Mr Deputy Speaker: Will the Member bring his remarks to a close, please?

Mr Flanagan: The Minister and his counterpart, James Reilly, have indicated their willingness to explore such approaches when they deliver mutual benefits. We will all support them in reaching that goal.

Mrs Foster: Like the proposer of the topic, whom I congratulate on securing the debate, I want to pay tribute to the staff at the South West Acute Hospital. Unfortunately, I had to visit on a number of occasions recently after my mother fell and was an inpatient for 11 days. That allowed me to see at first hand how much care and attention those staff were able to give.

Members mentioned the single rooms that we now have in our beautiful new hospital. I know that they may have presented a challenge to staff, but the privacy and dignity now accorded to patients in the new South West Acute Hospital really manifested themselves when I visited my mother and saw how all patients were treated.

I pay tribute particularly to the staff in A&E. They are often under pressure, but I found them very professional and courteous. I want to pass that on to the Minister, and, perhaps, he will pass that on to the chief executive of the trust, to the staff in medical ward 2 and, in particular, to the ancillary staff: the cleaners and porters who took the time to have a chat and spend that little bit of time with the patients around the ward. I thank them most sincerely.

The facilities in the new South West Acute Hospital are second to none. Recently, I was very proud to be able to bring members of my Smart region group to the new hospital so that they could appreciate the level of technology and the fact that we can use it as a catalyst for the public sector and, looking towards investment, for the private sector.

The Smart region group comprises the chief executive of the Western Health and Social Care Trust; the chief executive of the South West College; representatives from the councils in Omagh and Fermanagh; Invest Northern Ireland; private sector interests, including BT; and me. We are looking at how we can use the infrastructure in and around the hospital to draw attention to Fermanagh for all the right reasons. So I hope that this beautiful public sector building — not just the building, of course, but what goes on within it — will act as a catalyst. I thank the chief executive of the trust and her deputy Joe Lusby for the way in which they have engaged with the Smart region group in all that they do.

I want to put on record that we have some state-of-the-art technology. Enniskillen has the new electronic document management system and is the pathfinder site for that facility. That is a regional feasibility pilot. Edwin has been working with me in my ministerial capacity on Connected Health, which I am delighted to see playing such a growing role in the new South West Acute Hospital. As well as acting as a catalyst for public sector interest in the hospital, it acts as a catalyst for the private sector. I understand, from speaking to the chief executive just yesterday, that it is proving also to be a magnet. Dr McDonnell made the point that it might be necessary to increase salary levels to get people to come to the new hospital. In my conversation yesterday, I was told that we are pulling in interest from top-quality medical staff. I look forward to announcements on that in the near future. I understand that the new hospital is attracting a lot of interest simply because we now have the technology hub in the south-west, and I am obviously pleased about that.

I understand that the hospital provides over 300 outpatient clinics per week, covering all the main specialties. Although I accept that we would want the maximum amount of services delivered locally — I acknowledge that desire, which is one that I share — I think that we will gain more from the hospital, and, more importantly, more for our patients, if we sell the fact that we have this marvellous facility in the south-west.

I take on board the point that Mr Flanagan made about cross-border working. Of course, if it is to the benefit of patients in Northern Ireland, we will do that. We want to make sure that the South West Hospital is the success that we all want it to be. I am sure that the Minister will reflect that in his comments.

6.00 pm

I know from speaking to clinicians in the South West that they are determined to innovate and to demonstrate the new facility and what it can deliver. I want to support them in that innovation where possible, whether it be Dr Kelly and all his colleagues in the stroke unit, Dr Nethercott in the paediatric clinic and everything that he is doing down there, or our coronary care services. It is always dangerous to pick out individuals, but I want to pay tribute to Mahen Varma for all the work that he has done for coronary care in the south-west. It is right to recognise his unstinting devotion, formerly to the Erne Hospital and now to the South West Acute Hospital.

Finally, 3fivetwo Healthcare has been using the facilities at the Erne Hospital. It is right to acknowledge what has been going on. A huge number of my constituents have benefited from the fact that 3fivetwo can lease premises in the South West Hospital. I understand that patient responses to 3fivetwo using the hospital have been very positive. For example, in 2013, 414 patients were seen at outpatient clinics and 474 patients underwent surgical procedures. Those are 474 patients who otherwise would have had to go elsewhere for their surgery. I know that they very much appreciate the fact that they could access it near their own home.

The Minister is looking for new ways to develop the health service.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Will the Member bring her remarks to a close, please?

Mrs Foster: I know that he is going to use new technology to do that. I will certainly support him. I thank him for all his support to date for the South West Acute Hospital.

Mr Byrne: I welcome the opportunity to speak in the debate. June 2012 saw the opening of the new South West Acute Hospital, which we were told could accommodate up to 312 inpatient and day-case beds. I attended the official opening of the new hospital as one of only two nationalist public representatives on the day. I think that all the Members opposite were also there. The new hospital was to deliver a wide range of services and include an emergency department, stroke unit, maternity unit and children's ward, as well as services such as X-ray and GP out-of-hours.

Those of us in west Tyrone who advocated for the hospital to be based in Omagh were disappointed with the decision to place it in Enniskillen. We in Omagh and the surrounding district were, and are, proud of the services that were, and are still, being provided at Tyrone County Hospital. Nevertheless, once the decision was taken to downgrade Tyrone County Hospital in favour of the new development, many people locally supported the decision and went with it.

The hospital is a state-of-the-art building, and all are impressed with the facility itself. Many in west Tyrone have used the facility and have nothing but praise for the medical staff who treated them. However, some patients have been taken from Omagh to Enniskillen by ambulance and then, when discharged late at night, maybe in their bed clothes, asked to find their own way home. They have to get home in a taxi at their own expense. That is not appropriate. It is fine if patients can get someone to lift them, but many live alone and have no access to a car to get them home. What happens if the person has no money on them or at home? Can they afford it? Is that how a caring society treats patients?

One of the first things that we were promised when it was announced that the acute hospital was to be placed in Enniskillen was the upgrade of the A32 from Omagh to Enniskillen. Although improvements have been made on part of the road, the overall road needs to be upgraded to accommodate hospital traffic and, in particular, emergency ambulances. We had black ice on the roads two weeks ago, and there were many accidents on the A32 that morning. That is not acceptable.

Many who choose to go to A&E in Enniskillen are transferred to either Altnagelvin or another hospital. Is that a case of double accounting and adding to the frustration of patients? As a result, many select to head straight to the other A&E services to save time. It takes 45 minutes to go from Omagh to Enniskillen. If patients are then referred to Altnagelvin from Enniskillen, the journey will take approximately one and a half hours. To be sustainable for the people of the area, the hospital needs to treat all the patients that it can on site, as well as have a full range of services and medical staff available to treat all emergencies.

I note that the hospital has sometimes spent much of its budget on locum staff. If we need to attract staff to a hospital such as this, we need to provide not only a range of services but career opportunities that will allow individuals to continue to develop their expertise. State-of-the-art facilities help, but it is the expertise that comes with services, patient numbers and the complexity of health-related matters that will attract permanent staff.

The people of west Tyrone and Fermanagh need to have the same access to hospital-based quality services that people in Belfast, Derry and Craigavon do. Let us make sure that the South West Acute Hospital is properly resourced to make sure that it is fully utilised in the interests of the people of the south-west area.

Mr Elliott: I thank Mr Flanagan for securing today's Adjournment debate on what is a crucial issue. I also welcome the Health Minister's input and his being here for the debate.

Clearly, this is a very important issue throughout the west of the Province. It is not just a Fermanagh or a Tyrone hospital; it is now a south-west hospital of Northern Ireland. I fully appreciate the issues around cross-border cooperation and, indeed, cooperation throughout the community. When people are in pain and are suffering, and when they have a severe medical condition, they do not care where they are treated provided they get good, honest treatment. That is why I believe that there is a very good service in the South West Acute Hospital in Enniskillen.

We are all very proud, and I take Mr Byrne's point that people in Omagh and the wider Tyrone area were disappointed that they did not have an acute services hospital built there. In fairness, the people of Omagh and Tyrone have embraced it and accepted that the treatment that patients receive there is second-to-none. That is not to say that there are not some difficulties there, because there are. There are difficulties in every hospital and in every walk of life, and we have to take cognisance of what has happened.

There have been some very tragic incidents at the South West Acute Hospital. I have met families who have gone through severe tragedy, and clearly they may not be overly impressed with the service that their loved ones received at that time. However, you have to look at it in general; in the round, it is a first-class hospital that provides a first-class service.

Like others have done, I commend the staff in the hospital for the way they reacted and adapted to moving from the Erne Hospital site to the new South West. Let us be quite clear about it: there is a lot of new equipment and technology, and that brings opportunities for those staff who transferred, but it also brings opportunities for those people who wish to come to the South West to work, build a career and make their home in the south-west of the Province. They have an opportunity to develop their knowledge and their career. It is not every hospital in Northern Ireland, the United Kingdom or Ireland that has the technology that we currently have in the South West.

It is also important that we keep ahead of the game and continue to provide services to the wider public. It is important that elective surgery is developed. Initially, we were promised that quite a lot of elective surgery would take place in the South West; maybe the Minister can enlighten us to some degree about what is happening with that situation.

The 3fivetwo healthcare group has already been mentioned, and I am well aware of some people who have availed themselves of that service. They have been extremely appreciative of it and they believe that the service that they got was excellent, and they did not have to travel out of Fermanagh. I am well aware that some people will probably have to travel to Fermanagh to avail themselves of that service, but we are very thankful to have it on our doorstep in the south-west.

Clearly, it is important that the facilities there are developed. I said that before. I will also pay tribute to Joe Lusby, who is on site and on hand at every opportunity. He is very open and is very willing to meet to discuss issues. He is also willing to meet to discuss problems, as well as progress. He and the management there are looking to develop even further the facilities and the opportunities at the hospital and to ensure that, whenever there are faults and mistakes, as, clearly, there will be, they do not happen again. We need to put every possible measure in place to ensure that the mistakes are limited and, indeed, cut out altogether.

That returns me to the staffing issues. From talking to individual staff members who work at the South West Acute Hospital, I know that they feel under extreme pressure at times due to work and because they have had to move from an entirely different system from that at the Erne Hospital site.

Mrs Foster mentioned the individual beds and rooms, and that is certainly very good for patient care. It requires additional work from the staff, because you cannot walk into a cubicle and look at six patients in a matter of a few seconds. You have to physically go into every room or look through the windows, and the patients accept that.

However, there is an issue with the staffing levels. The staff there feel under extreme pressure, and I hope that the trust is able to provide enough staffing resources to ensure that the services are not brought down and that the excellent service that they provide is not reduced to any degree.

Lord Morrow: I look forward to saying some words in this Adjournment debate. I am delighted to see that Mr Flanagan is not just as belligerent today as he has been in the local press about the South West Acute Hospital in recent times. I half expected a tirade from him about all the things that are wrong in the South West Hospital, which he has been highlighting in the local media in recent times. I am pleased that, in fact, he has not taken that particular line tonight, and I think that that is a good thing. Maybe now that he is on the Floor, he is more appreciative of the facilities that have been provided through the South West Hospital than he has been in recent times in his remarks in the local media. So, maybe he is on a learning curve, or maybe he has seen the error of his ways. I very much like that, respect it and thank him for it.

I believe that the South West Acute Hospital is a magnificent structure. It opened its doors on 21 June 2012 at a cost of somewhere around £270 million, if my memory is right. At the hospital, which is not specifically for Fermanagh but is based in Fermanagh, we have facilities that, in my opinion, are second to none. It replaces, of course, the old Erne Hospital, which, also in my opinion, was no longer fit for purpose. This hospital certainly is a state-of-the-art facility.

It has a pioneering vascular services programme, benefiting patients North and South, as well as a Cooperation and Working Together project for people with diabetes. There are also specific units for dedicated stroke care and for women's health, as well as mental health liaison and a GP out-of-hours service.

Mr Flanagan, who secured the debate, has accepted that these are excellent facilities for staff and patients. I concur with what Mr Elliott said about the staff, because this is a completely different, unique hospital design, in that every patient now has a dedicated ward. It is not as though six to 12 to 18 patients are being facilitated in one ward.

It slips my mind now, but I heard the number of miles that nurses travel each day as they walk around the new layout of the hospital. It is phenomenal. I just wish that I could bring to mind the number of miles that they travel. That is not in any way to denigrate or downgrade that facility, as some have been trying to do in the media in recent times; rather, it is just the way that things are and an indication of how they have moved on. Fermanagh has benefited immensely from that.

Mr Flanagan was highly critical of an expenditure of £1.3 million on locum staff over a six-month period, which, incidentally, covered the first six months of the new facility being opened. He did not make reference to that tonight. I suspect that it slipped his mind, and he will want to return to that at some other time when he is writing to the press again. I think that the facility —

6.15 pm

Mr Flanagan: I thank the Member for giving way. I really do not understand what he is talking about. We are here to discuss the range of services that is on offer at the new hospital in Enniskillen. We are not here to discuss what you think I may or may not have said. Whether I have criticised a spend of £1.3 million on locum consultants or not is nothing to do with the range of services that is on offer.

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Lord Morrow: It is not a matter of what I think he may or may not have said; it is a matter of what I read that he said. [Interruption.] Well, you were —

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order. Everything through the Chair, please.

Lord Morrow: Yes, of course. I am not the one who is shouting. The shouting is from a sedentary position.

It is easy to go to the media and be as negative as you can about a very modern, up-to-date facility. We had a state-of-the-art facility at the South Tyrone Hospital, and it is worth reminding him that one of his predecessors, who was the then Sinn Féin Minister, decided that she wanted to close that hospital or take away the acute services status — I know that he is not responsible for that, but his party certainly is. That put pressure on —

Mr Deputy Speaker: I encourage the Member to come back to the topic.

Lord Morrow: It is very relevant, Mr Deputy Speaker. The closure of that acute service put pressure on other hospitals. It put pressure on Craigavon Area Hospital; it put pressure on the acute service in Fermanagh; and it put pressure on Omagh. So, these things have a knock-on effect. When we criticise others for not doing this, that and the other, let us be ever mindful of the neglect that they perpetrated when they closed a hospital.

We have a case of having to respond to the needs of the community, and, at that time, there were literally thousands of people standing in Market Square. His party ignored each and every one of them and said, "Those people are not relevant. We will make our own decisions". So, we have a South West Acute Hospital. It is a particularly good service and a particularly fine hospital that is delivering a great service. Like others, I pay tribute to the staff in that hospital from the highest ranking position to the lowest, because they all play a significant part in delivering an excellent, full service to the community. There are teething problems, but I suspect that those will be sorted out in time.

Another thing that has been mentioned that has to happen is that we need to see an upgrading of our road system in Fermanagh and in south Tyrone. The A4, which travels from Belfast right through to Enniskillen and beyond, from Augher to Enniskillen is not a good road system, and that has to change. I hope that it does change, and I hope that the Minister for Regional Development will see the importance of that. I am sure that Mr Flanagan will agree with that too. That is one thing that needs to happen in the whole of the Fermanagh area and, indeed, in the whole of the Tyrone area.

I want to say to the Minister today — he should take it back — that what he is doing and what has been achieved in Fermanagh is greatly appreciated by the people of Fermanagh and indeed those across the border. Mr Flanagan put much emphasis on delivering a cross-border service. I do not have a real problem with that at all. As a matter of fact, I am glad that he has acknowledged that it is uniquely situated to deliver that. As a result of what is continually happening in the South West Acute Hospital, there are better days ahead. I commend the Minister for what he is doing there, and I commend the staff, whether they are in his Department or in the hospital.

Mr Lynch: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Ar dtús, I thank my colleague Phil Flanagan for bringing the debate to the House. I agree with many sentiments expressed by Members so far, but I want to remind the Member who spoke last that it was a Sinn Féin Minister who delivered the magnificent facility that we have in Enniskillen. I agree with everybody that it is the most modern in Europe. It is always the most modern until the next one is built, but, at a cost of precisely £276 million, it was one of the biggest capital projects ever brought to County Fermanagh. As somebody who had the opportunity to visit the hospital through the various stages of its construction and at the end, I saw how up to date it was. I worked on a huge hospital in Dublin in a past life, Beaumont Hospital in the 1980s, and I could see the huge difference there was in just two decades.

Like the Minister — she is gone — I had reason to visit a family member, my mother, who took a heart attack this month last year. She got excellent care in the hospital and was out in a number of days. I have also spoken to staff. When you live in the county you meet people such as porters and staff at all levels. Although there were teething problems that we all know about, there will always be teething problems with a huge project of that size. I know that it had to open weeks before its time, which led to some of the problems. In fact, nurses were talking about the old hospital being a better facility. It took them a while to get used to single rooms, but today they would not go back.

The hospital is situated, as my colleague said, in a region that has Donegal, Leitrim, Cavan, Monaghan and Tyrone. You could drive for 25 miles in any direction and you would be in one of those counties. Therefore, the potential of the new state-of-the-art hospital is in the context of that region. It is an area of approximately 200,000 people, with a typical journey time of about 90 minutes. I know that there needs to be an upgrade of some infrastructure in the area.

The report 'Unlocking the Potential of Cross-Border Hospital Planning on the Island of Ireland' stated that, given the economic circumstances in both jurisdictions, it is unlikely that a similar facility will be built in the foreseeable future. There are ageing hospitals in Monaghan, Cavan and Leitrim, with decreasing services, so it is a reality that the new acute hospital will become more important in a cross-border context. The cross-border arrangement promoting access to healthcare will follow.

The report from the Centre for Cross Border Studies recognises that there are potential benefits to be gained from increasing North/South cooperation in key areas. Some of those have been mentioned by other Members, including ENT surgery, paediatric cardiac surgery, orthopaedic surgery and acute mental services. I believe that hip replacements, which are fairly simple, routine operations today, could also be carried out in it, though some people would say that they should not. Something that I have also raised in the House is that autopsy facilities should be located and utilised on a cross-border basis. Currently, if a loved one dies suddenly in Fermanagh, they must be transferred to Belfast, 100 miles away, not only at great cost but causing extra stress for the grieving family. I am aware that there is plenty of space in the new building to carry out autopsies.

I know that the Minister has encouraged cooperation, particularly in the Newry area. The Compton review of health and social care has suggested a number of cross-border initiatives, including specialist paediatric services to be provided to patients from here in Southern hospitals and vice versa, including cancer patients. I also recognise the good work being carried out by CAWT through its INTERREG project, particularly the arrangements between North and South. That is all to be supported. However, greater cooperation in area-based planning is needed. I call on the Minister to work with his counterpart — I know that he has done so quite well — to tackle some of the barriers, whether organisational, waiting lists, patient information or insurance issues, some of which have already been resolved. Any cross-border arrangements are at risk of failing in the absence of central support. Cross-border arrangements for the new acute hospital would improve the quality of provision and improve access.

Mr McKinney: I welcome the opportunity to speak in the debate on the range of services at the South West Acute Hospital. It is a fantastic facility. We were all impressed when, after much anticipation, the building was unveiled. Indeed, it has won design awards. I also pay tribute to the caring staff at the wonderful new world-class facility. Minister Foster referred specifically to Dr Mahen Varma, whom I recall fondly. His contribution, particularly to coronary care, is legendary, and the House should acknowledge that.

Nevertheless, there are issues about the range of services in the hospital. When it first opened, one of the primary features that was marketed was the creation of a network of services. By that, I mean that medical staff, including consultants, would move between hospitals in Belfast, Derry and Enniskillen. Many were enthused about that prospect, as they felt that it would lead to an elevated level of local healthcare characterised by experience and expertise. Local people rightly envisaged a model of healthcare provision that would cater for all their needs on one site. It was hoped that the South West Acute Hospital would contain an A&E department, elective surgery and maternity services, with everything, as I said, on one site. It was to be a state-of-the-art, modern facility for fully comprehensive healthcare.

Tom Elliott said that there had been some incidents and that that was typical of many hospitals. I note that Lord Morrow does not want to brook any criticism and is selective in his, but there is a fundamental issue around how the business model was characterised at the start, which was what ultimately led to the capital investment. It has not yet delivered on its promises. We believe that that is more than just teething problems. There were warning signs on day one, when there were not sufficient doctors and nurses. I realise that the services currently undertaken in the hospital are all of a very high quality, and that has to be recognised. That is due to the ability and dedication of the staff. However, there are gaps in the range of services. One notable gap is the pain clinic. Individuals in the Fermanagh locality who need to use a pain clinic have to travel a substantial distance. Local people are bewildered that such an expansive hospital with a wide range of capabilities cannot cater for that.

As was touched on, another worrying trend is the number of people who are transferred from Enniskillen to other hospitals, particularly Altnagelvin. Indeed, we heard today that many people who live between Enniskillen and Derry will often opt for Derry to ensure that they are treated at the first facility they attend. Imagine that you lived in Fermanagh and for years had leaned on the Omagh facility, which itself was disintegrating. Ultimately, you are told that you will get a newly built, high-quality hospital that is close to you. How would you feel, if you discovered that that shining new dawn did not do all that it promised? The hospital has some empty theatres, which, as I understand, and as was reflected on earlier, are being rented out to the private sector to deal with patient lists from elsewhere. From our perspective, that is another example of health service failure. Imagine that you built a school but could find only half the teachers necessary. Imagine that you built a factory with too many production lines. Somebody, somewhere should be able to answer questions on these issues.

Ultimately, will we face a potential situation in which the hospital could have a nurse-led unit? I do not want to be facetious about that, but that has been the answer in other situations that emerged in Dungannon, mid-Ulster and elsewhere. It would be different if it were a small low-cost unit, but this a multimillion-pound service that the people of Fermanagh and the south-west saw as a beacon for their health.

I will sum up with a range of questions. Why does the hospital not have the full range of services? Why are so many locum consultants needed and at such a high cost? Over five months, £1.3 million is a very high cost. Why do people need to be transferred to Altnagelvin? Why are the North/South elements not maximised? As I said, those issues culminate in more than just teething problems. It is clear that there is considerable concern among the people of Fermanagh and elsewhere. Contrast the initial vision for the South West Acute Hospital with the questions now asked about the service that it provides — can we get some answers?

Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): I thank the Members who spoke in the debate. It is clear that the South West Acute Hospital is held in high regard by many. Mr McKinney is not about Fermanagh very often nowadays and therefore does not hold it in the same regard as, perhaps, the rest of the community does. However, I can assure him and all Members in the House. I know that they think that it is an easy pop to have a go at the health service all the time. The 70,000 people working in the health service are a bit like a family. Politicians might think that it is smart to have a go all the time. However, the health service family does not like it, particularly when it is unjustified. So it is not a smart political move at all.

6.30 pm

I know how much people in Fermanagh appreciate the service because I get their letters, and those that appreciate the service greatly outweigh the negative ones. They are in favour of and recognise the good service that is provided. Very often, I do not need middle men to tell me what goes on in facilities because the public tell me, and I know the score. Mr McKinney can press whatever line he likes here, and Mr Flanagan can press whatever line he likes in the press and media — I know the score. People appreciate that they have a brand new hospital facility and that it has been well staffed. We have spent an additional £700,000 on nursing staff. We have taken on an additional cardiologist, an additional consultant in gastroenterology, an additional stroke consultant, two MRI radiologists and an additional physician. That demonstrates that there is not just a new, shiny building but a commitment to staffing to ensure that people are delivered high-quality services.

I had the privilege of being at the opening of the hospital by Her Majesty the Queen and His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, and it was an excellent day. The people of Fermanagh and the hospital staff were out in huge numbers to welcome its opening. It is a state-of-the-art facility of which the health service can be justifiably proud. Subsequent to the opening, I have gone down there and met staff who work in the hospital at all levels. I know how dedicated and committed they are to providing a high-quality service to the people of the south-west.

The influence of the South West Acute Hospital extends beyond its catchment area. As a Queen's University teaching hospital, it is deeply involved in medical education and supports a significant number of Queen's undergraduate placements. In addition, it is the only hospital in Northern Ireland that provides medical education for students from the Royal College of Surgeons in Ireland. The hospital has attracted significant interest from other parts of Northern Ireland and elsewhere in the UK, with clinicians and managers from other areas visiting to see how it operates so successfully.

In the first year of its existence from July 2012 to June 2013, when it was, according to some people, having a whole lot of teething problems, the doctors, nurses and other professional staff working at the South West Acute Hospital clocked up an impressive volume of activity. There were 126,000 outpatient attendances, 20,000 inpatient admissions, 60,000 attendances for diagnostic imaging and 1,237 births. The emergency department had more than 29,000 attendances, with nine out of ten people attending the department treated and discharged or admitted to a ward within four hours. I know that some Members might want to work that up into a crisis, but it strikes me as a success story as opposed to a crisis.

Incidentally, reference was made to the challenges in other places. I know that the Royal Victoria Hospital, for example, has been under a degree of pressure in recent days. I can reassure Members that significant work has been taking place on that front. The Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority is assisting me in two ways at the RVH. First, it is carrying out inspections. Over the past few days, it has been in the Royal's emergency department and its acute medical ward assessing the quality of care and dignity afforded to patients. Secondly, the RQIA will facilitate the work of an external expert team to review the 9 January incident and advise how we can improve our emergency care more generally. I think that we can even learn things from the South West Acute Hospital on the management of such situations.

The South West Acute Hospital also provides general inpatient services, including medical, surgical, care of the elderly, obstetrics and gynaecology, paediatrics, maternity, neonatal, coronary care and critical care. Its elderly care and stroke wards support the work of a multidisciplinary team of specialists, meeting modern-day treatment standards and delivering hyper-acute care incorporating thrombolysis and acute rehabilitation. Consultants, visiting consultants and specialist nurses provide, on average, 300 outpatient clinics a week in all the main specialities.

There have been service developments and investments in Enniskillen in recent years in the old Erne Hospital and the new South West Acute Hospital. We have the additional consultants whom I mentioned, and those investments have increased the range of on-site inpatient and outpatient services significantly. The number of visiting consultants on site has increased. For example, urology outpatient clinics are now held in the hospital by the team based at Craigavon Area Hospital.

The South West Acute Hospital is, of course, a general hospital, and it is not possible to provide every medical speciality there. The need to concentrate specialist expertise, particularly for the more acutely ill patients or for regional and tertiary services, inevitably means that some patients in the south-west will have to travel elsewhere for treatment. However, the majority of patients will be able to access most of their healthcare locally.

The South West Acute Hospital is also at the forefront of innovation in modern, cutting-edge technology. New technology is one of the keys to providing improved healthcare. Its most obvious use is in new technologies designed to diagnose and treat patients. Staff in the hospital have on-site access to specialist and support services, including state-of-the-art radiology, pharmacy and laboratories. For example, the hospital's radiology department has fully digital radiography rooms, a fluoroscopy room, a multi-slice CT scanner, an MRI scanner and three ultrasound rooms. The department is almost paperless, with requests and reports being processed electronically. In the hospital's intensive care unit, the clinical information system utilises the most recent technological advances in computer-patient interfacing to improve the quality and standard of care. That allows nurses more time to focus their skills on the patients, reduce mortality, improve outcomes and provide a better service to patients.

Technology can help improve patient safety, alleviate some of the pressures on our staff, reduce duplication, improve access to critical patient information and bring care closer to the patient's bedside. The Western Trust is also the pathfinder site for a regional feasibility pilot for electronic document management, which is the digitisation of patient medical records. The system went live in paediatrics at the South West Acute Hospital in March 2013 and is the first of its kind.

One of the recommendations in Transforming Your Care was the development of joint planning arrangements with colleagues in the Republic of Ireland. The South West Acute Hospital is well placed for collaborative cross-border working. In May 2013, James Reilly TD, the Republic's Minister for Health, and I paid a joint visit to the hospital. We met staff and patients who had benefited from participation in the Cooperation and Working Together diabetes programme and heard about developments in cross-border vascular services. The Cooperation and Working Together partnership delivers an extensive level of patient services at the South West Acute Hospital, including vascular, ophthalmology, urogynaecology and ear, nose and throat services. Services range from outpatient assessment clinics to surgical procedures and follow-up review appointments. CAWT continues to invest in reforming and modernising patient services. One example is vascular VNUS closure, which allows patients to have more efficient vascular procedures. That means that patients are treated and discharged within approximately 2 hours as outpatients, rather than inpatients who stay overnight. My Department and the HSC will continue to explore opportunities for cooperation with the Republic of Ireland where it is of mutual benefit to our health and social care systems.

Transforming Your Care also sets out the direction of travel for Northern Ireland's health and services. Transforming Your Care has indicated that the South West Acute Hospital will continue to provide general hospital services to the people of the south-west, including its rural population. The hospital will network with Altnagelvin Area Hospital and Craigavon Area Hospital. The new hospital being constructed at Omagh will also play an important role in the network of hospitals in the west. The networking between hospitals reflects the fact that no hospital stands in isolation from its neighbours, as not every service can be provided locally.

I understand that my time is gone, Mr Deputy Speaker, so I conclude at that point. Perhaps we can catch up on some of the other issues at a later time.

Northern Ireland Assembly

Monday 10 February 2014

The Assembly met at 12.00 noon (Mr Principal Deputy Speaker [Mr Mitchel McLaughlin] in the Chair).

Members observed two minutes' silence.

Assembly Business

Mr Allister: On a point of order. May I seek some information? Will the standards commissioner's report into Mr Jimmy Spratt's comments about "nutters" now be reopened, given the revelation that the 'News Letter' has a recording that indicates that Mr Spratt denied ever having made the comment, particularly since a cornerstone of Mr Bain's report is that there was no such denial? Will the matter be reopened or will that fatally flawed report now stand? What of Mr Bain, who made such a basic error?

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: It is not a point of order, as I am sure the Member is aware. It is a matter for the Committee, and it will be addressed there.

Ministerial Statement

Emergency Department Review

Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): Thank you. It is good to put the Minister of Finance in his proper place.

The statement concerns actions that I have commissioned that are aimed at ensuring the safety and quality of the service that our hospital emergency departments (ED) provide, hence reassuring the public that they can have full confidence in these services. The review's primary focus is the Belfast Trust, but the work will look at emergency departments in the regional context. I am sure that there will be issues and lessons that will be relevant across Northern Ireland.

In recent weeks, there has been a continuing debate, not least in the Assembly, about the pressures that emergency departments face. Questions have been asked, and rightly so, about whether those pressures are routine. Are they caused by a shortage of staff or funding? Are ambulance turnaround times too slow? Are winter pressures more acute than normal this year? Are those pressures and the underlying causes peculiar to Northern Ireland or are we witnessing a national phenomenon that is explained in part by the growing elderly population or by an inability to attract junior doctors to work in emergency medicine? All those are questions that we need to address if we are to sustain and to improve the high standards of emergency care in the Province.

In response to the 28 January Assembly motion, I referred to the wide range of measures that we have put in place to manage the vastly increased workload on Health and Social Care (HSC) so that we can meet and service the needs of our population, which is growing older. I also stated that we are mindful that the performance of our emergency departments falls behind that in some other parts of the United Kingdom. I am keen to learn from the widest range of peers and to benchmark against the best.

In this context, I referred to our involvement with GB expertise in the Northern Trust, for example, and said that I was giving consideration to how we could utilise similar expertise to test whether there are more things that we could do better in our emergency departments, particularly in how they integrate with the rest of the hospital.

I have spoken with members of staff in different specialities and at different levels in the Royal Victoria Hospital (RVH) in recent weeks. Other staff in the Belfast Trust have made their views heard through correspondence and engagement with the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority (RQIA) and the Public Health Agency's (PHA) 10,000 Voices project.

On 29 January, I wrote to the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety indicating that I was actively considering a review with external expert input. Following the Adjournment debate on 4 February, I sent a letter to the Committee confirming that I had decided to seek assurance for the public and for myself as Minister that our EDs are providing care of the highest quality and safety, and to identify areas where there may be opportunities to make improvements. I advised that this would take the form of an independent review bringing in expertise from outside Northern Ireland.

Taking account of the advice that I have received from clinicians and professional staff working in our emergency departments, I commissioned the RQIA to do two things to help ensure that the Belfast Trust and the wider health and social care system can act as effectively as possible on the issues arising from recent events and to ensure that there is a full and open process of review.

Firstly, I instructed RQIA to carry out inspections at the RVH site. Over the weekend of 31 January, RQIA assessed the quality of care and dignity that was afforded to patients in the emergency department and the acute medical unit (AMU). Secondly, I decided that rather than having a Health and Social Care Board-led review of the major incident that was declared at the RVH last month, it would be better for there to be a review under RQIA's role and powers. The RQIA has agreed to carry out this wider review, which will be led by Dr David Stewart, the RQIA's director of reviews and medical director. The other members of the review team will bring expertise from all the essential disciplines that are required in the speciality of emergency care. I do not wish to mention names until final confirmation has been received, but I can advise the Assembly that members will include a national expert in emergency medicine, a senior nurse, an operational manager with a successful track record in unscheduled care and an expert on ambulance-related issues. I have today published the terms of reference for this work.

RQIA has provided immediate feedback on its inspection at the RVH to the Belfast Trust, the Health and Social Care Board, the Public Health Agency and my Department on its preliminary findings. I have been advised that the inspection identified a range of issues, which cause me and my Department to have serious concern about whether the Belfast Trust is consistently performing to the high standards that I require in executing its responsibilities to patients and staff. I recognise, however, that some of these are wider issues that cannot necessarily be addressed by the trust on its own. The emerging findings help to put all the concerns that had been circulated into a clearer context. Nevertheless, this is a disappointing outcome to the inspection and reflects the unacceptable experiences that many of us have had related to us by some patients and staff. I am resolved that this will be fully and comprehensively addressed as a matter of priority. RQIA will provide me with a preliminary report on its findings later this week.

I want to share with the Assembly the aspects of the immediate feedback that have given me cause for concern. These early findings require our immediate attention. The inspectors spoke to more than 100 staff across a range of roles and functions. The inspection has confirmed concerns about staffing levels in key areas, allegations of bullying, staff under intolerable pressure and a system of care that does not function fully as it was set up to do. The concerns relate to the emergency department itself, to the acute medical unit, which is a 60-bed unit for the assessment and treatment of admitted patients, including many admitted through the ED, and to some aspects of the wider hospital and trust functions. There are genuine and heartfelt concerns from clinicians about the impact that this difficult situation is having on patients.

The emerging findings recognised that the model of care and the intended approach to managing the treatment and placement of patients in the hospital is good but that the system has, on occasions, struggled to cope with the large numbers of patients who are awaiting admission. It appears that one root of the problem is as much in the delay in discharging patients who no longer need care in the acute setting as in the flows into and through the hospital. When large numbers are waiting for discharge, it is not always possible for patients to be placed in the correct specialty ward, where their particular conditions can be treated in the best possible way. It is well known that when patients are outliers — that is, that they are in a ward not specialising in the care of their particular condition — it is more difficult to provide the specialist care of the required quality and to do so as safely.

The inspection found that, in some settings and/or at some times, there are not enough doctors and nurses to provide appropriate care to the number of patients in the system. In some cases, this means staff working in areas that ideally they would have more experience to undertake. The pressure on staff limits the time to undertake professional supervision and appraisal. Sickness absence among nursing staff in the AMU is high. I understand that the trust has already taken some steps to address these issues and expects to appoint additional medical and nursing staff quickly.

Any reference to potentially unsafe care needs to be addressed with caution as all HSC organisations and all staff have clear statutory and professional obligations to provide safe care. Consideration of such allegations must be measured and proportionate as these are preliminary findings and we need to assure people facing emergencies that their needs can and will be met safely. Disproportionate or hasty interventions could be very damaging. However, we have to face the fact that concerns about safety have been expressed in the comments that led me to commission the inspection, and some significant points seem to have been confirmed in the inspection. I have no doubt that the Belfast Trust is doing all it can to ensure safety and is already acting on the key findings.

Risks to safety in the emergency department itself arise in the times when its functions are impeded by having too many patients at one time. Physical access to patients can be difficult for staff. There is a lack of space in the resuscitation area. Cubicles in the focused assessment area are being used at times to care for patients while they await transfer to specialist hospital beds. There are often many patients waiting for admission who need nursing care, including administration of drugs. This is difficult to carry out in an open environment. Beyond the ED itself, staffing levels in the AMU need to be sufficient to care for the needs of patients who are, by definition, acutely ill, and the trust also needs to find ways that reduce the risks associated with the care of patients who are outlying in other wards, given that they require the clinical team from another ward to attend to their needs.

The inspection also found concerns about the environment and patient experience. There is insufficient space in the ED for the number of patients waiting. Patients waiting on trolleys are very close to the next patient. The ED can be noisy, draughty and cold as it is not designed to operate as a ward environment. The AMU consists of 60 beds, and the size and layout of the ward are difficult and confusing for families and patients. There is insufficient equipment in the ED and the AMU. The present conditions make the delivery of personal care by the nursing team in the ED difficult. Clinical observations and procedures are carried out in an open environment. The provision of meals and drinks are hampered. All of this points to issues of respect and dignity that are unacceptable. The patient tracking system is identified as not working well, and some patients' discharges are not happening in as timely a manner as staff would wish.

References to a bullying culture cause me particular concern. We have access time targets for unscheduled care, and I make no apology that these have been applied for many years and form part of the performance management function of the HSCB in relation to all trusts. I think that it would be wrong to say that it is acceptable for patients needing emergency care to wait for more than 12 hours for admission or discharge, and that is clearly the view that the public express. However, my message has always been that quality and safety must come first. Also, the access time targets are intended to promote good care and reduce the risk of poor patient experience. It appears that concern about the 12-hour and four-hour targets for emergency care may have led to some unacceptable behaviour by some staff on some occasions.

It is important that we achieve positive change in that culture and approach. My message is, and has been, very clear: patient care comes first, and no one should ever do the wrong thing to meet a target. Front line staff should be able to focus on the quality and safety of care. It is the responsibility of senior managers to ensure that it is possible for front line staff to do that and to meet the targets. That includes the responsibility to ensure that sufficient staff are available and that systems are working effectively. Senior managers know that if a task is impossible for any reason, they have the right and the responsibility to say so, as they are accountable to the Department for the threefold responsibility of providing high-quality, safe services that deliver the ministerial targets within the available resources.

12.15 pm

Against that background, I am glad to say that the inspection confirmed that there is an overwhelming desire from staff to be part of the solution, and I want to assure Members that that will happen. In response, the Belfast Trust has acted quickly to address the RQIA's emerging findings. I will say more about that in the days ahead. However, I stress that I have not yet received the considered and full findings even of the immediate inspection. It is important that we await the report on the inspection and the fuller review before reaching considered conclusions.

Although I recognise the gravity of the situation, I wish to reassure the public and the Assembly that the Belfast Trust will continue to provide services in the RVH's emergency department to meet the needs of its population, as a result of the commitment of all its staff. It is acting to manage the risks to safety that have been highlighted. However, we need to ensure that that is embedded in how care is organised and delivered. The trust's management team has responded with an open and fully transparent approach to the RQIA's inspection and is working constructively with the board, the PHA and my Department in moving forward.

It is right to express high appreciation for all staff who provide emergency care in the Belfast Trust for their dedication and commitment to their patients, and, most obviously, to all the front line staff who have kept going with a Blitz-like spirit, and also to the senior managers who are wrestling with highly complex and challenging responsibilities. I urge Members to recognise the great complexity of the situation: if easy solutions were available, they would have already been adopted. I want to thank the staff for their candour in expressing their views to the RQIA. I understand that the staff have welcomed the inspection, and I hope that they now have confidence that their concerns will be fully addressed.

The RQIA's wider review will report to me by June. Although the focus of the review is on the RVH as the Province's major trauma centre, undoubtedly there will be learning that can be of benefit more generally across the system. The review will, therefore, identify and recommend opportunities for all parts of the healthcare system to contribute to improving emergency care in Northern Ireland. It will look at how the whole system could remove some of the burden on emergency departments and offer a much improved patient experience.

I hope that the Assembly will appreciate that it is important to make progress in a considered and measured way, listening to the views of front line professionals and patients, mindful of the importance of ensuring at all times that the public retain confidence in our hospitals and continue to use them appropriately, not because I say so, but because the staff make it so.

Occasionally, the system has to respond to extreme pressure, such as that in the RVH on 8 January when the trust activated its major incident plan, or the major incident declared by the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service at the Odyssey Arena last Thursday. In both cases, the system implemented its escalation plans to ensure that patient safety was maintained and that the necessary resources were made available. I should like to take this opportunity to commend the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service and the Belfast and South Eastern Trusts for their action on Thursday evening in responding to what was a very serious and potentially volatile situation.

I have made it clear from my first day as Minister that the underlying objective for the entire health system is to protect and improve the quality of services that we deliver. The health service must be safe, effective and totally focused on the patient, as they are at the heart of everything that we do. Today, I assure the Assembly of my commitment to continue to work to improve the care provided for all patients, not least those who use our emergency departments.

I look forward to receiving the RQIA's report in June. It will be an important report, and it will complement the substantial work already being undertaken by HSC to improve emergency care in the short term and in the medium to longer term through Transforming Your Care.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin (The Chairperson of the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety): Go raibh maith agat, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. I thank the Minister for his statement. The initial RQIA findings are quite damning. Your statement referred to speaking to over 100 staff and confirmed concerns about staffing in key areas, allegations of bullying, staff under intolerable pressure and a system of care that does not function fully as it was set up to do. That is nothing new to us in the House or, indeed, the wider community. A year ago next month, a report from the College of Emergency Medicine clearly outlined that procedures in the Belfast Trust were neither safe nor sustainable. There was an earlier A&E improvement group. Given that the Minister is widening the review to look at emergency departments in a regional context, does he now fully accept that there is a crisis in our emergency care?

Mr Poots: Waiting times are coming down for emergency care. We are getting better outcomes in our responses to major critical illnesses such as sepsis, stroke, heart attack and major trauma. None of those aspects is experiencing a crisis situation. You are looking at improvement right across the system and at better care than was ever delivered previously.

We have a situation in which staff are working under immense pressure. I identified that, which is why I brought the RQIA in to assist us in speaking to staff and identifying their issues. Consequently, I made today's statement in support of the staff who deliver the service. It is absolutely essential that those staff are working to their optimum and getting the responses that they need from the management system and other parts of the hospital to ensure that delivery of care in emergency departments reaches its optimum output. All that is focused on delivering better working conditions and support for the staff who are at the front line of our hospitals providing front line services.

Emergency departments are always highly pressured places, but staff are feeling under more pressure than usual. Where does that pressure come from? It comes from managers. Where does the pressure on managers come from? It comes from me. Where does the pressure on me come from? It comes from you. It all directly comes back to the House, which is demanding higher and higher standards. We are living within a particular budget and expect staff to deliver for us. We have a growing population, so more and more people require emergency care. That is the essential problem. Can we do it better? I think that we can, which is why I want assistance and expertise from other places that are doing it better. That is what this is about.

Mr Wells: The Minister referred to the situation at the Odyssey last Thursday night. Will he give the Assembly his initial views on what caused that major issue for A&Es and what he and his Executive colleagues can do to ensure that similar events are not repeated?

Mr Poots: What happened at the Odyssey had a fairly significant impact on our emergency departments. Emergency departments are always prewarned if anything is going to happen. My wife used to work in an emergency department and does not like flying because so many calls came in warning of potential air incidents. Emergency departments are promptly warned that they could have a major incident on their hands, and that was the case on Thursday night with the Odyssey. Some 100 young people required treatment and care. Some of that was carried out by the voluntary sector, much of it was carried out by the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service on site, and 17 people attended emergency departments. From the first reports, it had been anticipated that many more people would need to go to emergency departments. The cause of the problem was alcohol and drugs. The people attending emergency departments were 15-, 16-, 17- and 18-year-olds. None of them should have been drinking alcohol, and the drugs were illegal. Let us be very clear that, as a consequence of taking materials that they should not have taken, young people ended up in our emergency departments.

Let us be also clear that eight out of 10 people who attend emergency departments at weekends are there as a result of taking alcohol. So society has a role to play in ensuring that we deliver care for people who really need it. Very often, actions that people take, and foolish actions that people take, contribute to the pressurised environment that we are talking about. Emergency doctors and nurses, and other staff in the facility, very often operate in an environment where they are under huge pressure as a consequence of people attending and behaving very badly as a result of having taken alcohol. All these things have to be taken into account. There are also things for other Departments and Committees to take on board to ensure a society that has greater respect for the work that is being carried out in our emergency departments.

Mr McKinney: I remind the Minister of a statement that he made on 13 January in the wake of the situation at the Royal:

"Last week's circumstances were exceptional, and it is important not to confuse an exceptional circumstance with overall performance". — [Official Report, Bound Volume 90, p276, col 2.]

"I just wish that our politicians and, indeed, our media would be more mature in how they assess things." — [Official Report, Bound Volume 90, p277, col 1.]

In that context, and given the announcement today, I offer the Minister the opportunity to apologise to those who rightly raised the issue in the media and on the Floor. Given that position and the apparent position today, I think that I am right to be sceptical. The review may be an assessment of events internal to an emergency department, but we believe that there are external influences. Will the review look at the decisions, which we believe were wrong, that influenced the crisis in the first place?

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Let us keep questions to the statement as concise as possible, please.

Mr Poots: Thank you, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker.

The apology should come from the Member and, indeed, those Members who continually castigate a system that delivers for the people of Northern Ireland and ensures the survival of more people who attend hospital with a heart attack, stroke, major trauma or sepsis when, in many other circumstances, they would not survive. I am disappointed that the Member has not apologised for that.

Mr Beggs: I thank the Minister for his statement. Some weeks after the Belfast Trust's declaration of a major incident at the Royal Victoria Hospital and the diversion of ambulances from Craigavon hospital, the Minister denied that there was a crisis in A&E in Northern Ireland. Why is he only now advising us of a review of A&E, having denied that there was a crisis? Is it a result of tomorrow night's 'Spotlight' programme on A&E and the spotlight that will be shone by the Health Committee later this week?

Mr Poots: We will wait and see how maturely that programme handles things and how well it puts the case for the good things that are happening in hospitals, or whether it is just another session of attacking the healthcare system. I had decided, before learning anything of 'Spotlight', to ask the RQIA to look at what was going on in the Royal Victoria Hospital. That was not on the back of any Assembly Members or the media. That was on the back of talking to people on the ground and to staff. That is one of the benefits of having a local Minister who is prepared to go to a hospital immediately after there has been a difficulty to see what is happening on the ground, arrange to meet people thereafter and identify the issues and problems. Staff said that they were operating under immense pressure and did not feel that they were getting the support throughout the hospital that would allow them to ensure that ED output flowed more smoothly. It is about paying attention to the needs of the local community and the people who serve that local community and doing something about it.

12.30 pm

Mr McCarthy: Once again, it takes a crisis or major incident to effect an urgent investigation. Let us hope that the review will bring some change.

It appears that we are losing experts in the field to regions outside Northern Ireland where conditions are much more attractive. What consideration will be given to the introduction of incentives to encourage medical staff to specialise in emergency medicine and remain in Northern Ireland? Will the Minister concede that the continued reduction of 3% per annum in the budget makes Transforming Your Care impossible to fulfill, and, as such, ill people will continue to suffer?

Mr Poots: If Mr McCarthy wants to do something about the health budget, perhaps he can ensure that we get some money off the Department of Justice, DEL or some other Department that will enable us to spend more.

In spite of the fact that we had the 3% cut that the Member refers to, we have been able to employ 100 more doctors and increase the number of nurses who are employed in the Health and Social Care system. The Member may not understand that. He is on the Health Committee, so he should know and understand that we have spent resources more wisely, sought to reduce waste and employed more staff on the front line. Therefore, I do not accept that implementing Transforming Your Care is an impossibility. It is absolutely essential that we implement it; otherwise, the problems will keep coming at us.

I understand that we are in the middle of the process of implementing Transforming Your Care. One requirement of the additional £30 million that the Minister of Finance was able to allocate to us was to take on more staff to carry out domiciliary care, and the money has enabled us to do that.

It is very important that we keep more people in their own home, support them to be in their own home and support our older population.

What some Members fail to recognise is that we are successfully keeping people living longer. Sixty per cent of our hospital beds are taken up by people who are over the age of 65. The more successful that we are, the more work that we will create for ourselves, and more pressures will be applied. If the Assembly wants to take a different view on budgets, it is for the Assembly to take that view. If it wants to identify that health needs greater resources, that is a matter for this Assembly. We are living within the resources that we have, and we are doing it well.

What we have in the hospital at present is a situation in which staff are operating under a lot of pressure. We believe that we can assist them to ensure that we resolve the issues and problems. That is what I am proposing to do today, and that is something that the House should welcome.

Mr Dunne: I thank the Minister for his statement, for his work in trying to make A&Es more efficient and for challenging managers to work more effectively. Does he agree that we should not be seeing adverse incidents in the health service? How does Northern Ireland's handling of such incidents compare with that of other places?

Mr Poots: Adverse incidents arise because of a number of circumstances. Sometimes, they can arise in the community. Very often, they will arise before they reach an emergency department. They can be the result of vulnerable adults, children in care, vulnerable children, and so on.

When standardised against hospital mortality rates for the five trusts compared with those of the 146 English acute trusts, the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust is at 99.1% on the index. That is pretty close to the national average. The same applies for serious adverse incidents. Northern Ireland is not falling behind other parts of the United Kingdom in the quality of healthcare and social care that it provides for people.

Mr Hazzard: I thank the Minister for his statement and welcome the fact that he is having a review into the crisis.

He poured scorn on those of us who, he says, castigate the system. We do not castigate the system, rather, we simply want to call into question those who are on world-class salaries yet are unable to run a world-class health system in the North.

On the question of widening the review to look at hospitals such as Downe, can the Minister give assurances that the trust that people have lost in those who govern the health system will be rebuilt throughout the review? Go raibh míle maith agat.

Mr Poots: Perhaps the Member has just returned from Wexford — from another country — in the past few hours. If he had fallen ill there, he would have got a lesser standard of treatment than if he had fallen ill here. Perhaps Sinn Féin should recognise that, whilst Northern Ireland, in United Kingdom terms, could do better, it looks pretty good against the Republic of Ireland. That is what you would like to take us into, of course; I recognise that.

I understand that recruitment to emergency departments is challenging. It is not just challenging here; it is challenging in other parts of the United Kingdom and in the Republic of Ireland. Of course, that will be an issue for Downe Hospital. I have identified quite a number of doctors who have chosen to go to other countries, such as Australia. Around one quarter of emergency doctors in Australia come from either the United Kingdom or the Republic of Ireland. I have asked why that is the case. Very often, people talk about better working conditions, managers who are more responsive to the needs of the doctors and so forth. Those are areas that we can do something about and make being an emergency practitioner here more attractive. They also indicated that, within the hospitals, they felt that they got better support from the communities — the people who attended emergency departments — and that it was less abusive.

Perhaps you and everybody should stand with our emergency staff and say that the abuse that they take at times is wholly unacceptable. As a community, we need to ensure that we support our staff in those instances, as opposed to demanding and demanding and demanding more of the staff on behalf of people who abuse the system.

Mr Givan: I commend the Minister; whilst others try to grab the headlines, he seeks to grab the difficult issues and tries to resolve them. With regard to assuring himself that he is hearing from front line members of staff who are working in the emergency departments, what efforts is he taking to meet them and speak with them, as opposed to hearing a message that may well be filtered — this is a concern of some of the staff — through senior management? Some of the staff who have contacted me have indicated that the failure of the South Eastern Trust to maintain the services at the Lagan Valley was having a detrimental impact on the Royal Victoria Hospital. What efforts are being taken to resolve that?

Mr Poots: The Member knows that I have sought to meet, and have met, members of staff who are working on the ground. As a consequence of having met the staff directly and identified the issues, we brought in the RQIA and carried out that piece of work. The report will be initiated by others who have expertise on the issue.

We have approached Dr Taj Hassan, for example, who is a vice-president of the College of Emergency Medicine, to participate in the review. The Chair of the Committee referred to the previous review; Dr Hassan was one of the key architects of that review. I am sure that he will want to assure us of the full implementation of that review if he is able to take up the post. Dr Hassan has agreed that he is prepared to do this, but he needs to get the authority of his employers, and that is being sought. There has to be final confirmation of that.

The RQIA has been talking directly to the staff, identifying those issues, on the back of us talking directly to the staff. I am telling the House that, having identified the issues, we want to go further and do something about it. We want to ensure that our staff work in the optimum conditions, because staff working in optimum conditions will provide the best level of service for the people who need it.

Mr Rogers: I thank the Minister for his statement. We all commend the work of the staff. Minister, do you accept that the closure of the Downe Hospital at weekends and at night has put increased pressure on the Royal and the Ulster Hospital, considering that 40% of the Belfast Trust's patients are treated at the Ulster's accident and emergency? Will you widen this out to look at A&E provision outside the Belfast area and how that affects the Downe and so on?

Mr Poots: There is not evidence to suggest that the pressures that were identified in the Royal Victoria Hospital were a consequence of the Lagan Valley and Downe circumstance. The Member referred to a large number of people, particularly from east Belfast, who use the Ulster Hospital. I should also refer to a large number of people who live in the South Eastern Trust area, particularly in the Colin area, who use the Royal Victoria Hospital as their base. So, there is a degree of counterbalance to that.

The South Eastern Trust has had trouble attracting the requisite number of doctors that would ensure that the service could continue in the Downe Hospital. I have impressed upon the trust the importance of going out and being more vigorous in its recruitment and to seek to ensure that we get more staff there. That will ensure that we can have as strong a service as possible in the likes of the Downe and the Lagan Valley Hospital and that we can seek to ensure that we treat people outside the key sites.

I make it very clear that the Ulster Hospital and the Royal Victoria Hospital are the acute hospitals in that region. That is where people are best placed for acute care. I think that it is absolutely appropriate that a lot of the people, particularly older people, who go through emergency departments with issues that involve admissions, are admitted directly to the likes of Lagan Valley Hospital and the Downe Hospital. People with many of the minor injuries should not be travelling to the South Eastern Trust to the Ulster Hospital or, indeed, to the Royal. We need to ensure that steps are taken to avoid those circumstances, and I have impressed that need upon the trust.

Mr Cree: Minister, thank you for the statement. I am looking at some of the figures, and I see that the performance on four-hour waits at A&Es across Northern Ireland has continued to decline every year since you took over in 2011. That may just be a coincidence. However, the external review at Antrim produced a degree of improvement across a wide range of services. I wonder, on behalf of the constituents of North Down, and, indeed, further afield, when we can expect similar investment in staff levels, improved management and, of course, resources at the Ulster, which you just mentioned.

Mr Poots: Perhaps it is also a coincidence that the 12-hour waits have been coming down since I came into office. Nonetheless, we have given investment for each trust to have additional beds and support in the hospitals, particularly over the winter period. So, they have all received finance to assist them through the winter period when the pressures are somewhat higher. That is a course of work that has been carried out.

The Ulster Hospital has also taken on additional consultants over my time. Indeed, we have taken on additional doctors and nurses across the system. So, in spite of the constrained finances that exist across the UK, which have been applied here in Northern Ireland, we have managed to employ more doctors and nurses to deal with people on the front line of services. We are offering more domiciliary care, and we are engaging in offering more social care support to people. In all those measurements, we are doing more than was previously the case.

Mr I McCrea: I welcome the Minister's statement. Having previously welcomed the turnaround team that he introduced to Antrim Area Hospital, I certainly welcome what he has decided on with the RQIA. No doubt, that will bring some benefit to aid the healthcare workers in the emergency departments.

The Minister referred to the number of people who come to the A&E departments with alcohol-related problems. As part of signposting people to minor injury units, has the Minister given any consideration to ensuring that the emergency departments are not overused by people who should not be there?

Mr Poots: In our hospitals, we need to look at having an emergency department that is purely an emergency department; where the triage takes place and that admits people to an emergency department. Others would remain in an acute services department, minor injuries or something that has another description, because what is an emergency department?

I named the four issues that take most lives: sepsis, stroke, major trauma and cardiac incidents. We provide excellent care for those things, and it really grates on me that Members do not even bother to acknowledge that excellent care and the better standards in all those things. In fact, if you had a stroke in 2012-13, the chances of you dying were 16.8% lower than in 2008-09. We are doing better on those major things, and perhaps people would be decent enough to acknowledge the good care that is being provided. However, in doing that, do we separate at the door of the hospital those kind of treatments from the other treatments that involve admitting people with chronic illnesses, which is acute care? Indeed, should minor injuries be separated as well? We need to look at and address those issues, and I hope that, as the report comes to a conclusion later this year, we will have very clear recommendations on the way forward to ensure that we can provide the best possible care across the board.

It is important that public confidence is not diminished as a result of people carping and seeking to make a headline for themselves. It is important that public confidence is maintained in our health and social care system, and the fact is that people are being seen quicker and are getting better treatment than was the case a number of years ago. We should focus on that at this time as well.

Mr Allister: Can I ask the Minister this directly: have any trolley waits or delays led to or contributed to any fatalities? Given the catalogue of failure that has been recited today, does the buck ever stop with the Minister?

Mr Poots: When Ministers learn something, they do something about it, and I am telling the Assembly today that we are doing something about it. The Member knows very well the problems in the Northern Trust area, which is his area, and if he is in contact with his constituents, they will tell him that they are getting a much better service after the intervention of the Minister. I got criticised because I asked someone to step down because I did not think that they were carrying out their job as well as they should have been. Subsequent to that, there has been a dramatic improvement in the Antrim Area Hospital and in the Northern Trust. Mr Allister could have paid tribute to us for the service that we have provided for his constituents.

Mr Agnew: The Minister said in response to a previous supplementary question that there was no evidence that the closure of the Downe and Lagan Valley A&Es in the evenings and weekends contributed to the major incident at Lagan Valley Hospital. However, an answer in an AQW that he provided to me shows that approximately 20% of the patients admitted that night were from those areas. Will he give a commitment that, should the review signal that this is a problem and is contributing to the problem, he will seek to solve the problems in recruiting staff for those A&Es rather than simply keeping them closed?

Mr Poots: When he got the answer, the Member obviously did not check the figures for the previous year and the year before that. He may not be aware that the Royal Victoria Hospital is a regional facility. So, it takes people from across Northern Ireland. It is the major trauma facility and the lead hospital for a series of specialisms. So, of course it will serve people from outside Belfast. I do not think that we should discriminate against people outside Belfast for specialisms. And, of course, it also takes a large number of people who migrate to it from the Colin area, naturally, and indeed from the Lisburn area; but there are substantial numbers of others, in the Belfast Trust area, who migrate to the South Eastern area to use the Ulster Hospital facilities, as the Member should know.

Mr McNarry: It is clear that confidence in the service is enjoyed by many. However, revelations damaging that confidence are not, I contend, based on lies told by anyone. How competent is the system for dealing with revelations via complaints, and can we all be confident that the system itself is efficient and impartial?

Mr Poots: As the Member knows, healthcare is always in a very fluid situation. Millions attend our hospitals during the year and 70,000 staff work in them. We are spending £4.5 billion. That is a massive scale. Does anybody think that you can operate a system like that and not hit problems? I think that the Member asks how we respond to those problems, and that is what is important.

I hope that, at trust level, responses are good and effective. That is not always the case and, sometimes, we have to intervene. That is why I am intervening in this instance, to ensure that the trust gets the support it needs to ensure that it delivers the service that the public desires. That is our aim, our goal and is why we are giving support to the trust in this instance.

Mrs Cameron: I thank the Minister for his statement and welcome the review. I also welcome the marked improvements in the Antrim Area Hospital which is in my constituency of South Antrim. I ask the Minister for his assessment of how our emergency departments perform with genuine life-and-death emergencies.

Mr Poots: With respect to the performance of emergency departments in those genuine life-and-death situations, we have identified that improvements are being carried out. For example, one of the recent innovations is a 24/7 cath lab, which has been installed at the Royal Victoria Hospital and which will be in place later this year at Altnagelvin Area Hospital. That will reduce mortality among people who have heart attacks.

We have already indicated that we have reduced the number of people who die as a result of stroke. We are doing well with regard to sepsis and we are doing better with regard to major traumas. So, in those key areas of life-and-death situations, which is what people really perceive and what EDs should really be about, we are doing better and the public can have confidence that if they fall ill with a major serious illness the appropriate expertise will be able to deal with them and provide the best possible care for them. On some occasions — a very small number — it may fall short, but in the vast majority of incidents, over 99% of cases, people will be well treated.

Mr Brady: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. I apologise for having missed the start of the Minister's statement. I thank him for it. Earlier, he referred to Wexford. Sinn Féin is not yet in Government in the Twenty-six Counties, but you can be sure that, when we are, health will be a priority.

The Minister accepts that a shortage of staff contributes to some of the problems in A&E. You said in your statement that the trust has taken steps to address the problem by recruiting staff. Why was that not done earlier? People have been talking about this long-term problem for at least 18 months.

Mr Poots: Additional staff have been recruited. One of the things that we want the report to identify is that the appropriate number of staff is employed and that the shifts are right to allow us to respond to people. All those things can be looked at to see whether improvements can be made. Representatives of the College of Emergency Medicine came over last March to look at the system and reported to us in August. A series of steps have been taken to implement their recommendations, and work is ongoing with regard to full implementation of the recommendations. I trust that the process that I have announced today will hasten that and ensure that those recommendations are fully and more quickly implemented.

Mrs D Kelly: The report makes stark reading. The SDLP has always been pleased to stand with staff to bring the issue to the Minister's attention. It is a somewhat belated response but is, nonetheless, welcome.

The statement refers to A&E units not being equipped to be wards because they are not the right environment. Is the Minister aware that, to the best of my knowledge, on Saturday night past, no beds were available in the Belfast Trust? The lack of bed availability is having a direct impact on A&E waiting times and trolley waits. Will the review acknowledge that and examine that difficulty, which is leading to the problems being experienced by A&E patients?

Mr Poots: Of course I recognise that. That is one reason why I propose to bring in expertise. If the Member had been listening earlier, she would know that one problem in our emergency departments is the whole hospital environment and the ability of other parts of a hospital to take people out of emergency departments at the appropriate times. People are not being discharged quickly enough, and emergency departments have more to do. We believe that there can be further improvement in that regard, which is a key element of what we are doing. We are bringing a team together to look at that to ensure that the whole hospital system works as effectively as it should do, which should lead to a major reduction in the pressures on our emergency departments.

Mr D McIlveen: I also apologise for being a little detained in getting to the Chamber this afternoon. Unlike some of the Minister's predecessors, he has clearly been speaking to front line staff in the health service. Will he elaborate on the impact of those who have, either through the media or in the House, used flyaway headline-grabbing descriptions such as "crises" to castigate those in the front line of the health service? What has been the impact on morale, particularly for staff who find themselves in such a situation?

Mr Poots: If we look at international news, we will probably see crises. There is probably a crisis in England, where people are having significant problems in accessing services such as healthcare because of flooding. We have had difficult situations to manage. They have been highly pressured situations, but Members wish to drum them up into something else so that they can grab a cheap headline. I am not interested in cheap headlines; I am interested in outcomes. Our hospital outcomes are better than they were a number of years ago. We continue to improve outcomes because we have brilliant front line staff who provide a great service for us. I am proud of them, and I am standing with them. I urge all Members to stand with us.

Mr P Ramsey: I welcome the Minister's statement. I note his reference to the unfortunate incident at the Odyssey last Thursday night, when 100 young people created an emergency situation because of alcohol and drug misuse. Will the Minister, along with me, acknowledge the many thousands of young people across Northern Ireland who behaved responsibly and maturely and are tarnished by the unfortunate incident last week?

Mr Poots: The majority of young people in Northern Ireland are good young people. I was at an event on Saturday night with many young people who are going to Poland to help young people there who are in very needy circumstances. I was in conversation with someone from Mr Ramsey's part of the world who had witnessed some young people getting onto a bus. He said that the amount of alcohol being loaded onto that bus resembled a mini-off-licence. It was wholly irresponsible of the private coach hire company to allow that to happen. It is against the law, and it is the Department of the Environment's responsibility to enforce it. It is my intention to set up a meeting to include people from the PSNI, the DOE, which has a very significant job to do in enforcement, and the Odyssey to identify how we can reduce the risk of things like this happening again.

1.00 pm

If you go to the Odyssey or other parts of Belfast on a Saturday night, you will find smaller but significant numbers of young people in similar circumstances, and many will end up in our emergency departments. We cannot continue with this attitude to alcohol. Our young people consume far too much of it. Over the weekend, I got a letter from an emergency department consultant in which she said that she feared that, in 10 years' time, there would be an explosion of young women who had developed liver problems as a consequence of the total abuse of alcohol in their teenage years. The House needs to do something about that.

Executive Committee Business

Suspension of Standing Orders

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel):
I beg to move

That Standing Orders 10(2) to 10(4) be suspended for 10 February 2014.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Before we proceed to the Question, I remind Members that the motion requires cross-community support.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved (with cross-community support):

That Standing Orders 10(2) to 10(4) be suspended for 10 February 2014.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: As there are Ayes from all sides of the House and no dissenting voices, I am satisfied that cross-community support has been demonstrated. Today's sitting may go beyond 7.00 pm, if required.

Spring Supplementary Estimates 2013-14 and Vote on Account 2014-15

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The next two motions relate to the Supply resolutions. As usual, there will be a single debate on the two motions. I shall call the Minister to move the first motion, and the debate on both motions will then begin. When all who wish to speak have done so, I shall put the Question on the first motion. The second motion will then be read into the record, and I will call the Minister to move it. The Question will then be put on the second motion.

The Business Committee has agreed to allow up to four hours and 30 minutes for the debate. The Minister will have up to 60 minutes to allocate at his discretion between proposing and making a winding-up speech. All other Members who are called to speak will have 10 minutes. If that is clear, we shall proceed.

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel):
I beg to move

That this Assembly approves that a total sum, not exceeding £15,530,883,000, be granted out of the Consolidated Fund for or towards defraying the charges for Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2014 and that total resources, not exceeding £16,606,564,000, be authorised for use by Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2014 as summarised for each Department or other public body in columns 3(c) and 2(c) of table 1 in the volume of the Northern Ireland spring Supplementary Estimates 2013-14 that was laid before the Assembly on 3 February 2014.

That this Assembly approves that a sum, not exceeding £7,062,352,000, be granted out of the Consolidated Fund on account for or towards defraying the charges for Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2015 and that resources, not exceeding £7,545,788,000, be authorised, on account, for use by Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility

Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2015 as summarised for each Department or other public body in columns 4 and 6 of table 1 in the Vote on Account 2014-15 document that was laid before the Assembly on 3 February 2014. — [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: We then move to the debate proper. I call Mr Daithí McKay, the Chairperson of the Finance Committee. Sorry, the Minister wishes to make a statement.

Mr Hamilton: The Supply resolutions debate is a critical step in the legislative process that governs our finances. The debate covers the final spending plans for 2013-14. In the first Supply motion, I seek the Assembly's legislative approval of the Executive's final spending plans for 2013-14 as detailed in the spring Supplementary Estimates (SSE) that have been laid before the House. Through the second motion, I request interim legislative cover for resources and funding for the first few months of 2014-15 in the form of a Vote on Account.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Dallat] in the Chair)

I request the levels of Supply set out in the motions under section 63 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, which provides for the Minister of Finance and Personnel to make recommendations to the Assembly leading to cash appropriations from the Northern Ireland Consolidated Fund.

The amounts that I ask the House to vote in Supply for 2013-14 are substantial: over £15 billion of cash, over £16 billion of resources and over £2 billion of accruing resources for spend and use by Departments and other public bodies in Northern Ireland. The first Supply motion sums up the spring Supplementary Estimates that are before us today. I take the opportunity to remind Members that the spring Supplementary Estimates reflect all in-year changes made since the Main Estimates were approved by the Assembly last June; that is, they reflect the departmental expenditure limit (DEL) changes agreed by the Executive at the June, October and January monitoring rounds as well as the annually managed expenditure (AME) funding agreed by the Treasury since the approval of the 2013-14 Main Estimates in June.

Before going into some of the detail of the spending plans for 2013-14, I want to make some important points. Over the next few weeks, we will progress a significant tranche of business through the House relating to the Supply resolutions and the Budget Bills. Those are important pieces of legislation, but it is critical and crucial that Members appreciate that today's debate is not an opportunity to redistribute funds for particular issues. Rather, it is about giving legislative authority to the decisions already taken by the Executive on public expenditure for 2013-14. In addition, it is about ensuring that departmental spending for 2014-15 can go ahead with legislative cover from the start of the next financial year. In effect, the legislative process today and over the next few weeks simply gives form to budgets agreed by the Executive in January monitoring and in previous Budget exercises for 2014-15.

Therefore, it is my hope, perhaps optimistically, that Members will not use the opportunity to seek a debate on what project should be funded and where but instead will focus on the specifics of what the budgets have achieved over the 2013-14 financial year. That, in essence, is what today's debate is all about, but I suspect that the call to focus on the specifics of the spring Supplementary Estimates may fall on deaf ears.

With that in mind, let me turn to a topic that has a bearing on the Estimates, and that is welfare reform. I again express my concern that the public expenditure consequences of welfare reform non-delivery have not been taken as seriously as they should. I confirmed in January monitoring that £15 million will be lost to the Northern Ireland departmental expenditure limit in the 2013-14 financial year. That is not some theoretical accounting adjustment but money that could have been allocated to local schools, hospitals, roads or other public services. The 2013-14 Estimates before you could, and should, contain an additional £15 million for services. However, that could not happen, because, without progress on welfare reform, Her Majesty's Treasury will now take that funding off us. Losing £15 million in that manner is simply inexcusable. Looking to the scale of the Northern Ireland DEL adjustments that lie ahead because of non-delivery of welfare reform, it is ever more unacceptable that progress is stalled.

Turning to the 2014-15 financial year, which the motion on Vote on Account covers, the forecast penalty for not progressing welfare reform is now £105 million. That simply cannot be met through the reduced requirements that usually materialise in the three monitoring rounds. It will therefore require cuts to all Departments, equivalent to 1% across all resource DEL baselines. To give some perspective as to what the £105 million cut will mean for public services, Members should note that the quantum represents the annual costs of providing around 2,500 nurses or 2,100 teachers.

If we do not implement welfare reform, I could be standing here in a few years' time telling the House that we have lost over £300 million in a single financial year as a result. Indeed, the forecast cost for failure to progress welfare reform is now over £1 billion over the next five years. In failing to proceed and allowing increasing millions of pounds of public spending to be foregone and not spent where it should be — on providing key and critical services to people across Northern Ireland — those who resist the inevitability of welfare reform are being utterly negligent in their duties and are exhibiting an abject absence of leadership.

In addition to the direct financial penalties, there are other adverse impacts on public service delivery and the wider economy that cannot be ignored. There are 1,410 people employed by the Department for Social Development in providing child maintenance and social security services to people in England on behalf of the Department for Work and Pensions. Those jobs are located in two service centres, one in Belfast and one at Lisahally, Londonderry.

The Department for Social Development is able to retain those jobs because it is able to staff the service centres with experienced staff who understand the existing benefits and the supporting IT systems. The Department for Work and Pensions is clear that, should Northern Ireland not maintain parity in the social security system and, consequently, no longer have staff experienced in using the supporting IT systems, it will have no option but to relocate the work to service centres elsewhere. The loss of those jobs to Northern Ireland would be a huge blow and would have a seriously detrimental impact on the local economy.

I agree that we must do as much as we can to protect those in our society who rely on the benefits system. My colleague the Minister for Social Development has negotiated a package of measures that will ameliorate the worst impacts of welfare reform. We are not best serving those people by removing millions of pounds from our overall departmental expenditure limit budget. That simply makes our public services poorer for all, including those who need them most. Those resisting welfare reform because they think they are protecting the vulnerable are only serving to harm those same people and potentially create more vulnerable people by depriving funding for essential public services such as health, education and housing.

The Social Development Minister has put in place a package of concessions that provides a unique opportunity to implement welfare reform here while helping those most affected by that change. It is a Northern Ireland solution for Northern Ireland people. It is an opportunity that we must grasp, and it is one that I, as Finance Minister, believe we simply cannot afford to miss.

Having had my say on that issue, I turn to the detail of today's business. This financial year has been one in which we have finally started to see some meaningful recovery in our economy. The most recent Northern Ireland composite economic index showed growth in the Northern Ireland economy of 1.2% in the 12 months from September 2012. Unemployment has fallen for 11 consecutive months. The latest Ulster Bank purchasing managers' index, published this morning, shows our recovery gaining momentum, with firms experiencing their fastest rate of growth in 10 years. Growth here is faster than in the UK as a whole.

Rising workloads and fuller order books are also translating into an increase in employment. Our construction sector, which suffered severely during the downturn, is also returning to growth, with the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors reporting in October that the sector had exited recession.

We cannot and must not be complacent. The positive indicators in our economy mean nothing to the person who has lost their job. Every job loss in our economy is one job lost too many. There is much, much more to be done, and it is within that context that the Executive have gone about their business of reallocating budgets this financial year. That job has not been easy.

The positive economic growth has not translated into an improving public expenditure purse. The public expenditure position remains constrained as the UK Government seek to deal with the legacy of debt. That public expenditure austerity at a UK level has worked its way into our budget from Her Majesty's Treasury. The Executive have had to make difficult decisions about the allocation of that funding to best equip our economy and protect our citizens.

In 2013-14, we began the financial year with an overcommitment. An extra £58.9 million of resource funding had been allocated to Departments, with the expectation that, during the course of the year, the Executive would be able to recoup that through reduced requirements being surrendered in the monitoring rounds. I can confirm that that approach has not only allowed additional funding to be appropriately planned for but has been effectively managed through the three monitoring rounds. In addition to reducing that planned overcommitment, the Executive were able to allocate further funding throughout the year to high-priority and emerging issues.

I will take a moment to look at the overall public spending picture for 2013-14. The Departments surrendered £90.7 million non-ring-fenced resource funding for redistribution in the three monitoring rounds. That compares with equivalent reduced requirements of £66.7 million, £65.7 million and £54.9 million for the preceding three years. Taking into account the Executive's Delivering Social Change funding, a capital to resource transfer and funding to manage the overcommitment and ring-fenced resources, it meant that the Executive were able to allocate some £132 million of resource to emerging issues in 2013-14.

On the capital side, Departments gave back some £181.6 million for redistribution during in-year monitoring. That included some £108 million as a result of the ongoing delay to the A5 road scheme. Again, taking into account the surplus position at the start of the year, technical adjustments and additional allocations from Her Majesty's Treasury, the Executive were able to meet capital pressures of some £249.6 million in 2013-14.

The Executive have delivered throughout 2013-14. We hosted the G8 in June and the 2013 UK City of Culture in Londonderry, which showcased to the world what Northern Ireland has to offer in hospitality and potential to invest. We held an exceptionally successful World Police and Fire Games over the summer, again highlighting to the world a Northern Ireland that is a world-class tourist attraction. I am personally particularly pleased that Ulster Rugby will host a quarter final of the Heineken Cup at the 18,000 capacity Ravenhill ground in April. That will be funded in part by the Executive. There have been plenty of positives as a result of Executive intervention.

1.15 pm

Let me turn to the detail of some of the resource and capital allocations that the Executive made this year. Some of the major allocations include £57 million to the Department of Health for a range of pressures, including elective care and the Transforming Your Care programme; £49.6 million to DRD for a range of areas, including road repairs and street lighting improvements; £11 million to the Department of Justice to support the policing operation for the G8 summit; £8.5 million to DETI for Invest NI initiatives and funding to support our Tourist Board in the promotion of major events; and £8.3 million to DARD for a hardship scheme and a TB compensation programme.

On the capital side, the Executive allocated just over £80 million to DRD for improvements to our region's infrastructure, including improvements to our road network and replacement buses for our transport network; £44 million to the Department of Health for a range of infrastructure and medical equipment investments; £27.2 million to the Department for Social Development for co-ownership and first-time buyer initiatives to help to get people on to the property ladder and to create movement in our housing sector; £26 million to DETI for an access-to-finance fund run by Invest NI and the buy-out of the Invest NI HQ PFI lease; and £25 million of financial transactions capital to be issued to the University of Ulster as a loan to assist its move to the city centre.

That is just a snapshot of some of the departmental expenditure limit allocations in the monitoring rounds. However, Members must not forget that provision was also made in the annually managed expenditure exercises and in the 2013-14 spring Supplementary Estimates for almost £3 billion of income-related social security benefits to the most vulnerable. That funding goes a long way to protect those who are most in need and provides mainly for expenditure on disability benefits, income support, pension credit, jobseeker's benefits and housing benefits.

Before leaving the detail of the spring Supplementary Estimates, I can inform the House that some additional headroom has been built in over and above the January monitoring position. Headroom has been included for the Department of Health and the Department of Justice to ensure that, should other Departments have underspends before the end of the financial year, there is sufficient legislative cover to allow unspent resources to be redirected to those Departments. That will help the Executive to maximise expenditure and should ensure that no resources are lost to Northern Ireland under the Budget exchange scheme.

In addition, some headroom has been built in for the Department for Employment and Learning to cover a technical change in the way that the Treasury accounts for student loans. That does not represent an increase in spending power for the Department; rather, it is a prudent step to provide sufficient legislative cover for student loan provision. It is critical to emphasise to the House that such headroom has been included on the condition that if — I emphasise if — the resources become available, they must be used only for the agreed purpose, effectively ring-fencing the areas that I outlined.

I am sure that Members will also endorse the actions that have been taken. The actions will ensure that we maximise the funding that is available to Northern Ireland and utilise it for areas that will provide a real benefit to the people of Northern Ireland. I hope that I speak for all in the House when I say that the last thing that I want to see is scarce funding being surrendered to Treasury at the year end.

Turning from the 2013-14 financial year and looking ahead to 2014-15, the second motion before the Assembly seeks approval for the issue of a cash and resource Vote on Account to ensure the continuation of services into the next financial year. The amounts of cash and resources that are proposed are an advance of around 45% of the final 2013-14 provision and have no direct correlation to the Budget allocations for 2014-15. That advance is necessary to enable services to continue into 2014-15 until the Main Estimates are prepared and presented to the Assembly for approval.

I commend to Members the motions on the 2013-14 spring Supplementary Estimates, the 2014-15 Vote on Account and the Supply resolution. At the end of today's debate, I will endeavour to deal with as many of the issues that Members raise over the next few hours as I can.

Mr McKay (The Chairperson of the Committee for Finance and Personnel): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Senior DFP officials briefed the Committee for Finance and Personnel on 5 February on the SSE and the Budget Bill. The Committee approved accelerated passage for the Budget Bill, which the Minister will introduce later today. That decision was on the basis that there has been appropriate consultation with the Committee, as provided for by Standing Order 42(2). I have written to the Speaker to provide confirmation of that.

As has been pointed out, the spring Supplementary Estimates reflect the changes that have been made to the opening Budget position for 2013-14 as a result of the monitoring rounds in June, October and January respectively. Additionally, the Department has explained to the Committee that headroom has been built in to the SSE to give the Executive ability to spend any last-minute underspends on priority areas to ensure that no resources are lost to Treasury under the Budget exchange scheme. I will return to that issue in a moment.

During our evidence session with departmental officials, the Committee received helpful clarification on a number of significant allocations, easements and technical adjustments that have occurred through each of the three monitoring rounds. The officials helpfully ran through the detail of these when explaining the reconciliation of the Estimates with the original budgets of Departments.

This reconciliation exercise highlighted the scale of the movement of moneys between Departments during the year. In fact, from a quick calculation, the total resource allocations amounted to over £180 million, while the total capital allocations amounted to almost £250 million. This was against total easements of almost £133 million in resource and £182 million in capital. In some instances, the figures involved were substantial, including for Health and Regional Development in particular.

The scale of the cumulative changes resulting from the nominal reallocations through monitoring rounds, combined with the in-year technical changes, will, in some cases, have resulted in significant differences between the opening and closing resource and capital allocations of Departments. In that regard, it will be important that all Statutory Committees have satisfied themselves as to the reasons for, and timing of, any significant levels of easements or return of moneys during the in-year monitoring process, and that the necessary assurances have been received on any concerns raised with Departments in minimising year-end underspend. I expect that other Members will address these issues in their contributions to today's debate.

The Committee for Finance and Personnel has undertaken an active role in scrutinising the quarterly monitoring rounds, at a strategic and departmental level, throughout the 2013-14 financial year and has received timely briefings on the Department's position prior to each monitoring round.

As regards its own expenditure, DFP had no significant allocations, but it reported easements totalling £5.9 million in resource and £1.5 million in capital, which is significant given DFP's relatively small budget. This might indicate further scope for achieving savings in the Department of Finance and Personnel budget; a point that was acknowledged by senior departmental officials during separate oral evidence on 15 January. No doubt, this will be an area that the Committee will wish to explore as part of its input to the 2015-16 Budget process.

As regards the quality of the briefing provided by DFP on its Estimates, I wish to commend the officials on their paper providing a reconciliation with the Budget. Indeed, the Committee has circulated this paper to the other Statutory Committees as a potential model for the other Departments to follow in future.

Returning to the strategic and cross-cutting issues, during the session on 5 February, members queried how DFP ensures that the Executive's main priorities are still to the fore and that value for money is being achieved in the context of the significant movement of moneys in-year. On this point, officials have sought to assure the Committee that Departments are required to make clear how their bids fit in with the Executive's priorities.

As regards the headroom issue that I mentioned earlier, the Committee has previously recognised that limited use of this facility offers flexibility to minimise year-end underspend and so avoid the handing back of money to Treasury, which nobody wants to do. However, during last week's evidence session, members probed the DFP officials on the rationale and justification for the significant amounts provided for Health at £35 million, Justice at £14 million, and Employment and Learning at £8.7million. Some unease was expressed that an increased reliance on headroom might hinder an accurate assessment of the standards of financial management and forecasting of Departments. In sharing the DFP briefing paper with the other Statutory Committees, the Committee for Finance and Personnel, therefore, highlighted the significant headroom provision and whether Committees have been fully briefed by their respective Departments.

Finally, arising from last week's evidence from DFP, the Committee has sought advice from the Department on the feasibility of a composite final out-turn report being prepared and laid in the Assembly annually in future in order to address an apparent gap in the budget and financial reporting process. Although the Finance Minister provides the Assembly with a cross-departmental picture of the provisional out-turn figures in June or July each year, no similar report is provided on the finalised position and the separate end-year accounts for individual Departments provide only a disjointed picture. This is important also in light of the point made in the Minister's January monitoring round statement about the Budget exchange position being finalised only once the final out-turn for the year is known. For completeness and transparency, perhaps, a composite final out-turn report could also include confirmation to the Assembly of the finalised Budget exchange position.

I turn now to the motion relating to the Vote on Account for 2014-15. This is a practical measure that provides interim resources at approximately 45% of the 2013-14 provision. This enables departments, as the Minister has said, to ensure that public services continue during the early part of the financial year until the Main Estimates for 2014-15 and the associated Budget Bill are debated by the Assembly before the summer.

To conclude, therefore, on behalf of the Committee for Finance and Personnel, I support the motions.

I now wish to speak briefly in an individual capacity. The Minister has already mentioned some of the allocations in the previous year. Some £3 million went to the G8, the City of Culture, the World Police and Fire Games, all of which were important for our international reputation and for tourism.

For the year ahead, and tying into the Vote on Account for 2014-15, I want to see that same flexibility applied, if need be, into significant events such as the Giro d'Italia, which will make its way from Belfast through north Antrim and all the way down to Dublin. It is important to recognise that some DSD moneys have gone to some of the towns along that route but the amount is rather minuscule and we have to bear in mind the scale of this event — which not many people seem to have caught on to yet — which will take place in just a matter of weeks up and down the eastern seaboard of Ireland. It is important that, if moneys are needed in Departments such as DETI and DCAL for the Giro d'Italia and for building a legacy after the event, the same flexibility that has been applied in this financial year is applied in the next one.

The Chairperson of the Committee for Social Development, Alex Maskey, may touch on the next issue later. The past year has been quite difficult for a number of glazing firms. I should declare an interest as a number of these firms are located in north Antrim. A great deal of money was to be spent on the double-glazing project, but that was important not just for those companies but for a lot of families who should have been provided with double glazing and would have had the ability to heat their homes and save money going into the winter. That has not been the case. In my view, there has been meddling in that scheme and it has put firms and jobs at risk in my constituency. We need to ensure that DSD's budget handling capabilities are such that construction work in all our Departments is upheld and also in terms of employment and suitable insulation for families.

Similarly, there have clearly been easements in relation to the Maze/Long Kesh project, which also would have brought construction, tourism and jobs. That was shelved because of party politics and the politics of the past. That, in my opinion, is shameful. [Interruption.] Mitchell McLaughlin mentioned the headroom issue in last week's Committee meeting. He described it as preparing for bad financial management. That is clearly true.

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is almost up.

Mr McKay: To conclude, I support the motions on behalf of the Committee and my party.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Before I call Mr Givan, I remind Members not to make remarks from a sedentary position. I am sure that no Member cherishes more the right to be able to speak without interruption.

Mr Givan (The Chairperson of the Committee for Justice): Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker. I am pleased to speak today as Chair of the Committee for Justice. As Members will know, we scrutinise the Department in respect of its delivery plans, its savings plans and all the financial matters that are related to it.

Given that over 60% of the Department's budget relates to the Police Service spend, the Chief Constable attended a Committee meeting in September last year to discuss the police budget and the pressures and challenges that he faces. I will focus on that area first. Although the cost of the huge police operation for the G8 summit was high, there has been no resultant pressure on the police budget because the Executive provided £14.5 million in resource and capital funding, with the rest coming from Her Majesty's Treasury's reserve. The operation itself was also managed very efficiently and effectively, resulting in virtually no trouble or arrests.

1.30 pm

During the year, however, the police indicated financial pressures in a range of areas, including the Historical Enquiries Team (HET), overtime costs and mutual aid costs. The Department has asked the police to absorb the costs, including that of the HET pressures, this year and next year of approximately £12.6 million. Although that has been achieved this year, it is a challenge to absorb the additional pressures while continuing to meet the required savings targets, given that over 80% of overall police costs are salary-related.

The PSNI also faces a very challenging situation with the delivery of its savings targets this year and next year. To address the problem, as well as its original planned savings from back office and areas such as estates, supplies and transport, it has initiated an efficiency programme called Service First, which aims to achieve efficiency from all parts of the organisation, especially operational activity, to gain the most from existing resources and deliver up to £45 million of efficiency savings over the next two years. No doubt, the Committee and, in particular, the Policing Board will wish to keep a very close eye on the outworkings of this project to ensure that there is no detrimental impact on front line services.

It is clear that the PSNI faces some major budget and resilience challenges currently and going forward. The medium-term resource plan highlights the fact that sustaining the level of resources that the police believe they need — a minimum of almost 7,000 warranted officers who can be used in a variety of ways, as indicated in their review of resilience and capability — will create a significant budget gap. According to the Chief Constable, 500 to 600 officers will leave through natural procedures over the next couple of years, and the PSNI can at this stage recruit only an initial tranche of about 100 officers because of budget funding uncertainty. This issue needs to be addressed over the coming months to ensure that the potential resilience issue is satisfactorily resolved.

Before moving on to other areas of the budget, let me touch briefly on the Desertcreat training college capital project. The Committee has questioned officials, including the Deputy Chief Constable, who heads up the project, on a number of occasions. As we are all aware of the issues and difficulties that have arisen, it is vital that none of the capital funding that has been made available for this project is lost due to the delays. Hopefully, substantial progress can be made in the coming months.

I turn now to the Prison Service. I very much welcome the efforts made by the Finance Minister in establishing this headroom provision, of which £14 million has been earmarked that could go to fund the voluntary service exit scheme. The funding is required to complete a voluntary scheme that would enable the final eight governor grades and 20 senior officers in the service to leave. I particularly welcome the decision by the Executive to make this a priority issue.

It is important that all staff who opted to leave under the scheme can be facilitated to do so. Approximately 500 officers have left under the scheme. Let me declare an interest: a family member was one such individual. The scheme was designed to allow older members of the service who had served during some of the most difficult periods of our Troubles to leave with dignity. I know that they have been very upset at the long protracted period that it has now taken to bring the scheme to a conclusion. If funds become available and other Departments are unable to spend them, I think that it is prudent of the Executive to have made this provision rather than send the money back to Westminster. It is a welcome move to be able to facilitate these individuals to leave the service.

Let me also take this opportunity to welcome the announcement that the Prison Service has identified the resources needed to fund the payment of a supplementary environmental risk allowance to post-2002 operational prison grade staff this year, which was recommended by the Prison Service pay review body. Staff should receive the payment this month. Again, this issue has been ongoing for some time.

Members will know that, on the back of the tragic murder of prison officer David Black, the personal security of prison officers and prison grade staff came into sharp focus and, rightly, this issue was brought to the fore. It has taken some time to get the Minister of Justice to this point. The matter was referred back to the pay review body, which made the recommendation, and I want to thank the Prison Service management, who have been able to identify the funding and make it available within their current resources. It is right that we support officers living under a threat. As they protect us, it is right that we support them.

Let me turn briefly to legal aid, which continues to generate the biggest pressure on the Department, despite the implementation of a number of changes to funding arrangements and the level of fees paid for criminal legal aid work. As early as June, the Legal Services Commission was forecasting a pressure of £27 million. The Department allocated an additional £15 million to ease the pressure. However, by October, the forecast pressure had increased to £41.7 million, or a net £26.7 million, taking into account the extra £15 million funding already provided.

In the January monitoring round, the forecast pressure now sits at around £25.8 million. The fact that the cost of legal aid is still so far above the available budget is unacceptable and unsustainable. Other areas of the Department cannot continually be expected to fund the additional cost, nor can the Department of Justice expect to receive additional money through the monitoring rounds that could be used to fund more important services and projects in other Departments.

The key cause of the pressures continues to be civil legal aid, with higher volumes and higher average case costs. There has also been an initiative by the judiciary to clear a backlog of Crown Court cases, which has led to an increase in criminal legal aid costs this year. The initiative is welcome from the point of view of speeding up cases through the justice system, but the Committee is concerned not only about the legal aid bill, which still far exceeds the available budget, but about the apparent inability of the Legal Services Commission to forecast with any accuracy the likely cost of legal aid.

An example of that is the initiative in the Crown Court, which would affect legal aid costs to be paid this year, yet no account appears to have been taken of it until the pressure emerged. Even then, the forecast was not accurate. A robust model capable of accurately forecasting legal aid costs must be developed as a matter of urgency. Otherwise, the ability of the Department to deliver the legal aid reform programme will be undermined.

The Committee will continue to scrutinise further reforms that the Minister intends to bring forward, particularly in civil legal aid, to ensure that value for money within the available budget is achieved. Bringing legal aid spending within budget is important, but also of importance to the Committee is protecting access to justice. Therefore, we are looking at possible ways of assessing the impact of changes, especially on civil legal aid for family cases. The Deputy Chairman and I will meet the chief inspector of Criminal Justice Inspection tomorrow to discuss the matter further.

Finally, on the Department's budget allocations and savings delivery plans, the Committee pays particular attention to the likely impact on the delivery of front line services. Previously, there had been indications of possible impacts on front line services in the Probation Board, the Office of the Police Ombudsman and the Police Rehabilitation and Retraining Trust. The Committee will continue to scrutinise closely the outworkings of the delivery of the savings targets in those areas and across the Department as a whole during the 2014-15 financial year.

I welcome the Minister's motion. Personally speaking, I concur with the Member for North Antrim Mr McKay, who said that he wanted flexibility to continue next year to address emerging pressures that could materialise. I say to Members opposite that, in the continued absence of leadership on their part to deal with welfare reform, they will not have the type of flexibility that they want. So step up to the mark, provide leadership and recognise reality, and then we will be able to allow our Finance Minister, who has been doing a superb job since his appointment, to continue to meet emerging pressures going into the next financial year.

Mr D Bradley: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leat as an deis cainte seo a thabhairt domh sa díospóireacht ar Mheastúcháin Fhorlíontacha an earraigh agus ar an Vóta Creidmheasa. Thank you for the opportunity to contribute to the debate on the Supplementary Estimates and the Vote on Account.

As already outlined, the spring Supplementary Estimates are, in effect, a way of summarising and tidying up the financial situation for the current financial year, and the Vote on Account is a resolution to allow initial spending into the next financial year. The SDLP will not be opposing the motions.

I begin by reminding the House that the Department reviewed the financial process, and a number of options were proposed to create a single, coherent financial framework. It was to be efficient, effective and transparent, and it was to enhance and ensure scrutiny and accountability to the Assembly. There was to be a Budget calendar for future processes, and that was to be outlined in advance to allow for adequate consultation. The Budget process was to include a strategic phase, perhaps in the spring, to precede the production of a draft Budget. That was all to allow the Assembly the opportunity to debate revenue measures and spending priorities.

Another important recommendation was that future Budget processes should include a formal stage for the reconsideration of the Budget in the light of emerging spending pressures or policy reorientation. Its aim was to inform in-year reallocations and to consider developments that might affect those reallocations. Future budgetary documents were to include a more detailed breakdown of the expenditure plans and the linkages between expenditure and performance outcomes.

The framework for a budgetary process was to be set out clearly in legislation, with additional details, where necessary, contained in the Assembly's Standing Orders. We have been told in the past that the implementation of the reforms is being halted by the Minister of Education. I do not think that that situation is acceptable. I ask the Minister this: can any of the reforms be implemented, or is it the case that the Minister of Education can hold the whole process to ransom? I am interested to hear the Minister's response to that at the end of the debate.

My colleagues will set out in today's debate and that tomorrow some of the areas in which they see a necessity for budgetary change. I will refer to some of the areas of concern as I see them, and I hope that I do not step on any of my colleagues' toes in doing so.

The ongoing failure to bring the Education and Skills Authority Bill back to the Assembly is leading to a crisis in the delivery of the £180 million capital programme for schools. The education boards and the sectoral organisations tell us that, owing to a moratorium on recruitment, they simply do not have the personnel to process the projects that await funding. The problem has the potential to impact severely on the delivery of the whole programme. I ask the Minister to give the House his views on that issue. Does he agree that there is a problem around the delivery of the programme and that it may have a negative impact on the financial situation, not to mention on the building and construction industry, which depends on the projects coming to fruition?

There are also a number of projects that seem to be locked in OFMDFM. I mention the Maze/Long Kesh development, the childcare strategy, the poverty and exclusion strategy, and the cohesion, sharing and integration strategy. The moneys tied up in those projects are of concern. Once again, I ask the Minister for his views on the financial implications of the continued delays. Those delays have an impact in the community; that is the most worrying aspect of it.

1.45 pm

Looking back, we will remember that variance and special terms were agreed for the Department of Health at the beginning of the Budget period back in 2011. However, given the monitoring performance outcomes, it seems that we have moved away from that position. In the run-in to the 2011 Budget period, the Department was allowed to keep its reduced requirements, and the quid pro quo for that was that it would not bid in the monitoring rounds except where it could demonstrate exceptional need. That arrangement seems to have been relaxed, and that has been done rather informally.

We have now reached the stage where the Department of Health is bidding along with everyone else, presumably as well as keeping its reduced requirements. I would like to hear the Minister's comments on that situation. Does he think that our health service is properly funded, or is it the case that it will constantly be in need of bailouts until the end of the budgetary period and, indeed, beyond that? I ask the Minister to outline the amount of extra money that is going to Health and for what reasons it is needed, because annex A in the book of Estimates does not explain the situation in full.

The Minister mentioned the headroom afforded to the Departments of Justice, Health, and Employment and Learning. He explained the rationale behind that: he is seeking to avoid underspend. Certainly, all of us would welcome that situation. However, as the Chair of the Committee remarked — I find myself agreeing with him — we need to be careful that such generous headroom does not contribute to the encouragement of poor financial management across Departments.

The SDLP is working responsibly for change through the democratic processes of the House. We showed that in our approach to the Public Service Pensions Bill. We have achieved changes there that are of benefit to our people, although obviously you will remember that we believe that more could have and should have been done. I hope that, today and tomorrow, we will get a chance to discuss welfare reform in more detail in response to some of the points that the Minister has made today.

In conclusion, it is obviously —

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is almost up.

Mr D Bradley: — the case that we have few economic levers here. Public spending is one of the few that we do have, and we must use it to stimulate —

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr D Bradley: — the economy. I ask the Minister to tell us —

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr D Bradley: — what is in the Budget that will foster and grow our economy.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order. The Member's time is up.

Mr Cree: I am pleased to speak on the two Supply resolutions, which I understand will be debated together.

Following on from Mr Bradley's point, last year I referred to the review of the financial process as well. That was, as you know, promoted by the Committee for Finance and Personnel and agreed by the Minister at that time and the Department. We had a debate in the House, and the House also agreed it. This matter has been under discussion for several years, and it is a great disappointment to me that it is not being progressed by the Executive.

Everyone agrees that the existing process is inadequate and does not provide direct read-across. It is well past its sell-by date and needs to be clearer and more user-friendly. I ask the Minister, and I know that he will try to tell us, why such an issue, which cannot be contentious, has not been agreed by the Executive.

There are two motions before us. The Supply motion seeks the Assembly's approval of the Executive's final spending plans for the year 2013-14, as detailed in the spring Supplementary Estimates that have been laid before the House. The second motion requires interim resources and funding for the first few months of 2014-15 in the form of a Vote on Account. The spring Supplementary Estimates are technical and tidy up the loose ends that have been dealt with in the three monitoring rounds.

I will now highlight concerns that I have with the current situation. First, in DARD, there is an easement of £1.2 million, which equates to £0.5 million for the forestry fund. I wonder why it was not possible to carry the work out as planned — that much needed and sought-after increase in forestry provision. Perhaps the Minister can advise me or perhaps he will need to check it out. Some £2.7 million was also declared as an easement in the Department of Education. Is that a capital realisation? If so, what happens to it? In the Department for Employment and Learning, an easement of £9.2 million is surrendered, which, I understand, relates to colleges' end-of-year flexibility. Is that money at risk or can it be ring-fenced for future use?

The Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment appears to have invested in one of its own headquarters during the year. It seems that, no time ago, we were talking about the very opposite: selling them off and leasing them back. However, it purchased the Invest Northern Ireland building for £17 million. I wonder whether the Minister can advise what the resultant savings in rent or lease payments will be. It also appears that £5 million came back through a reduced requirement from the economy and jobs initiative. Will that sum be reallocated or will it be available to the Department next year?

Turning to the Minister's own Department, perhaps he could comment on the easement of £1.6 million for staff costs. The Department for Social Development has shown a reduced requirement of £66.3 million, which appears to come from the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. Further clarification would be appreciated. Incidentally, some figures on the spring Supplementary Estimates for that Department have, strangely, not appeared in the volume dated February 2014. I do not know whether I got a specially printed edition, but there are some virtually blank pages.

The Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister received both resource and capital allocations through in-year monitoring. The resource amounted to £10.625 million. I understand that £3.8 million was for the Historical Institutional Abuse Inquiry and £2 million was for Delivering Social Change. On what is the balance of some £5 million intended to be expended?

Finally, there appears to be £300,000 of annually managed expenditure for the current year in respect of the settlement for the Northern Ireland Civil Service pay claim. As that has not been resolved in full, will the balance be ring-fenced or protected in any way for the next financial year?

I am sure that the Minister will be able to answer my questions satisfactorily in due course. On that basis, I am prepared to support, on behalf of the Ulster Unionist Party, the Supply resolution and the Vote on Account that are before the House.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order. The next item of business on the Order Paper is Question Time. I therefore propose by leave of the Assembly to suspend the sitting until 2.00 pm. The sitting is, by leave, suspended.

The sitting was suspended at 1.54 pm.

2.00 pm

On resuming (Mr Principal Deputy Speaker [Mr Mitchel McLaughlin] in the Chair) —

Oral Answers to Questions

Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister

Social Investment Fund

1. Ms Boyle asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the social investment fund. (AQO 5482/11-15)

2. Mr Anderson asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the social investment fund. (AQO 5483/11-15)

Mr P Robinson (The First Minister): With your permission, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, I will answer questions 1 and 2 together. I am pleased that we have announced, today, the first 23 successful projects that will be funded from the social investment fund (SIF). These projects amount to more than £33 million and are from across all nine zones. The list of 23 projects is available from the OFMDFM website, and officials will be communicating directly with the organisations involved. The remaining projects that are within the funding allocations are in the economic appraisal process, and, over the next few weeks and months, we anticipate making the remaining announcements, fully committing the £80 million fund.

Considerable work has been completed in developing the policy and structures, establishing the steering groups and supporting them in the development of their 10 projects for each zone and in getting those projects through the economic appraisal process to this final stage. Most of the individual projects have many elements within them, some with up to 15 different capital elements.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Before calling Michaela Boyle for a supplementary question, I inform Members that question 5 has been withdrawn.

Ms Boyle: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for the good news story that the 23 projects are to be announced. I am sure that the letters of offer will be going out to those other groups within the coming weeks. Given the delay in getting funding to those groups, will the Minister's office extend the timelines for spend to ensure that we get the maximum outcome from the projects?

Mr P Robinson: Yes, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, I am happy to do that. The deputy First Minister and I have consistently indicated that we are ring-fencing the £80 million. Each of the groups is aware of its allocation. I think that it is worthwhile pointing out at this stage that some of the zones will have fewer schemes in this tranche than others, which means that they will have more than others when it comes to the next and later allocations. So, rather than holding until we have the last schemes out from the appraisals being carried out by the economists, we now have a sufficient batch through the economists to make this announcement and, hopefully, in the next number of weeks, we will be able to make further announcements.

Mr Anderson: I thank the First Minister for his responses thus far. I, too, welcome the good news story that has been announced today. First Minister, of the projects announced, can you outline what projects will be funded in my area in the southern zone?

Mr P Robinson: All politics is local. I had looked at the southern zone for the withdrawn question. Six projects will be funded across the zone that incorporates the Upper Bann constituency. Amongst those are two revenue projects, which will operate on a zone-wide basis with the objective of increasing employment. They include £2.7 million for an employment work-it project. In addition, there will be four capital projects, three of which are cluster projects encompassing a number of smaller capital works. They will result in 11 capital schemes specifically within the Upper Bann constituency, including projects to sustain local infrastructure with £1.25 million.

Mr Nesbitt: I thank the First Minister. I have been checking the home page of the departmental website and clicking on the social investment fund. I see no record of the announcement, as yet. So, I apologise if this scheme is across the line, but I am not aware whether it is. The First Minister will be aware that there was a proposal for a sports facility to be put in place in the Glen Estate in Newtownards in conjunction with work ongoing on developing Londonderry Primary School, which would have been a very cost-effective use of SIF funds. Can he estimate the number of similar missed opportunities if, indeed, this proposal is not going ahead?

Mr P Robinson: I assume that the first part of his question was, "Congratulations, we are delighted to see the announcement today and we hope that the scheme will build capacity in the local area and allow local people to determine what is best for their area". His criticism of the people in Strangford will no doubt be heard by them.

Mr Nesbitt: It is not a criticism.

Mr P Robinson: It is entirely a criticism of the people in Strangford. The Member is criticising his constituents. We did not choose the schemes. They are locally chosen schemes. They were chosen by the people in the zone after consultation around his constituency. If he is unhappy with that, rather than perhaps the constituents being unhappy with him, which might be the norm, he can now be unhappy with them. [Laughter.]

