there is a real opportunity for groups of schools to look at this proposal as a way of getting greater integration in their community and improving educational prospects.

Mr D Bradley: Go raibh míle maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Chéad-Aire as ucht a ráitis, agus, go deimhin, cuirim fáilte roimhe. Tá suim ar leith agam sa £18 billiún d'airgead caipitil atá luaite ann.

I thank the First Minister for his statement and welcome it. I am particularly interested in the £18 billion of capital funding mentioned in the statement. How much of that has been delivered to date? How much remains to be delivered?

Mr P Robinson: The Member will know that, right across the House, there was considerable concern about the gap between the commitment that had been made by the outgoing Labour Administration and the plans that were produced by the coalition Government. The coalition Government had indicated that they believed that the £18 billion could be met within the time frame entered into by the previous Administration.

Over the past year in particular there have been step changes in the Government's commitment to capital funding for Northern Ireland, and literally hundreds of millions of pounds have been added to the capital budget. The cynics might well say that there have been reductions or freezes on the revenue side to allow for increases on the capital side, but if we are to stick to the letter of the agreement, there have been increases. I think that the last paper I saw from the Department of Finance indicated that the present projections — this was before the statement from the Treasury in the past few days — were that we would have received something in the region of £17.56 billion. The additional figures that have been added to the capital budget by the Chancellor's statement more recently must take it very close to the £18 billion, if not exceeding the £18 billion mark.

Mr Newton: Like others, I welcome the Minister's very positive statement. It is good to end the term on such a positive and high note. Reference has already been made to the assisted area status. Like others, I welcome the retention of that. Perhaps the First Minister will comment on the importance of that status to long-term investment and securing foreign investment in the Province.

Mr P Robinson: In my statement I pointed out just how helpful that had been over the past year, when 7,500 jobs were brought in directly as a result of our ability to give assisted area status. Moreover, in the past three months in particular, around 3,000 jobs have come into Northern Ireland, so it is a fantastic lever to be able to go to a company and say, "If you come to Northern Ireland, we can give you assistance". What assistance you give and in what areas you give it depends largely on what type of businesses we are trying to attract. Assisted area status allows us to lever in jobs in a way that would make us very uncompetitive if we did not have it because it allows us to give funding, which can offset the advantage that companies might receive if they were to put themselves in a region that had a lower level of corporation tax, for instance. So it is massively important that we continue to have that status. It is a tool that the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment and Invest Northern Ireland have used very successfully. There were considerable concerns, and, indeed, some calculations being carried out, as to what the consequences would be if that status had been taken away from us or it had been to a reduced part of Northern Ireland.

Mr I McCrea: I thank the First Minister for his statement and welcome the nature of its content. I also welcome the early progress in relation to the planning system. Does the First Minister believe that the amended Planning Bill will offer a real opportunity to speed up the planning system and help attract inward investment?

Mr P Robinson: I know that, with any proposal that is brought before the House, there are always some people who want to try to get some political advantage for their political party out of it, but, quite frankly, anybody who has travelled around the world trying to bring business to Northern Ireland, and has spoken to those who want to invest, but who find our planning delays so frustrating, will know that anything that can be done to fast-track those and improve Northern Ireland's reputation abroad is helpful. If we are able to speak to investors and indicate that there are issues that we can help to resolve, and we can do it within a time frame, it makes it much easier for DETI and Invest Northern Ireland to attract people. So, yes, obviously, being able to take decisions faster helps our economy, helps get people into jobs and helps get people out of poverty. That is the real issue, and I would have thought that that would be vastly welcomed in a community that requires growth in the economy in order to trigger people getting off the dole and into work, out of poverty and into prosperity.

Mr Douglas: I welcome the First Minister's very positive statement, which is good news for Northern Ireland. The economic package refers to the Port of Belfast, and recent reports show that the port has had another very successful and profitable year. What do the Executive have in mind to ensure that Northern Ireland benefits from the work of the port?

Mr P Robinson: Northern Ireland already benefits from the work of the port. It is the gateway for business into Northern Ireland, and it does a tremendous job in encouraging investment in its area. The DONG proposal is a perfect example of that. Anyone who looks at the skyline around the port and at the work that DONG has undertaken can see just how valuable that is economically and for jobs. However, we have to recognise that it is more than a port. The core port land is one issue, but there is massive development potential, with some thousands of acres available. I do not know what the current Minister's position is, or what guidance he is getting, but when I was in the Department for Regional Development and was being asked to appoint people to the board of the port, the criteria that I was given were all marine-related. The fact is that the job that the port is doing is not just marine-related any longer; it is a massive development organisation.

Therefore, from a Northern Ireland plc point of view — I do not really like that term — the benefits should be not just to the port users and the port itself but to the wider community in Northern Ireland. As things stand, the fiduciary responsibility of the commissioners would not allow them to throw money away to the Executive. However, the Executive would have the ability to change the criteria, and although the port "lawyered up" when mention was first made of it, the pact makes very clear that the United Kingdom Government will give us whatever additional support we might need if legislation was required in the UK so that the wider community could get some benefit from the port assets.

This all started, as the Member will remember, when the Minister of Finance and Personnel, in his Budget statement, sought to get additional funds from various sources outside the normal revenue streams. He had looked at getting £20 million from the port, which the port resisted, and, therefore, we are looking at other mechanisms that will allow us to do that.

I am convinced that that revenue is there to be had, but I am insistent that in bringing that additional revenue to Northern Ireland, looking at how the port operates, I do not want us to take any step that makes it less favourable for the port to do the job that it has successfully been doing. The Member referred to the significant profits that it has raised, the side effects of which include the recent proposal to spend £7 million on a docking facility for tour boats.

All of that is beneficial, and the Executive will look at that on the basis of a proposal that, I suspect, will come forward from the Minister for Regional Development.

Mr Allister: In his statement, the First Minister refers to the Executive's vision of:

"A community strengthened by its diversity, in which cultural expression is celebrated and embraced ... free from prejudice, hate and intolerance."

He also told us:

"every Minister has committed to the delivery of the strategy."

How can that be squared with the performance of the Culture Minister, who, in recent weeks, led protests against expressions of unionist culture? Has the First Minister any comment to make about her behaviour?

Mr P Robinson: The Member wants to stretch me beyond the scope of the statement. Every Minister must answer for their behaviour and how consistent it is with the agreements of the Executive. The Executive have very clearly recognised that the way forward for Northern Ireland is one where we each show respect for the other's traditions, where we have an understanding of the difficulties and the angle of vision that people may have from their community, and where there is a wider level of tolerance. That has to be the way forward. I encourage the Member in the same way that I encourage every other Member: if we all are in tune with those criteria, we will have a very peaceful parading season and a very peaceful Northern Ireland. That will allow us to be able to meet one of the two criteria that we want to achieve, namely the establishment of a shared community, the other one being economy prosperity for our people.

11.30 am

Mr Agnew: The First Minister's opening sentence was telling when he referred to the economic package, 'Building a Prosperous and United Community, because that is what this is. It is an economic programme rebranded and repackaged as a shared future document. Although there have been some welcome headline targets on delivering a shared future, there has been no strategy on how we get there.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Can we have a question, please?

Mr Agnew: Indeed, the content of the statement is almost exclusively about the economy. Is the statement an admission from the Executive that they have given up on delivering a shared future strategy?

Mr P Robinson: Has the Member been on holiday? Where was he on 23 May? Is he not aware that we have produced the strategy on building a united community? Did he not listen to my statement, in which I indicated that the Executive have unanimously supported this being the starting point and that they will seek to deliver it? The strategy is there for building a united community. Perhaps, the Member will go to the Library and get a copy of it.

Mrs Overend: I want to ask the First Minister about the fiscal powers. Will he outline what powers are being considered for devolution to Northern Ireland? Who will be driving forward the examination?

Mr P Robinson: I have already touched on the powers. People have talked to us about the aggregates levy, the landfill tax and stamp duty. The proposal is obviously one that would have to come forward from the Department of Finance and Personnel to the Executive. The Executive will want to consult widely with the Committees and the Assembly on moving forward on any proposal.

We have considerable powers through our regional rate, which is, in effect, a local tax. If we want to increase the local tax to pay for an addition to the RRI borrowing, we can simply do that by increasing our regional rate. It is up to anybody who has a suggestion to make about additional areas of tax to make, but my fear is that when people talk about taxes, they talk about reducing them rather than putting up tax and indicating what they will be charging that additional tax for.

Planning Policy Statement 2: Natural Heritage

Mr Attwood (The Minister of the Environment):

Following Executive agreement, I am issuing Planning Policy Statement 2 (PPS 2) on natural heritage. So that people are aware, natural heritage refers to the diversity of our habitats, species, landscape and earth-science features.

In the past few weeks, as Members know, I have brought to the Assembly PPS 16 on tourism, which is aimed at supporting high-quality and sustainable tourist development to maximise the economic opportunities that tourism offers. For Members' information, yesterday, I circulated a PPS on flood areas to the Executive. That is all evidence of the reform of planning.

Work has commenced on developing a single, strategic planning policy statement to be in place in the early months of 2015 to gather in one place the planning policy ambitions and statements of this part of the world. Members will recall — how could you forget? — that, last week, there was a debate on the Planning Bill, which focused on streamlining and reforming the planning system and ensuring that economic considerations are embedded in the system in the proper way. I have always maintained that the planning system is about striking the appropriate balance between facilitating development in support of the economy and protecting and enhancing our natural and built heritage. The reason is clear-cut: as I keep saying, the scale, wonder and beauty of our built, natural, archaeological and Christian heritage is unsurpassed on these islands. This statement today and the adoption of PPS 2 by the Executive, unanimously and without dispute — to borrow the phrase used by the First Minister in his previous comments — is a useful rebuttal to the bad politics and bad law of last Monday and Tuesday.

Today, I am launching PPS 2 on natural heritage, which is a policy aimed specifically at preserving and enhancing all that we cherish about our unique natural heritage in the North. It extends beyond and enhances the old PPS 2, which dates back to June 1997 and dealt only with natural conservations. It is interesting that, in a statement issued today, the chair of the Council for Nature Conservation and the Countryside (CNCC), Patrick Casement, acknowledges that this PPS moves us beyond conservation and deals more comprehensively with heritage.

The policy seeks to conserve, enhance and restore the abundance, quality, diversity and distinctiveness of our natural heritage. It protects designated sites at international, national and local level; statutorily protected species; other species; habitats or features of natural heritage importance; and areas of outstanding natural beauty (AONBs). The PPS better informs applicants of the types of surveys and assessments that may be requested as part of the development management process. All of that is timely, given how, even in recent legal challenges, issues around compliance with European standards have been questioned by the courts.

PPS 2 will help us to meet international, national and local responsibilities and obligations. It will help us to achieve important obligations under the biodiversity convention, the European Landscape Convention and commitments made through the Northern Ireland biodiversity strategy, as well as to further sustainable development. It provides flexibility to accommodate development for economic growth without compromising the need to protect the valuable natural heritage. Underlying PPS 2 is the principle that conservation and development can be compatible and that, with careful planning, the potential for conflict can be minimised. I have just come from a meeting with the Minister of Agriculture at which the first item on the agenda was the work that we have taken forward together to try to protect Strangford lough, in particular how we have been able to reconcile the economic, energy and environmental needs, given the tidal turbine that exists in the middle of the narrows.

The policy encourages development plans to take account of natural heritage issues during their preparation by identifying and protecting local sites of importance and biodiversity. Plans are an important tool now — as they are for councils in the future, given their planning and developing planning functions — in evaluating and reconciling any potential conflict between the need for development and the need to protect the environment.

PPS 2 also provides a set of six operational planning policies to be taken into account when determining planning applications. In the document, NH 1 to NH 6, respectively and inclusively, are the pathway for dealing with all the relevant designations and how the planning system needs to acknowledge and respect those in any development plan or planning application. The first of the operational policies focuses on the protection of European sites and listed or proposed Ramsar sites. Those are given the highest level of protection, in line with the EC birds and habitats directives and the Ramsar convention. The process for considering development proposals affecting European sites is set out in law. Nobody can vary from what is set out in law, even though some seem to think that they can. Particular species of flora and fauna are subject to special protection and are protected from harm as required by legislation at European and domestic level.

PPS 2 also contains policy provisions aimed at providing the necessary protection for statutory protected species. The policy indicates different tests for those species depending on whether they are protected through the Wildlife Order, the 2011 Wildlife and Natural Environment Act or European legislation.

The policy also provides protection against the adverse effects of development proposals in nationally important sites such as areas of special scientific interest and national nature reserves. Similarly, it contains policy provisions that protect local nature reserves against the potentially adverse effects of development. It makes good sense to retain the hierarchy of protection for our nature conservation sites by providing the right level of protection for the appropriate designation.

Flexibility has been built into the policy to allow for development, provided the benefits of the proposed development outweigh the value of the designated site at national and local level. Benefits should be of a long-term interest and sufficient to override the value of the site or harm to the natural heritage interest.

However, many of our wildlife, habitats and features of natural heritage importance are not confined to designated sites, and PPS 2 recognises that by also protecting non-designated landscape features, wetlands and long-established woodlands. This shows the inclusive nature of the PPS. It goes across the hierarchy of designation from that required under European requirements through to non-designated landscapes such as wetlands, woodlands and trees.

PPS 2 also contains policy provisions for development in areas of outstanding natural beauty. All development proposals in those designated areas will have to meet special design criteria. That will minimise the effects on the distinctive character of the protected landscapes. The policy complements that in PPS 21 on sustainable development in the countryside and the accompanying supplementary planning guidance 'Building on Tradition: A Sustainable Design Guide for the Northern Ireland Countryside.'

I believe that the policy provides the necessary protection for natural heritage areas that are designated by environmental legislation and those deemed to be of particular importance to Northern Ireland. It does so in a way that allows appropriate development to take place subject to necessary mitigation. It is further evidence of my desire to use planning to facilitate growth and to protect and enhance our valuable natural heritage. Although I use those words cautiously, and nothing too much should be read into them, this planning policy statement captures the three pillars — avoid, mitigate and compensate — when it comes to areas of heritage value that have designations. That is what the PPS does. I hope that, in going forward, other parties, other Ministers and all of government recognise that that is the way to have a proper planning system.

Ms Lo (The Chairperson of the Committee for the Environment): I very much welcome the Minister's announcement of enhanced protection for our natural heritage. We are so blessed in Northern Ireland with such a rich natural and built heritage. As the Minister is aware, UNESCO has recommended that we need legal protection for our world heritage site. I put in an amendment as an Alliance member, but it was not supported. Will the Minister consider legislating to support our only world heritage site in Northern Ireland?

Mr Attwood: I thank the Chair for her comments and for all the work of the Environment Committee through the past term. She was right to use the word "blessed". Whether what we enjoy is God-given or a consequence of other reasons, we are blessed, and that word rightly acknowledges the scale, wonder and beauty of the heritage all around us.

In the debate last week, I read into the record — I did not even read all of what I wanted to into the record — how we already protect heritage sites and, in particular, how we have a suite of measures, policy and practice that protects the world heritage site. Nobody said that that was inadequate, save what the Member said about her proposal and the law on the world heritage site.

There is a scale of measures that already protect. That is why development in the world heritage site and in the area of outstanding value is only allowed in exceptional circumstances. The proof of that has been what has happened with the planning history of that part of Northern Ireland. At a meeting last Thursday, I put my issues around the world heritage site and the conduct of UNESCO and its advisers the International Union for Conservation of Nature (IUCN) to Mr Simon Jenkins, the chair of the National Trust. Although he made the point that his view is that there is a requirement for further law, that point has not yet prevailed with the Governments of Northern Ireland, Scotland or Wales or the London Government. That argument has not prevailed to date, but, in a long and probing meeting in which I asked all the hard questions of the National Trust, Mr Jenkins indicated to me very clearly that, whatever about the legal issue, in his view, the planning application on lands adjacent to the world heritage site is now settled.

Mr Hamilton: I welcome the Minister's statement, at least the bits that were in the printed version. I am disappointed that the Minister is not making his statement on PPS 21 today. He has been working on that for two years, and many of us had hoped that it would be here before now. If the rumour mill around this place is right, I hope that the Minister has the time to get it printed as a written statement and into Members' pigeon holes before the end of this week.

In the Minister's statement, he made reference to flexibility being built into the policy to allow for development where that proposed development outweighs the value of the designated site at national and local level. Following on from what the Chair asked, what criteria does the Minister see being applied to such circumstances that would determine whether it would outweigh the national or the local designation?

Mr Attwood: I thank the Member for his question. As I have tried to demonstrate even in the past 20 minutes, I have always thought that you should try to add a bit of colour to what otherwise might be seen as somewhat dry statements to the House and even add some political comment that might be timely and cutting, or not, depending on how you might view it. The measure of the best politicians is to not rely upon the rumour mill for anything but to rely upon the evidence and the facts. We will see what the evidence and the facts are whenever evidence and facts begin to emerge.

The answer to his question is that, as Patrick Casement said in the CNCC statement this morning, there are now policy tests on each and every designation from the range that we have in the North. Whether that is the highest designation of European and Ramsar sites, sites of species or nature conservation importance, national or local, habitat species or areas of outstanding natural beauty, the tests are all outlined in pages 11 to 17 of the PPS. I do not intend to go through all of those, but those are the tests, and any application of a development plan must be judged against each and all of those tests. So, to answer the Member's question, when it comes to any one or other application, that application will have to be judged against the test that is outlined in respect of the area of designation in which that application is located. Therefore, there will be various tests at various times on various locations against the various standards in NH 1 to NH 6 respectively. In respect of the highest designation, as the decisions that were made on the Giant's Causeway or the Runkerry proposal indicate, those tests are exhaustive and extensive. Only on the far side of all the tests, was, in exceptional circumstances, a decision to approve given.

Mr Boylan: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Cuirim fáilte roimh ráiteas an Aire. I welcome the Minister's statement. What European regulations or measures have influenced this PPS, and what extra protection will it mean for our natural heritage?

Mr Attwood: As I indicated, the previous approach of the 1997 PPS 2 was to focus on nature conservation. By definition, nature conservation is a limited term. The purpose of this PPS is to broaden policy from conservation to heritage generally. It looks at six different streams of heritage when it comes to designations in the North and what planning policy should or should not apply to each.

To answer the Member's point about EU law, when it comes to issues of heritage, there are four directives, two of which are particularly relevant and two of which are relevant in the round. The first two directives are in respect of birds, which deal with designations known as special protection areas (SPAs), and habitats, where designations are known as special areas of conservation (SACs). Together those are known as Natura 2000 sites. They are the highest designation. However, in informing planning decisions, two other directives are relevant, namely the marine strategy framework directive and — the fourth has gone out of my head. There is also the Ramsar wetlands convention. Those are the highest designations. Those are the streams of European law that inform the thinking behind this PPS. In addition, there is national law: the Wildlife Order, and the Wildlife and Natural Environment Act. There is also local legislation that informs some other planning policy guidance. When you take all that together — the European, domestic and national legislation — you come up with all the law that is at the heart of this planning policy statement.

Mrs D Kelly: I thank the Minister for his statement. Minister, I wonder whether you could give us some indication of your assessment of the scope to further develop and take advantage of the tourist potential of our natural and built heritage.

Mr Attwood: I was slightly worried there because, normally, Dolores is to my left, and now she is behind me. The truth of the matter is that Dolores is normally in front of me, because I am following her.

In answer to her question, I refer to this policy statement and the previous policy statement that came before the House in respect of tourism. If you take both of those, they assert very strongly that there is a wonder of heritage here that, in law, policy and practice, we have to protect when it comes to planning decisions and development plans. On the other hand, the tourism statement says that there are opportunities for sustainable and high-quality development in settlements and rural areas. PPS 16 outlines and scopes what that might look at. Ultimately, however, whatever the policy and the law might be, people have to break through and recognise that you can protect our heritage — we must, because it is a big part of the character of our lives — and, at the same time, positively develop that heritage. That argument is beginning to be more fully understood. I think that it is an argument that was understood by the Tourist Board and the councils that manage heritage assets such as beaches.

More people are beginning to realise that, more than ever, we have a great opportunity to grow our tourism to a £1 billion a year industry. At the heart of that is the economic driver of our historic environment. The Department produced a report about 12 months ago, which was adequate but not spectacular in content. If you want to see a spectacular report, look at the sister report that was produced at around the same time by the Office of Public Works in the South on the economic benefit of our historic environment. I think that that narrative is growing. The consequence of that is that the Executive now have to direct resources. We had a report yesterday from the Finance Minister on June monitoring. Useful money was given to DOE to deal with waste crime, environmental crime, dereliction and council funding. That is very welcome, and I want to put that on the record. It was a more generous outcome from monitoring rounds than I have seen in my time at the Executive table. However, the strategic shift has to be made in the September/October monitoring. Will a heritage-led development fund be created that will do a number of heritage-led development projects this year and next? That will be proof positive, and a good answer to the Member's question.

Mr Deputy Speaker: I encourage Members and Ministers to address their remarks through the Chair. Microphones are positioned to ensure that what is said to the Chair is picked up by Hansard and by other Members.

Mr Elliott: I will certainly try to do that. The Minister's statement indicates that flexibility has been built into the policy to allow for development. Will that flexibility extend to those economic or enterprise zones that were proposed in the Planning Bill last week, power over which goes to the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister? Could that be in conflict with the planning policy statement outlined by the Minister today?

Mr Attwood: I thank the Member for his question. I indicated in the debate on Monday of last week that there was a model completely like what has been proposed in the amendments from the DUP and Sinn Féin in the economic zone. It is known as a "simplified planning zone". It is built into the body of the Planning Act (Northern Ireland) 2011. Article 38 of that Act provides that, when it comes to simplified planning zones, respect must be shown for the various designations, some of which I have referred to today. I put that on the record. It is unusual for a Minister to read into the record the legal advice that he has received, because that is privileged information and, if you like, I have waived my privilege to that advice, which is addressed to me. However, I put that on the record. At no time in the debates of Monday or Tuesday last week did anyone in the House contradict that advice. Certainly, no one from the ranks of the DUP or Sinn Féin contradicted it. Since last Monday or Tuesday, now that a week has passed, despite the comments that have been made on those amendments, I have not heard a word from other parties contradicting the advice that I gave last week. No one said that you could propose or pass law in this Chamber in respect of economic zones that deleted or redacted out of the law the obligations that we have under European law and its designations. I have not heard anyone, at any time — in this Chamber or outside it — from a political, legal or any other background, rebut what I said last week.

I listened closely to what the First Minister said in reply to a question on economic zones. I find it curious that the First Minister somehow wants to portray those who want to do right by law, politics and Europe as somehow doing wrong by those who are out of work. I rebut that. I resent that remark because I would not say to the First Minister, at any time, that he is hostile to the interests of those who are out of work, and he should not visit those sorts of comments on anyone else in any other party. Equally curious is the fact that the First Minister, when he was given an opportunity to say that my legal advice, my opinion and the opinions of all those who disagree with the First Minister and deputy First Minister about the law on this matter are wrong, did not take it. I think the case is closed.

Mr Weir: Returning to the statement itself —

Mr Allister: That was a year ago.

Mr Weir: I hear some heckling from a sedentary position. However, I return to the statement. I am disappointed, as my colleague is, that we will hear from the Minister only once today, rather than twice. The Minister makes specific reference in the third-last paragraph to protection made available to non-designated landscape features. In particular, he mentions wetlands and established woodlands. Will he expand on the protection that will be made available to them?

Mr Attwood: I thank the Member. I am disappointed that I was unable to have the First Stage of the Local Government Bill yesterday. I have disappointments as well about what is not before us.

Mr Weir: It is a house of sorrows.

12.00 noon

Mr Attwood: It could well be. I am disappointed that we did not have the First Stage and the Second Stage of two pieces of legislation, on local government and road traffic, before the end of the session. That was despite good efforts. There seems to have been some blockage somewhere: even a blockage, it seems to me, in respect of local government around flags, of all things. I will not go back into that, because I commented on that yesterday. So if there is disappointment, let us acknowledge that there is a lot of disappointment. Yes, I had to pull the PPS 21 statement, because I got it late yesterday. I do not mind rewriting questions for oral answer, statements or letters. I have made a practice of it over the past while. I had to rewrite the PPS 21 statement because, in my view, it did not address all the issues in the draft that I thought Members legitimately wanted addressed. I hope that that will be corrected shortly.

There will be protections, and not just for ancient and long-established woodland. That will be of some interest to Members from Derry in respect of Prehen Wood, where I hope to do something in the very near future. However, there are proposals for woodlands and trees. Should woodlands, which, I think, is the sixth element of the advice in the relevant section of the PPS, come under threat from development proposals, my Department can consider tree preservation orders for the protection for those woodlands. In other words, it can protect trees and woods. That may happen anyway, but this planning policy gives further cover for that outcome.

Lord Morrow: The Minister's statement reads very well. I wonder whether he agrees with me that protection and enforcement go hand in hand. We have had some experiences of late where the Department was alerted some five years ago about issues before it took action. What future does the Minister see for the policy that he speaks about today, if it is going to take that length of time in the future to enforce infringements of his policy?

Mr Attwood: I thank the Member for his question. I agree absolutely one hundred per cent with his opening remarks, which were, essentially, when it comes to planning, you need to have good planning, the right protections and robust enforcement. I agree with that; the flip side of good planning is hard enforcement in a proportionate manner going after the worst offenders. For what it is worth, I have tried to develop that narrative in this job over the past couple of years, and there is some evidence that, on the enforcement side, matters have been escalated. I would like to think that Members would accept that.

As I said before, there have been more urgent works notices served in the past two years than had been served in the previous 40 years. Why was that? The answer is that there were listed buildings at risk, and we decided to go after those in control of those buildings to get them to protect those assets for the wider public interest. We served a completion notice, something that had never been served before, on the Stand Hotel in Portstewart. Beyond that, completion notices will be served on a number of other properties that have been identified by Planning Service. At the moment, conversations are ongoing between those in control of those properties in advance of the completion notices being served in order to drive forward the issue of enforcement.

Action is being taken against illegal car park operators, around which there has been some publicity — indeed, there have been some legal proceedings in recent days in that regard. In one case, I instructed counsel to ensure that we resisted an application for interim relief in relation to a car park at the International Airport where the Planning Appeals Commission had recently found in our favour, and that demonstrates a greater profile of enforcement than there has been heretofore. That is why I made the argument, and the Finance Minister accepted the argument, that an in-year monitoring allocation of £1.5 million should be put into the environmental crime unit to deal with fuel laundering and waste crime, which the Member touched on.

The Member asked a fair question. If something was flagged up in 2009, what is the story since 2009? I think that is an entirely reasonable question. That is why I have appointed Chris Mills, the former chief executive of the Welsh Environment Agency, and I have directed him to interrogate, in a fearless and robust way, what has happened in the waste side of the Environment Agency to identify what was known, what was not known and why was it not known. We will get to the bottom of all that, and we will tell the full story of all that. I have to point out to Lord Morrow that all that happened when there were three DUP Ministers in the space of four years.

Putting that aside, I agree with the Member in respect of enforcement. Subject to further advice, it is likely that I will appoint Chris Mills, not just to do the exercise on what happened on the waste side over the last period of time, but to look at the planning side. There were issues around planning and planning enforcement in and around the relevant areas of land in the north-west, and if there is anything to be discovered in that regard, in a robust and fearless way, we will do so. Ultimately, though, actions taken against the landowners in the north-west and against the waste management facility in the north-west send out a message that organised crime needs to be on its watch for enforcement. It is of some note that those who ran that waste management facility closed their business down.

Mr Dallat: I have listened very carefully to the Minister's statement and welcome it. Does the Minister agree that, in the distant past, much of our natural and built heritage was systematically destroyed under the guise of job creation and tourism? Does PPS 2 mean that we will not have any more crazy proposals, such as turning Knock Golf Club into a building site?

Mr Attwood: In our experience and the experience of Europe, the reason why we needed the directives, be they on habitats, birds, water or anything else, was that although these were huge natural assets that we enjoyed, we were not doing enough to protect them. That is the wider story of the growing threat of climate change and global warming. There has to be a standard. That is what PPS 16 is about: it is about sustainable, high-quality development. I think that you can have sustainable, high-quality development that is fully respectful of the heritage, and any adverse impacts can be sufficiently mitigated. Indeed, some decisions have been made, but because of the very stringent environmental conditions laid down in planning permission, you will actually have better management of land. For example, in the Runkerry decision, there were 21 robust planning conditions. One of those dealt with the management of woodland on that site. As you will know, there is a small area of woodland in part of the Runkerry site. I have walked that site and have gone through that woodland, and it is falling in on itself because of inadequate management, so we said that there has to be a proper management plan for the woodland on that site.

I could give you multiple other examples of how planning conditions can, in the context of sustainable, high-quality development, protect our heritage. I hope that that is the message that people, including friends of Ms Lo, are hearing.

Mr Anderson: I thank the Minister for his statement. How do you see PPS 2 sitting with PPS 16 that you referred to on tourism? Do you agree that there is a need to maximise our tourism potential at every opportunity as one way of growing our economy? I just wonder how those two policies will sit with each other.

Mr Attwood: PPS 2 and PPS 16 have been recently endorsed by the Executive, and I must acknowledge that Ministers have interrogated those two planning policy statements in some depth, and they have been changed because of that interrogation. The fact that Ministers, particularly the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment and myself, as the Environment Minister, have signed off on them, suggests that both of us recognise that PPS 2 and PPS 16 are entirely consistent with the objective of the pathway through the planning process to have sustainable high-quality development on one hand and tourist numbers, jobs and increased spend on the other. Otherwise, we would not be signing off on those PPSs. So, the answer to your question is that if we do not have PPS 2 and PPS 16, we will put in jeopardy that which we value. By having PPS 2 and PPS 16, we can protect what we have, as we enhance what we have. That is the pathway forward in order to maximise the economic return and that is a pathway that has been endorsed by the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, as well as by all Ministers.

Mr Allister: In light of last week's notified power grab on the Department, would it be right to conclude that policies

3, 4 and 6 in PPS 2 could be ignored, superseded and, essentially, abrogated in any process of economic zone in which the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister (OFMDFM) took upon itself the powers that it intends? Is that the actual situation?

Mr Attwood: I have never used the words “power grab” in respect of what happened last week. I think it is more eloquent and chilling to say bad politics, bad law and bad government. That is my view, because I think that that captures not only the fact that there is bad politics about the amendments that were passed last week with regard to taking to another part of government functions that it is not fit to fulfil. Such action represents bad government, bad law and bad politics, and that is why I use that phrase.

As I indicated to Mr Elliott, as I indicated last week and as I will confirm now, in my view, and I have got legal advice to this effect, in taking forward economic planning, be it what the FM and DFM think they are going to get up to, what I have done or what the councils might do in the future, you cannot ride a coach and horses through European designations, European directives and European requirements. You may wish it otherwise; I do not, and they may. You cannot delete that requirement from our domestic law, and that is what they did. If, in making economic assessments, you delete the references and requirements under European law —

Mr Hamilton: [Interruption.]

Mr Attwood: Sorry?

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr Attwood: If you make economic planning and ignore European designations, it follows that you ignore those elements — the various planning policies outlined in the planning policy statement — referred to by Mr Allister in his question.

I found it somewhat inconsistent, contradictory and mildly bizarre that, last Thursday, the Executive passed a planning policy statement that builds into our law and planning practice respect for designations, but, on Tuesday, deleted references to the same things in our primary legislation. Can Peter Robinson and Martin McGuinness explain to me why if it is good enough on a Thursday it is not good enough on a Tuesday?

Mr Agnew: I thank the Minister for his statement. It is timely that he brings the policy on the protection of the environment at a time when diggers at the back of the Building are ripping up trees during nesting season, right outside the Green Party office.

In the statement on the policy, the Minister referred to giving assurances on European designations. Has he been given any advice on the impact of potential economic planning zones on areas that have domestic designations?

Mr Attwood: First, I note what the Member said about the trees. Yesterday, I enquired into the matter because my office also overlooks the ongoing works. There are no tree-protection orders in respect of the trees that were removed. This Building is not in a conservation zone. Consequently, there are no restrictions on the removal of trees, but I note what the Member says. If I had thought that there was some reason for me to go to the Assembly Commission, which is why I asked those questions yesterday morning, I would have done so. Two or three semi-mature trees have been removed. Let me put it this way: they were not removed with any delicacy. They certainly were not removed to be replanted elsewhere. That is how things transpired.

The Member's question is a good one. The legal advice that I got in respect of the proposed economic zones captures both domestic law under the Northern Ireland Act 1998 and our European and international obligations. I need to double-check the answer to that particular question, and I will certainly do so.

Committee Business

Committee for Regional Development: Better Use of Public and Community Sector Funds for the Delivery of Transport Options

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Business Committee has agreed to allow up to one hour and 30 minutes for the debate. The proposer will have 15 minutes to propose the motion and 15 minutes to make a winding-up speech. All other Members who wish to speak will have five minutes.

Mr Lynch (The Deputy Chairperson of the Committee for Regional Development): I beg to move

That this Assembly approves the report of the Committee for Regional Development on its inquiry into the better use of public and community sector funds for the delivery of transport options; and calls on the Minister for Regional Development, in conjunction with his Executive colleagues and relevant bodies, to implement the recommendations.

Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. With your permission, Mr Deputy Speaker, I would like to thank all of the witnesses who provided evidence to the Committee during its evidence sessions and those who received us and gave us so much of their time on study visits to Dublin, Glasgow, Exeter, Cardiff and Arnhem. I thank our researcher, Hansard and, of course, our Committee team. I would also like to thank the Committee bursary student, Brian Mahon, for his work and wish him well with his studies and future career.

Cuirim fáilte roimh an deis an rún a chur roimh an Tionól inniu. I welcome the opportunity to move the motion that is before the House. I welcome it as the first opportunity to present to the House the Committee's assessment of the potential for integrated transport in the North of Ireland.

We can all cite examples about the visually apparent duplication of transport services across three Departments, namely, the Department of Education; the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (DHSSPS); and the Department for Regional Development (DRD), through the current public transport provider, Translink. On many occasions, we have seen buses from all three congregated on the same roads, travelling along the same routes at the same time. Colleagues from rural constituencies will, undoubtedly, tell the House about 16-seater buses with, at the most, one or two people on them, travelling behind Translink buses with a similar number of people onboard.

All of that is for the bargain price of over £200 million from the public purse each year. To put it another way, if we go to a five-year mandate, £1 billion will have been spent on providing public transport in the North of Ireland. That does not include the capital for providing each of the fleets that are maintained in the public sector. That is just the cost of moving people from one point to another. I am sure that the House will agree that, given the tight fiscal situation that we face today, including the further cuts announced last week, the use of transportation facilities that pay for themselves without additional and unnecessary funding is essential.

Transport Scotland defined integrated transport as:

"A mechanism where departments of an organisation or various organisations jointly plan and deliver transport, sharing resources (vehicles/drivers/staff) and procurement to optimise their use to meet service demand, and enhance the delivery of transport to appropriate users."

During the inquiry, the Committee sought evidence of co-operation between Departments but found none. Instead, it was faced with a barrage of excuses to support the case for doing nothing — regulations do not allow for it; different contracts for different drivers; and some buses need one type of door, while others need a different one. Even the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations (TUPE) were cited as a reason. "Barriers to integration" became the buzz words during Committee evidence sessions. The only obvious evidence presented to the Committee was that each Department, each trust and each board just wanted to revert to their own individual silos and protect what they believed to be theirs. There was no desire, no willingness and no appetite for integration.

There were some exceptions to the experience that I outlined. As is often the case, volunteers in our communities wanted to see a change. Community transport associations were very vocal in wanting to extend their services, be it through Dial-a-Lift or Door-2-Door. They wanted to link their often excluded communities into the core network and provide a real alternative that complemented the existing services. However, their frustrations were also evident, particularly with the proposed changes to the 10B operator licences, which would see many of their volunteer drivers unable to continue providing a key service in socially excluded communities.

The Committee for Regional Development is fully supportive of their calls to have that problem resolved urgently. Committee members have seen excellent examples of how similar licence arrangements operate in the Netherlands and Scotland, including the collection of fare-paying passengers along agreed routes. This is a regulatory matter that can be easily resolved. We recommend that the Department for Regional Development and the Department of the Environment liaise on the review of the 10B operating licence, with a view to expanding the potential for community transport delivery of scheduled, fare-paying routes and other public procurement exercises, such as the delivery of school meals. Efforts also need to be made to ensure that that important provision is utilised to its full effect.

Although the community transport associations stated their opposition to changes to the regulations governing their licences and offered solutions as to how it could be achieved, others put forward compliance with the legislation as an excuse to do nothing. The Committee, however, does not accept that. We are of the view that, if the legislation as it currently exists is preventing meaningful integration, it must be changed, and we have the ability to do so.

The Committee recommends, therefore, that the relevant Departments review their respective legislative and regulatory processes to ensure that vehicles and services can be used for a wider range of services than that for which they are currently deployed. That should include the ability to charge a fare or fee for use of the service. The Committee does not see why a school bus, for example, should drop off students and then be prohibited from collecting passengers rather than returning back to an empty depot.

In addition, the Committee believes that the Department, in conjunction with the Community Transport Association (CTA), should examine the potential for realignment of current services in preparation for the expansion of the range of services to be provided under the recommended 10B licence. The Committee is mindful that different community transport providers have different skill sets and that there is scope for integration within the sector. It is important, therefore, for the Department and the Community Transport Association to assess what capacity-building is required to operate an enhanced service. This should not be so bureaucratic as to deter volunteers from providing their services, but it should be sufficient to ensure that users of the services are protected and that all statutory obligations, such as roadworthiness, are catered for.

One major weakness identified by the Committee was how much it costs to move a person from one place to another. The level of control over transport budgets varied significantly across and within those providing the service. The Department for Regional Development (DRD) and the Department of Education are very clear on what their budgets are, but that was less evident in DHSSPS and the trusts, where provision of transport was almost seen as incidental to the operation of hospitals and other clinics. When Members spoke to transport organisations such as the National Transport Authority in Dublin and the Strathclyde Partnership for Transport, the message delivered was that transport can be truly integrated only when budgets are centralised. There was the potential to achieve that had the Department implemented the agency model identified during the transport reform process. However, that model is no longer available.

The Committee remains of the view that efforts should be made to integrate transport budgets. Accordingly, it recommends that the Minister for Regional Development commences formal negotiation with his Executive colleagues to identify the best model for the funding of transport across the entire sector. The Committee further recommends that the Budget review group and the performance and efficiency delivery unit (PEDU) undertake an urgent study on the centralisation of the transport budget to aid and inform the Minister and the Executive in their consideration of the matter.

The Committee is aware that the integration of transport provision has many complexities. That was made evident when representatives from the Committee attended a seminar on integrated transport organised by the Passenger Transport Executive Group in London. The seminar provided the Committee with a great many insights into the potential, and pitfalls, of integrated transport. Case studies of pilot projects provided many solutions to the complex problems and, in some cases, raised even more. However, it was evident that the pilot projects were a very effective vehicle for testing the concept of integration and were necessary to bring about successful change. We will hear from the Minister later, no doubt, about the two pilot projects that are at different stages of being tested and evaluated: the one in my constituency is Easilink in Fermanagh, which provides services to Altnagelvin hospital; and the other is in Dungannon. The Committee has concerns about the latter. The pilot does not include the integration of the health fleet because, as officials from the Department indicated, it does not have a large enough presence in the area. It strikes me as strange that you would pilot an integration project in an area where the fleet cannot be integrated. Effectively, the pilot is looking at the integration of the school and core networks, which happens daily during the school year.

We hear anecdotal evidence of the refusal to look at integrating special needs customers and those with disabilities because of their particular circumstances and because of bus design. Although we fully appreciate the specific care needs that special needs children and those with a disability have, we cannot accept that those individuals can never be integrated into our transport provision.

12.30 pm

The Committee saw how the Strathclyde Partnership for Transport worked with local special educational needs (SEN) and health providers to ensure that children, many of whom shared the same classrooms, could travel to school with friends on specially designed buses. We heard how SEN schools asked the partnership to develop training schemes that would provide training on the use of public transport to children as preparation for when they left the school. We heard feedback from those pupils that stated that they felt they were no longer socially excluded and that the stigma of having separate buses was removed, so there were very positive personal and non-monetary benefits. It is therefore important that we do not lose this potential during the pilot project. With that in mind, the Committee recommends that the pilot project should look at the potential for full integration of those fleets in the test area, including that of the health fleets. The pilot scheme should also test whether there is a need for a redesign of specific elements of the fleet to allow for a better integration of able and less-able customers.

I will now address the issue of the imbalance between the departmental budget allocation for roads against that of public transport. As we have reported, a number of organisations considered the budget allocation to be in contradiction of the Programme for Government objective on sustainable transport and could not see how the necessary modal shift could be made from cars to public transport, something that would also be greatly aided if an effective integrated transport system was in place. At the commencement of the inquiry, there were no professionally qualified transport planners employed in the public transport sector. The Committee notes that the Department has now seconded one on a short- to medium-term contract: indeed, the individual subsequently seconded to the Department was one of the first witnesses to give evidence to the Committee.

The Committee believes that there needs to be a collaborative approach to the planning and funding of transport. The Committee further believes that, in order to achieve a substantial degree of modal shift, the end-user needs to be consulted in order that the "when, where and how" of people wishing to travel can be understood. We recommend, therefore, that the Minister undertake a major travel-proofing, mapping and identification of appropriate transport options of customer transport needs in the North of Ireland as soon as is practicable. In addition, we would ask that departmental budgets are re-examined to identify coverage for the secondment of additional professionally qualified transport planners to undertake this exercise.

The Committee has made other recommendations that will no doubt be covered during the course of this debate. As Deputy Chair, I welcome and look forward to the comments that Members will make today and hope that they can support the motion. I support the report and the motion.

Mr Easton: DRD made a presentation to the Committee on the pilot integration scheme in Dungannon on 15 May 2013, during which departmental representatives spoke of barriers to the delivery of the pilot scheme such as different drivers, accessibility of vehicles and insurance requirements, public service vehicle (PSV) licence requirements for bus drivers and collecting the general public for hire and reward. A major hurdle to integration is those who hold the budgets. A great deal of reference has been made to the budgets during the oral evidence sessions and to the fact that Northern Ireland cannot be compared to local government provision in the remainder of the UK. In addition, transport in England, Wales and Scotland has been deregulated for a number of years.

A major barrier to integration is the attitude of departmental officials in the three main Departments with transport responsibilities, who appear to be embedded in the respective departmental silos and are actively reluctant to accept suggestions for change. Examples of this include a new approach for regional transportation that will shape transport investment from 2015. It is isolated and insular to DRD alone and does not incorporate transport in other Executive Departments.

The Northern Ireland Audit Office report of June 2005, titled 'Education and Health and Social Services Transport', concluded:

"there is scope for the development of a greater consensus on how the transport assets available within both sectors might be more effectively coordinated to improve operational efficiency and enhance the services provided to customers."

DHSSPS officials told the Committee that their response was to point out the constraints on doing anything in the Audit Office. Department of Education officials, in oral evidence and follow-up correspondence, referred to a downtime survey that indicated that there was little scope for the sharing of vehicles. That is despite the survey looking only at weekdays and during school terms. Other excuses provided included TUPE, timetabling, drivers' contracts and child protection, even though the majority of schoolchildren's travel on normal Translink services takes place during the school day, the evening and at the weekend. The Committee is content that there are no real barriers to integration that would prevent progress along that path.

Through the careful targeting of its study visits, the Committee has been able to see examples of how the perceived barriers have been overcome, such as the designs for a front-loaded bus that caters for able and less able passengers, the leasing of buses to community transport organisations and the scheduling and collection of tariff-paying passengers in remote rural areas by voluntary drivers. The Committee also believes that a major attitude change is required at senior level right across the Departments, trusts and boards with responsibility for transport. That should commence immediately.

The new approach to regional transportation was launched in March 2012 and set three high-level aims covering the economy, society and the environment for the future development of transport. Those are driven by the Executive's Programme for Government and are supported by 12 strategic transport objectives. The new approach included a new policy prioritisation framework to assess the policy fit of what to do and to help reach a better decision on transportation investment by identifying the schemes that will best achieve the set out strategic objectives. The Department has been developing that framework in liaison with other Departments, including the Department of Health and the Department of Education. The Department will continue to work with key stakeholders in the development of the framework to ensure that the desired policy outcomes of the Executive are achieved.

Mr Dallat: The study of public transport and its development is a fascinating subject that knows no limits or bounds. It occupies the time of teachers and pupils as well as enthusiasts across the country as they learn of the stagecoach and especially the mail coach, which could deliver letters to Dublin faster 150 years ago. There is keen interest in the navvies who built the canals and those who first introduced steam engines on to our roads, who had to carry a red flag to warn of the danger. Everyone wants to know about the era of the steam trains: Stephenson's Rocket, the Flying Scotsman and our own history of Irish railways, which brought freedom of travel to people on a scale unimaginable.

Today, there is no such excitement about public transport and its development. Let us hope that this inquiry will bring a new stimulus and perhaps a renaissance that will get people excited again about the way we travel. The Committee certainly did not restrict its travel during the inquiry to discover what could be done to develop an integrated form of transport that would address the needs of people rather than the whims of those who currently run what can only be described as a system that is a little bit disjointed. It is costly to run and fails to meet the needs of many of the people who rely on public transport.

Much of what is recommended in the report should have happened, and it has happened in some of the places that the Committee members visited. The pilot study currently taking place in the Dungannon and Cookstown area will hopefully chart the way forward for an integrated public transport system that is fit for purpose and less wasteful in the way in which it operates. As was indicated by the Deputy Chairman, to make that happen new legislation will be necessary, as it was all those years ago when Stephenson's Rocket made its first journey from Stockton to Darlington, as it was when the red flag Act was legislated for when the first steam engines began speeding through the towns and villages at the breakneck speed of 4 mph, and as it has been for every new development in public transport. Today, with new technology, there is no reason why we cannot make better use of that technology to tailor public transport needs to the individual. Indeed, we saw good examples of that in Dublin and Glasgow, where they make use of the call centre model.

We need a commitment from those who hold the reins of power over a disjointed public transport system that falls far short of what we could have if only there was the creative wisdom and enthusiasm of our predecessors: the men and women who built the canals and the railways, pioneered the stagecoaches and brought travel within the reach of many people who had not travelled outside their own village before. Today, the scene is different, but the issues are similar. Many older people have free travel, but what use is that if the transport system is not tailored to their needs? That is one of the questions that this inquiry addresses, but, again, it can happen only if the Executive have the commitment and the determination to make it happen.

The report refers to the needs of less able customers. Although I have mentioned this last, it should be first in the list of priorities. Public transport has made strides to accommodate people with disabilities, but we fall far short of what is possible. In Glasgow, for example, the same buses can accommodate able-bodied people alongside those who use a wheelchair. That is real progress and is one of the fingerposts towards a fully integrated public transport system.

There has been a lot of speculation around this place about the future of some Ministers: I hope that the current Minister for Regional Development remains in his post. He has shown a lot of interest in this subject, and I believe that he is the person who will deliver.

Mr Hussey: I welcome the opportunity to speak on the motion. I apologise to the Deputy Chairman for not being here for the start of his speech. Unfortunately, I was at another event in the other House.

Unlike the previous Member who spoke, I do not remember the red flags or the steam engines. I hardly remember the trains in Omagh before they were taken away. However, I am delighted with the support that he gave to our Minister, who, I am sure, will feel confident in his position until the next election. [Interruption.] I did not see the whites of his eyes; I am looking at the back of his head.

The title of the report is fairly self-explanatory. It is about the better integration of services, which, in turn, could lead to a better passenger experience and, ultimately, to greater efficiencies and savings. That is something that the Committee, the Assembly and, no doubt, the Minister would agree on.

Criticism of Executive Departments working with a silo mentality is nothing new. Sometimes, Departments claim that they have no choice because of their budgetary arrangements, but that is not an excuse. If two Departments are trying to do the same thing, parallel to each other, that is not the best use of public money. That is a point that was also found during the Committee's work on the inquiry.

One of the first debates that I brought to the Assembly was a call on the Education Minister to carry out a root-and-branch review of home-to-school transport. That followed a number of deeply disappointing failures by the Department in the west Tyrone area, particularly the Strabane area. Unsurprisingly, Minister O'Dowd does not appear to have given any attention to the problems raised in that motion. Therefore, is it really surprising that the same old problems are still occurring? That is an example of a Minister failing to act even after being mandated to do so by the Assembly.

Another point raised in that motion was the collaboration between the education and library boards and Translink. Both have their responsibilities, with Translink taking the lead role in the service. Indeed, the arrangement works quite well. However, there is still duplication, with buses running almost identical routes, often below capacity, and some households still being missed.

Of course, it is not just the education and library board buses and Translink that could co-operate on home-to-school transport but all types of transport, whether it is community buses or even taxis, on which a heavy reliance is still placed in a number of circumstances, especially in rural areas such as west Tyrone. That is a perfect example of an area where greater collaboration between Departments would be beneficial.

Although education would be the obvious area for collaboration, our health service also relies significantly on bus transport. Local community buses play an absolutely vital role in transporting patients, especially the elderly, where other means of transport are often not available. A prime example of that is in the Omagh to Enniskillen area where people from Omagh are attempting to get to the new South West Acute Hospital.

The Minister and his Department will shortly implement a pilot in the Dungannon area, and that is to be welcomed. I hope that it tests all the opportunities for better integration. That pilot is the opportunity for DRD to work with the local stakeholders, the SELB, the Health Department and trusts, as well as those bodies with responsibilities within the Department. However, I urge them to ensure not only that all organisations are properly consulted on an ongoing basis during the pilot but that the Department's expectations of them are made clear to them. The pilot will not deliver maximum benefit unless all bodies take part with equal esteem for it. I, therefore, ask the Minister to detail what steps his Department will take to ensure that it gets the necessary buy-in to make it applicable. I hope that the exercise will ultimately reveal enough opportunities for a joined-up approach to justify it being rolled out across the Province.

I am in no doubt that some aspects of our system, such as home-to-school transport, are already integrated to a significant degree, which is welcome, but the fact that one end of it is working does not excuse the changes that are needed at the other. The report has highlighted areas where there may still be scope for further integration. No doubt, the Minister and his officials will have read those with interest, and I agree that some are more relevant than others. I wish the Minister well in his efforts to deliver a better, more integrated bus transport system, and I am delighted that the SDLP has secured your place in the Assembly until the end of this period. [Laughter.]

Mr Dickson: I too fully support the recommendations in the report and ask the Minister, who will obviously be here for a very long time, to commit to implementing those forthwith, now that he has the time.

The report confirms the need for a more integrated transport network to better serve all the people of Northern Ireland. As others have said, the report highlights a disjoint in transport planning that results in duplication and overlapping of transport expenditure by all other Departments. That disjoint means that the Assembly has an enormous bill for transport without any Department taking consideration of effective and efficient delivery.

I ask the Minister to get together with the Minister of Health, whoever he may be, and the Minister of Education — I think we probably know that he will be here for some time — to introduce effective transport planning to ensure that there is a more efficient transport system that will provide an effective service to meet the needs of people across Northern Ireland. By centralising the transport planning function and with better integrated use of budgets, we genuinely have the opportunity to deliver a more person-centred transport system that will be more efficient, but we need to know where, why, when and how people travel. By planning transport to meet the needs of the public, we can create that modal shift. We can develop a public transport system using a mix of service providers, and we can reduce expenditure by making the best use of resources and assets.

If we had the capacity for the Department of Education's yellow buses to bring rural dwellers into larger towns with schoolchildren or for community transport to support access to hospital appointments, either through a direct connection to the hospital or by linking people to the main public transport network, we would have an integrated public transport system that was working for Northern Ireland. Although I welcome the pilot that is ongoing at the moment, my belief is that it is not sufficiently ambitious and more work needs to be done in order to develop it.

In order to progress an integrated transport system, the report highlights the need for clarity and confirmation on bus licensing. As a matter of urgency, I ask the Minister to confirm the role and future delivery of services by community transport providers and to ensure, along with the Minister of the Environment, that new bus licensing will not exclude or prevent the community and voluntary sectors from having an active and much-needed role in an integrated system.

The ongoing saga of bus licensing is creating a barrier to future transport planning. Regional Development Committee and the voluntary sector want to do more but are prevented from doing so because of licensing and departmental procedural arrangements. Any new licensing arrangements must allow the transport resources in the community and voluntary sectors and in health and education to be brought into the supply chain to allow a better mix of vehicles and services.

Finally, the silo mentality demonstrated by officials throughout the inquiry has to be dealt with. The Programme for Government aimed to reduce such silo approaches, but, to date, the Minister and his colleagues in Health and Education have failed to embrace the opportunity to work together to make a better transport system. The Health Department is good at delivering health, and the Department of Education is good at delivering education. Neither are transport suppliers, yet both have enormous expenditure on transport. We need to stop and change that.

The report recommends a smarter way of delivering transport for Northern Ireland that enables collaborative working that will see justifiable savings for this Assembly. I urge the Minister to take forward the recommendations with immediate effect.

Mr I McCrea: I support the motion and the report commissioned by the Committee. If he has not already taken the opportunity to do so, I hope that the Minister will do some midnight reading and go through the report which, no doubt, will keep him up for quite a while.

Community transport was one of the key aspects of the Committee's evidence sessions. The Deputy Chairperson and others have mentioned the 10B licences, and there is a lot of concern about the way in which changes that have been made by the Department of the Environment to those licences will have an impact on the ability of community transport providers to continue to exist.

I know that, in dealing with community transport providers, the Minister has done his best to make the Community Transport Association's systems more efficient. However, it is important that, in delivering services — this was part of the inquiry — we integrate them into wider transport provision.

Much has been said about the mid-Ulster pilot. Although it is called a mid-Ulster pilot, it takes in only a very small part of the constituency. Nonetheless, it has an impact on part of my constituency, and I welcome that. As other Members said, it is a pilot, and there is room for improvement. I suppose that it has to start somewhere, and we have to see how it resolves the integration of services. I hope that we will see an outcome of that in the not-too-distant future.

The constituency that I represent is two thirds rural. One of the issues that I hear about day and daily is access to public transport. I have had conversations with transport providers that have tried to fill that gap, but getting people to the nearest bus stop is not part of their remit. There are difficulties for people who live some distance away from the closest bus stop and cannot get to the nearest town to do their shopping or travel on to hospital appointments and things like that. Those issues are important.

Mr Dallat, when he got to the present day, referred to the free travel that the Department provides for our senior citizens.

In that context, if people cannot access public transport without getting into their car and driving to their closest bus station, it defeats the purpose. Living in a rural area, the difficulties that arise from that are evident.

Doing nothing is not an option, as the Minister will recognise. Other Departments deliver similar services and, as suggested even during evidence to the Committee, are able to do so more cheaply. A common theme in the Committee evidence sessions was that a lot more could be done to try to deliver the integration of services a lot more efficiently and in the best interests of the people whom we represent.

Mr Ó hOisín: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Ceapaim go ndearna an Coiste Forbartha Réigiúnaí piosa iontach oibre ar an ábhar seo. Agus cosúil le daoine eile, ba mhaith liom labhairt i bhfabhar an rúin agus na tuarascála fosta. I am very happy to speak in favour of the motion and recognise the work of the Committee in delivering this report.

The Regional Development Committee's report provides a progressive and productive set of recommendations, and I ask Minister Kennedy to implement all of them as soon as possible. The provision of transport here costs the public purse over £200 million per annum, and the Minister has the opportunity to take forward progressive actions to ensure that transport in the North will be fit for purpose, meet the needs of the people, integrate the mix of service providers and make the best use of resources bought and paid for by the Assembly.

John Dallat, in a contribution in the style of John Betjeman, rightly remarked on the field trips taken by the Committee. The value of those field trips is reflected in the report, in that they looked at best practice in Dublin, Scotland and Holland.

The Committee wants the Minister to adopt the example set by Transport Scotland in 2009, which introduced a mechanism whereby departments of an organisation or various organisations jointly plan and deliver transport and share resources, vehicles, drivers, staff and procurement to optimise their use to meet the service demand and enhance the delivery of transport to appropriate users.

It is vital that Minister Kennedy develops an action plan in partnership with the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, Edwin Poots, and the Education Minister, John O'Dowd, to centralise transport resources, including budgets, and plan for a more integrated transport system.

Reference was made to the two trial schemes — the two pilot projects — and there were some concerns in the Committee about the way in which they were delivered, particularly the uptake of and publicity for the Enniskillen/Derry pilot, and the time frame and delivery of the Dungannon pilot, given that it has been held up as a model of best practice for the roll-out of the project elsewhere.

There is an opportunity to expand the current transport planning function in DRD, thereby removing private vehicles from our roads. By adopting an accessible transport planning model, DRD can take forward centralised functions that will meet the needs of health, education and public transport by mapping and identifying appropriate transport functions for people. Combined with a centralised call centre approach, integrated ticketing across a mix of vehicle suppliers and the tracking of vehicles, that will deliver a properly managed transport network, taking and making the best use of resources and money.

By working together, all three Departments have the ability to create an inclusive integrated transport solution that will provide better access to services for the public.

There is a need to include the community transport sector. I take this opportunity to praise the work of the CTA and other community transport providers as part of the transport mix. Throughout the inquiry, the Committee heard how the community transport sector wants to play a more effective role to help to deliver solutions to older people, people with disabilities and people who live in rural areas and/or in isolation. However, there are a number of barriers to prevent this Assembly from making best use of these suppliers. Bus operator licences, as others have mentioned, are still not sorted, even though the review started in March 2010, and current procurement systems exclude non-profit community transport suppliers from being able to deliver services.

1.00 pm

It is vital that the Ministers for Regional Development and the Environment confirm the licensing agreements to allow our much-respected community and voluntary sector to deliver a wider remit and enhance services as we move transport forward. No one expects our recommendations to be fulfilled overnight. However, the Committee has watched in horror as officials have ignored requests from the Audit Office to come together. The silo mentality needs to stop. The Assembly can no longer afford to have the Departments spending millions duplicating services.

I am proud of the report presented by the Committee and encourage the Minister to take forward the recommendations quickly, with actual results being realised before the end of this Assembly period.

Mr Storey (The Chairperson of the Committee for Education): I rise to make a few comments in relation to this report as Chair of the Education Committee. This is not the first time that I have stood here on behalf of the Education Committee to discuss issues in relation to public transport. Home-to-school transport is a key example that we need to clearly define and clearly understand, as it provided a lifeline in many isolated communities, but carries with it a substantial cost of somewhere in the region of £70 million per year. About half of this money goes to Translink, and I believe that the Regional Development Committee will be pursuing the issue Translink's profits in the coming days.

About £23 million, based on 2010-11 figures for the home-to-school transport budget, goes to keep the education and library boards' fleet on the road, and three quarters of that money goes to cover staff costs. To be clear, it appears that these costs are paid whether the bus is on the road or not, and I think that that is an issue that needs to be addressed.

The education and library board bus fleet could therefore be thought of as a sunk cost. Greater use of these buses could have a relatively small marginal cost, with untold benefits for taxpayers throughout the rest of Northern Ireland.

A better, smarter use of publicly owned vehicles is obviously a good idea, and indeed I understand that following the commencement of this inquiry, the Departments of Education and Health were prompted to undertake the pilot that has been referred to in Dungannon. My colleague from Magherafelt Mr McCrea referred to it. Also, Mr Easton referred to the hurdles that have appeared in relation to this particular pilot and all the problems that seem to have emanated from it.

What is the problem, and what is to be done? The report recommends a review of the legislation to ensure that vehicles and services can be used for a wider range, and the report also recommends an Executive-wide approach to the funding of transport across the whole public sector, including education. The Committee for Education is very happy to endorse these sensible and, I believe, achievable recommendations.

The Committee hopes that it will soon see the Department of Education's PEDU action plan for school transport. We have been waiting for this longer than you would wait for a bus. I throw out the challenge to all the people in the House this morning — this afternoon, now — who are singing the praises of public transport: how many actually use public transport to come to this House? Well, it was not because I was speaking on this today, but I used the train to come here, as I do regularly. As I have said to the Minister in the past, the trains are good but the bus service is less than good. The connectivity between Central Station and this House is something that needs to be looked at.

However, moving on from that, I was worried when the Member for East Londonderry stood up. He was going to have us all back on steam trains and back on the canal. Maybe that is a reflection of the politics of the party that he belongs to and the era that it comes from.

We are still waiting, after 18 months, for the PEDU action plan. What did it say? The PEDU action plan is a very detailed analysis. We don't need any more figures or facts, but in 2010-11, £75 million was spent transporting just under 90,000 Northern Ireland pupils from home to school and back. At a time when we are told that pupil numbers are falling, that represents an increase in spend of 17.3% compared with 2004-05. The net result was that the cost per pupil increased by 28% over the past five years. In addition, the increase in costs has not been uniform across the five education and library boards. The cost per pupil in the South Eastern Education and Library Board rose by 14.3%, while in the Belfast Board the unit cost increased — let Members hear this — by 58.7%. Something is going wrong, and somebody, somewhere is benefiting as a result of the process.

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is almost gone.

Mr Storey: Much more could be said about the PEDU report. I call on the Minister to use his best endeavours to ensure that the Minister of Education plays his active part in delivering a proper, well-funded and fit-for-purpose transport system —

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr Storey: — in our schools.

Mr McAleer: Thank you, a Cheann Comhairle. I speak in favour of the motion. As the Members who spoke previously said, £200 million is spent each year on transport. Apart from the two pilot studies that have been referred to, there has been very little attempt to join up the various providers. Like the Members who have spoken, I have seen situations in which vehicles from different providers collect people at the same time and travel on the same routes.

Since joining the Committee for Regional Development last September, I have sat through meetings in which compelling evidence has been presented for a shared transport solution. However, I have also heard from providers who are more focused on the reasons that that cannot happen. Indeed, the term "silo" was often used to describe that failure or unwillingness to join up transport provision. That has been very apparent in some of the evidence sessions and has flagged the need for a serious attitudinal shift at a more strategic level.

Along with other Committee members, I had the opportunity to take part in one of the fact-finding trips, which was to Dublin and Glasgow. In Dublin, we were briefed by representatives from the National Transport Authority. We learned about its local integrated transport services pilot scheme, which used successful case studies from Louth, Meath, Sligo and Leitrim to illuminate the strategy's objectives. We heard about different opportunities for integration such as the collect-and-connect services, whereby passengers can access local services that bring them to an interchange point that connects with the scheduled services; hospital-feeder services; co-ordinated journey planning; and integrated ticketing. All of that provides valuable lessons for an integrated transport solution in this part of the island.

The second leg of the fact-finding visit was to Glasgow. We visited the headquarters of the Strathclyde Partnership for Transport (SPT), which is the largest of seven regional transport partnerships in Scotland. It covers a wide, rural geographical area that bears many similarities to the North in topography and demography, albeit that it has a larger population. The partnership is funded by the local authorities and central government and has a remit for planning and co-ordination for the 12 member councils in its area.

In evidence sessions in Parliament Buildings, we heard that there are barriers to sharing transport among certain providers, particularly on issues such as child protection and the challenges connected with catering for people of various levels of ability on the same vehicles. However, when Committee members were briefed on the operation of the SPT's Flexibus service and had the opportunity to experience it at first hand, that removed any remaining doubt that an integrated transport solution cannot be found. In fact, the template is already there.

On the subject of catering for people of different abilities, the SPT officials made the point that, rather than segregating and effectively labelling people, their buses are designed to cater for all abilities. Therefore, the child who is a wheelchair user can be collected on the same basis as his or her able-bodied peers. The officials further pointed out that those buses have minimal downtime. Once the school runs are completed in the morning, the Flexibus is used for a variety of purposes during the day; for example, as a local bus service. That is what provoked the quote that is included in the Committee report. The deputy chief executive said to us:

"You just have to sweat the bus a wee bit more!"

All that is anchored through a call centre, which Members also had an opportunity to visit and learn about.

The evidence that I have heard to date overwhelmingly supports the view that a silo mentality exists among our transport providers, which costs millions of pounds every year. A shared transport solution can be found, but it will require a serious attitudinal shift.

Mrs D Kelly: When it gets to this stage in a debate, it is difficult to know what new information I can add or what questions I can ask the Minister, who, of course, has my full endorsement as well as my party colleague's.

I put on record my thanks to the Committee staff, the Research and Information Service staff and the Committee Clerk for putting the report together and assisting us with our inquiry. It is important Committee work that can bring something new to the table to address concerns across the broader community and among stakeholders.

Later today, there will be a debate on how the next mandate should decide its Programme for Government in advance of its Budget. That is to be welcomed. If we come to the debate with a mature, grown-up attitude, there is some hope that, in trying to work in the best interests of all our people, we will recognise the importance of transport to all our citizens. The historical underfunding of public sector transport, in particular, ought to be addressed.

As Members said, real savings can be made through an interdepartmental and integrated transport system in which the Education Department and the Health Department do not stand alone, with the public sector being out on a limb. I fully endorse the report's recommendations and their outworkings. The Audit Office report, 'Education and Health and Social Services Transport', made its conclusions some eight years ago, and they have not yet been acted on. I hope that we do not have to wait as long because, financially, we cannot afford to do that.

When evidence was being taken from various stakeholders, I discovered a surprising fact, which is the lack of professionally qualified transport planners in the Department. I will be interested to hear how the Minister hopes to address that matter in the short term.

Mr Storey talked about public sector and school transport. In Committee, I raised the point that in rural communities — certainly in the area that I live — there would be no public transport, by and large, if the schools were off. People have to walk at least half a mile to the nearest bus stop, which is unacceptable in the 21st century.

The needs of disabled users, particularly people with visual impairment, is also an area of concern.

One recommendation states that integrated ticketing systems should be extended beyond Belfast and Dungannon. There is also the issue of zoning.

If we are trying to get a change in culture and a different type of transport, there are short-, medium- and long-term recommendations in the report. I will be interested in how the Minister sets out an action plan to address those recommendations.

Mr Kennedy (The Minister for Regional Development):

Thank you very much, Mr Speaker, for the opportunity to respond to the debate on the Committee for Regional Development's report on the better use of public and community transport funding. The contributions have been very good.

The concept of local public transport planning and the integration of services was first proposed by my Department as part of a consultation on public transport reform in 2009-2010, so it is not a new issue. The report that we are looking at today makes a contribution to that. It will also provide a useful input to the work that my Department is already co-ordinating with other Departments; we are looking towards the pilot scheme, particularly that in the Dungannon area. Committee members and other Assembly Members are well aware of that work. I will not be tempted to speculate on my tenure in this post, save to say that I always recall Harold Wilson's maxim that a week is a long time in politics; it would be very wise for all Members to reflect on that.

The pilot scheme involves my Department working with other organisations that either fund or deliver public transport services to assess and test the opportunities for better integration of services and the greater efficiencies that may be achieved. In doing so, it is hoped that we can improve the passenger experience by providing improved travel options. Preparatory work for the Dungannon pilot scheme is under way, and it will begin in earnest in September.

There is no shortage of organisations involved in the scheme: the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety; the Health and Social Care Board; the Southern Health and Social Care Trust; the Department of Education; the Southern Education and Library Board; the Department of the Environment; the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development; the rural community transport partnership in the area; the Federation of Passenger Transport, representing the public transport industry, including private operators; and, importantly, Translink. There is a wide-ranging and full list of groups and key stakeholders involved. In addition, as part of the preparatory work for the implementation of the pilot later this year, officials have been consulting with a wide range of stakeholders, including Dungannon and South Tyrone Borough Council and Cookstown District Council, the Rural Community Network and the Consumer Council, which will take forward some work on behalf of the Department to identify transport-user requirements in the pilot area.

It is early days in the preparation for the pilot. However, from the analysis of the network that has been carried out so far, it is clear that there are opportunities for more integration between Translink and the Southern Education and Library Board on school services. We want to trial these opportunities fully during the pilot. Another area that we are keen to trial is improved integration of community transport and school transport services on some minor roads in the area. That would enable us to test the viability of combining school transport and community transport in very rural areas to improve accessibility and make them both more financially sustainable for the long term.

Of course, we already have a considerable degree of integration in public and school transport, with Translink transporting nearly 60% of pupils who are entitled to home-to-school transport. It is rather disappointing that the Committee's conclusions did not acknowledge that as an example of good practice in service integration, because it provides us with a very good foundation on which to build. I say, in the correct spirit in which it is intended, that there is a lesson here that, to have your voice heard clearly in critique, you also have to be fair with positive comment. The existing integration also has the major advantage of helping to safeguard scheduled public transport services in rural areas, where it would otherwise be tough to justify fully the costs involved in providing services for public transport users, many of whom depend on public transport and do not have access to other forms of transport.

As has been raised in the debate, the pilot also plans to test the scope for better integration of the transport for children and adults with special needs, and that will involve the Southern Education and Library Board and the Southern Health Trust.

Improvements in passenger information are also being trialled, both through improved electronic information and targeted paper-based information about specific services. The focus of that work will be on how best to provide the fullest information to passengers and potential passengers about how to reach destinations that attract large numbers of users, such as the South Tyrone Hospital in Dungannon, Craigavon Area Hospital and the South West College in Dungannon. The aim will be to help more people to have easily available information about the public transport services in the area, including the interconnecting transport services that are often necessary for people who live in the more rural locations.

Joined-up transport is not only about tailoring public transport to services; it is about ensuring that future locations for service are accessible to existing transport. It is planned to introduce initial improvements on the ground as early as the autumn. Those changes are likely to be in school transport provision, and, thereafter, further improvements will be introduced on a phased basis as solutions are developed. The pilot will run for about one year during which time the new arrangements will be evaluated.

Even at this early stage, it is expected that the changes will be sufficiently beneficial for the organisations involved to consider implementing them in other areas. That will require a delivery model to be developed, through which the very detailed work that is required to implement and sustain such improvements on a wider scale can be undertaken. A business case will be needed and will require expert transport planning input. That will assess the cost and benefits of wider roll-out, including the organisational and implementation arrangements that are necessary. The development of such an appraisal will need to be undertaken jointly with other Departments, and the necessary cross-government project management arrangements are already in place to facilitate that. At key points along the way, I will want to involve my Executive colleagues in all of this, and there may also be a need for some legislative change to be taken forward by the Department of the Environment.

As the Assembly will understand from reading the Committee's report, there are no ready-made solutions that we can simply lift from other jurisdictions. Many different models have been tried with varying degrees of success, and my Department has taken those on board. However, as I indicated, our public transport and school transport systems are already integrated to a significant degree. I have heard the harsh criticisms of the silo mentality, and I am interested in doing something about that.

For the first time, we have the advantage of having all the key players committed to and involved in helping to design the pilot arrangements, and that collaborative approach is proving very helpful in identifying potential opportunities to do things better. Implementing the pilot will require a significant ongoing effort from all the organisations involved, and designing arrangements that are suitable for delivery on a wider scale will also require considerable effort. The Dungannon pilot provides an important catalyst and an opportunity to design arrangements for the future that are user-focused and as efficient as possible. I am glad that the Committee's report is broadly supportive of my Department's direction of travel, and the Department will respond more fully to the recommendations in the coming months as the pilot progresses through its various stages.

You did not indicate how long I have, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: Fifteen minutes.

Mr Kennedy: Thank you very much indeed.

I will deal with some of the issues raised by Members. The Deputy Chairman of the Committee said that he felt that there was no great willingness for integration. That is not the sense that I have. He raised a couple of queries about the transport agency. It was never intended to centralise departmental budgets through the DRD transport agency.

The agency is intended to deliver the new transport authority functions, including contracts with Translink. Of course, these are now the responsibility of Transport NI.

On the integration of health trusts with other providers, the pilot will explore the potential for the integration of transport services for children and adults with special needs. Mr Lynch and Mrs Kelly mentioned the number of officials and experts involved. One full-time planner is employed, and an additional planner will shortly be recruited.

Cathal Ó hOisín and Seán Lynch referred to the Altnagelvin to Enniskillen pilot. That is in operation and due to be evaluated later this year. At this stage, the uptake has not been as high as expected, but we continue to review it.

Mr McCrea asked about the criteria for accessibility to mainstream public transport. It is hoped to test the concept of a collect-and-connect service in the pilot, involving community transport that will take passengers to join the main Translink service. This, as he knows, already happens in some areas. We will have to look at the implications of the licensing review for changes to the 10B licences with DOE, but that should not impact on the ability to deliver the pilot.

My colleague Ross Hussey referred to integrating SELB and Translink delivery, and that will be looked at as part of the pilot process.

Generally, from Members' contributions, I gained an understanding of their frustration at the perceived silo mentality and their perception of budgets, but we must not underestimate the challenge of trying to improve the situation. That is not to say, of course, that we are not determined to deliver and absolutely committed to delivering. I am committed to delivering a cost-effective and comprehensive public transport network that will increasingly become a real alternative to the private car and provide real choice.

Mr Lynch: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire. I thank the Minister and Members for their positive comments during the debate, some of which I will return to in due course. What I heard encourages me, and I am even more convinced about the merits of an integrated transport system. At a time of economic uncertainty and high fuel prices, I firmly believe that integrated public transport is more important and sensible than ever. From an economic point of view, we need it to link people to jobs and services and help our villages, towns and cities to improve. We need to make better use of our public transport budgets. We must re-prioritise the existing sources of transport funding to enable the targeting of resources more directly on integrated public transport projects that deliver clear economic and social benefits.

I will refer to a number of the Members who spoke in the debate. Alex Easton highlighted the need to centralise budgets, and he and many others mentioned the silo mentality. He raised the important point that the regional transport strategy does not reference fleets in other Departments. It is difficult to know how important integrated transport is when the main transport strategy does not even refer to it.

1.30 pm

John Dallat was very much in the past on modes of transport; I just realised why he drives a Morris Minor. He is not in the Chamber, but he also talked about the need for greater stimulus for better integrated public transport that is fit for purpose today and tailored to the needs of users.

Ross Hussey, who never misses a chance to mention west Tyrone, stressed the need to exploit the potential of the pilot project and the need for all key stakeholders to be encouraged to participate. Stewart Dickson highlighted the design of our transport system and called on the Regional Development Minister to meet the Health Minister and the Education Minister to address fragmentation. He also called on the Minister of the Environment to sort out the community transport licensing issue, which is important.

My colleague Cathal Ó hOisín said that the recommendations were progressive and called on the Minister to put together an action plan that includes the centralisation of budgets. He also, quite rightly, spoke of the value and importance of the Community Transport Association. The Chair of the Education Committee, Mervyn Storey, referred to the cost of the education fleet and endorsed the sensible and achievable recommendations. We welcome the support of colleagues on the Education Committee.

Declan McAleer spoke of the compelling evidence for integrated systems and called for an attitudinal shift at senior level. Dolores Kelly endorsed the report and suggested that there might be mature debate on budgets and greater interdepartmental co-operation to bring about integrated transport systems, including ticketing.

I reiterate that the Committee fully appreciates the complexities of transport integration and that getting there is not going to be a quick process. However, the real examples of efficiency that are being achieved through, for example, fleet reduction and fuel procurement provide the Committee with encouragement that significant efficiencies can be achieved in the North of Ireland and that a user-ended service, with wider and more complete coverage, is possible. The Committee believes that the deputy chief executive of Strathclyde Partnership for Transport hit the nail on the head when he was asked how his organisation had been successful in its integration efforts. After a little thought — and this little statement was mentioned by my colleague Declan McAleer — he said, “You just have to sweat the bus a wee bit more.” Sometimes, I wonder what he meant by that.

The Committee believes that this is achievable through collaborative working by the public and community sectors, but only if it gets the buy-in at the top: at the Executive. We need someone to champion this and to take us out of the silos that most Members mentioned as a barrier. We need someone who will provide the catalyst for change. The Committee for Regional Development believes that it is time to start that movement towards change, and I ask the House to support us in that belief.

I welcome the Minister's contribution, although I hope that the report represents more than a “useful input”, as he termed it, to the work of his Department. Although the Minister listed all those who sit around the table in Dungannon, the evidence provided by his officials was that the implementation of the pilot is restricted to school and public transport. I welcome his acknowledgement that something needs to be done about the silo mentality, and I hope that he addresses that urgently. Unless that is addressed, the pilot and the potential advances in our report are doomed to failure.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly approves the report of the Committee for Regional Development on its inquiry into the better use of public and community sector funds for the delivery of transport options; and calls on the Minister for Regional Development, in conjunction with his Executive colleagues and relevant bodies, to implement the recommendations.

Assembly and Executive Review Committee: 'Review of d'Hondt, Community Designation and Provisions for Opposition'

Mr Speaker: The Business Committee has agreed to allow up to one hour and 30 minutes for this debate. The proposer will have 15 minutes to propose the motion and 15 minutes to make a winding-up speech. All other Members called to speak will have five minutes.

Mr Moutray (The Chairperson of the Assembly and Executive Review Committee): I beg to move

That this Assembly notes the report of the Assembly and Executive Review Committee on its 'Review of d'Hondt, Community Designation and Provisions for Opposition'.

In December 2012, the Committee agreed that its next priority was to review the issues of d'Hondt, community designation and provisions for opposition. The Committee also agreed that although each was a separate issue, the interrelationship between the three areas should also be considered, and that was made clear in the review's terms of reference. As Members will see, the terms of reference also made clear that the principles of inclusivity and power sharing should be safeguarded within the Northern Ireland institutions.

The Committee's detailed "call for evidence" paper was agreed in February 2013. It was made available on the Committee's webpage, and a signposting notice was published in three regional newspapers. The Committee also wrote to a range of stakeholders, including academic experts and all political parties registered in Northern Ireland. The Committee received and considered 22 stakeholder responses to its review. It took oral evidence from Professor Derek Birrell, Professor Yvonne Galligan, Professor Christopher McCrudden, Professor Brendan O'Leary, Professor Rick Wilford, and Dr Robin Wilson and Ms Eileen Cairnduff from Platform for Change. The Committee also visited the Scottish Parliament and met representatives of the Scottish Parliamentary Corporate Body and the Parliamentary Bureau, in order to inform the review. On behalf of the Committee, I would like to sincerely thank all those who took time to respond to our call for evidence, particularly those who came to the Committee to give oral evidence and those in the Scottish Parliament who shared their experience and knowledge and extended their hospitality to our Committee members.

Before I refer to the conclusions in the report, I want to make clear the context within which the Committee worked. First, the complexity of the issues reviewed in the report should not be underestimated. I would like to thank the Assembly Research and Information Service for the research papers it prepared, which provided useful detail on the existing provisions both here and in the other legislatures throughout these islands. Secondly, each party came to the review with its own perspective. That was, I believe, well informed by the evidence gathered over the course of the review. Thirdly, the Committee had to take care to consider the existing structures and procedures in the institutions here, which were carefully crafted through various pieces of legislation and the Standing Orders of this House. Although the Committee's focus was to improve the effectiveness of the Assembly, it would not wish to do anything that would in any way affect the effectiveness and stability of our institutions. That caution was echoed by Professor McCrudden when he gave evidence at the Committee on 5 March 2013. He said:

"there is a danger in picking and choosing bits of another system and assuming that they will have the same effects when transferred to your system. We suggest considerable caution in that regard. The system is an organic whole and operates in a particular way."

The Committee gave a lot of thought to the various issues raised over the course of the review. Although it did not reach consensus on some issues — notably, whether the d'Hondt mechanism should be replaced and whether community designation should be retained — I wish to assure the Assembly that the Committee considered and discussed those issues in some detail. Similarly, all the issues surrounding provisions for opposition were also considered in detail. Comparisons were inevitably made with other legislatures. However, the Committee remained mindful of our unique circumstances and the fact that these institutions, as I stated earlier, were carefully constructed to accommodate the spectrum of political opinions that exists here.

As the report states, there was recognition that parties already have the right to opt out of taking up their Executive entitlement following an election or to withdraw from the Executive at any time. The Committee also recognised that the principle of proportionality within our institutions should be protected. Therefore, although there were differing views on what rights should be afforded to non-Executive parties, there was consensus that those rights should broadly reflect the level of electoral support each party received.

Members will note that the Committee concluded that parties of the incoming Executive should, after an election, aim to agree a heads of agreement of a Programme for Government in advance of the formation of the Executive via d'Hondt. That would be an important development, particularly in the context of informal, non-Executive opposition parties.

The Committee identified two areas that merit additional work: technical groups and petitions of concern. Provision for technical groups might allay some of the concerns of smaller parties and independent Members in the Assembly. Therefore, the Committee felt that it would be useful for such provision to be reviewed. It would be fair to say that most respondents to our call for evidence expressed an opinion on petitions of concern. The Committee also received a briefing note from the Assembly Research and Information Service on the subject, as well as legal advice. It is a complex area that the Committee felt should be considered in greater depth, hence the conclusion that the issue will be reviewed in further detail.

The Committee gathered a wide range of evidence during the review. I encourage Members to read the responses to our call for evidence, and the Hansard reports of our evidence sessions, and reflect on the different opinions expressed in those. As I said, I hope that Members will appreciate the complexity of the issues that the Committee faced. Indeed, I hope that Members will also appreciate that the Committee did its best to give those issues the detailed consideration that they deserve. I am in no doubt that all Committee members would say that the review process developed their thinking on those issues. That is a valuable outcome that should not be underestimated. It is now for the Assembly and, indeed, the Executive to develop and implement the Committee's conclusions.

On behalf of the Committee, I acknowledge and thank the Committee staff for their valuable work and support during the review. I also thank the Assembly Research and Information Service staff, the legal advisers and Hansard staff for their contribution to the review. The Assembly and Executive Review Committee requests that the Assembly note the Committee's report.

Mr McCartney: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I am speaking on behalf of my party on the review. I thank the Chair of the Committee, Stephen Moutray, for taking us through the discussion and, as he did, I thank the Committee Clerk and the staff for their work. I also thank all those who provided oral and written evidence.

As the Chair said, there was wide-ranging discussion throughout. In many ways, it cleared the way and, as he said, informed our thinking on future decisions. Gabhaim buíochas libh go léir as sin.

As with all the work that the Assembly and Executive Review Committee has done in the past, we are guided by what we consider to be the fundamental principles of the Good Friday Agreement, which are inclusiveness, representativeness and equality. That is how we arrived at the three topics in the review, and I note that the Chair said that, flowing from our discussions, there were issues around petitions of concern and technical groups. We look forward to discussing those in the future.

We are very clear that d'Hondt should continue. We received evidence on d'Hondt, and, at present, it seems to be the best model to guarantee or underwrite the need for inclusiveness and representativeness, so we are happy for it to continue. We are also happy for community designation to continue, and we put that forward in our submission.

We outlined our view of opposition, which is written into the report at paragraph 95. Some people approach the model of opposition as if it were an add-on to the system that we already have in place. However, Professor McCrudden had words of caution:

"there is a danger in picking and choosing bits of another system and assuming that they will have the same effects when transferred to your system ... The system is an organic whole and operates in a particular way."

When people provided evidence and commentaries, many pointed to the system of government and opposition at Westminster.

Indeed, when they do that, they nearly put it up as being the best model, yet they go on to argue that, if a party opts out of the Executive, it should be given Chair and Deputy Chair positions as a means of showing that opposition. In the Westminster model, it is the opposite. The Government hold on to the Chair and Deputy Chair positions and are precious about doing that because of the particular system. Indeed, when Brendan O'Leary gave evidence to the Committee on 5 March 2013, he said that one of the features of our arrangements is:

"you can decide not to participate in the Executive and yet, remarkably, receive your entitlement either to chairing or deputy chairing Committees, for which there is no analogue in the Westminster model of democracy. It seems to me that, for that reason, opposition parties get a very reasonable share of resources and opportunities under the existing system."

Therefore, you have a system that is described as organic in place for a particular reason, and then, all of a sudden, people want to change it. That is where the discussion should be.

1.45 pm

There is a rationale for wanting to change it — quite legitimately, for self-interest or party interest — but people often use models, and, when those models are examined, they do not exactly provide the answer that they seek; indeed, they undermine some of the arguments that people make. I suppose that that comes back to the rationale. At one time, people believed that the centre would remain in control. Indeed, Bishop McKeown alluded to that on 'Sunday Sequence', when he said that the assumption of the Good Friday Agreement was that the centre ground — the two parties — would remain in control. Now that they are no longer in control, the discussion around opposition seems to have increased. The system was put in place for a reason, and, in our view, that reason has not changed.

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is almost gone.

Mr McCartney: Therefore, we support the review.

Mr McDevitt: I am happy to support the report. I found the work of the Committee in preparing the report very useful. A fair few myths were left in the ditch, including the myth that we are not well funded here. I am afraid to say that our parties are well funded. We are all well funded, particularly the smaller parties. They are disproportionately well funded compared with how they would be funded in other jurisdictions, which, I think, is right and proper.

The other thing that is interesting about the report — [Interruption.] It is nice to welcome the smaller parties to what is effectively an extended Committee meeting. That is important, and we should look forward to their contribution today and reflect on it in as much detail as we can. The other interesting thing about the work was that we found that everything in the garden of the Good Friday Agreement was not all that bad and there was much in the Good Friday Agreement that seemed agreeable to everyone in the House. The principle of power sharing, for starters, appears to find practically unanimous support in the House, and the application of the d'Hondt formula as a method by which we can determine how we share power in the House appears to be recognised by all sides at this moment in time as best meeting our needs.

During the Committee conversations, it was interesting to note that it became obvious that all parties are very wedded to a strong Committee system, feel very defensive of the fact that we have very powerful Committees in the House and are anxious to see those Committees grow further, exercise even more influence over the work of the House and find ways of being able to deepen their accountability duty towards the Executive.

I am content with the report because, last November, I asked the SDLP at conference to endorse what we call d'Hondt opt-out; in other words, to endorse a model of government going forward that evolves the spirit and builds on the principles of the Good Friday Agreement and is still protective of the allocation of seats in a power-sharing Executive after an election using the d'Hondt formula but allows a party's explicit rather than implicit right to opt out. If you are going to ask parties to exercise a decision to opt out of something, it needs to be not only because they did not do well in the election but because they do not really agree with the direction of travel.

Government is not meant to be about carve-up, and I do not think that there was ever any intention by those who penned the Good Friday Agreement or those of us who have been made custodians of it since — all of us in the House are custodians of it — to reduce the politics of this region to some type of carve-up. Therefore the fact that this report, with the support of all parties, with, I think, the exception of Sinn Féin on this specific point, invites us to step up to the challenge of, at the very least, agreeing the heads of a Programme for Government before we form an Executive, is a significant sign of slowly maturing politics here. If we are to build a credible democracy and deepen power sharing, it is essential that we do so on the strength of ideas and argument around the direction of society and not just on some sense of having shared power between the major parties representing the predominant communities. That is an important moment and one that we should reflect a little on.

I hope that, in the years ahead, government continues to be a big tent around here. I hope that every party that is entitled to sit at the Executive table still wants to do so, but the way they will be able to do that, so that people will have confidence in them doing so, will be by all of us beginning to put policy and the battle of ideas, rather than the battle of interests, at the heart of the critical decisions that will be made after an election.

Mr Beggs: At the outset of the debate, it is important to note that, although major decisions are ultimately taken elsewhere, the backdrop of the Assembly and Executive Review Committee has been worthwhile in examining the structures that exist and can exist in the future. We received evidence from a wide range of experts, and, again, that was helpful. We also considered how other jurisdictions do business. It is disappointing that one party — Sinn Féin — did not engage constructively in the process of trying to improve devolution in Northern Ireland. Sinn Féin refused to back any changes during the work that the Committee undertook. That was not the approach of the Ulster Unionist Party. We think that institutions must change, adapt, grow and take into account the changing world around us. We cannot simply stay as we are.

The Committee considered three principal areas, the first of which was the d'Hondt process. We understand that d'Hondt should pertain in the short to medium term. However, it is tied to other issues, such as the creation of an opposition. In Northern Ireland, it is important that an equitable mechanism for allocating cross-community ministerial places and Chairs is in place, especially when there is a coalition Government in place. We want to avoid stalemate, and it should be possible and should not be a huge deviation from the principles set down in the Belfast Agreement — or the St Andrews Agreement, to make others happier.

It is also important to look at what happens when we depart from the agreed mechanism. For example, the Alliance Party has two Ministers, while bigger parties have only one: how did that happen? That is something that we must rectify. We have been clear that the allocation of the Justice Ministry, on a cross-community basis, should count towards a d'Hondt pick. That would be fair.

I also think that there is merit in running d'Hondt concurrently with Ministers and Chairs to allow for proportionality. That point was made on a number of occasions in Committee meetings. A party that opted not to take up a ministerial place to which it would be entitled, whilst not receiving additional resources — in fact, it would receive less — could choose to concentrate its scrutiny of the Executive through prominent roles in Committees. What would be wrong with that? It would, surely, make life more interesting in Northern Ireland politics.

On community designation, our clear view is that moving away from community designation and towards a weighted majority should be welcomed. It would represent a normalisation of politics here. Again, we could maintain the current requirement for cross-community voting, so that one community would not dominate another. What would be wrong with that? We have to aspire to more normal government.

There would also be an opportunity to restructure the current petition of concern, which is, clearly, being abused regularly. Perhaps, the most striking case of that occurred recently, when the DUP used a petition of concern to knock down an Ulster Unionist amendment that was supported by virtually the whole of the rest of the Assembly. That was never envisaged when the concept of a petition of concern was established. It is a clear abuse of the system. It is being operated not for good governance but for narrow party political advantage.

We have long heard the view that the best form of government is one that has an official opposition. We want to move towards that. Voters would then have a more significant role in changing Ministers, following the outcome of an election. At present, there is a certain degree of apathy because, no matter how you vote, you can be sure that certain individuals will pop up and be Ministers. That does not encourage or empower voters to bring about change. We should all be open to how we can move towards that and bring it about.

Scrutiny and accountability would undoubtedly improve if there were an empowered official opposition. We wish to move towards that. We must also address the current apathy amongst voters, give them clearer choice and provide alternatives as to which parties they wish to govern Northern Ireland.

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is almost up.

Mr Beggs: It is not helpful to look at opposition in financial terms, but, rather, it should be a question of what resources, functions and provisions are needed to have an effective opposition in place.

Mr Speaker: Order. Question Time commences at 2.00 pm. I ask the House to take its ease until then. We will certainly return to the debate after Question Time, when the next Member to speak will be Stewart Dickson.

The debate stood suspended.

Oral Answers to Questions

Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Accident and Emergency Departments: Waiting Times

1. Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the accident and emergency departments that are not meeting the target of having no patient waiting longer than 12 hours. (AQO 4443/11-15)

9. Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how the average percentage of patients being seen within four hours at accident and emergency departments compares with England. (AQO 4451/11-15)

Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): With your permission, Mr Deputy Speaker, I will take questions 1 and 9 together, as they are both about emergency department waiting times.

The latest performance figures for emergency care are for May 2013 and are provisional at this stage. During May, a total of 299 patients waited for more than 12 hours in 10 hospital emergency departments across the region. The vast majority of patients — 99.2% in 2012-13 — are discharged home or admitted to a ward well within the 12-hour target. During the quarter ending 31 March 2013, in Northern Ireland, 74.1% of patients attending emergency care departments were either treated and discharged home or admitted within four hours, compared with 94.1% in England. Even one person waiting unduly long for treatment is unacceptable to me, and I will continue to press the Health and Social Care Board and trusts to eradicate lengthy waits.

Mr Kinahan: I thank the Minister for his answer. I agree that the figures are unacceptable and that even one person waiting is too many. I welcome the new A&E facility in Antrim, but I am deeply concerned about nursing numbers and today's whistle-blowing revelations. Can the Minister confirm that 20 additional nursing posts will actually be created? If so, when will that happen?