Mr Attwood: I will nail my colours to the mast and say that projects that are good and not so good will be funded, and we will see where all that goes over the next period. Given that the First Minister said that, over the next weeks and months, the funds will be fully committed, is he saying that all those funds will be committed and spent by the end of the 2015-16 financial year or will we have a situation where spend will go into the next mandate, which will see the £80 million spend in SIF go over a timeline of five or six years? Is that the outcome? Is that satisfactory?

Mr P Robinson: It is a bit sanctimonious of the Member to stand and say that, although we set up local organisations representative of the political parties here, including his own, we do not like what they believe is best for their area. That is effectively what the Member is saying. We may all have judgments about what might have been the best or worst schemes in any area. That is why, rather than big government consistently taking the position that it will decide for people, this project allowed local communities to decide for themselves what was most needed in their area. His criticism is not a criticism of the scheme or the Executive but is a criticism of people in his local area.

As far as the timescales are concerned, the funding is allocated and ring-fenced. Some schemes, particularly the capital schemes, will take longer to roll out than others. The money is there for when the bills come forward, and the letters of offer will stipulate the conditions that apply.

We really cannot have it both ways. There has been criticism in the past about the delay, but you cannot criticise the delay on the one hand and then, on the other hand, fault us for putting robust procedures in place, which required more time. However, whether it is in this Programme for Government period, the comprehensive spending review period or it flows over into the next, the money is ring-fenced. As soon as the projects are completed, they will be funded.

Mr McCarthy: I welcome the announcement, even though we have not seen it, and I ask the First Minister not to keep me in suspense and to relay to the Assembly for my constituency of Strangford exactly the same details as he did for Upper Bann.

Mr P Robinson: I am delighted that I will not need to do so because I have just been informed that the SIF press release is now out. I hope that everybody does not vacate the Chamber at the one time to go and read it. It will be available. This is only the first tranche and the allocations are a minimum of £8 million for each zone. That money is ring-fenced for the zones, and, as soon as the remaining projects have been assessed by the economists, we will make those announcements and a letter of offer will go out.

EU Funding

3. Mr Swann asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the drawdown of EU competitive funding in relation to the Programme for Government target. (AQO 5484/11-15)

Mr P Robinson: Departments continue to make good progress towards meeting the 20% target. In 2011-12, year one, we drew down £23 million, and in 2012-13, year two, we drew down £18.3 million. I can confirm, therefore, that at the halfway point in the full Budget period 2011-15, £41.3 million has been drawn down, which represents 64% of the target, so we are on track to realise the total drawdown of £64.4 million by the end of March 2015. Figures for 2013-14 will be available after the end of this financial year. We will continue to monitor progress through the all-party ministerial Budget review group, which I co-chair with the deputy First Minister, and the junior Ministers will also continue to encourage Departments to deliver against this target through the Barroso task force working group.

Mr Swann: I thank the First Minister for his answer. According to some research, the framework programme for research and technological development — framework programme 7 (FP7) — indicates that Northern Ireland has drawn down only €35.33 per head whereas, in the Republic, the same figure is €590.26 per head. What steps are being put in place to rectify that discrepancy?

Mr P Robinson: If I can decode the Member, I assume that he was saying congratulations. It is good that we are not only on target but ahead of it in meeting the PFG figure of a 20% increase. You do it in precisely the way in which the Executive have set it out. You encourage officials to stretch themselves and work with the arm's-length bodies and third parties to enhance the amount of drawdown. In addition to that, through our North/South ministerial meetings, we spoke with the Irish Government on ways in which we can collaborate with them to increase both our drawdowns. Do not forget that we have just come out of a period during which we were an objective 1 area. We did not have the same level of competing under objective 1 criteria. So we are on a learning curve and are already finding ourselves ahead of the targets that we set, and we will continue to stretch officials to meet even higher targets.

Mr McGlone: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as a fhreagraí go nuige. I thank the First Minister for his answers until now. Specifically with regard to research and development, it is widely acknowledged and known that the drawdown under FP7 was quite pathetic by comparison with other EU regions. The Irish Government have set themselves a drawdown target of €1.25 billion for Horizon 2020. Has the First Minister any ambition, or has his Department set a target, for a drawdown of Horizon 2020 funding for research and innovation?

Mr P Robinson: Yes. The Irish Government's target takes them through to 2020. We are awaiting a paper from DETI setting our targets. I hope that they will be ambitious. If they are not, the Executive will want to look at them. We recognise that, in many cases, when talking about research and development, we usually mean collaboration between universities and business. We have two universities that are now working very hard. They have learned how to use the system and are submitting applications that will bear fruit in the future. Obviously, the Executive have an interest in that and will do everything they can to assist in collaborating with those who submit applications, but they are effectively led by those outside of government.

We want to increase significantly our drawdown from Europe. At the beginning, I thought that we were setting ourselves a very challenging target at 20%, and I am delighted that we are well on track to reach it. However, that does not mean that we stop as soon as we reach the 20% mark. We will continue to push officials, and those who are collaborating with third parties and arm's-length bodies, to increase the percentage. We are coming up to the halfway stage — the mid-term review — and we will look at the targets at that stage to see whether they should be increased.

Jobs: Derry 2012-13

4. Mr Eastwood asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the companies responsible for promoting 1,180 jobs in the Derry City Council area in 2012-13. (AQO 5485/11-15)

Mr P Robinson: With your permission, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, I ask my colleague, Assembly Member and junior Minister Jonathan Bell to answer this question.

Mr Bell (Junior Minister, Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister): Job creation is one of the key priorities contained in the One Plan for the city's regeneration. I emphasise the very challenging economic climate during that period. The 1,180 jobs promoted in 2012-13 are from a range of sectors, including construction, information technology, engineering and hospitality. As the Member would expect, there are commercial sensitivities regarding the information for some of the organisations and smaller businesses in the city. I can provide the details of some of the organisations and sectors behind the job figures. They include 26 construction jobs during 2012-13 on the Ebrington site through H&J Martin. In addition, the Executive backed the UK City of Culture project, which resulted in 213 jobs. Invest Northern Ireland promoted 453 jobs, including 200 in the US-owned technology firm Allstate, 20 in Allpipe Engineering and 11 in MetaCompliance Limited. Firstsource announced the creation of 100 new posts. Sixty new IT jobs were announced by Kainos. The opening of the Premier Inn created 60 jobs, and the new Iceland store created 28 jobs.

Some of the jobs were promoted and created through small business start-ups and expansions. I think that we would all want to commend the small businesses that created jobs in the city during what was a very difficult economic period. Although the economy remains fragile, we are seeing some signs of improvement. There have been a number of very significant events, such as the announcement of 190 jobs in Fujitsu last December following the First Minister and deputy First Minister's visit to Japan.

Mr Eastwood: I thank the junior Minister for his answer. It is useful to have that information. Will he tell me why his Department refused to give me the information in response to my previous questions for written answer?

Mr Bell: I happen to have a copy of the answers that were given to your questions for written answer. If you want, I will read them out. They show that the sector stated that 1,180 jobs were promoted in 2012-13. That information was given to Mr Eastwood on 17 December 2013. Either he is not getting the letters or his researcher is not telling him. That was given to you in December 2013.

Mr G Robinson: Will the junior Minister give a commitment that the promotion of the north-west will continue to be a priority during investment visits by the First Minister and deputy First Minister, particularly in light of the very welcome result arising from the Japanese visit to the north-west?

Mr Bell: Yes. We are very much committed. I have undertaken a number of visits to the area, as have the First Minister and deputy First Minister. In the margins of some of those meetings, I met the Londonderry Chamber of Commerce, city council officials and economic development officials. I am very encouraged by the can-do attitude of many. The list of jobs includes 20 in Allpipe Engineering, 200 in Allstate Northern Ireland Limited, 10 in Fleming Agri-Products Limited, 11 in MetaCompliance Limited, Season Harvest Limited, Crystal Clear e-learning organisation, right down to childcare jobs in Muddy Puddles. It is very clear that, right across the range of sectors, there is an entrepreneurial spirit in the region. We will do all that we can to encourage that.

I notice that today's 'Financial Times' records that the monthly rate of Northern Ireland business activity is at one of its all-time highs. We want business activity to increase, and we want to see some of what appear to be green shoots of a recovery delivering for areas right across Northern Ireland: north, south, east and west.

Shale Gas

6. Mr Wilson asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether they have had any discussions with the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment on bringing forward a cross-departmental policy on the exploitation of shale gas. (AQO 5487/11-15)

Mr P Robinson: Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, with your permission, I ask junior Minister Jonathan Bell to answer this question, too.

Mr Bell: The Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister has had no discussions with the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment on bringing forward a cross-departmental policy on the exploitation of shale gas. DETI officials continue to liaise with Department of the Environment officials as part of the work of the shale gas regulators' forum. In addition, Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment officials, in conjunction with the Department of the Environment's Planning Service and Northern Ireland Environment Agency officials, provided the Northern Ireland input to the 'Onshore oil and gas exploration in the UK: regulation and best practice' road map that was published by the Department of Energy and Climate Change on 17 December 2013.

Mr Wilson: Given the energy problems that we face in Northern Ireland, I am disappointed that the issue has not been addressed cross-departmentally. However, given that at least two Executive Ministers have vociferously opposed the exploitation of shale gas in Northern Ireland — something that the 42% of consumers who experience fuel poverty and the businesses that are struggling with fuel bills will find bewildering — can the junior Minister assure us that there will be serious discussions of energy policy, investment policy, planning policy, environmental policy and mineral exploitation policy to ensure that we do not lose out on the opportunity that has transformed the American economy and that has the potential to transform the Northern Ireland economy?

Some Members: Hear, hear.

Mr Bell: When two Departments work together, that is cross-departmental.

It is important that we always follow the evidence and best practice. We all have a responsibility to be good stewards of the environment and the earth. As the Member rightly points out, we also have a responsibility to look at international best practice and at the successes in energy security, in jobs created and in businesses driving their energy costs down so that they can appear more competitive on the international market.

Ultimately, this will be a matter for the Northern Ireland Executive, and I think that they will be judicious in looking at it. It will be important to take account of all the implications if we proceed, and, equally, those if we do not proceed, with exploiting what is a natural resource. The Member made a number of important points towards the end of his question that should undoubtedly form part of the considerations. We should be aware of the best practice in the United States of America and look towards best practice in the rest of our United Kingdom. We have to weigh up the evidence in a judicious and measured way that allows us to be good stewards of the earth that we have inherited and want to pass on to our children and grandchildren. However, we also have to make sure that we do not miss out on the huge opportunities that are available to deliver jobs and investment to the people whom we serve.

Mr Flanagan: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Given the questions from the Member who spoke previously, will the junior Minister give us his assessment of whether climate change exists?

Mr Bell: I have a science degree, but it is in psychology, and some would debate whether that is a science or a social science.

In all seriousness, we have to look at what there is. We have to look at the best scientific evidence available and at shale gas exploration in other parts of the world. We all live in an international marketplace, and the cost of jobs and energy will affect the employment that we can provide for our young people and citizens.

There are obviously concerns around climate change, and we all have a responsibility to ensure that we pass on the environment in a responsible manner. We also have to take a balanced approach to looking at international best practice, international science, the difficulties that exist and, equally, the opportunities. If opportunities exist to significantly drive down energy costs and thereby allow our people to have more jobs and investment in their area and more money coming into the economy, we would be foolish to ignore that on an emotional basis. We have to look at it in a measured way — scientifically — and see what we can do for the next generation. We have examples. We can look to the rest of the United Kingdom and the United States, and where there is best practice and success, we would be very foolish not to copy the United States in driving down energy costs. The European Union is looking at energy security as one of its primary aims. We would do well not to ignore those concerns.

Mr Elliott: I thank the junior Minister so far. Have there been any agreements or even discussions about specific benefits, such as rate reductions, for communities where fracking would take place?

Mr Bell: As it stands, preparation for that possible unconventional oil and gas development in Northern Ireland and its regulation requires input from several Departments and other bodies. The Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment has the initial role in the licensing and regulation of petroleum exploration. The Department of the Environment is the principal regulator for shale gas development through its environmental and planning responsibilities. The Department of Finance and Personnel, if it is a direct question in relation to rates, is the best Department to answer your specific question.

The shale gas regulators' forum was established in 2012. It was a joint initiative by the Enterprise, Trade and Investment Minister and the then Environment Minister, Alex Attwood MLA. It continues to keep under review the legislative and regulatory requirements needed to support possible development. Where possible, it will coordinate the functions and facilitate the cooperation. There has been no direct discussion as yet between the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment on the development of shale gas in Northern Ireland. However, DETI officials are continuing to liaise with Department of the Environment officials as part of the work that lies within the shale gas regulators' forum. DETI officials, in conjunction with DOE Planning Service and Northern Ireland Environment Agency officials, are going to provide the Northern Ireland input to the 'Onshore oil and gas exploration in the UK: regulation and best practice' road map.

Mr Agnew: I welcome the junior Minister's statement that we should be looking at the evidence because all the evidence is that exploiting shale gas in Northern Ireland will not bring down gas prices. Where I do agree with Mr Wilson is that this is a cross-departmental issue. Does the junior Minister then agree that it is a bit anomalous that we have this situation whereby the Enterprise, Trade and Investment Minister can issue a licence without any consultation?

Mr Bell: I cannot agree with the Member. Anybody looking at this situation dispassionately and objectively could not concur in a reasonable way that all the evidence is against, because it quite clearly is not. I am not sure that that sort of zero-sum game that he proposes is in the best interests of the environment, energy security, fuel poverty or job creation.

The tenor of the Member's question indicates exactly why we need independent and objective evidence. Any progress that has been made scientifically has always been met with fears. I do not dismiss the fears, but they have to be forensically analysed. There is best practice in other parts of the world. We have to look at what occurs there. We are facing a situation in Europe of energy security.

All of us in this House want to pass on best practice in the environment and use best practice in making our decisions.

2.30 pm

What is necessary is a measured, judicious response that dispassionately analyses the evidence for science and asks first, how we can we pass on, as good stewards of the earth, a better environment and use best practice from what we inherited. And secondly, how can we ensure that we follow international best practice, including that which allows us to create jobs, make energy prices cheaper, bring investment into our areas and make our businesses competitive on the international stage?

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: That ends the period for listed questions. We now move on to 15 minutes of topical questions.

Natural Gas: East Antrim

1. Mr McMullan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what help they can give areas that are not receiving natural gas, including in East Antrim from Larne to the glens. (AQT 681/11-15)

Mr P Robinson: I await his supplementary to hear his proposal. His question indicates the need to use natural resources where they are available. I therefore expect that he will be teaming up with the Member for East Antrim Mr Wilson in calling for the use of shale gas over the next number of weeks and months.

Of course, where facilities are available, they need to be used. In the Larne area, there is particular potential for the storage of gas and electricity — two fantastic opportunities are available — and I hope that that will be supported around the House. I look forward to hearing the Member's proposals for what should happen in his area.

Mr McMullan: I thank the Minister for that. If we do nothing for areas that will not get natural gas, we will create areas that are black spots for industry. Nobody will come into them if we cannot compete with areas that can offer alternative energy. Doing nothing will also create more fuel poverty. That is why I am asking what can be done by the Assembly to look at that. Larne has the gas storage etc, but only last week one firm pulled out of gas storage under Larne Lough. Go raibh maith agat.

Mr P Robinson: I agree with the premise upon which the Member asked his question. There are risks, not just to business and commerce but to residential use if we have too high a reliance on very few sources of energy. There is a good cause, and I hope that the ETI Minister and Committee will consider whether they can assist in the further expansion of that project.

However, we cannot on the one hand say that it is essential that we exploit opportunities and on the other, with our eyes closed, say no and that we are not going even to look at the opportunities for shale gas.

Catherine Seeley: Intimidation

2. Ms Ruane asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for their view on the recent sectarian intimidation of the young schoolteacher from the Boys' Model School, Catherine Seeley. (AQT 682/11-15)

Mr P Robinson: I have already spoken on this issue, and my view has not changed. I deplore intimidation in the workplace, no matter where it takes place or against whom it is directed. People should get jobs on merit and should be allowed to carry out their employment in a peaceful and dignified way.

Of course, there are issues about education; there are also issues about fairness of employment in education. However, none of those touches on the issue or justifies the intimidation of anybody in the workplace.

Ms Ruane: Gabhaim buíochas leis an gCéad-Aire as an bhfreagra sin. I thank the First Minister for that answer. When I was in the Department, that was one of the schools for which we approved a newbuild. I welcome the work that is going on in the school and particularly pay tribute to the young boys who stood up and were counted in tackling sectarianism.

As a supplementary question, I will say that there have been other attacks, including one at Ahoghill GAA club and in Bangor, so would the Minister like to give his view on those?

Mr P Robinson: I think that it is right that we publicly take the opportunity to express our condemnation of any attack on persons and property. We have had a long history of people trying to threaten and to intimidate. Indeed, a schoolteacher in Newry was killed over past years. There is a long history, which has to be deplored, of people trying to intimidate and impose their way on others. Let there be a very clear message from this Executive that intimidation, whether by verbal means, threat of violence or by actual violence, is to be deplored — past, present and future.

Ballykelly: Expressions of Interest

3. Mr Campbell asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether there has been any indication of the potential of the Ballykelly site, given that the closing date for expressions of interest has passed. (AQT 683/11-15)

Mr P Robinson: The deputy First Minister and I took the trouble to go down to that site, and I have to say that we were both substantially impressed by the opportunities that we saw in the facility. We therefore gave a direction that the site was not to be sold, because it was to be for a use that would not have developed it to the potential that the area would have wanted. I think that, as a result, we have been vindicated by the level of expressions of interest.

Over 40 expressions of interest have been created. They include those from people who want to employ only one or two people on the site to those who want to employ thousands. In terms of finance, they range from those who want to rent the site to those who want to buy the site, some at very significant amounts of money, to some who want joint ventures and some who want trusts and community organisations to have a role. So, those 40-plus expressions will have to be considered very carefully to see whether more than one of those uses could be on the site at the same time, because some of them are requesting use of only part of the site. I think that a massive opportunity for the north-west area could be drawn out of the site, and it could become a regional hub with very significant employment opportunities.

Mr Campbell: I welcome the First Minister's very positive announcement of the number of expressions of interest. Can he outline what criteria will be used to maximise the site's very positive potential?

On the subject of positivity, I also welcome the positive approach that the First Minister and deputy First Minister have taken to the site. It is much more positive than walking around the corridors of Stormont counting the number of people who do and do not speak to you, which makes you look and sound like a real loser.

Mr P Robinson: I will respond to the first part of that question, if the Member is content. I assume that he is recognising that decisions will have to be taken on the balance between whether we look at that site as one to create jobs, irrespective of what the income generation might be to government, or whether we want to maximise the amount of money that we get for the sale of the site. I think that the balance that we have had in other sites is in recognising their local importance, recognising the potential that they can have and seeing how they can change a local area's economy. I am pretty sure that, when it comes to looking at the criteria, a major factor will be how we can develop that site to be an economic hub for the area as a whole.

Child Poverty Act: Targets

4. Mr F McCann asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether we will achieve the targets in the Child Poverty Act. (AQT 684/11-15)

Mr P Robinson: I think that all that any Executive can do is continue to push as hard as they can. Obviously, the targets became much more difficult because of the economic recession. Targets for child poverty are related directly to the ability of their parents and that very much comes down to whether people can get jobs. It is obviously a much more challenging factor as result of the increase in unemployment since the days when we had 4% unemployment in Northern Ireland. However, as my colleague indicated earlier, the trends in the economy are with us. It is very clear that unemployment is coming down. The claimant count is coming down. That all indicates that more people are getting into work. Prosperity will, therefore, increase.

I have some problems with child poverty statistics in that we base them on median incomes and, therefore, will never get rid of child poverty. Poverty will always be with us if we base it on that. In fact, if you use that criterion, poverty in Northern Ireland is the same as poverty in India. Anybody who has seen the slums in India that the deputy First Minister and I saw on a recent visit will know that we are dealing with two entirely different situations. We are not dealing with world-recognised criteria for poverty. We are operating on the basis of relative poverty in Northern Ireland.

Mr F McCann: I thank the First Minister for his answer. In light of the findings in the OFMDFM-commissioned Institute for Fiscal Studies report, does he accept that the Delivering Social Change agenda needs to be mainstreamed in all Departments if we are really going to tackle child poverty?

Mr P Robinson: I am very proud of the Delivering Social Change agenda and the steps that we have taken in it. It requires the participation of all Departments to achieve its outcomes. In the Delivering Social Change agenda, we had a number of initiatives. When we bring out new proposals, they very often require new infrastructure to be put in place within the government system. That can take some time. I have high hopes that, as we move forward, the Delivering Social Change programme will flow out and we can build upon it.

The Member and I are in total agreement that, when young people grow up in this society, they should all have an equal opportunity to be able to progress and move forward. It must be in the interests of the Assembly to do everything that it can to use that human resource to the best possible advantage and to make sure that every child has the same opportunity.

North/South Interconnector

5. Mr Boylan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, given Enda Kenny's recent announcement about a formal application for a North/South interconnector, to confirm whether their office has received representation from groups opposed to it and to update the House on their thinking about the proposal. (AQT 685/11-15)

Mr P Robinson: I remember discussing the issue with the Taoiseach along with the deputy First Minister. My understanding was that most of the problem was in the South rather than in Northern Ireland and that most of it related to whether there was overhead or underground cabling. I will write to the Member to clarify whether the Department has received any objections. All that I can say to him is that I am not aware of them.

Mr Boylan: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as a fhreagra. I thank the Minister for his answer. Given the conflicting views on the issue, does the Minister believe that there should be a proper assessment of whether or not the project is needed to address the energy issues on the island?

Mr P Robinson: I do not think that there is any question about the need for the project. That was the one thing that we were all very clear about. How it is implemented is an issue of cost. I understand that the cost of underground cabling would be so high that it would make the project unfeasible. From that point of view, it is very clear what needs to happen. I recognise the rights of people to object because not everybody wants to have the kind of overhead cables that would be necessary going through their land or close to their property. However, as I understand it, it is absolutely essential that the project goes ahead.

Childcare Strategy

6. Mr D Bradley asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the implementation of the childcare strategy. (AQT 686/11-15)

2.45 pm

Mr P Robinson: The deputy First Minister and I have already made our statement announcing the childcare strategy. Perhaps the Member should go along with the Member for Strangford and visit the OFMDFM website. It is a project that delivers thousands of places in Northern Ireland, which, I hope, will be welcomed throughout the community. I am not sure whether the Member had any specific question or whether he doubted that we had the project under way, but it is now up and running.

Employment and Learning

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Order. We will start with the listed questions to the Minister for Employment and Learning. Question 5 has been withdrawn.

Economic Inactivity

1. Mr Wilson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how the level of economic inactivity locally compares with other regions of the UK. (AQO 5497/11-15)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): With your permission, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, I was going to group questions 1 and 5 together and ask for an additional minute for the answer.

The current rate of economic inactivity in Northern Ireland, measured as a percentage of the 16-64 working-age population, for the third quarter of 2013 is 27.1%. This equates to more than 315,000 people who are neither in work nor actively seeking employment. It compares with 21.5% in England, 20.9% in Scotland, 23% in Wales and a UK average of 21.7%. Within the overall rate for Northern Ireland, 27% are students, 28.4% are categorised as long-term sick and disabled, 25.7% are categorised as having family commitments, 12.4% are early retirees and the remaining 6.5% are categorised as "other", for reasons such as a short-term illness or injury.

For several decades, Northern Ireland has consistently had the highest rate of economic inactivity in the UK. Economic inactivity has not historically been influenced by economic cycles and it is right that we now focus on tackling this long-term problem in a progressive and sustainable way. It is for that reason that the Northern Ireland Executive have made the unprecedented commitment to develop a strategy to tackle the difficult issue of economic inactivity. My Department and the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment have jointly developed a strategic framework document in conjunction with several other key Departments and have recently launched a 12-week public consultation exercise on the proposals, which will inform the development of the final strategy. This process will be complemented by a series of forthcoming public consultation events across Northern Ireland.

The final strategy will be the only dedicated government strategy in the UK that is targeted specifically at addressing the major socio-economic issue of economic inactivity. I should emphasise that this is a Northern Ireland Executive initiative; it is not about welfare reform, nor is it being driven from Westminster or elsewhere. It is a local initiative that is focused on finding real solutions to help people who are inactive because of health issues or caring responsibilities to go back to work when they are ready. Students or early retirees are not a focus for the strategy.

Mr Wilson: This is not a new issue. It is one that has persisted over 30 years through boom periods and periods of depression, so it is clearly nothing to do with a lack of jobs. Even during boom times, the issue was not addressed.

Given that it has been a long-term issue and it is clear that there is a whole group of people who either cannot work or will not work, is it time not for more consultation but for some action? Will the Minister tell us what specific proposals he has at the moment for contemplation that will address this problem and get these resources back into productive work in the economy?

Dr Farry: I thank the Member for his question and his interest in the matter. He is right to say that this has been a major long-term issue for our economy. It is a structural issue that we have to come to terms with. As a former Minister, the Member will appreciate the reality that we have to go through a public consultation on these issues. However, it is to the Executive's credit — and this was an Executive-wide initiative that was part of the Programme for Government — that they have realised that they have to address this issue. I stress that we are the only part of the UK that is currently developing such a strategy.

This will be a 10-year commitment across a number of Departments. We will need to look for additional resources in due course to make this a reality, but we hope to take the initiative forward through what we call a series of competitive pilots. We want to see proposals coming forward from the community and organisations so that they can put in place a number of different initiatives, whether on a Northern Ireland-wide or a local basis, test what is effective or less effective, and seek to scale those initiatives up across the board. That is an innovative way to address the issue, and there is a desire for a lot more innovation in Northern Ireland under devolution.

Mr F McCann: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for his answers so far. How does he intend to develop measures and tackle areas of high unemployment such as in my constituency of West Belfast.

Dr Farry: The Member is right to say that inactivity levels will vary across Northern Ireland, and there will be parts of our region where there are considerable concentrations. Economic inactivity is a different category to unemployment, although there will be a correlation between patterns of higher unemployment levels and levels of inactivity. Again, I stress that it is about the community coming forward with innovative projects. We will, no doubt, see a greater volume of those from areas where levels of inactivity are most acute. On the back of the consultation, some organisations in the community are already beginning to give thought to different types of initiatives that could be taken forward.

Mr P Ramsey: It is most welcome that the Minister is coming forward with his strategy. Following on from Fra McCann's question, there is clearly historical economic inactivity in Northern Ireland, but there is much more cultural historical economic inactivity in certain areas, the north-west being one in particular. How will the Minister encourage and motivate to try to ensure that business or community groups come forward with realistic programmes to make a difference?

Dr Farry: The Member's question is on a similar theme to the previous question. There are some local angles in the north-west, and I can tell the Member that a specific public consultation event will be held in Derry on 13 March. That will complement events that are being held in Dungannon on 19 March and in Belfast on 26 March. I encourage Members and, indeed, any of their constituents and organisations in their areas also to attend those events. We will want to talk to those organisations to try to encourage proposals. We also have a skills and employability adviser in the north-west, and part of her role can be extended to encourage organisations to come up with ideas. We have the infrastructure in place to try to encourage proposals, particularly from the most vulnerable areas such as the north-west.

Mrs Overend: Recent labour figures show that the over-45s are more likely to be economically inactive here than in the rest of the UK. Does the Minister intend to take specific steps to address that trend?

Dr Farry: In spring 2013, we published a baseline study that set out the overall context behind our economic inactivity figures. There is a whole host of variations compared with the situation elsewhere in these islands that relates to our particular circumstances. I stress that, to make a difference, we need to relate the type of projects that we take forward as part of the strategy to the particular characteristics of the economically inactive population. Hopefully, that fits in with the thrust of the Member's question.

Mivan: Employee Assistance

2. Mr Girvan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what assistance his Department is providing for the employees of Mivan, Antrim. (AQO 5498/11-15)

Dr Farry: I understand the deep impact of the loss of Mivan on its employees. My Department has been proactive in determining what steps we can take to assist employees facing redundancy to provide them with advice and guidance regarding upskilling and alternative employment. To this end, my officials have worked closely with Mivan since the initial redundancy statement was announced.

My Department's redundancy advice service has already started to deliver a tailored package of support to Mivan staff. It is working in partnership with a range of organisations, including the Social Security Agency, Antrim Enterprise Agency, Citizens Advice and Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs, to deliver the redundancy clinics, which took place at the Mivan offices on 22 and 29 January. Through this service, advice has been provided on alternative job opportunities and mentoring, access to training courses, entrepreneurship and careers, as well as advice on benefits and taxation. The service was delivered free of charge to all employees facing redundancy. My officials have received expressions of interest from a number of companies about exploring the possibility of redeploying affected staff. There has been liaison with Invest Northern Ireland and Mivan to ensure that those opportunities are brought to the attention of the redundant workers.

Finally, my staff in the jobs and benefits offices will continue to engage closely with those workers affected by redundancy. This is an approach that we have already successfully deployed to address other significant redundancies. Notwithstanding the job losses in relation to Mivan, our economy is growing and unemployment is falling. The prospects for our economy are strong.

Mr Girvan: I appreciate the help and assistance that has been given, albeit that quite a bit of it is looking at redundancy and access to unemployment benefits. I wonder what contact has been made on an interdepartmental basis between DETI and his Department to try to move forward with new initiatives to deal with these types of problems when they arise.

Dr Farry: The Member is right to highlight the importance of Departments working in collaboration around this issue. I believe that that has been the case in relation to Mivan and similar tragic situations that have arisen in the past number of years.

Obviously, Invest Northern Ireland is an important partner in this regard in terms of looking to other opportunities that may arise. We have the potential in relation to MGM, though that situation still has to be clarified with regard to any opportunities that may arise for existing staff to be able to apply for jobs that may well be created. We can also look to the resource of our local training colleges. If the demand is there, we can put in place some specific courses to help with retraining opportunities.

Often, when we come to these situations, we find staff who are very highly skilled. The difficulty has been that, in the past, they might not have gone through the process of having their skills formally accredited. Often, what is required is actually putting in place those procedures to get people the qualifications to allow them to sell themselves to other companies and employers. That is something that we are more than happy to look at.

Mr Kinahan: I, too, thank the Minister for the help with the Mivan employees. When he is talking to other Departments, has he looked at helping DSD's jobs and benefits and other organisations to have more resources to actually be able to help the people? That is one of the difficulties that has arisen.

Dr Farry: I cannot comment directly about the resourcing available through the Social Security Agency, but I am aware that my employment service's current resource base is overstretched. We are essentially resourced to deal with a jobseeker's allowance (JSA) live load of around 35,000. The claimant count is falling, but it is still just below the 60,000 mark. So there is considerable pressure on the front line, and I pay tribute to the work of our staff in helping people by giving them advice and signposting them to other opportunities. However, as and when these situations arise — and, hopefully, they will be a lot fewer over the coming months and years — we will be quite clear in our commitment to follow through and to put in place the type of redundancy service that we have put in place in relation to Mivan.

Mr Allister: Does the Minister have any concern about how the Mivan situation was handled to result in the fact that none of the workers have any transfer of undertakings and protection of employment (TUPE) rights, because the redundancies were allowed to fall into place, and then, immediately, a new company came in to take over the premises and the buildings but gave no TUPE rights to the existing workers? Is that not an abuse of the arrangements that should be in place?

Dr Farry: We have had a public consultation on TUPE arrangements over the past number of months, and it is my intention to bring forward a paper to the Executive in relation to the future of TUPE in Northern Ireland. That is very much in line with a similar exercise — and, indeed, we were part of the consultation that was conducted — by the Department for Business, Innovation & Skills (BIS) for Great Britain.

I understand the Member's concerns, but, if there are concerns around how TUPE is being applied in any particular situation, those who are affected have rights and the ability to challenge decisions that have been made.

I cannot take a view on that particular situation, except to clarify once again that people do have recourse in the event that they feel that TUPE has not been properly applied.

DEL: Transfer of Functions

3. Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps he is taking to facilitate the early transfer of his Department's functions to match training provision and apprenticeships to job opportunities to the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment. (AQO 5499/11-15)

Dr Farry: Matching training to jobs is addressed through a number of measures. In January, I made a statement to the Assembly to announce the findings of the review of apprenticeships. The review's interim report sets out the blueprint for Northern Ireland's future apprenticeship programme. It is a model that puts employers at its very heart and matches better supply with demand. In parallel with that review, a review of youth training is being undertaken to ensure that provision meets the future needs of business by developing a highly skilled workforce.

This year, the careers review will consider how young people are encouraged to align their education, training and apprenticeships with current and future job opportunities. I am keen to expand higher and further education places in Northern Ireland and, to date, have been able to negotiate funding for an additional 1,350 places. All the additional places are in the science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM) subject areas, as I believe that they are key for the future of our economy. My Department has worked closely with the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment in the production and implementation of the Success through STEM strategy. I also chair a series of working groups on ICT, advanced manufacturing and food and drink manufacturing. The Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment is also represented on those bodies.

The Executive are committed to an overarching review of Departments, and the First Minister and the deputy First Minister have indicated that they are content to await the outcome of that review before taking any decisions on the future of the Department for Employment and Learning. That may well see a consolidation of economic functions across a number of current Departments within a new Department of the economy.

Mr McNarry: I thank the Minister for his answer, but, if we can cut to the chase, will he accept that a Department responsible for training that has resulted in 5,000 unemployed teachers simply cannot continue to manage teacher training?

Dr Farry: I am afraid that the Member is ill informed. My Department does not set the teacher training numbers. We simply resource the teacher training colleges. The number of teachers allocated to teacher training is solely a matter for the Minister of Education.

Mr Flanagan: I thank the Minister for his answers. In my role as an MLA, I, like many others, regularly engage with businesspeople, and the message that I hear from them, particularly those in medium-sized businesses, is that they have a large number of positions that they want to fill. I then speak to highly skilled, highly qualified people who cannot find a job. How does the Minister propose to bring the two problems together to find a solution?

Dr Farry: I am grateful to the Member for putting his finger on what is a constant source of frustration in our economy and, indeed, many other economies around the world. There is a certain mismatch between supply and demand, and that happens also in areas in which we are investing in training and upskilling. We need to be much more efficient if we are to ensure that our economy grows to its maximum and our young people find themselves lucrative careers and sustainable jobs. We can be much more efficient in what we are doing to address that particular problem through a number of measures that I outlined in the principal answer. In particular, I highlight the review of apprenticeships. Apprenticeships are perhaps the purest way of matching training to employers' needs. As the Member knows, we are out to consultation on the findings of the review of apprenticeships.

We are also working on the review of youth training, which will support interventions at that level. In particular, we need to look at what we do in the universities and encourage people to study subject areas that are more likely to lead to secure jobs in the economy. That is why we place such a focus on STEM subjects. I am pleased that we are making progress in all those areas, but we need to keep the work going.

Mr Lyttle: I thank the Minister for his answers so far. Will he give us an update on the review of apprenticeships and the role that he sees them playing in upskilling the Northern Ireland workforce and leading to high-value, sustainable employment?

Dr Farry: I am grateful to the Member for his question. As the Member will know, last month, we announced the outcome of the review of apprenticeships, which is out for public consultation. I am pleased with the response that we have received to date from a number of stakeholders. This provides a very exciting new platform for training in Northern Ireland and should radically transform our skills infrastructure. We are taking forward a number of other initiatives on apprenticeships while the public consultation is under way. They include work on the funding model to ensure that we are gathering the resources available to us to have the greatest impact on delivering results.

We need to work with small businesses in particular. As Members know, a disproportionate share of our economy is linked to small businesses, and it is important that we try to address the barriers to recruiting apprentices that they may face in the future. We are developing a number of different models to see how we can provide a mechanism to allow small businesses to engage with our model. It is a problem that is uniform across the world. However, hopefully, with good innovation under devolution, we can find the means to crack it. Bear in mind that it is a new start for Northern Ireland. We are changing the apprenticeships model from a level 2 and level 3 intervention to level 3 up to level 8 and expanding it to a range of new occupations. I strongly recommend it as a major plank of our future skills offerings.

FE Means Business

4. Mr Buchanan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline the role that regional colleges will have in the delivery of his Department's Further Education Means Business strategy. (AQO 5500/11-15)

Dr Farry: Our further education sector is a major asset to the Northern Ireland economy and wider society. The Department's role is to set the strategic direction for the sector in Northern Ireland, fund colleges to deliver my strategic priorities for the sector and monitor the extent to which colleges meet the targets they are set. Following a major process of evidence gathering and consultation, the current Further Education Means Business strategy was agreed in 2004. The strategy confirmed the role of further education as being to strengthen economic and workforce development, to enhance social cohesion and to advance individuals' skills and learning. The objectives of FE Means Business included raising the skills and qualification levels to meet the needs of employers and the wider economy; ensuring that colleges provided an economically focused curriculum; providing support to employers; developing flexible approaches to learning; and ensuring quality in keeping with best international practice. The main achievements of the strategy include the rationalisation from 16 to six colleges, increased enrolments, increased levels of learner achievement, which are now at 87%, and strong support to employers.

We are committed to a new strategy for further education. That is at the early stages of development. However, building on successes in recent years, the vision is that colleges will have a detailed understanding of the changing needs of employers and learners, that they will develop and deliver services and curriculum in an innovative and inspirational manner, and that they will have a strong ethos of self-improvement. I can confirm that the Department will work closely with the further education sector and other key stakeholders in the development and implementation of the new strategy.

Mr Buchanan: I thank the Minister for his answer. Will he tell the House how he sees the strategy being different in delivery from all the other strategies already in the system?

Dr Farry: I am grateful to the Member for his question. It is important that the House understands the full remit of my Department and the areas that we cover. The most important strategy that we have is the skills strategy, which was agreed by the Executive in 2011 and sets the overall skills requirements that we need to meet in Northern Ireland over the course of the decade. That will be supported by a number of different strategies. We have, for example, the higher education strategy, which looks at higher education issues; we are working on a review of apprenticeships; and we have a widening participation strategy to ensure that we bring more people into higher and further education. Within that spectrum of strategies, FE Means Business, which is our further education strategy, is now 10 years old, and it is time that we refresh and renew that and look to put in place a strategy that will take us forward over the next 10 years. I know that the Member is very aware of the potential of further education, and I stress that it is a sector that is likely to grow over the next 10 years. As we look to develop our new model of apprenticeships and increase the number of people taking foundation degrees, the role of further education will be critical in ensuring that we match the needs of employers with the areas in which we are investing in training and education.

Mr Byrne: Can the Minister state whether the regional colleges have enough resources and the ability to provide STEM courses within the remit of the strategy that he outlined?

Dr Farry: It is probably fair to say that the simple answer is no. At present, all six colleges are stretched in what they are doing, and what we can do to assist them is very much foremost in my mind. In the current round of efficiency savings during this CSR period, the colleges were less affected than other aspects of my Department's work and, indeed, than other aspects of the public sector. Nonetheless, they are in a challenging situation. As we look to the future of the economy, and bearing in mind what I just said to Mr Buchanan, we will need to be mindful of making sure that we put in place adequate resources for the FE sector to ensure that we all live up to our potential and seize opportunities for the future.

Mr Beggs: What engagement has the Minister had with small and medium-sized enterprises on FE Means Business, particularly directly or through intermediary bodies such as the Federation of Small Businesses (FSB)? How will he assure businesses that training will be provided locally and therefore minimise the associated pressures on staff time and travel?

Dr Farry: First of all, FE Means Business was developed back in 2004, so I cannot comment specifically on the nature of engagement with the small and medium-sized enterprises sector, although there is no doubt that it was considerable. What I can answer for is what happens today. We work very closely with the representative bodies of small and medium-sized enterprises, including FSB and the Northern Ireland Retail Trade Association, to take forward and evolve strategies and action plans. They have been represented, for example, in our review of apprenticeships and in the review of youth training. Indeed, as we take forward our review of the FE strategy, they will be closely involved.

Beyond the formal process of devising policy, there is ongoing engagement with FSB, particularly on further education. Indeed, it is more than happy to sponsor different types of awards. I know that a number of Members have been to some of those events and have seen at first hand how closely small and medium-sized enterprises engage with colleges. We are, in fact, trying to encourage the FE sector to be the first point of call for advice for businesses, particularly on some research and development activity.

Employment: People with Learning Disabilities

6. Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline the employment opportunities available to people with learning disabilities who are leaving school at 16 years old. (AQO 5502/11-15)

Dr Farry: My Department provides a range of programmes and services that help young people with learning disabilities to move towards their employment goals. The provision covers support in adult education, careers advice and guidance, training and skills development and employment support.

Through its provision of careers advice and guidance, the Careers Service is the first point of contact for young people. In particular, during transition planning meetings, advisers support the young person and their parents or guardians by offering independent advice on their options, such as training or supported employment opportunities.

My Department's disability employment service delivers tailored support to people with learning disabilities through a range of specialist services and programmes to help them to achieve their employment goals. That provision can include local disability organisations, some of which specialise in support for people with learning disabilities.

The Department is developing a new disability employment strategy in conjunction with the local disability sector. An emerging theme is a renewed focus on young people with disabilities and the implementation of a more employment-focused transition service. The Department's adult education and skills provision gives people with learning disabilities additional support to help them to overcome specific difficulties. That can include more flexible entry criteria, specialist equipment, specialist support providers or additional financial help.

Under the European social fund programme and the Pathways to Success strategy, a number of projects are being delivered to help people to achieve sustainable employment. The projects support a range of individuals who experience disadvantage, including those with learning disabilities.

Finally, my Department works with the Children and Young People's Strategic Partnership, which is a regional cross-sector strategic group of key agencies from health, social services, education, policing, housing and the voluntary and community sectors. The partnership has a transitions subgroup, which is addressing the issue of transitions across front line providers.

3.15 pm

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Apologies, Mr Hilditch; we are out of time. We must now move on to 15 minutes of topical questions.

Queen's University/Stranmillis: Proposed Merger

1. Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for the current status of Queen's University and Stranmillis, following his statement to the House on 13 May 2013 in which he effectively brought the proposed merger to an end. (AQT 691/11-15)

Dr Farry: I am grateful to the Member for his question. He will appreciate that we are going through a two-stage review of the future training infrastructure in Northern Ireland. We are in phase 2, and the panel that has been appointed is working with the different providers. We have received a number of submissions from a range of different individuals and organisations. The issue of the specific merger between Queen's and Stranmillis is something that I inherited when I assumed office in May 2011. It quickly became clear that there was not the necessary support in the Assembly to take forward that merger and it was essentially subsumed into the two-stage review of teacher training. The official position of the Department is that we would still like to see the merger proceed. Stranmillis's response to the two-stage review has superseded its support for the merger, though, of course, it remains one of many scenarios that may emerge on the back of the report that I am expecting in the spring of this year.

Lord Morrow: I thank the Minister for his answer but I am still not quite sure whether he is in support or not. He said that there was not sufficient support in the Assembly for him to proceed down that road. Bearing that in mind, I suspect — maybe he does not — that the position is as it was then, which is that there is still not the support for that. Do you intend to resurrect the merger or what line do you intend to take, bearing in mind that you said that you felt that there was not the support for it?

Dr Farry: In November 2011, I made it clear that the Department and I believed that the merger had significant merit and should proceed, but there was not the support to take it forward. I respect that, and Members are entitled to have their opinion. However, we are now looking at a much bigger issue than simply the future of Queen's and Stranmillis as it pertains to teacher education, and we need to have a holistic view of the entire teacher training infrastructure. That is what the current review is seeking to do. It is possible to imagine a whole range of different options that may emerge from the current expert panel that is taking forward the issue. I cannot predict whether it will recommend the Queen's/Stranmillis issue on a stand-alone basis or as part of a wider series of options or, indeed, as a subsection of a much bigger option. That remains an open question. We will see where we go on the back of that report. However, I will be taking forward discussions with the different providers during the later half of this year, and that will be a discussion without prejudice to whatever particular scenarios we wish to discuss.

Students: ROI Costs

2. Mr Allister asked the Minister for Employment and Learning the current cost to his Department of providing free education for students from the Republic of Ireland in our further education colleges. (AQT 692/11-15)

Dr Farry: If the Member can be patient for two seconds, I will hop forward to question 15, which we did not quite get to as part of the formal session, and give him the precise figure.

For the 2012-13 academic year, the figure was £7,120,887. Hopefully, that is accurate enough for the Member.

Mr Allister: Can the Minister give any indication to the House of whether there have been or will be any efforts to recoup any of that money from the Republic of Ireland, bearing in mind that there is also a figure of £4 million or £5 million for the cost of educating Republic of Ireland students in our universities?

Dr Farry: The Member is quite right to draw attention to the issue. It is important that we encourage a natural flow of students in both directions on the island of Ireland. At present, the flow is predominantly in one direction, which is from South to North, and it is an issue in further and higher education. As a former Member of the European Parliament, the Member knows well that we do not have any legal basis on which to seek to recoup these funds from the Government of the Republic of Ireland —

Mr Allister: That is why we would be better off out.

Dr Farry: I am not sure whether the Member gets a third go. Let me continue with the answer I was giving.

We have to bear in mind that there are some underlying causes as to why we have these discrepancies. A 2011 report on higher education from the Irish Business and Employers Confederation and the Confederation of British Industry sets out the issue well and points to a number of barriers that are being addressed, particularly in relation to the recognition of A-level grades in Northern Ireland. We have now seen some very small but welcome progress, with the announcement, last week, by Trinity and Dublin City University. We want to see that across the board. We need to do more in careers advice and ensuring that people are aware of the opportunities to study in the Republic of Ireland.

When we look at further education, we see that there is a particular problem in the north-west of the island. This reflects a lack of equivalent level 2 and level 3 provision in County Donegal. Around three quarters of the flow is in that corridor. We are having discussions with our counterparts in the Republic of Ireland on how we can encourage them to better invest in their vocational training opportunities in that geographical area, which, in the long term, will address the issue. It is also an issue that has been raised as part of the North/South Ministerial Council.

May I stress for the benefit of Mr Allister that we benefit massively from Northern Ireland's membership of the European Union. The sums we receive by way of the European social fund, the European regional development fund and Horizon 2020 dwarf any distortion that we happen to see, as bad as it may be, in the medium term in relation to student flows.

North West Regional College: Industrial Relations

3. Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether he realises or finds it acceptable that the North West Regional College improvement team has not met, given that it is almost 12 months since the Harry McConnell report on industrial relations. (AQT 693/11-15)

Dr Farry: In some ways, I am pleased that Mr Ramsey has raised the issue of the North West Regional College, as it is becoming a source of frustration to me that we have not seen the action plan being fully implemented. I feel obliged to draw attention to where I believe the main source of the problem lies at this stage: the actions of the regional branch of the University and College Union (UCU), which, despite numerous attempts and offers, has not formally engaged with staff in taking forward the action plan.

I stress that the North West Regional College should be looking to have a bright new future. There have been serious industrial relations problems in the past, and they have been documented well in the McConnell report. It is important that we move past those as quickly as we can because, as the Member knows, the economy in the north-west needs particular revitalisation, and the college has to be a key partner in that regard. It is my concern that, the longer this goes on, it will become a distraction from what should be the real job for the college, which is to support young people and employers in the north-west.

Mr P Ramsey: It is a subject that I was hoping not to raise again, but I accept some of the points that the Minister makes in going forward. The Minister's information from the board of governors is one-way traffic. The board unilaterally changed the college's action plan without any discussion with any other membership body or trade union movement within the college. Does the Minister find that acceptable? Is it not the case that he should be intervening once again in the college's industrial relations?

Dr Farry: It is important to stress that it is the job of the governing body to run the college. I have confidence in the governing body, and, as the Member knows, we are going through a transition in relation to the chairperson. I am meeting the acting chairperson this Friday to discuss the college and, in particular, the issues that the Member will be aware of. I reiterate this: fundamental to moving the college forward is the local UCU branch engaging with the staff on the delivery and implementation of the action plan.

Teacher Training: Catholic Certificate in Religious Education

4. Mrs Overend asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, given his role in teacher training, to outline his stance on the requirement that teachers can be appointed to Catholic maintained nursery or primary schools only if they hold a Catholic certificate in RE, bearing in mind the unfortunate situation with the teacher Catherine Seeley and the Boys' Model School, which highlights the reality that, if we are moving to a more normal society, there will be new "norms", including members of one traditional community becoming embedded in another. (AQT 694/11-15)

Dr Farry: I am grateful to the Member for her question. It barely relates to my direct responsibilities as Minister because the matters that she outlined are primarily responsibilities of the Minister of Education. I want a situation in which any teacher who is professionally trained is capable of teaching in any type of school, irrespective of his or her background, whether that be political, religious, gender, sexual orientation, disability or any other type. That should be the norm in a healthy modern society.

As part of the current review of teacher training, I want to look at some of the entry requirements to the colleges and, in particular, to try to address the anomaly that St Mary's is not using the UCAS system for admitting its students whereas Stranmillis and the others are. That almost gives some students a second bite at the cherry in trying to access a precious teacher training place. We also need to look at the anomalies in fair access to the certificate in religious education. There is a wider issue of whether that should be a requirement for employment, which should be considered by the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister alongside the Minister of Education as an equality issue. However, under my responsibilities, I want a level playing field in access to the certificate.

Mrs Overend: In April 2013, the Assembly passed an Ulster Unionist motion calling for an end to an exception to fair employment law that allowed discrimination on the grounds of religious belief when appointing teachers. The Minister mentioned some of the ideals that he wants to see. What progress does he hope to achieve before the end of his term?

Dr Farry: I reiterate my personal support for that motion, and hopefully that will come to fruition through other channels in the near future. As part of stage 2 of the review of the teacher training infrastructure, I want those equality issues to be addressed. We have acknowledged them in the past, and they are ongoing issues of concern. Indeed, there is a sense of grievance, and I believe that they need to be overcome in some manner. I will put them on the agenda for our future discussions with the different providers.

Welding: ISO 9606-1

5. Mr Douglas asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether he is aware of the lack of provision to train or to upskill welders to European standards, such as the ISO 9606-1 approval system for coded welders, to meet the growing opportunities for welding jobs offshore and in Northern Ireland. (AQT 695/11-15)

Dr Farry: I thank the Member for his question. I appreciate the concern that has been voiced about some perceived opportunities that have been missed in the past number of months. We are moving to a situation in which our training programmes are much more demand-led than has been the case in the past, and, in particular, our reviews of apprenticeships and youth training are designed to ensure a much purer form of demand-led provision. We may see requirements for more investment in particular welding skills. Within welding, there will be different standards that people can be trained to and different situations, particularly offshore welding, where different types of training are required. I give the Member a commitment that our infrastructure will respond to the needs of industry, and we are happy to have further discussions with him or, indeed, anyone who wants a meeting to raise his or her concerns so that we can work through a way to address that.

I would signpost anyone to our skills solutions service as the first point of call for having a discussion at employer level.

Executive Committee Business

Spring Supplementary Estimates 2013-14 and Vote on Account 2014-15

Debate resumed on motion:

That this Assembly approves that a total sum, not exceeding £15,530,883,000, be granted out of the Consolidated Fund for or towards defraying the charges for Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2014 and that total resources, not exceeding £16,606,564,000, be authorised for use by Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2014 as summarised for each Department or other public body in columns 3(c) and 2(c) of table 1 in the volume of the Northern Ireland spring Supplementary Estimates 2013-14 that was laid before the Assembly on 3 February 2014. — [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

That this Assembly approves that a sum, not exceeding £7,062,352,000, be granted out of the Consolidated Fund on account for or towards defraying the charges for Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2015 and that resources, not exceeding £7,545,788,000, be authorised, on account, for use by Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2015 as summarised for each Department or other public body in columns 4 and 6 of table 1 in the Vote on Account 2014-15 document that was laid before the Assembly on 3 February 2014. — [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

Ms Lo (The Chairperson of the Committee for the Environment): I welcome the opportunity to outline the Environment Committee's views on the motion.

In comparison with other Departments, DOE's budget is one of the smallest, but the services that it provides are no less important to the people who live in this region. The Committee gave its support to DOE's proposed budget at the start of the year and will welcome the net increase in resources to be allocated to it.

Of particular interest to the Committee is the significant increase in funding available to the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA). During the past year, the agency has faced increased pressure on its resources from a number of directions. The Committee heard recently from the Department of its role in providing support and guidance to the management trusts, which administer areas of outstanding natural beauty, as well as addressing poor water quality in our rivers and lakes.

NIEA also has a vital role to play in fighting environmental crime. The Committee agreed that it was appropriate for staffing levels to be increased in the environmental crime unit to deal with illegal waste, particularly when it is on the scale of the recent incident at Mobuoy, where more than 0.5 million tons of illegal waste has been dumped. The Mills report estimates that £250 million may be required to clean up the sites and states:

"Waste crime is not just damaging the environment; it is damaging the economy in Northern Ireland."

I therefore hope that extra money will be made available in future bids, if DOE needs financial assistance in that respect.

The Committee also supports the additional allocation of resources to local government. Members are very much aware of the widespread changes to be introduced over the next year as shadow councils begin the review of public administration (RPA) process for local councils and realise how vital the provision of adequate resourcing will be to the success of the new roles and structures. However, it is concerning that the provision for planning, both policy divisions and services, is to be significantly reduced by more than £2.5 million at a time when preparation is under way for the transfer of those functions to local government.

The Committee also places great emphasis on the provision of road safety services and will be concerned to note that this area, too, has had a cut in its resources. The Department recently provided a comprehensive update on its work on road safety, but the Committee is very conscious that adequate funding is vital to the ongoing support of this work.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Dallat] in the Chair)

The Committee has largely been supportive of DOE's bids during the past year and, in considering the Vote on Account, stresses the importance of making sure that the necessary funds continue to be made available to DOE so that it can continue to deliver its programmes and conduct its functions effectively. On behalf of the Environment Committee, I support the motion.

I will now make some comments as an Alliance MLA. The maintenance of designated sites is funded from a combination of the DOE's budget for the management of sensitive sites and DARD's agrienvironment scheme moneys from the rural development programme pillar 2 budget. The next rural development programme will not be funded to the same level because of the zero percent transfer from pillar 1 to pillar 2.

DARD is preparing an agrienvironment scheme that will have two strands: a wider area scheme for all farmers; and a targeted one for those whose land contains designated sites. Without adequate co-funding, they will not be effective. In any case, there is a risk that the wider scheme will detract from the targeted one and that the NIEA will have to make up the shortfall.

DOE operates a centralised education and outreach programme that has to cover everything from road safety to conservation. Funding aimed at explaining the importance of our natural environment, including the cause and effect of climate change, is very limited. It merits an increase.

As the Alliance Party spokesperson on culture, arts and leisure, I want to raise the issue of the resource allocation to National Museums NI (NMNI), which received a budget of £12.9 million, including £10.6 million for staffing costs, in the 2013-14 financial year. National Museums NI recognises that its curatorial base has reached low levels, and it has identified a number of key posts that it should prioritise for recruitment. Given that the number of curators fell from 28 in 2008 to 16 in April 2013 — that number is even lower today, as there is no plan to replace the curator at the Ulster American Folk Park — there is real concern about how DCAL and NMNI will meet their statutory obligations to improve the standard of collections care and management in Northern Ireland's museums.

Mr Frew (The Chairperson of the Committee for Agriculture and Rural Development): I will cover the work that the Committee has done on scrutinising the DARD capital and resource budgets. I will mention some of the budgetary and financial issues and constraints that have been debated in Committee and in the Chamber over the past few weeks.

The Agriculture Committee takes regular briefings on budgetary and financial matters as part of its ongoing remit to scrutinise its Department. We last did so just before the Christmas recess, when we heard about DARD's plans for the January monitoring round. In the financial year 2012-13, DARD achieved an out-turn of 99.8% on resource and 98.9% on capital. DARD hopes to achieve the same level of performance in this financial year, and we as a Committee will scrutinise and call the Department to account if it does not.

We heard that, during the year, it had to give up moneys to ensure that it met those targets. It gave up money that it cannot spend this year on the proposed new IT system for animals and food products, to be called the Northern Ireland food animal information system (NIFAIS). It is the replacement for the current animal and public health information system (APHIS). The Committee is concerned about that because APHIS and its replacement are essential to the agrifood industry, enabling traceability and, thus, trade in Northern Ireland and internationally.

One of the main financial issues exercising the Committee and that I wish to cover is that of the budget for the new rural development programme 2014-2020. All here are aware that the Agriculture Minister's decision to transfer 7% of funding from CAP pillar 1 to pillar 2 was successfully challenged in the courts. That decision means that €137.5 million is retained in the pillar 1 budget over the 2014-2020 period, and that goes directly to the farming community.

The Minister indicated that she will now go to the Executive on the issue. The Committee took oral evidence recently from a range of organisations. In discussions, it indicated that it is content and indeed supports the call for Minister O'Neill to go to the Executive. However, the Committee will need to see the detail of any proposals before it can endorse them.

People are linking the issue of funding for the rural development programme to the Agri-Food Strategy Board's document 'Going for Growth'. It was published in May 2013 and has a stated request of £400 million from central government. As the Chamber will be aware, agrifood and that strategy are key targets in the Programme for Government which fall jointly to DARD and DETI. It should not be linked exclusively to the rural development programme (RDP), but there will be some important overlap that I will elaborate on.

The agrifood industry is very important to Northern Ireland. It has substantial potential to create jobs and wealth. It employs 27,000 in the food and drink processing sector and another 47,000 in farming. There is real potential to grow the industry even further with an estimated extra 15,000 jobs and a growth in sales to £7 billion. Those jobs and that wealth can be spread across Northern Ireland, and, with the right financial incentives, that growth could soon happen. The industry has told us that the opportunities are there now, ready to be acted on. We have been told that an immediate three-year commitment of £400 million could yield immediate results in jobs and wealth creation. It could also lever in investment of over £1.3 billion from the industry.

Many of the proposals in 'Going for Growth' sit very well with the proposals in the RDP. There is near-perfect alignment with the farm business investment scheme, but we need to know what is happening and how the funding required for the rural development programme and 'Going for Growth' will be realised.

We know that some movement has been made with the recent announcement by the ETI Minister of the agrifood loan scheme. I wish to congratulate the ETI Minister and the Finance and Personnel Minister on that initiative. Many local farmers have shown an interest in the scheme, and we hope to see a rapid development in capital investment for poultry houses in the near future. Alongside that are the recent announcements on a coordinated approach to, and ease around, planning issues. That proves that, when we put our minds to it, a joined-up approach can and does work well for our industry. On behalf of the ARD Committee, I would welcome any indication from the Minister of Finance and Personnel that those issues have been discussed at the Executive and are beginning to impact on the financial planning and budget of the Executive.

Another financial issue concerning the Agriculture and Rural Development Committee is the budget and eventual cost of the proposed trap, vaccinate and release (TVR) exercise to combat bovine TB. DARD has been preparing for some time — too long, I believe — to undertake pilots of TVR of badgers. We are aware that the scheme could be costly, and have been asking for some time for indicative costs and timetables. There is no doubt that bovine TB is costly to the Northern Ireland economy and purse, but it is also costly to individual farms, farmers and the industry in general.

Every monitoring round, departmental officials come to the Committee and indicate that they will be seeking additional millions of pounds from the Executive to help pay the costs associated with this disease. We had a little bit of good news in the last monitoring round with the receipt of £3 million of additional EU vet funds. After consulting with DFP, the Department has been allowed to use that to offset the additional costs of TB compensation. That underlines why we need to ensure that any scheme to tackle bovine TB is cost-effective, represents an efficient use of resources and is capable of being delivered in a timely manner. We expect that the cost of TVR will be in the 2014-15 budget, and we look forward to hearing from DARD on that aspect.

The Committee has also been briefed on the capital funding DARD will need to deliver flood alleviation measures over the next four financial years. In 2014-15, it will require £2.8 million. In the period to 2017-18, that will rise to around £18 million. Flooding is on the mind of everyone at the moment. We have all seen the destruction that the winter storms have brought to our shores. Over the past few years, every MLA has been all too familiar with flooding and the devastation and misery it brings to families, so we are pleased that DARD and the Rivers Agency are taking it seriously and that the finance will be available to carry on this important work in 2014-15.

The Committee has also taken a keen interest in tree disease, and we are pleased to note that it has been a while since any new cases of ash dieback were discovered here. It is, therefore, more disappointing when we hear that there have been further and substantial outbreaks of larch tree disease. We are also pleased to note that DARD and the Forest Service took the advice offered by the Committee and offered a restocking grant to those landowners who were affected by ash dieback. However, we are still concerned about the lack of legislation on pre-notification for five other tree species that are at serious threat.

3.45 pm

Throughout Europe and, indeed, the world, tree disease is on the rise, and the cost of tackling it is rising also. DARD and Forest Service tell the Committee that they are handling this with their current allocation of resources. There has also been a transfer of plant health functions from DARD to Forest Service, which will apparently help. However, the Committee still has doubts about whether the cost of tackling tree disease in Northern Ireland has been properly costed and is correctly resourced.

Finally, another major financial issue for the Committee is the DARD headquarters relocation. Although we are still awaiting the business case for the main relocation of the DARD headquarters to Ballykelly, the Committee has not lost sight of the fact that many DARD functions will move to other locations. For example, fisheries will move to the east coast, forestry to Fermanagh and the Rivers Agency to Desertcreat. All that will come at a cost. DARD officials told the Committee that it will cost an estimated £18 million in capital over the next four financial years. Although the expenditure in 2014-15 will be minimal, as a Committee, we want to make sure that the costs that are associated with the proposed DARD headquarter relocations are correctly estimated and, importantly, adhered to. That is the big task for DARD in this incoming financial year.

Ms Boyle: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I welcome the opportunity to speak on the spring Supplementary Estimates. As a new member of the Committee for Finance and Personnel, I welcomed the opportunity of a briefing to the Committee from departmental officials from the central expenditure division. Speaking as an individual MLA, I can say that, since that briefing, a number of significant allocations and easements have been made over the three monitoring rounds. I just want to pay a wee bit of attention to DARD's allocation of £17 million of resource and £4.6 million in capital.

One of the main modules is a £3 million allocation for the common agricultural policy and the £5.3 million that the Executive allocated for the hardship scheme. Given that the Chair of that Committee has just spoken, I will not labour the other aspects of the funding in that budget. However, I want to pay some attention to the hardship scheme and to the much-needed funding that has been allocated to it to assist farmers who were affected by adverse weather recently and in March 2013 for such things as fodder and the disposal of fallen animals. All the funding that was given to farmers arose out of the snowstorms in 2013 and was much needed. I commend the Executive and Department for acting swiftly on the hardship scheme, and I also commend the Minister for visiting all the affected areas.

Given that, as recently as lunchtime today, we were given a yellow warning for severe weather over the next week, that payment should be available immediately if we are faced with the extreme weather conditions that we faced last year.

I also briefly want to major on the A5 and the £108 million that was handed back and reallocated to capital projects in the Department of Health and DRD. Given that the Executive gave a commitment to the A5 and that the Minister has continually repeated in the House that the A5 is deferred and not shelved, I am concerned that that construction should start soon because of the impact that would have right across the west.

Although DE is providing the money in the education budget for the campus at Lisanelly, with an estimated budget of £120 million that will cater for almost 4,000 pupils, we have been given reassurances and a commitment from the Minister that funding for the campus will be ring-fenced. Such is the importance of the project in my area, the Executive have included a specific target in their Programme for Government to progress work on the site. Indeed, the project will enhance the facilities that we have there.

I particularly commend Departments for continuing to work in a sensible way on their budgets. Although I am not speaking as Chair of the Public Accounts Committee (PAC), I commend the work of that Committee in highlighting best and worst practice in departmental spend. The PAC, from time to time, will make recommendations on how best Departments can manage their budgets in a sensible and mature way.

I do not think that Members will have any difficulty with supporting the Estimates resolution, and on that basis I support the motion.

Mr Storey (The Chairperson of the Committee for Education): Members will recall that we have all made contributions to this debate over the past number of years of this mandate. Last year, I contributed to a similar debate. On that occasion, I indicated that the Committee for Education had received the monitoring round information and questioned the Department throughout the financial year on its spend. I also advised the House that the Committee had endeavoured to track the changes in spending that had manifested themselves in the spring Supplementary Estimates.

As I said then, this is not an easy process for any Member or Committee to be involved in. In the first place, the Estimates can be very difficult to navigate. As other Members have mentioned, the format of the document makes it hard to sometimes identify the key changes in budget spend. For example, the increase in the net resource requirement for the Department of Education is a worrying £52 million. However, after some inquiries, it becomes clear that that is largely due to the misalignment between the 2010 opening budget and the present position. That, however, is not explained in the Estimates.

There is also an almost equally worrying increase in the net resource requirement for the teachers' pension scheme of some £10 million. Again after making some inquiries, I understand that that is a consequence of the re-evaluation of pension liabilities. The basis of that is also not explained in the Estimates document. So, there are issues that arise that make it challenging for Committees and Members to scrutinise and ensure that they have a proper understanding of the process that is before them.

The Committee will, of course, continue to ask the right questions of the Department of Education in respect of its spending. However, I suggest that, as part of the ongoing review of the financial process, consideration is given by the Minister and his Department to the simplification of the Estimates documents. I put my hands up as someone who probably needs as much assistance and help on that issue as anyone in this House.

In the Education Committee, we have a particular problem with financial scrutiny. The Department of Education does not participate in the DFP-sponsored monitoring of savings delivery plans and operates a large contingency fund, which at the start of the financial year had around £30 million in it. That is a reasonably good, healthy slush fund for any Department to have at its beck and call. That is despite the fact that in previous correspondence the Finance Minister had raised concerns about the use of such a contingency fund and that the current and previous Finance Ministers have raised concerns about the Department of Education not participating in the savings delivery plan process.

The Department indicates that it aims to have the contingency fund fully spent before the end of the year. To be fair, against a resource budget of nearly £2 billion, it is worthy of note that the Department had no resource Estimates and successfully bid for only £2 million in 2013-14. Overall, the Department has previously done quite well in respect of its total resource spending targets.

Repeatedly, the Department tells us that it has been good at balancing the books. However, I suspect that, if you were to ask some schools that face particular challenges and problems in relation to either capital or resource, they would question that comment. The use of contingency funds makes scrutiny by a statutory Committee such as the Education Committee more difficult. Indeed, the Education Minister's recent announcement that he is to establish another contingency fund for the common funding scheme will present another scrutiny challenge for the Committee in the next financial year.

The absence of information on the savings delivery plans also makes it difficult for the Committee to determine the extent of cost savings and their impact on front line services. Of particular concern is the reduction in the Curriculum and Advisory Support Service (CASS). The details of that are difficult to pin down, but the reality and the impact are not so difficult to locate. One only has to speak to many of the professional teachers and staff in our schools and those in the education and library boards. They will concur with the challenges that that has created.

In respect of the Department of Education's capital budget, which is around £110 million, £2.7 million of Estimates were linked to asset sales and a successful bid of £5 million in 2013-14. The scrutiny of DE's capital presents another problem. The monthly summary report on capital build progress appears to include a lot of what can only be described as out-of-date information. Indeed, well over half the projects in the report have actually been concluded. I find it more than a little difficult to reconcile that information with the ongoing departmental press releases on new school builds, which could give a distortion as to the reality of delivery on the ground as regards capital. The Committee will continue to scrutinise the important aspects of DE's spend. I suggest, however, that this should not be as difficult as it is currently. Surely, there has to be a better way.

In concluding my remarks as Chairperson, I would like to pass on the Committee's thanks to the Finance Minister for the allocations received by the Department of Education this year, including the £3.5 million for the Delivering Social Change programme.

I will now make a few comments as a Member of the House before time runs out. I wish to raise the serious ongoing issue of the common funding formula scheme. I want this clearly on the record; I was accused — and the words, if you check Hansard, are correct — of “telling lies” about figures used when the Department of Education produced information on the common funding formula that stated that 76% of Catholic primary schools in the Western Education and Library Board would lose money. Despite the comments made by Members opposite, those figures have now been substantiated and those figures are correct.

Despite Members opposite trying to hide, cause diversion and find a way whereby they could ensure that their blushes were in some way concealed, the situation this week is that the responses to the common funding formula at the Education Committee will prove beyond all shadow of a doubt that there was huge concern in the community about the proposals being brought forward by the Education Minister on the continued funding of the common funding formula scheme. It is now well past the time for the Minister to come to the House and tell the schools, which are being asked to have a three-year financial plan and planning process, what he is doing about the budgets of our schools. What is happening in relation to the common funding formula scheme? After Wednesday, when they will have access to the papers that have been presented to the Education Committee today, Members will see that this scheme, proposed by the Education Minister, is financially not fit for purpose.

I will conclude on another issue. The Member who spoke previously referred to the Lisanelly project. For that project to work, it requires not only finance but faith — faith in the delivery of the model that is on the table. Everybody — I underscore the word “everybody” — and every school in Omagh, not just some schools, needs to have confidence that what is proposed is something that they are buying into.

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is almost up.

Mr Storey: If that is the case, the money that is allocated will be money well spent.

4.00 pm

Mr Maskey (The Chairperson of the Committee for Social Development): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Members will probably have read the Hansard report of the Finance and Personnel Committee's meeting on the spring Supplementary Estimates and will, therefore, be aware of DSD's current budget position.

The Committee welcomes the allocations that DSD has achieved — for example, some £15 million has been allocated to Co-ownership. This will undoubtedly help the construction industry and will certainly be welcomed by those aiming to get on the housing ladder. However, although some have realistic aspirations to get on the housing ladder, there are many more for whom it will remain an aspiration and who simply need access to social housing. The reality is that we are not building enough social housing to meet the need. It is, therefore, unacceptable and quite unbelievable, in some respects, that, on the basis of the last three monitoring rounds, DSD now has a reduced requirement of over £66 million. The Committee recognises that much of that relates to the non-release of money in respect of planned maintenance contracts, but that is another day's discussion. We all hope that that situation can be resolved sooner rather than later. However, the Committee has been amazed and unanimously expressed its concerns, with varying degrees of stridency across the membership, at the sheer inability of the Housing Executive, the Department and the housing associations to get to grips with the barriers that prevent more social housing being built.

The Department is sending out a dangerous message that it cannot spend the money it has been allocated. That means the surrender of almost £40 million of Northern Ireland Housing Executive housing grant. People on the waiting list and those in need of maintenance work on their home will see handing back that amount of money as a dereliction of duty and responsibility. Generally speaking, people are not interested in whether the money is defined as capital or resource, what the nature of the bids is or what the Supplementary Estimates indicate; they are more interested in receiving services that they need and having the basic need for a roof over their head met.

The Department's surrender of money, monitoring round after monitoring round, has regrettably become a recurring issue and one of great concern to the Committee. As I said, members have expressed their concerns with varying degrees of strength and opposition. What we tend to see, monitoring round after monitoring round, therefore, is a scrabbling around to find areas for which the Department can bid for funds — such as the ill-conceived and ultimately failed buy-back scheme of former Housing

Executive-owned houses — rather than appropriate budgeting and spending in the first place.

As I said, the Committee broadly supports the co-ownership scheme. However, in the October monitoring round, some concern was expressed that £15 million was allocated to Co-ownership, with a bid for an additional £10 million, while there were no bids relating to social housing. A key and enduring concern in the Committee has been the Department's continued failure to spend the budget that it has been allocated for the building of social housing. This is at a time when demand is high and the construction industry is just about on its knees. One would think that building more social housing was a win-win situation. Building more housing would see more people in homes while creating much-needed employment. Although the Department has spent some of the budget on very worthwhile schemes, such as the boiler replacement scheme that we all welcome, it is the reduced requirements and subsequent handing back of moneys to build social housing that really stands out. In the June and October monitoring rounds, the Committee expressed grave concerns about handing back money that is vital for social housing; yet, the money continues to be handed back.

The bottom line for members is that the Department hands back tens of millions of pounds when it desperately needs to be spent. The Committee finds it difficult to accept that such a failure persists. The Committee for Finance and Personnel has made clear its concerns that Departments do not appear to be on top of their budget. As far as the Committee for Social Development is concerned, that certainly appears to be the case for DSD.

The Committee emphasises that it does not expect to see a continuation of the recent trend of surrendering money and will treat any proposals to do so in future monitoring rounds with the detailed examination that they deserve. As Chair, I thank the Committee for its diligent work in trying to maintain a focus on the problems with the budget, particularly the social housing budget. It will remain a key focus for the Committee in the time ahead. I also thank the Committee officials for their due diligence in supporting the Committee in trying to monitor these developments.

I will now speak as a Member and not as Chair of the Committee. I just want to make a couple of points. The Minister referred to welfare reform and said that these matters were not being taken seriously. I suggest that my party certainly takes these matters very seriously. Sinn Féin cannot and will not ignore the serious and negative impact of many of the key elements of the Welfare Reform Bill. I remind the Minister that his party was initially prepared to say that, because the Bill is parity legislation, we have to have it as it is. I am very pleased to say that, despite the fact that some in the Chamber resisted any attempt to secure changes to the Bill, we have managed to agree some that will be very important in due course for mitigating measures. Nevertheless, my party believes that much more can be done. We take the Welfare Reform Bill and the issues involved very seriously, and we are particularly concerned about the impact that it will have on many people whom all the parties in the Chamber represent. If implemented unchanged, the Welfare Reform Bill, which we call a cuts agenda from London, would take a considerable amount of money out of the pockets of people whom we represent and therefore out of the local economy.

It is unfortunate that the Minister began his announcement today in a fantasy area, making up figures as he went along. That does not help, and his party would be better committing itself to working with us and others who have serious concerns about the Bill. I know that his party has concerns about the Bill, so let us work together to secure the further changes that, I believe, can still be secured for all the people whom we represent. We take the matter seriously, as I believe most people do. All the parties here would do well to work together to make sure that we make the necessary changes to the Bill, which we can do, if we put our shoulders to the wheel.

I mentioned the social housing programme in my remarks as Chair. My party and the Committee members whom I represent believe that DSD's treatment of the social housing development programme is nothing less than shameful. It is absolutely shameful that we hand back tens of millions of pounds when people are crying out for a roof over their head or trying to get maintenance carried out on their home or when contractors are virtually going to the wall because they cannot get contracts released to do the necessary work, despite the fact that the money is there in the budget. This is not even a case of people trying to get or secure a budget; the budget is there to build more homes and maintain people's homes to a proper standard.

The failure of the Department is becoming almost legendary, and, on behalf of my party, I repeat that that is absolutely unacceptable. It tells me that the Department completely lacks the capacity to take these matters forward and, perhaps, even the will to deliver a social housing programme that is fit for purpose and meets needs, particularly in light of the additional pressures that will come to bear on people through the introduction of the Bill from Westminster. More people will need access to social housing, and the people who require those houses will need different tenures. The Department is sitting on its hands and not tackling the problems.

I accept entirely that there are barriers to liberating the social housing programme. Indeed, the housing association movement came to the Committee and presented a range of barriers — I do not have to agree with all of them — to the social housing build programme, including land acquisition, procurement, planning and even local objections to particular initiatives and projects. Notwithstanding that, the Department gave us a commitment that, month on month, it will sit with the housing association movement and work to remove all those necessary barriers. To date, we have heard nothing about how those barriers have been tackled, and, again, that tells me that the Department does not have the capacity or perhaps even the will to take the social housing programme forward. As far as my party is concerned, our focus in the time ahead will be on ensuring that the moneys that have been allocated by the Executive, including the DUP members, will provide support for the social housing development programme to go ahead and go ahead much better than it has done until now.

Mr McGlone (The Chairperson of the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Initially, I will speak as Chair of the Committee.

A couple of issues came up in Committee that the Minister may wish to address. In the October monitoring round, the Committee sought clarification and further explanation of the £17.1 million capital spend for the Invest NI headquarters. The Department responded:

"an opportunity had arisen to acquire the shared capital of BSDL", which stands for "Bedford Street Developments Ltd". The Department said that the building was under a PFI contract between Invest NI and BSDL. It continued:

"Invest NI was able to buy the shares of BSDL at a competitive price and it is estimated that the transaction will result in savings to the NI Block of around £7m versus the original arrangements ... the public sector will retain ownership of the building, whereas it would have reverted to the private sector under the previous arrangements."

During January monitoring, the Committee was concerned that there was a £250,000 reduction in administration costs due to unfilled posts at the Health and Safety Executive NI (HSENI), especially given the importance of health and safety. It is not, relatively speaking, a lot of money, but the consequences of not fulfilling its role adequately could be dire. I have but to point out many of the major and catastrophic accidents that there have been, particularly on farms, over this past wee while. Such incidents have drawn a lot of media attention and, for families, brought deep, deep loss. Members sought information on the posts that remained unfilled, the duration of the vacancies, the reason for not filling posts and how succession planning had not been undertaken. The Department responded that 60% of the budget released related to unfilled trainee inspector posts. It said in its response:

"Eight Trainee Inspectors were appointed to HSENI in November 2013, taking the inspectorate staff to full complement. The HSENI has sufficient staff to fulfil its role, including its role in relation to the Farm Safety Campaign."

Other underspend related to normal staff movements in the Northern Ireland Civil Service on promotion or transfer. There has also been a vacancy at senior medical officer level, following a retirement in June 2013. Attempts to fill the post have been unsuccessful, and interim arrangements are in place with the Occupational Health Service.

The Committee sought clarification on a reduced requirement regarding £30,000 ring-fenced funding for small business research initiative (SBRI) costs for nitrates that cannot be utilised in the financial year. The Department responded that the SBRI competition for the development of solutions for the sustainable utilisation of poultry litter opened in December 2012. Following an competition in which 39 bids were received, nine phase-one contracts were awarded at a total cost of £648,000. The contracts for those projects completed in November 2013. Contractors have submitted end-of-phase-one reports, which are currently being assessed by the SBRI project team. That is of vital importance to our agriculture sector and, particularly, our agrifood farmers. The House may also wish to note that a total of £10 million was ring-fenced in the 2012-13 DETI budget in the expectation that the issue of the EU nitrates directive and the disposal of chicken litter would have to be addressed. Most of the allocation was surrendered in the October monitoring round in 2012.

The Committee noted that INTERREG IVa projects have not drawn down the amounts previously forecast by the Special EU Programmes Body. That is a deferral of expenditure to future years, and the Committee wrote to the SEUPB on the matter. It responded that the situation resulted from lead partners being overly optimistic about project implementation timetables. The SEUPB must strike a balance and work largely on the basis of information provided by lead partners on potential requirements. In addition, the capital tourism projects in particular have presented significant problems. The Committee contacted the Department and is awaiting a response regarding any projects relating to the Department where there may have been a delay.

4.15 pm

Those are the views that I have been asked to relay on behalf of the Committee. That takes me neatly into an area that I will divide between potential and disappeared. I will deal with the disappeared first: funds that have been announced and have just disappeared. This does not relate specifically to the Minister, so he will have to bear with me. I know that he is fresh in post, so I cannot lay this at his table. The Emerging Europe fund was announced to provide investment in Northern Ireland, and it was announced by OFMDFM on a trip to New York in March 2009. It was established by the then New York comptroller, Thomas DiNapoli. Of a total of $100 million, $30 million was said to be earmarked for projects in the North. We have raised this, and we have sought clarification from OFMDFM. To date, of the $30 million that had been earmarked, apparently, five years later there is no mention of it. Some $30 million of funding has disappeared. Like the Emerald Fund before it, this appears to have been yet another short-term PR gimmick for OFMDFM that has delivered nothing. Announcements made and repeated; money allocated, allegedly; money sought from overseas; and money disappeared, not spent. It is important to put that on record, because we have enough smoke and mirrors around this place and enough gimmicks and stunts. People who are finding it difficult enough to put food on the table for them and their family look towards that investment for them and for the future sustainability of the North's economy.

That brings me on to something that was touched on by Mr Swann: the drawdown of EU funds in regard to what has to be one of the key elements of any form of recovery of the North here as an economy, and that is research and innovation. Specifically, I refer to framework programme 7 (FP7), now latterly merged and evolved into Horizon 2020 EU funds. I find it incredibly difficult to believe that the drawdown of FP7 here in the North amounted to €35 per capita, and, just a few miles down the road in the rest of the island, it amounted to €590 per capita. FP7 is acknowledged to have been a difficult enough programme because of its bureaucratic nature.

We are missing out on serious opportunities to help develop the economy. I know that the Minister has an interest in a lot of these matters and takes it very seriously, but I had an experience last week where we sought information from a major stakeholder — the Northern Ireland Chamber of Commerce — and asked if there had been any formal engagement with it around Horizon 2020. To my surprise and disappointment, the answer was no. There had been no engagement with a major stakeholder representing 500 businesses across the North to see what opportunities could be availed of.

I mentioned that the Government in the Republic had set a target of €1.25 billion or €1.4 billion, depending on what you read. They have the ambition to do that. What has been set here — the First Minister referred to it earlier — was a target of £100 million. That is twice the previous drawdown, which was £50 million. By comparison, it is not a very ambitious target to set. Opportunities have to be availed of. Those opportunities are out there. Others just down the road can draw down those funds, avail themselves of those opportunities, get out there and search for the moneys and revitalise their economy, with their help because of the nature of the programme. We can draw down and be much more ambitious and proactive. Departments right across have to really step up to the mark.

There are other issues. I am also chair of the all-party working group on construction. I seriously do not know how many times we will have announcements made of capital projects — and announced again and announced again. We had a presentation recently where I met the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS). It told me that, in capital works on new schools that were announced in January 2012, not a brick had been laid. I genuinely want to see the construction industry move, but those capital schemes must be seen to develop and to actually happen on the ground in the interests of that construction sector and its service and related sectors. Minister, it is not immediately your brief, but contractors have been in touch with me. The work is clearly there and the money is there, yet the contracts are not happening on the ground. I refer to the window suppliers, and hopefully we will hear more from the Housing Executive tomorrow. Some sort of impetus has to be injected into it to make sure that the work happens on the ground.

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr McGlone: People look to us and to the Executive.

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr McGlone: It can be done, it should be done, and it must be done.

Mr Nesbitt (The Chairperson of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister): My first remarks will be as Chair, and then I will address some points in my capacity as a Member. In-year, the Department briefed the Committee on its monitoring round returns and proposals. I am glad to say that the Committee was broadly satisfied with the Department's approach to the matter.

The Committee noted the easements in relation to capital spend at the Maze/Long Kesh site, with some £3.5 million returned in January monitoring. The Committee hopes that agreement is reached on a way ahead at the site in the coming weeks so that the site's full economic benefit will be achieved. The Committee is mindful of a commitment in the 2011-15 Programme for Government for the Maze/Long Kesh site for this financial year — 2013-14 — on the commencement of site infrastructure. It appears to the Committee that, in the absence of further knowledge, the £3.5 million that was returned in January monitoring was for site infrastructure that did not take place this year.

The Committee also welcomed the bid of £1.6 million in the October monitoring round that allows the Victims and Survivors Service to meet the demands for the financial assistance regular allowance scheme and some other work streams. However, the Committee had some concerns that the financial assistance regular allowance scheme was effectively closed in June last year. The Committee hopes that the current review of the Victims and Survivors Service by the commissioner will address how funding is applied for and granted. I commend Committee members for the scrutiny that they brought to bear on this area. It is an interest that has yielded positive change and some worthwhile and significant improvements for victims and survivors.

In relation to additional allocations through the year, the Committee welcomes the progress that has been made on the inquiry into historical institutional abuse. The additional funding required to progress it is to be welcomed. The Committee looks forward to a briefing from the Department on the scoping paper on options for victims of institutional abuse and Magdalene laundry-type institutions who currently fall outside the remit of the inquiry chaired by Sir Anthony Hart.

Looking at the allocations made throughout the year, we can see that there are discrepancies with what the Committee was advised of during the monitoring rounds. There seems to be around £26 million extra in capital allocations. I am led to believe that that is in relation to Department for Employment and Learning funding for the University of Ulster. The Committee has not been formally notified of that allocation, and my information comes from last week's briefing to the Committee for Finance and Personnel. I would therefore be grateful if the Minister of Finance and Personnel could shed some light on that issue.

I will also highlight some Members' concern about scrutiny of the Executive's ring-fenced Delivering Social Change fund. It includes the social investment fund (SIF), which we heard about from the First Minister earlier, the childcare fund and the Delivering Social Change signature programme fund. The Committee encourages greater transparency on how those Executive funds are allocated and spent, as it seems that OFMDFM has accessed some £2 million of that funding and there has been no information from the Department on what it is intended for. I thank Committee members and staff for their attention over the year to financial scrutiny.

I now move on to make some personal comments on the spring Supplementary Estimates. It is a matter of regret that should be shared throughout the House that the development of the Maze/Long Kesh site appears to be on hold and we have no certainty about what is happening today or what is planned for tomorrow. We have Members, including the First Minister, who seem to believe that Sinn Féin holds a veto on the development of the entire site in the absence of the peace-building and conflict resolution centre, while others — Members of the House and elected representatives from elsewhere, such as Sammy Wilson and Jeffrey Donaldson — argue that they see no reason why the development of the site should not go ahead. In its forward work programme, the Committee had a briefing scheduled for this Wednesday from the First Minister and deputy First Minister. It is my understanding that that will not go ahead. Officials will tell us about the development of some of the other sites under the control of OFMDFM but not about the plans for the Maze/Long Kesh.

Mr Maskey, as Chair of the Social Development Committee, made clear the anger in his community at money not being spent, perhaps being wasted and perhaps being returned to the Treasury. Here is £3.5 million that was allocated for the development of the Maze/Long Kesh site, money that is not being used in this financial year. That is £3.5 million that could be spent on infrastructure. Indeed, a portion of it could be spent on delisting and demolishing the retained prison buildings, and, perhaps, then we could move on.

The Committee has, as I said, done a great deal of scrutiny of the Victims and Survivors Service that has led to the exposure of issues that needed to be addressed. One example was a victim in a wheelchair who required a replacement wheelchair but was told that she had to source three quotes, pay for the chair and keep the receipt so that she could claim the money back. That is no longer the case, and I give credit to the Committee and the individual Members for highlighting that issue and making sure that it was addressed by the Department. The commissioner is currently conducting a review of the Victims and Survivors Service that may have resource implications. I would very much welcome that resource being made available, not least to deal with the call from victims for a fixed point of reference with the Victims and Survivors Service so that, at all times, they know that they have a champion in that institution.

The historical institutional abuse inquiry began without a budget line determined, so it is welcome that a line has been found for Sir Anthony Hart. The Committee has asked for a briefing from the senior official who was appointed by the Department to scope out what could be done for victims who were subject to institutional abuse in institutions not covered by the inquiry, particularly Magdalene laundry-type institutions. Many victims of clerical abuse were not abused within institutions, and I say frankly that it is not good enough to say that they should have recourse to either the PSNI or social services. If there is an inquiry for one group of victims, surely there should be inquiries for all. It is not good enough to say that we will let this process run out before considering the next process. Time is the enemy. I will quote Christine Smith QC, counsel to the HIA inquiry. On the first day of the public sessions in Banbridge she remarked:

Poignantly, she went on to say:

“some who have spoken to the Inquiry about their experiences in preparation for the public hearings have not lived to see this day.”

Even in the period between the announcement of the HIA inquiry and the first public hearing, some of the victims of institutional abuse have passed on to another place.

Those are the concerns coming forward from the Committee and me.

The Committee would like some clarity on the £26 million in capital allocations and the £2 million as previously stated. I will also say that the Committee has some well-rehearsed issues with the Department to do with liaison and information sharing, but we are working those through. I am convinced that everybody has the will to make this better going forward. It is a critical Department in the Northern Ireland Executive. Once again, let me praise Committee members for their scrutiny of financial matters over the past 12 months.

Mr Spratt (The Chairperson of the Committee for Regional Development): I welcome the opportunity to contribute to the debate and do so as the Chair of the Committee for Regional Development. I will start by thanking my colleague the Finance Minister for bringing the motion to the House. Like his predecessor, the Minister has been very generous to the Department for Regional Development throughout the monitoring rounds in a number of areas. I also recognise the work that has been done by the Minister for Regional Development and his staff and their efforts to allocate money, on the whole, to the best uses possible.

4.30 pm

The introduction to the Supplementary Estimates states that, overall, there was an increase in the net resource requirement of £22.5 million and a decrease in the net cash requirement of £102 million. Officials from the Department of Finance and Personnel briefed the Committee on 5 February 2014. During that briefing, they provided further detail on the allocations and easements in respect of the Department. They quite rightly described them as being significant. I would therefore like to spend a little time on those issues.

Northern Ireland has over 15,500 miles of roads, making them one of its biggest assets. Over the year, the Department for Regional Development has successfully bid for over £80 million for capital investment, the overwhelming majority of which, some £53 million, is directed towards roads structural maintenance. That should allow for a total of £119 million to be spent this year on maintaining roads.

It has been independently assessed that the Department needs some £129 million a year just to maintain the existing road network. We currently have a backlog of £830 million in respect of roads structural maintenance. The Northern Ireland branch of the Institution of Civil Engineers has called for the provision of a secure road-maintenance budget and prioritisation of existing strategic road schemes. In its ‘State of the Nation’ report on transport, it identified what it believed would be the consequences of not delivering appropriate levels of investment in the roads and transport infrastructure. They include increasing levels of pollution in towns; decreasing economic and social alliance between communities; decreasing levels of health arising from reliance on private cars; decreasing performance of Northern Ireland’s largest asset, namely its road network; and Northern Ireland’s becoming a less attractive place to invest.

In addressing the Committee on January monitoring, Department for Regional Development officials advised of the consequences of bids for the structural maintenance programme’s not being met. They said that failure to meet that bid would mean that maintenance priority would focus on repairing safety defects and only the highest priority remedial sites would receive resurfacing treatment. They said that that is likely to attract significant criticism from elected representatives and the construction industry as a whole, and that the cost of reactive patching is likely to increase, drawing further funding away from good-value maintenance activities, such as resurfacing and surface dressing. They also said that numbers and cost of public-liability claims is also likely to increase.

In the absence of a secure budget given the economic environment that we have been operating in, it is therefore imperative that DRD can bid in-year for additional money to address that deficit and that it is successful in doing so, not just because of the need to maintain our infrastructure. The benefits that accrue from maintaining our network are more than physical; for every £1 million invested in our roads, 28 jobs are sustained. The economic knock-on effect that these works have on our construction industry and the suppliers in the industry is immense; every £1 invested in construction generates £2.84 in total economic activity. The impact that the infrastructure has on tourism, driving our exports and imports and linking our communities is colossal. I again congratulate the Executive as a whole for the strategic approach they adopted when they considered the in-year bids for roads structural maintenance.

The Department has declared some significant reduced requirements. A total of £36 million is a reduced requirement for roads depreciation. This is in respect of land that the Department had been revaluing, which has not depreciated as significantly as it had assumed it would. It is a non-cash item and is ring-fenced.

The second easement was in respect of the A5 project and amounted to £108 million. That money has been reallocated, principally to the Department for Regional Development and the Department of Health. I do not intend to open a debate on the A5; the Minister for Regional Development has been very effective in keeping the House up to date on the matter.

I will return to the increased capital allocations and deal with the £7 million that has been gifted to the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company, or Translink as it is more commonly referred to. The Committee is not opposed to investment in Translink per se. The Committee remains vociferously in support of the Belfast rapid transit project and the principle of the Belfast transport hub, which is now starting to formulate. However, the Committee is opposed to the automatic awarding of long-term and lucrative contracts to Translink without proper testing of the market — testing similar to that in the Republic of Ireland, which is putting 10% of its network out to tender and is, in the process, creating more jobs. The Committee believes that it reduces the incentive for Translink to be efficient, and it brings about incentives.

We are opposed to the chief executive of Translink coming to the Committee and brazenly declaring that Translink has £60 million in the bank while consistently running cap in hand to the Department for handouts. There is scope in existing legislation for the Minister for Regional Development to recoup such profits, and the Committee has called on the Minister to ease the burden on the public purse by doing so. Northern Ireland Water pays the Department a dividend of nearly £30 million each year. Why should Translink not do something similar? These issues were raised recently when the House debated the transport issue.

As the Committee sees it, Northern Ireland Water has very successfully come from its position under the previous chief executive, Mr Trevor Haslett CBE, to a company that is very much upfront and doing a pretty excellent job.

I urge the Finance Minister to continue to look at end-year flexibility. I know that he has been doing that with Northern Ireland Water. The benefits of such an arrangement to allow Northern Ireland Water the ability to undertake strategic infrastructural programmes are enormous and, again, would be of enormous benefit to the construction industry, constituents plagued by flooding and to our environment generally. I ask the Minister to look at those areas —

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is almost up.

Mr Spratt: — and to consider the issues with the Treasury in end-year flexibility.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin (The Chairperson of the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety): Go raibh maith agat. I welcome the opportunity to address the House as Chair of the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety. This year, the Department of Health had to find £139 million of savings. By September 2013, it was able to make £20 million of those savings. The latest correspondence that the Committee has received via the Department of Finance and Personnel is that the Department is still on track to make the £139 million of savings by the end of this financial year. However, given the pressures that the Department is facing, there are, in my view, some very serious questions around how those savings will actually be made.

I note that £35 million of headroom has been built into the spring Supplementary Estimates for the Department of Health. There is certainly a view that that is a sensible move, given the pressures that the Department is under.

In December, the Committee held an evidence session with departmental officials on the financial position for 2013-14, and we are due to receive a further update directly from the Minister at our meeting this week. In December, officials told us that the Department still has a funding gap for 2013-14. Given the extent of that gap, the Department submitted a bid of £67 million under the January monitoring round. That comprised £20 million for clinical negligence settlements; £12 million for elective care; £10 million for winter pressures; £7 million for safety of services; £7 million for Transforming Your Care (TYC) transitional funding; £5 million for domiciliary care; and £5 million for children's services.

The Department advised the Committee that it prioritised those bids for submission to DFP. The highest priority bid was £20 million for clinical negligence settlements. Three bids were classified at the next tier of importance, because they would have an impact on safety. Those were the bids for quality and safety of services, winter pressures and children's services.

The outcome of the January monitoring round was announced on 21 January. The Assembly was advised that the Department of Health would receive £30 million. However, there were no precise details about how the £30 million would be allocated across the range of bids that were submitted. The Committee, therefore, wrote to the Department to seek clarification. In addition, the Department originally bid for £67 million, which means that £37 million of the bid was not met. Again, the Committee wrote to the Department to ask how it intended to meet that gap. Unfortunately, we have not yet received answers to those questions.

We are concerned, therefore, about whether money will be made available out of the £30 million received in the January monitoring round to drive forward the changes set out in Transforming Your Care. It was originally estimated that £70 million would be needed over three years to implement TYC. The Department received £19 million from the Executive in 2012-13 to fund TYC transitional costs and a further £9.4 million in the June monitoring round this year. However, further money is required in 2013-14 to keep things moving forward. This is long-term work. If the funds are not made available to implement it, a lot of hard work may come to very little.

4.45 pm

The Department of Health also made bids in the June and October monitoring rounds for 2013-14. In the October monitoring round, the Department submitted a bid of £64 million: £26 million for elective care, £20 million for clinical negligence and £18 million for Transforming Your Care. It received £14 million to address elective care waiting lists. Although the Committee welcomed that money coming into the Department of Health, it is fair to say that we are concerned that a substantial proportion of it is being spent on the private sector. In our view, that is not a sustainable solution, does not represent best value for money and is not getting to the root of the problem.

The Committee also noted that the Department has, since October 2011, been making bids in the monitoring rounds to address waiting lists. Under DFP rules, bids are supposed to be only for major and unforeseen circumstances. Given that the Department has been aware of the issue for years, there is a question over whether the problems with the waiting lists are really unforeseen. The Committee is doing a review of waiting times, and we will present our recommendations to the Minister in due course.

I will make my final comments in my capacity as an individual MLA. Concerns are rife that Transforming Your Care transitional funding is at risk. However, in return for additional in-year flexibilities, the Executive had stipulated that the Department of Health should not table current expenditure bids except in the event of «major and unforeseeable circumstances». This year, the Department of Health has received £56 million in resource and £43 million in capital through monitoring rounds. Many will challenge that £20 million for clinical negligence is major and unforeseeable.

Mrs Cochrane: I welcome the opportunity to speak on the motions, which seek our approval for the Executive's final spending plans for 2013-14 and for interim resources and funding for the first few months of 2014-15 in the form of a Vote on Account.

As a member of the Finance and Personnel Committee, I have had the opportunity to examine the reconciliation between the figures in the Main Estimates, which were agreed last June, and the spring Supplementary Estimates before us today. As already stated, the amounts are significant, and this process gives legal form to the financial decisions made by the Executive in the monitoring rounds during this financial year.

The monitoring rounds have allowed the Executive to redistribute reduced requirements from various Departments to emerging issues, and today is an opportunity to debate the changes that happened and the allocations made during this financial year.

This financial year continued to be a difficult one for the local economy. However, there are indications that the economic climate is improving. Indeed, just this morning, we heard that, in January, local businesses experienced their fastest rate of growth in almost 10 years. The Northern Ireland growth rate was also faster than that across the UK as a whole. So it is certainly not all doom and gloom, and we should take the opportunity to be positive about some things that we have achieved in the past year.

The Minister, in his opening remarks, outlined a number of those things and mentioned that, thanks to funding in part by the Executive, we can host a Heineken Cup quarter-final at the newly expanded capacity Ravenhill ground. I just hope that the weather on 5 April is kinder to us than it was last Friday night. The recent news of increasing employment is also to be welcomed and no doubt is, in some part, due to the continuing good work of Invest NI, which has benefited from monitoring round allocations on the resource and capital sides to enable it to continue to assist businesses here to realise their maximum potential in our economy.

The Department of Health also benefited significantly through an additional resource allocation of £57 million for a range of measures, including elective care and Transforming Your Care, and £44 million of capital for a range of infrastructure and medical equipment investments. I welcome those allocations, but, given the issues that have arisen when progressing Transforming Your Care, does the Minister believe that the financial resources available for its implementation are adequate?

The Department for Regional Development received almost £50 million for a range of areas including road repairs and street lighting improvements, and that, too, should be welcomed. Indeed, I have noticed a much improved can-do attitude from it in recent months in response to many requests.

Another positive allocation was the £5 million in capital to the Department of Education for minor works. Having taken the Education Minister to visit Strandtown Primary School this time last year so that he could see at first hand the challenges that the current building poses to staff and pupils, I am delighted that it is now benefiting during this financial year and undergoing a programme of minor works. However, there is still much pressure on our schools estate and a long way to go in addressing all the maintenance issues and newbuild requirements.

The Vote on Account for the 2014-15 financial year will ensure the continuation of services into that year. As we go into 2014-15, we must recognise that we do so with a significant overcommitment on both resource expenditure and capital investment. It is therefore important that we maximise the amount that we can carry forward under the Budget exchange scheme. We must also consider the burden that the failure to implement welfare reform will place on our Budget and, although I have concerns about some aspects of the Welfare Reform Bill, reductions of over £100 million in the next financial year are simply not affordable and will have a major impact on our public services.

Before I finish, I wish to raise again the issue of the review of the financial process. If we are to be able to scrutinise ministerial decisions effectively, we need to have better read-across between the various financial documents that are before us. I understand that the Education Minister still has some outstanding concerns about the proposed changes, and I am interested to know whether the Finance Minister believes that he can make any more headway than his predecessor in resolving that so that we can have enhance transparency and improved Assembly scrutiny. I support both motions.

Mr Irwin (The Deputy Chairperson of the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure): I welcome the opportunity to speak in the debate.

It is widely recognised that the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure has proportionately the smallest budget. Nonetheless, the Committee has undertaken a robust and active scrutiny role throughout the 2013-14 budgetary year.

In this financial year, the Department briefed the Committee on the management of its annual budget. Sessions were held with departmental officials in May, September and December, during which the Committee was updated on a range of adjustments that affected spending profiles in advance of each monitoring round. On all occasions, the Committee challenged the Department to explain its reasons for making bids and surrendering resources.

The Committee exercised its scrutiny role of significant public investment, including the UK City of Culture project, the World Police and Fire Games, and the redevelopment of Windsor Park, Casement Park and Ravenhill.

The most significant adjustment in this financial year is DCAL's return of £9.5 million capital. Although £1.4 million of that total is from the sale of the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland (PRONI) site at Balmoral, the substantial proportion of the return is £8.2 million from the stadia redevelopment programme. The Committee welcomes the sale of the site at Balmoral, given that it has been on the market for quite some time. However, the Committee is concerned that it was not made aware of the full extent of the easement for the stadia programme. In October, the Committee was advised that the Department was returning £3.669 million capital from slippage in the stadia programme. It has only just come to the Committee's attention that an additional £4.5 million is also being handed back from the project. On that occasion, the Committee was prevented from properly fulfilling its scrutiny role of the financial management of the project.

Following the Audit Office's findings on DCAL's management of previous capital projects, as well as the departure of the stadia programme director to the private sector, the Committee has sought assurances from the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure that her Department has the expertise to complete the project on time and in budget. The Committee is fully aware of the pressures facing the project as a result of legal challenges and objections made regarding the Windsor and Casement redevelopments. It is also aware that there has been some engagement with the Finance Minister and his officials regarding a potential extension into 2015-16 and profiling of expenditure. I look forward to hearing from the Finance Minister regarding his position on the profiling of that major capital project.

The Committee will continue to scrutinise the Department's management of the stadia redevelopment and urges the Culture Minister to ensure that it is informed of significant financial adjustments in a timely manner.

Of the £6.5 million capital that DCAL has successfully bid for in this financial year, around half has been allocated for the development of library services, including building works, replacement of mobile libraries and an IT replacement project known as E2. Libraries have been and will remain a key area of focus for the Committee.

The Committee is aware of the Minister's priorities in respect of tackling poverty and social exclusion and promoting equality in the culture, arts and leisure sectors. That commitment is evidenced through the Department's successful bids for £2.2 million capital and £2.5 million resource. The Committee sought assurances from the Department that any imbalances under its section 75 obligations that might result from the priority will be minimised and addressed.

The Committee is also aware of the Department's shift towards zero-based budgeting, and that its arm's-length bodies are currently going through that process. The method of funding is being adopted to ensure that DCAL's arm's-length bodies meet the ministerial priority. Nonetheless, the Committee will scrutinise the practicalities of such an approach, including the overall impact that the funding might have on the general development of the arts, sport and culture.

Other successful bids for the Department during this financial year secured £1 million capital and £1 million resource for the Department's legacy plans following the UK City of Culture year. The Committee is aware that that will cover the January-March period, and that the Minister has longer-term plans, including a DCAL office in the north-west to oversee and manage a new company limited by guarantee focusing on developing and delivering a legacy programme. Although the Minister has a very clear intention of how to take that forward, the financial profile has not, as yet, been drawn up. The Committee looks forward to scrutinising that and seeking an evidence base that demonstrates value for money. Given the significant public investment in the delivery of the project, and concerns about sourcing private sponsorship, a legacy programme and funding must be secured through collaboration and a partnership approach.

Another key focus for the Committee over the past year has been the World Police and Fire Games. Over the next few weeks, the Committee will hear from the Department and the World Police and Fire Games company about the evaluation of the games. The Committee will look forward to hearing whether DCAL's investment of £3.93 million in the games was value for money.

Finally, the Committee has been looking at DCAL's expenditure on the Minister's Líofo initiative. To date, over £200,000 has been spent on Líofo, with another £260,000 expected on an advertising campaign and website. All that expenditure is being considered and approved on a case-by-case basis. The lack of a budget for Líofo means that there are no parameters through which the Committee can determine whether the initiative is value for money or whether it is being managed properly. As we move towards considering departmental budget requirements for 2015-16, the Committee calls on the Minister to properly budget for that ongoing programme.

On behalf of the Committee, I support the motion.

Mr Hazzard: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I welcome the opportunity to speak to the motion today. I will make a few points on education matters before perhaps finishing with some wider comments.

Despite the very tight economic conditions, the Department of Education was able to announce a large number of new school builds, minor works and school enhancements in the past year. Despite the often lethargic nature of planning processes and officialdom, the expected investment of some £500 million of public money is not merely a fantastic boost for our local pupils and teachers, who will undoubtedly benefit from world-class facilities; it will have a knock-on effect on our local construction industry and the micro-economies in our regional towns.

Like the decentralisation of the fisheries office jobs to Downpatrick, the construction of the Down High School in the months and years ahead will provide plenty of cheer and will help lead local communities in economic recovery. It is also important, of course, that those schools provide a fit-for-purpose education system, with the right number of schools in the right places. We must continue to see the creation and celebration of high-quality education through a network of strong, sustainable schools that command the confidence of the communities they serve.

The Department invested more than £50 million in the preschool programme in 2013-14, enabling 99.9% of target-age children whose parents fully engaged with the admissions process to be offered a preschool place last September.

At the heart of that admissions arrangement are criteria that enable children from socially disadvantaged areas to gain a foothold on the educational ladder and that help them to overcome the barriers that socio-economic hardship would otherwise put in their way.

5.00 pm

Sinn Féin shares the Education Minister's concerns that the current common funding scheme does not adequately support his Department's core policy objectives. We strongly advocate more being done to raise standards in all our schools to effectively target social need and to build a sustainable and equitable schools estate. For that to be achieved, a revised funding scheme would have to be not only fit for purpose but would have to meet the principles of objectivity, equality and transparency. With that in mind, the Minister's plans to reform the funding scheme are to be welcomed and no doubt will prove instrumental in raising the educational achievements of so many of our young people, as laid out in Bob Salisbury's report.

I welcome the recent debate in the House and the fact that the relationship between social deprivation and educational achievement has received the spotlight. In tandem with an extensive body of international research, we recognise that pupils from socially disadvantaged backgrounds have greater obstacles to overcome and that good schools with the necessary resources can assist them in breaking that toxic link.

We agree that more must be done to ensure the effective targeting of resources. That will undoubtedly enable schools to provide the necessary support for young people from disadvantaged backgrounds to address the level of underachievement that, despite recent improvements, is still too high. We cannot grow as a society and an economy if we are prepared to tolerate a situation in which, after 12 years of compulsory schooling, children from poor families have half the chances of their better-off counterparts to reach the levels of attainment that we all desire. The international experience of education systems, such as that in Ontario in Canada, prove that, by targeting resources in that way, you not only narrow the attainment gap between socially disadvantaged children and more affluent pupils but you raise the bar for all learners.

Sinn Féin strongly endorses the fact that Bob Salisbury's report focuses on the needs of all our young people, regardless of where they go to school or the sector in which they are educated. Moreover, we welcome the panel's recognition that targeting poverty is one of the five key strategic priorities of the Executive's Programme for Government. Given that the Executive's aim is to stimulate interventions that break the cycle of deprivation and educational underachievement, it makes perfect sense that the Minister should look to close the gap in achievement between those who are least and most disadvantaged and to improve the participation of young people in education, employment and learning. Indeed, the all-party Public Accounts Committee called on the Education Minister to undertake a full review of the common funding formula to ensure that funding is directed to where it is needed most. As a member of the Public Accounts Committee and, indeed, of the Education Committee, I call on those opposite to put the interests of all our young people to the fore. This is public money, and it must be used in the interests of all the people.

Finally, I want to talk briefly about the need for fresh thinking from those on the opposite Benches. Public services need to be efficient and effective, yet the duplication of services, particularly in border counties, is allowed to continue. That fails not only our citizens but the public purse.

It has been illustrated that, where cooperation is developed, such as in health or education, not only does it provide a higher standard of care but it produces better economic outcomes. It improves the economic and physical well-being of all our citizens. The new jointly funded cancer centre in Derry and the Centre for Autism in Middletown demonstrate that progressive thinking can deliver public services across Ireland effectively and efficiently. A substantial start to achieving maximum efficiencies would be for all Departments in both jurisdictions to identify mutually beneficial projects that could be jointly developed from planning stage to completion, with an emphasis on delivering targets and expected outcomes.

We need a new approach to economic development across the island that does not promote austerity, perpetuate two fractured economies or, indeed, force thousands of our young people to emigrate in search of employment opportunities. There is no difference in the effects of the London or Dublin austerity policies, which are crippling the lives of our people. Cooperation alone will not deliver prosperity for the people of Ireland, and an economy that is built on fairness and equality will deliver a bright future for all our people in a new Ireland. There is a better way for the people of Ireland, and that is through taking control of our sovereign economic and political destiny.

Mr Rogers: The SDLP has consistently argued against the way in which the current financial arrangements are being managed. The spring Supplementary Estimates provide a welcome opportunity to assess the areas of need in our education system. I also welcome the new Bills, but my concern is with the length of time that is taken between decisions being made in the House to the first sod being cut.

The Education and Skills Authority was introduced as a means of cutting costs and bureaucracy in the education service. In fact, so far, it has had the opposite effect. It has swallowed up approximately £16.5 million without any tangible output, and that has led to a crisis in the delivery of capital programmes in our schools. When the former NIO Minister Angela Smith introduced ESA in 2005, it was with a view to delivering more resources to the classroom. The SDLP was supportive of any initiative to deliver the real changes that ESA promised. Any supposed changes to date have been achieved by scaling down the level of services, which has caused unnecessary stress to teachers. In every education debate, we speak about raising standards, but, to raise standards, we must invest in our teaching staff. We have great teachers, but they need ongoing professional development and support.

When I question the departmental officials regularly at Committee, they still refer to CASS, which has been haemorrhaging for years. Board officials will tell you that they can only firefight; they can provide only minimal assistance for schools in formal intervention. For many years, there has been a focus on school self-evaluation, but the ETI acknowledges that it is still not well enough embedded in schools. Many schools need professional help from outside to get monitoring and self-evaluation right. What did the Department do? It did not even maintain the level of continuing professional development but cut £15 million out of the budget.

I wonder what type of joined-up thinking takes place in the Department at times between ETI, the officials who report to the Committee and the accountants who balance the books. Obviously, the accountants are winning and education is losing. It is ironic that an Education Department is being driven by an economic rather than an educational agenda. Teachers will tell you that, in essence, there is no CASS, but it is not the boards' fault. Where is the power-sharing Executive? Only two parties, the DUP and Sinn Féin, seem to know what is going on with ESA. The Minister must get to grips with ESA and make sure that it represents value for money.

Investment in a long-term early years strategy is essential if we are to create the building blocks for our children's educational future. Current funding arrangements favour education at secondary or third level rather than at an early stage of learning. We believe that a child's development hinges on high-quality early childhood education. Increasing investment at an early stage is essential to address poor rates of literacy and numeracy. As I indicated last week, the involvement of parents and carers in their child's development is essential. The good practice that has developed through the extended schools programme needs to be disseminated to all schools.

An Audit Office report published in February 2013 pointed to the stark reality that thousands of young people in this region leave school unable to read or write. Although there have been some modest improvements, Northern Ireland's global education position in literacy and numeracy has been falling since 2006. In 2010-11, 9,000 pupils left full-time education after failing to reach the required standard in literacy and numeracy. We must do better.

Not only is an effective early years plan right for the development of young people, but it would help to improve our economy in the long term. A well-educated population can bring innovation, creativity and ingenuity into our economy. The SDLP believes that there must be a more robust focus on attainment in science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM) throughout our education system in order to provide young people with the right skills. As a consequence, our businesses, with the necessary skills base, will excel in this era of global competition. It must start in primary schools. The Department will tell us that it does, but it is buried in the world around us. You must satisfy the enquiring mind of the young child.

If we are to see our economic outlook improve, we need to address the skills imbalances that characterise our island economy. Critically, those imbalances lead to lacklustre productivity and stifle foreign direct investment and business start-up. Skills gaps act as an impediment to productivity and can, therefore, generate lags in growth. Skills shortages refer to an imbalance between demand and supply in the labour market. Labour demands may not be fully met if the labour supply does not possess the right skills to meet those needs. There seems to be a recognition that, across our island, there needs to be greater engagement between higher education and enterprise to ensure that there is no mismatch between the skills requirement of Ireland and the output of its higher education systems.

I await the rework of the common funding formula, as the current version will not accurately address social need or improve delivery of the Department of Education's key policy objectives. A proposal that leaves almost 80% of our schools with less money will not just leave many of our small schools at a greater disadvantage; it will close many. Maybe that is the real intention. If we add area-based planning into the mix, the heart is being ripped out of rural communities. Without rural schools, we do not have rural communities.

The SDLP is only too aware of the finite nature of the resources that are available for education services. However, increased budgetary restrictions on schools will result only in more expensive problems in school maintenance and future provision. Schools are astounded that the Department did not bid for extra funding as part of the January monitoring round. The Department stated:

"As the ability of DE funded organisations to commission and incur significant additional resource expenditure prior to the 31 March 2014 is limited at this late stage of the financial year it was not considered prudent to bid for additional funding; due to the risk that the budget could not be effectively utilised."

Every principal could have effectively utilised extra resources to replace computers that are so slow that they are useless or to carry out essential maintenance such as painting classrooms and fixing leaks. All schools are sitting with little projects that they could do if they had the money. They all could raise an order before the end of the day. Remember, it was the January monitoring round: there were still 10 weeks of the financial year left.

I do not understand why the Minister of Education has advised that his Department will not be participating in any future savings delivery plan. Surely, Budget 2011-15 required him to. So, the Executive, like the rest of us, are kept in the dark with respect to monitoring and whether the Department is meeting its objectives. We know that the principle behind one of those has not been met, namely that savings should be cash releasing and should not result in a diminution of services. CASS comes to mind.

Sound financial planning is intrinsic to improving our education system. The Minister of Education must work with the whole Executive, allocate funding to strengthen the educational prospects of all our young people and ensure that ESA is not an acronym for education still awaits.

Mr Beggs: The spring Supplementary Estimates set out and seek approval for changes since the Main Estimates were approved earlier in the financial year. As an Ulster Unionist member of the Health Committee, I will concentrate on the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety.

When I examined the changes in gross provision in the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety's Estimates, there were a couple of significant changes that stood out, on which I will seek further explanation from the Minister.

I refer to RfR A-13 for "Business Services Organisation", the funding for which appears to have significantly increased. Net provision was initially recorded as £15.6 million, but that was increased to £45.9 million. That represents an almost trebling of the Budget allocation. Will the Minister give an explanation of what has happened for such significant changes to be made? In particular, what has happened to the levels of savings and efficiencies that were predicted when the Minister of Health brought in the new business services organisation restructuring and when the health trust administrations were centralised?

I also refer to RfR A-7 for the Department's training and further education budget. There appears to have been a £27 million reduction in the funding originally allocated. I find that surprising because, at a time of Transforming Your Care and of many shortages in many specialities, I would have thought that there would be additional pressures on the training budget and not a 43% reduction. Again, will the Minister explain that significant change and reassure me and the community that that does not mean short-term cuts in the training budget for specialist nurses, doctors and allied health professionals that we will regret in the immediate future?

The spring Supplementary Estimates also incorporate the monitoring rounds into departmental figures. I noticed recently that, at the Finance Committee, the Chairman questioned a senior Department of Finance and Personnel official on the 2011-15 Budget's "special terms" that were agreed by DFP. Those terms held that DHSSPS could reallocate internal reduced requirements but that it should not bid during in-year monitoring rounds except in the event of major and unforeseen circumstances.

The public and I will be glad that this stipulation appears to have been put aside and that there has been a U-turn. It would be helpful if the Minister of Finance would confirm this.

5.15 pm

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beggs: Yes.

Mr Wells: The Member may remember that it was actually the predecessor to the present Minister, Mr McGimpsey, who negotiated this provision; therefore, if it is not going too well, the Member could blame the honourable Member for South Belfast. Secondly, the Member and I sit on the Health Committee, and he knows that the Minister does come forward to show that his bids in the monitoring round are for inescapable financial demands on the Health Department that could not have been foreseen at the start of the financial year.

Mr Beggs: That is interesting. When I looked at the in-year monitoring bids for 2011-12, I discovered that the Department of Health received £25 million that year, £72.5 million in 2012-13 and, if my figures are right, it will be £98 million in the current year, almost twice the amount that the previous Minister would have been given. You will recall that, although he welcomed in-year flexibility, the previous Health Minister was dissatisfied with the health budget and, indeed, voted against it. However, you and your colleagues, and the current Health Minister, appeared to be satisfied with it. What we are finding is that it is not sufficient, and with inescapable pressures, we find, in virtually every in-year monitoring round, that we have bids for elective operations in order to reduce waiting lists. That could have been predicted. It happens virtually every year, so it is not something that is unforeseen. I beg to differ with your interpretation.

The health service now faces huge pressures on its accident and emergency service; a discussion earlier today reflects that. Does the health service have enough finance in this year, and indeed, next year's funding? By examining the recent monitoring round bid of £67 million, one is able to see the considerable pressures that exist and were not dealt with in the monitoring round. Some £30 million was awarded to the Department of Health, but I notice that the Minister of Finance, in a rather Pontius Pilate-like fashion, did not allocate the £30 million against individual bids submitted. He is letting the Minister of Health decide where to allocate and ultimately what not to allocate or how else to provide for inescapable pressures that were not provided for in that monitoring round.

As far as the inescapable pressures are concerned, we have the clinical negligence settlement of £20 million, the children's services bid of £5 million for additional pressures for children in care, a bid of £7 million for the quality and safety of services and a bid for unscheduled admissions and winter pressures of £11 million — and winter pressures are fairly predictable, Mr Wells, as they normally happen every winter. What were described to the Committee and prioritised as inescapable pressures totalled £43 million.

I would first like to record my appreciation and that of the Ulster Unionist Party to all health service staff who strive to maintain our health service in Northern Ireland, despite having insufficient resources allocated to them to meet the level of demand they are facing. As I said, only £30 million was contributed to £43 million of inescapable pressures, so a further £13 million will have to be found from the rest of the health budget in order to meet these inescapable pressures.

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beggs: I have already given way and I am pressed for time.

The Health Committee was advised recently that each health trust in Northern Ireland is in deficit. On top of that, we are moving into the most heavily demanding time for the health service, when we have winter pressures. The health service is expected to find cuts to meet these inescapable pressures.

Additionally, some of the other bids that were not funded included a bid for £5 million for domiciliary care services, which help to improve patient flow out of our hospitals, take pressure off our accident and emergency units and provide additional care in the community, which means that, hopefully, fewer people will return to hospital. That was not inescapable, and the Minister did not prioritise it, but clearly it is very important. An elective care bid for £12 million was also not funded. It was not prioritised, and I suspect that, regrettably, waiting lists will grow. There was even a £7 million flagship bid for transitional TYC funding. Again, funding could not be found for that because of the inescapable priorities.

Many of the important changes that we are led to believe are essential will not have been funded this year. These were described as strategically important to the Department and critical to maintaining and improving the quality of care provided to patients and clients. However, they have not been funded.

There are huge pressures on our A&Es. During 2013, some 641 people had to wait more than 24 hours. We had a major incident at the Royal recently, which was due not to a major event but to a build-up of pressures and a shortage of hospital beds. The pressures at A&E are resulting in delays in ambulances handing over patients. I notice from the figures that, in the first six months up to September, over 500 ambulances had to wait at accident and emergency for more than one hour. One even had to wait for four hours. That results in fewer ambulances being available to respond to 999 calls, which means extended waiting times, with life-saving paramedics taking longer to get to scenes of accidents and emergencies. That can be critical. A few weeks ago, at Craigavon Area Hospital, ambulances had to be diverted to the Daisy Hill and South West hospitals.

As I said, the Health Committee has been advised that each trust is in deficit and that there are inescapable pressures. I wonder whether Mr Michael McGimpsey will receive an apology —

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is almost up,

Mr Beggs: — from the First Minister and his colleagues for saying that he was behaving in an "obscene" fashion. There is an urgent need to improve funding to the health service to meet the needs of our local community.

Mr Wells: Before I go into the main part of my speech, I have to say that Mr Beggs, if nothing else, is at least predictable. When Mr Beggs sees light at the end of the tunnel, he goes out and orders more tunnel. He simply cannot accept that huge strides have been made in health since May 2011.

The obvious success has been that, despite the very difficult fiscal straitjacket that we are all in, health has continued to deliver. The Minister, rather than simply complaining, moaning and demanding more money, set about finding inefficiencies in the present budget. Since May 2011, £700 million of inefficiencies have been taken out and redirected to essential care. I will put that amount of money in context: it is more than the budgets of seven Departments in Northern Ireland and almost as much as the budgets of the five smallest Departments combined.

That has been going on behind the scenes with a great deal of efficiency and diligence. Has anybody really noticed? No, we have not. However, it indicates that there were inefficiencies in the system left by the previous Sinn Féin, Ulster Unionist and direct rule Ministers. The Department has set about getting to the bottom of the situation and taking out the unessential and inefficient element of the health service budget.

Mr Beggs: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wells: Certainly. I will be more generous than the Member was.

Mr Beggs: The Member says that everything is behaving wonderfully. Is he aware that there has been a deterioration in performance on four-hour waiting times at our type 1 A&E units? In the best months in the past three years, an additional 1,350 people have had to wait more than four hours. In the worst months in the winter, an additional 3,000 people have had to wait more than four hours. In other words, an additional 100 people a day are having to wait more than four hours in accident and emergency. Does he call that a success?

Mr Wells: Yet again, the honourable Member for East Antrim is being selective with his statistics. He has failed to recognise, of course, the dramatic fall in the number of patients waiting 12 hours, particularly in his own Northern Trust area where the Minister moved in and took action on Antrim Area Hospital with dramatic success.

Therefore, I accept that we will never have enough money for health. In the entire world, only Brunei can say that it has enough money for health. There will always these stresses and strains.

*(Mr Principal Deputy Speaker
[Mr Mitchel McLaughlin] in the Chair)*

We have to remember that the Minister, in addition to taking out £700 million in efficiencies — I am sure that Mr Beggs is itching to stand up and congratulate him on that, and I will give him the opportunity to do so later — is faced with a situation in which the health element has, in real terms, had a 1.9% increase in the comprehensive spending review (CSR) period. There has been no increase at all, of course, at the social care end.

As I repeat very often, demand is rising by between 5% and 6%. Therefore, to square that circle, the Minister has had to take action to remove inefficiencies. I have to be honest and say that we are now well into that programme, and I believe that the vast majority of inefficiencies have been detected and removed. There is not much left to take. The budget is stretched, and that is probably the only thing on which I will agree with Mr Beggs. We will have to find further funding for several reasons, the first being the increase in demand. Secondly, Mr Beggs is right in saying that the Finance Ministers, Mr Hamilton and his predecessor Mr Wilson, have been generous at the monitoring rounds, and we applaud them for that. Remember, however, that over one third of the entire Budget in Northern Ireland is spent on health, and, therefore, it is to be expected that the health budget will get significant additional funding through the monitoring rounds.

However, we also have to accept that things such as the A5 will not be with us for much longer. We were fortunate, in a sense, that, for various reasons, that major infrastructure project had to be put on ice. That meant that the Finance Minister was able to give a very generous settlement to the Health Department. There will not be an A5, as far as we can detect, in the incoming year. Therefore, that monitoring round may not be as generous. We need to keep ensuring that, if possible, extra money is put into health because we know that it will be very wisely spent.

There have been some considerable successes in the year that has just passed: for instance, the Minister announced capital spending for the new children's hospital at the Royal Victoria Hospital site, for which every Member has been calling for many years. We were told that it was almost impossible to fund, but money was found. That is a success. We have had ongoing work in the hospital at Omagh and, as I mentioned earlier, a significant reduction in 12-hour waiting times. In addition, we have had the significant development of the clinics in places such as Banbridge. There has been real progress in very difficult times.

Every year about this time of year, the Health Department's chief finance officer comes before the Health Committee, and I always remind her that she is like Houdini in the glass water tank with chains and padlocks on her hands. Every year, she seems to get out of that tank later and later, but she always seems to make it, and we always seem to balance the budget. BUT, it is getting harder and harder to come out of the financial year with the books in balance, and we all have to accept that. Any additional provision that the Department of Finance and Personnel can give will be much welcomed.

Last week, the Assembly showed responsibility in the pensions debate. You may ask why I am raising that, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. Had the Assembly not taken that difficult decision — I accept that it was difficult for us all that we simply could not afford to pay for pension provision for the next 30 or 40 years — at least a third of any cuts required to fund a different decision would have been to health. That is how serious it was.

We are now coming to probably the most important decision that this Assembly will ever take, which is on the Welfare Reform Bill. It is a terribly difficult issue, and none of us will want to be where we will be in a few months' time with that Bill. We do not want to be in that situation, but we are stuck with it, and, because of parity, we will have to introduce measures that will bring pain to our community, and we accept that. However, remember that, if we decide to hide our head in the sand and not go down the line of social security parity, whatever we decide to spend will not come as additional money from the block grant but will be taken from it, and at least 35% of that will be shaved off our health service.

The reality is that, when you look at the money involved two years down the line, the Health Department simply cannot afford to take that hit. Before we decide to beat our breast and say that we are not in favour of any change in social security spending, we must remember that the inevitable outcome of that decision would be that our major spending Departments — Health, Education, Justice, Regional Development etc — take a very significant hit.

5.30 pm

Ms Maeve McLaughlin: Thank you for giving way. Can the Member outline to the House how he believes that a £20 million bid for outstanding clinical negligence is both major and unforeseen?

Mr Wells: Funnily, I was just about to come to that point in reaction to Mr Beggs's contribution.

I think that we need to distinguish between "unexpected" and "inescapable". "Unexpected" is an element that has suddenly appeared, that we knew nothing about and that could not have been predicted. "Inescapable" is something that we put in a bid for originally but, because of the finite budget, we could not fund. In the monitoring rounds, when more money has become available, we are asking for some more. Therefore, the Minister is not living in some naive land. Much of what he bid for was inescapable, but it was not unexpected, and that is the important distinction.

On medical negligence, we have no way of predicting at the start of the financial year what will come through the system. It is the courts that decide that, and we cannot dictate what happens. When the Minister became aware of the case, he made the bid for £20 million, and that is exactly right. I make no apology whatsoever for the Minister making as strong a bid as he can for additional money in the monitoring round. I do not believe that there is anything wrong with that, and if the system that was set up by Mr McGimpsey is flawed, that is where it came from. Remember, Mr Beggs, that originally the system was such that the Health Department was allowed full latitude in the distribution of money in its budget, but it automatically got the first £25 million of any monitoring round money. It was automatic in that the Health Minister did not have to bid for it.

We now have a different system whereby, of course, the Minister can bid. I would far rather have our Minister get £90 million by bidding than £25 million automatically. That is clearly a better system, and the Department of Finance and Personnel will have looked at the competing bids and thought that those were genuinely inescapable pressures on the Department and funded them accordingly.

We are living in cloud cuckoo land if we believe that any Minister will stand up in any fiscal situation and say, "We have enough". That is impossible. We will always have conflicting demands, but the Department has done extremely well over this past two and half years. It is to be congratulated for being able to employ more people to deliver better outcomes for patients, for being able to put more people through hospitals for various procedures and for being able to do so given such a straitjacket of funding.

Mr McAleer: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Last October, in a blaze of publicity, the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment and the Minister of Finance and Personnel announced the launch of the agrifood loan scheme. Its objective was to help local food producers, who are part of the integrated food supply chain, by providing them with finance through loans. The scheme was to start off by giving funding to broiler producers, before moving on to the dairy sector and producers of pig meat and red meat. At the scheme's launch, Minister Foster acknowledged that there were difficulties for the industry to access finance and that the scheme was very important for the Going for Growth strategy. The Minister said that they had worked very hard to ensure that the scheme was as straightforward as possible.

The Finance Minister reiterated those comments. He then said that the scheme would be rolled out on a phased basis, the first phase of which would be open for applications the following month. That would be last November. Now we are into the new year, and I have learnt that the £10 million that was given to INI for the scheme has been surrendered and that the scheme has not been put in place.

Farmers, local producers and, indeed, prospective producers are very frustrated. I have dealt with some constituents who have planning permission in place, have come to agreements with the main producers and have some matched funding in place, yet the scheme has not happened. I hope that, when he responds to today's debate, the Minister will tell us what happened. Where did it all go wrong? What is the situation with the £10 million? Will the scheme be resuscitated? The scheme is very important for the industry, and it wants answers.

Mr McKinney: I will contribute to this debate by talking about the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety. I have already expressed my party's concern about the moneys requested in the January monitoring round, particularly those for clinical negligence. I know that the Minister made the point that clinical negligence costs are accrued over a long time — years, in fact. However, that is not a suitable reason for simply ignoring the fact that the amount requested for clinical negligence stands in stark contrast to the other amounts. We must interrogate the breakdown of the additional £30 million requested in January, and we have not had sufficient answers.

I have to reflect on Mr Wells's comments about clinical negligence: that it is now the courts' fault. That is a classic case of issue avoidance that now it is the courts' responsibility. How do these cases end up in the courts? Is there another approach that the Health Department could take when it comes to these types of cases and mistakes being made in the health service? Perhaps the Member could point to something that the Minister has done in relation to that. How else could we look at those costs and not have to have a £20 million additional inescapable —

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr McKinney: I will, of course.

Mr Wells: The honourable Member, in this life and in a previous life, knows that medical negligence cases can take eight or nine years before they come to court and any final settlement is reached. The present Minister was not in position when that happened, nor was the previous one. In no way can he intervene at such a late stage in those cases. He has no way of knowing what the outcomes will be, as they are very difficult to predict. That is the nature of the beast, unfortunately, as far as medical negligence is concerned. Even if he took action now, it would be four or five years before there would be any change in the system.

Mr McKinney: I notice that the Member did not actually comment on what I asked, which was: can he point to anything that the Minister has done? The Minister has a responsibility to look after historic and present costs, but he also has a responsibility to deal with future potential costs, and he has not yet been able to point at anything that the Minister has done in relation to that.

The Minister and Mr Wells should also reflect on the fact that they have taken £700 million out of the health service. The SDLP recognises that, given that 50p in every pound is spent on health here, we have to look at how that money is spent and make sure that it is spent wisely. Given the big numbers that are talked about in the January monitoring round and in other rounds, we must make sure that, with the moneys that are claimed through clinical negligence, and the practical implementation of TYC — they become even more crucial. They have a bigger impact on a reducing budget. That underscores the need to ensure that those moneys do not end up with front line services being harmed. We must properly fund front line services.

We cannot ignore the Minister's announcement this morning on issues around accident and emergency at the Royal. Our narrative has been that these cases apply all across the North, but the Minister was able to tell us that, after consulting 100 staff, he has found intolerable pressures in that system. Some of those reductions, combined with demands for money elsewhere, are adding increased pressure on to that system.

As the Minister well knows, the pressures on health are many, and they are all very genuine. We have only to look at the crisis situations recently seen in many of our accident and emergency departments to know that funding needs to be sufficient in order to maintain a high quality of patient care.

The invest-to-save aspect of the current health budget requirements has at its heart Transforming Your Care. I trust that the Finance Minister will continue to cast a clinical eye on every aspect of Transforming Your Care and whether or not the financial cuts are actually beneficial in the long term.

For it to work, it is important that investments that are made to save money down the line genuinely achieve those savings and are in credible invest-to-save options. Many in the professional side of management, the clinical side, the representative organisations, the patient groups and a significant number of Members still have reservations about aspects of Transforming Your Care being able to deliver the savings that are being suggested. Indeed, we met UNISON and the Royal College of Nursing, both of which have those concerns.

Other aspects of health and social care policy will present us with real and deep financial challenges, not least the cost of social care. Given that we have an integrated health and social care system here, it would be a great pity if we ended up having to ask people at the very limit of their means to make contributions to the social care of elderly people in particular, which are well beyond their ability to afford. In our view, such a scenario would be a breach of the basic contract at the heart of the NHS, which is to provide health and social care free at the point of need. I trust that the Minister will continue to respect and uphold that principle.

As we reflect and begin to face up to the challenges of providing an increasingly ageing population with social care, we must do so in a way that does not cripple working families or provide little more than a shifting of debt from one generation to the other.

Finally, I want to talk about all-island efficiencies and opportunities. Those are significant in the health and social care arena, whether they are through the commissioning of specialist surgical and secondary care services, greater opportunity for cooperation in the primary care sector in and along the border region, integrating emergency services in the border region or through the specialist and strategic investments that could be made in our very good and very modern hospitals north of the border. I think about the success of the cancer centre in Belfast City Hospital and the opportunity for further cardiac services to be developed in Altnagelvin.

There are many financial opportunities out there, and we need to ensure that the Minister and his Department maximise each of them to achieve the standards that are necessary for 21st-century healthcare provision. There is one thing that the SDLP fears, and that is the provision of healthcare under the strategic direction of the 'Transforming Your Care' document must not become simply a financial exercise rather than one that has patient care and front line services at its core.

Mr Swann (The Chairperson of the Committee for Employment and Learning): Speaking as Chair of the Employment and Learning Committee, I welcome the opportunity to outline the Committee's views on the spring Supplementary Estimates 2013-14.

Given that it is one of the Executive's largest spenders, the Committee takes scrutiny of the DEL budget very seriously. The Committee understands the challenges to the forecasting of the budget, given that the Department's services are so closely linked to the wider economic conditions. Throughout the 2013-14 period, the Committee listened with interest as officials from the Department explained the subtle shifts in funding to meet changing demands and the requirements of decreasing budgets.

In this financial year, the Committee has had seven briefings from DEL officials on its savings delivery plans and monitoring rounds. The difficulty in estimating a demand-led budget such as DEL's was best exemplified by the Department coming to the Committee last May and advising that, in the June monitoring round, it included a bid for £5 million to help to ease the pressure with employment programmes. It also advised that it was confident in the success of the bid and that, if it was not successful, it would resubmit the bid in the October monitoring round. However, the bid was unsuccessful, and it did not show up again in the October monitoring round. When asked what had happened in the intervening period, the Department outlined that it had better estimates of its future spend and was able to find savings elsewhere.

From that anecdote on how estimates can be wrong, I will now move to comment on the spring Supplementary Estimates. The Committee acknowledges the £9.2 million resource easement in the Department and notes that that may have been larger if the £5 million bid had been successful. The Committee notes that £6 million of the money that was surrendered was from the further education colleges' end-of-year flexibility schemes and that up to £6 million will go back to the colleges in June if it is required.

The fact that £1 million has been returned because the youth employment scheme was unable to spend it is a concern to the Committee, given the current high levels of youth unemployment. The Committee also notes the technical changes in student loans and the adjustment of £22.1 million in resource from the Treasury to increase the student loans impairments line, which will therefore not come from other Departments. The Committee notes that that headroom has been built in to the Department for Employment and Learning's student loan budget following a very recent change in the way that student loans are recorded throughout the UK. That change was notified to the Finance Minister on 15 January 2014.

The Committee also notes with interest that DEL has made a technical transfer of £3.3 million to the Department of Health for its condition management programme. The Committee was briefed on that programme last year and has taken a keen interest in its continuance, as both DEL and the Department of Health are reviewing the funding sources. The Committee is particularly pleased to see the £25 million capital allocation from the Strategic Investment Board via OFMDFM for the University of Ulster as a loan for funding the relocation of the university's Jordanstown campus to Belfast city centre.

The Committee is content to note the spring Supplementary Estimates and looks forward to reviewing their accuracy in future briefings.

Speaking as Ulster Unionist employment and learning spokesperson, I can say that the most concerning fact to us is the £1 million that was returned, especially in the current situation, given increased levels of youth unemployment. We think that the Department should have made better use of that money to ease the critical situation at this time. There are a number of programmes and delivery schemes out there, and the Department keeps bringing forward further programmes. How is it going to tackle this programme? We think that to hand back £1 million is reprehensible in the current situation.

5.45 pm

Mr Attwood: I apologise that I have not been in the Chamber to hear much of the debate, but other duties took me elsewhere in the Building.

Mr Swann said in his contribution that his Committee took the scrutiny of the DEL budget very seriously. I think that any Chair and any member of any Committee would echo those comments. That is why, in opening, I want to make a general comment about the conduct of the OFMDFM Committee.

Two weeks ago, it wrote unanimously to the permanent secretary and head of the Civil Service asking him to come to the Committee to discuss the inability of the Committee to extract from the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister relevant information for it to fulfil its statutory function of accountability, including accountability in respect of Estimates and Votes on Account. The Committee had to write to the head of the Civil Service asking that he come to the Committee to see whether he could work with the Committee to resolve the issues that the Committee has with the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister in respect of questions that it has on policy implementation, the proper spending of resources and the allocation of moneys.

I could speak at length, as could other members of the Committee, about how that situation has arisen. A Committee of the House, further to devolution, is, in my view, being frustrated and is unable to fulfil its statutory function, including when it comes to budgetary issues, to the point where it has to ask to see the permanent secretary.

The Committee has agreed that, as a preamble to that meeting, the Chair and the Deputy Chair of the Committee will meet the head of the Civil Service to discuss the difficulty, which long predates my joining the Committee in October, about questions to the First Minister and the deputy First Minister not being asked, papers not being provided and answers not being given to proper questions further to our statutory responsibility.

It took years of democratic struggle to achieve devolution, only to see devolution now being frustrated by the failure of one Department to account properly to the Committee to which it is answerable on behalf of the people of Northern Ireland.

The Minister has left the House, but he will be aware that, earlier today, the First Minister confirmed how 40% of the budget allocation for the social investment fund would be spent. Does the Minister accept the argument that the OFMDFM Committee is being frustrated in discharging its statutory function in the way that I have outlined?

I have a second question for the Minister. In 2011, there was a budget allocation for SIF. However, nearly three years later, the only money spent has been on consultants. Over the weekend, I heard the leader of another political party on this island, at his annual ard fheis, criticise the Irish Government for spending money on Irish Water, because all of it was going into the pockets of consultants. When I heard the leader of that party say those words in Wexford, I wondered whether the leader of that party would apply those very same words to the allocation of moneys up until today to the social investment fund. Up until today, all the money has gone into the pockets of consultants. I wonder whether I will get an answer to that question.

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel):
Not from me.

Mr Attwood: You would be tempting fate, I think, if you were to answer that, Minister.

My question to the Minister is this: what sense does it make that a Budget allocation in 2014 has, as of today, been spent only on consultants? The First Minister confirmed in the House today that the full spend of the £80 million would now stretch into the next mandate. Is there any government policy or spend where a Budget allocation of three years ago has not been spent until today and where it will take another three years to spend even the £80 million that was allocated under the Budget headline? Does it not prove that when it comes to proper management of finances, you put the money where the policy is located? When it comes to neighbourhood disadvantage and renewal, the policy is located in DSD.

That is not to take away from the fact that SIF may fund good projects; but it does not take away the concern that, around SIF, there is still a level of cronyism, party politics and insider trading in the allocation of some of that money.

I have a third question for the Minister. I know that earlier, my colleague the Chair of the Enterprise Committee asked questions about Horizon 2020, the £80 billion fund for research, development and innovation that comes from Europe. I acknowledge that DETI and INI have appointed additional staff — I think that they are five or six in number, but they are nonetheless additional staff — to try to better deliver the funding opportunities that arise from Horizon 2020.

Does the Minister not agree, not least because of the need to develop the financial profile of Northern Ireland when it comes to research and development, that the current ambition of a drawdown of only £100 million from the Horizon 2020 budget for 2014-2020 is scandalous when you compare it with the anticipated drawdown in Dublin from the same budget of €1.4 billion, being mindful that, just as they surpassed their notional targets for FP7, they will surpass that and will get closer to a drawdown of €2 billion over those six years?

With regard to that low-hanging fruit, is there not an opportunity for the Government in the North to develop the systems and structures in government to draw down the potential funding that could see the money that is being allocated under these Estimates to research and development in universities, for example, being multiplied many times?

My fourth question to the Minister is one that the SDLP raised in 2009. The Minister will be fully aware of it. Where are we now, five years later, with regard to using to the public's benefit some of the money that was gathered through the Harbour Commissioners' very efficient management of the port of Northern Ireland? Are we any closer either to getting cash —

Mr Allister: No.

Mr Attwood: I am hearing over here that the answer is no. Maybe the answer will be yes from over there shortly. Are we any closer to being able to use either the cash reserves, if they have not been spent on alternative projects by the Harbour Commissioners, or, in some other way, the financing and profits of the Harbour Commissioners for the wider interest beyond that of the harbour?

The harbour is a very important asset in this part of the North. It is one of the two main harbours on the island of Ireland. It has a profit margin of 35% of its annual income. It is probably the most profitable organisation in the North of Ireland. Are we any closer to ensuring that some of its funds come back into the public purse for the wider public benefit? Are we any closer, for example, to seeing a contribution from the Harbour Commissioners to the construction of the underpass by his ministerial colleague in DRD? Given that they have responsibility for the harbour area, it seems to me that it is a small hop, skip and jump to contribute to the funding of a road and underpass that are a matter of metres or yards away.

My final point is that there is a responsibility in these times, given the profile of issues around victims and survivors generally and, not least, because of the Haass talks, for government to be looking at and probing more deeply the work of the Victims and Survivors Service (VSS). Work is ongoing. I acknowledge the work of the Victims' Commission in that regard. However, in my view, when it comes to money that is going to the VSS, a lot of it would be better spent by third-party accredited organisations who know best what needs to be done on behalf of victims and survivors generally.

Mr B McCrea: I listened to the Minister's opening remarks, when he reminded us of the purpose of the debate. I think that he rather forlornly hoped that we would stick to it but accepted that we might stray a little. However, I will try to deal with some of the issues raised.

I am disappointed by the progress towards how we look at the Budget process. Perhaps the Minister will agree. Frankly, it is rather difficult to understand what is going on in many cases. I have a Research and Information Service paper on DFP's review of financial process. It outlines quite a number of recommendations that, I understand, have the support of the Committee for Finance and Personnel. I wonder whether the Minister might, at some stage, take some time to explain to us why we have not been able to make more progress on that. He may choose to reflect on the process happening in Scotland where, because of the potential for the enhanced devolution of fiscal powers, they are looking at an even better streamlined system. The reason that is important is this: if the devolution of corporation tax is one of the key objectives of the Minister, he will know that it is one of the most volatile taxes that we can manage and we need better fiscal powers and better fiscal control to make sure that we can deal with it. That was one of the reasons why my party, NI21, called for an overarching review of all our fiscal powers.

I quote what the Minister said last week on 4 February when he said that we have had a number of difficult years. In fact, he repeated it. He said:

"we have had a difficult number of years — times will get tougher even as the economy improves, particularly in respect of public expenditure." —
[Official Report, This Bound Volume, p316, col 1.]

That is a really interesting statement to make only last week: even as the economy improves, things will get tougher. That means that we need better financial control.

I put to the Minister a quotation from Liam Fox, a member of the Conservative Party, speaking about his desire to stop the ring-fencing of health:

"I think we've tested to destruction the idea that simply throwing ... money at the health service will make it better."

That is a stark warning. A lot of our revenue is unhypothecated, and, if we lose health and education's ring-fenced status, we will have real problems with our Budget.

I will move on to some of the specifics that the Minister may wish to deal with, since this is something of a tidying-up exercise. I will continue where the previous Member left off, with the Belfast Harbour Commissioners. One of the things that was interesting in the Hansard report of the Finance and Personnel Committee meeting was this:

"The DRD has a number of significant allocations and easements. In allocations, £20 million went to the DRD to make up the shortfall in the release of funds from the ports, which we thought we might get but did not work out that way."

That is a really interesting statement. It relates to the Budget statement. The Executive have agreed that the Harbour Commissioners will take forward measures to ensure that they can make a direct financial contribution of £20 million a year for 2013-14 and 2014-15. In answer to a question asked by Mr Attwood, Mr Len O'Hagan said that they had very clear legal advice:

"I think that is the same as that of DRD — that there is no way in which any of the assets or cash of Belfast Harbour can be transferred to the Assembly."

Given that you had that warning, you wonder why we have it in the Budget and why we were expecting it to come along but it did not work out that way.

I want to make some other points. In health spending, £56 million resource and £46 million capital were reallocated this year. Mr Wells was waxing lyrical about it. Did no other Department have any requirements? Where is the link to that expenditure in the Programme for Government? We had an agreed position, and suddenly we are just dishing out money. I am not saying that it was not right to give the money — I just do not know — but the idea was that it was supposed to be tied to the Programme for Government, and other Members have made the point that this is not really working out terribly well.

6.00 pm

The Principal Deputy Speaker will probably be familiar with this point of argument, and I will quote him. In Committee, Mr McLaughlin asked:

"Are we giving the money to health because it can spend it?"

Mr Jakobsen replied, "Yes". Mr McLaughlin said:

"It is not that health needs it."

Mr Jakobsen said that health did need it because it had made a bid,

"but it can spend the money now, towards the year end. Most Departments cannot ramp up their spending quickly. That is the issue."

When we look for details, we cannot find them. So it comes down to this: how are we meant to manage a Budget when we do not get the figures and do not agree to the protocol? I want to hear from the Minister whether he thinks that the process is fit for purpose, regardless of the merits of the actual allocation. It seems doubtful to me.

I also want to mention social and affordable housing. Demand continually outstrips provision, yet, as far as I can see — I stand to be corrected — DSD has made limited in-year bids for extra resources to boost house building. Why is it that we cannot try to meet that build? Why did we decide to put all the money in health?

The social investment fund was announced today to great triumph. I read the tweets from the 'Belfast Telegraph' about how wonderfully we have done. In any other place, a budget that was delivered two and a half years late, after probably our worst recession, would be greeted not with cries of joy but with derision. How are we able to manage this Budget if we still do not know what has been paid for?

We then get to welfare reform. I see that we have made a provision for £5 million a month from January and that there has been £15 million for the past three months. How long will that carry on?

I am not sure whether the issue about the Titanic building is in the Budget, but Mr Allister was the last person to ask a question about this — a full year ago. You will remember that because, at the time, there was also a debate about the value of mints at the front of the Chamber. We were able to discuss who should pay for the mints in great detail, but, when it came to the £18.3 million, we were told that it could not be drawn down, would be put somewhere else, would be reallocated, might be lost or might not be lost. There is some talk about it in Hansard, but I still do not know what happened to that £18.3 million.

Going through the details, I see that, in the monitoring rounds, £17 million is allocated to the Invest NI building: 'Invest NI Snaps Up HQ Building'. That is £17 million that we have just spent. That seems rather strange. Paragraph 3.36 of the Budget for 2011-15 states:

"The Executive has now endorsed the establishment of a Central Asset Management Unit who will work to deliver the £100 million of additional capital receipts identified in the draft Budget."

In the Budget, we were planning to sell the estate and raise money, but suddenly we have decided to buy buildings. It may be that that is the correct decision — I do not know — but I am telling you that that 180-degree turn without any real discussion or oversight is a bit of a surprise, given what was agreed in the Budget. I have an issue about how we conduct our business in all these matters.

These debates, during which we stand up and say the same old thing time and time again and have 10 minutes to try to fix the travails of the world, are not the proper way to do government or to engage. We should have a Budget, and it should be discussed. Committees are entitled to paperwork and information, and we should have proper oversight. That is good governance, but it is not what we get. I want the Minister, in his response, to state what he intends to do about it.

Mr Allister: Today, in this debate, I have heard a number of Members dutifully laud the Executive for the production of their Estimates, the diligence and thoughtfulness that goes into all these matters and the delivery that comes with it. Is this the Executive whose joint leader described them as an embarrassment? Are we talking about the same Executive?

Of course, if we want to talk about embarrassment, Mr McCrea has just referred to the episode today of the announcement of the social investment fund. When did we first hear about the social investment fund? It just happened to be just before the last election in 2011. We heard about the £80 million that was hard won by the DUP and Sinn Féin. They were going to spread it to causes of need throughout the community, and things were going to be wonderful. Today, three years later, after £42 million of it has had to be given back during various monitoring escapades, we have some announcements. However, the

First Minister was careful to make sure that there was no scrutiny of the announcement by keeping the detail off the website until the time for OFMDFM questions in Question Time had passed. What do I find as a representative for North Antrim? I find that not one penny will come to North Antrim under this tranche of the social investment fund. The whole northern region is getting £400,000. This is the great announcement that was promised for years. Little wonder that the joint First Minister is embarrassed by the Executive. So he might be, though he seems to forget that he is their joint leader and therefore a great source of that embarrassment.

I have a few questions for the Minister. When you examine the financial process through the year and the changes in the in-year monitoring, it is noticeable that four Departments — three in particular: DARD, DCAL and the Department of Education — never give up anything under a single easement during the year. Is it just a coincidence that they are the three Sinn Féin Ministries? Not one penny was surrendered in the easements. While other Departments were expected to make savings to allow redistribution, they operated on the basis of holding their hand out and giving nothing. Why was it that those three Sinn Féin Departments had nothing to offer in easements? Are they the freeloading Departments of the Executive for which it is all take and no give? Of course, their Ministers are from the party that is holding up the review of financial processes. It is courtesy of them that we do not even have basic transparency in our budgetary arrangements. If it is not a coincidence, why is the Finance Minister not going after them hard for their failure to deliver on easements? Of course, the same party is piling up the penalties on welfare reform and again wanting to freeload on that front but taking none of the pain in its Departments.

Indeed, some have had most lavish uplifts during the year. DCAL's cultural policy and language line increased by 100% over the year. And yet, other Departments are required, of necessity, to pull their weight. Why are the Sinn Féin Departments not pulling their weight in financial easements? That is a question that I would like to hear answered.

I would also like to hear what progress the Minister is making in dealing with another freeloading issue to which I referred in my question to the Minister for Employment and Learning: free education for students from the Irish Republic in our regional colleges. That costs over £7 million a year. Some 5% of the DEL budget for further education is spent on providing free education to Republic of Ireland students, and not a penny of it is paid back by the Southern Government. What progress is the Minister making there?

What progress has been made on the free healthcare that is provided on a cross-border basis, or is there just another saga of freeloading in that regard? Perhaps the Minister can tell us what progress has been made in balancing the books in that regard.

Something else that the Minister can maybe elaborate on is the progress that he is making in dealing with the outstanding equal pay claim of civil servants from the PSNI and other arms in Justice. How long will that saga continue? How long will those people be held out on before they get the equality of provision that others obtained? The Minister has told the House a number of times that he is looking at the matter. I hope that he is doing more than looking at it; I hope that he will deliver on it. Maybe it is now close enough to the election for him to make the announcement that he will deliver on it. Maybe tonight he will tell us.

There seem to be some very favoured organisations in the Estimates. One of them, I note, is the Strategic Investment Board, which gets an uplift during the year of not 100%, 200% or 300% but 400%. It gets a 400% increase in its funding. Why is that? One is left to wonder.

Something else that puzzles me about the Estimates is the uplift during the year for Invest NI of some £30 million, yet it is a serial underspender. In monitoring round after monitoring round in recent years, it has been returning funds. Will the Minister give the rhyme or reason for Invest NI nonetheless seeing that increase during the year?

How are we doing on the dispersal of and reduction in the number of quangos? I remember another brave, bold announcement that we were going to cull quangos, that this Executive were going to tackle the issue of quangos. Of course, they were also going to tackle the issue of surplus Departments, and we had a great to-do that DEL was going to be disappeared, only for there to be a total U-turn. How about the quangos? Why is it that tonight we have more people serving on quangos than when this Executive came into being?

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is almost up.

Mr Allister: In 2007, in OFMDFM alone, there were 94 appointees on quangos. In just five years, that had increased to 108.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr Allister: So, where is the cull of quangos?

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Order. The Member's time is up.

Mr Allister: Of course, there is also the £30 million that we continue to squander on the useless North/South bodies.

6.15 pm

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I call the Minister of Finance and Personnel. You have used 16 minutes of your allocated hour.

Mr Hamilton: Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker, for allowing me the opportunity to respond as best I can to Members. I would have been disappointed if the last Member had not got in the last point. I am sure that he would have been more disappointed, though. At one stage, I thought that he was going to whip himself up into such a frenzy that he might have put additional pressures on the Health Minister's already pressurised health budget.

I thank all Members, including the last Member, for their contributions to the debate today, particularly those who spoke on behalf of their Committee. This has been my first Supply resolution debate as Finance Minister but certainly not my first as a Member of the House. Over my time, I have seen a growing awareness and understanding in the House of the nature of the debate. I welcome the comments of those who contributed to that understanding. Nevertheless, as predicted, some Members took the opportunity to, shall we say, air subjects more loosely connected to the Supply resolutions before us. I will attempt to respond as fully as possible in the time available to me to as many of the relevant issues discussed as possible.

I acknowledge the confirmation today by the Chairperson of my Committee, Daithí McKay, on behalf of the Committee for Finance and Personnel, that there has been appropriate consultation with it on the spending plans reflected in the motions and that the Committee is content that the Budget Bill, which I hope to introduce after this debate, should proceed via accelerated passage. I very much appreciate the assistance, as always, of the Committee in this matter.

I now turn to the issues raised by Members. I will deal with one of Mr Allister's points. I know that he made several points, and I will endeavour to respond as best I can, but I lead with one about which there is — how can I put it? — an inexactitude in the facts. He made comments about how there had been no reduced requirements from Sinn Féin Departments. I am happy to stand corrected if he did not say that there had been no reduced requirements, but one does not have to go too far back — back to January, in fact, and the January monitoring round — to find that, in the first table supplied to Members after the statement, the first reduced requirement was from the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development. It was £500,000 on a forestry fund, and there was a reduced requirement of £0.8 million for the Northern Ireland food and animal information system. There was a reduced requirement of £1.1 million in Department of Education surplus asset receipts. There was £4.5 million of a reduced requirement in DCAL's regional stadium programme. If you go back a little further to the October monitoring round, there was a reduced requirement of £3.7 million from the Culture Minister, and there were surplus asset receipts from the Department of Education of £1.6 million. It is not entirely accurate to say that there have been no reduced requirements from Sinn Féin Ministers.

Mr Allister: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Hamilton: Yes.

Mr Allister: In fact, I was quoting from a document produced by the Minister's Department as a briefing paper to the Finance Committee just a short time ago. It provided at annex A the reconciliation of DEL from Main Estimates to spring Supplementary Estimates 2013-14. Under the column on easements, it showed DARD — nil; DCAL — nil; and the Department of Education — nil. The source of my allegation is a departmental document from the Minister's Department.

Mr Hamilton: Reduced requirements are the important aspect of the management of finances in the Executive and the Assembly. It is very clear that all Departments — periodically some more than others, for various reasons — [Interruption.] The Member has been in the House for long enough now to realise that the papers that are produced and put forward, both in January monitoring and October monitoring — I am sure that I could go back to June monitoring last year and, indeed, monitoring rounds before that in previous years — show that DARD, DE and DCAL in this mandate have offered reduced requirements on every occasion. It is not for me, as Minister of Finance and Personnel, to in any way defend the reasons behind all of those, but there are certainly reduced requirements coming forward in every case. If the Member looks at the annex that he has been brandishing, he will see that easements on the resource side have been zero. On the capital side, there have been significant easements and reduced requirements.

Of course, other Departments have had very low figures, but I do not hear the Member criticising them. Far be it from me to defend any Minister's Department, but, when the Member reads in Hansard his comments that there have been no easements — I think that that is what he said — he will, even by the piece of paper that he is brandishing, be shown to be wrong. I will not go into it further, as I have already used up five minutes of my time. I want to address some of the other issues that the Member and others raised.

Mr McKay and Mr Bradley raised issues about headroom. In fact, the Chair of the Committee described the quantum of headroom this year as perhaps a preparation for bad financial management. I have to say that I do not agree. It is important to emphasise that we are factoring in to the headroom an additional £15 million for welfare reform penalties. Should progress on welfare reform be made before the end of the year, we might be able to utilise some of that funding. I believe that the inclusion of headroom in that case is prudent planning; it is certainly not preparing for bad budget management.

I also want to point out that Departments should be totally focused on adhering to their budgets as they stand, and I expect them to come in within those budgets. Headroom is in place only should significant late easements arise that allow us to avoid handing back funding to Her Majesty's Treasury. It ensures that we spend all our money and do not relinquish any of it back to the Treasury. I am sure that we would all agree with that.

The Committee Chair advised that the Committee of Finance and Personnel would like a report to be issued annually outlining the final out-turn position. Historically, the out-turn position has been reported to Departments at provisional out-turn stage, along with my statement to the House accompanying the June monitoring round. That is available much earlier than the final out-turn stage. There is rarely much change at the final out-turn stage, and it usually manifests itself in or around the summer period. My officials and I are happy to work with the Committee to develop reports that will provide an update at the final out-turn stage.

Mr McKay is a keen cyclist, although I am not sure whether that is still the case with the recent weather. I agree with him that there is enormous prestige in Northern Ireland being selected as the venue for the Grande Partenza of the Giro d'Italia. That, once again, proves that Northern Ireland is a world-class tourism and sporting venue. In recognition of the importance of the event, the Tourist Board has committed £3 million to it, and I understand that DETI dedicated a further half a million pounds to the Tourist Board to cover some Giro d'Italia-related activities. The Member also mentioned that DSD had committed funds for what is perhaps best described as a spring clean for some of the towns along the route. Of course, the Executive would have to consider any further funding requirements for the event. I am certainly content to look at more spending if it is required, although I have to say that losing £15 million to welfare reform this year certainly does not help matters.

Mr Givan: Hear, hear.

Mr Hamilton: Mr Givan — right on cue — raised a number of issues on the Department of Justice's —

Mr Wells: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Hamilton: Yes, I will.

Mr Wells: The Minister quoted the figure of £15 million. Perhaps he could also alert the House to what the likely outcome will be in the following year if we do not adopt the Welfare Reform Bill in its entirety?

Mr Hamilton: I am happy to reiterate what I said in my opening statement about the estimated cost for next year being £105 million. I am sure that, having spoken to and debated with colleagues on the health budget, the Member will appreciate that that will have a very serious impact. There is a danger in dismissing £15 million as a paltry amount in the context of a £12 billion departmental budget overall. Once it rises from £15 million to £105 million and then escalates to over £1 billion in total over the next five years, the impact on vulnerable people and public services in Northern Ireland will be exceptionally acute.

Mr Givan raised issues about the Department of Justice's budget, and he is the Chair of the Justice Committee. I welcome the work of the Minister and the Committee in making efforts to manage the Department of Justice's budget, especially its legal aid budget. The Department of Justice's budget faces many pressures, and the Executive will, where possible, support the Minister in his work. Indeed, alongside the £115 million allocated by Treasury, the Executive supported the Department with some £16 million this year. The Department of Justice's budget, however, remains ring-fenced, and I expect the Justice Minister to continue to contain those pressures next year. The Member might be interested to know that I am scheduled to meet the Chief Constable and the Minister of Justice soon to look at pressures in future years.

The Member mentioned headroom for the Prison Service exit scheme. Although there is no guarantee that money will be available, I am hopeful that we will be able to meet that bid if funding becomes available between now and the end of the financial year.

A number of Members — Mr Bradley, Mr Cree, Mrs Cochrane and, latterly, Mr McCrea — raised the issue of the review of financial processes. I am as frustrated as everyone who raised the issue at the lack of progress on the review. I strongly agree that this is an area where we need to see reform of what are outdated processes. It has, as Mr McCrea mentioned, been agreed by my Committee. Clearly, it has widespread support in the House.

As Members will be aware, and I think that Mr Cree and others mentioned this, the Education Minister has expressed concern around aspects of this review and, more specifically, around the level of scrutiny applied to his budget. I share the concerns of others, as, in my view, the Education Minister's issues have been addressed. However, I am willing to have further discussions with the Education Minister on this subject, as progress will, of course, require Executive agreement.

I am sure that many will agree with me that we want to get rid of an archaic, out-of-date and direct rule-era system of budgeting. I am sure that the Education Minister would similarly agree with the need to get rid of a direct rule-era system of budgeting.

Mr Bradley and Mrs McLaughlin, as did many other Members, raised issues about special arrangements for the Department of Health. It is true that the Executive have provided substantial additional funds to the health service in this financial year. I am sure that all Members would welcome that, although at times I listened to Members, Mr Bradley included and others, who sounded as if they were complaining about additional money being spent on the health service. The original agreement precluded Health from tabling routine bids, but it did not preclude allocations being made to the Department of Health.

The monitoring rounds exist to ensure that resources are distributed to the Executive's priorities, and the Executive have rightly considered our health service to be one of those top priorities. In the context where significant funding became available this year, I think that the Executive would be short-sighted if we decided not to fund our health services when this was considered a higher priority than other requests, especially at a time when the health service is facing considerable pressures.

I move to Anna Lo's comments; she was speaking as Chair of the Environment Committee. I thank her for her comments on the Budget. Although I am sympathetic to the call for budgets to be made available for cleaning up illegal waste, the Member will know that that is a matter more directly for the DOE Minister to prioritise and bring to the Executive if necessary.

The Member also raised the issue of local government reform and the Planning Service budget and road safety budget. The Member will know that the budget for planning and road safety is a matter for the DOE Minister, who will prioritise his overall budget accordingly. The Member drew attention to the reduction in the Planning Service's line by £2 million in the spring Supplementary Estimates. That is a result of some internal reallocations of budgets in DOE to ensure that back office costs are correctly apportioned across the various business areas, particularly planning and the NIEA. It does not represent a cut in front line services with the Planning Service and does not have any bearing on the transfer of responsibilities to local government under RPA.

Michaela Boyle raised issues in respect of hardship funding through DARD. She mentioned the £5.3 million that was allocated to DARD. I am glad that the Executive were able to support our local agricultural industry in that way. The Member acknowledged that I was on record in stating that the Executive remain committed to the A5 project, and that is true. As we all know, the legal challenge by the Alternative A5 Alliance resulted in the statutory orders relating to the A5 scheme being quashed. The Regional Development Minister is seeking to address the area of concern that the court identified.

Mr Cree asked about a number of in-year financial movements, and I will do my best to address as many of those as I can. As part of January monitoring, DARD declared a small easement of £500,000 from the £4 million awarded to the Department to improve the tourism potential of our forests under the economy and jobs initiative. I am sure that Members will agree that our natural assets have considerable tourism potential. Therefore, I encourage the Agriculture Minister to ensure that this fund is prioritised.

Mr Cree also raised the issue of the £2.7 million capital receipt from the Department of Education. I can confirm that, in Education's case, that resulted from surplus capital receipts realised from asset disposals that arose as a result of the school sectors disposing of assets earlier than planned and above the level of Education's planned receipts budget.

Mr Cree queried the £9.2 million reduced requirement by the Department for Employment and Learning. I can confirm that £6 million is related to the further education (FE) college end-year flexibility (EYF) scheme, which is similar to the scheme that the Department of Education has. There was £1.5 million, which was related to employment schemes and initiatives, and £1.8 million, which was related to ring-fenced depreciation.

6.30 pm

Invest Northern Ireland's headquarters PFI buy-out, which Mr Cree and Mr McCrea raised, will result in a saving of approximately £24 million over the lease period, representing an internal rate of return of 16%. All Members will agree that that represents a good deal for the Executive.

The £5 million surrendered by DETI from the economy and jobs initiative was reallocated and will not be held for redistribution next year. The £1.6 million released by my Department related to staff costs, and I am sure that the Member will welcome the work done by my Department to reduce the cost of administration.

Mr Cree and Mr Maskey raised the issue of the £66.3 million of reduced requirements from DSD, which included almost £15 million from the Housing Executive. Most of that related to the housing maintenance contracts, an issue that the whole House will be well aware of. My colleague the Social Development Minister has done good work to ensure that the contracts will be fit for purpose. He is right not to proceed if the contracts do not represent good value for money. I would rather see, as I am sure all Members would, the money being spent on the clear need in our housing stock. It should not be wasted on overly expensive contracts or on those that are not value for money.

Of the OFMDFM allocations that Mr Cree spoke about, the £5 million balance relates to almost £3 million for good relations, almost £1 million for PlayBoard and £1.3 million for the Hillsborough agreement sites.

Finally, the Member mentioned blank pages in the initial document. I can only assume that this was due to a printing error, but I am sure that he would agree that there are enough numbers on the other pages to keep him and the House well occupied.

Mr Frew, in his capacity as Chair of the Agriculture and Rural Development Committee, mentioned the 'Going for Growth' report. The agrifood sector has performed well, very much bucking the trend during the difficult economic conditions of the past number of years. We should commend the level of ambition that the Agri-Food Strategy Board outlined in its 'Going for Growth' report. 'Going for Growth' calls for major investment from government, which, as the Member highlighted, should lever in significant investment from the industry. Ministers are in the process of considering a proposed response to the report, and I expect the way forward to be announced in the future. I have already indicated my support for it, and I have also publicly said that when it comes to backing 'Going for Growth', because of the value that I and the whole Executive place on that important sector in our economy, I will not be found wanting.

Anna Lo and Mr Frew raised the issue of funding for the 2014-2020 rural development programme. The Executive will need to engage in a Budget process for 2015-16 very shortly, and the issue of funding for the next rural development programme can be addressed as part of that process.

Mr Maskey, speaking as Chair of the Social Development Committee, raised issues in respect of the social housing development programme. That has been allocated £83.9 million to fund 1,275 new social and supported units, work on which will start this year.

I mentioned work being done by my colleague the Social Development Minister. He has done some good work on making sure that the new social housing maintenance contracts are designed to eliminate the potential for contractors to overcharge for services as highlighted in the 2012 Audit Office report on the management of response maintenance contracts. Setting aside the problems on the maintenance programme, the social housing development programme is on target and is expected to exceed the Programme for Government target of 8,000 new and affordable homes by 2015.

We can see the outworking of the performance and efficiency delivery unit's review of the programme, with more than half of the 25 recommendations for improved delivery already in place. For example, the regulatory burden on social housing design has been reduced to align them with those used for private sector housing so that associations can produce a more cost effective bill. I expect that we will see a less back-loaded delivery programme from this year on.

Mr Mervyn Storey noticed concerns about a lack of transparency in the education budget, particularly in relation to the information presented to the Education Committee. The Department of Education has significant flexibility to move resources within its budget and has significant scope to recycle reduced requirements rather than declare them to the Executive. As with all departmental budgets, my officials will closely scrutinise the out-turn position for this year, revealing how Departments have used the resources available to them.

I share the Member's frustration that the Education Minister failed to participate in the Executive's process to monitor savings delivery plans. That takes away from the Executive's savings delivery plans monitoring process and forces me to present an incomplete picture to the Assembly. Transparency in the Executive's finances is vital in engendering confidence among the electorate. Non-cooperation in the provision of information, as demonstrated by the Education Minister, damages the Executive as a whole.

Mr Spratt, who is Chair of the Regional Development Committee, asked about Northern Ireland Water gaining greater end-year flexibility. I want to report back to him that my officials have been discussing the possibility of some flexibility being granted to Northern Ireland Water in its capital spending profile. However, this flexibility can be limited only to movements within the DRD capital budget, and any such flexibility will need to be agreed by the Executive.

With a Budget exchange scheme limit on the capital side of some £12 million annually, there is no scope to grant any end-year flexibility to a particular Department. This is because such flexibility would significantly increase the risk of funding being surrendered to the Treasury at year end. The Member should also note that this Budget exchange scheme limit is not open to negotiation with Her Majesty's Treasury. Although I have some sympathy for the Member's points, I think that he would agree, and I am sure that his Committee would agree, that things that would seriously jeopardise our overall block position are not a good idea.

Mr McGlone, the Chair of the Enterprise Committee, raised various issues about EU funding. He mentioned the drawdown of such funding, and I welcome his comments on trying to maximise the drawdown. It is imperative that we seek to do that, but as Finance Minister, I must caution that we should do so only when a scheme has proven to show value for money and to contribute to our Programme for Government priorities. There is no point in drawing down funds for projects that do not represent value for money, especially when the Executive are providing match funding to those projects. He mentioned a couple of other funds including the Emerald Fund, and I point out to the Member that such funds, perhaps including the other one that he mentioned, are not our funds, so we do not have responsibility for the reasons why they spend or do not spend.

Mr McGlone mentioned, as did his colleague Mr Attwood, Horizon 2020. He made a specific point that there had been "no engagement" — that is the phrase that he used — with the Northern Ireland Chamber of Commerce. I appreciate that that statement is being relayed by Mr McGlone as a third party, but I find it hard to fathom. I am sure that, if the Enterprise Minister were here, she would find it even more difficult to fathom, not least because Horizon 2020 is mentioned in the Executive's draft innovation strategy, DETI has its own Horizon 2020 action plan and a website dedicated to Horizon 2020. Although I appreciate the comments about having more ambitious funding targets, and I think that that is a measure for the Enterprise Minister to consider, I do not think that we can say that there has been no engagement, or at least no attempt at engagement, with any business organisation.

Mr Nesbitt raised some issues around financial transactions funding, specifically the £26 million capital allocation in OFMDFM's budget: £1 million of that is for the Crumlin Road Gaol development, and I am surprised that the Member is not aware of that bid; and the remaining £25 million, which the Member seemed confused about although I notice that his colleague Mr Swann had a good grasp and understanding of it, was allocated to OFMDFM for the Department for Employment and Learning's University of Ulster relocation project. The loan to the University of Ulster, which I announced a few weeks ago, is being channelled through the Strategic Investment Board because the Department for Employment and Learning did not have the legislative vires to issue the loan. This was agreed by the Executive in the January monitoring rounds, and, as such, officials may not have had time to update the Committee. This is a good example of cross-departmental working to deliver significant investment in our higher education infrastructure.

Mr William Irwin, on behalf of the Culture, Arts and Leisure Committee, raised some issues around the stadia programme. I welcome his comments on the early surrender of funds by Departments, and I am sure that we would encourage all Departments to do that. It is imperative that Departments, once they know of reduced requirements, surrender them for reallocation as early as possible in the financial year so that the Executive can redistribute them in line with their priorities. There is no doubt that the stadia projects will enhance the reputation and capacity for local sport, and, as I mentioned, I am particularly pleased with the progress at Ravenhill, where an expected 18,000 — including me — will watch the Heineken Cup quarter-final in April.

Mr Hazzard's contribution, which I think contained elements of his and his speech from the weekend, raised public service delivery and public sector reform. I know that he is an advocate of recycling, but I think that recycling a speech two days later is pushing it. As somebody who wants reform and innovation across the public sector, I encourage him and congratulate him on reusing his speech in an efficient way, even if I did not agree with the content. He mentioned the increased cost of public service delivery in border areas, a point that Mr Allister raised in a slightly more tangential way later.

I agree that we need to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of all aspects of the public service. That is why I established the public sector reform division in my Department. The role of the division will be to work collaboratively with Departments, business areas and front line staff to develop further reforms in the delivery of local public services and make improvements to existing plans for reform with a focus on reducing costs and enhancing the quality of public services.

Mr Beggs, Mr Wells, Mr McKinney and others raised issues about health changes. At times, I felt like a bit of a spectator at the Health Committee and felt that we should all step outside and let the Members continue with a debate that is obviously raging in the corridors of the Building. The arrangements for health do not preclude an allocation being made to the Department of Health, which we did in this financial year. It remains the case that the Executive decide whether the Department of Health should get an allocation in the monitoring rounds. I am barking so badly that I may need some assistance from the Department of Health if it continues.

Mr Beggs accused me of being Pontius Pilate in allocating money to the Department of Health in January monitoring, because I did not specifically allocate it. I have to say that I do not allocate. Mr Deputy Speaker, it is a point that you will appreciate given your extensive experience on the Finance Committee. Unfortunately, as much as I might like to be able to do so, I do not allocate any money. I recommend to the Executive. It is the job of the Executive to allocate funding to Departments. It is their decision that results in allocations being made. Of course, the Executive includes one Danny Kennedy.

Mrs Cochrane, Mr Wells, Mr Givan, Mr Bradley, Mr Maskey, Mr McCrea and others raised concerns about welfare reform. I share those concerns. As detailed in my opening statement earlier today and pointed out in response to Mr Wells's question, the penalties are forecast at £105 million next year and will increase to over £300 million by 2018-19. This will require substantial cuts to departmental budgets and have a significantly detrimental impact on public services. I am also extremely concerned about the potential impact on claimants when, in the not too distant future, we reach the point of being unable to process payments to hundreds of thousands of the most vulnerable because we can no longer use Department for Work and Pensions IT systems. My opening statement also referred to the potential loss of over 1,400 jobs at local service centres in Belfast and Londonderry, which causes me grave concern.

The Chair of the Social Development Committee referred to the economic consequences of not implementing welfare reforms and suggested that we negotiate further concessions with the UK Government. As the Member well knows, there is no scope for further concessions beyond those that my colleague the Minister for Social Development has valiantly negotiated already. I suggest that any conversation at this stage with Treasury, as it sees savings that should have been realised not materialising, would be very short.

The economic cost to Northern of failure to progress welfare reform significantly outweighs the costs arising from implementing the reforms. I have highlighted the costs of not implementing the reforms. In addition, a key aspect of the reforms is that they will make work pay. This will undoubtedly incentivise many people back into work and help to grow our economy.

I also point out to the Chair of the Committee for Social Development, Mr Maskey, that the numbers that I put forward are not fantasy figures. They are very much real, and, very soon, we, and more importantly our constituents, will all begin to see and feel how real those figures are. In the spring Supplementary Estimates, a provision has been made and approved by Sinn Féin Ministers in the Executive of £15 million now and £105 million next year. That is the equivalent of 2,500 nurses, 2,100 teachers or a 1% cut to all Departments. The extent of that is so severe that I cannot see how it could be dealt with in-year through the monitoring rounds. I will have no option other than putting forward what can only be described as a cuts paper when we come to June monitoring.

The cost is now estimated to be in excess of £1 billion over the next five years.

6.45 pm

I listened to Mr Maskey give off extensively about handing back housing money. He may well have a point about people who need the money not getting it, but as he gives off about handing housing money back to me to redistribute through the Executive to other priority areas, at least we can point out that none of that money has been lost to London.

Declan McAleer raised issues around the agrifood loan scheme. I share his disappointment that the scheme has not been the reality in this financial year as we expected and hoped that it would be. He mentioned that he had talked to some people who had wished to avail themselves of the scheme, and I am sure that he appreciates that it is necessarily an incredibly complex scheme, given that it involves dealing with at least four parties, which are the farmer, the producer, the bank and government in the shape of Invest Northern Ireland.

I can assure him that, given the announcement that was made in October monitoring that a further £10 million would be allocated to the scheme, there is money there. We hope that it will be in place early in the next financial year. Certainly, if the Member is correct and the soundings that I have picked up are correct, there will be significant demand for that money next year. I hope that we will see that starting to benefit a growing agrifood sector in Northern Ireland very early in the next financial year.

Mr Attwood raised a series of issues and asked a considerable number of questions. I will do my best to answer them, although I am absolutely certain that it will not be done to his satisfaction. He asked about Committee engagement, and I have to say that, particularly for the OFMDFM Committee, I cannot account for Committee engagement, or lack of it, as he might perceive by any other Department. I try to be responsible as best I can for my Department's engagement with its Committee, which, I hope, is of a sufficiently high standard. That is a matter for each Department and is an issue that is better taken up with the relevant Ministers.

He also mentioned issues around SIF funding, as did others. He begrudgingly acknowledged that there were allocations of some £33 million in total, for 12 capital schemes and 11 revenue-based schemes, accounting for almost half of the spend now being made. He begrudgingly accepted that the money was being spent on good projects.

Mr Attwood and Mr McCrea spoke about Belfast port. Again, that is a matter more directly for the Minister for Regional Development, and I encourage both Members to direct specific questions at that Minister. However, I support the objective that is contained in the Budget, an objective that is still being pursued in order to gain value from Belfast port. Progress has been slower than we would have liked, and the matter is still being dealt with on an ongoing basis by the Budget review group, which is discussing and exploring a range of options to realise that value from the port. I accept that it places a pressure on the DRD budget, but it is not an issue that has been given up at all.

Mr McCrea quoted me at least half favourably. In fact, he said that he was interested by what I said. I am glad that I can interest the Member. I do not interest everybody, but at least I seem to have interested him. [Interruption.] My colleague to my left has uncharitably said that very little of what the Member says interests anyone, but I will not go down that route.

Mr B McCrea: I was being nice to you.

Mr Hamilton: I know, but I pretended that it was not me who said it.

Mr McCrea acknowledged the public spending pressures. He made a very good point, so I will try to be as nice to him as I possibly can. I have made the point before and will say it again: the impression will be given, as we see a weekly, if not almost daily, diet of good economic news, that our private sector continues to grow and flourish.

Today's purchasing managers' index (PMI) results from Ulster Bank have shown for seven months in a row that all sectors are doing well, including sectors that have been under the cosh, such as construction and retail. They are all doing really well, and, in fact, the growth in the Northern Ireland manufacturing sector is higher than that in the rest of the UK as a whole and is higher than any of the markets that RBS Group measures in its PMI surveys. We should be very grateful for that and should recognise that the investments that made by the Executive to ensure that we could capitalise on growing economies globally are now starting to pay off.

I think that that will give something of a false impression to people, and I want to try to ensure that it does not give a false impression to Members here. Just because the economy is booming — we will see the British economy, even the euro zone economy and the global economy starting to take off this year, with the Northern Ireland economy following that and doing equally well — that does not necessarily and automatically translate into public spending going up at the same pace.

We have heard very clear indications from the Chancellor that, over the next number of years, he will continue to pursue an austerity programme. He has said that he wishes not only to balance the books but to create a surplus by the end of this decade. Indicators from the Office for Budget Responsibility show that, affirming what the Chancellor has said, austerity will continue to at least the end of this decade, if not beyond and into the 2020s. We have heard recently the Chancellor say that he thinks that there is scope to take a further £25 billion out of the UK Budget as a whole. The Barnett consequences of that for Northern Ireland will be around half a billion pounds.

We have had a difficult number of years, and the 2011-15 Budget was an exceptionally challenging Budget, but I think that it will be nothing compared with the pressures that we will face. The Member quoted Liam Fox, but I am not entirely sure that I would take that as an authoritative view on Tory thinking at this time. Certainly, if the ring-fencing of hospitals and schools at an English level does not continue, the impact on Northern Ireland will be quite severe, because that protection that has been afforded to Northern Ireland has been quite significant over the past number of years. I think that it is a reason why we should continue to pursue reform, and I have not suggested that we should reform the public sector in Northern Ireland just because I think that it is a good idea. There are some areas where there are obvious cuts and reductions that could be made.

Mr Allister mentioned the ugly scaffolding in this place, and those are obvious areas where savings could be made, but the bigger prize is in changing how we do things and how we get more for the money that we invest and how we get that elusive prize of doing more with less. So, when I come to this House or publicly and say that we need to reform, it is because of the Budget pressures that I see looming down the line. It is not a pet project or some hobby horse; it is a firm belief that we need to do that or else we will face very serious pressures before this decade is out.

The Member admitted to getting most of his information from Twitter and from newspapers. I suggest to the Member that he is better coming into this House and listening, or even asking his deputy, who sits on the Finance and Personnel Committee. Had he done that, he would have heard the good news that there was a good deal for the Executive on the Invest Northern Ireland headquarters. As I highlighted earlier, that is realising over £20 million in savings for the Executive over the life of the lease. He mentioned the Titanic building and the £18 million that could not be drawn down from Europe for that. Perhaps if he followed the right Twitter accounts and read the right newspapers, he would have heard that that money has been reallocated to various transport projects, including, if I am right in recalling, the A8 and the A2. So, that money was not lost.

Mr B McCrea: Will the Member give way?

Mr Hamilton: Yes, I will, to take a breath more than anything.

Mr B McCrea: I am grateful that the Minister has taken time to cover my points in detail. I only mentioned the Twitter thing because that is what the public are hearing. Perhaps he can direct me, or maybe I should write to him, about where these announcements are in the public domain. I did search to see what had happened with the £18.3 million that came down, because I understood that it had to be reallocated, and, I have to confess, I could not find it in official sources. So, if there is a particular place to look, I will gladly look. This is a point that I think we have common cause in. We are saying that we want to have open and transparent government, and it is just difficult, given the current system.

Mr Hamilton: There is a worrying friendship starting to develop here, and I must do my best to ruin that. I can recall, both as Minister and from sitting in the seat beside when I was assisting Mr Wilson when he was Minister of Finance, that those very announcements, particularly on the Invest Northern Ireland headquarters and the Titanic building, were made in monitoring round statements. Of course, we are seeing the product of those today in that we are wrapping everything up and giving it a legislative authority.

Both of those issues and, probably, some of the other issues that the Member is concerned about have been addressed in that way, because that is the proper way in which the Finance Minister, on behalf of the Executive, should be reporting those issues back to Members of this House. Of course, there are avenues through the various Committees to explore the issues in more depth. I appreciate that the Member is in a party that does not have broad representation on the Committees of this House, but I am sure that he could follow that through Hansard and the appropriate channels.

I will move on to an issue that Mr Allister raised — the issue of what he referred to as equal pay for people in the justice family. As I said to the previous Member to speak, I encourage him to listen to what has been said in the House. In fact, he could have listened to a response that I gave in the House to a question from Mr Givan about a fortnight ago when he asked me for an update on the matter. I point out that I am happy to inform the Member at any time about the issue if he asks me personally or in writing, but I cannot recall having received any correspondence from him on it in the recent past.

Mr Allister: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Hamilton: Yes.

Mr Allister: The Minister will find that there is an outstanding question for written answer of three months' vintage from me on this very issue.

Mr Hamilton: I am happy to respond to the Member's query now, in the same fashion as I responded before. You will not find a terrible lot of difference between what I will say today and what I said to Mr Givan a number of weeks ago. The Member mocked me for looking at the issue and for demanding that more be done. However, it is very clear that the Member is powerless to do anything on this matter and that he would need me to take action in consort with Executive colleagues.

I have been carefully considering it, and I will point out to the Member that the issue was sitting in a state of stasis and not moving until I looked at it again and breathed some life back into it. It was always with the caveat, which I made very clear over the past number of months, that I do not want to unnecessarily raise the expectations of anybody who may be affected. That is because I think that they have had their expectations unnecessarily raised in the past.

Although I have some sympathy for the arguments that are put forward on a moral basis, there is no legal basis for me to extend the Northern Ireland Civil Service equal pay settlement to those members of the justice family. However, I continue to examine options. I recently had a discussion, which was followed up with discussions between officials in my Department and the Department of Justice, to look at ways in which the issue could be addressed satisfactorily so that some recognition could be given to the people in the broad justice family who are affected.

Mr Givan: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Hamilton: Yes, very briefly; my time is short.

Mr Givan: I am sure that the Member for North Antrim is acutely aware that that legal entitlement, or lack of it, was established by the courts. So, I am sure that the Member for North Antrim will recognise the courts' decision on that. Nevertheless, I appreciate this Minister's efforts to try to overcome the issues that that decision has presented to us.

Mr Hamilton: Absolutely. The Member is right. It was very clearly established in the court last March that there was no legal entitlement to extend the equal pay settlement to those members of staff. However, that does not take away, denigrate or dilute the moral argument that they put forward. I reassure him, I reassure Mr Allister, I reassure the House, and, more importantly, I reassure the members of staff who worked in the broad justice family that I will continue to make every effort to see what can be done, and we will attempt to expedite that as quickly as possible.

To draw my remarks to a conclusion, and with just over a minute left, I thank again all Members and Committees for their contributions. This financial year has seen welcome growth in our economy that has not been seen for some time. That is a testament to our private sector first and foremost, which continues to innovate and to perform in domestic and international markets.

Credit must also be given to our public sector, which has assisted in providing the conditions that have aided recovery. We have implemented, among many things, the jobs and economy initiative, directed resources to areas that have helped to educate our young people, develop our workers, equip those seeking employment and resource our businesses while ensuring that we continue to care for the vulnerable and the elderly.

The distribution of funding this year reflects that balance of priorities, and it is important to acknowledge that the spring Supplementary Estimates represent the final outcome of those decisions made in the best interests of the citizens of Northern Ireland.

We must stop or even pause at this point; there is more that we must do. The spring Supplementary Estimates represent a point in time when we must put in place the necessary legislation. However, we must continue to stay focused on service delivery. We must also continue to reform our public services to ensure that we have the right components in place to continue on the path to economy recovery.

On that note, I commend the spring Supplementary Estimates for 2013-14 and the Vote on Account for 2014-15 to the Assembly, and I ask Members to support the motions.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Before we proceed to the Question, I remind Members that the motion requires cross-community support.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved (with cross-community support):

That this Assembly approves that a total sum, not exceeding £15,530,883,000, be granted out of the Consolidated Fund for or towards defraying the charges for Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2014 and that total resources, not exceeding £16,606,564,000, be authorised for use by Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2014 as summarised for each Department or other public body in columns 3(c) and 2(c) of table 1 in the volume of the Northern Ireland spring Supplementary Estimates 2013-14 that was laid before the Assembly on 3 February 2014.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: We now move to the motion on the Vote on Account, which has already been debated. I remind Members that this vote also requires cross-community support.

Resolved (with cross-community support):

That this Assembly approves that a sum, not exceeding £7,062,352,000, be granted out of the Consolidated Fund on account for or towards defraying the charges for Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2015 and that resources, not exceeding £7,545,788,000, be authorised, on account, for use by Northern Ireland Departments,

the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2015 as summarised for each Department or other public body in columns 4 and 6 of table 1 in the Vote on Account 2014-15 document that was laid before the Assembly on 3 February 2014. — [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

Budget Bill: First Stage

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel):

I beg to introduce the Budget Bill (Northern Ireland) 2014 [NIA 32/11-15], which is a Bill to authorise the issue out of the Consolidated Fund of certain sums for the service of the years ending 31 March 2014 and 2015; to appropriate those sums for specified purposes; to authorise the Department of Finance and Personnel to borrow on the credit of the appropriated sums; to authorise the use for the public service of certain resources for the years ending 31 March 2014 and 2015; and to revise the limits on the use of certain accruing resources in the year ending 31 March 2014.

Bill passed First Stage and ordered to be printed.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I inform Members that confirmation has been received from the Chairperson of the Committee for Finance and Personnel, in accordance with Standing Order 42(2), that the Committee is satisfied that there has been appropriate consultation with it on the public expenditure proposals contained in the Bill and that the Bill can therefore proceed under the accelerated passage procedure. The Second Stage of the Bill will be brought before the House tomorrow.

The House will now take its ease while we change the top Table.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Beggs] in the Chair)

Tobacco Retailers Bill: Further Consideration Stage

Mr Deputy Speaker: I call on the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to move the Further Consideration Stage of the Tobacco Retailers Bill.

Moved. — [Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety).]

Mr Deputy Speaker: As no amendments have been tabled, there is no opportunity to discuss the Tobacco Retailers Bill today. Members will, of course, be able to have a full debate at the Final Stage. The Further Consideration Stage is therefore concluded. The Bill stands referred to the Speaker.

Private Members' Business

Safer Internet Day 2014

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Business Committee has agreed to allow up to one hour and 30 minutes for the debate. The proposer of the motion will have 10 minutes to propose and 10 minutes to make a winding-up speech. One amendment has been selected and is published on the Marshalled List. The proposer of the amendment will have 10 minutes to propose and five minutes to make a winding-up speech. All other Members who are called to speak will have five minutes.

Mr Weir: I beg to move

That this Assembly endorses and supports the Safer Internet Day 2014 campaign entitled "Let's create a better Internet together"; recognises that whilst it poses significant dangers to children and young people, used properly the Internet can also positively affect social, economic and educational advancement; acknowledges that all users have a part to play in making the Internet a safer and better place for everybody; and calls upon Her Majesty's Government to encourage a cross-cutting approach to online safety by incorporating it into the school curriculum, by affording parents and carers easy access to sufficient information to take necessary action and by encouraging businesses and industry to self-regulate their web-based content and services.

I rise to propose the motion and welcome the opportunity to debate it. There was an opportunity at Westminster with a similar motion, which was proposed by my colleague David Simpson, but I think that it is important that this House has an opportunity to give its view on what I believe to be a very important issue. I say at the outset, for those who are unfamiliar with Safer Internet Day, that we are facing what is effectively its tenth anniversary. It was initiated in 2004, originally from an EU project.

For those of us who are more sceptical about the European Union, I suppose we can at least find something positive to embrace. What started out as an annual Safer Internet Day has moved beyond the EU and is now embraced by over 100 countries worldwide. It is something that is being done in Northern Ireland, the rest of the UK and across a wide range of countries. The theme this year is, "Let's create a better internet together".

I believe, in the spirit of togetherness, that the whole House can unite around the motion. Different parties in the Chamber will have slightly nuanced views on the wording, but, for the sake of clarity at the start of the debate, I want to indicate that I am very happy with the amendment proposed by Mrs Overend and will be asking Members to support the motion and the amendment, and therefore the motion as amended. On this very important issue, the House can speak with one voice.

To dispel one potential myth, I will deal first with the fact that supporting the Safer Internet Day campaign is not some sort of Luddite opposition to the Internet or a belief that the Internet itself is in any way wrong. The Internet has transformed all our lives and society in many positive ways. The opportunity for education and information flow has been enhanced greatly in recent years by the Internet, particularly in the field of communication. What would have been regarded, in the lifetime of many of us in the Chamber, as almost some sort of fantastical science fiction is now reality; people can, in an instant, communicate with one another across continents.

So, it is right that we pause to pay tribute to the very positive aspects of the Internet. However, with that, undoubtedly and unfortunately, we need to ensure that sufficient safeguards are put in place against those who would use the Internet for evil purposes. In particular, we should look to protect our children and vulnerable people on the Internet.

The one thing that is beyond discussion is the all-pervasive nature of the Internet. For example, the latest figures from Ofcom suggest that 78% of households in Northern Ireland have access to the Internet and that nearly half the population has access via the mobile phone. From a generational point of view, it becomes all the more pervasive the younger you are. Around 93% of children between the ages of five and 15 in Northern Ireland have home access to the Internet and about 80% of children regularly use the Internet at home. Therefore, it is important we ensure that they are protected.

There are three main sources of concern. First, there is the extent to which young people have access to inappropriate imagery through pornography. Secondly, there is the issue of child sexual abuse, through imagery and grooming. Thirdly, there is the issue of online bullying. I will talk briefly about each of those in turn.

Looking at the statistics; a parliamentary inquiry held in 2012 found that one in three children aged 10 or under has seen sexual imagery online and that that figure increases greatly when you move into the teenage years. On numerous occasions, we have seen action taken by police on an international level to combat Internet sexual abuse.

Looking at the issue of grooming; across the UK, in 2012, there were 1,145 public reports related to incidents of grooming. On a number of those occasions, attempts were made by those online to meet a child offline. It is, if you like, being seen as a vehicle that could be used.

I suppose that the third issue is cyberbullying. Again, with regard to statistics, indications from the Department of Education highlight that around one sixth of children have been victims of cyberbullying. Perhaps, even more surprisingly, the same survey indicated that 5% of children in year 6 and nearly 7% of pupils in year 9 admitted to being bullies themselves. As we have seen, the all-pervasive effects of any form of bullying on children can have a very disturbing impact on their lives. Unfortunately, in Northern Ireland and beyond, we have seen it taken to extremes at times when children have felt so bullied that they have taken the ultimate sanction and taken their own lives. That is why I believe that this is a vital issue.

The motion, with the inclusion of the amendment, details four areas where we see that positive action needs to be taken. The first is the idea of a cross-cutting approach to incorporating safety in the school curriculum and addressing it at that level. The second is to ensure that parents and carers have easy access to sufficient information in order to take necessary action. The third is to encourage businesses and industry to self-regulate. In the amendment, there is the useful addition of the e-safety forum, which, I think, OFMDFM will spearhead. I look forward to the junior Minister's response on that. All those goals are quite achievable.

If we look first at what is available in the school curriculum with regard to Internet safety for pupils, we see that there is a range of activities, from the Internet proficiency scheme at Key Stage 2 through to the Kidsmart scheme at Key Stage 4; Know IT All for schools; and Thinkuknow. A range of things can be done and provided through that. Indeed, training can be given to teachers as well.

Similarly, via Safer Internet Day, a range of information could be provided and training given on Internet awareness for parents and carers. It is important that it is not something that is simply tackled in schools. Given the fact that the greatest level of Internet access is in the home, it is important that parents be given the opportunity to learn further about the issue. A wide range of practical advice can be given to parents, pupils and teachers on tackling cyberbullying via the Department of Education, an organisation called BeatBullying and the Anti-Bullying Network. The opportunity is there to be grasped.

There are two other aspects. From the point of view of a local initiative, work that can be done via OFMDFM to help to coordinate what is there is vital. There is also a challenge for Internet providers. There has been some progress by Microsoft and Google towards self-regulation. If it can be effective, self-regulation is always the best option. Concerns have been raised about it, particularly in the House of Lords by Baroness Howe, who has looked at putting forward legislation on the subject. That might be the route that ultimately has to be gone down. A challenge should be thrown out, in the first instance, to the large companies to try to deliver on that issue. There is a wide range of things that they can do, such as stopping auto-complete features from offering people child-abuse search terms; new algorithms that will block child-abuse images; and ClickSafe functions that can ensure that there is a degree of blocking mechanisms. Various things can be done by the major server providers.

I see you looking at me, Mr Deputy Speaker, so I will wind up my remarks. In conclusion, I think that the issue is one on which the House can unite, take very positive actions and send a clear signal from the Assembly that we can all enjoy the Internet in a safe way, particularly one that protects all our children.

Mrs Overend: I beg to move the following amendment:

Leave out all after "everybody;" and insert

"calls upon the Northern Ireland Executive and Her Majesty's Government to encourage a cross-cutting approach to online safety by incorporating it into the school curriculum, by affording parents and carers easy access to sufficient information to take necessary action and by encouraging businesses and industry to self-regulate their web-based content and services; and further calls upon the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to assist with the prompt establishment of an e-safety forum, as recommended in the recent Safeguarding Board for Northern Ireland, 'An exploration of e-safety messages to young people, parents and practitioners in Northern Ireland', and to coordinate e-safety responsibilities across all Executive Departments".

I welcome the opportunity to participate in the debate, and I thank the Members who raised this important issue. I thank the proposers for indicating their support for my amendment. I welcome the presence of junior Minister McCann this evening. I look forward to her response.

7.15 pm

As children and young people's spokesperson for the Ulster Unionist Party, and as a mother of three children, I have a long-standing interest in ensuring the safety of children and young people online. Although we are always mindful of the dangers of Internet use, the aim of Safer Internet Day 2014 is to put the focus on the creative and positive things that young people are doing online.

The contrast between the potential risks and the rewards of Internet use are seen day and daily. Only this weekend, my eight-year-old son looked up a remote control car that he wanted to upgrade or something similar. He and I were both amazed to find a flashing advertisement at the bottom of that website showing pictures of half-naked women and asking the question: do you need a date? That is just one example.

On the positive side, I was delighted to learn that pupils from Cookstown High School had qualified for the national finals of RTE's 'Dragons' Den' with their location awareness GTracks app, DavaghNav, which offers route options and hazard warnings for cyclists who use the cycle trails at Davagh Forest outside Cookstown. That follows on from pupils in the same school who won a prestigious award last year for an app that they designed. That demonstrates the positive opportunities that can be opened up through the effective use of the Internet.

Of course, the potential positives of the Internet do not end there but neither, sadly, do the dangers. Those are often broken down into the four Cs: content — exposure to harmful material; contact — participation in adult-initiated online activity; conduct — as a perpetrator or victim in a peer-to-peer exchange; and commercial — exposure to inappropriate advertising or hidden costs, something that is now more prevalent with free apps such as Candy Crush or Angry Birds offering helpful add-ins at a price. We have also seen the negative influence that peer pressure can have over online behaviour as our young people become young adults, with the recent Nekominate drinking game craze.

Developments in technology advance at such a rate that parents' ability to keep up can be severely tested. The fact remains that parents are often less technology-savvy than their children, making it even more important for them to be able to access the right information, and that is a very challenging issue.

The exponential increase in smartphone and tablet use among our children and young people vastly increases the ability to access the Internet and makes e-safety an even more pressing issue. We simply cannot sit on our hands or rest on our laurels when it comes to this issue. Taking responsible steps, such as the use of antivirus software, parental controls and privacy settings and providing helpful practical advice such as not sharing personal information, keeping your profile private, talking only to people you know, using only secure and trusted websites and password protection can go a long way to protect your child online.

Some of the best advice for parents that I have read is simply to have conversations with your children about staying safe online, something that I have tried to practise. You do not need to be a technology expert by any means; it is just like other types of parenting. It is best to have regular conversations with our children about what they like and dislike about the online world, what websites they use and view and agree on a set of rules together.

There are so many statistics that illustrate the scale of the task that we have in making the Internet a safer place, and I will highlight a few. According to Ofcom, as Mr Weir mentioned, 93% of five- to 15-year-olds have access to the Internet, and that number is rising year on year. This is not a matter for a minority; it is a matter for all of us.

ChildLine recently revealed that it had experienced a 65% increase in young people contacting it for support and advice on how to deal with Internet safety issues in the past year and reported a very worrying 85% increase in the numbers contacting it for support and advice on cyberbullying over the same period. This is a cross-cutting, cross-community and cross-generational issue. We all have a role to play: Departments, schools, community groups, sports clubs, and parents, children and young people all have a role to play.

A number of organisations provide much-needed support in research, programme delivery and raising public awareness. The NSPCC's contribution has been very influential. I also pay tribute to the work of the National Children's Bureau (NCB) and the Safeguarding Board for Northern Ireland (SBNi) in compiling the report, 'An Exploration of E-safety Messages to Young People, Parents and Practitioners in Northern Ireland'. It was prepared on behalf of the Safeguarding Board for Northern Ireland, and I join others in commending its recommendations to the House.

Similarly, I recognise the valuable work of the PSNI on Internet safety. It is taking a proactive approach by going into schools and delivering e-safety messages to pupils. I know that the PSNI is to visit my children's school shortly. I look forward to meeting the PSNI soon to discuss its Risk Avoidance and Danger Awareness Resource (RADAR) project, which will have e-safety as one of its key focuses.

Access to up-to-date information is important. We need to make the most of the resources available to us by building on the work of the three main UK organisations — the UK Safer Internet Centre, the Child Exploitation and Online Protection (CEOP) Centre and the UK Council for Child Internet Safety — and tailoring our efforts to best meet the needs of our children and young people. Coordination is key. With so many organisations offering information, we must not complicate matters and consistency of message is crucial.

Locally, we have arm's-length bodies and charities such as C2K, the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Children and Young People, the Northern Ireland Anti-Bullying Forum and, I am sure, many others operating alongside the Departments and UK-wide bodies.

The Prime Minister's intervention last summer was welcome. Her Majesty's Government, of course, have a significant role to play and, perhaps, could do so most usefully by pressing businesses and service providers to self-regulate. However, there are steps that we can and must take in Northern Ireland. That is where I want to bring the focus of today's debate — to Northern Ireland and the responsibilities that lie with legislators in this place.

I very much welcome the junior Ministers' commitment. I have lobbied both junior Ministers extensively on Internet safety. Most recently, I met them in November ahead of their visit to Brussels in December, where, I understand, e-safety was on the agenda. Any lessons learned from other European states and opportunities for partnership will be of benefit.

I was particularly pleased to hear them endorse the Safeguarding Board for Northern Ireland's report and speak of their desire to put measures in place to keep children safe online and support parents in their efforts to protect their children when using the Internet. I know that OFMDFM has undertaken a gapping and mapping exercise, and I ask it for an update on its work in the area.

Once again, I call on OFMDFM to take the lead and help to bring forward the establishment and development of the e-safety forum and coordinate e-safety responsibilities across all Departments. The e-safety forum can act as a starting point for the coordination of a strategy that will work to identify gaps and opportunities and ensure consistency in messaging. A coordinated strategy is vital. We cannot afford to duplicate resources, and we cannot allow there to be gaps.

Through the work of the industry and the UK Government, much has happened at a UK level to protect children better, but there is a massive local element, and the need for a cross-Government e-safety strategy remains. As I said previously, time is of the essence, so I urge a speedy response and speedy work by OFMDFM to push the matter forward.

Ms Fearon: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Today, we will support the amendment moved by Mrs Overend. The safety of our children, particularly e-safety, is paramount. I think that we all agree that it is more difficult to protect young people online, given the vast nature of the Internet. We welcome the fact that the amendment gives the Executive a role. The motion called on the British Government to interfere with the school curriculum, but education is a devolved matter. Thankfully, the British Government have no input or say in our curriculum. That is not to take away from the point that is being made. It is hugely important that young people are fully aware of the dangers associated with the Internet and that children and parents have the necessary skills to stay safe online.

We should also recognise the huge benefits of online advancements to education. There is a wealth of information at our fingertips. Wikipedia, for example, has over 13 million articles, five million of which are in English, and, every minute, 72 hours of video are uploaded to YouTube. The Internet has made the world a much smaller place. Young people are more engaged now than ever before, as information about world events is instantaneous.

We no longer search for the news; the news finds us. In fact, some in New York received tweets about a recent earthquake 30 seconds before they felt it.

That having been said, there are inherent dangers associated with the Internet, and, as Mrs Overend said, there have already been tragedies associated with NekNominations, which have spread around social media like wildfire. Of course, we cannot solely place the blame on Facebook, Twitter or other social media sites. It has a lot to do with our society's unhealthy relationship with alcohol. There are almost 90 alcohol-related deaths a month in Ireland. However, social media sites were a catalyst for the dangerous behaviour and undoubtedly fuelled the fire.

Another obvious danger that has grown along with the Internet is cyberbullying. Bullying is now inescapable for young people. No longer is it confined to the schoolyard or the classroom. Bullies now have 24/7 access to their victims. That comes with serious consequences for the mental health of our young people and has unfortunately led to too many suicides across this island. A website such as Ask.fm is a pertinent example of that. Users can post anonymous opinions about other people, often in the form of abusive comments. Threats and comments made online must be taken as seriously as if they were said anywhere else. Whether they are homophobic, sectarian, racist or sexist, we cannot tolerate them.

I note that, in Britain, the so-called porn filter has been introduced. However, there is a fine line between regulation to protect our children and censorship. Cameron's porn filter was never meant to be just about tackling pornography, but it was cleverly packaged in that way. It is, in fact, being used to promote a heterosexual lifestyle. In some instances, LGBT websites have been blocked, along with sites such as ChildLine, domestic violence refuge websites and sex education websites. There is a balance to be found, and there are obvious concerns over how children are being sexualised at such a young age. I know that parents are worried about the dangers that children can be exposed to, but the question remains about who exactly decides what is dangerous.

Although there are real and genuine dangers associated with the Internet, we must also be positive about the impact that it can have on young people's lives. Social media, for example, provide young people, particularly teenagers, with access to an online community that is dealing with similar issues, and it brings a whole new meaning to the word "community". Social networking has now become the number one online activity. It is a way for young people to socialise and express themselves, and it unites young people across the world. With 50% of the world's population under the age of 30, social media represent a fundamental shift in the way in which our world communicates. The evidence for that can be drawn from a single website. Facebook now has one billion users, and, if it were a country, it would be the third largest in the world.

We need to embrace change and technology while being mindful of children's safety. The world is a rapidly changing place, and it will not be very long before the iPad replaces the blackboard. We need to ensure that all young people have equal access to this vast resource. Rural broadband is still a huge issue in many places, and access to the Internet, particularly in areas of high deprivation, should be provided.

I welcome the motion from the DUP and the amendment from the Ulster Unionists. However, it rings slightly hollow, given that their track record on children's rights leaves a lot to be desired. Neither party supports extending age discrimination legislation to allow young people equal access to goods, facilities and services. The party opposite's use of flammable language around issues such as marriage equality and blood donation has adversely impacted on many young people's lives, yet it continues to take a discriminatory stance. I welcome this concern for children's rights and safety. Hopefully, it is a sign of improvement for the future.

Mr Rogers: I welcome the motion and the amendment, which adds to the motion. I welcome the opportunity to contribute to the debate and fully endorse Safer Internet Day on 11 February. It is imperative that we create an effective statutory framework for keeping our young people safe when they use the Internet. The Internet knows no boundaries. I call on Brussels, as Mrs Overend did, to encourage a cross-cutting approach to Internet safety.

The Internet is an incredible tool and has many positive benefits that have transformed our society. Ofcom's 2013 annual review of the communications market in Northern Ireland indicated that 78% of households in Northern Ireland had access to the Internet and that 45% of people now use their mobile phone to access the Internet. We must, however, do all that is necessary to protect children from the inherent dangers of the Internet. Children often have more knowledge about electronic devices than their parents do. As a result, they need to be protected. Last year, Ofcom demonstrated that 93% of children aged five to 15 have access to the Internet at home.

Much violent and inappropriate material is too easily accessible online, and social networking sites can be used as a means of intimidating, threatening or bullying users. The phenomenon of cyberbullying is a serious issue in Northern Ireland for children and young people. According to research conducted by the Department of Education in 2011, 15% of year 6 pupils and 17% of year 9 pupils indicated that they had experienced cyberbullying in the past couple of months. Even more worrying, that research is now three years old. The Internet has got more sophisticated in the intervening time, and so has cyberbullying. Cyberbullying can have serious detrimental effects on victims, damaging their sense of worth and their self-esteem. In some cases, it is found to have contributed to children and young people self-harming or taking their own life. It must be acknowledged that, in recent years, that phenomenon has been taken increasingly seriously by schools and statutory agencies, with positive outcomes. However, much work is left to be done.

7.30 pm

There are shocking websites that are pro-suicide and pro-eating disorders. That material is extremely damaging to the well-being of our young people. Only last year, a mother from Burren in my constituency highlighted that issue when she walked from Burren to London to highlight the issue after the death of her son. The latest dangerous online drinking game — NekNomination — in which participants are challenged to down a drink, is disturbing. The popularity of this reckless craze has become increasingly concerning for parents and families across the North. It is believed to have begun in Australia and spread from there. Many of our young people take it to extremes, downing large quantities of spirits and other alcoholic and intoxicating mixtures, sometimes with dangerous results. Most people who take part make a video of themselves carrying it out and post it on a social media platform. This is not a game; it is jeopardising the lives of our young people. Anybody who saw the father of Jonny Byrne — the Carlow teenager who lost his life in the River Barrow — tell his story on TV last weekend would certainly be moved. In fact, I believe that such interviews should be shown to our young people.