Mr Poots: People should be aware of the nursing posts because they were advertised in a very public way. The appointment processes have taken place. I think that the hospital intends to readvertise for one senior grade nurse because of the lack of a suitable applicant. As I understand it, the other nursing posts have been filled. New additional nurses are in Antrim Area Hospital. Previously, additional nurses were employed in Antrim hospital on a permanent basis in areas where there was far too great a reliance on locums. In the past year, I believe, some 40 nurses were made permanent. So we are going down the route of having more permanent nurses on site. Permanent nurses deliver a better service than locum nurses because they are on the same ward day by day and know the issues and their patients better, so it makes good sense.

Mrs Overend: I thank the Minister for his responses so far. I was disappointed that he felt it necessary to group the questions rather than giving a substantial answer to each.

Recent figures for waiting times in England have been described as representing a crisis over there, yet they are still significantly better than those in Northern Ireland. Does he accept that, had he been a Minister in England, he would have been hounded out of office by now?

Mr Poots: Maybe so — we would have to wait and see. However, if you are going to hound Ministers out of office, perhaps you should consider that, in 2008-09, 2,280 people were left waiting and, by the time the then Minister left office, 7,379 people were waiting for more than 12 hours. So, if you want to talk about Ministers not performing, you had better look a bit closer to home. Thankfully, last year, we had fewer people waiting for more than 12 hours than when your Minister left office.

Ms S Ramsey: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for his answers, which help to build a bigger picture of our A&Es. Minister, I totally agree with you that permanent staff — nurses and doctors — deliver a better service. Can you give us an update today on the recent incident in the A&E at the Royal, where over 100 patients seen by a locum doctor have been recalled?

Mr Poots: The information that I can give you is this: a doctor was employed, as I understand it, at registrar grade — I think that the doctor is a consultant but was employed at registrar grade — and they had no concerns about the background information on the individual and felt that it was safe to employ him. It was later discovered that there was the potential that a couple of cases had not been appropriately diagnosed following the reading of X-rays and so forth. Thereafter, they decided to recall all the patients he had dealt with in similar circumstances. That amounted to just over 90 patients, I believe. All of that is a little sketchy, because I do not have the facts and figures in front of me. However, that is my recollection. I have not had any indications that there have been adverse outcomes as a result of it, but it was recognised to be a problem. I think that the Belfast Trust responded promptly in dealing with the situation. That is a demonstration that we can have some confidence that the system actually works, in that it identified that people had not been treated as well as they should have been in the first instance and a check was then taken on all the patients who were treated.

Mr Durkan: Can the Minister tell the House whether he is taking any steps to address the shortage of A&E consultants at Altnagelvin and the difficulties that that creates?

Mr Poots: That is a matter directly for the Western Trust. I know that the Western Trust has been talking to the HSCB about the issue. It has indicated that, should there be opportunities for further A&E consultants to become available, the Western Trust would have first claim on them. I support the Western Trust in that, because I know that, in spite of performing very well, Altnagelvin has a fairly low number of consultants compared with many other facilities. Thankfully, however, Altnagelvin hospital performs well, certainly in comparison with many other hospitals across Northern Ireland, and is to be commended and congratulated for that. The trust is doing the right thing in seeking further consultants for that facility.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Members should note that question 6 has been withdrawn and requires a written answer.

Hydraulic Fracturing: Health Risks

2. Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if the Public Health Agency has any evidence to show that the process of hydraulic fracturing poses no risk to human health. (AQO 4444/11-15)

Mr Poots: Public Health England (PHE), formerly the Health Protection Agency, provides specialist advice and support to Departments and agencies across the UK on a wide range of health protection matters. PHE is currently reviewing the potential health impacts of shale gas extraction using the process commonly known as fracking. It is anticipated that that report will be available in the near future. The Public Health Agency will be guided by this advice.

Mr Elliott: I thank the Minister for that. Does he know whether that will include any investigations that have been carried out in areas where fracking is ongoing? If so, how detailed will those investigations be?

Mr Poots: In its consideration of hydraulic fracturing, my Department has been monitoring developments and has considered reports from other countries, including the report by the Office of the Chief Medical Officer concerning shale gas development in New Brunswick, Canada, where it is taking place already. So, it is a matter that we will take seriously. We will address it appropriately and in a very professional way. People would do well to pay attention to the information that we obtain. That will be the information that has real relevance, not like some of the stuff that you see on internet sites.

Mr Flanagan: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. The Minister will be aware that an ongoing review is being carried out by the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) in the South and the Environment Agency (NIEA) in the North. To date, the draft terms of reference make no reference to public health. Can the Minister confirm whether he would support elements of public health being included as part of that ongoing cross-border work?

Mr Poots: The Environmental Protection Agency in the Republic has commissioned a comprehensive study. It is being co-funded by the EPA, the Department of Communications, Energy and Natural Resources and the NIEA. Outputs from that research will assist regulators in fulfilling their statutory role regarding this activity, if indeed it is to progress. It is likely that the research programme will take around two years to complete. The EPA intends to publish interim reports while the report is under way.

Mr Eastwood: What discussions has the Minister had with other relevant Ministers on fracking?

Mr Poots: I have not had discussions with other Ministers on the issue, because, at this point, all that is being done is exploration. If it comes to the point where other Departments see fit to move ahead, the health impacts and whether or not they exist is something that we will discuss. We will discuss the health impacts on the basis of the professional information that we have sought. That will happen in due course, when necessary. At this point, an exploration is taking place, and there are no concerns about health consequences from that exploration. When it comes to the matter of hydraulic fracturing, we will have those discussions with the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment and the Department of the Environment.

Ms P Bradley: Will the Minister provide an update on the shale gas regulators' forum, please?

Mr Poots: DETI established the Shale Gas Forum, which first met in October last year. The purpose of the forum is to co-ordinate the activities of the various Departments and regulatory bodies and to ensure a joined-up approach to regulation and monitoring. As public health concerns have been raised, DHSSPS and the Public Health Agency have been invited to attend meetings of the group.

Northern Health and Social Care Trust: Alcohol-dependent Patients

3. Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what provision is available in the Northern health trust area for alcohol-dependent patients. (AQO 4445/11-15)

Mr Poots: There is a range of information and advice, intervention, harm reduction and treatment and support services available in the Northern Health and Social Care Trust (NHSCT) for those who misuse alcohol. The trust's addiction service provides an individually tailored, non-judgemental, confidential and accessible service to adults who are experiencing problems with alcohol or drugs. The service offers a range of approaches that include community-based assessment, treatment, management and support and inpatient hospital treatment, if indicated. A stepped-care approach is used to ensure that clients receive the most appropriate level of care. Residential services are available for individuals who experience significant dependency problems with alcohol and drugs for whom other services have not been sufficient in helping, or for individuals with complex needs.

The NHSCT addiction service works with other health and social care teams to respond to the complex needs of clients. Those include liver specialists, mental health teams and probation and criminal justice teams. The addiction service also works in partnership with a range of partner agencies to provide a comprehensive range of support. These wrap-around services include housing, benefits advice, personal development programmes, family support and educational and vocational services.

Mr Campbell: Recently, my colleagues and I met some voluntary and community groups that are working, particularly, with young people who are involved in alcohol dependency activities and drug use. Can the Minister ensure that the professionals in the addiction service will work closely with those community and voluntary working groups, particularly in Coleraine, to assist those who have a difficulty with alcohol and drug use?

Mr Poots: It is absolutely essential that we work with local communities. Community and voluntary organisations often bring something to the table that we are not capable of doing in the government sector. Therefore, it is important that we pay attention to them and listen to the messages that come from them. If Members, in general, find that there are issues or problems, they should raise those matters with the trusts. They should seek a more positive outcome, if they feel that not enough is being done on the collaborative work that needs to take place with the voluntary sector.

Mr Brady: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. We have seen the reports of the recent deaths attributed to drugs, and we sympathise with the families. What is the involvement of the Public Health Authority on a regional strategy?

Mr Poots: The Public Health Agency is heavily involved. We have the New Strategic Direction for Alcohol and Drugs Phase 2, which is a strategic plan with regional and local outcomes to address the harm related to alcohol and drug misuse in Northern Ireland. Approximately £8 million each year is allocated to its implementation, and we have tasked the PHA and the HSCB, as commissioners of alcohol and drugs services, to develop a commissioning framework for alcohol and drugs services across Northern Ireland. The purpose of the framework is to improve the consistency of services provided and to ensure that they are in line with best practice and emerging evidence. The framework was first issued for consultation in March 2013 and is being finalised in the light of responses received. We would appreciate it if any Member wishes to make a response. It is anticipated that that work will be finalised in August 2013.

2.15 pm

Mrs McKeivitt: I thank the Minister for his replies so far. Has the number of people presenting with alcohol dependency increased or decreased in the past five years? Has the number of programmes in the trusts across the North increased or decreased? Will the Minister compare the two figures?

Mr Poots: There has been some more positive news about people drinking. Fewer people are binge drinking. The proportion of men in Northern Ireland who drink over the recommended weekly limit has fallen from 33% in 2002-03 to 27% in 2010-11. The proportion of adult drinkers who binge drink has fallen from 38% in 2005 to 32% in 2008 and 30% in 2011. The proportion of young people aged 11 to 16 who reported getting drunk in 2010 was 23% against a baseline of 33% in 2003. All that is positive, but it is not good enough. We need to go further. That is one reason why we are looking at a minimum price for alcohol because it is vastly cheaper than it was many years ago. Therefore, the opportunity for young people to participate in abusive drinking is very significant. We need to minimise that potential.

Illegal Drugs: Community Initiatives

4. Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the action he has taken to promote community initiatives to remove illegal drugs from the streets. (AQO 4446/11-15)

Mr Poots: Recent potential drug-related incidents, including sudden deaths, reinforce the need for my Department, the Department of Justice and the PSNI to work with our local communities to prevent and address the harm related to alcohol and drug misuse. Phase 2 of the new strategic direction for alcohol and drugs, which was launched in 2012, highlights that need. Through the strategy, a number of services are available across Northern Ireland, including education and information; prevention and early intervention; community support; harm reduction; and treatment and support.

I recently launched the RAPID — remove all prescription and illegal drugs — drug safe box in Connswater shopping centre. The initiative was developed by community and voluntary groups, Belfast City Council, the policing and community safety partnership, and the health service. Individuals can take any illegal drugs or unused prescription pills and deposit them in the drug safe box. That is a pragmatic and practical response to substance misuse and a way of removing dangerous substances from the community. The substances can also be tested to enable us to provide clear public health messages. Other drug disposal bins are available in other areas across Belfast, including four in north Belfast and Sandy Row.

Mr D McIlveen: I thank the Minister for his answers. Will he give us an update on the recent deaths in Belfast and the one in County Londonderry?

Mr Poots: Interestingly enough, in my most recent conversations, the connection between all eight deaths does not exist, other than there being eight unexplained deaths. If people are looking for a single bad batch of drugs as the problem, they may be looking in the wrong direction. We need to verify that as time goes on. There may be a series of reasons, with drugs being the potential cause in a number of them. In some instances, it may be bad drugs, and in other instances, it may just be drugs. Over 100 people a year die because of drugs — over two each week. Let us be very clear. In recent weeks, the damage that drugs can do has been highlighted. However, the truth is that drugs do damage to our communities every week. That is why I am very clear that we need to step up to ensure that we wipe out drug dealing on our streets. That involves the community, the police and the courts working hand in hand to ensure that we remove this blight from our community.

Mr McCarthy: Given the seriousness of the situation, particularly over this recent while, will the Minister consider the comments he made on the radio this morning about the PSNI? Will he consider withdrawing that statement? Perhaps an apology to the PSNI is in order.

Mr Poots: I am glad to say that I have had a conversation with the Chief Constable. He made it absolutely clear that the police will go after anyone who is engaged in drug dealing and that there should be no untouchables. That is what the community wants to hear. Whether we like it or not, there is a perception among many in our community that there are people who are untouchable: those who are known to be trading in drugs and who do not appear to be being arrested for it. Let us get the message out to the community that they need to pass the information to the police. The police expressed a very clear willingness to me at the highest level this morning to pursue such individuals. Let us go forward with that confidence.

Mr Copeland: I thank the Minister for his measured and reasoned responses thus far. Does the Minister agree that any person who procures, supplies or administers any illegal drug to any person, which results in their death, should be viewed as morally, if not legally, guilty of manslaughter at the least and murder at the worst?

Mr Poots: I indicated my views on drug dealers yesterday and today. I think that they are pernicious people, who trade in what is potentially poison. They are providing that to people in their communities. We have to go after these despicable people in a lawful way. It is not the task of paramilitary organisations to go after drug dealers, nor is it the task of paramilitary organisations to protect drug dealers; there is an element of that in certain communities. What is important is the community's response to the PSNI in giving them the appropriate information, the PSNI's response in acting on that information to bring people to justice and the courts' response in giving these criminals decent sentences as opposed to treating them with kid gloves. I do not know anybody who disagrees with me on this issue, apart from the drug dealers.

Mr McDevitt: I want to press the Minister a little. This morning, the Minister said that he would not be surprised if the police were turning "a blind eye" to the activities of some drug dealers. I ask the Minister directly and explicitly whether he still holds that view this afternoon.

Mr Poots: I have certainly had experience over the years of dealing with these issues and of taking people, who have information, to the police so it can be acted on. Over the years, I have had those experiences, and that is a position that I understand because I work in my local community. However, I had my conversation with the Chief Constable, and today it is important that we focus on where the problem lies. It lies with people who think that it is all right to sell drugs illegally for a profit. The best means of taking those people out of the equation is for the community to say, "We do not want those people and we will inform on those people to the PSNI." It will then be for the PSNI to ensure that those issues are followed up and people are brought to court.

The Chief Constable made it very clear to me that there are no untouchables and that the police will go after people if they have information. I think that we have to take his word on that and ensure that that is the case. It is for members of the Policing Board to hold the Chief Constable and others to account, and it is for the Chief Constable and other senior officers to give due regard to the Policing Board when they are held to account.

Children's Homes

5. Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how he is promoting high-quality provision in children's homes. (AQO 4447/11-15)

Mr Poots: Residential care operates as a key component of a whole-system approach to the provision of children and family care services. There remains a substantial demand for residential care services in Northern Ireland, and my Department invested £26.8m in children's residential care in 2011-12.

A recent review of children's residential care, undertaken by the Health and Social Care (HSC) Board, has now concluded and a draft report has been produced. The final report, which is due to be published in September/October 2013, will set the general direction of travel for the future provision of children's residential care services in Northern Ireland. My Department is also in the process of developing new standards for children's residential care homes, which will set the minimum standard of service provision that children and young people living in residential care can expect to receive. The standards are subject to public consultation, and it is intended that they will be published later this year. In addition, all HSC trusts operate a model of therapeutic intervention across all children's residential care facilities.

Finally, the HSC Board and the Youth Justice Agency are working jointly to establish a new forensic adolescent consultation and treatment service that will provide specialist forensic input to assist in addressing the mental health and risk management needs of young people in the residential care, secure care and juvenile justice sectors.

Miss M McIlveen: I thank the Minister for his answer. The Minister will be aware that there has been an increase in the number of looked-after children (LAC), going from 2,511 to 2,644 since 2011. Will the Minister comment on that increase and on how it compares with the rest of the United Kingdom?

Mr Poots: I thank the Member for her question. I also thank her for her ongoing interest in that particular issue and for the work that she does on it. I actually welcome the rise. People may find that somewhat surprising, but it is a demonstration that more work is being done to identify children who are in potentially neglectful or abusive situations. I want the figures to go down, but I suspect that they will have to go up before they go down, because we are doing that work.

Abuse and neglect remain the main reasons for children living apart from their families. In addition, more adolescents are becoming looked after due to family breakdown. There was also an increase of 102 young people aged 16-plus in the care system in the 2011-12 figures. That is due in part to the ageing of young people in the looked-after system. It also reflects the changes in how health and social care trusts actually respond both to young people in that age range who require intervention and to judicial expectations.

Other factors relate to changes in society. The economic downturn cannot be discounted, because it adds further pressures on families that are on the edge of the care system. There is an ongoing dilemma for the health and social care trusts as they seek to engage kinship carers as support to families but believe that, in the light of various legal judgements, the correct response is to confer looked-after children status on children. Trends in numbers of LAC can ebb and flow, with numbers recently ranging from 2,400 to the current figure of 2,644. I am confident that my social work teams are more effective than ever in identifying children who are in danger of neglect and abuse. That is something that we need to continue with to remove children from situations where harm may come to them.

Mr McCallister: Does the Minister not accept that the best outcome for children would be to speed up the adoption process? I know that a Bill is being framed, but the delays in that are significant, given that he has been Minister now for two years and there has been no progress. When are we going to see a much faster system of adoption to help protect children from having to go into residential care?

Mr Poots: I am very keen to move that legislation forward, but, of course, I need Executive approval to do so. That is a piece of legislation that I would welcome, and I think that speeding up the adoption process would be positive. I should also say that we recently held a meeting, which I convened. Minister Ford was in attendance, as were all the relevant people from the Department of Justice, including Lord Justice Maguire, as well as all the relevant people from health and social care. One of the concerns that was expressed at that meeting was that, whenever a social worker raises an issue about a child, it can take up to 11 months for that to go through the court system. Eleven months may seem a relatively short space of time for people of our age, but it may be half of a child's lifetime. That is not good enough for providing the care and security for that child that is at potential risk of neglect and abuse. It is not an issue that the Department of Justice and the Department of Health are beating each other up about. It is an issue that we need to work on and to co-operate on. I think that we had a very positive round-table meeting on that day and that more positive things will be derived from that. We will continue to work on it.

2.30 pm

Justice

Rowan Sexual Assault Referral Centre

1. Ms Brown asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the appointment of independent sexual violence advisers to the sexual assault referral centre. (AQO 4457/11-15)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): The establishment of the Rowan, Northern Ireland's regional sexual assault referral centre (SARC), is a significant step forward in supporting all victims of sexual violence and abuse. It will provide victims of rape and serious sexual assault with a safe, secure and confidential environment. It is a key initiative to tackle sexual violence and abuse and is an excellent example of partnership-working between all the relevant Departments and agencies. Sexual violence is a serious problem in Northern Ireland, and it affects people from all cultural, social and ethnic backgrounds and across all age groups.

Independent sexual violence advisers (ISVAs) are intended to be specialist support workers who assist and help victims of sexual assault and abuse in the weeks and months after an assault. They will be accessed through the SARC. To secure funding for the ISVA service, my Department is required to produce a robust business case, which will depend on operational data collected over some months.

Work has been ongoing between my officials and key stakeholders to define and develop the roles of the ISVA and any links to the independent domestic violence advisers, given the link between domestic and sexual violence. Those roles will evolve as the Rowan becomes fully operational.

It is therefore not possible at this stage to provide a definitive time frame for the appointment of ISVAs. That will be dependent on producing a business case and on securing funding. In the interim, the Rowan will refer victims, with their consent, to the appropriate support services.

Ms Brown: I thank the Minister for his answer, although I am somewhat disappointed by it. I am sure that he will agree that the role of ISVAs in the SARC is crucial and that many other SARCs have seen the benefits of having such advisers. Hopefully, ISVAs will become a reality in the SARC so that they can help victims of sexual abuse and rape to cope with their circumstances and also help to secure convictions. Will the Minister support those comments?

Mr Ford: I thank Ms Brown for her comments. When it comes to ensuring best evidence, the important work is that which is done in the SARC rather than the ongoing work of the ISVAs. As I pointed out, there is also the issue of referral, which affects those agencies already in operation.

The Member highlighted the issue of ISVAs operating in some other SARCs. I am certainly aware of some across the water that have taken many years to get ISVAs approved. I hope that we will examine the business case significantly faster than that.

Mr Lynch: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Will the Minister give an assurance that no victim will suffer as a result of there being no advisers in place?

Mr Ford: I can certainly give Mr Lynch an assurance that the opening of the Rowan is a very positive and significant step forward in meeting the needs of victims of sexual violence. It will assist in the medical care and counselling of victims and in providing criminal evidence on their behalf. Obviously, we will have to examine the issue of the business case to see exactly how the SARC will develop in the future.

Mr Kinahan: I thank the Minister for his answers. I find it strange that the Rowan was opened without the business case having been done. Why was it not worked on beforehand?

Mr Ford: I am afraid that the answer is very simple. The business case requires operational data, which cannot come through until the centre is in operation.

Mr Deputy Speaker: I should have told Members that questions 2 and 11 have been withdrawn.

Community Safety College

3. Mr Boylan asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the Desertcreat college capital project. (AQO 4459/11-15)

Mr Ford: I informed the Assembly on 21 May that the construction tender cost was some £30 million higher than budget and that the project board had established a working group that sought measures to deliver cost reductions while not affecting the overall operational functionality of the college. A business case addendum with options based on that work was presented to the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (DHSSPS) and my Department for consideration. Several issues were identified with the addendum, and the project board revised the document and resubmitted it accordingly. Various cost-saving measures have been identified that do not significantly reduce the functionality of the college. This business case addendum is being considered by the two Departments.

Although it is not yet possible to give a new final cost for the build, I can report that substantial progress has been made in reducing the cost overrun; but it remains likely that the final cost will exceed the original budget. Should this addendum demonstrate that an integrated college at Desertcreat represents value for money and is affordable, it will be submitted to the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP) for approval.

Mr Boylan: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for his answer. Does he agree that a breakdown in relationship should not become a ready made excuse for a blockage to progress reform, given that questions 3 and 10 were supposed to be grouped?

Mr Ford: I agree with Mr Boylan that there should be no breakdown in the progress that is necessary to make the college project go forward. That is why intensive work has been done by the two Departments. That work is continuing to ensure that we get the best possible value for money and the best possible training facility for the three services.

Mr McGlone: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as a fhreagraí. I thank the Minister for his answers. In light of recent revelations and the need to protect the public interest by delivering a good project and protect the public purse and payment to contractors, will the Minister outline the due diligence that has been exercised during the procurement process? Could some sort of added protection be given through the introduction of project management accounts for the scheme?

Mr Ford: Although I take Mr McGlone's point, I cannot go into detail because much of what he is asking for is the concern of the project board. My concern is to ensure that we get the best possible value for money and that we have a viable working project that operates for the benefit of, as far as possible, local businesses, in providing for the construction, and the ongoing needs of the services.

Mrs Overend: I thank the Minister for his responses. Is he concerned that the level of reduction and scaling back in the proposed works at Desertcreat will result in a project with facilities much reduced from those originally proposed?

Mr Ford: I assure Mrs Overend that that is not the case. The cutbacks have been done in such a way as to not damage the functionality of the college. I have previously highlighted some areas where cutbacks have been possible, and we are fine tuning the revised addendum to the business case, which will ensure that we get something that is value for money. The detailed work is being pursued by officials in the two Departments.

Mr Givan: Is the Minister still confident that he will be cutting the first sod in October this year, as previously indicated? Is he also aware of any investigation into any aspect of the design, procurement or development of the scheme that relates to financial matters of a potentially criminal nature, which has been requested?

Mr Ford: No, I am not aware of an investigation of criminal matters relating to financial management, though Members are well aware of the problems that arose around the consultancy regarding costs. As to whether I am confident that I will be cutting the first sod in October, we hope that the contract will be on site in the autumn of this year. Whether the project board invites me or the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety is, of course, up to its members.

Youth Integration

4. Mrs McKevitt asked the Minister of Justice what strategies his Department has to improve youth integration. (AQO 4460/11-15)

Mr Ford: I am committed to working with my Executive colleagues to build a society that young people feel they can belong to and, in turn, can make a positive contribution to. My officials are engaging with their counterparts across Departments to continue to develop those links. For example, the Youth Justice Agency is providing practical support for a wide range of youth and community based organisations across Northern Ireland, particularly in interface areas, to deliver a range of initiatives, with the specific aim of diverting young people away from offending. Those interventions include adventure learning and sporting activities, residential courses, family support and educational activities.

The Probation Board also works directly with youth and community groups and has developed links to facilitate unpaid community service by young people for the benefit of their local communities. The Probation Board also funds activities, including those that aid youth integration and diversion and desistance from offending.

The Department also contributes to summer interventions through its Priority Youth Interventions initiative, which is specifically targets engaging with those young people who are most at risk of becoming involved in interface violence or are most at risk when community tensions are heightened. That initiative has made funding of £100,000 available this year, through policing and community safety partnerships (PCSPs).

Mrs McKevitt: I thank the Minister for his reply. Programmes that promote youth integration to reduce the number of young people who get involved in sectarian violence are very important. Does the Minister have a timescale for rolling out the programmes that his Department is offering to communities? Will the neighbourhood policing teams across our region be delivering those programmes?

Mr Ford: I thank Mrs McKevitt for those positive words about the work that is being done. It is clearly a very significant issue at this time of the year. We need to do all that we can to divert young people from getting involved in violence, given the potential consequences in the form of damage to their future lives. I cannot give a direct indication of the roll-out of funding since, as I said, most of these projects are delivered by either PCSPs or arm's-length bodies, such as the Youth Justice Agency or the Probation Board. However, if there are specific issues that she wishes me to investigate, I will happily do so.

Prison Service: Temporary Promotions

5. Mr McKay asked the Minister of Justice how many positions in the Prison Service are currently filled by people who are temporarily promoted. (AQO 4461/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Prison Service currently has 104 individuals on temporary promotion. Of those, 78 are at Prison Service operational grades and 26 are at general service grades.

Mr McKay: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Will the Minister give the House an assurance that the impact of those 104 temporary promotions will not be the prevention of full implementation of the reform package?

Mr Ford: I can happily give Mr McKay that assurance, because, in fact, a number of the temporary promotions are related to the reform package. For example, of the 21 Prison Service staff currently promoted to principal officer grade, 16 are on short-term training posts related to the intake of new officers and the need to provide additional staffing to the college. Others are related to temporary work as we work to implement the target operating model that will deal with the overall management and staffing of the prison. As we look to the months later in this year and seek to put formal promotions in place, we will see a significant reduction in the number of temporary promotions. A number of those posts will come to an end completely. It was a necessary stage to go through to put new staffing structures in place, and it is an essential part of the prison reform programme.

Mr Elliott: Does the Minister accept that there is huge disappointment among many locally recruited Prison Service staff that they have been overlooked for promotion? What action is he taking to address that?

Mr Ford: I do not quite take Mr Elliott's point on the basis that temporary promotions are offered to existing staff under the normal Civil Service procedures for making temporary promotions. Therefore, existing staff were eligible for those posts. Existing staff will also be eligible to apply when we move to make those posts substantive. So, I do not see how existing staff are negatively affected in any way.

Mr A Maginness: One hundred and four temporary promotions seems a significant number. It also seems that that is contributing to a degree of uncertainty among current staff about their future. Would the Minister not prefer these matters to be resolved by way of permanent appointments as soon as possible?

Mr Ford: Yes; I agree with Mr Maginness. I wish the posts to be resolved as soon as possible. My understanding is that in excess of 70 of the posts are likely to be resolved in the autumn.

Lord Morrow: My question is not dissimilar to Mr Maginness's, but I would like the Minister to elaborate a wee bit. There are 104 members of staff in temporary positions. Does the Minister not accept that that brings a considerable degree of instability to the whole prison regime? The confidence of the whole Prison Service is affected. I have received much representation on the issue, as I am sure many other MLAs have.

Mr Ford: I do not believe that it brings instability. The reality is that we are going through a significant programme of reform. As Members will know, we had a voluntary early retirement scheme that had over 500 applications. We hope to be able to allow all of those 500 people to go, subject to finance, in the relatively short period of the reform programme.

That is all resulting in significant change. Implementation of the target operating model is producing differences in the way in which work is to be done in different units in the three prisons, which is why there have been a number of temporary promotions as well as the training posts that I referred to earlier. The fact that we are seeking to rationalise that and deal with the great majority of them in this calendar year shows that we are managing to make the changes effectively and speedily.

Bangor Courthouse

6. Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Justice whether he will delay placing Bangor courthouse on the open property market to enable him to explore the potential for it to become a community asset transfer project. (AQO 4462/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service is working with Land and Property Services to secure an alternative use for Bangor hearing centre. A marketing strategy is being developed in line with government guidelines on the disposal of surplus public sector property. The community asset transfer policy is currently subject to consultation. Implementation is unlikely to be effected before the autumn. The time required to progress both processes should allow any interested party to register interest in the property. I am aware that the Member has visited the hearing centre, and I have written to him to offer a meeting with my officials.

Mr Agnew: I thank the Minister for his answer and for agreeing to a meeting with officials from his Department. When looking at community asset transfer, the Minister will, of course, ensure that his Department gets good for value for money from any future use of the site, but does he agree that we need to look at public value and value to the community, not just pounds and pence?

Mr Ford: I remind Mr Agnew that, whatever his enthusiasm may be as a Member for North Down, I am required to go by the guidance that Land and Property Services gives on the valuation of the building. It is therefore not a matter of the Department of Justice seeking to be generous and provide community benefit on its own. I suggest that he probably needs to continue the work being done with North Down Borough Council and others to see whether we can find an alternative use.

Mr Dunne: Given the substandard court provision in Newtownards, has the Justice Minister any plans for a new, purpose-built facility for the north Down and Ards area?

Mr Ford: It is difficult to answer a question that starts with an utterly unacceptable premise. The accommodation in Newtownards is not substandard.

Mr Cree: Have any informal discussions been held with the local council on the issue, bearing in mind the imminence of RPA?

Mr Ford: I can confirm to Mr Cree that discussions have been held between my officials and officers of North Down Borough Council. I know that there is potential interest in developing arts and community use of the courthouse, but these are early, relatively informal discussions.

Prisoners

7. Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Justice how many hours per day are prisoners locked up. (AQO 4463/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Prison Service has been aware of criticism that prisoners are being locked in their cell for too long. It is recognised that a worthwhile and productive regime is to the benefit of prisoners' resettlement and general well-being. The implementation of the new target operating model has had a positive impact, and further improvements will be delivered when NIPS has the correct number of staff. Governors report that the number of regime restrictions so far this summer is well down on the same period last year. However, regime restrictions increase in the context of high levels of staff sickness absence and in the context of staff deciding not to work overtime. Steps have been taken to ensure that resources are targeted to provide for a core day between 8.00 am and 7.45 pm, and they are showing improvements in the time out of cell. The length of time a prisoner is locked in their cell can vary for a number of reasons, including whether he or she is engaged in employment or education. Two hundred and eighty prisoners assessed as low risk, which is over 15% of the prison population, are not locked in at all. During the night, they are secured on their landing but can freely associate with others. That regime is available in certain locations in all three establishments.

Mr McMullan: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for his answer. The prison review oversight group expressed concerns about long periods of isolation affecting prisoners' physical and mental health. How will the new target operating model address that problem?

Mr Ford: I appreciate Mr McMullan's point, but he highlights what came from the prison review team, and significant progress has been made since. In particular, a lot of work is being done on the team's recommendation to make Hydebank Wood a secure college. Work is being done using the Foyleview unit at Magilligan to enhance the opportunities that prisoners have to engage in constructive activity. We are looking at reopening the prisoner assessment unit (PAU) at Crumlin Road for prisoners leaving Magilligan, so a lot of significant work is going on. As I highlighted, we have recently managed to increase out-of-cell time significantly.

Mrs D Kelly: The Minister has not given us any definitive timetable for improvements other than to say that work is ongoing. I am interested to know whether there is any correlation between the high number of self-harm incidents in prisons and those prisoners who have experienced excessive lock-down time.

Mr Ford: Mrs Kelly certainly makes a very significant point. I cannot give a specific mathematical correlation between them, but we are all aware that those prisoners who are most vulnerable suffer particularly if there are excessive times of in-cell only. That is why so much work is being done and why we have also the Donard centre in Maghaberry to deal with those who are most vulnerable. Work is ongoing, but I entirely acknowledge her point that a lot more is still to be done.

Mr Dickson: Minister, I welcome the comments that you made on the provision of a core day for prisoners. Will you outline further the activities that are planned for purposeful activity, and the benefits of that for prisoners?

Mr Ford: I thank Mr Dickson for pointing out that it is a matter not simply of having cells open during the core day but of the opportunity to provide purposeful activity. Significant work is being done on learning and skills, particularly in Hydebank Wood, to give people more opportunity to engage in the kind of activity that will benefit them when they leave. For example, we are hoping that we will have an external provider taking responsibility for outsourced learning and skills services in Hydebank at the start of the next academic year in the autumn of 2014. Similar work is being done using the learning and skills centre that was opened relatively recently at Maghaberry, and significant work is being done at Magilligan to give people the opportunity to engage in work as they move to the Foyleview unit towards the end of their sentence. Those are all examples of work being done, but there is absolutely no doubt that a lot more needs to be done, which is where some of the early discussions that have been held with business organisations interested in providing training in prison and employment opportunities outside will be particularly beneficial, if they come through. All of them are currently at an early stage.

Mr Beggs: Will the Minister outline what actions he is taking to ensure that destructive activity does not occur during excessive periods of time when prisoners are locked up and that, in particular, availability of drugs, which ultimately leads to destructive activity outside prisons, is targeted?

Mr Ford: Again, Mr Beggs has highlighted one of the problems that exist across this whole society, and prisons are not immune from it. A significant programme has been developed looking at the issue of targeted searching to deal with drugs and, indeed, with other contraband. That, rather than merely searching by routine, has produced some benefits in recent months. The intelligence-led approach appears to be having some benefits, but it is clear that action needs to be taken continually, both on prisoners who go out on leave or to court and, indeed, on prison visits, where there are considerable attempts to smuggle drugs in. A very robust effort is required by the Prison Service to defeat that.

Criminal Justice: Security of Employees

8. Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice what discussions he has had with the Chief Constable regarding the level of threat to people working in justice-related positions from dissident republican terrorist organisations. (AQO 4464/11-15)

Mr Ford: I have regular meetings with the Chief Constable on a range of issues concerning security. That includes the level of threat from all terrorist organisations to different groups. In addition, my Department regularly keeps under review the level of threat to individuals holding justice-related positions to ensure that personal security measures can be provided and advice issued, as required, to those individuals within my ministerial remit.

Mr Campbell: Will the Justice Minister ensure that keeping it regularly under review will include, for example, personnel who have applied to get personal protection weapons because of their work in the justice domain in various parts of Northern Ireland that are under threat, particularly from dissident republicans? Will those personal protection weapons be given sympathetic consideration?

Mr Ford: I am afraid that the Member will have to take that question to another place and ask it of the Minister of State in the Northern Ireland Office, who has that responsibility.

Ms McCorley: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as a fhreagraí. Is the Minister satisfied that all necessary steps are being taken to ensure that people's safety is not compromised?

Mr Ford: I certainly think that the steps that can be taken by my Department are being taken. Clearly, however, there are issues, as I have just highlighted to Mr Campbell, that fall to the Northern Ireland Office, not to the Department of Justice. Most of those are the type of issues that have been highlighted by the two Members. Where a matter specifically falls to our employees — for example, home protection for prison officers — action has been taken in recent months to address that as best we can.

Women's Prison

9. Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Justice for an assurance that the new prison for women will not be delayed in the event of any budget reallocation. (AQO 4465/11-15)

Mr Ford: As I informed the Assembly on 19 March, my intention is to develop a new separate facility for women offenders, combining provision for women who require secure custody and facilities for women for whom a community-based approach is more appropriate. NIPS officials are progressing a business case that will be subject to DFP scrutiny. However, the current planning assumption is that the development of a new women's facility will fall into the next Budget period. Therefore, funding will be determined as part of the Executive's next Budget process.

I am pleased to advise that Prison Service officials are investigating the potential to convert Alderwood House on the Hydebank Wood site into a step-down facility for women prisoners who are nearing the end of their sentence. Alderwood House is currently occupied by the Probation Board, which is sourcing alternative accommodation. Should everything go according to plan, the facility could be in use some time around spring 2014.

Mr McElduff: Go raibh maith agat. What measures are being taken in the interim to ensure that the particular needs of female prisoners are being met?

Mr Ford: There is certainly a specific regime that is as appropriate as can be for women prisoners in Ash House at Hydebank Wood. The Prison Service recognises the difficulties of managing women on that site. If Mr McElduff has other issues or particular points to make, I will happily address them, but I certainly believe that, given the constraints on the existing site, very significant changes are being made to meet the needs of women. We are doing our best to manage circumstances under those difficulties.

Ms Lo: Last week, the Minister announced a review of security classifications for women prisoners. Will such flexibility in how women prisoners are categorised be extended to the new facilities that are being developed?

Mr Ford: I thank my colleague for reminding me of the answer that I should have given to Mr McElduff a few moments ago. Yes; part of the issue is that because the security classification is developed for the great majority of our prisoners, namely adult men, it has been applied to young offenders and women without necessarily considering their particular circumstances. The review will enable us to look at what the real needs are, because I think that there is a general assumption that a significant number of women who are in Ash House would have a very low security classification and do not require the sort of facilities there. The step towards using Alderwood House is one way in which we can develop things to get the right classification and the right level of support for vulnerable women who are in our custody.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Mr Alex Maskey is not in his place to ask question 10. I call Ms Bronwyn McGahan.

DOJ: G8 Summit

12. Ms McGahan asked the Minister of Justice for a breakdown of the costs of the G8 summit in relation to his Department's budget. (AQO 4468/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Government are responsible for compiling the total cost of hosting the G8 summit. As I understand it, the total policing and security cost is in the region of £70 million to £80 million. Members will be aware that the Minister of Finance and Personnel announced funding of £14.5 million in the June monitoring round to meet the total cost to the PSNI.

Ms McGahan: Go raibh maith agat. I thank the Minister for his answer. Given that some of the expense was incurred through the purchase of drones by the PSNI for use during the G8 summit, will the Minister indicate to the Assembly under what legal authority and licensing agreement the PSNI trained for and used that new equipment?

3.00 pm

Mr Ford: The only answer that I can give to that question is that it is an operational issue and should be referred to the Chief Constable.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Time is up.

Mrs D Kelly: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. Given that this is the last Question Time before recess, will the Speaker investigate the number of questions, questions for written answer in particular, that remain unanswered by Ministers during this Assembly term? I tabled a question to the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure on 15 May. The Minister had 10 days to make a response, and as yet I have received none. That is most unsatisfactory.

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member's comments are noted.

Committee Business

Assembly and Executive Review Committee: 'Review of d'Hondt, Community Designation and Provisions for Opposition'

Debate resumed on motion:

That this Assembly notes the report of the Assembly and Executive Review Committee on its 'Review of d'Hondt, Community Designation and Provisions for Opposition'.—[Mr Moutray (The Chairperson of the Assembly and Executive Review Committee).]

Mr Dickson: It has been frustrating to be involved in the drafting of this report. It was hard to find consensus, and, consequently, there is little in it that makes progress on the issues that we were looking at. However, it would be remiss of me not to place on record my thanks to the staff, the Chair and the Deputy Chair, who led us through those issues, and, in particular, the people who contributed to the report.

It is clear that some parties were not engaged with the review and gave incomplete answers to questions about how they envisaged the system should work in the future. That made it difficult to develop a coherent set of proposals for the Assembly to debate. In many cases, we were unable to reach consensus because some parties were not willing to make their positions clear or to engage in compromise.

As Members are aware, the report looked at d'Hondt, opposition and community designation. Lack of consensus on the establishment of a formal opposition was based partly on the idea that parties are free to opt out of their entitlement to Executive positions. There is a need to progress and move towards more normal politics in Northern Ireland. That means that we must eventually move towards voluntary coalition, negotiated between parties on the basis of a common Programme for Government. I believe that any incoming Executive should develop a Programme for Government between them and before they are subject to a cross-community vote in the Assembly. That would lead to a coherent Executive programme rather than to 12 different Executive programmes. It would also lead to better government. At the very least, the incoming Executive could be required to present a heads of agreement document. Until we can agree on a move to government and opposition politics, that would at least provide for a more effective Executive.

Unfortunately, the Committee was also unable to agree on a replacement for community designation, a point that Mr Beggs made well earlier in the debate. The Alliance Party feels that there are four particular problems with the current system: the institutionalisation of sectarian division; the inequality of votes between elected MLAs; the inability to adjust to changing demographic and political circumstances; and the ability of political majorities to hold the process to ransom. The introduction of a system of weighted-majority voting would ensure cross-community support while avoiding some of those difficulties.

The Committee was again unable to reach agreement on recommending moves away from using d'Hondt to appoint Committee Chairs. I have long felt that a form of election by STV would be a better system for the appointment of Chairs.

The Committee agreed that further work on the role of petitions of concern needs to be undertaken. The events last week, when the DUP abused the petition of concern process to block environmental protections and community empowerment in the planning process, demonstrate the clear need for petitions of concern to be reviewed. Whatever anyone's position on those amendments — the Assembly made its position clear — it cannot be argued that this is a cross-community matter. This has led to a situation in which petitions of concern are now used simply to hold up issues that are opposed by the DUP and others. Eventually, normal politics must resume in Northern Ireland, with government, opposition and voluntary coalition. The current system does not allow for that, and the report, regrettably, does not move us much further forward.

Mr Campbell: I welcome the report and the discussions that were ongoing throughout the period. A number of Members alluded to the degree of consensus that emerged on a range of issues. Earlier in the debate today and in the debate yesterday on North/South issues, Mr McDevitt and one or two others kept referring to the Belfast Agreement and its place in providing the mechanism that made us arrive at where we are today. I can recall that, many decades ago, more than I care to remember — I think that there are only four Members in the House now who came in in 1982: Mr Allister for North Antrim; myself; Mr Robinson, the First Minister; and Mr Wells — we were all trying to arrive at a system of government that could encompass some form of responsibility across the divide where some sort of stability would emerge. Unfortunately, for a variety of reasons, that did not work out, and we are where we are now. I just wish that people would not keep referring back to one agreement that has long since past its sell-by date and keep referring to it as if it was as fresh and fragrant as the morning dew. However, be that as it may, that is what they want to do.

Consensus was reached in a number of areas, and yet there are other areas where consensus was not reached. I am sure people will ask why the Committee did not reach a greater degree of consensus than it did. Although there are a number of reasons why that is the case, there is one overriding reason: the differences of outlook and opinion among political parties are considerable. My party believes in trying to build this structure and have it more deeply embedded in the United Kingdom, and another large party wants to try to detach us from the United Kingdom. As that party — Sinn Féin — distances itself slightly, hesitantly and with some difficulty from its terrorist, murderous past, progress can be made. As long as it keeps doing that, we will keep making progress. Some people might try to decry the progress, but if there is progress, we will acknowledge it and keep making progress. That is part of the reason why we cannot reach a wider consensus, but we will keep working at it. No matter how slow the learners are, we will keep working at it, regardless of how long it takes. That is what politics is about, and that is what we have to try to do. We have to try to achieve agreement and consensus to try to change the current position.

I think that most people would accept and concede that we need an opposition, and I want to confine my concluding remarks to that. We need to have an effective opposition in place because the last thing that people want to see is some sort of bureaucratic system here in Stormont where most of the parties comprise 90% of the elected representatives and make up an Executive where there is no challenge and no opposition, apart from the odd question for written answer about the cost of mint imperials in the Chamber. Apart from that, there is no effective challenging opposition to exercise the minds of those who are in government to try to ensure that they continue to make progress.

There was an issue about how effective the d'Hondt system was. Mr McDevitt alluded to the fact that it was widely agreed that it was the best method, although I do not think that that was the case. In the absence of another system on which we can get consensus, we are left with d'Hondt. However, that is not quite the same as saying that it is the agreed method for all of us. There is more progress to be made, and, hopefully, when we reconvene in the autumn, we can pick up where we have left off today.

Mr Hamilton: It seems that the end-of-term feeling about this place has well and truly kicked in. I suspect that other Members are in their rooms wearing their own clothes and playing board games as though it were the end of a school term. [Laughter.] There seems to be a few more people here than when this debate started before Question Time. At one point before Question Time, there were not sufficient Members in the Chamber to form an Executive, never mind an opposition.

I welcome the debate and the opportunity to contribute to it. Reports of the Assembly and Executive Review Committee that come to the Chamber rarely have total agreement, or even partial agreement, such is the nature of the Committee. In my shared time on it, I have often referred to it as the Campbell doctrine. Decisions are not taken in the Committee; it is the Committee's role to scope out options, possibilities and areas of some consensus. I think that if people were to take an objective read of the report that is being submitted today, they would see that there are some areas — precious few, perhaps — where there is some consensus between all parties or the majority of parties about how we can move forward on those three important and interlinked issues.

To elaborate a little bit more on what Mr Campbell said, where my party's position is concerned, we take a view on these issues that has been consistent from the start. The issues are d'Hondt, opposition and community designation, which are what Mark Durkan referred to in a speech in Oxford a number of years ago as the "ugly scaffolding" of the Belfast Agreement. It is an ugly scaffolding that I think, and as most people would agree, needs to be dismantled.

As a party, we believe that it would be a sign of a more normal democracy if we were to have a properly functioning opposition as well as a government in this place. We believe that an opposition function should be facilitated in the House. We believe that a voluntary form of government would be far better than that which is enforced on us using the d'Hondt system. We believe that you cannot move forward to the sort of society, politics and democracy that we want if the very seeds of our division, through sectarianism, are enshrined by the fact that on day one, when somebody is elected into this Chamber, they have to designate themselves as unionist, nationalist or other.

I want to dwell, as Mr Campbell did, on opposition, which I suspect will probably be what most Members will want to talk about during this debate. One area of consensus in the report is that there is an agreement among the majority of parties that sit in the Assembly and Executive Review Committee that there should be formal recognition for those parties that are entitled to be in government but that opt out of it. That concerns additional speaking rights, speaking time and time for business in the House. I think that party leaders can build on that agreement in their discussions on how we move forward on this issue.

One of the interesting things that we discovered as a Committee while we were investigating and conducting our review was that smaller, self-styled opposition parties in this House are well catered for and better catered for financially than other small parties and one-Member outfits in other Parliaments, including the Scottish Parliament. So the evil regime that resides in this place has been much more benign for smaller parties than perhaps some of them would think.

I also want to make the point that although I think that having an opposition in this place would be a good, positive thing and would be a sign of progress, it is not the answer to the problems that we have. To have an opposition that would make a difference, it would have to be an effective opposition. It would have to be an opposition that had a coherence and some policies to offer people as an alternative government. I do not accept for a second that the system of government that we have is as effective as it should be, but merely having an opposition is not in itself the answer to the problems that we have. It is the ugly scaffolding that causes the blockages, the delays, the inefficiency and the ability not to respond to things as quickly as we would want to. That is what needs to be dismantled first. The creation of an opposition will not necessarily lead to the problems that we have been answered. We will have some people who will —

3.15 pm

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is almost up.

Mr Hamilton: I am sure that the contributions of some of the smaller parties will be about their dissatisfaction at what is being put forward by the report and at the lack of movement, but as we listen to what they say —

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr Hamilton: — Members need to remember to ask how they would achieve the objectives that they set out.

Mr McCallister: It was very good of Mr Hamilton to predict what I am going to say. Our new Finance Minister is a mind reader already.

It is fair to say that the report is a missed opportunity. Very little of it moves the debate on in any significant or meaningful way. All the areas that need to be looked at, which all contributors seem to be saying we should be looking at and talking about, appear to be pushed down the track. Members are saying, "Yes, we will look at them, and we will talk about them, and we will talk a bit more." Mr Campbell suggested that we will pick it up again in the autumn and talk a bit more, but there has been no real agreement on where the long-term strategy should go on this.

I take the point about the big issue of designation. I agree with Mr Hamilton's point that it is not a helpful situation at the minute that we designate as unionist, nationalist or other. In fact, Mr Dickson's point is that his designation does not count for anything: in a cross-community vote, his vote does not matter. He is simply keeping up his voting record. To all intents and purposes, that is all that it achieves for him.

There were other issues raised about the very fabric of an opposition. Mr Hamilton made a point about needing an opposition, but he said that it needs to have policies and to look and feel like an alternative. I accept that, but, at that point, you have to acknowledge that to do all those things, you will have to resource some of it. You will have to give an opposition speaking rights. You will have to make sure that it is in a fit state to challenge not only the governing parties but the entire machinery and apparatus of government that it will be up against. That is how you will get proper scrutiny of and provide a proper, credible alternative to the Government. Those are the two key things that an opposition must, and can, do.

Mr Beggs: Does the Member accept that there was a fair degree of consensus in Committee on starting to move towards some form of opposition, except by Sinn Féin, which is quoted as saying that it does:

"not see a need for any sort of formal opposition, or an informal one for that matter."

Given that it seems to favour some form of North Korean junta, how do you propose that we move forward?

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member has an additional minute.

Mr McCallister: Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker. Yes, it is no great shock that Sinn Féin has traditionally had more of a North Korean, politburo, let-everyone-agree-with-the-Sinn-Féin-line-and-applaud-loudly style. That is the main Sinn Féin mantra. What we as other political parties have to do is keep on making the argument that although, yes, it got us from where we were in 1998 and has made progress to now, the system has outlived its usefulness. It is now time that the Assembly evolved, came of age and moved to normalise our politics, because the entrenched division that we have of unionist, nationalist and other is filtering down to our communities and is reflected in everything that we do.

Look at how we can trigger petitions of concern. To what do we get petitions of concern? We get them to the Caravans Bill, the Planning Bill and just about everything that we can imagine, because one party has the required number of seats to trigger them. It does not matter how often it abuses that process, for it can still do it. We get petitions of concern on numerous things, and, of course, that triggers the situation in which Mr Dickson's vote does not count. Is that a useful way to do business? I suggest that it is not. Does it sectarianise politics? Absolutely. At present, going by this report, we will keep doing that and heading that way.

Look at the all-inclusive Executive that Pat Sheehan was shouting about as listening to everybody. Look at what they deliver for us. We have an SDLP Minister who is now stuck with a Planning Bill that he does not really believe in or like. Right? We have an SDLP Minister who is legislating for a form of council that he does not like; which, in fact, the Ulster Unionist Party does not like and some in the DUP, I am led to believe, do not like, but, due to their North Korean-style of party management, they accept, although I am sure that none of them would say that openly.

Mr McCartney: Will the Member give way?

Mr McCallister: Certainly, if you are quick.

Mr McCartney: In true North Korean style, we tried to ensure that the Member would have speaking rights in the Assembly.

Mr McCallister: I am delighted that you have tried to let us have speaking rights in the Assembly. I want you keep that campaign going and champion the cause of NI21. [Interruption.]

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr McCallister: You also —

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Member's speaking rights have run out. [Laughter.]

Mr Allister: Here we have another non-report by the Assembly and Executive Review Committee. It goes through the motions of a few platitudes here and there, presented by a Chairman, who dutifully reads out to us what is being presented and tells us all of the work that the Committee has done. However, when, at the end of that, one evaluates the report, one sees that it does not amount to a row of beans because we have been here so many times before.

It is proof positive, yet again, that the House will never self-regulate itself into a functioning, recognisable democratic chamber because the vested interest is such that clutching all power by those who are in power is the overriding consideration. Yes: they can afford to pay a little lip service and say, "Oh yes: we would like to have an opposition", but, in the same breath, just in case anyone would get out of line, they remind us, like Mr Hamilton did, how benign the dictatorship has been to the small parties by throwing them a few pounds to survive. I do not think that that washed with very many people.

In the report, I read talk about a technical group. Last autumn, in the Committee on Procedures, I proposed that we should put in motion measures to allow for a technical group. Who voted that down? It was the ruling cabal of the DUP and Sinn Féin. Frankly, it does not impress me to now find some token talk about a technical group when the very parties that control the House blocked that move, prevented it from already being in place and, now, say that, perhaps, it could be considered.

There is not a word in the report about revising the ludicrous situation in which only Executive parties are allowed to sit on the Business Committee, which determines the business of the House and ensures that no one from these Benches ever gets any business on to the Floor of the House. There is not a word to say that, perhaps, we should just allow the six Members who are outside the Executive parties to have a voice on the Business Committee. Oh no: we could not do that.

It is no surprise, of course, that Sinn Féin is the party that champions the rejection of opposition. We are all too familiar with how the republican movement deals with opposition.

The bullet in the head in terrorism has its parallel in the opposition from Sinn Féin in dealing with the very suggestion of an opposition in the House.

Then, of course, we have some who pretend that they would like to move away from the architecture of the Belfast Agreement — the great pretenders in the House who pretend either that the Belfast Agreement does not exist or that they are not its prime implementers — when the truth is that they are its primary props, and without their propping role in the Assembly, the structures of the Belfast Agreement would not be in daily operation in the House.

Of course, such is the contempt for the basic tenets of democracy that the cheerleaders and proposers of the fact that we should even disrespect the electorate by, without notice or consultation, moving the Assembly, which was elected for four years, to five years are again the ruling cabal. So, everything about this report speaks to the suppression of democracy. [Interruption.] It is a matter of record that the Democratic Unionist Party and Sinn Féin supported the extension of the Assembly to five years to have the election in 2016. That is a matter of record. [Interruption.] What do the people matter in the view of those who have such disrespect —

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr Allister: — for democracy that they cannot even contemplate opposition —

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr Allister: — in the House, —

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member will resume his seat.

Mr Allister: — such is their aversion and such is their attachment to the iniquitous Belfast Agreement —

Mr Deputy Speaker: His time is up.

Mr Allister: — the props of the Belfast Agreement — as stated day and daily.

Mr Deputy Speaker: I ask the Member to resume his seat, please.

Mr Sheehan (The Deputy Chairperson of the Assembly and Executive Review Committee): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank Members for their contributions to the debate. As the Chairperson outlined, the Committee received and heard evidence from a wide range of academics and other stakeholders, and I echo his thanks to all who contributed to the review.

I also wish to thank those in the Scottish Parliament who shared their experience and extended their hospitality to us; it was genuinely appreciated. People often talk about opposition normalising politics, and I can assure Members that we felt very normal when our Scottish counterparts shared their opinions with us. In some ways, none of them could agree on provisions for non-Executive parties either. Indeed, I recall Members of the Scottish Parliament describing the development of their institutions as an evolutionary process.

I am aware that the report may not have satisfied all Members of the House, but I am content that it reflects the very thorough and constructive examination of these issues by the Committee. As the Chairperson highlighted, the issues raised in this review were indeed very complex.

Furthermore, the Committee was conscious that the structures here are unique, and, as Professor McCrudden highlighted, they represent an "organic whole". Therefore, it is important to take that into account when looking at potential structural and operational changes here. As the Chairperson said, the Committee was also concerned that the principles of inclusivity and power sharing be safeguarded, as stated in the review's terms of reference.

The Committee reached a number of conclusions, as set out in the report and discussed during today's debate. While some of those conclusions may state that there was no consensus in the Committee on some issues, they reflect the debate that the Committee had on the current operation of our institutions and members' views on change. Such debate is an important and useful part of the democratic process.

Two of the conclusions recommended further work. One related to provisions for technical groups, which the Committee agreed should be reviewed. The Committee will be interested in the outcome of that review. Another recommendation was that the important area of petitions of concern merited further detailed examination.

3.30 pm

I do not propose to go through Members' contributions today; they have all been recorded by Hansard. If anyone is interested, I am sure that they can read them. I thank the Committee staff, Research and Information Service staff, Hansard staff and other Assembly staff who assisted the Committee in the review and in the production of the report. I ask the Assembly to note the Committee's report.

Removing my Deputy Chair's hat for a moment, I would like to say that the discussions in Committee were mild-mannered and temperate throughout. It is somewhat disappointing, therefore, to come into the Chamber and see Members showboating when the cameras are operational. We know that some Members, particularly down in the corner, are experts in showboating. However, I will leave that to the side for the minute. We had good discussions but could not always agree. The issues are complex, and the Committee performed its task well.

By the way, this Committee has been very productive. This is the third report that it has produced inside a year. I commend the officials of the Committee for the work that they have done.

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Mr Sheehan: Sorry?

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Mr Sheehan: Mr Deputy Speaker, I speak to the Member every time I pass him. I say, "Good morning, Jim", "Hello, Jim" or "How are you, Jim?" He never, ever responds. I thought that it was on a point of principle, but I now see that it is not. However, I am not prepared to give way — no thanks. [Laughter.]

Mr McCartney: Not until he says, "Good morning".

Mr Sheehan: If you say, "Good morning" next time, I will consider it. [Laughter.] Maybe the problem is that the Member just does not like me.

In any event, Mr Deputy Speaker, I commend the report to the House and ask the Assembly to note it.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly notes the report of the Assembly and Executive Review Committee on its 'Review of d'Hondt, Community Designation and Provisions for Opposition'.

Motion made:

*That the Assembly do now adjourn.—
[Mr Deputy Speaker.]*

Adjournment

Proposed Closure of Drumcree College, Portadown

Mr Deputy Speaker: The proposer of the topic will have 15 minutes, the Minister will have 10 minutes to respond, and all other Members who wish to speak will have approximately six minutes.

Mrs D Kelly: I am indebted to my party colleagues for allowing me to raise the matter in the Assembly at this time. I am not sure whether the Minister hopes to come, given that it is also a constituency matter. I was hoping to have the last word with the Minister, but we will wait and see. Here he comes now, Mr Deputy Speaker. The Minister may or may not know that my name is Mary Dolores, two names that are very important in the Minister's life. Usually, those women have the last word in his household.

I welcome the decision by the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) to halt the closure of Drumcree College, Portadown. We in the SDLP have argued for a sustained period that the school should remain open to serve the needs of its community. I have raised the issue with my colleagues on Craigavon Borough Council, and it has been raised at the council, where cross-party meetings were sought with the Minister to impress on him the need to keep the school open. I welcome the decision by CCMS, albeit at the eleventh hour, to rethink its position on the closure of Drumcree College. The school received a letter from CCMS on Friday 26 June indicating its intention to find a way to keep it operating, albeit within a different model. This U-turn on any plans to close Drumcree will be welcome news to the school and the wider community.

Although the school is small, it is unique and strategically important in the context of the community. Drumcree College must be recognised as a good school that deserves widespread support and financial assistance from the Department of Education. Only in the past few weeks, the school learned of its all-Ireland UNESCO award for an environmental project. Yesterday, we had the privilege of meeting young Ellie Delaney, an attendee at the learning support unit who has raised over £4,800 for Headway Trust and the Rainbow Child Foundation. There is great pastoral care and community engagement as well as academic achievement in the field of maths, I believe, and a UK award in recent months.

I asked the Minister of Education on 31 May to provide me with his assessment of the consultation process on the future of Drumcree College. In response to this question, the Minister informed me that CCMS had responsibility in the first instance to manage provision in the maintained schools estate and bring forward proposals to the Department. As the process for Drumcree College was still at the initial consultation stage, he was not able to make any assessment of the process.

Over the past number of months, I have been deeply concerned at the attitude of CCMS, operating under the policy direction of the Minister of Education, who was refusing to engage with the board of governors, staff and parents associated with the college. I have received correspondence from many teachers at Drumcree College expressing their grave concern at the possible closure of the school. Teachers have told me of their fear that pupils would not receive the quality of teaching and learning they deserved in other schools in the area — not due to the efforts of those schools, however, but simply as a result of oversubscribed classes. Such oversubscription would require additional funds from the Department in order to meet the needs of the children in the other schools in the area, namely St Catherine's and St Patrick's.

The Minister has set out his key objectives as raising standards, targeting social need and building a network of strong, sustainable schools. Drumcree College provides key facilities to support its young people, including a full-time counsellor and learning mentor to engage students and develop their ambition and skills to contribute to the local economy. The removal of these services would create a state of flux in this socio-economically deprived community and rob these children of a good standard of education and support.

I am told by many in the teaching community that CCMS has not provided the level of support necessary. No statement was issued encouraging students to attend Drumcree College, and this action would have lessened the fear of parents and guardians. The Minister refers to the need to take decisions based on independent advice, yet he chooses to ignore two separate consultations for closure carried out on Drumcree College, both supporting Catholic education in Portadown. CCMS also ignored this.

This debate provides an opportunity for this House to hear from the Minister as to how this very welcome U-turn came about and provide us with the detail of the new plans he will put in place to support the college going forward. I welcome the Minister's recent statement recognising that small schools can be of strategic importance to local communities and deserve to be adequately resourced in order to meet the needs of their children. I call on the Minister, following the recognition of the importance of this school, to pledge to this House that he will do everything in his power to keep it open and functioning to meet the needs of its local community, and that, in the future, he will not be so ready to create a fearful environment for parents, pupils and staff by treating an unfounded closure.

Mr Moutray: I congratulate Mrs Kelly on securing the debate this afternoon. I support her in the sentiments that she has extended. Drumcree College has served the community in which it is based very well for many years. It is recognised as the only post-primary school in the maintained sector in Portadown. It must also be noted that, if Drumcree College were to close, this would have an impact on the local community, not only educationally but also economically in that once again, people would be forced to send their children outside Craigavon to other places for their education, and that would have a very negative impact on the community.

In my role as mayor of Craigavon in 2010-11, I visited Drumcree College and was tremendously impressed by Mr Bullock, his staff and the children who were in attendance. I received a very warm welcome and I came into a school that was bright and happy. I think I was there on a European day or something like that, and I had a great experience and went away feeling that this was an educational establishment that was working. We must remember that the area of Portadown in which it is located has had many problems over the years, and Drumcree College, as far as I was concerned, was a beacon of light in that area in many times that were very dark.

I pay special tribute to the learning support unit in Drumcree. I also met Ellie Delaney when she was up here yesterday. I was delighted to meet her and some other people from the school. That unit in the college does some excellent work in preparing young people for later life. I looked on the internet earlier today at the skills areas that they receive training in. Among them are information and communication technology (ICT), horticulture, media training and other skills. All those things are so important in training young people as they go through school and into work.

At the end of the day, I hope that the decision not to close the school will be stood by in the years ahead. It is envisaged that population numbers will increase significantly from 2015 on. There will be demand for Drumcree College in the days that lie ahead. I wish the school all the very best. I am pleased that I have had the opportunity to speak in this debate.

Mr Gardiner: First, let me record my congratulations to Mrs Dolores Kelly, who has done so much to fight the corner of Drumcree College in Portadown. She deserves praise for her persistence and hard work.

The whole state of education is in flux after 15 years' tenure of the education Ministry by Sinn Féin. Where it found peace, it has brought about conflict, uncertainty and discord. Nowhere is that more true than in my constituency of Upper Bann. Not only was Drumcree threatened with closure — hopefully, that has been reversed — but the Dickson plan, the mainstay of education in north Armagh for the past 40 years, is under direct threat. The thing that concerns me most about education change sponsored by Sinn Féin is the loss of opportunity that it represents for different groups of young people. In the case of Drumcree, it would have been a loss to children from a socially deprived background. In the case of the destruction of the Dickson plan, it will be a loss of two of the Province's best grammar schools, serving children from broadly pro-unionist backgrounds.

The Education Minister's plan to dismantle the Dickson plan in north Armagh is, I believe, the latest move in the cultural war that Sinn Féin is waging against unionism. Just as Drumcree was a vehicle to address social deprivation and educational disadvantage at the very place where that disadvantage and deprivation was happening, the closure of the two successful grammar schools in Lurgan and Portadown will see the shutting off of the life chances for a whole generation of children from broadly pro-unionist backgrounds. I believe that Sinn Féin wants to turn them into a sort of underclass and to shut down their life chances. It is not just the policy of Sinn Féin that I object to, but the way in which it is implementing it. It does not build up; it pulls down. It does not reinforce; it undermines. It should be building on the excellence that already exists in the system, not trying to destroy it. The principle that should guide educational change should be to retain what is working well in the system and build up the parts of the system that are not. Let us hope that the revisiting of the Drumcree decision is a sign that things will be changing.

Mr Anderson: I, too, congratulate Mrs Kelly on securing the debate today. From the very outset, I thought that I was in the wrong debate; I thought that I was a couple of weeks behind, when we were hearing about the Dickson plan. I welcome Mr Gardiner coming late in the day to discuss the Dickson plan and lending us his support. I appreciate that that is now moving forward. Perhaps we will get fewer mixed messages coming from the representatives in Upper Bann on the Dickson plan than those that we heard in the past. Hopefully, we can take that forward.

For the second time in a few days, we are having a debate on the provision of education in Upper Bann, specifically in the Craigavon area. Two weeks ago, it was the Dickson plan in the controlled sector in Craigavon, and, today, it is Drumcree College in Portadown, which, of course, is in the maintained sector.

3.45 pm

We have heard some of the facts and issues about Drumcree College in the debate, and it is worth noting that Drumcree College is the only post-primary school in the Catholic maintained sector in the Portadown area. If it were to close, pupils who want an education in a Catholic school would have to travel as far away as Armagh, Keady and maybe beyond.

The Education Minister, Mr O'Dowd, is an MLA for Upper Bann, and I am aware that Sinn Féin councillors in the area have expressed regret at the uncertainty surrounding the future of the college. I would, therefore, be interested to hear exactly what the Minister and his party are doing to support the college in its campaign to remain open.

The Minister, when speaking generally about school closures, has said that it is not just a numbers game, and I agree with him. As I said previously, many different criteria need to be taken into account when deciding the future of schools.

Drumcree College is a good school. I know it well because I live quite close to it. It is a well-established school that produces excellent academic results. It provides staff and pupils with a happy educational environment. It has high standards that it seeks to maintain. I believe that the school's mission statement is:

"to provide an excellent education for all".

The Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) has earmarked Drumcree College for closure for some time, and this ongoing uncertainty has not been good for stability or the morale of the school. No one would disagree that the school has suffered from underinvestment and a declining enrolment. However, that really ought to have been addressed long before now.

In April 2009, the Minister's predecessor, Caitríona Ruane, launched the policy initiative Every School a Good School, which was designed to improve outcomes for pupils and young people. Few would disagree with that. Why then can Drumcree College not be given a chance to fulfill its potential? As I said, it is a good school, and given help, support and a clear vision for the future, there is no reason why it should not be an excellent educational asset for that area.

The uncertainty about the future of the college has led to the inevitable knock-on effect of making it difficult for it to attract new pupils, and it has certainly suffered from falling enrolments. However, even with that uncertainty, enrolments have increased, albeit slightly, which is significant in itself. As Yvonne Sterritt, a community worker in the Ballyoran area and a member of the group campaigning to keep the school open, said, the numbers were:

"evidence of a resounding voice from within the area which supports the continuance of Drumcree College."

CCMS has given the college a reprieve, and it will be open in the new academic year starting in September. I am pleased about that, but it is just another stay of execution. We need clarity and a sense of direction. The uncertainty has dragged on for far too long.

Like others, I welcome the debate and hope that a resolution can be found for the school. It is needed and much required in that area. I hope that that resolution comes about quickly.

Mrs Dobson: I also congratulate Mrs Kelly on securing this timely Adjournment debate. It is timely because it gives the House an opportunity, once again, to discuss education in our constituency of Upper Bann.

As Mr Anderson mentioned, the debate comes less than a week after the divisive betrayal of public opinion that was shown by SELB in voting for option A, which will effectively end the Dickson plan. CCMS's earlier decision to announce the closure of Drumcree College has equally angered communities in Portadown. However, its recent announcement of a pause in the consultation is to be welcomed.

At the very heart of this debate is the provision of quality local services for local people. The mission statement of Drumcree College is:

"to provide an excellent education for all".

If only that statement applied to SELB, CCMS and, indeed, the Department.

Last July, it was reported by SELB that the number of pupils putting Drumcree College as their first preference had risen, despite the school being earmarked for closure. That raised, once again, as in the case of small rural primary schools, the very real danger of self-fulfilling prophecies. The public hear that a school may close, vote with their feet and, unwittingly, the fate of the school is sealed. The longer uncertainty remains, the more that danger increases. However, having said that, I wish to commend those from the community who have campaigned to keep the college open. They can claim credit for that modest rise in the number of pupils who chose the college as their preference last year.

I noted with interest last week that the Minister's counterpart in Wales, Leighton Andrews, resigned because he was seen as trying to keep a school open in his constituency. There is no danger of that happening here. Mr Andrews apparently lost the confidence of the Welsh First Minister. Perhaps our own First Minister will consider making a similar gesture, given the politically motivated actions taken over the future of the Dickson plan. If trying to keep a school open in the Minister's constituency is a matter for the ministerial code in Wales, surely the threat hanging over the future of a school, or, indeed, a Minister intent on ending an entire education system, should equally come under the same scrutiny here.

The Minister is happy to hide his dogmatic party politics behind CCMS on Drumcree College and SELB on the Dickson plan. They provide convenient camouflage and cover for a Minister intent on continuing to ride roughshod over public opinion. Communities in Portadown support the retention of Drumcree College. That is backed up by almost 700 responses to the SELB's area-planning process. In SELB's own words:

"A majority of respondents commented that options other than closure should have been presented for consultation."

In the responses, it is pointed out that Drumcree College, like many schools, plays a central role in the community. The Drumcree Community Trust questioned whether the impact of the proposed closure on the community had been properly assessed. That is especially important, as Mrs Kelly highlighted, because a substantial part of the catchment area of the college lies within the north-west Portadown neighbourhood renewal area. The Minister will be well aware of the level of DSD-funded projects that have been conducted in recent years at schools within those areas. Communities are benefiting from the high level of investment in the future of their children. I, therefore, urge the Minister not to remove local post-primary provision. That would force children to travel far from their homes and would be potentially damaging in the long term to our local communities.

In saying that, I welcome the pause that CCMS has recently put on the process, and again urge SELB to take similar action in its area-planning proposals. The majority support the retention of Drumcree College. Majority support is something that Drumcree College and the Dickson plan have in common, but the Minister must stop and listen to the public before making decisions. I urge him to do so.

Mr Deputy Speaker: I call Mr Mervyn Storey.

Mr Storey: Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker. The Minister stood up; he thought that he was Mervyn Storey. [Laughter.] I am sure that that is a nightmare that he will try to get over in the next few hours.

I thank you for calling me, Mr Deputy Speaker, and I apologise to Mrs Kelly for not being present to hear her comments at the commencement of the debate. I congratulate her for securing the debate at a timely period, not only for Drumcree College but for education generally in the Craigavon area.

I am Chair of the Education Committee, and I always like to support Members when an education issue is being debated. I have tried, as consistently as I can, to be present on most occasions because I do not see it as me just trying to fill time, rather it is my responsibility as an elected representative who has been given an important role in the Assembly. I also want to commend my colleagues from the area and to support them when such debates take place.

This afternoon, we are at another point when people will use the debate for other reasons. There are others who are using this debate, all of a sudden six months later, to extol the virtues of the Dickson plan, even though they had been deathly silent for a long time. Some of them could neither spell Dickson nor describe what a controlled school was because their domain was always in other places. However, we welcome conversions, and we welcome those who now, all of a sudden, see the merit in what we have been saying for some considerable time.

The focus of this debate has to be on Drumcree College and on what CCMS has been doing about the school. I thank the Member who supplied me with the correspondence that came yesterday from CCMS. I was absolutely astounded to read that an organisation that is tasked with being the voice and the champion of the maintained sector has, all of a sudden, tried to use the Minister as a cloak of convenience.

There is no one happier than I am, when necessary, to give the Minister a metaphorical doing-over in this House. He is bigger than me, so I could not do it physically. [Laughter.] Nevertheless, organisations have to take responsibility for their own patch. I would like to know when CCMS has been a help to Drumcree College other than in its comments, in which it says:

"As a consequence, CCMS now proposes to pause consultation on the closure."

What message does that send out to the staff? What message does that send out to the community? What message does that send out to the pupils? It says that all you are is a part of a process, even though we know about the contribution that Drumcree College has made to its community and, I believe, to the wider community. Let us not try to narrow this down or suggest that this is, somehow, an issue that benefits just the Catholic community in the area. Drumcree College benefits the entire community in the way in which it goes about its job. If we really want to see progress in the Craigavon area, CCMS should step up to the plate by having shared provision in that area rather than doing what it has done to date, which, to benefit its own agendas, is to run away from the Dickson plan and to try to dismantle a process that has been there for many years.

I will place on record in the House this evening my support for the comments that have been made in the debate. I apologise again to Mrs Kelly for not being here at the start of the debate. I trust that the pause in the consultation will be beneficial to the school and that it will not further compound the problems, difficulties and challenges that the pupils of Drumcree College and their parents face but that it will give them an opportunity to ensure that the school is there for those young people who will most benefit as a result of the education that they receive in that establishment.

Mr Deputy Speaker: I now call the Minister of Education, Mr John O'Dowd, to respond to the debate. [Laughter.]

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I welcome the opportunity to debate and outline some of the facts about Drumcree College, even though I know that the facts sometimes get in the road of a good argument.

First, I want to put on record that I have never ignored the views of or refused to engage with the board of governors of Drumcree College, the pupils and their parents or, indeed, the SDLP on the matter.

Let us look at the history of the proposal. Throughout her speech, in fairness to her, Mrs Kelly outlined the relationships in this matter, as well as my role and that of my Department and CCMS. First and foremost, it is legally the role of CCMS to decide the future of Drumcree College. I cannot legally interfere in the role of CCMS. I will come on to Mrs Dobson's comments about what happened in Wales later.

Regardless of whether the school is in my constituency, under various pieces of legislation, I have a legal duty as Minister to follow the proper procedures. CCMS has, through the post-primary Catholic review and the post-primary area plans, proposed the closure of Drumcree College. That, of course, caused concern in the community in Portadown but particularly among the staff of Drumcree College and the pupils and their parents. It has to be put on the record that there are sufficient pupil numbers in the Catholic sector in Portadown to keep Drumcree College open. The vast majority of parents, over many years, have decided to send their children elsewhere. Some of that was to do with the conflict around the Drumcree parading disputes and the atmosphere around Portadown at that time, while some of it was to do with how the amalgamation between the two former schools was managed — staff relationships, and so on — at that time. Parents made a conscious decision. Mrs Kelly stood in the Chamber last week and defended parental choice. She defended the right of parents to decide what school their children attend. Is she seriously suggesting that I stop parental choice because it suits her in this political context? I cannot stop it.

4.00 pm

Mrs D Kelly: Will the Minister give way?

Mr O'Dowd: No. I cannot stop parents deciding to send their children out of Portadown to Armagh, Dungannon, Lurgan or Craigavon. I have no legal authority to do so, nor do I wish to have legal authority to do so.

Members across the Chamber last week supported academic selection as the best thing since sliced bread. The consensus among them was that it is the best invention ever in education and that we are so lucky to have it. Some parents decide to send their children outside Portadown, past Drumcree, up the Moy Road, up the Armagh Road and into Lurgan for academically selective education based on the myth that the education is in some way different or better. Members of all the other parties in the Chamber last week stood up and defended academic selection, but they now realise the impact that their policy has on local schools. One of the impacts on Drumcree College has been to create the myth that grammar schools provide a different type of education from non-selective schools. That is not true, and it is not a view supported by me, but it is one that is supported by every other party in the Chamber.

Parties quite rightly examine my policies and the impact that they have on schools, but they need to examine their own policies and their impact on schools, because the thing that is having the most detrimental impact on Drumcree College is the myth that schools outside it provide a different and better education.

Mrs D Kelly: Will the Minister give way?

Mr O'Dowd: No.

It is not true. They all teach the same curriculum and have the responsibility to provide 24 to 27 subjects.

Let us look at where we are with Drumcree College. CCMS in the past number of days has said that it is going to pause its proposal to close the school. Although I welcome that decision, Mr Storey has a point. The pupils, parents and teachers who attend and support Drumcree College and the north-west community in Portadown need certainty; they need to know what is happening with Drumcree College. I as Minister cannot confirm what is happening with Drumcree College until I get a firm proposal from CCMS. We need a firm proposal. CCMS talks about providing alternative post-primary provision on the site. Let us see what that looks like and let us give certainty to those who wish to have continued education at Drumcree College.

An Adjournment debate secured by Mrs Kelly titled "Proposed Closure of Drumcree College" does not give any certainty to the college or to parents and pupils. A more appropriate title for the debate could have been "The Future of Drumcree College" or "Support for Drumcree College". What does it say to the community in Portadown when Mrs Kelly tables a topic for the Adjournment debate titled, "Proposed Closure of Drumcree College"? There is no proposed closure of Drumcree College.

Mr Anderson: Will the Minister give way?

Mr O'Dowd: No, you have all had your opportunity.

It was mentioned in CCMS documents, but there is no proposal for the closure of Drumcree College.

Perhaps Mrs Kelly wants to come in at this point, because I am not sure which two consultations I ignored about Drumcree College. You referred to that in your speech, so perhaps you would like to elaborate.

Mrs D Kelly: I am grateful to the Minister for giving way. He knows quite well that when I tabled the topic for debate, Drumcree College was being proposed for closure and that that was the basis for the consultation. There were consultations earlier this year, and this is the second consultation on Drumcree College. Minister, I tabled a question to you asking you, and I think that the school asked you — I am sure that you will correct me if I am wrong — to consider giving it a five-year breathing space so that it could come forward with a development proposal. You refused to do so.

Mr O'Dowd: Mrs Kelly, you either refuse to understand the system or you continue to ask the question because the answer does not suit you.

I have no legal authority — no legal authority — to interfere in the role of CCMS. I have no legal authority to tell any school that I will give it five years before a development proposal comes forward. The only body that can do that in this case is CCMS. The only body that can give Drumcree College a five-year stay of execution from a development proposal is CCMS. Let me say it again: I have no legal authority to do so. It may not suit your political agenda for me to give you that answer.

Mr Anderson: Will the Minister give way?

Mr O'Dowd: Just give me one moment.

I suspect that although many in Portadown are delighted that CCMS has come forward with its proposal today,

Mrs Kelly is very disappointed, because she was building a wee political campaign for herself that was not in the interests of education but was in the interests of Mrs Kelly.

Mr Anderson: I thank the Minister for giving way. He says that he has no legal authority to bring this forward. Minister, take off your ministerial cap and tell us this: do you, as an MLA for Upper Bann, support keeping Drumcree College open?

Mr O'Dowd: When you take up a ministerial post, you also take on a code of conduct and a ministerial code. Under that ministerial code, you say that you will serve all the people of the North. That is where my ministerial responsibilities come into play. If I were to make alternative views known or treat Drumcree College differently than any school outside my constituency, Members on all the other Benches would, quite rightly, call for my resignation. Indeed, Mrs Dobson said today that the First Minister should perhaps consider whether he has confidence in me. I suspect that I can answer that question, but the First Minister does not appoint me. The deputy First Minister appoints me, and I will let him answer that question.

I have a duty, which I take very seriously, to serve all the people of the North. I will not treat schools in my constituency any differently from those in any other constituency. If I do not believe that my policy is right, I withdraw my policy. However, I believe that the policy is right. I believe that it is there to protect the educational well-being of all our young people, uncomfortable though that may be for me at times as an MLA or as an individual. I cannot let my heart rule my head on this matter.

As I said, I welcome the fact that CCMS has brought forward further clarification today, but it is long past the time that pupils, parents, teachers and those in the Portadown community who support Drumcree College had certainty. I urge CCMS to bring forward a definitive proposal on the way forward for that college, for the sake of everyone.

Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Potential Trust Procurement Issues

Published at noon on Tuesday 2 July 2013

Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): This Statement draws to the Assembly's attention audit investigations arising from information reported by whistle-blowers about potential malpractice in the procurement and management of building maintenance in the Northern Health and Social Care Trust.

Assurance and accountability is fundamental as it is important to know that ALBs are complying with relevant guidance and regulations. One area which can be particularly challenging is that of procurement given the wide range of local, national and European legislation, regulations and guidance. Adherence to these requirements is essential if we are to demonstrate value for money for Health and Social Care and ensure equitable treatment to all our suppliers and contractors. I expect nothing less from those in my Department and its Arms Length Bodies.

However within the Northern Health and Social Care Trust whistleblowing allegations have been made of procurement and potential contract management malpractice within the estates function, alongside others relating to managerial issues. Under my Department's oversight, BSO Internal Audit and investigation specialists are investigating these allegations.

Although a report has not yet been finalised, it is apparent that there are a number of procurement control weaknesses in the Trust's Estates function and investigations are still ongoing. In this respect, external audit, as part of their audit on the 2012/13 Annual Accounts, have identified £860,000 of payments in respect of Measured Day Term Contracts (MDTC), which may be potentially irregular due to procurement issues. The Trust has already moved to take some corrective action and Health Estates Investment Group, within my Department, will also undertake a series of compliance checks across all Trusts and further audits are planned for 2013.

My Department is ensuring that all allegations are investigated with appropriate rigour to ensure that when any necessary improvements have been made, the public can have full confidence in NHSCT Estates procurement practices.

It is appropriate and important that where anyone has information about abuse of public money this is brought to light so that the specific issues can be resolved, appropriate lessons learned, and public confidence restored. Where wrongdoing has occurred it must be addressed, with a proportionate and appropriate response.

I will provide further information to the Assembly following completion of all the investigations.

2013 Annual Report on the Concordat between the Voluntary and Community Sector and the Northern Ireland Government

Published at 3.00 pm on Tuesday 2 July 2013

Mr McCausland (The Minister for Social Development):

As you are aware, the Concordat between the Voluntary and Community Sector and the Northern Ireland Government included an undertaking to report annually to the Northern Ireland Executive and Assembly on issues impacting on the Sector. In accordance with the principles contained within the Concordat, I wish to present Assembly colleagues with the second report on the implementation of the Concordat. This report includes detail on issues impacting the Voluntary and Community Sector, the progress made against selected commitments contained within the Concordat and progress made against recommendations made by the Public Accounts Committee in their report 'Creating Effective Partnerships between Government and the Voluntary and Community Sector'.

The Concordat, which is the formal agreement between this Assembly and the Voluntary and Community Sector, is the means by which we work together as social partners with the Sector to create more responsive and people-centred public services and since its launch in 2011, work has been ongoing to create the circumstances where these outcomes can be realised.

This pledge by government and the sector committing to work together is underpinned by the establishment and implementation of an agreed set of commitments. The report presented today demonstrates how serious this commitment has been taken and how much can be achieved when we work together.

This government has long recognised and valued the contribution the Voluntary and Community Sector makes to the social, economic, environmental, political, and cultural life of Northern Ireland and recognises and supports the independence of the Sector and its right to campaign within the law and to comment on and, where appropriate, challenge government policy.

This is where the Concordat agreement has been pivotal in placing the Sector on an equal footing with the public sector bodies it interacts with on a daily basis and in giving the Sector a voice that can now be clearly heard. The Concordat, as a written agreement, has been transformed into a living document with the power to build capacity and the capability to make more responsive and people-centred public services by harnessing the expertise available to us.

This is the second report on the Concordat from the Joint Forum and this is what makes the progress on the commitments all the more significant. The report demonstrates that the Joint Forum has tackled what have previously been considered difficult issues. An example of the tangible progress made includes the recent issue of a report on 'Addressing Bureaucracy'. In the last year real progress has been made in developing pragmatic ways to reduce bureaucracy in the funding process. This work will go some way towards reducing the bureaucratic burden on the Sector.

Progress has also been made in the area of policy development so that all significant stakeholders are involved in the process as early as possible so that the resultant policy will be fit for purpose. The Joint Forum has also provided a platform for Government Departments to communicate with the sector on key issues. Recent meetings have included presentations on the Reform of Local Government and Welfare Reform programmes.

New and existing public sector and voluntary and community sector working relationships have been established and strengthened and strong links have been forged with other forums with similar professional interests with an exchange of membership.

I am very pleased to commend this report to my Executive and Assembly colleagues and to endorse the progress made over the past year. The implementation of the Concordat commitments and the identification and resolution of issues affecting the Voluntary and Community Sector can only assist Government and Voluntary and Community Sector partnership working, which aims to better serve the people of Northern Ireland.

A copy of the report has been published on the DSD website and can be accessed from http://www.dsdni.gov.uk/index/voluntary_and_community/vc-publications.htm

Written Answers to Questions

Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister

China: OFMDFM Visit

Mr Gardiner asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail (i) how many Ministers, junior Ministers, MLAs, officials and other people comprised the delegation for the business mission to China; (ii) the cost of their travel; (iii) the cost of their accommodation; and (iv) other costs associated with the mission.

(AQW 16734/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness (The First Minister and deputy First Minister): The information has been published on the OFMDFM website.

Executive Information Service

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister when the review of the Executive Information Service began; and when it is expected to be completed.

(AQW 18689/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The matter is being progressed.

Welfare Reform Bill

Mr McGimpsey asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what representations they have made to the Minister for Social Development on behalf of victims to ensure that the Welfare Reform Bill does not disproportionately affect their entitlements.

(AQO 3559/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Following discussions between DSD and OFMDFM, we are pleased to confirm that there will be no change under Universal Credit to how payments made by the Victims and Survivors Service will be treated within the social security system. As is the current position, such payments will be disregarded as income for those in receipt of social security benefits; however, they will be considered as capital. This is exactly the same position as to how payments made by the Memorial Fund are currently treated. The statutory basis for this approach is contained within regulations 5 and 13 of The Social Security (Miscellaneous Amendments No.4) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2006.

NI Memorial Fund: Applications

Mr Eastwood asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how applicants to the NI Memorial Fund were informed that the fund would permanently close for applications on 7 January 2013.

(AQW 21419/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Northern Ireland Memorial Fund (NIMF) wrote to recipients of the Fund on 14 December 2012, informing them that the Fund would close for applications on Monday 7 January 2013. Recipients were also informed of the transition arrangement of the Fund into the new Victims Service.

The Fund issued separate letters to clients who had already applied for funding in the 2012/13 financial year and those who were still eligible to apply but had not yet submitted an application

Victims and Survivors Service: Funding

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on funding allocations by the Victims and Survivors Service; and to list the successful applicants and the amounts awarded.

(AQW 22730/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: This information is not yet available from the Victims and Survivors Service as processes are not yet complete.

Unanswered Question: AQW 14210/11-15

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister why AQW 14210/11-15 remains unanswered eight months after it was asked; and to provide the answer to the question.

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: AQW 14210/11-15 was answered on 23 May 2013.

Strategic Support Fund: Funding Allocations

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to list the organisations in each council area that were awarded funding from the Strategic Support Fund in (i) 2012/13; and (ii) 2013/14; and the amount that each organisation received.

Note: As at 21.05.2013, these figures are subject to change following completion of verification exercises/repayment of underspends

The SSF, previously administered by the Community Relations Council (CRC), closed on 31 March 2013 and has been replaced since 1 April 2013 by the Victims Support Programme (VSP), managed by the Victims and Survivors Service (VSS).

Interim Letters of Offer were issued to groups by the VSS during April 2013. The VSS is currently in the process of meeting with the groups to finalise work plans and budgets for the next two financial years. In addition, a number of groups are progressing through an appeals process and a number are undergoing a corporate governance review. When all these processes are complete the VSS will then be in a position to provide full details of successful applicants and amounts awarded.

Strategic Support Fund: Funded Staff

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the number of staff (i) allocated; and (ii) appointed to each organisation that had staff funded by the Strategic Support Fund in 2012/13, broken down by council area. (AQW 23233/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The number of staff allocated to each organisation funded by the Strategic Support Fund (SSF) in 2012/13 broken down by council area is detailed in the table below.

Information on actual staff appointed is not available. However, staff costs are checked during the verification process and funding is only provided based on staff actually in post.

Strategic Support Fund: Funded Staff

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to list each organisation who has staff funded by the Strategic Support Fund in 2013/14, broken down by council area; and the number of staff funded.

(AQW 23236/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: This information is not yet available from the Victims and Survivors Service.

Victims and Survivors Service: Staff Background

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for a breakdown of the community background of staff employed in the Victims and Survivors Service.

(AQW 23257/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Victims and Survivors Service has advised us that they currently employ 32 members of staff, who identify themselves as being from the following community backgrounds: 16 Roman Catholic, 11 Protestant and 5 None.

QE5: Training Contracts

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister (i) how much QE5 obtained from the Community Relations Council and the Victims and Survivors Service for training contracts in the victims sector over the last ten years; (ii) whether this was paid from core victims funding; and (iii) if not, what was the source of the payment.

(AQW 23259/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Victims and Survivors Service (VSS) has advised us that it has paid QE5 £2,756 for the provision of training. This payment came from the VSS corporate operating budget.

The Community Relations Council (CRC) has paid £16,409.70 directly to QE5 for training in the last ten years. These payments came from the CRC's administrative costs.

WAVE: Staff Background

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for a breakdown of the community background of staff employed in the organisation WAVE.

(AQW 23261/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Department has no requirement to collect or hold this information and is not in a position to provide the information requested.

Victims and Survivors Service: Staff Background

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for a breakdown of the cumulative community background of staff employed by groups funded by the Victims and Survivors Service.

(AQW 23263/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Victims and Survivors Service has advised us that it has no statutory obligation to collect or hold such information on the groups funded under the Victims Support Programme and is therefore unable to provide this information.

Racial Equality Strategy

Mr Flanagan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the Racial Equality Strategy.

(AQO 4062/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Our Department has always been and remains strongly committed to the mainstreaming and promotion of racial equality through both the Minority Ethnic Development Fund and the Racial Equality Strategy.

That Strategy has to be reflective of the actual needs of our minority ethnic people.

Officials have been liaising with the Racial Equality Panel and wider representatives of the sector to refocus and refine a strategy that is fresh, attainable and meaningful.

Following the last meeting of the Racial Equality Panel on 30 April, the draft Strategy is nearing completion and we intend to commence the public consultation exercise as soon as possible.

The cornerstone for the last Strategy was the six shared aims written in close collaboration with the sector.

The demographic and economic landscape has changed dramatically since the last Strategy and this has been factored into the draft document.

There is a clear necessity to get this Strategy right, robust and ready for realistic implementation and, through continued dialogue with the sector, we are confident we will have a Strategy that will deliver.

Peace Building and Conflict Resolution Centre

Mr McGimpsey asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether they have had any correspondence with the Minister of Education about the proposed Peace Building and Conflict Resolution Centre.

(AQO 4063/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: We have had no correspondence with the Minister of Education about the Peace Building and Conflict Resolution Centre at Maze/Long Kesh.

Preliminary discussions were held with representatives from the education sector to help outline the Education, Research, Teaching and Learning work strand of the Centre and discussions will continue to help determine and shape this important area.

Stakeholder engagement will take place as the key projects at the site progress, including the development of the functions and services of the Peace Building and Conflict Resolution Centre.

Northern Ireland Centre for Trauma and Transformation

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister (i) how much of the allocation to the Northern Ireland Centre for Trauma and Transformation (NICTT) in (a) 2010/11; and (b) 2011/12 was spent; (ii) whether NICTT applied for funding in 2012/13; (iii) whether funding was awarded; and (iv) whether it is known why NICTT ceased to operate.

(AQW 23405/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: In 2010/11, our Department awarded a grant of £199,771 to the Northern Ireland Centre for Trauma and Transformation (NICTT). Following verification, it was assessed that the actual amount of spend for the period was £179,374.

In 2011/12, NICTT was successful in obtaining £271,675.50 in funding from the Strategic Support Fund, administered by the Community Relations Council (CRC) on behalf of OFMDFM. Due to the closure of the organisation on 31 December 2011, £211,305.76 of this funding was verified by CRC as actually spent.

NICTT did not apply for funding in 2012/13 and informed CRC that it closed due to a number of operational difficulties.

Strategic Support Fund: Underspend

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the underspend in the Strategic Support Fund in (i) 2010/11; (ii) 2011/12; and (iii) 2012/13.
(AQW 23446/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Department has not recorded any underspends for the Strategic Support Fund (SSF) in 2010/11 or 2011/12.

The SSF ceased to operate on 31 March 2013 and responsibility for its administration transferred to the Victims and Survivors Service (VSS) during November 2012. The VSS has advised us that the vouching and verification of 2012/13 SSF spend will not be finalised for a number of weeks.