The Assembly should support the Online Safety Bill, which is before the UK Parliament. Schools must also pursue a robust programme of education for our young people on safe Internet use. It must start early in primary school, and parents need to be actively involved in the education process. The era of the Internet has lots of positive consequences, but we must build in protection for our children and young people.

Mr Lyttle: I am delighted to offer the support of the Alliance Party for the motion and the amendment and to join the Assembly in celebrating Safer Internet Day 2014 and the creative possibilities of the Internet. We should also use it as an opportunity to check whether our Government are delivering on their responsibility to protect our children and young people against its dangers. The website for Safer Internet Day is saferinternet.org.uk, and there people can find out more information about how they can get involved on 11 February.

As many Members have said this evening, we are experiencing a communications revolution. Quite simply, information, both good and bad, can travel at the speed of light. Three billion people are connected by the Internet, and around 3 million emails are sent every second. There are almost as many mobile devices as there are people on the planet. The birth of Prince George — probably of more interest to some Members than others — was heralded by around 25,000 tweets a minute. So, evidence of a hyperconnected world and an immensely powerful communications tool that offers immense hope and opportunity is readily available all around us. The Internet is a platform from which to foster creativity and innovation, tackle inequality, break down barriers of all types and promote an inclusive and shared society. Cloud computing and smart technology achieve better outcomes for businesses, communities, children and young people across the globe. In recent months, I have been delighted to work with a group of young people in east Belfast to develop a youth services directory app and to support the work of an organisation called Thinkspace that is going to create app development rooms in schools and youth clubs across Northern Ireland.

The Internet is indeed a power for great good, but it can, as we have heard this evening, be used to cause great damage and danger. That is the reality that we have to face up to in the Assembly. As a Member of the Assembly and the father of two young children, I believe that we share a significant responsibility and duty of care for our children and young people. We need to maximise the opportunity of the Internet and protect children and young people from the dangers of the digital world.

What are the significant dangers? Mrs Overend eloquently set out the four Cs: content, contact, conduct and commercial. There are some very specific dangers that we have also heard about this evening, one of which is cyberbullying. Figures from the Department of Education from 2011 show that 15·5% of year 6 pupils and 17% of year 9 pupils had experienced cyberbullying. Some great work is ongoing by the Northern Ireland Anti-Bullying Forum to tackle the issue. In 2011, the Childhood Wellbeing Research Centre showed that particular groups were at greater risk of cyberbullying. They include children with special educational needs and children from black and minority ethnic groups. We also heard about the dangers of pornography and other harmful content, and 11% of nine- to 16-year-olds in the UK in 2011 reported exposure to pornography.

How adequate is the current approach taken by our Government here? There seems to be a lack of overarching policy to address e-safety. There is, however, a cross-departmental review of current and future actions in the field of e-safety. The Northern Ireland Direct website provides some advice and information on different aspects of e-safety for young people and parents. We also have work to promote Internet safety day here in Northern Ireland, which is to be welcomed. However, if we want to keep pace with what is a communications revolution, we need to see an e-safety revolution. We need to empower our parents, children and young people to remain safe in a digital world. I add my support to the Safeguarding Board for Northern Ireland/National Children's Bureau report, which has called for the establishment of an e-safety forum in Northern Ireland to lead that work. The motion states that industry self-regulation of web-based content and services is essential. The UK Government's work in that regard should be supported by the Northern Ireland Executive. We need to see greater adequacy and effectiveness of self-regulation.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Will the Member draw his remarks to a close, please?

Mr Lyttle: I strongly support the work to coordinate approaches, raise awareness and enhance protection for our children and young people while they explore the possibilities and opportunities of the digital world online.

Mr Givan: Undoubtedly, the Internet has, in the main, been hugely positive and beneficial to our society. We can think about how it has impacted on our economy in commerce, e-banking and conference calls. Socially, it has enabled families and friends to be connected all across the world. As recently as Christmas, I was able to Skype my sister, who was holidaying in Australia over that period. It shows how small this world really is. Educationally, it has changed the classroom environment. Practically, we can think about how people really have no excuse for getting lost now, because you can very quickly Google Maps somewhere and you should be able to find your way.

Undoubtedly, the Internet has brought huge benefit to our society, but it has also created extreme dangers. It is right that we focus on that and ensure that, where gaps are found and established, action is taken. We can think of some of the dangers that Members have highlighted. You can throw out statistics, and, although they do not always resonate, it is frightening to consider that a third of three- to four-year-olds in the United Kingdom have used the Internet. I have three daughters: one is six, one is four and one is 14 months old. Already, I watch my youngest girl scrolling across on the iPad, trying to get access to the different apps. My eldest girl, who is only six, has already been able to memorise my password. She was able to get into it, so I had to change my password. Whenever you are on apps such as Angry Birds or Candy Crush Saga and you get stuck, it asks whether you want to pay 69p to get to the next level. Thankfully, she does not know the password to access my credit card details, which are already on the iPad, but that just shows how young people are so advanced in how they can navigate the Internet and different electronic devices. Although that can be a good thing, it is also important that there is an awareness of how we can address that.

Colleagues have talked about the inherent dangers, and we should consider how pornographic material is being accessed, particularly by young boys. Over 56% of 15-year-olds admit to regularly viewing pornographic material. That is those who admit to it. That will have a huge impact on their cognitive thinking and how they consider people. Rather than recognising them as persons, they will see them as commodities. There are dangers that we need to be alert to.

Recently, I have noticed the number of adverts for online gambling. That also has an impact. The growing evidence shows that around 2% of children aged between 11 and 15 have gambling problems because of the Internet. Look at how it impacts on adults as well. We should be rightly concerned about that.

Members have touched on the cyberbullying and grooming aspects. There are clear dangers that need to be considered and addressed.

Awareness is key, and parents need to be aware. The research shows that the overwhelming majority of parents would take action to deal with something if they were aware that it was harmful. However, many parents do not understand the different technologies. They are often not properly aware of the dangers that exist or of their children's ability to access material. One statistic shows that 62% of 12- to 15-year-olds now have a smartphone that can access the Internet. However, 70% of those with smartphones do not have any parental controls on them that could be used to block inappropriate images. Parents need to be responsible.

We can encourage the businesses involved to be responsible and self-regulate — that is obviously where the first port of call should be — but government should not rule out taking a form of statutory control over this area. If that is needed, it is right that government should act. We have a duty to protect the most vulnerable in our society, and that should be considered if there is a failure to self-regulate.

Finally, the other aspect —

Mr Deputy Speaker: Will the Member bring his remarks to a close, please?

Mr Givan: — is the National Crime Agency. It would be remiss of me not to mention it. It is key to tackling the exploitation of children and young people, and the parties opposite need to consider their continued blockage of it and the risks that that presents.

Mr Hazzard: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. As my party colleagues have said, we welcome the motion and are more than happy to support the motion as amended.

Some of our counterparts on the Benches opposite have been fascinated by the Sinn Féin ard fheis at the weekend and some of the speeches at it. One of the contributors at our ard fheis was Catherine Seeley, a young teacher who had been harassed and bullied through the Internet and felt intimidated and unable to go back to her workplace. We very much saw the dangers of the Internet and what can happen. On the flip side of that, the young pupils of the school in question went on to social media to support their teacher and showed that the Internet can be empowering and a force for good, just as it can be a negative force. That is an appropriate example of why we need balance.

Chris Lyttle talked about the communications revolution, and we need to face the fact that no lawmakers anywhere will ever keep pace with the communications revolution. By its very nature, a revolution is not to be contained. We need to build a culture and a respect among our young people, our teachers and everyone else that teaches our young people how to deal with it. Our young people are growing up in a very different world from that which most of us could have imagined. They connect, share, learn, explore and play in a way that was simply unimaginable a generation ago. That is the only world that they know, and their parents, teachers, political leaders and even the media are all doing what they can to catch up.

The emergence of social media in all its forms pushes the boundaries of what we think of as private, while giving us and our children a platform to express ourselves at any time and anywhere. Undoubtedly, it can be a very unnerving prospect for a parent or a teacher to see their kids pack so much processing power in their pocket. The media have played on those fears to a large extent with screaming headlines and nightly news leads about online predators, pornography, cyberbullying etc. Indeed, some lawmakers have proposed online safety legislation following one incident or another. One such proposal was an age limit of 16 years for accessing social media and the Internet. Although understandable, those reactions are not always helpful or healthy. The promotion of fear, uncertainty and doubt may make for provocative headlines, but it does little to create an informed and empowered young citizenry that is prepared to take on the challenges of the future.

7.45 pm

The power of social media and the Internet and new technologies as a whole has transformed the notion of citizenship, the pro-social set of behaviours that enable people to be connected to the world around them. With these new powers ultimately come new responsibilities. Parents and educators must be prepared to guide their kids in a new digital world. Policymakers must help to advance the right ideas that help to keep kids safe, and teens must be equipped to make smart, safe and responsible choices online in order to reap many of the opportunities presented in this new world.

We should not allow negative hype or let it preclude us from providing social media opportunities for our kids. We should be frank with ourselves and our children and young people in developing online environments that protect younger kids but are not so limiting that they stifle all the benefits of social media and the Internet.

We need to ensure that our children are fully aware of how to navigate the Internet and social media safely. However, we need to avoid the fear-mongering of social media and the perpetuation of myths that are focused solely on raising alarm. There is ample evidence that the Internet in general, and social media specifically, provide our children with opportunities to learn, interact, participate and connect with the world to make a difference like we never had before. A Harris Interactive survey of teens found that 68% felt that the benefits of social media outweighed the risks, especially when people were coming together to promote positive social change. In addition, more than half of teens said that social media sites such as Facebook and Twitter had made them more aware of the needs of others.

Dr Michael Rich, director of the center on media and child health at Boston Children's Hospital, said:

"We should not view social media as either positive or negative but as essentially neutral. It's what we do with the tools that decide how they affect us and those around us."

Indeed, much as we can control positive and negative aspects of automobiles by observing the speed limit, employing intellect and caution and collaboratively working with drivers, social media requires its own behaviours, commonly referred to as "digital citizenship". Industry, policymakers and others stakeholders, such as schools, need to ensure that some simple ideas and best practices are applied to social networking services that cater to children. Employing key safety principles will help to change a deeply damaging cultural attitude that makes technology something to fear. We should build media literacy skills, focus on the good and promote the idea of family accounts for young children. Let us not give into the myths but focus instead on the positives —

Mr Deputy Speaker: Will the Member bring his remarks to a close?

Mr Hazzard: — and benefits of our evolving digital lives. Our next generation of entrepreneurs, philanthropists and cultural leaders will have the Internet and social media as part of their DNA. We need to work together to provide our children with a strong foundation of life skills that will enable them to convert this into a means of doing good across their entire life.

Ms J McCann (Junior Minister, Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister): I welcome the opportunity to respond to what has been an extremely encouraging debate, given that there seems to be an agreed view on how serious an issue this is and how we need to tackle it.

I indicated in last year's Assembly debate on child Internet safety that it was a real concern for me as a parent of three teenagers and as a Minister. In both roles, I am very aware of my responsibility to help ensure that our children and young people are safe and protected from dangers online. That remains the case.

I very much welcome the opportunity to debate the issues around Internet safety and hear the concerns and issues that Members have brought forward. The increased focus on Safer Internet Day reflects a broader concern in society on the issue, and Junior Minister Bell and I will reflect that through a number of activities that we have planned for tomorrow to promote and celebrate Safer Internet Day. I do not want anyone to be in any doubt about our continued commitment to the issue of child Internet safety.

Everyone here this evening will know just how capable children and young people are in embracing new technology with relative ease, instinctively finding their favourite website or game and song to download. For many adults, it can be daunting to keep up with them and worrying to know that, alongside the fun, games and educational sites, there are considerable dangers from which children and young people need to be protected. As a parent, therefore, you are left with a dilemma. You want your children to learn all those digital skills and have that educational tool, which is essential in everyday life, but you also want to protect them and keep them from the danger they are exposed to, particularly in a place where people would exploit it.

So, in response, we must educate and empower our young people, parents, teachers and everyone who plays a role in educating and caring for our children. With the right information, and the explanation that every action has consequences, we can arm children with the right information and the tools to keep them safe online.

I empathise with all those who feel confused and daunted about how to protect our children from the potential risks online. Part of the problem is that children are very often more digitally active than their parents. I know that from first-hand experience. However, there is a lot of advice and help on offer. Indeed, that is one of the issues that the recent SBNI report, which some Members mentioned, demonstrated. We need to ensure that we are providing clear and consistent messages for children and young people, their parents and those who are working with them.

In light of the report from SBNI, I will make some points. I will try to answer some of the questions that Members asked: if I do not answer a Member's point, forgive me, but I will try my best.

First, I congratulate the Safeguarding Board and the National Children's Bureau for the report, which marks an important staging post in our efforts to protect children online. Just as we need to educate children to have the confidence to say no, we need to empower and engage those looking after children with clear and relevant e-safety messages so that they are not alone when objecting to what children are being enticed to access. Ms Overend was at the launch of the report, and, time and time again, it came across that the messages were not clear.

Secondly, the theme for Safer Internet Day this year is, "Let's create a better internet together". That recognises the balance between encouraging users to embrace the positive opportunities offered online and responding to, and dealing with, the negative aspects of the online world.

As the motion sets out, and as I said when I mentioned the launch of the report, we should not lose sight of the positive side of the Internet as a fantastic educational resource, even as we seek to protect the most vulnerable from its negative side. Unfortunately, however, we know that it can also subject children to inappropriate or harmful material. Children can also, through their behaviour, inadvertently put themselves at risk. It is important that we recognise that children need to be empowered with the tools and the skills to know when they are putting themselves at risk.

The most recent survey evidence bears that out. Although access to the Internet can be seen as beneficial for educational and social development, one in six children indicated that they had seen something on the Internet in the past year that had upset or worried them. Also, one in eight children told a recent ARK survey that they had been bullied by someone sending nasty texts or putting up bad things about them on the Internet. We have work to do to make sure that clear, concise and consistent messages are provided to our children and young people, their parents and carers.

However, it would be unfair to expect people who look after children to take all the responsibility for making sure that children are safe when they go online. The industry and retailers have to share the responsibility for e-safety messages as well. They must do all that they can to support those looking after children in understanding how to ensure that their children stay safe. They have a big responsibility in this. In that context, we welcome the recent announcement by the Internet service providers on work that they are taking forward to block child abuse and other illegal content on the Internet.

Turning to some more specific aspects of the motion and taking account of the amendment from Ms Overend, the Department is fully supportive of cross-departmental working on the issue and of the development by the Safeguarding Board of an e-safety forum.

Some Members asked about the mechanics of that forum. The Safeguarding Board is spearheading the forum, but OFMDFM will be playing an active role in it. We will be helping to coordinate the forum, and we will be using the framework that we use for Delivering Social Change because that will give us the cross-departmental mechanism that we need. We are keen to use that and the existing children's champions in the various Departments. I emphasise that the Safeguarding Board will have the spearheading role.

As I said, e-safety is an issue that cuts across all Departments that interface with children and young people. A number of Members mentioned the Brussels visit that Minister Bell and I were on and how we can learn from the European example. We met Commission representatives when we were there last November and discussed the research that we were doing here as well as the research that they were carrying out in a European capacity. Again, it is about learning best models of practice and how the type of information that they can give us can inform our policy here when we take it forward. It is important to recognise European developments in helping to inform our policies at a local level.

We recognise that there is considerable merit in the adoption of an overarching approach to ensure that our children are adequately protected in all areas of their lives, particularly in e-safety. Another Member, I think that it was Mr Lyttle, mentioned the NCB report that was commissioned by the Safeguarding Board, which looked at an Executive strategy around e-safety. Again, we would use the forum to develop that. Although the Department of Health has the overarching responsibility for child protection and safety, we will play our part to ensure that, through the mechanisms that we have in our coordinating role in OFMDFM, other Departments will also hopefully play their part.

In 2013, we carried out an exercise to identify any risks to children and young people from access to the Internet across Departments. You asked for an update on that. We have compiled a report that we gave to the Safeguarding Board, as we said during meetings that we had with the Member, so we are waiting for the Safeguarding Board to come back to us with a report on that research. I will let Members know when that meeting happens.

As I said, I am very pleased to have taken part in the debate. I support the amendment on the importance of establishing an e-safety forum, as recommended by the SBNI. The forum would provide an excellent opportunity to bring together those organisations best placed to contribute to the development of an Executive-wide approach that would incorporate that forum and an Executive strategy on it. For its part, OFMDFM will be happy to take part.

I believe that the steps that the Executive have put in place over the past year represent a strong foundation through which we can address the challenges posed by the Internet. On that basis, I would welcome cross-party support today. I ask everyone to support Safer Internet Day tomorrow.

Mr Nesbitt: As is traditional, I will begin by thanking the proposers of the motion and Mrs Overend for her amendment. It is an important debate, and it is good to see Members in the Chamber and, indeed, Members in agreement on the issues. However, look around the Chamber, Members. Who is here? The DUP is here, Sinn Féin is here, the SDLP is here, the Alliance Party is here, and the Ulster Unionist Party is here. The five parties of the Executive. The so-called parties of opposition are absent.

I thank Mr Weir not only for tabling the motion but for making it clear early on that he has no difficulty with Mrs Overend's amendment, which gives us a very good platform for unanimity this evening. I also thank him for acknowledging the positive influence of the Internet, not least for people such as us.

On Friday, in my constituency office in Newtownards, I dealt with a woman who had an issue that involved me sending some data to another agency. Luckily enough, I did it as she was sitting there. The recipient of the email came straight back and said, "Yes, but could I refer you to somebody else?" I pinged the email on. Incredibly, within the time of the meeting, the second person came back to me. We had an answer for that woman in the space of 90 minutes. By first class post, it would have taken, at best, five working days. We can now do in 90 minutes what used to take us over a week.

8.00 pm

The Internet is technology that is fantastically beneficial when it goes our way. However, as with anything and everything in life, there are those who are out to exploit it and to do damage with it. We, as an Assembly, have a duty to act to protect and prevent. Mrs Overend gave the example of her eight-year-old looking for a toy on the Internet and coming across an entirely inappropriate adult advertisement. Mr Givan talked about a six-year-old cracking his password but being thankful that the child did not get the password for his bank details. I am tempted to say, "Your wife was on the phone. You are to call home urgently. The bank manager is in the driveway."

On a more serious point, the fact that we do not have the full protections of the National Crime Agency (NCA) is a very important point for the House to reflect on. As we go forward, we will continue to return to the damage done by an ideological decision not to bring the National Crime Agency into Northern Ireland.

Mrs Overend defined in some detail the sort of software and behavioural advice that is available today to make the positive difference that we seek. We do not have to go off and do an awful lot of research; it is out there to be grasped.

Ms Fearon gave data that provided some definition of the fact that 93% of five- to 15-year-olds have access to the Internet. She gave us some startling figures on the activity of uploading videos and images, which emphasised the scope for abuse. Ms Fearon also talked about goods, facilities and services (GFS) and how she wants GFS to be made available to young people as well as older people. I just wonder whether, in suggesting that protections be brought in, you are admitting that GFS are not entirely suitable for younger people. You would have to legislate to take account of the age of these people.

I thank junior Minister Ms McCann, who confirmed that OFMDFM will lead the drive in establishing the e-safety forum. That is extremely welcome news, but, of course, the proof of the pudding is in the eating.

Much reference was made to the Safeguarding Board. Sharon Beattie, its director of operations, talks about a parent who likened looking for information on e-safety to looking up something that the doctor tells you on the Internet and being put off because:

"so much comes up when you do a search".

We have to help to mould this. I searched "NI Assembly" —

Mr Deputy Speaker: Will the Member bring his remarks to a close?

Mr Nesbitt: — on Bing and got 6,680,000 references. Let us hope that the next one is a reference to the fact that the House was united tonight in supporting the motion as amended by Mrs Overend.

Lord Morrow: I am pleased to wind on the motion. As my colleague Peter Weir said, we are quite content to adopt and accept the amendment moved by Mrs Overend. I do not intend to comment on individuals who have spoken, except to say that I feel that all the speeches were of excellent quality. I am delighted that the House is united. It is good to see that the House can unite around some things. There is nothing more important or better to unite around than this motion.

I have taken a close interest in online safety over recent years. On 28 January, I attended a debate in the House of Lords on the Children and Families Bill, which included a discussion on online safety. Baroness Howe, a cross-Bench peer, moved an amendment to introduce in statute an opt-in system of online regulation. She really struck me when she mentioned some statistics related to tube sites, which offer hard-core pornographic and violent material at the click of a play button, with no warnings, no splash pages or any means of restricting children's access. She said:

"If we look at some Experian Hitwise statistics for UK visits to just six 'tube' sites, the figures are staggering: Pornhub gets 66 million monthly UK hits; xHamster, 63 million; XNXX, 29 million; RedTube, 28 million; Xvideos, 28 million; and YouPorn, 26 million. That is a total of 240 million hits from the UK in a single month to adult sites, without any form of onsite child protection."

Members, no doubt like many of you, I find those statistics to be truly shocking and very worrying. It is abundantly clear that easy access to such material for children and young people can be deeply damaging. I could point to a range of academic studies that outline that point, but in the limited time available to me, I will highlight only one. In 2010, Dr Linda Papadopoulos, in a Home Office report considering the sexualisation of children, stated:

"The evidence gathered in the review suggests a clear link between consumption of sexualised images, a tendency to view women as objects and the acceptance of aggressive attitudes and behaviour as the norm."

Confronted with the very real dangers online that face our children and young people, I believe that it is crucial that we take action. To my mind, two steps must be taken. First, we must seek the introduction in statute of an opt-in system to protect children and young people from stumbling accidentally on or purposely seeking harmful material online. Secondly, we must seek to ensure that parents and children are effectively educated about online safety. It is not one or the other; it must be both.

In the time available to me, I want to concentrate particularly on the opt-in, default adult content filters that can be lifted at any time with age verification demonstrating that the person is over 18. I know that the Assembly does not have the power to introduce such a system in our Province, but I believe that we should urge our parliamentary counterparts at Westminster to make the change.

The first thing to say is that I very much welcome the progress that has been made over the past year on a self-regulatory basis. Since we debated the issue last February, there has been considerable progress. The introduction of a code of practice for the four major Internet service providers is clearly a positive step forward. It is fantastic that three of the four have voluntarily introduced an opt-in system.

However, there are six major problems with self-regulation, which Baroness Howe set out powerfully in the debate in the House of Lords on 28 January and in a recent article on politics.co.uk. I will quickly run through the problems that she outlined.

First, it is important to recognise that self-regulation does not cover all the market. Between 5% and 10% of the market, which amounts to over one million homes and hundreds of thousands of children, will not be covered by the default filters. Put quite simply, what is the point of plugging a leak if it covers only 90% of the hole?

Baroness Howe notes that one Internet service provider (ISP) — namely Andrews and Arnold Ltd — has no plans to introduce default filters at all. Indeed, on its home page, it proclaims its commitment to "Unfiltered Internet for all". To my mind, it is clear that, if effective protection is to be provided for all children, we need a statutory approach that will cover the entirety of the market.

Secondly, in the context of ISP self-regulation, there are very real fears that big corporations are given too much power, because it is up to companies to define what constitutes adult content. Currently, there is no requirement for the definition of adult content to be consistent across the sector. There is no accountability of those companies.

I do acknowledge that there is a legitimate concern about websites being blocked in error. The statutory approach that Baroness Howe has proposed addresses both of these concerns by giving Ofcom, an accountable public body, responsibility for defining adult content and for providing a mechanism for dealing with claims of over-blocking in a timely manner.

Thirdly, if default filters are to achieve their goal, they must be complemented with effective age verification so that we can be certain that those people who are disabling adult content filters are 18 years or over. The current approach that is used by the industry, which is called the closed loop, involves sending the ISP account-holder an email informing them that their filters have been disabled. This presents two problems. First, no age verification takes place before default filters are disabled. Secondly, it depends entirely on parents reading and acting on these ISP emails immediately, and, in many cases, that simply will not happen. It seems apparent to me that the UK Government need to require all ISPs to introduce robust verification of the age of the person who is deciding to disable default filters before filters are disabled.

Fourthly, it seems very strange to me that the UK Government are reluctant to introduce such statutory regulation. As the eminent peer Lord Mackay of Clashfern has argued, it is illogical for us as a society to believe that child protection is a sufficiently important subject to merit statutory protections offline but then to decide that self-regulation will do online.

The British Government have been very quick to make the point that what is illegal offline is also illegal online. However, Members, we need to ask the question: if that was sufficient security, why have the Government seen the need for default filters? The reality, of course, is that legal protection for children is not just about pronouncing some things to be illegal. It is also about using the law to protect children from coming into contact with things that are illegal and, crucially, about using the law to protect children and young people from accessing things that, although not illegal, are, nonetheless, inappropriate for children to access.

Fifthly and finally, the mobile phone operators code has not been properly adhered to by the industry. As many Members will be aware, many children and young people these days access the Internet through their phones. In 2010, it was revealed that BlackBerry mobiles were not offering default filters, in contravention of the 2005 code. That had left children able to access inappropriate material for five years.

Last month, Tesco Mobile was similarly found to be ignoring the code. Fortunately, both companies have now rectified matters, but the history of the code makes the weakness of self-regulation obvious. Moreover, it has been ignored by companies not once but twice, and, no doubt, it could easily happen again. Indeed, it is quite possible —

Mr Deputy Speaker: Will the Member draw his remarks to a close, please?

Lord Morrow: — although I am not certain, that other mobile companies could be ignoring the requirements of the 2005 code. It seems clear that we need to see the default filtering obligation, with effective age verification, in statute so that mobile phone operators take their responsibilities more seriously. I commend the motion to the House.

Question, That the amendment be made, put and agreed to.

Main Question, as amended, put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly endorses and supports the Safer Internet Day 2014 campaign entitled "Let's create a better Internet together"; recognises that whilst it poses significant dangers to children and young people, used properly the Internet can also positively affect social, economic and educational advancement; acknowledges that all users have a part to play in making the Internet a safer and better place for everybody; calls upon the Northern Ireland Executive and Her Majesty's Government to encourage a cross-cutting approach to online safety by incorporating it into the school curriculum, by affording parents and carers easy access to sufficient information to take necessary action and by encouraging businesses and industry to self-regulate their web-based content and services; and further calls upon the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to assist with the prompt establishment of an e-safety forum, as recommended in the recent Safeguarding Board for Northern Ireland, 'An exploration of e-safety messages to young people, parents and practitioners in Northern Ireland', and to coordinate e-safety responsibilities across all Executive Departments.

Adjourned at 8.14 pm.

Northern Ireland Assembly

Tuesday 11 February 2014

The Assembly met at 10.30 am (Mr Principal Deputy Speaker [Mr Mitchel McLaughlin] in the Chair).

Members observed two minutes' silence.

Assembly Business

Mr McNarry: On a point of order, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. Yesterday we learned of a letter that the Minister of Finance sent to his ministerial colleagues only — a letter of alarming facts and figures, which the House is so far unaware of. Subsequently, the letter was leaked to the media by obviously at least one Minister. Is that not a breach of the ministerial code? How seriously do you view the matter?

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: If you have information, you can bring it to the attention of the Speaker's Office, and we will then consider the matter. I have to say that it is something that I am completely unaware of as we speak. So, if you can supply that information, or, indeed, if you have done so already, it will be considered in due course.

Mr McNarry: Further to that point of order, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, just for your information, the information that I bring is very much in the public domain. I am very surprised that no one from the Bench that you sit on listened to the news last night.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The latter point is not a point of order. The Speaker's Office will take its own counsel on the matter.

Mr Allister: On a point of order. I want to refer back to the statement that the Health Minister made about the situation in our emergency departments. The House may recall that, yesterday, I directly asked the Minister whether there had been any deaths in consequence of or related to trolley waits and delays in the hospital. The Minister ducked the question and did not answer, yet this morning on the radio, we heard from Dr Tony Stevens that there may have been as many as five deaths in connection with that. Surely the expectation of the House is that, when Ministers come to the House and are asked questions, they should frankly and openly supply the information that is requested, rather than duck the issue. Is that not a reasonable expectation in the House?

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I remind the Member, and Members generally, that, on 26 January 2009, the Speaker gave a very clear ruling that it is not for the Chair to judge whether a Minister is giving a satisfactory answer. If Members are not satisfied with an answer, they should be persistent with the Minister and table further questions, which I recommend to the Member.

It is not the job of the Chair to make judgements on answers, and I addressed that point last week. I will not take any more points of order on these matters. Members have recourse if they are not satisfied with the response from a Minister or, indeed, with subsequent disclosure, and they know how to follow those matters up in their own diligent fashion.

Ministerial Statement

Organ Donation

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety wishes to make a statement.

Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): Thank you, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. I wish to make a statement concerning the future of organ donation policy in Northern Ireland.

In April last year, I announced the key measures to be taken forward by my Department in developing its organ donation policy. In July 2013, I launched the NHS Blood and Transplant's (NHSBT) new UK-wide organ donation and transplantation strategy, 'Taking Organ Transplantation to 2020: A UK Strategy'. The strategy was developed by NHSBT in collaboration with all UK Health Departments and all those involved in organ donation and transplantation, including professional bodies, patient groups, transplant surgeons and the wider health service. The overall aim is to match world-class performance in organ donation and transplantation. The strategy does not propose that soft opt-out legislation should be introduced as a UK-wide policy. The strategy proposes that three groups — society and individuals; NHS hospitals and staff; NHSBT and commissioners — need to act for the strategy to be successful and achieve the desired outcomes. Support action from government, professional bodies and the voluntary sector will be essential, too.

In addition to the actions set out in the strategy, at my request, the Public Health Agency (PHA) has completed a major survey to test local public opinion on organ donation. The findings of that survey will be addressed by a public information campaign, which the PHA will launch on 12 February. The campaign is aimed at encouraging people to let their family know whether they wish to donate their organs at the end of life. The aim is to increase public awareness of organ donation and the number of donors. Following the campaign, the PHA will conduct a second public attitudes survey into organ donation later this year. When the results of that survey are known, I will be better placed to reach a decision on what further action might be required, including whether we need to move forward with statutory measures on organ donation policy.

For the past six years, Northern Ireland's organ donation policy has been driven initially by advice from the UK organ donation task force (ODTF) and, since June 2012, by the Northern Ireland Committee for Organ Donation and Transplantation (NICODT), a group comprising commissioners, DHSSPS officials, clinicians, NHS Blood and Transplant, local regional collaborative members and the voluntary sector. In January 2008, the ODTF made 14 recommendations addressing the obstacles to organ donation throughout the whole of the UK, aiming to increase donor rates by at least 50% by 2013. During that time, there was considerable investment in organ donation. Clinical leads and specialist nurses were appointed in each trust, donation committees were established and regional collaboratives developed to share good practice and provide a platform for shared learning. As a result of the developments, and the dedication of the staff involved, the 50% increase in donation was reached by the UK as a whole. Northern Ireland exceeded the target by increasing donation rates by 82%. That is rightly an achievement that we should be very proud of, but we cannot be complacent as more still needs to be done. Currently, around 160 people in Northern Ireland are actively waiting on a transplant and, unfortunately, around 15 people die in Northern Ireland each year while waiting for a transplant. Having achieved, and indeed surpassed, the aims of the ODTF, in July 2013, I launched a new UK-wide organ donation and transplantation strategy, 'Taking Organ Transplantation to 2020: A UK Strategy'. The strategy was developed by NHSBT in conjunction with the four UK Health Administrations. The overall aim of the strategy is to match world-class performance in organ donation and transplantation.

Last year, I announced that I intended to initiate a public engagement process to establish attitudes towards organ donation to inform my decision on the future policy for organ donation in Northern Ireland, including the possible introduction of an opt-out system for organ donation, if necessary. This work was taken forward by the Public Health Agency and consisted of a public attitude survey and focus group meetings. It was to be followed up by a widespread media campaign. The results of the PHA's public engagement process were published in October 2013. In response, I stated that I wished to consider the report in detail before making my decision on the future of organ donation in Northern Ireland.

The PHA's public engagement process involved a representative sample survey of 1,012 members of the Northern Ireland public and 16 focus groups with key stakeholders, such as charities, people on a waiting list, those who have had a transplant, donor families and health and social care staff. The results of the work highlighted that with regard to organ donation and registration on the organ donor register (ODR), 84% of respondents supported the idea of organ donation. However, support was lower for the idea that we should all register for organ donation, at 55%, or that it is unacceptable not to donate your organs, at 26%. More than a third, 36%, of respondents were not aware of the ODR. Knowledge about organ donation was generally low among respondents, who answered, on average, three questions out of seven correctly.

Four factors were found to drive respondents' attitudes towards organ donation, of which spiritual or traditional beliefs, such as that the body should be kept whole for burial, was the main one. That was followed by medical distrust; for example, "If I sign an organ donor card, doctors may take away my organs before I am actually dead". There was the "icky" factor; for example, "I do not like the idea of my body being cut into when I have died". Another factor was the perceived benefits; for example, "Organ donation is the gift of life for whoever receives it". Seventy-eight percent of respondents said that they would be willing to accept an organ if they needed one.

Seventy-eight percent of respondents agreed that it is important to discuss organ donation wishes with family and/or friends. However, only 38% had done so, and only 43% thought that their family or close friend would actually know their wishes. Just over half of the respondents, 52%, said that they knew the donation wishes of their wife, husband or partner, and fewer knew the wishes of their parents, 32%; siblings, 27%; children, 29%; or close friend, 26%.

Eighty-eight percent of those who said their family or close friend would know their donation wishes thought that they would agree with those wishes. However, that fell to 29% when they did not think their family or close friend would know their wishes. This suggests that people may be less likely to discuss their donation wishes with their family or close friend if they are concerned that their family or close friend would not agree with their decision.

What can be done to improve organ donation in Northern Ireland? Stakeholders felt that it was important to normalise organ donation. Informing the public by providing correct information and dispelling myths was considered essential. There was unanimous support across all stakeholder groups for a well-resourced and sustained public information campaign to raise awareness of organ donation and make it a cultural norm.

The soft opt-out/presumed consent debate has been happening. Fifty-six percent of respondents said they would be in favour of changing to a soft opt-out/presumed consent system. However, when asked whether they agreed with the statement that, "Everyone should be presumed to be an organ donor unless they register a wish otherwise", fewer, 49%, agreed, indicating that there is some confusion about the idea.

With regard to stakeholders, support for soft opt-out/presumed consent was higher among organ donation charities, transplant recipients, those on the transplant waiting list, and the British Medical Association (BMA). Those who were less supportive of the proposed legislative change believed that now is not the right time and raised concern about public readiness. Concerns among stakeholders about the introduction of soft opt-out/presumed consent included the possibility of feeding into medical distrust — public perception of a conflict of interest for medical staff when considering end-of-life care — a general feeling that people would not actively seek out an opt-out register and fear that use of the ODR, which would still be in operation, may decline.

That means that more families could be in a situation of not knowing their loved one's wishes, so decision-making consent among donor families could become more difficult. The pool of potential donors could reduce from the current situation whereby all families are asked to consider donation if medically appropriate, whether their loved one is on the ODR or not, to one whereby only the families of those not on the opt-out register are asked.

10.45 am

Other concerns included the following: losing the notion that donation is a gift; creating public confusion that stops people opting in; and the issue becoming a political football. There are general concerns that the gains made in Northern Ireland over the past six years could be lost if the public are not fully in favour of a change. Some stakeholders said that they had changed their opinion from being supportive of the proposed legislative change to becoming more cautious about implementing it at this time. Finally, 43% of respondents felt that more can be done with the current opt-in system before changing to soft opt-out/presumed consent.

Following on from the public engagement, tomorrow, the Public Health Agency will take forward the next phase of the work that I announced last year, which is a major public information campaign aimed at tackling the obstacles identified to organ donation in Northern Ireland. A major theme of that will be letting your family and friends know of your wish to become an organ donor after your death.

As I have publicly stated, making a decision on any legislative change for organ donation is not one to be taken lightly. The last place that we want to be is, in seeking to do the right thing for the right reasons, actually doing the wrong thing. Making such an important decision warrants taking sufficient time to assess the available evidence and reach a final decision on the long-term future of the service. Part of that evidence will be to see how the public respond to the information campaign that is about to be launched. I will also follow closely the view of the professionals and will be cautious about legislative change without clear clinical support from those with expertise of working day in, day out in this field.

There is much more to consider here than simply whether or not we proceed with legislation. We also need to look at how we further improve awareness of the organ donor register, organ donation in general and highly sensitive issues such as how to encourage people to discuss their wishes with loved ones. Those areas must be given further impetus and the response of the public carefully considered if I am to arrive at a properly informed decision on the future development of policy on organ donation in Northern Ireland.

In the meantime, I urge all those who have not already done so to join the organ donor register and to discuss their wishes with friends and family. Our shared aim is to reduce the numbers of people on the waiting list for life-saving organs by increasing the numbers of families who consent to making healthy organs available for transplantation.

In conclusion, I firmly believe that increased public awareness, education on the key issues and the further development of transplantation services through UK-wide action is the right way forward for organ donation in Northern Ireland at this time. I will be happy to continue these discussions with all who have an interest in this important issue later this year, after I have had an opportunity to consider the further survey of public opinion following the PHA's public awareness campaign. Thank you.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin (The Chairperson of the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety): Go raibh maith agat, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. I thank the Minister for his statement. He outlined that 84% of respondents supported the idea of organ donation and that 55% supported the idea that we should all register for organ donation. However, the opt-out debate is not about registering in as opposed to opting out. We should all advocate public awareness, but given that, specifically, Wales has adopted a two-pronged approach through legislative change and a public awareness campaign, is the Minister simply stalling legislative change? How will he give guarantees now that a soft opt-out system or any legislative change will be advanced in this mandate?

Mr Poots: I am not against soft opt-out legislation. We are dealing with something that is hugely sensitive, and I am of the opinion that a person's organs belong to the person. They do not belong to the state; they belong to the individual, and it is for the individual to make the decision.

However, if we go down the soft opt-out route, it may well ensure that more lives are saved by increasing organ donation, but we have to do that on an evidence basis. The evidence base in Sweden, where the soft opt-out was introduced, is less conclusive. Spain has seen a significant benefit, but that did not come immediately after the soft opt-out was introduced; in fact, it came many years later and after public information campaigns. Therefore, we need to work more closely with the public to make them more aware of the benefits and importance of organ donation and the importance of discussing those matters with their relatives. We then need to go back to the public to see whether we can get a more confirmed view. We have public consultation for garnering the public's views on these matters before the Assembly makes decisions. That is why we have had this extensive consultation and why, given the confused responses from those who participated, we need to have a further extensive consultation.

Mr Wells: The Minister is aware that there has been a significant increase in the number of live kidney donors. Does he see that as an option to try to make up the gap between the demand of those requiring organs and the number of those prepared to donate?

Mr Poots: We have a target of 50 live kidney donors annually, and that has been surpassed in recent years, which makes Northern Ireland one of the leading countries in the field of live organ donation. We need to congratulate our staff for the excellent work that they have carried out. However, that will help out only with kidneys, and there is a range of other organs that can be donated. It is important to drive up the number of people who donate organs when deceased. So there is a course of work that needs to be continued.

A huge success story is the increasing number of people, up to 82%, donating organs. Much of that is down to the excellent work of our specialist nurses in organ donation. We have six specialist nurses based in the Belfast Trust, and they provide excellent support for families going through the most traumatic period in their life, which is losing their loved one. They do things in an incredibly sensitive way, and that has enabled us to increase massively the number of people who are donating organs. We need to consider that in all of this, and we need to ensure that we can develop it further, because I think that we can make further ground in increasing the number of organs donated.

Mr McKinney: Does the Minister accept that the statistics in the consultation responses are sufficient for action of a legislative nature? One startling statistic that underscores the point is that 15 of the 160 people currently on the transplant list may not survive their wait. Therefore, for them, every day is a delay.

Mr Poots: The statistics demonstrate that there is massive confusion. They certainly do not give us a clear pathway. I encourage the Member to read through the statistics. The fact that 15 people die each year should be a major incentive for us to act. The truth is that many of the organs that are obtained in Northern Ireland are not used in Northern Ireland.

If we are to make a real impact on the 15 lives that are lost each year, we need to do it across the United Kingdom, because we are part of a pool of organs that exists in the United Kingdom. Therefore Northern Ireland is leading the way in driving up organ donation. We need to get other parts of the United Kingdom to move as quickly as Northern Ireland. That is where the real benefits can be obtained across the United Kingdom, not just in Northern Ireland. It is important that we work with our colleagues in England, Scotland and Wales to ensure that we maximise organ donation, to ensure that many more people benefit from organ donation as a consequence, and to ensure that we make a real impact on those numbers — the 160 who are waiting on the list and the 15 lives that are lost each year. That is something that we are absolutely committed to doing.

Mrs Dobson: Minister, your statement proves one thing in the House today: the personal commitment of the First Minister and the deputy First Minister means little. You can survey an issue to death; meanwhile people continue to die. Will you give a commitment to the House that, when you know the results of the second public survey, which, I gather, could be up to a year away, you will bring a soft opt-out system before the end of this mandate? Or, perhaps, you will commission another survey, followed by another survey, followed by yet another survey.

Mr Poots: I do not know what the outcome of the second survey will be. I did not dictate people's responses in the survey; we asked people questions, and they came back with answers. I know that organ donation is hugely important to the Member and that her family has benefited personally from it, as has mine. My uncle was one of the earliest recipients of a kidney transplant in Northern Ireland and is still alive today as a result. I could have benefited further from organ donation for my mother who died early of liver disease, in spite of the fact that she never drank. However, she did not have the opportunity to get that. This issue is very important to me personally, as I want to save lives through organ donation.

I am not against the proposals that Mrs Dobson, for example, has produced on soft opt-out; it might be the right way forward. However, it is important that we educate the public and bring the public with us on those issues if we are to take what is a very significant step. It may be the right step, but, at this moment in time, I do not have the powerful evidence base that I think we should have to move ahead.

Mr McCarthy: The issue of organ donation has been with us for a very long time. I am disappointed that we seem to be going for more time. Of course, we want to make the right decision. I welcome the statement's indication:

"The overall aim is to match world-class performance in organ donation and transplantation."

However, the statement also says, as has been mentioned, that 160 people are waiting for a transplant; therefore urgent decisions are required. Can the Minister advise whether his Department is looking at the success or otherwise of what is happening in other places where soft opt-out is in operation? Given that, will the Minister give the Assembly an assurance that an early decision will be forthcoming?

Mr Poots: I already have mentioned Spain and Sweden. Wales has introduced legislation but is not enacting it until late in 2015, I believe, so we will not have any evidence base arising from that. This is not about creating inordinate delays. In fact, we will continue to drive up the numbers who donate organs over the time in which we are doing this work. I am absolutely confident of that. One of the benefits of the proposals on both pieces of legislation is that they have created debate, and public awareness is now much higher than it was. So there has been significant benefit.

11.00 am

However, it is important that the public are more engaged and that they have those conversations with their families. I ask Members this: have they had those conversations with their families? Many people have not had that conversation and do not know the wishes of their loved ones, and, as a consequence, when the worst possible thing happens and that leads to the death of a loved one, people are in a confused state. We need to keep getting a message out there that will help remove confusion and help bring clarity to the situation and, consequently, we can save more lives.

Mr Dunne: I thank the Minister for his statement. What does international evidence say about the opt-out systems for organ donation?

Mr Poots: Internationally, as I indicated, Spain has driven up organ donation quite significantly as a result of soft opt-out legislation, but that did not happen until public information and education was driven up, which was quite a number of years after the legislation was introduced. Sweden has not had the real benefits that it might have expected to derive as a result of introducing soft opt-out. So, in that respect, it is patchy. We really need to focus on how we can maximise organ donation in Northern Ireland but also in the pool that we receive organs from, which is right across the United Kingdom. It is very important that we work very closely with our colleagues across the other UK regions to ensure that many more organs are donated at a UK-wide level. We have a population of 1.8 million people, and the organ donation pool has a population of 60 million people. So, if we make a 100% increase and they only make a 10% increase, that is not as significant as it could be. We need to work closely with our colleagues across the UK to ensure that the increases take place on a UK level and, consequently, the benefits are maximised. Matching livers, hearts and other organs is very challenging, and that is why we really need more organs to come in from the wider pool, which is the UK pool, as opposed to from Northern Ireland.

Mr McCartney: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as a fhreagraí go dtí seo. I thank the Minister for his answers to date. Quite recently, on a number of occasions, I have heard an MLA in the Assembly make the point that, when a Department or a Minister wants to kick something into touch, they ask for more evidence. Given the evidence-based campaign led by Joe Brolly, is this a case of looking more evidence or are you simply kicking the ball into touch? By the way, the MLA was Jim Wells.

Mr Poots: Well, I cannot argue with Jim Wells. I am not interested in kicking this into touch. I am interested in getting the best outcomes. People can either judge that as genuine or not. I sincerely believe that we should encourage more people to donate their organs. It is a hugely sensitive issue, and we need to be very careful in how we manage the public and not take the public for granted. We carried out an extensive survey and asked a wide range of questions, and it demonstrated that the public are not as well informed as we want them to be. Immediately, on the back of that, we are engaging in a public information campaign, and as soon as that concludes, we will take a further evidence base. If that gives us the nod to go ahead, I will be very happy to proceed with it. It is not about holding things back.

Mrs Cameron: I thank the Minister for his statement. I concur with his call for us to have those conversations with friends and families and let them know our wishes for after our death.

Minister, in the Public Health Agency findings, there is a significant variation from other figures that have been quoted. How robust do you consider the PHA process to have been?

Mr Poots: It was a robust exercise. It certainly questioned a wide range of people across Northern Ireland. The work carried out met all expected standards. The process involved a statistical representation of the population of Northern Ireland, which indicates that it is a truer reflection of the thoughts of the whole of Northern Ireland than it would be had it included just those people who may be exercised to respond to an individual consultation.

I plan to repeat the public attitudes survey later in the year following the public awareness campaign, so I hope to establish whether the campaign has the desired impact of increasing awareness and understanding of organ donation issues. That will allow me to make a decision on the future policy for organ donation in Northern Ireland. I encourage people to read the statistics that the Public Health Agency produced. They are very interesting, indicating that there can be a community and religious difference when it comes to organ donation. For example, people from the Roman Catholic community are less inclined to have their organs donated than people from the Protestant community are. There are issues that we may need to discuss further to ensure that people feel more comfortable, even in their faith, that the right thing to do is to help others to live after they die.

Mr P Ramsey: I welcome the statement, and I have no doubt that the Minister is honourable in his approach. It is clear from his language that the matter is a very emotive and sensitive one. I share the concerns of a number of Members about a delay of another 12 months. As the Minister said, it will mean that another 15 families will lose a loved one. Given that we regularly get statistics from the Department, what research or study has it carried out into how many lives would be saved if presumed consent were introduced?

Mr Poots: I state very clearly that, if soft opt-out were introduced today, and, indeed, if we drove the numbers up, we would still not save the life of 15 people, or anywhere near that number. We should not confuse that. Nonetheless, we should make an effort to save the life of as many people as possible. If the strategy saves one or two lives, it is very important to the one or two who are saved. Let us be very clear about that. However, I want to go after the 15. I want to maximise the number of lives saved. What we do in Northern Ireland and what other parts of the UK do will help us to achieve that. Therefore, we will work closely with others to drive forward the campaigns and ensure that they have as good success as we are having in driving up the numbers of people donating organs. As I indicated before, we have achieved success thus far, but we have not, by any stretch of the imagination, plateaued. There are massive opportunities for us to increase the numbers further.

Not proceeding straight away with soft opt-out legislation will not stop us from increasing organ donation at this point and ensuring that more lives are saved in Northern Ireland and across the United Kingdom. If others can keep pace with us, that will certainly ensure that lives are saved here as a consequence of organs being donated in other parts of the UK and coming to people who live in Northern Ireland.

Mr Beggs: I, too, welcome the Minister's statement, but he said little in it to assure those who may have personal concerns about organ donation. The soft opt-out proposals include a register so that those who have concerns can ensure, for the first time, that their wishes will not be overridden by others, as can happen at present. Will the Minister explain why he did not explain that in his statement?

Mr Poots: One of the issues identified was that, for people not on the organ donor register, new problems will be created as a result of the legislation. Consequently, there are issues for them. There were also issues for people who are on the organ donor register who indicated that they believed that their donation is a gift. They said that, if the Government decided that they owned the organs, they would remove their names from the register and not donate their organs. That is a relatively small number of people, but it is a couple of percent of those who are on the organ donor register.

So, not everybody takes kindly to the notion of the Government saying, "Organs belong to us". That is because people believe that organs belong to them. We need to work on that to ensure that people are more conformable with the fact that the organs that they donate after their lives have been lived will help others to live a full and healthy life. I think that it is most important that we continue to get those messages out to the public, that the public in Northern Ireland are widely receptive to our proposals on organ donation and that more and more people sign up to donate organs.

Mr D McIlveen: I thank the Minister for his statement. There has been considerable focus on what has been done in countries outside the United Kingdom, such as Spain and Sweden. However, all of us in Northern Ireland live in Her Majesty's United Kingdom. With that in mind, will the Minister advise us of the English view of the soft opt-out approach?

Mr Poots: Members may be interested to know that I met David Cameron when he visited Northern Ireland just over two years ago. I was not in this position very long, and I asked him what his opinion was on organ donation, as I was somewhat inclined to go for the soft opt-out option. Mr Cameron made it very clear that neither he nor Andrew Lansley was sympathetic to that option, and it would appear that Jeremy Hunt is not particularly sympathetic to the proposal. Indeed, the previous Labour Administration were not particularly sympathetic to it either. That alerted me to the fact that, we could go down a particular route, but we would not get the changes that we would want by having a massively increased organ donor pool. That is because the largest body of people who would contribute to that pool would not engage in it.

As with my English colleagues, my Scottish colleagues said that they would find it difficult to recommend changing the current opt-in system, as they have seen a significant rise in organ donations of around 63% in the UK as a whole since 2007-08. That level is predicted to increase to 68% by the end of this financial year. There has also been an increase of 33% in organ transplantation over the same baseline years. Those rates continue to rise.

So, England and Scotland do not seem inclined to go down this route. Wales has done something different, but it has not been demonstrated at this point that it will increase the organ pool. We will do our thing and develop our policies. However, it is important that we develop our own policies on the basis of qualitative information. This is not an emotive issue; rather, it is about having factual information at hand that can demonstrate that we can make a real and tangible difference.

Mr Ross: I commend the Minister for taking a sensible decision on this sensitive issue. Two things jumped out at me from the PHA consultation. First, a third of people are still unaware that there is an organ donor register, and secondly, the more that people learned about presumed consent, the more that they were opposed to it. Indeed, over 50% of respondents to the consultation were opposed to presumed consent.

Does the Minister agree with the transplant specialists and the consultants who work closest with potential donors that the opt-out legislation would be unnecessary and could be counterproductive? I cite the fact that the 1979 Spanish legislation that introduced presumed consent there has never been enacted and that presumed consent legislation in places such as Sweden, Norway, Chile and Brazil has been counterproductive and they have worse rates of donor donation than we do in the United Kingdom.

11.15 am

Mr Poots: If we put our minds to it, we could probably do it better than a number of the countries named. Nonetheless, it is absolutely correct to say that the closer you get to intensive care units and specialists who deal with people at the end of their life, where most organs are obtained, there is greater reticence and reluctance to go down the route of soft opt-out. The BMA indicated that it supports it, but the closer you get to the doctors and clinicians who deal with the people who provide us with most organs, the more reluctance you find. It is important that we take cognisance of what professional people tell us and say.

As I indicated, we have six specialist nurses in organ donation in the Belfast Trust. They do a fantastic job. I spent a full afternoon with them and the consultants in the departments. I came away with the view that we should proceed on these matters very carefully. We should not take things for granted or make assumptions, and we should operate on the basis of evidence, fact and what can make an absolute, real and tangible difference. We need to deal with this in a way that is not around emotions but is on the basis of fact, and we need to stick rigidly to that.

Mr I McCrea: I welcome the Minister's statement. I have never made it much of a secret that I do not support legislative change to introduce presumed consent, but I do support what the Minister says in respect of conversations with family members and the need for people to get on the register. However, people need to do that based on their own mindset rather than a legislative change to state-own organs, as it were.

Does the Minister accept that if the presumed consent soft opt-out legislative change is brought about, it could result in people going the opposite way, as he said, in removing themselves from the register? Would having the legislative process changed not be more detrimental to the number of organs coming into the system than giving people the choice?

Mr Poots: When Mr McCrea goes one way, that normally encourages me to go in the opposite direction. We are probably looking at a relatively small number removing themselves from the list, with greater potential for increased numbers joining the list. However, that is not something that we should easily ignore, and we need to reflect on the fact that people who willingly indicated that they wished to have their organs donated are indicating that they would remove their names. We should not ignore that in how we do things.

It is absolutely important that we continue to drive upwards the number of organs donated. We can make a significant impact on that. The public awareness raised by the work that Joe Brolly, for example, has done, and the work that Alastair Ross and Jo-Anne Dobson have done, has been beneficial. Let us be clear about that. However, we can and should do more to continue to improve the number of people on the organ donor register.

Mr A Maginness: I thank the Minister for his statement. I have no doubt that he is sincere in what he is attempting to do, but I sense, by the nature of the questions, a great deal of frustration and impatience in the House about not getting on with some legislative initiative à la the outline Bill that Mrs Dobson presented to the House. The delay of a year in the public consultation is something that people have found unacceptable. Can the Minister speed up that process? Does he accept that, unless a concrete proposal is given to the public, the public will not make up their minds in a decisive and influential way?

Mr Poots: I accept that the latter part of that argument has a lot of strength. Regarding the pace of the process, we are starting the public information campaign tomorrow, so that obviously cannot happen sooner. We can look to see whether we can hasten the process. When I took up my position, I was more inclined towards soft opt-out than I am now. My view is a consequence of speaking to a lot of key people who are engaged in the delivery of the service and provide care and support for those who are at the end of their lives.

I encourage people to research the issue themselves. Do not take my word for it. Go and research the findings of the PHA yourselves, talk to those who are engaged with people who are at the end of their lives, particularly those in intensive care units, and arrive at your own conclusions. Do not let me try to influence you on this. My position has changed, although I am not necessarily opposed to the soft opt-out option. If we are to get there, we should do more work to bring the public with us and ensure that those in the medical profession who deal the most closely with people who are at the end of their lives are with us as well.

Mr Agnew: I want to leave no confusion: I want my organs to be donated when I die. I also would like to dispel some of the myths that the Minister set out. Your body does not stay whole after you die: it rots and your organs will rot unless they can be kept alive by keeping someone else alive.

The Minister said that we need to increase the pool across the UK, but surely if we introduce soft opt-out and make it work, we can make it harder for England and Scotland to resist such a change.

Mr Poots: I said that I have no religious opposition to this, but I have to respect people who say that they do. That is an issue for them. Most of the people were not of my faith, so it is not something that affects my electorate to the same extent either. You still have to show respect for people's views and give them consideration. I can make that decision for myself, and I did so many years ago, long before I was a politician. For one reason or another, others have not made that decision or have not made their decision clear.

It is very important that we encourage people to have those conversations with their families. I confess that our conversation was more recent: it is probably something that we should have done years ago. Everybody wants to donate, should the situation arise. I suspect that, if more people had the conversation, more would be content in the knowledge that donating organs can make a real difference.

People who I know very well lost their very young child relatively recently. They decided that their child's organs would be donated, which saved the lives of five other children. It is a massive comfort to them that, in spite of the fact that they do not have their little child, other children are alive as a consequence of them donating their child's organs. So, it is something that can bring peace and satisfaction to individuals who have lost a loved one. However, again, we need to be very careful that we do not take people and the public for granted and that we seek to bring the public with us on these issues.

Mr Anderson: I also thank the Minister for his statement. Minister, what percentage of organs received by Northern Ireland residents came from Northern Ireland donors?

Mr Poots: One hundred and sixty organs were donated in Northern Ireland over the past 11 years, of which we received 22.4%. Around three quarters of the organs donated will go to other parts of the UK, and less than one quarter will stay in Northern Ireland. As I said, the real benefits here will be through ensuring that England, Scotland and Wales drive up their organ donation in significant ways. If they are not to go down the opt-out route, how can we ensure, and encourage them to ensure, that those numbers go up quite dramatically? That will involve our liaising closely with them, which may or may not be assisted by our doing our own thing. We will give consideration to that at some point.

Mr Givan: I thank the Minister for the very sensitive way in which he has handled this emotive issue this morning. I am certainly not ideologically opposed to Mrs Dobson's Bill, and I commend her for her work in taking it forward and the public debate that it has created.

Everyone in the House wants to do the right thing and wants organ donation levels to increase. I am registered and have had the conversation with my wife and family about what could happen to me. We want the best evidence to guide us, and I have had conversations with nurses who work in intensive care units in Belfast who have told me how difficult the conversations can be with families at the end-of-life stage. To that end, has the Minister been able to identify the way in which families approach the issue when they are in this tragic state of having to consider these issues and having those very difficult conversations with clinicians?

Mr Poots: Families can approach the issue in different ways and, because the view has not been expressed to them, will not do it and will err on the side of caution. It is hugely unfortunate that there is an issue of medical distrust, but some people have the notion that doctors and medical staff will not do as much to save lives if they think that they are going to receive their organs. That is wholly and completely wrong. That is the perception among a minority, but, nonetheless, a significant number of people hold that view.

We need to be very clear with families that we will do everything that we can to save the lives of individuals who come into our healthcare system. Hospitals in Northern Ireland have the lowest mortality rates in the United Kingdom. Every one of our trusts has a lower mortality rate than the average in England, but we need to dispel that myth to ensure that people have confidence.

I cannot do very much to persuade people on the faith side. Others need to do that, and I would encourage them to do so, because lives can be saved as a result of people donating organs. More work can be done with families, and we can do work to help, particularly on the medical distrust issue. Others could assist us in some work, and I encourage them to do so.

Executive Committee Business

Carrier Bags Bill: Further Consideration Stage

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Minister of the Environment has advised that he is not in a position to move the Further Consideration Stage of the Carrier Bags Bill today. However, as it still stands as an item of business in today's Order Paper, it will need to be disposed of formally.

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. I confirm that I do not intend to move the Bill to Further Consideration Stage today. Given the policy implications of the amendments tabled on Thursday 6 February, I wish to consult my Executive colleagues to seek reaffirmation of their commitment to existing policy direction. However, I stress that I remain committed to progressing the Bill through the Assembly and will seek to reschedule Further Consideration Stage at the earliest possible opportunity.

Not moved.

Health and Social Care (Amendment) Bill: Final Stage

Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): I beg to move

That the Health and Social Care (Amendment) Bill [NIA 27/11-15] do now pass.

As I said at Second Stage, the purpose of the Bill is to make a number of necessary amendments to the Health and Social Care (Reform) Act (Northern Ireland) 2009. There are two main amendments proposed in the Bill. The first deals with support services that the regional Business Services Organisation (BSO) can provide. The second covers functions that can be delegated to the BSO.

As Members will be aware, the Reform Act established the BSO and defined its role as being to provide or secure the provision of a range of support services to the Health and Social Care bodies listed at section 1(5) of the Reform Act. However, as currently framed, the Reform Act does not enable the Department to secure support services from the BSO, nor does it provide the Department with the power to direct the BSO to provide support services to three of the Department's arm's-length bodies: the Northern Ireland Social Care Council, the Northern Ireland Practice and Education Council for Nursing and Midwifery and the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service Board.

Clause 1 seeks to address the issue by giving the BSO the legal cover to provide support services to the Department and all the Department's arm's-length bodies. Clause 1 also seeks to provide greater clarity on the nature of the fraud prevention support service provided by the BSO. The counter-fraud and probity services unit in the BSO carries out a range of activities that include fraud investigation, fraud prevention and probity services. However, the Reform Act refers only to fraud prevention. Although it is felt that this definition covers the complete range of activities undertaken by the BSO, the Department has taken the opportunity to provide clarity on the definition by adding the words "fraud investigation" and "probity services" after "fraud prevention". I point out that this amendment does not alter the activity or scope of the services that are currently undertaken by the counter-fraud and probity services unit on the ground — they remain unchanged.

I move on to clause 2. Section 26 of the Reform Act contains a provision that enables the BSO to exercise those functions that the Central Services Agency had exercised immediately before its dissolution in 2009. However, the Reform Act does not currently permit the BSO to exercise any new functions relating to the administration of health and social care. What clause 2 of the Bill will do, therefore, is enable the Department to direct the BSO to exercise any new functions of the Department with respect to the administration of health and social care.

Clause 3 seeks to deal with the membership of the Health and Social Care Board, the Public Health Agency and the Business Services Organisation. The Reform Act currently provides the Department with the power to prescribe conditions for persons appointed as members of these organisations. However, the Department does not have the power to prescribe conditions for their chairs. Clause 3(6) provides the Department with a power to make subordinate legislation to prescribe conditions for appointment for the chair of the Health and Social Care Board, the Public Health Agency and the Business Services Organisation. I also wish to point out that the Department proposes to prescribe for chairs in similar terms as for members of these organisations.

The schedule to the Bill includes amendments that should originally have been made under schedule 6 to the Reform Act, which includes a number of blanket amendments to references to particular bodies in other existing legislation: for example, the name of health and social services trusts was changed to Health and Social Care trusts. Section 1 of the Reform Act renames the Health and Personal Social Services Regulation and Improvement Authority (RQIA) to reflect the correct legal title of the organisation, the Health and Social Care Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority.

However, schedule 6 to the 2009 Act did not carry across the change to the title of the organisation into other legislation. For that reason, the amendments proposed at paragraphs 1 and 2 of the schedule to this amending Bill seek to change the title of the organisation in other pieces of legislation. Finally, paragraph 3 of the schedule seeks to amend the reference to "personal social service" in the Carers and Direct Payments Act (Northern Ireland) 2002 to "social care service".

In conclusion, I am sure that Members will agree that there is a sound rationale for the Health and Social Care (Amendment) Bill and that the amendments to the 2009 Act are clearly necessary.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin (The Chairperson of the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety): Go raibh maith agat, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. On behalf of the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety, I welcome the Final Stage of the Bill.

As the Minister said, its purpose is to make a small number of amendments to the Health and Social Care (Reform) Act 2009. The amendments are designed to correct oversights or anomalies that were contained in the original legislation rather than to introduce any new policies. Although the Bill is fairly technical in nature, the Committee welcomes the fact that it will result in more uniformity across the Department's arm's-length bodies.

The Bill was referred to the Committee on 24 September 2013. To ensure that there was enough time to scrutinise the legislation, the Committee sought an extension until 11 December. However, I am pleased to say that we finished a week ahead of schedule, thanks to the hard work of Committee members and the cooperation of departmental officials. The Committee received written submissions from seven organisations and, because the evidence was straightforward and supportive of the Bill, we chose simply to take oral evidence from departmental officials.

The majority of the groundwork on the Bill had been done by the Committee during the pre-introductory scrutiny phase. We had been concerned that the proposals in clause 3, which require that the chairs of the Health and Social Care Board, the Public Health Agency and the Business Services Organisation must satisfy prescribed conditions, were an attempt to prescribe new criteria on who could apply for the position of chair of those three bodies. The Committee was of the view that the appointment criteria for a chair should be consistent across all the Department's arm's-length bodies.

Departmental officials explained that clause 3 was aimed at correcting an error in the original legislation rather than at implementing a new policy. An oversight had occurred when the Health and Social Care (Reform) Act 2009 was made that meant that the chairs of the Health and Social Care Board, the Public Health Agency and the Business Services Organisation did not need to satisfy prescribed conditions. That was not the intention of the Department, as its view is that the chairs of all its arm's-length bodies must satisfy prescribed conditions. Following the clarification provided by the Department on the matter, the Committee indicated that it was content with clause 3.

The Committee received written evidence from the Business Services Organisation and the Health and Social Care Board in support of clause 1, which gives the former legal cover to provide support to the Department and the full range of arm's-length bodies. The Committee welcomed the clarification around the nature of the counter-fraud and probity services provided by the Business Services Organisation.

The Committee considered written evidence from the RQIA on the schedule to the Bill. The RQIA had suggested simplifying the wording of its title. However, during the oral evidence session with the Department, officials explained that RQIA's full title — the Health and Social Care Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority — needed to be used in the Bill as it is the organisation's legal title. The Committee was therefore content with the Department's explanation of the issue. To conclude, the Committee welcomes the Final Stage of the Bill.

Mr Wells: If bonuses are being paid to Ministers in the House, the present Health Minister would be due a very substantial payout. [Interruption.] Yes, the Finance Minister has also been very busy over the past few weeks.

At least 75% of the business in the Assembly this past month has been on health, and here we are again with the Minister on his feet several times.

I am glad to say that, on this particular occasion, he will get a very fair wind from Members, because the Committee discussed this piece of legislation at length. We took evidence from the Department, and, as the Chair said, there really were no problems with it.

During RPA and the whole review of the structures of health and social services in Northern Ireland, with the huge change that involved the abolition of the old trusts and boards and a move towards a more centralised and streamlined approach, it was inevitable that there would be a few gremlins in the system that needed to be ironed out later and that there would be a few pieces of drafting errors that had to be dealt with. That is very much what we are dealing with this morning.

Clause 3 brings into line what should have been there already in the criteria that are required for the chairs of various organisations. Knowing, as I do, the chairs who had been appointed under the legislation pre-amendment, I emphasise that this is no inference about their quality and ability. They are all outstanding individuals who have done a lot already in a short period to further health service provision in Northern Ireland. It is just a tidying-up exercise, and, indeed, despite not having this technically in the legislation, the Department has been adhering to good practice and has, in my opinion, got the right people. Apart from that, there is nothing contentious about this. There was cross-party support throughout the Committee. Following the consultation, everyone agreed that this should be given a fair wind. Therefore, as Deputy Chair, I support the legislation.

Mr McKinney: I welcome the opportunity to speak at this Final Stage of the Health and Social Care (Amendment) Bill. We have discussed this in Committee some eight times. The main amendments that the Committee ratified are on the functions of the Business Services Organisation, as has been described. The Bill will allow that body to provide support services to all Departments' arm's-length bodies and to administer any health and social care functions on behalf of the Department of Health. It must be noted, as it has been, that this amendment Bill is merely a refinement of the original 2009 legislation and that it is in line with the purpose for which the BSO was established. The Committee feels that that is important, given that the BSO is currently providing services to arm's-length bodies without legislative cover.

Another key amendment is on the appointment of the chairs to three of the Department's arm's-length bodies. Those are the Health and Social Care Board, the Public Health Agency and the BSO. The Chair described the issue with the oversight in the original legislation, and the amendment in the legislation attempts to rectify that. Another key point as we discuss the legislation is that all the organisations that responded to the Committee's call for evidence were in favour of the Bill, and there were no objections to any of the clauses. The amendments are sensible and logical and refine the original legislation in a way that is agreeable across the spectrum. The Committee, and, by extension, the SDLP, is content that the amendments that were put forward in this legislation and that have been discussed will serve to correct the anomalies in the Health and Social Care (Reform) Act 2009.

Mr Beggs: Like other Members, during scrutiny of this new legislation, the Health and Social Care (Amendment) Bill, and while taking evidence from others, I can say that no issues were raised that gave me concern. Therefore, I am content that the amendments in the Bill are sensible. As others said, the Bill perhaps regularises some of the minor omissions that were in the original legislation when it went through.

The Business Services Organisation has the potential to bring about improvements and effectiveness and efficiencies in how the support services of a range of arm's-length bodies are delivered. By specialising, there is the potential to bring that efficiency about, but care has to be taken that we do not become overbureaucratic, that those efficiencies are delivered and that there are improvements in how services are delivered. Therefore, I continue to support that aspect of the Bill.

The widening of the definition of "fraud prevention" to "counter-fraud and probity services" seems to enable greater protective action to be taken to reduce risks and to minimise the risk of potential fraud in organisations. Therefore, that is a sensible adjustment, and I am supportive of it as well.

As to widening the governance of committee chairs to the same level as would exist for other members of boards of arm's-length bodies, that again seems to be eminently sensible, and, as others have said, it may simply have been an oversight when the original legislation went through.

I am therefore content that this Bill should be supported and I will continue to support it.

Mr McCarthy: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. I say very briefly, on behalf of the Alliance Party, that I support and commend this Bill as it passes its Final Stage. This has been a fairly straightforward Bill, and, as a member of the Health Committee, I am happy and content to agree with the others and respondents to the Bill. I take this opportunity to thank everyone involved in contributing to the Bill and its smooth passage through all stages. I look forward to its implementation.

Mr Poots: It is truly a privilege to be here to have listened to one of the best speeches ever made by Mr McCarthy. I thank him for that, and I thank the Members who contributed to the debate for their remarks.

Mr McCarthy: Did you understand it all? Did you get the gist?

Mr Poots: Yes, I understood.

The Committee has done considerable work on this, and we appreciate that. It is largely a tidying-up exercise, as the Act left some gaps. It is important that that aspect was carried out. As Mr McKinney pointed out, it creates a greater degree of uniformity, which is something that needed to be done. Although this is not the most significant legislation that we will ever pass, it is nonetheless necessary. My officials met the Health Committee on various occasions to discuss the rationale behind the proposed amendments, and I appreciate the work that they have done in helping to increase the understanding of the necessity for this. I thank the Committee for so readily receiving that information. I will conclude on that, and I again express my gratitude for moving this legislation forward.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That the Health and Social Care (Amendment) Bill [NIA 27/11-15] do now pass.

Financial Provisions Bill: Consideration Stage

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I call the Minister of Finance and Personnel, Mr Hamilton, to move the Consideration Stage of the Financial Provisions Bill.

Moved. — [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Members will have a copy of the Marshalled List of amendments detailing the order for consideration. The amendments have been grouped for debate in the provisional grouping of amendments selected list. There is a single group of amendments that deals with changes to the Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 and other technical issues. We will debate the amendments in turn. Once the debate on the group is completed, any further amendments in the group will be moved formally as we go through the Bill, and the Question on each will be put without further debate. The Questions on stand part will be taken at the appropriate points in the Bill. If all that is clear, we shall proceed.

No amendments have been tabled to clauses 1 or 2. I propose, by leave of the Assembly, to group these clauses for the Question on stand part.

New Clause

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: We now come to the single group of amendments for debate. With amendment No 1, it will be convenient to debate amendment Nos 2 to 10. Amendment Nos 6 and 7 are technical. The remaining amendments deal with rates in relation to landlord liability, information gathering and discounts. Members will note that amendment Nos 8 and 10 are consequential to amendment Nos 1 to 5, and amendment No 9 is consequential to amendment No 2.

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): I beg to move amendment No 1: After clause 2 insert

“Rating of owners instead of occupiers in certain cases

2A. In Article 20 of the Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 (rating of owners instead of occupiers in certain cases)—

(a) in paragraph (1)—

(i) in sub-paragraph (a), after “hereditament” insert “(where the hereditament does not have a net annual value and a capital value)”;

(ii) in sub-paragraph (b) for “£55,000” substitute “£150,000”;

(iii) in sub-paragraph (c), for head (ii) substitute—

“(ii) its net annual value does not exceed £1,590;”;

(b) in paragraph (1A), for the words from “both conditions” to the end of that paragraph substitute “the conditions in sub-paragraphs (b) and (c)(ii) of paragraph (1) must be satisfied, but the condition set out in sub-paragraph (c)(i) of that paragraph does not apply in relation to such a hereditament.”.— [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

The following amendments stood on the Marshalled List:

No 2: After clause 2 insert

“Repeal of Articles 23 and 24 of the Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977

2B. Articles 23 (liability of occupier for rates unpaid by owner) and 24 (recovery of rates from tenants and lodgers) of the Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 are repealed.”— [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

No 3: After clause 2 insert

“Power of Department of Finance and Personnel to require information

2C.—(1) Article 26 of the Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 (power of Department to require information as to ownership, etc.) is amended as follows.

(2) In paragraph (1)—

(a) at the end of sub-paragraph (a) insert “and the date on which he acquired that interest”;

(b) after sub-paragraph (c) insert—

“(cc) the date on which he began to occupy the hereditament.”

(3) After paragraph (1) insert—

“(1A) The Department may, for the purposes of this Order, serve a notice on the owner of any hereditament requiring him to state to the Department in writing, within a period and in the manner specified in the notice—

(a) the date on which he acquired ownership of the hereditament; and

(b) the date, if any, on which he began to occupy the hereditament.”

(4) In paragraph (2B)(a) after “(1)” insert “, (1A)”.— [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

No 4: After clause 2 insert

“Discount on rates on dwellings

2D.—(1) Article 30 of the Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 (discount on rates on dwellings) is amended as follows.

(2) After paragraph (2) insert—

“(2ZA) An allowance shall be granted in accordance with paragraph (2ZC) to any person entitled to possession of a hereditament to which paragraph (2ZB) applies who pays the net amount due on account of a rate in respect of that hereditament in a single sum before such date as the Department may notify to him.

(2ZB) This paragraph applies to a hereditament in the capital value list in respect of which rates are chargeable under Article 25A where the hereditament is a hereditament which—

(a) is not in use; and

(b) is a hereditament which the Department considers will, when next in use, be a dwelling-house or, though not a dwelling-house, will be used partly for the purposes of a private dwelling; and

(c) is not the subject of an agreement under Article 21.

(2ZC) The allowance shall be by way of a discount of 4% on the amount payable on account of the rate as is computed by reference to the rateable capital value of the hereditament.”

(3) In paragraph (2A) after “(2)” insert “or (2ZC)”.— [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

No 4: After clause 2 insert

2D.—(1) Article 30 of the Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 (discount on rates on dwellings) is amended as follows.

“(2ZA) An allowance shall be granted in accordance with paragraph (2ZC) to any person entitled to possession of a hereditament to which paragraph (2ZB) applies who pays the net amount due on account of a rate in respect of that hereditament in a single sum before such date as the Department may notify to him.

(2ZB) This paragraph applies to a hereditament in the capital value list in respect of which rates are chargeable under Article 25A where the hereditament is a hereditament which—

(a) is not in use; and

(b) is a hereditament which the Department considers will, when next in use, be a dwelling-house or, though not a dwelling-house, will be used partly for the purposes of a private dwelling; and

(c) is not the subject of an agreement under Article 21.

(2ZC) The allowance shall be by way of a discount of 4% on the amount payable on account of the rate as is computed by reference to the rateable capital value of the hereditament.”

(3) In paragraph (2A) after “(2)” insert “or (2ZC)”.— [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

No 5: After clause 2 insert

“Temporary reduction of rates for specified hereditaments

2E. In Article 31C of the Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 (temporary reduction of rates for specified hereditaments)—

(a) in paragraph (1) after “percentage” insert “or a specified amount”;

(b) in sub-paragraph (a) of that paragraph for “exceed a” substitute “exceed such other”.— [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

No 6: In clause 3, page 2, line 13, leave out “make provision as” and insert “give directions in relation”.— [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

No 8: In clause 8, page 3, line 21, leave out “Section 5 comes” and insert “Sections 2A, 2B, 2C, 2D and 5 come”.— [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

No 9: In the schedule, page 4, line 15, at end insert

"The Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 Articles 23 and 24."— [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

No 10: In the long title, after "authorities;" insert

"to amend the Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977".— [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

Mr Hamilton: I would like to convey my thanks to the Committee and its staff for their timely and helpful consideration of the Bill and associated amendments. Their extensive engagement on this Bill is very much appreciated.

Amendment Nos 1 and 2 deal with some changes that have arisen from the recent consultation exercise undertaken by my Department in relation to liability to rates in the landlord sector. Amendment No 1 revises the landlord liability provisions within article 20 of the Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977. It has the effect of removing the outdated and unnecessary article 20(1) frequency-of-tenancy criteria for the domestic rental sector in relation to properties with a value of £150,000 or less. The existing valuation threshold is not being changed.

The present criteria in article 20(1)(c) state that only properties in respect of which rent is paid or collected less than quarterly and with a value of £150,000 or less fall within landlord liability. In reality those sorts of tenancies are extremely rare if not non-existent, so the existence of the criteria makes no difference and only causes bureaucracy and confusion. The removal of the criteria has the support of landlords, as represented by the Landlords' Association, and tenants, as represented by the Housing Rights Service. It is also welcomed by Land and Property Services (LPS) as it removes red tape and the requirement on it to examine tenancy agreements.

Amendment No 2 serves to repeal articles 23 and 24 of the Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977. The current article 23 provision states that if a landlord defaults, LPS can recover the rates due from the tenant. The other provision, article 24, relates to a power to allow the Department to step in and act as landlord should there be an issue of default. The articles have never been used and have been sitting dormant in the rating legislation. The Department deems the provisions to be unsuitable for use and legally challengeable. Again, that amendment also had support during our consultation.

Amendment No 3 clarifies LPS's ability to request effective dates for occupation under article 26 of the Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977. The change is aimed at enabling the Department of Finance and Personnel to establish and maintain more accurate records for the purposes of rates collection and the correct backdating of bills. It addresses concerns that the existing powers available to LPS may be inadequate and puts that matter beyond doubt. It will not change LPS processes and practices but it will clarify its authority.

Amendment No 4 serves to extend the current discount allowed for early repayment of rates in relation to occupied dwellings to also cover unoccupied dwellings. That is a change that follows from the rating of empty homes policy introduced into the rating system by my predecessor.

Amendment No 5 provides for an adjustment of article 31C of the Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977, which currently provides for the small business rate relief scheme. Currently, article 31C only provides for a reduction in rates to take the form of a specified percentage. The amendment would allow such a reduction to also take the form of a specified amount if required. I am making that change in advance of a full policy evaluation in the next financial year to ensure that the Department has greater legislative flexibility to address the outcome of that review. It is not intended as a limiting measure.

Amendment Nos 6 and 7 are provisions for the Department of Justice. Amendment No 6 amends clause 3 of the Bill following advice from the Examiner of Statutory Rules that, where a change is being put through to the Court Funds Rules (Northern Ireland) 1979 to allow interest rates to be amended by way of ministerial direction, that needs to be expressly spelt out. Amendment no 7 amends clause 6 of the Bill, where the Examiner of Statutory Rules has asked that the provision clearly shows that the power given to the Department of Justice to make regulations providing for the constitution, functions, procedures and financing of the Northern Ireland Police Fund and the Police Rehabilitation and Retraining Trust are subject to Assembly procedures.

Amendment No 8 makes provision for the commencement of the aforementioned new rating provisions brought forward as amendment Nos 1 to 5. Amendment No 9 makes an amendment to the schedule to reflect the repeal of articles 23 and 24 of the Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 given effect by amendment No 2. Amendment No 10 makes an amendment to the long title of the Bill to reflect the aforementioned new rating provisions brought forward as amendment Nos 1 to 5.

That concludes my comments on the proposed amendments to what is a technical and, hopefully, non-controversial piece of legislation. I am content to address any queries that Members might have when I sum up later, but I urge the Assembly to support the amendments before us.

Mr McKay (The Chairperson of the Committee for Finance and Personnel):

Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Before I address the amendments tabled today, I first want to take a little latitude as Committee Chairperson to refer briefly to our scrutiny of the Bill. Financial provisions Bills, by their very nature, are generally considered catch-all legislation. Their purpose is generally to deal with routine, minor and non-controversial amendments to governing legislation or to regularise an existing practice. As such, the Bill contains provisions that are relevant not only to the Department of Finance and Personnel but to the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, the Audit Office, the Department of Justice and the Department for Social Development. The Committee for Finance and Personnel, however, fulfilled a coordinating role in seeking and collating submissions from the respective Committees on the Bill's provisions in addition to considering evidence from departmental officials on provisions relevant to DFP itself. During a pre-introductory briefing to the Committee, members raised issues relevant to the Department for Regional Development, the Department of Justice and the Department for Social Development portfolios and referred those to the appropriate scrutiny Committees for further consideration.

I shall refer only briefly to the clauses relating to other Departments' remits, as the Minister has previously outlined their purpose, and representatives of the applicable Committees may wish to contribute to the debate today. Suffice it to say, the Finance Committee was content, although it was mindful of comments from other Committees.

First, the Committee was content with clauses 1 and 2 as introduced, although it was mindful that the Committee for Agriculture and Rural Development did not have any concerns with those clauses. Secondly, following advice from the Examiner of Statutory Rules, the Committee highlighted issues with the technical drafting of clauses 3 and 6 as introduced, hence today's tabled amendments. Members sought clarification on the use of alternative short- and medium-term investment options for moneys held under the court fund and on the status of the police fund and the Police Rehabilitation and Retraining Trust. Members were generally content with the clarification that was provided.

After receiving clarification from officials on the disparity of land disposal costs between transaction and administrative costs, as well as an indication from the Social Development Committee that it was content with the explanation given by DSD officials, members of the Finance and Personnel Committee were content to agree clause 4.

Likewise, following an indication from the Public Accounts Committee and the Audit Committee that they were content with clause 5, members were content to agree that clause.

Clauses 7, 8 and 9 deal with repeals, commencement and the short title respectively. The Committee was content with those as drafted and with the consequential amendments to clause 8, the schedule of repeals and the long title.

As I said during Committee Stage, members were informed of four new clauses that would introduce provisions for rating legislation falling within the direct remit of the Department of Finance and Personnel. As outlined by the Minister, the new measures will amend or repeal articles in the Rates (NI) Order 1977, known as the 1977 order. I do not intend to go over the purpose of those provisions. The Committee sought further information, including where any particular difficulties were posed by the absence of the new power to require an effective date of occupation and the estimated costs of extending the discount for early repayment of rates to unoccupied dwellings. Members were, however, generally content with the explanation.

The Committee was subsequently informed of another two repeals to the 1977 order: one would remove the reference to the frequency of collection of rent from consideration of whether a landlord is liable for rates on properties up to £150,000; the other would remove liability of the occupier for rates, should an owner default and remove the provision for rates to be recovered from tenants. Despite DFP officials' assurance during a recent departmental consultation that the Landlords' Association and the Housing Rights Service supported those removals, the Committee did not have the time to gauge stakeholder views.

In January, after the Committee had completed Committee Stage, members were informed of one further amendment concerning a broadening of an existing power in rates legislation to provide the small business rate relief scheme.

Officials explained to the Committee that that will ensure maximum flexibility in addressing the outcomes of the forthcoming policy evaluation of the scheme, which is due to begin in the spring.

Officials further pointed out that the current power is found in article 31C of the 1977 Order and allows only for percentage reductions in rates. DFP considers that to be too limiting and that an amendment to that power would allow reductions to be given as specified amounts as opposed to percentages. The amendment is listed before us today as amendment No 5.

12.00 noon

Again, the Committee did not have the opportunity to report on that as the evidence gathering on the Bill had already been completed. Therefore, no agreed Committee position can be reflected here today. The Minister, in his concluding remarks, might wish to elaborate on the specific circumstances in which the specified amounts approach might be taken in future.

I would like to take this opportunity, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle, to thank the other Committees for providing input to the scrutiny of the Bill and the officials, who were responsive to the requests of the Finance Committee and other Committees who requested clarification on issues raised by their respective members.

Although I welcome the early notification from the Department of some of the amendments being debated today, I will conclude by highlighting the Committee report's recommendation that DFP take steps to ensure that future financial provisions Bills are as fully developed as possible before their introduction to the Assembly.

Mr Girvan: I, too, support the progress of the Bill. In doing so, I want to comment on the common-sense approach taken to some of the amendments moved today. The one that probably stands out most allows the discount to be extended to those who pay rates on vacant properties. I appreciate that, if someone pays rates on a vacant property, whether it is occupied or not, they should be able to avail themselves of the discount, and this goes some way towards trying to address that.

Another very good amendment relates to the small business rate relief scheme introduced by the previous Finance Minister. As the Chair stated, the amendment includes a change to allow for a specified amount or a percentage. There was a bit of discussion in Committee on that matter and how it had been brought forward. It gives flexibility back to the Department to make some of those points. I look forward to getting clarification on the matter raised by the Chair.

Another vital point is that amendment No 7 brings under the same financial controls whatever is dealt with through the Police Rehabilitation and Retraining Trust. I think that that has to be brought under the same controls as DFP has.

A lot of the amendments are of a technical nature, and, consequently, one leads on to the next. Amendment Nos 1 and 2 relate to landlords and tenants. I appreciate that the Minister has clarified that the Landlords' Association and tenants' rights groups are in favour of the approach. Although very few landlords receive payments less than quarterly — I would say that most like to receive payment more frequently — it will affect a small number of individuals. Therefore, it is important that we put that measure in place.

I am happy to support all the Minister's amendments in order to allow the Bill to progress to its next stage. The Bill has addressed a number of areas in previous years. This is a way of aligning it with some of the changes made in previous years, so that they and issues associated with the rates review can be included. It is not a move, as some might have thought at one stage, to remove the small business rate relief scheme; it is an opportunity for us to extend it and then look at it under the outcome of that review, which will take place within the next year.

Mr Cree: At this stage in the debate, there is not an awful lot more to say. I was surprised to hear Mr Girvan refer to common sense. That is a novel approach to things.

The Bill as it stands contains nine clauses, which, in common with such Bills, cover a wide range of issues for several Departments. Most of them are fairly technical in nature and were really designed to bring legislation up to scratch. We now have 10 amendments tabled to the Bill by the Minister of Finance and Personnel.

Amendment No 1 proposes a change to an article in the Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 on the rating of owners instead of occupiers in certain cases.

Amendment No 2 is intended to repeal articles 23 and 24 of the 1977 order. Amendment No 3 will insert a further new clause, which will give the Department of Finance and Personnel the power to require information.

Amendment No 4 deals with a discount on rates on dwellings and will insert new clause 2D. That is "D" for "donkey". Amendment No 5 seeks to insert new clause 2E, which deals with a temporary reduction of rates for specific — I love this old-fashioned word — hereditaments.

As the Minister said, the remaining five amendments are mainly technical and complete his list of 10 amendments on rates and miscellaneous matters.

On behalf of the Ulster Unionist Party, I have no difficulty supporting all the amendments.

Mrs Cochrane: I, too, welcome the opportunity to speak on the amendments. Much of the detail has already been covered by the Minister and other Members, so I will keep my comments brief. However, I wish to highlight a few points about the changes, specifically those to rating policy.

First, I welcome any changes that will provide greater clarity on rating legislation. I have had numerous queries from constituents in recent times, and proposed new clause 2A is a small step in the right direction. I assume that the amendment tabled by the Minister will be based on his priority of ensuring that rates can be collected in as seamless a manner as possible. However, I approach the amendment with the concerns of tenants at the forefront. Although I welcome the change, which will make all rented property with a capital value of less than £150,000 subject to compulsory landlord liability no matter at what intervals tenants' rent is collected, I argue that it potentially does not go far enough.

Letting agents are not currently regulated in Northern Ireland. I have seen many occasions on which a tenant has signed a lease that states that the rental payment is inclusive of rates, only to discover at the end of the tenancy that the landlord has not made the rate payments for the property. The tenant is then left with a liability because the property has a capital value of more than £150,000. Unfortunately, it is too late for the tenant to realise that the lease is not worth the paper that it is written on and that the Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 trumps the tenancy agreement. That is of great concern, given that many tenants in the private rental market will have sourced their property via a letting agent who will have provided what they assumed was a lease that looked after their interests.

Even if the letting agent is also a regulated estate agent, the Estate Agents Act 1979 does not extend to letting functions. Therefore, tenants of properties with a capital value of more than £150,000 are left to rely on the good nature of their landlord to pay the rates to LPS if their tenancy agreement states that the rental amount includes rates. I hope to address that through a private Member's Bill, which is in its preliminary stages. However, I ask the Minister to consider making the whole process simpler in future by making landlords liable for rates, regardless of the property's capital value.

Amendment No 2 seeks to repeal articles 23 and 24 of the Rates (Northern Ireland) Order, which, we have been advised, have never been used since their introduction in 1977. I therefore have no problem supporting the amendment.

Amendment No 3, which will introduce new clause 2C, is technical in nature. We should support the amendment if it assists LPS in accurately establishing the period of rates liability.

Amendment No 4, which will introduce new clause 2D, will extend the early payment discount to the rating of empty homes. When the rating of empty homes policy was introduced in 2011, it was decided that the owners of such properties would not be able to avail themselves of the early payment discount. I am interested to know whether that original decision was as a result of the assumption that many of the owners were wealthy developers who should have been well able to pay the full rateable amount. However, we all know how slow the market has been in recent times, although there are signs that it is picking up. People who own properties would in fact like to sell them, instead of holding on to them to make money as the market rises. That small change to allow the early payment discount to be applicable to empty homes should, therefore, be welcomed.

Finally, where amendment No 5 is concerned, a range of measures is in place to support our small businesses. One of those is the small business rate relief scheme. An evaluation of the scheme is due to be undertaken this year to assess its effectiveness and to consider the need for longer-term support measures to continue after the non-domestic revaluation in 2015. New clause 2A will allow reductions for small businesses to be given as specified monetary amounts as well as percentages. That has the potential to do two things. First, it may help to budget for the cost of the scheme more accurately, and, secondly, it will ensure maximum flexibility in tailoring longer-term alternatives that are based on the outcomes of the evaluation of the scheme in the context of future economic conditions.

I support all the amendments that have been tabled today.

Mr Hamilton: I am sure that Members will agree that the amendments were dealt with fairly efficiently. I am also sure that the Second Stage of the Budget Bill later today will be equally uneventful.

I thank the Chair, the Committee and its staff for the work that they put in to the scrutiny of the Bill and for their support of the amendments. I appreciate their flexibility and their understanding as additional amendments came to them, even beyond their formal scrutiny of the Bill. The Chair, Mr McKay, raised issues on amendment No 5. I assure him that this is an enabling power for small business rate relief. He asked me to predict circumstances for when it may be deployed. However, it is hard to predict such circumstances exactly. I do not want to pre-empt the review of the small business rate relief scheme, which will be carried out later this year. However, it is fair to consider that that evaluation might reveal moving a better scheme forward, which could be to have a set amount of a reduction as opposed to a percentage reduction. The Chair of the Committee and Members will be aware that the small business rate relief scheme was an intervention specifically for the recession. Like England and Wales, we here are due to end it in 2014-15. So, the review is being carried out now to see whether there is still a need for that or a revised scheme. Rather than going through a full legislative process later, I think that it is only prudent and sensible to have this maximum flexibility in place now and to be sensible well in advance.

Mr Girvan supported amendment No 4, which is on empty homes. I think that it is only right that the discount of 4% in rates for early payment is extended to empty homes, similar to the situation for occupied homes. To address Mrs Cochrane's point, although undoubtedly not having the discount in place will affect all sorts of people, for me, it is more an issue of fairness to extend it so that everyone benefits from the discount.

Mrs Cochrane also spoke about increasing simplicity in the rating system. I am very keen to see that happen. When you consider our rating system in Northern Ireland, particularly with all the various reliefs and allowances that we have added to it, you see that we have an incredibly complicated system. It is difficult for all of us in the House who legislate on it to understand it, never mind the people out there who have to deal with it day in and day out.

I already said that, after the current revaluation that is ongoing and the outcome of the small business rate relief scheme review, I will be keen to look at the totality of non-domestic rates, particularly with a view to trying to simplify the system. When you look at the whole suite of reliefs and allowances that we have, you can see that they are not easily understandable. I think that the simpler and more easily understood the system is, the better it is for all of us.

The Member will know that regulation of letting agents is an issue, first and foremost, for the Department for Social Development. Although I think that the issues that she raised are very relevant — they are certainly relevant to me for rates — she will appreciate that I hope that this is a technical Bill and not a piece of legislation to address those issues. However, I look forward to addressing them, either myself or through her Private Member's Bill that she mentioned.

In conclusion, I again thank all Members and particularly the Committee for their support. I commend the amendments to the House.

Budget Bill: Second Stage

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel):
I beg to move

That the Second Stage of the Budget Bill [NIA 32/11-15] be agreed.

Accelerated passage of the Bill through the Assembly is needed in order to ensure Royal Assent as early as possible in March, and, therefore, legal authority for Departments and other public bodies to draw down and spend the cash and use the resources in the Bill in 2013-14 and to ensure a smooth continuation of public services into 2014-15.

As the House is by now well aware, the preparation of the detailed Estimates and the related Budget Bill under consideration today is a difficult undertaking given the tight timetable involved. The Bill and the Estimates must reflect the latest financial monitoring position announced to the Assembly on 21 January, yet the Bill requires Royal Assent prior to the end of the financial year. It is no easy task, I am sure you will agree, to bring the Bill to the Assembly in that small window of opportunity. I am, therefore, grateful that the Committee for Finance and Personnel has confirmed, in line with Standing Order 42, that it is satisfied that there has been appropriate consultation with it on the public expenditure proposals contained in the Bill and is content that the Bill may proceed by accelerated passage. I welcome and appreciate the assistance of the Committee in the matter.

I shall now briefly outline the purpose of the legislation before us today and draw attention to the main provisions of the Bill. The debate follows the Bill's First Stage yesterday, which, in turn, followed the debate and approval of the Supply Resolutions for the 2013-14 spring Supplementary Estimates and the 2014-15 Vote on Account.

The purpose of the Bill is to give legislative effect to the 2013-14 spring Supplementary Estimates and to the 2014 Vote on Account, which have been laid before the Assembly. Copies of the Budget Bill and the explanatory and financial memorandum have been made available to Members today. I do not intend to repeat the detail that I gave to Members yesterday. Indeed, in accordance with Standing Order 32, the debate, as you know, should concern itself with the content of the Bill, a point that I am hopeful other Members will have taken note of in preparation of their speeches. For the benefit of Members, and in accordance with Standing Order 32, I wish to summarise briefly the main features of the Bill.

The purpose of the Bill is to authorise the issue of £15,530,883,000 from the Northern Ireland Consolidated Fund in 2013-14. This is an additional £123,052,000 since the Main Estimates were presented last year. The cash is drawn down on a daily basis as needed from the Northern Ireland Consolidated Fund, which is managed by my Department on behalf of the Executive. The Bill also authorises the use of resources totalling £16,606,564,000 by Departments and certain other bodies, which is some £406,569,000 more than approved in the Main Estimates last June.

These amounts are detailed in part 2 of each spring Supplementary Estimate for 2013-14. In addition, the Bill revises for 2013-14 the limit on the amount of accruing resources that may be directed by my Department to be used for the purposes in column 1 of schedule 2. The limit includes operating and non-operating accruing resources, or, in other words, current and capital receipts and amounts to £2,366,007,000.

Under section 8 of the Government Resources and Accounts Act (Northern Ireland) 2001, a direction on the actual use of the accruing resources will be provided by way of a DFP minute, which will be laid before the Assembly in March following Royal Assent of the Bill. Therefore, not only does the Bill authorise the use of resources, it authorises accruing resources, bringing the resources for use by Departments and other public bodies to almost £19 billion.

The sums to be issued from the Consolidated Fund are to be appropriated by each Department or public body for services as listed in column 1 of schedule 1 to the Bill while the resources, including the accruing resources, are to be used for the purposes specified in column 1 of schedule 2. The amounts now requested for 2013-14 supersede the Vote on Account in the Budget Act (Northern Ireland) 2013, which was passed this time last year, and the Main Estimates provision in the Budget (No. 2) Act (Northern Ireland) 2013, which was passed by the Assembly in June 2013. The Bill also authorises a Vote on Account for 2014-15 of cash of £7,062,352,000 and resources of £7,545,788,000 to allow the flow of cash and resources to continue to public services in the early months of 2014-15 until the Main Estimates and the related Budget Bill are approved in June this year. The cash and the resources are to be appropriated and used for the services and the purposes set out in column 1 of schedules 3 and 4 respectively.

Finally, clause 5 authorises temporary borrowing by the Department of Finance and Personnel at a ceiling of £3,531,176,000 for 2014-15. That is approximately half the sum authorised in clause 4(1) for issue out of the Consolidated Fund for 2014-15 and is a normal safeguard for any temporary deficiency arising in the fund. I must stress to the House that clause 5 does not provide for the issue of any additional cash out of the Consolidated Fund or convey any additional spending power, but it does enable my Department to run a very efficient cash management regime.

There is little more that I can usefully add on the detail of the Budget Bill, but I will be more than happy to deal with any points of principle or detail that Members want to raise.

Mr McKay (The Chairperson of the Committee for Finance and Personnel): Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. As we heard, the Budget Bill provides statutory authority for expenditure as set out in the spring Supplementary Estimates 2013-14. The Bill also includes the Vote on Account, which allows Departments to incur expenditure and use resources in the early part of the next financial year, 2014-15, until the Main Estimates are voted on by the Assembly in June.

Standing Order 42(2) states that accelerated passage may be granted for a Budget Bill provided the Committee for Finance and Personnel is satisfied that it has been appropriately consulted on the public expenditure proposals in the Bill. At its meeting on 5 February, departmental officials briefed the Committee and took questions on the Budget Bill, including on issues relating to a range of Departments. In addition to that evidence, the Committee has scrutinised each of the monitoring rounds during the current financial year, including the overall outcome across Departments and the position for DFP as a Department. In view of that evidence-gathering exercise throughout the year, the Committee was content to grant accelerated passage to the Bill, and I, therefore, wrote to the Speaker to inform him of the Committee's decision.

As I pointed out in yesterday's Supply resolution debate, the scale of the cumulative changes resulting from the normal reallocations through monitoring rounds combined with the in-year technical changes will, in some cases, have resulted in significant differences between the opening and closing resource and capital allocations of Departments. The Committee welcomes the engagement with the Department on those issues and during the quarterly monitoring rounds, and members will continue to prioritise that aspect of their work. I encourage the other Statutory Committees to continue to monitor closely the financial forecasting and expenditure of their respective Departments for the remainder of this year and during the next year to ensure that underspend is minimised and that Departments maximise the impact from available resources. In the meantime, for today, on behalf of the Committee, I support the motion.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Business Committee has arranged to meet immediately after the lunchtime suspension. I propose, therefore, by leave of the Assembly, to suspend the sitting until 2.00 pm. The first item of business when we return will be Question Time.

The sitting was suspended at 12.29 pm.

On resuming (Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Dallat] in the Chair) —

2.00 pm

Oral Answers to Questions

Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Ambulance Service: Designation

1. Mr Boylan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why the Ambulance Service is designated as an essential service rather than an emergency service. (AQO 5512/11-15)

Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): I have been advised that there is no legal definition of what constitutes an "essential" as opposed to an "emergency" service. The Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) is the emergency service of Northern Ireland's Health and Social Care (HSC). As such, it is considered to be an emergency service alongside the police and the fire service. While the police and the fire service are stand-alone services, our Ambulance Service is an integral part of HSC. I strongly believe that it should remain so. NIAS is more than just an emergency service. It provides essential clinical services and plays an important role in the wider urgent and emergency care system.

Mr Boylan: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as ucht a fhreagra. I thank the Minister for his answer. Will he consider re-evaluating the classification to bring it into line with services such as the fire service and the PSNI?

Mr Poots: I do not see what difference it will make at this point. Perhaps people can argue that it will make an essential difference. The Ambulance Service is different from the Police Service and the fire service because it is a key element of our health and social care sector. For example, we have a medical director in the Ambulance Service. We have doctors in 999 rooms to take calls and assist people who fall ill. It is a different kind of service from what is offered by the police and the fire service. It is certainly something that we can give consideration to, but the arguments would need to be very well made that significant benefit will come from it.

Mr Craig: Will the Minister commend the Ambulance Service staff on their efforts at the Odyssey incident last week, particularly their use of front line doctor services at the scene, which saved a lot of congestion in the A&E services?

Mr Poots: The Ambulance Service, which was the first responder, provided an excellent service at the Odyssey. It dealt with a lot of people on site without bringing them to hospital. It was able to provide them with the support and care they needed. Indeed, it initiated a major incident, which was absolutely necessary and the right thing to do, given the scale of the event that was occurring and the possibility that it could have got considerably worse. It ensured that the hospitals were well prepared and well placed to deal with the numbers that came in. We were greatly assisted by the work of the Ambulance Service on the ground, which ensured that large numbers were dealt with without having to come to hospital. I cannot commend the Ambulance Service highly enough on its response in that instance.

Mr P Ramsey: Following through from the original question, I ask the Minister about the new car-style ambulances that are seen across Northern Ireland. Are they compliant with the specification of emergency vehicles?

Mr Poots: The cars can get to the site quicker, so you have a paramedic who can get to the individuals quicker. Over 70% of people in Northern Ireland are responded to by the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service within eight minutes of making that call, which is quite remarkable given the geography of Northern Ireland. A lot of that is done by the cars. You have a paramedic there, who will very often get all the testing equipment and so forth and do the first response. If people need to be taken to hospital, the ambulances are very often quickly on the scene as well. It enables us, as first responders, to engage even more quickly with the needs of people.

Health Promotion: Belfast

2. Mr Newton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he is taking to promote better health in inner city Belfast. (AQO 5513/11-15)

Mr Poots: Partnership working is vital if we are to effectively promote better health and tackle health inequalities. That includes working with communities, which are best placed to know their local resources, assets, issues and challenges. That intimate knowledge is vital in tailoring services and initiatives to address local needs and in finding solutions to those challenges. The Public Health Agency (PHA) works at a strategic city-wide level with Belfast City Council, and with other organisations through the Belfast Strategic Partnership for Health and Wellbeing, to coordinate actions for health improvement across the city. Members of local community organisations and area-based partnerships are key members of that partnership.

In addition, the agency is supporting actions at a more local community level through the investment of some £6 million, which is largely being channelled through the community and voluntary sector. One example is the east Belfast health framework that I launched recently. That will provide community-driven front line action and practical support for individuals in need and their families.

Mr Newton: I thank the Minister for his comments. He mentioned the strategy that he announced. Will he be specific about the issues that he is addressing in the east of the city?

Mr Poots: The Public Health Agency funds five community-based posts in the East Belfast Community Development Agency and the East Belfast Partnership at a cost of almost £200,000 per annum. Work is being taken forward to ensure that the contracts that the PHA have are aligned with the five themes of the east Belfast health framework, and an action plan will be developed for 2014-15.

During 2012-13, the PHA funded work with the East Belfast Independent Advice Centre, which resulted in support for 236 people with mental health issues from disadvantaged areas. The support allowed them to access benefits that they were entitled to and generated an income for them of some £310,000. A number of organisations are being funded through Protect Life, and there has been recent additional investment to enhance bereavement support in the area. A local drugs and alcohol action plan for east Belfast was developed in November 2013 and specifies a range of actions to be taken forward in 2013-14.

Flu Vaccinations: Children

3. Mr Irwin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on influenza vaccinations for children. (AQO 5514/11-15)

Mr Poots: Last October saw the introduction of the first phase of the children's flu vaccination programme across Northern Ireland, with a live attenuated influenza vaccine Fluenz, which has been shown to provide greater protection for children than inactivated influenza vaccine, being offered to all children aged two or three years old and pupils in primary year 6. This vaccine was also offered to children in an at-risk group who are aged between two and less than 18 years of age.