Child Poverty Reduction Pilot Study

Mr Agnew asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the Child Poverty Reduction Pilot Study.
(AQW 23500/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Child Poverty Reduction Pilot Study was put out to tender during summer 2012. Only one tender bid was received. Following assessment and discussions with the bidder, a clarified bid was received in late December.

Following careful consideration, a decision was taken not to proceed with this bid as it did not meet the minimum specification requirements as set out in the original tender.

Children and Young People Strategy

Mr Agnew asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister when further action plans, emanating from the 10 year Strategy for Children and Young People, will be developed; and when work will begin on developing a further Children and Young People Strategy.
(AQW 23502/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Implementation of the current Ten Year Strategy for Children and Young People is now being taken forward through the Delivering Social Change Framework. A key aim of the new Framework is to improve the outcomes for children and young people. The new Framework represents a move away from previous action plans towards a more focused and co-ordinated approach to maximise impact.

In support of this development, the Children and Young Persons Early Action document was published on 14 November 2012. This takes full account of the principles of the Ten Year Strategy for Children and Young People including its high level outcomes. It also identifies the key priorities for children and families over the remaining years of the Ten Year Strategy. The Early Action document identifies five priority work programmes focused on (i) early years and early intervention (2) actions to improve children's early literacy and numeracy skills; (3) support for services and interventions which protect and support young people through key life transitions; (iv) integrated service delivery (v) joined up planning and commissioning.

The document has been developed to assist key stakeholders in delivering further programmes and initiatives.

Any consideration of a successor to the Ten Year Strategy post 2016 would be informed by a range of factors. These would include, for example, an assessment of the progress achieved over the period of the existing strategy, the current context including the Delivering Social Change Framework, consultation with relevant stakeholders including children and young people and the outcomes and concluding observations of the Periodic Review of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.

Magdalene Laundry: Abuse Inquiries

Mr Agnew asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether they will establish inquiries into allegations of abuse by people who fall outside the remit of the Historical Institutional Abuse inquiry, specifically victims of clerical child abuse and former residents or inmates of Magdalene Laundry type institutions.
(AQW 23792/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The recent reports regarding the Magdalene Laundry institutions in the Republic of Ireland have raised the question of how those who were resident in similar institutions here may address concerns. Anyone who experienced abuse as a child within such institutions will be covered by the remit of the current Inquiry.

However, we are conscious that there may be a group that would not be covered as they were over the age of 18 during their residency. We have appointed a senior civil servant to draw up a scoping report on the Magdalene Laundry type institutions here to see what further action could be taken.

The issue of clerical abuse is no less important or emotive than institutional abuse and we are mindful of the equally destructive impact it has had on many individuals.

Following the Inquiry into Historical Institutional Abuse, it will be for the Executive to consider how to deal with abuse that does not fall within the Inquiry's terms of reference.

This Inquiry, however, was initiated in the 2009 Assembly debate about historical institutional abuse of children. The definition of an institution for the purposes of the Inquiry formed an important aspect of consultation with victims and other key stakeholders. Setting the parameters in this way does not in any way undermine the trauma that has undoubtedly been inflicted on many other individuals as a result of abuse in domestic and other settings. However, the categories to be covered by the Inquiry were selected because of the very particular vulnerable nature of this type of residential care.

Childcare Strategy

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the Childcare Strategy. (AQO 4180/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The development and delivery of a Childcare Strategy is a key Programme for Government commitment. The Executive is determined to deliver a Strategy that will make a real and lasting difference to the lives of parents and children.

Public consultation on the Childcare Strategy ended on 5 March. All of the comments received have been reviewed to inform the development of the Childcare Strategy, including its priorities for early action. This work is at an advanced stage and we expect to be able to make an announcement shortly.

St. Lucia Barracks, Omagh

Mr Buchanan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on St. Lucia lands, Omagh. (AQO 4182/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Part of St Lucia Barracks was gifted to our Department under the Hillsborough Agreement. The listed buildings and parade ground at St Lucia remain the property of the Ministry of Defence (MOD) and that part of the site has not been transferred to the Executive for legal reasons; however a resolution to this issue is currently being pursued by MOD.

Officials have held discussions and continue to liaise with Omagh District Council and the Department for Social Development regional development office regarding future possibilities for the site.

The Minister of the Environment announced on 3 May that he was recommending planning approval for the new Shared Education Campus at the Lisanelly site, which is adjacent to St Lucia. Strategic planning for the St Lucia site will take account of the impact of the schools development.

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

Broadband: East Londonderry

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether she will consider targeting rural areas of East Londonderry in the recently announced tranche of broadband funding. (AQW 23643/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): It is intended to target as many postcode areas as possible within the list of 6,500 rural broadband "not spots" based on multiple deprivation including some within your own area. Not all areas will be able to fully benefit from this round of targeting however as success is dependent upon the technical solutions available within the existing budget.

Farmers: Damaged Farm Sheds

Mrs Hale asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the financial implications for farmers whose farm sheds which were damaged by the heavy snow around Easter and were not covered by insurance. (AQW 23657/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I am very aware that some farmers have suffered damage to farm buildings as a result of the 22-24 March snow storm and I fully sympathise with all those who were affected by the snow storm.

Given that those worst affected by the snow storm were livestock farmers, my aim was to provide early hardship funding to help mitigate the losses sustained by livestock farmers as a result of the snow storm. The hardship funding made available by the Executive has been specifically to help deal with these livestock losses.

The first element of the hardship funding was the payment by my Department of collection and disposal costs. The second element, concerns the Hardship Payments Scheme, which seeks to help mitigate the cost to farmers of the livestock losses arising from the snow storm.

There are no financial support measures planned as part of the hardship funding for farmers whose buildings were damaged during the heavy snow.

The Farm Family Options – Business Mentoring Programme, funded under the Rural Development Programme, assists farmers and family members, with the support of an experienced agricultural business mentor, to consider their current position, address the main issues, opportunities, concerns and to develop a focused Action Plan for the future.

Rural Support operates a helpline which provides a listening ear and signposting service for farmers and rural dwellers. If farmers themselves or someone they know would benefit from speaking to a Rural Support volunteer they can call the helpline which is confidential.

Slurry: 22-week Storage

Mrs Hale asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline the protection in place for farmers who the exceed 22 week slurry storage, given that the Environment Agency has suggested that they should cull healthy animals in order to comply with the EU Nitrates Directive.

(AQW 23659/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The EU Nitrates Directive is implemented through the Nitrates Action Programme (NAP) Regulations (NI) 2010 which is joint legislation between the Department of the Environment and my Department. The Regulations set the minimum slurry storage capacity for livestock farms at 22 weeks and 26 weeks in the case of pig and poultry enterprises. These are the minimum capacities and farms in wetter areas or with heavier soils may require greater storage capacity to ensure they spread slurry only when soil and weather conditions are suitable.

The NI Environment Agency (NIEA) is responsible for inspection and enforcement of the NAP Regulations. NIEA has confirmed that it has never suggested that livestock should be culled to meet the various requirements of the Regulations.

If farmers find they have insufficient slurry storage capacity on farm they can employ a range of management options to help achieve compliance with the Regulations.

Options farmers may consider include selling surplus livestock, renting additional slurry storage tanks, exporting slurry, use of a slurry separator and housing animals on straw bedded accommodation.

DARD's Code of Good Agricultural Practice provides advice to farmers on best practice for managing slurry. This includes how to maximise the available slurry storage capacity on farm by separating clean water and reducing the amount of dirty water produced from the farmyard which is collected in slurry tanks.

Farmers: Health and Welfare

Mrs Hale asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what measures she has put in place to ensure that farmers' health and welfare are maintained following the severe weather at Easter and the current fodder crisis.

(AQW 23686/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The unprecedented weather has led to many issues for farmers in the north, including their health and welfare. I am committed to supporting the health and wellbeing of all those living in rural communities.

My Department provides funding to the Rural Support Charity who play a very important role in rural communities. During the severe weather at Easter and since then through the recent fodder crisis, farmers and members of rural families have been directed to Rural Support who address issues such as emotional distress, physical and mental health.

My Department are collaborating with DHSSPS, the Public Health Agency and Health Trusts on the Farm Family Health check project. This project includes a signposting service to mental health services.

DARD has also recently launched a joint initiative with DCAL and DHSSPS along with the Public Health Agency and the three main sporting bodies, GAA, soccer and rugby, to provide help, advice and support to those in rural areas suffering from poor mental health. This initiative aims to assist those living in rural areas in particular, where difficulty in accessing key services can have an adverse impact on the health of our communities and add to feelings of isolation.

In addition, the Farm Family Options Mentoring Programme funded by the Rural Development Programme, provides the opportunity for an experienced agricultural business mentor to discuss issues with a farm family such including their current situation, opportunities and concerns, and develop a focused Action Plan for the future. This can include signposting to other forms of support and assistance.

Going For Growth

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what commitment has she received from the Executive that the £400m required for the Going For Growth Strategy will be forthcoming.

(AQW 23692/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The Agri-Food Strategy Board's strategic action plan Going for Growth was only very recently launched a few weeks ago at the Balmoral Show.

The DETI Minister and I are in the process of examining all of the recommendations carefully, before presenting proposed next steps to the Executive. Obviously, the Board's recommendations have significant funding implications for DARD and other Departments and we will need to engage with colleagues on the detail of these, including their affordability. We expect to make an announcement on implementation, once the Executive has agreed the way forward.

Land Parcel Identification System

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the nature of the technical problem that caused errors in the Land Parcel Identification System maps.

(AQW 23693/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The maps produced this year for issue to farm businesses were constructed based on fields declared in the 2012 SAF together with other owned fields that DARD holds as being associated with the business. To present this view of fields in a map format required DARD IT systems to select declared and owned fields and associate these with a specific business. This is a complex task and for the majority of farm maps produced, this process worked successfully. However in one batch of maps the process failed resulting in not all fields being displayed on the map. The underlying data was not affected.

An automated script that produces the maps failed to complete successfully resulting in the missing fields on around 9% of maps.

Several businesses can have an interest in a field parcel for different schemes. To create the Single Farm Payment farm business map, it is necessary to pick out the field parcels associated with a business that declared specific field parcels as part of their SAF 2012 application. An automated script associates declared field parcels with businesses and builds a link. It also links owned field parcels with a business and based on these links builds a business map view that is then distilled into a PDF file, quality assured and then published through DARD online services before being sent on to a printer for hard copy map production.

The process is complicated in scenarios where the underlying field parcel information has changed since the time that the SAF declaration information was taken. For example, as part of the field boundary and ineligible feature improvement process, Land & Property Services (LPS) staff (using aerial imagery) split a field. The original declared field was not split i.e. it was based on a whole field parcel. The script must take this change into account when making the links. Likewise in scenarios where two fields are merged, the script must reconcile the fact that the original declaration was based on two fields but the amended field parcel view is that there is only one field.

Data was supplied to DARD for map production in three separate batches. Where businesses had field information that spanned across one or more of these batches the script made the links with the relevant information in one batch but failed to continue and pick up the remaining information from the other batch(es). These incomplete links meant that field parcels did not display on the map.

The problem was fixed and maps were reproduced within approximately 2.5 weeks of the problem being identified. These were made available on-line for viewing and printing. Farmers affected by this issue were provided with an additional 2 weeks to make map updates in advance of their Single Application Form being pre-printed with any updates made.

This is a transitional year for the Single Farm Payment system and the development of these new maps has been a novel and complex operation not made any easier by the need to maintain a 'live' system while integrating the new mapping data.

African Horse Sickness

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the threat of African Horse Sickness entering through the Republic of Ireland, considering there are controls in place across the UK but none currently exist in the Republic of Ireland.

(AQW 23696/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: African Horse Sickness (AHS) is a notifiable disease both here and in the south of Ireland. The control measures for the disease are set out in EC Directive 92/35. It has never been detected on this island.

In the unlikely event of a suspect or confirmed case in the south of Ireland the powers to control the disease are currently contained in the Diseases of Animals Act 1966 (Notification and Control of Animal Diseases) Order 2008. DAFM officials have also confirmed that they are currently in the process of bringing forward a statutory instrument specifically for the control of AHS. This will contain similar provisions to those in the African Horse Sickness Regulations that are currently being finalised by officials in my Department. The production of our respective AHS Regulations is in line with the Fortress Ireland policy and I intend to raise this with Minister Coveney when the NSMC meets next month.

Current advice from my Veterinary Service officials indicates that the risk of African Horse Sickness incursion via legal routes of horses and horse products is very low. This risk is kept under review on an ongoing basis to take account of changes in climate and international horse movements.

In the event of an outbreak of any epizootic disease, such as African Horse Sickness, either here or in the south of Ireland, my officials and those in DAFM recognise that sustained cooperation is essential to the containment of the outbreak and to reduce further spread of disease.

Grazing: Blanket Bog Areas

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether her Department monitors grazing in blanket bog areas to ensure that they are not overgrazed.

(AQW 23721/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department does not routinely monitor the grazing in blanket bog areas. However, during On-The-Spot Checks for area-based schemes such as Single Farm Payment (SFP), Less Favoured Area Compensatory Allowance (LFACA) and Agri-Environment Scheme, DARD inspectors record any breaches of Good Agricultural and Environmental Condition (GAEC). Protecting grassland and semi-natural habitats from over grazing is one of the GAEC requirements, and a breach of this standard may result in a penalty being applied to the scheme payment.

NI Environmental Agency currently undertakes routine monitoring of blanket bog on designated sites (Special Areas of Conservation (SACs) and Areas of Special Scientific Interest (ASSIs)) on a six-yearly cycle. The work enables NIEA to assess whether the blanket bog vegetation is in favourable condition or not. Where the habitat is unfavourable, the information collected helps to identify those factors that may be responsible, such as overgrazing. NIEA will then work with site managers and DARD to address the causes of unfavourable condition so that action can be taken to enable the habitat to recover.

Correspondence: Unanswered

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development when will she answer the letter I sent on 26 April 2013.

(AQW 23772/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: A response to your correspondence of 26 April 2013 was issued on 31 May 2013.

Horse Passports: Fraud

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail (i) the number of cases referred to the Central Investigation Service since 2008 that relate to allegations of irregularity or fraud involving horse passports; ii) how many of these received a full investigation; and (iii) how many of these resulted in a criminal sanction.

(AQW 23777/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The Central Investigation Service received 6 complaints in relation to private sales between two parties concerning non-compliance with the Horse Passport Regulations. Of these 6 complaints, 3 were investigated, none of which resulted in criminal sanction.

Wind Turbines: Funding

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 22423/11-15, of the 91 applicants who have accepted the letter of offer and have had funding made available to them, to detail how many have drawn down and used the funding to date.

(AQW 23891/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Of the 91 projects, 21 are completed and have received their funding in full (8 Feasibility, 11 installation and 2 as part of a larger project). Of the remaining 70 six have drawn down some funding against their projects (1 feasibility study, 4 installation and 1 as part of a larger project).

Trees: Native Species

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development if Forest Service plans to increase the number of native tree species that are planted.

(AQW 23991/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Forest Service provide grant aid and advice to help farmers and landowners create new native woodland under the Woodland Grant Scheme and the Farm Woodland Premium Scheme. This is guided by Forest Service's publication of the "Native Woodland Definition and Guidance" Booklet produced by the Native Woodland Group.

To increase the level of planting, including native woodland, Forest Service plans to operate a pilot Forestry Challenge Scheme this year for the creation of at least 100 hectares of new woodland in addition to woodland supported under the existing forestry grant schemes. The Scheme is subject to EU approval and will be aimed at encouraging farmers and landowners to establish new woodland on a landscape scale and applications will be assessed by judging which proposals contribute most to delivering the aims of the Forestry Challenge Scheme on a best value basis.

In Forest Service managed woodland, the most appropriate areas for re-establishing native trees are identified through forest management plans. For example, native trees can be re-established near rivers or on ancient woodland sites where they can make a significant contribution to biodiversity. Natural colonisation or regeneration of native species is the preferred establishment approach which conserves local genetic distinctiveness and diversity.

Farmers: Livestock Sheds

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what consideration she has given to the provision of a grant scheme for livestock sheds for hill farmers, to help minimise the impact of severe weather, such as that around Easter 2013. (AQW 24162/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I am very aware that farmers have suffered damage to buildings as a result of the snow storm of 22-24 March and I fully sympathise with the difficulties they are experiencing.

The Executive agreed to hardship funding in recognition of the extraordinary livestock losses suffered by farmers arising from the snow storm. The first element of the funding was the payment by my Department of collection and disposal costs. The second element, the Hardship Payment Scheme, seeks to help mitigate the cost to farmers of those livestock losses arising from the snow storm.

The hardship funding being made available by the Executive is specifically to deal with livestock losses and there is no provision for compensation for structural damage caused to buildings as a result of the snow storm.

The development of the future Rural Development Programme, which will include a grant aid scheme for farm businesses, is underway and this will be subject to a public consultation later this year.

The Farm Family Options – Business Mentoring Programme, funded under the Rural Development Programme, assists farmers and family members, with the support of an experienced agricultural business mentor, to consider their current position, address the main issues, opportunities, concerns and to develop a focused Action Plan for the future.

Farm Quality Assurance Standards

Mrs Hale asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what support mechanisms she has implemented to help farmers achieve farm quality assured produce. (AQO 4282/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Farm quality assurance schemes for the various meat and non-meat categories within the food supply chain are administered and promoted by the agri-food industry.

The College of Agriculture Food and Rural Enterprise (CAFRE) supports good farming practices by developing people through education and training and the provision of technical and business development advice. A number of these training courses cover topics that would be considered best practice and would be commensurate with quality assurance schemes. These include the Animal Health Challenges, Cereals Challenge and courses such as Safe Use of Pesticides. In this way CAFRE helps farmers and growers to develop the required technical competences to comply with farm quality assurance standards.

However, it is the responsibility of the agri-food industry to develop farm quality assurance standards and to recruit farmers and growers into the farm quality assurance schemes.

Fodder Transport Scheme

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether the objectives of the Fodder Transport Scheme were achieved. (AQO 4283/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department has been monitoring the fodder situation carefully. In response to discussions with the Industry on Thursday 16 May and my Department's assessment of the situation, I secured £1m to fund a Fodder Transport scheme in the north which started at midnight on 18 May 2013. The Scheme closed at midnight on 31 May 2013.

The objective of the scheme was to ensure that fodder was made available to farmers in the north who have found themselves short of fodder, as quickly as possible. The intervention was to subsidise the transportation costs for the importation of fodder into the north thus encouraging an adequate supply.

At the close of the scheme on 31 May 2013 in the region of 16,000 tonnes of fodder was imported into the north. While being delivered to all 6 counties over half was delivered to the west where the need was greatest.

I considerer that the objective of the scheme has been achieved as much needed fodder was imported into the north for farmers to feed their stock.

Fodder: Shortages

Mr Spratt asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail what forward planning is being put in place to assist farmers in the medium to long term regarding fodder shortages in the coming winter.

(AQO 4284/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I am very aware of the considerable difficulties facing farmers following prolonged periods of unfavourable weather. This has had a serious effect on our livestock industry and I recognise that it is likely to continue for some time to come. Indeed some of the effects may not be fully apparent until we reach the end of the summer and farmers start to house their animals for the winter period.

My Department has established a taskforce comprising representatives of the main farmers unions, feed suppliers, processor organisations and banks to work along with DARD to identify the issues facing the industry in the next twelve months. The taskforce will propose action that can be made by the industry and my Department to help mitigate any adverse effects of the fodder shortage as they develop.

The Taskforce has already met a number of times and has identified a range of issues. I anticipate that an action plan will be agreed this month and the Taskforce will be reconvened if necessary.

DARD Headquarters: Business Case

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what progress has been made on producing the business case for the proposed move of her departmental headquarters to Ballykelly.

(AQO 4285/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The business case is currently going through the normal internal appraisal processes within my Department. It will then be submitted to DFP for scrutiny. I expect that process to be completed before the end of summer 2013.

Farms: Waterlogged Land

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline the action she is taking to deal with the problem of waterlogging of agricultural land which has hindered crop production and is driving up food and fodder prices.

(AQO 4286/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I fully recognise the difficulties being experienced by farmers and growers following the poor weather conditions throughout 2012 and during the spring of 2013. Waterlogged soils are caused by soils becoming compacted along with underlying drainage problems and my Department is working proactively with the industry to help farmers address these problems.

As part of my Department's response, CAFRE will be holding two training events on 3 and 5 July 2013 at Greenmount and Enniskillen Campuses respectively. These events will provide farmers with the knowledge to address soil compaction and drainage issues. Additional training courses for farmers and growers will be delivered during 2013 depending on local need. Individual farmers can also receive support from their local CAFRE Development adviser on soil and sward improvement.

In addition my Department is funding a research project on soil compaction which is currently being undertaken by AFBI. This is to identify the extent of soil compaction within the north of Ireland and its influence on crop yields. Various improvement methods currently being used by the industry will be evaluated.

Hedgerows: Irish Hare

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what encouragement her Department provides to farmers to retain hedgerows given, their importance to the Irish Hare.

(AQO 4273/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I welcome the opportunity to provide an update on the work that my Department carries out to encourage farmers to retain and positively manage hedgerows. These not only enhance the landscape but also provide valuable wildlife habitats for many species of animals and plants including the Irish hare.

Farmers who receive direct agricultural support payments, including Single Farm Payment (SFP) must retain field boundaries. Hedges are considered a landscape feature and are eligible for these payments provided they meet certain eligibility conditions.

Hedges must not be removed without prior permission from DARD and they must not be trimmed during the closed period for hedge-cutting. These actions are considered to be a breach of Cross-Compliance and could potentially result in the loss or reduction of the SFP and other direct payments. Removal of hedgerows may also be an offence under the Environmental Impact Assessment (Agriculture) Regulations (NI) 2007.

My Department actively encourages the management, restoration and regeneration of hedgerows through the provision of funding to around 12,000 farmers in agri-environment schemes. In 2012 agri-environment farmers committed to undertake a total of 200 kilometres of hedgerow restoration through actions such as planting, laying and coppicing.

Woodland also provides the Irish hare with habitat. Although the Forestry Act 2010 gives woodland owners general powers under to protect their trees from damage by wild animals, that power does not extend to Irish hares. The Irish hare was granted special recognition as an indigenous species of this island. As a result the Irish hare must not be killed at any time to protect woodland trees.

My Department also provides advice on managing and preserving hedgerows for biodiversity through a number of channels including communication with Countryside Management Advisers, information in scheme booklets, provision of training events, press articles and on the DARD website.

DARD Direct: Strabane

Ms Boyle asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on any progress in locating the north west DARD Direct office in Strabane.

(AQO 4275/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Strabane is a location well placed to provide the full range of DARD Direct services to farmers in the surrounding area. Following my decision to locate the north west DARD Direct office in Strabane, my officials have been working with DFP to explore options in the town, which will best meet the DARD Direct specification. I am committed to ensuring that we get the DARD Direct services up and running there, as soon as we are able.

Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure

Pitches: East Derry

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how many third and fourth generation synthetic pitches are currently available for use in the East Derry area.

(AQW 20948/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): Neither my Department nor Sport NI retains information on the number of third and fourth generation synthetic pitches currently available for use in the East Derry area.

I have, however, asked Sport NI to carry out an audit of all sports facilities across the north of Ireland, including synthetic pitches. When completed, this information will be made available on Sport NI's website.

Sport NI has confirmed, however, that over the last four years, it has provided funding towards the development of two third generation synthetic pitches in the East Derry area.

Stadia: Funding

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure whether there are any 'state aid' issues relating to her Department's funding package for the three sporting stadia; and what steps have been taken to address any issues.

(AQW 21230/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: As this matter is the subject of current legal proceedings it is not appropriate to comment at this stage.

Coiste Na nIarchimí: Funding

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure whether Coiste Na nIarchimí has ever been offered funding by her Department and for what purpose.

(AQW 21378/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department has not offered any funding to Coiste na nIarchimí.

Northern Ireland Screen: Funding

Mr McCrea asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what funding has been provided to Northern Ireland Screen, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 21429/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Northern Ireland Screen has received the following funding in each of the last 3 years from my Department:

Year	Funding £000's
10/11	1,376
12/13	1,977

Sport NI: Lottery Funding

Mr McDevitt asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what proportion of SportNI Lottery funding has been granted to (i) statutory; (ii) voluntary or community; and (iii) private organisations, in each of the last five financial years.

(AQW 21664/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The table below outlines Lottery funding and the percentage proportions to statutory and voluntary or community sector organisations from 01 April 2007 – 31 March 2013. Sport NI did not fund any private sector organisations during this period.

Organisation Type	Financial Year					Grand Total
	2007-08	2008-09	2010-11	2011-12	2012-13
(i) Statutory		£483,017 (14%)	£2,353,287 (43%)	£2,923,549 (55%)	£3,008,098 (46%)	£8,767,951 (30%)
(ii) Voluntary or Community	£8,621,005 (100%)	£2,951,007 (86%)	£3,094,643 (57%)	£2,373,300 (45%)	£3,536,570 (54%)	£20,576,525 (70%)
Grand Total	£8,621,005	£3,434,024	£5,447,930	£5,296,849	£6,544,668	£29,344,476

Procurement: Social Clauses

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, in light of the Programme for Government commitment to include social clauses in all public procurement contracts for supplies, services and construction, how many contracts her Department has entered into since this commitment; and what where the social clauses included in these contracts.

(AQW 21738/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Since the Programme for Government commitment to include social clauses in all public procurement contracts for supplies, services and construction, the Department of Culture Arts and Leisure has entered into thirty five contracts of which ten contain social clauses. This demonstrates the work undertaken to date in:

- The application of the north's equality duties, including Section 75, to ensure that resources and opportunities are specifically ring-fenced and targeted at sectors facing greatest inequalities within areas of greatest objective need.
- Promoting the living wage scheme, and opportunities for sub-contractors, through the Stadium Programme;
- The introduction of a new departmental priority to promote equality and tackle social exclusion and poverty throughout all departmental business, once again utilising the purposive as well procedural equality duties to target public resources at need.

Through these ten contracts the Department is working to promote sustainable economic, social, equality and environmental returns primarily through the Stadium Programme and projects within Libraries NI and the wider DCAL work-stream.

Eel Fishing: Lough Erne

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 19966/11-15, to outline why a closure of eel fishing in Lough Erne presented compensation considerations different from those that would apply were the Lough Neagh Eel Fishery to close; and would her Department consider introducing a compensation scheme for Lough Neagh eel fishermen in the event of closure.

(AQW 21933/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: A requirement upon the approval of the North West International Eel Management Plan under Council Regulation (EC) No 1100 / 2007 was the cessation of the commercial eel fishery on Lough Erne, as there was evidence that it did not meet the 40% escapement figure.

There was no provision for compensation in the NW Eel Management Plan or under Council Regulation (EC) No 1100 / 2007.

The potential threat of closure to the Lough Neagh eel fishery originates from proposals, which if accepted by the EU, would close all commercial eel fisheries across the EU. In the event of such circumstances I would consider it incumbent on the EU to include inter alia compensatory measures for those affected by a closure.

NI Screen: Staff Contracts

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure if there are any outstanding staff contracts for NI Screen and if so, when was she notified.

(AQW 22039/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Staff contracts are a matter between NI Screen as the employer and its staff.

World Police and Fire Games 2013

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the World Police and Fire Games. (AQW 22252/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: There has been significant progress in the preparation for the 2013 World Police and Fire Games.

As of 11 June 5,806 athletes have registered for the Games.

The response to the call for volunteers was excellent with over 5,200 fully completed applications. Notification of volunteers commenced on the 24th April and will continue through to June 2013.

Furthermore, a number of flagship sponsors have been secured to support the Games and contract details are currently being agreed. The sponsorship target for the Games has been exceeded.

All of the sporting venues for the Games have been confirmed with venue organisers and were announced on 31 May 2012. The venue for the Games Opening Ceremony is The King's Hall Complex and it will take place on 1 August. The Closing Ceremony will take place at the Titanic Slipways on 10 August.

The World Police and Fire Games Schools Pack was launched in October 2012 which provides teachers with a comprehensive set of education resources to inform children and young people about the Games and get them involved in the event throughout 2013.

The Company has, and will continue to work with local councils to identify opportunities for them to organise or host events related to the Games. The Company's website provides details on other events taking place during the Games as well as information on local visitor attractions and places of interest, all aimed at showcasing what we have to offer in the north and maximising tourism benefits.

The Company has developed a Social Benefit Strategy and Legacy Plan to ensure the social inclusivity of the Games. As part of this, three charity partners have been appointed: The Northern Ireland Cancer Fund for Children, the SOS Bus and the Special Educational Needs Advisory Service will all benefit from an increased profile and fundraising opportunities during the Games.

Theatre: Bangor

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what assistance her Department can provide to community groups wishing to establish a new theatre in Bangor. (AQW 22462/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department through the Arts Council can provide funding to carry out feasibility studies into the establishment and sustainability of capital projects.

Fintona Library

Mr Byrne asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline the current position of Fintona Library; and what assurances she can give on its long term viability. (AQW 22829/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: In January 2012 I provided Libraries NI with an extra £2.39m, some of this funding was to assist Libraries NI in meeting the additional costs associated with allowing seven libraries to remain open. These seven libraries, including Fintona Library, had been considered for closure following the Stage 2 Review of the Library Estate in the north of Ireland.

The operation of individual libraries and the management of the library estate are a matter for the Board of Libraries NI; however Libraries NI has informed me that its Board is working with the Fintona Community Forum, in partnership with the Fintona Library Educational Awareness Training Association (FLEAT), to develop proposals for the future of the library. It is anticipated that the Board will review the outcome of those discussions in October 2013.

Parading: Socio-economic Impact

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline the positive points which came from 'A Report on the Socio-Economic Impact of the Traditional Protestant Parading Sector in Northern Ireland', funded by the Department for Social Development; and how her Department will use the findings in this report. (AQW 23497/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department will take account of relevant research findings outlined in the DSD funded report.

Department of Education

Preschool Admissions: North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 23147/11-15, how many pupils (i) applied for pre-school admission; (ii) were not offered a place at their first preference setting; (iii) were offered a place at a subsequent preference setting; and (iv) remain unplaced.

(AQW 23782/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): A total of 897 1st preference applications were received for settings in the North Down Council area during the 2013/14 pre-school admissions process. This included 10 late applications.

160 children were not offered a place in their 1st preference setting, of which 139 were offered a place in a setting listed as a subsequent preference. The parents of 18 children did not avail of the opportunity to state further preferences at the end of Stage 1 and 3 children whose parents submitted a late application during Stage 2 of the process remain unplaced.

All of the parents who fully participated in the process received an offer of a place for their child.

Together: Building a United Community: Education Issues

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education (i) whether he was consulted on the educational issues relevant to his Department prior to the announcement by the First Minister and deputy First Minister on the Together: Building a United Community Strategy; (ii) how any consultation took place; and (iii) when he was consulted.

(AQW 23815/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I was consulted on educational issues relevant to my Department prior to the announcement.

Schools: Additional Places

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Education to list the schools that received additional places for the September 2013 intake; and the number of additional places each school received.

(AQW 23849/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: A list of schools and the number of additional places granted by the Department for September 2013 is detailed below. The information reflects the position as at the 5 June.

Primary Schools: Admissions Procedure

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education what steps his Department has taken to ensure that parents applying for primary school places are using addresses at which they actually reside; and how many cases of parents using false addresses have been discovered over the last three years.

Mr O'Dowd: It is a school's responsibility as the admission authority to ensure that the information it takes into account when applying its admissions criteria to applications for places, is accurate. Where a school is oversubscribed and it has to apply its admissions criteria to determine admission, the Boards of Governors have a duty to verify 'qualifying information' contained within applications, if at the point of applying their admission criteria, there have a 'general knowledge or belief' of a problem of false information.

The Department provides guidance within DE Circular 2011/20 to schools on the duty to verify. The guidance is on the Department website at http://www.deni.gov.uk/circular_2011.20_-_guidance_on_a_school_s_duty_to_verify_information_contained_within_applications_for_admission__pre-school__primary___post-primary__pdf_1.27mb.pdf.

Where the Department receives any information about possible use of false addresses, this is passed on to the school to address.

The Department does not hold information on the number of false addresses discovered over the last three years.

Schools: Admissions Procedure

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education what verification of information contained within applications for admission to (i) pre-school; (ii) primary; and (iii) post-primary school took place in 2013; and to detail the percentage of applications checked in each Education and Library Board area, broken down by each type of school.

(AQW 23875/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: In applications for admission to post-primary schools, Education and Library Boards (ELBs) verify claims of entitlement to free school meals. Other than this, responsibility for verification of the information contained within applications for admission to pre-school, primary and post-primary schools lies with the Board of Governors of the individual school or provider. Guidance about this is provided in the Department's Circular 2011/20 which can be viewed on the DE website: www.deni.gov.uk. Neither the ELBs, nor the Department of Education carry out a check of the personal information provided in applications.

Schools: Admissions Procedure

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education what action he is taking to ensure that the applications for admission to schools have been checked in time to ensure that the appeals procedure can be followed properly.

(AQW 23876/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The operation of the admissions processes is a matter for the Education and Library Boards and the schools, not the Department. Guidance is provided by the Department to all schools on their duty to verify information with the admission process to ensure the completion of the process within the relevant timescales which will allow for the appeals to be lodged by the due date. The guidance to schools on the duty to verify in the form of DE Circular 2011/20 is on the Department website at http://www.deni.gov.uk/circular_2011.20_-_guidance_on_a_school_s_duty_to_verify_information_contained_within_applications_for_admission__pre-school__primary__post-primary__pdf_1.27mb.pdf.

Education and Training Inspectorate: Complaints

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Education (i) how many complaints the Education and Training Inspectorate (ETI) has received over the last five school years; (ii) to outline the procedure for hearing the complaints; (iii) whether this procedure is independent of the ETI; and (iv) what were the outcomes of these complaints.

(AQW 23883/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd:

- (i) The number of complaints the Education and Training Inspectorate received in each of the last five school years are as follows:

School year	Complaint
2007/2008	9
2008/2009	2
2009/2010	7
2011/2012	2

- (ii) The procedure for complaints (revised in September 2012), is available to the public and can be accessed using the following link: <http://www.etini.gov.uk/Homepage/complaints-procedure.pdf>
- (iii) The ETI complaints procedure has two stages: stage 1, the formal complaint investigation; stage 2, an internal review of the way in which the complaint was investigated at stage 1. Both stages are carried out by an investigating officer who has had no previous involvement with the inspection. If the complainant remains dissatisfied they can refer their complaint to the Assembly Ombudsman.
- (iv) All of these complaints were followed up systematically, in accordance with the procedures outlined in the Inspectorate's Complaints Procedures at that time. None of the complaints investigated was upheld.

Grammar Schools: Admissions on Appeal

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Education how many pupils were admitted to a grammar school on appeal in each of the last three years, broken down by school.

(AQW 23903/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I am advised by the Education and Library Boards that the number of pupils admitted to a grammar school on appeal in each of the last 3 years is set out in the tables below:

Preschools: Staff Qualifications

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education (i) what is the minimum standard of education required to work in a pre-school; (ii) how this level of training compares with international best practice; and (iii) what mechanisms are in place to ensure that all staff working in pre-schools are trained to an appropriate standard.

(AQW 23905/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd:

- (i) The leader of a voluntary or private pre-school setting should have at least a qualification at QCF level 3 or higher in Child Care Learning and Development (CCLD) or equivalent. Fifty percent of the rest of the staff (i.e. assistants) in voluntary and private preschool settings should have at least a QCF level 2 Diploma in CCLD or playwork.
- (ii) The Education and Training Inspectorate (ETI) have advised that the level of training in the north of Ireland is currently lower than international best practice, where leaders are qualified to degree level (level 5). However, under the Minimum Standards for Day Care and Childminding for Children Under Age 12 published in July 2012 by the Department for Health, Social Services and Public Safety, all new leaders in voluntary and private pre-school settings will be required by 2016 to have at least a qualification at of QCF level 5 in CCLD or equivalent.

- (iii) The Health and Social Care Trust are responsible for compliance checks of their minimum standards in voluntary and private pre-school settings. ETI evaluate and report the quality of staffing, leadership and management during inspections.

GCSE:: Software Programming

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Education whether his Department will consider the merits of introducing Software Programming as a GCSE subject and at an earlier stage in pupil education as part of the curriculum at primary school level. (AQW 23911/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The revised curriculum has been designed to provide flexibility for schools to develop experiences that suit the needs of their pupils. Embedding mandatory, cross curricular skills and keeping prescribed content to a minimum, allows schools to choose the most appropriate approach to take to ensure that pupils are engaged and challenged, to reach their full potential.

Computer Science, which includes software programming, is a specialised field and the flexibility already in place within the revised curriculum, enables schools to teach Computer Science in any Key Stage, including at primary school level, if they feel it appropriate.

At Key Stage 4 (GCSE), the Council for Curriculum Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) will be consulting with schools between September and October 2013 regarding existing and new specifications. One of the proposed qualifications going to consultation will be a GCSE in software systems development which would provide clear progression to a new A level in software systems development that is now available to schools for first teaching from September 2013. In addition, some Awarding Bodies already offer 'Computing' in addition to ICT.

Special Educational Needs: Key Priorities

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education to detail his Department's key priorities and objectives for special educational needs provision for the period 2012-2015. (AQW 23921/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department's primary role in supporting all children and young people with special educational needs (SEN) is to provide a robust, inclusive policy framework to enable the individual needs of each child to be met.

This is reflected within Corporate Goal 2 of the Department of Education's Corporate Plan for Education 2012-2015 in which the Department aims to "close the performance gap and increase access and equality."

Within this goal there is one strategic objective relating specifically to special educational needs provision namely:-

"To finalise and implement a new approach to meeting the needs of children and young people with SEN following the completion of the SEN Review."

Special Educational Needs: Strategic Development

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education for an update on the Strategic Planning and Policy Development Forum; and how this body has reviewed the requirements of special educational needs schools. (AQW 23922/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Strategic Planning and Policy Development Forum (known as the Strategic Forum) has been in operation since February 2011 and has met on 10 occasions.

Over the course of that time, the Forum has developed significantly and currently plays an important role in building a consensus across the sector in areas of mutual interest, providing an early opportunity for the Department to engage with many of our key stakeholders on strategic issues.

Initially the Forum examined a range of strategic issues. Three areas were agreed and work streams were established to consider how the Forum could contribute to supporting: Area Based Planning, Raising Standards, and the Education Budget/ Review of the Common Funding Scheme (CFS).

The work streams on Area Based Planning and Raising Standards completed their work in September and December 2012 respectively. The reports produced were considered by the Forum and papers submitted to me as advice for consideration.

The Forum has in place an agreement that no more than three work streams will run concurrently at any one time. In March 2013, given the continued work on the Education Budget/ CFS, the Forum identified two additional issues from the DE Corporate Plan 2012-2015 and new work streams were established on the School Workforce Review and Professional Development and Leadership. Members have nominated representatives from their organisations to participate on the new working groups and these groups have both held an initial meeting.

To date, the requirements of special educational needs schools have not been considered by the Forum. However the Forum will continue to establish work streams as appropriate to progress specific issues as agreed by its members.

Education: Corporate Plan 2012-15

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education for an update on his Departmental objectives as set out in the Corporate Plan for Education 2012-2015.

(AQW 23923/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: A review and update of the Corporate Plan for Education 2012-2015 is currently taking place. This will take account of my Department's progress on its business plan commitments and actions contained in its 2012-2013 business plan and involve finalisation of an updated business plan for 2013-14.

The Department has already committed to publishing an end year report on its progress in delivering the actions in its 2012-13 business plan and this will be published shortly.

Primary Schools: Admissions Criteria

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education whether he will review the guidelines for primary school places to allow for flexibility where rural and urban boundaries exist, to ensure that children living in a rural area but close to an urban school are not discriminated against compared to children living in an urban area but further from the school.

(AQW 23924/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Board of Governors of a school as the admissions authority is responsible for setting the admissions criteria to determine the admission of applicants to the school. The Department has no role in the setting of the admission criteria, other than to provide guidance to schools on the admission process. This guidance is on the Department's website at www.deni.gov.uk and is updated each year. Where a tiebreaker situation exists within any specific criteria, the Department advocates that the school uses age, random alphabetical letters or random selection to determine places, rather than distance which can disadvantage rural applicants.

I have no specific plans to review the guidance from a urban/rural perspective.

Teachers: Employment

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Education, in light of his announcement in relation to the employment of fully qualified teachers, how the schools will be selected.

(AQW 23926/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I would refer the Member to my answer to AQW 23783/11-15, tabled by Peter Weir MLA and published in the Official Report on 7th June 2013.

Schools: Formal Intervention

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the criteria by which a school is (i) placed into; and (ii) removed from, intervention.

(AQW 23938/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd:

- (i) In circumstances where a school inspection, undertaken by the Education and Training Inspectorate (ETI), finds that, in the areas inspected, the overall quality of education provided is less than satisfactory, i.e. 'inadequate' or 'unsatisfactory', the school will be placed in formal intervention.
- (ii) The process for deciding whether a school should exit the FIP is initiated when a school is evaluated through a follow-up inspection, undertaken by the ETI, as providing a satisfactory or better overall quality of education. In this circumstance, the Department will decide whether the school should exit FIP

There are no set criteria for determining whether a school should exit the FIP rather each case is considered on its individual merits. The Department's decision will take account of the findings of the follow-up inspection report and any other specific issues pertaining to the school that could potentially impact on the school's ability to sustain the level of improvement made or its ability to operate effectively. A key factor in the Department's decision will be whether the pupils' best interests would be served by the school exiting the FIP.

In making its decision the Department will seek the views of the local Education and Library Board and, in the case of schools in the Catholic maintained sector, the CCMS.

The Formal Intervention Process (FIP) was introduced with the launch of Every School a Good School - A Policy for School Improvement at 30 April 2009.

Further details on the FIP can be found in Annex C of this policy which is published on the Department's website and can be accessed via the following link http://www.deni.gov.uk/esags_policy_for_school_improvement_-_final_version_05-05-2009.pdf

Foley Primary School, Armagh

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education whether Foley Primary School, Armagh is a controlled primary school; and if so, whether it is meeting the obligations under Schedule 4 of the Education and Libraries (NI) Order 1986 in respect of transferor representatives.

(AQW 23945/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Foley Primary School is a controlled primary school. The Southern Education & Library Board has confirmed that the Board of Governors of the school is constituted in accordance with Schedule 4 to the Education and Libraries (NI) Order 1986 and that it holds the nomination rights for the four transferor governors.

Sperrinview Special School: Annual Enrolment

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 23623/11-15, and given the rise in annual enrolment at Sperrinview Special School, particularly in the 2012/13 year; (i) what support is being given to ensure that staff and the school can deliver to a high standard for pupils; (ii) what extensions are planned for the building facilities to accommodate increased enrolment; (iii) how many additional staff will be employed and in what capacity; and (iv) by how much will the annual budget increase.

Mr O'Dowd: The Southern Education and Library Board has advised as follows:-

- (i) Sperrinview Special School, as with all special schools within the Southern Education and Library Board (SELB), is appropriately resourced, supported and maintained by the board. The school has full access to all board support and corporate services to ensure that it can deliver to a high standard for pupils with special educational needs (SEN). SELB also continues to provide professional support and training to enable the Board of Governors and Principal to meet their statutory duty in relation to the needs of the children and young people at the school.
- (ii) In 2010, approximately 375 square metres of accommodation was added to Sperrinview School providing 2 classrooms, stores, toilets and a life skills social area.

In 2012, a further 224 square metres of accommodation was built to provide a further 2 classrooms and associated stores.

- (iii) For the academic year 2012/13, SELB funded a high level of staffing resources to Sperrinview School to meet the SEN of all pupils. This included 14.6 teachers, including the Principal, plus 832.5 hours of classroom assistance to meet the needs of a projected enrolment of 103 pupils with the flexibility for placement of an additional 16 pupils (excluding Early Years Provision).

For the academic year 2013/14, the Board will fund staffing resources so that Sperrinview have access to 15.6 teachers including the Principal plus 897.5 hours of classroom assistance to meet the SEN of a projected enrolment of 96 pupils with the flexibility for placement of an additional 13 pupils (excluding Early Years Provision). This reflects an increase of 1 full time teacher and 65 hours classroom assistance.

These figures reflect the position as at 8th April 2013.

- (iv) Sperrinview School's delegated budget for 2013/14 has been based on the 2012/13 outturn, excluding ear-marked allocations. The budget for all special schools within SELB has been uplifted from the 2012/13 spend level by 7%. Schools will receive notification of the actual increase in their budget in due course.

The non-delegated budget for the Board's special schools, which includes the pressure for increased staffing costs, incremental staff wage progression and inflation, will increase by approximately 4%. Again, Sperrinview School will be informed of their actual budget in due course.

Any earmarked allocations will be in addition to the delegated monies allocated to Sperrinview School by the Board.

The on-going investment by the Board in both the extensions and increased staffing allocation reflects the Board's commitment to ensuring the school can improve pupil outcomes and deliver a high standard of education for all its pupils.

Education Bill: Academic Selection

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education which clauses in the Education Bill guarantee the continuity of academic selection.

(AQW 23978/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Clauses 3(4) and 34(10) confirm that the Education Bill will not change the existing law on admissions criteria for grant-aided schools. The existing law does not guarantee the continuity of academic selection, but makes its use a matter for decision by individual boards of governors.

Education Bill: Boards of Governors

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education which clauses in the Education Bill include provisions that reserve matters on selection to the Boards of Governors.

(AQW 23983/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Clauses 3(4) and 34(10) confirm that the Education Bill will not change the existing law on admissions criteria for grant-aided schools. The existing law makes the use of academic selection a matter for decision by individual boards of governors.

Education Bill: Heads of Agreement

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education whether the Heads of Agreement is reflected accurately in the Education Bill.

(AQW 23984/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Bill will deliver all of the policy commitments in the Heads of Agreement.

Schools: Places Unfilled in Newtownabbey, Carrickfergus and Larne

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of unfilled places in (i) Newtownabbey; (ii) Carrickfergus; and (iii) Larne, broken down into (a) nursery, (b) primary and (c) post-primary sectors, in each of the last five years.

Mr O'Dowd: The information requested is detailed in the table below.

Unfilled places in nursery schools and nursery classes in primary schools located in selected Local Government District areas 2008-09 – 2012-13

Note: Figures exclude pupils in receipt of a statement of special educational needs and pupils admitted to Year 1 (primary) / Year 8 (post-primary) on appeal and pupils in their first year at a post-primary school following their admission by the direction of the Exceptional Circumstances Body, as they are admitted over and above a school's approved enrolment number. Figures also exclude pupils admitted to a school by a temporary variation to a school's approved enrolment number.

Teachers: Redundancies

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education whether this is the last year for the 90 week scheme regarding teacher redundancies; and what will replace the 90 week scheme.

(AQW 24041/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: No decisions have been made as yet regarding teacher redundancies after 31 August 2013, or the level of compensation for the future.

Teachers: Redundancies

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education when he will make decisions on teacher redundancies; and to outline his plans for the future.

(AQW 24042/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: No decisions have been made as yet regarding teacher redundancies after 31 August 2013, or the level of compensation for the future.

Free School Meals: Eligible Pupils

Ms McCorley asked the Minister of Education to detail the percentage of (i) primary; and (ii) post-primary school pupils who are eligible for free school meals, broken down by sector.

Mr O'Dowd: The information requested is provided in the table below.

Percentage of pupils entitled to free school meals in primary and post-primary schools, by school management type, 2012-13

Foyleview Special School, Derry

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Education what steps his Department is taking to ensure the retention of a nurse at Foyleview Special School in Derry.

(AQW 24072/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Western Education and Library Board has advised that it currently has funding earmarked for this post. The Western Health and Social Care Trust is actively seeking to recruit a nurse for Foyleview Special School to replace the present post-holder who has been appointed to a position elsewhere.

The school is fully aware of the situation and arrangements are in place for the current post-holder to remain at Foyleview until 30 June 2013.

Primary Schools: Rural/Urban Attendance

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Education how many pupils attend (i) rural; and (ii) urban primary schools in each Education and Library Board area.

(AQW 24152/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The information requested is detailed in the table below.

Pupils attending urban and rural primary schools, by Education and Library Board area, 2012/13

Department for Employment and Learning

Teachers: Graduate Employment

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of graduates from Initial Teacher Education Colleges who have obtained employment in (i) Northern Ireland; (ii) Great Britain; (iii) Republic of Ireland; (iv) within the European Union; and (v) outside the European Union.

(AQW 23424/11-15)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): In 2010/11, 590 students graduated from Initial Teacher Training courses at Northern Ireland Higher Education Institutions. Of these, 495 responded to the Destinations of Leavers from Higher Education Survey which showed that 430 were in some type of employment, with 395 working in teaching positions according to their Social and Occupational Classification.

The breakdown by location of employment is shown in the table overleaf.

Of those employed as teaching professionals in Northern Ireland, 35 were in permanent or open-ended contracts.

Of the teaching professionals employed in locations other than Northern Ireland, 20 were in permanent or open-ended contracts.

Apprenticeships: Government-funded Schemes

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for a breakdown of the top twenty five organisations in terms of (i) the number of people each organisation has employed; (ii) the number of people employed as part of a government funded scheme; and (iii) how much funding each has received in through the various schemes.

(AQW 23494/11-15)

Dr Farry:

Item (i)

I would advise that my Department does not hold information regarding the number of people employed in organisations.

Item (ii)

Annex A provides a brief background on the two relevant programmes offered by my Department.

Annex B provides information on the current number of apprentices in each of the twenty five organisations, in descending order of number employed.

Annex C provides information on the current number of young people employed through the Youth Employment Scheme employer subsidy.

Item (iii)

In relation to ApprenticeshipsNI, my Department contracts with 43 training suppliers across Northern Ireland for the delivery of the programme. All funding in this respect is payable directly to suppliers and cannot be attributed to individual employers.

Annex C provides information on Youth Employment Scheme subsidy payments to date and the full subsidy entitlement.

I trust that you will find this response helpful.

Annex A

ApprenticeshipsNI.

ApprenticeshipsNI provides an opportunity for those already in or about to take up employment the opportunity to follow an apprenticeship in their chosen occupation. This programme is delivered by training suppliers who are contracted by my Department and who work in partnership with employers across Northern Ireland to deliver a wide variety of apprenticeships.

Funding is paid in respect of individuals participating in training and is dependant on their age and the apprenticeship framework that they are following. Participants aged between 16 and 24 years will attract full funding for the 'off the job' element of the training whilst those aged 25 and over will attract 50% of the amount provided they are following one of the specified frameworks within the defined priority economic sectors.

Under ApprenticeshipsNI employers are paid an incentive, through their partnering training supplier. This is paid on the successful completion of the individual's apprenticeship, can range from £250 - £1500, and is dependent on the apprenticeship being followed.

Youth Employment Scheme Northern Ireland

The focus of the Youth Employment Scheme is early intervention for young people aged 18 to 24 years. The aim of this intervention is to help this group gain work experience, develop additional skills and to achieve recognised relevant qualifications needed by those sectors that have the potential for future growth in the economy.

The Northern Ireland Executive has committed to investing £31 million in this scheme over the next 3 years and the aim is to deliver 13,100 work experience and training opportunities during this period. If successful the Youth Employment Offer will make a significant contribution to both reducing youth unemployment and rebuilding and rebalancing the economy in line with the Northern Ireland Executive's Programme for Government Priorities.

This is a voluntary scheme for young people and it is offered through local Jobs and Benefits Offices operated by the Department for Employment and Learning (DEL) in Northern Ireland.

For 18 to 24 year old benefit claimants DEL has put the following additional measures in place from the point of claim:

- (A) skills audit;
- (B) work experience;
- (C) skills assessment;
- (D) Skills Development Programme; and
- (E) employment opportunities.

Employers that offer full time jobs to young people in the jobs growth sectors are able to avail of an enhanced employer subsidy of £5,000 a year as follows for each eligible client:

- £500 on the completion of the first 4 weeks of employment for each employee working an average of 30 hours per week or more (including time spent training);
- A further 12 payments of £375 for each subsequent 4 week period for each employee working an average of 30 hours per week or more (including time spent training).

A requirement of the subsidy is that employers provide training to allow the young people to develop their skills and gain relevant qualification while in employment. Up to an additional £750 for each employee receiving agreed formal training, leading towards a recognised certified qualification is payable.

Students: Blue Badge Parking Spaces

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline the policy in place that ensures the provision of guaranteed parking spaces for third level education students with severe mobility difficulties at Further Education Colleges. (AQW 23568/11-15)

Dr Farry: There is no policy in place to guarantee parking spaces for third level education students with severe mobility difficulties at Further Education Colleges. The colleges provide car parking at their Main Campus premises and a number of these are designated for use by people with disabilities. These spaces are allocated on a first come first served basis and require the driver to display a blue badge permit.

Dignity at Work: DEL Cases

Mr Spratt asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many Dignity at Work cases have been lodged in his Department in each of the last five years, broken down by (i) core department; and (ii) non-departmental public body; and how many of these cases have been successfully resolved. (AQW 23576/11-15)

Dr Farry: Part (i) The number of cases that have been lodged in the Department for Employment and Learning in each of the last five years is set out in Table 1. The number that have been resolved are set out in Table 2.

Part (II) The Department's NDPBs are: Construction Industry Training Board (CITB), the Labour Relations Agency (LRA), Ulster Supported Employment Limited (USEL), Stranmillis University College and Northern Ireland's Further Education (FE) Colleges.

3 of these NDPBs have had no Dignity at Work cases in this timeframe. These are USEL, CITB and the LRA.

Stranmillis University College and the FE Colleges have had Dignity at Work complaints lodged. The details of these are set out in tables 4 – 6 below.

Postgraduate Certificate in Education

Mr Clarke asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of graduates that (i) have qualified for; (ii) applied and were successful in obtaining; and (iii) applied and were unsuccessful in obtaining a Postgraduate Certificate in Education course, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 23675/11-15)

Dr Farry: Whilst my Department is responsible for the funding and administration of Initial Teacher Education (ITE), the Minister for Education is responsible for deciding the number of students who will be admitted to ITE courses, including the Postgraduate Certificate in Education course.

I should also point out that while the Department of Education sets the minimum entry requirements needed for entry to ITE courses, individual providers may seek qualifications over and above these, especially at a time when many ITE courses are oversubscribed.

My Department has provided information in respect of part (i) detailing the number of graduates who have obtained a Postgraduate Certificate in Education, in each of the last five years. This information can be found at Annex A.

It was necessary to contact each of the Institutions in respect of parts (ii) and (iii) as this information is not held by my Department. Details of the responses received from each institution are attached at Annex B.

Boost Programme: Rural Communities

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how her Department is promoting the Boost Scheme in rural communities.

(AQW 23730/11-15)

Dr Farry: The Boost Programme is a rural youth employability project which is managed by Advantage NI and funded under Priority 1 of the Northern Ireland European Social Fund Programme 2007 – 2013. The project was offered funding over the period 1 April 2011 to 31 March 2014 of £234,841 from the European Social Fund and £146,775 from the Department for Employment and Learning.

The Department for Employment and Learning's Employment Service entered into an agreement with Advantage NI that provides the Boost Programme with access to rural Jobs & Benefits Offices and Jobcentres in order to promote the Boost Programme as an addition to the range of mainstream support available to help young people find work.

Northern Regional College: Coleraine Campus

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what representations have been made from users and members of the public on the suitability and condition of the building at the Northern Regional College, Coleraine Campus, in the last three years.

(AQW 23863/11-15)

Dr Farry: No representations have been made from users or members of the public on the suitability and condition of the building at the Northern Regional College, Coleraine Campus, in the last three years.

Apprenticeships: Placements

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline the steps that his Department is taking to monitor and ensure that students completing apprenticeships through Further Education Colleges, are provided with placements that will equip them with the skills needed to achieve the relevant qualification.

(AQW 23893/11-15)

Dr Farry: The ApprenticeshipsNI Programme is an employment based programme, open to those that have reached school leaving age, who are entering or are already in employment, and contracted to work a minimum of 21 hours per week.

As apprentices are employed there is no separate requirement for work placements.

Work placements form part of the Programme Led Apprenticeship Programme. An important aspect of this programme is that participants have the opportunity to work towards the relevant NVQ element of the apprenticeship framework through an employer placement which complements and builds on the occupational skills acquired in directed training and simulated working environment.

Programme Led Apprenticeships Operational Guidelines are explicit about what is expected of all Suppliers and participants in terms of programme content and procedures (including work placements).

The Department's Quality and Performance Branch monitors all contracted Training Suppliers, including Further Education Colleges, to ensure compliance with all of the Operational Guidelines requirements.

In cases where any non compliance has been identified the Training Supplier will be cautioned and Quality and Performance Branch will continue to monitor the Supplier on an ongoing basis to ensure that there is no repetition of the practices involved.

Continual failure by Suppliers to source placements to equip learners with the skills required could result in the Supplier losing this service from their contract.

Postgraduate Funding

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 23006/11-15, whether the amount of funding matches the increased number of postgraduate places and courses.

(AQW 23901/11-15)

Dr Farry: I am fully committed to doubling the number of postgraduate courses my Department funds to 1,000 places by 2020, as contained in the Higher Education Strategy.

On 6 December 2012, I announced that I have already secured additional new funding for 300 of these places through the Jobs and Economy Initiative and through the Higher Education Strategy. This funding will be used to increase the number of postgraduate places from 495 to 795 by 2015/16.

Apprenticeships: Sickness Guidelines

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of the guidelines for Programme Led Apprenticeships, in particular (i) 4.4 Interrupted Training; and (ii) 4.6 Sickness, in that they discriminate against people with sickness but allow for persons with custodial sentences or who are pregnant to continue their training at a later stage.

(AQW 24015/11-15)

Dr Farry: The Programme Led Apprenticeships Operational Guidelines are explicit about what is expected of all Suppliers and participants in terms of programme content and procedures.

An Interruption to Training is used to protect the balance of training time where a period of training is interrupted due to pregnancy, custodial sentence, or care order. This facility ensures that the participant can re-enter Programme-Led Apprenticeships, following an enforced interruption, and continue to receive the balance of training time remaining (even if they are over 18 years old).

Any sickness absence related to a participant's disability and evidenced by the participant's GP must be disregarded when aggregating a participant's sick record. However, participants should be withdrawn from training at the end of six weeks continuous absence to safe guard against reducing further the balance of training due and affect the participant's ability to complete the relevant components of Programme-Led Apprenticeships.

In circumstances where a participant has been withdrawn from training because of extended sickness, they are also given the opportunity to return to training when they have recovered and continue to receive the balance of training time remaining (even if they are over 18 years old).

The Guidelines also state that suspected abuse of self-certification arrangements must be investigated and, if necessary, the disciplinary procedures as outlined in the guidance may be invoked.

I am satisfied that my Department aims to ensure fair and inclusive delivery of all its programmes including Programme Led Apprenticeships.

Apprenticeships: Sickness Guidelines

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what is the policy used by training providers when people on Programme Led Apprenticeships have reached their allowance of fifteen days absence due to sickness but remain unwell and have an unfit for work certificate from their GP.

(AQW 24017/11-15)

Dr Farry: The policy as set out in the Programme-Led Apprenticeship Guidelines, as it relates to the above question, is as follows;

"Where a participant has been continuously absent for three weeks, the participant must be withdrawn from Programme-Led Apprenticeships. However, where a participant has been continuously absent for three weeks, a fourth week may be approved and EMA paid, provided it is clear that the participant will return to training the following week. Should the participant not return, the participant must be withdrawn from Programme-Led Apprenticeships."
Para. 4.6 (iv) and;

"In circumstances where a participant has been withdrawn from training because of extended sickness, the young person must be given the opportunity to return to training when they have recovered. The Supplier must complete PLA 8 and forward to the mailbox of their local Careers Office, prior to re-entry, in order for a Training Credit to be issued for the balance of time, even if over 18 years of age (i.e. the period from the participant's start date, less the period for which the participant has received payment of EMA prior to withdrawal)." Para 4.6 (v)

The reason for withdrawal from training in the above circumstances is to protect the participant's balance of training.

All Training Suppliers are issued with copies of the Operational Guidelines and any subsequent memos which may be issued from time to time. I hope that the above information clarifies the position in relation to the question that you have raised.

Teacher Education Infrastructure

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 23551/11-15, whether the two companies that submitted proposals for the second tender had been approached by a member of staff from his Department to do so.

(AQW 24095/11-15)

Dr Farry: No member of staff from my Department approached any company in relation to the second tender for stage one of the Study of the Teacher Education Infrastructure in Northern Ireland.

Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment

Economic Development: Indigenous Business

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how she plans to work with the Department of Jobs, Enterprise and Innovation to develop indigenous business.

(AQW 22535/11-15)

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): Indigenous businesses in Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland both face similar challenges relating to the increasing pace and intensity of global competition. In such an intense environment, every source of competitive advantage must be considered and exploited. To this end, officials from my Department and Invest Northern Ireland continue to meet with their Irish counterparts on a formal basis through North South Inter-Agency Group. The DETI Permanent Secretary, Invest NI Chief Executive and the Secretary General of the Department of Jobs, Enterprise, and Innovation attend these meetings, as do senior officials from InterTrade Ireland and Enterprise Ireland. Meeting agendas cover a wide range of economic development related issues ensuring that any opportunities for mutually beneficial activity and engagement are explored in full. One such example of where this approach has been very successful has been in the implementation of the Innovation Voucher Scheme on an all-island basis.

Investment Conference

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 22468/11-14, to detail (i) the date of each discussion; (ii) who was in attendance at each; (iii) the outcome of each discussion; and (iv) the date on which she first raised the matter of the investment conference planned for Autumn 2013.

(AQW 22752/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Discussions about a possible investment conference are continuing and an announcement will be made in due course. Until then there is nothing I can usefully add to my previous answer.

Foreign Direct Investment

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to provide a list of all businesses that are operating in as a result of Foreign Direct Investment in the last three years, and to plot these businesses on a regional map, colour coding each business according to its sector.

(AQW 23103/11-15)

Mrs Foster: During the period 1st April 2010 and 31st March 2013, Invest NI offered support to 235 externally-owned businesses to establish and/or further develop their business within Northern Ireland.

The names of 11 businesses have been withheld as they are exempt under Freedom of Information legislation (Section 22 [1]). Under this legislation Invest NI is exempt from disclosing information on projects planned to be publicly announced at some future date (whether determined or not) subject to a public interest test.

Therefore, the list in Table 1 comprises 224 businesses, which have been presented in alphabetical order.

A map showing the locations of these businesses, colour-coded according to its sector, has been placed in the library.

Craigavon Borough Council

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 1338/11, (i) what monies have been recouped from Craigavon Borough Council; (ii) when the money was recouped; and (iii) the detail the reasons for any outstanding amount.

(AQW 23566/11-15)

Mrs Foster: At this stage no monies have been recouped from Craigavon Borough Council. The matter is not yet resolved but the Department and Craigavon Borough Council continue to work together to resolve the issue.

Invest NI: Economies of Agglomeration

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether InvestNI considers economies of agglomeration when seeking to attract foreign direct investment.

(AQW 23577/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest NI is aware of the potential pull and benefits that can be generated by economies of agglomeration. Invest NI's overseas sales network initially sells Northern Ireland as an attractive FDI location by highlighting existing investors and sectoral clusters already operating in Northern Ireland.

As part of a potential investor's visit programme Invest NI aims to include meetings with existing international investors within the same sector across the locations the company is interested in. In doing so these visit programmes provide potential investors with an opportunity to hear first hand testimony of experiences of doing business in Northern Ireland, which reinforces the Northern Ireland proposition.

It is important to clarify that location decisions for inward investment visits must clearly showcase Northern Ireland's capability to meet the company's needs. Potential investors will focus on the availability of skilled labour, suitable property and infrastructure requirements, along with existing clusters of companies in their business sector. Areas that cannot demonstrate this are unlikely to be the focus of inward investment visits and further inward investment.

Tourism: Foyle Cup

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether she plans to include the Foyle Cup as one of the ten major events to be supported through Tourism Priorities for Action.

(AQW 23628/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) has supported the Foyle Cup this year and in previous years through the National Tourism Events Fund with total assistance provided over the last 2 years of £30,000. The Northern Ireland Executive provided £40,000 in financial assistance for the 2011 event.

DETI is in the process of developing an Events Plan for 2014 – 2020 which will consider how best to support events in Northern Ireland and how to grow our events industry.

I understand that no support is currently being offered from either Sport NI or the Irish Football Association, even though the event provides the opportunity for young local players from Northern Ireland to play against international teams.

It is my view that Sport NI could adopt a more proactive approach in promoting and assisting sporting events such as the Foyle Cup.

Jobs Fund: Tourism Sector

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how she will ensure that there will be an increase in the number of tourism related jobs created via the Jobs Fund.

(AQW 23633/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Jobs Fund supports employment creation projects from across the business base and across many sectors and industries including tourism.

Invest NI will continue to assess all funding applications on a case by case basis and will structure its support to provide the optimal package that is most appropriate to the business' needs, which delivers maximum economic benefit for Northern Ireland and best value for money for the public purse. For tourism accommodation projects support may be best delivered through Invest NI's Tourism Development Scheme. Invest NI will ensure that the Jobs Fund is utilized to provide support where appropriate.

Jobs Fund: Tourism Sector

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment why more jobs have not been created in the tourism sector via the Jobs Fund.

(AQW 23634/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest NI's remit includes the provision of financial support towards tourism accommodation projects which typically comprise the construction of new or expansion of existing accommodation facilities. Whilst there may be job creation associated with these projects, these tend to be capital intensive and Invest NI's Tourism Development Scheme is the most effective and therefore most frequently used scheme to support these projects.

The Jobs Fund has been specifically designed as a direct response to the global economic downturn in order to tackle our high unemployment by creating new jobs and helping to rebuild our local economy.

The Jobs Fund supports employment creation projects from across the business base and across many sectors and industries including tourism.

The Jobs Fund continues to be widely promoted and applications from all sectors, including those with a tourism focus will continue to be considered for support as and when these are received. Invest NI will continue to assess all applications on a case by case basis and will structure its support to provide the optimal package that is most appropriate to the business' needs and which delivers maximum economic benefit for Northern Ireland and best value for money for the public purse.

Dignity at Work: DETI Cases

Mr Spratt asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how many Dignity at Work cases have been lodged in his Department in each of the last five years, broken down by (i) core department; and (ii) non-departmental public body; and how many of these cases have been resolved.

(AQW 23646/11-15)

Mrs Foster:

Dignity at Work cases lodged in DETI & Non-departmental public body (NDPB) in the last five years

Department/ NDPB		2008/09	2009/10	2010/11	2011/12	2012/13
DETI	No. of Cases Lodged			1	2
HSENI (NDPB)	No. of Cases Lodged					1
NITB (NDPB)	No. of Cases Lodged					1
InvestNI (NDPB)	No. of Cases Lodged	1		3	1	4
GCCNI (NDPB)	No. of Cases Lodged

All cases have been resolved apart from one received in the 2012/13 year which is currently ongoing.

Energy Costs

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what assistance her Department can provide to businesses to help meet their energy costs.

(AQW 23666/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest NI provides a range of support for businesses to assist with the management of energy costs and for the deployment of renewable energy to help reduce operating costs. This support includes technical advice, free energy efficiency audits, action plans and project management support to help businesses to implement the most cost effective cost saving opportunities.

Invest NI also provides funding for the Energy Efficiency Loan Fund in Northern Ireland which is managed and delivered by Carbon Trust. The Loan Fund offers interest-free loans from £3,000 - £400,000 to Northern Ireland businesses to help them install more energy efficient equipment.

Invest NI and Manufacturing NI have recently launched a guide to encourage companies to improve energy efficiency and consider adopting renewable energy technologies. 'Energy Independence' has been developed by Manufacturing NI and Carbon Trust with funding from Invest NI to provide advice and information on reducing the cost of energy consumption through on-site generation of electricity or heat from renewable sources.

Invest NI will consider providing Selective Financial Assistance to Large Energy Users that bring forward proposals for capital expenditure on equipment that will make a significant impact on energy efficiency.

In addition my Department incentivises Renewable electricity through the Northern Ireland Renewables Obligation (NIRO) which provides a revenue stream for electricity generated over a 20 year period in the form of Renewables Obligation Certificates (ROCs). A wide range of technologies are supported through this incentive mechanism.

A Renewable Heat Incentive is also in place for non-domestic installations which provides a tariff payment based on the size and type of technology over a 20 year period. Technologies supported include solar thermal, biomass boilers and ground source heat pumps.

Giro d'Italia 2014

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline what discussions her Department has had to date with the organisers of the Giro d'Italia 2014 regarding the inclusion of the Mourne area in the route.

(AQW 23701/11-15)

Mrs Foster: I would refer the member to the reply I gave to Priority AQW 23022/11-15.

The Northern Ireland Tourist Board has established a group to engage with local authorities. This group met for the first time on 11 April 2013 with a number of local authorities involved.

This local authority group will meet again once the route is decided and will have a key role in delivering on the range of opportunities that the event will provide locally.

Giro d'Italia 2014

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 23022/11-15, whether local authorities from the Mourne area participated in the group established by the Northern Ireland Tourist Board to help them harness the potential benefits from the Giro d'Italia 2014.

(AQW 23702/11-15)

Mrs Foster: I can confirm that Down District Council and Newry & Mourne District Council participated.

Foreign Direct Investment: Smartphone Application

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 22706/11-15, to detail (i) what engagement her Department has had to date with Down District Council in regard to the Foreign Direct Investment smartphone application; and (ii) whether Down District Council submitted a proposition for the Down area.

(AQW 23704/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest NI is committed to helping Councils develop international investment propositions for their areas. With this in mind, Invest NI has consulted with Down District Council on being included in a joint Invest NI/Council initiative that will provide for development of a mobile application to promote Council areas in external markets. The proposed project is being considered for funding under the Local Economic Development measure of the European Sustainable Competitiveness Programme for Northern Ireland.

Down District Council has advised that it wishes to be included in this joint initiative and Invest NI will advise Councils of the outcome of the funding decision which is due in the coming weeks.

The above proposal includes provision for funding towards the development of appropriate content for the mobile application. Councils may therefore develop an appropriate proposition for their area, input the information to the application and update as required.

Small Business Loan Fund

Mr Spratt asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how many businesses have availed of the Small Business Loan Fund scheme since its launch.

(AQW 23708/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Since the launch of the Small Business Loan Fund on the 11 February 2013, there have been 473 enquiries to the fund managers, 67 applications have been received and 9 loans have been approved as at 31st May 2013.

Tourism: Bilingual Signage

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what meetings the Northern Ireland Tourist Board has had with groups which are supportive of bilingual tourism signage and to outline what concerns were raised.

(AQW 23714/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The detailed information sought is not readily available and may only be obtained at disproportionate cost to the Northern Ireland Tourist Board.

Tourism: Bilingual Signage

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline the evidence that the Northern Ireland Tourist Board has that bilingual signage would be subject to possible defacing as stated in its response to the Department for Regional Development consultation on road signage.

(AQW 23715/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Northern Ireland Tourist Board's comments were made in reference to content in the DRD Consultation documents regarding on-going difficulties with signage defacing where political sensitivities exist.

Strategic Environmental Assessment

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the Strategic Energy Assessment that was completed when the 40 per cent of energy to come from renewable sources target was set.

(AQW 23729/11-15)

Mrs Foster: I am not aware of the term Strategic Energy Assessment but I am assuming that the member is referring to a Strategic Environmental Assessment (SEA).

When the 40% target for renewable electricity was set, SEAs of both the OffShore Renewable Energy Strategic Action Plan (ORESAP) and the Onshore Renewable Electricity Strategic Action Plan (OREAP) were underway. The ORESAP SEA was commissioned in 2008 and the OREAP SEA was commissioned in 2009. All documents associated with each SEA can be viewed at www.offshoreenergyni.co.uk and www.onshorerenewablesni.co.uk.

Tourism: Bilingual Signage

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline how the Northern Ireland Tourist Board sought evidence or commissioned research to establish the possible economic and tourism value of bilingual tourism signage.

(AQW 23755/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Northern Ireland Tourist Board has not commissioned research to establish the possible economic and tourism value of bilingual tourism signage.

Tourism: Irish Signage

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline how the Northern Ireland Tourist Board and her Department are encouraging the use of place names in Irish.

(AQW 23756/11-15)

Mrs Foster: It is not the role of the Northern Ireland Tourist Board or the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to encourage the use of place names in Irish.

Tourism: Signage Policy

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether the Northern Ireland Tourist Board has screened its tourism signage policy for equality, and if not, when it plans to do so.

(AQW 23757/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Tourist Signing in Northern Ireland Policy (16 April 2004) was jointly agreed between Roads Service and the Northern Ireland Tourist Board.

The Policy was equality screened by Roads Service.

Tourism: Bilingual Signage

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline why a departmental direction was issued to the Northern Ireland Tourist Board on 13 September 2012 proposing that it does not formalise a policy on bilingual tourism signage.

(AQW 23758/11-15)

Mrs Foster: A Departmental direction was not issued to NITB on this matter.

Invest NI: Financial Support

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of businesses in North Down that have benefited from financial support from InvestNI, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 23786/11-15)

Mrs Foster: In North Down, Invest NI offered financial support to 37 businesses in 2010-11, 67 in 2011-12 and 73 in 2012-13. It should be noted that not all assisted businesses receive financial support. A further 12 businesses were offered support and guidance through Invest NI's various business development schemes during the 3 year period.

In addition, 112 local start up businesses in 2010-11, 80 in 2011-12 and 41 in 2012-13 were offered advice and guidance through business start support.

Tourism: Signage Policy

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline what Ministerial direction was given to the Northern Ireland Tourist Board on 11 January 2011 in relation to tourism signage.

(AQW 23808/11-15)

Mrs Foster: A Ministerial Direction was not given to the Northern Ireland Tourist Board on this issue.

Tourism: Accommodation Demand

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 19984/11-15, to detail (i) when she expects the consultation on future tourist accommodation demand to commence; (ii) whether the consultation will be carried out by external consultants, and if so, if these been tendered; (iii) if the Oxford Economics research on Forecasting Tourism Accommodation Demand will form part of the consultation process; and (iv) why the results of this research would not be made available to other Departments to assist in the delivery of strategic priorities.

(AQW 23812/11-15)

Mrs Foster: DETI intends to carry out a consultation exercise later this year, which will gather views to help inform future accommodation policy.

It is anticipated that evidence from a wide range of sources, including research undertaken by Oxford Economics, will form the consultation process.

The Oxford Economics' research was commissioned for internal use only, with a view to contributing to the evidence base for the development of future accommodation policy which will, in turn, inform other relevant Departments and Bodies.

Wind Turbines: Third-party Claims

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether liability for third party claims caused by wind turbines will be against the landowner or the wind turbine operator .

(AQW 23822/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The issue of liability insurance is a matter between the landowner and the turbine operator, who, in some cases, will be one and the same. My Department has no role in this process. However, it is my understanding that it is common practice for the wind turbine operator to take responsibility for all aspects of insurance, including public liability.

Wind Turbines: Health and Safety

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what steps she will take to address health and safety issues associated with the operation of wind turbines including (i) ice throw; (ii) turbine collapse; (iii) turbine fires; (iv) blade fragmentation; and (v) risks to hill walkers, farming personnel, livestock and birds.

(AQW 23825/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Ice throw, turbine collapse, turbine fires and blade fragmentation have all been known to occur on wind turbines used around the world and could potentially place hill walkers, farming personnel, livestock and birds at risk.

The Health and Safety Executive for Northern Ireland (the body responsible for safety regulation in the wind turbine industry) believes that these risks are low for wind turbines sited in compliance with planning requirements and constructed, operated and maintained in accordance with British and European Standards and Industry guidance.

Consequently there are no plans for HSENI to take any actions over and above its general regulatory activity within the whole of the electrical supply industry.

Broadband: Greencastle and Broughderg

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how her Department will deliver further progress in providing a broadband connection to the communities of Greencastle and Broughderg, County Tyrone, over the next twelve months.

(AQW 23912/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Broadband services are presently available to constituents in Broughderg and Greencastle and include options of a fixed-wireless broadband service of 10Mbps-100Mbps or a satellite broadband service of up to 20Mbps.

Looking forward, under DETI's Telecommunications Action Plan 2011-2015, a new Broadband Improvement Project has been initiated. This project aims to ensure that, by 2015, virtually all premises in Northern Ireland are able to avail of a broadband download speed of at least 2Mbps, and at least 90% of premises are provided with superfast broadband, with speeds in excess of 24Mbps.

The proposed intervention area is currently being assessed to comply with State Aid rules. A procurement process will commence shortly and it will be for the industry to respond with proposals on the roll out of services across Northern Ireland.

Retail: Online/High Street

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on action to commission market research on the short and long-term negative effects of on-line retailing on high street retailers.

(AQO 4251/11-15)

Mrs Foster: My Department is not undertaking any market research on the short and long-term negative effects of on-line retailing on high street retailers.

Department of the Environment

Minerals: Applications/Enforcement Cases

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 14244/11-15 and AQW 20926/11-15, whether the review of minerals applications and Environmental Impact Assessment screening, carried out by Strategic Planning Division's Minerals Team and assisted by the Development Management Guidance Team, included reviews of recently approved minerals applications and minerals enforcement cases.

(AQW 22043/11-15)

Mr Attwood (The Minister of the Environment): In my response to AQW 14244/11-15, I had indicated that there would be an immediate review of all current and recently approved minerals applications as well as a range of enforcement cases (minerals and unauthorised waste).

Drumlee Road, Kilcoo: R/2008/0164/CA

Mr Wells asked the Minister of the Environment why no enforcement action was taken by the Southern Area Planning Office regarding case number R/2008/0164/CA.

(AQW 22334/11-15)

Mr Attwood: In July 2008, the Downpatrick Area Planning Office commenced an enforcement investigation into an alleged unauthorised building on lands at Drumlee Road, Kilcoo. The investigation was undertaken in response to complaints received at that time.

The investigation established that the building had been erected in 2 phases, the first in 2001 and the second (an extension) in 2004. I am advised by my officials that the first phase of the building became immune from enforcement action in 2005, 3 years before the Area Office received a complaint. The legal time frame for taking enforcement action in this case was 4 years – the 5 year period for the enforcement of planning control came into effect in December 2011.

As far as the extension is concerned, I am advised it became immune from enforcement action in 2008, before the findings of the enforcement investigation had been established. Enforcement action would not have been taken in respect of the extension, as its impact on public amenity – particularly in the context of the larger original building – was not considered to warrant such action.

Sprucefield: Planning Appeal

Mr Givan asked the Minister of the Environment when he will bring forward a paper to the Executive on the Retail Planning Policy related to the retail development status of Sprucefield.

(AQW 22532/11-15)

Mr Attwood: I have lodged, in the Assembly Library, a copy of the full submission made by my Department to the now abandoned Planning Appeals Commission hearing on Sprucefield. This includes consideration of the Retail Strategy. It is an extensive, detailed document and it merits reading. The member may wish to study the papers which give a full picture of all the considerations which were relevant to this matter.

Members know, Executive business is confidential. However, in order to be helpful, I was asked by the Executive and provided information to the Executive in relation to retail policy advice provided to the now abandoned enquiry.

Sprucefield: Planning Appeal

Mr Givan asked the Minister of the Environment why he is yet to provide a substantive response to Lisburn City Council's correspondence relating to his statement of intention to the Planning Appeals Commission on the planning conditions associated with Sprucefield retail development.[R]

(AQW 22537/11-15)

Mr Attwood: I have lodged a copy of the full submission by my Department to the now abandoned PAC hearing on Sprucefield (including advice on the retail element of the Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan) in the Assembly library. I believe it would inform discussion and fulfil the requirements of disclosure for others who made/were due to make submissions to the PAC hearing and who were also to publish their submissions. I remain convinced that the advice I provided was faithful to planning policy and the Regional Development Strategy (2035), informed by present economic and retail circumstances and the right approach for retail and all the town and city centres within 60 minutes driving distance of Sprucefield (including Lisburn City Centre).

I have also now written to the Council and their legal representatives. I believe the Council should consider the submission detailed above.

Employment: People with Special Needs

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 21701/11-15, whether he will request that councils provide the exact figures for placements.

(AQW 22639/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The Department does not hold this information. As indicated in my response to AQW 22948/11-15, I am writing to all chief executives asking for information on council practices in this regard. I will respond substantively to this question as soon as it has been possible to collate the council responses.

Vehicles: Registered in Northern Ireland

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of the Environment to list the number of vehicles registered, broken down by the year of first registration.

(AQW 22949/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The latest licensed vehicles figures are detailed in Table 1 below.

Vehicles licensed in Northern Ireland at 31 December 2012, by year of first registration

MOT: Pre-1960 Exemptions

Mr Girvan asked the Minister of the Environment what impact his decision to exempt pre-1960 historic vehicles from the MOT test will have on (i) insurance claims; and (ii) calls for the abolition of the MOT test for all vehicles.

(AQW 23154/11-15)

Mr Attwood:

- (i) My decision to exempt pre-1960 historic vehicles from the MOT test is unlikely to have any impact on insurance claims or insurance premiums.

The Association of British Insurers, in response to the Historic Vehicles MOT Review Consultation conducted by the Department for Transport in Britain, indicated that it would not expect an immediate impact on insurance premiums simply from a change in the MOT requirement of itself. Any change would depend, all other factors being equal, on whether insurers noticed any change in the claims experience of these vehicles. If this were noted, then ABI would expect to see premiums rise.

Historic car enthusiasts are well known for keeping their vehicles in excellent condition. Vehicles used on public roads are in any case required to comply with all relevant aspects of the Motor Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1999 and the Road Vehicles Lighting Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2000, which include the requirement to maintain vehicles being used on the road in a roadworthy condition, with failure to do so being an offence. The periodic MOT test is an element, but only an element, in measures to ensure compliance by vehicle keepers with these statutory requirements.

I have provided access to owners of pre-1960 vehicles to an MOT test on a voluntary basis, should owners require this for any reason (which might include prior to a sale, for a cherished plate transfer, or for reasons connected with insurance requirements from particular insurers).

- (ii) European Directive 2009/40/EC on roadworthiness tests for motor vehicles and their trailers included a provision permitting Member States to exclude from the scope of the Directive vehicles which are never, or hardly ever, used on public highways, including vehicles of historic interest which were manufactured before 1 January 1960 or which are temporarily withdrawn from circulation.

There are no plans to abolish the MOT test for other vehicles. The provisions for periodic testing of vehicles are set down in European Directives. As you will be aware from my answers to other Assembly Questions, the European Commission and European Parliament are minded to strengthen rather than relax test requirements, most recently through the proposed Roadworthiness Package, about which I and others (including the Assembly Environment Committee) have made strong representations where the proposals go beyond what I consider are required for road safety purposes.

Quarry and Aggregate Sites: Compliance Visits

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment to list the compliance inspection visits that the (i) Northern Ireland Environment Agency Water Management Unit; (ii) Planning Service; and (iii) Industrial Pollution and Radiochemical Inspectorate made to quarry and aggregate sites in (a) 2011; and (b) 2012.

(AQW 23159/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The issue of compliance visits and enforcement visits is intrinsically linked, therefore information on both aspects of the regulation of quarry and aggregate sites have been included below.

The Industrial Pollution and Radiochemical Inspectorate regulates emissions to air from quarries where crushing and screening of minerals is carried out. There are currently 143 such installations permitted under the Pollution Prevention and Control Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2003.

In the compliance year 2011/12 a total of 264 mineral compliance assessments (inspections) were carried out and in the compliance year 2012/13 a total of 225 mineral compliance assessments (inspections) were carried out.

NIEA Water Management Unit (WMU) regulate such sites under the Water (Northern Ireland) Order 1999, it is an offence to discharge trade or sewage effluent to waterways or to water in underground strata without the consent of the DOE.

WMU administers a system of discharge consents which lay down conditions relating to the quality and quantity of effluent that may be discharged. Failure to comply with the conditions of a discharge consent is an offence under the Water Order and, if a discharge is non-compliant, appropriate action is taken by NIEA, depending on compliance history and/or the severity of the breach of consent and its effect on the environment.

Once a discharge consent has been issued, compliance assessment monitoring is normally carried out where the consent permits a maximum daily discharge of 5 cubic metres or more, or where the consent relates to significant site drainage discharges, such as those for the aggregate sector. This approach to sampling has been adopted to target resources in a cost effective way at those discharges which, because of their volume or composition, have the greatest pollution potential.

Compliance monitoring normally includes the routine collection of samples, or visual inspections, or both. All consent holders are obliged to ensure that the sample point for their discharge is maintained so that it is freely available and accessible to authorised officers of the Department at all times; and authorised officers of the Department are at all times allowed to readily and safely obtain a sample of the effluent, a measurement of the flow and images of the discharge or other data relative to the discharge.

These conditions are fundamental to the sampling and inspection programme as consent holders are not told in advance when sampling will take place.

Discharges from sites in the aggregate sector are monitored 4 times per year. There are currently 120 sites sampled in line with the conditions of their consent which equates to 480 compliance visits per year.

There are 124 deemed abstraction licences, for quarry sites, issued under the Water Abstraction and Impoundment (Licensing) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2006.

NIEA seeks to work co-operatively with industry to secure improved practice, but acknowledges that enforcement action will need to be taken in some cases to ensure compliance. Any enforcement action taken is in accordance with the NIEA Enforcement and Prosecution Policy for Environmental Protection. Under this policy, NIEA endeavours to be;

- consistent and impartial;
- proportionate in its actions; and
- transparent in its activities.

NIEA undertakes advisory visits where less significant breaches have occurred or where a site is in danger of non compliance. For more significant breaches a warning letter or formal notice can be issued. For persistent non compliance or for the most significant breaches an evidence file will be prepared with a view to taking a prosecution against the offender.

The Department of the Environment's (DOE) Planning Division, upon receiving a complaint regarding a breach of planning control opens a case to investigate. The site in each case is inspected to substantiate a breach. If a warning or other request is issued by the Department, the site may be inspected again for compliance with that request and in the event that a final warning is issued a further inspection may take place.

Should an Enforcement or other Notice be issued, several site inspections may take place to monitor compliance with that Notice. There are of course cases which dictate that more or less frequent inspections are carried out depending on the impacts of the breach and as such visits can in cases be carried out daily for up to 28 days.

As a minimum each case receives one inspection and an average of 3 visits may be expected for the majority of cases.

Given the large number of sites, regulated under a number of regulatory regimes, and the proactive and informal nature of advisory visits, the majority of which help the site stay or return to compliance, in addition to formal visits related to more robust enforcement action and sites visits in relation to reports of alleged pollution incidents, received through NIEA's pollution hotline, it would not be feasible to compile a composite list of all such visits. However detailed information on specific sites can be provided upon request.

Quarry and Aggregate Sites: Enforcement Visits

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment to list the enforcement visits that the (i) Northern Ireland Environment Agency Water Management Unit; (ii) Planning Service; and (iii) Industrial Pollution and Radiochemical Inspectorate made to quarry and aggregates sites in (a) 2011; and (b) 2012.

(AQW 23161/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The issue of compliance visits and enforcement visits is intrinsically linked, therefore information on both aspects of the regulation of quarry and aggregate sites have been included below.

The Industrial Pollution and Radiochemical Inspectorate regulates emissions to air from quarries where crushing and screening of minerals is carried out. There are currently 143 such installations permitted under the Pollution Prevention and Control Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2003.

Vehicles: Unlicensed

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of the Environment how many reports of unlicensed vehicles have been received by the Driver Vehicle Agency by (i) telephone; and (ii) its online reporting facility, in each of the last twelve months.
(AQW 23276/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The Driver & Vehicle Agency (DVA) accepts reports of unlicensed vehicles from members of the public by post, telephone or online, however, the majority are received via the online reporting facility.

In the period 1 May 2012 to 30 April 2013, DVA received 1,033 reports from members of the public for Northern Ireland registered vehicles. Of these 1,033 reports, 410 vehicles were found to be currently licensed and no further action was required.

DVA records all such reports on the computer system as 'Public Detections' and cannot provide a further breakdown according to method of receipt.

The table below provides overall totals for each of the last twelve months.

Hydroelectric Scheme: Applications

Mr Ó hÓisín asked the Minister of the Environment how many hydro-electric scheme applications have been (i) approved; and (ii) refused to date; and how many are in the planning system.

(AQW 23408/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The Department welcomes the contribution that renewable projects make to the reduction of carbon emissions and acknowledges the importance of processing these applications in a consistent and timely manner. As Minister I am fully supportive of renewable energy and believe firmly in the contribution that renewables make to the economy.

Table 1 below provides a breakdown by LGD of those applications granted or refused permission over the last 9 years.

PPS 21: CTY 10

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of the Environment whether, since the publication of PPS 21 in its current form, he has given instructions to Planning Service Divisional offices which change the application of CTY 10, so that in situations where the applicant land owner rents his land out, planning permission will only be granted under the tenant's farm business ID and not the land owner's.

(AQW 23412/11-15)

Mr Attwood: Policy CTY10 of Planning Policy Statement (PPS) 21 'Sustainable Development in Countryside' states that permission will be granted for a dwelling house on a farm where all of the following criteria are met: the farm business is currently active and has been established for at least 6 years; no dwellings or development opportunities out-with settlements limits have been sold off from the farm holding within 10 years from the date of the application; and the new building is visually linked or sited to cluster with an established group of buildings on the farm.

I can advise that I have not given any instruction to planning staff indicating that planning permission will only be granted under the tenant's farm business ID and not the land owner's.

An applicant who may lease out some or all of his land, but who is nonetheless responsible for maintaining it in good agricultural and environmental condition, can still benefit from a dwelling under CTY10, subject to being able to satisfy the other requirements of the policy.

A key issue to be considered under CTY10 is whether there is an active and established business for 6 years. Any subsequent planning permission would be tied to the business rather than the individual person and permission granted under this policy will only be forthcoming once every 10 years.

The Department is aware that there will be a range of different scenarios to consider under this policy in terms of full and part time farmers and those who let land in conacre. DOE Planning therefore take all relevant factors into account in order to arrive at a balanced decision based on the facts of each case.

Notwithstanding, you may be aware that PPS21 is subject to a rolling review into the operation of the policy in order to ensure both consistency and increased flexibility of decision-making in line with the content and substance of the existing policy and I intend to make a statement to the Assembly on the outcome of the review to date.

Ballymena Borough Council: DDA Placements

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 22435/11-15 and given that Ballymena Borough Council has confirmed that it does employ and provide placements within these criteria, why it cannot provide a figure of their current employees and placements.

(AQW 23452/11-15)

Mr Attwood: Ballymena Borough Council has advised that two placements are currently filled.

The council further advises 12 members of staff would meet the recognised definition of disability under the Disability Discrimination Act.

I trust it will be reassuring to the Member to know I will be writing to all Chief Executives seeking an assurance that their council's employment policies comply fully with the relevant legislation.

Councils: Disabled Staff

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, for each of the last five years, to detail the number of staff in each council that have become disabled whilst employed and have had reasonable adjustment made to assist their continued employment.

(AQW 23527/11-15)

Mr Attwood: Councils are independent employers and are thus bound by the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 (DDA) under which it is unlawful for an employer to discriminate on the grounds of disability. The DDA allows for reasonable adjustments by employers to ensure fair access for disabled people or to compensate for the disadvantage they experience as a result of their disability.

Councils are, in addition, bound by Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 which obliges councils to have due regard to the need to promote equality of opportunity between persons with a disability and persons without.

It is the responsibility and duty of councils to comply with all relevant legislation in regard to the employment of individuals and I will write to all council Chief Executives seeking the information you request and provide it to you when it has been collated.

Carrier Bag Levy

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the monthly receipts from the single use bag levy.