Provisional data for the period up to the end of December shows that Northern Ireland has achieved the best uptake rates across the UK. For two- and three-year-olds, it was 54.3%; for children in P6, it was 80.7%. I express my appreciation to all who worked hard to achieve those uptake rates. I recognise the considerable effort required by GPs and school nursing teams to complete the seasonal flu vaccination programme within a very short timescale.

From the coming autumn, in addition to the routine flu programme, the children's flu vaccination programme will be extended to all preschool children aged two and over and all primary-school children. In the autumn of 2015, it is intended that the flu vaccination programme will be extended to include all children of secondary school age.

Mr Irwin: I thank the Minister for his response. How important does he feel that the flu vaccination is for young people?

Mr Poots: Flu vaccination is a very important policy. Through it, we believe that we can avoid people needing to attend our emergency departments or being admitted to hospital as a consequence of the more serious symptoms of flu.

The provisional data for the flu vaccination programme for the period up to the end of December showed that Northern Ireland has achieved excellent uptake rates compared with the rest of the UK: 72.6% for over-65s, 72.3% for under-65s at risk and 51.4% for pregnant women. That demonstrates that people in Northern Ireland are getting the message very clearly that flu can be quite a serious illness and that they can do something to avoid it. Many people take that option. We are keen that more and more children take that option and ensure that they do not suffer the effects of flu.

Mrs Cochrane: A response to a recent question that I tabled to the Education Minister indicated that almost 15,000 working days were lost among the teaching profession last year as a result of flu-related illnesses. Therefore, will the Minister consider working with the Education Minister to extend the flu vaccination programme to teachers?

Mr Poots: That seems a perfectly reasonable suggestion and is something that I am happy to talk to the Education Minister about. We are targeting schoolchildren because flu is so common and so easily spread in that environment. We want teachers to be teaching and not sitting at home sick, and I am sure that they want to be teaching and not sitting at home sick, so if that is something that the Education Minister wishes to take up with me, I will be happy to liaise with him.

Mrs McKevitt: Will the Minister outline the stock levels of vaccinations and say whether they are subject to sell-by dates?

Mr Poots: This year, Northern Ireland procured 546,500 doses of seasonal flu vaccine, so stock levels for the target groups have been reasonably good and have not proven to be an issue for us this year.

Cancer Drugs

4. Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the current availability of cancer drugs compared with England. (AQO 5515/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) has responsibility for commissioning all cancer drugs available in Northern Ireland. The HSCB and the NHS commissioning bodies in England are guided by the National Institute for Health and Care Excellence (NICE) in determining which cancer drugs should be routinely available. All NICE-approved cancer drugs that are routinely available in England are recurrently funded or available via a cost-per-case mechanism in Northern Ireland. The HSCB has a clear process by which unapproved cancer drugs can be made available to patients by means of an individual funding request setting out the clinical circumstances that support the request.

Mr McKinney: I thank the Minister. The cancer drugs fund in England takes a different approach for non-routinely available drugs and has granted NHS access to up to 38 drugs that are not available here. Will the Minister consider having a cancer drugs fund model here or approaching his Westminster counterpart to address the inequality?

Mr Poots: I certainly will consider it. If the Executive and Assembly were to support me in doing that, I would do it very quickly. That would be done through charging something for prescriptions once again, as that would allow us to establish a specialist drugs fund for not just cancer drugs but other specialist drugs that are not regularly available.

That is the right thing to do. Any good socialist should want to do it, because those of us who can afford to pay for drugs would be ensuring that people who really need them but cannot afford them have the opportunity to receive them, and we would be saving lives. However, if people want to cling to another policy, that is entirely a matter for them.

Mr Kinahan: When it comes to the funding of those who need to go across the water for special treatment for cancer or other illnesses, will the Minister look at reviewing the process so that it is quicker, allowing people to get money and get over for the treatment as quickly as possible?

Mr Poots: The process is carried out through the Health and Social Care Board. If the Member has identified particular problems and wishes to raise them directly with the chief executive of the board or me, we will pursue the matter. If it is an issue that Members in general have identified, I am happy to look at it.

Mr G Robinson: What work is going on with the managed entry of new drugs?

Mr Poots: The Health and Social Care Board is refining and further developing the processes for managing the entry of new medicines to ensure that they are more effective and more clearly understood by patients, their representatives and clinicians. Guidance should be issued shortly.

Access to effective treatments for the population of Northern Ireland, including access to cancer drugs and other specialist medicines, is an important priority for me and the Department. I am determined to explore every avenue open to me to deliver increased access to specialist medicines and other interventions.

If a lot of research and work has gone into developing new procedures and drugs, the public want Northern Ireland to be at the forefront of delivering on that. We are somewhat constrained in so doing, and I suggested to the House earlier that we have a means of getting around that. I ask Members to think very clearly about what we are suggesting to them. There is a real possibility of making a difference to people's lives and of saving many lives as a consequence.

Addiction Treatment Units

5. Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on his plans for the future of the addiction treatment units in Omagh and Armagh. (AQO 5516/11-15)

Mr Poots: A public consultation by the Health and Social Care Board on the future model for tier-4 addiction services closed on 24 January 2014. The board is considering all responses received and is finalising proposals on the appropriate model of service provision, which will take account of the wider need of the overall Northern Ireland population and seek to improve outcomes for clients. The board hopes to complete that work by the end of April 2014. Therefore, no decision has been taken at this stage on the future model or on the location of any service.

Mr McGlone: Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as an fhreagra sin. I thank the Minister for his response. In light of his answer, can he advise whether the addictions unit that was planned for the new local enhanced hospital in Omagh could be jeopardised as a result of any proposed changes to addiction services that may be centralised across the region?

Mr Poots: Again, I am less interested in buildings and locations than I am in outcomes. The course of work that we are looking at would see many more people being treated in the community. Therefore, the locations of the buildings are less of an issue for us. However, we are engaged in a consultation process, and we are drawing feedback from that and collating it to identify the way forward. So, we are not at a point of making decisions. Members can lobby and seek to influence at this point, but there is a course of work that needs to be carried out before we arrive at a decision.

Mr McElduff: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for his answers. My specific interest is in the future of the addiction treatment unit (ATU) in Omagh. Does the Minister accept that it is not feasible, given the rurality of counties Tyrone and Fermanagh, to expect people to travel outside those counties for addiction treatment services? What is needed is a new configuration that divides the North into three regions as opposed to two.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Can we have a question?

Mr McElduff: Yes. The question is this: does the Minister accept that it is not feasible for people who live in rural areas in Tyrone and Fermanagh to travel beyond that subregion to access these essential services?

Mr Poots: That is something that I will pay attention to, unlike previous Ministers, who decided that they did not need a hospital in Omagh and chose to close it. Mr McElduff did not seem to have that great of an influence with Minister de Brún, his own Sinn Féin Minister, on that occasion. He did not deliver for the people of Omagh on that occasion. Thankfully, since the DUP came in, a new hospital has been proposed for the town of Omagh and has started to be developed. We will look at all these things very seriously in seeking to ensure that Omagh gets fairer treatment under the DUP than it got under Sinn Féin.

RVH/Mater: Serious Incidents

6. Mr A Maginness asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many serious incident forms, detailing incidents when patient safety is compromised, have been submitted by staff in the accident and emergency department and the acute medical unit at the Royal Victoria Hospital and the Mater Hospital in the past 12 weeks. (AQO 5517/11-15)

Mr Poots: Health and social care organisations are required to routinely report serious adverse incidents (SAIs) to the Health and Social Care Board. There are specific criteria that determine whether an adverse incident constitutes an SAI. Any adverse incident that meets one or more of the criteria should be reported as an SAI to the Health and Social Care Board within 72 hours of being discovered.

Fewer than five serious adverse incident forms detailing incidents where patient safety has been compromised have been submitted by staff in the emergency departments or the acute medical wards of the Royal Victoria Hospital or the Mater Hospital in the past 12 weeks. In line with departmental policy, information on specific numbers is not routinely published if the number is fewer than five. That approach is taken to maintain patient confidentiality.

Mr A Maginness: I thank the Minister for that answer. Given the ongoing difficulties, particularly in the Royal, would the Minister not express some concern or even surprise that only five serious adverse incident forms have been received?

Mr Poots: I said fewer than five, so it could be considerably fewer than that. This morning, we all learned, including me, of five serious adverse incidents that have been reported over the past 12 months, from December 2012 to November 2013. In those instances, it has been indicated that the medical response could have been better had more doctors been available. Those are serious questions that we will all be seeking answers to in the time ahead. It will probably be difficult to reveal all the answers because we are dealing with a relatively small number of people and patient confidentiality issues will arise. There may be issues that the coroner will have to take a look at to identify and ensure that matters were dealt with appropriately.

Mr Beggs: Extended waiting times at our A&Es can contribute to serious incidents there, as we have learned. Does the Minister accept that, with significant numbers of patients having to wait more than four hours, there is a risk that their health could have deteriorated from when they were initially assessed by the triage nurse? When will waiting times in Northern Ireland match those in the rest of the United Kingdom in order to reduce this risk?

Mr Poots: I think that the waiting times that we have set are appropriate and that is why I have rigidly stuck to them. Over the past couple of months, and I know that a lot of politicians here like to run with the trade unions, we have had trade union representatives saying that those times are not reasonable and that they should be extended. I think that the evidence that we have seen over the past few days would indicate that the waiting times are not unreasonable and that they are a reasonable expectation for us to seek of our hospitals.

Throughout the course of this, we have sought to ensure that waiting times are reduced. I am glad that 12-hour waiting times, for example, have reduced to a third of what they were in the previous year, for example in December 2013. Considerable work has been done on that. We can do more and that is why I made the statement that I made yesterday. We must ensure that we adopt best practice wherever best practice is being applied and use the expertise that has delivered that to assist us in delivering better waiting times in Northern Ireland.

Ulster Hospital: A&E Waiting Times

7. Mr Cree asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on accident and emergency department waiting times at the Ulster Hospital. (AQO 5518/11-15)

Mr Poots: The South Eastern Trust has made significant progress in reducing the number of patients waiting for longer than 12 hours in the Ulster Hospital's emergency department. In December 2013, 21 patients waited for more than 12 hours, which is unacceptable to me, but that compares with 286 patients in December 2012. In December 2013, 70.7% of patients were treated and discharged home or admitted to a ward within four hours compared with 68.8% in December 2012. I look to the Health and Social Care Board to continue working with the trust to make further progress on meeting my targets for emergency care.

Mr Cree: I thank the Minister for his response. The Minister is aware of pressures on the Ulster and, indeed, on the Royal Victoria. We touched yesterday on the question of Antrim. Minister, bearing in mind the pressures that are on the Ulster Hospital, do you not consider it prudent to have a review there?

Mr Poots: Should we have very strong recommendations flowing from a course of work with the Royal Victoria Hospital, we will want to look at the other emergency departments to ensure that they are operating as efficiently as they should be. Whether that would involve the full-scale reporting that we are currently seeking in the Royal remains to be seen. However, we will want to see that our hospitals across Northern Ireland are responding well. If actions are taken in the Royal that dramatically improve performance, we will want to see that dramatic improvement elsewhere. If that involves asking the team to do a course of work elsewhere, that is something that we will give consideration to.

Mr Dunne: I thank the Minister for his answers today. Bearing in mind the significance of the Ulster Hospital in the South Eastern Trust, what measures has the Minister put in place to deal with ongoing winter pressures?

Mr Poots: Over the winter period, we made an additional £600,000 available to recruit extra staff and implement initiatives to manage the extra activity. We created 10 extra medical beds on the Ulster Hospital site and improved the flow and discharge of patients at the hospital. We are making greater utilisation of Ards and Bangor community hospitals as medical step-down facilities. We have 10 additional intermediate care beds in an independent sector facility; additional care package provision including physiotherapy and social work support; additional pharmacy support at the weekends; a rapid-response nursing service that will provide additional interventions such as intravenous antibiotics in clinic and domiciliary settings in the community; additional therapy provision for the community rehabilitation team; and additional allied health professionals and social work resources in Ards and Bangor community hospitals.

Mr Hazzard: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I notice that the Minister did not mention that he also closed the Downe A&E at weekends and in the evenings to help the Ulster. The Minister will be aware that 41% of patients seen at the Ulster Hospital are not from the South Eastern Trust area but are from the Belfast Trust area. What sort of pressure does that put on the Ulster Hospital?

Mr Poots: The Member well knows that I did not close the Downe A&E at weekends, but he seeks to cause some sort of deflection. He knows that it was a decision by the trust. It was an operational decision based on safety, because they did not have the adequate number of doctors to provide the care and cover at the weekends. We all need to ask ourselves this question: why do we have such problems recruiting doctors to work in emergency departments? I have given people the answers, and sometimes they do not like those answers. Nonetheless, that is where we are.

As regards the fact that 41% of people who attend the Ulster Hospital do not come from the South Eastern Trust, it is important to remember that a large number of attendances at the Royal Victoria Hospital are by people from the South Eastern Trust. It is a bit of swings and roundabouts. Many people who live in the Colin area, for example, will not travel to the Ulster Hospital as the Royal Victoria Hospital is much more accessible; that is wholly understandable.

Many people in the Lisburn area will travel to the Royal Victoria Hospital before they will travel to the Ulster Hospital. Indeed, many ambulances take people to the Royal Victoria first because they are not going to drive past an acute hospital with a seriously ill person if that hospital is available to them. It is clearly not a case of the South Eastern Trust having to absorb a lot of people from Belfast and Belfast not absorbing anybody from the South Eastern Trust.

Occupational Therapy: Fermanagh Waiting Times

8. Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline his Department's strategy to reduce the high waiting times for community occupational therapy services in County Fermanagh. (AQO 5519/11-15)

Mr Poots: There is a nine-week access standard for all allied health professions, including occupational therapy. The waiting time has been improved progressively, moving from 26 weeks a few years ago to 13 weeks and then to the current nine-week target. Improving waiting times for occupational therapy services is a priority for my Department, the Health and Social Care Board and the Public Health Agency.

In 2013-14, the Health and Social Care Board allocated an additional £165,000 non-recurrently to support the Western Health and Social Care Trust to reduce occupational therapy waiting times. Despite the additional funding, waiting times have increased during 2013-14. The Health and Social Care Board and Public Health Agency are currently working closely with the Western Trust to address the issue. Work is ongoing to establish the level of demand for occupational therapy services and the capacity necessary to meet such demand in line with my challenging nine-week access standard.

Mr Deputy Speaker: I am sorry that there is not time for a supplementary question as we have to move on. That ends the period of questions for oral answer. We now move on to topical questions.

Royal Victoria Hospital: Patient Deaths

1. Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how he will respond to the shocking news of the death of five patients at the Royal due to delays and waiting times. (AQT 701/11-15)

2.30 pm

Mr Poots: I had initiated reporting procedures prior to being aware of the deaths of those five people. I should make it clear that those five people died because they were seriously unwell. They attended the Royal Victoria Hospital. A serious adverse incident report was compiled that identifies that there is a possibility that more could have been done and a possibility that not all five people would have died. However, we do not know that and we do not have the evidence to say whether it is or is not the case at this stage.

There are always deaths in emergency departments. The avoidance of preventable deaths is a challenge for all health services, and the speed of delivery of appropriate medical care is a factor. That includes ambulance response times, triage, diagnostic testing and the provision of clinical care, which are all essential in ensuring the best outcome for an individual.

I previously expressed concerns about the Royal Victoria Hospital. I am aware of the five cases that Mr Ó hOisín mentioned, and, although I do not have the specific details, I have asked my officials to ascertain whether the systems in place for learning are fully functional and to identify issues of concern.

It is important to reassure the public about the overall safety of these services. We know that, overall, mortality figures for Northern Ireland hospitals, including those in the Belfast Trust area, compare favourably with the rest of the UK. In fact, the average mortality rate in England is higher than those in any of our trusts across Northern Ireland. Let us be very clear about that: the public need to know that mortality is lower in hospitals in Northern Ireland than it is in England.

The serious adverse incident is a learning system, and it is important to note that not every case that is referred to as an SAI indicates that there has been any problem with the care that has been provided or with the patient or client. There are certain categories of death, for example, that must automatically be reported as an SAI. Members will understand —

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order. I presume that the Minister has asked for extra time.

Mr Poots: I have not, no.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Are you asking for it?

Mr Poots: If I can have just half a minute, Mr Deputy Speaker, I would appreciate that.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Please continue.

Mr Poots: Members will understand that great care needs to be taken in discussing individual cases and clients to protect their confidentiality. However, I want to assure Members that I have sought assurances from officials that all appropriate steps and processes were taken. It would be wrong to conclude, at this stage, that the outcomes in these cases were directly related to waiting times. Although we recognise that healthcare can never be 100% safe, we must also recognise that these were very sick patients with very complex cases and that they may have passed away in any case. It would also be appropriate for the House to express its sympathies to the families of those five people for their deaths.

Mr Ó hOisín: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. The Minister concedes that there is a possibility that more could have been done. Will he now apologise to those families? What can he do to instil public confidence?

Mr Poots: I would certainly express my sympathies to the families, and I have done so in these circumstances. For all individuals, their case is the most important case, and we must never get away from the fact that healthcare is about serving the needs of individuals. We need to look into these cases further and identify whether failings on the part of the health and social care system were a factor in the deaths. That needs to be identified and avoided in other instances.

Patient Deaths: Royal Victoria Hospital

2. Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to contrast the sad news of the deaths at the Royal with his comments in early January that the pressure situation at that hospital's A&E was a one-off. (AQT 702/11-15)

I would also like to extend our sincere sympathies to those families who learned today that their loved ones may have died as a result of accident and emergency pressures at the Royal Victoria Hospital.

Mr Poots: The discussion that we had in January was about what happened on three days. The issue that we are discussing now is about five incidents that occurred over a year. We need to be very careful and very sensitive about how we handle these things. I do not intend to engage in some sort of ping-pong about people's deaths.

Mr McKinney: I assure the House that neither will I, but it is our view that it is the sustained political and media focus that has led to these revelations, which might not otherwise have come to the fore. We conclude that the Minister either did not know or did know about the longer-term pressures when he was making his earlier remarks. Will he therefore agree with me that the public might be right to suspect that there was at least a disguising of the situation or, at worst, a cover-up?

Mr Poots: This has been said in the House quite a number of times, and people can ignore it, but it is factual: I attended the Royal Victoria Hospital on the morning after the major incident was declared, and I spoke to staff, and I took my actions on the basis of speaking to staff — nothing else, nothing more and nothing less.

Andrew Quigley

3. Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, on a very emotive and sensitive subject, to outline any discussions he has had with DRD, which is responsible for bridges, or the Public Health Agency in its role in bringing forward deterrents to young people who are considering self-harm, given the situation with Andrew Quigley, a young man from Derry who has been missing for four weeks after entering the River Foyle from one of the bridges, leaving Colette and his family heartbroken and devastated, and with the emergency services, North and South, along with Foyle Search and Rescue, trying to locate him. (AQT 703/11-15)

Mr Poots: My officials certainly have engaged with DRD officials on making the bridges more safe. I do not suppose that, if someone is determined to take their own life, it is possible to always have a means of preventing them from doing that, but I certainly think that there are people who may be thinking about it, and, if there are adequate deterrents in place, it may well stop them. There is learning that we can take from other places, for example San Francisco, which has the Golden Gate Bridge, and so forth. I am very keen that my departmental officials will continue to engage with people in the Foyle constituency, with DRD and others, and I recognise the huge distress that it causes, such as to the family that Mr Ramsey referred to. I support him in the sympathies that he has expressed for that family.

Mr P Ramsey: I will certainly pass on the Minister's comments to the family. Given his comments, would he be mindful to convene with DRD in a multi-agency approach? Foyle Search and Rescue is one of the main bodies that acts to try to prevent loss of life, and it has said that small structural changes could absolutely act as a deterrent at that moment to prevent someone from either jumping in or trying to jump in.

Mr Poots: I assure the Member that I will make officials available. If he wishes to convene a meeting in the Foyle area, healthcare officials will not be found wanting in seeking to respond to the issues that he has raised.

Health Service: Staff

4. Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how the number of key staff working in our local health service has changed since 2011. (AQT 704/11-15)

Mr Poots: I have the most recent figures for full-time equivalents in September 2013 compared with March 2011. The number of consultants, medical and dental, is up by 160, or 12%. The number of middle-grade doctors is up by 69, or 20%. Nurses and midwives are up by 531, or 4%. Nursing and support staff are up by 147, or 4%. Paramedics and ambulance staff are up by 12, or 2%. Qualified allied health professionals are up by 317, or 11%.

Mr Weir: The Minister has indicated that, across the board, in a range of functions, staff numbers are up in the health service. What factors has he identified that mean that our trusts are still finding it challenging to provide services in a timely manner?

Mr Poots: There are certain areas where it is harder to attract staff. Surgery, emergency medicine, obstetrics and gynaecology are all areas where we are finding it more difficult to recruit staff, and that needs to be made very clear. We also have particular problems in the Western Trust area, where it is more difficult to attract doctors than in the greater Belfast area. The smaller regional hospitals very often struggle to attract staff, as is the case, for example, in Lagan Valley, Downe and, perhaps to a lesser extent, the Causeway. That means that we become more reliant on locum doctors. However, the figures that I cited show that, in spite of the financial pressures over the past number of years, we have continued to drive up the number of those providing the front line services to better equip the health and social care sector to respond to the obvious needs of the public.

Downe Hospital: A&E Service

5. Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he agrees with the South Eastern Trust that the preferred option for Downe Hospital is a minor injuries unit or is he committed to the full restoration of 24-hour A&E services in Downpatrick. (AQT 705/11-15)

Mr Poots: I have instructed the South Eastern Trust to make greater efforts to recruit emergency doctors in order to provide a more extensive service. I asked the South Eastern Trust to produce a plan for providing support to the people in the Downe and Lagan Valley area in the meantime. That plan, which has been submitted to the Health and Social Care Board, will ensure that the vast majority of needs in the Downe Hospital area will be met in that facility while the trust seeks to recruit emergency doctors.

Mr Hazzard: Go raibh maith agat. I thank the Minister for his answer. A connected issue is that people have no faith in the governance of the South Eastern Trust. Does the Minister have any plans to look at the governance structures of the South Eastern Trust to see whether they are fit for purpose?

Mr Poots: We all have a role, particularly me, in holding the South Eastern Trust to account. The House has a role in that, as, indeed, have local authorities. It is important that trusts respond to the needs of local communities. The first elements of the provision of health and social care are safety and quality. The trust will always want and have to ensure that they provide those. If it falls short, it will be a matter of real concern to all of us.

Antrim Area Hospital: Procurement Review

6. Mr Milne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the outstanding recommendations that were made following the procurement review at Antrim Area Hospital and a time frame for their completion. (AQT 706/11-15)

Mr Poots: We had asked for a course of work to be done. In the past few weeks, I made a statement to the House that indicated that there were procurement issues. Although there was no evidence of fraud, there were certainly weaknesses in procurement. We are looking to close off those weaknesses and have a much more robust procurement scheme in the Northern Trust area.

Mr Milne: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as ucht a fhreagra sin. I thank the Minister for his answer. Will he give us an assurance that those recommendations will be implemented across the trusts and that procurement throughout the health service will be open and transparent?

Mr Poots: It is certainly the case that we want procurement to be open and transparent throughout the system. The Business Services Organisation will carry out much of that work for trusts. Where trusts are engaged in direct procurement, we want everything to be done in a way that ensures that they have public confidence and deliver best value for money for the public.

Environment

Planning: Job Losses

1. Mr McNarry asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the number of local jobs lost or deferred by delays to the planning process. (AQO 5527/11-15)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): Planning can make a very positive contribution to the development of our local economy. That is why my Department gives priority to proposals that have the potential to bring investment to the local economy and create jobs, and ensures that the applications are processed to a decision as quickly as possible.

2.45 pm

Performance across all categories of application has improved in recent years, and I know that strenuous efforts are being made to continue that improvement. However, I also acknowledge that more can be done, and that is why I announced in January a series of new actions to improve further our performance in planning. The actions include shortening and simplifying planning policy; continuing to implement key reforms such as initiating new development plan work; encouraging more pre-application discussions and pre-application community consultations; improving consultee performance, including in the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) in my Department; and improving customer service.

In May 2011, there were 60 live article 31 applications. Since then, 46 applications have been determined, five of which are awaiting the outcome of the appeals process, and one further application is scheduled for a public inquiry. Since May 2011, a further 11 new applications have been designated article 31, and five of those have been determined within the new PFG target of six months. That includes the application for the redevelopment of Windsor Park, where the applicant engaged with the Department and relevant stakeholders in a comprehensive pre-application process that included piloting pre-application community consultation and resulted in the submission of a quality application, a speedy process and a determination within 11 weeks.

I want to create a better environment and a stronger economy, and my aim is to create a planning system that works to achieve that.

Mr McNarry: I thank the Minister for his response. He has his own refreshing style of not answering the question about job losses, so I will have another go, if I may. I ask the Minister to detail any sensitive planning applications that he is discussing to transfer to OFMDFM or whether he is likely, or intends, to discuss such a matter with it soon?

Mr Durkan: I thank Mr McNarry for the supplementary question. Any failure to answer it will not be a deliberate attempt on my part to avoid answering it. It will just be down to a complete lack of understanding of what he means. [Laughter.] I am the Minister of the Environment. My Department is responsible for making planning decisions. I am involved in no negotiations with the First Minister and the deputy First Minister. I am fairly certain that my Department is not involved in any conversations with the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister around the transfer of any particular application, sensitive or otherwise. However, if there is a particular application that Mr McNarry would like to discuss with me — or with OFMDFM — I am happy to meet him at a later stage.

Mr Boylan: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as ucht a fhreagra. Will the Minister assure the House that, following consultation on the draft strategic planning policy statement, job creation and economic growth will be key elements in the planning future? Will he also bring forward some policies that will lead to sustainable rural communities?

Mr Durkan: Go raibh maith agat as an cheist nó as na ceisteanna sin. I thank the Member for the questions.

Following consultation on the single strategic planning policy statement, yes, economic considerations will have a material weight in determining planning decisions. However, there is nothing new in that. Currently, considerable weight is attached to economic considerations when applications are being processed. However, that weight is not determining. Good planning is a balancing act between what is good for the economy and what is good for the environment. I do not believe that one should be compromised at the expense of the other.

Yes, sustainable rural communities is a very important issue. It is one that Mr Boylan and other Members have raised with me before. We spoke at length during a debate on rural housing earlier this month.

However, I know that rural businesses are also very important not just to Members but to the communities that they represent.

Mr Cree: Does the Minister have any plans to progress the Planning Bill, which he withdrew last year?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for his question. I have answered similar questions in the Chamber before, and I will give the same answer that I gave to those questions. The answer is, quite simply, no. I made the decision not to move the Planning Bill. I made that announcement in the House on 22 October last year and cited sound reasons for doing so. Those reasons were procedural, evidential and legal. I must say that, anywhere that I have gone and any sector with which I have engaged in the aftermath of making that decision and announcement, the decision has been received well. There seems to be consensus outside the House — although maybe not inside it — that the Planning Bill, as amended, was not the way to go about improving our planning system.

Mr McGlone: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle, agus gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as na freagraí cuimsitheacha go nuige seo. I thank the Minister for his comprehensive answers to this point. I note with interest that, when talking about sharpening up the performance of planning, he made specific reference to the NIEA. It is with regret I say that that is one agency that keeps delaying the planning process through its performance and efficiency, as well as for no apparent reason. What specific measures will the Minister take to make that organisation much more efficient in its decision-making and in its liaison with Planning Service?

Mr Durkan: Go raibh maith agat as an cheist sin. I thank the Member for that question. In the preamble or foreword to his question, the Member said that NIEA is “one agency”. It is one agency. However, I am sure that, when dealing with NIEA, many Members think that it is a lot more than one agency. Weaknesses have been identified in the agency that fall back to the fact that it is constructed from so many different individual sectors, and there has been speculation and commentary to suggest that those sections work using a silo approach. That is something that was brought up again more recently in the Mills report on waste. When it comes to the processing of planning applications, that is something that causes great frustration to applicants, agents and developers, and indeed to objectors. It is something that I certainly intend to tackle. I have asked my permanent secretary, and, indeed, the chief executive of NIEA, to conduct a root-and-branch review of the agency with a view to improving its structure and performance. I look forward to bringing those proposals back to the Assembly.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Before we move on, I encourage Members please to be brief when asking questions. I also encourage other Members who are not asking questions to remain silent, please, so that I can at least hear the Minister.

Councils: Single Transferable Vote

2. Mr Dickson asked the Minister of the Environment whether he plans to amend the Local Government Bill to allow the use of the single transferable vote system for the allocation of positions of responsibility. (AQO 5528/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I am committed to ensuring that positions of responsibility on a council, and positions on external statutory bodies on which the council is represented, are shared across all the political parties and independents that are represented on the council. Schedule 3 to the Local Government Bill makes provision for a council to select from either the d'Hondt or Sainte-Laguë formula methods or the single transferable vote (STV) approach to achieve that objective. The inclusion of options in the Bill provides flexibility for the political parties that are represented on a council to agree a method for sharing positions of responsibility that they consider most appropriate for their particular circumstances. If the political parties cannot agree the method to be adopted, by a qualified majority, the d'Hondt method is specified as the default position.

In order to mitigate the potential favouring of political parties with larger levels of representation on a council, the selected method for allocating positions will be applied at the start of a council term, following a local government election, across all positions over the four-year term of the council. Each position would be held only for a single year, unless a longer term of office on an external body is specified by that body. This will provide the opportunity, in line with the democratic process, for parties with lower levels of representation or independents to hold positions of responsibility.

Mr Dickson: I thank the Minister for his answer. Does he not accept that, if the intention of the legislation is to ensure fairness in the distribution of areas of responsibility in local government, d'Hondt does not and can never deliver that and that it can be delivered only by the use of STV as the preferred means of sharing responsibility in local government? Although the Minister has given a menu of available options, surely the default situation should always be STV.

Mr Durkan: I thank Mr Dickson for his question and supplementary. Indeed, I understand some of the concerns that he has raised. However, it is my belief, and I believe that it is one shared by others, that by running whatever method of selection that is chosen by a council at the start of a council term for every position over the four-year term at that stage, smaller parties and independents will get chances that they would not necessarily achieve or get even under STV should it be run annually, as is currently the set-up in most, if not all, councils. The reform of local government provides a tremendous opportunity to us all. It is vital that those parties and independents whom people vote for have the opportunities afforded to them that are available to members of larger parties. By running whatever formula a council decides on at the start of the term, those opportunities will be much more available than is currently the situation.

Mr Allister: The Minister's Bill anticipates that there may be control in a council by a cabinet system. Would that cabinet meet in secret? Has the Minister any concerns that, by reposing all power in such a small power bureau, the role of every other councillor would be vastly diminished and they would become mere spectators?

Mr Durkan: I thank Mr Allister for his question. The provision does indeed exist for a council to establish a committee-style form of governance. Last week, I attended the Environment Committee. The Local Government Bill is at Committee Stage. The Committee is diligently and thoroughly going through the legislation clause by clause. I found out to my expense just how thoroughly they were going through it when I appeared before them and they questioned me on many clauses and issues in the Bill, of which that was one.

It is certainly my vision that there will be no secret meetings unless there are details of a commercially or personally sensitive nature. All council business, where possible, should be open. That should extend to the cabinet of any council should it choose to go with the cabinet system. As it is, I am not sure how many councils will choose to do so. In response to Mr Dickson's question, I talked about selection of councillors for particular roles. I think that a cabinet, if a council were to go with one, would want a degree of continuity on that. I am not sure that what we have proposed on selecting councillors for positions would necessarily allow for that continuity.

There have also been questions about the membership of a cabinet, whether it would automatically include the chair and vice-chair, or mayor and deputy mayor, of a council and, if so, whether that would be an ex officio role. So, there are still quite a lot of —

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Minister's two minutes are up.

Mr Durkan: There is quite a lot of stuff left to look at, and the Committee will keep at it. I look forward to working with it to find as robust a system as possible.

3.00 pm

Mr A Maginness: I know that the Minister is a man dedicated to fairness and proportionality in local government. Will he outline the level of consultation he has had with stakeholders about the system of governance? In addition, what level of consensus was reached on that?

Mr Durkan: I thank Mr Maginness for the question. The provision of the three alternative methods for ensuring that positions of responsibility were shared was agreed by representatives of the five main political parties on the policy development panel, which was charged with the development of policy proposals on the governance arrangements for the new councils. That position was subsequently endorsed by the political parties represented on the strategic leadership board. There was significant support for this approach in the responses to the public consultation on the local government reform policy proposals launched on 30 November 2010.

Mr Weir: I thank the Minister for his answers so far. Although it will ultimately be up to individual areas to agree, largely by consensus, the way forward with the methodology that they use, does the Minister acknowledge that, in circumstances where a large number of posts are to be appointed by a relatively small electorate — the number of councillors — the single transferable vote is not necessarily the best way of achieving that distribution of responsibilities?

Mr Durkan: I thank Mr Weir for his question. We intend to give councils a range of options so that they will be able to choose the system that will work for them. We should be not just empowering councils but entrusting them to make the correct decisions. However, should they not be able to make a decision on this, d'Hondt will be the default position, partially for some of the reasons outlined by Mr Weir.

Planning: Staffing Levels

3. Mr Irwin asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the effects the future transfer of planning powers to local councils will have on current staffing levels in the Planning Service southern area planning office. (AQO 5529/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My Department is working to establish accurately the professional planning and administrative staffing complement required to ensure that an effective, fit-for-purpose planning service is transferred to local councils. In preparation for the transfer of planning powers, the Department commissioned a workforce planning model to estimate the number of planning staff required in each local council area. It was developed in 2011 in partnership with Fujitsu in response to a recommendation from the Public Accounts Committee that planning needed a mechanism to help determine the resources to transfer under the review of public administration. The workforce model includes administrative staff, from administrative assistant to deputy principal grades, and staff on the professional and technical side, from professional and technical officer to senior professional and technical officer grades, working in development management and enforcement. The staffing requirements for development planning work were excluded as that is not quantified on the number of planning applications received.

The workforce model will be rerun in April or May when the data for the 2013-14 financial year is available. That will provide more up-to-date figures and help guide and inform staffing decisions with the statutory transition committees. All staff transferring from the Department to local councils will transfer on the basis of TUPE-type arrangements, providing certain protections for staff, including their terms and conditions of employment.

Mr Irwin: I thank the Minister for his reply. When planning powers pass to councils, is it possible that we could, in effect, see several different interpretations of planning policy in Northern Ireland?

Mr Durkan: I thank Mr Irwin for his supplementary question. I think that I heard a voice from the Benches saying that we might already do so. Planning policy is open to interpretation, so it is inevitable that we will see, as we do on occasion, different interpretations of planning policy. However, if there is a genuine concern among the public and elected representatives that the transfer of planning powers will result in huge inconsistencies in the application of planning policy across councils, I reassure them that that will not be the case. It is vital that the planning service remains consistent, regardless of who the planning authority is. The Department will retain an oversight role, will carefully monitor the performance of each council and the decisions made and not made by councils and will be ready, willing and able to step in and assist, should councils have particular difficulties in their interpretation and application of policy.

Mr McElduff: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Tá ceist áirithe agam ar an Aire. What training and familiarisation will be provided for staff transferring from the Planning Service to the new councils in line with the transfer of powers?

Mr Durkan: Go raibh maith agat as an cheist shuimiúil sin. Thank you for that interesting and important question. I have been asked a lot of questions recently at various forums, including in the Chamber, about capacity building around the transfer of planning powers, and all the focus has been on training for the elected representatives and councillors who will take on planning powers. I congratulate Mr McElduff on being the first representative to ask about the training that will be required for the planning staff who will move to local government as their new employer, and I assure him that I am considering the matter. The money that had been acquired by my predecessor for capacity building applies not solely to elected representatives. Funding has been set aside and programmes set up for the training of our planning officers and staff before their move to local government.

Ms Lo: Currently, staff in the NIEA provide expertise and advice on environmental and built heritage issues to planners. What happens post RPA? Can those planners access services from the NIEA, or will councils have to pay fees?

Mr Durkan: I thank Ms Lo for that supplementary question. An earlier question suggested that planners cannot currently access those services easily. The Environment Agency will remain a statutory consultee on many planning applications. I outlined earlier my intention to review the Environment Agency, its structure and how it operates, and I fully anticipate that it will be easier for planning officers, applicants and agents to access the NIEA throughout the planning application process.

Mr Rogers: Thanks to the Minister for his answers thus far. He talked about the training that would be available for staff. What assurance can he give me about the staff who transfer from the Planning Service to local government? More specifically, will he provide details of the protections that will be afforded to them?

Mr Durkan: I thank Mr Rogers for his question, which follows on from Mr McElduff's question. A transfer scheme is being developed by DFP for staff transferring to local government with their functions. That is from all Departments, and it obviously includes planning staff. It will be negotiated through the normal Civil Service management and trade union fora and will secure agreement from both sides. Within that transfer scheme, all staff will be afforded protections under TUPE, which provides protection for employees against changes to their terms and conditions of employment as a result of a transfer of undertaking. The Department is taking action to minimise the hardship and domestic disruption that may be experienced by individual staff who are transferred to councils. A staff preference scheme has been implemented, which identifies the locational preferences of all staff in planning, and the Department is working to accommodate as many staff as possible in their preferred location at the date of transfer to councils.

Dereliction Funding: Craigavon

4. Mr Moutray asked the Minister of the Environment why Craigavon Borough Council's application for dereliction funding was refused. (AQO 5530/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The dereliction funding scheme was introduced in March 2012 to provide councils with funding to enhance and improve the cosmetic and aesthetic appearance of an area, whether it is a city, town, village or neighbourhood. Since its introduction, £4 million has been allocated to councils by the programme.

In August 2013, I asked all councils to submit proposals in preparation for the October monitoring round. Some 16 councils submitted bids, but, as I was unsuccessful in obtaining funding at that time, councils were asked to revise their bids in time for the January monitoring round. At that stage, three councils withdrew their bids. All bids were assessed, and Craigavon Borough Council's bid was placed joint sixth.

I was successful in obtaining £500,000 at January monitoring, to which I added £100,000 from my Department's funds. That allowed me to fund five of the 13 bids — one in full and four in part. This is a competitive process and, unfortunately, Craigavon Borough Council's bid was just below the cut-off point, as five bids were judged to have more merit on this occasion.

The dereliction intervention scheme has been extremely successful and will be a rolling programme that my Department will bid to maintain. I hope that Craigavon Borough Council will rebid for further funding when resources next become available.

Mr Moutray: I thank the Minister for his response. Can the Minister outline what plans he has to roll out further funding and when to areas like Craigavon, so that they too can enhance their environment, improve their economy and strengthen tourism?

Mr Durkan: I thank Mr Moutray for his supplementary. The dereliction fund, unfortunately, is dependent on how I fare at future monitoring rounds with my Executive colleagues. However, given the tremendous success and popularity of the scheme and the ever-growing demand for it, I have no doubt that Members will encourage their colleagues around the Executive table to support any future bid of mine for additional funding for the scheme.

Ms McCorley: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as ucht a fhreagraí go dtí seo. I thank the Minister for his answers thus far. An dtig leis an Aire a chinntiú cé hiad na ceantair ar tugadh maoiniú dearóilithe dóibh agus cá mhéad? Can the Minister confirm what areas have been allocated dereliction funding and how much they have received?

Mr Durkan: Go raibh maith agat as an cheist agus má fhanann tú nóiméad tá sé anseo. On this occasion, the successful bidders, of whom there were five, were Belfast City Council, which was awarded £220,000; Ards Borough Council, which received £111,000; North Down Borough Council, which received £102,000; Newry and Mourne District Council, which received £80,000; Newtownabbey Borough Council, which received £53,000; and — oh, there were six — Larne Borough Council, which received £39,000.

Mr Deputy Speaker: That ends the period for oral questions. We now move on to topical questions.

3.15 pm

Giro d'Italia: Election Posters

1. Dr McDonnell asked the Minister of the Environment whether he agrees with our colleagues Alex Attwood and Councillor Gerard Mallon that we should keep lamp posts and streets along the route of the Giro d'Italia free from election posters on 9, 10 and 11 May. (AQT 711/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for his question. This is a very positive suggestion. The Giro d'Italia has a global audience of 775 million in 165 countries worldwide, with 200 participants and up to an estimated 140,000 spectators. It presents a huge opportunity to showcase the excellent tourism product that Ireland has to offer, with key tourist sites, including Titanic Belfast, the north coast and Armagh, being especially profiled. I regret that the race is not coming to Derry, but I think that the hills might have put them off. One constituent remarked to me that we had better get used to the "giro" not coming if Nelson McCausland gets his way. [Laughter.] There is a responsibility on all of us to present the best possible picture of Northern Ireland, and a small step such as this by political parties would reap much greater collective benefits for all people here. Therefore, just today, I have written to all party leaders asking them for their views and cooperation on a voluntary political agreement that will ensure that, for the three days of the Giro d'Italia in May when Northern Ireland is on the global stage, there will be a poster-free route. I look forward to responses from the party leaders and am hopeful that a positive political agreement can and will be found.

Dr McDonnell: I thank the Minister for that lengthy answer. He can be assured of a positive response from me and the SDLP to his letter. Has the Minister given any consideration to reviewing the current legislation on the display of election posters, including the option of a ban?

Mr Durkan: Under the legislation as it stands, the DOE's Planning Service writes to all parties in advance of an election reminding them of their statutory obligations in displaying election posters, including positioning, road safety issues and removal within 14 days of a poll closing. Under planning law, no advertisement may be displayed without consent granted by the Department, but exemptions exist for election posters in advance of a pending election.

The display of election posters is a cause of annoyance for many members of the public, and political parties are reminded of that every time we have an election. They are also a headache for those of us who have to put them up and take them down, although I have been told that my days as a poster boy might be over.

I am very much aware of the issue and am willing to look at it. I have been considering a review of current legislation in advance of the media interest in this issue, and, as part of that review, I will examine a range of options, including a ban.

Alcohol Consumption: Public Service Vehicles

2. Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the effectiveness of the current legislation for alcohol consumption on public service vehicles. (AQT 712/11-15)

Mr Durkan: That is a topical question indeed. Current law states that it is an offence for a passenger to consume alcohol on a public service vehicle. This is contained in the PSV regulations of 1985. The PSNI advise that PSV regulations offences are very difficult to enforce, as they need to collect evidence that certain individuals consume alcohol on board a vehicle. My officials therefore put forward options to address that in a consultation last July, including the introduction of a restriction on the bus operator's licence prohibiting operators from carrying alcohol in their vehicles; the creation of a road traffic offence for operators of carrying alcohol in a public service vehicle; or doing nothing.

Responses to the consultation were mixed, and genuine difficulties were raised with each of the options. Operators highlighted the difficulties that their drivers can have in stopping passengers bringing alcohol on board and consuming it. A number of respondents commented that the only effective solution would be a total ban on the carriage of alcohol on public service vehicles. The creation of such an offence would be a matter for the Department of Justice, and I have recently discussed it with Minister Ford. Other respondents called for a repeal of the current ban on consumption, citing the fact that passengers can consume alcohol on the Enterprise, on ferries and on planes.

As a result of the responses to the consultation, I proposed a four-pronged approach at this stage. The actions are to commission communication activities to highlight the fact that it is illegal to drink on buses, as well as the road safety and passenger risks that it poses; to introduce a new licensing condition for operators that requires them to highlight to hirers that they cannot consume alcohol; to engage with DOJ on the extension of the current ban on alcohol carriage to the whole bus sector in Northern Ireland; and to continue to engage with DHSSPS, which is responsible for the new strategic direction for alcohol and drugs, as problems with alcohol —

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Minister's time is well up.

Mr Durkan: — consumption on buses form just one facet of the wider societal problems of alcohol in Northern Ireland.

Mr Eastwood: I thank the Minister for his very comprehensive answer. I welcome the fact that he has been engaging with the Department of Justice. What kind of response has he received from it?

Mr Durkan: Minister Ford has indicated that he understands the difficulties with enforcing the current offence and the risks to public and passenger safety that could result. He indicated that his Department had an extensive legislative programme under way and would consider this issue alongside that. I emphasise that the consultation highlighted what many of us know: there is no one solution to the problem. Indeed, the problem is not one of drinking on buses per se; rather, that is one element of general issues with alcohol in society, and there is little purpose in looking at the issue of drinking on buses without considering other elements, such as the price of alcohol in shops, the promotions on alcohol purchased in venues and the health risks associated with alcohol. All of us in the Chamber and any parents among us have a responsibility to work together to address those issues.

Alcohol Consumption: Buses

3. Mr Maskey asked the Minister of the Environment, without prejudging any investigations, whether he can update the House on the allegations of buses being used to ferry alcohol to the Odyssey, given the unfortunate and dangerous events at that venue last week and the fact that the Minister has been dealing with the availability of alcohol on buses. (AQT 713/11-15)

I was going to ask the Minister earlier whether he will assure Willie Frazer that the Giro d'Italia colours are an Italian tricolour.

Mr Durkan: I thank Mr Maskey for his question. I have just answered Mr Eastwood's question and see this as very much a follow-on from that.

Yes, I am aware of alcohol consumption on many buses and coaches responsible for taking young people to an event in the Odyssey on Thursday night, and I said that we had to address that. As a Department, we have to engage with the proprietors and operators of those buses and ensure that they were taking every step possible to ensure that alcohol was not consumed on their buses, particularly by minors, which is another criminal offence. I have outlined the difficulty in enforcing the law, and the PSNI seems reluctant — I do not know whether that is the right word — to do so. It certainly is incapable of doing so. Apparently, if the police stop a vehicle and get on, they have to have evidence of an individual consuming drink on it. Generally, someone drops the can or bottle and denies all knowledge of it, and, without evidence, further action cannot be taken. That causes headaches and heartache for responsible bus operators who find themselves almost having to frisk passengers who get on.

I spoke of the potential — I had this conversation with the Minister of Justice — for an outright ban on the carriage of alcohol on buses, but that seems a bit draconian. It would result in someone not being able to get the bus home after buying a meal deal in Marks and Spencer with a bottle of wine. So, there is a lot of work to be done on this, but it is a wider societal issue than just —

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Minister's time is up again.

Mr Durkan: — drinking on buses.

Mr Maskey: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for that response. I appreciate that it is a complex issue. It is one for wider society, but, nevertheless, there is legislation in place. Will the Minister assure the House that, with the PSNI and particularly with DOJ, he will consider what other measures may be taken? Of course, he must make sure that those measures are not disproportionate to the extent of the problem, but it may necessitate amending current legislation.

Mr Durkan: I am certainly happy to assure the Member and the House that I remain committed to focusing on this issue. I know that it is something that my predecessor was particularly vexed about, and it is something that I would also like to address. Thursday's unfortunate incident brought it all to the fore. However, I re-emphasise that Thursday's events were, in many ways, a microcosm of what goes on in every town, village and city across the North every weekend, with young people drinking to excess. It is incumbent not just on my Department, DOJ and us, as elected representatives, but on parents and young people to assume responsibility.

Illegal Dumping: Mills Report

4. Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of the Environment what steps his Department has taken to reduce waste crime and illegal dumping in Northern Ireland following the publication of the Mills report in December last year. (AQT 714/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for his question. My predecessor commissioned the Mills report following the discovery of waste crime on a scale previously unseen and, I dare say, undreamt of here in Northern Ireland. In fact, it was in my constituency. It has elicited a prompt and, I believe, robust response from my Department.

A number of actions were taken even before we received the Mills report. My predecessor secured £1.5 million in the June 2013 monitoring round. That has been used to employ 10 extra waste enforcement experts in NIEA's environmental crime unit; to clean up some of the waste at the Campsie illegal waste dump that posed the most immediate environmental risk; and to buy specialist investigation equipment. The funding has helped the NIEA to set up a major waste crackdown through what is known as Operation Toothfish. The operation is being led by the NIEA's environmental crime unit with the assistance of the PSNI. The operation currently involves 25 investigations covering 31 sites and 42 suspected companies and individuals across Northern Ireland. That is a worrying scale indeed. This is a comprehensive crackdown that is targeting a variety of potential types of waste crime, including illegal landfill, refuse-derived fuel, fuel laundering, end-of-life vehicles and waste tyres. The operation is the start of a programme of action over the next few years to reduce the creation of waste and to establish a fully compliant waste industry here in Northern Ireland.

Mr Deputy Speaker: I call Mr Humphrey for a very quick supplementary.

Mr Humphrey: I thank the Minister for his answer. Can I ask him to provide assurances that his Department will liaise with the Department of Justice to ensure that the serious issue of waste crime in Northern Ireland, which he has acknowledged, will be addressed by the increased sentencing that applies across the United Kingdom?

Mr Deputy Speaker: I call the Minister for a very quick answer as well.

Mr Durkan: I also raised that issue at another recent meeting with DOJ. Officials of mine and in DOJ recently held a joint seminar on the very issue of waste crime. It is important that the severity of sentence reflects the seriousness of the crime.

As it stands, the sentences that we have — the punishments — are not sufficient deterrents, given the vast profits that are there to be made by opportunists and criminals

Executive Committee Business

Budget Bill: Second Stage

Debate resumed on motion:

That the Second Stage of the Budget Bill [NIA 32/11-15] be agreed. — [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

Mr Girvan: At this Stage of a Budget Bill, anything that has to be said has been said. However, suffice it to say that a number of very good initiatives have been brought forward by the Executive that have been of benefit to the people of Northern Ireland.

One of the things that is causing us concern for the future is welfare reform and the effect that it could have on our block grant should we not move ahead and make a decision. I appreciate that it is already costing us money and that £15 million has been set aside for the first quarter of this year to address some of the ongoing costs that could be attributed to it, with the costs rising to £270 million if we do not move ahead with it.

(Mr Principal Deputy Speaker [Mr Mitchel McLaughlin] in the Chair)

I appreciate that the Vote on Account 2013-14 will allow spending to be made up to April and allow us to move ahead until we set the Estimates in June. Almost £16 billion will be spent, which will allow us to move ahead.

I appreciate that the Executive are looking at a couple of other areas, one of which is air passenger duty (APD). Some of the APD has been devolved to us to attract additional air links. One of the major problems in Northern Ireland is that we rely heavily on our air links: people cannot necessarily travel freely as we have no land links to other areas of the United Kingdom. APD has been devolved for long-haul flights, and it would be encouraging if we could attract additional long-haul flights into Northern Ireland. We know that most of the people who would use those flights would ultimately stay for some time and spend money in our local economy. That is a very important issue that needs to be addressed.

A number of things came through the Committee, and I appreciate that we have had the opportunity to look at what has come forward. I also appreciate that each Department has been involved in bringing forward its budget for the forthcoming year and explaining how it will break down its spend. I feel that the process has improved. Through the monitoring rounds in October, November and June, Departments have released money that they have not spent. That has been very good, but it is important that we get the money early enough so that it is all spent. I think that that is the case.

We do not want any money to go back to the Treasury; everyone always says that it is a big problem when you hand money back to the Treasury. We are making use of the money, but we must ensure that what we spend is not wasted. I appreciate that it is the responsibility of each Department to ensure that it spends the money that is allocated to it effectively. On some occasions, however, we are not so sure that we get that efficiency. We need to ensure that that is being driven out and that all those efficiencies are there.

As I said, one of the big worries that we have is welfare reform and how it could affect what happens in the forthcoming year of the Budget. It is vital that we resolve that matter and move ahead.

So, with that, I support the Budget Bill as presented and just hope and pray that we definitely come within our spending limits in all areas. I know that the Executive keep a close eye on that. I believe that they have done a good job this year, and I do not think that it will be anything different next year.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I am glad you have that confidence.

Mr Girvan: It is confidence.

Mr D Bradley: I could not possibly comment, but thank you very much anyway, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, for the opportunity to participate in this debate.

As I mentioned in the debate yesterday on the Vote on Account and the spring Supplementary Estimates, for the SDLP, using other means of leveraging further expenditure to invest in the local economy and sectors that could improve the lives of our people here is the whole purpose of devolution. Outside of the block grant, we had a promise that additional revenue-raising proposals to the tune of £900 million would be incorporated into this Budget from 2011 to 2015. I do not know whether we are on target to meet that amount. I would be interested to hear an update from the Minister. I used to have a little bit of an obsession with the previous Finance Minister and questioned him quite often on that issue, so why break the habit of a lifetime.

Looking at this section of the Budget in isolation neglects the opportunity to be more holistic and strategic. A yearly Budget, as opposed to the current four-year Budget, would provide the opportunity for our economy to be more flexible, especially during these difficult times. There is no reason why we should not do what other Governments do, and what is done in Dáil Éireann and in Westminster, which is to produce a Budget annually.

In conjunction with an annual Budget, we should wish to emulate the Scottish Government, who, in establishing the Calman commission on extending devolution, highlighted the additional set of levers they could obtain that would provide more control and help to shape a bespoke economic future. Other forms of devolution could include tax-varying powers. We have mentioned them before: landfill tax, motor tax, corporation tax, enterprise zones and so on. Such devolved powers would enable us to move away from a process like today's Budget Bill, which is not much more than tinkering around the edges of what we are supplied with.

Mr Ross: I thank the Member for giving way. He mentioned a number of tax-varying powers that we could devolve to the Assembly. Perhaps he would share with the Assembly the cost of devolving those powers.

Mr D Bradley: Of course. There is absolutely no difficulty about sharing the cost of those — we just ask the Minister of Finance here. As we know, when we ask for the cost of devolving powers, we get one figure from the Minister and another comes from the Treasury. It is all really quite confusing, so to get an accurate figure is very difficult indeed.

It would provide the opportunity for us to use our finances in a way that could boost the local economy and improve the lives of the people of Northern Ireland. I imagine that the Finance Minister would relish the opportunity for the Executive to develop greater financial control, to get to grips with tax-varying powers and to set, collect and invest those taxes back into the economy.

In response to Mr Ross's question, a commission such as the Calman commission would look at the possibilities from devolving tax-varying powers and might engage in the costing of those powers. So, we would know what is available to us and what the cost would be. Therefore, we could make decisions based on evidence, and I am certainly in favour of that.

Every time the subject is raised in the House, it provokes controversy and the type of question that Mr Ross asked. If he really wants his question answered, he should support me in calling for a Calman-type inquiry. Then, he will have the answers and I will have the answers, and we can then make up our minds about the future.

Mr Weir: Will the Member give way?

Mr D Bradley: No, not on this occasion. [Interruption.] I have been generous enough: I gave way to your colleague who I am sure you trust enough to convey the thoughts of your party to me. I have answered his question.

There is no doubt that these issues are complex, but that is not a reason to shy away from them. We should not be constantly reverting to the automatic default situation. We should seek to explore what is available to us on a cost-benefit basis.

Our long-term planning must involve seeking, to the greatest extent possible, to stand on our own feet economically. Our medium-term planning must involve becoming more flexible to the needs of our economy, and in the short term we must make budgetary changes to position ourselves so that we benefit from the global economic uplift.

During this debate, my other colleagues will be raising such opportunities, notably the opportunity to use investment in all-Ireland infrastructure projects, including improving the roads infrastructure to boost economic growth. They will also talk about investing in the green new deal initiatives and focus on sustainable job creation, which was all but ignored in this Budget. Such an investment would not only help tackle climate change but the measures proposed have the ability to help lift vulnerable people out of fuel poverty and, crucially, provide opportunities for very significant job creation.

Finally, instead of handing them back, DSD moneys should be reinvested in house building to boost the construction industry. As has been well rehearsed in this House, house building is labour intensive and consumes considerable quantities of locally-sourced material, so it offers a high economic-multiplier effect. It is essential that we properly consider such options while debating the Budget to provide a better way of life for all of our people. A Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle, gabhaim buíochas leat as ucht na deise cainte.

Mr Cree: Yesterday, we approved the spring Supplementary Estimates and Vote on Account, and I appreciate that a new Bill needs to be in place before the end of the financial year. However, this year will complete the third year of Budget 2011-15, which means that we will shortly be entering the final year. It is crucial that we examine what targets have been achieved and what remains to be done.

We discussed, at some length, the savings delivery plans that Departments were required to meet. What is the situation on real savings that have been achieved? One Minister — the Minister of Education — refused to cooperate and opted out of the plan. This is the same Minister who blocked the financial review process and frustrated the clear will of the House. The Northern Ireland Assembly attracts a lot of criticism, some of it ill-advised, but how can we explain to our citizens that the Executive cannot even agree two non-political and non-contentious plans to improve the running of government in this place?

3.45 pm

I would like to revisit the use of consultants. A target of 10% year-on-year reductions was expected: what progress has been made there? I continue to be concerned about the way in which we handle financial transactions capital (FTC). This is a relatively new area of economic development and has considerable potential. Will the Minister tell me what formal plans have been put in place to maximise this investment opportunity, bearing in mind that a structured approach is necessary? It is also essential to have a close working relationship with the private sector, bearing in mind the lead time for capital projects.

Yesterday, the Minister drew attention, as another Member has done, to the £15 million being held that may have to be paid to the Treasury because of the delay in dealing with welfare reform. I understand that it is being held in the centre. What other moneys are there now, and what is his best estimate of what will be there at year end?

In the past, use has been made of overcommitment to prevent moneys being returned to the Treasury as a result of money not being spent as anticipated in the Budget. We also now have the provision of headroom to safeguard against late underspends. Will the Minister clarify the total provision available now and the estimated total for the year end? I am sure that he will agree that there is a danger of resources being spent on low-priority areas, should there be surplus funds towards year end.

Colleagues from my party will address other issues in the Bill during the debate. They will arrive shortly, I am quite sure.

Mr Dickson: The Budget gives us the opportunity to reflect on recent financial changes across various portfolios and the impact that budgetary decisions have on the services that the Assembly ultimately delivers. The financial stability of our Budget sends out a very strong signal. I am sure that the Finance Minister would agree that that signal goes out not only to our community and those who benefit from the Budget that we spend inside Northern Ireland but, most importantly, to investors and businesses wishing to contribute to Northern Ireland, perhaps from outside.

Financial stability is very important to any economy, and the stability of our Budget and how we budget is important.

Therefore, perhaps one of the biggest issues presenting instability today is the difficulties that we are having with welfare reform. We have been told that we are facing a fine of some £5 million and that is just a short-term cost. In the long term, if we do not move on with this legislation, the costs could be astronomical, with the Finance Minister suggesting recently a figure of £1 billion. The figure may be in dispute, but the fact that there is and will continue to be a cost of doing nothing is indisputable.

I do not support every part of the welfare legislation, but the place to have opposed it was in Westminster. The room that we have in this House is for local determination, and I support that within the overall framework of the Bill. However, what there is not room for is a continued Mexican stand-off between parties. What we need is constructive dialogue on the Welfare Reform Bill, not a megaphone debate.

We must act in the interests of the whole of Northern Ireland by taking part in constructive negotiations among the political parties in order to discuss what possible key refinements can be made to the Bill as it is brought to the Assembly. It is essential that this is progressed now before wider cuts are needed to other services that also deliver alleviations to poverty, and we start to see a domino effect on some of the poorest and most vulnerable in our society.

I will turn now to local government reform, ongoing reform and the cost of local government. We will need to consider the significant cost of the merger of councils. Of course, this will save money in the long run, but these costs will be borne by the Department or by ratepayers. It is worth asking the Minister whether extra resources will be allocated from within DOE or whether more money will be allocated from the centre. This is, after all, a public administration review and not just a single-Department review, and so should be supported centrally. I am also interested in knowing how the Executive plan to ensure that the new shadow councils manage the mergers of debts and rate convergence for the benefit of ratepayers and business rate payers.

Health is perhaps the largest spending Department, so fluctuations in spend have significant knock-on effects, specifically because extra money has been allocated to tackle winter pressures this year. That has not solved the problems for this year or for future monitoring rounds. I would like to know how the Finance Minister has dealt with the Department of Health with regard to these allocations and how they will be adjusted to reflect likely increases in winter pressures, not only this year but into the future.

Given that Transforming Your Care is being implemented against a backdrop of falling resources and that it appears that it is being implemented poorly, does the Minister feel that the financial and human resources available for Transforming Your Care are adequate? Health resources will likely be in user strain for the foreseeable future. These two issues concern essential cross-departmental work. We need to ensure that they are managed, and managed properly.

In education, the Minister recently mentioned that he is considering putting extra money into his reform of school funding so that the vast majority of schools will no longer lose out. I do not think that that has been formalised, and it is not clear where the money is coming from. Schools, governors, teachers and principals need clarity on how this is to ensure to ensure correct budgeting so that all of our children will benefit.

There are also wider points to consider that are not Department-specific. One example is the reallocation of capital funding which we have seen due to the failure of the A5 road scheme this year. Capital reallocation makes it clear that greater planning is needed to ensure that there are ready-to-run capital projects that are always able to go, so that underspends can be reallocated and capital budgets more effectively managed. This does not always require more money, but it perhaps requires better management across the Executive's funding. What actions is the Minister of Finance taking to ensure that his Executive colleagues are meeting their obligations on these matters?

On European money, the issue is better use of resource rather than need for more resource. The Maze peace centre is an exemplar of politics trumping investment. We need to ensure that every Department is doing its best to draw down the maximum sums of money from European funding. I also argue that competitiveness funds are key here. DFP should provide assistance to make sure that they are used by other Departments and agencies in an innovative manner.

Additionally, it would be worthwhile to call for a benchmarking project to see how our budgets shape up compared to other smaller regions. For example, we have talked in the past about spending more on economic growth and capital funding, although this obviously has to come from somewhere.

I have these direct questions for the Minister: when will the Executive agree an overarching approach for the allocation of the one-year 2015-16 Budget? Will the various Committees be given adequate time to engage with the relevant Departments in that process, given the extension of the Assembly mandate for one further year?

Finally, my party has highlighted in the past the high cost of division, as I am sure the House is well aware. Too many schools, too many riots and too many scared-off investors contribute to a massive problem for the Northern Ireland economy. These are obviously long-term problems. We should begin by undertaking an exercise to calculate them so that Ministers at least know how to go about tackling them in the future, if they have the desire to do so.

Mr Weir: I support the Bill. Quite naturally, a number of Members have bombarded the Minister with a list of questions that he will have to answer in his winding-up speech. I am sure that the Minister will be glad to hear that I will not go down that route. There is a slight danger of this being like an old episode of 'Record Breakers', with the Minister performing the role of Norris McWhirter in the chair. I am half expecting somebody to ask him what the fastest land animal is or what the largest tree in the world is. I will not tax his powers of knowledge on those issues. I will simply address some of the issues that are in front of us.

I welcome the Budget. Our Budget-setting process is a sensible one that is based on sound financial projections. Although there has been some criticism of the fact that this is part of a wider package of a Budget running over a comprehensive spending review (CSR) period, it is a sensible way of doing things.

If you go back far enough, not just in Northern Ireland but across the UK in other jurisdictions, to when Budget Bills and Budget statements were driven by the needs of one particular year, there was a criticism that Budgets were almost like an oscillating rollercoaster — a Chancellor would make an announcement depending on whether the Government wanted to have a year of austerity or a giveaway Budget in the run-up to an election. The end result was that no great certainty was produced in the economy or in Departments.

In recent years, while there has still been flexibility to make adjustments and deal with individual circumstances, the movement towards a much more strategic look at the Budget over a longer period, particularly in Northern Ireland as we are, in many ways, dependent on our block grant and CSR settlements, seems sensible.

This is a Budget based on firm figures. I was not particularly persuaded by the Member on the opposite Benches who had a long list of schemes that could be transferred. They were almost like get-rich-quick schemes. I wonder whether he was expecting the Department of Finance and Personnel to invest in a goldmine in South America as a way of generating additional money. When my colleague questioned him about the cost of a range of things, he said that he did not know and that we should try to find out. To my mind, that is very much like advocating a range of tax-varying powers without having a clue what it would cost. That is very much like approaching someone to buy a car, agreeing to buy the car, signing for the car —

Mr D Bradley: Will the Member give way?

Mr Weir: I will extend to the Member the same courtesy that he gave to me, so I will not give way. The Member had the opportunity to deal with this point when he was on his feet and refused to give way to me.

The SDLP's approach seems to be to buy the car and find out the cost later. To me, those seem to be the economics of the madhouse. We have something that is based much more on reality.

Mr D Bradley: Twice in one day. [Interruption.]

Mr Weir: Indeed. I look around the Chamber, and I will come to the other issue in a short while. There is no shortage of madhouses around here.

There are two or three issues that I want to touch on in the context of the Budget. First, in local taxation, there is variability on the broad issue of rate increases. I welcome the move made by my party and by many others in local government to try to keep rates to a minimum. In recent days, zero rate rises have been agreed at a local level in Dungannon, Craigavon and Belfast.

Mr G Robinson: And in Limavady.

Mr Weir: And in Limavady, according to information on my right.

Clearly, that is a good thing as we try to ease the burden on people in tough economic circumstances, but that is valuable only if the approach to minimising rates is also taken at a central level. I am glad that, for one of many years, rises have been kept to a maximum of the rate of inflation, which is sensible.

The end result is that our business rates and non-domestic rates compare extremely favourably with other parts of the United Kingdom: for example, the average business rates bill for 2014-15 in Northern Ireland, excluding reliefs and exemptions — many generous reliefs and exemptions have been built in here — will be £10,819, which compares with an estimated figure of around £15,000 in England. When you consider that the average domestic ratepayer in Northern Ireland pays roughly half what is paid across the water, it shows that the Executive, and the Finance Minister in particular, are very cognisant of the difficult positions in which businesses and families have been put as a result of the recession and have tried to keep that burden to a minimum.

For example, increases to the regional rate have been frozen in real terms for the past seven years as a result of decisions taken by the Executive. Given that, under direct rule, we sometimes saw double-digit increases, that is something to be borne in mind. Set against that is the fact that, particularly for businesses, we have a range of reliefs in place. For example, on small business rate relief, the reliefs that apply to empty retail units and small business support mean that more than 50% of businesses receive some form of relief.

4.00 pm

Obviously, the issue of rates in the Budget will become particularly pertinent as we move towards rates convergence. On that basis, as indicated in the Budget, up to £30 million has been allocated over the next three years to try to smooth the passage for people as they move, in some cases, from areas of lower rates to areas of higher rates. I think that it is right that ratepayers be protected, and, indeed, a quarter of a million ratepayers will have an adjustment in connection with that. It will also help ease the burden for councils, because it is undoubtedly accepted that the initial costs of RPA will be largely focused on the early years. That will allow councils the opportunity to reduce their costs through convergence, but it is a challenge to them to do that. From that point of view, the same commitment that local councils have given in recent weeks to a zero or low-level rates increase has to be matched in the overall fiscal position as we move ahead.

As part of the Budget process on rates, revaluation for non-domestic properties is an issue that will be tackled. It is important to realise that there are expectations to be met. Sometimes, there is a failure to grasp how rates work. Some businesses make an assumption that, because their value has gone down or, indeed, because they are doing less trade than they were six years ago, revaluation will automatically lead to a reduction in their level of rates. The key thing to realise is that it is a comparative realignment, so, consequently, businesses will see a reduction in rates only if they have declined in rateable value at a swifter rate than the average. Therefore, it is an issue that the Assembly has to manage, as far as the challenges that are there are concerned.

As has been mentioned, it is important that the Budget look at delivering services for the best possible value. I remember one of the previous Finance Ministers, who is now the First Minister, highlighting the fact that one of the problems in making an assessment of public sector spend was that, at times, there was almost an assumption in Departments that 99% of what was spent last year would essentially go unchallenged and that the focus would be only on areas in which you were looking at either additionality or small cuts. Therefore, I support the current Finance Minister's commitment in the Budget process to the public sector reform division, to looking at the ways in which we can tackle public expenditure, and to looking at the ways in which Departments and business areas deliver public services. I say that from not only an economic point of view but a delivery point of view. It is a very important decision that the Minister has taken.

Undoubtedly, we have a sound Budget, and that is true as of this moment. However, it would be remiss of me to suggest that there is not an elephant in the room — one that is becoming bigger and bigger as time moves on — and it is the potential impact of dodging the bullet on welfare reform. As has been indicated, even for 2013-14, the Finance Minister has had to set aside £15 million, potentially for payback for that. The longer that this issue goes unresolved, the higher that figure will escalate. The estimates are that in 2014-15 it will reach £105 million, stretching forward to an annual drain on the Executive's resources of around about £363 million in 2018-19. The cumulative effect over those five years, calculated purely on what is being lost to the block grant, will be over £1 billion.

As I indicated, if we do not reach a swift resolution, the loss in 2014-15 will be £105 million, or, to put it in context, 2,500 teachers or over 2,000 nurses. That is the stark reality. It is not simply a question from a financial point of view of people in the House defending their ground. This will have a real impact on services on the ground, and we have to recognise that this is hitting all our constituents.

However, it also goes beyond that. Some 1,410 jobs are essentially dependent on the outsourced work that local workers do for DWP to provide a service for the whole of the United Kingdom. Quite frankly, if we decide simply to go down our own path or to keep on delaying welfare reform, that will have an impact on those people. There will not be work for them. Why on earth would DWP outsource work to an area that does not follow the remainder of welfare reform?

That will then have an impact on the Budget. If we have a situation where, instead of drawing money into this economy, we add to the numbers of unemployed, that will clearly have a dramatic impact. Similarly, we are facing a crunch with the withdrawal of DWP computer systems, which will mean that, from 2016 onwards, we will start seeing a situation where there is a very real threat to a range of benefits. That money will simply cease, because the computer systems will not be there to process the benefits. If we seek to fill the gap by providing our own computer systems, in each of those six different areas, the bill could be up to £300 million. That is a frightening and sobering prospect in the context of this Budget. Yesterday and today, the Minister was right to highlight that issue. Welfare reform is the elephant in the room, and there is a catastrophe potentially coming down the road for all our constituents if the issue is not grasped soon.

On that note, I welcome this Budget Bill. However, the Budget must come with a very severe health warning. If irresponsibility continues in welfare reform, as the year moves on, we will see further pressures and necessary cuts in public services, which will impact on everyone. The gap will grow greater and greater until it is unsustainable. With that warning, I urge Members to support the Budget Bill as it represents what I believe to be a sound Budget presented by the Finance Minister.

Mr McQuillan: I welcome the opportunity to speak on the Bill as a member of the Finance and Personnel Committee and as a Member for the constituency of East Londonderry.

The Bill is intended to have a very important outcome, which is Departments' ability to draw down funds for the remainder of this financial year and, from April 2014, for the beginning of the new year. We all know too well the importance of the Bill, as a failure to agree the vote on the budget in the USA late last year left it at a standstill. I therefore trust that we will not find ourselves in such a position.

The economy has come through many a storm in the past seven or so years, and there finally appears to be light at the end of the tunnel, with some evidence of economic growth and movement in the property market. Nevertheless, we need not breathe a sigh of relief just yet, as we continue to see job losses, such as those that were lost at Mivan in Antrim. We therefore need to continue to see investment in training so that we can see young people adopt much-needed trades and those who have lost their jobs or suffered setbacks retrained to re-engage in the economy and grow the private sector.

I also want to see investment in early years education. That is central to our economy on two fronts: it is the keystone of investment in our children; and it gives them the best start in life as they begin their education. Early years education has suffered cutbacks in recent years, and working parents have been unable to secure places for their children. The latter point is serious. If there are few or no spaces, the children suffer as well as the parents. I want to see more investment in early years for our children, their parents and our economy at present and in future.

I also call on the Education Minister to look at the way in which early years are funded. It is sometimes November before a school knows what funding it is to receive. The sooner that changes, the better for all concerned. A school needs to know much earlier in the year how much money it has for the year ahead.

Investment in our workforce is also needed. I ask the Minister of Finance and Personnel when police support staff, who formed the backbone of the Police Service of Northern Ireland, with many also forming the backbone of the RUC, will see the back pay that they are entitled to. That has been on the cards for some time, and I am as keen as they are to see what they are due being paid to them.

I also ask the Minister for an update on the non-domestic and domestic rate valuations. Valuations of domestic and non-domestic properties have not been carried out for some time. I am therefore keen to ensure that rates valuations are as reflective today as they were in previous years, given the changes in the property market. I know that the process of valuation has begun for non-domestic rates. Can the Minister therefore provide the House with an update on any progress made to date as well as an update on the domestic rates valuation?

The small business rate relief scheme has been extended and continued over the past number of financial years. I am therefore keen to see the scheme continue beyond 2015. That is a small way of helping our small business community in Northern Ireland, especially those on the high street, something that I am keen to preserve. An extension to the scheme as it stands would be welcomed by the small business community in recognition of the importance of small businesses to our economy. I thank Members for listening and commend all that I have said to the House. I support the Bill.

Mr P Ramsey: As SDLP spokesperson on employment and learning, I want to focus on some areas of concern to us. The SDLP opposed the 2011-15 Budget for a number of important reasons, many of which my colleagues highlighted yesterday and will continue to highlight today.

One major cause of concern that we flagged up regarding the Budget in 2011 was the fact that the Department for Employment and Learning was asked to make a resource saving totalling nearly £400 million across the four Budget years. When the Budget was set, we highlighted the danger that it failed to provide clarity on student finance, student fees and the educational maintenance allowance while proposing substantial cuts that would put additional pressure and stress on students, who already face an uphill struggle to gain further and higher education, and would limit their access to learning and training in their preferred field.

Yet in the years since the DUP and Sinn Féin passed the 2011 Budget, we have still not gained clarity on funding for further and higher education. The discussion regarding an increase in student fees is ongoing. That is, of course, close to my heart, as I know the benefit that a rise in the student cap would be to Derry and the north-west. A substantial university campus in Derry is the primary and key investment in the economic regeneration plan that would enable substantial economic and social growth in the entire north-west region of Northern Ireland.

The economic strategy of Northern Ireland, and of developed regions globally, is predicated on knowledge-based industries. Cities and regions with a strong university presence can achieve a sustainable advantage in those industries. However, rather than provide additional funding, it appears that the Executive are content with the continued export of our knowledge-based students.

Investment in the science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM) subjects — I know that a number of members of the Employment and Learning Committee see them as vital to the future — and promoting and progressing them consistently is essential for the development of a strong knowledge-based and skilled workforce. We see that continuously, and I am sure that other Members will make reference to it. Without such investment, our young people and students will be disadvantaged and our economic growth will be hindered, precisely when we should be preparing to take advantage of the beginnings of a potential global financial upturn. In that regard, a failure of the Minister to safeguard successful local delivery agents for Steps to Work so that they could deliver the new programme was a strange decision. Again, it is a matter that has caused concern in the Employment and Learning Committee.

4.15 pm

The Finance Minister may not be in a position to respond to that, but of the eight bidders who have secured preferred status, seven are UK-based companies. When we have models of success across Northern Ireland through local companies in Steps to Work, it amazes and, frankly, shocks me that they have been excluded from the process. Building a new employment programme by putting those who sought to deliver it locally out of a job is not building any confidence or helping to deliver capacity across all regions in Northern Ireland. Therefore, although it is welcome that the employment Minister recently brought forward Enabling Success, a strategy to reduce economic inactivity, the SDLP will be sure to critically analyse that and respond to the consultation, as will the members of the Employment and Learning Committee.

Despite the major cuts to the DEL budget included in the 2011-15 Budget, which we will discuss today, I trust that adequate funding will be found to tackle the endemic problem of economic inactivity. We have not been given any figures in the strategy, a most welcome strategy from the Minister for Employment and Learning and the Minister with responsibility for economic development, Arlene. It will be interesting to see whether the Minister of Finance has any inkling of what sort of funding streams will be in place to progress that much-needed programme across a number of the regions where there are hotspots of economic inactivity much higher than the Northern Ireland average.

Given the problems that we have experienced around apprenticeships in the past, it is notable that they warrant only two references in the Enabling Success strategy. Questions must be asked about the massive saving, almost £130 million, to be made by DEL in 2014-15 and how that ties in with the priorities of stimulating the economy and creating opportunities. That is a higher saving in the period than in any other Department. The Executive need to ask themselves how seriously they take the functions of the Employment and Learning Department.

We require new thinking and funding for apprenticeships. Training centres of old were fit for purpose and, at that time, in that economy and in their area, provided good, traditional trades. We need to go back to that. We need to be more creative with companies across Northern Ireland as we come out of recession. However, new models must be adequately funded. A new programme is looking at senior, higher levels of apprenticeships, which is most welcome, but we cannot forget that traditional apprenticeships are the core of small companies and contractors across Northern Ireland.

Although the strategy is referenced in a commitment in the Programme for Government (PFG), it is not referenced in the Budget. That is because the Budget was set beforehand. Given that, over the past 30 years, our economic inactivity levels have never dropped below 25% of the working-age population, it is surprising that the issue was not in the Budget. However, now that the Ministers are set to produce a policy to tackle the issue, it is yet another example of how we cannot rely on a Budget that is clearly years out of date to best manage our finances, provide sound planning and allow for transparency and accountability. It is also an example of how Executive Ministers can work cross-departmentally on issues of importance to our economy. However, given that the Ministers were unable to appear jointly in front of the Enterprise, Trade and Investment Committee to discuss the strategy, it is certainly not something that you would hold up as a shining example. Instead, I again request, on behalf of the SDLP, that we produce a new and better Budget that does much more to stimulate economic activity in Northern Ireland.

I want to reference U4D, the University for Derry campaign in the north-west. A new report, which was, coincidentally, launched today, highlights a number of key areas for students and student movement. U4D is calling for a substantial expansion to the University of Ulster's Magee campus to bring Northern Ireland's higher education provision up to the levels achieved in the rest of the UK. The chair of U4D makes it very clear that the report reveals that Northern Ireland requires an additional 14,400 places at its universities just to match the existing level across Britain and England. The provision in England is increasing by 30,000 places this year precisely because the British Government realise the connection between the skills generated by a university education and the long-term health of the economy. I am mindful of comments made by the Minister before he was in post. He was certainly very supportive of the university base and the importance it plays in the economy. The chairperson of U4D said:

"It is only by increasing the skill base of the labour market in Derry-Londonderry and the wider North West that we will combat our unacceptably high rate of unemployment. Only the substantial expansion of university provision will turn our economy round."

My party has said consistently, as have all parties represented in the north-west that — and I say to the Finance Minister — the most important investment ever to take place in Derry will be the expansion of the Magee campus. We have had a limited increase in numbers over recent years. The One Plan for the city, which was accepted and adopted by the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, had, for example, an increase of over 7,000 full-time students at Magee. We do not see that materialising. Perhaps, the Minister would like to comment on that.

Some of the report's key points are as follows. Northern Ireland provides the highest proportion of school leavers going to universities of any of the UK areas. It has the smallest university sector of any of the UK regions. Our increased rate of school leavers going to university has been achieved only by a growing proportion of them going to Britain — not coming to universities here because we do not have the capacity to meet the demands and needs of our young people going forward. The loss of Northern Ireland's students to Britain is seriously damaging our productivity and industry, wealth generation and ability to grow our own businesses and attract inward investment.

I will move on to some Regional Development issues and the impact that the Budget Bill will have on the DRD work programme. I note in the Bill the reallocation of £108 million as a result of the A5 delay. The A5 project is still a major priority for the SDLP, as it is for other parties in the Chamber, and will remain so. It should remain so for the Minister. Perhaps, he will give us some of his thoughts on the way forward. The A5 project is more than just a road that gets people from A to B faster and safer: there is the crucial element of a hub, which will address economic and social deprivation as well as traffic issues. It is an important part of a cross-border project that is designed to address the negative elements of partition. It must remain so.

However, if it transpires that money set aside for that project is in danger of going back to the Treasury, we believe it should be spent on the A6 project. That is of direct benefit to the north-west, which has been starved of infrastructural money for decades. There is an acceptance from all political parties that that is the case. I recall in my earlier years, and the Principal Deputy Speaker will recall, that funding for infrastructural projects in the 1970s and 1980s was based on car ownership. When you had a city with high levels of unemployment and social deprivation such as Derry, that funding was never going to go there. It is interesting to reflect on that.

Most importantly, we want to see the Dungiven bypass going ahead even if that means decoupling it from the rest of the project. Separate it and let us get it done. Last week, I attended the Committee for Regional Development meeting to discuss my private Member's Bill on 25 mph restrictions in residential areas. I was asked about the issue and what I was going to do about concerns about pollution in Dungiven. It is for the House to address that issue. If Dungiven has the highest levels of pollution, we have a duty of care to its population. I know that Members John Dallat and Cathal Ó hOisín have been raising the issue for some time. It needs to be resolved.

Alongside the lack of investment in the Enterprise service and the failure to make progress on the A5, the political game playing on the Narrow Water Bridge project, which some of our other Members will speak to, is ensuring that yet another North/South infrastructural project, with obvious benefits to transport and tourism, is being frustrated for no benefit.

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr P Ramsey: Yes.

Mr Wells: You can blame many people for the failure of the Narrow Water Bridge project, but I do not think that Mr Hamilton falls into that category. The reality is that the Narrow Water Bridge project failed because the tender price was grossly underestimated. When the first tender came in, it was 80% higher than the figure that was given to the Special EU Programmes Body (SEUPB). The SEUPB was very quick to pull the offer of funding in December 2013, which did not give time for the shortfall to be made up. The Finance Minister's predecessor, Mr Wilson, provided money from the Northern Ireland block grant to make up our contribution for that. The Regional Development Minister approved the bridge order, and the planning Minister, who was, in fact, Mr Attwood, gave the planning approval and got it through as quickly as possible. So all the Executive Ministers in the Building played their part, but other issues outside the Assembly caused the loss of the project.

Mr P Ramsey: I take your point, but it is also the case that, with a bit of creativity and imagination and a wee bit more tolerance from the Finance Department, we might be in a better place now.

Likewise, it is imperative that Ministers in Dáil Éireann and the Northern Ireland Assembly recognise the need jointly to fund the operation of the Foyle ferry service to ensure its long-term viability. John Dallat, in particular, has been championing and advocating that service for some time. I know that he was in the Dáil recently, along with other Members, addressing the Committee there. It is important that that provision between Magilligan and Greencastle is protected. It greatly enhances the economic value on both sides, North and South, so it is important that we champion it as well. The SDLP is very clearly behind the Foyle ferry service to ensure that it is sustainable.

For so many of these issues, we require a Budget that provides for the reshaping of our transportation infrastructure in a way that is visionary and relative to a modern Europe, providing for our commercial needs, commuters, North/South linkages and tourism development.

Mrs Overend: As the Ulster Unionist spokesperson for enterprise, trade and investment, I welcome the opportunity to speak on the Second Stage of the Budget Bill. As was stated by the Minister and other Members, today's debate and vote give legislative effect to the spring Supplementary Estimates and the Vote on Account approved yesterday. In many ways, the real debate on the Estimates will take place in the summer. Nevertheless, I will take this opportunity to raise some questions about the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment's spending priorities at the end of this financial year and will look forward to 2014-15.

The Department's strapline and reason for existing is:

"to promote the growth of a competitive and export-led economy".

In that regard, prudent government spending on economic development, principally via the agency of Invest Northern Ireland and the development of tourism through the Northern Ireland Tourist Board and Tourism Ireland, is vital. Significant sums continue to be committed to the development of tourism, with a headline figure of £870,000, and to the agencies of the Northern Ireland Tourist Board and Tourism Ireland, with sums of £17.441 million and £14.375 million respectively. What we do not know from the figures presented in the Estimates is the value that we are getting from that spend or, as some would say, what bang we are getting for our buck.

We had Londonderry as the UK City of Culture in 2013. We also hosted the World Police and Fire Games last summer. This year, we look forward to hosting the Giro d'Italia. I welcome the fact that the Tourist Board has committed £3 million to that and that DETI has committed a further half a million pounds to the Tourist Board to cover some Giro d'Italia-related activities. Again, those sorts of events help to put us on the global tourism map. However, as legislators, we should be careful that we get a return on the investment that we put in to developing our tourism product. With the public investment that has been put in even at a time of recession, we should expect results through increased visitor numbers, increased hotel bed occupancy numbers and increased spend by tourists in Northern Ireland.

On economic development, Invest Northern Ireland is receiving an uplift in its budget from just under £130 million to over £160 million.

An issue that has been discussed with Invest Northern Ireland on many occasions is the move to talking and producing figures for jobs created rather than jobs promoted. Add that to the need for improved assessment of the value of exports from Northern Ireland and I will be a happier MLA. However, I must give credit where credit is due; from information presented to the Committee during earlier monitoring rounds, the £17 million spent on the purchase of the Invest Northern Ireland headquarters, which was previously leased under a PFI contract, should prove to be highly advantageous to the Northern Ireland taxpayer. The Northern Ireland taxpayer should always be in the forefront of our minds when we discuss budgets in the Chamber.

4.30 pm

Indeed, as we look forward to a better economic outlook for Northern Ireland, albeit somewhat slower than the rest of the UK, it is important that an ideal environment is created to enable businesses to access advice and support to grow exports, to innovate and to become world leaders in an increasing number of industries here in Northern Ireland.

As has been said before, access to Horizon 2020 funding for local large enterprises and, more importantly, for small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs), needs particular focus. In the previous time of framework 7, figures were produced that showed that one university in Dublin received more finance than the whole of Northern Ireland. Therefore, expert guidance by this Government is necessary.

Everyone in the House should know by now and recognise, as I do, the value of our agrifood sector in Northern Ireland and its potential for future growth for the Northern Ireland economy. Indeed, the agrifood strategy document 'Going for Growth' outlines that very potential. However, we have yet to see any real progress on that. In the January monitoring round, we saw £10 million capital being handed back to be reallocated to the 2014-15 financial year for the agrifood loan scheme. I hope that that scheme is available sooner rather than later.

Mr McQuillan mentioned the small business rate relief scheme. Indeed, this is something that SMEs have mentioned to me, and it should be extended beyond its current end date of 2015. I am heartened to guess that if the DUP called on the Finance Minister to extend it, maybe this one will be delivered.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Beggs] in the Chair)

As an Assembly Member for Mid Ulster, I could not leave the subject of finance without mentioning the community safety college planned for Desertcreat outside Cookstown. I should not need to inform the Minister of the need for the college, but my constituents cannot be blamed for being bitterly disappointed at the continual delays and the consequential increased cost to the taxpayer. I wonder whether the Minister can detail the effect that the movement of the timescale on the project will have on his budget.

Mr Deputy Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to voice my concerns. I look forward to the Minister's response.

Mr McCallister: Yesterday's debate on the Supplementary Estimates and the Vote on Account and today's Budget Bill debate make up a significant proportion of the Executive's annual budget process. I do not think that anyone in the Chamber would disagree when I say that the budgetary process of the Executive is complex and largely process-driven. The Budget, which is set for four years, supposedly in line with the Programme for Government targets, and the process we engaged in today and yesterday and through monitoring rounds is largely a financial management process.

The link between the strategic direction of the Government and the budgetary process is limited, by comparison with other places. My colleague Basil McCrea and others touched on that point yesterday. I would like to go into it in slightly more depth today, because I feel that it is vital, especially as the Executive go forward in their attempt to devolve corporation tax.

Scotland, by comparison, holds an annual budget, which is something that I strongly advocate for Northern Ireland. That annual process comprises the publication of a draft budget for the following year in September or October, which sets the Government's detailed spending plans for the following year. The Scottish Parliament and the public are consulted on those plans, and they are debated in December by the Parliament. That is followed by a Budget Bill phase, which begins in January with the Bill setting out the Minister's spending plans for the following year. The Bill goes through full parliamentary and Committee scrutiny, with the Finance Committee taking on considerably more scrutiny responsibilities than the Committee on which I sit.

That phase is followed by a Budget strategy phase, which takes place in the spring prior to the next UK spending review and is intended to allow the Parliament to scrutinise the progress that the Scottish Government are making on delivering their targets. That is largely missing from this place: the Programme for Government is written after the formation of the Government and then largely ignored as a tool to hold this Government to account.

The Scottish Budget process is designed to encourage the participation of the people of Scotland in the debate about how the Budget is spent. If we compare that process with Northern Ireland's budgetary process, we see that the difference is considerable. One lends itself to openness and enhances accountability; the other is often devoid of any meaningful link to the Executive's priorities and the Programme for Government.

I note the Committee for Finance and Personnel's review of the financial process and the recommendations for improving the Budget process in this place. Many of its recommendations reflect the process in Scotland. May I point out that when some of that was happening, and when some of those recommendations were being made, the now Minister was possibly a member of the Finance Committee?

I note that, yesterday, the Finance Minister stated:

"I am as frustrated as everyone who raised the issue at the lack of progress on the review."

He went on:

"I strongly agree that this is an area where we need to see reform of what are outdated processes." — [Official Report, This Bound Volume, p378, col 2.]

He appeared to lay the blame for the lack of progress with the Minister of Education. I am afraid that that answer and that approach are simply not good enough, for a number of reasons. Improving the Budget process is important now. In fact, with the Executive's commitment to devolving corporation tax, it is vital. That is why the Minister's answer is inadequate.

In light of new fiscal powers contained in the Scotland Act 2012, there is a debate in Scotland, right now, on how further to improve the budgetary process of the Government and the scrutiny powers of the Scottish Parliament, with particular emphasis on the role of a Finance Committee, which already has more extensive duties and powers than ours. The current Scottish Finance Committee scrutinises the financial memorandum of all legislation that the Scottish Government produce.

In the near future, Scotland will have to consider additional tax rates and allowances that will come under its control through the Scotland Act. Those powers might change again in the future, depending on the outworkings of the referendum. There is a complex procedure for the rate of income tax. It involves the consideration of issues and the accuracy of the forecast of tax revenues made by the Office for Budget Responsibility and, indeed, of regional economic data. This will add up to a much greater fiscal risk for Scotland because, if it chooses to vary income tax, its income may no longer be guaranteed.

As a supporter of devolving further powers, I welcome that risk. It is grown-up, accountable politics. It is also grown up and accountable that the Scottish are ahead of Northern Ireland in their financial scrutiny and are prepared to enhance that even further. When we compare that with the approach to financial scrutiny and the devolution of further tax-varying powers to Northern Ireland, the difference is, again, stark. Scotland held a far-reaching commission to examine the issues in their entirety and to make progress on financial scrutiny. However, despite the Executive's unanimous support for devolving corporation tax, what preparations for enhanced scrutiny have we made in the House and, indeed, in the Finance Committee?

The issues surrounding corporation tax are also significant. Of all the viable taxes that can be devolved, it is the most volatile, meaning that forecasts and tax returns vary considerably year on year. If used, that will increase fiscal risk, making it considerably more difficult to plan spending. On top of that, making the case for devolving corporation tax has proven that Northern Ireland has weak regionalised economic data. It is still unclear as to what the actual corporation tax take is for Northern Ireland. The data needs to improve significantly.

For many of those reasons, NI21 advocates looking at the issues of devolving fiscal powers in a broader manner, examining all the potential taxes and looking at which are best for incentivising economic development, while minimising and limiting the fiscal risk.

The debate surrounding the devolution of corporation tax has not examined the implications for our budgetary process and scrutiny. I believe that that is a major oversight on the part of the Executive, especially the previous Finance Minister, who may not have been just as enthusiastic about devolving corporation tax as the current Minister is.

I note that Sinn Féin raised the issue of devolving more fiscal powers at its ard fheis at the weekend. I must warn that few will take that seriously when one of its Ministers is holding up reform of the budgetary process in Northern Ireland, which I have described previously as being vital to the successful implementation of devolving fiscal powers. Therefore, it is not grown-up politics if you ignore the scrutiny and do not take the tough decisions. We have to get to the stage of having grown-up politics that welcomes scrutiny of a Budget process, that will take the tough decisions and that will explain to our electorate why those tough decisions are having to be taken. At present, Sinn Féin is in government and comfortable in government, but it has the skill for ignoring uncomfortable issues and pretending that they are nothing to do with the party.

I ask the Finance Minister whether he believes the current Budget process and scrutiny provisions to be fit for corporation tax to be devolved into. Indeed, if they are not, will that be an additional stumbling block that he will face? If the Minister says that they are not fit, will Treasury agree with that analysis? Will Treasury even consider devolving the powers to this place if the scrutiny provisions are not fit? The Minister needs to have those discussions with Treasury. I assume that he has had discussions with Treasury on corporation tax.

The House will be aware that I am in favour of reforming these institutions and that I support the introduction of an opposition. Just as the Finance Minister has stated that he does not want to reform public service delivery on a personal whim, I do not want to introduce an opposition and reform the ability of the House to scrutinise the Government because of personal impulses. The introduction of an opposition would be good for democracy and public engagement, and, ultimately, good for public service delivery and our economy.

Mr Ross: We are used to debating and discussing Budgets in fairly gloomy economic periods, and I suppose that what we are dealing with in Northern Ireland at the moment is a hangover from the tough economic times of recent years.

I listened to the contribution from Mr Pat Ramsey earlier, and he talked about many of the difficulties that young people in Northern Ireland are facing, which are issues that we are dealing with on the Committee for Employment and Learning. Many young people find themselves out of work or not in any sort of formal education or training, and that is a real issue that is affecting so many people. We both had the opportunity to go to the European employment conference in Brussels at the end of last year, and it, in many ways, put into context the difficulties that we are facing in Northern Ireland.

We still have far too high a youth unemployment rate; of that there is no doubt. However, when we compare that with the 60% rate of youth unemployment in places such as Greece, the 57% in Spain and the rates in Italy, Portugal and even south of the border, we see that some places face much worse difficulties than Northern Ireland. Nevertheless, it is absolutely right that, in the Budget, public spending is targeted towards schemes that will help young people to get into work.

Mr Ramsey talked about apprentices, and we know that the Minister for Employment and Learning is working on a new approach to apprenticeships. It is important that those are well funded. There is also the potential that we may need to give some financial assistance to some employers to take on some of those apprentices. However, again, I think that this Budget will cover and identify that.

4.45 pm

I listened to Mr Ramsey say that one of the greatest challenges that we face in our local economy is young people going across to GB and not coming back. The way in which we can encourage those young people to come back to Northern Ireland and to contribute to our economy is by ensuring that we have the jobs in place to attract them back. We should keep that in mind when we are discussing economic matters today.

I said that we are used to discussing gloomy economic periods. Perhaps the Finance Minister will be glad that he came into post when he did, because there are definitely positive signs of growth in the economy. Unemployment has fallen for 11 consecutive months in Northern Ireland. We have seen in the region of 1·2% growth in the local economy. That does not sound massive, but, compared with where we have been in the past number of years, it is definitely an encouraging sign.

Many of us who speak to construction companies in our constituencies or across Northern Ireland will know that they are much more positive about the future. I always think that, if the construction sector is more confident, it is a good sign that the economy is heading in the right direction.

Forecasts from Danske Bank's report on consumer confidence show that it is at the highest level in four years, and the Ulster Bank purchasing managers' index again reported an increase in business activity during December, which is the sixth consecutive month that that has happened. So, there is definitely positive news.

There is always a point during Budget debates when Members have to discuss what is going on in their constituencies. In recent weeks, there have been two positive developments in my constituency, East Antrim. First, the Caterpillar plant in Larne has received £5·4 million investment to permanently source axles. Last week, the First Minister, the deputy First Minister and the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment were at the Ryobi plant in Carrickfergus to announce a £32 million investment that will create 100 new jobs and bring the workforce to 385.

Those are examples locally where we are starting to see more encouraging signs in the economy. I think that the Budget process should take note of how we have used public money to help to support some of that job creation. I pay tribute to the Ministers and to Invest Northern Ireland for the work that they have done in going overseas on trade missions and meeting companies, as well as for the work that they have done locally in attracting companies to come and invest in Northern Ireland.

I think that it is important to say that, even during the difficult global times, Northern Ireland has performed reasonably well in attracting inward investment. It has been said many times before, but it is important that we reiterate today that, outside London, Northern Ireland is the most successful part of the United Kingdom in drawing in inward investment. I think that that is a hugely significant statement, and it is particularly encouraging.

I had the opportunity to speak at a Northern Ireland Council for Voluntary Action (NICVA) conference a fortnight ago that was on how young people today are finding life very difficult in more disadvantageous circumstances than those that previous generations experienced. Although I do not necessarily agree with that sentiment, young people are undoubtedly facing difficulties. However, there are also far more opportunities in Northern Ireland today than there have been for young people before.

I noticed a slide from the economist Richard Ramsey that pointed to many of the firms that are now situated in Northern Ireland and are offering graduates jobs for young people. Those include, to name just a few, the New York Stock Exchange, Liberty, Chicago Mercantile Exchange, Allstate, Oracle, Allen and Overy, and Capita. Of course, we also have HBO situated at the Titanic Quarter, and it is producing the 'Game of Thrones' TV show, which is a massive hit right across the world. Today, I noticed reports in the media about there potentially being a huge contract for Bombardier to build wings and fuselages in Belfast, and that will have a positive knock-on effect.

All that work is the result of Ministers' activities and the work of Invest Northern Ireland in ensuring that we provide support to some companies to create jobs in Northern Ireland. Recent announcements include: 993 jobs in Stream, 650 in Allstate, 416 in Terumo, 263 in Terex, 229 in Almac, 179 in Linden Foods, and 177 in Deloitte. Those are positive announcements that have been made over the past six to 12 months, and they have provided quality employment for people here.

Moreover, 75% of companies that invest in Northern Ireland reinvest here. That is hugely important. It is a tribute to our workforce and to the skills that we are developing among our young people. It is also a tribute to the support that the Government are giving to companies to ensure that they come here, invest and come back again. That positive result has meant that Northern Ireland is the number-one location in the world for financial technology investment. That is hugely significant, and it should be celebrated right across the Chamber. Of course, as Mr Ramsey said earlier, we need to keep developing the skills of young people and investing financial resources in them to ensure that they have the skills that will help us to attract larger companies to Northern Ireland.

I spoke at the South Eastern Regional College (SERC) in recent weeks. It pointed to the fact that it was able to tailor courses to the requirements of companies. Allen and Overy, which is a huge legal firm that came to Northern Ireland, required a particular set of skills from young people to provide employment. The further education colleges were able to adapt their courses to provide the skills that employers need. That is hugely important. We need a joined-up approach between government and our colleges and universities to ensure that we give young people the skills that will find them employment.

Another important point is that we need to continue to fund the work of Invest Northern Ireland. If we are convinced that the economy is starting to recover, there will be more opportunities to attract major companies to Northern Ireland. It is important that we continue to have that level of funding available to attract jobs as the economy picks up.

We would make a mistake if we think that, because there are positive economic times ahead, there will be more public money to throw at various pet projects. Anybody who believes that should take note of recent comments by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who said that we are yet to get halfway along the road of austerity. That means that, even if the economy is picking up, there will be further restrictions on public funding in years to come. It is important that we deal with that issue maturely and that we recognise that there will be further challenges in the Budget period ahead as we work to pay off the national debt. We still have not made an impact on the national debt. The deficit has been reduced, but the debt is still growing. We need to make sure that we pay attention to that.

We need to bear in mind four main things during this Budget period: we need to target the spending in the Budget carefully; we need to reduce the wasting of public money; we need to reform in order to be more efficient; and we need to target fiscal powers carefully. Those issues have been raised by other Members. Potentially, they are the four most important issues that we deal with.

I listened to the comments of Mrs Overend earlier. She is absolutely right: we want to spend money where we get the most bang for our buck and where we get a return on the investment. As I said, when the economy is picking up, we have the opportunity to spend and target public money to attract the sort of jobs that we want to see here. We do not want to miss out on any opportunities, which we might do so if the budget is not in place for Invest Northern Ireland to do its work across the world in attracting such jobs.

It is not the Government that create jobs; we set the right environment for companies to invest and entrepreneurs to flourish. That also means that there will be challenges not only in having the right Budget but in reforming our employment law to make sure that we are more attractive as a region to investors and companies, that we have the right support in place, and that we continue to work on skills. We want Northern Ireland to be the most business-friendly environment anywhere in Europe.

I outlined some of the recent successes in the form of jobs announcements. I perhaps omitted to announce that the economy Minister is in Singapore and was able to announce another success yesterday, with HeartSine Technologies winning a major contract to supply automated external defibrillators to the Singapore Ministry of Defence. That is another positive outcome of the sort of work that our Ministers are involved in.

A Member mentioned the importance of exports and supporting companies to export. That is another example of how we can use public money to give support to local companies, particularly SMEs, in taking the first step in exporting. If we are to grow and transform our economy, we need to encourage more companies to take the risk and export for the first time.

Last week, I was at a dinner in this Building for the NI-NL trade organisation, which is concerned with building links between Northern Ireland and the Netherlands. The Netherlands is a perfect place for companies to export to for the first time because of the cultural similarities, its location in Europe and its size. Public money has been used to provide support to companies to go there for the first time through the Going Dutch programme, and that has been hugely successful.

Mrs Overend talked about the importance of tourism events and ensuring that there is money in the Budget to support some of the major events that we have tried to attract to Northern Ireland in recent years. We have had the MTV Awards, the Irish Open, the City of Culture, the Clipper Round the World Yacht Race, the World Police and Fire Games and the G8, and, later this year, the Giro d'Italia will come to Northern Ireland. Those are all significant events. Mrs Overend is right that the primary purpose of having those tourism-type events is to attract people to Northern Ireland to spend money and time.

However, they also have the benefit of changing global perceptions of what Northern Ireland is all about. It is important that money is made available in the Budget to the Tourist Board to continue its work in attracting major events to Northern Ireland and change global perceptions of what this place is capable of doing.

We are working on further events for future years. The Rugby World Cup has been mentioned as an event that we could benefit from, and it is important that that is financed well. We also had the recent announcement of the extension of the Belfast Waterfront. That will allow us to attract large conferences to Northern Ireland and will bring to Belfast many thousands of people who will spend money. That is the type of project where public money is used to the benefit of the Northern Ireland economy, and it is a prime example of how we can get more bang for our buck, as Mrs Overend talked about.

One of the other areas that we have to talk about is reducing waste. If we accept that we will face tighter fiscal circumstances in the years to come, we have to reduce waste. I will not go over the issue of welfare reform again, but I think that my colleague Mr Weir highlighted some of the real difficulties and challenges that we face economically in Northern Ireland if we do not step up the plate and deal with welfare reform.

He mentioned the costs, and we know that some £15 million was set aside in the January monitoring round. We heard figures on the media last night — more frightening figures, perhaps — about the loss to the block grant and to our spending power if we refuse to take somewhat difficult decisions on welfare reform. We also heard about some of the job losses that could be incurred. However, as I said, I will not rehearse the argument; I heard Mr Weir explain it pretty well to the Assembly.

One of the other areas that we need to look at is the reform of the public sector. Again, if we face tighter fiscal circumstances, we need to ensure that we do not stand still. We need to ensure that our public sector is up to the task and is as efficient as possible. Many times, we hear Members talk about the need and requirement for innovation and collaboration in the business community and the private sector. If it is important to do that in the private sector, it is also important to do it in the public sector. Given the size of Northern Ireland, we should be small enough and flexible enough to ensure that our public sector is as innovative as possible in how it delivers services to our constituents.