(AQW 23533/11-15)

Mr Attwood: As the receipts from the Carrier Bag Levy are collected on a quarterly basis, the first payments from retailers to the Department are not due until July 2013.

The Department anticipates quarterly receipts of around £425,000 in 2013/14 and will publish the actual receipts when this information becomes available.

Carrier Bag Levy

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment to list the environmental projects or groups that have been designated for funding from receipts of the single use bag levy.

(AQW 23534/11-15)

Mr Attwood: I intend to use the net revenue generated from the Carrier Bag Levy to support communities, businesses, voluntary organisations, charities and schools in the delivery of local environmental programmes, particularly those that deliver social and economic benefits. These include:

- The creation of a new River Restoration Fund to allow local communities, angling groups and voluntary environmental organisations to run small projects which will improve local river water quality and ecological status and thereby contribute to implementing the objectives of the EU Water Framework Directive;
- The creation of a new Sustainability Innovation Fund to support community groups, business and others who need financial support to implement initiatives which have the potential for innovation which can generate transformational environmental change;
- Increased grants from the Community Challenge Fund to deliver a range of practical, local environmental projects through a broad range of not-for-profit groups including; voluntary and community groups, schools, charities and environmental trusts;
- Increased grants from the Natural Heritage Fund to encourage the conservation and enhancement of key elements of the environment and its wildlife and provide facilities which help as wide a range of people as possible to enjoy and appreciate our natural heritage; and
- Increased grants available from the Rethink Waste Fund to promote waste prevention, reuse and recycling.

The first Carrier Bag Levy returns from retailers are due in July 2013. Once this information is received and collated, the Department will be able to establish a reliable estimate of the total net revenue for 2013/14 and allocate funding to programmes and projects on the basis of this estimate.

Taxis: Single-tier Licensing

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment why the one tier taxi licensing system has restrictions on which taxis can use the Belfast taxi ranks, but permits any taxi to use a taxi rank outside Belfast.

(AQW 23540/11-15)

Mr Attwood: Single Tier Licensing will not introduce any new restrictions on the type of taxis which are able to sit at ranks in Belfast. Belfast Public Hire taxis (yellow plate) are the only vehicles which are currently permitted to stand at ranks in Belfast as they are the only vehicles which are tested as wheelchair accessible by the Driver and Vehicle Agency. This situation will not change after 1 September 2013.

There is currently no requirement for taxi vehicles licensed as public hire outside Belfast or private hire to be wheelchair accessible and any vehicle can use ranks outside Belfast. This is in line with the taxi reform programme which is implementing the Taxis Act 2008, which restricts the use of publicly-funded ranks in Belfast to wheelchair accessible vehicles, and will introduce the same restriction outside Belfast in 2016. This was determined to be necessary as part of ensuring a sufficient supply of wheelchair accessible vehicles within the taxi fleet. Work is currently underway to determine the specification for wheelchair accessible vehicles, and this will be subject to public consultation before being finalised.

Taxis: Licence Plates

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment why a single coloured taxi plate, which would indicate that a level competitive framework exists for all taxis, will not be issued under the single tier taxi system.

(AQW 23541/11-15)

Mr Attwood: In September 2014, it is intended that all taxi plates will be attached to the taxi's roof sign. The minimum roof sign specification which will allow for this will be released later this year.

In the transition period prior to this, in order to minimise operator costs associated with the purchasing of new plates, there will be no need for taxis wishing to operate as 'Restricted Public Hire' and currently using a private hire (green) plate or a Public Hire outside Belfast (white) plate to apply to the Driver and Vehicle Agency (DVA) for a change of plate. A new 'Restricted Public Hire' plate will be issued when the current licence plate expires. If a current green or white taxi plate is lost, accidentally defaced or destroyed, DVA will replace it with the same type of plate; only when the current licence and plate expires will a taxi be able to obtain a "Restricted Public Hire" licence and plate.

Private hire green plates will only be issued after 1 September 2013 to those operating contract services, such as limousines, wedding and funeral cars, and chauffeur services. These vehicles will not require a roof sign to obtain a PSV licence. Anyone wishing to remain as private hire and operate as a special occasion/contract vehicle without a roof sign will be able voluntarily to submit their external plates to DVA in exchange for a new private hire internal plate.

In the transition period, yellow plates will continue to be issued to those vehicles tested as wheelchair accessible and therefore able to sit at ranks in Belfast City Centre.

Taxis: Public Hire

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment why the proposals from his department on a single tier taxi system place the word 'restricted' on the majority of taxi plates that will be issued; and what consideration was given to any disadvantage that might ensue to taxi drivers.

(AQW 23542/11-15)

Mr Attwood: Single Tier Licensing will not introduce any new restrictions on non-wheelchair accessible public hire taxis. The only restriction which will apply is the current restriction from standing at ranks in Belfast City Centre. The current wording of "Public Hire Outside Belfast" has been amended to "Restricted Public Hire" reflecting the fact that single tier taxi licensing will now allow all public hire taxis to work in Belfast City Centre.

Dignity at Work: DOE Cases

Mr Spratt asked the Minister of the Environment how many Dignity at Work cases have been lodged in his Department in each of the last five years, broken down by (i) core department; and (ii) non-departmental public body; and how many of these cases have been successfully resolved.

(AQW 23556/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The table below outlines the number of formal Dignity at Work cases lodged in the Department since 2008. There are currently 8 live formal cases, 4 from late 2012 and 4 lodged this year.

Year	Open	Closed
2013	4	1
2012	4	5
2011	0	5
2010	0	6
2009	0	10
2008	0	11

Of the two non-departmental bodies, Northern Ireland Local Government Officers' Superannuation Committee (NILGOSC) and the Local Government Staff Commission (LGSC) only NILGOSC has had two Dignity at Work cases during the period, both of which were resolved.

Planning Application J/2011/0335/F

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of the Environment, in light of the frustration of groups and individuals considering submitting consultation responses to wind farm applications in the West Tyrone, and in particular planning application J/2011/0335/F, who are finding it difficult to access and locate all the necessary information in order to make an informed consultation response, what measures can be taken by applicants and councils to defer any wind farm applications recommended for approval in instances where consultees have not been able to examine all the relevant documentation, so that potential consultation responders can secure reasonable and adequate time to review the relevant application and documentation.

(AQW 23560/11-15)

Mr Attwood: It is fully 20 months since planning application J/2011/0335/F was submitted to the Department for consideration. In that time all of the information submitted in support of the planning application has been available to view on the Department's Planning Portal website. Copies have also been available to view in the Area Planning Office in Omagh and in the Strategic Planning Division in Belfast. This application seeks to amend some of the details of a wind farm previously approved in August 2009.

In total, 50 letters of objection have been received. Some of those objections focus on the quality and quantity of information submitted with the planning application. As I understand the AQ, the issue is not access – but the information that is being accessed.

My officials have determined that sufficient information has been submitted to allow full consideration to be given to the proposal and all of that information has been publicly available. The Department has made available to interested parties the files relating to the original grant of approval for the wind farm dating from August 2009. These files, because of their age, would not have been available to view on the Department's website.

There are established procedures in place whereby a Council, when considering a planning application, may seek to defer the matter if they have particular concerns with the proposal or the recommendation from the Department. At this stage, I have not been advised what further information may be required in the view of those objecting but would welcome hearing.

Wind Turbines: Planning Applications

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of planning applications (i) received; and (ii) approved for (a) 0kW to 50kW; (b) 51kW to 100kW; (c) 101kW to 200kW; and (d) 201kW to 250kW output single wind turbines between 1 May 2010 and 1 May 2013.

(AQW 23593/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The Department welcomes the contribution that renewable projects make to the reduction of carbon emissions and acknowledges the importance of processing these applications in a consistent and timely manner. As Minister I am fully supportive of renewable energy and believe firmly in the contribution that renewables make to the economy.

The information provided in planning applications for wind turbines does not always include the output level of the proposed turbine. It is therefore not possible from the information held on the database to provide validated statistical information in relation to this request.

The table below details the number of Single Wind Turbines applications received, approved and decided since April 2010 until March 2013:

Received	2010/2011	2011/2012	2012/2013
Received	628	665	606
Approved	117	269	495
Refused	28	61	75

Carrier Bag Levy

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment which environmental projects or groups have received funding or grants from the single use plastic bag levy; and, if no awards have been made, when the first award will be made.

(AQW 23596/11-15)

Mr Attwood: Before I allocate funding from the Carrier Bag Levy to specific environmental programmes and projects, I wish to establish a fuller assessment of the likely quantum of revenue for 2013/14. This will be possible after retailers make their first quarterly returns to the Department in July 2013. Once a fuller assessment is established, I will identify those projects to benefit from the receipts generated by the Carrier Bag Levy and award funding accordingly.

I intend to use the net revenue generated from the Carrier Bag Levy to support communities, businesses, voluntary organisations, charities and schools in the delivery of local environmental programmes, particularly those that deliver social and economic benefits.

Taxis: Illegal Operators

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of the Environment how many people have been prosecuted for operating illegal taxis, in the last two years.

(AQW 23648/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The following table sets out the number of taxis inspected by DVA Enforcement Officers during the period 1st April 2011 to 31st March 2013 and details the number of prosecution cases instigated and fixed penalty notices issued to drivers at the roadside. The figures reported are the latest available DOE/DVA Official Statistics

Period	Number of Taxis Inspected	Number of Prosecutions	Number of Fixed Penalty Notices
2011/12	2,177	104	254
2012/13	1,865	88	280
Total	4,042	192	534

The figures that relate to prosecutions and fixed penalty notices are linked to a variety of taxi offences as there is no singular offence code to identify an illegal taxi.

Ulster Way: International Appalachian Trail

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment (i) for his assessment of the proposal for an International Appalachian Trail along the Ulster Way, particularly along the North Coast; (ii) what consultation has taken place with local landowners over the proposal; (iii) what were the results of the consultation; (iv) what impact the Trail would have on the ownership, upkeep and name of the existing Ulster Way; (v) what are the financial implications of the Trail; and (vi) upon whom would these implications impact.

(AQW 23653/11-15)

Mr Attwood: I support the concept of the International Appalachian Trail (IAT) and I convened a meeting earlier this year with the European Vice President of the IAT steering group together with representatives from NITB and from the councils along the proposed route.

Following this meeting officials in the Northern Ireland Environment Agency wrote to each of the relevant councils seeking nominees to sit on a NI IAT Working Group and are awaiting a response. It is clearly important that the councils confirm support for the proposal as each would have a crucial role in ensuring that the standard of the IAT is appropriate to its international status. NIEA officials have advised that they are not aware of any consultation carried out by the councils.

There will be no impact on the ownership or the name of the Ulster Way as the route is simply being double branded where appropriate. District councils are responsible for landowners' agreements and the essential maintenance of the quality sections of the Ulster Way. NIEA, through the Natural Heritage Grant Programme, may provide financial support towards essential works and the development of further off-road sections of approved long distance routes, including the Ulster Way. It is quite possible that the international recognition of the IAT will bring welcome benefits to tourism and promote wellbeing as more people may be encouraged to walk the Ulster Way and the long distance walking routes that make up most of the IAT.

At this early stage it is not envisaged that the development of the IAT would have any financial implications for the councils as there are no signs or trail furniture planned. It would be for each council to decide if it wishes to place any new trail furniture on the route and to bear any resultant cost.

The European IAT steering group is not constituted in such a way that it could apply for funding for projects. It may, should this prove necessary, be possible for a particular council to apply for funding on behalf of this body and NIEA is exploring this option with councils.

Tourism: PPS 16

Mr Swann asked the Minister of the Environment when draft PPS 16 will be adopted.
(AQW 23670/11-15)

Mr Attwood: Draft PPS 16 was published for public consultation in November 2010. The public consultation period ended in March 2011 and the PPS was amended to take account of the public consultation responses.

The final version of PPS 16 was agreed by the Executive on 06/06/2013.

Tourism: Accommodation

Mr Swann asked the Minister of the Environment what evidence is required to identify and detail a positive need for a particular type of tourist accommodation in any area, as required by TOU 3 of the Planning Strategy for Rural Northern Ireland.

(AQW 23671/11-15)

Mr Attwood: Policy TOU 3 of 'A Planning Strategy for Rural Northern Ireland' states that the Department will give favourable consideration to proposals for Hotels, Guesthouses and Self-catering accommodation in existing settlements and in appropriate rural locations. It will be necessary for applicants to identify and detail a positive need for a particular type of tourist accommodation in any area.

In assessing applications for rural tourist accommodation the need for the development is material in the determination of a planning application. A range of information may be requested by the Department in order to demonstrate a need for tourist accommodation. This will be dependent on the nature, scale and location of the development proposal and may include one or a number of the following:-

- Expressions of support from the Northern Ireland Tourist Board and other appropriate bodies such as local community groups or tourism based organisations;
- Expressions of support from local elected representatives;
- a 'Tourism Needs Statement' which would demonstrate that the development would be in the public interest in terms of inward investment and employment opportunity;
- where applicable, confirmation of grant-aid funding in order to facilitate the tourism accommodation;
- a feasibility study for consideration and assessment by the Economics Branch in the Department for Regional Development which provides this service to the Department.

When PPS 16 is published in final form, it will remove this much criticised needs test by replacing it with specific criteria tailored to different forms of tourism development. This will improve the transparency of policy and make it easier for developers to ensure their proposals accord with planning policy.

Tourism: PPS 16

Mr Swann asked the Minister of the Environment to detail any discussions his officials have had with officials from the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (DETI) on information held by DETI that would inform the implementation of TOU 3 of the Planning Strategy for Rural Northern Ireland or draft PPS 16.

(AQW 23672/11-15)

Mr Attwood: My officials have fully engaged with DETI and the Northern Ireland Tourist Board in the preparation and development of PPS 16. Through this engagement, PPS16 will remove the current needs based tests for the assessment of planning applications for tourist accommodation in the countryside currently as set out in Policy T0U3 in 'A Planning Strategy for Rural Northern Ireland'.

Carrier Bag Levy

Ms Lo asked the Minister of the Environment for an estimate of the amount of income that will be received from the plastic bag levy, given the estimates that single use bag usage has dropped by 98 per cent.

(AQW 23682/11-15)

Mr Attwood: As I have stressed previously, the Carrier Bag Levy (which currently applies to single use carrier bags made from plastic, paper and other natural materials) is first and foremost an environmental measure intended to benefit our environment by dramatically reducing the number of single use carrier bags dispensed in Northern Ireland.

I have been very encouraged by the anecdotal evidence and estimates from retailers indicating substantial reductions in the number of single use carrier bags being dispensed. Although many retailers have informally reported significant reductions, including one as high as 98%, validated statistics will not be available until later this year. However, I am confident that the target of an 80% reduction overall is well within our reach.

As I have indicated previously, the amount of revenue generated by the levy will be heavily dependent upon the overall reduction in the number of single use carrier bags dispensed. Based on data from the Welsh carrier bag charge, the latest 2013/14 gross revenue forecast for the Northern Ireland Carrier Bag Levy is £1.7m.

The first Carrier Bag Levy returns from retailers are due in July 2013. Once this information is received and collated, the Department will be able to establish a reliable estimate of the total revenue for 2013/14.

Carrier Bag Levy

Ms Lo asked the Minister of the Environment how he will fund the projects which were due to be funded through the plastic bag levy, given estimates that single use bag usage has dropped by 98 per cent.

(AQW 23683/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The Carrier Bag Levy currently applies to single use carrier bags made from plastic, paper and other natural materials. I intend to use the net revenue generated from the levy to support communities, businesses, voluntary organisations, charities and schools in the delivery of local environmental programmes, particularly those that deliver social and economic benefits. These include:

- The creation of a new River Restoration Fund to allow local communities, angling groups and voluntary environmental organisations to run small projects which will improve local river water quality and ecological status and thereby contribute to implementing the objectives of the EU Water Framework Directive;
- The creation of a new Sustainability Innovation Fund to support community groups, business and others who need financial support to implement initiatives which have the potential for innovation which can generate transformational environmental change;
- Increased grants from the Community Challenge Fund to deliver a range of practical, local environmental projects through a broad range of not-for-profit groups including; voluntary and community groups, schools, charities and environmental trusts;
- Increased grants from the Natural Heritage Fund to encourage the conservation and enhancement of key elements of the environment and its wildlife and provide facilities which help as wide a range of people as possible to enjoy and appreciate our natural heritage; and
- Increased grants available from the Rethink Waste Fund to promote waste prevention, reuse and recycling.

As I have stressed, the Carrier Bag Levy is first and foremost an environmental measure intended to benefit our environment by dramatically reducing the number of single use carrier bags dispensed in Northern Ireland. I have been very encouraged by the anecdotal evidence and estimates from retailers indicating substantial reductions in the number of single use carrier bags being dispensed. Although many retailers have informally reported significant reductions, including one as high as 98%, validated statistics will not be available until later this year. However, I believe that the target of an 80% reduction overall may be within our reach.

Clearly, the amount of revenue generated by the levy will be heavily dependent upon the overall reduction in the number of single use carrier bags dispensed.

The first Carrier Bag Levy returns from retailers are due in July 2013. Once this information is received and collated, the Department will be able to establish a reliable estimate of the total net revenue for 2013/14 and I will be in a better position to assess funding allocations to programmes and projects on the basis of this estimate. Over the last 2 years, the DOE has demonstrated enhanced commitment to funding environmental projects such as the Challenge Fund. I will seek to identify ways to continue to do and enhance the funding streams, through and outside levy monies.

Ulster Way: Landslide at Portnabrock

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment what plans the Northern Ireland Environment Agency, or other arm's-length bodies, have to assist in finding a solution to the blockage caused to the Ulster Way by the land slide at Portnabrock. (AQW 23691/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The path at Portnabrock, also known as Doonninish, is part of the Causeway Coast Way and the Ulster Way. Moyle District Council (MDC) has responsibility for any development and management of the route in this area.

The Natural Heritage Directorate of NIEA is aware of the access issues due to the rock falls at this location and has been working since January 2012 with MDC and Outdoor Recreation NI (ORNI) to identify a long-term solution.

A Strategic Path Review for the Causeway Coast Way was undertaken by ORNI to examine the sustainability of the route and develop recommendations for its future. NIEA provided grant aid of £6,000 (75% of costs) for the Review with match funding from MDC, Coleraine District Council and the National Trust. The Review was completed in November 2012 and one of the priority recommendations contained in the report was to 're-open access at Doonninish – remove rock fall and debris and negotiate a new access agreement for re-routing the path over the headland'.

Since then MDC and ORNI have each made approaches to the landowners to negotiate a new route close to the previous one however these were not successful and instead an alternative route for the path, which while not ideal may be suitable, was agreed. MDC felt that on the grounds of Health and Safety, the route would require an extensive geological inspection.

NIEA recognises the impact of the closure of this section of path and the need to find a sustainable solution. With this in mind, NIEA has recently offered financial support to MDC to enable it to undertake the geological studies and to identify and agree a sustainable long term route for this section of the Causeway Coast Way. Once this has been delivered, MDC should then progress to identify the costs involved in reinstating a route, for which further grant aid may be sought.

Birds: Population Trends

Ms Lo asked the Minister of the Environment, in light of the recent Royal Society for the Protection of Birds State of Nature Study which suggests that the numbers of Northern Ireland's threatened bird species are declining rapidly, what data his Department collects on population trends for birds. (AQW 23722/11-15)

Mr Attwood: Information on bird population trends available to the Northern Ireland Environment Agency covers a wide range of species and originates from several sources. These include regular monitoring programmes and periodic species or habitat-specific surveys. Northern Ireland Environment Agency is a significant supporter of many of these survey programmes. Many of the surveys referred to have their equivalent in the Republic of Ireland allowing a better understanding of changes of bird populations at an all-Ireland level.

Our important wintering waterbird sites and populations are monitored annually through the UK wide Wetland Bird Surveys.

Breeding birds of the wider countryside are surveyed through the Breeding Bird Survey, again part of a UK wide programme.

Northern Ireland participates in the periodic bird atlases programmes covering Great Britain and Ireland which provide important data on distribution changes of both breeding and wintering species. The most recent atlas is scheduled for publication later this year.

Data on rarer breeding species is obtained through targeted surveys as part of the Scarce and Rare Breeding Bird Surveys.

Seabird monitoring is undertaken through national surveys at approximately 15 year intervals but is supplemented with additional surveys, some annually.

While the Department's NIEA undertake some of the above work, much of it is undertaken by a range of organisations many of which are supported by the Department. The contribution from the voluntary sector is of particular importance.

The close working relationship between NIEA and the other groups involved in this work is notable and ensures that a co-ordinated approach is taken to monitoring our bird populations.

Animals: Northern Ireland Priority Species List

Ms Lo asked the Minister of the Environment what protections are afforded to species on the Northern Ireland Priority Species List. (AQW 23723/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The protection afforded to species on the Northern Ireland Priority Species List is varied.

Many Priority Species are directly protected under the Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Order 1985. These priority species include birds, mammals, other vertebrates, some invertebrates and plants. The Wildlife and Natural Environment Act (Northern Ireland) 2011 offered protection to additional species, strengthened the protection from disturbance (from intentional to reckless) and introduced custodial sentences for some offences.

Sites are designated as Areas of Special Scientific Interest (ASSIs) through the Environment (Northern Ireland) Order 2002 to protect many of the rarer species. This site designation process includes management arrangements which afford greater opportunity to protect species

Northern Ireland Priority Species are also protected through a range of Government policies e.g. planning and agricultural policies and guidance. In addition, Government funding is also used to encourage the conservation of priority species such as through NIEA grant-aid and the targeting of agri-environment schemes.

Birds: Threatened Species

Ms Lo asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds State of Nature Report which suggests that many of Northern Ireland's threatened species, including yellowhammers and lapwings, are declining in number; and what steps his Department is taking to arrest this decline.

(AQW 23724/11-15)

Mr Attwood: Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) is aware of the status of the threatened species mentioned in the recently published State of Nature Report.

Yellowhammer and Lapwing are just two of the 481 Northern Ireland priority species which have been identified by the Department as requiring conservation action.

Public bodies now have a duty under the Wildlife and Natural Environment Act to further biodiversity.

The Department has published information on each of the Northern Ireland priority species and will further develop advice on the actions which each species requires to identify and arrest declining populations.

Departmental action for individual species varies and includes helping obtain better information on status, designated site protection and influencing more general habitat management.

In the case of Lapwing and Yellowhammer NIEA will continue to fund required monitoring and research to provide the Department with the information necessary to better understand population changes for these species and the factors affecting their status.

A number of Areas of Special Scientific Interest have been designated as sites for breeding Lapwing such as Maghaberry ASSI where this spring appears to be a record breaking season for this species.

It is recognised that most of the breeding Lapwing and Yellowhammer occur outside designated sites and are heavily influenced by agricultural policies especially. NIEA is currently liaising with Department of Agriculture and Rural Development to ensure that the forthcoming Rural Development Plan, and in particular measures such as agri-environment schemes, are targeted at benefiting threatened priority species such as Yellowhammer and Lapwing.

Wind Farms: AONB/ASSI/SAC Protection

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of the Environment what steps he is taking to protect (i) Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty; (ii) Areas of Special Scientific Interest; and (iii) Special Areas of Conservation, from wind farm development.

(AQW 23726/11-15)

Mr Attwood: Planning Policy Statement (PPS)18 'Renewable Energy' aims to facilitate the siting of renewable energy generating facilities in appropriate locations in the built and natural environment in order to achieve Northern Ireland's renewable energy targets.

The policy does not however rule out renewable energy development (including wind farms) within Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty (AONBs); Areas of Special Scientific Interest (ASSI's) or Special Areas of Conservation (SACs).

It is however a key objective of the policy to ensure that the environmental, landscape, visual and amenity impacts associated with renewable energy development are adequately addressed; and that adequate protection is afforded to the Region's built, natural and cultural heritage features.

The Best Practice Guidance (BPG) that accompanies PPS 18 makes clear that a cautious approach is necessary in relation to those landscapes which are of designated significant value, such as Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty, and their wider settings. The BPG advises that here it may be difficult to accommodate wind turbines without detriment to the Region's cultural and natural heritage assets. The BPG also recognises that some areas are important for a variety of bird species protected under the EU and UK legislation (SPAs, SACs and ASSIs).

The Natural Heritage Directorate (NH) of NIEA provides advice to DOE Planning on wind farm developments which may impact upon the designation features of Areas of Special Scientific Interest or Special Areas of Conservation.

In addition, and where appropriate, NH also provides advice to DOE on wind farm developments which may impact upon Northern Ireland's landscapes, including AONB's. The advice provided by NH assists with the appropriate location, siting, layout and design of wind farm developments in landscape and visual terms.

Finally, where wind farm developments are located in a "sensitive area" including AONBs, ASSIs and SACs, an Environment Impact Assessment will be required if the development is likely to have a significant effect on the environment.

Taximeters: Regulation

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of the Environment to outline his plans for the regulation of taximeters, including the calibration of new or faulty taximeters.

(AQW 23763/11-15)

Mr Attwood: A consultation on proposals for a maximum Taxi Fare and Taximeter requirements within Northern Ireland took place between 21 November 2011 and 17 February 2012. Supporters of the proposals such as IMTAC, Disability Action and the Consumer Council stated that taximeters are essential to ensure public confidence in the regulation of fares.

The enabling Regulations are presently planned to be introduced in September 2014 in order to allow the industry time to prepare for the costs associated with meter and receipt printer purchases. The Regulations are necessary are in order to:

- improve consumer protection by ensuring that customers cannot be overcharged;
- remove the ability to charge a wheelchair user more than a non-wheelchair user; and
- improve the level of service provided to fare paying customers, by requiring receipt printers for all taximeters.

Under the proposed Regulations, all taxis will have to be fitted with a sealed taximeter, calibrated to the maximum taxi tariff. The meter will be tested on a regular basis by companies approved by the Driver and Vehicle Agency (DVA) under a specific scheme introduced for this purpose. Given the importance of providing appropriate customer protection, drivers will not be allowed to taxi until and unless the taximeter is correctly calibrated. The Regulations will make it an offence for a taxi to operate if the taximeter is broken. All broken taximeters will have to be reported to DVA and the vehicle will not be able to be used for hire or reward until the taximeter has been repaired, calibrated, checked and sealed.

Councils: Performance Improvement

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of the Environment, in light of the proposed new role of the Local Government Auditor in the Local Government (Reorganisation) Bill to provide the external assurance that councils have complied with their duties on performance improvement, what baseline assessment will be used.

(AQW 23767/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The baseline for the Local Government Auditor's role will be the statutory duties that will be placed on councils through the Local Government Bill and the associated guidance issued by the Department together with a council's Annual Improvement Plan. This Plan will set out the council's improvement objectives for the incoming year and its assessment of its performance against objectives set for the preceding year.

Wind Farms: Neighbour Notification Criteria

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of the Environment what plans he has to change the neighbour notification criteria for the erection of wind farms, as applies to household extensions, to a model more based on business usage.

(AQW 23769/11-15)

Mr Attwood: Neighbour notification is undertaken by the Department as a matter of good practice and is not required by statute. Its purpose is to advise those who are most likely to be affected by a development proposal. As such it is established procedure to notify only the occupants of buildings that abut a planning application site and are within 90m of that site.

In addition to the scheme, planning applications are also advertised in a paper in circulation in the locality within which the application site is situated. All applications are also available to view on the PlanningNI website.

The Planning Bill, which is currently under the scrutiny of the Environment Committee, is an interim measure intended to give effect to certain reform provisions contained in the Planning Act 2011 which may be commenced by Department prior to the transfer of planning powers to the new district councils. These include new provisions for revised publicity measures to be brought forward by way of future subordinate legislation. Such legislation will itself be subject to public consultation and Assembly scrutiny.

Wind Farms: Slieveard Planning Application

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of the Environment, given the major changes to the Slieveard Wind Farm planning application, whether the developer is required to organise a further series of public information events.

(AQW 23770/11-15)

Mr Attwood: My Department was notified by the developer at the pre-application stage of their intention to submit an application for a development of 9 wind turbines. The planning application subsequently submitted was for 7 turbines. I do not consider this change, a reduction by 2 in the number of turbines proposed, to be a major change in the proposal.

Planning legislation does not yet require an applicant to engage in public consultation prior to the submission of an application for major developments although many developers recognise the benefit of this approach and have voluntarily organised events. I encourage this approach. However, provisions in the forthcoming Planning Bill will ensure enhanced community involvement at pre application stage for certain major development proposals.

Wind Farms: Ulster American Folk Park

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of the Environment what steps he will take to address the situation where three wind farms, within a five mile radius, will be visible from the Ulster American Folk Park.

(AQW 23771/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The planning system exists to regulate the development and use of land in the public interest. The public interest requires that all development is carried out in a way that would not cause harm to interests of acknowledged importance.

Planning applications for wind farm developments, as with all other forms of development, will be determined on their individual planning merits. In determining those applications, my officials will have regard to the relevant policy provisions and all other material considerations.

Clearly the potential cumulative impact arising from a number of wind farm planning applications in the same locality will be a material consideration. The views from the Ulster American Folk Park and if and how they represent a material consideration is a matter for assessment by officials when they come to consider the merits of each proposal.

Planning: Qualified Planning Officers

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment how many qualified planning officers work for the Planning Service in each planning division.

(AQW 23839/11-15)

Mr Attwood: Planning and Local Government Group employs the following number of professional Planning Staff in each of the locations detailed in the attached table.

Location	Number of Professional Planning Staff Employed
South Antrim Area Planning Office, Ballymena	29
Belfast Area Planning Office, Belfast (Bedford House)	44
Planning & Local Government Group Headquarters, Belfast (Millennium House)	67
Northern Area Planning Office, Coleraine	19
Southern Area Planning Office, Craigavon	53
Downpatrick Area Planning Office, Downpatrick	41
Western Area Planning Office, Enniskillen	8
Northern Area Planning Office, Londonderry	25
Western Area Planning Office, Omagh	34
Total	320

Planning: Application Backlog

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what action his Department is taking to reduce the backlog in planning applications and the time taken to process planning applications.

(AQW 23840/11-15)

Mr Attwood: I am fully aware of the need for a speedy planning process to support the economy and I have implemented a number of initiatives to improve performance and reduce the number of applications in the system over 12 months.

I have put in place an Improving Planning Application Processing Times Action Plan to help deliver faster, more predictable planning decisions. The Action Plan is in place for almost one year and has seen improved performance in all categories of applications. This upward trend in performance is reflected in the 2012/13 business year with Q3 statistics indicating that the targets for intermediate and minor categories of development have been exceeded. Management information also indicates that the Programme for Government target for 2013-13 of determining 60% of large scale investment applications and those with job creation potential to be given additional weight has also been exceeded.

A project management approach is used in processing all planning applications, however, additionally, as part of the Action Plan I have asked each of the area offices to actively focusing on the reduction of the number of applications in the system for over 12 months. Management information indicates that there has been a substantial reduction of 38.9% in older applications from April 2012 to April 2013, with just over 1500 applications remaining in the system over 12 months.

As demonstrated above the measures that I have introduced have shown a significant improvement in planning processing times and in reducing the backlog of planning applications in the system. However, I am not satisfied with the length of time it takes to process planning applications and have set increasingly challenging targets for all categories of applications every year up until the transfer of planning functions in April 2015. I will, therefore, continue to monitor performance.

Planning: North Down Applications

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment how many planning applications in the North Down council area have been in the planning system for between (i) 12 months and two years; and (ii) two and three years.

(AQW 23842/11-15)

Mr Attwood: As of 30 April 2013, 10 planning applications in the North Down Council area have been in the planning system for between 12 months and two years. As of the same date, 2 applications have been in the system for between 2 and 3 years.

This figure has been taken from the most recent statistical information available to me.

Organ Donation: Driving Licence Declarations

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of the Environment to on how many applications for driving licences the question regarding organ donation was answered positively, in each year since it was first used on the application.

(AQW 23899/11-15)

Mr Attwood: Although the Driver and Vehicle Agency facilitates those applying for driving licences registering their willingness to donate organs, since this data is not required for the processing of driving licence applications, under data processing rules, no record of this data is retained by the Agency. The details of applicants making a declaration in favour of organ donation is transmitted directly to the NHS Organ Donation and Transplantation Directorate.

Rathlin Island: Gorse Fire

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of the Environment, following the recent gorse fire on Rathlin Island, whether an environmental impact assessment has been carried out, given that the fire occurred at the height of the bird nesting season.

(AQW 23967/11-15)

Mr Attwood: An official from the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) will in June visit Rathlin Island to undertake an environmental assessment of the fire that recently occurred there, part of which took place within the Rathlin Island Coast Area of Special Scientific Interest (ASSI). The impact and severity of the fire on the ASSI and its declaration features, which include maritime cliff and slopes and nesting seabirds and raptors, will be assessed at that time. I saw the area affected myself when visiting the island for the recent Maritime Festival.

In a wider context NIEA is supporting a variety of initiatives to address the wildfire issue. In relation to the impact of wildfires on natural heritage interests NIEA is funding, through the Natural Heritage Research Partnership, a project entitled 'Quantifying the extent and impact of wildfires'. This research project will include consideration of impacts of wildfires on plants, invertebrates and birds and is due for completion by the end of 2015.

Gas Exploration and Extraction

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the Environmental Protection Agency/Department of Communications, Energy and Natural Resources/Northern Ireland Environment Agency study into the long term impacts of unconventional gas exploration and extraction.

(AQO 4222/11-15)

Mr Attwood: My Department is co-funding this research programme and officials from the Northern Ireland Environment Agency form part of the Steering Committee that is tasked with developing the terms of reference and for managing the outputs from the programme.

The steering committee developed a proposed Terms of Reference (ToR) for an extensive and comprehensive programme of research. The ToR was the subject of a public consultation exercise in both the North and South of Ireland. The consultation period ended on the 8 March 2013 and approximately 1400 consultation responses were received.

The steering committee is now in the process of completing a review of all the submissions received and is now assessing them against the draft ToR, with a view to making the appropriate changes to the final document where appropriate.

Once this process is complete the steering committee will make available details of all valid submissions and where possible indicate how submissions have influenced the final document.

Once the ToR has been finalised it will form the basis of a tender document inviting suitably qualified companies and academic institutions to bid for individual projects or a number of projects within the scope of the research programme.

The steering committee met on 29 May 2013. A final copy of the ToR will be placed on the NIEA website in due course and all consultees will be informed of the next steps in the process through a reply to their submissions.

Wind Farms: AONB Consideration

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of the Environment what consideration his Department gives to the protection of an Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty when considering a planning application for a wind farm in that area.

(AQO 4223/11-15)

Mr Attwood: Policy RE1 of Planning Policy Statement (PPS) 18 'Renewable Energy' does not distinguish between areas designated for their significant landscape value, such as Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty (AONBs), and other undesignated landscapes.

Nonetheless, the policy requires that all renewable energy development, regardless of whether it is proposed in a designated area or not, should not result in an unacceptable adverse impact on visual amenity or landscape character of that area.

To assist the Department in the consideration of wind energy applications, PPS 18 is accompanied by Best Practice Guidance (BPG) and Supplementary Planning Guidance (SPG) 'Wind energy Development in Northern Ireland's Landscapes'. The SPG provides broad, strategic guidance in relation to the visual and landscape impacts of wind energy development for 130 Landscape Character Areas (LCAs) across Northern Ireland.

Within each LCA the key landscape and visual characteristics are identified. In relation to the scenic quality of an area, the LCA will identify whether any part is subject to designation as an AONB. An assessment is also made as to the overall sensitivity of the landscape to wind energy development. The SPG advice is taken into account by the Department as strategic guidance in processing planning applications for wind energy development across the whole of Northern Ireland.

Planning Application Q/2011/0220/0

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on planning application Q/2011/0220/0.
(AQO 4224/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The planning application for a two storey dwelling and garage at 58 Moyallen Road Portadown is currently under consideration and an opinion will be presented to Banbridge District Council prior to a decision issuing.

Carrickfergus: Heritage Plan

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of the Environment whether he will initiate a heritage plan for Carrickfergus.
(AQO 4225/11-15)

Mr Attwood: I consider that the local council is well placed to initiate a heritage plan, particularly as we move closer to enhanced powers being provided to Councils in less than 2 years time, under the Review of Public Administration.

The Department would be a keen partner in a heritage/Conservation Plan, and would provide input in relation to the historic assets within its control, ie Carrickfergus Castle and the Gasworks. The Department would also provide advice and input in relation to other historic monuments, listed buildings and the Conservation Area within Carrickfergus, should the Council take forward such a plan. Much of this could fit within the context of the Innovation Trial at the Castle which NIEA is currently seeking to advance with Carrickfergus Borough Council.

Houses in Multiple Occupation: Laganbank, South Belfast

Mr Maskey asked the Minister of the Environment how many streets have exceeded the Houses in Multiple Occupation cap in the Laganbank District Electoral Area, South Belfast.
(AQO 4226/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The Houses in Multiple Occupation (HMOs) Subject Plan for Belfast City Council Area 2015 was published by my Department in December 2008.

The Plan identifies 22 areas in Belfast City Council area where HMOs are concentrated. These areas are designated as HMO Policy Areas. Of these 22, there are 20 in which the number of HMOs exceeds 30% of all the dwelling units. These are detailed in Appendix 3 of the Subject Plan.

Laganbank Electoral Area contains 670 streets. Of these 670 streets, 130 streets fall within the HMO Policy Areas in which the 30% occupancy rates have been exceeded.

No further HMO development will be permitted within those HMO Policy Areas until such times as the proportion of HMOs falls below 30% of all dwelling units in a Policy Area.

In relation to the remaining 540 streets where the 10% policy cap applies, my Department is carrying out further analysis when available, I shall advise of its conclusions.

Carrier Bag Levy

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the impact of the single use carrier bag levy.
(AQO 4227/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The Department will receive the first online returns from retailers in July; this will provide the first formal indication of the reduction in carrier bag consumption.

However current indications point to a sharp drop in demand for single use carrier bags. Some retailers have already reported reductions in bag consumption of between 75% and 98%. This suggests that the target of at least an 80% reduction in carrier bag consumption is well within our reach.

The Department's customer relations' managers have visited a large number of retail premises, both before and after the commencement of charging on 8 April. Feedback suggests that retailers are broadly positive about the introduction of the levy, and that customer acceptance is high.

Departmental staff will continue to work with the retailers to ensure that compliance is achieved. I firmly believe that the levy has been widely embraced because citizens and businesses want to make positive contributions to addressing the issue of waste.

Councils: Appointment of Senior Officers

Ms Ruane asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the process he will use to appoint senior officers to the new councils under the review of public administration.

(AQO 4228/11-15)

Mr Attwood: Discussions regarding the underlying principles and timings for competitions for senior staff are being taken forward within the implementation structures which I have established for local government reform.

In relation to the new Chief Executive positions, I believe that these posts will be critical to the success of the new councils. The new councils will be larger geographically, will have additional functions and responsibilities and therefore greater accountability. There is a need for clear leadership in the local government reform process, both in the run up to 2015 and in the years beyond, not only at a political level but also operationally. Clearly much will be asked of those appointed, and they will need to have the experience, leadership qualities and skills required to transform local government.

I believe that these posts would best be filled through full and open competition, clearly I am carefully considering the issues and legal advice before soon making a final determination.

Department of Finance and Personnel

Civil Service: Salaries

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many (i) civil servants; and (ii) employees of departmental arm's-length bodies or quangos are paid through a limited company or a method other than PAYE.

(AQW 22987/11-15)

Mr Wilson (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): Ten of the thirteen NICS departments have confirmed that there are no civil servants or employees of arm's-length bodies (ALBs) or quangos paid through limited companies or a method other than PAYE.

The Department of Justice has responded that there are currently no such arrangements in respect of civil servants in DOJ, its Agencies or ALBs but that one employee of an ALB is paid through a limited company.

The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety has advised that no civil servants employed by DHSSPS are paid through private companies and that the NI Fire and Rescue Service does not have staff that are paid salaries through private companies. Staff employed in Health and Social Care on a temporary basis, through agencies, are the only staff who would be paid by private companies. The Health and Social Care Trusts do not have the information requested readily available and this could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost.

There are no civil servants in the Department for Employment and Learning whose salaries are paid through a limited company or a method other than PAYE. DEL is responsible for the Further Education sector in Northern Ireland and there is one member of staff in that sector who is currently paid outside PAYE.

Wind Turbines: Jobs Created

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many new local jobs have been created through the development of wind turbines, in the last three years.

(AQW 23774/11-15)

Mr Wilson: The UK Standard Industrial Classification (SIC) 2007 used in surveys that provide estimates of employee jobs classifies businesses by the type of economic activity in which they are engaged. Development of wind turbines is grouped with similar businesses in the Production of Electricity Industry classification and therefore it is not possible to determine how many employee jobs there are in this specific aspect of the industry.

Jobs: North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many private sector jobs have been created in the North Down constituency in each of the last four years.

(AQW 23781/11-15)

Mr Wilson: It is not possible to provide information on the total number of private sector jobs created in North Down as requested. Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency collects information on the number of jobs at a particular point in time and therefore can only provide the net change between two points in time.

The table overleaf provides the most recent information available on the net change in all private sector employee jobs in the Parliamentary Constituency of North Down as measured by the biennial Census of Employment. The net decrease takes into account both job gains and losses during the period. Estimates for 2012 will be available in September 2013.

Year	Number of Private Sector Employee Jobs	Employee Job Net Change

Procurement: Legal Challenges

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (i) the number of procurements or contracts that were held up by legal challenges, in each of the last three years; (ii) the value of those procurements or contracts; and (iii) where applicable, the number of jobs affected.

(AQW 23871/11-15)

Mr Wilson: The information provided in response to (i) and (ii) relates to construction works, supplies and services procurements carried out by the Central Procurement Directorate (CPD) on behalf of Departments.

CPD does not hold information in relation to the number of jobs affected.

Financial Year	Number of procurements/contracts	Value of procurements/contracts (£ million)
2010 - 2011	3	4.6
2011 - 2012	6	187.1
2012 - 2013	1	3.0

Social Media

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline the legislation that seeks to protect people's reputations on social media and for his assessment of how successfully it is being enforced.

(AQW 23931/11-15)

Mr Wilson: Much of the law on defamation is judge-made. However, the Defamation Act (Northern Ireland) 1955 and the Defamation Act 1996 deal with a number of issues, including offers to make amends, limitation periods, the summary disposal of claims and certain defences.

On the libel side the focus previously was on the written or printed word. However, as recent cases have shown, the current law can be successfully applied to more modern forms of communication, including the internet and Twitter and, accordingly, I believe it offers suitable protections.

With the abolition of criminal defamation, defamation is now solely a civil matter and the issue of enforcement does not, therefore, arise. Rather it is for the individual citizen to initiate proceedings in his or her own name.

Civil Service: Staff 2007-2013

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of civil servants in each year since 2007, broken down by grade.

(AQW 23988/11-15)

Mr Wilson: The information requested is set out in the attached tables. Figures provided are permanent headcount as at 1 January each year, except 2009, which is at 1 April, and include analogous grades. While Department of Justice was set up on 12 April 2010, information on the number of uniformed Prison Officers is only available from 2012.

Warm Homes Scheme: Roof Insulation

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, given the change in recent years of the minimum depth of roofspace insulation under various Warm Homes schemes, whether consideration is being given to a review of the current requirement.

(AQW 24059/11-15)

Mr Wilson: The Building Regulations set minimum standards to be met when undertaking relevant work.

Thermal standards are contained in Part F (Conservation of fuel and power) of the Building Regulations. As part of an overhaul of all the regulations, Part F was reviewed during 2011 and uplifts in standards were reflected in the new Building Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2012.

The legislation and accompanying guidance documentation are available on the DFP website at <http://www.dfpni.gov.uk/index/buildings-energy-efficiency-buildings/building-regulations.htm>

A further review of Part F is planned during 2014 and will take into account the outcomes of research and consultation currently under way in England.

The application of a specific standard to roofspace insulation under Warm Homes schemes is a matter for the Department of Social Development to address.

Public Sector: Prompt Payment

Ms McGahan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what he is doing to improve prompt payment by the public sector.
(AQO 4253/11-15)

Mr Wilson: My Department is responsible for issuing guidance and seeking assurance that guidance issued is being implemented. In regards to prompt payment, guidance was issued in 2008 and reissued in 2010 to reinforce the importance of prompt payment. My department also issued further guidance in March 2013, to draw attention to the new legislation on prompt payment and asked that all appropriate steps are taken to approve and release invoices for payment without unnecessary delay. I also wrote to Ministerial colleagues asking them to ensure that appropriate steps were being taken in their departments, agencies and arms-length bodies to action the guidance issued.

Departments, Agencies and NDPBs are now required to provide information in their accounts to disclose their performance both in terms of paying invoices within 30 days and 10 days.

I have also been focusing on late payments to subcontractors in the construction industry, who are badly impacted by poor payment practices. On 8 October 2012, I stated that 'where a contractor fails to deliver on a government contract, whether it relates to meeting the specification or to the treatment of the supply chain, they will be prevented from tendering for future government contracts'. In addition, from January 2013 we have introduced Project Bank Accounts for government construction contracts with an estimated value of £1million where there is a significant subcontracting element.

Special Advisers: Tax/National Insurance

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether tax and national insurance contributions are deducted at source for all Special Advisers, who are paid from public funds, based on their salary level.

(AQO 4257/11-15)

Mr Wilson: I can confirm that tax and National Insurance contributions are deducted at source for all Special Advisers, who are paid from public funds, based on their salary level.

Banks: Lending

Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for an update on his engagement with Her Majesty's Treasury on bank lending.

(AQO 4258/11-15)

Mr Wilson: I most recently met with the Economic Secretary to the Treasury on 4th June along with the Enterprise Minister and the Secretary of State to discuss the problems facing our bank sector and where I pressed him for action on a number of important issues.

These included the ineffectiveness of national banking initiatives in Northern Ireland, my concerns about the Ulster Bank and in particular that the scale of its impairments are constraining its ability to serve the needs of its customers and our economy, regional lending data, and about HMT's liaison with the Irish Government on banking matters.

The Economic Secretary indicated that the Treasury would respond on our Ulster Bank concerns following the publication of the Parliamentary Commission on Banking Standards report, that they would continue to examine the performance of national initiatives locally, and would appreciate our views on this. He will also support our efforts to obtain better regional lending data from the banks.

We agreed to meet regularly to discuss these issues.

Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Patient Care Service: Transport

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) how much was spent by the Patient Care Service on the provision of the Non-Emergency Ambulance Service in the last financial year; (ii) how much of this was spent transporting people to hospital appointments; and (iii) how many clients were transported during this period.

(AQW 23454/11-15)

Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety):

- (i) The total cost of non-emergency Patient Care Service Transport in 2012/13 was £8.8m.
- (ii) This total amount was spent in the transportation of patients to hospital appointments.
- (iii) In 2012/13, 200,205 patient journeys took place from a non-emergency perspective bringing patients to and from Hospitals or other Health and Social Care environments

Causeway Hospital: Options Appraisal

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether the detailed options appraisal on the Causeway Hospital has begun; and if so, who is carrying out the appraisal and when it began.

(AQW 23514/11-15)

Mr Poots: The options appraisal for the future management arrangements for the Causeway Hospital is being taken forward by my Department with inputs from the Health and Social Care Board, the Northern Health and Social Care Trust, the Western Health and Social Care Trust and others, as required. The work is commencing now and will take into the account the forthcoming report from the Turnaround and Support Team as appropriate.

Infertility Counselling Services

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the rationale for infertility counselling services not being provided at any locations outside Greater Belfast.

(AQW 23549/11-15)

Mr Poots: The decision on where services are most appropriately delivered to meet the needs of any population is taken by the Health and Social Care Board in its role as Commissioner of health services. Currently infertility counselling, which is provided by the Fertility Counselling Service (NI), is an integral part of fertility treatment, which is only provided at the Regional Fertility Centre in the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust; as such, counselling is provided at a Belfast location.

Dignity at Work: DHSSPS Cases

Mr Spratt asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many Dignity at Work cases have been lodged in his Department in each of the last five years, broken down by (i) core department; and (ii) non-departmental public body; and how many of these cases have been successfully resolved.

(AQW 23559/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Northern Ireland Civil Service Dignity at Work policy sets out the procedures for dealing with internal complaints of bullying, harassment, discrimination and victimisation. Table A below details formal complaints lodged, and investigated, under these provisions within this Department and the subsequent outcome.

Table B details any complaints of this nature made under the respective policies in the Department's Arms Length Bodies. Please assume a nil return for any such bodies not listed.

Care Homes: Occupancy

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 22622/11-15, what are the admission figures for each home when respite care and intermediate bed admissions are excluded; and what is the current occupancy by permanent residents in each home.

(AQW 23585/11-15)

Mr Poots: The information requested is not held centrally therefore it was requested from each of the five Health and Social Care (HSC) Trusts. The responses are provided in Table 1 below.

Care Homes: Closure

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 22618/11-15, to publish the precise information he received on 24 April 2013 on the Northern Health and Social Care Trust's "detailed proposals" for the closure of residential homes.

(AQW 23586/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Department received an email from the NHSCT on 24 April 2013 which included a business case for their proposal, an EQIA, a briefing paper, their consultation document and the response pro forma, that would come before its Board on Thursday 25th April. I am content to place a copy in the Assembly library.

As I have previously advised the member, it was not clear to me, or to the Department, at the point of receiving the proposals from the Northern HSC Trust on 24 April 2013 that most mainstream elderly statutory homes were likely to be under consultation for closure. This was only apparent as other Trusts shared proposals in the days immediately following, which built up the wider picture.

On 3rd May 2013, I called a halt to the Trust consultation proposal process. I have asked the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) to lead on a new, regionalised process of consultation, which will place at its core the principle of sensitivity to the needs and wishes of older people.

Care Homes: Closure

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 22618/11-15, why he did not intervene to prevent the proposal to close all residential homes in the Northern Health and Social Care trust area once he obtained the Trust's "detailed proposals" on 24 April 2013.

(AQW 23587/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Department received an email from the NHSCT on 24 April 2013 which included a business case for their proposal, an EQIA, a briefing paper, their consultation document and the response pro forma, that would come before its Board on Thursday 25th April. Paediatric Congenital Cardiac Surgery

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 22720/11-15, to detail the cost for each procedure listed in Annex A.

(AQW 23629/11-15)

Mr Poots: The paediatric cardiac surgery procedures referred to in AQW 22720/11-15 were undertaken in 2012/2013 and final costs are not yet available.

Lifeline 24/7 Crisis Response Helpline

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of calls received by the Lifeline 24/7 crisis response helpline, in each month of the last three years.

(AQW 23632/11-15)

Mr Poots: The table below shows the total number of calls received by the Lifeline 24/7 crisis response helpline, in each month of the last three financial years. This is a combined total (broken down by month) of Lifeline calls answered plus Lifeline calls missed. Taken together, these are classified as 'Lifeline Call Demand'.

	Apr	May	June	July	Aug	Sep	Oct	Nov	Dec	Jan	Feb	Mar	Total

Biologic Therapies: Waiting Times

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when the waiting times for biologic drugs will be brought into line with the rest of the UK where patients, in line with the National Institute for Health and Care Excellence guidelines, receive these treatments immediately.

(AQW 23642/11-15)

Mr Poots: In England and Wales NHS bodies are expected to have implemented NICE guidance within three months.

The Commissioning Plan Direction has set a target for 2013/14 in respect of biologic therapies that no patient should wait longer than 3 months to commence NICE approved therapies for rheumatoid arthritis, psoriatic arthritis and ankylosing spondylitis; and, no patient should wait longer than 9 months to commence NICE approved specialist treatments for psoriasis, reducing to 3 months by September 2013.

Northern Trust: Chief Executive

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 22617 11/15, who made the appointment to the post; and what involvement he had in the appointment.

(AQW 23665/11-15)

Mr Poots: There had been discussions between my Department, the HSCB and the PHA for some time about the need to devote resources to enhance the strategic leadership in e-Health and external collaboration.

Given that Mr Donaghy had agreed to step aside as Chief Executive of the Northern HSC Trust, this new post offered suitable alternative employment to which he could move. His appointment to this post was agreed with the HSCB and while I was not involved in the appointment, I was aware that it was being made.

Dementia Strategy

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether it is Departmental policy that people who are diagnosed with Alzheimers or Dementia are routinely referred to a Social Worker after diagnosis.

(AQW 23684/11-15)

Mr Poots: As you will be aware I published a Dementia Strategy for Northern Ireland in November 2011. One of the key themes identified within the strategy is Promoting Early Assessment and Diagnosis.

The immediate needs of people who have recently received a diagnosis will vary considerably, depending on the stage of their dementia and other individual needs. People may require care and support from a wide range of health and social care services. Their carers may also require support. A multi-disciplinary approach is therefore required in assessing need (including carer's needs), drawing up and reviewing a care plan and appointing a key worker.

For those in the early stages, initial requirements may be solely for information and advice, with a contact point should they wish to ask further questions later or to seek help as their condition deteriorates.

Under the Quality and Outcomes Framework (QOF), GPs are encouraged to maintain a register of people in their practice who are diagnosed as having dementia. QOF also provides for 15 monthly reviews of people on the dementia registers to ensure their needs are being appropriately met.

Tobacco: Packaging

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the proposals to introduce standardised packaging of tobacco products.

(AQW 23700/11-15)

Mr Poots: I am supportive of any effective measures which would help to reduce the influence of tobacco advertising on children and young people, and which would help prevent them from smoking.

In view of this, I agreed to Northern Ireland being included in the UK wide consultation exercise on standardised packaging for tobacco products which was led by the Department of Health (London). The consultation summary report has not yet been cleared by Department of Health Ministers and an indication of the direction which England proposes to take on standardised packaging has yet to be announced. It is my view that any move towards the introduction of standardised tobacco packaging would best be taken on a UK wide basis. I have, therefore, written to the Secretary of State for Health in England to encourage him to come to an early decision on this matter.

Resuscitation Strategy

Mr B McCreagh asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether the proposed new Resuscitation Strategy will include training for resuscitation following anaphylaxis.
(AQW 23731/11-15)

Mr Poots: The primary focus of the resuscitation strategy is on cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR). While CPR may be necessary for helping someone with severe anaphylaxis until medical help is available other forms of treatment may be more appropriate.

Gender Identity Clinic: Staff Complement

Mr McDevitt asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of (i) full time staff; and (ii) vacancies, within the Gender Identity clinic; and how long the clinic has been operating without a full complement of staff.
(AQW 23732/11-15)

Mr Poots:

- i) Staff in post (as at 4th June) at the Gender Identity Clinic in the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust are shown in the table below.

Grade	Headcount	WTE	Weekly clinic hours
Consultant Psychiatrist	1	0.5	19 hours
Band 7 Nurse	2	2.0	36.5 hours each

Source: Belfast HSC Trust

- ii) The Belfast HSC Trust is currently advertising for a locum Consultant Psychiatrist in Psychosexual Gender Identity Medicine. In addition they will be internally transferring an additional experienced Band 7 nurse to the service as of 10th June.
- iii) The Belfast HSC Trust has advised that the two Band 7 Nurse Practitioners may also provide services for individuals with complex psychosexual needs as well as Gender Identity Services.

Gender Identity Clinic: Waiting Times

Mr McDevitt asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the current waiting time for new patient assessment and treatment at the Gender Identity clinic.
(AQW 23733/11-15)

Mr Poots: New patient assessment and treatment at a Gender Identity clinic is only carried out in Belfast HSC Trust.

Belfast HSC Trust has advised that, as of week commencing 3rd June 2013, there are currently 14 individuals awaiting treatment at the Gender Identity clinic and the current waiting time to receive treatment is 6-8 months.

On the 10th June 2013, a new Practitioner will commence assessments which should address this issue.

Gender Identity Clinic: Waiting Times

Mr McDevitt asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action is being taken to ensure that transgender people have timely access to support and treatment during their transition.
(AQW 23734/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Health and Social Care Board has now provided additional investment to enable the further development of Regional Psychosexual and Gender Identity Service provided by Belfast Trust. Whilst acknowledging it will take some time to fill new posts, the Trust is now accepting new referrals and on the 10th June a new Practitioner will commence assessments. The Health and Social Care Board and the Belfast Trust accepts that until all new posts are filled, patients may have to wait longer than the current access standard of 13 weeks, however, waiting times for this service should substantially improve by the end of this year.

Dental Services: Commitment Payments

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what reforms have been considered that would retain the commitment payment for dentists providing Health Service dental care.

(AQW 23742/11-15)

Mr Poots: In order to address the pressures on the General Dental Services budget, my Department consulted upon a number of proposed changes to the provision of General Dental Services, including the cessation of commitment payments. A number of the responses included alternative suggestions for addressing the budget pressures and potentially retaining the commitment payment.

All responses to the consultation have been considered carefully. I will shortly be in a position to decide which changes will be taken forward. A summary of the consultation responses will be published alongside the final details of which changes will be introduced.

Dental Services: Commitment Payments

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the rationale for removing commitment payments to dentists providing Health Service dental care, given that they have opened up access and ensured a high level of dental patient registration.

(AQW 23743/11-15)

Mr Poots: In order to address the pressures on the General Dental Services budget, my Department developed a number of proposals to change the treatments available to patients and allowances paid to dentists. As commitment to the Health Service and access to dentistry have significantly improved over the past 3 years, my Department re-examined the requirement for continuing to pay out commitment payments. As the conditions which led to the introduction of the allowance are no longer extant, it has been proposed that this allowance would no longer be paid from April 2013.

When considering these proposals, my Department was conscious of the importance of the Practice Allowance in supporting the ongoing running costs of Health Service dental practices. In order to protect the Practice Allowance for the most committed Health Service practices the focus for savings proposals was therefore on the commitment payment.

Dental Services: Commitment Payments

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what mechanisms are being put in place to reward dentists who register Health Service patients following the removal of the commitment payment.

(AQW 23744/11-15)

Mr Poots: Dentists who register children or adults as Health Service patients receive monthly capitation and continuing care payments. These payments are increased by up to 50% if the patient lives in an electoral ward that is recognised as having a higher incidence of dental need. Practices who demonstrate their commitment to the Health Service, through registration levels, are eligible to apply for the practice allowance which is an award of up to 11% of the gross Health Service turnover for the practice. The annual practice allowance budget is around £8m. In addition, dentists receive fees for all Health Service treatments provided to their registered patients.

Dental Services: Operating Costs

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority requirements have increased the average operating costs for dentists, in each of the last ten years.

(AQW 23745/11-15)

Mr Poots: The requirement for dental practices providing private dental treatment in Northern Ireland to register with the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority was introduced in April 2011. There would have been no costs to dentists prior to this. The cost of initial registration is £952 per practice and the charge in subsequent years is £46 per dental chair.

The Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority inspections are primarily concerned with the provision of private dental care and treatment and the Department does not hold information on the costs associated with the provision of private dental services.

Biologic Therapies: Waiting Times

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he has had any contact with the Health and Social Care Board to ensure that Commissioning Plans include a target to reduce the waiting times for Biologic drugs to zero.

(AQW 23762/11-15)

Mr Poots: I am committed to using health service resources effectively and providing the best possible access to specialist medicines that we can within the funding available.

The current Commissioning Plan Direction therefore sets the focus for the Health and Social Care Board and the Public Health Agency in the commissioning of health and social care services during the year 1st April 2013 to 31st March 2014. The Commissioning Plan Direction has set a target for 2013/14 in respect of biologic therapies that no patient should wait longer than 3 months to commence National Institute for Health and Care Excellence (NICE) approved therapies for rheumatoid arthritis, psoriatic arthritis and ankylosing spondylitis; and no patient should wait longer than 9 months to commence NICE approved specialist treatments for psoriasis, reducing to 3 months by September 2013.

Abortion: DHSSPS Guidance

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the extensive work programme undertaken to produce the draft guidance on The Limited Circumstances For A Lawful Termination Of Pregnancy In Northern Ireland; and who was involved in this programme.

(AQW 23793/11-15)

Mr Poots: My Department's Termination of Pregnancy Working Group has undertaken a significant body of work to produce guidance for health professionals in line with the law in Northern Ireland. The group consists of medical, nursing, legal and policy expertise.

The guidance document currently issued for consultation is the result of the careful consideration of medical, nursing and legal views, as well as those of other interested groups, emerging from the various consultations that the Department has run stretching back to the Court of Appeal order in October 2004. The Court of Appeal Order instructed that the Department should inquire into the adequacy of termination of pregnancy services in Northern Ireland (including aftercare) and following appropriate inquiry and consultation, issue guidance if it was required.

Following the Order, a Departmental Group commissioned a workshop and survey to gather the views of health professionals in the field. The Group determined that there was a need for guidance, and a draft was prepared and consulted upon in 2007. This work included a series of bilateral meetings with a range of stakeholder groups. The Northern Ireland Assembly debated the guidance and passed a resolution that opposed its introduction on 22 October 2007. The then Minister asked the Chief Medical Officer to convene a Termination of Pregnancy Working Group to consider the views raised. Following a number of meetings the working group produced revised guidance which it released for public consultation in July 2008.

Following reflection on the views raised in the consultation, revised draft guidance was produced and provided to the Health Committee on 17 October 2008 for an evidence session with Departmental officials. Clearance to issue the guidance was received from the Northern Ireland Executive on 5 March 2009 and the guidance was published on 13 March 2009.

The March 2009 document was challenged in court by the Society for the Protection of the Unborn Child (SPUC) and in November 2009 Lord Justice Girvan gave his judgement to the Judicial Review. He found in favour of the Department in five of the seven grounds and that two parts "failed to give fully clear and accurate guidance". However, he held that the statement of the law on termination of pregnancy contained in the guidance was correct. He ordered the Department to reconsider the sections in the document on counselling and conscientious objection. While these sections were being redrafted, interim guidance was issued. The interim guidance was threatened by further legal challenge by SPUC.

The Department withdrew the interim guidance and published a revised version of draft guidance on 27 July 2010. Consideration was given to consultation responses received. The Department provided draft guidance and a summary of consultation responses to the Health Committee in February 2011. The guidance was submitted to the Executive for approval, but not considered before the Assembly was dissolved in March 2011.

Since my appointment as Health Minister, I have given careful consideration to the development and publication of guidance that satisfies the requirements of the law and provides advice to health professionals. I have discussed the matter with officials to ensure the current draft is robust, and have sought clarification and assurance on a number of issues. I am content that the current draft guidance, The Limited Circumstances for a Lawful Termination of Pregnancy in Northern Ireland, meets the requirements emerging from the 2004 Court of Appeal order.

The current document is out for public consultation until 29 July and will receive further consideration in light of responses received during the consultation process. It will then be provided to the Executive for their approval.

Abortion: DHSSPS Consultation

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to identify the range of stakeholder groups that were engaged in the formal consultation exercises and informal discussions to produce the draft guidance on The Limited Circumstances For A Lawful Termination Of Pregnancy In Northern Ireland.

(AQW 23794/11-15)

Mr Poots: Development of the draft guidance document began following the Court of Appeal Order in 2004. Since then, the Department has held a number of public consultation exercises on various versions of the guidance.

Responses to previous consultation have been received from a range of stakeholders including Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecology, Royal College of Nursing, Royal College of Midwives, Royal College of General Practitioners, Royal College of Psychiatrists, British Medical Association, Health and Social Care Boards and Trusts, the Public Health Agency as well as individual Doctors. Responses have also been received from a range of groups including Evangelical Alliance Northern Ireland, Family Planning Association, Society for Protection of Unborn Children, Precious Life, Life NI, Doctors for Life, Northern Catholic Bishops, Women's Resource and Development Agency, Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission and Alliance for Choice. This list is not exhaustive.

Meetings that have taken place include discussions with doctors from a range of specialties, a workshop to assess health professionals views and meetings with stakeholder groups. The Department met with the Royal College of Psychiatrists to discuss elements of the current draft to ensure those elements are fit for purpose.

Views expressed by the above organisations and groups were considered during the development of the current draft which is out for public consultation until 29 July. The Department has encouraged stakeholder groups to make their views known.

Care Homes: Slievemore Unit, Derry

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the next steps on the future of the Slievemore Unit, Derry.
(AQW 23796/11-15)

Mr Poots: Slievemore Unit did not close on 31 May 2013. Discussions have been ongoing between the Department, RQIA and Trust officials in an attempt to explore all avenues possible in order to find a resolution which will allow matters to move forward. I also met with Elaine Way, CEO WHSCT, on Monday 3 June to discuss this matter. I emphasised that the safety and care for the six remaining residents continues to be my first concern. .

I have recently written to the Commissioner for Older People in Northern Ireland to ask her to mediate between organisations and families with the aim of giving all parties sufficient opportunity for meaningful engagement.

GP Appointments: Cost

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is the average cost to the Health Service of an appointment with a GP.
(AQW 23817/11-15)

Mr Poots: The average cost of an appointment with a GP was £28 in 2011/12 which is the latest year available.

Accident and Emergency Attendance: Cost

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the average cost of attendance at an (i) Accident and Emergency Department; and (ii) an Accident and Emergency Department, broken down by the different categories used for recording attendance.
(AQW 23818/11-15)

Mr Poots:

- (i) The average cost of attendance at an Accident & Emergency Department in 2011/12 (latest information available) was £126.
- (ii) The cost of attendance at an A&E Department broken down by the different categories used for recording attendance are not collected centrally and can therefore only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Out-patient Appointments: Cost

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the average cost of an out-patient appointment with a Consultant; and (ii) the average cost of an out-patient attendance with a Consultant, broken down by medical speciality.
(AQW 23819/11-15)

Mr Poots:

- (i) The average cost of an Outpatient attendance is estimated to be £160.
- (ii) The average cost of an Outpatient attendance with a Consultant, broken down by medical speciality is set out in the table below;

Specialty	Total Costs Per Attendance £
100 General Surgery	162

Negligence Cases: Compensation Payments

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much his Department has paid out (i) in medical negligence cases to plaintiffs; (ii) in legal fees related to negligence cases; (iii) to the lawyers retained by his Department; and (iv) to the legal teams used by plaintiffs suing his Department, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 23832/11-15)

Mr Poots: The information requested is set out in the table below.

	2012/13 £m	2011/12 £m	2010/11 £m
Compensation paid	19	18	23
Plaintiff costs	5	7	4
Defence costs (excl *DLS)	3	2	3
Directorate of Legal Services costs	1	1	1
Total	28	29	32

* DLS – Directorate of Legal Services

Care Homes: Closure

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he proposes to take any further action against the Health and Social Care Trusts which have breached his Department's policy on the closure of elderly care homes.

(AQW 23835/11-15)

Mr Poots: Proposals – and not decisions - were brought forward by individual HSC Trusts. On 3rd May 2013, I called a halt to the Trust consultation proposal process. I have asked the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) to lead on a new, regionalised process of consultation, which will place at its core the principle of sensitivity to the needs and wishes of older people.

My concern has always been to ensure that pace of change is such as to ensure that resident's views and wishes are being heard and accommodated where reasonably possible.

I am content that the actions I have taken now allow for that to happen.

Health Trusts: Staff Employed

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the (i) medical; and (ii) administrative staff employed in each Health and Social Care Trust, broken down by grade.

(AQW 23838/11-15)

Mr Poots:

- i) Headcount and whole-time equivalent figures for medical staff in each Health and Social Care Trust, as at 31st March 2013, are shown in the table below.

Hospital Stays: Costs

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is the average daily cost of a stay in hospital; and the average daily cost broken down by medical speciality.

(AQW 23854/11-15)

Mr Poots: The average daily cost of a stay in hospital differs significantly between patients and is subject to a range of variables including the diagnosis, procedures performed and the complexity of the case. In this context, it is not possible to provide a single average daily cost per patient for a stay in hospital.

Gender Identity Clinic: Waiting List

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people are on the waiting list for assessment and treatment with the Regional Psychosexual and Gender Identity Service.

(AQW 23857/11-15)

Mr Poots: Refer to answer in AQW 23733/2011-15.

Tourette's Syndrome

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what services are available in each Health and Social Care Trust for people diagnosed with Tourette's syndrome; and to detail the location of these services.

(AQW 23864/11-15)

Mr Poots: In the event of a person with Tourette's Syndrome being referred into services they will be assessed and signposted at Primary Mental Health Care level to the relevant existing services in general Psychiatry/Psychology.

Care Homes: Closure

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, in light of the announcement by the Northern Health and Social Care Trust that it intended to close all its residential care homes, and the award of £14m in contracts to private domiciliary care providers, to detail (i) the business cases for these contracts; (ii) whether contracts worth over £500,000 were subject to approval by the Department of Finance and Personnel; and (iii) whether these contracts were made to preempt, or in conjunction with, the closure of the statutory residential homes.

(AQW 23867/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Northern HSC Trust has indicated that it is not aware of £14m in contracts being awarded to domiciliary care providers in their area and therefore the information requested cannot be provided.

Pinewood Residential Home

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many admissions were made to Pinewoods Residential home for (i) long-term; (ii) respite; and (iii) step up or step down placements, in each year since 2009.

(AQW 23868/11-15)

Mr Poots: This information is not held centrally and was therefore requested from the Northern Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust. The information provided is held in Table 1 below.

Table 1. Admissions to Pinewood Residential Care Home

Year	Admission Type			Total
	Permanent	Respite	Intermediate Care
2008/09	0	48	0	48
2009/10	0	15	78	93
2010/11	0	66	101	167
2011/12	0	34	125	159
2012/13	0	13	149	162

Care Homes: Closure

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the statement by the Director of Older Persons' Services in the Northern Health and Social Care Trust, at the Trust Board on 25 May 2013, that no one was upset by the plans to close residential care homes; and what action he has taken against Trusts since his decision to remove their power to close statutory residential homes.

(AQW 23869/11-15)

Mr Poots: I have been advised that the statement you refer to was part of a briefing by the Director of Older Person's Services to inform the Trust Board of the feedback she had received from the staff who had carried out individual interviews with residents and their families on Friday 26th April. These staff had advised that no resident was distressed when they left the homes having carried out the interviews.

On 3rd May 2013, I called a halt to the Trust consultation process. I have asked the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) to lead on a new, regionalised process of consultation, which will place at its core the principle of sensitivity to the needs and wishes of older people.

My concern has also always been to ensure that pace of change is such as to ensure that resident's views and wishes are being heard and accommodated where reasonably possible.

I am content that the actions I have taken now allow for all of this to happen.

Adoption: Same-sex Couples

Mr Lynch asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what status married same-sex couples with adopted children will have if they move from England or Wales to live here after the relevant Westminster legislation is passed. (AQO 4255/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Bill seeks to give effect to the UK Government's decision to introduce same sex marriage in England and Wales. Northern Ireland is not introducing same sex marriage and, accordingly, the Bill provides for an English or Welsh same sex marriage to be treated as a civil partnership in Northern Ireland.

This has prompted queries with regard to the status of a married same-sex couple with adopted children. I am assuming that the Member is endeavouring to establish whether the couple will still be regarded as the child's parents.

An adoption order granted in England, Wales and Scotland is recognised in Northern Ireland under Article 2 of the Adoption (Northern Ireland) Order 1987. This position will not change with enactment of the Marriage (Same Sex Couples) Bill, nor with the introduction of the Adoption and Children Bill, which will continue to recognise adoption orders made in England, Wales and Scotland. Likewise, adoption orders made in Northern Ireland are recognised in other parts of the UK. This mutual recognition arrangement is designed to ensure that children and adoptive parents have access to the post adoption supports they require, regardless of where in the UK they reside.

Prisoners: Mental Illness

Ms Brown asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the services available to prisoners who have been diagnosed with a mental illness. (AQO 4270/11-15)

Mr Poots: The South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust, which has responsibility for the provision of health services in prisons, has advised that prisoners have access to a range of mental health services similar to those available in the community to the general public. Access to services is based on the clinical needs of the individual.

Northern Trust: Chairperson Vacancy

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many applications the Northern Health and Social Care Trust has received for the vacant role of Chairperson; and whether any reorganisation of the Chairperson's roles and responsibilities are planned. (AQW 23896/11-15)

Mr Poots: A total of 4 applications were received for the Chair post on the Northern Health and Social Care Trust. Due to the small pool of applicants, it is the Department's intention to re-advertise and is now in the planning stage.

I can confirm that no reorganisation of the Chairperson's roles and responsibilities are planned. The role and responsibilities of the Board and Chair are set out in the Trust's Management Statement.

Podiatry Appointments: Waiting Times

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what are the current waiting times for podiatry appointments in the Southern Health and Social Care Trust. (AQW 23897/11-15)

Mr Poots: This information is not held centrally and was therefore requested from the Southern Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust.

Information on clients waiting for the commencement of podiatry treatment as at 3 June 2013 is detailed in the table below by aggregate time bands.

HSC Trust	Waiting time from referral to commencement of treatment for Podiatry (by weeks waiting)					Total
	0-3	>3 to 6	>6 to 9	> 9 to 13	> 13
Southern	326	368	296	125	5	1,120

Note: Information refers to active waits.

Multiple Sclerosis

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many patients at each GP surgery, in each Health and Social Care Trust, are diagnosed with Multiple Sclerosis. (AQW 23902/11-15)

Mr Poots: The information requested is not available.

Northern Trust: Travel Expenses

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether the Northern Health and Social Care Trust is proposing to amend the travel expenses paid to community nurses and care workers from 1 July 2013.

(AQW 23925/11-15)

Mr Poots: The new mileage rates from 1 July 2013, for all HSC staff employed under Agenda for Change terms and conditions, will be 67 pence per mile for the first 3,500 miles and 24 pence per mile thereafter. These new travel reimbursement arrangements are a National Agenda for Change Agreement negotiated with the Main National Health Service Trade Unions.

Learning Disabilities: Southern Trust

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people in the Southern Health and Social Care Trust area have a severe learning disability.

(AQW 23927/11-15)

Mr Poots: Under the Quality & Outcomes Framework (QOF), GPs maintain a register of the number of patients aged 18 years and over with learning disabilities. The register includes all patients with learning disabilities, regardless of the severity of their condition. It is not possible to disaggregate the data to determine how many patients have severe learning disabilities.

As at 31 March 2013, there were 2,006 patients on the learning disability registers of GPs located in Southern Health and Social Care Trust area.

This figure has been determined based on the constituency in which the GP practice is located; it should be noted that patients may not reside in the constituency in which their practice is located.

Accident and Emergency: Patient Numbers

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many patients were processed at each Accident and Emergency Department, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 23933/11-15)

Mr Poots: It is assumed that this question refers to the number of patients attending each Accident and Emergency department, in each of the last five years.

Information on attendances (new, unplanned and/or planned reviews) at emergency care departments is published on an annual basis and is available to view or download from:

http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/index/stats_research/hospital-stats/emergency_care-3.htm

Information for 2012/13 is due to be published on the 27th June 2013.

Stroke: Lysis Treatment

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 21822/11-15, how many times in the last twelve months a patient at (i) the Causeway Hospital; and (ii) Antrim Area Hospital attended the Accident and Emergency department and, having been diagnosed with a CVA, received stroke Lysis treatment.

(AQW 23949/11-15)

Mr Poots:

- (i) For the twelve months April 2012 – March 2013, 10 patients attended Causeway Hospital A&E and, having been diagnosed with a cerebrovascular accident (stroke) received Lysis treatment.
- (ii) For the twelve months April 2012 – March 2013, 24 patients attended Antrim Hospital A&E and, having been diagnosed with a cerebrovascular accident (stroke) received Lysis treatment.

Learning Disabilities: Tenancy Test

Ms McGahan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether there is a statutory obligation on Health and Social Care Trusts to carry out a tenancy test and apply it to people with learning disabilities, to ensure that the person is fit to live independently.

(AQW 23953/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Health and Social Care Trusts do not have a statutory obligation to carry out a tenancy test for adults with a Learning Disability.

A tenancy test does not indicate an individual's ability to live independently - this is determined by a comprehensive assessment of need. In some cases the person may be assessed as able to live independently whereby for others varying degrees of support and assistance will be required for the individual/s to maintain their own tenancy.

HSC Trusts do not award tenancies. These are delivered through provider organisations and the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Civil Service: DHSSPS Salaries

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of civil servants employed in his Department who are in receipt of a salary in excess of £100,000.

(AQW 23957/11-15)

Mr Poots: Two senior officials in my Department (one Civil Servant and one Seconded In) are currently paid in excess of £100,000 per annum.

Civil Service: Late Payment Regulations

Mr McClarty asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 19675/11-15 and following the transposition of the revised Late Payment Regulations and the publication of DAO (DFP) 04/13 on 12 March 2013, to detail (i) the precise payment terms that now apply to supply contract SS16A; (ii) the date of which the revised payment terms became effective; (iii) to which transactions these revised payment terms apply; and (iv) the date from which these revised payment terms are to apply.

(AQW 24003/11-15)

Mr Poots:

- (i) The payment terms set out in the Price and Payment section of the revised supply contract SS16A are as follows:

Price and Payment

- The Contract price shall be net, i.e. after the deduction of all agreed discounts. It shall include the cost of packaging, packing materials, addressing, labelling, loading and delivery to the addresses named in the Contract or order. The amount of any duty additional to the Contract price and any early settlement discounts shall be shown separately in the Contract.
- Payment shall be made by the Authority in accordance with the Late Payment of Commercial Debts (Interest) Act 1998 (as amended by the 2013 Regulations) no later than 30 days after the Authority completes its procedure for verification and acceptance of the goods provided that a valid Contractor's invoice is received by the Authority on or before the completion of its verification or acceptance procedure. The said procedure for verification or acceptance of the goods shall (unless otherwise expressly agreed in writing between the parties) be completed within 30 days from the date of delivery of the goods.
- Invoices should be quoted in Sterling (GBP) and forwarded to the address as indicated on the purchase order or as advised by the Authority and/or Organisation.
- An invoice shall be rendered on the Contractor's own invoice form to the Authority, clearly marked with the Authority's order number and quoting the Contract Reference. Where the invoice submitted by the Contractor contains an error such that the invoice cannot be processed by the Authority for payment, the Authority will reject the invoice and return it to the Contractor for correction. In such a case, time for payment of the rejected invoice will not start to run until a fully corrected valid invoice is received by the Authority.
- The Authority should pay the Contract price to the Contractor, by BACS (Bank Account Clearing System) if the Authority so chooses.
- Whenever under the Contract any sum of money shall be recoverable from or payable by the Contractor the same may be deducted from any sum then due or which at any time thereafter may become due to the Contractor under the Contract or under any other Contract with the Authority.

- (ii) The payment terms apply to all contracts awarded on or after 16th March 2013 in line with the revised legislation.
- (iii) The revised payment terms apply to all transactions against contracts awarded on or after 16th March 2013.
- (iv) The revised payment terms apply from 16th March 2013

Food Delivery Vehicles: Regulations

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what regulations are in place to regulate food delivery vehicles.

(AQW 24010/11-15)

Mr Poots: This is a matter for the Food Standards Agency, which is a non-ministerial government department. The FSA has advised as follows.

With regard to regulation of food delivery vehicles from a food hygiene perspective, this is provided for in Regulation (EC) No 852/2004 of the European Parliament and of the Council on the hygiene of foodstuffs. This Regulation lays down general rules on the hygiene of foodstuffs that apply to all food business operators and includes specific requirements in relation to transport. This European Regulation is enforced in Northern Ireland through the provisions of The Food Hygiene Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2006 (as amended).

Dental Services: Disposable Instruments

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether there is currently a clinical problem with cross-infection in dental surgeries that warrants the increased use of single use disposable dental instruments.

(AQW 24021/11-15)

Mr Poots: There is not currently a clinical problem with cross-infection in dental surgeries that warrants the increased use of single use disposable dental instruments.

Some items that are difficult to clean and decontaminate are manufactured for single-use only and disposal, such as endodontic files for root canal treatments. Some dentists use other disposable products, which are relatively cheap to mass produce in disposable form, as they save on the reprocessing time for cleaning and decontamination. Examples are saliva ejectors, cups and disposable scalpels. However, most dental instruments are re-usable after undergoing appropriate cleaning and decontamination processes. Most dental care and treatment is provided in High Street dental practices and the DHSSPS PEL (12)23 guidance for Northern Ireland allows for the local decontamination and re-use of dental instruments in these primary care dental settings.

Different guidance applies to Trust-based dental services, i.e. the Community Dental Services and Hospital Dental Services, which come under the Regional Decontamination Strategy. DHSSPS policy is that these decontamination requirements must be met from Sterile Service Departments (SSD) accredited to the essential requirements of the Medical Device Regulations. Only the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust (BHSCT) uses single-use metal filling instruments. The BHSCT includes a relatively large number of dental clinics as well as the Royal Dental Hospital. The BHSCT uses a large volume of instruments and has decided this is the most cost-effective option, given that the disposable instruments meet the requirements for clinical use.

Epilepsy: Patients Aged under 18

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people under the age of 18 in each Health and Social Care Trust area are diagnosed with epilepsy.

(AQW 24046/11-15)

Mr Poots: The information requested is not available.

Under the Quality & Outcomes Framework (QOF), GPs maintain a register of the number of patients aged 18 and over who are currently on drug treatment for epilepsy. The register does not include patients under the age of 18 as care for younger patients is generally undertaken outside of primary care.

Alcohol: Cost of Abuse

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an estimate of the annual cost to the Health Service for dealing with alcohol abuse.

(AQW 24047/11-15)

Mr Poots: Research (http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/social_costs_of_alcohol_misuse_200809.pdf) commissioned by my Department placed the annual cost of alcohol misuse to the Health and Social Care system at up to £240 Million in 2008/09. The breakdown of these costs is as follows:

Area	Upper cost estimate
GP-prescribed drugs	£0.3M
GP/practice nurse consultations attributable to alcohol	£14M
Laboratory testing in primary care	£0.1M
Hospitalisation days – acute	£72.1M
Hospitalisation days – mental illness	£10.8M
A&E attendances	£30.5M
Outpatient hospital visits	£5.4M
Day hospital visits – mental illness	<£0.1M
Day hospital visits – non-mental illness	£2.1M
Community psychiatric teams	£5.3M
Health promotion	£0.4M
Drug and Alcohol Coordination Teams	£4.3 M
Ambulance journeys	£12.6M
Children and family services	£69.2M

Area	Upper cost estimate
Youth justice	£4M
Criminal justice social work	£8.8M
Total Estimated Cost to HSC	£240m

In the same report, total social cost to Northern Ireland of alcohol misuse was estimated at up to £881.1 Million.

Rush Hall Care Home, Limavady

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what investigations are on-going into the complaints made about Rush Hall Care Home, Limavady.

(AQW 24051/11-15)

Mr Poots: Abuse of vulnerable adults wherever it occurs and whoever is responsible is wrong and cannot be tolerated; it is particularly abhorrent when the abuse is perpetrated by the very individuals entrusted with the care of vulnerable people.

Making sure that vulnerable people and their rights are fully safeguarded, wherever they live, is a key shared responsibility.

I cannot comment on the specifics of the cases in Rush Hall, as they are the subject of formal investigation by the PSNI.

I can confirm however that the Western Trust will work closely with the PSNI and the Independent Sector Provider involved. This is part of a Joint Protocol which allows for multi-agency co-operation in such cases.

Care Homes: Ownership

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many (a) executive or non-executive members of (i) Health & Social Care Trusts; (ii) the Health and Social Care Board; (iii) local commissioning groups; (iv) the Public Health Authority; (v) the Patient Client Council; (vi) the Business Services Organisation; (vii) the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority; (viii) the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service; and (ix) the Northern Ireland Social Care Council; and (b) officials at Senior Civil Service level within his Department, have interests on the registrar that include ownership of residential or nursing homes for older people.

(AQW 24065/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Boards of all HSC bodies and the Department must keep registers of interest appropriate to the bodies' activities. Chairs and board members must, on appointment, declare any potential conflicts of interests such as business interests, position of authority in a charity or voluntary body in the field of health and social care, and any connection with a voluntary or other body contracting for HSC services. All board members should declare any conflict of interest that arises in the course of conducting HSC business. In relation to the questions asked the information would be recorded on the HSC Bodies and the Department's Register of Interest which are available on request, from the relevant body, for public inspection. The current Departmental register of interest does not record that any Senior Civil Servants in the Department have declared interests of the types identified in these three Assembly questions.

Care Homes: Ownership

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many (a) executive or non-executive members of (i) Health & Social Care Trusts; (ii) the Health and Social Care Board; (iii) local commissioning groups; (iv) the Public Health Authority; (v) the Patient Client Council; (vi) the Business Services Organisation; (vii) the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority; (viii) the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service; and (ix) the Northern Ireland Social Care Council; and (b) officials at Senior Civil Service level within his Department, have shares in residential or nursing homes for older people.

(AQW 24066/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Boards of all HSC bodies and the Department must keep registers of interest appropriate to the bodies' activities. Chairs and board members must, on appointment, declare any potential conflicts of interests such as business interests, position of authority in a charity or voluntary body in the field of health and social care, and any connection with a voluntary or other body contracting for HSC services. All board members should declare any conflict of interest that arises in the course of conducting HSC business. In relation to the questions asked the information would be recorded on the HSC Bodies and the Department's Register of Interest which are available on request, from the relevant body, for public inspection. The current Departmental register of interest does not record that any Senior Civil Servants in the Department have declared interests of the types identified in these three Assembly questions.

Care Homes: Ownership

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many (a) executive or non-executive members of (i) Health & Social Care Trusts; (ii) the Health and Social Care Board; (iii) local commissioning groups; (iv) the Public Health Authority; (v) the Patient Client Council; (vi) the Business Services Organisation; (vii) the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority; (viii) the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service; and (ix) the Northern Ireland Social Care

Council; and (b) officials at Senior Civil Service level within his Department, hold a non-remunerated position on the board of a private residential nursing home.

(AQW 24067/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Boards of all HSC bodies and the Department must keep registers of interest appropriate to the bodies' activities. Chairs and board members must, on appointment, declare any potential conflicts of interests such as business interests, position of authority in a charity or voluntary body in the field of health and social care, and any connection with a voluntary or other body contracting for HSC services. All board members should declare any conflict of interest that arises in the course of conducting HSC business. In relation to the questions asked the information would be recorded on the HSC Bodies and the Department's Register of Interest which are available on request, from the relevant body, for public inspection. The current Departmental register of interest does not record that any Senior Civil Servants in the Department have declared interests of the types identified in these three Assembly questions.

Paediatric Allergy Service: Belfast Trust

Dr McDonnell asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether dietician services have ever been or are currently provided within the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust Paediatric Allergy Service; and to outline the reasons for this position.

(AQW 24070/11-15)

Mr Poots: There has never been a dedicated dietetic support for the paediatric allergy/immunology clinics held in the Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children (RBHSC) or the day case treatments which take place in the Immunology Day Centre. The dietetic service is not involved in food challenges for these patients.

General paediatric dieticians working in RBHSC see allergy patients who are resident in the Belfast Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust area as in patients and outpatients at RBHSC and community clinics; these referrals are from the immunology/allergy consultants with clinics in RBHSC and other paediatricians.

If the patient is not from the Belfast HSC Trust area, the referral is forwarded to the GP with a covering letter asking for a referral to be made to the local Trust dietetic services.

Never Events

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he has sought or obtained information on Never Events; and when this information was sought and to what effect.

(AQW 24092/11-15)

Mr Poots: I have not sought or obtained information on 'Never Events', as incidents such as those defined by the National Patient Safety Agency (NPSA) as 'Never Events' fall within the Serious Adverse Incident (SAI) reporting criteria and consequently are captured under HSC Board's Serious Adverse Incident (SAI) Reporting System

Organ Donation: Opt-out Scheme

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether, at the joint Organ Donation announcement with the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister on 5 February 2013, an undertaking was given that the Executive would move towards a position of introducing a soft opt-out system of organ donation.

(AQW 24097/11-15)

Mr Poots: On 5 February 2013 I announced my intention to consult on public attitudes towards organ donation, including the possible introduction of an opt-out system, which would be accompanied by a strong message to join the organ donor register. This work is being taken forward by the Public Health Agency in the form of a public survey and focus group meetings with key stakeholders. A decision on the next steps for increasing organ donation in Northern Ireland will be taken when the findings of this work are known later this year. A major public information campaign is also planned for later this year.

Department of Justice

Prisoners: Accompanied on Temporary Leave

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 21633/11-15, whether the approving Governor was also the Governor who accompanied Mr Parker on the day in question; (ii) whether this is routine practice; and (iii) if not, what level of Governor is assigned for accompaniment on such occasions.

(AQW 22586/11-15)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): I have been informed by the Governor of Maghaberry that the governor who accompanied Mr Parker on the day in question was also the approving governor. This would not be routine practice. Accompanied Temporary Release procedures do not specify the grade of accompanying officers.

Drugs: Maghaberry

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice whether consideration has been given to a pilot project in Maghaberry Prison, aimed at the use of illegal drugs, whereby all medication is dispensed per dose per prisoner; introducing supervised swallowing for all prisoners on prescribed medication; mandatory fully supervised daily drugs testing, and mandatory reporting to the PSNI of all prisoners caught with illegal drugs with a view to court prosecution and conviction.

(AQW 23268/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Prison Service (NIPS) and the South Eastern Trust (SET) worked in partnership to introduce supervised swallow arrangements for high value, tradable medication across the Service. Both NIPS and SET agreed that other medications did not present the same risk, and there was no value in extending the arrangements given the unacceptable demand this would place on healthcare staff, and the implications for delay in delivering the regime. Supervised swallow arrangements are presently being introduced at Maghaberry.

Mandatory, suspicion and progression-linked drug testing is regularly carried out at all prisons.

Prisoners and visitors to the prison found to be in possession of illegal drugs are routinely referred to the PSNI for investigation with a view to prosecution.

Brendan Lillis

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the status of the case against Brendan Lillis; and whether the charges against him are being held in abeyance until he is fit to stand trial.

(AQW 23526/11-15)

Mr Ford: Mr Lillis is living in the community on a reinstated life licence, his release having been directed by the Parole Commissioners in August 2011.

The status of the case against him, including any outstanding charges and whether he is fit to stand trial on such charges, is not a matter for the Department of Justice.

Prisoners: Compassionate Leave Requests

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice how many prisoners were refused compassionate leave in each of the last two years; and how many of these decisions were overturned on appeal or by Judicial Review.

(AQW 23529/11-15)

Mr Ford: The number of Compassionate Temporary Release applications refused by NIPS in each of the last two years is:

Year	No. of CTR applications refused
2011	222
2012	337
*2013	141

* 1 January - 30 April

Four decisions have been overturned at judicial review, three in 2012 and one, to date, in 2013.

Joseph McManus

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to Joseph McManus who absconded whilst on compassionate leave, why a statement was not immediately released to the media when the issue was discovered.

(AQW 23604/11-15)

Mr Ford: In accordance with Prison Service procedures, Joseph McManus was posted as 'unlawfully at large' on the Department of Justice website after he failed to return to Maghaberry Prison.

TV Licence: Custodial Sentences

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 22580/11-15, to detail the number of people who served custodial sentences solely as a result of their failure to pay a television licence fee, in 2007 and 2012.

(AQW 23644/11-15)

Mr Ford: Prisoners in custody for failure to pay a television fee are often initially committed to prison on remand or already serving concurrent sentences for other offences. A manual exercise in order to detail the number of people who served custodial sentences solely as a result of their failure to pay a television licence fee could therefore only be conducted at a disproportionate cost to the public purse.

Injunctive Relief: Publicity Prohibited

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice to detail (i) the number of orders that have been made by the High Court of Justice in Northern Ireland prohibiting publicity on the granting of injunctive relief since 30 April 2012; (ii) when each order was made; (iii) the number that are extant; (iv) whether any such orders have been discharged since 30 April 2012; and (v) the total of orders, whenever made, extant on 29 May 2013.

(AQW 23690/11-15)

Mr Ford:

- (i) Two orders have been made by the High Court of Justice in Northern Ireland prohibiting publicity on the granting of injunctive relief since 30 April 2012.
- (ii) The date when each of these orders was made cannot be provided without risking contravening the terms of the order itself.
- (iii) Of the orders made since 30 April 2012 two are extant.
- (iv) No orders made since 30 April 2012 have been discharged.
- (v) This information is not readily available and could only be compiled at a disproportionate cost.

Further information in respect of the extant orders cannot be provided without risking contravening the terms of the order itself.

Joseph McManus

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to Joseph McManus who absconded whilst on compassionate leave, to detail what he was subsequently charged with after committing further offences which led to his recapture.

(AQW 23706/11-15)

Mr Ford: Joseph McManus appeared at Laganside Courts on 8 April 2013 and was charged with the following offences:

- 1 Driving when unfit through drink/drugs.
- 2 Causing Grievous Bodily Harm by dangerous driving.
- 3 Failing to stop for police.
- 4 Aggravated vehicle taking causing Grievous Bodily Harm.
- 5 Driving while disqualified.
- 6 Using a motor vehicle without insurance.
- 7 Aggravated taking and causing damage to a vehicle.
- 8 Assault on police.
- 9 Failing to provide a specimen.

Prisoners: Compassionate Leave

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to detail (i) how many prisoners were released on compassionate leave from prisons in each of the last two years; (ii) the reason for release; and (iii) how many were accompanied by prison staff during release.

(AQW 23707/11-15)

Mr Ford: Prisoners who are released temporarily under Prison Rule 27(2) including those released on compassionate leave are not required to be escorted by Prison Service staff. The numbers of those released under this Rule in each of the last two years and the reasons for release are set out in the table below.

Year	Number released under Prison Rule 27(2)	Funeral	Critically Ill relative	Graveside Visit
2011	37	23	14	NIL
2012	30	21	8	1
2013 (up to 30 April)	13	11	2	NIL

In addition, a number of other prisoners are removed from prison for compassionate reasons under Section 18(2) of the Prison (NI) Act 1953. They are escorted by Prison Service staff and remain in custody. The numbers of those removed under this section of the Act in each of the last two years and the reasons for such removal are set out in the table below.

Year	Number removed under Section 18(2) of the Prison Act	Funeral	Critically Ill relative	Graveside Visit
2011	34	19	14	1
2012	36	24	9	3
2013 (up to 30 April)	10	3	3	4

Noel Parker

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 22900/11-15, whether Noel Parker would still have met the criteria for temporary release.

(AQW 23750/11-15)

Mr Ford: I can confirm that Noel Parker would have met the criteria for temporary release.

Drugs: Use in Prisons

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 22661/11-15, in relation to drug use in prisons and concerns expressed by agencies that persons who suffer from drug dependency and addiction are being held in inappropriate conditions, whether he would consider running a pilot scheme to establish if there are any benefits from allocating a specific area in Maghaberry Prison for such prisoners.

(AQW 23751/11-15)

Mr Ford: AQW 22661/11-15 asked if consideration was given to the allocation of an area specifically for those with drug dependencies. While this is not under consideration, the Governor is considering introducing a therapeutic regime to assist individuals with various types of addictions and this may include allocating a separate area within the Maghaberry Prison to house such prisoners.

Prisoners: Suicide and Attempted Suicide

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 22742/11-15, whether he will commission a detailed review to establish if similarities exist amongst prisoner suicides and attempted suicides, specifically to enable warning signs to be highlighted for the prevention of further incidents and to reduce the risk.

(AQW 23752/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Prison Service reviews all attempted suicides and suicides on a case by case basis through current processes; including Supporting Prisoner at Risk case reviews, serious self harm case reviews, and Prisoner Ombudsman's reports. Any learning identified will assist the implementation of changes or improvements to help care for and manage prisoners at risk to prevent further incidents and reduce the risk of self harm.

Dungannon Court House: Prisoner Accommodation

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to detail (i) why several people awaiting custodial appearance at Dungannon Court House on Wednesday 29 May were held in PSNI vehicles outside the court building, and not placed in cells; (ii) whether a risk assessment was carried out; and (iii) whether this is common practice.

(AQW 23753/11-15)

Mr Ford: Necessary building works at Dungannon Courthouse resulted in three of the nine cells not being available on 29 May 2013. This, in conjunction with a high number of Police and Criminal Evidence (PACE) detainees to be dealt with on the day, resulted in two PACE detainees being held in police vehicles, until cellular accommodation became available.

The decision to hold the detainees in police cars was taken by the PSNI, who were responsible for conducting any necessary risk assessment.

This was an isolated incident and PECCS management continue to work closely with PSNI custody suites to avoid any similar occurrences.

Injury-on-duty Awards: Correspondence

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Justice to detail the correspondence that he has had with the Northern Ireland Policing Board on the review of Injury on Duty Awards.

(AQW 23797/11-15)

Mr Ford: Under Regulation 35 (1) the PSNI and PSNI Reserve (Injury Benefit) Regulations 2006 it is the responsibility of the Policing Board to arrange reviews. The Chief Executive of the Policing Board wrote to me on 8 February 2013 advising of his intention to set up an Injury on Duty Working Group. In my response I supported the proposed suspension of the reviews of the degree of disablement pending the report from the working group.

Injury-on-duty Awards: Review

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Justice to outline the role of his Department in the review of Injury on Duty Awards.
(AQW 23798/11-15)

Mr Ford: My Department does not have any role in the review of Injury on Duty Awards.

Under Regulation 35(1) of the PSNI and PSNI Reserve (Injury Benefit) Regulations 2006 the Policing Board is legally obliged to arrange periodical reviews of the degree of disablement of an Injury on Duty award.

Injury-on-duty Awards: Review

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Justice whether he would support a discontinuation of the review of Injury on Duty Awards.
(AQW 23799/11-15)

Mr Ford: I refer to my answer to AQW 23797/11-15.

Injury-on-duty Awards: Review

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Justice to detail what discussions he has had with the Northern Ireland Policing Board and the Chief Constable regarding the trauma which the current review of Injury on Duty Awards has caused some former police officers and their families.
(AQW 23800/11-15)

Mr Ford: To date, I have not had any discussions with the Policing Board or Chief Constable regarding the current review of the Injury on Duty awards.

Legal Services Commission: Budget 2013-14

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 22662/11-15, to detail (i) the Legal Services Commission's budget for 2013/14; (ii) the projected expenditure; and (iii) whether an overspend is expected, and if so, the estimated cost.
(AQW 23843/11-15)

Mr Ford: The initial budget available to the Northern Ireland Legal Services Commission (NILSC) at the beginning of the financial year, 2013/14, was £74.8m.

As part of the in year forecasting processes, the NILSC notified the Department of a forecast pressure of £27m in March 2013 for the forthcoming financial year.

Following a meeting of the Departmental Strategic Resources Committee (SRC) in May 2013, an additional allocation of £15m was made available, bringing the total budget available to the NILSC to £89.8m.

The projected shortfall between budget available and current forecast requirement is estimated at £12m. During 2013/14 the Department of Justice will continue to work with the NILSC to monitor the forecast as the year progresses. Any funding pressures will be considered as part of the in-year monitoring round process.

Prison Officers: Voluntary Early Retirement Scheme

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 23108/11-15, to outline the criteria that were applied to granting people the Voluntary Early Retirement Scheme, subsequent to November 2011.
(AQW 23844/11-15)

Mr Ford: The criteria applied to the Voluntary Early Retirement Scheme are:

- (i) age 50 or over at 8 November 2011;
- (ii) in an eligible surplus grade; and
- (iii) staff released in least cost order.

Prisoners: Cost 2007/2012

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice to detail the average cost per prisoner in (i) 2007; and (ii) 2012.
(AQW 23861/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Prison Service calculates an average cost per prisoner place for each financial year. The table below sets out the cost for the financial years 2007/08 and 2012/13 (subject to audit).

Financial Year	Average cost per prisoner place
2007/08	£81,254
2012/13	£66,494 (subject to audit)

Prisoners: Temporary Release

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 22900/11-15, whether the administrative error stated refers to the Northern Ireland Prison Service interpretation of AQW 21633/11-15 as submitted, or information held on Prison Service records which contained details of the application and granting of temporary release.

(AQW 23882/11-15)

Mr Ford: An administrative error occurred in one section of Mr Parker's file in which the word niece had been transcribed as daughter. This typographical error did not impact on the outcome of the Risk assessment, Mr Parker's eligibility with regards to accompanied temporary release or the operational decision for Mr Parker to attend his niece's wedding.

Prison Service: Appeals

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of appeals lodged against dismissal from the Northern Ireland Prison Service to the Northern Ireland Civil Service Appeals Board that were (i) withdrawn; and (ii) struck out, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 23885/11-15)

Mr Ford: This information has been withheld as disclosure would be contrary to the Data Protection Act 1998 and in order to protect the identity of those involved.

Civil Law Reform/Family Law

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice to detail (i) what contact his Department has had with the Department of Finance and Personnel about the transfer of civil law reform for family law; (ii) the reasons for the delay of the transfer of civil law reform for family law from the Department of Finance and Personnel to his Department; and (iii) when he expects that civil law reform in family law will be fully transferred to his Department.

(AQW 23887/11-15)

Mr Ford: I have in the past corresponded with the Minister of Finance and Personnel regarding the desirability of all justice related matters coming within the remit of my Department. However there is at present no Ministerial agreement on the transfer of responsibility for civil law reform or family law to my Department and I am unable to indicate when such a transfer is likely to occur.

Peace Walls: Removal

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 22856/11-15, whether consideration of the removal of peace walls or barriers would necessitate consultation and require agreement.

(AQW 23894/11-15)

Mr Ford: In considering the future of interface structures there will be consultation with residents and others.

The issue of the determination of agreement is complex and I would not want to be prescriptive.

Internet Regulation

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Justice to outline the action that his Department has taken to limit the availability of indecent images of children online.

(AQW 23917/11-15)

Mr Ford: Article 3 of the Protection of Children (NI) Order 1978 prohibits the possession, distribution and publication of indecent images of children under 18 years, with a maximum penalty of 10 years' imprisonment.

Regulation of the internet is a reserved matter and not one which can be dealt with in a devolved manner by this Department.

Victims and Witnesses of Crime

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice what progress his Department has made on implementing the recommendations in the report by the Committee for Justice on its Inquiry into the Criminal Justice Services available to Victims and Witnesses of Crime in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 23941/11-15)

Mr Ford: Since the publication of the Committee's report in June 2012, I have published a new five-year strategy for victims and witnesses of crime. This strategy, entitled 'Making a difference to victims and witnesses of crime – Improving access to justice, services and support', includes actions that respond to 28 of the 30 recommendations included in the Committee's report.

I have also published an action plan for 2013-15 and this reflects 20 of the recommendations from the Committee's report. Some of the key actions include the development of a Victim Charter, the introduction of Victim and Witness Care Units, promoting the use of Victim Personal Statements and the introduction of a comprehensive formal assessment process to identify victim and witness needs in relation to special measures and other support requirements. Work has already commenced on a number of these actions, including through the establishment of a pilot Victim and Witness Care Unit and pilot Registered Intermediaries Schemes were launched last month.

My Department will be providing six-monthly updates to the Justice Committee on progress against these actions.

In respect of the Committee's recommendation on statutory case management, I have publicly consulted on the management of criminal cases and will be making provision for this in the forthcoming 'Faster, Fairer Justice' Bill.

The remaining recommendation deals with participation in restorative practice. The Department will continue to explore opportunities to develop services with a restorative focus. Support is also being provided to a number of projects promoting restorative interventions with victims and offenders.

RUC Reserve Gratuity Fund

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 22688/11-15, if he consider distributing the remaining funds of £392,000 to the people for whom it was provided in the initial case.

(AQW 23966/11-15)

Mr Ford: It is not possible either to reopen the Part-Time Reserve Gratuity Scheme to allow late applications or to establish another similar scheme in order to distribute the residue, due to the terms and conditions of the scheme.

I am considering a range of options for allocating the residue and expect to make a decision in the near future.

Prisoners: Unlawfully at Large

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 23178/11-15, of those who absconded, how many remain unlawfully at large.

(AQW 23986/11-15)

Mr Ford: Of those prisoners who absconded while on compassionate bail, two remain unlawfully at large.

PSNI: Equal Pay

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Justice when his Department received the business case from the PSNI on the issue of the equal pay settlement, and to outline the action that was taken, including where and when it was subsequently sent.

(AQW 24077/11-15)

Mr Ford: The PSNI sent my Department a business case in October 2010 for discussions on whether it demonstrated a legal entitlement to the NICS equal pay settlement. Upon receiving the business case, my Department consulted DFP on it to confirm the view on the issue of legal liability.

The advice received from DFP on 22 February 2011 clearly affirmed my Department's understanding that the pay and grading delegation that had been granted to the NIO in 1996 was to include the Northern Ireland Policing Board, formerly PANI, and that this pay delegation had not been rescinded.

As a result of this advice, which was shared with PSNI on 1 March 2011, the business case could not proceed along the approvals process since it was clear that there was no legal basis to make a payment.

Further to the receipt of the DFP legal advice, my Department did not receive any further formal correspondence from the PSNI requesting that the business case be progressed.

Drugs: Crime

Mr Douglas asked the Minister of Justice what actions his Department is taking to combat the problem of drug-related crime.

(AQO 4260/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Department of Justice is actively working within the criminal justice system, and with other stakeholders, to combat the scourge of drugs on our streets and in our communities.

My Department and other criminal justice organisations are major contributors to the outcomes defined in the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety New Strategic Direction for Alcohol and Drugs 2011-16.

Through the Community Safety Strategy the Department of Justice, the Prison Service, the Youth Justice Agency and the Probation Board provide a range of financial and other resources to both statutory and community bodies to help those offenders who are using drugs which may be a contributing factor in their offending behaviour.

In addition, Policing and Community Safety Partnerships work with their local community to identify local problems and seek workable solutions.

The Department of Justice also seek to address drug trafficking and supply through the Organised Crime Task Force. A subgroup of the OCTF is dedicated to this issue and includes PSNI, Home Office Border Force, Serious Organised Crime Agency, the Post Office, DHSSPS and Forensic Science.

Combating the issue of drugs and crime requires a joint effort across Government and the community. The Police, in their Policing Plan Update for 2013-14 recognise that street level drug dealing is under-reported and the challenge is to encourage the public to report such matters, either through the PSNI or through the Crimestoppers charity, and so reduce this crime further. I would encourage anyone with information to do this.

Legal Services Commission: Staff Salaries

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 22409/11-15 and AQW 23404/11-15, for his assessment of whether the type of document submitted was appropriate and adequate.
(AQW 24096/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Legal Services Commission has sought legal advice on the contractual right of staff to pay progression. This advice has been shared with the Department of Justice and the NILSC is seeking to bring to a conclusion the ongoing pay discussions.

As the legal advice provided is covered by legal professional privilege I am not in a position to comment on the specific points raised in the Question.

Door Supervisor Licences

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice to detail how many people hold Security Industry Authority Door Supervisor Licences; and of these (i) how many have convictions for violence related offences; and (ii) how many have been convicted of offences for which they received life sentences.
(AQW 24131/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Security Industry Authority (SIA) has advised that there are currently 223,725 active door supervisor licences in the United Kingdom. Of these, 4,335 have home addresses in Northern Ireland.

Information on the number of licence holders who have convictions, including convictions for violence related offences or convictions for which the individual received a life sentence, is not retained by the SIA in a readily accessible format.

Inquest Files

Mr Sheehan asked the Minister of Justice when, and on whose authority, the Court Service became involved in the development of a protocol with the Public Record Office to prevent the release of inquest files to bereaved families.
(AQO 4269/11-15)

Mr Ford: There is no protocol between the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service and the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland to prevent the release of inquest files.

Decisions on the release of inquest files are governed by the Freedom of Information Act 2000, the Data Protection Act 1998 and the convention rights incorporated by the Human Rights Act 1998. All NICTS decisions and recommendations on this subject are based on this legislative framework and relevant case law. Part of this process is the need to consult with interested parties when considering what exemptions, if any, may be required in an individual case.

In considering individual access requests, NICTS and PRONI apply a Memorandum of Understanding that sets out how the consultation process is undertaken.

PSNI: Equal Pay for Civilian Staff

Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of Justice if his Department can authorise payments to civilian staff working for the PSNI, who are not covered by the equal pay settlement, without being legally compelled to do so.
(AQO 4271/11-15)

Mr Ford: The point raised was debated in the Assembly on Tuesday 4 June 2013. As I informed the House at the time, I as Minister of Justice do not have the authority to authorise payments solely on the basis of fairness, where no liability or right has been established and where the court has ruled to the contrary.

The judgement of His Honour Judge Babington in the recent Equal Pay case heard in the County Court was clear that PSNI staff did not have a contractual right to equal pay terms.

Any decision to make payments in this case would be contrary to this legal judgement and would, based on DFP advice of 22 February 2011, fall outside the delegated authority granted to my Department by DFP.

There appears to be some confusion with respect to this matter and in an attempt to address this, I have given an assurance to the Assembly that I would write to the Finance Minister. I will ask him to set out the basis on which my Department and in turn, his Department, could approve a business case based on arguments of fairness where the court has ruled that no legal liability exists. I will also ask him to guarantee that if he is in a position to approve such a business case, that he will also make the arrangements to provide the necessary funds to meet the additional costs and any further liabilities that might flow from such an action.

Legal Aid: Judicial Reviews

Mr Anderson asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the use of Legal Aid in relation to judicial reviews.
(AQO 4272/11-15)

Mr Ford: Civil Legal Aid is available for judicial review proceedings. Judicial Review proceedings are heard at the High Court.

Legal Aid will be granted for judicial review proceedings where the applicant meets the 2 statutory tests, namely that the applicant qualifies for legal aid under the financial eligibility rules and the Legal Services Commission is satisfied that the case merits legal aid funding. Decisions on the grant of legal aid in an individual case are taken by the Legal Services Commission, independently of government.

The Access to Justice Review recommended that legal aid should continue to be available for Judicial Review proceedings.

Department for Regional Development

Councils: Payments to Parking Attendants

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the amount (i) that each local council paid to companies to provide parking attendants, over the last twelve months; and (ii) of revenue each local council raised from parking tickets during this period.

(AQW 22708/11-15)

Mr Kennedy (The Minister for Regional Development): Local councils do not make payments for NSL parking attendants and local councils do not obtain revenue from parking tickets issued by NSL attendants.

A5: Spending

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development how much has been spent on the A5 road scheme to date.
(AQW 22943/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: As of the end of May 2013 the amount spent on the A5 Western Transport Corridor scheme was £58,238,000, of which £35,542,000 was spent prior to my taking up of office in May 2011.

A breakdown of the total amount spent on the A5 shows that, £47,782,000 was used for fees; £4,353,000 for surveys; £1,508,000 for construction costs; £1,792,000 for contractor's design costs; £894,000 for utilities costs; £744,000 for public consultation/legal costs and £1,165,000 for land/ compensation.

The land/compensation figure includes an amount of £796,000 associated with 90 per cent advance compensation payments which have been paid to five landowners. These five landowners have been given the option of returning the money or selling the land to the Department by agreement. Discussion with these landowners is ongoing.

Roadside Monuments: Illegally Erected

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of illegally erected Republican monuments on roadsides.

(AQW 23156/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department is aware of twenty illegally erected Republican monuments on roadsides.

Salt Boxes: Antrim Borough Council/Newtownabbey Borough Council

Mr Girvan asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the location of salt bins in (i) Antrim Borough Council; and (ii) Newtownabbey Borough Council.

(AQW 23460/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Details of the locations of salt boxes in the Antrim and Newtownabbey Borough Council areas are available in the Assembly Library.

Roads: Maze Development

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans his Department has to improve the road infrastructure in and around the Maze Development.

(AQW 23531/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: It is the Maze/Long Kesh Development Corporation (MLKDC), under the auspices of OFMDFM, which is responsible for the development of the site and associated roads infrastructure.

This year's Balmoral Show emphasised the need for new roads infrastructure to support the development of the site.

I am aware MLKDC has a development plan setting out proposals for road links to the M1 motorway. However, to date the MLKDC has not made a planning application.

My Department's experience is that the processes and timeframes for the development of new roads can be time-consuming, complex and can take a number of years to complete.

The processes involve the identification of a preferred option, the preparation of a design and an environmental impact assessment, an application for planning permission, the acquisition of land, procurement and then construction.

My officials will work with MLKDC and OFMDFM to assist in expediting the development of their proposals and I have written to Terence Brannigan, the chairman of MLKDC, and the First and deputy First Ministers to formally make this offer.

Road Safety: Gransha Road, Bangor

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the timescale for the proposals for road safety measures for the Gransha Road, Bangor.

(AQW 23535/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department is currently commissioning consultants to carry out a feasibility design to consider possible options to improve pedestrian facilities at the Gransha Road Roundabout, Bangor. Officials expect this study to be completed within the next six months, when they will be in a better position to establish the best way forward.

I have asked Mr Bertie Ellison, Divisional Roads Manager (Acting), Roads Service Eastern Division to advise you of the outcome.

Roadside Monuments: Illegally Erected

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of illegal road side monuments to terrorists.

(AQW 23554/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department is aware of nineteen illegal roadside monuments to terrorists.

Dignity at Work: DRD Cases

Mr Spratt asked the Minister for Regional Development how many Dignity at Work cases have been lodged in his Department in each of the last five years, broken down by (i) core department; and (ii) non-departmental public body; and how many of these cases have been successfully resolved.

(AQW 23574/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The information for my Department and its Arm's Length Bodies is detailed in the table below.

Year	Organisation	Total Number of Cases	Number of Cases Resolved	Number of Cases Outstanding
2008/09	DRD	9	9	0
	Northern Ireland Water	1	1	0
	Translink	44	44	0
2009/10	DRD	13	13	0

Hollywood Golf Club: Brown Signs

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Regional Development when brown signs for Hollywood Golf Club will be erected.
(AQW 23606/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department recently wrote to the Tourist Information Centre, Bangor, regarding a proposal to provide direction signs to Hollywood Golf Club. This includes the erection of direction signs at the B198 Belfast/Jacksons Road junction, Jacksons Road/Old Hollywood Road junction and the entrance to the golf club itself. The cost of providing and erecting these signs will be £671.44.

Upon receipt of confirmation that the golf club is content to proceed, my Department will make arrangements to purchase and erect the signs, which should take a further eight weeks to complete.

Parking Tickets: Coalisland

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development when a parking ticket was last issued in Coalisland.
(AQW 23622/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: No Penalty Charge Notices have been issued in Coalisland since the beginning of Decriminalised Parking Enforcement, in 2006.

The number of Penalty Charge Notices (PCNs) issued in any one town or area depends on many factors, not least of which are the size of the town, the extent of parking restrictions and the volume of traffic. These factors plus the level of illegal parking will influence where Traffic Attendants (TA) are deployed.

For example, in Coalisland there are very few parking restrictions to be enforced which is the primary reason that no PCNs have been issued.

Traffic Wardens: Donaghmore and Coalisland

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 21613/11-15 and AQW 22800/11-15, to detail whether traffic wardens operated in (i) Donaghmore during 2012/13; and (ii) Coalisland in any of the last three years.
(AQW 23624/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Traffic Attendants have visited Donaghmore on 32 occasions during 2012/13, but have not visited Coalisland over the last three years.

My Department has to prioritise its limited Traffic Attendant resource so it can provide an effective and balanced enforcement service. Although it is not possible to cover every restriction, we do respond where we receive complaints or requests for enforcement.

Fixed Penalty Notices: Coalisland and Donaghmore

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 21613/11-15 and AQW 22800/11-15, to detail (i) the reasons for the disparity in the number, and in some cases, non-existence, of Fixed Penalty Notices for parking violations in Coalisland and Donaghmore, compared to Aughnacloy and particularly Fivemiletown; (ii) whether a threat was made directly or indirectly to traffic wardens not to patrol and/or issue Fixed Penalty Notices; and (iii) what action he intends to take to ensure that this trend is reversed and that enforcement is equitable.
(AQW 23705/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The number of Penalty Charge Notices (PCNs) issued in any one town or area depends on many factors, not least of which are the size of the town, the extent of parking restrictions and the volume of traffic. For example, in Coalisland there are very few parking restrictions to be enforced which is the primary reason no PCNs have been issued. In addition, the level of illegal parking will also influence where Traffic Attendants (TA) are deployed.

To provide an effective and balanced enforcement service, my Department has to prioritise its limited TA resource. Although it is not possible to cover every restriction, my Department does address problem areas where complaints or requests for enforcement are received.

Neither my Department nor NSL are aware of any evidence of threats made against Traffic Attendants in either Coalisland or Donaghmore.

Deployment levels in all towns are regularly reviewed and updated, if required. My Department will continue to monitor the situation in the towns you have mentioned and take appropriate enforcement action based on compliance with the relevant parking restrictions.

A5: Funding Reallocation

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development what response there has been from other Executive Ministers on proposals to reallocate funding for the A5 road scheme.
(AQW 23748/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I wrote to the Minister of Finance, Sammy Wilson MP MLA on 9 May 2013 to inform him of the current issues surrounding the delay to the A5 scheme, the subsequent financial implications and options for other road improvements.

In view of the strategic importance of this issue I copied the correspondence to Executive colleagues. I look forward to the Minister of Finance bringing a paper to the Executive on the underlying budgeting issues for collective discussion.

Minister Poots has responded to me directly on the issue.

Door-2-Door Transport Scheme: Fares

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he will provide a commitment that the fee for Door-2-Door Transport Scheme journeys which exceed 3 miles, will not increase.

(AQW 23754/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The issue of setting fares for the Disability Action Transport scheme is primarily an operational matter for Disability Action; however, any potential increases would be discussed with the Department in advance. Disability Action has informed me that it intends to establish a User Forum in September this year. Any issues arising will be discussed with this Department.

North West 200: Flexible Road Closures

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development what support he will provide, in the form of flexible road closures, to better facilitate the North West 200.

(AQW 23773/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Under the 1986 Road Races (Northern Ireland) Order, my Department may only grant ten road closing orders (excluding hill climbs) in a calendar year. However, the legislation limits the number of days any particular road may be used for, or in connection with motor races, to a maximum of three days in any calendar year. The exception being races held over the Dundrod Circuit, due to special arrangements contained in the 1986 Order, and its predecessors. The aim of the legislation is to strike a balance between the considerable interest in the sport in Northern Ireland and the needs of the general public, in terms of normal use of the road network.

The Order requires applications for road closing orders to be received and approved by my Department, by 31 March each year.

There is no specific provision in the legislation regarding the day, or days of the week, on which a road may be closed. It is up to promoters to decide on which days to run their race and practices. There is no provision to enable the date, or dates, of a race to be changed after the 31 March deadline due to, for example, bad weather or an outbreak of contagious disease such as 'Foot and Mouth' etc.

After the 'washout' of the 2011 Northwest 200 race, and following advice from my Department, the race promoters increased the time the roads were closed on the three days, to allow more flexibility in the event of adverse weather. There are now a number of races held on the Thursday night to ease pressures on the main race day, Saturday.

In principle, I am supportive of the proposals to achieve greater flexibility. However, my officials have obtained legal guidance, advising flexibility cannot be achieved without a change to the 1986 Order. Therefore, I have decided to seek the Executive's approval to commence proceedings to progress a short single purpose bill, by way of accelerated passage, in order to achieve the flexibility sought. While very challenging, I will be endeavouring to have the changes in place for the 2014 racing season.

North West 200: Flexible Road Closures

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Regional Development what progress has been made in offering greater flexibility to the organisers of events, such as the North West 200, regarding the number of days that road closures can apply.

(AQW 23785/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Under the 1986 Road Races (Northern Ireland) Order, my Department may only grant ten road closing orders (excluding hill climbs) in a calendar year. However, the legislation limits the number of days any particular road may be used for, or in connection with motor races, to a maximum of three days in any calendar year. The exception being races held over the Dundrod Circuit, due to special arrangements contained in the 1986 Order, and its predecessors. The aim of the legislation is to strike a balance between the considerable interest in the sport in Northern Ireland and the needs of the general public, in terms of normal use of the road network.

The Order requires applications for road closing orders to be received and approved by my Department, by 31 March each year.

There is no specific provision in the legislation regarding the day, or days of the week, on which a road may be closed. It is up to promoters to decide on which days to run their race and practices. There is no provision to enable the date, or dates, of a race to be changed after the 31 March deadline due to, for example, bad weather or an outbreak of contagious disease such as 'Foot and Mouth' etc.

After the 'washout' of the 2011 Northwest 200 race, and following advice from my Department, the race promoters increased the time the roads were closed on the three days, to allow more flexibility in the event of adverse weather. There are now a number of races held on the Thursday night to ease pressures on the main race day, Saturday.

In principle, I am supportive of the proposals to achieve greater flexibility. However, my officials have obtained legal guidance, advising flexibility cannot be achieved without a change to the 1986 Order. Therefore, I have decided to seek the Executive's approval to commence proceedings to progress a short single purpose bill, by way of accelerated passage, in order to achieve the flexibility sought. While very challenging, I will be endeavouring to have the changes in place for the 2014 racing season.

Park-and-ride Facilities: North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans there are to increase Park and Ride facilities in North Down. (AQW 23787/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: In August 2011, I endorsed my Department's 'Strategic Review of Park & Ride' report and approved the proposed way forward. The report presented recommendations for the delivery and prioritisation of Park & Ride facilities.

My Department has established a Park & Ride Programme Board with responsibility for co-ordinating and prioritising the implementation of Park & Ride projects in line with the Departmental Strategy. The Programme Board has produced a 'Park & Ride Strategic Delivery Programme 2013-15', which is a schedule of Park & Ride projects with clearly defined responsibilities for funding, implementation, maintenance and operation, to be taken forward by my Department's Transport Projects Division, Transport NI and Translink.

I am aware that there is significant demand for Park & Ride facilities in North Down, with many existing sites operating close to capacity. This demand highlights the success brought about by my Department's investment in the railway network in recent years and it is something that I would like to continue to build upon.

As a result, the Park & Ride Strategic Delivery Programme 2013-15 will include proposals for increased Park & Ride facilities in North Down as follows:

- Bangor - My Department is currently developing a business case which will consider a number of options for the provision of additional Park & Ride facilities in Bangor, to supplement those currently available at Abbey Street. Subject to the identification of a suitable site and the satisfactory completion of the necessary processes, which may include land purchase and attaining planning permission, the new facilities could be provided in late 2014/2015.
- Cultra - Translink are entering into a lease agreement with the Ulster Folk and Transport Museum to operate Park & Ride from a section of the museum's car park on a trial basis. This will utilise the Cultra Train Halt and become operational by September 2013.

Rail Services: Bangor, Portadown, Larne, Derry and Portrush

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the total number of journeys on the (i) Bangor; (ii) Portadown; (iii) Larne; (iv) Derry; and (v) Portrush rail services, each year from 2001/2002 to 2011/2012. (AQW 23827/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The table below shows the total number of journeys on the (i) Bangor; (ii) Portadown; (iii) Larne; (iv) Londonderry; and (v) Portrush rail services, each year from 2001/2002 to 2011/2012, with a more detailed split per line for the period 2004/2005 to 2011/2012.

It has only been possible to provide total journey statistics for the years 2001/02, 2002/03 and 2003/04 as a different ticketing system was in operation then which precludes extraction to the level of detail requested.

Line Yr	Bangor	Portadown	Larne	Londonderry	Portrush	Total local
2001/02	-	-	-	-	-	5,247,316
2002/03	-	-	-	-	-	5,188,377

2011/12	2,523,443	3,217,248	2,153,142	1,561,364	543,593	9,998,790

Enterprise Train Service: Customers

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the average number of customers per Enterprise train journey, each year from 2001/2002 to 2011/2012.

(AQW 23828/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can advise that Translink introduced a new ticketing system during 2003/04. For the years prior to that, Translink cannot readily reconcile information with that produced by the current ticketing system. Accordingly, the statistics provided are from financial year 2004/05 to date.

These are as follows:

Year	Average Loadings per Journey
2004/05	171
2005/06	168
2006/07	167
2007/08	183
2008/09	173
2009/10	147
2010/11	156
2011/12	154
2012/13	172

Enterprise Train Service: Scheduled Journey Time

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the scheduled journey time for the Enterprise train service, each year from 2001/2002 and 2011/2012.

(AQW 23829/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can advise you that Translink have confirmed that scheduled journey times vary depending on the stopping pattern of the train and the effect of other train schedules.

For example, up until 2008 the fastest Enterprise train incorporated only one intermediate stop at Portadown and did not serve Newry, Dundalk or Drogheda. From December 2008 additional stops were included at Newry and Dundalk. Subsequently a number of Enterprise trains also stop at Lisburn in addition to Portadown, Newry, Dundalk and Drogheda. Train running times will be impacted by the stopping patterns and by influence of the local trains sharing the same running lines.

The minimum/maximum journey times for Enterprise services are as outlined in the table below:

Min - Max Journey Times Belfast Central / Dublin

Enterprise	Min	Max
2001	01:51:00	02:10:00
2002	01:51:00	02:10:00
2003	01:51:00	02:15:00

2012	02:00:00	02:15:00

Rail Services: Bangor, Portadown, Larne, Derry and Portrush

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the scheduled journey time for (i) Bangor; (ii) Portadown; (iii) Larne; (iv) Derry; and (v) Portrush rail services, each year from 2001/2002 and 2011/2012.

(AQW 23830/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Scheduled journey times vary depending on the stopping pattern of the train and the effect of other train schedules.

In relation to local trains, running times are principally impacted by stopping patterns. The minimum running times will reflect 'express' services, maximum running times will reflect 'all stops' services. Running times on all lines will be affected by Temporary Speed Restrictions over extended periods and Permanent Speed Restrictions applicable at various times over the years in question due to, for example:

- Significant Infrastructure improvement or repair works (track conditions)
- Damage – flooding/subsidence etc.
- Vandalism/civil disorder
- Other extraneous factors such as Third Party works / interfaces

On the Derry line, in particular, scheduled running times are influenced by the number of trains which have to meet and cross on what is a single track infrastructure with passing loop. Between 2001 and 2004 a maximum of 18 trains operated per day. Now NIR operates 38 trains per day on the same infrastructure.

Details of minimum/maximum journey times year on year are as outlined in the table below.

Min - Max Journey Times to Belfast Great Victoria Street / Belfast Central

Note: For most of 2005 rail services were suspended on the Larne line due to track re-lay and bus substitution measures were put in place.

Park-and-ride Facilities: Dungiven

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he would consider carrying out a feasibility study to establish the need for a Park and Ride facility for Translink passengers at Dungiven.

(AQW 23836/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department previously investigated the purchase of a part site, owned by the old controlled secondary school, to facilitate a dedicated Park and Ride site. However, it did not proceed with the purchase as consultations with local residents indicated strong opposition to the proposals.

An alternative Park and Ride site has been identified at Magherabuoy Terrace, as part of the ongoing development of the A6 dualling scheme between Londonderry and east of Dungiven. It is expected this site would be delivered in conjunction with construction of the first phase of the dualling scheme.

Flags: Health and Safety

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for Regional Development what health and safety assessments have been undertaken of the dangers posed by flags and other materials attached to lamp posts and other street furniture.

(AQW 23850/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department's assessment is that flags or other materials attached to lamp posts or other street furniture do not, generally, cause structural concerns. However, where such attachments interfere with the light output of the street lights or the visibility of traffic signs there would be safety implications for the travelling public. In these situations, attachments would be removed on safety grounds.

In addition, large banners attached to street lighting columns, which have not been designed for this purpose, would also cause safety concerns, due to the effect of wind loading on the structural stability of the column. In such circumstances, officials would seek to have such banners removed on safety grounds.

Lamp Posts

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for Regional Development if his Department considers lamp posts as places of work for Roads Service employees.

(AQW 23851/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My officials are required to work in a range of environments, including offices, depots, stores, workshops, construction sites, and on the public highway. Lamp posts however are not considered to be places of work. Work on lamp posts is generally regarded and treated as site works on the public highway, and is carried out under a range of health and safety regulations and procedures relevant to the specific operation. These include compliance with the necessary signing and guarding of the works to ensure safety of workers and road users.

Level-crossings: Jordanstown and Trooperslane

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for Regional Development if his Department will bid for funding under the June Monitoring Round for improvements to level-crossings at Jordanstown and Trooperslane.

(AQW 23852/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department is providing funding to Translink to enable it to take forward a project to improve signalling arrangements at Jordanstown and Trooperslane level crossings.

The works will help reduce the duration of level crossing barriers/road closures when trains are in this line section.

The project is expected to be fully complete by late summer this year.

Pay and Display: Maintenance Costs

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the cost of maintenance and repairs for all Pay and Display car parks, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 23858/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I assume the Member's question relates to the maintenance of Pay and Display equipment.

My Department currently has 609 Pay and Display machines, of which, 275 are on-street and 334 off-street. During the last three years, the number of Pay and Display machines has fluctuated due to car parks changing from kiosk operated or free car parks to Pay and Display.

Maintenance of on-street and off-street Pay and Display machines is carried out under the same contract, therefore, figures for on-street and off-street are not compiled separately.

Details of the costs for maintenance and repair of all Pay and Display equipment, in each of the last three financial years, are provided in the table below:

Year	Maintenance and Repair of all Pay and Display Machines
2010/11	£325,832
2011/12	£399,160
2012/13	£364,615

Translink: Racism/Sectarianism

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail what plans he has to raise awareness of, and apply a zero tolerance approach to, the issue of racism and sectarianism on Translink buses.

(AQW 23890/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink bus drivers are trained to deal with difficult situations generally, including the conduct of passengers.

As an organisation, Translink has a zero tolerance towards any display of racism and sectarianism and staff use their discretion to deal with such situations as and when they arise. I fully endorse this approach.

Door-2-Door Transport Scheme

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the progress that has been made in securing a long-term provider for the Door-2-Door Transport Scheme.

(AQW 23892/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: At the end of last year my Department commenced a project to secure long-term arrangements for the provision of a Door-2-Door-type transport scheme. A multi-disciplined team from across my Department and Central Procurement Directorate [DFP] was established to identify and deliver a scheme that would meet the transportation needs of the elderly and disabled people living in urban areas.

As part of the project, a workshop was held earlier this year to specify the scope and timescale for the project. This highlighted the complex interaction between a number of the Department's Accessible Transport Services including provision in rural and urban areas. As these services have been developed and implemented at different times, the project team identified the need for a review of the relevant policy objectives. This work is on-going as part of the project and when completed will enable the Department to identify an accessible transportation service that meets the transportation needs of the elderly and disabled people.

Water Mains: Ballygorian Road, Hilltown

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 22682/11-15, if the water mains extension due to commence in November 2013 will reach each property on the Ballygorian Road, Hilltown.

(AQW 23965/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that the purpose of replacing the water main on Ballygorian Road, Hilltown is to increase water pressure to properties in the area to at least the minimum standard of 1.5 bar pressure at the property supply point of connection to the main. The new main will be available to all properties on the road, and existing connections will be transferred to the new main on a like for like basis. Any new connections will need to be applied for and approved by NIW's Customer Connection team in the normal way. Guidance notes and an application form are available on the NIW website at www.niwater.com.

Where properties are at an elevated ground level relative to their connection to the public water main, it may be necessary for individual homeowners to boost the water pressure to their property by fitting and maintaining a domestic booster pump on their private supply pipe.

Department for Social Development

Private Sector Landlords: Prosecution

Mr Copeland asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of private sector landlords that have been prosecuted for failing to carry out work specified in notices of unfitness or disrepair, in each of the last three years; and the average level of fine imposed during this period.

(AQW 22469/11-15)

Mr McCausland (The Minister for Social Development): The number of private sector landlords that have been prosecuted for failing to carry out work specified in notices of unfitness or disrepair, in each of the last three years; and the average level of fine imposed during this period is detailed below:

Year	No of landlords where prosecution proceedings commenced.	Result of Prosecution
2010/11	2	1 case adjourned and £500 fine for the other.
2011/12	5	2 cases withdrawn (work carried out) 1 fined £500, 1 fined £750 1 convicted no fine imposed.
2012/13	2	1 withdrawn (work carried out) 1 fined £500

Private-rented Sector: Fitness Inspections

Mr Copeland asked the Minister for Social Development how many fitness inspections in the private rented sector were carried out, by each District and Borough Council, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 22471/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The number of fitness inspections carried out in the private rented sector by each District and Borough Council, in each of the last three years, is detailed below.

District Council	No of inspections carried out
	2010/11	2011/12	2012/13

Private-rented Sector: Fitness Standard

Mr Copeland asked the Minister for Social Development what action has been taken to progress Action 5 of the Department's private rented sector strategy on standard of fitness.

(AQW 22472/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Following the issue of the Private Rented Sector Strategy in 2010, a stakeholder group was established to take forward proposals to enhance the fitness standard applicable to the private rented sector. However, the statutory fitness standard currently applies across all housing tenures, and not just the private rented sector.

My Department's new Housing Strategy Action Plan, due to be published shortly, will set out timescales for taking this work forward. I anticipate we will consult on a proposed standard during 2014 and seek to commence the legislative process for changes to the fitness standard within this Assembly mandate.

Information Service: DSD Staff

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development how many staff are employed in his Department's Information Service; and what is the annual cost of this service.

(AQW 23040/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Department for Social Development employs six Executive Information Service staff to deliver communications services to the Department, the Social Security Agency and the Northern Ireland Child Maintenance Service.

Salary cost for 2013/14, based on averages, is £257,000.

Diversity Training: DSD Staff

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister for Social Development what training and monitoring systems are in place to ensure that staff respect and understand people from an ethnic minority background.

(AQW 23369/11-15)

Mr McCausland: All staff undertake a 'Diversity Now' training course and then receive refresher training every three years. Additionally, every six months, all staff in the Department are reminded of their responsibilities through circulation of the Equal Opportunities documentation. Complaints relating to this work area are regularly monitored to highlight specific trends and identify training needs.

From a customer perspective, customer facing business areas of the Department have customer complaints procedures in place, and regular monitoring of all complaints is undertaken to identify trends and areas of concerns.

Ethnic Minorities: DSD Action

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister for Social Development what action his Department is taking to protect ethnic minority communities.

(AQW 23506/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 requires my Department to have due regard to (inter alia) the need to promote equality of opportunity between people of different racial groups. The Department's Equality Scheme sets out how we will fulfil those duties.

New policies and decisions are screened before implementation, to ensure that any impact on Section 75 groups (including people of different racial groups). Any adverse impacts identified are mitigated, or an alternative policy adopted

Diversity Training: DSD Agencies

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister for Social Development what action his Department is taking to train Jobs and Benefits, Housing Executive and other front line staff to respect and understand people from ethnic minority backgrounds.

(AQW 23512/11-15)

Mr McCausland: My Department provides extensive training for all staff to respect and understand claimants from ethnic minority backgrounds.

The Department for Social Development runs a mandatory Diversity Now training programme for all new staff, and refresher on-line training is provided to all staff every 3 years. The training is supplemented by Equal Opportunity Policy Guidance which is accessible through the staff Intranet. The guidance is circulated regularly and it is compulsory that all staff read, discuss and sign that they understand the content on a six monthly basis. Branch Managers complete a Certificate of Assurance each month confirming staff compliance to Equal Opportunity policies.

The Housing Executive runs extensive cultural awareness, Race Relations Act and Section 75 training programmes for all staff. The Race Relations Act section of the Equality Awareness training was developed in conjunction with the Multi Cultural Resource Centre. To date over 2,500 staff have attended Equality Awareness training. Training is available on using and accessing communication support services for people who do not have English as a first language. The Building Relationships in Communities training programme also provides staff with training in good relations with all customers. Additionally to structured training events, the Housing Executive staff have access to a Cultural Awareness Handbook and receive bulletins from their Equality Unit in relation to communicating with customers whose first language is not English and a yearly Black and Minority Ethnic and Migrant Worker Mapping Update. The Housing Executive has also established a Consultative Forum on Equality and Black and Minority Ethnic Forum, which provide feedback from representatives of Black and Minority Ethnic communities on how the Housing Executive works with Black and Minority Ethnic customers.

Dignity at Work: DSD Cases

Mr Spratt asked the Minister for Social Development how many Dignity at Work cases have been lodged in his Department in each of the last five years, broken down by (i) core department; and (ii) non-departmental public body; and how many of these cases have been successfully resolved.

(AQW 23590/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The information relating to the number of Dignity at Work (DAW) cases lodged in each of the last five financial years in both the core Department and the non-Departmental public bodies is included at Table 1. The cases are categorised as 'closed' when they have been considered fully under the DAW policy. The 'closed' category includes cases that have been investigated and upheld, partially upheld, not upheld or withdrawn. It will also include cases that were considered and not taken forward to investigation.

Sandy Row/Shafesbury Square Development Proposals

Mr Spratt asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the Sandy Row/Shafesbury Square Development proposals.

(AQW 23710/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Department for Social Development has been working with the South Belfast Partnership Board to commission a Physical Development Framework for Shafesbury Square and the surrounding areas of south Belfast. The aim of the project is to set out a shared vision of the area's development potential that can be used by statutory bodies involved in regeneration and private developers, over the next decade, to inform their development priorities. Following a procurement competition, GM Design Associates has been appointed to take this work forward. It is anticipated that the results of their findings will be available in December 2013.

Welfare Reform: Social Security Agency

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Social Development what additional resources have been made available to the Social Security Agency to address any business demands resulting from Welfare Reform; and for what purposes have any such funds been identified.

(AQW 23746/11-15)

Mr McCausland: In the Spending Review 2010 settlement the Social Security Agency received the following additional funding for Welfare Reform, as a result of bids submitted in the Spending Review Process.

£'K	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14	2014/15	Total

This funding is being used to implement the reforms contained in the Welfare Reform programme. The detailed activities and related requirements and funding needs are being assessed through the Welfare Reform projects which are being taken forward by the Social Security Agency. These projects cover the implementation of Universal Credit, Personal Independence Payment, Social Fund reforms, Fraud and Error Strategy, Employment and Support Allowance Legislative changes and Appeals reforms. Funding has also been made available to the Department for Employment and Learning and the Department of Health Social Services and Public Safety for the purposes of implementing measures associated with Welfare Reform.

Incapacity Benefit: Claimant Assessments

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Social Development when those people who are in receipt of Incapacity Benefit will have completed their reassessment process.

(AQW 23779/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Work commenced on 28 February 2011 to reassess the claims of approximately 83,000 existing Incapacity Benefit, Severe Disablement Allowance and Income Support (paid on the grounds of incapacity) claimants to determine if they are entitled to Employment and Support Allowance. At the end of May 2013 over 58,000 claimants had commenced the reassessment journey.

The last cases are expected to commence reassessment in March 2014 and it is estimated these will be completed by the end of June 2014.

Get Britain Building

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Social Development which Housing Associations will be offered the £7.2 million for affordable homes under Get Britain Building, in the current year.

(AQW 23780/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Three Housing Associations have submitted successful bids against the £19 million funding available under the Get Britain Building banner. My officials are currently negotiating the necessary loan agreements with the successful Associations and once these agreements have been signed, I will be announcing the details of the programme and the relevant Housing Associations involved.

I hope to make this announcement before the Summer Recess.

Dignity at Work: Sports Paraphernalia

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to to AQW 22253/11-15, what is the policy under Dignity at Work relating to sports paraphernalia.

(AQW 23810/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Department operates under the NICS Dignity at Work policy. Within the policy, guidance is included as to the common forms of unwanted unreasonable and offensive conduct. Whilst not specifically mentioning sporting paraphernalia, the guidance refers to flags, bunting, emblems and sportswear which may be deemed offensive by others.

Together: Building a United Community: Housing Issues

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development (i) whether he was consulted on the housing issues relevant to his Department prior to the announcement by the First Minister and deputy First Minister on the Together: Building a United Community Strategy; (ii) how any consultation took place; and (iii) when he was consulted.

(AQW 23814/11-15)

Mr McCausland: I have ongoing and regular discussions with the First Minister and deputy First Minister on all matters pertaining to housing. I and my officials are currently considering how to take forward proposals for an additional 10 new shared housing developments in light of the recent announcements by the First Minister and deputy First Minister on Together: Building a United Community.

Coleraine: Retail and Car Parking Developments

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Social Development what is the expected timescale for the retail and car parking developments under consideration for Coleraine Town Centre.

(AQW 23859/11-15)

Mr McCausland: My Department continues to work with the developers of both the Lanes scheme and the Ramparts schemes to ensure that these can commence as soon as they are economically viable. The Department is currently receiving advice on the economic viability of The Lanes scheme and a decision regarding the potential relocation of educational and training services in the town centre, which may be facilitated as part of the Ramparts scheme.

Jobseeker's Allowance: IT System Fault

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Social Development what fault existed within the Job Seekers Allowance (JSA) IT payment system in the Foyle area; and how many claimants this fault has prevented from receiving the JSA payments on the correct payment date.

(AQW 23865/11-15)

Mr McCausland: To ensure that all claimants receive their Jobseekers Allowance payments by the due date, arrangements are made to advance payments around bank holidays. A problem was identified for Jobseekers Allowance claimants for the 27th May Bank Holiday whereby due to a system fault, payments were not automatically credited to some claimants account on the due date. In Foyle Jobs and Benefits Office three claimants reported on the 28th May that they had not received their payment. The due payments were credited to their bank account within four hours of the claimant notifying the office. The issue has been escalated and is being investigated.

Housing Executive: North Down Demolitions

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the timescales for any proposed demolition of Housing Executive properties in North Down.

(AQW 23935/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The only proposed demolition of Housing Executive properties in North Down is for the Kilclief Flats in the Kilcooley Estate, Bangor. The Northern Ireland Housing Executive is in the process of tendering for a specialist demolitions contractor to allow them to progress this demolition.

This process involves the preparation of the contract documents, the tender process itself and the subsequent analysis and awarding of the tender.

This is being treated as a priority and it is anticipated that work will commence on site in September 2013.

Heating Oil: Affordability

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Social Development, in light of increasing fuel poverty, what steps he will take to address retailers charging up to £1 per litre for heating oil dispensed in drums, when the same oil is available for delivery in homes at 55.5p per litre for larger quantities.

(AQW 23951/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The most recent Northern Ireland House Condition Survey notes a slight decrease in fuel poverty from 44% in 2009 to 42% in 2011. My Department's Fuel Poverty Strategy recognises that the price and affordability of home heating oil is a contributory factor to fuel poverty and that some low income households can find it difficult to budget for large deliveries of oil. The strategy takes forward a range of measures to alleviate fuel poverty and targets those most affected by fuel poverty.

The regulation of the price of utilities is a matter for the Department of Enterprise Trade and Investment working with the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation. The Department of Enterprise Trade and Investment has advised that the Office of Fair Trading report published in October 2011 considered that the Northern Ireland oil distribution sector is transparent and competitive on price, with retail prices cheaper than most regions in Great Britain and the Republic of Ireland. Regulation of the Northern Ireland heating oil industry would result in additional costs to consumers and is unlikely to result in the unit price of oil in 20 litre containers being reduced by a significant amount. Oil retail prices respond to fluctuating international wholesale prices which are outside the control of government.

The Northern Ireland Oil Federation in conjunction with the Consumer Council for Northern Ireland agreed a Customer Charter for oil consumers, which was published in October 2012. This includes codes of practice, standards of customer care, complaints procedures, and general customer advice on servicing and safety. The Charter builds on the Voluntary Agreement between the Northern Ireland Oil Federation and the Department.

Primary Schools: Rural Closures

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Social Development whether he plans to raise any concerns with the Minister of Education on the proposals to close some rural primary schools, following the public consultation on draft area plans for primary provision which ended on 1 June 2013.

(AQW 23955/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The draft area plans for primary provision are a matter for the Minister of Education, however should any members of the community who are served by my Departments Neighbourhood Renewal programme raise concerns; then I will of course raise them with the Education Minister.

Apartments: North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development how many unfinished (i) one; and (ii) two bedroom apartments there are in North Down.

(AQW 24001/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that, in relation to social housing, the table below shows the number of two bedroom apartments that are currently on site and yet to complete in the North Down Parliamentary Constituency. Currently, there are no schemes on site in this constituency which include one bedroom apartments.

On site year	No. of Two Bedroom Apartments
2009/10	6
2012/13	47
Total	53

Housing Executive: Occupancy Rates in Newtownabbey, Carrickfergus and Larne

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the occupancy rates for Housing Executive units in (i) Newtownabbey2; (ii) Carrickfergus; and (iii) Larne.

(AQW 24012/11-15)

Mr McCausland: At 31 May 2013, the Housing Executive had 5,337 properties within their Newtownabbey 2, Carrickfergus and Larne local office areas. Of these, 78 properties were vacant; with only 22 in a lettable condition. The remainder were vacant for a variety of reasons such as undergoing repairs or decanting of tenants.

The table below details the breakdown of vacant stock by the various Housing Executive local offices in question.

Local Office area	Total Stock	Tenanted Stock	Total Vacant
Newtownabbey 2	2,138	2115	23
Carrickfergus	1,901	1863	38
Larne	1,298	1281	17
Total	5,337	5259	78

Social Housing: Waiting List, Dromore, County Down

Mrs Hale asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the current social housing waiting list for Dromore, Co. Down.

(AQW 24053/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The table below details the social housing waiting list for Dromore as at 1 June 2013.

Area	Social Housing Waiting List
Dromore Rural Cottages	2
Dromore Town Centre	76
Dromore/Ballela	0
Total	78

Social Housing: Newbuild at Bayview Park, Derrymore

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the proposed new build social housing at Bayview Park, Derrymore, Aghagallon, including the timescale for completion.

(AQW 24056/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The proposed scheme at Bayview Park for 4 No. 5 person/3 bedroom units is being taken forward by Clanmil Housing Association. A Consultant Architect has been appointed and Clanmil intend to commence the community consultation process by end June, with a view to submitting a planning application in September/October 2013.

The Housing Association is currently working towards achieving an onsite start for this scheme of March 2014.

Maximising Incomes and Outcomes Community Roadshows

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) the number of Maximising Incomes and Outcomes community roadshows that have been planned to date; (ii) the cost of these roadshows; (iii) the sponsorship that has been received for each roadshow; (iv) how sponsorship was sought and what procurement process was followed; (v) the monitoring and evaluation criteria that have been identified in relation to assessing the outcome of the roadshows.

(AQW 24075/11-15)

Mr McCausland:

- (i) The first Maximising Incomes & Outcomes Community Roadshow Event is planned for 20 June 2013 in the Ballymoney Council area. A similar event is planned for each Council area across Northern Ireland by 2016.
- (ii) It is anticipated that the first roadshow will cost in the region of £1,000.

- (iii) No financial sponsorship has been sought or received for the roadshows.
- (iv) No financial sponsorship has been sought or received for the roadshows.
- (v) The following criteria will be used after each roadshow in each Council area:
 - The number of people attending;
 - The number of organisations participating to promote benefits, services and supports;
 - The number of benefit entitlement checks delivered; and
 - The amount of people benefiting and the additional benefits secured.

Written Answers to Questions

Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister

Active Ageing Strategy

Mr McCarthy asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the Active Ageing Strategy.
(AQO 3829/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness (The First Minister and deputy First Minister): The new draft Active Ageing Strategy has been extensively reworked following feedback from the Ageing Strategy Advisory Group, chaired by Claire Keatinge, the Commissioner for Older People.

The draft Active Ageing Strategy highlights the key issues facing older people and will be implemented through the Delivering Social Change framework with a focus on what departments can do to add to existing work to make a strategic change to services or programmes in relation to older people.

The specific scope of the Delivering Social Change Signature Programmes, their associated targets and reporting mechanisms are currently the focus of revised discussions with departments. We are keen that these targets should be robust and ambitious and have asked officials to revisit this in a new round of meetings with relevant departments prior to full public consultation.

Age Discrimination: Goods, Facilities and Services

Mr Agnew asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister when the consultation on age discrimination in the delivery of goods, facilities and services will be launched.
(AQW 23165/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: We are currently considering the scope of the legislation and the implications of the various options available to us for taking this forward.

When we are satisfied that a full suite of policy proposals has been developed to achieve the intended outcome, we will launch the consultation.

Peace Building and Conflict Resolution Centre

Mr Nesbitt asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, pursuant to AQW 22807/11-15, to outline the relevant guidance referred to in the answer.
(AQW 23801/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The projections were calculated in line with departmental guidance relevant to the internal business case process.

Peace Building and Conflict Resolution Centre: Education, Research, Teaching and Learning Work

Mr Nesbitt asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, pursuant to AQW 22921/11-15, to outline the preliminary overview of the Education, Research, Teaching and Learning work strand of the Peace Building and Conflict Resolution Centre.
(AQW 23804/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Education, Research, Teaching and Learning work strand of the Peace Building and Conflict Resolution Centre will support conflict resolution, peace building studies and research both here and internationally.

It will potentially provide a venue for local conferences, workshops and summer schools and explore issues relating to conflict, racism and wider citizenship work. It will build on the existing expertise of Queen's University, the University of Ulster and other education providers.

Extensive stakeholder engagement will take place on the development of the functions and services of this important work strand. No final decisions have been taken on the nature of the work.

Internet: Online Dangers

Mrs Overend asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the gapping and mapping exercise in relation to internet safety for children.

(AQW 23916/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Given growing concern over the online dangers children face, OFMDFM in collaboration with the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety initiated an exercise earlier this year to take stock of actions being undertaken or planned by relevant Executive Departments to address this issue.

To facilitate this exercise, key departments were asked to report on current actions under the headings of policy and strategy, awareness, best practice, regulation, research and monitoring and 'other' gaps in terms of existing actions or measures and any further actions which could be taken forward to promote better internet safety for children and young people.

The opportunities for cross-departmental action in response to the findings are currently under consideration.

M1: Balmoral/Knockmore Link

Mr Craig asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, given the success of the recent Balmoral Show at its new venue, can they confirm that adequate funds will be provided to facilitate the provision of the M1 link and fit for purpose infrastructure between the site and the Knockmore rail halt.

(AQO 4234/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The regeneration of the Maze/Long Kesh site is one of the Executive's commitments identified under the Programme for Government for 2011-15. Under that commitment, a key objective for the Maze/Long Kesh Development Corporation is delivery of the necessary infrastructure both internally and externally to facilitate the development of the site.

OFMDFM allocated £21m in the current CSR period to prepare the site and provide the essential utilities, including development of necessary roads infrastructure. Therefore, funding for the infrastructure you have outlined could be made available from within the current allocation, if required.

The processes and timescales involved in developing this type of infrastructure would indicate that we may require expenditure in the next budget period and, if so, we would bid to secure all necessary funds to ensure the completion the work.

We are committed to working with the MLK Development Corporation, Roads Service and the Minister for Regional Development to seek the completion of the necessary road infrastructure as quickly as possible.

St Patrick's Barracks, Ballymena

Mr Frew asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for what short-term purpose will the land at St Patricks Barracks, Ballymena be used, until a master plan for the site is agreed.

(AQO 4242/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Our officials have met with and continue to liaise with Ballymena Borough Council to consider if there is potential for short-term uses for the land at St Patricks Barracks in Ballymena. Discussions have also been held with other public sector organisations on the potential use of land or buildings as an interim measure but no firm proposals have been received and the lack of on-site utilities and services limits the uses which would be feasible.

Under the Hillsborough Agreement, the St Patricks site was gifted to the Executive to raise funds from the eventual disposal of the site and not for the purposes of regeneration by OFMDFM.

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

Civil Service: DARD Staff

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail (i) the number of people; and (ii) the community background, of those recruited to her Department, in each of the last five calendar years.

(AQW 23784/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): Although the NICS Departments are largely autonomous business units covering a wide range of functions and responsibilities, their Human Resource policies and practices including recruitment are common and corporate. In addition, for the purposes of the fair employment legislation, the NICS is regarded as one employer and the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP) therefore carries out equality monitoring on behalf of all NICS Departments and Agencies.

The NICS does not hold the religious background of staff, however as required by fair employment legislation, information is gathered on the perceived community background of staff and applicants for NICS posts. This enables DFP to provide the statutory annual monitoring returns to the Equality Commission for NI and to carry out regular three-yearly reviews of workforce composition and employment policies and practices.

The information requested is set out below:

	Protestant	Roman Catholic	Not Determined	Total
2012	43	51	13	107
2011	30	39	13	82
2010	33	38	6	77
2009	41	32	6	79
2008	88	77	12	177

Note

Based on joiners records on HRMS/HRConnect.

Includes both permanent and temporary appointees.

Excludes existing NICS employees successful in external recruitment competitions.

Single Farm Payment: Woodland Exemptions

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to clarify the position of farmers in relation to Single Farm Payment for buffer zone tree compounds/areas created through the building of major roads and such similar constructions.

(AQW 23928/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Land will only be eligible for Single Farm Payment (SFP) following the completion of building or construction work if it remains in agricultural use and meets Land Eligibility requirements. These are set out in the 2013 guidance booklet on the DARD website at: http://www.dardni.gov.uk/guide_to_land_eligibility_updated_2013_final.pdf

In general, woodland is not eligible for Single Farm Payment (SFP).

There are however, some exceptions to the eligibility of trees and woodland for SFP. These include:

- Grazed woodland with more than 50 trees per hectare may be considered eligible if there has been a history of acceptable grazing practice and there continues to be sufficient forage and evidence of acceptable grazing. The grazing must not be damage the ecological value of the site. If these areas have been fenced off and are not accessible to and grazed by animals, then they are not eligible for SFP.
- Land that was eligible and on which SFP was paid in respect of 2008 scheme year and is subsequently (after 31 December 2008) converted to forestry under an EU scheme or has been planted with trees under an EU Agri-environment scheme, remains eligible for the duration of the forestry or EU Agri-environment scheme.

If there are single trees, a line or a small clump of trees with grazing available right up to the trees, these can be considered eligible.

Where eligible trees or woodland have been temporarily removed from agricultural use to accommodate land vested for the building of roads or other similar construction, it may be possible to consider this under the force majeure or exceptional circumstances provisions in relation to a claim for SFP.

Farmers who find themselves in this position have to complete the relevant application form within 10 days of being in a position to do so and provide evidence to support this application. These are considered on a case by case basis. Further information is available in the Guide on how to complete the 2013 Single Application on the DARD website at http://www.dardni.gov.uk/index/publications/pubs-dard-grants-and-funding/publications_grants_and_funding-single_farm_payment_2013.htm

North Down: Rural Villages

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the villages in North Down that are classified as rural villages.

(AQW 23992/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The villages in North Down that are classified as rural, for Rural Development funding purposes are

Rural Regeneration: County Down Spend

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the villages in County Down that have benefited from rural regeneration spending; and the total provided to each village.

(AQW 23994/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I am presuming your question relates to rural development spending and in particular the Village Renewal and Development Measure of Axis 3 of the current Rural Development Programme. The villages in County Down that have benefited from rural development spending, so far, and the total provided to each village is listed in the attached Annex.

Single Farm Payment: Late Payments

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, of the farms inspected where Single Farm Payment applications had been submitted, how many payments were made five months or more after the initial application was made, in each of the last four calendar years.

(AQW 24006/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: In the past four years the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development has made all Single Farm Payments (SFP) more than five months after 15 May, the annual deadline for the submission of applications without penalty. This is because the European Council legislation which governs the administration of the SFP Scheme permits Paying Agencies to commence full payments on or after 1 December each year.

European Fisheries Fund: Budget

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail (i) the budget available from the European Fisheries Fund for each measure for each year between 2009 and 2015; (ii) the amount spent on each measure within each year to date; (iii) the number of applications for each measure which were (a) successful; and (b) unsuccessful for each year to date.

(AQW 24030/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The EFF budget available is set out in Table 1, the yearly spend in Table 2 and number of successful and unsuccessful applications in Table 3 below.

In addition to the yearly measure level spend detailed in Table 2, £161,336 of Axis 5 Technical Assistance has been spent by the Department to assist with the delivery of the Programme.

Table 1: total budget allocation approved in the Measure level business cases for the period 2009 to 2015

European Fisheries Fund: DARD Guidance

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what advice, support and assistance her Department provides to the fishing, processing and aquaculture sectors, apart from the grant support element of the European Fisheries Fund. (AQW 24031/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department's Sea Fisheries Inspectorate offers advice, support and guidance through fishery officers based at the 3 main fishing ports of Ardglass, Portavogie and Kilkeel and the north coast. Technical advice and assistance is also frequently provided to the industry by Headquarters based inspectorate and policy staff on issues such as compliance with European Regulations, fishing vessel licencing, quota and effort management, and making grant applications.

The Aquaculture and Fish Health inspectorate also provide technical support to fish farmers and are available to facilitate trade in aquaculture products. Again, advice and guidance to the aquaculture sector on implementation of the EU aquatic animal health regime including assistance with regard to import and export requirements documentation is readily available.

The Department also funds the Fisheries and Aquatics Ecosystems Division of Agri-food and Biosciences Institute (AFBI). AFBI carries out a comprehensive range of research and surveys of fish stocks and marine ecosystems around our coast that is used by fisheries managers and stakeholders manage and develop sustainable fisheries. Examples of AFBI's recent work includes camera surveys of the Irish sea Nephrops stocks and acoustic surveys of Irish Sea herring stocks that have been vital for robust stock assessments and increasing and maintaining the Total Allowable Catch available to our fishermen.

My Department also co – funds, along with the Sea Fish Industry Authority, a dedicated local facilitator who works on behalf of sea fishing industry to identify and develop beneficial projects and opportunities.

European Fisheries Fund: Applications

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development when each measure within the European Fisheries Fund programme (i) had its measure-level business case approved; and (ii) opened for applications. (AQW 24032/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Please find attached at Appendix 1 a table detailing the dates of approval of the business cases for each measure of the European Fisheries Fund and when each opened for applications.

Appendix 1

Measure	Date measure level business case approved	Date opened
Investments on board fishing vessels and selectivity	24 August 2010	1 September 2010
Small-scale coastal fishing	21 February 2011	23 February 2011
Productive investments in aquaculture	27 July 2009	3 August 2009

Protection and development of aquatic fauna and flora	26 January 2010*	8 April 2010
Fishing ports, landing sites and shelters	7 August 2009	24 August 2009

*No measure level business case was required as the only identified need for support under this measure was the Lough Neagh Eel Management Plan. Matched National funding is provided by DCAL, which secured budget approval on 26 January 2010.

Fisheries Grants Unit: Staff

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the number of staff employed within the Fisheries Grants Unit in each of the last four years.

(AQW 24033/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Please find attached at Appendix 1 a summary of the staff employed within Fisheries Grants Unit in each of the last four years

Agrifood: Review Recommendations

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 23334/11-15, to list the 63 recommendations of The Independent Review Panel accepted by her Department; and the actions taken to implement these recommendations.

(AQW 24055/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The 63 accepted or accepted in principle recommendations from the NI Agri-Food Better Regulation and Simplification Review which my Department had input to are listed on the attached table (placed in library) together with the actions taken to implement them.

Funding: GAA/Cricket Clubs

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many (i) cricket; and (ii) GAA clubs have applied for funding for Capital Projects under the recent Strategic Projects offer.

(AQW 24058/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Under the recent competitive call for strategic projects there were no applications from cricket clubs and two applications for GAA clubs. Of the two GAA clubs one was successful in securing an offer of funding.

Brucellosis: Cattle Movement

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 22602/11-15, how many animal movements were there in the twelve months ending 28 February 2013.

(AQW 24076/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: There have been 1,548,048 individual cattle movements in the north of Ireland, in the year up to 28 February 2013.

USPCA

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development who regulates the Ulster Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

(AQW 24246/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The Ulster Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (the USPCA) is a registered charity and as such is regulated by the Charity Commission. Historically, the USPCA has had no statutory role or enforcement powers under animal welfare legislation; and the Welfare of Animals Act 2011 does not change that. The provisions to protect animal welfare in the Welfare of Animals Act apply equally to the USPCA as they apply to any individual, organisation or charity.

Forest Service: Land

Mr F McCann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the land owned by the Forest Service in the greater Belfast area; and to provide a map detailing this.

(AQW 24253/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The Forest Service agency of my Department, manages approximately 93ha of land in the Greater Belfast area, at Belvoir Park Forest and Hydebank Wood. Approximately 34ha of this land is owned and the remaining 59 ha is leased from the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. A map detailing the total area is attached (placed in library).

Smith v USPCA

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, in light of the Smith versus Ulster Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals civil case in Armagh court on 21 May 2013, what measures will she employ to monitor and regulate charities who work with animals and whether this is best addressed through new or amended legislation.

(AQW 24261/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The welfare of animals here is protected by the Welfare of Animals Act 2011 (the 2011 Act). The 2011 Act is enforced by my Department in respect of farmed animals; Councils in respect of non-farmed animals; and the PSNI in respect of animal fighting and cases where other criminal activity is involved. It is an offence under the 2011 Act to allow an animal to suffer unnecessarily. Under the 2011 Act, Inspectors and PSNI Officers have powers to investigate such cases and prosecute offenders as necessary. These provisions apply to all protected animals including those held in animal sanctuaries run by charities and others.

As well as this, the 2011 Act provides powers for my Department to make subordinate legislation to regulate any activity involving animals in order to protect their welfare. Therefore, if it is deemed necessary, Regulations can be made specifically to protect the welfare of animals held in sanctuaries and charities.

Officials from my Department are reviewing Regulations regarding the welfare of animals in petshops, animal boarding establishments and riding establishments, the inspection of which currently falls to my Department. These Regulations were made under the Welfare of Animals Act 1972 and now need to be remade under the 2011 Act. I have asked my officials to take the opportunity to consider whether we need to legislate for other establishments such as open farms, pet grooming businesses, and animal charities, or sanctuaries. Any proposals will be subject to a full public consultation exercise.

Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure

Ulster-Scots: DCAL Publications

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what other publications her Department has produced since the inception of the Ulster Scots newspaper.

(AQW 20488/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): My Department has produced two Ulster-Scots related publications since the inception of the Ulster-Scots newspaper, as follows:

- (i) The draft Strategy for Ulster Scots Language, Heritage and Culture in July 2012; and
- (ii) The proposed Development and Research Strategy and Associated Grant Scheme for The Ulster-Scots Academy in October 2012.

In addition to the two above strategies, the Ulster-Scots Agency provide a monthly electronic Newsletter to those who have subscribed to the service via the Agency website.

The Agency also produced an annual magazine – 'Oot an Aboot', with editions in December 2008, December 2009 and June 2011. This magazine is no longer produced.

Pitches: Council Area

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the number of third and fourth generation synthetic sports pitches in each council area.

(AQW 21288/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Neither my Department nor Sport NI retains up to date information on the number of third and fourth generation synthetic pitches in each council area. I have, however, asked Sport NI to carry out an audit of all sports facilities across the north of Ireland, including synthetic pitches. When completed, this information will be made available on Sport NI's website.

Pitches: Council Area

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the number of new third and fourth generation synthetic sports pitches that are planned for each council area over the next three years.

(AQW 21289/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Responsibility for the provision of local sports facilities rests, in the first instance, with district councils. Sport NI, which is an arms length body of my Department, advises, however, that it will be providing assistance through its Sport Matters Community Capital Programme towards the development of 3rd generation synthetic pitches in 2013/14. This will be subject to applicants meeting the terms and conditions of Sport NI's Project Management Reports. Pitches in the following council areas are planned:

District Council	Number of pitches
Ards Borough Council	1
Armagh City and District Council	1
Banbridge District Council	1
Craigavon Borough Council	2
Dungannon District Council	2
Larne Borough Council	1

In addition, I have asked Sport NI to carry out an audit of all sports facilities across the north of Ireland. This will include information on existing and planned synthetic pitches which in turn will assist with strategic planning. When completed, this information will be made available on Sport NI's website.

Glenavon Football Club: Funding

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for a breakdown of all funding and assistance provided by her Department to Glenavon Football Club, in the last five years.

(AQW 21463/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Sport NI, an arms length body of my Department, is the primary funder to sport in the north of Ireland. During the last 5 years, up to 31 March 2013, Sport NI has provided exchequer funding totalling £367,537 to Glenavon Football Club. This is broken down as follows:-

Year	Amount	Programme
2009/10	£32,260	Soccer Strategy Playing Facilities
2010/11	£208,598	Soccer Strategy Playing Facilities
2010/11	£12,302	Stadia Safety Urgent Works (Infrastructure)
2011/12	£94,598	Soccer Strategy Playing Facilities
2011/12	£6,760	Stadia Safety Urgent Works (Infrastructure)
2011/12	£5,342	Stadia Safety Urgent Works (Equipment)
2012/13	£7,677	Soccer Strategy Playing Facilities

Translation Services: DCAL Spend

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how much her Department spent on translation services for visiting foreign nationals in each of the last five years.

(AQW 21527/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Department spent £2,888 on translation services for visiting foreign nationals in the 2012-13 financial year.

No such costs were incurred in any of the previous four financial years.

National Museums Northern Ireland: Bonuses

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for a breakdown of the bonuses paid to the directors at National Museums Northern Ireland, in each of the last ten years.

(AQW 21533/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The breakdown of the bonuses paid to National Museums' directors in each of the last 10 years is as follows:

Calendar Year	Number of Directors employed	Total amount paid in bonuses (£)
2003	3	50
2004	5	280
2005	5	6,215
2006	7	12,100
2007	7	11,812
2008	8	20,200
2009	8	20,550
2010	6	1,000

Strategic Investment Board: Assets

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 17631/11-15, to detail the nature of the £0.62m in assets that her Department has identified to the Asset Management Unit of the Strategic Investment Board, broken down by year.

(AQW 21584/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The table below provides details of the assets and their valuations provided to the Strategic Investment Board.

I should emphasise that actual disposals, their timing and value may differ from this plan for a number of reasons, including market conditions. At the time of writing, two of the assets have now been disposed of: Ballymacarrett and Andersonstown Libraries.

Disposal Plan	2012/2013 Value	2013/2014 Value	2014/2015 Value
Ligoniel Library	£0.090m
Ballymacarrett Library	£0.075m
Andersonstown Library	£0.080m
Ballynahinch Library HQ	£0.150m
Braniel Library	£0.075m
Gilnahirk library	£0.040m
Dunmurry library	£0.050m
Belvoir library		£0.020m
Gilford library		£0.040m
Totals	£0.560m	£0.060m

Rivers: Water Quality

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what action she is taking to ensure that lay people, such as those in River Trust and angling groups, are trained as samplers and monitors of our rivers.

(AQW 21588/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Department of Environment, through the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA), is responsible for taking water samples and monitoring the water quality of our rivers under the EU Water Framework Directive.

My Department has no role in sampling and monitoring water quality.

Lough Neagh: Illegal Netting

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for her assessment of the impact of the crackdown on illegal netting in Lough Neagh.

(AQW 21641/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: DCAL Fisheries Protection staff continue to carry out intelligence led operations, often in conjunction with other enforcement agencies, to detect, disrupt and deter those involved in illegal fishing activities on Lough Neagh.

Net seizures on Lough Neagh are down on the same period in the previous year, which would indicate that the focussed enforcement activities are having a deterrent effect on those involved in illegal fishing activity.

Lough Neagh: Fish Stocks

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how she plans to collect data on the fish stocks in Lough Neagh. (AQW 21642/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Lough Neagh is the one of the largest freshwater lakes in Europe and this poses significant challenges in collecting accurate fish stock data.

The North Atlantic Salmon Conservation Organisation (NASCO) places commitments on DCAL to record data on wild Atlantic salmon and this work is carried out by the Agri-Foods and Biosciences Institute (AFBI). Data is collected from the tributaries of Lough Neagh through electro-fishing surveys, habitat surveys, monitoring of adult runs through fish counters and from angling catch returns. Electro-fishing surveys and habitat surveys also provide the Department with details of other fish species present in Lough Neagh tributaries.

Eels stocks in Lough Neagh are monitored as part of the Neagh Bann Eel Management Plan and details of monitoring arrangements are detailed within it.

DCAL has commissioned AFBI to carry out a review of the status of wild trout stocks in the DCAL area, including Lough Neagh, and the report on this work is currently being drafted.

AFBI is currently undertaking netting surveys of all fish stocks on Lough Neagh and DCAL will have the results in due course.

Lough Neagh: Illegal Netting

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the amount of illegal netting found in Lough Neagh; and the work ongoing to prevent such illegal netting.

(AQW 21643/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: For the period 1 April 2012 to the end of March 2013, 22 nets with a total length of 23,000m were seized in Lough Neagh by DCAL Fisheries Protection Officers. There have been a total of 111 boat patrols on Lough Neagh during that period.

The Department will seize illegal nets from wherever they are detected including boats, commercial premises, quaysides, vehicles etc.

DCAL Fisheries Protection staff continue to carry out intelligence led operations, often in conjunction with other enforcement agencies, to detect, disrupt and deter those involved in illegal fishing activities on Lough Neagh.

Salmon: Conservation and Protection

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what studies her Department has made of salmon conservation and protection in other jurisdictions; and what lessons have been learned.

(AQW 21656/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department is committed to the work of the North Atlantic Salmon Conservation Organisation (NASCO). NASCO aims to conserve, restore, enhance and manage Atlantic salmon stocks through international co-operation and in exchanging best practice among the participating countries.

My Department reports annually on all salmon conservation measures and activities and the assessments have indicated that we are operating in line with NASCO principles and best practice.

My officials and AFBI scientists are active participants in NASCO meetings and expert panels involving countries within the European Union where wild Atlantic salmon conservation and protection are discussed in detail. They also provide direct support for the EU representatives at the NASCO annual conference.

My Department also works closely with both the Loughs Agency and Inland Fisheries Ireland on salmon conservation and protection issues across Ireland.

Sport NI: Lottery Funding

Mr McDevitt asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how much funding Sport NI has returned to the National Lottery in each of the last three years; and to outline the reasons why this funding was returned.

(AQW 21666/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: In the last three years SportNI has not returned any funding to the National Lottery.

Football: Financial Assistance

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the total financial assistance or capital grants provided to local football teams below the Premiership division, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 21731/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Over the last five years, Sport NI, an arm's-length body of my Department, provided £6,256,009 funding to local football clubs, who were below the Premiership division at the date of the funding award. A breakdown of the total funding provided during this time is shown in the table below: -

Financial Year	Exchequer	Lottery	Total Funding
2008/09	£976,217	£1,642,000	£2,618,217
2009/10	£1,250,775	£245,000	£1,495,775
2010/11	£1,138,541	-	£1,138,541
2011/12	£758,476	-	£758,476
2012/13	£245,000	-	£245,000
Total Funding	£4,369,009	£1,887,000	£6,256,009

Royal Charter

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what plans her Department has to assist towns and cities celebrate the 400th anniversary of the granting of the Royal Charter.

(AQW 21751/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I have approved funding for the Ministerial Advisory Group (MAG) – Ulster Scots Academy to undertake a partnership project with the Ulster Historical Foundation, to research the impact and contribution of the award of Town Charters in the early part of the 17th Century.

This project will have a particular emphasis on the Ulster-Scots dimension to Charters awarded across the island of Ireland. The research will be used to develop a Charters award touring programme in conjunction with the Ulster Scots Agency and Foras na Gaeilge to disseminate the findings across the island.

The MAG Academy has also allocated £42,500 to fund the development of a walking trail by Coleraine Borough Council. The project will create a legacy for Coleraine town centre to commemorate the 400th anniversary of the town's Charter.

The Public Record Office of Northern Ireland (PRONI) has delivered a series of lectures on Charter Towns at a number of libraries including Enniskillen, Killyleagh, Bangor and Belfast. A future talk has also been organised for Coleraine. In collaboration with Belfast City Council and the Ulster Society for Irish Historical Studies, PRONI participated in the Belfast 400 Forum and the Belfast 400 Festival. PRONI has also supported 400th exhibitions in Belfast, Newtownards and Coleraine.

Libraries NI is developing a programme of exhibitions, history workshops and talks in partnership with other organisations. Libraries NI also has significant Heritage collections across the north of Ireland and it will be drawing on these resources to support this activity and promoting relevant materials as part of this programme.

National Museums is offering loan of relevant materials to museums and other appropriate venues across the North in support of relevant programmes.

Líofa

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, in relation to the Líofa Initiative, how her Department targeted those from a socially or economically deprived background.

(AQW 21850/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Gaeltacht Bursary Scheme has been developed and the criteria established to target Líofa applicants who are from socially or economically deprived backgrounds and to support individuals with financial outlays which may otherwise be a barrier to them accessing an Irish Language Gaeltacht course.

Applicants must be signed up to Líofa and details of the Gaeltacht Bursary Scheme were e - mailed to all Líofa participants. The Department also advertised the Scheme widely in the newspapers and has distributed posters and leaflets to schools throughout the north which would include schools in socially and economically deprived areas. In addition, details of the Scheme were circulated to a wide range of Irish Language organisations some of which are located in socially and economically deprived areas.

Performing Arts

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure which performing arts events funded by the Arts Council of Northern Ireland, has she attended in the last twelve months.

(AQW 21937/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I receive a large number of invitations to attend performances and other events and meetings related to the arts but due to competing commitments across the spectrum of my Department's responsibilities I am only available to attend a limited number of performing arts events. Not all of these will have received funding from the Arts Council.

During the past twelve months I attended two performing arts events that were funded by the Arts Council of Northern Ireland.

Performing Arts

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how many performing arts events departmental officials have attended in the last twelve months.

(AQW 21938/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: In the 12 months from April 2012 to March 2013 my Departmental Officials have attended 48 performing arts events.

Arts Sector

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what steps she is taking to address the lack of a coherent policy framework for the professional arts sector.

(AQW 21939/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The public consultation on the Arts Council's draft Plan for Arts in Northern Ireland 2013-2018 ends on 29th April. This will be brought for my formal approval once the responses to the consultation have been evaluated. In tandem my Department is currently at the initial stages of scoping the development of an Arts & Culture Strategy for the north.

Creative Industries

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what role the professional performing arts plays in the development of the creative industries.

(AQW 21940/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The performing arts include a diverse range of roles which create employment in the local economy. Whilst the focus is normally onstage, any performance requires a large number of supporting jobs in areas such as set design, costume, lighting and sound.

There are significant interdependencies between the performing arts and other creative industries. Many professionals will learn their 'craft' in theatre and then move into areas such as television, film, music and more broadly into education and community development.

The performing arts therefore help to develop knowledge, skills, training and networks that contribute to the development of the creative industries as a whole.

Capital Overspend

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what steps have been taken to ensure that the capital overspend, that was highlighted in the Audit Office report, cannot be repeated.

(AQW 21965/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I can confirm that my Department has accepted all of the recommendations made by the NIAO in its report and is taking appropriate action. However, it would be inappropriate to comment further in advance of the Public Accounts Committee's review.

Marching Bands: Arts Council Funding

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how much grant funding the Arts Council has awarded to marching bands in each of the last three years.

(AQW 21966/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Over the last three years the Arts Council NI has awarded the following grant funding to Marching Bands:

Financial Year	Funding Awarded
2012/13	£213,491
2011/12	£200,074

Financial Year	Funding Awarded
2010/11	£216,712

Unanswered Question: AQW 20685/11-15

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure why AQW 20685/11-15 has not yet been answered.

(AQW 21994/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: AQW 20685/11-15 was answered on 24 April 2013.

Sports Clubs: Adjustments for People with Disabilities

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what assistance is available for sports clubs to make reasonable adjustments for people with disabilities.

(AQW 22064/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Responsibility for making reasonable adjustments in sports clubs, for people with disabilities rests, in the first instance, with the owners/operators of those clubs. Sport NI, however, which is an arms length body of my Department, invests annually in Disability Sports NI's (DSNI) Disability Mainstreaming Policy, through which advice, support and guidance is available to sports clubs, who are working towards becoming more inclusive.

Furthermore, in partnership with DSNI, Sport NI has developed and launched Design and Management Guidelines aimed at ensuring that all new sports facilities and extended/altered facilities in the north are built and managed to optimum levels of good practice in terms of access for people with disabilities. Further information can be accessed at: [www.dsni.co.uk/joanne/DSNI_-_Sport_NI_Design_&_Management_Guidelines_-_2010_Edition\[1\].pdf](http://www.dsni.co.uk/joanne/DSNI_-_Sport_NI_Design_&_Management_Guidelines_-_2010_Edition[1].pdf)

Soccer Teams: People with Disabilities

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what support is available to groups which wish to establish a soccer team for people with disabilities.

(AQW 22065/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Responsibility for the development of soccer in the north of Ireland, including providing support for the establishment of soccer teams, both for able bodied and disabled people, rests in the first instance with the Irish Football Association (IFA).

I am aware that the IFA has a dedicated Disability Department which aims to ensure that all disabled people have the opportunity to participate in soccer activities and are able to fulfil their potential. Furthermore, over the past 8 years the IFA has implemented an extensive range of programmes in special education, disability football club coaching, leagues, cups and various impairment specific programmes.

Further information on the work of the IFA's Disability Department can be obtained from their website at www.irishfa.com/grassroots/disability-football/

World Police and Fire Games 2013: Volunteers

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure when will those who applied to be volunteers at the World Police and Fire Games 2013 be informed of the outcome of their application.

(AQW 22084/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Notification of volunteers commenced on the 24th April 2013 and will continue through to June 2013.

Salmon: Fishing Licences

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, given the concerns about Northern Ireland's breach of international commitments and the EU Habitats Directive, whether she has issued licences this year for the netting of salmon off the coast.

(AQW 22086/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Applications have been received from two commercial coastal salmon netmen, who, as they did in 2012, provided an undertaking not to fish for salmon during the 2013 season.

In light of the written undertaking not to fish during the 2013 season, my Department has issued licences to the two fishermen.

Salmon: Fishing Licences for Lough Neagh

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how many licences for fishing with nets in Lough Neagh her Department has issued in 2013 to date; and for her assessment of the impact of this on the salmon population in the 2013 season.

(AQW 22088/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: There have been 11 Lough Neagh draft net licences issued so far in 2013. A total of 22 draft net licences were issued in 2012.

Salmon can only be legally taken on Lough Neagh with a draft net, but these are mainly used to target other fish species. Any salmon taken must have a carcass tag inserted. The returns submitted by draft net licence holders indicate that a total of 20 salmon were taken on Lough Neagh in 2012.

All draft net licence holders were sent a letter by the Department asking that they voluntarily do not fish for salmon in 2013 and where possible return any salmon caught to the water unharmed.

The small number of salmon reported taken by licensed fishermen on Lough Neagh would not have a significant impact on the overall population of salmon in the Lough and its tributaries.

Legislation is currently being drafted to take salmon off the Lough Neagh draft net licence from the 2014 season.

Salmon: Illegal Fishing

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how her Department has sought to ensure that no salmon nets have been placed around the coast this year.

(AQW 22089/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: DCAL Fisheries Protection Officers continue to carry out surveillance in the areas in which the coastal netsmen operated to ensure that they are complying with their undertakings not to fish and that no other illegal fishing activity is taking place. Patrols are carried out both at sea and along the coastline.

Salmon: Net Licences

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the negotiations between the holders of licences for salmon nets and her Department on the permanent removal of nets.

(AQW 22090/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Departmental officials have had a series of discussions with the coastal salmon netsmen and this process is on-going.

My Department is currently drafting legislation that will bring about a mandatory cessation of all commercial salmon netting across the DCAL jurisdiction from the 2014 season.

Sectarianism: Boxing/GAA

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline her Department's approach to sectarianism in sport; and whether she plans to launch reviews of sectarianism in boxing and GAA.

(AQW 22120/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I have repeatedly stated that I am committed to combating sectarianism in sport. To that end, my Department's strategy for sport, Sport Matters, contains a number of targets and actions that contribute to curbing sectarianism by helping to promote community cohesion through sport. These include targets to improve participation in sport and physical recreation particularly in under-represented groups of people such as those suffering social and economic inequality. Furthermore, Sport Matters endorses the provision of "shared spaces" for sport that promote community integration. This includes the development of facilities that are safe and accessible to all and the promotion of high standards of spectator conduct at major sporting events. I am aware that the governing body of boxing, the Irish Amateur Boxing Association, has launched a review of past claims of sectarianism within the sport.

Gaelscéal: Circulation/Profit/Loss

Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the circulation figures and the profit/loss recorded for Gaelscéal in each year from 2010 to date.

(AQW 22133/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The average weekly sales figures for the newspaper were as follows:

2010	1,469
2011	1,846
2012	1,314

The publisher of Gaelscéal, Torann na dTonn Teoranta is a limited company and subject to the relevant company's legislation in the South. In addition to not achieving the contractual sales targets, Torann na dTonn reported to Foras na Gaeilge a small profit €534 in 2010 and losses of €52,128 in 2011 and €72,857 in 2012.

UK City of Culture

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure whether discussions have been held between UK City of Culture employees and elected representatives in the North West area to ensure that events held under the auspices of the first UK City of Culture year are capable of support from all sections of the community.

(AQW 22148/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Derry City Council has advised that the Culture Company has had regular engagement with a range of political parties. These parties are represented on the Culture Company Board and have the opportunity to consider and comment upon the events in the City of Culture Programme.

There is also ongoing dialogue with MPs and MLAs and relevant Ministers within the Executive who regularly attend and participate in meetings, briefings, events and launches. The Culture Company actively encourages these stakeholders to be engaged with the events in the Programme.

Furthermore, the Culture Company Chair, Martin Bradley, attends the Unity of Purpose group, chaired by Jim Roddy. This group involves local MPs and MLAs and focuses on shared issues in the city. City Of Culture is a standing item on the agenda.

Outdoor Bowls: Participation

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what steps her Department is taking to increase participation in outdoor bowls.

(AQW 22179/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Responsibility for increasing participation in outdoor bowls rests, in the first instance, with the governing bodies for the sport, the Irish Bowling Association and the Irish Women's Bowling Association. Having said that, my Department's strategy for sport, Sport Matters, identifies a number of high level targets aimed at increasing participation rates in sport generally, including outdoor bowls. To help achieve these targets Sport NI has provided £80,760 in exchequer and lottery funding over the last three years to assist with the development of the sport and increase participation rates.

Outdoor Bowls: Funding

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the financial assistance provided to the sport of bowls in each of the last three years.

(AQW 22180/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Sport NI, an arm's-length body of my Department with primary responsibility for funding to sport in the north of Ireland, provided total funding of £80,760 to the sport of bowls over the last three years, up to 31 March 2013.

Financial Year	Amount	Fund
2010/11	£25,760	Exchequer
2011/12	£55,000	Lottery

NI Screen: DCAL Funding

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what contributions her Department has made to NI Screen to help attract inward investment.

(AQW 22181/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: DCAL is the sponsor department for NI Screen and funds NI Screen's educational and cultural activity which includes funding the Creative Learning Centres, film festivals, After School Film Clubs and skills development training.

NI Screen's skills development activity invests in creative talent through a number of initiatives which build the industry in the north of Ireland and ensure that indigenous talent acquires the necessary skills and expertise to not only create their own projects but also service the large scale productions which ultimately provide the inward investment opportunities.

DETI provides support for the film industry and inward investment through funding from Invest NI.

Safety at Sports Grounds

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (i) to detail all designated (a) grounds; and (b) spectator stands; and (ii) whether temporary spectator seating requires designation under safety at sports grounds legislation.

(AQW 22189/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Details of all sports grounds designated by my Department under the Safety of Sports Grounds (NI) Order 2006 are already publicly available and set out in The Safety of Sports Grounds (Designation) (No.2) Order (NI) 2009. This can be viewed at the following website address:

<http://www.legislation.gov.uk/nisr/2009/295/contents/made>.