5.00 pm

Last week, I spoke at the Centre for Competitiveness's quality awards, an event that recognised outstanding work in the public, private and voluntary sectors by those who are striving towards improving business performance. There were representatives present from many public sector organisations that have embraced that change and have looked to change how they do their work so that they can become more efficient. It is important that we continue to do that. Since taking office, the Minister has spoken many times about the importance of reform in the public sector. Perhaps, he will update the House on where we are with some of that reform and what it may look like. Of course, there are benefits to be had from closer collaboration between the public and private sectors, which we would all welcome.

The final point I want to raise is on the issue of fiscal powers for the Assembly. Dominic Bradley said that it was a pretty complicated area, and he is right. We are dealing with many different calculations, and, if we were to devolve all fiscal powers, we would have more uncertain Budgets, which would bring its own challenges. Devolving fiscal powers also comes at huge cost, so we have to be very careful about how we do it.

We need to continue to identify where devolving more fiscal powers would be an advantage to Northern Ireland. An example was the air passenger duty issue. Devolving that fiscal power was to our advantage, because we were at an economic disadvantage compared with the Republic of Ireland. By getting power over APD devolved to the Assembly, we were able to save our continental flight to New York, which is important for our business links with north America. Devolving that power was money well spent, as it had real economic benefit for Northern Ireland. As my colleague Mr Girvan mentioned, we have to use that power to try to attract further connectivity between Northern Ireland and other key markets across Europe and north America.

Mr McCallister: I am grateful to the Member for giving way. I largely agree with his comments about the challenges we face in devolving tax-varying powers. Does he agree that the Executive would have been better taking the approach taken by Scotland or Wales and looking at all taxes in the mix instead of focusing on one or another? That is the point that I have been trying to make. I would value his comments on that.

Mr Ross: I listened to the Member's comments very closely. I was worried at one stage that he was going to move to Scotland because he thought that they were doing something so much better than we were.

The difficulty comes when we deal with the cost. There is broad agreement across the House on devolving corporation tax powers. We know that that will come at huge cost, and perhaps some of the parties that are very enthusiastic about it at the moment will recoil a little bit when it comes to identifying where we are going to reduce public spending. I believe that it would be worthwhile. I read the report from independent groups who estimate that we could get in the region of 58,000 new jobs if we could lower corporation tax. However, to have a mature argument about this, we first need to hear from the Member and his party about what he would do with those taxes if he got them devolved. Is he saying that we should devolve the full portfolio of fiscal powers to the Northern Ireland Assembly in order to reduce the tax take from individuals? If so, he has to explain where he would cut public spending. If he is saying that we should get devolved powers to raise taxes, he will have a lot of explaining to do to hard-pressed families. One of the things that we can be proud of is being a low-tax economy with the lowest household bills in the UK.

Mr McCallister: Will the Member give way?

Mr Ross: Yes.

Mr McCallister: First, it is important to nail the myth that we are a low-tax economy. We have very little responsibility for the taxes we raise. There is very little correlation between those taxes and the levels of spending. So, it is not right to give ourselves the accolade of being a low-tax economy when we are not really facing up to some of the challenges.

I will take on the points that the Member raises. We have said that we should set up a commission, like Scotland and Wales did, to look at how you might devolve the powers. The Member has rightly pointed out that many people have said that they are in favour of lowering corporation tax but no one, including the Member and his party, has said exactly what the cost would be and where they would cut public spending. He has thrown the challenge over to the SDLP and Sinn Féin to say where they would find the money if they were to cut corporation tax, but the Member has not identified where he would find it. The point about varying taxes is that you can do small things around the margins that have a big impact on small businesses. That is the key. Corporation tax is volatile and difficult to predict. The Minister, with the best will in the world, does not have adequate economic data at the moment to predict some of those things.

Mr Ross: I am not any clearer about the position of Northern Ireland 21 on devolving fiscal powers to the Assembly. The Member talks about volatility but also says that we should look at bringing all the range of taxes to Northern Ireland. One issue that has to be addressed is the volatility that would come from all the fiscal responsibilities coming to the Northern Ireland Assembly and the difficulty that that would pose for planning. That is one advantage of the current Budget settlement.

Let me address the issue of the challenge to the SDLP. The entire Executive are in agreement on the devolution of corporation tax. Therefore, the responsibility to find the savings within public spending is an Executive priority that they will address collectively. When SDLP Members ask for additional taxes to be devolved to the Assembly, it is their responsibility to say where they would see further public spending reduced. The one fact that we cannot get away from is that, in Northern Ireland, we have more public money to spend than we collect. That is one of the benefits of the Union, and I am sure that the Member would agree with me on that.

Mr D Bradley: Will the Member give way?

Mr Ross: I will give way in one second. However, we are dealing with a huge subvention — it is in the region of £10.5 billion — to Northern Ireland. To get all the tax take coming from Northern Ireland, we would have to find all that additional money somewhere. You can raise taxes, which makes life more difficult for families who are already struggling, or you can reduce taxes for families. If you do that, you have to say expressly where you would find those savings.

Mr D Bradley: I thank the Member for giving way. I remind the Member that I did not say that we should transfer tax-raising powers willy-nilly. I said that we should do what has been done in Scotland. We should initiate a review that looks at a broad range of taxes and assesses them and the advantages of transferring the taxes that would be most advantageous to us. However, we should do that on the basis of hard information. Surely the Member does not disagree with that.

Mr Ross: Hard information was distinctly lacking in the Member's earlier contribution. What we have been doing in the Assembly is targeting the areas where, we think, we can get an advantage, and we have been very successful in that. The Member will know that we had a debate in the House not so long ago, and I think that his party talked about devolving fuel duty to the Assembly. Again, the costs of doing that were absolutely staggering. The Member has not outlined whether it is his intention to devolve fiscal powers and the range of taxes to the Assembly to reduce them or to make them higher. I have not heard that from the Member.

Mr D Bradley: I thank the Member for giving way. I did not quite catch the point he was making, but I said that it was worth looking at the range of tax-raising powers and deciding, on the basis of evidence, which of those would be advantageous for us to transfer. I will correct the Member: this party did not bring any motion to the Assembly on fuel duties.

Mr Ross: I apologise if that was the case. I distinctly remember the SDLP arguing to support that case, so perhaps we are splitting hairs.

I still did not hear the Member say whether he would seek to make taxes lower or higher for people in Northern Ireland. Parties cannot run away from that point.

Mr McCallister: Will the Member give way?

Mr Ross: Yes.

Mr McCallister: The Member has failed to say where he would get the money to cut corporation tax. I think that the DUP position is to put it even lower than 12.5%. Where would he take the money from? Which Departments would he cut?

Mr Ross: I outlined that it would be a collective decision by the Executive and therefore the Executive will collectively come to that decision. What we are already seeing — [Interruption.]

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr Ross: — under way from this and the previous Finance Minister is an attempt to find greater efficiencies in public spending to cut out waste. We also need more imaginative ways to deliver services to constituents. That does not always have to be done in the way that it has been done before. There are greater opportunities there to reduce public spending or look at delivering services differently, but that will be a decision taken collectively by the Executive.

Mrs D Kelly: I thank the Member for giving way. I was just going to be helpful by pointing to an area where some costs to this Executive could be reduced. Perhaps his colleague the Finance Minister might refrain from taking his partner the Sinn Féin Agriculture Minister to court and therefore save some legal fees. Also, perhaps the Minister of Health could prevent himself being dragged into the courts because of the other equality measures that he has failed to implement and judgements that have been found in Westminster. A reduction in legal fees strikes me as a very quick, easy and less painful way for the Executive to save money for the Northern Ireland public.

Mr Ross: I have found in my time in the Assembly that Mrs Kelly always tries to be helpful in her contributions. Of course, one thing that I would point out is that the action taken by the Finance Minister was found in his favour, so the courts decided that he was right in what he did. Therefore, the action he took was absolutely justified. Many people in the farming and rural communities will be very grateful for the action that the Finance Minister took. Perhaps she could explain to people in her constituency why she opposed that.

This is a well-balanced Budget, and its priorities are right. I look forward to hearing more from the Finance Minister on the work on reforming the public sector in Northern Ireland. I look forward to hearing from him on the difficulties that we will face if we refuse to stand up to the welfare reform issue, and I look forward to a more positive economic outlook in Northern Ireland in years to come.

Mr I McCrea: Possibly one of the worst things about being further down the list of DUP Members to speak is that everybody has pretty much already said everything. Mind you, that has never stopped me before, and it will not today. I do not often follow how the Chair of the Committee does things, but in this case, I will be brief, as he was. I think that, had other Members followed suit, this debate could have been over quite a while ago. However, given the Members who are left to speak, I am sure that we will be here for a period of time yet.

There are many issues that we could deal with, whether about rates and more so the issue of the RPA and whatnot, but as other Members have dealt with those, I will be parochial and deal with issues in my constituency and try my best to get as much of the over £15 billion that the Finance Minister mentioned as I can. I will not ask him to rewrite the Budget, but, if he could do something to reallocate it, the generosity that I know he has will hopefully make that a reality for my constituents in Mid Ulster.

My constituency colleague Sandra Overend referred to the community training college at Desertcreat. While that is an issue for us as a constituency, it will benefit the wider community across Northern Ireland. Although there has been delay after delay and some question over whether it would go ahead or not, I can hopefully take comfort from the fact that we now have a starting date of May or June of this year. Hopefully, there will be no further delays, because there is no doubt that the local economy and many of the businesspeople and constituents who have previously worked in the construction industry are waiting to see whether they can get something out of that. It is important that that happens. Wider industry in mid-Ulster has been severely hit, whether it be construction, engineering or manufacturing, but it is good to see that unemployment figures are going down and people are starting to see some movement.

I want to refer to the Magherafelt bypass.

The Finance Minister's predecessor announced the allocation of money for that. He found some extra money for the scheme. The fact that the £40 million construction project will create around 200 construction jobs is welcome. However, we should not end there. Before I left Cookstown District Council, we had a meeting with the Minister for Regional Development, Danny Kennedy, about the Cookstown bypass, which is a very important scheme for the Cookstown area. I urge the Minister to enter into discussions with the Minister for Regional Development to ensure that money is found for it.

I hope that Members will support the Bill and allow money to be spent in the mid-Ulster area. I recommend it to the House.

5.15 pm

Mr Kinahan: I am very pleased to speak today. In my role as education spokesperson, that is what I will focus on. Much has been covered, but I hope that I will make different points in a different way. I would like to start by making sure that we remember that, when we talk about education, it is our children's education that we are discussing. That is what the Budget is relevant to. We should always remember the staff, the teachers and all those in the education system. I start by giving them a big thank you for all the work that they do.

When we get the Budget papers, I sometimes wonder whether we really achieve anything in these debates or whether it is a bit pointless. At times, the process does not seem fit for purpose in that too little detail is given. Most of us talk about our areas of responsibility but have very little to go on. I hope that the Northern Ireland Audit Office will look at a way of getting better value for money from it.

Yesterday, we heard Mervyn Storey — I think that we heard this last year, too — describe the document as “difficult to navigate.” It is like having a map with just the names of the towns on it but no buildings, no roads, no rivers, no contours — just some general direction. That is what I would like to change. I would like a document that we can all understand and scrutinise in great detail.

Look at what is written under education in the Vote on Account. It says that we should be:

“Ensuring that all young people, through participation at school, reach the highest possible standards of educational achievement, that will give them a secure foundation for lifelong learning and employment; and develop the values and attitudes appropriate to citizenship in an inclusive society.”

Fantastic. Those are all the right noises, seemingly all in the right order, if I can borrow from Morecambe and Wise. However, there is little sign of it actually working in that way. There seems to be much being done in education but in the wrong order. Hopefully, through today's Budget and the comments that everyone makes, we will get it back into the right order.

The first line refers to “participation at school”, but look at the number of schools that have a non-attendance rate of over 20% for 85% of the time. That is a shame. In this Budget, there should be money that allows us to help schools to help themselves to make sure that we can educate all pupils, especially truants and others who do not attend.

There should be more money for the schools themselves. You have heard the statistic before. We want something similar to England, where 81% of funding goes to schools, as opposed to here, where 59% goes to schools. Nothing in today's figures shows that there is any intention of doing that.

In the Committee this week, we will see more on the common funding formula and the appalling idea that we should rob one school to pay another — or, as we put it, rob Peter to pay Paul — as threatened last summer. If you had gone into that in detail, you would have seen — all the answers that I got from schools indicated this — that cuts in 80% of schools would mean a loss of classroom assistants, a loss of special needs assistants, a loss of teachers and more strains on remaining teachers. We really did not want that. It also seemed to be a war on rural schools. Again, we see nothing of it in this Budget.

We would like something in the Budget that encourages schools to work with their communities, local authorities and councils. We would like something that helps Departments to work together, particularly on early years, on which we seem to have been extremely quiet in the two years that I have been on the Committee. There is no sign of this in the Budget.

The Vote on Account talks about “highest possible standards” and focusing on the right things, yet, at the same time, we do not seem to be putting money in the right place. We have seen £16.5 million wasted on the Education and Skills Authority (ESA), which will go on until ESA is stopped or a proper ESA is presented to the House.

However, £60 million more has been allocated in the Budget to the education and library boards, and that is what we want to see. At the moment, the boards are struggling to support all the schools. They need more money, and the more that can happen in that line, the better, until we get a decent ESA on which we can all agree.

Think of all the money that has been wasted on the area planning process in education as we set our schools into the wrong form of segregation. We need to have a proper Budget in which we can see where the money is being spent, and it should plan for the building of schools. Look at all the schools that are screaming out for repairs, maintenance and new classrooms. There are many such schools in my constituency. Parkhall is waiting for its newbuild, while others are waiting for mobile classrooms. There is no money in the Budget that we can see being planned for schools. There is no detail.

Mrs D Kelly: I thank the Member for giving way. He will recall my party colleague Patsy McGlone's contribution, in which he mentioned the Education Minister's announcement last year of some £180 million of capital spend, which failed to materialise. I understand that that was in part because of the vacancy control measures in place in the boards that do not allow some jobs to be filled. That means that business cases cannot be examined. There is a backlog of business cases, because of that logjam and the arguments around the establishment of ESA.

Mr Kinahan: I entirely agree, but there is so much that we cannot see in the education budget. We know that the funds are there, but we do not know all the reasons behind everything being held back. The issue that Mrs Kelly has raised is very poignant.

I will return to where I was. I wanted to make the point that we do not seem to have a shovel-ready system for schools. We had all the schools waiting for mobile classrooms and for change, yet, at the end of the year, the Education Minister and the Department were not ready to make use of the savings that had been made in other Departments. We need a system put in place and, as I said it before, much more detail in the Budget.

The Vote on Account also talks about a “foundation for lifelong learning”. We have this huge curriculum, yet the funding was taken away from the entitlement framework, and we see nothing of it in the Budget. We want to see our pupils leaving school with life skills. We want them to know how to manage money, create a business, and, most importantly, how to get a job and create more jobs. We do not see any of that in here.

At the excellent DEL and DE shared event last week called STEM is Cool, we saw how excellent Northern Ireland could be and is in the Generation Innovation video. I recommend that everyone watch it. If it does not lift you and show you how good Northern Ireland is and what the future is for our children, I do not know what will.

We need to see more money for primary schools and STEM subjects. Again, we do not see it in the Budget. We need money for training teachers. If you gave more money to Sentinus, it could double the numbers that are interested in the sciences. There is so much that we need to see through the Budget.

To go back to the point about a foundation for lifelong learning, we also need to train our teachers. We know that they have a number of training days, but we are throwing so much at them that they are not getting the time to think or learn, yet they are the absolute stars in our system. We have to find some way of giving more finance to schools so that they can not only teach better but have the freedom to train themselves.

The Vote on Account goes on to say that we should:

“develop the values and attitudes appropriate to citizenship in an inclusive society.”

That has to be done through shared education, yet we see little evidence of that, and little of it in the Budget. We have seen it pushed by President Obama and by Westminster, with their £250 million borrowing limits. Everyone else wants us to do it, but do we? Do we want shared education, and do we want to see things getting better here? If you look at the costs of the flag protests and everything else, you will see that we must look to that shared future.

Have the shared campuses started yet? Where is this Together: Building a United Community (T:BUC) that OFMDFM is meant to be producing? The Minister of Education has made a start on shared education, and I congratulate him on that. As we have seen in the documents this week, he intends to set up funding for a shared education future. However, we all need to be there, and we all need to be pushing for it.

We had the excellent North Eastern Education and Library Board and Atlantic Philanthropies primary integrating/enriching education project (PIEE) initiative, but the funding for that has just stopped. We need to see that being carried through, whether it is in the area learning communities, through the community relations, equality and diversity (CRED) programme or in other places. We look forward to seeing it there.

If you look at today's Budget figures, you will see that youth services get £1.6 million in small increases, yet only £263,000 goes to the Youth Council itself. We seem to be giving more money to the bodies that are running it and less to the actual youth themselves. Have we got it the right way round? Also, there is nothing in the Budget about what is happening over Westminster and the free school meals. That should have led to more money coming here to Northern Ireland or to a change in the free school meals system.

Last year, in the Education Committee, the auditors told us that the Education Department was the worst Department at producing budget efficiencies. Yet, at the same time, they said that none of our Departments was good at budget efficiencies. Is the Minister going to put something in place that makes all the Departments better at budget efficiencies?

I will go back to the point that I made at the beginning, which asked whether we will see a document and a system here that lets us really see what is going on and whether something is an efficiency or just a cut. All of us need to be part of that. I will go back to my point, which is: we need to see more detailed figures in a way that means that we can properly scrutinise them. However, the Ulster Unionist Party supports the Budget.

Mrs McKevitt: The SDLP has consistently argued against the way in which the current financial arrangements are being managed. I welcome any opportunity to assess the ways in which we can utilise our culture, arts and leisure sectors to enhance and grow the local economy.

There is significant underspend in the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure. DCAL has the smallest budget of all Departments, at less than 1% of the overall Budget, yet it has such an important role to play in the provision of and access to our arts, culture, leisure and sports. That underspend is not so much about financial good management but more about bad administration in government.

The most pertinent example of that is the failure to deliver on the Narrow Water bridge. Due to the dithering and downright resistance over the Narrow Water bridge project, the SEUPB withdrew crucial EU funding in November. That withdrawal was directly attributable to the failure of the Northern Ireland Executive, as well as of the Irish Government, to indicate how a shortfall in moneys could be met. The project represented a golden opportunity to unlock the tourism potential of the area and to boost the island's economic prospects. Once completed, the project will boost the construction sector and provide a vital gateway to the Mournes. We have a unique tourism product that has worldwide appeal. To let this important symbol of how far our society has come fall away would be hugely disappointing.

The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure underspend is particularly disappointing, given the lack of capital funding for the arts in the Newry area, which is falling behind the rest of the region. My colleague Dominic Bradley and I have highlighted with the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure the need for a high-quality arts base in Newry, and we hope that funding for that project can be identified when the Minister raises it with the Finance Department. I am flagging that up to you, Minister, so that you know that there is something coming to you in the future. I am marking your card that the people of Newry would really like your support on it.

5.30 pm

A more positive aspect to last year was the hugely successful World Police and Fire Games, which certainly represented value for money. The games featured almost 7,000 retired and current competitors across 56 sports and 41 venues, with thousands of volunteers ensuring that they were described as the friendliest games ever. I received news just today that the East Border Region is to further invest £500,000 in Rostrevor's Kilbroney Park. That shows that the games' legacy is good and still growing.

The games have also left a valuable legacy, in that 45 schools across Northern Ireland benefit from mobile defibrillators that were used during the games. Those defibs have the potential to save a child's life. Given that the health service requires an additional £30 million towards key healthcare pressures in the January monitoring round, the defibs are of great assistance.

I welcome the success of the Small Size, Big Festival, which ended in Newry this week. It certainly put Newry on the map internationally and is something that the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure invested in. I also welcome the recognition given to C S Lewis at the end of last year, with the unveiling of a statue in east Belfast and an inaugural C S Lewis festival, which took place in November and was funded by Belfast City Council. The exhibition at the Linen Hall Library was also a huge success.

I have consistently spoken about the need for the Department to fight cutbacks in access to libraries. The threats posed by cuts in hours and possible closures have galvanised many communities and led people to re-evaluate the crucial role played by libraries and, more important, the roles that they could play if properly resourced. Books are very important, but libraries are about much more. They are the real cultural hubs of small communities. Their role cannot be measured crudely by counting borrowings and visits. Kilkeel now has an opportunity with its new library to be a showcase for the new roles that libraries can play when they have the public backing that has been demonstrated over the past year.

Mr Elliott: I welcome the opportunity to speak on the Budget Bill. I have a number of queries, and I will be interested in the Minister's response to them. I would like to hear from other Ministers in due course about some of those issues when they are raised in Committee.

The first issue has been about for a wee while: the equal pay situation for those employed in the PSNI and the Department of Justice. I would be interested to hear from the Minister whether the money that was earmarked for it is still available and is ring-fenced only for that particular pay settlement. It is a very disturbing situation. I wrote to the Minister of Finance when he first came to office to ask him to hold a review. In fairness, he has looked at it, although I do not think that he has come to any conclusion — unless we hear a big announcement today, which I would welcome. Maybe he will resolve the matter as quickly as possible. The issue has support from all sides of the House and all parties. It would be helpful to resolve the issue in as short a period as possible. It would relieve many of those who believe that they are entitled to that equal pay settlement. I believe that they are so entitled, so I look forward to a positive outcome to that.

In the Department of Justice there is also the voluntary or early exit scheme for prison officers, which allows new recruits to be brought into the Prison Service and prison officers and prison staff to exit their employment. That has hit some financial hold-ups. I am keen that there are opportunities for new recruits to be brought in. I understand that there is a considerable waiting list for new recruits, and we want to deal with that as effectively and efficiently as possible.

The third issue in the Department of Justice is the PSNI budget itself. I know that it is broadly handled by the Policing Board, but, by and large, it comes back to the Department of Justice in the end. I have concerns that people have been making noises over recent months about the cost of policing the flags dispute and public disorder in relation to parades that were stopped. Those people have not told us the actual costs over many years of policing the many sectarian attacks and terrorist attacks that continue in the Province. We need to put it in some balance. I am concerned that they are using some of those statements to indicate that they need more money for the Police Service. If they need more money for the Police Service, they should be open and upfront and say why they need it. Are there reasonable efficiencies within the service, and is the money that is there being properly utilised? Considerable questions in that respect remain.

I come on to the Department of the Environment. An issue that I continue to raise is the cost of the review of public administration and local government. We have not heard any update on the £118 million costs proposed in the PwC report of a couple of years ago. I have consistently asked if there is any update, but I do not seem to be able to get any figures to tell me and other Members if there are revised figures for that, what the real cost of the review of public administration and local government will be and, indeed, where those efficiencies will come from. We are short on detail on how that money will be recouped. We have heard the suggestion that there will be considerable savings over a 25-year period, but I and many in the House are still to be convinced.

There are two other aspects of a local nature that I want to raise. One is around the development of the Erne Hospital site in Enniskillen in County Fermanagh. There has been an ongoing business case being developed for some time about the purchase of that site from the Department of Health or the Western Health and Social Care Trust. I know that the South West College's Enniskillen campus is keen to relocate to that site. It would be helpful if the Minister of Finance could use his influence to persuade OFMDFM to make progress on that. It is a huge potential development for County Fermanagh, and it would be welcome. It is not just the South West College campus that has an interest in it; other public service agencies have an interest, and we could certainly have a public service hub at that location.

The final issue is around the review of the Northern Ireland Tourist Board. There is huge potential to create more efficiencies in the tourist sector to provide finance in areas where it can be better utilised, in my opinion. I think of the regional tourist organisations. Fermanagh Lakeland Tourism, for example, could provide a much better marketing strategy and use that money more efficiently in its marketing and tourist advertising than currently happens.

Those are just some of the aspects that I have concerns about.

Mr A Maginness: Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker. Why is this such a dreary debate? Why is it that this process is so utterly boring and uninteresting to the public and, indeed, to our colleagues, who are mostly absent?

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): Tom is still sitting here. [Inaudible.]

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr A Maginness: Minister, if you would just listen to me, you might hear something about your good self in relation to the issue that I raise. It is because the Budget process is, as Mr McCallister, who is now absent, said, a financial management process. It is not a Budget at all. It is not a Budget in the sense that we have at Westminster or in Scotland, where it is an annual process and, as Mr McCallister rightly said, you have the people participating in the process, because it is a meaningful, imaginative, robust process where ideas are tossed about and some imagination is put into the public sphere of discussion about how we develop our economy and how we use the moneys that we get from Westminster etc. The whole point of devolution is that we do our own thing. However, every time we tried to do so, at least in the SDLP or indeed the Ulster Unionist Party, the previous Minister of Finance said, "You can't do that. You must follow Westminster. You can't be imaginative". So, it comes down to what is, as Mr McCallister said, a financial management process. It is a bookkeeping process.

The new Minister of Finance — a new broom — has an opportunity to abandon being a bookkeeper and become an economic innovator. That is the challenge for him and, indeed, the Executive. The previous occupant, Mr Wilson, whom I like and am very friendly with, was, unfortunately, a bookkeeper and a rather Scrooge-like bookkeeper from time to time. Perhaps that is a bit unkind; nonetheless, he showed no imagination. There were a few flashes here and there, but, by and large, he showed no imagination. That is the problem with our process. We have got to get away from the idea that everything Westminster says is the right way of doing things.

My colleague Mr Bradley was criticised today for daring to say that we can do things differently and introduce a sort of Calman-type commission to probe, look at the way we do things and look at fiscal policy in particular. If you do not have some element of fiscal policy — we have a very restricted one here — you cannot do very much. We have to experiment a bit. We have to be a bit brave. We have to take risks. Risk is the fundamental element of being an entrepreneur. You take risks, you put your money into a business and you hope that somebody starts to buy your goods, come into your shop or trade with you. That is a risk. We, as politicians, have got to take risks on behalf of the people. They have got to be reasonable risks; they cannot be reckless. However, we have got to take risks, and we are not doing so. Risk is necessary in politics, as it is in business and industry; without it, we are doomed to be bookkeepers and processors. I do not think that that is what we should be. We should be better than that. That is the challenge for us.

When we in the SDLP put forward alternatives to the 2011-15 Budget, we were laughed at and derided. We were told that we were fools because we had alternative proposals. They might not have been the best alternative proposals — some were very imaginative and very good — but at least we challenged the orthodoxy of the Department of Finance and Personnel.

I listened carefully to Mr Alastair Ross. He has a reputation for being bright and sparky. He will do good things in the Assembly and, perhaps, in the Executive, when he is appointed Minister for something. However, all I heard from him was conservatism and complacency. I did not hear any sparkiness or imagination. I am sorry he is absent now. If you listened to him carefully, you would think, "Well, there's nothing else we can do". There are other things that we can do. We must look at regenerating or re-energising the Budget process and the Department of Finance and Personnel, because it is keeping us in this vice-like grip of conservatism. We have got to go forward.

In this Budget process, I appeal to the Minister to look more imaginatively at things in the future. He should be vigorous in trying to create a new fiscal context in which we operate. He should look for a Calman-style commission for Northern Ireland. We should learn from what the Scots have done. They are doing things very well and have developed a fine reputation. We should also look at what they are doing south of the border because there are some good initiatives there. Let us do that. Let us take risks. Let us not be conservative or complacent. Let us not simply "block grant" everything; just slice away at the block grant.

5.45 pm

Mr Elliott: I thank the Member for giving way. I acknowledge and accept a number of the issues that he says are wrong and can perhaps be fixed. However, when he mentions the Republic of Ireland, does he also accept that, for a number of years, there was undoubtedly a very poor bookkeeper at the head of its policy unit who did not do a very good job at keeping those books? Maybe we have things to learn from what they got wrong.

Mr A Maginness: I accept that. I think that anybody who lives or works in the Republic would, if they were being responsible, say the same thing: "We got it wrong". However, they got it wrong in Britain and in lots of other countries. A huge international crisis overwhelmed everybody. Yes, they got it wrong. Yes, the regulators were soft, as we can see in certain instances now. However, we could not be accused of being in any way imaginative or reckless. The opposite is true: we are just so fundamentally conservative. We must be brave. I do not want to repeat the point.

Mr Weir talked about welfare reform, as he calls it, and referred to it as the elephant in the room. I would refer to it as the wolf in the room, the wolf that will impoverish and devour sections of our population. We have a duty to protect people. Northern Ireland suffers from greater deprivation than other parts of the UK, so we should protect our own people. What is presented to us as welfare reform should be seen as what it actually is: welfare cuts. I am in favour of welfare reform, as is my party, but we are not in favour of disguising welfare cuts as welfare reform. It is important that we defend the rights of ordinary citizens here, and we must take a reasonable approach to that. We have to tell Westminster that it does not fit in Northern Ireland.

We could talk about lots of things. Colleagues spoke about various aspects of government and the economy. What certainly annoys me about justice and security issues — I despair of this — is the way in which we throw money away on policing marches, flag-waving demonstrations and all the rest. It cost an additional £30 million over the summer and until the end of the year. In my constituency of North Belfast, it has cost £7 million to police the Twaddell camp. Ardoyne — Catholic and Protestant Ardoyne — is an area of considerable deprivation. If you had used that £7 million to enhance living standards, to improve schools and youth clubs and to assist in the general environment, it would have made a huge difference to people's lives.

Mrs D Kelly: I thank the Member for giving way. Obviously it is not just the real-term costs but the opportunity costs in catching criminals elsewhere who are engaged in various nefarious activities. The Member will be well acquainted with the residents of Harbour Hill. I think that there are some 53 families there, and there is not a single play area for the children of that area. They have to play on a concrete-covered car park. Is that not a travesty in this day and age?

Mr A Maginness: I can only accept what the Member says.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Members, we are straying a little bit in our conversations during the debate. I gently urge Members to come back towards the Budget Bill that is before us. Thank you.

Mr A Maginness: Certainly, Mr Deputy Speaker.

Again, there are aspects of the Justice budget that I find disturbing. If we take, for example, prison reform, which I fully support, and look at the cost of keeping prisoners here in Northern Ireland, we see that it works out at roughly £78,000 per prisoner per annum. In my view, we have a good programme of reform, but we are not bringing down the cost. In comparison, the costs in Scotland or England are about half that. So, there is work to be done there.

We know about the deafness claims by ex-members of the RUC and the way that those costs were dealt with by the Department of Justice. A total of £135 million was spent to settle claims by 8,000 former officers. Of that, £65 million was for legal fees and medical legal fees and £70 million was for the claims themselves. A plaintiff's solicitor indicated in the media that those costs could have been reduced by half, so we are throwing money away on that.

Again, if we look at legal aid, we see that, although some good work has been done there, one of the main pressures faced by the Department even now is due to legal aid expenditure. It is imperative that access to justice is protected, but value for money also has to be achieved. The cost of legal aid must be brought within the Department's budget. That has to happen, otherwise the impact on other spending areas will be unsustainable. What encouraged me at the last Justice Committee meeting was the indications from officials that there were ongoing discussions with the legal profession and that they were willing and prepared to compromise and to discuss reform of the legal aid system. That reform must be done in a fair and proportionate manner. I am deeply concerned that, if reform were implemented too hard and too fast, it would put many legal firms under intolerable pressure and reduce access to justice and reduce the quality of our justice system, as has happened in Britain. These are areas of reform that must be addressed. I hope and encourage the Department of Justice and the Department of Finance and Personnel to deal with that process, but it must be done in a fair and proportionate manner.

I end by saying that we need a new approach. I do not sense that we have that new approach. I give the new Minister the benefit of the doubt, and I hope that he rises to the occasion and brings us a new, bright and sparkling budgetary process that we can all cheer and jump up and down about.

Mr Copeland: I welcome the opportunity to make a number of uncharacteristically short remarks at this stage of the Budget Bill. I will focus my comments, as one would expect, on the expenditure of the Department for Social Development.

The Finance Minister will, no doubt, be very aware that the Social Development budget was one of the — dare I say it — more interesting ones over the previous 12 months. At over £66 million, the Department has had the highest resource easement from Main to Supplementary Estimates across any of the Departments. Almost £50 million came from the Northern Ireland Housing Executive alone — that is a lot of money. Much of that related to the non-release of money for planned maintenance contracts. I will not say much on that today, apart from noting that, although I am pleased that, seemingly, savings have been made, we should bear it in mind that, while the discussions were going on inside the Department, a large number of glazing firms were experiencing a very difficult time. After being led up the garden path, firms and jobs in those firms were, perhaps unavoidably, exposed to huge risk and uncertainty.

One thing that deeply frustrates me about how DSD spends its money is the attention that it gives to the provision of social housing. Despite endless warnings and reports that Northern Ireland is simply precipitating its social housing problems, the Department seemingly remains as ignorant and ambivalent about the problem as ever it was. I ask the Minister of Finance and Personnel this question: does he —

Mr A Maginness: Will the Member give way on his last point?

Mr Copeland: I fear that, if I sit down, I will not get back up, but I will try.

Mr A Maginness: The Member referred to the social housing programme. Can the Member indicate why there is such reluctance to be imaginative and robust in developing a programme that will meet the needs of the 40,000 people here who are homeless?

Mr Copeland: I think that the Member, in asking me to give an indication, is perhaps speaking to the Minister. However, you made a remark in your intervention that frequently irks me, and I impart no ill will towards you. It is not 40,000 people: it is 40,000 applications, which could be 150,000 people. Until we start seeing these problems as problems of people and stop seeing them as statistics, the problems will remain unaddressed.

I will get back to my plea to the Minister of Finance and Personnel, although I suspect that he already knows the answer. How can anybody who casually runs their eye over the number of newbuilds and sees how little impact it has on the growing housing lists not realise that we are simply not building enough new homes, as opposed to houses, of the right type in the right places? The co-ownership scheme has had another good year, but, with all due respect to it and the positive role that it plays, it runs the danger of being used by the Department and its Minister in pitiful attempts to underwrite their claim that they are doing enough. Indeed, the co-ownership scheme received another £15 million capital, and we must remember that this came in the year after it also received a big financial boost, this time from a — forgive the word — shameful £8 million underspend in the housing development programme. That was not a Minister prioritising affordable housing; it was a Minister trying to cover his failures.

Of course, this year, the sheer insolence of the Department was no different. Were targets reviewed? No. Are we building enough houses of the right type? Again, no. Did the Department ever begin to think about changing future plans in order to build the right number of houses in the right places at the right time? Again, no.

6.00 pm

It is a case of a Department holding its hands over its eyes and then, inevitably, expressing its shock and horror when it finds itself in the midst of a housing crisis. For instance, what about the £8·1 million repayment from Helm Housing earlier this year? Why could there not have been an agreement that that capital money could go into the social housing development problem? Was it a mistake? Or was it perhaps a real lack of effort?

Of course, inevitably, that brings me on to welfare reform, referred to as “cuts” by my colleague across the way. The Finance Minister has been saying much on that lately, and, to be fair to him, I concur with much of what he says. However, it is deeply regrettable that we have now seen £15 million set aside to pay for penalties. That is wasted money. It was not £15 million that directly benefited the most vulnerable in society, nor was it £15 million spent wisely. It was £15 million spent while the parties engaged in an exhaustive process of negotiation around the issues.

It is not acceptable that the Welfare Reform Bill is still festering away in the corridors of Stormont Castle. Yes, the Executive subcommittee on welfare reform meets to discuss the issue, seemingly occasionally. We know, however, that the decision to proceed will be taken outside of that, and only when Sinn Féin and the DUP believe that they have clambered towards the necessary deal. My party and I have been pretty open from day one on where we stand. We tabled amendments to the Bill last April, and, I am pleased to see that, at long last, there has been some movement on those. It is the Minister for Social Development who, despite all his previous predictions about doom and gloom, has failed since October 2012 to bring the Bill back to the Assembly. The cause of that delay and subsequent financial penalties, which were mentioned yesterday in the January monitoring round debate, are the responsibility of the Minister, and him alone.

The latest comments from the Finance Minister appear to be erratic. Of course, although they may have made the headlines, the only lasting impact is the possibility that over 1,000 staff are a little more unsure about their jobs. The proposals will most dramatically affect not those in search of unemployment benefit but those low-paid working families — the very people whom we should be supporting. The figure of £1·8 billion is being quoted for a new computer system. Minister, seriously, we have had enough of sensationalist headlines, massaged figures and false warnings. Political maturity is needed if the Bill is to progress to the next stage.

The Estimates demonstrate that the Social Development Minister has, in my view, failed in his responsibilities thus far, but he does not have to carry on like that. I sincerely hope that I will not be standing here in 12 months' time making exactly the same point. The issues are clear to see, and just because they were not tackled in the past year does not mean that they cannot be tackled in the next.

Mr Attwood: I start where Mr Alban Maginness started, by relying on the words of Mr McCallister, when he said that this debate is not about a Budget but about financial management. He is right about that. That is what the character of this debate is.

As Mr Maginness indicated, we should go back to the practice in other jurisdictions of having a full annual Budget process. I have not checked this out recently, but my view is that there is a case, arguably in law, that we are in breach of, I think, the Northern Ireland Act 1998 in failing to have a full annual budgetary process, as is the case in other jurisdictions. I think that our financial planning and budgetary ambition would be better if we were to adopt that approach.

As the Minister returns to the Chamber, which he may live to regret, I acknowledge what Mr Maginness said.

The essential question that Mr Maginness asked of the Minister is a relevant question to ask today, given that this is a light-touch Budget and not a real Budget process. Furthermore, given that this is the Minister's first Budget Bill in his time in office — he will have a couple more before the end of this mandate — and that he is going to be involved in negotiations on all that, never mind on the comprehensive spending review, the question that the Minister has to decide in his own head in the context of this debate and of the direction in which he takes his Department forward is simply this: is he a Sammy, or is he a Swinney? That is the difference between a Minister who knows what it is to be in government and to be in power — John Swinney, the Cabinet Secretary for Finance in Scotland — and one who, although capable, is more about theatre than substance — his predecessor's legacy, in my view.

So, this Minister has to decide whether he is going to be a Sammy or a Swinney. The answer to that question will determine whether he ends up being a thoughtful Minister or a technocrat. What we need is a thoughtful budgetary approach; what we do not need is a technocratic one. If you were to analyse the Minister's speeches and contributions yesterday, you would veer towards the conclusion that the Minister is more technocratic than thoughtful. However, if you were to draw conclusions from the last monitoring returns and the statement that he made to the House on that occasion, you might veer towards the conclusion that he is more thoughtful than technocratic. The jury is out.

Mr Hamilton: Who is on the jury?

Mr Attwood: Pardon?

Mr Hamilton: Who is on the jury?

Mr Attwood: The jury, I hope, is the public. They are the only jury that ultimately count. Everybody else is a servant of the public will and the common good. That is what we all are here, that is what the staff in this Building are, that is what all the staff in government are: servants of the public interest. Therefore, the jury in this case has to, and always must, remain the public.

The question is this: is this Minister a Sammy or a Swinney? In that regard, I want to put to him a number of issues that, in my view, will determine whether he veers towards one or the other, subject to the Minister having good health and good authority and, of course, Peter Robinson having the good fortune not to be challenged as leader of the DUP.

So, what are the strategic issues through which the Minister can demonstrate that he is more in the image of John Swinney, who is the best Minister on these islands? Even his predecessor indicated to me privately that he had significant admiration for John Swinney's work as Finance Minister.

Mr Deputy Speaker: I urge the Member to come back to the detail of the Bill.

Mr Attwood: Yes, I am very much going to come back to the Budget now. The Minister will be aware that, arising from the St Andrews Agreement, a review of the North/South arrangements is going on. It covers a lot of areas of North/South implementation and cooperation and is meant to scope out where the North/South arrangements go in the future. That is essential to the financial planning on this island, to this Budget period, to future Budget periods and to Budgets North and South for decades to come. So, my first question to the Minister is this: when it comes to issues in this Budget and the future budgetary period, is he going to allow that to be stuck in the mud, as it clearly is at the moment, or is he going to try to shape that in a different way than is currently the case?

This week, it was announced and confirmed that, for the first time ever, economy Ministers from Dublin, Belfast and London are to go on a joint trade mission. So, my questions to the Minister are as follows: does that not give a green light to doing stuff on the island of Ireland when it comes to finance and budgets in Belfast and Dublin? Does that not give a green light that those issues can be managed differently in future? The Minister has to ask himself that question and answer it, I hope, in the affirmative when it comes to the work that he might do on budgets with Michael Noonan in the South and his own office in the North. What might that look like? Should the Minister, as a new Minister who wants, I trust, to aspire to the ambition and character of John Swinney, not now put in place a task force to look at issues of all-Ireland procurement to interrogate the finances and adjust budgets to ensure that, in future, procurement is done in a more joined-up and shared way?

His colleague Mr Ross, whom I will comment on shortly, spoke about the opportunities for shared services. The single biggest opportunity for shared services is on the island of Ireland, not least on health — 40% of the entire budget of the island of Ireland is spent on health. Should he not now set up a task force to interrogate the opportunities for procurement that are all over the Budget Bill and all over Budget Bills North and South into the future? Should he not establish a task force to interrogate what could be done to break free from how things have been done in the past?

Could I ask him this: will he agree to meet the Centre for Cross Border Studies, which, as he is aware, publishes reports every year? In a report that, I think, came out 18 months ago, there were submissions on where the opportunities for all-Ireland procurement might arise. In that way, he could demonstrate that he will not be a hostage to the failure of politics, especially on the Northern side, to shape up and move forward the North/South review that has been stuck in the mud since 2007. It has not been published, implemented or concluded, and, at the time of the last report to the Chamber following the North/South Ministerial Council (NSMC) meeting in November, it was still a matter for discussion between Ministers and their officials. Question number one is this: can the Minister answer in the affirmative whether he is prepared to work on that project to demonstrate that he is different in his approach from his predecessor?

Mr Deputy Speaker: Could I ask Members to make sure that everyone links their comments to the Bill and the finance for next year?

Mr Attwood: I must have mentioned the Budget Bill more than anybody in the Chamber so far. I was trying to weave those comments into the debate on Budget legislation.

Mr Ross had a curious exchange with Mr Bradley when he asked him to explain whether, if more fiscal powers were to be devolved to the North, he would increase or reduce taxes and how things would get paid for. When Mr McCallister or Mr Maginness threw the question back to Mr Ross, which was the question that he had asked Mr Bradley, his answer was to hide behind whatever the Executive might decide.

Mr Ross: Will the Member give way?

Mr Attwood: I will in a second. That was the answer; that is what Hansard will record. It is not very good debating for a Member to ask another Member a question and then, in his reply, retreat to the cover of an Executive decision that has not yet been taken. I will give way.

Mr Ross: The two powers that I identified as positive things to devolve to the Assembly were corporation tax and APD. We were very clear that we want to reduce them because it would take away economic disadvantage. I asked Mr Bradley whether he envisages us reducing the additional fiscal powers that he wants — not that I want — and reducing the tax burden on people. It is a perfectly reasonable question.

Mr Attwood: That is different. That is an answer that you must have thought up in the past hour because that is not the answer that you gave an hour ago. However, if that is how you think now, I welcome the fact that your thinking is beginning to mature.

6.15 pm

I point out two things. Let us hear what Mr Ross has just said, which was that you would look for opportunities to reduce the tax burden. Let us note that that was what you said. Let us match that with the comments that the Minister of Finance and Personnel made in his contribution yesterday: he said that he saw more opportunities for cuts and cutbacks. I will come back to the words precisely later in my speech. Here we have the party on the far side slashing taxes on the one hand and having more cutbacks on the other. That is the message coming out about the wider politics of the DUP.

Mr Hamilton: Will the Member give way?

Mr Attwood: I will give way in a second, absolutely.

To answer the question about what we would do, I refer you to various publications by the SDLP. They are as relevant today as they were three, four or five years ago. The curious thing about the —

Mr Hamilton: Are you going to give way?

Mr Attwood: I will give way. [Interruption.]

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order. We shall have one Member controlling the Floor at one time.

Mr Attwood: I will give way in a second, but I am going to finish the point to your colleague before I deal with the point from you. This is the point: if you look at measures that have been adopted by the Executive or that are now being processed through the Budget review group process, you see that they are piggybacking on proposals that were first put on the table five years ago in 2009. Other things that are actually getting done in changing the profile of public spend in the North were proposed at that time by the SDLP. Let me give you examples.

Mr Hamilton: Will you give way?

Mr Attwood: Let me give you examples: selling selected DRD car parks as attractive investment opportunities was what we proposed in 2009. At a dinner that the Minister was at on Friday, I happened to run into somebody who has knowledge of the Strategic Investment Board (SIB) and its work. They confirmed to me that the assets plan concerning potential disposals to maximise income without prejudicing public services has matured. I welcome that, five years after the SDLP said that we should sell selected DRD car parks as attractive investment opportunities, and so on and so forth.

A lot of the things that we proposed have not matured. Why have we not reduced the Executive's three economic policy units to one? We continue to have the bizarre situation in which DFP, DETI and OFMDFM have three economic policy units. You wonder why there is not good economic policy planning in the North when there are three fingers in the pie. As we know, when OFMDFM puts its finger in pies that it is best left out of, things do not work out very well. Look at the legacy so far of the social investment fund.

I give way to the Minister.

Mr Hamilton: The moment has almost passed. I want to take task with the Member; he said that I said yesterday that I wanted to cut. I ask him to look at the Hansard report carefully and point out exactly where I encouraged or suggested that there were opportunities — I think that that was his word — for cuts. When he fails to find me encouraging cuts in yesterday's debate, I hope that he retracts the comments that he has just made.

Mr Attwood: You are quite right to ask me. I will find the reference in my later comments. I confirm —

Mr Hamilton: I would appreciate it if you —

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr Attwood: I confirm that you said that there were a number of areas in which you thought that there were opportunities for further cuts.

Mr Hamilton: Find it precisely now.

Mr Attwood: I will give you the precise reference later in the contribution. If you have just a moment's patience, you will be read the words, and then you —

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order. All —

Mr Hamilton: You just throw these things out, but you have nothing —

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order, Members.

Mr Attwood: You will be given the words, and you can eat your words at that time.

Mr Hamilton: We will see.

Mr Attwood: We will see what the record says —

Mr Hamilton: I know exactly what I said.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order, Members.

Mr Attwood: — when I read it into the record shortly.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order, Members. We shall have one person on the Floor at one time. If a Member wishes to intervene, they should indicate, but it is up to the Member who has the Floor to decide whether they wish to allow that person to make a comment.

Mr Attwood: In that moment's intervention, I found the place. This is what you said, Mr Hamilton, at around 6.30 pm yesterday in the Chamber. You were talking about the Northern Ireland Budget and you said:

"There are some areas where there are obvious cuts and reductions that could be made." —
[Official Report, This Bound Volume, p382, col 2.]

That is what you said. You made that comment in response to what the SDLP has been warning about over the past two or three years, which is that London is far from finished with what they refer to as their austerity agenda. Indeed, the Chancellor of the Exchequer confirmed recently that he is not even halfway down the road of his austerity agenda.

In response to that issue and what the Chancellor said about another half a billion pounds worth of cuts, you said:

"The Barnett consequences of that for Northern Ireland will be around half a billion pounds." —
[Official Report, This Bound Volume, p382, col 2.]

The "that" is that we are not even halfway down the road to austerity. In the next paragraph, you said:

"There are some areas where there are obvious cuts and reductions that could be made."

If you want to intervene now I would welcome it.

Mr Hamilton: Do you want to read on to the next sentence, in which I referred to the "ugly scaffolding"? Who used that phrase? Of course, it was the Member's colleague, the former leader of the SDLP. I stand over my view that there are obvious cuts to be made in that ugly scaffolding. However, the inference that the Member made and the way he tied it to Mr Ross's comments was that I thought that there were wholesale cuts to be made across health, education, housing and other areas. I ask him to qualify what he said to the House.

Mr Attwood: I did not try to imply anything. I said that you referred to cuts.

Mr Hamilton: You most certainly did.

Mr Attwood: I did not, and the Hansard report will show that I did not. Let the Hansard —

Mr Hamilton: You do not read all of the Hansard report.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Order. Could Members make all remarks through the Chair, please?

Mr Attwood: Let the Hansard record stand and the record stand as: — [Interruption.]

“obvious cuts and reductions that can be made.”

You then gave one example. There must be other examples because you used the words “obvious cuts and reductions”. You cannot undo what you said and, as a consequence, I suggest that you are eating your words.

Let us get back to the substance of the debate. I have put it to the Minister that, in respect of future budgetary proposals, there are opportunities with the stillborn North/South review that could be taken forward generally and particularly by his Department.

For my second question to the Minister on the Budget, I will piggyback on the comments made by my colleague Pat Ramsey about Derry. Given that we do not have a Budget process in the image of what they have in every other jurisdiction in these islands, I believe that it is very important that the new incoming Minister considers, in a strategic way, whether there are strategic opportunities to do things differently. That is the point of the questions that I am putting to him.

Mr Ramsey rightly mentioned the One Plan in Derry, which, if I recall rightly, suggested that there was an opportunity for 7,000 extra students at the University of Ulster site at Magee. I met the chamber of commerce in Derry a couple of weeks ago and its members made a point that is crystal clear, succinct and very relevant to the Budget Bill and the comments about the work of the Minister for Employment and Learning and the Committee for Employment and Learning. The point was that there are now indications coming from INI that it would endorse a subregional strategy.

As everybody knows, the current INI regional strategy means that most of the money goes into a corridor from Queen’s University to the Titanic Quarter, and everybody else has to live with the outworkings of that policy. I trust that these were not more meaningless phrases and that there is a solid intention to have a subregional strategy, but when it comes to a subregional strategy for the north-west, the view of the chamber of commerce, which is advocating the expansion of the university site, is that the university is the subregional strategy. Out of the university — and they are talking about 9,200 extra places — you will grow the skills base and when you have the skills base in the north-west, the jobs will follow. The current situation is one in which, as people know, there is a skills deficit in some key sectors in the North.

That is the chamber of commerce’s outworking of the One Plan strategy: it will be subregional, with the university at the heart of it, there will be skills because of the graduate pool and, consequently, jobs. For all the wonder of its heritage and year of culture, which will grow and sustain itself over the coming decades, the parallel strategy has to be subregional and based on the university and skills.

The Minister will now have conversations on the year-to-year Budgets that we have before us and will have over the next couple of years, but, arguably, he will also be the central figure in conversations with London on the comprehensive spending review and in preparation for the next mandate. If he is to put his fingerprints all over the budgetary processes, including the one that we are discussing, one measure has to be what Mr Ramsey outlined: the subregional, university and skills strategy of the University of Ulster at Magee in the north-west.

Given the amount of effort that was put into the One Plan, given that it was launched by OFMDFM, me and others and given that it seemed to have unanimous endorsement, will that endorsement now be translated into the Finance Minister recognising what INI may now say is a subregional strategy and its particular character in the north-west? Will he put his shoulder to the wheel and put money on the table to see what happens with the Magee development?

I do not want to put words into the Minister’s mouth, and I am sure that he is tempted to jump up and throw the issue of ministerial responsibility at me. I think that he crossed the line with pillar 1 and pillar 2 and the judicial review a couple of weeks ago. However, if he is the Finance Minister who is going to be in the image of Swinney rather than Sammy, one test of that is for him to put his fingerprints, as best he can, on policy that is strategic and requires specific budget lines. So Derry, the One Plan and the development of Magee will be very important.

The Minister came to the Chamber during the monitoring rounds and confirmed that the loan that was being directed to the University of Ulster for the development at Yorkgate was being managed through the Strategic Investment Board. Will he also confirm whether the Government in Northern Ireland are underwriting the loan, as I understand it, that is being drawn down by the University of Ulster to co-fund the university site development at Yorkgate? There is speculation that the Government may be underwriting that wider borrowing from the European Investment Bank (EIB). It would be useful to know whether the Government are underwriting that beyond the channelling of the £25 million. If I am in error, I will withdraw that remark and stand corrected.

In passing, I say to the University of Ulster that it gets close to a breach of faith that it challenged my decision not to grant planning permission for a car park adjacent to the newbuild at Yorkgate. That is relevant, given what happened last week at the Planning Appeals Commission, which overturned that decision. Given my previous role, I am far from happy about the university’s approach to that planning decision, although I fully endorse the wider decision about the university moving to the north of the city and the potential for that to be a catalyst in the development of the area and because of other opportunities at the Royal Exchange, the underpass and the Cathedral Quarter.

6.30 pm

My third question to the Minister is on welfare. I know the Minister and, while we may have had a bit of a disagreement earlier, I know that he is thoughtful, because if nothing else, and there is a lot else, he came to this Chamber on behalf of his party arguing for heritage-led development and delivered a heritage-led development fund for DOE. That is very welcome, but I have to say that I was disappointed by the character of his remarks yesterday in respect of the welfare issue. Given his financial responsibility, he has to give best advice to the Executive, to the Assembly and to the wider community about what he believes the consequences of welfare reform will be. However, it lacks something, Mr Deputy Speaker.

*(Mr Principal Deputy Speaker
[Mr Mitchel McLaughlin] in the Chair)*

In his contributions yesterday, and in other contributions from the DUP today, including that from Mr Weir, everything was about the cost consequences to the Budget if welfare reform is not done in the image of what London is imposing. Very little was said about the damage that will be caused to families, communities and individuals because of what London will impose. There is something lacking, in my view when, on one hand, we are warned if not threatened about the consequences of not doing welfare reform without fully, at the same time, acknowledging what the consequences are going to be for families and individuals.

Mr Weir said earlier that there was:

“a catastrophe ... coming down the road”,

He was referring to the conduct of the Treasury. There is a catastrophe coming down the road. It is a catastrophe for those on incapacity benefit, those who will suffer the consequences of the bedroom tax, and so on and so forth.

This time I will not be able to find the reference, because I could not find it before the debate, but yesterday the Finance Minister complimented the Minister for Social Development on the Trojan work, or words to that effect, that he had done in negotiations with the Treasury —

Mr Hamilton: I did not use that word. It definitely was not that one.

Mr Attwood: You did not use that word, but they were words of that character. I will find them and give them to you later. Essentially, you acknowledged the very significant and great contribution — I think that the word might actually have been “great” — that was made by the Social Development Minister.

Now, I differ, because I do not think that there has been much of a negotiation with DWP for months and months. It is my view that DWP has long had the measure of DSD and the DUP when it comes to what they want to do with welfare. My sense is — I am not party to these conversations any more — that for months, and certainly since before the summer, DWP has given not an inch to DSD in what it might have been asked. There may have been some issues on the table beforehand that were useful and technical and that would have an impact on people managing their money, but my sense is that there has not been much coming from DWP for months.

One reason why I say that is that Lord Freud came here to meet the welfare reform subcommittee of the Executive before the summer, and, before the meeting began, he came to me in the corridor and said — these are his words, not mine:

“Alex, it’s all over to you”

I asked what he meant by that and he did not give me much of an answer, but he said:

as if I was somehow going to deliver the Executive on the welfare reform programme. That suggests to me that, by that stage, DWP was not looking very closely at DSD and the arguments that it was putting up around welfare reform.

I have a point that I would like to put to the Minister about the role that I think he can play in respect of welfare reform. Let us remember that the threats to the Budget in the North were confirmed yesterday by the Finance Minister. The Finance Ministers — this one and the previous one — have been messengers for Treasury when it comes to the threat of welfare.

Why do they not go back to London and say the following? “The IT that you used in the roll-out of universal credit in Britain is not working. You have slowed down the roll-out of universal credit, mostly to beyond the next election. The evidence is that the single biggest impact of the welfare reform piloted to date is on the poorest. While you wave to us this letter of threat about the impact on our Budget, you have moved the goalposts over in England in respect of your IT not working, the slowdown of the roll-out and the impact on the poorest. We want you to withdraw that letter because you have changed how you are delivering it in London, the south-east and other parts of Britain. Take the pressure off Northern Ireland.”

Mr Copeland: Will the Member give way?

Mr Attwood: I will.

Mr Copeland: Will the Member join me in describing as astonishing reports that expenditure on the introduction of universal credit by DWP stands at £225,000 per claimant, that being the money invested divided by the number of claimants? Even more astonishing is that £10.5 million was spent by DSD preparing for the introduction of universal credit here in the absence of any legislation being passed in the Chamber.

Mr Attwood: I was not aware of that information, but I accept it at face value. I think that it confirms the point.

Rather than the Executive just saying, “We are going to take our medicine”, the politics of this require the Executive to say to London, “Your medicine has not worked over there” — there is no surprise in that — so change the prescription and withdraw the threat.”

There is something that I do not understand about the welfare reform negotiation. When it comes to corporation tax, it is the First and deputy First Minister, the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment and the Finance Minister who make the argument. When it came to the £275 million secured for the Presbyterian Mutual Society requirement, the argument was made by the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, the First Minister, the deputy First Minister and the Finance Minister. When it came to the so-called pact that was outlined pre-G8, that was negotiated by the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, the First and deputy First Minister and the Finance Minister. Yet, when it comes to welfare reform, it is left to DSD.

My question to the Minister is this: if the arguments about corporation tax, the Presbyterian Mutual Society and the economic pact require the attention and work of four Ministers and others to try to get them over the line, is it not time that you did the same in trying to get the welfare reform argument over the line? If DWP has the measure of DSD, is it not time to change the rules of the game by bringing into the game all the other voices of authority in the Executive rather than just casually saying, "That is the way it is going to be because that is what DWP has told Nelson McCausland"? I put it to the Minister that that is the strategy that should now be deployed. Escalate this around the Executive table rather than certain voices around that table going quiet.

To be fair to Lord Freud, he has forever said that he accepts that there are different circumstances in the North. He has an understanding of this place because he spent time here in other capacities before he became a Minister. He said that he understood that the segregated housing in this city and other parts of Northern Ireland meant that the bedroom tax issue was of a different character here than elsewhere. I do not want to put words into his mouth, but he accepted that the profile of incapacity here, with 120,000 people on incapacity benefit, and the legacy of the conflict in the form of physical and emotional disability made this place different.

Mr Maskey: I thank the Member for giving way. It is also helpful to be aware that, in a number of meetings that the Minister for Social Development and I had with David Freud, he was very clear — I do not have the precise words — that he accepted that the situation here was more grave than elsewhere but not to the extent that we were claiming. I want to make that very clear.

Subsequent to that, he has made precious little of the flexibility that he mentioned, as did Owen Paterson, the then British Secretary of State, when he made public statements that all the exceptions would be granted. They have done precious little of that.

Mr Attwood: The Chair of the Committee is absolutely right. The conclusion that I draw from that is that this is not getting sorted at DSD and DWP level. Anybody who thinks that, if you park it there, it will be sorted is — albeit not deliberately — misleading people and damaging the public interest and those who are on benefits.

I put it to the Minister that Lord Freud, although he is wrong on much of his welfare reform, is a man of good intention but cannot deliver. He cannot deliver because Treasury blocks him and he has a dogmatic leader in Iain Duncan Smith. You have to go around them. If you can go around a London Government on corporation tax, the Presbyterian Mutual Society and the economic pact and you move the argument to somewhere else, why are we not doing that when it comes to welfare, other than because we have to roll over because £5 million a month — according to DUP speeches, it will become £1 billion — will be coming from us? The DUP does not even mention those who will be the real victims of welfare reform on the far side of what that party is now threatening? I do not understand any and all of that.

The third question that I want to put to the Minister is —

Mr Hamilton: It is your fourth question.

Mr Attwood: It is the fourth, is it? I got two maths O levels, but it does not show.

Mr Hamilton: That is why I am here.

Mr Attwood: Thank you. It suggests, as Mr Maginness suggested, that you are a bookkeeper rather than a Minister, but I will not draw conclusions. The jury is still out.

Mr A Maginness: The bean counter.

Mr Attwood: The bean counter.

In any case, my third or fourth point concerns Together: Building a United Community. A curious letter has come to the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister. It is curious because we actually got a letter from OFMDFM, given that there is all this backlog. The letter refers to T:BUC, so that is now OFMDFM's flagship programme for a shared future. Again, I will put it on the record that, when that was being voted through, a number of Executive Ministers said that it was a start and a moderate proposal with much to be moderate about but, nonetheless, it should be given a fair wind. I presume that the Minister is aware of the letter to the Committee. It talks about shared education opportunities and campuses — the 10 new shared education campuses, which is a great concept and one that is bigger than Lisanelly in Omagh. There are multiple opportunities, and it is arguably the biggest proposal to come out of T:BUC. If we can educate in a more shared way — that may not mean integration, but it does mean sharing — we can all live with the benefits. To live with the benefits, however, you have to have the funding. My question to the Minister is this: how would he respond to what has now been sent by OFMDFM on the shared education campuses?

The letter states:

"funding will be critical to delivery of many of our ambitious targets as set out in Together: Building a United Community. Funding will not be all new money. It will be made up of existing resources being targeted and spent differently and by additional funds being bid for in the usual way."

It adds:

"The Department of Education and OFMDFM are considering how the development of campuses and associated funding would sit alongside ongoing/proposed initiatives. All funding options will be considered."

Several questions arise from all of that. What is the Minister's view of the statement that the funding will not be all new money? What is his view on resources being targeted and spent differently? What is his understanding of additional funds being bid for in the usual way? Is that just monitoring or is it more? What is his understanding of the statement that all funding options will be considered?

If T:BUC is meant to be the flagship programme, we need to know whether there will be funding to meet the ambition for 10 new shared education campuses, which is arguably the element of the programme with the biggest flagship potential. Is it moving funding away from traditional school models into shared campuses? Is the statement that all funding options will be considered a hint, which we should have the opportunity to interrogate, that some private initiatives are coming our way? Might there be a bit of top-up money from monitoring rounds every quarter going into a project, the scale of which is 10 shared education campuses?

I am nearly finished now, Mr Deputy Speaker. I will put a couple of points from yesterday's debate to the Minister that he may want to think about. First, further to a question that one of his colleagues raised about the Education Minister, the Minister said:

"I share the Member's frustration that the Education Minister failed to participate in the Executive's process to monitor savings ... plans. That takes away from the Executive's savings delivery plans monitoring process and forces me to present an incomplete picture to the Assembly."

Then he added:

"Transparency in the Executive's finances is vital in engendering confidence among the electorate."

He concluded:

"Non-cooperation in the provision of information, as demonstrated by the Education Minister, damages the Executive as a whole." — [Official Report, This Bound Volume, p380, col 1.]

Although I think that the Education Minister has fought a very robust case on this, I can say that, when I was a Minister, I complied and agreed with the processes that were being introduced. However, my question is not about the Education Minister; it is this: does the Finance Minister live up to the standards that he articulated yesterday? Those standards mean that the Assembly is not placed in the position of having an incomplete picture, that transparency is vital and that non-cooperation in the provision of information damages the Executive. I ask that because I subsequently asked the Minister about how the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister was being treated. I have brought into the Chamber a list of matters that should be of real concern to the Minister. They are very much about financial issues on which OFMDFM has not shared relevant information with the Committee. In the week that is in it, it includes a request for a timeline on consideration of the performance and efficiency delivery unit (PEDU) report on the 2012 flooding, a request for a response to a research paper on EU competitive funding, a request for a timeline for the publication of a consultation on sexual orientation and information on the Department's EU priorities for 2014. All those are outstanding. So, how does the Minister then consider transparency and the flow of information?

Mr G Robinson: Will the Member give way?

Mr Attwood: I will in a second.

How does he consider transparency, non-cooperation and having an incomplete picture? I ask that, given that the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, which has a lot of finance-related responsibilities, does not have transparency, cooperation and the complete picture. Yet, when the Minister replied to me yesterday, he said that he was not going to get involved in the matter. Now there is a difference. He is an Executive Minister, and he was talking about an Executive colleague. However, why would he not make comment on Executive colleagues who, using the standards against which he judges his fellow Minister, are, in my view, failing to cooperate and to give the complete picture to a Committee?

Mr G Robinson: I thank the Member for giving way. As a member of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, I assure the Member that those outstanding issues will be sorted out very shortly. We had meetings today, and I assure you that the matters will be sorted out very shortly.

Mr Attwood: I always welcome good news, if good news is coming, and I see that there has been some speeding up with the correspondence coming to the Committee in this week's papers. I was just asking the Minister to reconcile the standards that he applies to an Executive Minister when dealing with the Executive with his comments — his silence — about the same standards when they are applied to an Executive Minister dealing with the Committee. People should be protective of both Executive and Committee authority, and the Minister should apply the same principles to both rather than avoiding the question.

My questions to the Minister are as follows: are you Sammy, or are you Swinney? Will you be assertive on North/South and on the university in Derry? Will you change the argument on welfare? There are also the other issues that I raised.

Mrs Dobson: I also welcome the opportunity to speak on this stage of the Budget Bill. There can be little doubt that some officials may begrudge the debates on the Estimates and the Budget Bill. All I will say is that, with the guarded, backhanded manner in which budgetary decisions are often taken by some Departments, every opportunity for at least some debate on the facts is welcome. Indeed, it is not as if the Assembly is overburdened with legislation. With few exceptions — DRD, for example, which has already introduced and completed a number of Bills — Ministers appear more interested in involving themselves in political games with one another over major Bills rather than legislating for the good of Northern Ireland.

Nevertheless, in relation to the debate, I wish to make a number of points on the DARD Estimates and the Budget Bill. Unusually, I have to say that I pay some credit to the Department for appearing to have at least spent most of the money that it was given. That was reflected in the monitoring rounds during the year. How wisely it was spent is entirely another matter. Farmers may take an even harsher line on that issue, but I could not comment.

Too many Departments hand money back, sometimes as a result of mismanaging their budgets. In the June 2013 monitoring round, I was pleased to see the Executive recognise the need for a hardship scheme, which was allocated £4 million. It would be easy to look back at the fairly positive summer and autumn months, weatherwise and pricewise, and forget the horror that so many people in the agri sector were going through last spring. The heaviest snowfall in memory and the ensuing fodder crisis brought many to their knees, so the scheme was welcome news. I visited many farmers affected by the extreme weather conditions and know that for them and their families it was a time that brought many of them to their lowest point. We debated mental health in farming communities in the House last week. I know from my visits to farmers that the hardship scheme eased their financial pressures at that time. We can be in little doubt that the scheme also relieved mental pressures. Of course, like any proposal in DARD, the idea is always better than the actual administration. We all know that there are protocols to follow, but there were totally avoidable delays. I was also disappointed that the Department did not use its full allocation for the scheme as widely or as wisely as it could have done. Indeed, charging farmers to have their dead animals lifted left a bitter taste in the mouths of many.

A further £3 million was allocated for the land parcel identification system in the same monitoring round. Considering that we are coming up to four years since the new mapping system was announced, it is disheartening that we are still picking up the tab for it. Around that time, the Executive also agreed that they would reallocate much of the capital funding, following the changes to major projects such as the A5 road scheme. DARD got another £19.9 million via that, much of which went to the rural development programme. It was surprising, however, that only £2 million was made available for the then recently announced Going for Growth action plan. I was disappointed at the time, but I did not expect DARD and DETI to go on as poorly as they had started. Both Departments and their Ministers point favourably to the potential for growth in the agrifood sector. However, when they have to put resources up front, they are nowhere to be seen. I call on them to put their money where their mouth is and, when you consider that supporting our economy is meant to be the Executive's number one priority, I fear for other areas of growth that might not be as obvious as our food sector. Until the strategy is supported, it will remain only words on a sheet of paper, nothing more. Is it any wonder that frustration has been growing across the industry over the lack of real commitment to it? I ask the Finance Minister to give his assessment of why DETI and DARD have adopted an apathetic approach to securing funds for it over the last year. It is not as if they bid but did not get any: they often just did not bid at all.

In the October round, DARD received a further £6.3 million resource. The bulk of that — £5 million — went towards TB compensation, and a further £1.6 million went towards the hardship scheme. On the issue of compensation, it deeply frustrates me that, for so long, respective Agriculture Ministers adopted a head-in-the-sand approach. They literally hoped that, by doing nothing, the problem would go away. Unfortunately, other areas of public service have had to pay for that ineptitude — for instance, £5 million in the round.

Of course, compensation only partially covers the cost of a positive TB reading. Farms are closed, businesses are affected and the quality of herds can often be hit, some even decimated. At last, the Department has begun, albeit slowly and rigidly, to consider measures to tackle the reservoir of TB in wildlife. Nevertheless, I am sure that I will be standing here in a year's time talking about the same issue in the reconciliation of the DARD Main Estimates of the 2013-14 spring Supplementary Estimates. Previous intransigence has ensured that the necessity for compensation will carry on.

Most recently, in the January monitoring round, there was a £3 million allocation of resources to DARD. We have been told that that is to address a pressure that arose as a result of the expenditure disallowed under the common agricultural policy. DARD also bid for and received £3.3 million capital for the Northern Ireland rural development programme (NIRDP). This is an opportune point to raise what the Finance Minister no doubt considers a real source of exasperation. I have absolutely no sympathy for him, though; he must recognise that he is jointly to blame.

I know that today and yesterday's debates should be strictly on the Vote on Account and what has been spent, rather than what will be spent in the Estimates. However, Minister, where do you think we will be in a few months' time when presenting the Main Estimates? I bring my remarks to a close by asking the Finance Minister if he believes that it is now inevitable that he will have to make available additional significant allocations to the next rural development programme. Maybe you could use tonight's debate to provide some clarity.

Mrs D Kelly: At this stage of the evening and after two days of debate, one wonders what one could add to the debate. Perhaps I can start on a happy note and wish David McIlveen a very happy birthday today. I am sure that this is not how he planned to spend it, but no doubt the Finance Minister will have a surprise in store for him later on. He might not be quite the Scrooge that others take him for.

As we all know, the Budget is tied to the Programme for Government, which set out to aspire to tackle deprivation and poverty and to build a more inclusive society. It is with regret that I note the failure of the Social Development Minister to build sufficient housing and the fact that he had to return such a large amount of money, as outlined by the Committee Chairman, Mr Maskey, in his contribution yesterday. I hope that the Finance Minister will not take that into account when looking at the resource allocation for social housing in the next financial year. The Social Development Minister tried to explain away his failure by referring to planning and land acquisition difficulties. I accept that they were contributory factors, but we all know that there are high waiting lists in Derry, Strabane, north Belfast and, indeed, my constituency, where land is available. Indeed, to the best of my knowledge, the Department owns 31 sites across rural Northern Ireland.

I am happy to report that, after much lobbying, I have a meeting tomorrow night on the building of six new houses on my patch at Derrymore.

7.00 pm

A business case was presented to the Finance Minister for £10 million for a buy-back scheme. That business case failed because they looked purely at the financial figures that would be lost from the private sector by way of the housing association's contribution to buy-back in areas of high demand. The Minister should acknowledge health inequalities and the association between poor housing and poor health outcomes and take that into consideration when making a judgement against a business case for housing. I think that the Minister will acknowledge that poor housing can indeed lead to poor outcomes for so many people.

I note that many Members acknowledged the recent fall in unemployment, which we are all very happy about. However, what some Members failed to acknowledge was that it represents only 25% of the jobs lost during the recession. So, we can be far from complacent about falling unemployment levels.

As the Minister well knows, many of the jobs that have been created are in the low-paid sector. Indeed, we are now hearing about jobs being offered under zero-hours contracts. These are worrying trends. The SDLP has always stood with the trade unions and acknowledges the work of many people over centuries in fighting for the rights of those who labour. We must be vigilant in seeking to assert workers' rights and protect the rights that have been hard won over many years.

I trust that the Minister will acknowledge that we are a low-wage economy with a high cost of living. Therefore, when Members talk about welfare reform and put forward very real concerns on behalf of their constituents, they are not talking about those who the Tories in particular would seek to deride as scroungers. We can all acknowledge that many people do not have the opportunity to find employment. The Minister will know that many benefits actually go to the working poor. Those are the people we should protect. Unfortunately, because child benefit and working tax credits are non-devolved matters, some cuts are already kicking in, hitting hard-pressed families who are struggling and trying to do the right thing and be role models for their children and others by trying to pay their way in society.

As my colleague Mr Attwood pointed out, the Executive fought much more strenuously on behalf of the likes of the Presbyterian Mutual Society to seek funding to right a wrong. Surely, we should be trying to right the wrong that the proposed welfare cuts will have on the most vulnerable.

The Executive set themselves a challenge of delivering social change and tackling deprivation. It was with some relief and gratitude that I learned that £1.3 million was to be spent, in part in my constituency, through the social investment fund. Over 50% of that money is still to be spent. I do not think that we got an answer from the First Minister yesterday as to whether that four-year programme will be condensed into a two-year programme. Perhaps the Finance Minister might be better able to answer that question for us.

The unfortunate thing is that, when I sought out the projects that were successful, I discovered that none were in neighbourhood renewal areas, which represent the 10% most deprived wards across Northern Ireland. I will read out some of the projects that have been successful. If the Finance Minister is not able to answer the question, I ask him to challenge those in the Executive who made the decision about how these projects are going to address social deprivation and poverty. They are Gilford community centre; Brownstown campus, Portadown; Richmount Playgroup, Portadown; Happy Days Playgroup, Coalisland; Mount Zion energy project, Lurgan; the Underground project, Lurgan; Silverbridge track and car park; Clogher Orange hall; Corcrain Orange hall; Corcrain shops redevelopment; Banbridge Orange hall; Holy Trinity Church, Banbridge; Pearse Óg Gaelic Football Club's minor works, Armagh; and Dromore Orange hall.

I have to add to Mr Attwood's concerns about the failure of OFMDFM to respond. In a debate earlier today, Mr Bell made much play about the social investment fund being "ground up". Drumcree Community Trust was founded in 1991. One of my former party colleagues, the late Councillor Ignatius Fox, was indeed a founding member. It is a ground-based organisation that manages a community centre and the Mayfair Business Centre, which has several businesses, gives employment and encourages entrepreneurship in a neighbourhood renewal area. It wrote to OFMDFM when the criteria for the social investment fund were announced on 3 December 2012. The closing date for applications was 5 December. The criteria called on all applicants to have full planning applications and feasibility studies completed. However, there was no technical aid for those organisations to do that. For one application to be successful, it could cost around £20,000 to £30,000 — money that they just did not have. I think that pro bono work is all but gone in this recession.

The Drumcree Community Trust raised equality considerations and asked questions about the assessment and eligibility criteria. It got a reply, I believe, by email — a response to say that its letter was acknowledged — on 3 December 2012. It has not heard a word from OFMDFM since. I ask the Finance Minister whether that is the way in which the Executive should set their objectives in, as some people say, building an Ireland of equals and creating a fair society? The fundamental question is this: how have the Executive delivered on their vision to create a more fair and just society that tackles poverty and social deprivation? I think that many people are keeping their heads down because they cannot look me in the eye and say that they have delivered.

I suggest that the Finance Minister gets to grips with what the Budget and the Programme for Government sought to do two years ago. Let us see whether we will build a shared future rather than a shared-out future, which is what the social investment fund seems to have delivered to date.

Mr Hamilton: Unlike some Members, I do not intend to detain the House for long. I was asked what time I might be able to finish. I want to point out that Mr McIlveen and I have our table booked for dinner to celebrate his birthday at 10.00 pm, so I have until around 9.55 pm to detain you.

I thank Members who contributed to the Second Stage debate on the Budget Bill. I acknowledge the Chair's very brief comments at the start of the debate; if only others had followed his example. I place on record my thanks to the Committee for Finance and Personnel for ensuring accelerated passage so that the legislative timetable could be adhered to at this critical and time-bound point of the financial cycle.

Many issues were covered today. Some Members clearly heard my opening remarks about keeping their speeches focused on the Budget Bill. I think that it is safe to say that some Members may have strayed somewhat beyond the specifics of the Bill. I do, however, agree with those who said that it is vital that Members have the opportunity to debate this important legislation. I appreciate the time that Members have given to the Bill, and I will do my best to respond to as many of the issues raised as possible. This is perhaps the lot of the Finance Minister, and it is something that I have learnt very quickly, this being my first Budget process, but I seem to end up answering for everyone else's Department, and I am not asked at all about my Department. I think that it is worth noting that. I was asked latterly by Mr Attwood whether I am a Sammy or a Swinney. It would appear that I am, if nothing else, at least the agony aunt of many Members of the House, if the quantity of problems brought from other Departments are anything to go by.

Let me try in a chronological order — forgive me if I skip about a bit, but I will do my best to tie it together coherently — to address the points that Members raised.

Mr Girvan raised the issue of air passenger duty. I can report that my Department, along with the Department of Enterprise, is currently undertaking an air connectivity study to consider what more can be done by the Executive to improve our air connectivity. That includes considering air passenger duty and, indeed, non-air-passenger-duty measures. The first stage of that work, which was a scoping study, is now complete. DETI has now procured specialist aviation consultancy support to assist in the completion of the work, and I look forward to seeing the outcome.

In considering any outcome, I think that we as an Assembly need to be mindful, first and foremost, of the cost. That does not preclude me or the Executive from considering the issue. I think that we should give it our careful consideration, and we have committed to doing that. However, we should be mindful of the cost, which was estimated at the outset to be £60 million and rose very quickly to £90 million. We have to balance expending that amount of money at a time when expenditure is under pressure, which is a point that I will come back to again, against the probability that it will not lower air fares and the decision about whether or not lower APD for other bands would include all flights. I think that I have made the point, perhaps to you, Mr Deputy Speaker, in another guise, that there are some flights that it would be nice to be able to attract within bands A, B and C and that there are others that, although useful to have, are not as economically beneficial. Attracting a flight from Frankfurt is one thing, but attracting one from Fuerteventura is entirely different. Those are some issues that we will need to consider as we progress the matter.

Mr Bradley, who I am glad to see is still here, raised issues about revenue-raising in the Budget. He has raised that in every single Budget Bill debate since the start of this whole Budget process. The fact that he raises it perhaps means that he has not had a satisfactory answer — or, maybe it is better put, an answer to his satisfaction. To give him some, I hope, positive news, of the £370 million in revenue-raising measures that were built into the Budget for 2011-12 and 2012-13 — so, for years that have been completed to date — the Executive have realised some £369 million. So, we were £1 million shy of what we should have over that period. That is despite, I am sure you would agree, not yet realising value from Belfast port, which I mentioned yesterday, and which we are still trying to make progress on.

The Member should or must realise that the public expenditure environment has changed since the Budget was set in 2011. We have seen constrained resource departmental expenditure limit and increased capital departmental expenditure limit allocations, which we will see increase in the future. In the past, we might have earmarked capital assets for disposal, such as, for example, some of the car parks that Mr Attwood mentioned in his commentary, because that was seen as a good thing to do when we got a capital receipt and capital budgets were under pressure. However, now that that has flipped and changed to a situation where the resource budget is under pressure, it is actually good for the Department for Regional Development to have those revenue-raising assets at its disposal. Some of those car parks are a very good example of that. So, some of the assets that we had wanted to sell and explicitly earmarked to sell should now be retained, as they generate resource income.

Mr Bradley also mentioned, as did, I think, Mr Weir and some others, issues about budgeting, and I will come on to the issues about the process. Our Budget process is a four-yearly one. Certainly, the one that we are in the middle of is a four-yearly one rather than an annual one. Various merits and demerits were put forward for that. I will just point out that, in 2015-16, there will be a one-year Budget, because a one-year Budget and one-year spending round will be coming forward from Treasury. Perhaps we will judge the merits of a one-year Budget process after we have gone through that experience and know whether we want to repeat it annually. My view is that it will not be as easy an experience as Members might think.

7.15 pm

What we do is not massively different from the rest of Great Britain. They have the same CSR framework, but they choose a different process and, in some cases, go for an annual rather than a four-year process. I think that one of the merits of the four-year process is that it allows Departments to plan better, particularly their capital expenditure, and it allows them to see a longer-term picture of what they have at their disposal. Therefore, they can plan much better. Instead of having some uncertainty about whether money will come forward next year or whether there will be a hit to budgets, as there might be, as there will be, as there has been —

Mrs D Kelly: I thank the Minister for giving way. That would be fine and somewhat logical if we saw the outworking of that. However, over £180 million was not spent by the Education Minister and a further £50 million was not spent by the Social Development Minister. Taking those two Departments alone suggests that there are more reasons behind the underspend than simply allowing for four-year planning.

Mr Hamilton: The Member raised the DSD issue, as did other Members. Some people complain that we have such a rigid and inflexible Budget, which was set back in 2010-11 and takes us up to 2015, that it cannot change. Take the DSD example: the Minister identified reduced requirements and was able to relinquish them early on and have them redistributed to other Departments. That shows that we have a flexible Budget; it is not rigid and it can respond to reduced requirements and pressures.

Yesterday, most of us were in here gripped by the Supply resolutions debate. However, Ed Miliband — I nearly said David Miliband — made a speech yesterday about public sector reform. He made an interesting point when he said that he thought that there was an argument for moving to three- to five-year budgets for certain areas of public expenditure. He was not exactly talking about the overall picture that we are talking about, but it was an interesting commentary on giving people in health or education more certainty than they currently have with the one-year Budget processes that are the norm across the water, particularly in Scotland, which was much lauded by many during the debate. There are aspects of a one-year Budget process that may seem appealing, but on balance, being able to plan better over a four-year period is far better.

Mr Bradley also mentioned DSD's reduced requirements specifically, and I have addressed that. I am disappointed that the money was not spent where it had been earmarked for expenditure at the outset of the Budget, and, obviously, people suffer as a result of that — I accept and acknowledge that, and it was a point that I made to my colleague the Social Development Minister. However, I would rather that the Minister got better value for money in the contracts, did not waste money and did not spend it unnecessarily so that we have more money to spend in the longer term on other projects that will help the needy and vulnerable and our economy.

There was a bit of toing and froing throughout the debate about the devolution of taxation. Mr Bradley indicated his desire — at least I think that he indicated his desire, but we qualified that a little later — for the devolution of various tax-raising powers to the Executive. However, he was silent on the cost of devolving such powers. It is an important question.

The Executive and I are open to considering the devolution of tax-varying powers where there is a clear economic benefit to Northern Ireland. The devolution of air passenger duty and the efforts to devolve corporation tax are clear examples of that. The economic pact tasked my Department to examine the issue and produce a paper. First and foremost, we remain committed to pursuing corporation tax. I think that it would be a strategic weakness if we were distracted from our number-one objective in tax devolution, which is corporation tax, by talking about other taxes, which, I am sure we would all agree, would have a less significant impact on the local economy.

Mr D Bradley: Thank you very much for giving way, Minister. During the debate, I said that it would be useful to have a Calman-type review and to look at the various tax-varying powers that are open to us, of which I mentioned a few. I also said that it would be useful to look at the evidence on a cost-benefit basis and then decide which powers we should devolve.

The Minister makes much of the devolution of air passenger duty. That was not a choice made by the Executive; it was forced on the Executive by the fact that an airline was going to stop its transatlantic flight from Belfast International Airport to Newark. Had that not been the case, the duty would not have been devolved.

Mr Hamilton: The Member is right: it was not that the Executive pursued the devolution of air passenger duty. The objective, as he is absolutely right to point out, was to retain that key and critical flight into Newark. The device by which we could retain that was the devolution of APD for long-haul flights. It was not an ideological pursuit of the devolution of that tax and that band of that tax but a measure to secure a wider economic objective. That is the point that I would like to stress.

I have a simple approach to this. I am open to the devolution of more taxes to the Assembly and the Executive but on two broad conditions: one, that they are affordable; and, two, that they bring economic benefit to Northern Ireland. In some cases, the hurdles to overcome will be fairly high, but I think that they are reasonable hurdles for us as an Executive. In the fiscal position that we are in, they are reasonable. I think that affordability and having economic benefit are reasonable tests for us to have.

Mr McKay: Thank you for giving way. Unfortunately, I think that the Minister has been open to APD, for example, for a long, long time. That is what some members of the Committee find particularly frustrating, because, at the moment — this has been publicised in the press — airports in the North are feeling the strain because of distortions in the market on the island. Dublin is clearly well ahead of both airports in Belfast, which are feeling the strain.

Does the Minister agree that we have to take into account issues other than cost? I thought there was a bit of political tennis going on, with the cost of corporation tax on one side and air passenger duty on the other. Of course, cost is a primary factor, but the fact of the matter is that many people in the business community — particularly the airports — want to see the Executive respond to market signals such as those that we see very strongly with APD.

Mr Hamilton: I hope that the Member will accept that significant work has been undertaken by my Department and the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to scope out the issues surrounding the further devolution of APD. I mentioned issues around costs and other things at the minute. I accept that there are issues and that our airports feel that they are in a difficult position. However, I thought it interesting that, when the ROI Government announced their recent elimination of their equivalent of air passenger duty from around €3 to nothing, Belfast City Airport said in a statement that it did not think that that would result in a huge influx of passengers from Northern Ireland into the Republic of Ireland and out of Dublin Airport. I tend to agree with that. I do not think that that reduction would bring about the impact that some people think it would.

Let us not think that the only actors in this play are the Government and, by extension, taxpayers and those who use the services that we provide. The airports are in a position to do things themselves to attract long-haul and short-haul flights. I argue that we have given them the perfect device to attract further long-haul flights by eliminating APD for such flights. That happened over a year ago, and we have yet to have a single additional long-haul route for an airline out of Belfast International Airport. There are questions for the airport to answer about what it has been doing to ensure that more flights are attracted. Of course, they have options, since they are a business. They have commercial things that they can do and levers that they can pull to attract in airlines. Therefore, I do not accept that it is entirely the responsibility of us in government to give away £60 million of taxpayers' money that could be spent on other public services or, indeed, other areas of transportation, when there are things that the airports could and should do as well.

Finally, I am open to further tax devolution, but it must be affordable and of economic benefit to Northern Ireland. I am open to looking at some of the areas that have been considered. One of the reasons why I do not think that we need a highfalutin commission to look at this is that we can benefit from some of the work that Calman, Silk and others have already done elsewhere. I do not think that the issues that they raised in Scotland or Wales would be massively different here or would require us to have our own commission that would report over a long time. I think that we can learn from them, and that is exactly what my Department intends to do with this.

I have raised this with officials and am seeking to address it, but one of the things that is missing is that we do not have the macroeconomic model in place to know what the overall effect will be on the whole Northern Ireland economy if we get this tax and reduce it or increase it. Previously, we were able to design a model for corporation tax, but that was in isolation and on its own. We need to do likewise for all taxation so that we can see what happens with the economy if we go up and down in various taxes.

Leslie Cree spoke about the savings delivery plans, as, I think, did other Members. I recently provided to the Executive and the Committee for Finance and Personnel my update on the implementation of departmental savings delivery plans as at 30 September 2013. I am encouraged that the majority of Departments have indicated that they are on course to deliver on their savings commitment, with 98.2% of savings expected to be achieved this year and over 99% next year.

The Department of Justice has indicated potential difficulties in the delivery of its savings targets. Those difficulties are due mainly to higher than anticipated costs associated with the Prison Service staff exit scheme. However, I am assured that the scheme will deliver value for money over the longer term. I remain extremely disappointed that the Education Minister has decided not to participate in the savings delivery monitoring process.

Mr Cree also raised issues about the use of financial transactions capital and partnering more closely with the private sector. I very much support that. My statement on January monitoring updated the Assembly on the position on FTC, and the Executive have now allocated £40.9 million in this financial year, with a further allocation of £38 million for the next financial year. Schemes that have benefited to date include the University of Ulster's greater Belfast development scheme, housing schemes and the agrifood loan scheme, as well as loans to GPs and dentists to upgrade their facilities. I agree with the Member that, moving forward, the Executive need to work closely with the private sector to ensure that that funding is used to benefit our economy. I hope that the loan to the University of Ulster is our first major expenditure on FTC on a big capital project that will leverage in lots of other finance and point to the way ahead. I am actively pursuing other projects with Executive colleagues, including the Member's colleague the Minister for Regional Development.

Mr Cree also raised issues about consultancy or, more pertinently, the cost of consultancy. I am sure that he will be pleased to hear that I recently cleared for publication the 2012-13 compliance report on external consultancy. It was published on my Department's website on 6 February. The expenditure on the use of external consultants by Departments, their non-departmental public bodies and other arm's-length bodies fell to £7.65 million in 2012-13, a decrease of 18% on the previous year. That represents an overall reduction of 77% since annual reporting was introduced in 2007-08.

Mr Dickson raised some queries about the 2015-16 Budget-setting process. I will shortly bring a paper outlining the 2015-16 process to the Executive for agreement. I am confident that Committees will have sufficient time to engage with Departments on the 2015-16 position. Indeed, I will call on Committees to begin that process as soon as the Executive agree the overall approach. Departments should now begin to identify the pressures and issues that 2015-16 will bring and should already be planning for a more constrained resource position. Early engagement with officials will facilitate Committees' effectiveness in assisting in that 2015-16 Budget process.

Mr Dickson raised other issues, including concerns about capital funding. He asked about better planning for capital funding, citing, I think, the A5 as an example. I agree with him. That is why I created a subgroup under the procurement board, which I chair, to look at that very issue. I think that there are valid criticisms about our management of major capital projects. I have asked it to look at a range of issues, including the scope for greater centralisation and, indeed, the prioritisation of projects. Mr Kinahan used the awful phrase "shovel-ready projects". I hope that it is the last time that I hear that phrase in the House; I might do something with a shovel if I hear it again. If I do not agree with the language that he used, at least I agree with the sentiment that we need a better pipeline of projects ready to go should schemes not move. One that affects his constituency and which we have warmed up, to use a phrase, is the part of the A6 project between Randalstown and Castledawson, which has been given £1 million to take it to various stages should money become available at a later point to let that go. That is an example of what we can do. It is not quite shovel-ready; "procurement-ready" is probably a better phrase. However, at least I understand where the Member was coming from.

7.30 pm

Mr Dickson also raised queries about local government reform, as did some other Members. In February 2013, the Executive agreed a funding package of £47.8 million for local government reform. Over the next two financial years, £13.8 million from the package is available to cover transition elements of the programme. The Executive have also committed up to £4 million to cover the cost of council borrowing in relation to ICT costs and systems convergence for the next two financial years. There is also a further commitment of £30 million for rates convergence following the creation of the 11 new councils in April 2015. Essentially, that will be used to protect ratepayers whose rates bills may have experienced a significant increase as a result of merging with councils with higher rates. I hope to update the House on that in more detail via a statement in the not too distant future. To be clear, I expect local councils to cover any remaining costs of local government because they are expected to make huge savings in the years ahead if they utilise the benefits that come from reorganisation.

Adrian McQuillan made some general points about the economy. He started off by mentioning the USA's Budget. He is right: for all the maligning of our Budget in Northern Ireland and even if our process is boring, which some criticised it for being, I have yet to see us get to the 59th minute of the 11th hour without agreement on spending money. Our Government have yet to close down in Northern Ireland. So when we are lectured by Americans about what we should do in this country, there is sometimes a message and a lesson for them as well. He made a number of key points about the economy. Members acknowledged — some more grudgingly than others — that the economy was moving in the right direction. Even today, we see yet another of our local companies winning contracts around the world in international markets, with HeartSine, which Mr Ross referenced, providing defibrillators to Singapore's defence Ministry. I want to see more local firms competing and winning business in the world market. There has been very positive news on unemployment. It is still too high in many respects, and youth unemployment is still too high, but, in the past year, the claimant count has come down by more than half a per cent.

Mr McQuillan mentioned Mivan, which is an unfortunate recent victim of the downturn. Even though things are getting better, there will still be many victims, particularly in sectors that have struggled and continue to struggle. However, we welcome the news from the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors that the construction sector is, in its view, exiting recession. The Northern Ireland composite economic index showed an increase from September 2012 to September 2013 of 1.2% in our economy. The Ulster Bank PMI yesterday confirmed that all sectors were continuing to grow and that the manufacturing sector in Northern Ireland was growing at a higher rate than anywhere else in the United Kingdom or, indeed, anywhere else that the RBS Group measured.

Mr McQuillan also mentioned rates and domestic and non-domestic revaluation in particular. He asked for an update on the potential for a domestic revaluation for the purpose of calculating rates bills. The Executive have no plans to carry out a domestic capital value revaluation during the current spending review period and the life of the current Assembly. Furthermore, carrying one out would be difficult at the moment, as the evidence required to establish the values is not sufficiently reliable, given the continued volatility in the housing market. However, a non-domestic revaluation, which I know the Member will be aware of, is planned for 2015, and, to reiterate the point that Mr Weir made, it will be as much about managing expectations. There will, of course, be winners and losers, and many will stay more or less the same.

Mr Weir talked extensively about rates. I am proud to have inherited the record on rates that I was bequeathed by my predecessors. We have the lowest household taxes in the United Kingdom. The Member is right to point out that the average household in Northern Ireland pays household taxes that are half the average in England. That good news on rates is not restricted to the domestic sector; it extends into the non-domestic sector. He was right to point out that we are in our seventh year of a freeze in real terms in business rates. I am proud that half of all business in Northern Ireland now get at least a 20% relief on their rates bills and that over £300 million through industrial derating has been kept in the pockets of local manufacturing businesses.

Mrs D Kelly: I thank the Minister for giving way. Will he join me in congratulating Craigavon Borough Council and other councils that have returned a zero-rate increase for the next financial year in their local authorities?

Mr Hamilton: I congratulate any council, particularly councils with large DUP representations — I understand that Craigavon has — that follow the example of other DUP-led councils across Northern Ireland and have done their best to keep the rate low. I hope that the message has finally got down to some in local government. In this place, I think, we all agreed — I cannot remember much dissent around the House — to having zero increases of our own here and then freezing it in real terms in the past number of years. Unfortunately, in many cases, that was not translated into similarly low increases or freezes at local government level. Some councils took advantage of the low level of increase that we had here. Then, of course, the ratepayer did not see any real benefit. I hope that the message has now gone right down to local government level and that we can all prudently and sensibly manage our budgets with the requirement for as low an increase in rates as possible while still, obviously, trying to provide the best services.

Mrs Overend mentioned the small business rate relief scheme and her desire to see it extended beyond its current period, which is due to run out next year. I have commissioned an evaluation of the policy. It was, as Members will recall, a measure that was brought in to specifically deal with the recession. Now that the recession is over, it is right, as we come to the end of the legislative cover for it, that we assess whether the project has worked and where it has or has not worked, whether there are any tweaks and changes that can be made to improve it and whether, in fact, we need it at all. The revaluation will obviously play into the requirement for such a scheme. I very much enter into the evaluation with an open mind about what we do in the future.

Mrs Overend mentioned the agrifood loan scheme.

Mr Attwood: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Hamilton: I will give way on the agrifood loan scheme.

Mr Attwood: Given that the Minister has just said that he believes that the recession is over, does he still stand by his comments in yesterday's debate? He said:

"Just because the economy is booming — we will see the British economy ... starting to take off this year, with the Northern Ireland economy following that and doing equally well". — [Official Report, This Bound Volume, p382, col 2.]

Are you saying that, later this year, to use your words, the Northern Ireland economy will be booming?

Mr Hamilton: It is not for me to say. I look at the facts and report them. Compare where the Northern Ireland economy is now with where it was. The most recent figures for the entirety of the Northern Ireland economy, which were published recently through the composite economic index, show that, from September 2012 to September 2013, which is almost six months ago, the economy in Northern Ireland grew by 1.2%. The estimates coming from others, including PricewaterhouseCoopers, show that, in this year, the economy will grow by close to 2% in Northern Ireland. For me, in comparison with where we were, that is booming. It will lag behind where the United Kingdom economy as a whole is, as is usually the case. However, given where we have been and given the need for sensible, manageable and sustainable growth over the long term, I will settle for close to 2% this year and in future years.

I thought that the Member was going to intervene with a specific question about the agrifood loan scheme, as I had moved onto it, but I thought that that might have been a push for an MLA from West Belfast.

As the Member will know, the scheme is a joint initiative between my Department, DETI, Invest Northern Ireland and a number of local banks. Our cooperation with the banks shows that we are listening to, and acting on, industry concerns and is an example of the Executive working together to support local businesses.

The detailed negotiations with the banks and their advisers on the legal agreements that formed part of the first phase of the scheme have drawn to a close. Although the legal agreements have taken slightly longer to conclude than originally expected, we have taken time to address a number of potential issues up front that may have arisen and delayed the application process. Ultimately, this may lead to a smoother application process for poultry producers than might otherwise have been the case.

Looking to the wider issue of utilising FTC, I hope that Invest Northern Ireland will be able to make greater use of this in its engagements with the private sector.

I now want to address Mr Ramsey's comments and will deal first with his comments about the University of Ulster's campus at Magee College. He and Mr Attwood raised the issue of increasing the number of university places in the north-west. This, of course, is primarily an issue for the Department for Employment and Learning. I understand that, in principle, it is supportive of the University of Ulster's aim to increase undergraduate numbers at Magee College by 1,000, but that must be set against its overall budget and the priorities in that budget.

In 2011, the Executive made funding available for the creation of 700 additional undergraduate places over the period of 2012-13 to 2014-15 and, as a result of their economy and jobs initiative, the Executive met a DEL bid for an additional 500 additional undergraduate places to be funded from 2013-14 to 2015-16. The University of Ulster has stated that all its 652 additional places will go to Magee College, against a target of an additional 1,000 full-time undergraduate places there by 2015.

Mr Ramsey also discussed the strategic framework to address economic inactivity. He asked whether I could enlighten him on any additional funding that could be made available to address economic inactivity, particularly in his area. As he is no doubt aware, the Executive agreed to consult on a draft strategic framework to address economic inactivity late last year and the public consultation process is under way. I understand that the Minister for Employment and Learning and the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment will seek to bring a further draft strategy to the Executive after the period of public consultation ends, perhaps in May or June. At that point, I expect that we will hear whether there are any additional resourcing consequences and what they are.

Mr Ramsey also talked about colleges. I do not think that he was critical of our colleges, but I want to put it on record that I think that they are doing an increasingly exceptional job. Mr Ross mentioned his experience of the South Eastern Regional College, which covers my constituency, and its work with Allen and Overy — I think that that was the firm he cited — and its specific training needs. At probably a lower level, I know of a firm in my constituency that works in the waste management sector, and I was incredibly impressed by the way SERC was able to respond very rapidly to its needs and put a training package in place.

Mr Ramsey also mentioned that our Budget document is years out of date. Although that chimes with the theme that constantly came from that corner of the Chamber, I do not think that it is accurate. Our Budget and the Budget Bill before us reflect changes including additional Treasury allocations and the changes that we have made in the monitoring rounds.

During the debate, Members from the SDLP made repeated calls for more money ad infinitum. If this is an out of date document, then that was all that I heard. I heard calls for more money here and there, for the A5, the A6, the university in the north-west, Narrow Water Bridge, ferry services and so on and so forth. What I did not hear was any reference to any commensurate reductions. It is easy to call for more money. We are all very good at that. It is easy and instinctive, and is so instinctive that it is the sort of behaviour that my children engage in when it gets to Christmas time and they want this, that and the other thing. However, they do not tell Mummy or Daddy where they should get the money from to pay for it.

Mr Attwood: Will the Member give way?

Mr Hamilton: Yes.

Mr Attwood: Almost on a point of order; I think that any reference to an adult as a child in the Chamber is inappropriate, and you may want to think about that. If you had not referred to children I would not have done so. [Interruption.] It is a relevant matter, because we do not use language like that about you. We may call you a technocrat but we do not call you a child, and you should not visit the same language on anybody else.

In any case, you are wrong, you are wrong, you are wrong. And the reason that you are wrong is because the SDLP is alone among the parties in the Chamber to have published alternative Budgets. At the heart of those alternative Budgets are proposals to secure other sources of funding, reduce costs and protect services. I named some of them earlier and will not name the rest now, save to say that what we said in 2009 was adopted by your predecessor and the Budget review group, and you have taken it forward.

Mr Hamilton: Perhaps describing the Member as a child was inappropriate given his performance as a lecturing schoolteacher for the past minute or so. "We are looking for innovative proposals" was one of the cries from the SDLP corner today. Its alternative Budget document contained the innovative, revolutionary and, in fact, illegal proposal that we should sell City of Derry Airport, which, of course, we do not own. That was the wonderful piece of SDLP budgeting.

Mr Attwood: On a point of order, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. Will the Member give way?

Mr Hamilton: Is it a point of order, or do you want me to give way? I will give way.

Mr Attwood: That is a curious argument about City of Derry Airport. We do not own the harbour, yet part of your Budget strategy is to get money from the harbour.

Mr Hamilton: At least there is value in the harbour.

Mr Attwood: There is also value in the airport, but the point is — [Interruption.]

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: All remarks must be made through the Chair.

Mr Attwood: The Member's point is contradictory because he says that we cannot sell what we do not own, but we can get money from what we do not own in the harbour. You and others are failing abysmally to deal with the problem that that presents in money coming back to the state.

Mr Hamilton: We are continuing to attempt to extract value from the port, as the Member knows from his experience on the Executive. I would be interested to know how we extract value from City of Derry Airport, which, to my knowledge — I stand to be corrected — has never posted a profit, unlike Belfast harbour, which continues to post a profit. Perhaps there are other ways in which we could get value from that site, but ultimately we do not own it to extract value in those ways.

Mr Attwood: Will the Member give way?

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: If I can just intervene again. We have had the debate, and the Minister is responding. At this time of the evening, I certainly have no intention of allowing the debate to be reopened. Members had their opportunity to make their points. If the Minister would continue to respond to the debate, it would help us all.

Mr Hamilton: Thank you. I will take your direction, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker.

Mr Attwood: On a point of order, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. The Minister gave way, so I think that I am entitled to ask the question.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I will not take that as a challenge to the Speaker. I think that he did respond.

Mr Attwood: It is only a point. Are you not going to give way?

Mr Hamilton: I was given a direction by the Chair to move on, so I will respect him and not challenge him as others might.

Mr Ramsey put forward the A5 versus the A6 argument. I acknowledge that both are hugely important infrastructure schemes not just for the north-west but for the whole of Northern Ireland. However, they are also hugely expensive. As the Member, and indeed the House, will know, there is still a commitment to the A5, which means that we cannot commit fully to the A6.

Mrs McKeivitt mentioned the Narrow Water bridge project and criticised me and my Department for not being creative enough and showing enough tolerance. Mr Wells, in an intervention, succinctly highlighted the problem with the Narrow Water bridge project, which was a huge cost overrun. My Department brought forward over £3 million in funding, which unlocked a huge amount of European funding, was creative and showed tolerance. The reference to tolerance was perhaps about the letter of offer being rescinded. As the Member knows, that is a matter for the SEUPB as the managing authority for that fund. Although regrettable, it rightly withdrew the letter of offer. Lots of people were talking, but there was no hard cash on the table. I think that it took the right decision to withdraw that letter of offer so that we might employ that money elsewhere. Indeed, I look forward to announcements in the not too distant future about other projects on which that money might be wisely spent.

Mr McCallister spoke extensively about the Budget process in Scotland, so much so that I thought that he was going to move there. I thought that he was going to leave. I am due in Scotland next week: perhaps he could stow away in my luggage and we could leave him there. I wonder how long it would be until he was missed. We will not go there.

The Member raised the issue of producing an annual Budget. I hope that I have addressed some of those points, in that I think that, while there may be an attraction to annual Budgets, some might say that there are other downsides, not least in the system that we have. Members who raised issues with that may have short memories.