Neither spectator stands, nor temporary spectator seating, are subject to the direct designation process specified under the 2006 Order.

Arts/Sports Projects: Upper Bann

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the (i) arts; and (ii) sports projects and organisations that have been supported by her Department in the Upper Bann constituency, in the last two years.

(AQW 22194/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: In the last 2 years, from 1 April 2011, my Department has awarded to the Upper Bann constituency:

- (i) A total of £441,165 to 27 arts projects and organisations through the Arts Council NI; and
- (ii) A total of £742,929 to 10 sports projects and organisations through Sport NI.

Details of these awards are attached at Annex A.

Cricket: Funding

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how much funding has been awarded to cricket in each of the last five years.

(AQW 22248/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Over the last five years Sport NI, an arms length body of my Department, has provided a total of £2,342,726 exchequer and lottery funding to assist with the development of Cricket in the north of Ireland. This is broken down as follows:

Year	Exchequer	Lottery	Grand Total
2008	£436,518	£24,000	£460,518
2009	£629,197	£61,000	£690,197
2010	£377,703	£83,983	£461,686
2011	£262,007	£99,543	£361,550
2012	£226,082	£142,693	£368,775
Total	£1,931,507	£411,219	£2,342,726

Cricket: DCAL Support

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what steps her Department is taking to afford greater support to the sport of cricket.

(AQW 22249/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department, through Sport NI, continues to support the governing body of cricket, Cricket Ireland, in its development of cricket throughout the north of Ireland. Within the last five years Sport NI has provided just over £2.3m exchequer and lottery funding in this regard. Further support from Sport NI to Cricket Ireland, will continue over the next 4 years, with over £700k lottery funding allocated to the sport through the PerformanceFocus programme. This will help cricket to continue improving systems of governance, coaching, club development, talent identification and development and the governing body's academy structure.

Ulster-Scots Folk Orchestra

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure why the Ulster Scots Agency has not answered correspondence from public representatives on the subject of the Ulster Scots Folk Orchestra.

(AQW 22289/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I understand that the Ulster-Scots Agency has now responded to you as the public representative and the representative of the Ulster-Scots Folk Orchestra. The response which was issued on 1 May 2013 includes an apology and explanation for not replying to this issue in a timely manner.

Loans and Grants: North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for a breakdown of (i) loans; and (ii) grants her Department, and its agencies, have awarded to organisations in North Down, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 22291/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I have assumed that as well as the Department and its agencies, you are also interested in the loans and grants awarded by my Arms Length Bodies.

It should be noted that the Department, its Agencies and its Arms Length Bodies do not provide loans to other organisations.

The total amount of grants awarded to organisations in the North Down constituency in the last five years is summarised in the tables below, divided between resource and capital:

	2008/09 £000	2009/10 £000	2010/11 £000	2011/12 £000	2012/13 £000
Resource	216	355	243	183	84
Capital	381	968	2,000	5,017	6,217
Total	597	1,323	2,243	5,200	6,309

Detailed breakdowns by project are provided in Annex A

I should point out that if there was any doubt as to whether the North Down constituency benefited from the grant, then that grant was excluded from the answer. For example, if an organisation situated in the North Down constituency spent the funding further afield, it was excluded from the answer.

Fishing: Unlicensed or Illegal Angling

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how many people have been reported by her Department for matters connected to unlicensed and/or illegal angling and contravening Fisheries Regulations, broken down by area of detection, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 22318/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín:

YEAR	South Eastern Area	Lough Neagh	South Western	Northern
2008	37	55	1	15
2009	98	54	nil	28
2010	37	54	26	13
2011	36	61	14	17
2012	39	19	8	15

The areas referred to are DCAL Fisheries operational areas and the figures are the number of individuals taken to court for fisheries related offences.

UK City of Culture 2013: Funding

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how much funding her Department has allocated to the UK City of Culture 2013.

(AQW 22371/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department has allocated a total of £12.6m to the 2013 City of Culture (£6.5m for 2012/13 and £6.1m for 2013/14).

Ulster-Scots Agency: Staff Qualifications

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the formal qualifications of the staff in the Ulster Scots Agency who handle funding requests and applications.

(AQW 22403/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Staff in the Ulster-Scots Agency are recruited against agreed job descriptions and personnel specifications.

Personnel specifications establish appropriate levels of formal qualifications as well as appropriate levels of relevant experience required to undertake individual posts.

All post holders have gone through a transparent recruitment process which has required them to demonstrate that they have the necessary qualifications and experience for the roles that they undertake.

Theatre: Bangor

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline the discussions she has had with the Minister for Social Development in relation to the establishment of a theatre in Bangor, as part of the town centre regeneration plans.

(AQW 22458/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I have had no specific discussions with the Minister for Social Development in relation to the establishment of a theatre in Bangor.

Derry/Londonderry City of Culture 2013

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what plans his Department has to create an employment and training opportunities legacy following the Derry/Londonderry City of Culture 2013.

(AQO 4010/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The cultural programme for 2013, supported by my Department, includes a range of projects, events and interventions which will provide employment and training opportunities for the people of Derry and the surrounding area. The programme includes community based events like the Music Promise, which will deliver music lessons to every child in the City. The Spotlight on Communities project is providing grants to community groups in Neighbourhood Renewal Areas to develop their own cultural strategies and host events to tell their own stories, develop skills and showcase talent.

Digital hubs have been set up in the most deprived areas in the City - bringing the project right into the heart of the people and providing skills. 900 young people are accessing film-making skills and digital storytelling through the Digital Book of Kells project. The focus of some of these community based projects is to provide new opportunities to build skills which are in line with legacy objectives to develop the City into a world class digital hub.

I am committed to ensuring that my Department's investment in arts and culture promotes equality and tackles poverty and social exclusion – founded on the twin aims of excellence in achievement underpinned by equality in outcomes. As the City of Culture year progresses, DCAL officials are working closely with Derry City Council officials to ensure that it has in place a legacy plan which will deliver against these objectives. The creation of training and employment opportunities in the longer-term will be a key component of the plan.

The Department of Employment and Learning has advised that it is also playing an active role in supporting the One Plan's emphasis on skills and employment through its wide range of programmes and services in the city.

The aim remains to tackle deprivation and poverty in the City in part by attracting major businesses and investment in the City, but all within the vision and framework of a sustainable economic model.

Sport: Financial Support for People with Disabilities

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the level of financial support provided by her Department to sports for people with disabilities, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 24078/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Over the last three financial years, my Department, through Sport NI, has provided £783,219 to sports organisations that specifically work with people with a disability including Disability Sports NI, RNIB, Special Olympics Ireland, Paralympics Ireland, Guide Dogs for the Blind and Headway Belfast.

In addition, during this time, almost £7.8m has been provided to mainstream sporting bodies, elements of which will have assisted in improving opportunities and access for people with disabilities.

Ravenhill: Redevelopment Funding

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how much of the £110m provided through the Regional Stadium funding package is for Ravenhill Stadium.

(AQW 24159/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Within the £110m stadium programme budget £14.6m has been approved for the redevelopment of Ravenhill Stadium.

In addition, DCAL is holding £0.867m of Optimism Bias for the redevelopment of Ravenhill.

The total funding package available for the redevelopment of Ravenhill is £15.5.

Windsor Park: European Funding

Mr McGimpsey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure whether the query over European funding relates only to improvements at Windsor Park or will the other two venues in the wider project be affected.

(AQW 24200/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: As this matter is the subject of current legal proceedings, it is not appropriate to comment at this stage.

Stadia: Funding for Windsor Park, Ravenhill and Casement Park

Mr McGimpsey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure when she will be in a position to comment on the legality of the funding for improvements at (a) Windsor Park, (b) Ravenhill and (c) Casement Park; and whether she will allow contracts to be entered into should the funding be deemed legal.

(AQW 24201/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: As this matter is the subject of current legal proceedings, it is not appropriate to comment at this stage.

Stadia: Funding for Windsor Park, Ravenhill and Casement Park

Mr McGimpsey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline her departmental investigations in relation to the funding of improvements at (a) Windsor Park, (b) Ravenhill and (c) Casement Park; and will these investigations provide a preliminary or definitive view.

(AQW 24202/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: As this matter is the subject of current legal proceedings, it is not appropriate to comment at this stage.

Stadia: Funding for Windsor Park, Ravenhill and Casement Park

Mr McGimpsey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, in relation to the potential for the funding of the improvements at (a) Windsor (b) Ravenhill (c) Casement being classed as illegal state aid, for her assessment of whether departmental officials could have foreseen this and taken appropriate action at an earlier stage.

(AQW 24203/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: As this matter is the subject of current legal proceedings, it is not appropriate to comment at this stage.

Lough Neagh Partnership

Mr Mitchel McLaughlin asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline her plans to provide further support to the Lough Neagh Partnership.

(AQO 4342/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department provided grant totalling £50k to the Lough Neagh Partnership over a two year period which ends on 31 March 2014 to undertake a number of projects that would contribute to the development of the Lough and the communities around it.

The Partnership was tasked to identify options and make recommendations for a management structure for the Lough which integrate operational and strategic activities and provide adequate representation for all stakeholders.

A report is due for completion by the end of June and will be considered by the Department in determining any future funding/support for the management of the Lough.

A feasibility study into the dredging of the mouths of the River Blackwater and the Upper Bann to improve the safety of boats and encourage increased boating traffic on these rivers has been completed. This is being assessed by my officials.

The Department agreed to the Partnership using £10k from the grant it received to bid for the EU Rural Development Programme's Lough Neagh Cooperation Project which has a total value of £119,500.

Further financial support will be dependent on the satisfactory evaluation of the current pilot and on the submission of new proposals for a work programme that aligns with, and meets DCAL's Corporate objectives.

Future programmes will need to demonstrate strong strategic partnerships which aim to improve community participation and involvement along with targeting social need through addressing poverty and social exclusion.

Ballymartin GAA Club

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline what developments, if any, have occurred regarding Ballymartin GAA Club since she visited it.

(AQO 4339/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I visited Ballymartin GAA club on 23 January 2013 when I saw, at first hand, the poor condition of the club's facilities. Since May 2012, and as a result of redevelopment work at their home ground, the Club has been using temporary playing facilities in Kilkeel which have been provided by Newry & Mourne District Council. This is proving a difficult arrangement with officials and players, some as young as 5-6 years of age, being subjected to sectarian abuse.

Ballymartin GAC is one of a number of organisations with an application pending under Sport NI's 'Sport Matters: Community Capital Programme'. The application is to upgrade one of their home pitches and install new floodlighting.

My Department has made a bid, under the June Monitoring Round, for additional funding for this programme that will allow Sport NI to progress a number of projects, including Ballymartin GAC. Sport NI is currently taking these projects forward in anticipation of securing the necessary funding.

World Police and Fire Games 2013

Mr McDevitt asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for her assessment of the preparations for the World Police and Fire Games 2013, to date.

(AQO 4341/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: There has been significant progress in the preparation for the 2013 World Police and Fire Games and this is set to continue as we move towards the Games in August.

Following the outcome of the bracketing process the Company have confirmed that there will be 56 sports offered during the Games and it is estimated that over 7,000 athletes will compete. As of 11 June 2013, the total number of athletes who have registered for the Games is 5,815.

The Volunteer Programme is ongoing and 3,600 volunteers have now been matched to roles. Furthermore, the Company has exceeded the target of £1.4m for sponsorship, with a total amount of £1.6m secured.

All of the sporting and ceremony venues for the Games have been confirmed and the World Police and Fire Games Schools Pack was launched in October 2012 which provides teachers with a comprehensive set of education resources to inform children and young people about the Games and get them involved in the event throughout 2013.

The Company has developed a Social Benefit Strategy and Legacy Plan to ensure the social inclusivity of the Games and appointed three charity partners as part of this Plan.

I am looking forward to the World Police and Fire Games which represent a tremendous opportunity to demonstrate that we are capable of hosting international events here while showcasing the island of Ireland as a fantastic place to visit.

Library: Kilkeel

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the construction of a new library for Kilkeel, County Down.

(AQO 4343/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The project to build a replacement library in Kilkeel commenced in March 2013. The initial construction phase is due to last for 9 months, ending in November 2013.

This project is currently on target. The necessary demolition and site clearance has been completed and the process of erecting the steel superstructure is underway.

The library's furniture, stock and other equipment is to be installed during December and January with the new library being opened to the public in February 2014.

The local community will benefit from this £935k project. They will have a larger modern building which will offer a greater range of library services.

These services include a wider range of stock and other resources, dedicated adult and children's facilities, a community meeting space and increased learning opportunities.

Windsor Park: Development Update

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the development of Windsor Park Football Stadium. (AQO 4344/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Windsor Park Football Stadium project is currently on programme.

Key achievements to date include:

- Planning Approved received in February 2013.
- Invitation to Tender for the construction contract has been released (completed tenders due to be returned 24 June 2013).

Key planned activities for the coming months include:

- Appointment of the contractor in August 2013.
- Commencement of construction work in September 2013.

It is anticipated that construction work will be completed by June 2015 subject to satisfactory site conditions and avoidance of any significant procurement or legal challenges.

UK City of Culture 2013

Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the Derry/Londonderry City of Culture 2013. (AQO 4345/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: We are now half way through the City of Culture year, with the cultural programme under way and delivering very successful events. Some highlights so far are the Sons and Daughters Opening Concert, RTE's Other Voices, the Highland Dance Festival and the Radio One Big Weekend. We also recently enjoyed the spectacular Return of Colmcille celebration which attracted thousands of people to the City during the two day event.

A wide range of community projects and programmes are also being delivered successfully including: What's the Big Idea, Spotlight on Communities, the Music Promise and Teaching Divided Histories.

The programme continues to receive positive media coverage with feedback from local people demonstrating that the City is enjoying a more positive outlook and renewed confidence.

We remain focused on ensuring that the benefits of City of Culture are delivered through the development of strategic, detailed and sustainable legacy plans. My department is supporting Derry City Council to develop a legacy plan to build on the momentum of 2013 and ensure that the targets to 2020 are achieved.

iPad Pilot Scheme

Mr G Kelly asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline the ipads pilot scheme in the Lower Falls, Belfast. (AQO 4346/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: With investment from my Department, the West Belfast Partnership Board will develop a mobile iPad platform and community learning resource which will be used by schools and other groups.

In its initial stage the pilot project will focus on primary schools and other organisations in the Lower Falls area to introduce digital and mobile technologies to formal and informal education and learning.

The project will support numeracy and literacy initiatives in these schools as well as other possible initiatives in health, after school revision classes, life-long learning and cross-community work. Overall, it will help young people in the Lower Falls area to realise their potential and provide a possible template for innovative approaches to tackling social exclusion.

Department of Education

Inspections: Nursery, Primary and Post-primary Schools

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Education, in each of the last five years, how many inspections have been carried out in (i) nursery; (ii) primary; and (iii) post-primary schools in each education sector, broken down by Education and Library Board. (AQW 23847/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): The tables below outline the number of inspections which have been carried out in (i) nursery; (ii) primary; and (iii) post-primary schools in each education sector broken down by Education and Library Board for the period 2007/08 to 2011/12. Craigavon: Controlled Junior High Schools

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Education whether the four Controlled Junior High Schools in Craigavon will be included within the departmental Delivering Social Change project; and to outline the educational basis for this project being directed at Key Stage 2 and Key Stage 4 pupils, given the difficulties associated with teaching pupils to read beyond Key Stage 3. (AQW 23873/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: In October 2012 the First Minister and deputy First Minister announced the Delivering Social Change Signature Project on improving literacy and numeracy. An additional 230 recent graduate teachers who are not currently in work will be employed to deliver tuition, where appropriate, for children in primary and post primary schools who are currently struggling to achieve even basic educational standards. The objectives as stated are the

- Employment of 150 teachers not currently in employment, on a two-year fixed-term contract to deliver tuition, where appropriate, in English and Mathematics to Year 11 and 12 post-primary school pupils who are not likely without intervention to achieve a grade C in English and/or Mathematics.
- Employment of 80 teachers, not currently in employment, on a two-year fixed-term contract to deliver tuition, where appropriate, to primary school pupils who are not likely to be at the expected level in English and/or Mathematics at the end of Key Stage 2.

Consequently, the criteria for participation in the project were developed to achieve these stated objectives. The schools invited to participate in the Delivering Social Change Signature Project on improving literacy and numeracy (the Project) have been selected using criteria based on a combination of academic performance and Free School Meal Entitlement (FSME).

In the post-primary sector the methodology used was:

- 1 Schools where the percentage of pupils achieving GCSE English (Grades A*-C) and/or GCSE Maths (Grades A*-C) was an average of seventy percent or below, over a three-year period 2008/09 to 2010/11 inclusive and/or where the percentage of pupils achieving 5+ GCSEs (including English and Maths) Grades A*-C was an average of seventy percent or below, over a three-year period 2009/10 to 2011/12 inclusive.
- 2 Using the above methodology, teachers will be allocated to eligible schools based on the school's enrolment and performance in GCSE English and/or GCSE Maths and 5+ GCSEs (including GCSE English and GCSE Maths).

Accordingly, the Junior High Schools do not meet any of the criteria for inclusion in this particular project; however, the Delivering Social Change Project is just one of the many projects that are being delivered by my Department over the next few years. The Area Learning Community (ALC) Strategic Development Fund project is being funded for three years and as these Junior High Schools are members of the Craigavon Area Learning Community they will be able to avail of extra tuition for the literacy and numeracy needs of Key Stage 3 pupils through this project.

Preschool: Quality of Provision

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education whether his Department is aware of any research that indicates that pre-school provision of a poor quality is more detrimental to children than no pre-school provision.

(AQW 23908/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: There is a range of evidence which demonstrates the positive impact of high quality pre-school provision on children's learning and development. The Effective Pre-School Provision NI (EPPNI) research (2006 and 2010) demonstrated the positive effects of high quality pre-school experiences on children's intellectual and social behavioural development and attainment levels in English and Mathematics during primary school. The 2010 research also highlighted the importance of children receiving high quality pre-school provision as low quality pre-school provision is not associated with the same positive effects of high quality provision.

As well as the research available, the Education and Training Inspectorate inspect all pre-school settings participating in the Pre-School Education Programme. The Chief Inspector's report 2010-12 reported that most children attending pre-school settings experience a good or better pre-school education which is crucial to their future education and well-being.

Inspections: Grades Awarded to Schools

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Education to detail the grades awarded by inspectors to schools in each Education and Library Board, in each of the last five years, broken down by (i) sector; and (ii) type.

(AQW 23929/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I have arranged for the information requested to be placed in the Assembly Library.

Belmont House/Foyle View Special Schools: Merger

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Education, given the plans to merge Belmont and Foyle View Special Schools, for an update of the status of £7.4 million that he pledged to Belmont House School, Derry.

(AQW 23932/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Western Education and Library Board is currently undertaking a consultation on the Development Proposal for a new Controlled Special School which will provide for the special educational needs of pupils as currently provided by Belmont House School and Foyle View School.

The Development Proposal was published on 7 May 2013 and the consultation will be open for 2 months. Following this a submission will be made to me to allow a decision to be made on the scope and size of the new build project to be taken forward.

When there is clarity on the future provision, work can commence on the economic appraisal and design.

Foley Primary School, Armagh: Irish-medium Playgroup

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education, in light of the recent Pre-School Education Advisory Group determination that there was no unmet need for nursery places in the Armagh area, and in the context of refusing an additional nursery unit in a controlled school, to detail how an Irish Medium Unit has been approved in association with Foley Primary School.

(AQW 23946/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Irish medium voluntary playgroup, Naíscoil Shliabh Fuait, is not currently funded for pre-school places under the Department's Pre-School Education Programme. Any request from the group to participate in the Programme would be considered by the Southern Education and Library Board's (SELB) Pre-School Education Advisory Group (PEAG) taking into account the level of funded Irish medium pre-school provision in the Armagh area at the time. It was agreed by the SELB to enter into a Licence Agreement to facilitate the establishment of an Irish medium playgroup at Foyle Primary School.

The playgroup is not part of the Pre-school Education Programme so no consideration was given by the SELB PEAG to its impact on existing provision within the Programme. The registration and regulation of voluntary playgroups are a matter for the Health and Social Care Trusts. There is no requirement for the management committee of such a group to undertake consultation prior to establishment.

The request from Naíscoil Shliabh Fuait to rent a surplus classroom and office in Foley Primary School was agreed by the school's Board of Governors in the first instance. The school and playgroup will operate under their own separate management arrangements.

The SELB has advised that the Board of Governors of Foley PS sought approval from the SELB on 18 December 2012. The Board advised the school on 28 January 2013 that, subject to the approval of the Department, it was possible to facilitate the Naíscoil's request by means of a Licence Agreement. The Department advised the SELB on 30 April that it had no objections to the Board's proposal to establish a Licence Agreement with the Governing Body of Naíscoil Shliabh Fuait to facilitate the use of a vacant classroom and office at Foley Primary School by the playgroup.

Foley Primary School, Armagh: Irish-medium Playgroup Unit

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education how it is compatible with the ethos and status of Foley Primary School, Armagh to approve an Irish Medium Play Group within this controlled school.

(AQW 23947/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Irish medium voluntary playgroup, Naíscoil Shliabh Fuait, is not currently funded for pre-school places under the Department's Pre-School Education Programme. Any request from the group to participate in the Programme would be considered by the Southern Education and Library Board's (SELB) Pre-School Education Advisory Group (PEAG) taking into account the level of funded Irish medium pre-school provision in the Armagh area at the time. It was agreed by the SELB to enter into a Licence Agreement to facilitate the establishment of an Irish medium playgroup at Foyle Primary School.

Foley Primary School, Armagh: Irish-medium Playgroup

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education what consultation was conducted on the impact of nursery and play group provision elsewhere in Armagh before the decision to approve an Irish Medium Play Group in Foley Primary School was taken.

(AQW 23948/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Irish medium voluntary playgroup, Naíscoil Shliabh Fuait, is not currently funded for pre-school places under the Department's Pre-School Education Programme. Any request from the group to participate in the Programme would be considered by the Southern Education and Library Board's (SELB) Pre-School Education Advisory Group (PEAG) taking into account the level of funded Irish medium pre-school provision in the Armagh area at the time. Civil Service: DE Staff

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of people employed in (i) schools; and (ii) his Department's arm's-length bodies in each year since 2007, broken down by grade.

(AQW 23996/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I have arranged for the information requested to be placed in the Assembly Library.

Foley Primary School, Armagh: Irish-medium Playgroup

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education on what date (i) was approval sought from the Education and Library Board for an Irish Medium Play Group unit in Foley Primary School, Armagh; (ii) was approval granted by the Board; and (iii) was it approved by his Department.

(AQW 23997/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Irish medium voluntary playgroup, Naíscoil Shliabh Fuait, is not currently funded for pre-school places under the Department's Pre-School Education Programme. Any request from the group to participate in the Programme would be considered by the Southern Education and Library Board's (SELB) Pre-School Education Advisory Group (PEAG) taking into account the level of funded Irish medium pre-school provision in the Armagh area at the time. Bleary Primary School: Compensation Payment

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Education to detail the purpose of the £93,000 compensation payment recorded in the Annual Accounts of Bleary Primary School Annual Accounts for 2009/10.

(AQW 24099/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: There is no specific reference to a compensation payment included in the 2009/10 Outturn Statement which the Southern Education and Library Board published in respect of Bleary Primary School. The Southern Education and Library Board has however confirmed that a £93,000 compensation payment is included in the Outturn Statement under the heading of "Other Non Staff Costs" as part of the analysis on non-delegated expenditure. I am unable to provide any further detail as, under the terms of the compensation settlement, there is a legally binding confidentiality clause that the employer, the Board and the employee shall not disclose, or cause, or permit to be disclosed, the terms of the agreement which are confidential.

Teacher Demand Model

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Education whether the Teacher Demand Model for the forthcoming year will take into account the teachers who are registered with the General Teaching Council for Northern Ireland but are not registered with employment.

(AQW 24125/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Teacher Demand Model provides a statistical estimate of overall initial teacher education intake requirements utilises a range of statistical assumptions based on data obtained from a number of sources, including data provided by the General Teaching Council here (GTCNI).

The GTCNI provides data on the employment position of recent graduates and this is used to provide an assumption on the potential number of recent graduates who may be successful in filling future vacancies.

However, it is important to note that not all teachers registered with the GTCNI are seeking permanent employment and that the GTCNI does not hold information on the number of teachers who are specifically seeking permanent employment.

The Teacher Demand Model together with a range of other statistical information is used to inform the annual process of determining intakes to initial teacher education. However, in reaching a final decision I also take into account wider policy considerations.

Teachers: Religious/Gender Breakdown

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Education whether his Department can ascertain the religious and gender breakdowns of teachers who are registered with the General Teaching Council for Northern Ireland but who are not registered with employment.

(AQW 24126/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Information on the religious background of teachers is exempt from monitoring under Article 71 of the Fair Employment and Treatment (NI) Order 1998. This information is not therefore held.

At 11 June 2013 there were 27,186 teachers registered with the General Teaching Council (GTCNI), of which 19,417 were employed in a permanent or significant temporary capacity at the time of the last GTCNI data capture exercise, which fell between September and December 2012. However it should not be assumed that all those not in employment at that time were actively seeking work as a teacher. Furthermore, some may be employed in schools in a short-term temporary capacity or have secured employment since then.

Of the 7,769 registered teachers not in employment at that time, 6,009 were female and 1,760 were male.

The GTCNI publishes a Digest of Statistics on an annual basis and further detail on the gender make up of the teaching profession can be accessed at www.gtcni.org.uk/publications/uploads/document/Digest_of_Statistics_2012.pdf At March 2012 almost 76% of teachers registered with the GTCNI were female.

Teachers: Graduate Employment

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the value for money in the provision of teacher training and the needs of schools when 1408 graduates from Initial Teacher Training Colleges in Northern Ireland since 2005 have not registered with the General Teaching Council for Northern Ireland; and to outline the reasons for this wastage level.
(AQW 24128/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Whilst I recognise that many graduates from initial teacher education find difficulty getting employment in the current climate, the same applies across many professions.

It is important to note that the figure for the number of graduates cited by the Member represents a snapshot of those graduates not registered at 31 March 2013. It does not reflect the fact that many of those 1408 unregistered graduates will have been registered at some point prior to when the General Teaching Council's survey was being conducted on 31 March 2013.

There will be many reasons why individuals do not register. They may, for example, choose to use their skills to find employment in other professions and therefore benefit the economy in the North. Others may move to register and work as teachers in other jurisdictions and some may move to work in other professions overseas.

It is, nonetheless, encouraging that since 2006, 4 out of every 5 graduates have registered with the General Teaching Council and of the teachers who graduated in that year, around 9 out of 10 are registered and in employment in either a permanent or significant temporary capacity (one term or more).

Teacher training in the North has been assessed by the Education and Training Inspectorate as being of a very high standard. I therefore consider that it represents good value in terms of the quality of its graduates. The issue of value for money in terms of the cost of initial teacher education is a matter for the Minister for Employment and Learning who has commissioned a review of initial teacher education provision.

The member will be aware that the Department has cut intakes to initial teacher education courses by nearly one third in recent years to address the perceived oversupply of teachers. However, if I was to cut intakes further, as some have suggested, there will be a point at which the Higher Education Institutions could become unviable and student teachers will travel elsewhere which could impact on our ability to train teachers locally.

Consultants: DE Spend

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education how much his Department has spent on consultants in relation to the Review of Public Administration, in each financial year since 2007/8.
(AQW 24154/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Expenditure on external consultancy in relation to the Review of Public Administration in each financial year since 2007-08 as recorded in the Department's audited accounts is set out in the table below.

Year	£'000
2007/08	143
2008/09	162
2009/10	218
2010/11	15

Computer-based Assessments: Cost

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education how much has been spent to date on implementing the new computer based assessment arrangements for schools.
(AQW 24155/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Council for the Curriculum Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) are contract holders with two suppliers for Computer-Based Assessment. NILA is provided by Tribal and NINA is supplied by Rising Stars.

CCEA has provided the following costs for implementing the two CBA assessments to date.

Contracts were let with the suppliers in November 2011. From this date to the end of March 2013 a total of £2,851.3k was spent on implementing the new computer-based assessment arrangements. This figure includes payments to suppliers and teacher release provided to schools to engage in training. It also includes CCEA staffing costs in terms of the proportion of time of existing baseline staff and project staff which was specifically allocated to this project.

The breakdown of costs is as follows:

Supplier Costs	1,295.3k
Teacher Release Costs	830.5k
Implementation Costs
Venues, Print Resources	34.6k
Baseline Staff / CBA team	451.5k		Note 1
Other Support Baseline Staff	239.4k		Note 2
	725.5k
Overall Implementation Total	2,851.3k	(period Nov 2011 - Mar 2013)	Note 3

Note 1

Staff costs for CCEA project management, support for pre-trial, March 2012 trial with 200 schools/10,000 pupils, May QA, IM trial and QA, development of online & printed resources, principals' seminars, helpdesk provision

Note 2

Staff costs for CCEA in-house development & production of Moodle online training for more than 3,200 teachers, design of printed resources, implementation of evaluation strategy including online and hard copy questionnaires

Note 3

Actual expenditure relating to that period (Nov 2011 - Mar 2013)

Payments: Non-teaching Staff

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education for an update on the payment of £250 to all non-teaching staff earning less than £21,000 per annum.

(AQW 24156/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: All eligible non teaching staff, with the exception of those staff in the Voluntary Grammar and Grant Maintained Integrated sectors, have received payment of £250 for both the 2010/11 and 2011/12 pay years.

In respect of VGS and GMI schools I took the decision to make funding available to enable payment of the £250 for eligible non teaching staff in these sectors.

There are 51 VGS and 38 GMI Schools. Under the Executive's Pay Policy, a pay remit is required for each staff group on differing terms and conditions in each school, with supporting business cases, including legal advice on contractual obligations. The schools were asked to provide this information to the Department by 31 May 2013 and officials are following up outstanding returns.

It will only be once this information is received and analysed that the Department will be clear as to the extent of pay remits required and the possible timeframe for completion of this exercise.

Once the necessary approvals are in place, funding will be made available to enable the schools to make the payment to qualifying staff.

Spirit of Enniskillen Trust

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education how he plans to continue with the work of the Spirit of Enniskillen Trust.

(AQW 24157/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Spirit of Enniskillen Trust was a charitable organisation and has not been in receipt of any direct support from my Department since the previous community relations schemes were closed in 2010.

When the problems which resulted in closure first materialised, Department of Education officials engaged with the Trustees in an effort to identify possible solutions and to explore any alternatives to ensuring their work could continue. Unfortunately this was not possible.

However, the legacy of the Spirit of Enniskillen Trust will remain through the many young people whose lives were impacted by their involvement. I know that these young people will continue to influence their peers and to be active citizens in seeking to deliver the kind of shared future we wish to see.

The reconciliation work amongst young people which Spirit of Enniskillen engaged in will continue via other delivery approaches through my Department's Community Relations, Equality and Diversity in Education policy.

Procurement: Ministerial Meetings

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 22414/11-15, to detail the dates of the formal meetings with procurement staff since April 2012 to discuss the details of the report.

(AQW 24158/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: There have been no formal meetings with procurement staff since April 2012 to discuss the report.

Pupils: Non-attendance in South Antrim

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Education how many children in South Antrim have been identified as not attending school, broken down by Education and Library Board.

(AQW 24237/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The information requested is detailed in the tables below and refers to 3 categories:

- 1 Children with low attendance levels i.e. <85% attendance
- 2 Children receiving their education other than at school
- 3 Children who are home schooled

1 Primary and post primary pupils living in the South Antrim constituency who had less than 85% attendance in 2011/12

School type	NEELB	SEELB
Primary	378	18
Post primary	674	25

2 Primary and post primary pupils living in the South Antrim constituency who are recorded as being educated off site but not in a school – 2011/12

School type	NEELB	SEELB
Post primary	15	0

Notes:

The figures are obtained from the annual school census and refer to pupils undertaking Key Stages 1-4 only.

The information is based on pupils living in the South Antrim area.

*Refers to figures less than 5.

- 3 I have also been informed by the North Eastern Education and Library Board that they are aware of 16 children in the South Antrim area who are being home educated. South Eastern Education and Library Board are not aware of any children being home educated in the South Antrim area. It is important to note that parents can choose to home educate, however, there is no legal requirement for parents to advise their Education and Library Board or the Department of their decision.

Welfare Reform: DE Impact

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of how Welfare Reform will impact on the aims and objectives of his Department.

(AQW 24264/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Subject to the progress of the Welfare Reform Bill through the Assembly, it is intended that Universal Credit (UC) will be introduced here, as part of the Welfare Reform Agenda, on a phased basis from April 2014. The introduction of UC, as currently planned, will impact on the delivery of two key passported benefits for which the Department of Education (DE) has responsibility: the provision of free school meals (FSM) and school uniform grants.

FSM and school uniform grants are key passported benefits which provide targeted support to families on low incomes. The provision of FSM and school uniform grants to children from lower income households are key measures through which DE seeks to improve access to and participation in education. They contribute to wider Departmental objectives to improve educational outcomes and lifetime opportunities for children and young people from the most deprived communities.

It is intended that UC will replace a number of existing social welfare benefits including five of the benefits currently used to determine eligibility for FSM and school uniform grants. These five benefits are the qualifying criteria for the majority of all claims for FSM so an amendment to the Department's eligibility criteria will be required to facilitate the proposed introduction of UC in April 2014.

Work is underway at present to identify options to determine future eligibility for FSM under UC and to assess the potential impacts of these options. I will be giving careful consideration to this analysis.

I have made clear that my priority in determining new eligibility criteria for FSM and school uniform grants is to ensure that these key passported benefits continue to provide the necessary support to those most in need.

Mental Health: School-based Initiatives

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Education whether there are any school based initiatives that promote awareness of mental ill health and signpost young people to support services.

(AQW 24269/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: A school must address in its School Development Plan how it will promote the health and wellbeing, child protection, attendance, good behaviour and discipline of pupils'.

Schools are also required under The Education (Curriculum Minimum Content) Order (NI) 2007 to teach our young people about the importance of good mental health. At primary school this is delivered through Personal Development and Mutual Understanding and at post-primary school it is taught through Learning for Life and Work where all pupils should be provided with opportunities to understand the importance of recognising and managing factors that may influence emotional/mental health throughout life.

My Department's "i-Matter" programme is addressing how the entire school community should be engaged in promoting resilient emotional health for all pupils, what support systems are available for vulnerable pupils, and what support is available to schools in the event of a crisis. The programme is a vehicle to integrate individual policies and services in a consistent and coherent way. It benefits from the active involvement of other Departments, schools and of the voluntary sector through a series of working groups, each with a specific task.

The groups have developed a range of 'products' including a suite of homework diary inserts/posters on topics of concern to young people such as self esteem, substance abuse, relationships and outline sources of help for pupils.

An independent school based professional counselling service is accessible to young people of post-primary age in mainstream and special schools during difficult and vulnerable periods in their lives. As part of the current arrangements for support following a critical incident, pupils in primary schools have access to counselling support.

Education and Library Boards promote positive emotional health and well-being using a range of resources. Some schools are involved with issue-based class or group work around resilience, coping with stress, the transition from primary to post-primary school using evidenced-based programmes such as 'Bounce' and 'Mind Out'. Peer support, peer mentoring and school councils also assist with building positive emotional health and well-being of pupils.

Grammar Schools: Admissions on Appeal

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Education how many pupils were admitted on appeal to each Grammar School in (i) 2010/11; (ii) 2011/12; and (iii) 2012/13.

(AQW 24318/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The number of pupils admitted on appeal to each Grammar School in 2010/11; 2011/12; and 2012/13 are as detailed in the table below.

Post-primary Schools: North Coast

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Education to list the choice of post-primary schools available to pupils transferring from (i) St Colum's; (ii) Portstewart; (iii) Mill Strand Primary Schools; and to explain any variations in choice of post-primary options.
(AQW 24351/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The North Eastern Education & Library Board has advised me as follows:-

The most common preferences for children transferring from (i) St Colum's Primary School and (ii) Portstewart are Dominican College, Loreto College, St Joseph's College (Coleraine), Coleraine Academical Institution, Coleraine High School and Dalriada School and from (iii) Mill Strand Integrated Primary School are Dominican College, Loreto College, St Joseph's College (Coleraine), Coleraine High School, Dunluce School, North Coast Integrated College and Dalriada School.

As parents of children transferring from primary schools are entitled to list preferences for any post primary school in any sector which they feel would be appropriate for the education of their child, it is not possible to explain the variations in choice of post-primary options without knowing the reasons behind each parent's decision to select each school in a particular order.

School Transport: Rural Areas

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Education if pupils who attend a rural primary school move to a new home, which is closer to a different school, whether they are entitled to school transport to their original school to ensure that their education is not disrupted by having to change schools.
(AQW 24376/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: When a pupil moves to a new home, irrespective of whether they live in a rural or urban setting, Education and Library Boards will reassess their eligibility for assistance with transport from the location of their new home to the school they attend.

Where there is a suitable school, or schools, within statutory walking distance of the pupil's new home, but the parents wish to continue their child's education in the more distant school that they currently attend, then the pupil will only be eligible for assistance with transport if the parents have tried and been unable to secure a place for their child in all of those nearer suitable schools.

Boards will, however, make an exception for primary-age pupils in Years 6 or 7, or for post-primary-age pupils in Years 11 or 12. The purpose of the primary-age exception is to ensure that pupils should not have to change schools twice in two years, that is, primary-to-primary, followed by primary-to-post-primary. The purpose of the post-primary exception is to ensure that pupils do not have to change school in their important GCSE years. In these circumstances, a seat on a bus will only be provided only if there is a suitable service from the vicinity of the pupil's new home to the school. Otherwise, assistance may be provided in the form of a monetary allowance in lieu of transport.

Education Welfare Officers

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Education to detail the (i) number of Education and Welfare Officers; (ii) manager/supervisor ratio to Education and Welfare Officers; (iii) current caseload; and (iv) waiting list, in each Education and Library Board.
(AQW 24390/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department does not routinely collect this information however the following information has been provided by each Education and Library Board.

ELB	No. of Education Welfare Officers	Senior EWO to EWO Ratio	Current Caseload	Waiting List
BELB	28	Mainstream Teams – 1:7 Project Team – 1:6 Looked After Children (LAC) Team(2) -1:3	1180	NIL (1)
SEELB	23	4 Mainstream Teams 1:6 1:6 1:5 1:5 LAC Team(2) -1:3	728	159

(1) BELB does not operate a waiting list. All referrals are responded to with some form of intervention.

(2) Joint BELB and SEELB Team.

Department for Employment and Learning

Apprenticeships: Sickness Guidelines

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what plans are in place to change the guidelines for Programme Led Apprenticeships to ensure there is no discrimination against people who are sick whilst facilitating people who are serving a custodial sentence or are pregnant.

(AQW 24024/11-15)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): My Department has no plans to change the guidelines for Programme Led Apprenticeships.

Policies in regard to young people who have been withdrawn from training due to sick absence, or who are serving a custodial sentence, or are pregnant, are in place to protect the balance of training time and ensure that participants can re-enter Programme-Led Apprenticeships following an enforced interruption or a period of prolonged sickness (even if they are over 18 years old).

Furthermore, any sickness absence related to a participant's disability and evidenced by the participant's GP is disregarded when aggregating a participant's sick record.

The Guidelines also state that suspected abuse of self-certification arrangements must be investigated and, if necessary, the disciplinary procedures as outlined in the Operational Guidelines may be invoked.

I am satisfied that my Department aims to ensure fair and inclusive delivery of all its programmes including Programme Led Apprenticeships.

Education Maintenance Allowance: North Antrim

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many pupils in North Antrim receive Education Maintenance Allowance.

(AQW 24161/11-15)

Dr Farry: I can advise the member the total number of Northern Ireland domiciled learners attending schools, colleges and FE Colleges in receipt of Education Maintenance Allowance in North Antrim for the academic year 2011/2012, the latest year for which complete data is available, was 1,272.

Collaboration and Innovation Fund

Mr McMullan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, in relation to the Collaboration and Innovation Fund, to detail the councils that (i) did not apply; and (ii) applied but were unsuccessful.

(AQW 24176/11-15)

Dr Farry: Derry City Council in partnership with Ilex URC Ltd was the only Council in Northern Ireland that applied for and was successful in receiving funding under the Collaboration and Innovation Fund.

Youth Unemployment: Foyle

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of 16-24 year olds in the Foyle constituency availing of the new Youth Unemployment Scheme.

(AQW 24215/11-15)

Dr Farry: The Youth Employment Scheme commenced in September 2012 and includes a range of measures to help unemployed young people aged 18 to 24 to gain experience, acquire new skills and find employment.

Since the introduction of the scheme a total 252 young people (aged 18-24) in the Foyle constituency area, serviced by Foyle and Lisnagelvin Jobs & Benefits offices, have availed of a placement under the Youth Employment Scheme. To date, 70 of those have obtained full time employment.

The focus of the Youth Employment Scheme is on early intervention for young people with the specific aim of helping this group gain work experience, develop additional skills and achieve recognised relevant qualifications needed by those sectors that have the potential for future growth. This scheme is specifically designed to help those young people claiming Jobseekers Allowance and who are almost job ready move into employment.

My Department is also actively working with employers to source as many opportunities as possible across Northern Ireland. I have been encouraged by the response of employers so far (more than 1,100 have signed up to the scheme, offering 2500 opportunities) and I expect many more to come forward to offer opportunities for young people in the coming months

I appreciate your interest in the Youth Employment Scheme and would ask you to encourage young people and employers to become involved.

Mel Davison Construction: Redundancy

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline the discussions he has had with employees from Mel Davison Construction and their trade union representatives on the loss of 150 jobs; and whether they will be treated in accordance with the law.

(AQW 24435/11-15)

Dr Farry: Officials from my Department contacted Mel Davison Construction on 18 June 2013 to offer our Redundancy Advice Service. This service includes help and advice on employment, education, training, re-skilling, job-search, and arranging for benefits advice from the Social Security Agency.

Whilst I cannot comment on the legal aspects of any individual employment disputes, I can assure you that any and all subsequent applications to the Department's NI Redundancy Payments Service will be processed as expeditiously as possible, and in compliance with the prevailing legislation, policy, and procedures.

Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment

Investment: South Down

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 22706/11-15, to detail (i) what are the challenges facing the South Down area in attracting investment; and (ii) how she is helping local stakeholders across South Down to overcome each challenge.

(AQW 23703/11-15)

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): To attract inward investment an area must be able to clearly demonstrate it can meet the investor's needs. A company will be attracted to where they see clusters of talent to be and/or where cost-competitiveness can be leveraged. Potential inward investors will typically look at an area in terms of existing investors in the same business sector (Invest NI's key inward investment target sectors being ICT, business services and financial services) and/or universities and colleges that offer courses relating to that particular sector. ICT skill sets, and the infrastructure to support business in that sector, are in high demand.

When engaging with a company on a potential investment project, Invest NI first demonstrates how Northern Ireland can meet the needs of that particular project. The requirements will vary depending on the nature of the project. Invest NI will then propose a visit plan based on requirements detailed by the investor.

Areas in which these desired features do not exist, or are not clearly presented, are unlikely to attract the attention of potential investors to visit or locate in the area. In addition, potential investors are often drawn to population centres that they consider will provide the appropriate number of suitably skilled potential employees. Therefore a clear understanding and evidence of skill demographics for any region would greatly assist a potential investor in considering a particular area.

This understanding and appreciation of each local area's key demographics and area attributes, including that of the South Down area, is achieved through direct engagement with interested parties. To that end Invest NI is working closely with both Down and Newry & Mourne Councils, and other stakeholders to develop a sales proposition to show the strengths and opportunities in their respective areas that will ultimately attract potential inward investors to visit, locate there and grow in the surrounding South Down area.

Invest NI has developed an 'FDI app' which will help present a snapshot of the benefits of setting up in Northern Ireland to potential investors. Both Down and Newry & Mourne Area Councils have indicated that they wish to be involved and Invest NI is working with them on this. As the South Down offering develops, both councils should reflect this by updating the 'FDI app' and continuing engagement with Invest NI's Southern Regional Office - located in Newry.

In addition, Invest NI continues to work with both councils and the South East Economic Development (SEED) group of councils on a range of initiatives for local businesses under the Local Economic Development Measure (LED). EU/Invest NI support in the South Down area under LED totals over £1.35million and contributes to developing the local business base in the area.

Continued engagement to develop South Down as a competitive destination, development of relevant skills and increased availability of sites ready for business investment all have the potential to improve South Down's visible proposition and place it in further contention to attract inward investment.

Ultimately however, the investor will make the decision as to where they locate based on their specific business needs and having considered the options available to them.

Tourism: Bilingual Signage

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline what the Northern Ireland Tourist Board finds confusing about bilingual signage as stated in the Board Minutes from January 2011.
(AQW 23713/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Board of NITB did not state that they found anything confusing about bilingual signage.

Jobs Fund: South Down

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the impact of the Jobs Fund on job creation in the South Down constituency.
(AQW 23910/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Since the launch of the Jobs Fund in April 2011, a total of 12 businesses in South Down have received offers of support through the Jobs Fund for employment based investment projects which collectively have the potential to create a total of 70 new jobs, 43 of which have already been created.

The Jobs Fund has also provided support to 13 individuals resident in Neighbourhood Renewal Areas (NRA) to set up their own business through the NRA Business Start Grant, and to 11 young people (aged 16-24) Not in Education, Employment or Training (NEET) to set up their own business through the NEET Business Start grant.

The Jobs Fund work is ongoing and Invest NI will continue to actively promote its entire range of business solutions including the Jobs Fund through its ongoing engagement with businesses and stakeholders in South Down and right across Northern Ireland.

Broadband Service

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 22746/11-15, when she will launch a new consultation.
(AQW 23943/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Updated market information has become available which requires further consideration in line with the State Aid rules governing the process. Once we are satisfied that it complies with these rules as set down by the EU and is as accurate as possible it is my intention to arrange a further consultation and provide an opportunity for comment on the proposed intervention. This would be in accordance with State Aid rules.

Broadband

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 22681/11-15, when she will publish the responses.
(AQW 23944/11-15)

Mrs Foster: It is my intention to publish a document in the near future that will include detail of the responses received and to provide a final opportunity to help determine the area of intervention, in accordance with State Aid rules.

Wind Turbines: Health and Safety Regulations

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether the location of existing or previous wind turbines have broken health and safety regulations.
(AQW 24035/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Health and Safety Executive for Northern Ireland (HSENI) is not aware of any instance where the location of existing or previously built wind turbines has broken health and safety regulations.

Wind Turbines: Health and Safety Issues

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what health and safety issues are considered when identifying sites for erecting wind turbines.

(AQW 24037/11-15)

Mrs Foster: All health and safety issues should be considered in the identification of sites for erecting wind turbines. If the proposed site is in the vicinity of a "major hazard" site, the Health and Safety Executive for Northern Ireland (HSENI) is consulted by Planning Service. HSENI would consider the risks (arising from the dangerous substances present on such sites) during the construction, operation and possible failure of the turbine, and provide advice on separation distances.

Power NI: Tariff

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (i) for her assessment of the extent to which Power NI's first year effect billing system, when dealing with tariff changes creates inequities for consumers; (ii) what engagement she has had with the Utility Regulator, Power NI and the Consumer Council on this issue; and (iii) for her assessment of the need for a change in regulation to bring Power NI in line with other electricity providers.

(AQW 24064/11-15)

Mrs Foster:

- (i) This is a matter for the Regulator, not my Department. However, I understand that the Utility Regulator considers that its approach to the first-year billing effect of Power NI's billing system delivers an equitable approach for all consumers, who always have the same billed tariff rate for the same number of quarters. In-year tariff changes do not compromise this principle.
- (ii) I have had no engagement with the Regulator, Power NI or Consumer Council on this issue.
- (iii) This is a matter for the Regulator, not my Department.

Unanswered Questions: AQW 21913/11-15, AQW 21912/11-15, AQW 21911/11-15 and AQW 21910/11-15

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment why the AQWs 21913/11-15, 21912/11-15, 21911/11-15 and 21910/11-15 remain unanswered.

(AQW 24068/11-15)

Mrs Foster: These AQWs have remained unanswered because of the verification work required to ensure the completeness and accuracy of the information.

This exercise has now been completed and the information requested is being prepared.

Revised Answers: AQW 21913/11-15, AQW 21912/11-15, AQW 21911/11-15 and AQW 21910/11-15

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment why the Executive Leadership Team have requested that changes be made to the figures in AQWs 21913/11-15, 21912/11-15, 21911/11-15 and 21910/11-15.

(AQW 24090/11-15)

Mrs Foster: These AQWs have not been answered as yet and therefore no changes have been made to the figures.

Museum of Free Derry: Funding

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the funding application for the Museum of Free Derry.

(AQW 24112/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The funding application for this project is under consideration.

Electricity: Tariff/Price Controls

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, in light of the increase in domestic electricity prices, what measures, including extra regulatory price controls, are being considered by her Department in relation to energy pricing.

(AQW 24129/11-15)

Mrs Foster: My Department has no role in the regulation or setting of electricity prices. Tariff reviews and regulatory price controls are matters for the Regulator. I am of course concerned about recent announcements of price increases and the impact on all consumers, domestic and business. The Regulator reports that there are currently five active domestic electricity suppliers in the Northern Ireland market and consumers can switch supplier to avail of the best available tariffs.

I have also noted, with concern, the findings in the Regulator's Information Paper on prices paid by Industrial and Commercial consumers in Northern Ireland. On publication of the Paper I wrote to the Regulator to ask for additional analysis to examine regulatory and policy measures in other jurisdictions and the creation of a working group. While it is important for that work to be given priority by the Regulator, it is equally important to allow time for it to be completed to understand the drivers of pricing and the implications that changes to policy decisions or regulatory actions might have across consumer groups.

Investment: Visit Programme

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 23577/11-15, to detail how many meetings existing international investors have had with potential investors as part of a visit programme, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 24217/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Whilst Invest NI records the general Parliamentary Constituency/District Council Areas visited during inward investment visit programmes it does not maintain central records of the number and nature of specific meetings which potential inward investors choose to hold with existing international investors or individuals.

Mobile Telephone Service: Glenariffe

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, should the Glenariffe mobile phone mast not be selected as one of the 55 sites under the incoming Mobile Infrastructure Project scheme, will she guarantee that the present service will continue.

(AQW 24219/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The provision of a mobile telephone service in Glenariffe, as in any other area of Northern Ireland, is a commercial matter for the Mobile Network Operators. The Department of Culture, Media and Sport is responsible for delivering the Mobile Infrastructure Project and it has not yet made decisions about the number and locations of sites that may be selected for consideration under that project.

Derry: Super-connected City

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what her Department is doing to promote Derry's status as a super-connected city to potential investors.

(AQW 24302/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest NI is aware of the potential benefits that Londonderry's advanced telecommunications infrastructure provides to investors. The agency brought its international sales teams to the city for its annual International Conference at the start of May in order to learn more about the local proposition and to meet with existing investors.

Since the Conference there have been three investor visits to Londonderry by companies that could potentially benefit from the strength of the city's telecommunications infrastructure. While these potential investments are at an early stage, and the names of the companies involved are subsequently not disclosable, Invest NI will continue to pursue a number of opportunities to bring investment to Londonderry.

Londonderry's "super-connectivity" is just one feature of the proposition and there are many other factors that investors consider important. While Invest NI is unable to direct investment to any specific part of Northern Ireland, the agency will continue to engage with local stakeholders, including the Digital Derry project, in order to maximise the offering and sell Londonderry as a great place in which to invest.

Department of the Environment

Planning: Enforced Demolition

Mr Wells asked the Minister of the Environment how many buildings, which were erected without planning approval, were demolished by departmental staff, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 22333/11-15)

Mr Attwood (The Minister of the Environment): Under Article 74 of the Planning (NI) Order 1991 (as amended) the Department (or a person authorised in writing by the Department) can enter the land and take any steps required by the Enforcement Notice that are not taken within the period allowed for compliance. Under this Article the Department can also recover any expenses reasonably incurred by carrying out the required works.

This Article would permit Departmental staff to secure demolition of unauthorised buildings if the landowner did not comply with any Enforcement Notices served within the period allowed for compliance.

To date this Article has never been used and the Department relies upon compliance with enforcement proceedings to ensure that unauthorised buildings are demolished. If works are not carried out willingly and an enforcement notice is upheld, then a prosecution is brought forward where the person may be convicted and fined for failure to comply with an enforcement notice. Continued failure to comply may result in a further prosecution for a continuing offence.

This has been the situation, for example, in one case where fines to date have totalled £15k, £7k and £10k respectively, a total of £35k.

The Member will know that in a different matter, where a legal power was not previously deployed in NI, I did so. Similarly, in this matter. Officials have been directed by me, to take an article 74 application forward in relation to a particular case and, further, officials are preparing paper reviewing such cases across NI to be forwarded to me for clearance.

Planning: Delayed Applications

Mr Frew asked the Minister of the Environment how many current planning applications have remained in the planning system for three or more years in the (i) Ballymena Borough Council; (ii) Ballymoney Borough Council; and (iii) Moyle District Council areas; and to detail the nature of each application.

(AQW 22479/11-15)

Mr Attwood: As of 31 March 2013 a total of 15 applications have remained in the system for three or more years in the Ballymena Borough Council, Ballymoney Borough Council and Moyle District Council Areas; 2 of which has since been withdrawn.

The breakdown of the remaining 13 applications is as follows:

- Ballymena Borough Council – 3 applications;
- Ballymoney Borough Council – 7 applications; and
- Moyle District Council – 3 applications.

Table 1 below sets out the details of these 13 planning applications.

Table 1

File Reference	Proposal	Current Position
Ballymoney Borough Council
D/2009/0126/F	Infilling with construction waste to accommodate a park and share / ride	Information received under consideration
D/2008/0534/F	Extension to development proposal (Ref D/2007/0317/RM) incorporating redesign of existing layout to relocate proposed access and provide 13 additional dwellings. Scheme now totalling 34no. dwellings.	Approval decision to issue
D/2008/0460/F	Proposed housing development consisting of 24 semi-detached dwellings, amenity space and associated roads in accordance with 'Creating Places'	Department negotiating layout in line with outline approval.
D/2008/0093/F	Residential development of 50 No. townhouses, 6 No. semi-detached dwellings with associated parking and landscaping and amenity space.	Department in negotiations to agree acceptable layout.
D/2007/0382/F	Residential development of 24 dwellings (4 detached dwellings, 4 semi-detached dwellings, 7 townhouses and 9 apartments) including improvements to roadway in Oakfield Park.	Department in negotiations to agree acceptable layout
D/2007/0317/RM	Proposed brown field development to provide 31 residential units with associated access roads and car parking	Approval decision to issue
D/2006/0066/F	Redevelopment of former Tesco site to provide residential development consisting of 4 no. apartments, 16 no. townhouses and 24 no. semi-detached dwellings with associated roads, landscaping and amenity.	Finalising roads issues.
Moyle District Council
E/2009/0316/F	Amendment to previous approved application Ref: E/2004/0433/F. Proposed reconfiguration of hotel building only, to provide 45 bedrooms, 29 suites, restaurant/bar and ancillary accommodation all contained within previously approved footprint and retention of 24 holiday chalets, associated access roads, parking and landscaping as previously approved.	Finalising Article 40 Agreement
E/2007/0037/F	Housing development, 7 dwellings (amended scheme)	Refusal Decision to issue
E/2006/0016/F	Retention of dwelling (No. 96) and refurbishment of traditional outbuildings to residential use with new sewerage treatment plant.	Approval Decision to issue

File Reference	Proposal	Current Position
Ballymena Borough Council
G/2010/0191/F	Proposed demolition of existing dwelling house and re-development of site to provide 3 No. 1 Bed and 13 No. 2 bed apartments in 3 blocks and associated siteworks.	Application deferred by Council at meeting of 06/06/13. Part of the site in Flood Plain
G/2010/0082/F	Part demolition and extension of existing shopping centre (amended design).	Awaiting information in relation to roads issues
G/2009/0361/F	Construction of 13 townhouses and 13 apartments along with new road through the site and associated car parking (Amended Plans Received)	Awaiting contamination report from agent.

I have instructed officials to expedite the processing of these applications so that decisions on them, to approve or refuse, are issued as quickly as possible. I have also asked for an update at the end of July 2013.

In summary, of the 13 applications, 3 approvals to issue, one refusal to issue, one deferral of Council, 3 in regulations on layout, one article 40 agreement, one awaiting further information, two with road issues and one information being assessed.

Dereliction Scheme: Council Bids

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of the Environment to list the councils which have bid for his Department's Dereliction Scheme; and to detail the projects and the amounts requested.

Wind Turbines/Wind Farms

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of the Environment if he plans to introduce measures to codify law in respect of wind turbines and wind farms, given that the existing guidelines on the assessment and rating of noise from wind farms, ETSU-R-97, may have been rendered out of date by technological development.

(AQW 23823/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The Department's Planning Policy Statement 18 'Renewable Energy' requires applications for wind energy development to demonstrate that they will not cause significant harm to the safety or amenity of any sensitive receptors (including future occupants of committed developments) arising from, inter alia, noise.

In common with the approach adopted in England, Wales and Scotland my Department recommends the use of the 'Assessment and Rating of Noise from Wind Farms' (ETSU-R-97) standard in the assessment and rating of noise from wind energy developments. This standard describes a methodology for the assessment and rating of noise from wind energy development.

At the direction of the Department of Energy and Climate Change in England, the ETSU-R-97 standard was recently the subject of a review by the Institute of Acoustics (IoA). Following the review the IoA published a Good Practice Guide aimed at ensuring the consistent application of the methodology.

I am unaware of any plans to amend or further review the ETSU-R-97 standard which I am satisfied provides a reasonable degree of protection to wind farm neighbours, without placing unreasonable restrictions on wind farm development.

Wind Turbines/Wind Farms: Noise Monitoring

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of the Environment if he will codify regulations in respect of noise monitoring of wind farms and wind turbines to ensure that noise monitoring is carried out by an accredited acoustician who is independent of the wind industry and approved by those affected by the noise impacts of wind turbines; and to detail if he will establish procedures to ensure that deliberate manipulation of turbine operation during resting to reduce wind turbine noise, cannot occur.

(AQW 23824/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The Department's Planning Policy Statement 18 'Renewable Energy' requires that applications for wind energy development demonstrate that they will not cause significant harm to the safety or amenity of any sensitive receptors (including future occupants of committed developments) arising from, inter alia, noise.

In common with the approach adopted in England, Wales and Scotland my Department recommends the use of the 'Assessment and Rating of Noise from Wind Farms' (ETSU-R-97) standard in the assessment and rating of noise from wind energy developments.

In assessing the likely noise impacts from a wind energy proposal my Department will be guided by advice from the appropriate Council EHO as it is they who have the relevant expertise and experience in this area. They will also advise whether noise monitoring data and/or noise impact assessments, submitted to the Department by developers, have been carried out in accordance with the ETSU standard and relevant industry good practice and can therefore be relied upon for the purposes of determining a planning application.

School Transport: Cross-border Operators

Mr McCartney asked the Minister of the Environment whether the issue of cross-border school transport has been resolved since his announcement of 14 June 2012.

(AQW 23845/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The issue of cross-border operators delivering school transport in NI remains active work by my Department. My Department continues to engage with the Department for Transport and the European Commission to bring clarity to the rules which apply to operators from Ireland who provide services such as Education and Library Board home to school transport wholly within Northern Ireland.

EC Regulation 1073/2009 sets out the rules which apply to the carriage of passengers between, through and within Member States (MS), with cabotage being the carriage of passengers within a MS by a carrier who is established in a different MS. Regulation 1073/2009 further stipulates that cabotage operations should be carried out on a temporary basis. In bringing forward this legislation the Commission provided no definitive guidance on what constitutes "temporary". This has made interpretation and policy development in this area complex.

Given the lack of clear advice, from the Commission, around the temporary nature of cabotage operations, I and DOE have been engaging with the Department for Transport (DfT) and the Commission to bring certainty to the appropriate interpretation of EU Regulation 1073/2009.

Since June 2011, when I first became aware of the difficulties faced by NI operators particularly in the North West, my Department has been actively seeking to bring certainty to what has proven to be a complex legal issue. In June 2012, having received comprehensive solicitor's and Senior Counsel advice, it was concluded that Department of Education home to school contracts, because of their regularity and duration, were not temporary and could, therefore, only be delivered by NI licensed operators. As a result the Irish operators who held such contracts were required to obtain NI operator licences. Currently the home to school transport contracts are being delivered by NI licensed operators.

In parallel with this decision, I sought Commission advice on whether home to school transport contracts could be delivered in compliance with cabotage rules. Subsequent Commission advice indicated that contracts generally, and home to school transports particularly, could be delivered as cabotage services. My Department has adapted its policy to take account of this advice. However, in recognition of the impact of this on NI operators my officials have continued to engage with the Commission and DfT with a view to finalising a cabotage policy which takes account of Commission advice whilst having regard to the needs of the NI bus industry. Departmental officials, accompanied by members of the NI bus industry, met Commission officials in Brussels at the end of April and had an extensive and valuable exchange on the cabotage issue, and this is an important input into our cabotage policy.

It is my intention, subject to DfT consideration of what would be a UK wide policy, to bring the matter to a conclusion by publishing further final policy advice and guidance within the next few weeks. This issue does not appear to have been addressed and tackled – that's why I intervened and continue to intervene to secure the full and final outcome which is needed, not least given the interests of North West operators.

Planning Service: Departmental Economists

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 18791 11-15, how many times in 2012 the Planning Service made use of the services of departmental economists.

(AQW 23866/11-15)

Mr Attwood: In processing applications for planning permission, DOE Planning regularly consults with other authorities or bodies likely to have an interest in, and observations to make in respect of proposed development. The expert advice of consultees plays a key part of the development management process.

Departmental economists may be consulted on a range of applications such as investment and regeneration projects that are dependent on grant aid or on economically significant planning applications.

The Department consulted with Departmental economists on 5 separate planning applications during 2012.

Bonfires: Burning Tyres

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of the Environment what steps he will take to end the practice of using tyres as a source of fuel for bonfires; and what advice he has given to local councils to ensure the end of this practice.

(AQW 23872/11-15)

Mr Attwood: Beyond advice and enforcement action there is a need for those who construct or plan bonfires to show responsibility, respect the environment and avoid harmful emissions.

Increasing people's awareness of the harm that burning tyres cause can help in stopping this practice. I will seek opportunities to emphasise that by burning tyres, bonfire builders are forcing bystanders, local residents and indeed themselves to breathe in potentially cancer-causing chemicals. I will also encourage community groups to work with their local Councils and use alternative forms of celebration where they are available, such as the beacons that are being used in a number of locations. To press home the point I am writing to councils, political parties, the Orange Order and MLA's to urge that all use the influence they have around this issue.

Obtaining a prosecution against tyre dumpers depends on there being sufficient evidence (photographs, video footage or details of vehicle registrations) and witness statements that can be presented in court. My Department will continue to seek and use evidence of this nature to take legal action against businesses who use this route to get rid of waste at the expense of the community. I have stressed to Council and the NIEA the need to seek to escalate this enforcement action.

Dereliction Scheme: Funding

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment to detail his plans, including timescales, for future tranches of funding through the Dereliction Scheme.

(AQW 23878/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The Dereliction Intervention Programme is a rolling programme which I will be bidding to maintain in the current financial year and beyond. As part of the June monitoring round I have bid for £1.5 million for the 2013/2014 programme of funding and until the outcome of the monitoring round is known timescales for this year's scheme cannot be agreed.

On 12 March 2013 I wrote to all councils who were unsuccessful and partially unsuccessful in the 2012/2013 Scheme advising that it is open to those councils to revise or adjust their bids should further funding become available.

I will also shortly be writing out to all 26 councils asking them to revise, adjust their bids or enter a new bid in preparation for further funding should it become available.

Wind Turbines: Live Applications

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment how many live applications for wind turbines are in the planning system, broken down by constituency.

(AQW 23879/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The Department welcomes the contribution that renewable projects make to the reduction of carbon emissions and acknowledges the importance of processing these applications in a consistent and timely manner.

As of 30 April 2013 there were 736 planning applications for single and multiple wind turbines under consideration by the Department.

Table 1 below details the number of live applications for single and multiple wind turbines by parliamentary constituency area.

Table 1

Due to the significant interest in renewable energy applications a renewable energy report is now available on the planning website at <http://www.planningni.gov.uk/index/tools/about-statistics/renewable-energy.html> where you can view this detail of information.

Wind Turbines: Successful Planning Applications

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of successful planning applications for wind turbines in each of the last five years, broken down by constituency.

(AQW 23880/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The Department welcomes the contribution that renewable projects make to the reduction of carbon emissions and acknowledges the importance of processing these applications in a consistent and timely manner.

In the last 5 years a total of 1273 applications have been granted planning permission, 514 of these in the last business year alone.

Table 1 below details the number of applications for single and multiple wind turbines decided in each of the last 5 years, indicating how many were approved and the approval rate.

Notes:

- 1 Decided applications may not have been received in the same time period. Therefore direct comparisons between the figures cannot be made. Applications decided do not include withdrawn applications.

The increased number of decisions issued and approval rate of 86.5% in 2012/13 compared with the previous three years demonstrates the Departments commitment to supporting the economy and a sustainable environment through renewable energy sources.

Area Plans: DOE Concerns

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of the Environment whether he plans to raise any concerns with the Minister of Education on the proposals to close some rural primary schools, following the public consultation on draft area plans for primary provision which ended on 1 June 2013.

(AQW 23954/11-15)

Mr Attwood: Clearly, I will have a personal view on the consultation. My role as Minister is to fulfil my statutory functions, where the DENI consultation does not appear to have a particular impact. In the future, with devolution of planning powers to Councils – particularly Development Plans and community planning – Councils may have a particular view on educational provision.

Hydroelectric Scheme: Roe Valley

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the current status of the proposed hydro-electric scheme at Roe Valley Country Park.

(AQW 23968/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The Roe Valley Hydroelectric scheme to restore industrial heritage and generate renewable power was proposed with two construction phases. The first phase largely consisted of civil engineering works to prevent flooding. This phase is complete.

The second phase for the purchase, installation and commissioning of the turbine is subject to a bid for additional capital funding. The tenders for this final phase were higher than the projected market price which is why an additional capital funding bid is required. However, a review of the Economic Appraisal has clearly shown that the scheme remains viable and will pay-back the investment in full over the next 20 years against an expected lifetime of 50 years.

My Department supports the projected environmental and economic benefits associated with the proposed Hydroelectric scheme and I remain keen that this scheme is completed to off-set 50% of NIEA's electricity needs and as a practical demonstration of the low impact of well designed and managed schemes.

Buildings: Demolition Applications

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment whether he intends to amend Environmental Impact Assessment regulations to comply with the Court of Justice of the European Union decision in Case c-50/09 – (Commission v Ireland); and when he will order this amendment.

(AQW 23971/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The decision in Case c-50/09 – (Commission v Ireland) and a related UK Court of Appeal judgment in SAVE Britain's Heritage v Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government and Lancaster City Council, which concluded that demolition works come within the scope of the EIA Directive, were implemented in September 2012 by an amendment to the Department's Direction on Demolition and Development and to the Planning (General Development) Order (NI) 1993 ("the GDO").

The changes to the Department's Direction brought the demolition of all buildings with some minor exceptions under planning control. To ensure that the planning system was not overburdened with unnecessary planning applications for the demolition of relatively insignificant buildings the Department also introduced permitted development rights for the demolition of buildings. However, by virtue of an earlier amendment to the GDO made by the Planning (Environmental Impact Assessment) Regulations (NI) 1999 these were only granted up to the point where demolition reached the EIA threshold so that permitted development rights would not be granted where the proposal required environmental scrutiny under the EIA Regulations.

Planning: Applications in the Derry City Council Area

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on major planning applications in the Derry City Council area.

(AQO 4229/11-15)

Mr Attwood: Decisions have been made on four of the major retailing applications in Derry. One application, for an Asda food store, has been approved at the Crescent Link Retail Park. Three applications were refused. Two applications on the Buncrana Road/Templemore Road for Tesco (A/2004/0976/F and A/2009/0212/F) are now to be the subjects of a conjoined Public Inquiry to be held in November 2013. The other application at Drumahoe, A/2009/0689/O, is also now the subject of a Public Inquiry and the PAC will hold the hearing at the end of August 2013.

There are 5 major retailing applications which are currently being processed by the Department, one of which (the Niche Drinks Factory site) is being dealt with by the Area Planning Office in Orchard House. Consultation responses remain outstanding for this application.

The other four applications are being dealt with by the Strategic Planning Division in Belfast. The applicants have submitted additional information under their own volition and have consequently extended the processing of these applications.

I previously clarified my views on the two applications at Crescent Link when I announced that I would consider a large retail store at this location to be unacceptable. However the Notice of Opinion for the food store has not yet been issued, to allow the applicant time to consider a revised mixed-use proposal for the sites.

Re-advertisement, re-neighbour notification and consultation procedures are currently ongoing for the McCormick site on the Buncrana Road, due to the recent receipt of further environmental information. The final proposal at the Caw roundabout has still outstanding issues to resolve in relation to the Roads Service requirements but the applicants are also considering an amendment to the proposed development.

I would wish to bring all the applications within my control, to a conclusion quickly. I believe it would be helpful to create certainty. However, with applicants submitting further information – as they are entitled to do – this extends the time for decisions. As I have attempted to demonstrate with Article 31 decisions, I am keen to bring applications to the point of decision. Applicants should work with DOE on doing so.

The Northern Area Planning Office is also dealing with approximately 120 applications that are classed as major proposals. The majority of the applications relate to residential developments including social housing proposals. Other significant applications include the redevelopment of Fort George and mixed use proposals throughout the City.

Wind Turbines: Planning Applications

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the total number of planning applications for wind turbines and farms, including the number of turbines proposed in each case, in the (i) Magherafelt; (ii) Cookstown; and (iii) Dungannon district council areas, in each of the last five years; and the number that were (a) approved; and (b) rejected.

(AQW 24034/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The Department welcomes the contribution that renewable projects make to the reduction of carbon emissions and acknowledges the importance of processing these applications in a consistent and timely manner.

In the last 5 years, 351 applications for wind turbines and wind farms were received across the Magherafelt, Cookstown and Dungannon Council areas. For the same period and areas, a total of 186 such applications were approved with 26 refused.

Table 1 below details the number of applications for wind turbines and wind farms received, decided and approved in the last 5 years.

The increased number of decisions issued and approval rate of 91.8% in 2012/13 compared with the previous five years demonstrates the Departments commitment to supporting the economy and a sustainable environment through renewable energy sources.

Wind Turbines: Planning Policy

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of the Environment when the requirements for granting planning permission for the erection of wind turbines were last updated in his Department's planning policy; and whether they are being reviewed in advance of the creation of a Single Planning Policy Statement.

(AQW 24036/11-15)

Mr Attwood: Planning policy in relation to wind energy is contained in Planning Policy Statement (PPS) 18 'Renewable Energy', which was published in final form in August 2009.

The Department is committed to preparation of a single Strategic Planning Policy Statement (SPPS) in time for the transfer of Planning powers to local councils. The purpose of the SPPS is to provide a comprehensive consolidation of policy, including a review of some elements where necessary. The intention is that a draft SPPS will be published for public consultation by the end of the year.

Research and information is published on an ongoing basis on issues related to wind farms and wind turbines. I however, am and remain satisfied with the content of the planning policy PPS18.

Wind Turbines: Gaelectric Applications

Mr Wells asked the Minister of the Environment (i) how many applications for wind turbines have been submitted by Gaelectric in each of the last five years; and (ii) how many of these applications (a) were approved; and (b) are pending a decision.

(AQW 24038/11-15)

Mr Attwood: The Department welcomes the contribution that renewable projects make to the reduction of carbon emissions and acknowledges the importance of processing these applications in a consistent and timely manner.

In the last 5 years three applications have been received by the Department from Gaelectric for wind turbines. Two were received in the 2008/09 business year and one was received in 2011/12.

All three applications have been approved and there are no current applications for wind turbines that have been submitted by Gaelectric that are pending a decision.

Organ Donation: Driving Licence Declarations

Mr Ross asked the Minister of the Environment how many forms for (i) new driving licences; (ii) replacement driving licences; and (iii) duplicate driving licences have been returned to the Driver and Vehicle Agency, in each of the last ten years; and on how many occasions did applicants indicate on their form that they wished to be an organ donor.
(AQW 24061/11-15)

Mr Attwood: Whilst the Driver & Vehicle Agency facilitates those applying for driving licences registering their willingness to donate organs, since this data is not required for the processing of driving licence applications, under data processing rules, no record of this data is retained by the Agency. The details relating to applicants making a declaration in favour of organ donation is transmitted directly to the NHS Organ Donation and Transplantation Directorate.

The Organ Donation and Transplantation Directorate of NHS Blood and Transplant publish annual figures for the number of people on the Organ Donor Register for NI, but the figures do not include the source of registration. The figures show an increase in registration from 440,123 in 2008/09 to 550,629 in 2012/13, an increase of around 25%.

Table 1 below details the driver licensing transaction volumes in the categories requested for each of the last 10 years.

- Figures sourced from DVA management systems and are not validated DOE/DVA Official Statistics.
- The period of validity of a driving licence changed from three to ten years in 1985, which led to a three year peak renewal period each mid decade, which explains the increase in full licence figures during the three years from 2005/06 to 2007/08.

Wind Farms: Health Issues

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of (i) the health issues raised in the Hanning/Evans article in the British Medical Journal on 10 March 2012; and (ii) the concerns raised at Westminster on behalf of GPs from Aberdeenshire who noted an increase in health issues which coincided with significant wind farm development in the area.
(AQW 24104/11-15)

Mr Attwood: Where matters of public health are raised in relation to a proposal for wind energy development; or where an assessment of scientific research in this area is sought, it is my Department's practice to consult with the Public Health Agency (PHA) which possesses the relevant expertise in this area.

The advice of the PHA is that, in general, provided established guidance and best practice in relation to placement of wind turbines and mitigation measures is undertaken, there is minimal to no risk to the health of the population associated with such facilities.

The PHA has previously advised by Department that the British Medical Journal article by Hanning/ Evans which you cite is an opinion piece, and although it does consider earlier research, it does not necessarily do so in a systematic manner. In light of this the PHA advise that it should not be regarded as evidence of new scientific research in this area.

In relation to the concerns presented to Westminster by Aberdeenshire GPs, I have asked officials to access this information, consider it and seek further advice from the PHA.

By-laws: North Down

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of the Environment when her Department received, and will comment on, the new draft Pleasure Ground By-law proposals for the North Down Borough Council area.
(AQO 4337/11-15)

Mr Attwood: On 19 March 2010, the Department received an application from North Down Borough Council ("the Council") to revoke its 1995 bye-laws for Pleasure Grounds and to replace them with bye-laws for Pleasure Grounds, Public Walks and Open Spaces ("the proposed bye-laws").

A final version of the proposed bye-laws was received from the Council on 16 January 2013.

The Department considers that, subject to 3 minor amendments, the proposed bye-laws are suitable for confirmation.

Bye-laws do not take effect until confirmed by the Departments concerned. In this case, DCAL, having responsibility for one of the enabling powers under which the bye-laws are being made, will also be required to agree to confirm the bye-laws in addition to DOE.

The draft bye-laws were forwarded to DCAL and the Department awaits its formal response before it engages further with the Council on the proposed bye-laws.

Department of Finance and Personnel

Civil Service: Surplus Posts

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the (i) location; and (ii) number of surplus posts in the Northern Ireland Civil Service at (a) Administrative Assistant; (b) Administrative Officer; (c) Executive Officer II; (d) Executive Officer I; (e) Staff Officer; and (f) Deputy Principal grades, in each Government Department.
(AQW 23325/11-15)

Mr Wilson (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): The location and number of surplus posts in the Civil Service at (a) Administrative Assistant (AA); (b) Administrative Officer (AO); (c) Executive Officer II (EOII); (d) Executive Officer I (EOI); (e) Staff Officer (SO); and (f) Deputy Principal (DP) grades, in each Department at 21 May 2013 are set out in the table overleaf.

Civil Service: Video-conferencing Facilities

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel (i) which Departments have Video Conferencing facilities; (ii) whether these facilities are room based systems for group conferencing or personal laptop systems; and (iii) how frequently these systems are used.

(AQW 23572/11-15)

Mr Wilson: All NICS departments have Video Conferencing facilities. There are both room based group conferencing facilities and desktop/laptop based Video Conferencing facilities.

Usage varies from Video Conferencing endpoint. Some are used daily, such as, the endpoints used by NI Direct in Orchard House and Causeway Exchange to others that are used on an ad hoc basis.

Civil Service: Video-conferencing Assessment

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what assessment has been conducted into Video Conferencing requirements within the Civil Service and arm's-length bodies.

(AQW 23575/11-15)

Mr Wilson: Each video conferencing unit purchased is subjected to the normal Departmental capital purchasing procedures which include writing a Business Case to gain approval for the purchase of a capital asset and subject to the normal Post Project Review/Evaluation processes and procedures in place within the Departments purchasing the unit.

Enterprise Design Authority, now part of Enterprise Shared Services, DFP completed a Video Conferencing Strategy for the NICS and a resulting business case for the provision of a centralised Video Conferencing Infrastructure that supports both internal Video Conferences across Network NI and external breakout to external video conferencing units. This is now an offered IT Assist service and is therefore also available to any arm's-length body that chooses to take IT Assist's services.

Electricity: Carbon Price Floor Exemption

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the calculation used to predict that electricity bills would be 10-15 per cent lower following the exemption from the carbon price floor.

(AQW 23608/11-15)

Mr Wilson: This assessment is based on analysis contained in the Department of Energy and Climate Change (DECC) report, Estimated Impacts of Energy and Climate Change Policies on Energy Prices and Bills 2011.

DECC's most recent report in this regard was published in March 2013 and this suggests that the carbon price floor could increase the average electricity prices paid by large energy intensive users by up to 26 per cent by 2030. Clearly such a large increase would have a devastating impact on such business users in Northern Ireland, affecting their competitiveness and future long term prospects.

Civil Service: Complete and Accurate Statements of Revenue

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline the procedures which would be required to provide a set of complete and accurate statements of revenue.

(AQW 23627/11-15)

Mr Wilson: In line with its statutory responsibilities under the Government Resources and Accounts Act (Northern Ireland) 2001 (sections 9(2) and 11(2)), the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP) issues annual accounts directions which direct the form and content of department and agency accounts.

For the current financial year, these directions can be found in the Dear Accounting Officer letter issued to Accounting Officers as DAO (DFP) 03/13.

The directions should be read along with other guidance issued by DFP in the form of Finance Director letters:

- FD (DFP) 01/13, which provides guidance on the latest version of the Treasury Government Financial Reporting Manual to be used;
- FD (DFP) 04/13, which provides guidance on the timetable for producing accounts and the procedures for accounts being audited; and
- FD (DFP) 07/13, FD (DFP) 08/13 and FD (DFP) 09/13, which provide guidance on the laying of accounts before the Assembly for departments, agencies and Non-Departmental Public Bodies (NDPBs) respectively.

These, along with other more detailed guidance, can be found at http://www.dfpni.gov.uk/index/finance/afmd/afmd-finance/afmd-financial_reporting.htm

Going For Growth: Funding Bids

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what requests or bids he has received from the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for the £400 million required for the Agri-Food Strategy Board's Going For Growth initiative.

(AQW 23687/11-15)

Mr Wilson: I have not received any bids or requests from the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for the £400 million required for the Agri-Food Strategy Board's Report "Going For Growth – Investing in Success".

Civil Law Reform/Family Law

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether responsibility for civil law reform of family law will be transferred to the Department of Justice.

(AQW 23999/11-15)

Mr Wilson: I refer the Member to my reply to Pat Ramsey on 8 July 2011(AQW 1300/11-15). It remains the position that I have no plans to propose transfer of my Department's civil law reform responsibility to the Department of Justice.

Newry Canal: Business Case

Mr Cree asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what is the current status of the business case for the Newry Canal Project. (AQW 24005/11-15)

Mr Wilson: My Department has not received a Business Case in relation to the Newry Canal Project. May I suggest that if further information is required on this proposal the Member contacts the Minister for Culture, Arts & Leisure as she has policy responsibility for this particular project.

Roads: Landowner Compensation

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline his position on a 10 percent top-up compensation for landowners who are required to release land for road construction projects similar to the policy in Great Britain; and for his assessment of the implementation of such a policy in the case of the A31 Magherafelt bypass scheme. (AQW 24043/11-15)

Mr Wilson: This issue has been considered before by my Department in relation to other major road schemes. The findings were that the differences between GB and Northern Ireland provisions are much less clear cut than the question would imply.

In Northern Ireland qualifying owner occupiers of dwellings vested by an acquiring authority are already entitled to an additional 10% in the form of a Home Loss Payment, subject to a minimum of £4,500 and maximum £45,000. Similarly, qualifying owner occupiers of agricultural property are entitled to an unlimited Farm Loss Payment based on loss of net profits where the entire farm is taken. These supplemental amounts are over and above market value based compensation and any loss based disturbance compensation which is due to claimants.

In view of these existing provisions I have no plans to introduce legislation in Northern Ireland to replicate the GB provisions for basic and occupier loss payments. In GB the basic and occupier loss payments together amount to 10% of the market value, if both elements are payable to the same qualifying claimant, and are subject to ceilings.

In any event it would not necessarily be a matter for my Department to bring forward any such primary legislative change, but would more appropriately fall to one of the main vesting Departments.

My colleague, the Minister for Regional Development, informs me the design of the Magherafelt Bypass is at an advanced stage. A Public Inquiry was held in 2009, and the Direction Order and Notice of Intention to Proceed were published during 2010. The Vesting Order, however, will only be made when funding is confirmed.

Birth Rate: Northern Ireland/North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the birth rate in (i) Northern Ireland; and (ii) North Down, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 24087/11-15)

Mr Wilson: Table 1 overleaf shows the annual birth rate per 1,000 women aged 15-44 for Northern Ireland and North Down District Council area between 2007 and 2011.

Birth rates for 2012 will not be available until the release of 2012 population mid-year estimates at the end of June 2013.

Rate Relief: Dungannon SMEs

Ms McGahan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many small and medium-sized enterprises in Dungannon have applied for the rate relief scheme for empty shops or vacant premises since its introduction.

(AQW 24216/11-15)

Mr Wilson: Since introduction of Empty Premises Relief on 1st April 2012, six applications have been received by Land & Property Services for the Dungannon and South Tyrone District Council Area. LPS does not record applications by size or by town limits.

As of 14th June 2013, two applications have met the qualifying criteria of the scheme.

G8: Hosting Costs

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for a breakdown of the cost of hosting the G8 Summit to the Northern Ireland public purse.

(AQW 24225/11-15)

Mr Wilson: The cost estimates for hosting the G8 summit are still evolving and negotiations continue on apportioning these costs.

At our recent meeting, the Chief Secretary to the Treasury confirmed that the vast majority of policing and security-related costs will be met by UK Government and not the Executive. As might be expected there will be some other costs associated with hosting the G8 event. I will update the Assembly on the G8 costs as part of my Statement on June Monitoring, once this has been endorsed by the Executive.

It is also important to recognise that this event will generate significant revenues for Northern Ireland and especially the Fermanagh region.

Special Advisers: Tax/National Insurance

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, pursuant to AQO 4257/11-15, whether the eligibility of Special Advisers is based on their gross scale salary.

(AQW 24241/11-15)

Mr Wilson: I can confirm that tax and National Insurance contributions are deducted from the gross pay of all Special Advisers.

Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Waiting List Initiative: Travel Expenses

Mr Spratt asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, in relation to the Waiting List Initiative on surgery or medical interventions which were performed outside Northern Ireland, whether it is departmental policy to award tenders on the basis of excluding travel and subsistence costs from the assessment process or is the entire cost to the tax payer is included.

(AQW 23492/11-15)

Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) have created a Northern Ireland Independent Sector Tariff. Tariffs relate to assessment and treatment costs and do not include travel and subsistence.

Waiting List Initiative: Inconvenience

Mr Spratt asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, in relation to the Waiting List Initiative on surgery or medical interventions which were performed outside Northern Ireland, what weight is placed on the inconvenience and risk to the patient in the award of tenders.

(AQW 23493/11-15)

Mr Poots: I have been advised that: the Northern Health and Social Care Trust has no providers outside of Northern Ireland under the waiting list initiative on surgery or medical interventions; the Belfast, South Eastern and Western Trusts take account of the provision of services that can be delivered locally; and, the Southern Trust gives consideration to qualitative requirements.

Medical Negligence Cases: Settlement

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) how many medical negligence cases brought against his Department have been settled in the last three years; (ii) how many have been settled through the courts; and (iii) how many were settled by a non-legal arbitration route.

(AQW 23833/11-15)

Mr Poots:

- (i) It is assumed that this question refers to cases of clinical/social care negligence made against the Department which were settled in the last three years.

Information is detailed in Table 1 below on the number of settled cases during the last two years only, as information is not available for 2009/10. It should also be noted that it is not possible to disaggregate figures for (a) clinical and (b) social care negligence cases.

Table 1: Number of Clinical/Social Care Negligence Cases Settled (2010/11 – 2011/12)

Year	Total Number of Settled Cases
2010/11	259
2011/12	205

Source: DHSSPS CN1 Annual Information Return

- (ii) Information detailed in Table 2 below refers to the number of cases of clinical/social care negligence that have been settled after issue of proceedings.

Table 2: Number of Clinical/Social Care Negligence Cases Settled After Issue of Proceedings (2010/11 – 2011/12)

Year	Settled After Issue of Proceedings ¹
2010/11	121
2011/12	107

1 This refers to all cases settled after issue of proceedings and does not include any cases settled prior to the issue of proceedings or any cases where no damages were paid. Furthermore, figures do not distinguish between cases where a negotiated settlement has been reached and those which have been heard by a Judge and damages awarded.

- (iii) There were no cases settled by a non-legal arbitration route during the last two years, i.e. where the parties involved referred the dispute to one or more 'arbitrators' and whose decision they agreed to be bound.

Health Trusts: Ministerial Meetings

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) to outline the contacts which routinely take place between the officials and board members of the Health and Social Care Trusts and his departmental officials; (ii) whether agendas and minutes exist for these meetings; and (iii) where these agendas and meetings are published. (AQW 23837/11-15)

Mr Poots: As part of the governance arrangements between the Department and its Arms Length Bodies, my officials formally meet the Chairperson, Chief Executive and Executive Board Members of each Health and Social Care Trusts for mid and end year assurance and accountability meetings.

Agendas and minutes exist for each set of meetings and while these are not routinely published, they are subject to requests for release under the Freedom of Information Act.

In addition to these formal meetings, my officials hold a variety of meetings with Board members of Health and Social Care Trusts in the conduct of their normal business. Requests for information about each, including the existence of agendas and minutes are again subject to requests under the Freedom of information Act.

Operations: Average Costs

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is the average cost of an operation; and the average cost broken down by surgical speciality. (AQW 23855/11-15)

Mr Poots: The cost of an operation differs significantly between patients and is subject to a range of variables, including the diagnosis, complexity of the care and the particular procedure performed. In that context, there is no single, meaningful average cost of an operation and therefore this information cannot be provided.

However, average unit costs broken down by speciality for a wide range of procedures are collected by my Department and can be provided upon request

Children in Care

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, for each of the last three years, to detail (i) the number of children, broken down by age, who have been removed from the care of their parents following the recommendation of a social worker; (ii) the number of these children who were returned to parental care, broken down by the timescale in which they were returned; and (iii) the number of these children who were placed in foster care on a long-term basis.

(AQW 23870/11-15)

Mr Poots:

- (i) Table 1 below contains the number of children who have been removed from the care of their parents following the recommendation of a social worker in each of the last three years.

Patient Care Service: Transport

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the process by which a person with significant health issues and mobility limitations, who is cared for in a private facility under a contract with a local Health and Social Care Trust, is made responsible for providing their own transport to outpatient appointments.

(AQW 23877/11-15)

Mr Poots: General Practitioners assess whether their patients are eligible, on the basis of clinical need, for Patient Care Service transport provided by the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service. Patients who are not eligible for this service are expected to make their own arrangements either by using transport available to them or schemes that exist to help people with transport difficulties, including those provided by community transport operators, to take them to their outpatient appointment.

The Hospital Travel Costs Scheme provides help with travel costs to hospital for health service treatment for people and their dependants with entitlement determined on the basis of qualifying income levels.

Cancer: Individual Funding Requests

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) how many Individual Funding Requests the Health and Social Care Board has received since the new process was implemented in December 2012; (ii) how many of these requests were (a) approved; and (b) rejected; (iii) how many of the requests were for cancer medicines; and (iv) how many of the (a) approved; and (b) rejected requests were for cancer medicines.

(AQW 23889/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) has supplied the following information which demonstrates that the majority of individual funding requests (IFR) received by the HSCB are approved.

- (i) 113 IFRs received from 1 December 2012
- (ii) (a) approved: 107
(b) rejected: 1
(c) further info required: 2
(d) no longer required: 2
(e) not supported by Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust: 1
- (iii) 44 IFRs for Cancer medicines received from 1 December 2012
- (iv) (a) approved: 43
(b) rejected requests were for cancer medicines: 0
(c) not supported by HSC Trust: 1

Travel Expenses: Northern Trust

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how staff in the Northern Health and Social Care Trust, who are affected by the proposed changes to travel expenses, have been kept informed of the proposals.

(AQW 23970/11-15)

Mr Poots: I am advised that the Trust issued an information sheet to Assistant Directors on 30 April 2013 to cascade down to managers and staff; information was also published on the Trust's internal website. Staff will again be advised of the changes and given the website address in their June payslips.

Health Service: Number of Staff

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people employed in (i) the Health Service; and (ii) his Department's arm's-length bodies in each year since 2007, broken down by grade.

(AQW 23990/11-15)

Mr Poots: Staffing information on the bulk of Health & Social Care organisations can be found in summary in the quarterly Key Facts Workforce Bulletin and in more detail in the annual HSC Workforce Census. These publications can be found on the DHSSPS website at: http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/index/stats_research/workforce-statistics/stats-hsc.htm/. Please note that changes in organisation structures, occupational family categories (due to the introduction of Agenda for Change or re-grading) and methodology refinements, mean that yearly comparisons may not be strictly comparable.

Additionally, staffing information from the Northern Ireland Medical and Dental Training Agency (NIMDTA) is shown in Table 1 below.

The SOC codes used in Table 2 refer to the following staff groups within the NIFRS:

- 1 Station Commander up to Chief Fire Officer; Assistant Group Commander Control, Group Commander Control & Principal Fire Control Officer; Senior Officer, Principal Officer & Director.
- 2 Principal Officer.
- 3 Wholetime Operational – Firefighter, Crew Commander & Watch Commander; Retained Operational – Firefighter, Crew Commander & Watch Commander Scale 5 & 6, Senior Officer & Principal Officer.

Domiciliary Care: Private Providers

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) to detail the total; and (ii) to provide a breakdown of, all contracts agreed with private domiciliary care providers in each of the last five years, identifying the location of any new provisions.

(AQW 23998/11-15)

Mr Poots: Individual contracts are the responsibility of Health and Social Care Trusts which commission domiciliary care across a wide range of programmes of care. The information you have requested is not held centrally and could only be collected at a disproportionate cost.

All contracts with private providers are subject to Public Contract Regulations which govern public procurement in Northern Ireland.

Supply Contract (SS16A)

Mr McClarty asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is the most recent revision date of Supply Contract (SS16A); and whether all versions of Supply Contract (SS16A), predating the most recent change, have been withdrawn.