When we set our Budget in 2011, we set it for four years, and we were lauded for that in other parts of these islands. Scotland was unable to agree a four-year Budget, even though, I think, there was an attempt to do so. It has an annual Budget simply because it could not deliver what this Executive delivered, which was a settled Budget position that provided certainty in the medium term. However, we have adjusted that Budget when necessary, and routinely update it three times a year through the monitoring rounds. I do not think that the Member or any other Members give us enough credit for that.

He went on to ask whether our Budget process was fit for purpose to accommodate corporation tax. We will have to deal with a lot of issues if and when the Prime Minister makes a — hopefully, positive — decision about corporation tax. However, I think that there is a failure to grasp the key issue here. The key point is that we need a mechanism to manage the volatility of corporation tax, and that is not anything to do with the general Budget process.

Before moving off that subject, while the Member lauds and applauds Scotland, it has one advantage over our Executive in that it is a one-party Government. I think that it would be immeasurably easier for me or whoever was Finance Minister to agree annual Budgets in a one-party Government than it is in our system of a five-party mandatory coalition.

Mr McCallister and others mentioned the review of the financial process. He raised concerns over the lack of progress on the review and unfortunately sought to place the blame with me rather than with the Education Minister. I assure the Member that my predecessor made every effort to progress these much-needed reforms but was met with significant resistance from the Education Minister. I am happy, as I mentioned yesterday, to engage again with the Education Minister in order to progress the review, but given the size of the Education budget and the need to get legislation to underpin the review, I need broader Executive agreement.

Mr McCallister: I am grateful to the Minister for giving way, and for his response and his recognition of the volatility around corporation tax. Accepting that he is in a five-party coalition, how does he expect to get some Ministers on this Executive to agree with him on devolving corporation tax while still blocking the necessary reforms to the scrutiny process that he and this Assembly would like to bring forward? Surely the Minister will not want that to be the one blockage that Treasury puts in place, while almost hoping for a successful decision on this?

Mr Hamilton: I do not think that that is a relevant issue. It is certainly not something that has ever been raised with me. I cannot speak for my predecessor, but I am sure that it was never raised with him as a reason not to devolve corporation tax. I suppose that, as far as Treasury is concerned, our Budget process is perfectly fine, given that it is the process that direct rule Ministers operated for many years in Northern Ireland. It is content with our process as it is, and obviously if we change it, then everybody will have to buy into it because we will need legislation to underpin it.

I accept that dealing with the reductions in public spending that will come with devolving corporation tax will be a huge challenge, but I seek solace and hope about that difficult conversation that will happen around the Executive table in the fact that everyone around that table is supportive of devolving corporation tax. While they are, on the one hand, supportive of the many positives that would come from devolving corporation tax, not least attracting additional foreign direct investment, increasing jobs and encouraging indigenous firms to grow, they are also mindful that there is a price to pay and that that price will have to be taken from public spending.

Mrs Kelly raised the successful court action that I took against the Agriculture Minister over her decision not to consult the Executive on the transfer of funds from the single farm payment to the rural development programme. I would have preferred the Executive themselves to agree the Northern Ireland position on this important issue. Unfortunately, court action was the only method available, within the time frame, to set aside a decision that I believe should have been taken by the Executive. The court obviously agreed with me on that.

I am not surprised that the SDLP criticises that, given that it was as much a defence of the constitutional changes enshrined in the Northern Ireland (St Andrews Agreement) Act as anything else. I know that the SDLP was happy for Ministers to do whatever they wanted in their Department and treat it like a personal fiefdom. The DUP did not believe that that was right or should be the case. That is why we negotiated those changes in the St Andrews Agreement. I am glad that the court upheld the changes that were made in legislation.

Alastair Ross talked about the better economic picture, which is right. The facts show that there is a better economic picture. That is not to underplay the problems that still exist in the economy. We still have a long way to go, but we are starting to see our economy take off. After five or six years of nothing but doom and gloom, which I am sure satisfied some in the House, we are starting to see positive news about the Northern Ireland economy.

He was right to point out how good we are at attracting foreign direct investment. He mentioned some of the brand names — HBO, the New York Stock Exchange, the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, Citi, Fujitsu and others — which, a number of years ago, would not have entertained the notion of investing in Northern Ireland. He was right to point out that we often understate the good things that are done in the Northern Ireland economy. A number of weeks ago, I was in B/E Aerospace and I was impressed, not just by what it does and the customers that it serves but by the fact that it is producing around 30% of all of the world's aircraft seats in Kilkeel in County Down.

He was, however, also right to point out that, although our economy is moving in a positive direction, the world economy is growing and the UK economy as a whole is improving, that will not necessarily — in the short term, it absolutely will not — lead to any increase in public spending. That is why I have prioritised reform on my agenda as Minister.

The economic importance of reforming our public sector is sometimes misunderstood. However, I have noticed, and I think it worth exploring, that states with dynamic, innovative and export-orientated economies — the likes of Singapore, where our colleague the Minister of Enterprise is this week — also have dynamic and innovative Governments. It is no coincidence that reform-orientated Governments also have very dynamic and innovative economies.

He asked for an update on the work of the public sector reform division, the establishment of which was one of the first things that I announced in post. Work is ongoing, principally on creating what I describe as the architecture of reform, namely developing a strategy and a vision; reviewing what we do already on reform; and pointing out where improvements could be made. It is also about new innovations such as creating government policy laboratories, which are schemes that will involve staff producing and developing ideas. I am a great believer that front line staff probably have the best ideas about reforming our public sector and, as you might expect from a DFP perspective, in using funds and financial incentives to encourage and embed reform right across the public sector.

My colleague Ian McCrea raised the topic of the Magherafelt and Cookstown bypasses. He rightly acknowledged that, in an announcement, £15 million was allocated to the development of the Magherafelt bypass project to allow construction work to commence in 2014-15. He mentioned other projects including a Cookstown bypass.

Members will be aware of the slippage of the A5 project. I have said previously that we need to be careful not to commit contractually to other large road projects until we have certainty about the A5 situation. The Executive have an excellent track record of investment in our roads infrastructure, both in maintenance of the existing roads and new schemes. If the Minister for Regional Development has proposals for any other schemes, such as the Cookstown bypass that the Member mentioned, those can be considered as part of future monitoring rounds or Budget processes.

Karen McKeivitt, as well as raising the issue of the Narrow Water bridge, which I have addressed, talked about arts and cultural space for Newry. She implored me to find the money to invest in that — another request for money.

I have to say that I am a big supporter of investing in arts and culture, not because of arts and culture per se but because of their economic impact. I am also a fan of the Newry area. I was in Newry a week and a half ago at a lunch organised by its chamber of commerce at which quite a few other priorities were put to me to finance. Mrs McKeivitt mentioned libraries as well, and I am very open to discussions with Executive colleagues about their priorities for future capital investment, given the improving capital position.

8.00 pm

Mr Elliott raised several issues, one of which he described as "equal pay". I am slightly frustrated, in that I addressed this issue yesterday in the House. I appreciate that perhaps the Member was not present; indeed, he is not here now either. It is frustrating to deal with issues one day and then have to reopen them the next day as if they are brand new. Mr Elliott asked whether the money for equal pay was ring-fenced. As far as I am concerned, as I pointed out yesterday and as I pointed out in response to a question from Mr Givan — I think that I have a question for oral answer about it next week — there is no equal pay issue. The matter was established in the courts, and those to whom Mr Elliott referred are not, to use his phrase, “duly entitled”. However, I think that there is a moral argument for re-examining the issue, and that is why I took the step early in my tenure of doing that. The latest position, which I updated the House on yesterday, is that, following discussions with the Minister of Justice, his Department and mine are examining how the issue can be resolved and some recognition given. Of course, although the Minister of Justice and I might come to an agreement, we will definitely require Executive support and some finance.

Mr Elliott mentioned the Prison Service exit scheme. Although it has taken some time to get the full benefit from it and some outstanding cases remain, I am supportive of the scheme because it is a genuine reform-orientated bid for funds. Headroom has been built into the budget to allow for expenditure on the scheme, should money become available through reduced requirements between now and year end.

The Member mentioned the police budget, which, again, was something that I addressed yesterday in response to Mr Givan. Having listened to the Minister of Justice and the Chief Constable talk about the pressures that their budgets are under, I have agreed to meet them to discuss pressures that they may face in future years and opportunities that may exist to realise further efficiencies.

Mr Elliott also talked about RPA and his disbelief about the savings. I think that it stands to reason that savings will be made through RPA. Of course, it requires councils to seize the opportunities that reorganisation and reform present, and one such area is the use of shared services. I have extended an invitation to local government to discuss shared services, and my departmental officials have followed up on that. I hope that the expertise and experience that we have developed in the Department of Finance and Personnel in delivering an extensive and effective shared services programme can benefit local government in Northern Ireland and realise some of those savings.

Mr Maginness criticised the lack of excitement in the debate, and I am not sure whether my contribution has helped or hindered. I take on board several points that he raised and will try to address at least a few of them. I do not think that it is fair to say that we slavishly follow what happens in Westminster. While Mr Maginness was speaking, I noted down three examples in the Department of Finance and Personnel alone where we have not slavishly followed what has happened in Westminster. Rather, we have been innovative and creative and have used the benefits of devolution to do our own thing to suit the circumstances in Northern Ireland as and when they arise. I cannot speak for the other Ministers, but I am sure that, if they were here, they could think of two, three or, I hope, more examples in their Department of where they have stepped outside the norm and not taken the orthodox London view as the only way to move forward.

The first example of the three that I can think of is procurement. We are the first part of the United Kingdom to introduce project bank accounts to deal with the problem of money not going to subcontractors in large procurements. That is something on which we have innovated in Northern Ireland, with others looking on closely with a view to following. Therefore, we are actually leading and innovating. The second example is that, last week, I was with representatives of the electrical contracting industry in Northern Ireland who had devised a proposal for a licence-to-practise scheme called SparkSafe. I was very enthusiastic about that, and officials in CPD have engaged with representatives of the industry and have brought forward a pilot scheme, which has been in operation from the start of this month and will run for the next six months. I hope that it will be so successful that we will be able to embed it in Northern Ireland. That, again, is something that we are leading the way in. Nobody else has seen fit to embed those high standards in public sector contracts and use the public sector to raise standards overall in the construction industry. The final example is empty premises relief. I am sure that the Member will remember that, a few years ago, in response to increasing vacancies on our high streets and in our town centres, my colleague came forward with the policy of extending the 50% rates relief that there was for empty properties into the first year of occupation for new businesses. We have seen close to 200 businesses now open as a result of that, employing hundreds of people across Northern Ireland. Although I would never accept that a couple of hundred additional shops has solved the problems of vacancies in town centres and high streets, it has, at least, gone some way, and some areas have benefited substantially from it. That is a policy that, first, Wales and, then, Scotland copied, and then the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced an identical scheme in the autumn statement back in December. So, there are three examples of where we do not slavishly follow what happens in Westminster but lead the way for the whole of the United Kingdom. We can be innovative and creative as well as anyone else can.

The Member talked extensively about taking risks, and he is absolutely right. I talk about reform and dealing with the problems of reducing public spending in the years ahead, and I think that there are lots of impediments to reform. One of them is the culture of not being innovative in the public sector, and we can correct that in part through creating an architecture. However, one thing that we cannot build around is that issue of risk. That will take all of us to have a change of our own culture and our own mindset. We have all done this to some extent — some of us more than others, I have to say. Some of the Member's party colleagues have been exceptionally guilty of not seeing that taking risks, as, he rightly said, we should do, means that, to an extent, we are permitting failure. I do not think that there is an understanding of that among some. I will not name Members, but there are Members who seem to think that “risk” is a bad word and that we should not take risks. They think that every single thing about a project should be locked down, that there should be no risk and that there should be no danger of anything going wrong. That just does not happen in real life. I know that a higher standard should be employed to the expenditure of the public pound than of any other pound, but risks are inherent in anything that we do. Things go wrong from time to time, and, if we get things seriously wrong and criticism is valid, we are right to criticise government, but, where we take risks in trying to do something innovative and creative that could perhaps have reaped a higher dividend than it did, I do not think that we should be criticised as roundly as we sometimes are. I hope that, as we try to de-risk in the public sector, he will stand with me and encourage risk and innovation, not to the extent that we are frivolous or reckless, and permit some degree of failure in the public sector as well.

He and other Members encouraged me to look at others, and, since taking office, I have looked at the apparent Utopia that is Scotland. I have been in Wales and have examined things that they have done there. I have even been down South. Why do I say that I have “even been down South” to look at the Republic of Ireland? I have done that. I have gone to the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development in Paris. I have spoken to the European Commission, and I have been to Denmark and Estonia, looking at best practice around Europe. That makes me sound a bit like a Judith Chalmers-type character going around Europe, but I am happy to go anywhere and speak to anybody about doing things better because we do not have a monopoly on wisdom in this part of the world. One of the reasons why we can laud some of the things that Scotland is doing — apart from the fact that it has a one-party Government, which kind of helps — is that it has been at this for a lot longer than we have. I think that Scotland has a better grip and a better sense of what devolution is about than perhaps we have, and we have not entirely realised the full potential of devolution yet. I am more than happy to go to Scotland, and, in fact, I am scheduled to be there next Wednesday. I will go anywhere to learn from what others do.

Just as I am happy to learn, I am happy to share with others some of the things that we do well. As I said before, we have one of the best systems of shared services in this part of the world, if not indeed the whole world, and, when I talk to my counterparts south of the border, they are clear that they accept that they are not as advanced as we are. There are things that they can learn from us, every bit as much as we can learn from others. I am not closed to going anywhere or to talking to anybody about things that will improve the lives of citizens in Northern Ireland.

Mr Copeland talked about social housing. He was asked by Mr Maginness about imaginative solutions, and one such solution could be the proposed reform of the Housing Executive. It would, of course, result in a radical change in its structure to realise value from its £3 billion worth of assets. I hope that Mr Maginness is equally innovative and encouraging when the Minister comes forward with his proposals for reform of the Housing Executive.

Mr Copeland referred to Co-ownership and used words like “shameful” and “pitiful”. Although those words were not used directly to describe the scheme itself, I do not think that they can be applied to Co-ownership. We have doubled the budget and put more than £25 million worth of funding annually into Co-ownership. We have seen 500 affordable homes bought by people who needed them and have saved those people, in the process, a significant amount of money in what they were paying for private rental. That is a good and positive thing that should be welcomed.

I turn to Mr Attwood’s series of questions. I am sorry that I missed the start of Mr Attwood’s speech. It was a big mistake by me; I should have missed it all. [Laughter.] However, when I was outside the Chamber — I unfortunately had to leave momentarily — one of Mr Attwood’s colleagues accosted me in the corridor and asked whether I was running away before Alex’s speech. I am not going to name and shame that Member, but it is worth noting that that Member has not returned to the Chamber to hear her party colleague speaking. [Laughter.] Mr Attwood asked me a series of questions. I am sure that, no matter what I say, my answers will not be exactly to his satisfaction, but I will do my best to address them. He asked me about North/South cooperation. I just briefly mentioned being open. I do not think that we should be narrow about North/South or even east-west cooperation. We should see Northern Ireland in its rightful place as a part of Europe and of the world and look to examples all around the world. I am happy to work with and learn from anyone to improve this place; that is what anybody in my position should do. I hope that I have been clear in the past and that I can be clear in the future that I take a practical approach to the issue of North/South cooperation. I welcome the joint trade mission that my colleague Arlene Foster is on this week. I hope that it brings benefits to our economy primarily, but I will not begrudge anyone else on the trip the benefits from the joint trade mission.

Probably the area where I, as a Minister with the responsibility that I have, can perhaps have best cooperation with the Irish Republic is on reform. At the risk of sounding like a stuck record, it is an area that I am passionate about and that Brendan Howlin, my counterpart in the South who has responsibility for this area, is equally passionate about. He and I have already had some very productive discussions — I hope to follow those up — about how we can learn from each other in respect of reform. There are many areas where we are further advanced than they are in reform. I think that some of the reforms that they have brought in are less about reforming government and more about dealing with the budget crisis that they have faced over the last number of years. So I think that, in some ways, we are further advanced, and I am more than happy to work with him on whatever basis to develop that relationship. I have a positive relationship with my colleague Michael Noonan, principally on the National Asset Management Agency (NAMA) and banking issues. I have regular conversations with him about those matters.

The Member mentioned procurement as one example of where we could have better cross-border cooperation. Let me add a note of caution. At the risk of being called a technocrat again or, worse, a child, I think that there are risks in going bigger. This is one of the tensions that we have over procurement when we have debates in the House. If you were to go for a bigger volume of tendering — the Member suggests an all-Ireland basis — that might equate to better value for money, which, in some ways, as a Finance Minister, I am happy to see, but it puts pressure on in letting contracts go to small and medium-sized enterprises, which is not, of course, something that we can distort our procurement system to favour, but we have been able to protect that sector successfully, in my view, in Northern Ireland.

I think one of the reasons why we have such a comparatively high volume of SMEs tendering for and getting work in Northern Ireland is that, although some of the tenders are big in a Northern Ireland context, they are small in a European context and do not elicit the interest of some of the larger firms. If we wanted to get bigger procurement tenders put forward, we could all just work within the UK’s procurement framework and then we would receive even bigger benefits than we would on an all-Ireland basis.

8.15 pm

The second question was about the One Plan and the university for Derry. That is an issue primarily for other Ministers, but I am happy to have conversations with other Ministers to help them to develop the detail. He mentioned the University of Ulster. I think the use of financial transactions capital for the University of Ulster is an innovative thing for us to do.

The Member mentioned £25 million. It was actually a £35 million loan of £25 million last year and £10 million this year. That loan is in addition to the proposed European Investment Bank loan, which is not actually finalised yet. We are not underwriting its loan in any way. I have had conversations with the European Investment Bank about that project and, although it did not require us to underpin any of its loans, it did make it clear that government support exhibited by the Assembly and Executive would assist in unlocking the EIB support. That is something that I have been personally involved in and I hope that we see positive progress in the not-too-distant future.

He mentioned welfare reform, which was a constant theme through most speeches, so I want to come to it towards the end. It was his view that DWP had the measure of DSD. Without wishing to speak for the Minister for Social Development, I think it is fair to say that he is trying to make devolution work. He is trying to wring as many concessions as he possibly can and get ameliorative measures in place to dampen down the worst impact of welfare reform. I think those that are already publicly known will be greatly beneficial to people in Northern Ireland and those that are not in the public domain will be even more beneficial to the people in Northern Ireland.

Although I do not agree that DWP has the measure of DSD, it does still have a large measure of control in the process. He alluded to it himself. An even greater control is exuded by Her Majesty's Treasury, not least in the huge subvention that it gives us to pay the welfare bill in Northern Ireland, as well as the IT support that it provides. He asked what my involvement in the process was. Although I am not directly negotiating with the Department for Work and Pensions, I regularly meet the Chief Secretary to the Treasury — I am due to meet him next week — and he makes the large measure of control that they exhibit perfectly clear. That is why he wrote to my predecessor and said that he would dock our Budget by £5 million per month from last month.

My view is that the flexibilities that we already have in place are the envy of our Scots and Welsh counterparts. I know that from speaking to them and listening to them. For all of the lauding of the Scots today, they have not achieved anywhere near what we have in welfare reform. I suggest that they will go absolutely spare when they find out what other measures the Minister for Social Development has negotiated. We have pushed them far, but I recognise what Mr Attwood mentioned about the ideological approach of the Prime Minister, the Chancellor and the Minister for Work and Pensions. The distance that we have pushed them is, in the face of an ideological approach to welfare reform, pretty impressive on the part of the Minister for Social Development. I do not believe that there is much more that the Minister for Social Development can do, but what we have is more than we might have expected.

The Member's fourth and final question — it seemed like more than four, but I think there were only four — was around funding for Together: Building a United Community, or T:BUC, as it is now affectionately known. Forgive me if I picked some of it up wrong, because he talked quite rapidly, but he talked about redirecting existing resources and targeting resources differently in funding T:BUC. I think he was talking specifically about the funding of shared school campuses. I will come on to the general principle of redirecting and targeting resources differently in a second, but our capital position, as the Member will be aware, is improving. We can see that we will be in a better capital position in 2015-16, and we expect to see that beyond 2016-17 and the next spending round. He will be familiar, too, with the success in the negotiations on the economic pact, where the First Minister and deputy First Minister brought back the power to borrow a further £100 million for their RRI initiative as long as it was targeted towards shared housing and shared education projects. So there is an improving capital position and, through the facility that we have in RRI, the ability to fund a substantial number of shared education campuses.

In a tone that would almost suggest that this is a bad thing and is something that we should not do, the Member discussed the broad principle of redirecting existing resources and targeting resources differently. I am all for redirecting existing resources and targeting resources differently, if the places to which we have targeted them previously have not worked or produced outcomes. It is a challenge to all Ministers that we carefully consider what we are already spending our money on. I heard it said a lot today, as I am sure happens in every Budget debate, that Members want more money spent here, there and everywhere. However, sometimes the answer to the question of where we get the money from is where we are already spending money. I do not think that our job is to continue to fund projects that have not worked; it is to fund projects that do work so that we can achieve the objectives and outcomes that we all share and want to have in Northern Ireland.

Jo-Anne Dobson asked me several questions and then left immediately afterwards, so I hope that she will pick up the answers from the Hansard report. She began by criticising the Executive for inaction and then welcomed their decision to offer £4 million in hardship funding for farmers who were adversely affected by the bad weather last spring. So I am not sure whether we got good marks or bad marks for that. She talked sensibly about the Going for Growth plan, which is something that I am supportive of. The latest updated position on that is that DETI and DARD will respond on the report to the Executive for our consideration. It is already on public record that I will not be found wanting in respect of good bids that are made to capitalise on the growth potential in the agrifood sector. However, the resourcing of the strategy will be very much an issue for the Budget process moving forward. She then curiously expressed the view that she had no sympathy with me for various failings in not funding this, that or the other. She said that I am jointly to blame because I am part of the Executive. I will point this out to Mrs Dobson: so is Danny Kennedy.

Mrs Kelly, in her actual contribution rather than her intervention, talked about the social housing development programme and was critical of what the Social Development Minister has been doing. However, the Budget contains £83.9 million for 1,275 new and affordable homes. I will point out to Mrs Kelly that DSD is reporting that it is still on target to exceed the PFG target of 8,000 new and affordable homes. She acknowledged the good news that there has been on employment, but she was right to point out that there is still more to do. Our unemployment rate has fallen for 11 consecutive months, but it remains too high, and we have underlying problems with youth unemployment. I think that she and others should, and do, acknowledge that progress is being made economically.

Mrs Kelly also made some comments about SIF funding. Unfortunately, given the lateness of her contribution, I have not had time to respond fully to it. If there are any issues that I miss out, I am sure that I can come back to her. I think that there was a glimpse of gratitude for the release of SIF funding that the First Minister and deputy First Minister announced yesterday. I may have picked her up wrong, but I think that she asked me to justify how the very long list of schemes that she read out would benefit people. I have to say that some of the projects that she named sounded very positive to me. She complained that they are not located in neighbourhood renewal areas. However, I think that there is a valid point to be made that people who are deprived and live in neighbourhood renewal areas do not always have to use facilities that are located in deprived areas. She concluded with her customary criticism of the Executive and what they are doing and not doing. Like Mrs Dobson, I remind Mrs Kelly that her party is, of course, represented on the Executive.

Before I conclude, I want to touch on a theme that I touched on yesterday and that has been constant throughout today's proceedings. It was raised by Mr Girvan, Mr Cree, Mr Dickson, Mr Weir, Mr Attwood, Mrs Kelly and various others in different ways.

A number of Members have, once again, expressed concern about the impact on our public services of further delays to the Welfare Reform Bill. As I have detailed to the Assembly, the penalties next year are forecast at £105 million and will increase to over £300 million by 2018-19. That will require substantial cuts to departmental budgets and will have a significant detrimental impact on public services, all at a time when public spending is falling and we are, as Members highlighted, still pursuing the devolution of corporation tax.

I am also extremely concerned about the potential impact on claimants when we reach the point in the not-too-distant future of being unable to process payments to hundreds of thousands of the most vulnerable because we can no longer use the Department for Work and Pensions IT systems. I have also referred to the potential loss of over 1,400 jobs at local service centres in Belfast and Lisahally in Londonderry, which causes me grave concern. Stewart Dickson referred to the need to work constructively to get the Bill agreed. The Minister for Social Development and I have been doing that, and I just wish that others would do the same.

I take exception — great exception, in fact — to Mr Copeland's comment that it was the DUP that was delaying welfare reform. The Member well knows or should well know that the delay is being caused not by the DUP but by other parties represented in the Executive. I think that that much is pretty clear; it should, at least, have been pretty clear in the past 24 hours. I see the Member nodding in agreement. Perhaps he will reflect on his earlier comments. If he is prepared to accept that Nelson McCausland has been fighting for concessions and has not been holding up progress, I may refrain from reminding him that his party was once allied to the Tories, whose reforms these are.

Mr Maskey was almost ever-present in the debate, although he did not make a contribution. I was half expecting him to do so. Today, he has accused me of employing scare tactics about welfare reform. I assure him that I am not employing scare tactics, although I agree that the figures are scary and will be scary for many people. It is a matter for the party opposite and, indeed, others to justify —

Mr Maskey: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Hamilton: I will give way, yes.

Mr Maskey: Does the Minister not accept, when I refer to his use of scare tactics, that, when he suggests that, if there is no welfare reform by 2016, the whole system will grind to a halt and it will cost us £1 billion for non-implementation, all of that is silly? I said that I accepted that you were a man of some intelligence and that that made it even more disappointing that you had adopted the approach that you had. I made my position very clear and do so again on behalf of my party tonight: I believe and am confident that we can secure greater changes to the Welfare Reform Bill, if your party and the rest of us knuckle down and talk directly to the British Government in a manner that seeks to represent the best interests of the people whom we all represent. I believe that we can get more changes to the Welfare Reform Bill, if we make that effort and do not simply respond to British Government threats to fine us, surcharge us, take money out of the block grant and pay off 1,300 workers who currently run the IT system.

Mr Hamilton: Whether I was being silly or scary, I like to think that I was being sensible. Being sensible means pointing out the facts, which are those that I have outlined. It is for others to justify the reality that £15 million has gone from the Budget this year. Perhaps £15 million does not sound like a lot of money in the context of the Budget that we are agreeing today, but it rises rapidly to £105 million next year, which will necessitate serious cuts right across the board. It will go then from £300 million by 2018-19 to a total of £1 billion in the next five years. That is bad enough, and it is scary enough. It is absolutely sensible, not silly, to point out the reality of not moving forward with welfare reform and of not doing so, as the Member knows, on the basis of the package of measures that the Social Development Minister has negotiated, which will ameliorate some of the worst impacts of welfare reform in Northern Ireland. It would be irresponsible not to proceed on that basis.

It is bad enough that we face those reductions to the block grant, which will severely affect all budgets in the Executive, including the Education Minister's budget, mine and others, but we also face the prospect of 1,400 jobs being lost, the estimated cost of £1.8 billion for a new IT system and very real pain. We talk about people who are vulnerable, needy and in poverty suffering as a result of welfare reform: how much more will they suffer when we get to 2016, if the benefit system that we use now no longer operates and they are unable to receive the benefits to which they are entitled?

They are scary prospects for people in Northern Ireland. I hope that, even at this late stage, people see the sense in progressing with welfare reform.

8.30 pm

To conclude, the Budget Bill brings to a close the 2013-14 financial year and makes provision for the early months of 2014-15. It is easy to underestimate the work of the Assembly in the formation of the Bill. The figure work that it contains is a result of the Assembly's agreement to Budget 2011-15 and the associated Main Estimates voted for back in June last year. As well as the Executive's work in revising those allocations in the June, October and January monitoring rounds, many hours have been spent revising the Budget plans to ensure the best possible outcome for the citizens of Northern Ireland. Many hours have been spent debating those plans, and not just today. I commend the Assembly for the role that it has played and will continue to play in that very important process. On that note, I ask the Assembly to support the Bill.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Before we move to the Question, I advise Members that, as this is a Budget Bill, the motion will require cross-community support.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved (with cross-community support):

That the Second Stage of the Budget Bill [NIA 32/11-15] be agreed.

Motion made:

*That the Assembly do now adjourn. —
[Mr Principal Deputy Speaker.]*

Adjournment

Education: Post-primary Provision in South and East Belfast

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The proposer of the topic will have 15 minutes, and all other Members who wish to speak will have approximately four minutes. I must advise Members that, although taking interventions is a matter for their own discretion, I will be unable to award the customary one minute of extra time if they give way.

Mr Spratt: With your permission, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, given that my South Belfast colleague Michael McGimpsey has just come back to the Chamber today, I would like, on behalf of my party, to offer my sincere condolences to Michael and the McGimpsey family on the recent death of his mother and to assure him that he and the family are very much in our thoughts and prayers at this time.

I am pleased to be able to bring this Adjournment debate to the House tonight. Post-primary education in South Belfast and East Belfast has been a subject of debate in the House before. As an MLA for South Belfast, I remain concerned about future provision and the impact that that might have on local children in the area. I do not think that any of us should be playing politics with this issue. I think that that would send out the wrong message to parents and pupils alike. It would be much more helpful if everyone considered all the issues around both schools and put the education of pupils in those schools first and foremost.

I have to say at the outset that it is somewhat unhelpful that a number of leaflets have been circulating in one particular school in relation to a meeting that is to be held on Wednesday 26 February in Newtownbreda. The leaflets appear almost like election leaflets. Having spoken to Anna Lo earlier, I know that she told the school that it could have a quote but not a leaflet. Those leaflets are being put into children's school bags and sent home to parents. I agree with many of the sentiments in the leaflet, in the case of Ms Lo and, indeed, in the case of Michael McGimpsey. Some of the issues —

Ms Lo: I am grateful to the Member for giving way. I want to clarify that the leaflet was not produced by me. I agreed that, if they were producing a leaflet inviting parents to come to the public meeting, they could use a quote that I made during a meeting with the school. I understand that the leaflet was produced by a member of the parents' group without me ever seeing it. I made a complaint to the school, and it stopped circulation of the leaflets.

Mr Spratt: I already accepted that. I can agree with much of the content of Mr McGimpsey's leaflet with regard to the Newtownbreda site etc. However, there have been quotes to suggest that the South Eastern Education and Library Board (SEELB) has proposed to close Newtownbreda and Knockbreda schools to create a newly amalgamated school, despite strong opposition from local MLAs and parents.

We have to be very responsible about what is happening to this school. To refer to Knockbreda as a failing school and to call for its closure is potentially very damaging to both schools. If parents think that Knockbreda is likely to close, they are more likely to take their children out of the school or not send them there in the first place. All of that could mean that the new school would have lower numbers and could well face problems, and that is not the way to protect post-primary education in South Belfast and East Belfast.

I, along with party colleagues in East Belfast, have held a number of meetings with stakeholders, including the South Eastern Education and Library Board. I welcome the opportunity to hear a wide range of views, and meetings have been proposed for tomorrow and the coming days. Following the closure of Deramore High School, Dunmurry High School and Balmoral High School, it is fair to say that Newtownbreda is the last controlled post-primary school in South Belfast. As I have said many times, it has been closure after closure in that area for post-primary education at secondary level. Of course, I want to see the Newtownbreda site remain and flourish as a school, but we must all face the reality that many of the children who will be affected come from the east of the city, including Newtownbreda and Knockbreda. We have to be aware of that, whether we like it or not.

It is essential that everyone supports the amalgamation or merger — call it what you will. My understanding is that the Minister has made a decision, which, I do not want to misquote him, “cannot be overturned”. I thank the Minister for being in the House for the debate. Perhaps he will clarify the exact position when he speaks a little later. However, with regard to this site, our focus must be on getting the very best outcome for teachers and pupils.

I know that there is a very strong lobby at Newtownbreda to keep the school as it is. I have spoken at length to Rev Adrian Green, and my office and other offices have had numerous emails from Newtownbreda and Knockbreda parents. In contrast to Newtownbreda, Knockbreda staff and parents have been less vocal on the issue and have been actively trying to keep up the morale of the school and the pupils, given that the school got a fairly severe battering from the press in the past.

I said before in the House that parents whose children attend Knockbreda have told me that they are content with the education that their children receive. I had a meeting recently with the principal and some of the governors and teachers of the school. They have had a very positive open night that, hopefully, will keep the numbers up. The numbers in both those schools will lead to the opportunity for a very viable school in the future.

In meetings with the South Eastern Education and Library Board in the past number of days, we have been advised that an interim board of governors is being set up. According to the SEELB, it will be drawn from both schools. That may be something that the Minister will choose to clarify this evening. Other important steps will include the appointment of a new principal. I do not know who that will be, but it will be a matter for the new board of governors. My understanding is that the board will argue that there are a number of ways in which to improve relations between the two schools while the amalgamation is taking place. Together, the new board of governors will, and should, be able to agree the ethos and values of the new school, agree the budget, develop a communications strategy for pupils and staff, and provide newsletters detailing those areas.

In his statement to the House, the Minister said that the school will initially operate on a split site. In the meeting that I mentioned, the board referred to a split site for a period, with the possibility of a junior school on one site and a senior school on the other to allow for the newbuild, which should be on the Newtownbreda site, given the size of that site. I am not convinced that a split site will be attractive to parents. The issue needs to be very seriously managed by the Department and the board. Serious work needs to be done on exactly what is proposed or what is going to happen, because split sites have never really worked in the past. That is a big danger.

I know that there has been a very strong lobby from Rev Green on behalf of Newtownbreda parents. At the beginning of this month, I saw a number of communications about the amalgamation with Knockbreda, and I am concerned that the paper refers to questions that will require answers before a decision is taken by the Education Minister. Well, folks, the Education Minister made a statement to the House. At this stage, perhaps he needs to make clear to the lobby group whether there is any wriggle room or any possibility of changes. I am very hopeful that the Department, the Minister and the board will take very seriously the concerns of all parents and pupils from both sites and try to manage the situation in the best way possible. If that is not done, there is a real possibility that we could face a situation of dear knows what in the future. Possible legal challenges and all sorts of other things are already being mooted. Therefore, I think very serious work needs to be done at the two sites.

A very clear and positive message needs to be sent out that the new site — new school, new name, whatever — will be on the Newtownbreda site. A positive message will be sent out to South Belfast, including Belvoir, the wider Four Winds area and the area around the Newtownbreda site, that there will be a sustainable school with the possibility of — I am not misquoting what the Minister said previously to the House — around 1,000 pupils in the future. So there is a lot of positivity around that.

I plead with Members in this House tonight not to try to politicise this thing. That is why I said that at the outset of my remarks. Let us not try to lead parents and pupils in a direction in which they believe that something can be done to save the school and to save this, that and the other. Let us do what is best for the pupils, the parents and the very dedicated teaching staff in Newtownbreda. I have had meetings with the Knockbreda staff as well, and there are a lot of very good, dedicated staff there, too.

8.45 pm

Let us face it, the exam results at Knockbreda have improved dramatically. There are very dedicated staff in Newtownbreda school as well, and they need to be dealt with positively and sympathetically in the days ahead. So let us all try to get our shoulders to the wheel to do what is best for kids right across the board. I hope that colleagues in the Chamber tonight, from whatever party and whatever area, whether South Belfast or East Belfast, do what is best for everyone. It might be easy to go down the route of a protest or something like that, but that is not a route that I intend to go down. I will not be at the meeting on 26 February, and I have already made that clear to the school. Unfortunately, I have medical tests on that particular evening, which have been rescheduled to allow me to do my business in the House. That is the reason why I will not be there, and I have already made that very clear. Let us all try to be very positive in all this.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I remind Members that they will have four minutes in which to speak. There will be no extra time if you accept an intervention.

Mr Maskey: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. First, I thank Jimmy Spratt for bringing this matter to the House again. It is the second time that the Member has brought an Adjournment debate on the issue, and I think that it is important to continue to highlight the issues. I am particularly grateful to the Member for the manner in which he rightly raised a number of concerns that have been expressed by teachers, parents, boards of governors and others around what the future might hold for Knockbreda and Newtownbreda high schools. It is important that those concerns are firmly placed on the record. I also think that it is regrettable that, all too often, when we hear debates around schools, particularly if there is an argument around school closures, amalgamations or mergers, we get people who, in my view, unfortunately, take up what I can only describe as opportunistic and populist positions. Hopefully, that will not occur this evening.

It is of paramount for us, as representatives of South and East Belfast, that we need to recognise that these times and these decisions are very challenging, particularly for parents who have pupils at the schools. I speak from the point of view of having a brother who is a principal of a school, and his future at this time is uncertain. I can say very safely that he is the principal of that school, and the teachers, parents and boards of governors are equally committed to making sure that they do the best for that school and, particularly, for their pupils.

That is what is most commendable about the vast majority of the teaching profession that we know and those who are involved in the education estate. We all need to remain mindful of what we are all about, which is about making sure that our young people get the best opportunity to move into the future that we can possibly give them. Therefore, when Jimmy Spratt asked Members to treat this sensitively and sensibly, that was a very important call to make, and I hope and expect that all Members will respond to that.

As I said, there is no doubt that these matters are very challenging to people, and I know that the Minister will respond later. I was under the impression that the decision has been made that the schools will amalgamate or merge, or whatever the description may be, but a lot more work has yet to be done on the schools, parents and boards of governors working with the South Eastern Education and Library Board and others on what precisely will happen in the future. I have no doubt that, if those schools amalgamate, you will be looking at a school for probably a 1000-plus pupils. The modern schools estate, where new schools have been built and opened, is marvellous. People who have been in those premises in recent years cannot help but marvel at the facilities that are now available to young people who go to school today, and that is as it should be.

I hope that the decisions and deliberations in the time ahead and the discussions that will rightly take place among parents and people involved in making the final decisions have the absolute singular focus of making sure that we have the best school and the best educational opportunities available to young people from the areas who will go to the new school, wherever it may be located. That is a matter for others to decide, not me. I wish them well in their deliberations, and, more important, I wish the young people who will attend the new school, wherever it may be located, well for the future, because those young people will have a wonderful opportunity and a great education. As we all know, life is difficult and challenging enough, and the best thing that we can do for our young people is give them the best education possible to allow them to go forward with two feet forward.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Dr McDonnell: I welcome the opportunity to contribute to this important debate on the provision of post-primary education in South Belfast and East Belfast. There is much overlap between the two constituencies. Many children from South Belfast attend schools in East Belfast, and many children from East Belfast attend schools in South Belfast. It is vital that children who live in the overall area have access to a high standard of post-primary education, and our objective must always be to ensure quality educational outcomes.

We could indulge in a debate about selection, but it would not be helpful in this case. This debate hinges on providing the right atmosphere and the right conditions for learning for a large number of young people in South Belfast and East Belfast. We have the potential to create a very powerful comprehensive school in the controlled system for young Protestants in that area, and Mr Spratt rightly said that a number of secondary schools in South Belfast have closed and that has restricted access. Large sections of the community need those schools, and it is unreasonable to expect children in their early years, or even at 11 or 12 years of age, to travel a long distance.

In my experience, Newtownbreda High School is just the type of school that we should seek to emulate in many other areas of Belfast and across the North. I am not as familiar with Knockbreda, although I know that it is there and I have visited it. However, Newtownbreda High School is an asset to post-primary education and provides an excellent environment for educating young people in the Belvoir and Milltown areas. The recent decision, as was rightly outlined earlier, on the amalgamation of Newtownbreda and Knockbreda has created concern, but that is normal in such cases and, as Mr Spratt said earlier, it must be handled sensitively.

It is worth putting on the record that, in recent years, Newtownbreda has gone from strength to strength, with the highest GCSE performance of all co-education controlled post-primary schools in South Belfast and East Belfast. GCSE results are well above the Northern Ireland average, and that is testament to the hard work of staff, pupils and their parents. The school receives very high commendations from inspections, Education and Training Inspectorate (ETI) grading and in various other assessments.

If the amalgamation goes ahead, which it no doubt will, there should be minimum disruption to pupils and staff. I know that there is a debate about the naming of the place, and that has to be dealt with sensitively. I have no doubt that the school should remain on the Newtownbreda site.

Enrolment figures at Newtownbreda are very high, and that reflects how popular the school is and the quality of education there. I was familiar not just with the current principal but with previous principals, and the quality of education that they produce there is high.

The school has the potential to grow further and to develop over coming years. It can adapt and work with parents and others. I urge the Minister to work sensitively and to recognise the sensitivities, needs and anxieties of many of the parents, teachers and pupils.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr Copeland: I think that it is fair to say that the overall educational performance in East Belfast could be described as patchy at best. The educational inequalities are more apparent in East Belfast than practically anywhere else in the city. Testament to that is the fact that we have the lowest proportion of school leavers gaining at least five GCSEs at grades A* to C. East Belfast has four of the wealthiest wards and four of the poorest wards sitting almost side by side. In some cases, they are separated by the width of a main road. If you are born in one postcode, your future is assured for all the right reasons, but, if you are born in another, your future is assured for almost all the wrong reasons. Some of the best-performing schools in Northern Ireland function cheek by jowl, in some cases, with some of the most challenged.

I could talk all night about education in its widest sense and about the well-documented problems of underachievement in the working-class districts of our constituency. I will, however, try to concentrate on the current proposals to reconfigure secondary school provision in the area. A central feature of the aim was the 2006 Bain report, which was the proposal for area-based planning and a new strategic approach to planning schools estates to provide a system of strong, sustainable educational facilities. That is a very laudable and fine sentiment. It led to education and library boards carrying out viability studies, which, in turn, led to area plans that were published a year ago. Now, the Belfast and South Eastern boards have published six development proposals that affect seven post-primary schools in the east of the city and Holywood. The Minister made pronouncements on his proposals in the House on 14 January.

What is instructive in all that is that now, in February 2014, the South and East Belfast focus appears to be on post-primary secondary schools in the state-controlled sector. We seem, almost accidentally perhaps, to have wandered far away from the vision of Bain in 2006. One might ask about what happened to the cross-sectoral working, the sharing of resources and facilities, and, forgive me, the ministerial rhetoric that said that no sector would stand apart from the rest. That vision seems to have been lost somewhere in the area-planning process. Why was the all-encompassing vision allowed to lapse? Why was one sector allowed or able to rationalise its schools estates completely independently of the rest? Where is the building of relationships and the sharing of classes to deliver the entitlement curriculum between the grammar and the non-selective sectors, that is, the maintained, controlled and integrated? It may not be politically correct to say it, but I truly believe in a single education system for Northern Ireland. It may be a long-term pipe dream, but I am quite happy to place on record my belief that the state should provide one system.

Back in the here and now, the board has proposed the amalgamation of Newtownbreda and Knockbreda high schools, the closure of Orangefield and Dundonald high schools and an increase in the size of Ashfield Girls' High School, Ashfield Boy's High School and Priory Integrated College in Holywood. Moreover, in his development proposals, the Minister has given a very welcome reprieve to Dundonald High School. However, he has not found it possible to accede to an increase in the number of pupils in Ashfield. The most controversial proposal is to amalgamate Newtownbreda and Knockbreda into a single school of 1,000 pupils to operate initially on a split campus, with the possibility of a new school in the future. It is fair to say, Minister, that there is much unease about that. I do not like the fact that the two schools have, in actuality, been pitched against each other.

Often in politics, perception is all important. There is a widespread perception in East Belfast, although I am not saying that it is a reality, that the Minister is targeting the state-controlled —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr Copeland: — sector for particular attention. Perhaps, in summing up, the Minister could address those concerns.

Ms Lo: First, I offer my condolences to Mr McGimpsey on his recent bereavement.

I will focus on the amalgamation of the Newtownbreda and Knockbreda high schools.

I spoke at the Adjournment debate on the proposal last year and I wrote to the area-planning team to highlight my concerns.

9.00 pm

I have recently received about two dozen emails from concerned parents and pupils who are very distressed about the Minister's decision to amalgamate the two schools. The parents feel that there is no clear rationale for doing so and that they have not received an assurance that the future of their children's education is secure. Last week, I met with senior officials in the SEELB who explained in more detail the reasons and plans for implementing the amalgamation. I was assured by the imminent formation of the interim board of governors and recruitment of a principal designate to oversee the process.

I do not believe that it is ideal for the combined school to be based on two sites, even if they are 1.5 miles apart. I hope that this separation will not last any longer than two years, which was the expected time frame that was given to me by officials. Given the recent capital development at Newtownbreda High School, I strongly support the new school being on that site. There has been speculation as to whether the amalgamated school might be moved to the Orangefield site in five or six years' time. However, as it is the only controlled school in South Belfast, I would be strongly opposed to that proposal.

It is clear that there is a need for a well-managed transition that must be properly communicated to the schools and parents to avoid uncertainty and speculation. My support for the parents and teachers of Newtownbreda remains strong. I want the Department to do all that it can to ensure that the transition is as smooth as possible.

It is essential that there is proper post-primary planning across all sectors in South and East Belfast to ensure appropriate levels of social and physical connectivity between schools and communities. As an Alliance Member, it would be remiss of me not to highlight the demand from parents for the provision of integrated education, which makes up only 7% of post-primary provision. That is despite OFMDFM's good relations indicators update showing that 70% of people are in favour of mixed schools. In the South Belfast constituency, we have Lagan College, an integrated school that is consistently oversubscribed and that achieves excellent results at GCSE and A level. Decisions taken by the Minister should take the demand for more integrated education on board.

Mr Newton: I thank Mr Spratt for securing the debate and the Minister for being here. Minister, the last time that we debated East Belfast, the statement you made was perceived to be bittersweet. It was not as well received by those associated with Knockbreda and Newtownbreda high schools, as it was by those who are associated with Dundonald High School.

In the time that is available to me, I want to underline a few points on the principles behind making decisions on education. I assume that everyone in the House wants long-term, high-quality provision of education in East Belfast and South Belfast. A number of factors underpin the decision, and paramount among them is the need for parents to have confidence that their children will receive the very best possible education, with committed teachers and appropriate facilities to deliver it. Under the proposals, the parents of pupils at either school do not see that taking place and there is some dissension.

Minister, I welcome the decision that you took a short time ago to democratise, once again, the Belfast Education and Library Board through the appointment, albeit three years late, of councillors to represent parents. However, this decision is being taken by a South Eastern Education and Library Board that has no parental representatives. Indeed, the board is run by three commissioners, a situation that has existed for much longer than the Belfast Education and Library Board. So it is a decision taken by three commissioners when they were appointed more than three years ago. The board has no elected representatives and, therefore, no parental representation or input into the workings of the South Eastern Education and Library Board.

You recognised, Minister, in your statement to the House a few weeks ago that there was a situation that you found unacceptable:

"I believe that an opportunity was missed when all publicly funded post-primary schools were not brought into the equation and subsequent planning process."
— [Official Report, Bound Volume 90, p319, col 1.]

You were dissatisfied with that decision, Minister, and you made that quite clear. You will understand why parents are now asking, "If the Minister was dissatisfied with the planning process, why is he continuing with a decision made prior to his recent statement?"

The parents need to be convinced, particularly those in Newtownbreda, who put forward a proposal,

'Area Planning: The Way Forward', and they wanted to support two alternative proposals within that. In addition, Newtownbreda already has a good track record of integrating pupils from other schools such as Lisnasharragh, Dundonald and Dunmurry high schools, yet the decision to continue with a split site remains.

Let me say one thing about education investment: there is a need —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr Newton: — to look at what is best for young people, and we —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I am sorry, the Member's time is up. I have to be fair to others.

Mr Newton: — and parents need to understand what that investment will be.

Mr Douglas: I thank the Minister for attending and my colleague Jimmy Spratt for securing the debate. I also thank Mervyn Storey, Chair of the Education Committee.

This decision by the Minister has raised concerns among pupils, staff, politicians, churches and, indeed, many within the greater East Belfast area. That is no surprise because for many of the parents, teachers and children, there is the insecurity of change and what that means for the future. Anna Lo mentioned the transition period, and it is key that that is managed well. There has to be communication, and parents, staff and others need to have a sense of ownership and involvement in this major decision, which affects all their lives.

As my colleague Jimmy Spratt said, this is not about politics. It is not about East Belfast versus South Belfast, as some would have it, and it is not about Knockbreda High School versus Newtownbreda High School. It is a debate about the future of the children, the quality of the education, the future of the staff and how people are appointed. This must be about the slogan, "United we stand, divided we fall." An us-and-them situation would cause more discontent and insecurity and more problems within the area in trying to get the very best for our children.

Let me quote a young man who has been on placement with me for the past couple of days: He is Nicholas Hunter, a former pupil of Knockbreda High School:

"There is nothing I could probably say about the school that is bad or misleading. My brothers and sisters went to the same school years ago and it didn't do any harm to them. They said to me on the first day of school that Knockbreda is a fantastic school with excellent teaching staff".

Those are the sorts of quotes and that is the sort of passion and commitment that we are talking about. People want the best, not just for him, but for his sisters at that school as well.

From a parent, Lucinda:

"as the parent of a son who is currently in year 11 at Knockbreda High School and a daughter who left in 2012, I would like to share with you why Knockbreda High School is a good school. It is not a failing school. The last ETI report was classed as satisfactory improvement and continuing to improve. Knockbreda has embraced the changing population in the area and continues to have pupils from all races and creeds, developing into a multicultural school."

I think that that is a tremendous vision and future for the children of the school.

This is an amalgamation that we are talking about. It is a bringing together, and we need to manage that in the best possible way. My father was a former shipyard worker; he was a red leader at the shipyard. I was down at the Titanic Quarter recently, which has the motto "Building the future from the past". For me, that is what this amalgamation is all about. It is about bringing the two schools together while building a future for all of us.

Mr McKinney: This is an important debate for east and south Belfast. Given the location of Knockbreda and Newtownbreda in south Belfast, I wish to confine my remarks to these two schools, the characteristics and qualities of which Members have reflected on.

Part of the Minister's vision is that every school should be a good school. I have raised this issue directly with him on two occasions in this Chamber, reflecting on the harm that parents, pupils and staff feel his proposals are doing to their valuable establishment. On the first occasion, the Minister said that he did not care about the institutions, only about the output, but this is their good school.

On the second occasion that I raised the issue with him, I did so because I am acutely aware of the concerns of parents, pupils and staff. I suggested that the Minister might like to lay to rest the concerns that some people have had about the school being relocated, particularly on the Orangefield site. However, the Minister chose to rebuff the request and say that he did not care about postcodes. How is that consistent with valuing that good school?

It is 34 years since I left a school that I deeply value as a quality school. It was situated in a good town with great staff and brilliant outcomes and valued by parents, pupils, staff and the local community. It had ambitions to be better than good, and, in my view, achieved excellence. Newtownbreda, too, is situated in a community that values its output, its staff and its pupils, and it is endeavouring to improve and be the best that it can be. Those staff and pupils value its name, value the institution and value the location, so to simply dismiss those views, whatever the Minister's overall ambition and plan, can be harmful to the school and the community's view of it. This may be acceptable at a political level, but it causes much disquiet at classroom and pupil level and in the wider community.

We should, when making adjustments, make equitable and values-based decisions. If numbers are falling in a school, it is reasonable that, if they fall substantially below a certain level, decisions can be made around that. However, when both the quality and the numbers are improved at a school, you can understand why proposals such as this cause the disquiet that they do. To leave people hanging about the school name and site dismisses concerns and rejects the values that those pupils, parents and teachers place in their institution.

I ask the Minister to reflect on it in through the very human story that I am telling: people value their school. As I said last week, all MLAs in South Belfast, as has been confirmed here tonight, are getting emails and letters reflecting those concerns.

It is not just an institution in that sense; its location and values are hugely important to people who share in an education way and in a community way. It is important also, not just to look back at a school, but to look to its future. Given the improvement that Newtownbreda has experienced and the increased numbers and prospect of greater numbers, I urge the Minister to think again about his amalgamation proposal and the closure impact of it.

9.15 pm

Mr McGimpsey: I thank Jimmy Spratt for bringing forward the debate. I also thank colleagues for their kind words initially. This is a discussion about integration or amalgamation. We have two schools: Newtownbreda and Knockbreda. Newtownbreda is doing well. It is succeeding. It has shown a 30% improvement in its academic achievement over the last three years. Pupil numbers are rising. Its academic standards are going up. It is a popular school. Knockbreda is doing less well. Nevertheless, it gets a reasonably good rating as far as education standards are concerned.

The question is this: integration or amalgamation? With integration, the stronger school would carry on and the weaker school would eventually integrate into the stronger school. As Robin Newton said, there have been examples of that recently, particularly around Newtownbreda.

Amalgamation, on the other hand, would be to formally shut both schools and form a new school. The new school would be formed on a split site on either side of the busiest traffic junction in Northern Ireland. Anybody who is familiar with the Forestside junction will know the nightmare that pupils and staff would face if there were a split site.

To formally close Newtownbreda, a school that is doing well, is succeeding and has the support of the full school family — parents, pupils and staff — would, to put it mildly, be highly unpopular. I was at a public meeting in the school a number of months ago. The opinions expressed there were as strong as I have heard at a public meeting. It was in a packed school hall. The strong view was not about Newtownbreda versus Knockbreda. It was about Newtownbreda, which is succeeding and doing well: reinforce it, support it, invest in it.

What we have is a proposal that takes an ivory tower approach. Commissioners in the South Eastern Education and Library Board are saying, "We are not listening to any of that. All the parents, all the pupils, all the staff put together — it does not matter what they are saying. We are going to do it a different way. We know best." That is most unfortunate. To say that there is a public relations disaster brewing is to put it very mildly.

I was not aware of the leaflet that Jimmy Spratt referred to; I have not seen it. However, where my sympathies lie is not about leaflets. It is about the pupils in these schools. It is about the children in Newtownbreda and Knockbreda getting the best education that we can give them. Our sympathies have to be with those schools and their school populations.

What is proposed is a rushed process. A rushed process is likely to be a botched process. There is a rush to get a new headmaster. As I understand, he will not be based on either campus. He will be based in the South Eastern Board and not even at the school. How do pupils, staff and parents relate to that? There is also a target date of around June 2014. It is a rush. Even if you think that this is the way forward, it cannot be made to work in practical terms.

There are a number of reasons why this should not happen, but the key reason is this: amalgamations have a detrimental impact on quality of education. It is well-documented that, in 68% of amalgamations, the schools affected see a drop in their academic achievement; 51% of those never regain that position.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr McGimpsey: I remind colleagues that there is a meeting in Room 277 at 1.00 pm tomorrow. I invite everybody to come along to meet some of the parents.

Mr Lyttle: I, too, thank Mr Spratt for securing the debate. This topic is a good use of an Adjournment debate. To be honest, there are more elephants in the room on this issue than there are at Belfast Zoo. As regards why we see a reduction in pupil numbers in secondary schools, two of those elephants are called inequality and segregation. Another one is called a fragmented area-based planning process —

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): Academic selection.

Mr Lyttle: That as well; yes. The area-based planning process is turning into a sector-based planning process.

The Education Minister made a significant statement to the House on 14 January, in which he said:

"At the centre of the process must be decision-making in the best educational interests of children and solutions that can be implemented in a manageable manner." —
[Official Report, Bound Volume 90, p316, col 2.]

He also said that recognition on everyone's part that change is necessary is needed to deliver high-quality education and that the best solution for pupils on an area basis will require a high level of collaboration and coordination.

MLAs need to be very honest in the debate. We need to think outside the box and put the needs of areas and every child before lines on maps. We need to channel all the energy and passion that we have for the education of our children and young people into area-based planning. We need to engage in fully participative processes that include parents, staff, children and young people and that, although taking account of sensitivities, ultimately prioritise quality education for all.

How does that apply to the proposed amalgamation of Newtownbreda High School and Knockbreda High School? Undoubtedly, there are concerns, caused perhaps by a lack of clarity. As MLAs, we have heard from parents that they have requested meetings with the Minister. Some of the parents remain to be convinced that the proposal is in the best interests of all children and young people in the area. Indeed, they have asked for clarity on issues such as naming, the principal, leaderships teams, which sites will be used, and so on. I hope that the Minister can add some clarity to those issues tonight.

There is a responsibility on MLAs and parents to be clear and accurate in their information and communications. The most recent ETI reports show two schools that are making significant improvements and moving in the right direction in providing quality education for our children and young people. We have testimonies from pupils at both schools on the positive impact that education in the area is having on our children and young people. It is essential that we have good, accurate and clear communications on the process to ensure that continued improvement is at the heart of what is achieved.

I understand that letters have been sent to parents to outline the process. I would say, however, that those seem to be quite bureaucratic. It is incumbent on the Minister and his officials to set out a vision and plan for children in the Newtownbreda and Knockbreda areas in more detail and in more human terms. We could have parent information evenings that would give an opportunity for that type of vision and plan to be put forward, because I think that there is a positive vision for education in the area.

We need to look at whether more innovative solutions can be brought about through integration —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr Lyttle: — all-ability co-education and utilising appropriate information for academic progress.

Mr Storey: I thank my colleague Mr Spratt for tabling tonight's Adjournment topic. I also express my condolences to Mr McGimpsey on the passing of his mother.

I welcome the opportunity to speak. I have a particular interest, not only as Chair of the Education Committee but as the DUP's education spokesperson. When the Minister announced the decision on the six development proposals issued by the Belfast Education and Library Board and the South Eastern Education and Library Board, he admitted that, in the light of this exercise, the Department had learned a number of lessons.

I know that many Members will share the view that the process initiated by the two boards was neither strategic nor well planned. The fact that the Minister disagreed with or amended five of the six proposals says much about the process that was adopted. Furthermore, the fact that, in communicating his decision to the House, he admitted that more work needed to be undertaken on sixth-form provision in the area shows that we do not have any semblance of an area plan for young people, which is the point that my colleague Mr Newton was making.

The Education Committee has expressed its grave disquiet at the handling of the Orangefield situation. Over the past number of months, since the publication of the development proposals, I have endeavoured to be actively involved with the boards of governors of Newtownbreda and Knockbreda. I met with the senior management team in Dundonald and with representatives of Orangefield. On behalf of the party, I presented the two boards with a paper on a strategic way forward for post-primary provision in the area, which regrettably they have chosen to ignore.

As a result of this, I trust that I know and understand the feelings and concerns that have been expressed by many Members this evening. The current decisions have clarified a number of situations. Orangefield will close, Dundonald is to stay open and the Ashfields are not being permitted to increase their enrolments. I know that there is still disquiet in regard to the Breda schools.

The decision by the Minister in clarifying the situation creates a number of challenges for us. For example, Dundonald is to stay open, but we know that this, in itself, does not generate nor guarantee a successful school in the future. This will only come about with community support, the active and positive support of the boards and a high-quality teaching and learning environment created for all pupils. Similarly, in regard to the Breda schools, the reality is that, with no capital build on the horizon any time in the near future, the SEELB is faced with operating the arrangement of a new school in a less-than-favourable situation.

I concur with Mr McGimpsey's comments, and I make the plea to the Minister to seriously have a conversation with the two boards because not only is the proposal to be on the basis of a split site but it is my understanding that it will be on the basis of a junior and a senior school. If the Minister has rejected in his constituency the Dickson plan, albeit for different reasons, I doubt whether we should be going down the road of bringing a different form of education into east Belfast.

Mr O'Dowd: Thank you, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. In January, I made a detailed statement to the Assembly about the reshaping of post-primary provision in the greater east Belfast area, which encompasses the parliamentary constituencies of South Belfast and East Belfast. Details of my decisions and my rationale in each case are also clearly documented on my Department's website.

To clarify and confirm for Mr Spratt: I have made a decision on the amalgamation of Newtownbreda and Knockbreda. It is no longer a proposal; it is a decision.

Today's debate will give me an opportunity to update you on developments since my statement and to reassure Members of my resolve to ensure that the pupils in this area have access to the high standard of education they deserve. I also want to affirm that the area planning process, which the education and library boards are leading on, must account for the needs of all sectors and plan for the needs of all pupils in a given area.

The six greater east Belfast development proposals that I recently decided upon are a first phase in reshaping post-primary provision in this area. It was evident, however, that more work is needed, and a number of Members referred to that. However, the fact that work needs to be continued will not have affected my decision on the amalgamation of these two schools.

Not only is further work required to ensure the provision of adequate places for pupils at years 8 to 12 and at sixth form but the final area solution that has been reached encompasses the needs of all school sectors. Further engagement with those sectors is required, and my officials will be working closely with the Belfast and South Eastern Education and Library Boards over the coming months to ensure that this happens. At the centre of the process must be decision-making in the best educational interests of the children plus solutions that can be implemented in a manageable manner. I will accept nothing less.

Before I outline developments since my statement of 14 January, I want to clarify a couple of matters that have arisen in the interim. There appears to have been some confusion and concern about who will lead in effecting the changes that I announced. With regard to the amalgamation of Knockbreda and Newtownbreda, it is the South Eastern Education and Library Board, not my Department, that is responsible for all operational and management arrangements required to effect this amalgamation. Similarly, the Belfast Education and Library Board is responsible for all operational and management arrangements required to close Orangefield High School.

I turn to developments since 14 January. I expect the board to carry out the task of amalgamating these schools in an effective and timely manner. The South Eastern Education and Library Board's plan was to amalgamate Knockbreda and Newtownbreda from September 2014. However, since my decision, the board has considered the implementation timetable. It has indicated that, for practical reasons and taking account of the best interests of the pupils concerned, the 2014 school year will be a transitional one, with full amalgamation being achieved in September 2015. The SEELB has given its assurance that it will work with staff and parents to ensure that the transition is as smooth as possible.

9.30 pm

The board will consult all those directly involved in the transition process, and I will take a particular interest in how it consults and communicates with the schools, teachers, boards of governors, parents and pupils on the matter; because, sometimes, we can be too clinical in our approach, in how we write to people and in how we inform them of those matters. We can be too functionary at times rather than ensure that parents receive the information that they require.

Part of the process will be to bring forward an interim board of governors that will have a very important task. It will answer a number of the questions that have been raised. The idea that a new school principal will be stationed in board headquarters sounds ridiculous to me. If that is the plan, I will be using my authority to ensure that it is changed. The schools' staffing and management structures are matters for the new interim board of governors.

As with all other schools, my Department will set the budgets; however, how those budgets are spent in the schools is a matter for the interim board of governors. The curriculum will have to meet the entitlement framework, but how the curriculum is made up is a matter for the interim board of governors. Other matters for the interim board of governors include post-16 and special education provision; school name and uniform; as well as year admissions criteria and other school policies.

Therefore the interim board of governors — as with the board of governors of any school — will have to be representative of the school and the community that it serves, and it will have to have a skills base that will ensure that it delivers an effective and efficient education system in the school. That is important with respect to why there will be an amalgamation, rather than allowing one school to close, end or "wither on the vine", as the case was put.

I am disappointed that some MLAs concentrated only on Newtownbreda High School. There are more than 300 pupils still attending Knockbreda who deserve a future, representation and a voice. Their needs should also be represented in this debate. I could not allow myself as Education Minister to leave a school of 300 pupils to wither on the vine. If I were to do that, I would be in dereliction of my duty. Some Members have done the maths and considered that 800 or 900 pupils are represented in that school, so there are more parents involved; therefore they have decided to concentrate on the needs of that school and forget about the other. Any Member who does that is in dereliction of their duty as a local MLA.

The amalgamation is the best way forward for the entire school community in that area. If we were not to take decisions now, neither of the two schools could confidently stride into the future. We have now made a decision that allows for the provision of post-primary education in the area for generations to come. I am confident that, if we approach this properly as MLAs in a leadership position, as the South Eastern Education and Library Board, my Department, and I as Minister —

Mr Newton: Will the Minister give way?

Mr O'Dowd: Just give me one second. If we approach this properly, and I am confident that we can, we will develop a school that is not just satisfactory or good but very good and excellent. It will deliver education for generations to come in that area. I give way to the Member.

Mr Newton: Minister, underpinning that work has to be the confidence of parents. There is not that confidence, and it will not be there until parents see, in their words, a different plan and an investment in the schools to assure them of their future. There is no investment in the schools at this stage.

Mr O'Dowd: I can give confidence to the parents that I, as Education Minister, will take a very close interest in how those plans develop. In my opinion, the South Eastern Education and Library Board has taken the right decision: to delay the amalgamation for a year. However, anyone who is using their energy to overturn that decision is wasting it; they are wasting an opportunity to build on this and move forward.

In relation to investment in the schools, bricks and mortar alone do not make good schools. You can have the most modern, up-to-date school, but if you do not have the proper leadership team, staffing and board of governors in it, you are wasting your time. So let us get the leadership and board of governors right in the school and make sure that the teaching staff have the proper leadership to move forward. Then we will invest in an amalgamation and a newbuild.

So let us not get ahead of ourselves. Let us use our energies constructively in the months ahead.

I have no basis on which to overturn my decision. I have no inclination to overturn my decision, so I advise anyone who is preparing to launch the campaign that they are perfectly entitled to do so in any democratic society. However, I will say this to them: use your energies more effectively and more efficiently elsewhere and start building a new school for all the pupils in that area.

I see that Mr McKinney and the SDLP have employed their selective quotations editor again, who snips out words that are convenient in any debate but that may not include the complete responses or sentences. They are very busy up in the SDLP cutting office. Let us be clear about this: if there is going to be a newbuild — under the amalgamation, a newbuild will be required in the future — where that school is built will be a matter for the SEELB or the Education and Skills Authority (ESA), whichever comes into place. However, it will also have to be done in consultation with the school, local representatives and the parents. I said to you that I am not interested in the postcode. I, as Minister, have no interest in imposing a newbuild in a specific geographical location. It is up to the local managing authorities to consult and to decide where it is best to build in the future.

I think that the future of education in that area is bright. Difficult decisions have been made and are now being worked out. I believe that, if everybody keeps cool, calm heads and plans for the future, we will be able to look back on this occasion and say that, yes, it was the right decision, albeit a difficult decision, but our young people now have a school that they can all be proud of. We can assure ourselves that we have an education facility in the area that will serve the community for generations to come.

Northern Health and Social Care Trust Procurement Issues

Published at 2.00 pm on Friday 24 January 2014

Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): This Statement draws to the Assembly's attention a report of audit investigations arising from information reported by whistle-blowers about potential malpractice in the procurement and management of building maintenance in the Northern Health and Social Care Trust.

I first brought this issue to the attention of the Assembly on 2nd July 2013, when investigations were ongoing into allegations received by the Trust in February 2012 and by my Department in August 2012. The ongoing investigation was also raised in the annual accounts of the NHSCT for 2012/13.

Investigations have been carried out by BSO Internal Audit, BSO Counter Fraud Unit and the Procurement Policy and Compliance Unit in my Department, under the oversight of officials in my Department. They have recently concluded and the completed report is now available on the DHSSPS website.

I am very concerned that the report highlights a serious lack of control within the Estates Management function in the Northern Health and Social Care Trust, and indeed relevant legacy organisations. Examples of weaknesses in the implementation of procurement controls and guidance include:

- Single Tender Actions awarded without formal approval;
- A contractor working without a contract for several years;
- Contractors used outside of their contracted areas;
- Documentation missing from files to verify expenditure;
- Lack of checks on work carried out and invoices presented for payment;
- Contracts being completed in excess of tender quotation due to additional work undertaken.

The BSO Counter Fraud and Probity Unit has analysed findings from the report and has concluded there is no clear evidence of fraudulent activity. However, whilst the investigations found no incidence where services were paid for which were not provided, it was not possible to verify if this expenditure represented value for money in all cases.

The total value of work that has not been subject to appropriate control or procurement is estimated as £5.7m over the past 14 years. This is a matter of serious concern.

There are a total of 72 recommendations in the report. I am assured that the NHSCT management have accepted all of the recommendations and are taking steps to implement them to ensure that these failures will not be experienced again. The Trust has made significant progress in implementing the recommendations to date. My Department is ensuring that all recommendations are implemented so that the public can have full confidence in NHSCT Estates procurement practices

In addition, both BSO Internal Audit and Procurement Policy and Compliance Unit within my Department are undertaking a series of procurement audits and compliance checks across all Trusts to ensure that similar practices are not occurring elsewhere.

The mismanagement of procurement and contract management at NHSCT was brought to the attention of NHSCT and my Department through the Whistleblowing process and, once again I want to say that it is appropriate and important that where anyone has information about the potential abuse of public money they inform their organisation or my Department so that the specific issues can be resolved, appropriate lessons learned, and public confidence restored.

Where wrongdoing has occurred it must be addressed, with a proportionate and appropriate response. NHSCT management are assessing the reasons behind the failures identified in the report and an independent review will consider whether any further action is appropriate.

Planning — Preparing for 2015

Published at 4.00 pm on Wednesday 29 January 2014

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): In my October statement to the Assembly on the Planning Bill I affirmed my commitment to driving forward reform of the planning system including the transfer of the bulk of planning powers to councils in 2015.

I wish to make a written statement to outline my vision for the planning system as we move towards transfer next April. I also want to set out my agenda for delivering what I believe will be key improvements to the system. Improvements which will create a system which is less complex, more effective, more efficient and more customer-focused, without compromising on environmental standards.

I want to create a better environment and a stronger economy. My aim is to create a planning system that works to achieve this. A system that is fast, fair and fit for purpose. One that delivers for business - with timely decisions that bring investment and jobs but not at the expense of our environment, planet or people. A system which realises that the environment and the economy should not, and cannot be, at loggerheads. A system that fully recognises that a vibrant, sustainable environment can be a driver of prosperity and job creation. Similarly a strong economy and a prosperous society can be good for the environment. I am committed to do things differently and better.

This is an exciting and challenging time for planning. In just 15 months, our new 11 councils will be responsible for drawing up their own development plans, making the majority of planning decisions and shaping how their areas will grow and develop in a way that responds to the needs of their local communities. It is my job to ensure that we transfer planning as seamlessly as possible. That we ensure that the new system is in the best possible shape for transfer. To do this there are 5 key actions I want to focus on to bring the new system to life over coming months.

Key Actions

1. I want to shorten and simplify policy. Move to a single Strategic Planning Policy Statement (SPPS) rather than 20 separate policy publications – aiming for 100 pages of policy compared to some 800.
2. I want to initiate key reforms to the planning system. While the Planning Bill, as originally intended, would have allowed many of these to be delivered on a legislative basis, there are measures that can be set in place without legislation, such as new local development plan preparatory work, setting in place the new hierarchy of development arrangements, extending pre-application discussions and encouraging more widespread pre application community consultation. Better informed applications will be processed quicker.
3. I especially want to tackle response times from consultees - particularly those from the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) within my own

Department. I intend to therefore bring forward statutory consultee response times to remove delay in the process so that we deliver faster decisions

4. I want to improve customer service and access to case officers, and
5. I want to ensure all those with responsibility for delivering the new system have the capacity to do so.

Benefits

These measures will benefit all users of the planning system. Communities who want to input in a genuine and meaningful way to development plans for their areas, and who want to be consulted before applications are submitted by developers will benefit. Also developers will have more certainty in terms of speedier decisions and outcomes. The environment will benefit from better informed decisions. The Department will benefit in the short term but councils too will reap benefits in the longer term through improved efficiencies and performance.

I also want to challenge all those involved in the planning process – developers, planners, councils, communities, environmental groups, professional bodies to help me deliver my vision for the new planning system.

Recent performance

Before considering in more detail the actions for improvement I would like to acknowledge the work of my predecessor and the Department in delivering quicker decisions and providing greater certainty and outcomes for managing applications, than previously.

Improvements have been evident in all categories of applications. Over the most recent quarter, the average processing times for Major, Intermediate and Minor categories of planning applications reduced by four, two and one week respectively compared to the equivalent quarter in 2012/13. Article 31 applications have reduced by more than 50% in the last 18 months. There were 60 and there are now less than 30. I want to clear more Article 31 cases and to continue to exceed the 6 month target for large scale investment decisions.

Since I took up office the Department has made several major decisions and done so quickly:

- Biogas Combined Heat & Power Plant Newtownabbey 6 weeks (November)
- £2.5m storage, 7 distribution centre Newtownabbey , 3 months (November)
- 48 bed extension and new leisure centre Galgorm Manor less than 2 months (November)
- £20m data hub Coleraine based on innovative communications infrastructure linking Northern Ireland to USA & Europe, 2 months (October)
- £12m Forensic Science Lab Carrickfergus, less than 4 months (August)
- Young people's indoor safety village Belfast 6 weeks (September)
- In addition I have made decisions on a number of Article 31 applications, including:
  - A mixed use development at Glenmona in West Belfast;

- The redevelopment of the former Crepe Weavers factory site in Newtownards;
- The redevelopment of Casement Park; and
- £85 million energy from waste gasification plant at Bombardier Aerospace

I do acknowledge, however, that there are those who believe that the Department is not doing enough to improve the planning system. I readily accept that more needs to be done. I recognise that the planning system can, and should, do much more to unlock development potential, support job creation and aid economic recovery.

I have met with, and listened to, those running, wanting to expand and trying to set up businesses in NI, environmental groups, communities, the public among others. I told them I wouldn't just listen, I promised I would listen and act on their feedback. I hope I have demonstrated that I am prepared to listen to views and make difficult decisions.

As I listen, one of the issues I hear most is the need for greater certainty. Certainty in terms of the timescales for processing applications to decision – be it a yes or no; certainty of the policy context so stakeholders will know what is likely to be acceptable or unacceptable; certainty that the views of local communities will be sought and considered in a meaningful way and certainty that the planning system that will transfer to councils in 2015 will be fair and fit for purpose.

There are a number of key actions I intend to deliver.

ACTION 1 - Strategic Planning Policy Statement (SPPS)

Firstly, I want to shorten and simplify policy. I intend to bring forward a new draft single Strategic Planning Policy Statement. This will ensure we have a policy framework which reflects the aims and priorities for planning and provides better clarity and certainty for all users of the reformed planning system.

The SPPS is an essential, key element of the broader planning and local government reform programme that will assist in the transition to the two tier planning system in 2015. It is strategic in nature and provides the context for detailed operational policies to be brought forward by new councils within future local development plans.

It will be a relatively short and concise statement of planning policy. The emphasis will not merely be on consolidating into one document the strategic elements of extant policy but critically on improving it.

It will also set out the core planning principles to underpin delivery of the reformed two-tier planning system from April 2015 including promoting sustainable development, well being and shared space. In addition, the SPPS will bring forward new strategic policy relating to town centres and retail.

The draft SPPS will issue for public consultation in early February and be published in final form in good time before planning functions transfer.

ACTION 2 - Planning Act reforms

Secondly, as we move towards the implementation of the Planning Act 2011, I want to bring forward as many of the reforms contained within it in advance of the transfer.

I firmly believe that moving quickly towards mirroring the new structures that will be in place from 2015 and implementing the reforms, will individually and collectively provide a real opportunity to speed up decision making. It will also provide greater certainty for applicants, and enhanced community involvement.

Preparatory work on local development plans

Planning decisions should be taken against a framework of up to date and effective development plans and supplementary guidance. Again that provides greater certainty to investors, applicants and communities. I am now establishing Area Plan teams to commence preparatory work on local development plans for all the new council areas. This work will involve close working with statutory transition committees and in due course new shadow councils. This will allow the new councils to move quickly to bring forward their own development plans once they become the planning authorities next year.

Hierarchy of Development

I want to put in place the new development management approach as set out in the 2011 Planning Act. This incorporates a 3-tier hierarchy of development (consisting of local, major and regionally significant) so that greater resources can be directed at those applications with economic and social significance, through more proportionate decision making mechanisms tailored to the scale and complexity of the proposed development.

All major and local developments will be dealt with by councils under the new planning system. Major developments will be subject to pre-application consultation with the community. Regionally significant development proposals will also be subject to pre-application community consultation and will be determined by the Department.

Over coming months, I will consult on the legislative thresholds for the 3 categories. However, in the interim I have instructed officials to put the hierarchy arrangements in place as soon as possible, well in advance of the transfer of planning functions to councils. Alongside this I will be bringing forward, in consultation with local government, a new performance management regime and redefined targets to align with the hierarchy.

I have also asked for specialised multi-disciplinary/ multi-agency teams to be set up and deployed across the new clusters to actively manage major applications drawing on consultee expertise and with appropriately trained planners with knowledge of property, finance and commercial issues. Essentially I'm cascading the model used for regionally significant applications, including pre application discussions and pre application community consultation to a more local level.

I am also looking creatively at how we deal with particular pressures on the development management system. I have appointed retail consultants to assist in the assessment of Article 31 retail applications that are particularly labour intensive.

Pre-application discussion

I also want to continue frontloading the planning system by encouraging developers to engage in pre application discussions both with the Department and communities affected by the proposal.

I am therefore introducing new arrangements for pre application discussion (PADs). The best way to ensure a quick planning decision is to discuss proposals with the Department at the earliest opportunity before making an application. I intend to adopt a new approach. For smaller scale applications, applicants will be encouraged to call in to their local office for an informal discussion. On large, economically significant projects the Department will facilitate a more formal round table discussion involving all the relevant agencies depending on the nature of the scheme. This will help applicants to submit applications with all the necessary information addressing all the planning issues. I intend to launch new PADs guidance shortly.

Pre application community consultation

I will also be encouraging applicants for major developments to engage in meaningful consultation with the community affected by the development before submitting their application so that the views of local people can influence the scheme. This worked particularly well for example in the Windsor Park stadium redevelopment application - this application was processed in 11 weeks.

ACTION 3 - Improving consultee performance

Thirdly, I want to reduce response times from consultees, particularly those from within my own Department notably NIEA.

I am fully aware that the time taken to conclude consultations with key consultees is seen by many as a key cause of delay in the development management process. I intend to put in place measures to improve the performance of consultees so that sound decisions are made more quickly delivering decisions to support economic recovery and sustainable development.

As part of the implementation of the 2011 Planning Act I will provide greater clarity and certainty for the consultation process. For the first time, identified consultees will be statutorily required to provide a substantive response to a consultation request from a planning authority within a specified timeframe and to report on their performance in meeting their duty to respond.

All future consultation responses will have to be "substantive" providing sufficient information to allow the application to be determined. A holding response will not be regarded as meeting the requirements of the duty to respond. I believe this new element of the system will be a valuable opportunity to identify any difficulties or bottlenecks in the system but also to identify good practice. The annual reports produced by consultees in England provide a good example of how this system can work to identify opportunities for improvement going forward.

NIEA performance

NIEA has a critical role as a consultee on many planning applications. All NIEA consultee input will meet the new statutory timelines when they come into effect.

In the interim, NIEA will conduct a series of 'Backlog Blitzes' to clear outstanding planning consultations, with the first two being;

- All 'brownfield site' consultations greater than 12 months will be cleared by the end of March and the remainder of the backlog will be cleared by the end of June;
- 95% of all 'natural heritage' outstanding consultations (currently 230 applications) will be cleared by the end of March.

On the 1st of February, NIEA will establish a Planning Control Team which will:

- assign a single contact officer for all NIEA planning consultations. This will make it easier for applicants to get co-ordinated negotiation and advice from NIEA;
- develop new protocols for how the different sections of NIEA will streamline and improve their planning consultation processes.

NIEA will also start a series of projects with industry sectors to agree ways for NIEA and businesses to work together during the pre-applications phase, starting with:

- A Contaminated Land conference on 25 March for property development, construction sectors, councils, NIEA and others.
- Similar workshops will be conducted with the agri-food and renewable sectors in April

ACTION 4 - Improving customer service and applications.

Fourthly, I want to improve customer service. Speed of decision making is not the only measure of a quality planning system. It is also important to focus on customer needs. Therefore I want to improve customer service by listening to customer needs and responding to their requirements. In particular, I intend to improve direct telephone access to planners.

Better applications

It is important to remember that responsibility for improvement does not only rest with the planning authority and consultees. It has to be a collaborative approach. An efficient, effective, fair and fit for purpose planning system can only be delivered if all stakeholders work together. I am challenging my department but I am also laying down a challenge to applicants and agents to engage in pre application discussions and submit good applications. The Department will support those that have put in the time to submit good applications and reject badly prepared applications.

Therefore, applicants and developers need to play their role in ensuring quality, soundly based applications are submitted. And, in return, they can expect quicker decisions. Better performance based on better, comprehensive and complete applications is the way forward.

Poor applications with incomplete or low quality information clog up the system. DOE planning officers and consultees spend time going back and forward with these applicants seeking more and better information. This diverts our time and energy from dealing with good quality planning applications.

ACTION 5 - Preparing for Transfer

Capacity Building and Training

As well as improving the existing planning system in preparation for the transfer, I am also committed to helping councils get ready to receive their new powers. It is, therefore, vital that the new councils, and councillors, have the skills, knowledge and capability to deliver the new planning system and a mandatory code to follow. It is essential that everyone is properly prepared and aware of their role and responsibilities. Future decision makers must, for example, understand the delicate balancing act between environmental and economic considerations in development planning and development management. They must also appreciate the need for prompt, sound decisions.

Last year Executive funding of £3m was secured for capacity building and training. This money will ensure that essential training for councillors who are involved in making planning decisions can be carried out in good time and will mean that they are well equipped for, and have the confidence as well as competence to make, sound planning decisions right from day one.

The requirement for councillors to understand the planning process and the new role they will play in it will form a very important part of the capacity building programme that I have instructed officials to develop. The programme will ensure that councillors will be better equipped and better placed to deal with planning issues; from deciding planning applications through to the ethical standards and Code of Conduct they will be required to adhere to.

Working in partnership with a range of stakeholders, the action plan to deliver the overall capacity building and training programme will be rolled out during 2014 and right up to the point of transfer. Planning-specific training and relationship building at a local level between councils and area planning offices has already begun.

Checks and Balances, Audit and Performance Management

It is important that central government has an appropriate oversight role to ensure regional policies and objectives are implemented and that a consistent approach is applied to planning across the region.

The role of audit, inspections, performance management and monitoring of the planning system will also be critical in ensuring that planning functions are carried out and are seen to be carried out in a fair and consistent manner and that best practice is applied across the new district councils.

The 2011 Planning Act allows the Department to conduct an assessment of a council's performance and how a council deals with applications for planning permission. The Act also contains a range of oversight and intervention powers.

Performance Management

In terms of performance management, my Department will continue to work with local government to develop a system of performance management for planning. While much of this detail will be contained in guidance, the Local Government Bill, currently before the Assembly, provides enabling powers to allow the Department to set performance indicators and performance standards. If a council fails to comply with performance requirements the Department has powers to intervene.

Code of Conduct

When exercising their new decision making powers in respect of planning, councillors will be required to observe a mandatory Code of Conduct, which the Department is drafting and will issue for public consultation in the next few weeks.

This Code will include specific references to how councillors should conduct themselves when dealing with planning matters. The Code will be accompanied by detailed supplementary guidance to advise councillors on what they can and cannot do with regards to planning.

The guidance will deal with matters such as: lobbying of and by councillors; recommendations made by planning officers; councillors' personal and prejudicial interests; decisions contrary to an officer's recommendation; decisions contrary to the development plan.

Allegations of breaches of the code may be investigated by the Commissioner for Complaints and, if the Commissioner finds that a breach has occurred, sanctions may be taken against the councillor. The Code and guidance will offer protection to councillors executing planning duties and assurances to the public about councillor conduct.

Communication

There is also a need for enhanced public understanding of the changes to planning services. A Communications strategy is guiding the timely publication and dissemination of information through a range of media, including bulletins, articles and events.

Resources

The transfer of planning will only be successful with the right resources in place. I am, working to ensure the smooth transition of staff from central to local government. Work force models have been developed to inform the staffing levels required in each of the new councils.

Conclusion

I believe this package of measures will ensure that a fast, fair and fit for purpose planning system transfers to councils in 2015, and continues beyond, for the benefit of all. I also believe this package will provide certainty to investors and ensure that planning plays its full role in supporting economic recovery and sustainable development without compromising on environmental standards.

Over coming weeks I will issue the SPSS for consultation, progress the other actions and continue to press ahead with determining key planning applications.

Northern Ireland Climate Change Adaptation Programme

Published at 12.00 noon on Thursday 30 January 2014

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): I have today laid before the Assembly the first Northern Ireland Climate Change Adaptation Programme (Adaptation Programme).

There is no doubt that climate change represents the biggest environmental, economic and social challenge of the 21st century. The threat of global warming, the impact on the polar ice caps, sea level rises, increases in the frequency of extreme weather events, cyclones, floods, wildfires can all have extremely serious consequences for the environment, the economy and society.

These are global issues but they can and will continue to have significant local impacts. We have already experienced first hand extreme weather in the form of heavier snowfalls, more intense rainfall and the associated flooding events of recent years. Many of us as individuals and as part of the wider community have felt the severe and harsh consequences of these events.

As part of our obligations under the UK Climate Change Act 2008 relevant Northern Ireland Departments are required to lay programmes before the Northern Ireland Assembly setting out objectives, proposals, policies and associated timescales to address the risks and opportunities identified in the UK Climate Change Risk Assessment (CCRA). The CCRA, which was published in 2012, brought together the best available evidence to identify the main risks and opportunities related to climate change. This Adaptation Programme is our response to the findings in the CCRA for Northern Ireland.

The Adaptation Programme sets out our vision to build 'A resilient Northern Ireland which will take timely and well-informed decisions that are responsive to the key risks and opportunities presented by climate change'.

By working in partnership across Government and with relevant stakeholders, raising awareness of the likely effects of climate change, promoting and supporting the enhancement of scientific evidence, fulfilling the statutory duties and engaging with other administrations we have started the process towards achieving this vision.

This first 5-year Adaptation Programme sets out our strategic direction and objectives in preparing Northern Ireland for the effects of climate change. It identifies the initial four primary areas for action, within which progress on the application of the objectives and adaptation principles will be pursued. These are Flooding; Water; Natural Environment; and Agriculture & Forestry. The Programme focuses on integrating climate change adaptation into relevant key policy areas across Government, developing the climate change adaptation evidence base and communicating and promoting adaptation messages through our stakeholders.

The Adaptation Programme is the start of an ongoing climate adaptation process. It provides a proportionate and flexible cross-departmental response to the priority risks and opportunities identified for Northern Ireland. It will also act as a catalyst for everyone in Northern Ireland to rise to the challenge of adapting to our changing climate. I am confident that we will rise to this challenge, and in doing so boost our resilience to a changing climate, improve the adaptive capacity and support our environment, society, and economy now and for future generations.

Local Government Bill [NIA 28/11-15]

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Ms Anna Lo (Chairperson)
Mrs Pam Cameron (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr Cathal Boylan
Mr Colum Eastwood
Mr Ian Milne

The Chairperson: I will now commence the formal clause-by-clause analysis of the Local Government Bill. I remind members that formal clause-by-clause consideration is the last opportunity to discuss the clauses of the Bill and any decisions will be final. I intend to group clauses about which the Committee has previously indicated that it is content.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Clause 2 (Constitutions of councils)

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 2, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Mr Boylan: Excuse me, Chair, can we do some of the clauses en bloc or together?

The Chairperson: Yes, we can.

Mr Boylan: Do we have to go through them individually now?

Ms Éilis Haughey (Bill Clerk, Northern Ireland Assembly):

Chair, I should advise that the Committee had previously asked for a Committee amendment to be prepared for clause 2 to insert a date upon which the first —

The Chairperson: Yes. You have a tabled paper, members, with Éilis's proposed amendment. So, clause 2 there — sorry, jump back. Éilis, talk to us about that. Clause 2 is options.

Ms Haughey: The Committee had wished to insert a date by which the first constitution would be made available. The amendment tabled is at clause 2, page 1, line 17. It would insert, after the word "that" in line 17 in subsection (2), which is the subsection that requires copies of the constitution to be available at the principal office for inspection by members of the public at all reasonable hours, that copies must be available from 30 April 2015.

The Chairperson: Are members agreed?

Clauses 3 to 9 agreed to.

Clause 10 (Positions of responsibility)

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 10, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson: I want to put it on record that I want STV to be the default position instead of d'Hondt.

Clause 11 (Arrangements for discharge of functions of council)

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 11, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Clauses 12 to 24 agreed to.

Clause 25 (Council executives)

The Chairperson: We have two Committee amendments tabled. Can you explain those to us please, Éilis?

Ms Haughey: Clause 25, page 11, line 31: leave out "four" and insert "six". That was on the Committee's request to raise the minimum number of members of the executive. Then there is a further amendment consistent with that to clause 25, page 11, line 34: leave out "four" and insert "six", which would affect committees in a streamlined committee executive and ensure a minimum number of six members.

The Chairperson: What about that one on the chair and deputy chair?

Ms Haughey: OK. There is one more, an amendment to clause 25, page 11, line 29: leave out subsection (3) and insert new subsection (3):

"The chair and deputy chair of the council shall be ex officio non-voting members of the executive."

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, subject to the proposed amendments, put and agreed to.

Clauses 26 to 33 agreed to.

Clause 34 (Reference of matters to overview and scrutiny committee etc.)

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 34, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Clauses 35 to 49 agreed to.

The Chairperson: I have been requested to return to clause 25. Let me just confirm that Members are content with the three suggested Committee amendments.

Clause 50 (Application to committees and sub-committees)

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 50, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Clauses 51 to 57 agreed to.

Clause 58 (Investigations)

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 58, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Clauses 59 to 61 agreed to.

Clause 62 (Decision following report)

The Chairperson: Is the Committee content with clause 62, subject to the proposed departmental amendment and Committee amendment to specify grounds of appeal?

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 62, subject to the proposed amendments, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson: Do you need Éilis to talk you through that?

Mr Boylan: No, we are content to agree.

Ms Haughey: We do not have a drafted amendment yet, Chair.

Clause 63 (Decisions on interim reports)

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 63, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Clause 64 (Recommendations)

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 64, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Clauses 65 to 67 agreed to.

Clauses 86 to 94 agreed to.

Clause 95 (Improvement planning and publication of improvement information)

The Chairperson: Is the Committee content with clause 95, subject to Committee amendment and one departmental amendment as well?

The Committee Clerk: We have not got a departmental amendment.

The Chairperson: No? Just the Committee amendment. Éilis could quickly mention that.

Ms Haughey: The Committee had previously requested that an amendment be prepared to grant an enabling power to the Department to amend the date in clause 95(3)(a).

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson: Is the Committee content with new clause 117A?

Question, That the Committee is content with the new clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 118 agreed to.

New Clause

The Chairperson: There is a new clause after clause 119. We need to see clause 119 too. We have not said 119.

The Committee Clerk: We have got 119. That is a new clause too.

The Chairperson: OK. New clause after clause 119.

Question, That the Committee is content with the new clause, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson: Do we need to call out clause 119?

The Committee Clerk: It just comes under new clause after 119.

The Chairperson: We just say, "Is the Committee content with the clause as amended?"

Ms Haughey: We need to put the question on clause 119 as it stands, as well as the new clause — the existing clause 119.

Clause 119 agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 125, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Clauses 126 to 128 agreed to.

Long title agreed to.

Schedules 1 to 3 agreed to.

Schedule 4 (Appointment of councillors to committees, etc.)

The Chairperson: Schedule 4 is subject to a proposed Committee amendment. Éilis, can you explain about that, please?

Ms Haughey: We do not have the text of an amendment yet, but the Committee requested that we prepare an amendment to ensure that the formula for appointments to committees be run for all committee positions at once for the duration of the council term based on the number of seats that each party has immediately after the election. It is a recommendation that an amendment be developed, so the question will be on schedule 4 subject to such an amendment.

The Chairperson: Is the Committee content with schedule 4, subject to the Committee amendment?

Mr Milne: I just have a question. I have some experience in council. After the chair and vice-chair, how is it decided what committee comes next? There has to be some kind of formula or procedure.

Mr Eastwood: Usually d'Hondt is run within —

Mr Milne: Yes, I know that it runs on one after the other —

Mr Eastwood: It is your choice to pick which Committee, is that not right?

Mr Milne: Yes, but who decides which committee comes after the chair and the vice-chair?

The Chairperson: Is it up to the party? Is that what Colum is saying?

Mr Eastwood: You would be picking the chair of each committee as well. Say our party was up first; we would pick the chair of the development committee, or whatever it is. Then, if you are next, you pick the chair of environment, and then it runs through the membership. Is that not right?

Mr Boylan: That is the normal process. Where do you see an issue?

Mr Milne: With putting other members onto the committee. After the chair and vice-chair of the committee, how do we select further members? I am of the opinion that I would say, "Right, we elect someone onto the housing group", because I wanted to fit in with the way that d'Hondt runs. How is all that determined?

The Chairperson: I know what you mean, because there are so many different committees.

Mr Milne: It is very important.

Mr Eastwood: Normally, what happens is that each committee is the same size. Those positions are given out based on the size of your party. The largest party gets a certain number, and so on. You get numbers, and the party then slots in the members. Isn't that the way it works?

Mr Boylan: Yes, you pick out the committee chairs first right across the committees, and you fill the positions.

Mr Eastwood: The chairs first, and, after that, you have a certain number.

The Chairperson: For whatever you want, spreading it out, generally; is that right?

Mr Eastwood: No. Say, we had four members. If we had the chair, there will only be three members after that. It is then up to the party to nominate the three or four members onto the committee. The committee numbers in each committee will also be decided by d'Hondt separately. Do you know what I mean?

Mr Boylan: Are you happy enough?

Mr Milne: Yes, that makes more sense.

The Chairperson: That is normally the way that it is done; is that right?

Mr Boylan: You go down through each committee. You take the chair and the main positions and then fill the committees out.

The Chairperson: Whichever committee you want to fill, you put it in: is that right?

Mr Eastwood: After the chairs and deputy chairs, there is a set number based on d'Hondt. You run d'Hondt separately.

Mr Boylan: That is the way you run it.

The Chairperson: OK. Are members agreed with that one? Do you want me to read it again?

Mr Boylan: Yes, Chair. Read it into the record.

Question, That the Committee is content with schedule 4, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Schedules 5 to 8 agreed to.

Schedule 9 (Minor and consequential amendments relating to local government audit)

Question, That the Committee is content with schedule 9, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Schedule 10 agreed to.

Schedule 11 (Minor and consequential amendments: general)

Question, That the Committee is content with schedule 11, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Schedule 12 (Repeals)

Question, That the Committee is content with schedule 12, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson: OK, members. Thank you very much. That concludes formal clause-by-clause consideration of the Bill. The draft report will be brought forward for members' consideration at our next meeting, which is an additional meeting next Tuesday, from 12.30 pm until 2.00 pm, in Room 29. The draft will be sent to members.

Written Answers to Questions

Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister

Social Mobility and Child Poverty Commission

Mr Agnew asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister when they will appoint representatives to the UK Commission on Child Poverty and Social Mobility.

(AQW 23501/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness (The First Minister and deputy First Minister): This matter is currently under consideration.

Childcare Strategy

Mr Agnew asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what guarantee they can give that the childcare strategy will be published and implemented before the introduction of the provisions contained in the Welfare Reform Bill.

(AQW 27555/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: "Bright Start" was launched on 25 September 2013. The first phase of the Bright Start Strategy sets out a strategic direction and lists 15 key first actions that will be put in place to address the main childcare priorities identified during consultation and research. All key actions will be initiated in 2013/14.

The Executive has yet to conclude its discussions on Welfare Reform.

Social Investment Fund: South-eastern Zone

Mr Dunne asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the implementation of the Social Investment Fund implementation in the South East zone.

(AQW 28553/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Ten projects were submitted by the South Eastern Steering Group and are currently going through the appropriate economic appraisal procedures. On the basis of present projections, we are hopeful of supporting all these projects, subject to satisfactory economic appraisals. Until this work is completed it is not possible to comment further.

Victims and Survivors Service: Update

Mrs D Kelly asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the Victims and Survivors Service.

(AQO 5114/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Victims and Survivors Service has undertaken nearly 2,000 individual needs reviews and funded a total of 68 Victims and Survivors groups to date.

However, we are aware that issues have been raised in relation to the Service, which we take extremely seriously. We have therefore established a Programme Board, chaired by the Director of Equality and Strategy Directorate. The Commissioner for Victims and Survivors, Kathryn Stone, and the VSS Chief Executive, Anne Dorbie, also sit on the Board along with Special Advisors.

We will work together to resolve these issues and see this through to a conclusion to ensure that victims and survivors receive the best possible support.

City of Culture 2013: Tenders and Funding

Mr Eastwood asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail (i) tenders awarded; and (ii) funding provided to organisations in Derry to deliver the City of Culture 2013.

(AQW 28766/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: In relation to the City of Culture's 2013 cultural programme, all contracts were entered into with Derry City Council, therefore the Department did not award any tenders.

The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure secured approval for a business case to provide £12.6m funding for the City of Culture programme which was paid to Derry City Council. This included a contribution of £1.5m from OFMDFM through Ilex. In addition, a further contribution of £250k was provided by OFMDFM through Ilex to the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to assist with the marketing of the city during 2013.

Child Poverty

Mr Agnew asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, given the forecast by the Institute for Fiscal Studies that child poverty is set to increase significantly by 2020 based on their current policy interventions, (i) whether they intend to maintain the income based measurement of child poverty; (ii) whether they intend to meet their statutory targets to reduce child poverty under the Child Poverty Act; and (iii) what additional progressive interventions they intend to undertake to meet these obligations.

(AQW 28987/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The report by the Institute of Fiscal Studies (IFS) on Child and Working-Age Poverty in Northern Ireland from 2010 to 2020, published in May 2013, was commissioned by our Department to inform our work to tackle poverty and disadvantage. These projections are necessarily subject to uncertainties and limitations, which are noted in the report. IFS is working on an update using more recent data and we hope to publish in the New Year.

We are required, under the Child Poverty Act 2010, to publish a Child Poverty Strategy that contributes to meeting the targets set out in the Act, which are measured by household income.

We published the Executive's Child Poverty Strategy, Improving Children's Life Chances, in March 2011. In pursuit of the targets required by the Act, this Strategy sets out two key strands of work to address the causes and consequences of child poverty: reducing poorly paid work and unemployment amongst adults with children; and improving longer-term prospects through child-based interventions which are designed to tackle the cyclical nature of child poverty. Annual reports on progress were produced in 2012 and 2013 and are available on our department's website.

We are required to adhere to the Child Poverty Act and report progress against its targets and measures until 2020. In addition, in the Programme for Government 2011-15, the Executive made a commitment to deliver a range of measures to tackle poverty and social exclusion through the Delivering Social Change Framework. This was a new approach to tackling multi-generational poverty, based on additional, strategic actions which can make a difference, ultimately with a view to improving long-term outcomes. Delivering Social Change represents a new level of collaborative working across departments. We have sought to drive real initiatives which will have genuine impact on the ground through our seven Delivering Social Change Signature programmes.

Teachers are being recruited to deliver tuition to primary school pupils who are struggling with reading and maths at Key Stage 2 and post-primary pupils who are not projected to get a 'C' grade in English or Maths. Twenty additional Nurture Units are being created in local primary schools to help address barriers to learning among children arising from social, emotional or behavioural difficulties. Trained staff will select the children who will benefit most from additional support and develop individual learning plans agreed with parents and teachers.

Parenting programmes have been developed which will provide support to new parents living in areas of deprivation. Sixteen existing Family Support Hubs are receiving additional support to provide early intervention family support services and 10 new Hubs will be established by April 2014. A targeted intervention programme to support young people who are not in Education, Employment or Training and their families will also be rolled out; providing work placements, skills training and employment advice.

The programmes will also see investment in local communities. Eleven Social Enterprise Hubs will offer business advice and practical support to social enterprise entrepreneurs to encourage social enterprise business start-ups within local communities and £1.6 million is being invested to enhance play and leisure opportunities.

In addition, we continue to commission research to identify best practice and inform our work to tackle child poverty. In October, we published a Child Poverty Outcomes Framework, developed by the National Children's Bureau and the Centre for Excellence and Outcomes, to support a cross-departmental approach to reduce child poverty. This Framework seeks to identify interventions which will improve outcomes.

We are currently reviewing our Child Poverty Strategy and using the Child Poverty Outcomes Framework to develop a new strategy, under the banner of Delivering Social Change, to improve outcomes for all of our children.

Social Investment Fund: South-eastern Zone

Mr Weir asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how many applications for funding in the South East zone of the Social Investment Fund (i) have been submitted; (ii) are currently being processed; and (iii) have been approved.

(AQW 29118/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Ten projects were submitted by the South Eastern Steering Group. Four of these projects have full approvals in place and the other six are currently going through the appropriate appraisal procedures. On the basis of present projections we are hopeful of supporting all these projects, subject to satisfactory economic appraisals.

Child Abuse

Mr Givan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what action their Department and its arm's-length bodies are taking to protect children from abuse through the internet.

(AQW 29147/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: We recognise that while the internet offers new opportunities for children to expand their knowledge and experience, it also brings risks. The Executive is committed to ensuring children and young people are protected from abuse including through the internet.

Over the last year, OFMDFM has taken forward a range of actions to protect children from abuse through the internet, including:

- the commissioning of research to gain a better understanding of internet use by P7 pupils;
- engagement with the UK Safer Internet Centre, including involvement in Safer Internet Day activities on 5 February 2013; and
- a review of activity on internet safety across relevant departments to identify current actions, gaps and any further actions that may be required to address risks.

We have used existing cross-departmental structures such as the Delivering Social Change Programme Board and Children's Champions to ensure work is co-ordinated across the Executive.

In addition, OFMDFM has contributed to work which is being taken forward by the Safeguarding Board for Northern Ireland to evaluate the effectiveness of current internet safety messages for children and young people, parents and practitioners.

Junior Ministers have also met the Adviser to the EU Commissioner for the Digital Agenda to consider how we could work with the EU to address the issue of child internet safety, including raising awareness of cyber bullying.

In light of its concerns over internet safety, the NI Commissioner for Children and Young People (NICCY) has updated its 'Social Media Policy' and its 'Social Media Guidelines' in relation to the participation of children and young people. NICCY's Legal and Investigations Department deals with casework on a daily basis, some of which involve issues in relation to internet safety.

Childcare: Bright Start

Mr Lyttle asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how 3000 childcare places will be provided by social enterprise through the Bright Start Community Childcare Programme.

(AQW 29228/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: We propose to sustain or create the 3,000 childcare places for school age children through a grant funding scheme. The detail of the proposed grant scheme is currently in development with a view to launching early in 2014.

Childcare: Bright Start

Mr Lyttle asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for a breakdown of the budget for programmes provided for in the Bright Start Strategy.

(AQW 29230/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Department continues to work on the detailed costings for several of the key first actions set out in the first phase of Bright Start. As a consequence, we are not in a position to provide a breakdown of the budget for each of the programmes in Bright Start. However, we are intending on making more details available on this shortly.

Childcare: Bright Start

Mr Lyttle asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how the need for the number of extra childcare places being provided for under the Bright Start Strategy was established.

(AQW 29231/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Bright Start's key first actions aim to address the priority childcare needs that were identified during public consultation and research. These needs included a lack of provision for school age children; for children with disabilities; and for children in rural areas. The additional childcare places envisaged under the first phase of Bright Start represent a major step towards addressing these needs.

Childcare: Bright Start

Mr Lyttle asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to provide further detail on the Bright Start Childcare Information Programme.