(AQW 24002/11-15)

Mr Poots: The most recent revision date of Supply Contract SS16A is 20th May 2013 and this version applies to all contracts awarded from 16th March 2013.

However, in line with the Late Payment of Commercial Debts (Interest) Act 1998 (as amended by the 2013 Regulations), those contracts signed before 16 March 2013 will retain the conditions agreed at the time the contract was signed.

Supply Contract (SS16A)

Mr McClarty asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 19675/11-15, (i) when did the Health and Social Care Regional Procurement Board first become aware that it would be necessary to change the payment terms of contract (SS16A), earlier than the originally agreed date of September 2013; and (ii) when the contract review into the change of payment date from September 2013 commenced and was completed.

(AQW 24004/11-15)

Mr Poots:

- (i) The minutes of the Regional Procurement Board show that it was formally advised of the need to change payment terms earlier than the originally agreed date of September 2013 at its meeting on 1 February 2013.
- (ii) The Coalition Government's response to its consultation on the proposed revision to the Late Payment of Commercial Debts Act was published in February 2013. It concluded that it did not intend to avail of a potential opt-out available for Health in relation to the new payment terms. Following this, a review of the proposed regulations was completed and revised payment clauses for inclusion in the revised payment terms were agreed on 14 April. These clauses were transposed into terms and conditions on the Esourcing NI system on 20 May. The revised payment terms are applicable to all contracts awarded on or after 16 March 2013.

Hospital Deaths: Falls

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many deaths have been associated with a fall in hospital, such as from a trolley, bed or wheelchair, broken down by hospital, for (i) 2010; (ii) 2011; and (iii) 2012.

(AQW 24011/11-15)

Mr Poots: The number of deaths which have been associated with a fall in hospital in Northern and Western HSC Trusts is shown in the table below:

Hospital	2010	2011	2012
Antrim	1	1	0
Causeway	0	1	0
Altnagelvin	1	1	1

Source: Northern & Western HSC Trusts

Belfast, South Eastern and Southern HSC Trusts have advised it is not possible using electronic systems, to identify whether a fall in hospital has resulted in the death of the patient as this information could only be provided if a clinician carried out a full review of all patients who have sustained a fall to identify if the death could have resulted from the fall in each of the years requested. As such this would incur a disproportionate cost.

Ambulance Service: Staff Pay Bands

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the departmental time line for the completion of the exercise to band and grade Ambulance Service workers, as it has been nine years since the process commenced; for his assessment of (i) whether the delay in completing this exercise has resulted in the demoralisation of staff; and (ii) whether there is a deficiency in skills sets compared to Ambulance Service workers in Scotland, England and Wales.

(AQW 24023/11-15)

Mr Poots: Agenda for Change is being implemented in partnership with Trade Unions at Trust level. I am advised that similar to other Agenda for Change posts where the partners in the process were unable to agree a job match, the Emergency Medical Technicians and Paramedics posts are being subjected to full Job Evaluation. Despite following due regional and national processes and significant effort by the key partners involved, the Trust has been unable to conclude the process and produce agreed outcomes. The partners in this process agreed in February 2013 that the posts should be referred to the Regional Quality Assurance Job Evaluation Panel but this panel has been unable to meet because of the unavailability of one of its members. Whether or not new salary bands apply will depend on the outcomes of the Job Evaluation Process. However Paramedics and Rapid Response Paramedics and Emergency Medical Technicians are being paid on a without prejudice basis on Agenda for Change pay bands. Paramedics and Rapid Response Paramedics are being paid a Band 5 salary and Emergency Medical Technicians are being paid a Band 4 salary.

- (i) Whilst NIAS as the Employing Authority is anxious to receive confirmation of the agreed outcomes from the regional panel for all 3 of its staff groups, and recognises that the relevant post-holders also wish to receive notification of the final agreed outcomes for their jobs, the Trust has no evidence to suggest the delay in completing this exercise has resulted in the demoralisation of its staff.

- (ii) All frontline ambulance staff employed by NIAS are required to undertake and successfully complete nationally accredited ambulance training prior to commencing operational duties. The Trust is confident that its frontline staff have, and continue to retain, the necessary skill sets required to deliver out-of-hospital patient care to the public of Northern Ireland.

Foyleview Special School, Derry: Nurse

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps his Department is taking to ensure the retention of a nurse at Foyleview Special School in Derry.

(AQW 24073/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Western Health and Social Care Trust has confirmed that the current nurse at Foyle View School will be leaving. The Trust is actively trying to recruit a replacement and the school is being kept informed.

The Trust can assure the families of the pupils at the school that all individual pupil care plans are up-to-date. The Classroom Assistants are fully trained and deemed competent to carry out all the tasks associated with the care plans.

Mid-Ulster Hospital

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what discussions his Department has held on future provision at the Mid-Ulster Hospital; and to provide details of these discussions.

(AQW 24086/11-15)

Mr Poots: I can advise that my Department has held no discussions on future provision at the Mid-Ulster Hospital. The commissioning of hospital services is the responsibility of the Health and Social Care Board.

Accident and Emergency: Antrim Area Hospital

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of patients presenting at Antrim Area Hospital Accident and Emergency department in each of the last five years; and any projections for use in the next three years.

(AQW 24100/11-15)

Mr Poots: Information on attendances (new, unplanned and/or planned reviews) at emergency care departments is published on an annual basis and is available to view or download from:

http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/index/stats_research/hospital-stats/emergency_care-3.htm

Information for 2012/13 is due to be published on the 27th June 2013.

The Department has not made any projections as to the number of patients expected to attend Antrim Area Hospital emergency department in each of the next three years.

A new £9 million state of the art emergency department is due to open on 26th June 2013 at Antrim Area Hospital. The new facility has the capacity to cater for up to 90,000 attendances a year. In developing the business case for the new unit, the Northern HSC Trust estimated that by 2018 there would be almost 84,000 attendances.

Southern Trust: Learning Disability Service

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many of the (i) 293 people with a learning disability taking part in day opportunities; and (ii) 246 people with a learning disability involved in voluntary training placements, in the Southern Health and Social Care Trust area, were aged (a) 19-25; (b) 26-35; (c) 36-45; and (d) over 45 years old; and what percentage of the people participating in these schemes have a severe learning disability.

(AQW 24103/11-15)

Mr Poots: The information is not held centrally and was therefore requested from the Southern Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust. The response is detailed below:

Table 1: Day Opportunities – Learning Disability Service Users

* This question and AQW23105/11-15 indicated 246 placements. A check by the Trust has indicated that the actual number of users in voluntary training placements was 242.

Figures have not been validated by the DHSSPS

Severe Learning Disability

Day Opportunities and Voluntary Training Placements are designed to meet the needs of service users whose needs are best met in a community setting. All of these participants have person centred plans and have had comprehensive assessments undertaken by key workers and would be considered to have a severe Learning Disability within the terms of the Mental Health Order, while being judged to have low dependency needs. The Trust has supported these individuals to avail of community based activities which accommodate their specific needs.

Service users who present with challenging behaviours or whose needs are highly complex will continue to have their needs met in a day care setting.

Care Homes: HSCB Oversight

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 22703/11-15, what steps have been taken to establish a Health and Social Care Board led regional oversight process on the future of statutory care homes. (AQW 24116/11-15)

Mr Poots: On 3rd May 2013, I called a halt to the Trusts' consultation processes. I have asked the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) to lead on a new, regionalised process for consulting, engaging and implementing change. In doing so, I am keen to secure the best possible outcomes for older people, including those currently residing in statutory residential care homes.

The Health and Social Care Board has now convened the Regional Planning Group which has already had preliminary meetings. A Project Brief has been issued by my Department to inform the work of this Group.

My Department expects to receive a Project Initiation Document (PID), from the HSC Board, in the coming weeks. This document will set out the milestones for delivery of the project and the associated project structure.

Hydebank Wood: Healthcare Costs

Mr Copeland asked inister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the cost of healthcare provided at Hydebank Wood Young Offenders Centre and Prison in each of the last five years. (AQW 24145/11-15)

Mr Poots: The cost of healthcare provided at Hydebank Wood Young Offenders Centre and Prison in each of the last five years, broken down between (i) Goods and Services (G&S) and (ii) Salaries and Wages (S&W) is shown in the table below.

Year	G&S (£)	S&W (£)	Total (£)
2008/09	257,872	977,184	1,235,056
2009/10	233,607	1,026,459	1,260,066
2010/11	309,530	923,123	1,232,653
2011/12	316,642	882,399	1,199,041
2012/13	316,107	802,571	1,118,678

Note G&S includes such items as Pharmacy Drugs, Pharmaceutical Services and Addiction Services for Prisons

Tobacco: Packaging Legislation

Mr McDevitt asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline his position on standardised packaging of tobacco products, following the announcement by his counterpart in the Irish Government that he will be introducing legislation on this matter; and whether he will join with the Scottish and Welsh Governments in calling on the British Government to introduce legislation on standardised packaging.

(AQW 24153/11-15)

Mr Poots: I support measures that lead to a reduction in the uptake of smoking by children and young people which is why I agreed to the inclusion of Northern Ireland in a UK-wide consultation exercise on standardised packaging for tobacco products. This was led by the Department of Health in London. The consultation responses at UK-wide level and for each Devolved Administration are currently being considered.

Ideally, I would like to see a UK-wide approach taken on standardised packaging and I have recently written to the Secretary of State for Health to encourage him to come to an early decision on this issue.

Mental Health Services: South Eastern Trust

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 20810/11-15, how Psychology and Psychological Therapy services within the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust have been strengthened in recent years.

(AQW 24178/11-15)

Mr Poots: In 2008 and 2010, the Trust secured significant additional funding to increase staffing levels in Adult Mental Health Services in response to the significant increase in demand for psychological therapies. In 2011, the Trust established a multi-disciplinary, cross programme Working Group to develop a structure for an integrated Clinical Psychology and Psychological Therapies Service. In April 2013 the remaining Cognitive Behaviour Therapy staff within Adult Mental Health Services joined the integrated service. This integrated structure optimises clinical efficiency and effectiveness and facilitates governance of psychological therapies delivered across the Trust.

Downe Hospital: Low Secure/Rehabilitation Centre

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 20806/11-15, for an update on the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust's plans to locate a Low Secure/Rehabilitation centre at the Downe Hospital site in Downpatrick.

(AQW 24179/11-15)

Mr Poots: I am advised that the South Eastern Trust plans to relocate its Acute Mental Health Inpatient provision to a single site at the Ulster Hospital. In doing so, the Trust also proposes to relocate its Inpatient Low Secure and Rehabilitation Service to the Downe Hospital. This is dependent on business case approval and funding availability.

Community Care Packages: Northern Trust Delay

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people are awaiting community care packages in the Northern Health and Social Care Trust area; and to outline the reasons for the delay in providing care packages in this area.

(AQW 24198/11-15)

Mr Poots: The information was requested from the Northern Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust. The response is detailed below:

Care Managed Clients Waiting in the Community for Domiciliary / Nursing Care at 14th June 2013

Care Type	Clients Waiting	Reason Waiting
Domiciliary Full Package	27	No domiciliary package available
Permanent Nursing Care	3	No nursing beds available

Figures have not been validated by DHSSPS

At 14th June 2013, no-one was waiting in the community for respite, temporary placement or residential care.

Mileage Allowance: Nurses

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what are the projected savings from the changes to the mileage allowance paid to nurses by the Health and Social Care Trusts.

(AQW 24231/11-15)

Mr Poots: Information on mileage allowance paid to nurses is not held centrally and could only be obtained from Trusts at a disproportionate cost. This new system is not being introduced as a cost cutting exercise; Trusts have assessed the impact across all staff who claim reimbursement of travel costs and this assessment indicates that over 70% of staff will gain under the changes being introduced from 1 July 2013.

Mileage Allowance: Trade Union Correspondence

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the correspondence his Department has received from trade unions on changes to the mileage allowance by Health and Social Care Trusts.

(AQW 24233/11-15)

Mr Poots: My Department has received two separate letters from the Joint Secretaries of the Health Service Trade Unions one requesting a meeting to discuss the changes and a subsequent letter detailing the main issues for discussion.

Cancer: South Antrim

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the number of people in South Antrim diagnosed with cancer; (ii) the number of these people who are receiving treatment; and (iii) how many people in each electoral ward of South Antrim have died from cancer in each of the last three years.

(AQW 24236/11-15)

Mr Poots:

- (i) and (ii) The number of patients in South Antrim diagnosed with cancer in each of the last three years (for which information is available) is set out in Table 1 below. Information has been disaggregated by those who had and had not received treatment within a year of diagnosis:

Or view online at <http://apps.who.int/classifications/icd10/browse/2010/en#/II> ; non-melanoma skin cancer is a very common, but rarely fatal, cancer. Non-melanoma skin cancer's exclusion helps to reflect the true burden of cancer in the community.

 Treatment is defined as those patients for whom Northern Ireland Cancer Registry (NICR) has a record of either surgery, chemotherapy, or radiotherapy, within one year of their cancer diagnosis. NICR receives this information from the Trusts' Patient Administration System, and from audits of patient notes.

 Treatment data is not available for 2011, the most recent incidence year available, because it is necessary to follow up all patients till the end of 2012 for treatment information to ensure 12 months follow up after diagnosis; this information comes in concurrently with 2012 incidence information which is currently being processed. There were 419 incidences of cancer (excluding NSMC) in South Antrim Parliamentary Constituency in 2011.

- (iii) Due to the differing time lags associated with deaths, treatment and diagnoses information, cancer deaths in each electoral ward of South Antrim Parliamentary Constituency are set out for each of the last five years available in Table 2. This is to allow comparisons to be made with both the latest treatment and incidence data as well as provide the most recent three years deaths data available.

Legislation: DHSSPS

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to list the current or planned legislation that his Department will bring to the Assembly before the end of the current term.

(AQW 24256/11-15)

Mr Poots: I have introduced the Tobacco Retailers Bill to the Assembly on 15th April 2013 and intend to introduce primary legislation in relation to Mental Capacity, Adoption, Food Hygiene Rating, and Processing of Service User Information. I also intend to introduce legislation which will make amendments to the Health and Social Care (Reform) Act (NI) 2009 and the Health (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act (NI) 2008.

Other requirements for primary legislation relating to DHSSPS responsibilities may arise during this mandate and these will be reviewed on a regular basis.

There may also be a need to introduce subordinate legislation during the course of this Assembly mandate arising as a result of some of the primary legislation. However, at this point, it is not possible to be precise as to the nature or volume of such legislation.

Mental Health: Young People in Foyle

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what support services are available for young people in the Foyle constituency who are diagnosed with mental health issues.

(AQW 24268/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Western Health and Social Care Trust (WH SCT) provides Child and Adolescent Mental Health Services (CAMHS) to young people in the Foyle constituency from its local community-based team, based in Woodlea House on the Gransha Hospital site.

CAMHS provide a service to Children & Young People from 5 to 18 years through multidisciplinary teams which are made up of Psychiatry, Psychology, Social Worker and Clinical Nurse Specialists. The service also works closely with statutory, voluntary and private agencies.

Inpatient care for young people, when required, is provided in Beechcroft, the Regional Child and Adolescent Inpatient Mental Health Unit in Belfast.

Maternity Services: Regional Review

Mrs McKevitt asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when the Regional Review of Maternity Services will commence.

(AQW 24299/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Regional Review of Maternity Services has already been completed; it was launched in 2010 and, following public engagement and a consultation process in September 2011, a Strategy for Maternity Care in Northern Ireland 2012-2018 was published in July 2012.

The Strategy gives women, health service commissioners and policy makers a clear pathway for maternity services in Northern Ireland from preconceptual care through to postnatal care and contains 22 objectives. The objectives were developed by a project board comprised of commissioners, clinicians and service users. They are based on current professional advice and best practice, and subject to available resources are achievable.

The Health and Social Care Board and the Public Health Agency are leading on the implementation of the Strategy.

The Strategy can be accessed on the Department's website at – <http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/maternity-strategy.htm>

Transforming Your Care: Communication

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what measures he is taking to communicate better the individual components of Transforming Your Care.

(AQO 4289/11-15)

Mr Poots: I have informed Members on previous occasions that good communication and engagement with those likely to be impacted by service changes arising from Transforming Your Care, is essential.

I have made Statements to the House at key milestones in the development of TYC and briefed the Health Committee on a regular basis.

The Health and Social Care Board is undertaking the day to day work on the implementation of TYC. Their Communications and Engagement Plan focuses on:

- Engaging with residents of Statutory Residential Homes and their families in the decision making process for the future of statutory residential care
- Engaging with the Voluntary & Community sector seeking opportunities for collaborative working
- Engaging with the healthcare workforce and supporting through the transition period
- Ensuring that patients and users are at the heart of what we do.

There was extensive engagement and communication on the development of TYC and public consultation on the proposals emerging from it. It is important that where any significant, specific local changes are to take place, a further formal period of public consultation is held, with involvement of local stakeholders.

Health and Care Centres: Lisburn and Newry

Ms Fearon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when the business case from the Health Infrastructure Board on its decision to locate two Health and Social Care campuses in Lisburn and Newry will be published.

(AQO 4291/11-15)

Mr Poots: Copies of the business cases for Lisburn and Newry Health and Care Centres, approved by the relevant trust Boards, are available on request from my Department.

Paediatric Congenital Cardiac Surgery: Update

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the paediatric congenital cardiac surgery issue.

(AQO 4296/11-15)

Mr Poots: I met with the Republic of Ireland's Minister for Health, Dr James Reilly TD, on 8th May 2013 to discuss whether there is any scope for flexibility in the location for the future delivery of this service. I asked Minister Reilly to give consideration to a two centre model potentially providing PCCS services in both Belfast and Dublin. Consideration of this proposal is continuing at official level to determine whether such a model would be feasible. I will inform the Assembly of the outcome when I announce my decision on the future commissioning of this service which I hope to do so in the weeks ahead.

Community Pharmacies

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what progress has been made on expanding the range of services provided by community pharmacies.

(AQO 4297/11-15)

Mr Poots: As I informed the Assembly in January 2013 negotiations have been continuing with community pharmacy representatives on a new contract. Good progress has been made with a number of new services developed and commissioned in 2012 and 2013. These include an extension of the minor ailments service and the introduction of a Medicines Use Review service targeted initially on all respiratory patients taking multiple medicines. Discussions are continuing to expand this service further to cover other areas.

On 6 June 2013 the HSC Board and Public Health Agency announced the launch of a joint initiative for the development of a Health Plus Pharmacy programme. The goal of the programme is to enhance the public health focus of community pharmacies providing settings that the public will recognise as places where they can access high quality advice and services promoting health and disease prevention, early intervention, self-care and reducing health inequalities.

Within the next few weeks I also hope to launch a consultation document on a new strategy for the provision of pharmacy services in the community. The strategy will align developments in community pharmacy with the wider transformational changes in the health service and provide the framework for the further expansion of the range of services provided by community pharmacies.

Cancer: Individual Funding Requests

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of why local cancer patients are eight times less likely to be referred for an Individual Funding Request for specialist treatment than cancer patients in England.

(AQO 4298/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Health and Social Care Board has a clear process for the submission and review of Individual Funding (IFR) requests. From April 2012 to March 2013 the Board received 105 IFR requests for cancer drugs, of which 93 were approved. Two requests for funding were not supported. The remaining 10 did not progress. The total cancer drug expenditure in 2012/13 was £24.8m

Kinship Carers: Residence Orders

Ms McCorley asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the support provided to Kinship carers under current Residents Orders.

(AQO 4299/11-15)

Mr Poots: Children who are subject to a Residence Order have the same entitlement to support services universally available to children and their families. Additional support may be accessed from Family Support Hubs in HSC Trust areas where they currently exist. Further investment is being made in Family Support Hubs under the Delivering Social Change Programme and, as a result, Hubs will be available across Northern Ireland by 2014.

More focused and specialist support may be provided by a HSC Trust to "children in need" as defined in Article 17 of the Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1995. Such services will be determined following assessment and will be specific to the individual needs of the child. Finally, where a child in kinship care was previously a 'looked after' child, discretionary financial assistance may be paid to the kinship carer(s).

Adoption: Legislation

Mr Mitchel McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on his plans to amend adoption legislation.

(AQO 4300/11-15)

Mr Poots: It is still my intention to introduce new adoption legislation in the current mandate. The Adoption and Children Bill, which is currently being drafted, will introduce much needed reform of adoption in Northern Ireland and will ensure that the child is put firmly at the centre of the adoption process. I hope to publish the draft Bill for consultation in early 2014, with a view to introduction in the Assembly in late 2014.

Transforming Your Care: Pinewood Residential Home, Ballymena

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the new regional process for implementing Transforming Your Care, including how this will affect Pinewood Residential Home, Ballymena.

(AQO 4301/11-15)

Mr Poots: On 3 May I announced a halt to Trusts' processes, or intended processes, around consulting on the future of statutory residential homes.

The Health and Social Care Board has now convened the Regional Planning Group which has already had preliminary meetings. A Project Brief was issued by my Department on 28 May 2013 to inform the work of this Group.

My Department expects to receive a Project Initiation Document, from the HSC Board, in the coming weeks. This document will set out the milestones for delivery of the project and the associated project structure.

The future of Pinewood Residential Care Home is part of this new regional process, with consultation occurring at local Trust level. I would urge all interested parties to engage with the process.

Department of Justice

Care and Supervision Unit

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 22957/11-15, given the nature and purpose of the Care and Supervision Unit, for his assessment of the recommendation that one member of staff is sufficient, even during prisoner lock and with radio contact, particularly given the circumstances and outcome of the case in question.

(AQW 23846/11-15)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): I am satisfied that the Northern Ireland Prison Service provide appropriate staffing levels in the Care and Supervision Unit.

Prison Service: Inaccurate Information

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to detail on how many occasions, during the current and previous Assembly mandate, inaccurate information has been provided by the Northern Ireland Prison Service in response to Questions for Written Answer.

(AQW 23884/11-15)

Mr Ford: Data on the information requested is not statistically recorded and therefore could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Children's Order: Final Contact Orders

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice, for the first quarter of 2010, 2011, 2012 and 2013, (i) how many final contact orders were made under the Children Order; (ii) how many applicants in these cases were fathers; (iii) how many applicants in these orders were mothers; (iv) what was the Legal Aid cost for these orders; (v) how many contact orders were broken and how many people were held in contempt of court for breaking the judicial order; and (vi) for his assessment of (a) the amount of contact orders awarded; (b) if the court area is the correct setting for these cases; and (c) the rise in cases between 2011 and 2012.

(AQW 23886/11-15)

Mr Ford: Information on the number of contact orders made and the number of defendants found guilty of breaching a contact order is given in the table below.

Contact Orders Made: January - March 2010 to January - March 2013

Quarter	Number of contact orders made	Number of defendants found guilty of breaching a contact order
January-March 2010	749	0
January-March 2011	815	1
January-March 2012 ^P	970	2
January-March 2013 ^P	1,178	1

Source: ICOS

^P Data is currently provisional

It is not possible to provide the information on the relationship between the applicant and the child as this information is not routinely collated. To identify the number of applications from fathers or mothers would require a manual review of each court order and could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost. The associated legal aid cost could only be identified by a similar review and would also incur a disproportionate cost.

Family proceedings involve some of the most difficult and sensitive issues that courts have to deal with. It is preferable that disputes over arrangements for children are resolved outside court whenever possible.

The use of alternative dispute resolution (ADR) services such as mediation can help to sustain better relationships and minimise the impact of separation on children. However, there will be cases which are not suitable for ADR and for which the court is the appropriate setting. While it is preferable that family matters should be resolved without recourse to legal action, it is sometimes necessary for the courts to become involved.

My officials are working with colleagues from the DHSSPS and other relevant Departments on the potential benefits of ADR in private law cases.

An increase in the overall number of contact orders usually corresponds with the general level of family business, although the number of cases with at least one order decreased between 2011 and 2012. Several contact orders may issue in respect of a child in any one case.

Prison Officers: Suspended from Duty

Lord Morrow asked Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 22638/11-15, AQW 21450/11-15 and AQW 19382/11-15, whether the three senior officers disciplined as a result of the investigation into the death in custody of Colin Bell, as highlighted in the Ackah and Deane Report, were suspended from duty and if the charges preferred were under Gross Misconduct. (AQW 23918/11-15)

Mr Ford: This information has been withheld as disclosure would be contrary to the Data Protection Act 1998.

Social Media: Threats to Kill

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Justice to outline the legislation that addresses threats to kill messages on social media and for his assessment of how successfully it is being enforced. (AQW 23934/11-15)

Mr Ford: Threats to kill, whether made in social media or otherwise, are an offence under section 16 of Offences against the Person Act 1861. It is an offence if a person, without lawful excuse, makes a threat to kill another, intending that that other should fear it would be carried out. If found guilty, an offender is liable to imprisonment for up to ten years.

Section 127 of the Communications Act 2003 also makes it an offence to send by means of a public electronic communications network a message or other matter that is grossly offensive or of an indecent, obscene or menacing character. The maximum penalty is 6 months' imprisonment and/or a fine of up to £5000 on summary conviction.

The Police Service of Northern Ireland does review social media postings and, where appropriate, refer potential offences to the Public Prosecution Service (PPS). The PPS decides on the basis of the evidence and of the public interest whether to prosecute. As regards threats on social media, this includes considerations such as the credibility of the threat and the context in which it was made. Matters of charging and prosecution in individual cases are within the operational independence of the Chief Constable and the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Prisoners: Unlawfully at Large

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 23178/11-15, to detail the number of prisoners that have been granted compassionate bail; and of these how many (i) absconded; and (ii) remain unlawfully at large in 2013. (AQW 23940/11-15)

Mr Ford: During the period 1 January to 24 May 2013, provisional data indicates that 58 prisoners were granted compassionate bail. Of these, five absconded during this period with one prisoner remaining unlawfully at large as at 24 May 2013.

Police Fund: Chronic Pain Treatment

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 23002/11-15, to detail (i) if the service delivery partner used by the Northern Ireland Police Fund provides the same programme of chronic pain relief to its clients, including the administration of pain relief injections; (ii) whether the service delivery partner provides domiciliary visits; and (iii) whether the Northern Ireland Police Fund sought professional medical advice prior to this change in service. (AQW 23959/11-15)

Mr Ford: Further to my answer to AQW 23002/11-15, and for the avoidance of any misunderstanding, the Northern Ireland Police Fund provided a chronic pain management programme not a chronic pain relief programme to its clients.

I have been advised by the Northern Ireland Police Fund that the service delivery partner does not provide the same programme. It provides a range of pain management interventions based on the needs of clients within the scope of practice of its clinicians and on the best available clinical evidence. These include one-to-one physiotherapy and one-to-one psychological therapies. The provider has advised that for more complex needs it collaborates to provide individually tailored and group programmes based on a cognitive behavioural approach, combined with functional reactivation, education and relaxation. In addition, where a client's needs fall outside of the service delivery partner's remit, it would liaise with the client's general practitioner for onward referral as appropriate.

I am also advised that the service delivery partner provides home assessments where necessary, and that treatment is provided in approved physiotherapy practices and physiological therapies in a number of accessible locations including Omagh and Londonderry, as well as at the service delivery partner's own premises in Belfast.

As part of its recently completed review of chronic pain management provision, the Fund sought and received professional medical advice prior to this change in service.

Police Fund: Eligibility Criteria

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 23003/11-15, why the Northern Ireland Police Fund, in offering assistance to police officers and former officers who have been injured and disabled as a direct result of terrorism, requires that officers must be able to prove that they were the direct, intended target of a terrorist attack to receive assistance.

(AQW 23960/11-15)

Mr Ford: I have been advised by the Northern Ireland Police Fund that such proof is required to ascertain if a police officer or former officer who has been injured and disabled meets the Fund's eligibility criteria to become a client of the Fund.

Such officers who wish to apply for eligibility are considered at one of the Fund's regular case conferences where their application is considered by a Quorum of Directors against the Fund's eligibility criteria.

Police Fund: Grant Recipients

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 23001/11-15, to detail (i) the funding provided by the Northern Ireland Police Fund to groups for 2013/14; (ii) the groups that received an interim grant and if all terms and conditions were the same for each group; (iii) the groups that received one hundred per cent of their grant from the Northern Ireland Police Fund; (iv) if all those receiving the grant were direct intended targets of terrorism; and (v) if all recipient groups are registered charities.

(AQW 23961/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Police Fund (NIPF) has not yet completed its allocation of funding for the year 2013/14 to the groups which applied for funding as detailed in AQW/23001/11-15. Details of funding for those groups which have received some funding at 10 June 2013, can be found in the table below:

Group	2013/14 £
Carers' Association	5,000
Disabled Police Officers' Association Northern Ireland	14,000
Parents' Association	40,310

I am advised by the NIPF that for the year 2013/14, the Carers' Association and the Disabled Police Officers Association Northern Ireland have received interim grants as the information presented to the NIPF required clarification or was insufficient to allow a final decision on their submitted bids.

I am also advised by the NIPF that the terms and conditions for each group differed slightly as each is tailored to reflect the information provided by the group which allowed for the interim grant to be made.

Not all those receiving grants were direct intended targets of terrorism as the NIPF also supports carers, parents and others in line with the Steele Report and its Management Statement and Financial Memorandum.

The NIPF advises that not all recipient groups are registered charities.

Children's Order: Final Contact Orders

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice, to detail (i) how many final contact orders were made under the Children's Order; (ii) the number of orders sought by (a) mothers; and (b) fathers; (iii) how many orders were breached; and on how many occasions were those in breach held in contempt of court or otherwise made amenable; and (iv) if the resulting Legal Aid bill for proceedings under the Children's Order is known, in each year since 2010.

(AQW 23975/11-15)

Mr Ford: Information on the number of contact orders made and the number of defendants found guilty of breaching a contact order is given in the tables below.

Contact Orders Made: 2010 to 2012P

Year	Number of contact orders made	Number of defendants found guilty of breaching a contact order
2010	3,157	2
2011	3,866	1
2012P	4,318	2

Source: ICOS

^P Data is currently provisional

It is not possible to provide the information on the relationship between the applicant and the child as this data is not routinely collated. To identify the number of applications from fathers or mothers would require a manual review of each court order and could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost.

The following table details all legal aid payments made in respect of the Children Order, including contact orders, for each year since 2009/10. This reflects the year payment was made which may not be the year the case was dealt with.

2010/11	£18.9m
2011/12	£23m
2012/13	£22.4m

Patten Scheme: Age Requirements

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the sense of unfairness felt by some police officers who had completed the required length of service but were unable to leave the PSNI under the Patten Scheme due to age requirements.

(AQW 24009/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Voluntary Severance Scheme arose from the recommendations of the Independent Commission on Policing for Northern Ireland (Patten Commission) which was established as a result of the Good Friday Agreement. Consultation with members of Police Associations on this Scheme indicated that, while they felt the scheme should have been more generous, it offered the best overall deal for the majority of police officers.

The regulations governing the severance arrangements for members of the Police Service of Northern Ireland detail the criteria for admission to the Severance Scheme.

In line with similar schemes, there had to be a cut off point for eligibility. I recognise that in such circumstances there will often be individuals who feel a sense of grievance.

Firearm Inspections: PSNI Authorisation

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to place a copy in the Assembly library of the authorisation for the PSNI to carry out inspections of firearms dealers stores on behalf of his Department.

(AQW 24025/11-15)

Mr Ford: Part III of the Firearms (Northern Ireland) Order 2004 sets out the role of the Chief Constable in granting a Firearms Dealer's Certificate. Article 26(2)(b) states that the Chief Constable must be satisfied that every place of business where it is proposed to carry on business as a firearms dealer is suitable for that purpose.

Prisoners: Self-harmed/Suicide/Attempted Suicide

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of prisoners, who were not subject to the Prisoner at Risk or Supporting Prisoners at Risk processes, who have (i) self-harmed; or (ii) committed an act of suicide or attempted suicide, since January 2008.

(AQW 24026/11-15)

Mr Ford: Northern Ireland Prison Service (NIPS) electronic records began in 2010. To collate the information prior to that time would be at a disproportionate cost.

Table A below shows those prisoners not subject to the Prisoner at Risk or Supporting Prisoners at Risk processes who self harmed since 2010.

Year	No. of distinct inmates who self harmed who were not subject to the SPAR process
2010	142
2011	198
2012	201
2013	121

Table B below shows those prisoners not subject to the Prisoner at Risk or Supporting Prisoners at Risk processes who committed an act of suicide since 2010.

Year	No. of distinct inmates who committed an act of suicide who were not subject to the SPAR process
2010	2
2011	4
2012	3
2013	1

Information available does not differentiate between the act of self harm and an attempt, or act of suicide.

Prison Service: Safer Custody

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, given that The Safeguarding Vulnerable Groups (NI) Order 2007 specifies that all those detained in lawful custody are vulnerable, and that the related Standards and Guidance for Good Practice published in 2010 recommends that such persons should be supported by robust procedures and guidelines to keep them safe from harm, how safer custody is managed within the Northern Ireland Prison Service on a daily basis by operational staff.

(AQW 24027/11-15)

Mr Ford: On a daily basis safer custody issues are managed by all staff who work within Establishments and include management of procedures and processes intended to manage prisoners, particularly those specifically identified as vulnerable. In addition, prisoners identified as immediately at risk of suicide and/or self harm are managed in accordance with the Self Harm and Suicide Prevention Policy 2011 and the accompanying Standing Operating Procedure.

Prison Service: SPAR Training

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 22663/11-15 and the consequences of a lack of proper training in the case of Prisoner Mr 'C'; (i) whether the training measures referred to in his answer have been implemented at Maghaberry; (ii) if not, why they have yet to be implemented; (iii) if the measures have been implemented, by whom are they being managed; and (iv) what external and internal monitoring is taking place.

(AQW 24028/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Governor of Maghaberry instructed that all operational managers should receive full training in SPAR. This training, which is scheduled each Monday and delivered by the Prison Service training team, commenced on 23 April 2013. These sessions will continue until all managers have been fully trained. Training is managed on behalf of the Governor of Maghaberry by the Head of Personnel and the Head of Prisoner Safety & Support. Monitoring of this training is recorded by the Maghaberry Training Department.

Prison Service: SPAR Training

Lord Morrow asked Minister of Justice, given that the Prisoner Ombudsman has repeatedly highlighted the importance of quality rather than just the quantity of human contact in caring for vulnerable prisoners, whether the Northern Ireland Prison Service, in conjunction with the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust has designed and implemented a process to manage this contact and to assess the quality of care afforded to prisoners who are subject to Supporting Prisoners at Risk.

(AQW 24029/11-15)

Mr Ford: Managing suicide and self-harm within prisons is a very difficult and complex problem as the prison population comprises a high proportion of vulnerable individuals.

The Northern Ireland Prison Service and the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust are committed to providing effective services to vulnerable prisoners and will continue to work in partnership to support those prisoners being managed under the Supporting Prisoners At Risk procedures.

Any lessons learned from Prisoner Ombudsman's reports will continue to be taken forward by the Prison Service in collaboration with the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust, through the existing governance structures.

In addition, Safer Custody managers in each prison establishment monitor the quality of care to prisoners by completing regular audits of Supporting Prisoner at Risk documentation, reporting any issues to managers.

Improvements in performance and cultural change are being taken forward as part of the wider Prison Reform programme.

Community Service: North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice how many hours of community service have been carried out in the North Down area in each of the last five years; and how this is monitored.

(AQW 24045/11-15)

Mr Ford: The number of hours of community service carried out in the North Down¹ area in each of the last five years is detailed in Table 1 below.

Table 1

Year	Total Community Service Hours Sentenced ²
2008/09	6,800
2009/10	5,300
2010/11	7,500
2011/12	10,000
2012/13	6,400

1 Based on the address recorded at the time of the order starting.

2 The data presented is drawn from the PBNI's case management system (PIMS). Although care is taken when processing and analysing the data, the data is subject to inaccuracies inherent in an administrative data recording system. While the figures have been checked as far as practicable, they should be regarded as approximate and not necessarily accurate to the last whole number shown in the tables.

The Community Service Scheme for North Down is managed by a Probation Board for Northern Ireland (PBNI) Specialist Team with team members based in Greater Belfast and Newtownards. All staff work to the PBNI Best Practice Framework, agreed with Department of Justice (DOJ) and Sentencers, which sets standards and procedures through which each order is managed and monitored.

Prison Officers: Environmental Allowance

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of prison staff that are in receipt of the Environmental Allowance. (AQW 24081/11-15)

Mr Ford: There are no prison grades (uniform grades or governor grades) in receipt of an Environmental Allowance.

There are 615 prison grades who formerly received a Northern Ireland Prison Service Payment to reflect the special circumstances in which they worked. This was consolidated into salaries in 1994 (officers) and 2006 (governors) as part of a wider pay deal.

A Prison Environmental Allowance is paid to 279 non prison grades (general service and industrial grades) working in prison establishments, the allowance is for working in an adverse environment not normally associated with their profession or work and, where necessary, associating with prisoners.

Prison Officers: Environmental Allowance

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of prison staff that are not in receipt of the Environmental Allowance. (AQW 24082/11-15)

Mr Ford: At 31 May 2013, staff in uniform grades and governor grades in the Northern Ireland Prison Service totalled 1604. There are no prison grades currently in receipt of an Environmental Allowance. 615 staff formerly received a Northern Ireland Prison Service Payment to reflect the special circumstances in which they worked. This was consolidated into salaries in 1994 (officers) and 2006 (governors) as part of a wider pay deal.

At 31 May 2013, staff in non prison grades in the Northern Ireland Prison Service totalled 499. Of these staff, 220 are not in receipt of the Prison Environmental Allowance. 279 are in receipt of the Prison Environmental Allowance for working in prison establishments. The allowance is for working in an adverse environment not normally associated with their profession or work and, where necessary, associating with prisoners.

Central Investigation Service

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Justice, considering the nature of the work completed by the Central Investigation Service (CIS) and the diversity of its clients, for his assessment of whether the CIS is best placed within the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development.

(AQW 24114/11-15)

Mr Ford: I am content that the Central Investigation Service is best placed within the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Legal Services Commission: Pay Progression

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 23443/11-15, given that up to five years from 2009 may elapse before staff in the Northern Ireland Legal Services Commission could receive payment of pay progression and any increase, whether he would consider a request from the Northern Ireland Legal Services Commission to process a payment to staff to address the financial hardship they are experiencing, as an interim measure.

(AQW 24133/11-15)

Mr Ford: In accordance with Department of Finance and Personnel's (DFP) guidance, Departments must ensure that pay commitments are not entered into prior to appropriate approval by the Finance Minister having been secured.

My officials will continue to work with the NILSC to address the outstanding issues and to ensure that, when completed, any agreed Pay Strategy is passed to DFP for financial approval.

Legal Services Commission: Legal Advice

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 23404/11-15, to outline why the legal advice obtained by the Northern Ireland Legal Services Commission from the Departmental Solicitors Office in January 2013 is available to Northern Ireland Legal Services Commission staff, but that legal advice received since then has been withheld from staff, given that the rules of legal privilege have not altered.

(AQW 24135/11-15)

Mr Ford: I am advised that the legal advice received by the Northern Ireland Legal Services Commission in January 2013 was not made available to all Commission staff.

The release of this information, covered by legal profession privilege, was restricted to the small group of Commission staff directly involved in the preparation of the pay strategy business case.

In order to update staff on progress with the Pay Strategy Business Case, a general overview of key issues impacting on progress was provided to staff. This update referred to the impact of legal advice received but did not provide detailed information contained therein.

The Commission continues to update staff on progress on the pertinent issues relating to the Pay Strategy Business Case.

Door Supervisor Licences: Tar Anall

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice how many people have been awarded Security Industry Authority Door Supervisor Licences on applications supported by Tar Anall.

(AQW 24184/11-15)

Mr Ford: Applications to the Security Industry Authority (SIA) are made by individuals. While it is possible that an applicant received assistance in submitting an application, the SIA would not be aware of this.

Door Supervisor Licences: Criteria

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice to detail (i) the procedures whereby someone convicted of offences for which a life sentence has been imposed can subsequently be granted a Security Industry Authority Door Supervisor Licence; and (ii) the consultative involvement of law enforcement agencies.

(AQW 24185/11-15)

Mr Ford: All applications for licences from the Security Industry Authority (SIA) are subject to the licensing criteria which are set out in its "Get Licensed" document which is approved by the Home Secretary, in consultation with the devolved administrations. The current version of "Get Licensed" is available at http://www.sia.homeoffice.gov.uk/Documents/licensing/sia_get_licensed.pdf

Licence applications are subject to a criminality check, which involves the SIA receiving a standard disclosure from the relevant authority. With regards to applicants from Northern Ireland, the SIA requests disclosure from AccessNI.

When considering the criminal records for all licence applications, the SIA reviews the relevance, seriousness, recency and the disposal of each offence.

The consultative involvement of law enforcement agencies is a matter for the regulator. You may therefore wish to direct this part of your question to the Chief Executive of the SIA.

Legal Services Commission: HR Staff

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 22734/11-15 to detail (i) whether the employment of 6 staff in Human Resources by the Northern Ireland Legal Services Commission is proportionate to the staff complement of 148; (ii) the 12/13 salary costs for the staff complement; (iii) the salary cost for the 6 Human Resources staff; and (iv) the percentage of the total salaries accounted for by the 6 Human Resources staff.

(AQW 24186/11-15)

Mr Ford: As a Non Departmental Public Body, the Northern Ireland Legal Services Commission determines its own staffing requirements to meet its operational need, ensuring that staffing complement across the Commission falls within its operating budget.

Total unaudited salary costs for NILSC Staff Complement for 2012/13 were £4,112,493.

Unaudited salary costs for NILSC Human Resources Department for 2012/13 were £211,052.

The percentage Human Resources salary costs in relation to overall total staff complement costs were 5.13%.

Legal Services Commission: Staff on Fixed-term Contracts

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice to detail (i) the number of staff that are employed by the Northern Ireland Legal Services Commission on fixed-term contracts, indicating employment start dates and grade; and (ii) if it is intended to continue employment of these staff members beyond the four year anniversary thereby making them permanent employees.

(AQW 24188/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Legal Services Commission employs staff on a fixed term contract. Details have been withheld as disclosure would be contrary to the Data Protection Act 1998.

Lay Magistrates: Breach of Postal Security

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Justice whether he is aware of a breach of security in the postal correspondence sent out identifying Lay Magistrates; and what action will be taken to address this issue.

(AQW 24304/11-15)

Mr Ford: I was advised of this breach on 12 June as soon as it was discovered. The breach occurred as a result of an administrative error within the Youth Justice Agency. The Chief Executive of the Agency has written to all Lay Magistrates apologising for any unease this may have caused them. Advice on security has been given to the Lay Magistrates and the PSNI has been advised of the incident.

As soon as officials were notified of this breach, an investigation was launched. The matter was reported to my Departmental Security Branch and Departmental Information Management Branch who are responsible for security and data protection compliance issues. It has also been referred to the Information Commissioner's Office. Officials in Security Branch are now carrying out an investigation into the circumstances surrounding this incident.

The Youth Justice Agency is taking all necessary steps to ensure this will not happen again. Officials in the Agency have been reminded of the Department's procedures regarding data handling and appropriate action will be taken where necessary once the outcome of the investigation is known.

Department for Regional Development

A26: Dualling of the Drones Road

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development what is the earliest date that work could begin on the A26 dualling of the Drones Road; and how much is this projected work to cost.

(AQW 23365/11-15)

Mr Kennedy (The Minister for Regional Development): Subject to the outcome of the Public Inquiry, the availability of funding and successful procurement, it could be possible to commence construction of the A26 in autumn 2014.

The current projected cost of dualling the A26 between Glarryford and the A44 Drones Road is in the range of £50 - £70 million.

Following the recent Court ruling on the A5 scheme, I wrote to the Finance Minister on 9 May 2013, to declare a reduced budget requirement in relation to the 2013/14 year. I have also provided options to the Finance Minister for other major road schemes that could be started in that financial year. The dualling of the A26 from Glarryford to Drones Road is one of these schemes.

I await Executive consideration of these issues.

Translink Trains: Wi-Fi Service

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Regional Development if has he any plans to improve the Wi-Fi service which is available on Translink trains.

(AQW 23853/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Since October last year, all of the trains operating on the railways network have been equipped with Wi-Fi.

Translink estimate that 15-20% of passengers use free Wi-Fi on board local NIR trains, and 25-30% of passengers on Enterprise services are using this monthly.

I can advise that Translink will continue to review the success of Wi-Fi on both trains and buses.

A5: Habitats Directive

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister for Regional Development, given that the Habitats Directive was crucial to the A5 road scheme, what consideration has been given to other roads projects, such as the A6, which may be similarly impacted by the Directive.

(AQW 23919/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Habitats Directive decision in relation to the A5 was made during the ministerial tenure of my predecessor. I can, however, confirm my Department embraces the EU Habitats Directive when designing highway schemes.

All schemes within the Roads Programme, including the two proposed A6 schemes, Randalstown to Castledawson and the Londonderry to Dungiven scheme, are subject to an Assessment of Implications on European Sites (otherwise known as Habitats Regulations Assessment). This is required by law to inform the decision-making process when the proposed scheme may have a significant effect on a Natura 2000 site.

In addition to the normal consultation with the relevant statutory bodies, specialist advice will be taken as to the implications of the recent court ruling on the A5 dual carriageway project, for other schemes in the Roads Programme.

Ulsterbus/Metro/Northern Ireland Railways: Reserves

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the reserves held by (i) Ulsterbus; (ii) Metro; and (iii) Northern Ireland Railways, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 23920/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The reserves held by (i) Ulsterbus; (ii) Metro: and (iii) Northern Ireland Railways, in each of the last three years are set out in the table below:

	As at 25/03/12 £000s	As at 27/03/11 £000s	As at 28/03/10 £000s
Ulsterbus	8,641	732	22,773
Metro	4,009	1,177	8,317
NIR	-8,185	-12,347	1,471

The above figures represent the sum of all the assets and liabilities of each respective company, taken directly from the audited subsidiary accounts for 2011/2012 produced in line with International Accounting Standards. It should be noted that the total of the 3 figures will differ from the position in the Group's Annual Report and Accounts which includes the holding company.

The level of reserves is an accounting concept, it is not the same as cash held and they are not available for general spending. They represent the net worth of a company in line with agreed accounting policies used. These figures take account of long term liabilities such as pensions and capital grants made to the companies by government.

Primary Schools: Rural Transport

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he plans to raise any concerns with the Minister of Education on the proposals to close some rural primary schools, following the public consultation on draft area plans for primary provision which ended on 1 June 2013.

(AQW 23964/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: School transport services provided by Translink are mostly used by secondary school pupils. Translink has advised me that should there be changes in the use of school transport, it will adjust service levels accordingly.

Enterprise Train: Carriages/Seating Capacity

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the average number of carriages and the seating capacity on each Enterprise train between 2001/2002 and 2011/2012.

(AQW 23977/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can advise you that Translink have confirmed that the Enterprise standard train formation comprises:

- 4 x Standard Class carriages
- 1 x Catering Car
- 2 x First Plus carriages

This provides a total passenger capacity of 361 seats.

This standard formation would have been in operation for the majority of the period covered. However to note there were occasions within the period 2001/02 to 2011/2012 that some Enterprise trains operated with 5 x standard class coaches instead of 4 providing a total passenger capacity of 432 seats. In addition, there are some occasions (estimated to be less than 1%) when Translink will, if necessary, substitute with Class 3000 trains or Iarnród Éireann will substitute with Class 2900 trains. These have not been included in the average figures above.

Rail Passengers: Portadown/Lisburn

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development whether the number of customers who use the train service from (i) Portadown and Lisburn to Belfast; and (ii) Belfast to Lisburn and Portadown are included in the total number of passengers for (i) the Enterprise rail service or (ii) Translink's Portadown service.

(AQW 23979/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can advise that Translink has confirmed that in 2012/13, 3,450,000 passengers used NI Railways' services between Newry-Portadown-Lisburn and Belfast. This number is based on ticket sales data analysis and excludes passengers making cross-border journeys. Individuals booking tickets between Newry-Portadown-Lisburn to Belfast count as part of local service journeys.

Enterprise Train: Online Tickets

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development if Translink plans to introduce a facility to enable customers who purchase Enterprise standard tickets online the opportunity to reserve a seat free of charge.

(AQW 23980/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can advise that Translink has confirmed that at present the Enterprise service is a 'walk up, walk on' service and demand for a reservation facility has not been strongly expressed. Therefore there are currently no plans to introduce a facility to enable customers who have purchased Enterprise standard tickets online to reserve a seat free of charge.

Seat reservations are available in First Plus and for groups.

Translink: Online Tickets

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development if Translink plans to introduce a facility to book online and print tickets at home rather than receiving them through the post.

(AQW 23981/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can advise that Translink has confirmed that currently passengers booking tickets online have the option to have the ticket posted or to collect at station. Print at home options are also currently being explored.

Enterprise Train: iLink Tickets

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development whether Translink plans to introduce a facility to enable customers to purchase Enterprise rail service tickets using an i link card.

(AQW 23985/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can advise you that Translink have confirmed that at present the iLink ticket is for use in Northern Ireland only. There are currently no plans to introduce this facility for customers wishing to purchase an Enterprise rail service ticket.

G8: On-street Parking Restrictions in Fermanagh and Belfast

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the restrictions to on-street parking in (i) Fermanagh; and (ii) Belfast that will be in place during the G8 Summit and the effects this will have on local businesses.

(AQW 24007/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department does not intend to introduce additional on-street parking restrictions in either Belfast or Fermanagh during the G8 Summit.

However, during the Summit period, it is possible that the PSNI will impose temporary additional parking/waiting restrictions at some locations. These will be managed by the PSNI and marked by the placing of 'Police – No Waiting' traffic cones.

Pedestrian Crossings: Poleglass

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development for his assessment of the number of pedestrian crossings in Poleglass; and whether he has any plans to develop new crossings for pedestrians in this area.
(AQW 24019/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department currently has three stand-alone controlled pedestrian crossings in Poleglass. At present, there are no plans to install further crossings in this area but this will be kept under review.

Street Lighting: Poleglass

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development for his assessment of the street lighting in Poleglass; whether (i) the present provision of street lighting is deemed adequate for the safety of pedestrians at night; and (ii) he has any plans to increase the provision of street lighting in the area.
(AQW 24020/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The street lighting units in Poleglass are inspected on a routine basis and any defects noted are processed for repair. All new street lighting schemes are designed in accordance with the relevant British Standards and are therefore deemed to fully satisfy the needs of all road users.

It is recognised that some of the lighting has been there for many years and may not meet today's standards for modern lighting schemes. As such, officials have identified areas within Poleglass, such as Glenwell and Laurelbank, where some minor upgrades are required. I can confirm my Department proposes to include these particular areas within a works programme for replacement within the 2014/15 financial year.

Belfast Harbour Commissioners: Investment

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Regional Development why the £20 million investment from the Belfast Harbour Commissioners cannot be credited to his Department's budget, necessitating a bid in the June monitoring round; and why this was not understood after the initial meeting with the Commissioners in October 2012.
(AQW 24050/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Department's budget was set on the basis that £20m would be secured from Belfast Harbour Commissioners (BHC) in both 2013-14 and 2014-15. The Budget Review Group agreed that the Department should work collaboratively with BHC on release of value projects. Following detailed engagement between representatives of the Budget Review Group and BHC, in October 2012 it was agreed that BHC would take forward, from within its resources, proposals for investment in Foreign Direct Investment (FDI) accommodation. The first phase worth £10m is in progress with a second £10m phase to follow. Other potential projects to the value of £23m have also been identified.

BHC has started to progress the first phase, however there is no means of crediting this investment to the Department's budget – i.e. the investment will be made directly by BHC, benefiting the economy as a whole, but does not translate into income for the Department. As indicated above, as the Department's budget was established on the basis that the amounts would be credited to our budget, this has created a pressure which needs to be addressed by the Executive. This position was fully understood by the Budget Review Group when it took its decision in October 2012. When endorsing this approach, in January 2013, the Executive also agreed that the appropriate mechanism to address the financial pressure would be the in-year monitoring round – hence the bid in June Monitoring.

Train Services: Contingency Arrangements

Mr McClarty asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the (i) contingency arrangements put in place to transport passengers when train services are interrupted; (ii) maximum wait time for arrangements to be put in place to ensure that passengers arrive at their destination station within a reasonable time; and (iii) compensation available for passengers who miss appointments due to interrupted train services.
(AQW 24054/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can advise you that:

- (i) NI Railways operate a range of contingencies in the event of interrupted train services.

The first priority in every event is to protect the safety of passengers, staff and the public. Recovery plans and onward passenger travel arrangements will depend on the individual incident and circumstances, i.e. location, appropriate alternatives available by bus/train transfer.

- (ii) Maximum waiting time will be dependent on the circumstances of the event, as will the level of compensation.

As a minimum, NI Railways operate a "Delay Repay" compensation scheme which is set out in detail in the Passenger's Charter. This scheme is similar to that operated by many train companies in Great Britain and offers different levels of compensation based on the length of the delay:

(iii) -

- 30 – 59 minutes – half the cost of a single ticket or half of either part of a return ticket;
- 60 – 119 minutes – full cost of a single ticket or full cost of either part (the outward or the return part) of a return ticket; and
- delays of over 119 minutes – the cost of a return ticket for the journey even if only a single ticket was purchased.

You can see the full terms and conditions at: www.translink.co.uk/delayrepay.

Cross-border services have their own compensation arrangements which can be found in the Enterprise Charter, also available on Translink's website.

Roads: Repairs at Culcavy and Halftown

Mrs Hale asked the Minister for Regional Development how many times contractors carried out road repairs on the (i) Culcavy; and (ii) Halftown roads in (a) 2011/12; and (b) 2012/13.

(AQW 24057/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The numbers of road repairs completed on the Culcavy Road and Halftown Road in 2011/12 and 2012/13 are detailed in the table below:

Road	Financial Year 2011/12	Financial Year 2012/13
Culcavy Road	129	114
Halftown Road	98	162

Railway Stations: Bangor to Belfast

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development whether there are plans for work on railway stations on the Bangor to Belfast line.

(AQW 24079/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can advise you that there are currently 3 projects planned for stations on the Bangor line. These are:

Project Name	Est. Cost	Est. Finish
Seahill – Platform Ramps	£100,000	October 2014
Bangor Bus/Rail Station – Set-down area at front	£70,000	March 2014
Bangor Bus/Rail Station – Improvements to rear path and fencing	£30,000	March 2016

In addition, Translink is also in discussion with the Ulster Folk & Transport Museum at Cultra to operate, for a trial period, a railway Park & Ride using their existing facilities.

It should be noted that costs are at this stage estimates and completion dates are indicative; they will be firmed up on completion of business cases and when contracts are developed.

Cycle Paths: Maintenance

Mr Douglas asked the Minister for Regional Development what measures are in place to ensure that cycle paths, and other provision for cyclists, are properly maintained and kept free of debris, including broken glass.

(AQW 24084/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Article 8 of the Roads (Northern Ireland) Order 1993 places a duty on my Department to maintain all public roads in reasonable condition. The term 'road' includes all public adopted footways, cycle tracks, verges etc.

In recognition of its duty of care, my Department has put in place a set of Maintenance Standards for Safety, which are designed to ensure a consistent service level and a safe highway while offering value for money. These standards are based on best practice, research and consultation with both the public and other professional bodies and Industry.

The Safety Standards and procedures currently in operation establish frequencies for inspections and specify response times for the repair of defects. These systems and procedures are recognised and accepted by the courts as being appropriate given the finite level of funding available.

Surface defects identified outside of these inspection regimes will be dealt with according to same standards and remedial work arranged as necessary. If the relevant response time cannot be met, or is not appropriate, then my Department has the option of installing signs to warn road users of a possible danger.

Litter or other obstructions of this nature on the cycle lanes/tracks are usually detected during the routine maintenance inspections and the necessary action taken. However, in many instances these cycle routes/lanes do not belong to my Department and therefore, other parties have responsibility for their maintenance.

The following examples may help clarify the responsibility for maintaining cycle paths:

- Where the cycle track/lane belongs to my Department and runs along side a road then the responsibility for cleaning/sweeping lies with the local District Council. Article 7 of The Litter (NI) Order 1994 places responsibility for cleaning all roads on councils, with the exception of motorways and some designated roads which remain with my Department. Other general maintenance activities, such as patching and drainage etc. remain the responsibility of my Department.
- Where the cycle track/lane belongs to my Department but lies outside the area between the fence/hedge lines, interpreted as 'road' by the Roads (NI) Order, for example, the cycle tracks around the lakes in Craigavon, then all maintenance, including cleaning, is the responsibility of my Department.
- Where the cycle track/lane belongs to a third party, for example, the track along the M5, which is jointly owned by both Belfast and Newtownabbey Councils, then responsibility for all maintenance, including cleaning and other general maintenance activities, rests with the owners.

Cycle Paths: Maintenance at Knocknagoney

Mr Douglas asked the Minister for Regional Development what maintenance or inspection has been carried out at the cycle underpaths at Knocknagoney, in the last three months.

(AQW 24085/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Officials from my Department inspected the cycle underpaths on 21 March and 23 May 2013, and no defects were noted on either occasion. In addition, the grass in this area has been cut on two occasions.

Enterprise Train: Fire

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the cause of the fire on the Belfast to Dublin Enterprise train on 6 June 2013; and the action that is being taken to ensure that there is no recurrence.

(AQW 24137/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The investigation into the cause of the fire is ongoing. The findings of that investigation will inform any necessary action to reduce the risk of any further recurrence.

As required under their Safety Management System NIR will commission their own inquiry into the matter. Engineers will investigate the cause of the fire on the locomotive and the inquiry team will also include representatives from Iarnród Éireann, given the shared nature of the Enterprise service, the fact that the train in question is an Iarnród Éireann vehicle and that all locomotives in the Enterprise fleet are maintained in the Iarnród Éireann engineering depot in Dublin. The Department has asked to be kept fully informed.

The Rail Accident Investigation Board have been informed and, while they have yet to decide if they will investigate directly, have indicated that they are content with the investigation now underway. The Health & Safety Executive have also indicated that they will carry out an investigation into the incident and they have been briefed by Translink on the incident.

I recognise that this was a very distressing situation for all passengers concerned and I am very relieved that no-one was injured. I attended the scene of the incident and I have met with officials and Translink staff. The safety of the public remains our key priority. The response from the train crew, Translink's response teams and emergency services was excellent.

Bus Service: Foyle

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development whether his Department intends to establish an improved bus service to and from the city centre and the Culmore area of Foyle.

(AQW 24212/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Currently the Lough Swilly Bus Company operates a service along this route. We partly fund this under the Rural Transport Fund. My officials will be meeting with the company in the coming weeks regarding the level of service provision from the city centre to the Culmore area.

A6: Dualling Project

Mr Mitchel McLaughlin asked the Minister for Regional Development how many objections have been received to the 4.8km stretch of the A6 Dualling Project by-passing Dungiven and on the remainder of the Dualling Project.

(AQO 4329/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department has received 34 objections relating to the Dungiven By-pass part of the A6 dualling scheme.

A further 88 objections and 11 representations have been received relating to the remainder of the A6 Londonderry to Dungiven scheme.

Parking Tickets: County Londonderry

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Regional Development how many Penalty Charge Notices were issued in the towns of Coleraine, Limavady, Portstewart, Portrush and Dungiven, in each of the last two years.

(AQO 4317/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Mr Speaker, rather than read out a long list of numbers, I have placed the details in the Library.

In terms of the detail, I would highlight that parking control is important to help reduce congestion, improve road safety and improve access to town centres. My Department's parking policy is fundamentally about ensuring a turnover of spaces, and thus freeing up available spaces for shoppers and visitors which would otherwise be blocked by all day parkers. Such an approach is important to the viability of towns as shopping locations.

We are being successful – the numbers of PCNs issued across Northern Ireland in 2012/13 have reduced by 16,526 which represents a decrease of some 13% from the previous year. The figures for Limavady, Portstewart and Portrush reflect this decrease in PCN numbers. While Coleraine figures show an increase in the number of PCNs due to the addition of 610 new Pay and Display spaces in 2012-13, on a like for like basis, not including the impact of these additional spaces, the position for Coleraine is a 22% decrease for 2012-13.

Flags: Removal

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline who is liable for damage or injury caused by the removal of flags from lamp posts and other street furniture.

(AQO 4324/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I do not condone or support the unauthorised use of my Department's lamp posts, street furniture or other property.

Experience has shown that removal of flags in the absence of widespread support simply worsens the situation, with even more flags being displayed. My Department must also take account of the risks to its employees involved in removing flags where agreement has not been reached.

However, under the current Joint Protocol on the Display of Flags in Public Areas when called upon by the lead Agency, my officials will where necessary provide the access equipment and resources to remove unwanted flags.

Liability for damage or injury caused by the removal of flags from lamp posts and other street furniture lies with the persons who remove the flags. However, the Member will appreciate that the necessary evidence to pursue such liability may not always be available.

A5: Funding Reallocation

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development what success he has had in retaining money previously allocated for the A5 road project within the roads budget.

(AQO 4325/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Following the recent Court ruling on the scheme, I wrote to the Finance Minister on 9 May 2013, to declare a reduced budget requirement in relation to the 2013/14 year.

In parallel with this, I highlighted alternative areas of spend in my Department to which this money could be reallocated, all of which would provide support to the construction sector and the local economy at this most difficult time.

Looking forward, there will be implications for 2014-15 allocation and I have provided options to the Finance Minister for other major road schemes that could be started in that financial year given the substantial delay in respect of the A5 project.

I await Executive consideration of these issues.

Roads: Maintenance Budgets

Mr Irwin asked the Minister for Regional Development, in light of the recent under investment in roads maintenance, what plans does he have to increase the maintenance budgets available to Roads Service for road network repairs.

(AQO 4326/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: It is currently estimated that £130 million per annum is needed to maintain the structural integrity of Northern Ireland's 15,500 miles of road network.

The structural maintenance budget for 2013/14 is around £62 million, leaving a shortfall of some £68 million. I made a bid in June monitoring to meet this shortfall and I hope that the member, and indeed the House, will support this bid.

I can assure you that I will continue to make strong bids for additional structural maintenance funds when necessary.

Signs: "Welcome to Northern Ireland"

Ms Fearon asked the Minister for Regional Development how much has been spent on erecting and replacing Welcome to Northern Ireland signs.

(AQO 4327/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department has spent approximately £15,300 erecting and replacing 'Welcome to Northern Ireland' signs.

Such signs provide a very useful message to all road users who are not from this area. From a road safety perspective they inform the road user that the speed limits change to miles per hour, and from a tourist and visitor perspective they confirm that there is a change of jurisdiction. This is helpful for visitors, particularly in terms of currency, mobile phone use and, visa requirements for those from outside the European Union. My own view is that we would not be very good hosts if we did not welcome visitors to our country.

Glen Road, Derry: Traffic-calming Island

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he has evaluated the effectiveness of the traffic calming island installed on the Glen Road, in the Derry City Council area.

(AQO 4328/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I remain committed to improving road safety and reducing the number of people killed and seriously injured on our roads. Traffic calming is a key element of my Department's road safety programmes

The traffic calming scheme on the Glen Road in Londonderry includes a number of islands. Since the scheme was introduced in March 2011, there have been no recorded collisions involving personal injury and a reduction in vehicle speeds has been observed. This compares to two personal injury collisions being recorded in the year before introduction of the scheme.

In these circumstances, it is considered that the traffic calming measures installed on the Glen Road have been effective.

A5: Conservation Areas

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development when will he make an appropriate assessment in respect of the report he commissioned on the impact of the proposed A5 Western Transport Corridor on the special areas of conservation and proposed mitigation measures.

(AQO 4330/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: During the tenure of my predecessor, a screening exercise, as allowed by the Habitats Directive, was carried out on behalf of the Department. The findings of the screening exercise were issued to the two relevant statutory bodies, the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) and the Republic of Ireland's National Parks and Wildlife Service. Both these bodies expressly agreed with the findings. The screening exercise concluded that given the outcome a full Appropriate Assessment was not required.

The Appropriate Assessment process for the A5 project has commenced and I expect to receive the report within the next 2 months. This will allow me to carry out an initial assessment of its content and conclusions.

I have also asked for a third party review of the project consultant's work in respect of the entire Appropriate Assessment process. This review will include the scope of the report to inform the Appropriate Assessment, as well as an overview of the Environmental Statement. The findings of this report will also assist my deliberations.

A public consultation exercise on the report to inform the Appropriate Assessment process is expected to commence in late summer 2013. If this consultation and the third party review do not raise any issues, I would be in a position to complete the Appropriate Assessment in about 4 months' time.

However, if issues emerge from either the public consultation and/or the review which require a public inquiry, then my completion of an Appropriate Assessment will take a further 12 months. This additional time would be required to arrange and hold the public inquiry and await and consider the Inspector's report.

A4: TEN-T

Ms McGahan asked the Minister for Regional Development what impact the removal of the N16 from the TEN-T Comprehensive Road Network could have on the A4.

(AQO 4331/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I am delighted to confirm that, as a direct consequence of my personal intervention, my counterpart in the Republic of Ireland has withdrawn the proposal to remove the N16 from the Republic of Ireland's TEN-T Comprehensive Network. This avoids any adverse implications for the A4 in Northern Ireland.

Department for Social Development

Special Advisers: DSD Spend

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development how much his Department has spent on Special Advisers since May 2007, broken down by (i) salary; (ii) pension contributions; (iii) expenses; (iv) office costs; and (v) other costs.
(AQW 1004/11-15)

Mr McCausland (The Minister for Social Development): The Department is subject to the Data Protection Act in the disclosure of remuneration details of civil servants other than in broad terms. The information which is provided below has therefore had regard to Data Protection considerations.

- (i) The table below sets out the minimum and maximum of the pay scales for Special Advisers within the Department for Social Development during the period from May 2007 to 31 March 2013.

Salary Range

Year	Minimum	Maximum
2007/08	£56,100	£78,540
2008/09	£57,300	£79,740
2009/10	£57,300	£82,531
2010/11	£57,300	£82,531
2011/12	£57,300	£90,000
2012/13	£57,873	£90,900

- (ii) Employer's pension contributions were paid over at a rate of 21½% in the period from May 2007 to 31 March 2010 and at a rate of 23½% in the period from 1 April 2010 to 31 March 2013.
- (iii) Expenses paid to Special Advisers in the period from May 2007 to 31 March 2013 totalled £8,927.
- (iv) There were no incremental office costs as a result of Special Advisers using existing NICS DFP provided accommodation.
- (v) Other costs in the period from May 2007 to 31 March 2013 totalled £65,897 and include Employer's National Insurance Contributions, Data Card and telephony costs.

Special Advisers: Pay Band

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development whether his Special Adviser is paid within Band A or Band B of the Department of Finance and Personnel's salary scale; and, if it is within Band B whether, in light of the DFP decision to increase the upper limit of the Band B scale to £90,000, there has been an increase in salary or an increase is planned.
(AQW 2105/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Special Adviser within the Department is paid within Band B of the Department of Finance and Personnel's salary scale. There was no pay increase made in light of the change in the upper limit of the Band B scale to £90,000.

Unanswered Questions: AQW 1004/11-15 and AQW 2105/11-15

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development, in relation to Standing Order 20 (B) which states that a written answer 'shall' be answered by the end of ten working days after it is published, (i) why AQW 1004/11-15 and AQW 2105/11-15 have not been answered; and (ii) to provide answers to these questions.
(AQW 3568/11-15)

Mr McCausland: I would advise the Member that AQW 1004/11-15 and AQW 2105/11-15 have been answered.

Fuel Poverty: Funding

Mr Maskey asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the level of funding attributed to each of the fuel poverty programmes his Department has had responsibility for in the last five years; and to explain the rationale behind each of the varying levels of funding.
(AQW 23831/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Warm Homes Scheme is my Department's primary tool in tackling fuel poverty and the funding for the past 5 years is:

2009/2010	£20.75m
-----------	---------

2010/2011	£20.5m
2011/2012	£15.023m
2012/2013	£15.95m
2013/2014	£16.0m

£12million was allocated by DFP to my department to deliver the Boiler Replacement Scheme; this budget is £4 million per year over the remainder of this CSR period. An additional £6million has been secured from the European Regional Development Fund, which brings the total budget available for boiler replacement to £18 million.

All the budget allocations including Warm Homes are agreed by the NI Executive during the Comprehensive Spending Review. The last CSR finished in 2010/11 and the allocation for Warm Homes was lower than the amount of funding which DSD had requested. Minister Attwood at the time increased this allocation by redirecting funding from other budget allocations.

Social Security Agency: Recruitment

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 22825/11-15, whether he will ensure that in future years, when significant numbers of people are due to be recruited to the Social Security Agency, that any recruitment disparity, compared to years when much smaller numbers are recruited, is closely examined to establish any reason for the difference in outcomes.

(AQW 23898/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Recruitment and promotion exercises for general service posts (i.e. administrators and managers) across the Northern Ireland Civil Service (NICS) are managed on a corporate basis by the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP) through the HRConnect outsourced service.

On an annual basis, the Northern Ireland Research Agency (NISRA) produces an analysis of NICS recruitment competitions that includes equality information. From this report, DFP will identify disparities within the recruitment process and take any appropriate action. DFP use also data on recruitment to general NICS grades within triennial Article 55 reviews, and if this identifies a lack of fair participation in a grade, positive action advertising statements will be used to encourage applications from under-represented groups. The NICS also undertakes a number of outreach measures to address under representation as outlined at Section 1.8 of the NICS Recruitment and Procedures Manual (Version 13).

Rent Arrears

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) the current level of rent arrears outstanding to (a) Northern Ireland Housing Executive; and (b) housing associations; and (ii) to state the period for which the arrears are outstanding.

(AQW 23950/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Table 1 below gives details of the Housing Executive tenants by the number of weeks in arrears as at 31 May 2013. The Housing Executive has advised that it is not possible to provide past tenant debt broken down in this format. Table 2 gives details of past tenant arrears by value as at 31 May 2013.

Table 3 below gives details of both past and current Housing Association tenant rent arrears by the number of weeks and value as at 31 May 2013.

Table 1 - current Housing Executive tenant rent arrears by number of weeks

The majority of large rent arrears, for Housing Executive tenants, have not been caused by the non payment of rent but historically is due to tenants receiving Housing Benefit to which they were not entitled and thus creating an overpayment. The current Housing Benefit management system ensures that Housing Benefit overpayments are no longer transferred to tenants' rent accounts.

In relation to Housing Association rent arrears the figures include amounts that are “technical arrears”. These accrue because housing benefit is paid to the Housing Associations four weeks in arrears.

Social Housing: Void Properties

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) the number of void social housing properties in the Colin area of west Belfast; (ii) their location; (iii) the length of time they have been empty; and (iv) when they will be reallocated.

(AQW 23974/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that they currently have 12 void properties within the Colin area of West Belfast, seven of which are in Poleglass and the other five are in Twinbrook. The table below gives details in relation to parts (ii) to (iv) of the question.

Location	Length of time empty	Reallocated
Glenbawn Place, Poleglass	From February 2013	Yes, awaiting completion of change of tenancy repairs
Woodside View, Poleglass	From March 2013	Yes, awaiting completion of change of tenancy repairs
Woodside Park, Poleglass	From March 2013	Offered but not accepted
Glenkeen, Poleglass	From April 2013	Offered but not accepted
Ardcaoin Ave, Poleglass	From May 2013	Offered but not accepted
Glenbawn Drive, Poleglass	From May 2013	Yes, awaiting completion of change of tenancy repairs
Glenwood View, Poleglass	From May 2013	Offered but not accepted
Aspen Park, Twinbrook	From March 2013	Yes, awaiting completion of change of tenancy repairs
Juniper Court, Twinbrook	From March 2013	Yes, awaiting completion of change of tenancy repairs
Aspen Park, Twinbrook	From April 2013	Offered but not accepted
Broom Park Heights, Twinbrook	From April 2013	Offered but not accepted
Almond Heights, Twinbrook	From May 2013	Offered but not accepted

In relation to Housing Association's they have a total of 24 properties void in the Colin area of West Belfast. The table below gives details of parts (ii) to (iv) of the question.

Location	Length of time empty	Reallocated
Cloona Manor	Boarded up following threat to tenants	No
Lagmore (17 properties)	Vacant on average of 33 weeks	Nine to be allocated by end of summer and other eight may not be lettable until November 2013
Sheltered Housing Scheme at Pembroke Loop Road (3 properties)	One since 3 June 2013 Two since late 2011	One to be let in the next few weeks. The other two are unlettable at present due to substantial repairs required
Stewartstown Road	27/05/2013	Unable to relet as structural work is required
Good Shepherd Court	27/05/2013	Unable to relet at present due to major dampness
Laurelbank	26/05/13	Due to be relet 19/08/13

Fuel Poverty

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister for Social Development whether he will introduce a pilot scheme, similar to the Kirklees Metropolitan Area scheme in Yorkshire, targeted at alleviating the fuel poverty of the 13 percent of the population who are most affected.

(AQW 24044/11-15)

Mr McCausland: My Department has recently completed an Achieving Affordable Warmth Area Based Pilot, in partnership with OFMdfM, DARD, the University of Ulster, NI Housing Executive and 19 local Councils. The aim of this unique approach was to deliver energy efficiency improvements to homes in small concentrated areas. The University of Ulster developed a sophisticated targeting tool which identified areas of poor housing and low incomes indicating a high prevalence of fuel poverty. A total of 2,145 households were comprehensively surveyed and assessed in terms of their actual levels of fuel poverty and audited for eligibility to the Warm Homes Scheme. Approximately 1 in 2 houses contacted proved eligible for free energy efficiency measures under the Warm Homes Scheme and at least three-quarters of those contacted were in extreme or severe fuel poverty. The targeting system devised in this project is the most accurate area-based tool implemented thus far in the UK. Plans are being developed for a wider rollout of the area-based approach working with the 11 new council areas.

Housing Executive: Redundancy Package

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the leaving package of the former Deputy Chief Executive and Director of Corporate Services in the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, who left in March 2012.

(AQW 24093/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Deputy Chief Executive / Director of Corporate Services left the Housing Executive on the basis of Voluntary Early Retirement/Voluntary Redundancy.

He received the pension entitlements from the Northern Ireland Local Government's Officers Superannuation Scheme (NILGOSC) appropriate to his contributions and length of service and a compensation payment of £97,296 from the Housing Executive.

The Information provided in this response is governed by the Principles and Protocols of the Code of Practice for Official Statistics. This is enforced by UK Statistics Authority.

Housing Executive: Travel Expenses

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the cost of (i) flights; and (ii) accommodation incurred by the (i) Chairman; and (ii) vice Chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive since they were appointed.

(AQW 24094/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The cost of the flights and accommodation incurred by the Chairman and Vice Chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive since they were appointed to May 2013 are shown in the table below.

	Chairman	Vice Chairman
Flights	£4,407.92	£2,628.47
Accommodation	£2,209.00	£774.00
Total	£6,616.92	£3,402.47

Street Trading Licences

Mr I McCreagh asked the Minister for Social Development whether stalls at parades and festivals in towns and villages require street trading licences.

(AQW 24098/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The legislation regulating street trading in Northern Ireland (the Street Trading Act (Northern Ireland) 2001) provides that any person who wishes to trade from a stall must obtain a street trading licence from the district council for the area in which trading is to take place.

A temporary licence may be issued for special events such as parades and festivals.

Responsibility for the issue of licences rests with district councils.

Employment and Support Allowance

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 23545/11-15, whether the use of a claimant's National Insurance Contributions, paid in the last two complete tax years immediately prior to the benefit year in which their claim is made, for the purposes of determining entitlement to contribution-based Employment and Support Allowance provides a fair assessment of the claimant's current income; and what impact this method has on claims.

(AQW 24115/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Entitlement to contribution-based Employment and Support Allowance is determined on the meeting of particular national insurance contribution conditions as set out in the Employment and Support Allowance (Northern Ireland) Regulations 2008. The stipulation of the two year period of time over which contributions are paid in any tax year recognises and rewards recent proximity to the labour market. This provides a fair and equitable method of assessing entitlement to contribution-based Employment and Support Allowance.

It is not possible to determine the impact of this method on claims as the majority of those claimants that do not meet the contribution conditions will still qualify for income-related Employment and Support Allowance if their income and capital levels are low enough.

Gas Heating: Limavady

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Social Development for a timeframe for the installation of gas to Drumachose Park, Limavady.

(AQW 24151/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Drumachose Park gas heating scheme, for approximately 72 dwellings, is currently programmed with a start date of 19 August 2013 and the initial surveys are currently being carried out by the contractor. The start date is dependent on all relevant surveys being carried out.

Randalstown: Regeneration

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister for Social Development whether he has considered providing funding for the new car park at the site of the former police station in Randalstown, as part of the town regeneration programme.

(AQW 24165/11-15)

Mr McCausland: My Department is one of a number of stakeholders involved in taking forward actions set out contained in the Randalstown masterplan. DSD is aware that a local regeneration community group recently purchased the former police station however the new owner has not contacted my Department to discuss their proposals for the site.

Central Investigation Service

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Social Development whether his Department has used the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development's Central Investigation Service to investigate any actions or concerns in relation to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

(AQW 24174/11-15)

Mr McCausland: My Department has never used the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development's Central Investigation Service to investigate any actions or concerns in relation to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Gas Heating: Housing Executive Properties

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Social Development how many Housing Executive houses in each district avail of the gas network.

(AQW 24182/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The table below details the number of Housing Executive properties that have gas central heating in each of their district office areas.

NIHE District Office	Properties with Gas

Housing Executive: Occupancy Rates in North Down and Newtownards

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the occupancy rates for Housing Executive units in (i) North Down; and (ii) Newtownards.

(AQW 24192/11-15)

Mr McCausland: At 31 May 2013 the Housing Executive had 6,520 properties within their Bangor and Newtownards local office areas. Of these, 106 properties were vacant; with 35 in a lettable condition. The remainder were vacant for a variety of reasons such as undergoing repairs or decanting of tenants.

The table below details the breakdown of vacant stock by the various Housing Executive local offices in question.

Local Office area	Total Stock	Tenanted Stock	Total Vacant
Bangor	2,660	2,613	47
Newtownards	3,860	3801	59
Total	6,520	6,414	106

Housing: Supported People Funding

Mr Durkan asked the Minister for Social Development which service providers are at risk of losing Supported People Funding because they will be registered with the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority.

(AQW 24211/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority are responsible for the regulation and inspection of Registered Care Homes which are the statutory responsibility of DHSS&PS and Domiciliary Care services that can be delivered to supported living schemes. If the Regulatory authority decides that a supported living housing scheme should be registered as a Residential Care Home it becomes the responsibility of DHSS&PS to determine funding requirements.

The Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority and relevant trusts hold the information required in relation to all decisions regarding registration.

Parental Carers

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development for an estimate of the number of people in each constituency with complex care and learning difficulties who are being cared for by their parents.

(AQW 24222/11-15)

Mr McCausland: My Department does not hold this information.

Carers Allowance

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the total sum spent on the Carers Allowance in each of the last five years.

(AQW 24223/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The total sum spent in the Carers Allowance in each of the last five years is detailed below.

Financial Year	Spend (£'000)
2012-13	£123,588
2011-12	£111,219
2010-11	£103,573
2009-10	£97,999
2008-09	£90,401

The Information provided in this response is governed by the Principles and Protocols of the Code of Practice for Official Statistics. This is enforced by UK Statistics Authority.

Carers Allowance

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development how many people are in receipt of the Carers Allowance; and how many are providing care for a (i) child; (ii) sibling; and (iii) parent.

(AQW 24224/11-15)

Mr McCausland: At February 2013, there were 38,570 people in receipt of Carer's Allowance. Information is not held by my Department on the breakdown of care provision requested.

Cavity Wall Insulation: Castlereagh

Mr Lytle asked the Minister for Social Development whether the cavity wall insulation schemes scheduled to take place in Northern Ireland Housing Executive properties in Castlereagh will be completed on schedule.

(AQW 24279/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive does not have any cavity wall insulation schemes scheduled to take place in Castlereagh.

Ballymoney Roadshow: Non-financial Sponsor

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 24075/11-15, how the non-financial sponsor of the Ballymoney Roadshow was selected.

(AQW 24305/11-15)

Mr McCausland: No selection process was involved.

Cllr Mervyn Storey, MLA, advised the Department that he was planning to hold a benefit uptake event following his recent attendance at the Pensioner's Parliament.

This provided an ideal opportunity for the Department to test a delivery model for the first Maximising Incomes & Outcomes Community Road Show event in the Ballymoney Council area. As part of my Department's ongoing commitment to improving benefit uptake, a Road Show event will be delivered in every council area throughout Northern Ireland over the next 3 years.

Housing Executive: Home Improvement Grants

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister for Social Development how many grants for home improvements the Housing Executive has issued in the last year, broken down by amount.

(AQW 24309/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The breakdown for grant approvals in the financial year 2012/13 is detailed in the table below.

Grant type	<£1k	£1k - £5k	£5k - £10	£10k - £15k	£15k - £20k	£20k - £25k	> £25k	Total
Disabled Facilities	27	675	146	94	45	68	152	1,207
Home Repair Assistance	5	37	0	0	0	0	0	42
Renovation	1	7	12	8	9	18	0	55
Replacement	0	0	0	0	0	0	8	8
Total	33	719	158	102	54	86	160	1,312

Campbell Tickell

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development (i) whether the consultancy firm Campbell Tickell has been appointed to independently review the alleged overpayments of £18m to four Northern Ireland Housing Executive (NIHE) contractors; (ii) who made this appointment; (iii) whether a Board member of NIHE, that was appointed by the Minister, Gregory Lomax, is an associate in Campbell Tickell; (iv) what was the procurement process followed in the appointment of Campbell Tickell; (v) if the Board of NIHE was involved in the appointment did Mr Lomax declare an interest; (vi) what are the terms of reference for the Campbell Tickell investigation; and (vii) what period they will investigate.

(AQW 24342/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that Campbell Tickell has been appointed to independently review the alleged overpayments. Campbell Tickell has been appointed by the Board of the Housing Executive. The Board member Gregory Lomax is an associate in Campbell Tickell. The procurement process followed was in line with the appropriate procurement guidance for the direct award of contracts and the use of consultants. In relation to 'if the Board of NIHE was involved in the appointment did Mr Lomax declare an interest,' the initial processes of appointing the consultant were managed by the Chairman. The external independent review of the organisation's handling of planned maintenance contracts will review how this situation arose, the reliability of the information on overcharging and the actions taken to recover the overpayments. The period under investigation relates to planned maintenance contracts over the past five years.

Housing-led Regeneration

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Social Development to outline what 'housing led regeneration' means.

(AQO 4302/11-15)

Mr McCausland: It is of considerable regret to me that many once vibrant housing estates across Northern Ireland have been allowed to decline and become blighted by vacant and derelict properties, undeveloped land and poor design. This approach is failing communities and exacerbating the housing waiting list, as no one wants to live in an area that is run down and I feel it is morally wrong to condemn home owners to live in dereliction.

That is why the Housing Strategy sets out my intention to take a housing-led approach to regenerating communities to provide; better homes; better places to live and work; better services for communities; and better opportunities for residents.

This approach will involve concerted social, economic and physical actions by my Department's Housing, Urban Regeneration and Social Security Agency teams, working in partnership with other statutory organisations and communities, to develop solutions which reverse decline and create sustainable communities.

Actions to be taken forward will include; refurbishment of current housing stock; infrastructure improvements; and programmes to tackle anti social behaviour and improve educational attainment and employability prospects for people living within these communities.

Connswater Community Greenway

Mr Douglas asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the Connswater Community Greenway project, following the recent announcement about the contract being awarded to deliver the first phase.

(AQO 4309/11-15)

Mr McCausland: I very much welcome the announcement of the Contract being awarded which will deliver the first phase of the project. It is important that, given the previous delays, people can see some progression taking place with this significant regeneration project which my Department is helping to deliver across the city. This project will lead to considerable improvements to the City environment and will clearly demonstrate that Belfast is being 'turned around' for the benefit of its citizens.

Housing Executive: Electricity Group-buy Scheme

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development what steps the Housing Executive has taken to examine the potential for a group buy scheme to help offset the recently announced electricity price rises.

(AQO 4310/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Member will be aware that we were faced with the same situation last year in relation to electricity prices and that there is legislative provision under Section 19 of the Housing (Amendment) Act (Northern Ireland) 2011 to procure bulk energy. I raised the matter then with the Housing Executive and soon after there was a significant price cut.

In relation to the recently announced electricity price rises there is more work to be done with the Housing Executive to help achieve a similar result to last year. Again I asked the Housing Executive to raise the issue with the electricity license holders. They have advised me that they have written to all electricity license holders in Northern Ireland asking them to detail any discounts that they are prepared to offer to its tenants. A response is anticipated by Friday, 28 June 2013.

Housing Executive: Stock Transfer

Ms Lo asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the progress on transferring Housing Executive stock to Housing Associations.

(AQO 4311/11-15)

Mr McCausland: As the Stock Transfer Programme involves the transfer of over 2000 housing units currently in Housing Executive ownership, to the Housing Associations, we must be sure that value for money is being achieved by the public purse when transferring assets. The Housing Executive is currently working with my Department to finalise the stock transfer process to ensure this process is fit for purpose.

I am pleased to be able to inform you that the necessary approval to proceed with a further pilot in Bloomfield Bungalows, Bangor was received on 15 May 2013 and the Housing Executive issued a Formal Consultation first Notice to the tenants in Bloomfield Bungalows on Friday 17 May 2013.

The administrative processes and the oversight and approval mechanisms for the proposed Stock Transfer Programme are near completion and I intend to make an announcement on the Programme and the schemes it contains before the Summer Recess.

Landlord Registration Scheme

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the Landlord Registration Scheme.

(AQO 4312/11-15)

Mr McCausland: My original intention was to have Landlord Registration in place by the Summer. However, in order to facilitate the direct payment to landlords of the housing cost element of Universal Credit, it is necessary to make a number of practical changes to implementation. In addition the Head of the Civil Service issued a directive to all Departments that when developing new programmes involving online or telephone interaction with citizens or business services, there should be a presumption in favour of using NI Direct programme. My Department is therefore now working with NI Direct to ensure there is a fully functional landlord registration scheme in place as quickly as possible and certainly before the end of 2013.

Although the delay is disappointing, this will ensure a better service to people delivered more effectively.

Housing: Repossessions

Mr McMullan asked the Minister for Social Development what action he is taking to deal with the problem of house repossessions.

(AQO 4313/11-15)

Mr McCausland: My Department cannot resolve the underlying problems leading to possible home repossession; however it does offer help to people facing difficulty through the services outlined below.

My Department funds a Mortgage Debt Advice Service to help those experiencing difficulty making mortgage payments avoid the distressing prospect of court action and possible repossession. This free advice service, operated by the Housing Rights Service, has received funding until March 2015. The service operates during office working hours and includes an online advisor and evening opening hours to 8.00pm on Tuesdays and Thursdays and can be contacted directly on 0300 323 0310.

My Department also provides help through Support for Mortgage Interest to people receiving certain social security benefits.

Ballykeel, Ballymena: Regeneration

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the proposed regeneration scheme for the Ballykeel Ward, Ballymena.

(AQO 4314/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that it does not have any proposed regeneration schemes for Ballykeel. In addition, they advise that their local District Office is not aware of any schemes planned through Neighbourhood Renewal or Regional Development.

However, my Department will continue to work with the local voluntary and community sector and its local statutory partners including Ballymena Borough Council to identify, develop and deliver a range of projects to target the needs of the people in the Neighbourhood Renewal Area, including Ballykeel.

Unanswered Questions: AQW 1004/11-15; AQW 2105/11-15, AQW 3568/11-15 and AQW 6109/11-1

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development why AQW 1004/11-15 tabled on 17/06/2011; AQW 2105/11-15 tabled on 16/09/2011; AQW 3568/11-15 tabled on 19/10/2011; and AQW 6109/11-15 tabled on 09/01/2012 have not been answered. (AQO 4315/11-15)

Mr McCausland: I would advise the Member that AQW 1004/11-15; AQW 2105/11-15; and AQW 3568/11-15 were answered.

Social Security Office: Limavady

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Social Development what scope exists to expand the role of the Social Security Office in Limavady. (AQO 4316/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The role of the local Jobs and Benefits offices will continue to change as elements of welfare reform are rolled out across Northern Ireland. Whilst I am committed to maintaining the current network of offices, it is important that the Social Security Agency actively reviews all potential functions to ensure optimum use of the current estate. This review will include looking at the functions which could be carried out at the Limavady Jobs and Benefits Office

Housing Executive: Review of Maintenance Contracts

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Social Development when an external independent review of the Housing Executive's handling of maintenance contracts will (i) begin; and (ii) be completed. (AQW 24411/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The external independent review has begun and is scheduled to take 13 weeks to complete.

Northern Ireland Assembly Commission

Lobbying

Mr Dallat asked the Assembly Commission what guidance is in place to define when lobbying involving Assembly Members is appropriate and when it is inappropriate. (AQW 23888/11-15)

Mr Cree (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): Standing Order 69 (Members' Interests) and the Assembly's Code of Conduct together with the Guide to the Rules Relating to the Conduct of Members ("the Code and Guide") set out the rules and guidance that Members must adhere to in relation to lobbying. I enclose with this response links to Standing Order 69 and the Code and Guide, both of which appear on the Assembly's website.

Lobbying of Members is permitted. However, Members must register and/or declare any relevant interests that they have in relation to lobbying. Paragraphs 7 to 94 of the Guide provide further detail in relation to the requirements to register and declare interests.

Paid advocacy is not permitted. The rules therefore provide that no Member shall, in any proceeding of the Assembly, in return for payment or benefit:

- advocate or initiate any cause or matter on behalf of any outside body or individual;
- urge any other Member of the Assembly to do so.

Paragraphs 95 to 102 of the Guide provide further detail in relation to the advocacy rule.

At its meeting on 22 March 2013 the Committee on Standards and Privileges agreed that, as part of its forthcoming review of the Code and Guide, it would review the relevant provisions in order to ensure that the Members and their staff have appropriate standards/guidance for dealing with lobbyists and others whose intent is to sway public policy on behalf of specific interests.

Should you require it, further advice and guidance on these issues is available from the Clerk of Standards (Room 254).

Northern Ireland Assembly

Friday 28 June 2013

Written Answers to Questions

Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister

Training: Young People

Ms Fearon asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what funding is available from their Department for organisations who provide key skills and employment training for young people with a diverse range of needs.

(AQW 22952/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness (The First Minister and deputy First Minister): An important component of the 'Together: Building a United Community' Strategy, published on 23 May 2013, is the development of a 'United Youth Programme' focused on offering structured employment, work experience, volunteer and leisure opportunities to those young people who are not in either employment, education or training. Work is ongoing to progress this proposal across departments and full details of how the programme will operate and be delivered, including any potential funding opportunities, will be detailed in due course.

We are also aware that a number of employability projects, including several aimed at increasing the skills and employment opportunities for young people, are included within the Area Plans submitted to the Department by the Social Investment Fund (SIF) Steering Groups. These projects are now being assessed through an internal economic appraisal and verification process prior to a decision on funding.

In addition, funding is currently being provided to GEMS NI from the Minority Ethnic Development Fund to support its Minority Ethnic Employability Support Project. The project aims to improve the employability of minority ethnic individuals from a range of age groups including young people.

National Insurance: EU Nationals

Mr Kinahan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what support is in place to help newly arrived European Union Nationals to attain National Insurance numbers, schooling and basic health support prior to January 2014.

(AQW 22971/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Regional services tailored to meet the needs of European Union Nationals, have been set up by the Department of Education and the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety. These include the Northern Ireland New Entrant Service (NINES), designed to meet EU migrants' health and social wellbeing needs and a newcomer pupils' service to support curriculum access for school age children whose language is not English.

In addition, the Social Security Agency offers face-to-face National Insurance application support to locals and EU migrants alike.

Maze Regeneration Board: Remuneration Arrangements

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, pursuant to AQW 14065/11-15, to detail the remuneration arrangements for the members of the Maze Regeneration Board.

(AQW 23184/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Chair of the Maze/Long Kesh Development Corporation receives up to £30k per annum plus expenses and Board Members £6k per annum plus expenses.

Equality Legislation: Faith Group Exemptions

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what exemptions from equality legislation exist to protect faith groups.

(AQW 23583/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Article 70 of the Fair Employment and Treatment (NI) Order 1998 provides exceptions in relation to employment or occupation of clergy or Ministers of a religious denomination; and around any employment or occupation where the essential nature of the job requires it to be done by a person holding, or not holding, a particular religious belief.

Dignity at Work: OFMDFM Cases

Mr Spratt asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how many Dignity at Work cases have been lodged in their Department in each of the last five years, broken down by (i) core department; and (ii) non-departmental public body; and how many of these cases have been successfully resolved.

(AQW 23592/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness:

Year	Core Department		Non-departmental Public Body
	Dignity at Work Cases	Successful	Dignity at Work Cases	Successful
2009	0	0	1	1
2010	0	0	5	5
2011	1	1	4	3
2012	0	0	0	0
2013	2	2	0	0

Maze: Expenditure on Buildings

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how much has been spent on the former prison buildings at the Maze since 2007.

(AQW 23694/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: From 2007 to date the amount spent on maintaining the former prison buildings to fulfil our statutory obligations is approximately £260k.

Asset Management/Commercialisation

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, pursuant to AQW 23135/11-15, to explain the terms Asset Management and Commercialisation; and to list the individual projects and the value of consultancy where support is listed as (i) Asset Management; and (ii) Commercialisation.

(AQW 23813/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Asset Management is the process which aligns business and (primarily physical) asset strategies, ensuring the optimisation of an organisation's assets in a way which best supports its key business goals and objectives. Although it is primarily a strategic activity, it is also about ensuring that assets are managed efficiently and effectively on a day to day basis.

In the context of Central Government asset management, the Executive approved the recommendations of the Capital Realisation Taskforce Review report on 27 January 2011, the key recommendations were;

- The creation of a central Asset Management Unit (AMU)
- The development of a region-wide Corporate Asset Management Strategy
- The development of individual departmental Asset Management Plans
- The use of an electronic database (ePIMS) to create a Central Asset Register across the public sector

While the AMU facilitates, promotes and co-ordinates asset management activity across the public sector, it is the responsibility of all public sector organisations to effectively manage their property resources in line with Executive strategy and business needs.

Commercialisation is the use of public assets for non core activities to generate additional revenues. These assets can be tangible (e.g. forest estate) or non tangible (e.g. Intellectual Property (IP) and licensing), where the public purse seeks a return on its investment. The Strategic Investment Board has most recently provided assistance to the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute, the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure and the Forest Service in the commercialisation of their assets.

A table giving the breakdown of Asset Management and Commercialisation projects has been placed in the Assembly Library.

Ebrington Square: Permanent Arena

Mr Durkan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what action their Department has taken to ensure that the Venue in Derry's Ebrington Square is secured as a permanent arena beyond the 2013 City of Culture year.

(AQW 24074/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Venue is a temporary pavilion at Ebrington and was funded, procured and provided by the Department for Social Development to assist in the delivery of events as part of the Derry/Londonderry 2013 City of Culture programme.

The pavilion's purpose, duration of operation and removal are the responsibility of DSD.

Our Department has invested significant capital funding in Ebrington Square as a shared space facility in the city and an arena for appropriate cultural and performance opportunities throughout the 2013 programme and beyond.

Victims and Survivors (Northern Ireland) Order 2006: Grants

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to list the grants approved pursuant to Article 10 of the Victims and Survivors (Northern Ireland) Order 2006.

(AQW 24091/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Information relating to grants paid to Victims and Survivors is provided in the OFMDFM Resource Accounts. These are completed yearly and are available on the OFMDFM website. The Department is currently in the process of having the 2012-13 Resource Accounts audited by the Northern Ireland Audit Office. These will be published on the Departmental website in due course.

Maze: Regeneration Board Members

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether Paul Stewart is still a member of the Maze Regeneration Board; and if not, to detail (i) when and for what reason he ceased being a member; and (ii) by whom has he been replaced.

(AQW 24238/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Mr Paul Stewart resigned from the Maze/Long Kesh Development Corporation Board on 15 June 2013.

The position will be filled in due course.

Programme for Government 2011-15: Strategic Online Report

Mr Eastwood asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister why the Programme for Government 2011-2015 - Strategic Online Report has not been updated since December 2012.

(AQW 24444/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Reports on progress are commissioned on a quarterly basis, the most recent of which related to the period 1 January – 31 March 2013. The commissioning exercise was initiated on 25 March. Progress has subsequently been examined in accordance with the functions and structures of the prescribed delivery framework, including a meeting of the PfG Executive Programme Board on 12 June 2013. The Strategic Online Report (SOR) will be updated immediately following Executive and Committee of OFMDFM notification.

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

INTERREG IVA: Value for Money Assessment

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 23007/11-15, to explain the value for money assessment which is currently under consideration, including for whom it is intended to show value for money.

(AQW 24113/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): The value for money assessment referred to in the answer to AQW 23007/11-15 relates to an appraisal undertaken by the Special EU programmes Body as part of its routine process of assessment of applications to the INTERREG IVA programme.

Carlane Drain, Toomebridge

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, whether the Carlane Drain in Toomebridge is designated by Rivers Agency, and if so, to detail (i) how much of the drain is designated; and (ii) how often the drain has been cleaned in each of the last ten years, specifying the dates.

(AQW 24171/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I can confirm that the Carlane Drain in Toomebridge is designated under the terms of the Drainage (NI) Order 1973, from Carlane Road to Lough Neagh, a total length of 3046m. The watercourse is inspected on a three yearly cycle and maintained where necessary in line with Rivers Agency's maintenance programme. Maintenance can also be conducted more frequently where problems are identified. Over the last 10 years the drain has required maintenance on 4 occasions, in October 2002, October 2007, October 2009 and December 2012.

Deprivation: Rural Areas

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, as she intends to prioritise funding for areas of deprivation for the roll out of high speed broadband, to detail what methods she has adopted, or will adopt, in order to identify deprivation in rural areas.

(AQW 24207/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Following the public consultation of the list of 'not spot' postcodes my officials matched the postcodes to population census output areas and produced a list using the Multiple Deprivation Measure ranked scores from the latest census data available.

Animals: Transport Regulations

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, in relation to the movement of animals regulations, whether it is a breach of regulations to transport animals when their general condition is poor; and who makes the decision that animals are fit for transport.

(AQW 24249/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Under the Transport Regulations anyone transporting animals must ensure:-

- Journey times are kept to a minimum
- The animals are fit to travel
- Those handling animals are trained and competent
- The vehicle and its loading & unloading facilities are designed constructed and maintained to avoid injury and suffering.
- Water feed and rest are given to the animal as needed, and sufficient floor space and height is allowed.

Responsibility for assessment of fitness to travel lies with the owner of the animals and the person who transports the animals. It is a breach of the regulations to transport any animal in a way which causes, or is likely to cause, injury, or unnecessary suffering to that animal.

Legislation: DARD

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to list the current or planned legislation that her Department will bring to the Assembly before the end of the current term.

(AQW 24293/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: During the current term I plan to bring a Reservoirs Bill to the Assembly. This Bill will introduce a framework for the management and regulation of reservoir safety.

Other requirements for primary legislation which may arise during this mandate will be reviewed on a regular basis.

Cock Fighting: Prevention

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, following the recent revelations of incidents of organised cock fighting, what additional steps are being taken to prevent such activities in the future.

(AQW 24381/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Cock fighting has been banned in Ireland since 1837 under the Cruelty to Animals (Ireland) Act 1837.

Currently, the welfare of animals here is protected by the Welfare of Animals Act 2011. Section 8 of the Act created a number of offences in relation to animal fighting, which is defined as an occasion on which a protected animal is placed with an animal or with a human for the purpose of fighting, wrestling or baiting. Cock fighting falls under this definition.

The PSNI has enforcement responsibility for Section 8 of the Act in relation to animal fighting. It is the PSNI's responsibility to investigate complaints in respect of animal fighting, including cock fighting.

I believe that the Welfare of Animals Act 2011 provides the PSNI with robust powers to deal with animal fighting offences. For example, the Act makes it an offence to own, or train, an animal for use in connection with an animal fight, or any attempt to organise an animal fight, so action can be taken before the fight actually happens. In addition, the penalties under the Welfare of Animals Act 2011 are also sufficiently strong to deal effectively with those involved in the cruel and abhorrent practice of animal fighting.

Phytophthora Ramorum

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether any instances of Phytophthora ramorum have been confirmed in larch trees in the North West.

(AQW 24384/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: No instances of Phytophthora ramorum infection have been confirmed in larch trees in the North West to date. A first aerial survey for the disease in 2013 took place in early June. Suspect sites identified from the air will be subject to on ground follow up inspections over the summer period. The up to date outbreak situation can be found on the DARD website.

Circuses: Animal Welfare Inspections

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, for each of the last twelve months, to detail (i) the number of animal welfare inspections which have been carried out on circuses; and (ii) any instances when animal welfare inspectors have discovered violations of the law or regulations concerning the welfare of animals in circuses.

(AQW 24386/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Since April 2012, the Welfare of Animals Act 2011 has been enforced by Councils in respect of non-farmed animals. Council appointed Animal Welfare Officers inspect circuses when responding to specific welfare complaints. On the information that we have received from Councils I can advise you that over the last year there has been one animal welfare complaint regarding circuses reported to Councils. Following the complaint an Animal Welfare Officer inspected the circus and was content with the condition of the animals.

I understand that some individual Councils send veterinarians to inspect circuses when they visit their boroughs. My Department does not hold any statistics or records of these inspections.

Circuses: Wild Animals

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development when she intends to introduce legislation to ban the keeping of wild animals in circuses.

(AQW 24388/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: It is important to note that there are no circuses based here. There are a number of circuses registered in the south of Ireland, some of which travel here. My Department has an agreed protocol with the Department of Agriculture, Food and the Marine in Dublin which provides for an inspection of animals from these registered circuses before they move back to the south. We have no evidence to suggest that the welfare of these animals is compromised.

As you may be aware, Defra has offered to extend a draft Westminster Bill to ban the use of wild animals in travelling circuses to both here and Britain. I understand that Defra's proposed Bill will be introduced on ethical rather than welfare grounds because the available evidence does not support the view that the welfare of wild animals in circuses is compromised.

Before I make a decision on whether a ban is necessary, I want to take time to consider the issue fully and examine all options available to me. I also think that any action in relation to wild animals in travelling circuses should best be considered on an all-island basis. I therefore intend to raise this matter with my Ministerial colleague in the south of Ireland, Minister Coveney TD, when I meet him at the next North South Ministerial Council Agriculture Meeting which is to be held on 10 July 2013.

Herd Keepers

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many herd keepers have been registered in each of the last three years.

(AQW 24422/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Over the last 3 Financial years –

Financial Year	Species	No. Registrations
2010/11	Cattle	369
	Goats	88
	Sheep	730
	Pigs	301
Total		1,488

Financial Year	Species	No. Registrations
2011/12	Cattle	455
	Goats	99
	Sheep	987
	Pigs	254
Total		1,795
2012/13	Cattle	483
	Goats	93
	Sheep	849
	Pigs	149
Total		1,574
	Total Cattle Herds	1,307
	Total Goat Herds	280
	Total Sheep Flocks	2,566
	Total Pig Herds	704
	Overall Total	4,857

This includes herds which may now be non operational or archived.

Bovine TB

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the average length of time that animals remain on the farm once they have tested positive for Bovine TB; and how this compares with (i) 2008; and (ii) 2012.

(AQW 24447/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: DARD routinely uses the median value to monitor reactor removal times.

- For 2013 (to the end of March) the median TB reactor removal time from farm is 9.6 working days.
- The median TB reactor removal time from farm during 2008 was 12.3 working days.
- The median TB reactor removal time from farm during 2012 was 11.6 working days.

Farm Quality Assurance: Assessment

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the various Farm Quality Assured schemes that are in use; and to detail if she has plans to (i) make it easier for producers to qualify for all the schemes; and (ii) amalgamate all schemes into one.

(AQW 24489/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Farm quality assurance (FQA) schemes are industry led and DARD is not directly involved in their development, accreditation, management or implementation.

Membership of FQA schemes is voluntary. Farmers have to meet the standards set in the schemes in order to participate. Amalgamation of FQA schemes is a matter for those bodies operating them.

FQA schemes demonstrate that the industry is taking ownership for setting standards of good practice that are audited. Participation helps to provide assurance within the supply chain and ultimately to the consumer. They can provide a marketing advantage for our local agri-food industry under-pinning the ambition of sustainable growth.

Cock Fighting: Convictions

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many convictions for cock fighting have been secured in each of the last three years.

(AQW 24518/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Cock fighting has been banned in Ireland since 1837 under the Cruelty to Animals (Ireland) Act 1837. Currently, the welfare of animals here is protected by the Welfare of Animals Act 2011. Section 8 of the Act created a number of offences in relation to animal fighting, which is defined as an occasion on which a protected animal is placed with an animal, or with a human, for the purpose of fighting, wrestling or baiting. Cock fighting falls under this definition.

The PSNI has enforcement responsibility for Section 8 of the Act in relation to animal fighting. It is the PSNI's responsibility to investigate complaints in respect of animal fighting, including cock fighting.

I believe that the Welfare of Animals Act 2011 provides the PSNI with robust powers to deal with animal fighting offences. For example, the Act makes it an offence to own, or train, an animal for use in connection with an animal fight, or any attempt to organise an animal fight, so action can be taken before the fight actually happens. In addition, the penalties under the Welfare of Animals Act 2011 are also sufficiently strong to deal effectively with those involved in the cruel and abhorrent practice of animal fighting.

My Department does not keep information regarding prosecutions taken forward by the PSNI.

Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure

Language Body: Equality of Funding

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure when there will be equality of funding between the two sections of the Language Body, as outlined in the Belfast Agreement.

(AQW 22399/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): The Executive remains wholly committed to affording equal respect and recognition to the Irish and Ulster Scots languages and culture.

As the work of the Agencies is at different stages of development the funding currently provided to Foras na Gaeilge and the Ulster-Scots Agency reflects their differing ranges of projects, programmes and supported organisations and is determined on the basis of the approved actions in their respective corporate plans and annual business plans.

Windsor Park: National Anthem

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure whether the creation of a neutral environment and the ending of the practice of playing the National Anthem at Windsor Park is a condition of the release of capital funding for stadium development.

(AQW 22561/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: To date no Funding Agreement has been issued to the IFA for the release of capital funding in relation to the Windsor Park project. Suitable conditions will be considered at the appropriate time.

Salmon: Drift Net/Tidal Drift Net Licences

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 22085/11-15, to detail the location of the drift net and tidal draft net that received a licence.

(AQW 22571/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: For the 2013 commercial salmon fishing season the Department has issued a drift net licence for the North Coast and a tidal draft net licence for the South Down Coast.

Salmon: Drift Net/Tidal Drift Net

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 22085/11-15, whether the drift net and tidal draft net are being actively fished.

(AQW 22572/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The licence holders of the North Coast Drift net and the South Down Tidal Draft net have provided my Department with written undertakings that they will not operate these nets during the 2013 salmon fishing season.

Salmon: Tidal Drift Nets/Drift Nets/Lough Neagh Draft Nets

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 1903/11-15 and AQW 22085/11-15, to outline the reasons for the reduction in the number of (i) tidal drift nets; (ii) drift nets; and (iii) Lough Neagh draft nets.

(AQW 22573/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín:

- (i) and (ii) Departmental officials have been in negotiations with the coastal commercial salmon netmen and the reduction in the number of applications for licenses would reflect the recognition by all of the need to introduce measures to conserve wild Atlantic salmon.
- (iii) As of 8 May 2013 there have been 13 applications for Lough Neagh Draft nets and based on previous years it is likely that this figure will increase over the next month or two. These nets are licensed to take salmon and freshwater fish, but the vast majority of fish taken are trout.

Ulster-Scots Agency: Funding Allocations

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the organisations which have received funding from the Ulster Scots Agency in the last two years; and the total amount of funding each organisation received.

(AQW 22605/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The information regarding funding from the Ulster-Scots Agency in the last two years can be found in the table attached.

Payments: DCAL

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail, for the period 1 April 2012 to 31 March 2013, (i) the total number of invoices paid by her Department and its respective Arm's-Length Bodies; (ii) the number of invoices paid within thirty calendar days; (iii) the number of invoices paid within ten working days of receipt; (iv) how each of her Department's Arm's-Length Bodies has performed against the 30 Day Payment Performance Targets; and (v) the number of invoices that remain unpaid.

(AQW 22626/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The information for the year ended 31 March 2013 is provided below.

The Department

- (i) the Department paid 4,013 invoices
- (ii) 3,951 were paid within 30 calendar days
- (iii) 3,759 were paid within 10 working days

Arm's Length Bodies

- (i) The Department's Arm's-Length Bodies paid 33,934 invoices;
- (ii) 33,448 invoices were paid within 30 calendar days
- (iii) 30,080 invoices were paid within 10 working days

Individual arm's length bodies

- (iv) The table below details each ALB's performance against the 30 day target.

Arms-Length Body	No. of Invoices	Paid within 30 days
Arts Council	1222	100%
NI Screen	1001	99%
Armagh Observatory	611	100%
Armagh Planetarium	519	100%
NMNI	4733	98%
NIMC	255	99%
Libraries	22961	98%
Sport NI	2152	99%
World Police & Fire Games	480	100%

- (v) Unpaid invoices

At the year end, the number of invoices as yet unpaid were:

- The Department: 62 invoices
- The ALBs: 487 invoices

Fish: Licensed Coastal Fishing Engines

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how many fish have been harvested by each of her Department's licensed coastal fishing engines, in each year since 2010.

(AQW 22628/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The table below details the number of salmon reported caught by DCAL licensed coastal fishing engines in each year since 2010.

Net Name	2010	2011	2012
North Coast	437	192	nil
North Coast	26	35	nil
Ballyterrim	636 (36)	345	nil
Torr Head	783	494 (1)	nil
South East Coast	23	44	nil

The catch figures in brackets are sea trout.

UK City of Culture 2013: Funding

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for her assessment of (i) the business case in respect of the funding awarded to the Culture Company running the UK City of Culture 2013 events, in consequence of the income shortfalls now emerging; and (ii) the rigour applied to the scrutiny of the business case.

(AQW 22673/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Department's business case provided a robust justification to support the City of Culture Cultural programme through Derry City Council.

The business case followed standard process in terms of DCAL and DFP scrutiny and approval. The allocation to City of Culture was also approved by the Executive.

Film Production: Funding

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail how many applicants received funding from the Short Film Funding in (i) 2012; and (ii) 2013 to date.

(AQW 22704/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: In 2011/12 financial year fourteen applicants received Lottery funding for Short Film Production.

In 2013/14 to date 5 applicants have received Short Film Production Funding.

Football Clubs: Funding

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure which football clubs were allocated funding from the £500,000, as stated in the Assembly on 7 May 2013, broken down by the total paid to each club.

(AQW 22743/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Executive endorsed my bid for £4.5m over a three year period, £1.5m to the IFA, GAA and Ulster Rugby.

The IFA received £0.5m in the financial year 2012/13 and will receive a further £0.5m in the financial years 2013/14 and 2014/15 to roll out projects and programmes that will:

- Promote equality;
- Tackle poverty;
- Tackle social exclusion;
- Provide opportunities to realise socio-economic returns and community benefits;
- Provide opportunities to train and employ the long-term unemployed as coaches and administrators; and
- Provide suicide prevention initiatives.

These projects and programmes will be delivered throughout the North of Ireland with the aim of delivering positive outcomes for those sectors of society assessed as suffering the greatest socio-economic inequalities and within those areas assessed as suffering greatest objective need and deprivation.

Individual football clubs will not benefit directly in the form of financial support, as the programmes will be delivered centrally by the IFA. However, clubs will receive benefits from the programme through increased numbers of coaches at grassroots level within the game and through other interventions that will grow participation in the sport.

Fish: Stock Funding for Lough Neagh

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the future funding for studies on fish stocks in Lough Neagh; and for any other actions she is taking to help manage the future of fishing on Lough Neagh.

(AQW 22805/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department has commissioned the Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute (AFBI) to undertake research throughout the Lough Neagh catchment. This includes assessments of eel and salmon stocks and research on the stock status of brown trout across DCAL's jurisdiction, including Lough Neagh. These activities are funded as part of a service level agreement between DCAL and AFBI.

DCAL is also developing a Fisheries Management Plan for Lough Neagh in consultation with stakeholder interests to ensure that the fishery is managed in a sustainable manner based on independent scientific advice.

DCAL has recently established an operational base at Magherafelt to support its work in relation to the conservation and protection of fish stocks in the Lough.

Fish: Stands in South Armagh

Ms Fearon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the (i) number; and (ii) location of fishing stands in South Armagh.

(AQW 22843/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Department has two Public Angling Estate waters located in South Armagh, Clay Lake and Gentle Owens.

Clay Lake has low slopping banks, no weed cover and fluctuating water levels which makes this water unsuitable for angling stands.

The Department has recently entered into a management agreement with a local angling club to develop the angling facilities at Gentle Owens which will include the provision of angling stands.

The Department would have no record of fishing stands constructed on private fisheries located in South Armagh

Pitches: Funding

Ms Fearon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what funding is available for local sporting organisations to avail of all weather pitches.

(AQW 22844/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Sport NI, is the primary distributor of funding to sport in the north of Ireland. At present, Sport NI has no funding programmes open for local sporting organisations to avail of all weather pitches.

Sport NI offers a facility on their website whereby local sporting organisations can register to receive updates on future funding opportunities as they arise: - www.sportni.net/Online-funding+Registration+Page/Online+Funding+Registration+Page. Also available is 'Grant Tracker' – a website dedicated to helping the voluntary and community sector in the north to access sources of funding: - www.grant-tracker.org/.

Fish: Stands and Facilities for Anglers

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what assistance her Department can offer to (i) establish new; and (ii) improve existing, fishing stands and facilities for anglers.

(AQW 22890/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: DCAL Inland Fisheries Group provides advice and guidance to anglers and angling clubs on the position and construction standards for fishing stands.

DCAL provides advice to stakeholders on how to obtain the necessary consents and approvals as appropriate. DCAL staff are available to meet with fishery owners in providing a range of advice on fishery improvements.

Fish: Impact of Hydroelectric Turbine

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for her assessment of the impact on fish (i) passage; (ii) mortality; and (iii) populations following the installation of a hydroelectric turbine and whether an Environmental Impact Assessment should be required prior to permission to install such turbines being granted.

(AQW 22913/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Department undertakes the following procedures when assessing the impact of hydroelectric turbine installations on fish stocks

- (i) Research into impacts of hydro electric developments on fish populations are inconclusive. However, a number of studies are currently underway to assess the impact on fish populations on such schemes. DCAL will consider any new scientific evidence as part of its assessment process.

- (ii) Inspections at hydroelectric sites in the DCAL area are carried out to ensure compliance with fisheries legislation. Any fishery issues at the site will be highlighted as part of the reporting process and breaches of fishery legislation will result in enforcement action being taken by DCAL.
- (iii) DCAL provides funding to AFBI to monitor salmon stocks. This will include juvenile salmon and trout stock densities assessments at a number of sites on some rivers with hydroelectric schemes.
- (iv) All hydro electric turbines require a license from the NIEA to operate. All license applications are assessed by a DCAL Technical Assessment Group to ensure compliance with Fisheries Act and advice is provided to NIEA accordingly. DCAL does not consider an Environmental Impact Assessment, in respect of fish stocks, is necessary prior to the installation of a hydroelectric turbine as it undertakes a full assessment of all applications.

Boxing: Capital Funding

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail what funding is available for boxing clubs to purchase capital equipment.

(AQW 22964/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Sport NI has primary responsibility for the provision of funding, both Exchequer and Lottery, to sports clubs including boxing clubs. Currently, SportNI has no funding programmes available that would enable boxing clubs to directly purchase capital equipment. However, as part of my Boxing Strategy initiative, SportNI has allocated up to £240,000 from its Lottery budget to enable the governing body of boxing, the Irish Amateur Boxing Association (IABA), to purchase capital equipment on behalf of individual boxing clubs in the north of Ireland in line with the participation objectives of the strategy. A total of 94 boxing clubs across the north of Ireland have been identified by SportNI and the IABA as meeting the agreed eligibility criteria to receive this equipment under this initiative.

Commonwealth Games 2014: Northern Ireland Team

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline the departmental support, including financial assistance, that she has arranged to assist the Northern Ireland team competing in the Glasgow 2014 Commonwealth Games.

(AQW 23076/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure (DCAL) provides support to the north of Ireland team competing in Commonwealth Games competitions, including the Glasgow 2014 Commonwealth Games, through SportNI which is an arms-length body of the Department. SportNI has, and continues, to support the NI Commonwealth Games Council (NICGC), which is responsible for the north of Ireland team competing at the Games, to establish and run a Glasgow 2014 Operational Group. This Group, which is chaired by the NICGC, is responsible for co-ordinating the north of Ireland team's preparation for the Games.

Moreover, through its Investing in Performance Sport Programme, SportNI awarded £55,536 and £51,199 of exchequer funding to the NICGC in 2011/12 and 2012/13 respectively to assist both in improving the governance of the organisation and with youth development activity. SportNI has offered further investment, under the Programme, totalling £136,000 over the period 2013-15. This investment is intended to assist the NICGC meet costs associated with the north of Ireland team preparation and travel to the Glasgow Games and with the employment of an Executive Officer and related administration.

In addition, SportNI has offered the following investment to athletes, squads and sports governing bodies likely to nominate for the 2014 Games:-

Year	Programme	Offer	Purpose
2011/12	Athlete Investment Programme	£480,180	Support training, competition and living costs of 56 athletes and 3 squads from 17 sports included in 2014 Commonwealth Games
2012/13	Athlete Investment Programme	£349,600	Support training and competition -costs of 40 athletes and 3 squads from 17 sports included in 2014 Commonwealth Games
2012/13	Athlete Investment Programme	£102,664	Support living costs of 14 athletes from 9 sports governing bodies likely to nominate for 2014 Commonwealth Games
2012/13	Investing in Performance Sport	£982,069	Support employment of staff and resources for programmes in 13 sports governing bodies likely to nominate for 2014 Commonwealth Games
2013/15	Performance Focus	£2,182,892	Support employment of staff and resources for programmes in 14 sports governing bodies likely to nominate for 2014 Commonwealth Games

Commonwealth Games 2014: Rugby Sevens Event

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure which sporting body will nominate players to participate in the Rugby Sevens event at the Glasgow 2014 Commonwealth Games.

(AQW 23078/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Responsibility for nominating players from the north of Ireland to participate in international, multi sport competitions, including the Glasgow 2014 Commonwealth Games, rests with the governing body of the sport concerned. A governing body may choose to nominate players for such competitions in accordance with arrangements mutually agreed between the body and the relevant Council responsible for sending a local team to the competition. In the case of Rugby Sevens the governing body is the Irish Rugby Football Union (IRFU) and the relevant Council is the NI Commonwealth Games Council.

Commonwealth Games 2014: Ministerial Attendance

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure on which days does she intend attending the Glasgow 2014 Commonwealth Games and at which events.

(AQW 23079/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: the Glasgow 2014 Commonwealth Games take place from 23rd July 2014 to 3rd August 2014. My diary commitments are not agreed that far in advance.

Loans/ Grants: South Antrim

Mr Girvan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail any loans or grants that have been awarded to organisations in South Antrim by (i) her Department; (ii) departmental agencies; and (iii) Arm's-Length Bodies, in the last five years.

(AQW 23129/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: It should be noted that the Department, its Agencies and its Arm's Length Bodies do not provide loans to other organisations.

The total amount of grants awarded to organisations in the South Antrim constituency in the last five years is summarised in the tables below, divided between resource and capital:

	2008/09 £000	2009/10 £000	2010/11 £000	2011/12 £000	2012/13 £000
Resource	70	120	90	180	136
Capital	620	679	124	491	10
Total	690	799	214	671	146

Detailed breakdowns by project are provided in Annex A

I should point out that if there was any doubt as to whether the South Antrim constituency benefited from the grant, then that grant was excluded from the answer. For example, if an organisation situated in the South Antrim constituency spent the funding further afield, it was excluded from the answer.

Pitches: Capital Funding

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, in relation to sports clubs, to outline the procurement thresholds for capital funding for pitches.

(AQW 23292/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: All public procurement in the north of Ireland must adhere to the Public Procurement Policy adopted by the Executive. The thresholds under that Policy for construction works and services are as follows:

Value	Procedure
Up to £5,000	Departments must demonstrate that value for money has been secured.
£5,000 to £30,000	Contractors must be registered on Constructionline. First six contractors from a randomly selected list generated by Constructionline are invited to tender. Advertise on eSourcingNI.
£30,000 to EU Thresholds	Tender process must be conducted in line with Procurement Guidance Note PGN 05/12: 'Procurement of Goods, Works and Services Over £30,000 and Below EU Thresholds'. Available on DFP website at http://www.dfpni.gov.uk/index/procurement-2/cpd/cpd-policy-and-legislation/simplified-procurement-process/pgn-05-12.htm

Trout: Stock Status

Mr Girvan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 16550/11-15 and in relation to (i) pollan trout; (ii) boddagh; and (iii) black boddagh, how this information was ascertained and where this data can be accessed.

(AQW 23326/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The trout stock status report being produced the Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute (AFBI) for DCAL is currently being finalised and will be published in the near future.

Arts: Opportunities in South Down

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what opportunities exist in the South Down constituency for older people to get involved in the arts.

(AQW 23335/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Arts Council of NI manage the Arts and Older People Programme which aims to increase opportunities for older people to engage with the arts. The programme is currently closed but is expected to open again later in the summer.

NI Screen's Digital Film Archive (DFA) can be accessed at 18 sites across the North of Ireland with Down County Museum being one of these locations. The DFA Education Officer also, upon request, makes regular customised presentations from the archive to any interested groups including special interest groups, community groups, historical societies, retired groups, care homes and day centres.

Arts Council: Funding in South Down

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the groups in the South Down constituency that have been awarded funding by the Arts Council since 2011.

(AQW 23336/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Groups awarded exchequer and lottery funding by the Arts Council since 2011 are listed below:

Boxing: South Down

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure which boxing clubs in the South Down constituency will benefit from the Amateur Boxing Strategy.

(AQW 23337/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: As a result of an expression of interest exercise for the Boxing Investment Programme, nine amateur boxing clubs (ABC) from South Down have been identified as meeting the agreed eligibility criteria to receive equipment. These clubs are: -

- | | |
|-------------------------------|-------------------------------|
| ■ East Down ABC, Crossgar | ■ Mourne All Blacks, Annalong |
| ■ John McCoy ABC, Warrenpoint | ■ Sacred Heart ABC, Newry |
| ■ Kilmegan ABC, Castlewellan | ■ St Brigids Cross ABC, Newry |

- St Bronagh's ABC, Newry
- St John Bosco ABC, Newry
- St Patrick's ABC, Newry

Furthermore, an independent technical team is due to be appointed in July which will visit individual boxing clubs to assess the need for capital works and facility repairs. This may include clubs from South Down.

Horse Riding Schools: Funding

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what funding is available for horse riding schools that cater for people with disabilities and which need to purchase specialised equipment.

(AQW 23338/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Sport NI has primary responsibility for the distribution of funding to sport. At present, Sport NI does not have any funding programmes available to which horse riding schools, including those that cater for people with disabilities, can apply to purchase specialised equipment.

Horse riding schools may register with Sport NI to receive information on future funding programmes as they arise. In addition, the Sport NI website at <http://www.sportni.net/funding> holds details of alternative funding avenues that horse riding schools may wish to consider. Further information on possible assistance may also be available from Disability Sports NI and Riding for the Disabled Association.

North West 200: Financial Assistance

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the financial assistance her Department has provided to the North West 200, in each of the last four years.

(AQW 23350/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: During the last four years, my Department through Sport NI has provided a total of £162,816 exchequer funding to the North West 200 in respect of health and safety improvements at the NW 200 circuit. The funding details are:-

- 2009/10 £100,000
- 2010/11 £ 62,816

North West 200: Additional Assistance

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what additional assistance her Department is able to provide to the North West 200.

(AQW 23361/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: You will be aware that in 2010 policy responsibility and the funding for events passed from DCAL to Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment /NI Tourist Board (NITB). All funding for major events rests with the NITB.

The immediate priority of my Department, in terms of assisting motorcycle road race events such as the North West 200, is to encourage the promoters of such events to improve health and safety within the sport. With this in mind my Department, through Sport NI, is assisting the governing body for motorcycle road racing, the Motor Cycle Union of Ireland – Ulster Centre (MCUI-UC), to carry out a major safety review of road racing.

As part of that process, Sport NI continues to work with the MCUI in the development of a much needed Safety Code of Practice for the sport. The Code has been published and all motorcycle road races in the 2013 season, including the North West 200, are organised in accordance with the safety standards contained therein.

World Police and Fire Games 2013: Low Participation Rates

Mr McGimpsey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, in relation to the below target bookings to date, what steps she will take to address low participation rates in the World Police and Fire Games 2013.

(AQW 23433/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The World Police and Fire Games Company continues to implement a targeted marketing and communications strategy with robust actions to maximise registrations and visitor numbers and has recruited additional marketing staff to support this focused approach.

This strategy contains a wide range of actions specifically designed to encourage registrations; both from local competitors and from across the world.

Athletes can continue to register until the start of the Games on 1 August and the Company will be making every effort to secure as many competitors as possible for what will be the friendliest Games ever.

World Police and Fire Games 2013: Competitive Places

Mr McGimpsey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline how she intends to boost demand for competitive places at the World Police and Fire Games 2013.

(AQW 23434/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The World Police and Fire Games Company continues to implement a targeted marketing and communications strategy with robust actions to maximise registrations and visitor numbers and has recruited additional marketing staff to support this focused approach.

Department of Education

Roddensvale Special School: Hydrotherapy Pool

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Education at what stage is the proposal for a hydro-therapy pool at Roddensvale Special School, Larne.

(AQW 23765/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): As Roddensvale is a controlled school it is for the North Eastern Education and Library Board to consider all requests for capital works within agreed priorities and its available budget.

However, in addition to Roddensvale School, the Department is also planning work on new builds for five special schools and in light of requests for provision of new hydrotherapy pools at special schools; it has been in liaison with the Public Health Agency (PHA) who undertook a Strategic Review of provision.

The review raised a number of questions and concerns for both the PHA and the Department regarding the pattern of provision, the potential duplication in some areas, the usage of the pools in special schools and the training required for such usage, as well as value for money of hydrotherapy pool provision within special schools.

The Department has recently requested details of existing hydrotherapy pool provision at special schools from the five Education and Library Boards (ELBs). The data provided will be analysed to determine if the policy requires amendment. This will be in conjunction with the Department of Health and Social Services and Public Safety, ELBs, Education and Skills Authority, Education and Training Inspectorate and PHA to ensure a consistent approach to hydrotherapy provision in the north of Ireland.

Literacy and Numeracy: Assessments

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Education to detail any contractual arrangements his Department has entered into on Northern Ireland Literacy Assessments and Northern Ireland Numeracy Assessments, including the terms and the associated costs.

(AQW 23987/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department of Education has not entered into contractual arrangements for Northern Ireland Literacy Assessments (NILA) and Northern Ireland Numeracy Assessments (NINA). The Council for the Curriculum Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) are contract holders with two suppliers for Computer-Based Assessment. NILA is provided by Tribal and NINA is supplied by Ardluce/Rising Stars. CCEA have a contract for a three year period (with the option to extend for up to two further years).

The contract costs for the two CBA assessment suppliers are as follows:

	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14	2014/15	Totals
NILA	£446,754	£195,287	£187,741	£188,045	£1,017,827
NINA	£404,000	£162,700	£141,500	£141,500	£849,700

Both contracts contain claw-back clauses and CCEA can end the contract by giving six months written notice although there are associated termination costs.

Primary Schools: Nurture Projects

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to list the primary schools which will be funded for nurture projects.

(AQW 24048/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The 20 schools to receive funding for nurture group provision through the Delivering Social Change Signature Project are listed in the table below.

DE has arranged to provide funding to an additional 10 schools with existing nurture provision, whose funding has ceased or is due to cease during the life of the Signature Project. These schools are also listed in the table below.

Lismore Comprehensive School: Newbuild

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Education for an update, including timescales, on the proposed new build of Lismore Comprehensive School, Craigavon.

(AQW 24248/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: While Lismore Comprehensive will be disappointed that they were not included in my capital investment announcement of January 13, this in no way implies that they will not be considered for funding at a later stage within the on-going area planning process. The reality is that the budget settlement for Education means the need for investment far exceeds the funds available. I am not able at this time to give a date as to when I will be in a position to announce further capital investment in major school builds.

Legislation: DE

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to list the current or planned legislation that his Department will bring to the Assembly before the end of the current term.

(AQW 24292/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The list of the current and planned legislation the Department will bring to the Assembly before the end of the current term is:-

- Special Educational Needs Bill
- General Teaching Council Northern Ireland Bill
- Education Bill
- General & Vocational Qualifications Bill

Tree and Hedge-cutting Contracts

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education how many tree and hedge cutting contracts his Department, and its arm's-length bodies, awarded between 1 March and 31 August, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 24348/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department of Education and a number of its smaller Arm's-Length Bodies (ALBs) did not award any tree and hedge cutting contracts between 1 March and 31 August in any of the last three years. Those ALBs are: the Staff Commission for the Education and Library Boards; the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment; Youth Council; Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta; Council for Integrated Education; General Teaching Council.

The table below provides the number of tree and hedge cutting contracts awarded by DE ALBs from 1 March to 31 August, in each of the last 3 years:

Organisation	No. of contracts awarded from 1 Mar to 31 Aug for 2010-11; 2011-12; and 2012-13	Notes
BELB	2
NEELB	1
SEELB	1
WELB	68	a)
SELB	2	b)
Council for Catholic Maintained Schools	1	c)
Middletown Centre for Autism	1

Notes:

- a) WELB is the only ELB which does not currently have a Term Service Contract which includes tree surgery / hedge cutting. It is for this reason, that WELB reports a large number of small value orders placed during the periods in question.
- b) SELB has no contracts specifically for tree and hedge cutting, but rather its contracts with lead building contractors include tree maintenance as a supplementary skill.
- c) CCMS engaged tree maintenance services on a single occasion following storm damage.

Drumcree College: Ministerial Visit

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Education whether he has any plans to visit Drumcree College in the next four months.
(AQW 24391/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: As is the case with any school if Drumcree College issues a formal invitation to me I will be happy to consider it.

Literacy and Numeracy: Standards

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Education how he will measure the effectiveness of employing 230 additional teachers in raising numeracy and literacy standards as part of the Delivering Social Change agenda .
(AQW 24457/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Delivering Social Change Project will be monitored and evaluated to ensure that the project is being delivered in accordance with its stated aims and to measure the effectiveness of this approach to improving literacy and numeracy for pupils at risk of underachievement.

ELB officers have been appointed to provide support to schools to manage their delivery of this project. They will also ensure that schools are adhering to the objectives of the project and are on target to achieve the outcomes agreed in their school development plans.

The monitoring of the outcomes of pupils will be collected and analysed at 3 levels, system level; school level and pupil level. There will be a statistical analysis of the Key Stage 2 data and GCSE results for English and maths for the two academic years covered by the project. At school level, participating schools have to include an action plan in their school development plan to set out the expected outcomes for the recent graduate teacher and for the pupils who will receive extra support and interventions as a result of this project. At pupil level, pupils will be assessed prior to receiving support and following the interventions agreed for them. Finally, details of pupils' actual grade/level of achievement in the GCSE exams or key stage 2 assessment will be collected.

It is planned that the Education and Training Inspectorate (ETI) will conduct an independent Post Project Evaluation of the project including assessment of the outcomes for the pupils targeted and the teachers provided with employment experience during the project.

Teachers: Recognition to Teach

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education how many teachers have had their recognition to teach withdrawn in each of the last ten years.
(AQW 24494/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Under regulation 9 of the Teachers' (Eligibility) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1997, the Department may prohibit or restrict the employment or further employment of a person eligible to teach. In the last ten years, the eligibility to teach of twenty five individuals has been withdrawn under that provision. It is not possible to provide the information requested broken down by year as the small numbers involved would require a high level of suppression to prevent identification of an individual, in line with the confidentiality principle of the Statistics Authority's Code of Practice on Official Statistics.

Post-primary Pupils: Transport in North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education what was the cost to his Department of transporting post-primary school pupils from the North Down Borough Council area to schools outside North Down in 2012/13; and what was the cost for pupils from other council areas travelling to post-primary schools in North Down.

(AQW 24516/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The South Eastern Education and Library Board has informed me that the cost of transporting post-primary pupils from the North Down Borough Council Area to schools outside North Down is £1,414,350. The cost of transporting post-primary pupils from other council areas to post-primary schools in North Down is £124,212.

Area-planning: SELB

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Education when he will respond to my letters of 9 May 2013 and 24 May 2013 relating to the Area Planning Process being conducted by the Southern Education and Library Board and its impact on the Controlled Schools in the Dickson Plan catchment area.

(AQW 24521/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My reply to your letters of 9 and 24 May regarding the Area Planning Process conducted by the Southern Education and Library Board in relation to controlled schools in the Dickson Plan issued from my office on 18 June.

Grammar School: Admissions on Appeal

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Education how many pupils appealed to gain a grammar school place in each of the last three years, broken down by school.

(AQW 24524/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education and Library Boards have advised me that the number of pupils who appealed to gain a grammar school place in each of the last three years, broken down by school, are as provided in the table below.

Children and Families Bill: Sex and Relationship Education

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the recent amendment tabled to the Children and Families Bill in Westminster which sought to include Sex and Relationship Education in the curriculum; and whether he is considering introducing anything similar to the Northern Ireland Curriculum.

(AQW 24572/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I recognise the importance of Relationships and Sexuality Education (RSE) and the revised curriculum, which has been taught to all pupils of compulsory school age in the north of Ireland since 2009/10, places greater emphasis on preparing children for all aspects of life and work.

Through the Personal Development and Mutual Understanding (primary) and Learning for Life and Work (post-primary) Areas of Learning within the revised curriculum, pupils have opportunities to learn how to sustain their personal health, explore the implications of sexual maturation and the qualities of respectful relationships; as well as opportunities to identify and exercise their rights and social responsibilities. RSE is an integral part of these Areas of Learning.

Schools in the North are required to have in place a written policy setting out how they will address RSE, which has been subject to consultation with parents and endorsed by the Board of Governors. Guidance provided by the Department of Education states that RSE must be delivered in schools within a moral framework and taught in a sensitive manner that is in keeping with the ethos of the school and which is appropriate to the needs and maturity of their pupils.

A key strength of the Revised Curriculum is the flexibility it provides to teachers to introduce topics in ways that best meet the needs and interests of their pupils. In line with this flexibility, the specifics of what is taught and how, under each Area of Learning, is a matter for each teacher/school.

I have no plans to make any legislative changes to introduce any further compulsory elements to the curriculum.

Victoria Park Primary School: Newbuild

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education how many classrooms will be provided in the new build for Victoria Park Primary School; and how this number was decided upon.

(AQW 24632/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The new school building for Victoria Park PS will provide 12 class bases. This is the number deemed adequate to meet the projected area based needs and will provide educational facilities for an enrolment band of children 321-350 from the area currently served by Victoria Park Primary School.

Education and Library Boards: Recurrent/Capital Expenditure

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education what was the (i) recurrent and (ii) capital expenditure outturn in 2012/13 for each Education and Library Board.

(AQW 24635/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Details of the (i) recurrent and (ii) capital expenditure outturn in 2012-13 for each Education and Library Board are provided in the tables below:

Education and Skills Authority: Implementation Team/Staff

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education how many staff are currently working in the Education and Skills Authority Implementation Team.
(AQW 24636/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: As of 25 June 2013 there are 23 full time and 4 part-time staff working in the Education and Skills Authority Implementation Team

Youth Provision: Rathcoole

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the current North Eastern Education and Library Board youth provision in Rathcoole.
(AQO 4359/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: It is the responsibility of each Education and Library Board to decide the level of local youth provision in line with the Department's priorities, the funding available and based on their assessment of need within the area.

In Rathcoole, the NEELB supports a wide range of general youth provision and more targeted youth projects delivered by both the statutory and voluntary youth sectors.

Funding ranges from small block grants for uniformed groups, to the funding of a large Controlled Unit, which is open six nights per week. Provision also includes a full-time Detached/Outreach Area Youth Worker, a summer scheme and other targeted youth schemes to address specific needs which have been identified in the area.

School Leavers: Qualifications

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Education what measures he is putting in place to reduce the number of pupils leaving school with no qualifications from 339 in 2012.
(AQO 4360/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: High quality teaching and learning are at the core of tackling underachievement. My policies to raise education standards are delivering improvements for our young people.

The percentage of school leavers with no qualifications has significantly reduced in the last five years from 2.8% to 1.5%. This represents a reduction from 671 to 339 pupils.

Over the same period, the percentage of school leavers achieving 5+ GCSEs grades A*-C, including English and GCSE maths has increased from 56% to 62%.

It is unacceptable for any pupil to leave school with no qualifications. More needs to be done and I have brought forward a range of innovative programmes to further address underachievement and to raise standards.

The Delivering Social Change Project will provide literacy and numeracy tuition in schools and £1 million will be spent on a literacy and numeracy capacity building project for teachers of English and maths.

Equally, we need to raise parental aspirations and the value of education within our communities. That is why I launched the 'Education Works' advertising campaign last year.

We will also need to develop a range of interventions to integrate different services and to help schools reach into their communities. I have earmarked £2 million to be spent in each of the next two years on community education initiatives to provide educationally focused programmes in communities, with particular concentrations of educational disadvantage.

However, the continued use of academic admissions criteria by grammar schools is a barrier to addressing underachievement in disadvantaged communities.

It disadvantages children from those communities even further as evidenced by the disproportionately low number of pupils entitled to free school meals who attend grammar schools. It damages children's confidence, their motivation to learn, and lowers their expectations of themselves, contributing to the high levels of underachievement we are seeking to tackle. That is why academic selection for admissions purposes needs to end now and I am working to bring that about.

The appropriate time to assess the academic ability of a child is after they have been admitted to a school. This will enable the school to determine how they can best meet the educational needs of each child and ensure that they achieve their full potential. Academic assessment for streaming or banding purposes after a child has been admitted to a school correctly puts the focus on meeting the needs of the child, not the institution.

Free School Meals: Post-primary Pupils

Mr F McCann asked the Minister of Education to outline the expected benefits that will result from his decision to extend the Free School Meals criteria to post-primary children.

(AQO 4361/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: On 11 June 2013 I announced how I intend to take forward the recommendations from the "Independent Review of the Common Funding Scheme". The Review includes a specific recommendation to adjust the eligibility criteria for free school meals which I have accepted.

This will mean that, from September 2014, the same eligibility criteria for free school meals for both primary and post primary pupils will apply. I am pleased to advise that this will benefit an estimated additional 15,000 children from lower income households.

Research demonstrates that there is a clear link between a healthy diet and children's concentration, behaviour and performance at school. Healthy free school meals, therefore, play an important role in addressing the particular barriers that children from lower income backgrounds face in accessing and participating fully in school life and achieving their potential.

As young people from deprived backgrounds are at particular risk of educational underachievement, additional funding is provided to schools for each pupil entitled to free school meals with further funding made available to support those schools serving our most disadvantaged communities.

My announcement on 11 June signalled my intention to increase that funding by an additional £10 million in 2014-15 and a further £10 million in 2015-16.

This will mean that, in addition to the direct benefits to children and young people from free school meals, they will also benefit from more targeted support at school.

I consider that this will directly contribute to my Department's aim to address educational underachievement and help break the link between social disadvantage and low educational attainment.

Education and Skills Authority: Dickson Plan

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Education how the Dickson model of education would be supported by the Education and Skills Authority.

(AQO 4362/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: It is the responsibility of the relevant managing authorities in the first instance to determine the most appropriate structure of education provision for children living in the Dickson plan area.

With regard to the controlled sector, the Southern Education and Library Board (SELB) recently issued an options paper to the Boards of Governors of all of the controlled post-primary schools in the Dickson Plan. This paper summarised the two main options for future provision arising from the area plan consultation.

The returns from the consultation with the Boards of Governors will be taken into account, by the SELB, alongside all other evidence and data, including departmental policy, when deciding the way forward.

Should agreement on the way forward for all Dickson Plan schools be reached before the establishment of the Education and Skills Authority (ESA), the Authority will of course support whatever models are ultimately adopted for future provision in the area.

However, should the way forward not be determined prior to the establishment of ESA, then it will be a matter for ESA as the new managing authority to determine the model for future provision, taking into account the area planning work undertaken by the SELB and the CCMS.

Sustainable Schools Policy: Small Schools

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Education whether, in order to protect strategically important small schools, he plans to introduce a Small Schools Policy as part of the Sustainable Schools Policy.

(AQO 4364/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Independent Review of the Common Funding Scheme recommended the development of a Small Schools Policy which would identify and safeguard strategically important small schools.

As I noted in my statement to the Assembly on 11 June 2013, I have no difficulty with the thinking behind this recommendation, however I do not believe that another policy is necessary.

The Sustainable Schools policy already provides a framework, including criteria and quality indicators, to help managing authorities assess schools' sustainability. This is complemented by the area planning process which is designed to ensure that schools are planned strategically to deliver sustainable, high quality education.

Within this context therefore, I will be providing further clarification on the circumstances as to when a small school will be retained and how it will be supported.

Social Media/Internet: Post-primary Schools

Mr Irwin asked the Minister of Education to outline the resources available to teaching staff in the post-primary sector to educate, instruct and protect pupils in the use of the internet and social media.

(AQO 4365/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The revised curriculum which has been taught to all pupils of compulsory school age since 2009/10 is less prescriptive and the Department does not prescribe specific resources or programmes that teachers/schools should use in their delivery of the curriculum.

Safe use of the internet and social media is an integral aspect of ICT and as such is explicitly incorporated within the Council for Curriculum, Examination and Assessment's (CCEA) ICT assessment frameworks and qualifications. CCEA has produced a number of resources to assist teachers, including guidelines on sourcing images, copyright and plagiarism and reference is made to 'safe use' in the Levels of Progression document for Using ICT at Key Stages 1,2 and 3.

All CCEA produced resources are available to all teachers via the 'Using ICT' section of the curriculum website.

In addition, a number of resources are available via C2k, which provides the managed ICT services for all schools. These resources are designed to act as a starting point for schools to create appropriate policies and access teaching and learning resources for their staff, students and parents. The resources include videos, lesson support materials, current research, access to support services and parent resources such as - 360 Degrees Safe, UK Safer Internet Online Safety Briefings, Vodafone Digital Parenting Magazine and Professionals Online Safety Helpline. Access to C2k's resources has been widely communicated to schools via conferences, email, school training and intranet.

While these resources are available, the selection of resources to be used in curricular delivery is a matter for each teacher/school.

Glenwood Primary School and Edenderry Nursery School, Belfast

Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of Education to outline the timescale for the construction of the new Glenwood Primary School and Edenderry Nursery School, Belfast.

(AQO 4366/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Glenwood Primary School and Edenderry Nursery School, Belfast was one of the 22 projects included in my announcement in January 2013 to be advanced in planning. It is a joint project and as they are controlled schools it will be managed by the Belfast Education and Library Board. The BELB have advised that they are currently in the process of finalising a target programme for Glenwood Primary which will be submitted to DE end of June 2013. The BELB have confirmed that they are currently in the process of finalising the Economic Appraisal for Edenderry Nursery School with a view to submitting this for consideration by DE at end of August 2013.

Lisanelly Shared Education Campus

Ms Boyle asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the significance of the decision by Loreto College to join the Lisanelly Project in terms of the build proceeding.

(AQO 4367/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I welcome the news that Loreto College has signed a Memorandum of Understanding with the Department, recording its commitment to the development of post-primary education provision in Omagh through the Lisanelly Shared Education Campus.

This is a significant step forward for an important, flagship Programme for Government project that has wide support within the Executive and among the local community. I am delighted that the project now also has the support of all six schools identified for relocation to the Campus.

This news, taken alongside the recent announcement from Minister Atwood that the project has been recommended for outline planning approval, means that we can now proceed with detailed planning of the build programme, in conjunction with educational stakeholders.

I look forward to engaging fully with Loreto, and the other schools in the area, on making the Lisanelly project a reality and in securing a shared educational future for our young people.

Delivering Social Change: Junior High Schools, Craigavon

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education whether the Delivering Social Change initiative will be available to Junior High Schools in the Craigavon area.

(AQW 24642/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I would refer the Member to my answer to AQW 23873/11-15, tabled by Jo-Anne Dobson MLA and published in the Official Report on 21 June 2013.

Primary-school Applications: False Addresses

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education what sanctions can be taken against parents who use a false address when making an application for admission to a primary school for their child; and on how many occasions, in each of the last five years, have these sanctions been applied.

(AQW 24693/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: As a result of a 2007 Judicial Review, Boards of Governors have a duty to verify "qualifying information" contained within applications to their school if, at the point of applying their admissions criteria, they have a "general knowledge or belief" of a problem with false information within applications.

If a parent is found to have used a false address the offer of their place at the relevant school will be withdrawn by the school.

As the 'duty to verify' rests entirely with the Board of Governors of each school, the Department does not hold information in relation to how many pupils have lost a school place on this basis in the last five years.

Department for Employment and Learning

Unemployment: North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the organisations that receive funding to tackle youth unemployment in North Down.

(AQW 24080/11-15)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): Youth unemployment continues to be a major area of concern for me, with the most recently published figures indicating that there are 475 (18-24 year old) on Jobseekers Allowance in North Down and 550 in Newtownards. (Source DSD Analytical Services).

To tackle this, and adding to my Department's portfolio of provision, you will be aware that last year my Executive colleagues and myself agreed a range of interventions to help address this. The Youth Employment Scheme (YES) which I introduced in July 2012 offers a series of measures to help young people gain experience, acquire new skills and find employment.

My officials are actively working with employers and organisations to secure as many YES opportunities for young people as quickly as possible. I have been encouraged by the response of employers so far, and I expect many more to come forward to offer opportunities for young people in the coming months.

Steps to Work (StW) is my Department's main adult return to work programme. It provides a wide range of assistance to help people find employment. This includes work experience placements, training and subsidised employment. The programme is available for those aged 18 or over (lone parents 16 or over) who are not in employment of 16 hours or more each week. Those aged 18-24 years old, who have been claiming Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) for six months, will be required to participate on the programme.

In the North Down area 513 young people are currently availing of this programme. StW is delivered through a network of contracted providers. Within the North Down area the programme is delivered by the South Eastern Regional College.

The Training for Success (TfS) programme provides a guaranteed training opportunity for all eligible, unemployed, young people aged 16 and 17 (up to 24 years for those requiring additional support), which aims to progress participants to higher level training, further education, or employment by providing training to address personal and social development needs, develop occupational skills and employability skills and, where necessary, Essential Skills training. The following Training Suppliers are contracted to deliver TfS in the North Down area:

- Rutledge Recruitment and Training (Bangor)
- South Eastern Regional College (Newtownards)
- North Down Training and Datalink Reprographics Ltd
- DFPP Ltd (People 1st)
- Hair Academy/Jennymount
- Seven Towers Training
- Totalis People Ltd

All of this funding was formally agreed and contracts awarded, subject to the requirements and processes of government procurement. As you can see, my Department is working with a wide range of organisations in the North Down area to maximise our efforts to tackle youth unemployment.

Legislation: DEL

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to list the current or planned legislation that his Department will bring to the Assembly before the end of the current term.

(AQW 24294/11-15)

Dr Farry: The Department for Employment and Learning is working to bring two pieces of legislation to the Assembly before the end of the current term: the Employment Bill and the Work and Families Bill.

Dignity at Work: Jobs and Benefits Offices

Mr Spratt asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 23576/11-15, to detail (i) how many Dignity at Work cases have been lodged with his Department by staff working at Jobs and Benefits offices, in each of the last five years; and (ii) how many of these have been resolved.

(AQW 24338/11-15)

Dr Farry: Part (i)

The number of cases that have been lodged with the Department for Employment and Learning by staff working at Jobs and Benefits Offices in each of the last five years is set out in Table 1. The number that have been resolved are set out in Table 2.

NEETs: Dungannon

Ms McGahan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of young people not in employment, education or training in the Dungannon district, from January 2013 to date; and the initiatives his Department is undertaking to address this issue.

(AQW 24417/11-15)

Dr Farry: It is not possible to provide robust estimates of the number of young people who are not in employment, education or training in any individual District Council area due to sample size constraints in the Labour Force Survey (LFS). However, estimates of those who are not in employment, Government supported training or full-time education are available at the Northern Ireland level from the LFS.

For the period January –March 2013, in Northern Ireland, the LFS estimated that there were 42,000 (19.1%) 16-24 year olds who were not in employment, Government supported training or full-time education.

My Department recently introduced several new initiatives through the 'Pathways to Success' strategy to assist all young people including those who are not in employment, education or training (NEET), in the Dungannon District area and throughout Northern Ireland.

The Collaboration and Innovation Fund is designed to help who are not in employment, education or training to improve their employability prospects. Over £9 million will be provided to eighteen organisations from the community, voluntary and educational sectors to enable them to assist 5,500 unemployed young people from December 2012 to March 2015.

In the Dungannon District area, three organisations are supported by the fund:

- South West College Connections project aims to assist 300 young people with general and specific employability barriers in the Dungannon, Coalisland, Omagh and Enniskillen areas. The project will provide early interventions such as intensive transition point provision, assessment of need, mentoring, signposting and employability workshops;
- The Appleby Trust Print Room project will deliver a specialist two year pathway to employment programme for unemployed young people with Aspergers Syndrome within the Southern Health and Social Care Trust; and
- The Training for Women Network Gateway to Progression Project provides a tailored programme of one-to-one support and group activities to engage and support young women who face a range of employability issues.

In addition, my Department introduced the Pathways for Young People Allowance which ensures there are effective incentives in place for eligible young people to participate in projects which re-engage them with learning and training programmes. The Pathways for Young People Allowance will also be made available to eligible young people participating on Collaboration and Innovation project activity.

The Community Family Support Programme pilot is currently being trialled in East & West Belfast, Strabane, Cookstown and Newtownabbey to support parents, help prevent younger family members falling into the NEET category and help other young family members already in this situation to re-engage with education, training or employment. The intention is to roll this out to other areas including Dungannon, later this year.

The Department will also fund a Community Based Access Programme pilot which will commence in September 2013 and will enable 16 to 18 years olds increase their essential skills qualification and progress into further education and other government funded training.

In addition to the initiatives for young people who fall into the NEET category, my Department's Employment Service provides a wide range of initiatives and programmes to help address youth unemployment.

Steps to Work is the Department's main return to work provision. It is a flexible programme which tailors provision to the individual's need with the aim of assisting participants to find and sustain employment. It offers a wide range of provision including work experience, essential skills training, qualifications, subsidised employment, and assistance with self-employment. In the South Tyrone area South West College is the Lead Contractor and is funded to deliver this programme on behalf of the Department. The Lead Contractor will involve other organisations in the delivery of the programme.

As part of the Executive's Economy and Jobs Initiative, an additional strand was added to the Steps to Work Programme. First Start is a targeted intervention for unemployed 18 to 24 year olds which provides a period of supported employment for a minimum of 6 months within either the private, public or third sector. This strand is focused on those who have been unemployed and claiming Jobseeker's Allowance for at least 6 months.

My Department's Disability Employment Service provides programmes and services to help young people with disabilities to progress towards and move into employment. These include programmes such as Work Connect, Workable, Access to Work, Work Connect and the Job Introduction Scheme. All of this specialist disability provision can be accessed via the local Jobs and Benefits Office in Dungannon.

In addition, my Department provides financial assistance to Parkanaur College which provides employability training and vocational qualifications for young people with disabilities.

Youth unemployment continues to be a major area of concern for me and my Executive colleagues and together we agreed a range of interventions to help address this. The Youth Employment Scheme which I introduced in July 2012 offers a series of measures to help young people gain experience, acquire new skills and find employment. The scheme is delivered by Employment Service staff based in Jobs and Benefits offices and JobCentres across Northern Ireland including Dungannon.

Between April 2012 and March 2013 425 young people in the Dungannon area have been helped into work and a further 65 have found work during April and May 2013.

Young people residing in the Dungannon district who have a common employability barrier, such as the homeless, ex-offenders/ex-prisoners; people with a history of drug/alcohol misuse and care leavers can access the Local Employment Intermediary Service, on an outreach basis. Network Personnel based in Cookstown deliver the outreach service in the Dungannon area under the name of Source.

The Department's Training for Success programme is designed to enable participants to progress to higher level training, further education, or employment by providing training to address personal and social development needs, develop occupational skills and employability skills and, where necessary, Essential Skills training. The programme is available across Northern Ireland and is delivered by contracted Training Suppliers on behalf of the Department.

Also, the South West Colleges' 'Step Up To Sustainable Employment (SUSE)' project which aims to improve the employability of young people who are NEET through a structured partnership agreement, is funded through Priority 1 of the Northern Ireland European Social Fund Programme.

Furthermore, my Department's Careers Service provides an impartial all-age careers information, advice and guidance service to clients throughout Northern Ireland including those not in employment, education or training. Training Agreements are in place with all eleven post-primary schools, the Further Education College and Training Suppliers in the Dungannon District Council area. The Agreements enable the Careers Service to case manage all young people aged 16 and 17 including those who drop out of provision or do not have a positive destination when they leave, thus supporting and signposting young people to provision that meets their individual needs.

I hope that you find this information useful.

Steps 2 Success/Youth Employment Scheme

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how the Steps to Success Employment Programme and the Youth Employment Scheme will help people obtain jobs.

(AQW 24448/11-15)

Dr Farry: Addressing unemployment continues to be a priority for the Northern Ireland Executive and for my Department.

The Steps 2 Success programme has been designed to allow contracted providers the flexibility to determine how best to work with clients to address their employment barriers. Steps 2 Success will focus on positive outcomes and sustained employment, reinforced through the funding model for providers which will include rewards for sustained employment; payments will be made at intervals from job entry to 12 months as the client sustains employment. Providers will receive a further payment if a participant finds work while gaining a relevant accredited qualification through Steps 2 Success. Better performance will be encouraged by providing higher funding levels where a provider exceeds the performance targets set by the Department.

I have put the Youth Employment Scheme into place to help young people gain experience, acquire new skills and find employment. The scheme is based on the fact that employability skills are more readily obtained by active participation in a work setting with an employer or in a voluntary organisation. A work experience opportunity/placement with an employer also offers the chance to sample a range of work and improve levels of confidence and motivation and often, to gain additional qualifications in the workplace.

The Youth Employment Scheme is in addition to the range of provision already delivered by my Department and contracted providers.

Youth Employment Scheme: North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of 16 to 24 year olds in the North Down constituency who are availing of the new Youth Employment Scheme.

(AQW 24475/11-15)

Dr Farry: Addressing youth unemployment, in all areas of Northern Ireland including North Down, remains a priority.

In the period from the launch of the Youth Employment Scheme (YES) on 2 July 2012 to 14 June 2013, a total of 67 young people have participated in YES in North Down (the area served by Bangor and Newtownards Jobcentres).

Included in this figure are 26 young people who have secured permanent employment for which the employer is receiving the YES enhanced employer subsidy. A further 28 young people have availed of work experience opportunities to sample work and develop their employability skills, and 13 young people are currently availing of the YES skills development programme where they can develop their skills and gain work related qualifications.

My Department is also actively working with employers to secure as many opportunities as possible across Northern Ireland including the North Down area for young people. I have been encouraged by the response of employers so far and I expect many more to come forward to offer opportunities for young people in the coming months.

I consider the scheme to be successful with numbers of participants increasing steadily and I would ask you to encourage businesses in your respective constituency to support this scheme and also to encourage young unemployed constituents to take up the opportunities.

Education Maintenance Allowance: North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many pupils in North Down received Education Maintenance Allowance in each of the last five years.

(AQW 24562/11-15)

Dr Farry: I can advise the member that the total number of Northern Ireland domiciled learners attending schools, colleges and FE Colleges in receipt of Education Maintenance Allowance in North Down for the last five academic years are as follows:

Academic year	Total number of pupils in receipt of EMA in North Down
2008/2009	590
2009/2010	690
2010/2011	750
2011/2012	755
2012/2013	790

Unemployment: East Antrim

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline how he is working to address youth unemployment in East Antrim.

(AQO 4376/11-15)

Dr Farry: Since the launch last September of the Youth Employment Scheme, almost 80 employers have signed agreements to participate in the scheme in East Antrim.

To date there have been 97 opportunities advertised in East Antrim, with 50 young people availing of the scheme. There are also 54 temporary employment opportunities currently available under the new 'First Start' initiative; this was established as a direct response to the economic downturn and as part of the Northern Ireland Executive's Economy and Jobs Initiative. It is an additional employment strand for unemployed 18-24 year olds.

Steps to Work remains my Department's main adult return to work programme. It provides a wide range of assistance to help people find employment. The programme is available to all age groups, including those aged 18-24. In addition, the Training for Success programme provides a guaranteed training place for all unemployed young people in the 16-17 age group.

I recently introduced two new initiatives to help address youth unemployment, which include provision in East Antrim.

The Collaboration and Innovation Fund seeks to explore new approaches to address employability barriers faced by young people not in education, employment or training.

Over £4 million has been allocated to eight organisations that will provide support to unemployed young people in East Antrim, with the capacity to assist over 2,100 young people.

Newtownabbey is also one of the new Community Family Support Programme pilot areas. The programme will provide ten disadvantaged families with support to improve their parenting skills and re-engage all family members with education, employment and training.

Across East Antrim, Employment Service staff continue to work in partnership with local councils to deliver Jobs and Opportunities events. They also collaborate with LibrariesNI to deliver successful Jobclubs, which help young unemployed people address barriers to employment.

Steps 2 Success: Legal Challenges

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline how his Department will minimise legal challenges over the new Steps 2 Success programme.

(AQO 4374/11-15)

Dr Farry: Procurement for all employment provision within my Department is managed by the Department of Finance and Personnel's Central Procurement Directorate, as the Centre of Procurement Expertise. My Department complies with the Public Contracts Regulations (2006) and Northern Ireland Public Procurement Policy when tendering and, along with the Central Procurement Directorate, also seeks advice from the Departmental Solicitor's Office when appropriate.

Throughout the process of developing Steps 2 Success, my officials have engaged in an open and transparent manner with all interested stakeholders. This included an extensive formal consultation process which resulted in over 80 written responses from stakeholders. We also held five public information events across Northern Ireland. The response to the consultation was communicated back to stakeholders at a public event and was also published on the Department's website.

Following my formal statement last week announcing the procurement and introduction of Steps 2 Success from June 2014, two information days for prospective bidding organisations were held. At these events potential bidders were informed of the final design features of Steps 2 Success, the procurement process to be followed, and the timeline. They have also received information about the methodology being adopted for the tendering of the Steps 2 Success contracts.

Throughout each stage of the development of the programme my officials have worked closely with Central Procurement Directorate to ensure compliance and adherence to procurement guidelines.

My Department will continue to work with, and follow the guidance of colleagues in Central Procurement Directorate. We will also seek the advice of the Departmental Solicitor's Office as required.

NEETs: Sport

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what plans he has to use sport as a means of reducing the number of people not in education, employment or training.

(AQO 4375/11-15)

Dr Farry: My department funds a variety of innovative initiatives under its Collaboration and Innovation Fund to help reduce the number of young people not in education, employment or training. Altogether, 18 different projects are being funded at a cost of £9.2 million.

These 18 projects will test a range of initiatives aimed at re-engaging and supporting 5,500 young people over the next two years.

None of the projects, however, involves sport. The Collaboration and Innovation Fund is now fully committed but I will continue to seek opportunities for securing additional resources which may allow new innovative approaches, such as that suggested by the Member, to proceed.

In addition, the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure, in partnership with Sport NI, has developed a ten year strategy for sport, Sport Matters, which was approved by the NI Executive in December 2009. Opportunities for those not in education, employment or training will exist through specific obligations on the successful contractors to deliver the Stadium Programme.

Steps 2 Success: NICVA

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what communication his Department has had with NICVA to ensure that local community and voluntary organisations are not excluded from the delivery of Steps 2 Success.

(AQO 4377/11-15)

Dr Farry: The Steps 2 Success programme has been designed with flexibility at its core. This flexibility will allow contracted providers to work with clients to address their employment barriers. To deliver this, providers could come from any sector, but will require a wide diverse supply chain of sub-contracted organisations to meet the varied individual needs of clients.

I and my officials met with the Chair, and Policy Coordinator from NICVA in July 2012. The meeting was also attended by representatives from community and voluntary sector organisations. At that meeting I was able to advise that Steps 2 Success was being designed specifically as a bespoke programme which aimed to meet the needs of unemployed people across Northern Ireland. I also welcomed NICVA's enthusiasm to engage with my Department in the development of employment provision.

In developing Steps 2 Success, my Department has taken into account the views and opinions of a wide range of stakeholders, including those of the voluntary and community sector. A high level programme design was issued for public consultation from July to October 2012. This resulted in over 80 responses from a wide range of organisations.

As part of the consultation process my Department also delivered five information sessions across the province, one of which was held in NICVA headquarters in Belfast. These events were attended by approximately 180 representatives from a number of key stakeholders and other interested organisations.

My officials have evaluated the rich and varied responses from all who contributed to this valuable exercise, and have made a number of adjustments to the programme as a result of these. I am confident that Steps 2 Success will, like its predecessor, provide a role for voluntary and community organisations who can contribute to meeting the employability needs of those who require them.

Access to Success

Mr Copeland asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what action he is taking to increase opportunities in Further and Higher Education for people with disabilities.

(AQO 4378/11-15)

Dr Farry: Last September, I was pleased to launch Access to Success, my Department's regional strategy to widen participation in higher education. The strategy has a strong focus on the creation of a more accessible higher education sector, where people who are most able but least likely to participate are given every encouragement and support to apply to, and benefit from, higher education.

The strategy identifies those groups still under-represented in higher education, including those with disabilities and learning disabilities, which may require additional support to take full advantage of the educational opportunity.

My Department provides some £3m through Disabled Students Allowances, to help students with the extra costs they may incur when studying their higher education course. The allowances can help with the cost of specialist equipment, travel and other course-related materials. They also finance one to one personal support to disabled students on higher education courses at our colleges or universities. The support providers include note-takers, dyslexia coaches and sign language interpreters.

My Department also provides premium funding of around £250k per annum to the higher education institutions to recognise the additional costs of recruiting and retaining students with learning difficulties and disabilities.

In the Further Education sector, my Department provides financial support of £3.5m per annum to assist regional colleges to discharge their responsibility towards students with learning difficulties and disabilities.

This includes £2m per annum to help meet the cost of providing tailored, discrete courses for students who are unable to undertake a mainstream course due to the nature or degree of their disability or learning difficulty.

The colleges also provide an information and advocacy resource hub, accessed through the Colleges Northern Ireland website and the 'DisabledGo' service, which provides potential and existing students with accessibility information about college campuses.

PGCE: Graduate Places

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many graduates, who applied for PGCE courses, were successful in gaining a place in 2012/13.

(AQO 4379/11-15)

Dr Farry: Of the 2016 graduates who applied, 296 were successful in gaining a place on a PGCE course in 2012/13.

138 students gained places at Queen's University Belfast; 117 at the University of Ulster; 20 at St Mary's University College; 15 at Stranmillis University College; and 6 at the Open University.

Steps 2 Success: North West

Mr Byrne asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what consideration his Department has given to treating the North West as an individual area for Steps 2 Success to allow a local skills plan, as outlined in the One Plan, to be put in place.

(AQO 4380/11-15)

Dr Farry: The Department initially proposed to treat Northern Ireland as one contract area with three competing providers. There was a very mixed reaction to this in the Consultation, with a wide variety of views for and against the proposal.

Based on this response, the Department revisited the number and makeup of contract areas in relation to Steps 2 Success. After consideration of a number of options, ranging from one contract area to the existing 10 contract areas, it was agreed that three contract areas, broadly based on the existing Employment Service regions, with one provider in each, offered the optimum result in terms of local provision and scope for improvement.

There will be consistency of provision across the three contract areas and the nature of the provision will be such that it supports the One Plan and the Skills Directorate.

In addition, an officer from my Department will be seconded to the Skills Directorate from 1 July 2013 for two years, to work with a range of stakeholders and assist with its day-to-day work.

Management Matters

Mr Cree asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what consideration he has given to the report entitled Management Matters in Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland from 2009.

(AQO 4381/11-15)

Dr Farry: Since its publication in 2009, Management Matters in Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland has, along with other research, provided a key evidence base for the Department. The report identified that both the Republic of Ireland and Northern Ireland lag significantly behind those countries with the best management practices; the US achieved the best score. They both scored below the average and below Great Britain.

The report, which focused on manufacturing firms, identified three areas of management practice to address; (i) the need for improved performance in goal and target setting; (ii) aligning the goals and targets with the operations at shop floor level; and; (iii) taking robust action to manage and tackle poor performance.

Each of these themes has been taken into account in the subsequent design of DEL programmes and informed the development of a range of measures to improve Leadership and Management in Northern Ireland's Small to Medium Enterprises and Social Economy Enterprises. The Department's training programmes in leadership and management have undergone a refresh and update, taking into account the key findings of the report, in 2012. A new suite of programmes was launched in January 2013.

In recognition of the importance of management and leadership skills to the Northern Ireland economy, I recently announced a reintroduction of 100% funding for my Department's Leadership and Management Development Programmes from April 2013.

South West Regional College: Adults with Learning Disabilities

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the audit of the South West Regional College into the provision of Further Education for adults with learning disabilities.

(AQO 4382/11-15)

Dr Farry: I wish to advise that the audit of the provision of Further Education for adults with learning disabilities in South West College has been completed. I will be writing separately to the Member providing full details of the findings.

Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment

Jobs Fund

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for a breakdown by constituency, of the 2,699 jobs created and 560 jobs promoted as a result of the Jobs Fund.

(AQW 23936/11-15)

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): The table below details the 2,699 jobs created and 5,060 jobs promoted as a result of the Jobs Fund over the last 2 years. These figures include jobs supported across the full range of Jobs Fund measures including support for new business starts by residents of Neighbourhood Renewal Areas (NRA) and by young people Not in Employment, Education or Training (NEET); broader support for social enterprises; employment support to businesses to create new jobs across a range of sectors and includes Jobs Fund support towards the Department for Employment and Learning's Steps to Work Employer Subsidy to provide additional incentive to create new jobs for the unemployed. As such jobs created through the DEL Employers Subsidy are only reflected in the new Jobs Created column. This explains why the Jobs Created figure is higher than the Jobs Promoted figure for Belfast South and South Down.

Table 1: Jobs Fund Support by PCA (2011-12 and 2012-13)

PCA	New Jobs Promoted	New Jobs Created
Belfast East	221	164
Belfast North	466	135
Belfast South	360	389.5
Belfast West	660	138
East Antrim	474	28
East Londonderry	97	85
Fermanagh & South Tyrone	393	200
Foyle	334	296
Lagan Valley	194	117
Mid Ulster	637	381
Newry & Armagh	207	131
North Antrim	128	93
North Down	132	50
South Antrim	235	142.5
South Down	90	109
Strangford	161	65
Upper Bann	124	72.5
West Tyrone	139	102.5
Unknown	8	0

Notes to Table 1:

- 1 New Jobs Promoted represents the number of jobs expected to be created by the project. It can take up to three years before these actual jobs are created.
- 2 New Jobs Created represents the actual number of jobs created against which financial support has been drawn down.
- 3 215 jobs have been created in businesses with multiple locations across Northern Ireland. In these instances the jobs have been allocated against the headquarters of each business.
- 4 The 8 Unknown promoted jobs do not currently have location information as this support has been offered towards the creation of posts for home-based workers.
- 5 Invest NI revises performance data on a regular basis to ensure that it reflects implemented projects; therefore, the data above may differ to previously published information.

Invest NI

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to provide a breakdown by constituency, of the 13,870 jobs promoted and the £784m investment by InvestNI.

(AQW 23937/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The table below presents the number of jobs promoted by Invest NI and the amount of planned investment secured through employment-related projects during the two years 2011-12 and 2012-13.

Jobs Promoted and Total Planned Investment 2011/12 – 2012/13

PCA	Jobs Promoted	Planned Investment £m

* The precise location for a small number of jobs has yet to be determined. This may be for a number of reasons such as a new investor finalising their location decision.

It should be noted that whilst those jobs promoted through Invest NI's business start support programme (now known as the Regional Start Initiative) are included, these projects do not receive offers of financial assistance, and as such there is no associated planned investment recorded.

Invest NI: Jobs

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 23193/11-15, whether Invest NI can stipulate that an appropriate share of jobs be made available for people with disabilities in a letter of offer to large employers, and, if so, whether any consideration is being given to such an approach.

(AQW 23962/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest NI has no plans to introduce any stipulation that would require employment generating projects to make a proportion of any new jobs promoted available specifically to people with disabilities. Invest NI's Letters of Offer has been designed to ensure that any assisted companies are compliant with their responsibilities under the relevant employment legislation and, in any situation where it is shown that these have not been fulfilled, then appropriate action will be taken.

Flights: Business Class

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, to detail the number of business class flights that have been paid for by (i) her Department; and (ii) InvestNI, from 2008 to date.

(AQW 24130/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Department of Enterprise Trade and Investment and Invest NI paid for the following number of business class flights per financial year.

Financial Year	DETI	Invest NI
2007-8	21	62
2008-9	43	74
2009-10	35	82
2010-11	40	73
2011-12	56	102
2012-13	70	106
2013-14 to date	0	14

Gas Network: Ballymena

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, to provide a map showing the commercial and residential sections of Ballymena Council area, that are connected to the gas network.

(AQW 24172/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Department does not hold this information.

Firmus Energy has the exclusive licence to develop the natural gas market in the '10 towns' licensed area outside Greater Belfast which includes Ballymena.

Gas Network: Ballymena

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what consideration has been given to making gas available to householders in Dunclug, Ballymena.

(AQW 24175/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Firmus Energy, the developer of gas networks in the "10 towns" licensed area, which includes Ballymena, advise they have held discussions with the Northern Ireland Housing Executive (NIHE) about converting properties in the Dunclug area of Ballymena to natural gas.

The current NIHE heating policy is to install gas where available and the typical life expectancy for an oil fired central heating system is fifteen years. NIHE therefore will aim to replace these systems with gas, where available, using this criteria.

firmus energy advise that it is also in discussions with the Utility Regulator for approval to bring forward their gas network build programme to facilitate conversion of other NIHE properties to natural gas.

Business Start-ups: Foyle

Mr Durkan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) the number of business start-ups in the Foyle constituency over the past 12 months; and (ii) the support that is available to these businesses.

(AQW 24214/11-15)

Mrs Foster: In the Foyle Parliamentary Constituency Area (PCA) there were a total of 166 start-up businesses supported by Invest NI. 155 of these start-ups were locally focussed with a further 11 having an export dimension.

There is a wide range of advice and support available to these businesses including those highlighted below:

Invest NI's Regional Start Initiative is designed to support locally focussed entrepreneurs into self employment. Support is focussed on mentoring with the key output being a commercial business plan that the promoter can use to attract funds to the business.

Additionally, Invest NI provides advice and financial assistance to entrepreneurs with export-focussed ideas under initiatives such as Propel, Export Start and Global Start.

Invest NI's Boosting Business programme was launched in November 2011 in direct response to the difficulties being faced by businesses as a result of the economic downturn. In June 2012 Invest NI established a full time Business Support Team to deal with enquiries from businesses across Northern Ireland.

The Invest NI Jobs Fund has been developed to promote 5,000 jobs and provides employment grant support to investment projects which will create new sustainable jobs.

Invest NI's nibusinessinfo.co.uk website offers easy to use, comprehensive and up to date practical advice and guidance on all aspects of starting, running and growing a business with access to over 70 business support tools, best practice case studies and access to funding options as well as wider support.

Invest NI's Small Business Loan Fund provides loans of up to £50,000 to viable small and medium sized businesses on commercial terms.

Co-operatives: DETI Support

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what work her Department is doing to support the development of Co-operatives.

(AQW 24228/11-15)

Mrs Foster: DETI has led, on behalf of the Executive, on the development of social economy policy for Northern Ireland. The co-operative movement shares many of the principles of a social economy organisation and as such is seen as a leading stakeholder in the sector.

In direct response to the findings of an independent evaluation of the Northern Ireland social economy sector, DETI appointed Social Enterprise Northern Ireland in October 2012 to design, manage and deliver a Social Economy Work Programme (SEWP), for up to a maximum of three years. The main objective of the SEWP is to develop and implement a programme of initiatives to enable the continued growth of a sustainable social economy sector. Delivery of this programme will provide Social Enterprise Northern Ireland with an opportunity to explore areas of best practice within the sector, such as the co-operative model, and to develop new financial products/services for the benefit of the sector. Social Enterprise Northern Ireland also represents the interests of the sector and I understand they have a close working relationship with the Co-operative through membership on its Advisory Board.

In addition over the past five years Invest NI has offered financial assistance totalling £7,635,992 to local Co-Operatives and their subsidiary companies. Invest NI has also provided non financial assistance in terms of advice and support.

Invest NI will continue to actively engage with Co-operatives to support them in the development of their businesses.

Co-operatives: DETI Support

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether she has considered establishing a body to promote the development of Co-operatives.

(AQW 24229/11-15)

Mrs Foster: DETI has led, on behalf of the Executive, on the development of social economy policy for Northern Ireland. The co-operative movement shares many of the principles of a social economy organisation and as such is seen as a leading stakeholder in the sector.

In direct response to the findings of an independent evaluation of the Northern Ireland social economy sector in 2011, DETI appointed Social Enterprise Northern Ireland to design, manage and deliver a Social Economy Work Programme (SEWP), for up to a maximum of three years. The main objective of the SEWP is to develop and implement a programme of initiatives to enable the continued growth of a sustainable social economy sector. Delivery of this programme will provide Social Enterprise Northern Ireland with an opportunity to explore areas of best practice within the sector, such as the co-operative model, and to develop new financial products/services for the benefit of the sector.

Social Enterprise Northern Ireland also represents the interests of the sector and I understand they have a close working relationship with the Co-operative through membership on its Advisory Board.

Angling: Tourism

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 22889/11-15, to (i) provide an update on the Strategic Review of Angling; and (ii) outline to what extent this review is exploring the potential of Angling Tourism in South Down.

(AQW 24232/11-15)

Mrs Foster:

- (i) The review is underway. A draft report has been provided by the contractors to help inform the public consultations that have now been completed. The contractors are finalising the report which is to be submitted to the steering group by the end of June.
- (ii) The review is providing an overview on the potential for angling tourism across Northern Ireland and will highlight the best opportunities for angling tourism at an international, national and local level, including South Down.

Advertising: DETI Spend

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) how much was spent on advertising the Titanic Quarter worldwide; and (ii) how much was spent on advertising the Mournes and St. Patrick, in the last two years. (AQW 24235/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Both Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) and Tourism Ireland (TIL) are responsible for marketing our tourism product. NITB markets within Northern Ireland and to the Republic of Ireland. Tourism Ireland is responsible for marketing to Great Britain and overseas.

- (i) The amount spent in the last two years specifically on marketing Titanic is;

TIL £3,041,000	Calendar Years 2012 and 2013 to date
NITB £686,441	Financial Years 2011/ 2012 and 2012/2013
- (ii) NITB spent a total of £684,094 on the Mournes and St. Patrick in the Financial Years 2011/2012 and 2012/2013. There is no available breakdown of Tourism Ireland's marketing spend for the Mournes or St Patrick project in Northern Ireland.

Legislation: DETI

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to list the current or planned legislation that their Department will bring to the Assembly before the end of the current term. (AQW 24251/11-15)

Mrs Foster: In July 2012 Junior Minister Bell advised the Assembly of my intention to bring forward two Bills to reform energy distribution and tariffs and an insolvency Bill to enable insolvency practitioners to communicate information about cases by electronic means.

Tree and Hedge-cutting Contracts

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how many tree and hedge cutting contracts her Department, and its arm's-length bodies, awarded between 1 March and 31 August, in each of the last three years. (AQW 24347/11-15)

Mrs Foster: None.

Wind Energy

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment on what evidence is the potential efficiency of wind energy based; and whether consideration has been given to attempts in other countries which have failed and subsequently been abandoned.

(AQW 24369/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The All-island Grid Study which was completed in 2008 by DETI and its Irish Government counterpart DCENR was the first comprehensive assessment of the ability of the electrical power system, including the electricity transmission grid on the island, to absorb large amounts of electricity produced from renewable resources. The study concluded that it was technically feasible for up to 42% of power generation demand on the island to be provided from renewable energy, with the least cost and most readily available resource being on-shore wind. No specific analysis of other countries' experiences has been undertaken by my Department.

Isle of Man TT: Marketing Methods

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline any discussions which have taken place with the Isle of Man government regarding how marketing methods used for the Isle of Man TT could be applied to the North West 200. (AQW 24392/11-15)

Mrs Foster: There have not been any discussions between DETI and the Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) with the Isle of Man government in relation to the North West 200. Ultimately, it would be the responsibility of the North West 200 organisers to make or request such representations.

G8: Commemorative Supplements

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) the number of commemorative supplements produced in conjunction with the G8 Summit with support from her Department or any of its non-departmental public bodies; (ii) the newspapers in which the supplements appeared; (iii) how much each newspaper was paid to include each supplement; and (iv) if there was any stipulation that her photograph appear on several occasions.

(AQW 24424/11-15)

Mrs Foster: In the lead in to the G8 Summit at Lough Erne, a number of media outlets took the decision to produce commemorative supplements to mark the hosting of this unique opportunity to showcase the business and tourism offering of Fermanagh and Northern Ireland to the visiting delegations and accompanying international media.

Following approaches from many of these publications with sponsorship proposals to support the publications, Invest Northern Ireland entered into commercial agreements with the Belfast Telegraph, Impartial Reporter and Fermanagh Herald to provide relevant content in the form of case studies and advertorial to each. The agreements were commercial in confidence.

In addition to their distribution by inclusion in their own publications, copies of these three supplements were also provided to the international media who were covering the Summit. All of the supplements were written and produced by the publishers and there was absolutely no stipulation made by Invest Northern Ireland nor my Department in terms of photography.

Moyle District Council: Invest NI Support

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether InvestNI will liaise with Moyle District Council to assist in increasing investment in the area.

(AQW 24429/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest Northern Ireland is already actively working with Moyle District Council.

Invest NI offers a wide range of support to encourage investment and economic development in all council areas across Northern Ireland. It has a good working relationship with Moyle District Council and has met with council officials on 14 occasions within the last 12 months, principally but not exclusively, with a focus on Local Economic Development Programmes.

Invest NI is working closely with all Councils in the region – including Moyle District Council - to help identify gaps in the provision of support to small and medium businesses and develop initiatives that will complement existing provision. These projects are primarily aimed at increasing SME capability and competitiveness and are funded through the Local Economic Development Measure of the EU Sustainable Competitiveness Programme, Invest NI and local Councils.

Moyle District Council has also accepted an invitation from Invest NI to participate, with other Councils, in the development of a mobile app, focused on highlighting the unique selling points of the area in terms of its potential to attract Foreign Direct Investment.

Invest NI also participated in a breakfast meeting on 21 March 2013 involving local politicians, Moyle Chamber of Commerce and Council officials with the aim of increasing economic activity in the area. Invest NI has offered a follow up meeting with Moyle Chamber of Commerce to progress some of the ideas discussed.

Invest NI will continue to work in partnership with Moyle District Council and other stakeholders to assist in increasing investment in the area.

Strategic Energy Framework: Targets

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what consultation was carried out on the setting of the Strategic Energy Framework target of 40 percent energy from renewables by 2020; and to provide a copy of the consultation document and the Strategic Energy Assessment.

(AQW 24460/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The draft Strategic Energy Framework (SEF) which included the strategic goal to increase the amount of electricity from renewable sources to 40% by 2020, was approved by the Executive and issued for full consultation on 6 July 2009. A copy of the consultation document can be found at:

http://www.detini.gov.uk/a_draft_strategic_energy_framework_for_northern_ireland_2009-2

I am not aware of the term Strategic Energy Assessment but am assuming that the Member is referring to a Strategic Environmental Assessment (SEA). The SEF consultation document committed DETI to carrying out SEAs, where appropriate, on policies emanating from the Framework. When the 40% target for renewable electricity was set, SEAs of both the Offshore Renewable Energy Strategic Action Plan (ORESAP) and the Onshore Renewable Electricity Action Plan (OREAP) were underway. The ORESAP SEA was commissioned in 2008 and the OREAP SEA was commissioned in 2009. All documents associated with each SEA can be viewed at www.offshoreenergyyni.co.uk and www.onshorerenewablesni.co.uk

Broadband: Universal Access

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on her Department's proposal to achieve universal access to standard broadband services with a minimum download speed of two megabytes.

(AQW 24508/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement Project aims to deliver 2 Megabits per second broadband services to all premises and services of 24 Megabits per second or better to at least 90% premises by 2015. This is aligned with UK Broadband Strategy targets.

The process of defining the intervention area has been one of continuing refinement and further data from the market and clarification on revised State Aid rules had to be taken into consideration. An analysis on the postcodes to be included in the intervention area has now been completed. The results are expected to be published shortly. This will include details of the proposed intervention area for the project, on which comments will be invited through a short public consultation.

It is expected that procurement will commence by end summer and a contract awarded in early autumn 2013.

Broadband: South Down

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what percentage of people in South Down have (i) no access to broadband facilities; or (ii) a download speed lower than two megabytes.

(AQW 24509/11-15)

Mrs Foster:

- (i) Everyone throughout Northern Ireland, including South Down, has access to a broadband service via a mix of technologies, including fixed line, satellite, fixed wireless and mobile.
- (ii) The information requested is not held by my Department.

Gas: Flaring

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether flaring of excess gas from gas wells will be permitted under current legislation.

(AQW 24542/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Department recognises that during the exploration, appraisal, commissioning and production phases of a development, the flaring of some gas may be unavoidable. However, any flaring must be kept to the minimum that is technically and economically justified. The Department will control gas emissions by requiring Licensees to apply for consent to flare or vent gas emitted from their wells.

New regulations to reduce the emissions of gases to air by means of "green completions" are being introduced in the USA and it is anticipated that any future shale gas industry in the UK will adopt similar regulations based on industry best practice.

Structural Technology Maturity Project

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the Structural Technology Maturity project led by GKN and Bombardier that was announced in July 2012.

(AQW 24585/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Structural Technology Maturity Project (STeM) is a project under the UK Aerodynamics Centre with grant funding from the Department for Business, Innovation and Skills (BIS) Aerodynamics Centre budget and placed on contract through the Technology Strategy Board.