(AQW 29232/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Under the first phase of the Bright Start Childcare Strategy, the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (DHSSPS) is enhancing the Family Support NI website. This includes a new childcare specific search facility that is already operational. The facility enables parents to search for childcare services in their area and filter the results by a number of categories – eg the type of childcare being provided, any current vacancies, and the hours during which the childcare services are available.

DHSSPS has also commissioned a social media application. This will replicate the Family Support NI information and enable parents to search for childcare services using smart phones.

Delivering Social Change: Child Poverty

Mr Agnew asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what measures will be incorporated as part of delivering social change to address child poverty.

(AQW 29353/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Delivering Social Change is about reducing poverty and associated issues, across all ages; and an improvement in children and young people's health, well-being and life opportunities, breaking the cycle of multi-generational problems.

Six Delivering Social Change Signature Programmes, specifically focused on children and families, are currently being implemented to address the causes and consequences of poverty. In October, we announced a seventh Signature Programme to enhance play and leisure opportunities for children and young people. A range of possible future initiatives are also under consideration.

We are currently reviewing our Child Poverty Strategy, Improving Children's Life Chances, and aim to publish a new strategy, setting out future measures to address child poverty under the banner of Delivering Social Change, in March 2014.

Children's Services

Mr Agnew asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether they have any plans to improve the integration of planning, commissioning and delivery of children's services; and to provide further details.

(AQW 29401/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Direct responsibility for the planning, commissioning and delivery of children's services falls within the remit of the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety.

However, the Member will be aware of the work we are taking forward through the Delivering Social Change framework to provide a co-ordinated approach across the Executive to reduce poverty and bring about improvements in children and young people's health, well-being and life opportunities.

Historical Institutional Abuse Inquiry: Update

Mr Givan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the inquiry into Historical Institutional Abuse led by Justice Hart.

(AQO 5252/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Inquiry into Historical Institutional Abuse has been up and running since October 2012, when its confidential Acknowledgement Forum began hearing accounts from victims and survivors.

Of course, the Inquiry is independent from government and, subject to the Inquiry into Historical Institutional Abuse Act and Rules, the procedure and conduct of the Inquiry are directed by the Chairperson.

However, we note that applications from those victims and survivors who wished to be heard by the Inquiry closed on Friday 29 November 2013. Over that 14-month period, the Inquiry has received 433 applications. The Inquiry will commence its oral hearings in the former Banbridge Courthouse today. This will focus on opening statements by the Chairperson Sir Anthony Hart and Christine Smith QC, Senior Counsel to the Inquiry.

Hearings will initially focus on Institutions at Termonbacca and Sisters of Nazareth, Bishop Street Derry/Londonderry. The dates for the subsequent hearings will be announced by the Inquiry in due course.

The Inquiry's terms of reference anticipate that it will have completed all its work by January 2016.

Social Investment Fund: Update

Mr Irwin asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the delivery of the Social Investment Fund.

(AQO 5258/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: We have agreed indicative financial allocations for each of the nine Social Investment Fund zones. Officials have subsequently met with the Chairs of the nine Steering Groups and then with each Steering Group to agree the projects within each of the area plans which can be funded within the available resources for the zone and to discuss the next steps to progress the delivery of these projects. We expect that the first tranche of projects will receive letters of offer in the coming weeks.

Officials are currently focusing further efforts on securing approval to those projects which sit within the limits of affordability within each zone but have not yet been fully approved. We anticipate completing this exercise by the end of the current financial year.

International Relations Strategy

Mr I McCrea asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the development of an International Relations Strategy.

(AQO 5260/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The International Relations Strategy reflecting recent international visits and activity has been circulated to Executive Ministers for consideration and comment and will be discussed at a forthcoming Executive Meeting.

St Patrick's Barracks, Ballymena

Mr Frew asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on a strategy for lands at St Patrick's Barracks, Ballymena.

(AQO 5261/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: We are working with the Department for Social Development and Ballymena Borough Council to develop strategic plans for the St Patrick's site. Interested stakeholders within the public sector have been identified and regular meetings are held with them to discuss progressing development of the site.

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

Rural Crime

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, in relation to cluster areas of rural crime where there have been multiple livestock and agricultural machinery theft, (i) whether any evidence has emerged of criminal gangs operating to order; and (ii) whether any links to the crimes in localised areas have been identified.

(AQW 29207/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): Responsibility for tackling crime, including rural crime, lies primarily with the PSNI and the Department of Justice. My Department does not hold the information you ask for.

I understand that the PSNI holds statistical and other information relating to crime.

Coastal Defences: Strangford

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what assessment has been made of the coastal defences in the Strangford constituency as a result of the recent tidal surges.

(AQW 29513/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The sea defences which protect Newtownards and Downpatrick were severely tested during the recent storms. Early indications are that the defences performed well and the Agency has already commenced a post-event inspection programme.

Coastal Defences: Strangford

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the additional resources he will make available for the repair and improvement of coastal defences in the Strangford constituency, particularly around the Ards Peninsula.

(AQW 29514/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Rivers Agency's responsibilities include the sea defences which protect Newtownards and Downpatrick and there is no doubt that these defences were severely tested during the recent storms.

I am pleased to advise that Rivers Agency's initial assessment suggests that these defences performed well and the Agency has already commenced a post-event inspection programme of its defences. The findings of these inspections will dictate whether additional resources will be required for repairs or improvement.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the level of progress her Department has made in eradicating Bovine TB in cattle.

(AQW 29524/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: TB herd incidence has fallen from its peak of 7.46% at 31 October 2012 to reach 6.48% at 30 November 2013. Whilst there has been slight fluctuation in the herd incidence level on 2 occasions during this period, there has been a 24.3% reduction in the number of animals removed as reactors in the 11 months ending 30 November 2013 when compared with the same period in the previous year, with a corresponding 13.5% reduction in the number of new herd breakdowns. In addition, since November 2012 there has been a downward trend in % animal incidence.

While this reduction is welcome, I am not complacent and it is my aim to achieve a sustained and progressive reduction towards the ultimate eradication of TB in cattle here.

Coastal Defences: Funding

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what funding is available for the strengthening of coastal defences; and what (i) capital; and (ii) resources are allocated to this task.

(AQW 29562/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Rivers Agency is responsible for some 26 km of designated coastal flood defences which are subject to a rolling programme of inspection and maintenance. River Agency's initial assessment following the recent events in early January suggests that these defences performed well. A more extensive inspection of these defences is underway. Should this inspection identify the need for works, these will be given appropriate priority from the Agency's total opening budget allocation of £24.5m for the coming financial year.

Single Farm Payments

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail (i) how farmers, who realise they had inadvertently claimed ineligible land in a field, can correct mistakes after submitting their Single Farm Payment claims; and (ii) who farmers should contact and the timeframe they have to rectify mistakes after submitting their forms.

(AQW 29572/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill:

- (i) If farmers have inadvertently claimed ineligible land, they can remove this at any time after the submission of their application, provided the Department has not already told them of an error with their application, or they have not been given notice that an on-the-spot check will be or has been carried out.

If the correction affects the Maximum Eligible Area of the field then the farmer should also complete a Land Parcel Identification System (LPIS) correction form to enable the Department to update the mapping system.

- (ii) To amend their Single Application Form (SAF), farmers should complete and return the SAF 3 (included in their Single Application packs) or put their request in writing to Single Farm Payment Branch in Orchard House. The LPIS correction form should be sent to their local DARD Direct Office.

Advice on amendments, corrections or withdrawals of single application forms is clearly set out in each year's Guide on how to complete the Single Application and Field Data Sheet. For 2014 applications, this Guide will be issued to claimants in mid-March 2014.

Flooding: Risk Management

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, further to the expiration of the Statement of Principles governing flood risk management, what consultation she has engaged in to ensure adequate insurance provisions are in place to provide for those affected by localised flooding.

(AQW 29592/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I, along with officials from my Department, have had regular contact with representatives of the Association of British Insurers (ABI), DEFRA Ministers and officials from Departments in England, Scotland and Wales on the replacement to the Statement of Principles on Flood Insurance. Specifically, I met with the ABI as far back as November 2012 to discuss options for a replacement for the Statement of Principles. I have written to DEFRA Ministers on a number of occasions, stressing the need to ensure that home insurance, including provision for flooding, remains available and affordable for all residents in the north of Ireland and that this is adequately reflected in any agreed solution. Senior officials from Rivers Agency have also worked closely with DEFRA on the potential options to replace the Statement of Principles, which were subject to public consultation last year. As insurance is a reserved matter, the new arrangements will also apply to the north of Ireland and are being brought onto the Statute book using the Water Bill in Westminster.

Farming: Arable Land

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the amount of acreage of land used for arable farming in (i) 1982; (ii) 1992; (iii) 2002; and (iv) 2012.

(AQW 29665/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Information on arable land use is collected by DARD as part of the annual June Agricultural and Horticultural Survey. The total arable area and summary information on the main activities for selected years is presented in Table 1 below.

Table 1: Area Under Arable Production (ha), 1982-2012

1982	1,039	2,727	48,632	567	13,252	1,292	6,655	74,164
1992	7,638	2,028	37,941	143	11,124	1,538	5,524	65,936
2002	7,235	2,351	28,455	56	6,708	1,519	6,323	52,647
2012	9,395	1,879	25,533	259	4,150	1,253	10,544	53,013

Source: June Agricultural and Horticultural Survey, selected years, DARD.

Note 1: Other Arable includes maize and arable forage crops, fruit, short rotation coppice willow and ornamental plants.

Single Farm Payments

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQO 5265/11-15, whether the delay in processing Single Farm Payments is a result of matching aerial photographs with existing field maps.

(AQW 29756/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Calculations of payments to approximately 3,000 Single Farm Payment claimants have not yet been completed for a range of reasons. They remain to be completed, not as a result of matching aerial photographs with existing field maps, but for a range of reasons including the need to update field maps in the light of inspection findings, the need to have bank details from claimants, the need to investigate claims greater than the maximum eligible area, the need for feedback from two parties where two businesses have claimed the same field and the need for the completion of probate or inheritance proceedings.

Wind Turbines

Mr Wilson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development on how many Forest Service sites will wind turbines be installed.

(AQO 5264/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Mr Speaker with your permission I will answer questions 2 and 8 together.

At the start of January 2014 a Wind Farm Development Manager joined Forest Service on secondment from the Strategic Investment Board. We know from market soundings, that there is likely to be strong interest in developing some of the potential forestry sites but at this stage it is premature to speculate about the number or location of the sites that will be developed.

As the main benefits from wind farm operations are felt by the wider economy it is only proper that local communities affected by schemes receive a more direct benefit from energy projects.

Hence what we on this side are anxious to do is protect local communities from the damaging effects of energy generation from whatever source and, where the public interest is clearly in favour of projects going ahead, to ensure local communities are adequately recompensed. For that reason I am keen to see Forest Service projects become a test bed for schemes that provide community benefits from wind farms. The new wind farm manager will be looking closely at the models that have already been developed in other jurisdictions.

In general terms I look for communities to benefit by becoming an active participant in projects from concept through to operation, as well as seeing material gains from jobs in construction and maintenance, in supplying hotel accommodation and other services; and in community benefits schemes producing monetary or "in-kind" benefits as payments for access and as recompense for disruption.

Single Farm Payments

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the percentage of Single Farm Payments made since 1 December 2013.

(AQO 5269/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: To date, 92% of Single Farm Payment claims have been finalised since the opening of the payment window on 1 December 2013. The Department set its highest payment target ever for December 2013 at 85% and significantly exceeded it by finalising 90% of claims. More farmers received their Single Farm Payment in December 2013 than ever before.

The value of Single Farm Payments made so far is £238.75 million and is a vital element of farm incomes. The improved payment performance this year is a welcome boost for the farming industry and the wider rural economy.

Wind Farms

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline the benefits of the proposed wind farms on Forest Service land to the local communities.

(AQO 5270/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: At the start of January 2014 a Wind Farm Development Manager joined Forest Service on secondment from the Strategic Investment Board. We know from market soundings, that there is likely to be strong interest in developing some of the potential forestry sites but at this stage it is premature to speculate about the number or location of the sites that will be developed.

As the main benefits from wind farm operations are felt by the wider economy it is only proper that local communities affected by schemes receive a more direct benefit from energy projects.

Hence what we on this side are anxious to do is protect local communities from the damaging effects of energy generation from whatever source and, where the public interest is clearly in favour of projects going ahead, to ensure local communities are adequately recompensed. For that reason I am keen to see Forest Service projects become a test bed for schemes that provide community benefits from wind farms. The new wind farm manager will be looking closely at the models that have already been developed in other jurisdictions.

Marine Research and Seafood Sector Low-carbon Road Map

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether she intends to participate in the consultation process, recently launched by her counterpart in the Republic of Ireland, on the preparation of a Marine Research and Seafood Sector Low Carbon Roadmap.

(AQO 5271/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department has not participated directly in the preliminary stakeholder consultation on the preparation of a Marine Research and Seafood Sector Low Carbon Roadmap launched by Minister Coveney on 5 December and which ended on Friday 27 December 2013.

The Department of the Environment is the lead Department for cross cutting climate change issues and, given the consultation was not exclusively fishing focused, but included coastal infrastructure and wider environmental issues, it would have been the appropriate department to consider input into the consultation.

My Department has provided input to the Climate Change Risk Assessments that have informed the DOE's soon to be published Climate Change Adaptation Programme which encompasses all sectors of the local economy including the marine environment.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development why she sought to transfer funds from the Pillar 1 to the Pillar 2 budget of the Common Agricultural Policy without the agreement of the Executive.

(AQO 5272/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The reform of the CAP and the development and delivery of the RDP are absolute core elements of my remit as Minister for Agriculture and Rural Development. These are key policy and operational roles for my Department.

I firmly believed that I am best placed to balance the numerous and often very complex issues which play into decisions on CAP funding. Taking account of legal advice, I believed that I had the authority to take this decision to transfer 7% of the Direct Payments funds. As Minister for Agriculture and Rural Development, I have dealt with all aspects of CAP reform for over 2½ years.

I had taken previous similar decisions, in particular the decision in 2012 not to apply an additional year of voluntary modulation, without any of these decisions being challenged. Indeed, my predecessor's decisions on the transfer of funds from direct payments to rural development were not challenged.

The Court held that the issue met the criterion of being significant or controversial and outside the Programme for Government. In fact, the judgement was that the issue was significant and controversial.

Rural Development Programme

Mr Cree asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the level of funding available for the next Rural Development Programme following the zero percent transfer rate from Pillar 1 to Pillar 2.

(AQO 5273/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The eventual shape and size of the Programme will ultimately depend on the resources that are available. The notification of a 0% transfer from Pillar 1 to Pillar 2 has the potential to reduce the scope and flexibility of the next Programme.

Funding for the Rural Development Programme is drawn from a number of sources. We know the amount of funding we already have allocated to us from Europe, which is approximately 227 million euro.

DARD also contributes to the Programme from its own budget. I am continuing to discuss with my officials how much money from DARD's own budget can be used to fund the Programme.

The onus is now on all of us in the Executive to come up to the mark and make available funds to bridge the deficit which will support the farming sector, enhance the environment and meet the needs of rural communities.

Aquaculture

Ms Ruane asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how she will progress the aquaculture industry.
(AQO 5274/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I have just written to Minister Rabbitte in the south suggesting we convene an All Island Aquaculture Shellfish Conference to look at issues of importance to the aquaculture sector. The Conference will look at research that is currently being undertaken on diseases affecting the shellfish sector, particularly the Oyster Herpes Virus and to identify what lessons can be learned to benefit the industry. The Conference will consider other issues of interest to the sector including licensing regimes, environmental issues, education and training, funding and marketing opportunities.

My Department continues to co-fund the Cross Border Aquaculture Initiative. This organisation provides a range of support services for the sustainable development of aquaculture and represents the interests of the aquaculture industry on a number of government lead groups. On 30 July 2013, our Bottom Grown Mussels received the prestigious Marine Stewardship Council certification. An Aquaculture Representative Group was established and I had a very positive meeting with representatives from the Group in November.

My Department also continues to provide EU funding for capital grant projects under the European Fisheries Fund Aquaculture Measure. To date, the aquaculture sector has received £1.02m. The Reformed Common Fisheries Policy aims to give a higher priority to promoting the sustainable development and to enhancing the competitiveness of EU aquaculture. This will help to underpin the recommendations of Going for Growth which is currently being taken forward.

EU Agriculture and Fisheries Council

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the December Fisheries Council.
(AQO 5275/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: This was a tough Council, we faced an initial proposal for a large 24% cut in the quota for Area VII prawns and I pressed hard for a sustainable quota that reflected the scientific advice and fishing patterns.

In spite of scientific advice that was only 8.4% less than last year, the Commission frustratingly sought a much larger reduction. I was successful in getting the cut down to 9% which is broadly in line with the scientific advice.

The Council result, across the range of our most important stocks in the Irish Sea and western waters, saw increases in Herring, Anglerfish, and Hake quotas, but with cuts in haddock, plaice and cod. I think this was a reasonable result given the Commission's initial proposals. The cut in the prawn quota can be mitigated over the year through banking of unused quota from 2013 and the use of the quota swap system. Finally, I was pleased that the Commission agreed to our argument for no changes to the number of days at sea that can be fished by the local fleet.

Rural White Paper

Ms McGahan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how she will progress the Rural White Paper.
(AQO 5276/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The Rural White Paper Action Plan is an Executive initiative aimed at improving the wellbeing of rural communities and contains commitments by all Departments across a wide range of rural issues and challenges.

I am pleased to report that good progress has been made by Departments in delivering their commitments in the Action Plan during its first year of operation since it was launched in June 2012. The first Annual Progress Report on the Rural White Paper Action Plan has now been published and is available on the DARD website.

I see the Rural White Paper Action Plan as a live initiative which continues to respond to the needs of rural dwellers and I intend to ask my Executive colleagues to identify within their Departments new and challenging actions for inclusion in a refreshed Action Plan during 2014.

I also propose looking at how complementary initiatives such as rural champion and rural proofing could help deliver benefits more effectively for our rural communities and I have asked my officials to explore potential options for taking forward this work.

Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure

Sports: Representation

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, in light of the recent report by the Independent Working Group Examining Boxing in Ulster, what plans her Department has to address barriers which prevent sports people from Northern Ireland from representing the UK at international events like the Olympics.

(AQW 29383/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): My Department is fully supportive of the principle that sports people from the north of Ireland can choose to represent either Britain, or Ireland, at International Events. My Department will support Sport NI in its collaborations with other sports councils to provide and enhance guidance to sports governing bodies operating in Britain and Ireland on their responsibilities under the Good Friday Agreement.

In addition, my Department, through Sport NI, provides support to local athletes to enable them to meet the performance standards necessary to qualify for international competition. However, athletes must also meet the required eligibility and selection criteria of the sports concerned. The criteria will vary across the sports and will be dependent on the affiliation structures within the sport, the rules and processes of their governing organisations, and the rules, eligibility and selection criteria applied by the competition organising committees.

Creative Industries

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for her assessment of the impact that increased funding for arts initiatives could have in stimulating the growth of the creative industries.

(AQO 5285/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Vibrant and creative places and initiatives play a vital role in helping creative ideas, entrepreneurs and businesses to emerge and flourish. The arts and cultural sector provides a crucial ecosystem which helps to develop knowledge, skills, training and networks that contribute to the development of the creative industries.

Many people will, for example, learn their craft in community and professional theatre and then move onto areas such as television, film, music and more broadly onto education and community development.

Derry's term as City of Culture has clearly demonstrated the transformative power of the cultural sector to support a confident, creative, informed and healthy society. Key events such as the CultureTECH festival and the Fab Lab initiative have raised international awareness of the city as a hub for innovation and the creative industries. Initiatives such as DCAL's Creative Learning Centre in Derry, and those elsewhere, are supporting digital and creative skills and inspiring the next generation of creative entrepreneurs and businesses.

My plans for City of Culture legacy will therefore support the economic potential to grow our creative industries and further develop the blend of skills around creativity and entrepreneurship needed in the global economy.

Our arts and cultural landscape can help more of our young people, and more people of all ages, backgrounds and abilities, to flourish. That is why I intend to make a bid to the Executive to support ongoing and new interventions which maximise City of Culture benefits and strengthen Derry and the North West as a regional driver for innovation and the creative industries.

Suicide Prevention

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline any plans to provide additional support for suicide prevention.

(AQO 5286/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department has made a significant contribution in promoting mental well-being and awareness of suicide prevention through Sport, the Arts and Libraries. This includes:

- The DCAL Strategy for Sport: 'Sport Matters' which is a key contributor to the DHSSPS Suicide Prevention Strategy, Protect Life.
- A commitment to pilot a programme of suicide awareness and prevention training in two areas or the north identified as having high levels of suicide.
- I have also provided funding of £500k per year, for the period 2012/13 to 2014/15 to the IFA for a Health Programme, part of which will address issues around suicide awareness.
- DCAL provided £42k through Sport NI to deliver an awareness programme to support the existing Public Health Agency campaign and carrying the "Minding Your Head" message.
- The Libraries NI Health in Mind programme, in partnership with mental health charities, provides positive mental health and wellbeing information.
- The Arts Council's Youth Arts Strategy includes a commitment to pilot a youth sector initiative aimed at young people at risk of poor mental health.

Re-imaging Communities Programme

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for her assessment of previous reimagining schemes for sectarian murals in the light of the creation of several new murals in recent months.

(AQO 5287/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The previous Re-imaging Communities Programme invested over £3.3million in 155 community projects across the north of Ireland. The programme, rooted in A Shared Future, brought together key statutory bodies and departments and delivered an integrated and co-ordinated approach to addressing the issues of flags, emblems and sectional symbols in the north of Ireland. While it is always disappointing to learn of the creation of new sectarian murals, the Re-Imaging Communities evaluation concluded that the programme has been a considerable success both in relation to its own aims and objectives and also in relation to the wider context of inter-group relations across the north of Ireland. In addition, the report highlighted significant benefits to communities including increased community cohesion through strengthening relationships, the development of links between communities and Councils and an increased willingness for individuals and communities to dissociate from division and hostility.

The new "Building Peace Through the Arts – Re-Imaging Communities Programme" is currently underway after its launch in April 2013.

iPads: Pilot Scheme

Mr G Kelly asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on how the pilot scheme for iPads for deprived areas will be developed, including which areas will benefit.

(AQO 5288/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: During this financial year my Department is providing start-up support to pilot community initiatives across Belfast to highlight the benefit of mobile technologies in supporting formal and informal education and learning, as well as health and wellbeing initiatives.

It builds on the work of the DCAL supported Creative Learning Centres and their programmes for schools and young people in the use of new creative digital technologies. This work has a core remit of providing support to those from disadvantaged areas and backgrounds.

Although the initial focus is finalising on approximately four or five initiatives across Greater Belfast, I hope that the outcomes and positive impact of these pilot projects can lead to an expanded scheme across the region.

Arts: West Tyrone

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline the level and extent of her Department's financial assistance towards promoting the Arts in West Tyrone in the last 3 years.

(AQO 5289/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The level and extent of my Department's financial assistance towards promoting the arts in West Tyrone in the last three years is as follows:

- The Arts Council provided a total of £57,850 to arts projects, examples include funding towards public art for the new acute hospital for the South West and the purchase of musical instruments and new arts equipment for arts venues;
- The Arts Council provided funding of £10,000 towards the Fleadh Uladh which took place in Dromore Co. Tyrone from 20 to 29 July 2013.
- NI Screen provided funding of £73,075 to schools in West Tyrone for children to participate in after school FILMCLUBs. This figure includes funding for a short film production.
- My Department provided funding of £0.5m towards the Tyrone GAA Centre of Participation at Garvaghy in 2013. The centre includes a range of sporting, culture and arts facilities including a 200 seat auditorium and Irish language facilities.
- Community Festivals funding of £73,700 was made available to the area. Of which, £41,100 was allocated to Omagh District Council and £32,600 was allocated to Strabane District Council.

Boxing: Funding

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, following findings by the Independent Working Group that concluded that Sandy Row Amateur Boxing Club was discriminated against, whether she will review the grants to local boxing authorities.

(AQO 5290/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I have no plans to review the grants to local boxing authorities.

The Independent Working Group made twelve recommendations in its report and DCAL and Sport NI will be available to provide practical support to the Irish Amateur Boxing Association (IABA) as they take forward their considerations of these recommendations.

The current funding being provided to the IABA through the Boxing Investment Programme is to procure and supply boxing equipment, and to carry out technical surveys for facility improvements to eligible clubs across the north of Ireland.

The conditions of this grant include an equity clause to ensure that the facilities and premises assisted by the grant are used in an inclusive manner which will both aspire to and promote good relations. This has been accepted by the IABA.

C S Lewis Festival

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what plans her Department has to further develop the C.S. Lewis Festival, organised by the East Belfast Partnership, following a successful first year.

(AQO 5291/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am aware of the highly successful, inaugural CS Lewis Festival which took place from 18-23 November 2013 to mark the 50th anniversary of his death and celebrate the life of one of the most talented authors in the world. I congratulate the East Belfast Partnership on the festival's success and it is important that this momentum is not lost.

I am committed to supporting the arts in East Belfast and my Department has assisted with funding in this financial year for the development of an arts strategy for the area. One way I can help develop the C.S Lewis Festival and the arts sector in East Belfast is to continue to provide support to implement the strategy which will help create a vibrant, creative and inclusive part of Belfast with thriving arts and creative industries.

I believe a CS Lewis legacy would be an appropriate and integral part of this vision, providing a platform to commemorate the life of this renowned author, theologian and academic who has brought our city international acclaim.

Department of Education

Childcare: Foyle

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Education to outline the number of applications for childcare places made in the Foyle constituency in the last twelve months, broken down by provider; and the number of applications refused due to lack of spaces.

(AQW 29239/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): The Department of Education does not provide childcare. Its Pre-School Education Programme provides funded pre-school education places to children in the year immediately before they start compulsory education.

Admission to pre-school is preference based and parents are encouraged to list a number of preferences as it is not always possible to accommodate everyone's first choice. At the end of the 2013/14 admissions process, 99.9% of all children whose parents engaged fully with the process were placed with over 85% placed in their first preference setting.

All children in the Foyle constituency, whose parents engaged fully with the process, were placed. The Pre-School Education Advisory Group in the Western Education and Library Board will continue to ensure that sufficient provision is available in the area to meet demand.

The table below shows the number of funded pre-school education places available in each setting in the Foyle constituency and the number of first preference applications received by each setting for admissions in 2013/14.

Sure Start

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education what percentage of children attended a Sure Start programme in each of the last five years; and how much was spent on Sure Start in each year.

(AQW 29283/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Sure Start is a programme targeted at parents and children under the age of 4 living in the top 20% most disadvantaged wards in the north.

DE delivers the Sure Start programme through the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB), which has operational responsibility for the delivery of Sure Start. During 2012/13 HSCB developed and implemented a Sure Start database (Sure Start Play) funded by DE, to ensure future effective monitoring of activity within Sure Start projects from 2012/13 onwards.

Information on how many children were registered until the establishment of the database is not held centrally by DE or the HSCB and will have been collated in different ways by the various projects.

In respect of 2013/14 there are 127,324 children aged 0-4 living in the north of Ireland (Source NISRA 2012 Mid Years Population Estimates). 27% of those children (34191) are registered with Sure Start projects.

The budget for the Sure Start programme over the past 5 years was:

	2008/09	2009/10	2010/11	2011/12	2012/13
Sure Start budget (£m)	17.561	20.666	21.935	21.600	22.352

Teachers: Retirees Re-employed

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Education how many retired teachers have been re-employed as teachers since January 2013. (AQW 29392/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department does not publish data in the format requested. However a comprehensive analysis of provision of substitute cover by retired teachers is contained in the statistical press release "Teacher Workforce Statistics In Grant Aided Schools In Northern Ireland 2012/13", published by the Statistics and Research Team on the Department's website. This can be found at www.deni.gov.uk/workforce\_stats\_press\_release\_for\_web-3.pdf.

Table 20 in the document indicates for example that the total number of days worked by retired teachers providing substitute cover was 26,831 in the 2012/13 financial year.

The Department continues to advise employers that retired teachers should only be reemployed to provide short-term cover where newly qualified teachers or experienced non-retired teachers are unavailable.

Schools: Defibrillators

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Education for an update on the work of the Education and Library Board's and British Heart Foundation's Inter-Board Working Group on defibrillators; and whether an approved product has been identified for use in schools. (AQW 29447/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I am aware that the Education and Library Boards and CCMS established an Inter-Board/CCMS working group (the Group) to consider and address the increased volume of queries from schools on the use of automatic external defibrillators (AEDs).

The Group is currently taking forward work to:

- draw up an AED specification and commence a public procurement competition;
- draw up an AED training specification and issue tender documentation;
- develop AED "safe-use" guidelines for schools.

I am pleased to advise that the ELBs have confirmed that draft school guidelines have been developed. In addition, work is at an advanced stage regarding the development of an AED training pack for schools.

The Group is also working to develop a specification for the AED and to progress the AED procurement process in line with the statutory requirements under European Union procurement regulations.

Schools: Defibrillators

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Education what action he is taking to ensure that each school has a defibrillator and adequately trained staff to use the equipment. (AQW 29448/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The decision on the part of a school to acquire a defibrillator and train staff in its use is a matter for each school individually. The health and safety of pupils and staff is the responsibility of the school management, accountable in the first instance to the Board of Governors. I have no plans to place any requirement upon schools in this regard.

However, I would refer the Member to my answer to the recent Written Assembly Question (29447/11-15) which details the current work of the joint Education and Library Board/CCMS working group on the use of automated external defibrillators in schools in this regard.

Integrated Education

Mr Lytle asked the Minister of Education how his Department has discharged its statutory duty to encourage and facilitate the growth of integrated education further to the enactment of Article 69(1) of the Education Reform (NI) Order 1989. (AQW 29517/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Firstly, I should clarify that the statutory duty (placed on the Department of Education) to encourage and facilitate the development of integrated education sits within Article 64 of the Education Reform (NI) Order 1989.

I take the Department of Education's statutory duty to encourage and facilitate the development of integrated education (that is to say, the education together, at school, of Protestant and Roman Catholic pupils), very seriously.

The integrated sector continues to grow. In 2011, the schools' census indicated that there were 21,170 pupils attending 42 primary, and 20 post-primary integrated schools here. This has increased to 21,301 pupils according to the 2012 census figures.

To help discharge the statutory duty, my Department provides funding to the Council for Integrated Education (NICIE) to assist with the encouragement and promotion of integrated education. A budget of £646k has been allocated for 2013/14.

In addition, DE also provides funding to help schools with the process of transformation to integrated status. This assists schools in the initial stages of the transformation process, and with the employment of a teacher from the minority community in the school to assist with religious education. The budget available for 2013/14 is £185k.

I recognise the vital and valuable contribution that the integrated sector, together with all sectors of education, makes to building a peaceful and stable future for our children.

Going forward, the Department of Education will ensure that it continues to have a rigorous approach to its duty to integrated education.

Educational Psychologists: South Eastern Education and Library Board

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to detail the (i) longest; and (ii) average waiting time between a pupil being referred to an educational psychologist and having their first appointment, since June 2013, in the South Eastern Education and Library Board Area.

(AQW 29548/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The South Eastern Education and Library Board has confirmed that the longest and the average waiting time between a pupil being referred to an educational psychologist and having their first appointment, during the period 3 June 2013 to 31 December 2013, is as follows:

Longest Waiting Time – 298 days*

Average Waiting Time – 116 days

*In some cases, such as very young pre-school children already in receipt of ongoing developmental and therapeutic support, it is accepted good practice to carry out the educational psychology assessment after the child has had this support so that the child's response to intervention can be taken into account as part of a comprehensive special educational needs assessment.

Kirkinriola Primary School

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education, in relation to the present round of reconstituting of Boards of Governors, whether his Department intends to again appoint (i) three governors to Kirkinriola Primary School; (ii) the chair of the Board of Governors; and, if so, what are the respective timescales, given that the Governors are presently without a chair.

(AQW 29577/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Currently there are two additional DE appointed governors serving Kirkinriola Primary School. As part of the reconstitution of school Boards of Governors the Department intends to:

- (i) continue with the appointment of two additional governors to Kirkinriola Primary School; and
- (ii) review the need for a DE appointed Chair in consultation with the North Eastern Education and Library Board, in accordance with statutory requirements. The reconstitution process normally takes 12 to 18 months to complete but every effort is being made to expedite the process for Kirkinriola Primary School. When a vacancy occurs in the office of Chair or when the Chair is absent, the voting members can elect one of their number who is not a member of staff to act as Chair.

Kirkinriola Primary School

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education whether his Department has approved the action plan for Kirkinriola Primary School, arising from its intervention status; and, if not, what is the likely timescale for approval.

(AQW 29578/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The actions plans submitted by the school in March 2013 were cleared by the Education and Training Inspectorate (ETI) in April 2013 and the school was notified accordingly on 29 April 2013.

A revised action plan relating to Strategic Leadership was forwarded to the Department on 22 November 2013. This action plan has also been seen by the ETI and the Department wrote to the school on 8 January 2014 to acknowledge the response that the school has made, and plans to make, regarding this area for improvement.

Kirkinriola Primary School

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education why there has been a delay in the appointment of a leadership mentor in Kirkinriola Primary School.

(AQW 29579/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Kirkinriola Primary School had a follow-up inspection in November 2012 and the current post-inspection action plan on strategic leadership includes a specific action to provide a leadership mentor. However, this action plan could not be agreed ahead of the school principal's return to work in August 2013 following a long-term absence.

From August 2013 a number of meetings took place between the principal and the North Education and Library Board's Curriculum Advisory Support Service (CASS) link officer to address issues within the action plan including the mentoring programme. The final action plan was agreed by the school's board of governors and forwarded to the Department on 22 November 2013. The Department has since written to the school to acknowledge the response that the school has made, and plans to make, regarding the key areas for improvement in strategic leadership.

The NEELB has advised that the mentoring programme has commenced and the first meeting took place on 18 December 2013.

Schools: Community Relations, Equality and Diversity Enhancement Scheme

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Education what was the total funding awarded to schools through the Community Relations, Equality and Diversity Enhancement Scheme in (i) 2012/13; and (ii) 2013/14.

(AQW 29597/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I can confirm that the total funding awarded to schools through the Community Relations, Equality and Diversity (CRED) Enhancement Scheme was £221,995 in 2012/13. It is estimated that approximately £213,225 will be awarded in 2013/14.

Catholic Primary Schools: South Belfast

Mr Maskey asked the Minister of Education to detail the projected intake to Catholic Primary Schools in the South Belfast Constituency for the next academic year; and what provisions will be put in place for potential over subscription of these schools.

(AQW 29617/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The process for consideration of applications for admission to primary schools in September 2014 has only just begun with the closing date of Friday 10 January for receipt of applications from parents by schools. It will therefore be some time before the extent of oversubscription, (if any) in a particular area is known. The Education and Library Boards and the Department will work with schools in the period up to 30 April 2014, when letters issue advising parents of the primary school to which their child has been placed (or not), to ensure as far as possible that all pupils are placed in accordance with parental choice.

I am committed to ensuring that all children are placed in a school within their preferred educational sector that is within reasonable travelling distance of their home address. Where necessary the Department will consider an application from a school for a temporary one-year increase of its admissions number to cater for a genuine demographic pressure in its area.

The longer term availability of primary school places in particular areas is being addressed through the area planning process.

Schools: Enrolment

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education whether a parent is compelled to comply with the choice of school for a child as directed by the Education and Library Board.

(AQW 29637/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Education and Library Boards support parents in finding a school for their child both during, and after, the open enrolment processes (which place children in a school). If a child's preferences have been exhausted, the Education and Library Board will supply the parents with a list of alternative schools with places available and ask them to make a further school selection.

If at the end of the process a child remains unplaced, their parents are advised to identify a preference for one of the schools with places available in order to ensure that their child will be placed in time for the beginning of the school term. Details of children un-placed and not attending school after the start of the school year are forwarded to the Education Welfare Service, as it then becomes an attendance issue. An Education Welfare Officer will contact the family and offer advice and support to enable the family to reach a decision.

Home Tuition

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to outline the circumstances that home tuition, provided by qualified teachers, is legally permissible as an alternative to school tuition.

(AQW 29638/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Home tuition is not an alternative to full-time school attendance. It can reduce the impact of a disruption upon a child's education but cannot provide the same breadth and quality of learning that school attendance would provide.

Education and Library Boards (ELBs) operate their Home Tuition services as part of their responsibility under Article 86 of the Education (NI) Order 1998, to provide 'education otherwise than at school' (EOTAS) for 'those children of compulsory school age who by reason of illness, expulsion or suspension from school or otherwise, may not for any period receive suitable education unless such arrangements are made for them'.

Within the range of EOTAS services ELBs provide, home tuition is most frequently offered to support pupils recuperating from a long illness, enabling them to keep in touch with learning until they return to school. Its provision is normally limited to a few hours per week and should be supplemented with additional support from the child's registered school.

St Patrick's Primary School, Dungannon

Ms McGahan asked the Minister of Education, in relation to the extension for pre school places granted to St. Patrick's Primary School, Killyman Road, Dungannon, whether he will consider making this dispensation permanent, or guarantee that it will be extended into the next school year.

(AQW 29648/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: In order to fulfil the Executive's Programme for Government commitment of ensuring that at least one year of pre-school education is available to every family that wants it, the Department of Education approved a temporary increase to the enrolment number of the nursery unit of St Patrick's Primary School, Dungannon for the 2013/14 school year only to accommodate evidenced exceptional need in the Dungannon area.

On 2 September 2013, the Southern Education and Library Board (SELB) published Development Proposal (DP) No. 294, which proposes the establishment of an additional full-time nursery unit at St Patrick's Primary School, Dungannon. The statutory two-month objection period ended on 4 November 2013.

DE officials are in the process of preparing advice for my consideration and I anticipate being in a position to make a decision on the proposal in the near future.

Schools: Transport

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Education whether a full feasibility study concerning the provision of free public transport for all school pupils will be carried out within the review of the home-to-school transport policy, launched by his Department in December 2013; and if so, whether this will be undertaken in consultation with the Department for Regional Development.

Mr O'Dowd: As outlined in my reply to you in AQW 23442/11-15 which was published in the Official Report on 24 May 2013, the feasibility of providing free public transport for all school pupils will be considered as part of a wider Review of Home to School Transport policy. The Review was launched on 2 December 2013.

As part of the terms of reference for the Review, I asked the Panel to consider the option of providing free public transport to all school pupils. Given the independent nature of the Panel, it would be inappropriate for me to dictate how the Review is conducted and, therefore, it is wholly a matter for the Panel to determine what actions they feel are necessary in order to fulfil the Terms of Reference of the Review.

The Panel is due to report its recommendations to me by the end of August 2014.

Education Bill

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Education to outline the reasons for the delay in bringing forward the next stage of the Education Bill.

(AQO 5298/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Bill completed its Committee Stage on 8 April, 2013. The Bill cannot advance to Consideration Stage without the agreement of the Executive. This remains outstanding.

Post-primary Provision: Craigavon

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Education for an update on reorganisation of controlled post-primary provision in the Craigavon area.

(AQO 5299/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: At the outset I want to make clear that it is the responsibility of the relevant managing authorities to determine the most appropriate structure of education provision for children living in their area.

The SELB issued consultation questionnaires during the last week of November 2013 to parents, governors and staff of all controlled post primary schools and designated contributory primary schools in the Craigavon two-tier system. The deadline for return of completed questionnaires is 27 January 2014.

The SELB advise that an analysis of the responses to the consultation will be presented to the Board at its meeting on 12 February 2014. A decision will then be taken on progression of development proposals for any changes proposed.

Education Bill

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Education for an update on the progress of the Education Bill.

(AQO 5300/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Bill completed its Committee Stage on 8 April, 2013. The Bill cannot advance to Consideration Stage without the agreement of the Executive. This remains outstanding.

Special Educational Needs: Assessments

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Education to outline the average waiting time for an assessment for Special Educational Needs in each Education and Library Board area.

(AQO 5301/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Legislation requires an Education and Library Board to complete a statutory assessment of a child's special educational needs in no more than 26 weeks, allowing for valid exceptions. This period of time allows for a detailed assessment to be undertaken with input commissioned from the pupil's parents or guardians and a range of educational and health professionals if appropriate.

The Boards have advised that the average number of weeks taken for completing a statutory assessment and finalising a statement of special education needs in the academic year 2012/13, allowing for valid exceptions, is as follows:-

Belfast Education and Library Board	21 weeks
North Eastern Education and Library Board	20 weeks
South Eastern Education and Library Board	24 weeks
Southern Education and Library Board	22 weeks
Western Education and Library Board	22 weeks

Free School Meals

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Education to outline the options his Department has considered in determining future eligibility for Free School Meals under Universal Credit.

(AQO 5302/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: If the Welfare Reform Bill as currently drafted progresses through the Assembly, it is intended that Universal Credit (UC) will be introduced here on a phased basis during 2014.

It is proposed that Universal Credit will replace a number of existing social welfare benefits which are used to determine eligibility for free school meals and uniform grants. Therefore, it has been necessary to identify alternative options for free school meal eligibility criteria under Universal Credit.

In developing these options my priority is to ensure that children from lower income households do not lose out following the introduction of Universal Credit here.

The potential options which I am considering in this regard are based on an applicant being in receipt of Universal Credit combined with various household income thresholds.

I am also considering options for transitional protection based on the provision of such protection for various time periods.

I consider that the options currently under development will ensure that free school meals, as a key passported benefit, continue to provide support to those families who are most in need.

Subject to progress with the Welfare Reform Bill it is my intention to consult on these options in due course.

East Belfast and South Belfast Corridor

Mr Douglas asked the Minister of Education for an update on the development proposals for the East and South Belfast corridor.

(AQO 5303/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I reported my decisions on the six development proposals for the East and South Belfast corridor to the Assembly this morning. A copy of my statement has been provided to all Members.

I want to emphasise that I see these decisions as very much the first phase of the reshaping of provision in the area. They do not rule out further changes or further development proposals being published.

My officials will be meeting both Boards to discuss the detail of how they will progress my priorities for the next phase of development in this area. I want this done as a matter of urgency to ensure that there are adequate places, in the right schools, to meet future demand.

Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development: Education Report

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Education what actions he proposes to take in light of the recent Organisation for Economic Co-Operation and Development report on the local education system.

(AQO 5304/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: In November 2012, I announced that we would participate in an OECD review of evaluation and assessment frameworks for improving school outcomes. I felt that we could learn from the experience of others and drive improvements in educational outcomes.

I welcome the publication of the OECD Report on Evaluation and Assessment in Education; it is a detailed and comprehensive report, which outlines a number of strengths and challenges in our system.

I, along with other education stakeholders, will be giving careful consideration to this report along with the recently published results from the Programme for International Assessment (PISA) 2012 Study.

International benchmarking of our education system in this way provides valuable evidence which helps to inform the development of education policies in line with my Ministerial priorities.

I intend making a formal statement in due course, on evaluation and assessment, which will include a strategic response to this report and an outline of the future of GCSE and A-Level qualifications here. The statement will set the future direction for qualifications and assessment in the north.

I shall continue to encourage stakeholders to examine the report, and my Department has arranged for a workshop at which one of the authors will be making a presentation and facilitating discussion of the report's findings.

Common Funding Formula

Mr Cree asked the Minister of Education to outline the outcome of the consultation on proposed changes to the Common Funding Formula.

(AQO 5305/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The changes to the Common Funding Scheme (CFS) remain on track for delivery for the new financial year. At the closing date of 25 October, nearly 15,000 consultation responses were received to the main consultation, evidence of real engagement.

A full analysis of those responses is currently underway and I will give careful consideration to the views of all those who responded before making my final decisions. And I will arrange for a consultation summary to be published on the DE website, shared with the Education Committee and placed in the Assembly Library in due course.

Department for Employment and Learning

Gifts and Hospitality

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many entries his Special Adviser has made in the Department's Register of Gifts and Hospitality since being appointed; and what is the total value of such entries.

(AQW 29010/11-15)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): In the years 2011/12, 2012/13 and 2013/14 to date, my Special Advisers made ten, four and three entries respectively in the Department's Register of Gifts and Hospitality; all entries related to hospitality. The estimate value of all entries was £260, £125 and £115 by year. The estimated value of hospitality accepted was £175, £125 and £115. All hospitality received was in the course of accompanying me on official business.

October Monitoring Round

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the projects he submitted for funding allocation in the October Monitoring Round 2013.

(AQW 29211/11-15)

Dr Farry: No projects were submitted by the Department for additional funding in the October Monitoring Round.

October Monitoring Round

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the departmental projects that were awarded funding in the October Monitoring Round 2013.

(AQW 29212/11-15)

Dr Farry: As the department did not submit any bids for additional funding, no projects were awarded funding in the October Monitoring Round.

Armed Forces Veterans

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the opportunities his Department has made available to Armed Forces Veterans injured in combat over the past 3 years.

(AQW 29356/11-15)

Dr Farry: My Department has adopted the Higher Education Scholarship, which was introduced by the coalition Government in October 2010 from academic year 2011/2012. The aim of the scheme is to give the children of those killed in the service of their country a head start in life by giving them the opportunity to gain a higher education qualification. The scheme will be open to all children for whom the deceased person had legal parental responsibility at the time of death, and biological children born within the 10 months after the death. The scheme is to include those bereaved since 0001 hours on 1 January 1990 and is available in the UK only. The scholarship in Northern Ireland will be set at £7,325 for academic year 2013/2014; this is based on, but not tied to, the sum of tuition fees and maintenance loan.

In cooperation with the Ministry of Defence, my Department will also be introducing the Further and Higher Education Commitment Scheme in Northern Ireland. The Scheme will pay the tuition fees of service leavers who are resident in Northern Ireland when they are studying for a first full level 3 qualification, a first undergraduate or foundation degree, or a first HNC or HND.

My Department is also in discussions with the Ministry of Defence in regard to implementing the Enhanced Learning Credit Scheme in Northern Ireland. The Scheme will give financial help to qualifying service leavers with up to three payments towards the cost of 'higher level learning', namely achieving a qualification at level 3 or above such as an NVQ 3, A-level, HNC, foundation or ordinary degree or equivalent qualification.

Through its Disability Employment Service, my Department provides a range of programmes and services aimed at helping people with disabilities progress towards, move into, and sustain employment. This includes: specialist pre-employment support to help build confidence and prepare the person for work; financial assistance to purchase special aids and equipment; and longer term support to assist with travel to work and other in-work provision to both the disabled employee and their employer, as necessary. Similar measures are also in place to support persons with disabilities who participate in the Department's training programmes, ApprenticeshipsNI and Training for Success.

Third Sector Organisations: Funding

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail (i) all third sector organisations funded by the Department who provide services to the public; and (ii) the value of each contract.

(AQW 29411/11-15)

Dr Farry: The Department for Employment and Learning has contracted with the following third sector organisations on ten contracts as outlined in the table below.

University of Ulster: New Site

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether any attempts have been made to change the planning condition, that 168 cycle parking spaces be provided at the new University of Ulster site and if so why.
(AQW 29508/11-15)

Dr Farry: The University of Ulster is an independent body and issues relating to planning permission for the new University of Ulster site are a matter for the University and the planning authority. I have therefore asked Departmental officials to refer your question to the University of Ulster requesting that they respond to you directly on this matter.

Training Organisations: Registration

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline what steps a company should take to establish themselves as a Registered Training Organisation.
(AQW 29683/11-15)

Dr Farry: My Department's procurement of programmes and services is subject to public tendering processes advertised through the Department of Finance and Personnel's Central Procurement Directorate.

In order to be considered suitable to deliver tendered programmes on behalf of the Department, an organisation or company has to meet specific selection criteria, for example; show that it has suitable premises for the delivery of training; hold Awarding Body approval to deliver qualifications; have staff that are appropriately qualified; and display a proven track record in delivering training programmes. Criteria are set out in the related project tender documentation.

Central Procurement Directorate publishes a range of Guidance Notes which aims to increase knowledge and understanding of public sector procurement and so support the development of capability to compete successfully for public sector contracts. These guidance notes are available through the Central Procurement Directorate website - <http://www.dfpni.gov.uk/index.htm>.

Awarding Bodies are best placed to offer advice on how to become an Accredited Centre for qualifications.

Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment

Space Industry

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to quantify the value, and potential value, of the space industry to the local economy; and what her Department is doing to support the sector.
(AQW 29432/11-15)

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): Invest NI recently completed a survey that indicated that there were approximately twenty companies engaged in the space sector generating revenue of £27.5 million per annum.

The space sector is an emerging sector with projections indicating a global space sector to be worth £400 billion by 2030. The UK Space Agency has set a 10% global market share for the UK space industry.

My Department, through Invest Northern Ireland, is working on a number of initiatives with this sector, evidenced by the recent investment by European Space Propulsion and a number of space sector workshops.

Tourism: Accommodation

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of (i) bed and breakfasts and beds; (ii) hotels and hotel beds; (iii) caravan spaces; and (iv) camp sites spaces, (a) in 1993; (b) 2003; and (c) for the most recent year available.

(AQW 29433/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The information requested is as follows:

Category:	Year:	(a) 1993	(b) 2003	(c) 2013
(i) Bed & Breakfasts	No:	660	709	584
	Beds:	7487	8166	4982
(ii) Hotels	No:	124	128	138
	Beds:	7085	13218	17657

Please note data from 1993 is limited and records do not show the exact month when these figures were collated. Figures for 2003 and 2013 are from December 2003 and December 2013.

Data for Caravan spaces; and Camp Site spaces is not held by my Department or The Northern Ireland Tourist Board. Local Authorities are responsible for the licensing of these sites.

Economy

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, following the report in the Belfast Telegraph on 19 December 2013 titled 'Red tape burden to be reviewed', to detail (i) the agreement between the Executive and Westminster on measures to build a stronger economy; and (ii) the documents in her possession relating to this agreement.

(AQW 29552/11-15)

Mrs Foster: HM Government and the Northern Ireland Executive launched 'Building a Prosperous and United Community', the NI Economic Pact, on 14 June 2013. The Pact demonstrates the Government and Executive's shared commitment to help Northern Ireland fulfil its economic potential and ensure lasting peace and prosperity.

It sets out a wide range of measures to help rebalance the Northern Ireland economy and drive investment, jobs and growth. It also underpins efforts to tackle community divisions and build a shared future for everyone in Northern Ireland.

An update on progress on commitments contained within the package was published by the UK Government and the Executive on 10 October 2013.

Wind Turbines

Mr McClarty asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail any subsidies provided for wind turbines, during and after their construction, since 2003.

(AQW 29621/11-15)

Mrs Foster: No subsidies are provided before or during the construction of wind turbines by my Department. Wind turbines and other renewable electricity technologies only receive support once they accredit under the Northern Ireland Renewables Obligation (NIRO) and start generating electricity.

NIRO support is provided in the form of Renewables Obligation Certificates (ROCs) issued to generators by Ofgem. As the NIRO is a market-based support mechanism, the actual value of a ROC to a generator will depend on the supply and demand for ROCs during a given obligation period, and the individual arrangements reached between generators and the supplier or other person to whom they sell their ROCs. Table 1 sets out the approximate value of ROCs issued in each financial year since the NIRO's introduction in 2005.

Year	ROCs issued*	ROC value (buyout price plus 10%)	Total
2005-06	253,889	£35.56	£9,028,293
2006-07	320,706	£36.56	£11,725,011
2007-08	404,996	£37.73	£15,280,499

Wind Turbines

Mr McClarty asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail Northern Ireland's EU renewable energy target; and for an update on how this target is being met through the use of wind turbines.

(AQW 29623/11-15)

Mrs Foster: In 2009, the EU set renewable energy targets for Member States. The UK target is for 15% of energy (i.e. electricity, heat and transport) consumption to come from renewable sources by 2020. Devolved Administrations each took action to contribute to the overall UK target.

The Strategic Energy Framework, agreed by the Executive in 2010, set targets of 40% of electricity consumption to come from renewable sources by 2020.

In the rolling twelve month period to the end of November 2013, approximately 16% of electricity consumption was from renewable energy sources of which 93% came from onshore wind.

Energy Efficiency Directive

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the process of transposing the Energy Efficiency Directive; and to outline the requirements that have yet to be completed.

(AQW 29653/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The majority of the Energy Efficiency Directive (EED) must be transposed by 5 June 2014. Transposition will be mainly through a UK-wide statutory instrument that is being developed by the Department of Energy and Climate Change (DECC).

Articles 9-11 (Energy Billing and Metering) and Article 15 (Energy transformation, transmission and distribution) will be transposed separately in Northern Ireland.

Article 15 will be consulted on in February 2014. DETI will lay secondary regulations in the Northern Ireland Assembly in due course to transpose Articles 9-11 and 15.

Invest NI: Grant Aid

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the amount paid to the twenty largest recipients of grant aid from InvestNI, in the last six years.

(AQW 29668/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The amount paid to the twenty largest recipients of grant aid by Invest NI during the last six financial years (2007-08 to 2012-13) was £220million.

InterTradeIreland: Budget

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail any budget reductions to InterTradeIreland proposed by her Department.

(AQW 29669/11-15)

Mrs Foster: My Department is co-sponsor department for InterTradeIreland in conjunction with the Department of Jobs, Enterprise and Innovation in Ireland. However, the Department of Finance and Personnel in Northern Ireland and the Department of Public Expenditure and Reform in the Republic of Ireland are responsible for providing sponsor departments and North South Bodies with business planning and budget guidance on the preparation and submission of 2014-2016 Corporate Plans and 2014 Business Plans.

The guidance includes a requirement for further minimum cash releasing efficiency savings of 4% in 2014 cumulating to 12% in 2016. The baseline for these efficiency savings is the 2013 agreed budget for InterTradeIreland.

Broadband

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the procurement of Basic and Superfast Broadband Services; and when the tender will be announced.

(AQW 29744/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The procurement for the Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement Project has concluded and the tender response is being carefully evaluated to ensure that best value for money is achieved. Assuming that the evaluation is satisfactory and, pending necessary approvals, it is anticipated that a contract will be awarded in the coming weeks with implementation commencing immediately thereafter and ending in 2015.

Department of the Environment

Northern Ireland Environment Agency: Complaints Handling

Mr Irwin asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the public complaints handling and record keeping procedure used by the Northern Ireland Environment Agency in relation to industrial noise, odours and pollution.

(AQW 29063/11-15)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): The Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) regulates noise, odour and pollution from industrial installations permitted under the Pollution Prevention Control (PPC) Regulations (Northern Ireland), and investigates reports of water pollution and discharges to waterways and underground strata under the Water (Northern Ireland) Order 1999.

Complaints relating to industrial installations regulated under PPC are dealt with by the Industrial Pollution & Radiochemical Inspectorate (IPRI), who aim to respond to the complainant within 1 working day. The complaint investigation will include a site investigation where required, and details are recorded in the IPRI database. The complaint details and any actions taken to resolve the complaint are reviewed by line management before the complaint can be closed. IPRI's internal target is to respond to 85% of complaints within 1 working day, and since April 2013, they have responded to 95% within that timescale.

The NIEA Water Management Unit, operates on a 24-hour, 365 days-a-year basis, to co-ordinate the Agency's response to reported incidents of water pollution and promotes use of the 24-hour Water Pollution Hotline (0800 80 70 60) for incident reporting. A graduated response is used to prioritise incident investigation and targets are in place to investigate reported incidents of water pollution in a timely manner. Details of all stages of the investigation are recorded on PIMS (Pollution Incident Management System), which tracks the progress of all investigations.

A record of all information relating to complaints is retained for a minimum of five years.

Taxis: Wheelchair Users

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 28439/11-15, (i) whether wheelchair users are provided with an accessible 7-seater private hire taxi when booking and standard private hire taxis are not deployed in these instances; and in these instances; (ii) if standard taxis are deployed whether they charge the standard or an enhanced fare; and (iii) if standard taxis are not deployed, is this a breach of the Disability Discrimination Act by only offering one type of taxi at an enhanced fare to wheelchair users.

(AQW 29126/11-15)

Mr Durkan:

- (i) The provision of taxi vehicles by operators is a matter for each individual operator to determine according to the needs of the particular consumer. It is worth noting that early indications from a consultant's report prepared for the Department are that not all wheelchair users wish to travel in a large wheelchair accessible taxi, but that some prefer to travel in a saloon car with the wheelchair stowed in the boot. It is likely, therefore, that in practice both vehicles types are requested and despatched to wheelchair users. The consultant's report will be provided to the Environment Committee and placed on the Department's website when it is finalised.
- (ii) Private hire taxi fares are not regulated by the Department. Operators are free to determine their own fee structure. That said, I reiterate my previous statement that the Equality Commission has advised that DDA legislation makes it unlawful for organisations such as transport service providers, including taxi operators, to discriminate against disabled people in the way in which they provide or do not provide their services. It would be my expectation, therefore, that it is not appropriate for an 'enhanced' fare to be applied to a standard saloon type taxi in these circumstances.

- (iii) The definitive legal position as regards the circumstances described can only be ascertained when tested in court, with the details of a specific instance brought forward by a member of the public affected by such a scenario or by their representatives, and the court making a judgement on the facts of the case brought. If an operator has been advised by a customer that they have a wheelchair, and the customer does not specify a preference between vehicle types, it may be considered reasonable by the courts for the operator to assume that the customer prefers a wheelchair accessible vehicle, but that would be for the courts to determine. If the operator refused, on request, to provide a saloon type car, they would appear to have more of a case to answer in respect of the relevant DDA legislation.

Taxi Operator Licences: Numbers

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of (i) taxi operator licences issued in 2013; and (ii) drivers included under (a) small; and (b) large operator licences.

(AQW 29276/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Taxi Operator Licensing was introduced on 1 September 2012.

DOE Official Statistics relating to taxi operator licences, which were published for the first time on 28th November 2013, show that there were 1,884 taxi operator licences as at 30 September 2013. Of these 1,637 (87%)<sup>2</sup> operator's licences issued were for small operator's licences and 247 (13%)<sup>2</sup> were large operator licences.

As at 12 December 2013, there were 1,6521 drivers included under small operator licences and 6,1211 drivers included under large operator licences.

1 Please note these figures are not part of official statistics and have not been subject to data validation.

2 The figure represents the position at 30 September 2013.

Strategic Planning Policy Statement: Economic Development

Mr Sheehan asked the Minister of the Environment which specific provisions for economic development will be included in the Strategic Planning Policy Statement.

(AQO 5194/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Work on the development of a single Strategic Planning Policy Statement (SPPS) is now well underway.

The SPPS is required to be in place prior to the transfer of planning powers to Councils in 2015. It is my intention, therefore, to consult on a draft version of the SPPS in early 2014, with a view to publishing it in final form in good time for the transfer of planning powers.

The SPPS will ensure that the Department's planning policies are more proportionate and appropriate for the introduction of the new two-tier planning system. It will be pitched at a higher, more strategic level than in the past so that the councils can take it into account in providing the more detailed operational planning policy in their new local development plans. The SPPS will be shorter, clearer and more focused and will be much more accessible and intelligible.

The SPPS will also underscore the wider context of the Executive's aims and objectives, and clarify the Government's expectations of the new planning system.

The new SPPS will set out the Core Principles of the new planning system which will include explaining what concepts such as furthering sustainable development and promoting / improving well-being mean for planning. It will also detail how economic development factors are dealt with in planning, including clarifying and reaffirming that economic considerations are material in the determination of planning applications.

I am committed to ensuring that this new approach to planning policy plays its part in contributing to growing a dynamic, innovative and sustainable economy in the North.

Strategic Planning Policy Statement: Publication

Mr Swann asked the Minister of the Environment to outline when he expects to publish his Single Planning Policy Statement.

(AQO 5196/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Work on the development of a single Strategic Planning Policy Statement (SPPS) is now well underway.

The SPPS is required to be in place prior to the transfer of planning powers to Councils in 2015. It is my intention, therefore, to consult on a draft version of the SPPS in early 2014, with a view to publishing it in final form in good time for the transfer of planning powers.

The SPPS will ensure that the Department's planning policies are more proportionate and appropriate for the introduction of the new two-tier planning system. It will be pitched at a higher, more strategic level than in the past so that the councils can take it into account in providing the more detailed operational planning policy in their new local development plans. The SPPS will be shorter, clearer and more focused and will be much more accessible and intelligible.

The SPPS will also underscore the wider context of the Executive's aims and objectives, and clarify the Government's expectations of the new planning system.

The new SPSS will set out the Core Principles of the new planning system which will include explaining what concepts such as furthering sustainable development and promoting / improving well-being mean for planning. It will also detail how economic development factors are dealt with in planning, including clarifying and reaffirming that economic considerations are material in the determination of planning applications.

I am committed to ensuring that this new approach to planning policy plays its part in contributing to growing a dynamic, innovative and sustainable economy in the North.

Taxi Regulations: Belfast

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what provision is being made, or proposed, in taxi regulations to cover the unique taxi situation that exists in Belfast.

(AQW 29436/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The new taxi licensing regulations planned for September 2014 will mean that taxis will either be licensed as wheelchair accessible or non wheelchair accessible and all taxis will be able to ply for hire anywhere in Northern Ireland.

I remain committed to the aims of the Taxis Act, of creating a modern, fair and fit for purpose taxi industry in Northern Ireland. However I recognise that the new regulations bring greater challenges for Belfast Public Hire drivers than for other sectors of the taxi industry. Therefore to assist Belfast Public Hire drivers with this transition, the draft regulations will continue to limit Belfast City Centre ranks to wheelchair accessible taxis only. The specification for a wheelchair accessible taxi will also be modernised, and I will shortly be releasing a consultation which proposes that the current Belfast public hire fleet be the only vehicles granted grandfather rights for the new accessibility requirements. This means they will be able to continue to use their existing vehicle to the end of its useful life, which provides continued protection in terms of their unique access to Belfast City ranks.

Taxi Regulations: Implementation

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the regulations, and the proposed timescale for the introduction of these regulations, planned to implement the taxis legislation.

(AQW 29437/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My Department is preparing five sets of subordinate regulations to implement the provisions of the Taxis Act (Northern Ireland) 2008 ("the Taxis Act"), which are summarised below. The titles of the Statutory Rules may change slightly from those listed below during the legislative process.

The Taxi Vehicle Regulations will introduce the new taxi vehicle test, define the various classes of taxi, and introduce single tier licensing, as well as requiring new roof signs and taxi plates. They will come into operation on 1st September 2014.

The Taximeter and Maximum Fare Regulations will require the fitment of taximeters and compliance with a Northern Ireland-wide maximum fare structure. The Regulations, which will become operative on 1st September 2014, will require taximeters to be fitted in early 2015 and receipt printers to be fitted a year later. These derogations have been included in response to concerns raised by the Environment Committee about the financial impact of the new measures.

The Taxi Accessibility Regulations will introduce an improved specification for such vehicles, and will be operative on 1st September 2014.

The Taxi Driving Test Regulations will re-introduce a driving test and a requirement for periodic training for taxi drivers and will be operative on 1st September 2014. Periodic training for existing drivers will be deferred for one year from this date to help address concerns about the financial impact of the new measures.

The Taxis Retention and Disposal Regulations will provide for a system of seizure and retention of vehicles suspected of operating as taxis without a valid taxi licence, based on the power already provided in the Taxis Act. These will come into operation on 1st September 2014.

As well as the five main statutory rules, a number of minor consequential statutory rules will be required to revoke elements of the existing system and to commence the necessary sections of the Taxis Act.

Habitats Directive: River Faughan

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 28983/11-15, and given his confirmation that a full review of extant permissions was not carried out at the time the River Faughan became a candidate Special Area of Conservation, what assurances he can give that (i) there are no extant permissions which should have been reviewed but have been missed; and (ii) that no harm has been caused, or no risk of harm is posed to the designation by permissions that should have been reviewed but may not have been.

(AQW 29457/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The River Faughan and Tributaries SAC has been designated for salmon, otters and oak woodland. The features of Atlantic salmon and otter are in favourable condition; although salmon is considered to be at risk due to the uncertainty of the long term trend in returning adults. The woodland feature is in unfavourable condition due largely to the presence of invasive species such as beech. It is, therefore, considered that the integrity of the site has not been impacted by extant permissions having been missed.

Habitats Directive: New Special Areas of Conservation

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 28983/11-15, for his understanding of the (i) purpose; and (ii) required outcome of the review of extant permissions required by the Habitats Directive for new Special Areas of Conservation.

(AQW 29458/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The purpose and outcome of any review is to prevent any impact on the integrity of the SAC by projects which have been given permission before designation of the site.

Habitats Directive: River Faughan

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 28983/11-15, why his Department did not carry out a full review of extant permissions likely to affect the River Faughan Special Area of Conservation, if this is a lawful requirement of the Habitats Directives.

(AQW 29459/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Habitats Regulations require Competent Authorities to review all permissions 'as soon as reasonably practicable'. This is an ongoing process. The Department is undertaking the required review on a case by case basis. That is, where there are amendments or modifications to earlier applications approved before designation of the SAC, or if it is deemed necessary due to the Department becoming aware of a particular issue with the project.

Habitats Directive: New Special Areas of Conservation

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (i) the number of Special Areas of Conservation (SAC) designated; (ii) how many are in good status; (iii) how many are in unfavourable status; and (iv) how many were the subject of a full review of extant permissions likely to have a significant effect on those designations, as required by the Habitats Directives.

(AQW 29460/11-15)

Mr Durkan:

- I. Northern Ireland has designated fifty four Special Areas of Conservation (SACs). In addition, two candidate SACs have been submitted to the European Commission for adoption as Sites of Community Importance (SCI); and one SCI will be designated as a SAC in due course.
- II. Sixteen SACs are currently in favourable condition.
- III. Five sites are currently classed as being in unfavourable but recovering condition; which means that favourable management is in place, but the sites are not yet fully achieving their conservation objectives. There is an expectation that these sites will recover to favourable status within a reasonable period of time. Thirty three SACs are currently in unfavourable condition.
- IV. The Department has not undertaken a full review of all extant permissions, but it is undertaking the required review on a case by case basis where there are amendments or modifications to applications approved before designation of a SAC, or if it is deemed necessary due to the Department becoming aware of particular issue with the project.

Taxis: Single-tier System

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment to provide a copy of the original consultation paper on the proposed single tier taxi system; and to list the respondents.

(AQW 29595/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My Department issued a consultation on 4 July 2011 concerning proposals for Taxi Licence and Powers of Seizure (including single tier licensing) within Northern Ireland. The consultation closed on 30 September 2011 and responses were received from 27 individuals as well as the following organisations:

- |  |                                     |
|--|-------------------------------------|
| ■ Ards Borough Council                 | ■ IMTAC                             |
| ■ Belfast Taxi CIC                     | ■ Lagan Taxis                       |
| ■ BRAKE                                | ■ NEELB                             |
| ■ Consumer Council for NI              | ■ North West Taxi Providers         |
| ■ Disability Action                    | ■ Provincial Chauffeurs Association |
| ■ DS Executive Services                | ■ PSNI Road Policing                |
| ■ Fonacab                              | ■ Public Hire Coalition             |
| ■ Glenone Taxis                        | ■ Southern Health Trust             |
| ■ Guide Dogs for the Blind Association | ■ Value Cabs                        |

Council Employees

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what disqualifications and restrictions exist to prevent a council employee becoming a councillor in an other council.

(AQW 29606/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 1972, section 4(1)(a), disqualifies a person from being elected or being a councillor if they are employed by that council or any other council.

Department of Finance and Personnel

Welfare Reform: Financial Implications

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, pursuant to AQW 28846/11-15, and given the recent statement by the Chancellor of the Exchequer regarding future reductions in expenditure in Welfare Reform, what are the financial implications in addition to the current extra cost of £5 million per month.

(AQW 29605/11-15)

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): The penalties applied to the Northern Ireland Executive are reflective of the additional costs being incurred by the UK Government as a consequence of welfare policy in Northern Ireland not aligning to that in the rest of the United Kingdom. Whilst the penalty currently stands at £5 million a month, it is expected that this will increase significantly as welfare reforms are rolled out in Great Britain and will reach an estimated £200 million per annum by 2017-18.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer recently indicated that it would be necessary to make further savings in welfare costs after the next General Election. This has the potential to further increase the disparity between welfare systems in Great Britain and Northern Ireland should we not implement similar reforms. As a consequence, the penalties applied to the Northern Ireland Executive would increase.

In addition to the penalties applied by the UK Government, the Northern Ireland Executive will incur significant IT and administrative costs if our welfare system is not aligned to the rest of the United Kingdom.

Construction: Expenditure

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline the estimated expenditure on construction by (i) the private sector; and (ii) the public sector, broken down by district council area, in each of the last ten years.

(AQW 29666/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The information requested is not available for district council areas.

However, the Northern Ireland Construction Bulletin publishes a table which provides information on estimates of Construction Output on New Work at the Northern Ireland level for the private and public sectors since 2000. The latest published table is attached overleaf.

Table 1 – Volume of Output<sup>1</sup> in Northern Ireland (New Work only) by Type of Sector

Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Private Healthcare Providers

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the total spend on private health care providers within the UK and the Republic of Ireland, between January 2011 and January 2013.

(AQW 28948/11-15)

Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): The total spend on private health care providers within the UK and the Republic of Ireland amounted to £52.6m in 2011/12 and £66m in 2012/13.

Ambulance Service: Voluntary Drivers

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to clarify the rate per mile for voluntary drivers providing services for NI Ambulance Service; and when the rate was last reviewed.

(AQW 29527/11-15)

Mr Poots: I am advised by the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust that the standard mileage allowance currently paid to volunteer drivers to cover expenses is thirty eight pence per mile travelled. This rate was introduced on 1 January 2011. The previous rate of thirty three pence per mile travelled was introduced on 1 October 2005.

Healthy Start Scheme

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether additional measures can be implemented to ensure pregnant women have access to the Healthy Start scheme.

(AQW 29533/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Healthy Start Scheme is a nutritional safety net for low-income families. The Scheme is open to those who are at least 10 weeks pregnant or have a child under 4 years old, are in receipt of certain benefits, and have an annual family income of £16,190 or less. All pregnant women under the age of 18 qualify for the Scheme, whether or not they are on benefits.

Information about the availability of Healthy Start is included in leaflets and in online information about benefits and tax credits. Details on Healthy Start are contained in 'The Pregnancy Book' which is supplied to all pregnant women at first booking appointment and 'The Birth to Five Book' which is supplied to all mothers leaving the maternity unit. This information is also available online at www.healthystart.nhs.uk and www.nidirect.gov.uk.

My Department continues to actively look for ways of signposting the Scheme and issues regular Information Updates on Healthy Start for Health and Social Care health professionals.

Health and Social Care Trusts: Patient Data

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 28357/11-15, to outline the impact on the integrity of patient data following the changes which have made a large volume of past patient data incomparable with current data; and for his assessment on the ability to gauge the current and past performance of local Health and Social Care Trusts in this area following these changes.

Mr Poots: Details of outpatient activity during 2012/13, are available online in the Northern Ireland Hospital Statistics: Outpatient Activity Statistics, available at: http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/ni\_hospital\_statistics\_-\_outpatient\_activity\_2012-13.pdf

The following measurements are included within the Outpatient Activity Statistics:

- Total Attendances
- Review Attendances
- New Attendances
- Missed Appointments (Did not Attend/DNAs)

- |   |                               |
|---|-------------------------------|
| ■ Patient Cancellations (Could not Attend/CNAs) | ■ CNA Rates                   |
| ■ Hospital Cancellations                        | ■ Hospital Cancellation Rates |
| ■ DNA Rates                                     |                               |

This data is presented at a Northern Ireland, HSC Trust and hospital level as well as by specialty of consultant. This data is comparable over time, since the collection was introduced in 2008/09, and is unaffected by the recent review initiated by Health Committee. This data continues to be used by the Health Service to gauge current and past performance of HSC Trusts.

The issue of comparability is with the reasons recorded for hospital cancelled outpatient appointments only. This is only one measurement within the suite of data available to the health service to assess performance.

Hospitals: Outpatient Appointments

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 28357/11-15, irrespective of any issues of incomparability of data, to provide the data requested for (i) 2010; (ii) 2011; (iii) 2012.

(AQW 29540/11-15)

Mr Poots: As previously explained in AQW 28357/11-15, the methodology used to collect information on reasons for hospital cancelled outpatient appointments was reviewed in 2013/14 and a new process has since been established.

The number of consultant-led appointments cancelled by hospitals due to annual leave is not routinely collected by the Department and would require a manual exercise by Trusts at disproportionate costs.

Details of reasons for hospital cancelled outpatient appointments are available online in the Northern Ireland Hospital Statistics: Outpatient Activity Statistics, available at:

- http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/ni\_hospital\_statistics\_-\_outpatient\_activity\_2012-13.pdf

Third Sector Organisations: Funding

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) all third sector organisations funded by his Department who provide services to the public; and (ii) the value of each contract.

(AQW 29543/11-15)

Mr Poots: Funding provided by my Department to the voluntary and community sector is by grant rather than procured contract. In total £6.6m is provided to the sector. Grant funding is utilised for a variety of purposes by organisations and it is not always possible to distinguish funds specifically used for service provision from those used to support policy development and implementation. It has been estimated that around £4.6m of the grant funding provided by DHSSPS is used to support services delivered to the public.

A list organisations in receipt of grant funding from the department is shown below. Organisations listed deliver both service and policy functions from the grant funding that they receive.

Downe Hospital: Radiology

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he can give an assurance that the radiology service at Downe Hospital will be maintained at the current operating level.

(AQW 29545/11-15)

Mr Poots: The operating times of the Emergency Department have recently been reduced at night and at weekends. I am advised that no significant changes have been made to the radiology service in the Downe Hospital.

Enzalutamide

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline his Department's position on the use of Enzalutamide.

(AQW 29555/11-15)

Mr Poots: Enzalutamide is currently under appraisal by the National Institute for Health and Clinical Excellence (NICE). My Department has formal links with NICE whereby all Clinical Guidelines and Technology Appraisals published by the Institute are reviewed locally for their applicability to NI and, where appropriate, endorsed here. My Department does not challenge the robustness of the NICE guidance but rather its applicability in the legal and policy context of NI. This arrangement has ensured access to up-to-date, independent, professional, evidence-based guidance on the value of health care interventions. My Department's review of NICE Technology Appraisals is expected to be complete within 4 weeks of the final publication by NICE. As soon as the local review is complete, endorsement decisions will be published on the Department's website.

Hospitals: Outpatient Appointments

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 28357/11-15, (i) to outline the rationale for the review; (ii) why this review resulted in patient data becoming incomparable with previous data; and (iii) to detail any resultant action emanating from any previous reviews in this area.

(AQW 29559/11-15)

Mr Poots:

- (i) The review was initiated as a result of the Health Committee debate on 6th February 2013 on hospital cancelled outpatient appointments.
- (ii) As detailed in AQW 29538/11-15, the majority of information collected on outpatient activity remains comparable with previous years. The issue of comparability is with the reasons recorded for hospital cancelled appointments only. This is only one measurement within the suite of data available to the health service to assess performance.

The variables used to collect the reasons for cancelled outpatient appointments were not previously mandatory on the Patient Administrative System and as such coverage varied across HSC Trusts as did the adherence to the regional guidance issued at the beginning of its collection in 2008/09. The Department has been transparent on this issue, including notes in the technical guidance of publications.

The review facilitated the development of new guidance with an agreed list of regional and sub-regional codes for the reasons for cancellation. This new guidance was issued to HSC Trusts for implementation from 1st July 2013. In addition, the variable 'reason for cancellation' on the Patient Administrative System is now mandatory which will improve the coverage of the relevant data.

- (iii) The Quarterly Outpatient Activity Return (QOAR), which is the present methodology for the collection of consultant-led outpatient activity, was introduced by the Department from the beginning of 2008/09, as a direct result of a comprehensive review of collection of outpatient activity undertaken in 2007/08. Primarily, the methodology changed from the reporting of the number of clinics held and cancelled to the reporting of the number of appointments held and cancelled.

Accident and Emergency Departments: Complaints

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for a broad classification by type of medical complaint for those patients who attended Accident and Emergency departments (i) between 30 and 39 times; (ii) between 40 and 49 times; and (iii) more than 50 times a year, in each of the last three years.

Mr Poots: This information is not available at a regional level.

Accident and Emergency Departments: Attendance

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for the total number of attendances at each Accident and Emergency department in each of the last three years.

(AQW 29571/11-15)

Mr Poots: Information on attendances (new, unplanned and/or planned reviews) at emergency care departments is published on an annual basis and is available to view or download from:

http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/index/stats\_research/hospital-stats/emergency\_care-3/emergency-care-stats.htm

Alternatively, information on waiting times at emergency care departments (excluding planned review attendances) is published on a monthly basis, and is available to view or download from:

http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/index/stats\_research/hospital-stats/emergency\_care-3/emergency\_care-monthly\_waiting\_times.htm

Young People: Definition

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 29502/11-15, whether the legal definition of young people in the Housing (Northern Ireland) Order 1988, the definition of young people in the Commissioner for Children and Young People Order 2003 or the definition of young people in disability legislation is applicable to the functions of the Children's and Young People's strategic partnership, as outlined in The NI Children and Young People's Plan 2011-14, Appendix 2, Section 2.2.

(AQW 29600/11-15)

Mr Poots: Section 2.2 (e) of Appendix 2 to The Northern Ireland Children and Young People's Plan 2011-14 specifies that the age group of children and young people addressed by the Children's and Young People's Strategic Partnership (CYPSP) and its planning groups is 0-18 years, extended for young people who have been Looked After, those who are homeless and those who have a disability.

While section 2.2(e) of the Plan does not specify an upper age limit, it is clear that the CYPSP can and does act on behalf of disabled children, looked after children and those who are homeless beyond age 18. It is possible, therefore, that this is in keeping with the definitions of a young person contained in the legislation cited above, which extend the definition of young person to age 21.

Alcohol: Minimum Pricing

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on his proposal for minimum pricing of alcohol.

(AQW 29618/11-15)

Mr Poots: I have commissioned research to model the impact of the introduction of minimum pricing for alcohol in Northern Ireland, and it is anticipated that this will be completed within the next few months. When this report is analysed I will take a decision, jointly with the Minister for Social Development, whether or not to proceed with appropriate legislation.

The research that has been commissioned is essential, firstly for demonstrating any legislation that may be brought forward will have the desired impact and secondly to determine if minimum unit pricing is a proportionate response to addressing alcohol related harm. If a decision is made to proceed, we will endeavour to introduce a bill to the Assembly within the current mandate.

Northern Health and Social Care Trust: Funding to Treat Depression

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail any funding provided to the community and voluntary sector within the Northern Health and Social Care Trust for services to help people with depression, in each of the last five years, including to whom this funding was awarded and for the provision of which services.

(AQW 29619/11-15)

Mr Poots: Funding is provided by the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, the Northern Health and Social Care Trust and the Public Health Agency to voluntary and community groups for services to help people with a range of mental health problems, including depression, in the Northern Trust area. It is not possible to separate out the funding used solely for services for people with depression from other services provided.

Craigavon Area Hospital: Accident and Emergency Department

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) for his assessment of the current pressures being placed on the Accident and Emergency facilities at Craigavon Area Hospital; (ii) when these pressures will be relieved; and (iii) what action he is taking to ensure that the Southern Health and Social Care Trust is adequately resourced and funded to avoid any future patient backlogs and their associated risks to public health.

(AQW 29649/11-15)

Mr Poots: Emergency departments are busy all year round, but particularly so during the winter months. Ambulances were diverted to other hospitals for a time last week in response to the situation at Craigavon Hospital which was significantly busier than usual. This is a routine part of the operational management of pressures across the system. During the period 1-8 January 2014 there were no breaches of the 12-hour target at Craigavon Area Hospital emergency department, and the Southern Trust continues to treat more than 73% of emergency department patients within 4 hours. The Southern Trust has an escalation plan in place to respond to pressures in the system as required.

Belfast City Hospital: Medical Assessment Unit

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 28124/11-15 to detail (i) if the Medical Assessment Unit at Belfast City Hospital is now fully operational from 6N; (ii) the enhancements that have been made to the service; and (iii) the impact this has had upon Accident and Emergency services at the Royal Victoria Hospital.

(AQW 29664/11-15)

Mr Poots: I have been advised by the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust that the Medical Assessment Unit is now operational from Belfast City Hospital's Ward 6 North.

Patients are being directly admitted to the Belfast City Hospital but direct admission to the Royal Victoria Hospital site has not yet been fully implemented. The Trust is working to deliver this. The service provides telephone advice for GPs as well as a route for assessment/admission of patients, potentially avoiding the need for some patients having to attend an emergency department.

Craigavon Area Hospital: CT Scanners

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the business case for the purchase of a second CT scanner at Craigavon Area Hospital; and who is responsible for making the final decision of the purchase of the scanner.

(AQW 29698/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Southern Health and Social Care Trust is currently finalising a business case for a second CT Scanner at Craigavon.

The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety is responsible for appraising and approving the business case and for allocation of capital funding. The timing of the purchase will be subject to availability of funding.

There is a range of decision makers in the process of purchasing the scanner with various delegations in place from the Executive to the Minister to the Department to the HSC Board and Trust.

The decision to purchase will be made by the Trust Board once all the necessary approvals are in place and the funding has been secured, both capital and revenue and will be subject to procurement guidelines and rules.

Organ Donation: Public Health Agency Report

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) when he will complete his consideration of the findings of the Public Health Agency's report on its work to establish attitudes towards organ donation; and (ii) whether he intends to make a statement to the Assembly on this matter.

(AQW 29705/11-15)

Mr Poots: I am giving careful consideration to the findings in the Public Health Agency's report and the implications for the future development of my Department's policy on organ donation. This is an important matter and requires thorough consideration to ensure that the future policy is the right policy for the people of Northern Ireland. When I have concluded this consideration, I will make a statement to the Assembly as soon as possible.

Special Educational Needs: Review of Support for Children and Young People

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the scope of the Review of the Allied Health Professional Support for Children and Young People with Statements of Special Educational Needs in Special Schools and Mainstream Education.

(AQW 29707/11-15)

Mr Poots: The initial phase of the review is a scoping exercise which will establish the level of Allied Health Professions (AHP) provision and support for children with special educational needs in special schools and mainstream education. The focus in the first year of the review will be on establishing a baseline of current arrangements, identification of themes and agreeing recommendations for further action. Thereafter, the review will agree a regional model, in partnership with key stakeholders, to ensure that the AHP assessed needs of children are met, irrespective of what school they attend.

The AHPs to be considered by this review will include:

- Physiotherapy
- Occupational Therapy
- Speech and Language Therapy
- Dietetics
- Orthoptics; and
- Podiatry

There will also be an opportunity for engagement with representatives from other Allied Health Professions, including those providing music therapy.

Special Educational Needs: Music Therapy

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether music therapy is being considered as part of the Review of the Allied Health Professional Support for Children and Young People with Statements of Special Educational Needs in Special Schools and Mainstream Education.

(AQW 29708/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Review's focus is primarily on the services provided by Occupational Therapy, Speech and Language Therapy, Physiotherapy, Dietetics, Orthoptics and Podiatry for children with Statements of Special Educational Needs. In addition, it has been agreed that there will be an opportunity for engagement with representatives from other Allied Health Professions, including those providing music therapy, who work with children with SEN Statements.

Irritable Bowel Syndrome

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he would consider introducing automatic referrals for a CA125 blood test for women diagnosed with Irritable Bowel Syndrome symptoms and a family history of ovarian cancer.

(AQW 29739/11-15)

Mr Poots: The CA125 blood test is one of a number of tests routinely available in Northern Ireland. The decision as to which test is appropriate for an individual patient is a clinical matter.

In January 2009 my department endorsed the National Institute for Health and Clinical Excellence (NICE) guidance for irritable bowel syndrome (IBS) in adults (CG61) wherein clinicians are advised to ask patients who present with possible IBS symptoms if there is any family history of ovarian cancer and if so they should be referred for further investigation.

My department has formally endorsed (NICE) guidance for ovarian cancer (CG122) in May 2012, which can be viewed at: http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/index/phealth/sqs/sqsd-guidance/sqsd-guidance-nice-guidance/clinical\_guidelines/endorsed\_nice\_clinical\_guidelines\_2012-2013.htm. This guidance refers to women over 50 who present with symptoms suggestive of IBS, and advise GPs to carry out appropriate tests one of which is CA125.

Family Fund

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, given the demand for support from the Family Fund, what plans he has to increase the funding available.

(AQW 29741/11-15)

Mr Poots: Through funding support of £1.57m provided by my Department to the Family Fund in 2012/13, almost 3000 families in Northern Ireland with disabled children were helped.

Due to the ongoing financial challenges facing my Department I am currently unable to increase their funding provision. However, DHSSPS officials will be meeting with the Family Fund in the near future to further discuss this issue and how best it can help support families in NI.

Family Fund

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what assurances he can give that the Family Fund has sufficient capital to service the applications for funding.

(AQW 29815/11-15)

Mr Poots: My Department provides funding of £1.57m to the Family Fund and in 2012/13 this allowed the Fund to help almost 3000 families in Northern Ireland with disabled children. My Department's allocation includes an amount to cover the administrative costs of processing applications for assistance.

Due to the ongoing financial challenges facing my Department and the finite resources available to me, I am unable to increase their funding provision. However, DHSSPS officials will be meeting with the Family Fund in the near future to further discuss this issue and how best it can help support families in NI.

Department of Justice

Community Restorative Justice Ireland: Funding for Belfast Office

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice to detail the public funding provided to the Belfast office of Community Restorative Justice Ireland, which is chaired by Harry Maguire, a person convicted of the murder of Corporals Howes and Woods.
(AQW 29521/11-15)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): The grant funding committed through the Department of Justice to the Headquarters of Community Restorative Justice Ireland (CRJI) for 2013-14 is as follows:

- £50,000 for strategic capacity building in the development of restorative practices across the organisation's network of accredited community-based restorative justice schemes; and
- £40,000 for community restorative interventions involving adjudicated offenders.

Domestic Abuse Bill

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice whether he will bring Northern Ireland in line with the UK in relation to the proposed Domestic Abuse Bill, and if so, when and by what legislation he intends to progress this.
(AQW 29525/11-15)

Mr Ford: I am aware of a proposed Domestic Abuse bill which, if introduced, would make domestic abuse a specific offence in England and Wales carrying a sentence of up to 14 years in prison.

My officials will liaise with colleagues in the Home Office throughout the passage of the Bill in Westminster and will share developments with the Regional Strategy Group on Domestic and Sexual Violence. The Regional Strategy Group's views will then inform any decision by me on the introduction of similar legislation into Northern Ireland.

Prison Service: Code of Conduct and Discipline

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice whether the new Northern Ireland Prison Service Code of Conduct and Discipline is interim in nature; and if so, to detail the reasons for this.
(AQW 29526/11-15)

Mr Ford: I refer the Member to the answer I gave to AQW/29366/11-15.

Cruelty to Animals: Tariffs

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice whether his Department plans to re-examine the effectiveness of tariffs for offences concerning cruelty to animals, given the low rate of custodial sentences for such crimes.
(AQW 29560/11-15)

Mr Ford: As Minister of Justice my role is to ensure that any proposals from Departments for new offences or penalties sit appropriately within the existing framework of criminal sanctions. In that context it is the responsibility of the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development to assess the efficacy of animal welfare legislation.

Within the legislative framework, sentencing in individual cases is a matter for the judiciary. I am aware, however, that sentencing guidelines in respect of animal welfare, including cruelty to animals, were issued in December 2012 for cases being heard in the Magistrates' Courts.

Policing Board: Informed Warnings

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of why it is appropriate that someone who is subject to a concurrent informed warning should continue to serve on the Policing Board.
(AQW 29580/11-15)

Mr Ford: Paragraph 9(1)(b) of Schedule 1 to the Police (Northern Ireland) Act 2000 states that the Minister of Justice may remove a person from office as an independent or political member of the Northern Ireland Policing Board if satisfied they have been convicted of a criminal offence in Northern Ireland or elsewhere committed after the date of their appointment. As an informed warning is not a conviction, the legislation is not applicable.

The Code of Conduct for members of the Northern Ireland Policing Board states that members must not conduct themselves in such a manner that will bring the Board into disrepute. Therefore it is for the Northern Ireland Policing Board to determine whether a member who is subject to a concurrent informed warning is in breach of the code.

Legal Aid: Proposals

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of (i) representations he has received from legal practitioners opposing his civil and family Legal Aid proposals; and (ii) meetings he has held with such concerned practitioners.
(AQW 29631/11-15)

Mr Ford: I have undertaken four public consultations on Civil Legal Aid reform, the first in November 2012. My Department has received 49 representations from legal practitioners opposing Civil Legal Aid reforms. I have held nine meetings with legal practitioners to discuss the totality of legal aid reform. My officials continue to engage with representative bodies of the legal professions on the current proposals for reform.

Prison Service: Dogs

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of prison dogs that have been put down in each of the last five years.
(AQW 29635/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Prison Service (NIPS) has humanely put down five dogs in the last five years. Two dogs were put down in 2011, two in 2012 and one in 2013. NIPS only put down dogs when advised to do so by a veterinary surgeon for reasons of chronic ill health. NIPS also re-home any dog found not suitable for prison work.

Department for Regional Development

Translink: Ulsterbus and Metro Routes

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the punctuality problems experienced by Ulsterbus and Metro routes that Translink are seeking to address.
(AQW 27368/11-15)

Mr Kennedy (The Minister for Regional Development): Translink has informed officials that there are two specific issues that impact on the punctuality of their Ulsterbus and Metro routes but in particular their urban services.

The first is the one-off or unexpected events, such as road traffic accidents or extreme weather conditions, which will inevitably impact on the ability of public transport to operate as per scheduled timetables.

The second, which is more prevalent in urban areas, is traffic congestion, leading to reduced average speeds, variable and unpredictable journey times.

Translink is pursuing practical solutions in liaison with Roads Service, in respect of the expansion of Park & Ride facilities and improved bus priority measures.

It is also of note that recent Spring 2013 Passenger Charter results were published on 1 October. These results based on an independent survey against charter criteria suggests that 98% of Metro services and 96% of Ulsterbus services arrive no more than 7 minutes late.

A5: Screening

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Regional Development, in relation to the A5 Western Transport Corridor dualling project (A5WTC) and the River Foyle and tributaries and River Finn Special Area of Conservation (SAC), (i) who provided the advice that the screening exercise concluded that it was unlikely that the proposed A5WTC scheme would have an adverse effect on the integrity of this SAC and consequently a full Appropriate Assessment was not required; (ii) to whom this advice was provided; (iii) whether this advice has since proven to be inaccurate; (iv) what action, including disciplinary, has been taken as a result; and (v) who carried out the screening exercise.
(AQW 28743/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: During the tenure of my predecessor, a screening exercise, rather than a report to inform an Appropriate Assessment under the Habitats Directive, was carried out on behalf of the Department by Mouchel, the consultants for the A5WTC project.

For the roads which have progressed past this point during my tenure, where the Habitats Directive is relevant, these being, A31 (Magherafelt Bypass), A26 (Frosses Road) and A6, an Appropriate Assessment either has been or will be carried out.

I have asked for an independent review of the project consultant's work in respect of the completion of the Appropriate Assessment process. An independent review of the methodology proposed to address the Court's Ruling is substantially complete and a review of the Appropriate Assessment and Environmental Statement processes is ongoing. When these urgent aspects of the review are finalised, the focus of the independent review will switch to the adequacy of the screening work previously carried out by Mouchel.

Public Transport: North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development for his assessment of the increase in public transport useage in North Down over the last five years.

(AQW 29285/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: In overall terms public transport usage has grown over the last five years, with an additional 210,000 journeys at the end of 2012/13. In the last three years the increase has been 235,000 journeys.

Strathmore Park

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister for Regional Development what work his Department, or the Roads Service, has carried out in the Strathmore Park area of North Belfast in the last five years; and (ii) what plans his Department has to undertake drainage work in this area over the next five years.

(AQW 29290/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: There is a lot of surface scarring of the roads in the Strathmore Park area due to utility installations. Whilst this may not be aesthetically pleasing, the roads are considered to be safe and structurally sound and there are no recorded instances of road drainage problems. For this reason there has been no major expenditure on resurfacing or drainage work in the Strathmore Park area in the last five years.

In accordance with road maintenance policy, safety inspections are carried out on a two monthly cyclical basis and any defects will be identified for repair.

NI Water has advised that water infrastructure work has been carried out within the NI Water Mains Rehabilitation Programme between September and December 2011. The work included 1,131 metres of mains replacement/renewal through open cut and pipe bursting techniques along with 190 service replacements.

Translink: Report of Investigation

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he will undertake to provide a report on the outcome of a Translink investigation in which it is alleged that a visually impaired man with a guide dog was refused access to a bus by a driver.

(AQW 29329/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My officials have contacted Translink about this matter and it has investigated this incident. The driver in question has been interviewed and it is my understanding that the bus didn't stop at the relevant bus stop.

Translink has assured me that the failure to uplift this passenger was a genuine mistake.

I would suggest the individual involved contacts Translink and if you can contact the individual I would ask that you pass this invite on. Translink senior management would be happy to meet him, to further discuss the matter and take the opportunity to extend both the Company's and the driver's personal apologies.

Towerview, Bangor: Footpaths

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans his Department has to resurface the footpaths in the Towerview area of Bangor.

(AQW 29331/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The footways at Towerview Avenue and Towerview Crescent, Bangor are being considered for possible inclusion in the Roads Service 2014-2016 footway reconstruction programme for North Down, subject to funding availability and other priorities.

Enterprise Project: Funding

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the Enterprise project to which he is considering allocating EU funding.

(AQW 29361/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department is both active and successful in bidding for EU funding across a range of Programmes and is a major contributor to the achievement of the 2011-15 Programme for Government commitment to increase drawdown of competitive EU funds. The allocation of EU funding is the primary responsibility of organisations and Departments other than my own.

In the case of the Enterprise project, allocation of INTERREG IV(a) monies is the responsibility of the Special European Programmes Body (SEUPB). As stated in my answer to Oral Question 5221/11-15 on December 10th, my Department has been approached by the SEUPB which is now urgently seeking to divert the unspent Narrow Water Bridge funds into contingency projects. In this respect, officials from my Department have, in co-operation with the Department for Transport, Tourism and Sport and Translink, identified the upgrading of the Enterprise Service's rolling stock as a suitable alternative.

The cross border coaches are now 16 years old; their design life is 30 years. Having reached half-life, the project will deal with system obsolescence and compliance with standards including those relating to Persons of Reduced Mobility and general safety as well as aesthetic refurbishment. A new electronic system to enable seat booking in real time for all carriages up to the boarding time for that particular service forms part of the project with the system being fully integrated into the booking service. I believe, in order to further increase passenger numbers, there should be an enhanced environment with increased functionality.

I am pleased that in bringing this project forward for consideration by the SEUPB, my Department can make an active contribution to help ensure that the INTERREG funds are not lost to the people of Northern Ireland.

A6, Dungiven: Park-and-ride Facilities

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the provision of the Park and Ride sites on the A6 at Dungiven.

(AQW 29446/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My officials recently examined five suggested sites along the A6, in and around Dungiven, and will consider if any can be progressed ahead of the dualling of the A6, between Londonderry and Dungiven.

Ards Peninsula: Roads Budget

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he will allocate additional resource to the Ards Peninsula roads budget to address subsidence and the weakening of road infrastructure as a result of the recent tidal surge, (AQW 29511/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department has begun the process of assessing the damage caused by the recent tidal surge which affected not only the Ards Peninsula, but other parts of the coastline and adjoining roads. It may be some time before the full impact is known, necessary repairs are implemented and the full cost is realised. However, remedial works have already begun at some locations on the Ards Peninsula, with additional preparatory work being undertaken in advance of the commencement of works at other locations.

My Department has already submitted additional funding bids as part of January Monitoring. If successful, any additional funding will be allocated on a needs basis.

In addition, officials are still assessing the extent of the damage caused and specific bids for further funding may be required, which would hopefully be considered sympathetically at a later date, if repairs cannot be funded from within existing budgets.

Department for Social Development

Benefits: Universal Credit

Mr Copeland asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the cost to his Department to date, of preparing for the introduction of Universal Credit.

(AQW 29478/11-15)

Mr McCausland (The Minister for Social Development): The Northern Ireland Universal Credit Programme was established in May 2011. The costs incurred in running this Programme are set out below (to the nearest £100k):

- £1.9m in 2011/12 financial year.
- £4.5m in 2012/13 financial year.
- £4m to 30 November in the 2013/14 financial year.

Benefits: Employment and Support Allowance/Incapacity Benefit

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development, in relation to people who were in receipt of Incapacity Benefit and/or Employment Support Allowance, who were examined by Atos Healthcare and deemed fit for work and either accepted this ruling or proceeded to Appeal but were over-ruled, where liability rests if people become ill as a result of work, particularly in instances of an exacerbation of an existing condition which was made known at examination or death.

(AQW 29529/11-15)

Mr McCausland: All claimants of Employment and Support Allowance, along with those who are undergoing Incapacity Benefit Reassessment, are subject to the Work Capability Assessment process to determine their ability to work and carry out everyday tasks. This is a functional assessment based on the premise that eligibility should not be determined by a person's disability or health condition, but rather how their ability to function is affected. The responsibility of the approved Health Care Professional, who carries out the assessment, therefore differs from that of a GP needing to make a diagnosis and plan treatment.

In addition claimants do not need to be fully fit to go back to work and should discuss options available to them with their employer who may be able to facilitate reasonable adjustments in the workplace.

The question of where legal liability (if any) rests -should a claimant become ill as a result of work- can only be authoritatively determined by a court of competent jurisdiction, upon examination of all the relevant facts of each particular case.

Housing Executive: Contracts

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the name of the contractor that was appointed to the All-Trades contract at the last tender date in each district of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

(AQW 29535/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that at the last tender date, which was August/September 2012, the following contractors were appointed to the NIHE Response Maintenance Repairs Contract.

District	Contractor
Belfast 1& 3 (West)	Mel Davison Construction*
Belfast District 2 East	Garrivan O'Rourke*
Belfast Dist 4	Direct Labour Organisation
Belfast Dist 5 Shankill	Mel Davison Construction*
Belfast Dist 6 North	Garrivan O'Rourke*
Belfast Dist 7 South	Mel Davison Construction*
Castlereagh	ESE Ltd
Lisburn Antrim Street	Garrivan O'Rourke*
Lisburn Dairy Farm	Mel Davison Construction*
Bangor, Newtownards 	H & A Mechanical Services Ltd
Downpatrick	ESE Ltd
Armagh / Banbridge	PK Murphy
Lurgan/Brownlow/Portadown	Mel Davison Construction*
Fermanagh(4&5)	PK Murphy
Dungannon	PK Murphy
Newry (1-5)	Bayview Contracts
Newtownabbey 1 & 2	CFM
Ballymena, Carrick, Larne 	H & A Mechanical Services Ltd

Strabane	Robinson Ferry Construction Ltd
Londonderry 1,2,3 	Omega Mechanical Services Ltd

* These contractors have subsequently entered into Administration and alternative arrangements have been made.

** The contracts for these Districts were awarded in 2010 and they will be the subject of a secondary competition during early 2014 from the new framework.

The Information provided in this response is governed by the Principles and Protocols of the Code of Practice for Official Statistics. This is enforced by UK Statistics Authority.

Housing Executive: Contracts

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Social Development, in relation to contracts that the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's Direct Labour Organisation have taken over, to detail each contract and whether (i) each has decreased or increased the labour force; and (ii) all rights under the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations have been protected.

(AQW 29537/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that their Direct Labour Organisation initially provided cover for all eight contracts vacated by contractors who had gone into administration. The contracts were: -

- West Belfast
- South Belfast
- East Belfast
- North Belfast
- Shankill
- Lisburn Antrim Street
- Lisburn Dairy Farm
- Craigavon

The Housing Executive confirms that, in taking this action, the Direct Labour Organisation acted in accordance with the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) (TUPE) Regulations 2006, and that any employees from those previous contractors who met the requirements of the TUPE Regulations were transferred to their Direct Labour Organisation, as follows: -

West Belfast (MDC)	41
South Belfast (MDC)	39
East Belfast (Garrivan & O'Rourke)	8
North Belfast District 6 (Garrivan & O'Rourke)	12
Shankill (MDC)	38
Lisburn Antrim Street (Garrivan & O'Rourke)	9
Lisburn Dairy Farm (MDC)	15
Portadown (MDC)	57

The Housing Executive advises that a small number of these staff have subsequently left. They further explain that as neither MDC nor Garrivan & O'Rourke employed electricians, they engaged electricians to supplement the workforce on these contracts.

Third Sector Organisations: Funding

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) all third sector organisations funded by his Department who provide services to the public; and (ii) the value of each contract.

(AQW 29542/11-15)

Mr McCausland: A list of third sector organisations funded by the Department for Social Development and the value of each contract for 2013/2014 is attached at Annex A.

Annex A

Welfare Reform: Oversight Board

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the work of the Welfare Reform Oversight Board; and whether the Board will produce a report on the Welfare Reform Bill.

(AQW 29594/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Following my statement to the Assembly on the flexibilities which were secured from Lord Freud on how Universal Credit would be paid in Northern Ireland, I announced the establishment of an Oversight Board chaired by my Department's Permanent Secretary with members from a cross section of representatives from the voluntary and community sector. The Board provides support in developing the criteria to enable the implementation of the different payment flexibilities.

The Board has met on three occasions and considered papers produced by the Universal Credit Programme Team on payment flexibilities policy and implementation issues. The Board has also received feedback from public consultation events which were organised across Northern Ireland to facilitate input from organisations not represented on the Oversight Board as well as political parties and individuals.

At the next meeting it is planned to present the Board with the latest policy and operational thinking taking into account political discussions.

The Board will then produce a final report on the criteria for payment flexibilities in Universal Credit.

Gambling Legislation

Mr McGimpsey asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) the current gambling legislation applicable locally; (ii) any proposed amendment to current gambling legislation; and (iii) whether there are plans to harmonise gambling legislation within the UK.

(AQW 29642/11-15)

Mr McCausland:

- (i) Gambling in Northern Ireland is primarily regulated by the Betting, Gaming, Lotteries and Amusements (Northern Ireland) Order 1985. Other legislation, such as the National Lottery etc. Act 1993, the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 and the Gambling Act 2005 also contain provisions which are applicable to Northern Ireland.
- (ii) Following a review of the current legislation early last year I announced my intention to update the law in order to address the rapidly changing gambling environment that exists today, ensure fairness within the gambling industry, protect the young and vulnerable and keep crime out of gambling. My Department is currently working on the drafting of new legislation.

In addition, the Gambling (Licensing and Advertising) Bill, currently progressing through the UK Parliament, contains provisions which will ensure that Northern Ireland consumers continue to have the same protection as other British consumers in relation to the advertising of remote gambling. The Assembly approved a Legislative Consent Motion in respect of this Bill on 17 June 2013.

- (iii) The introduction of new legislation may bring Northern Ireland gambling laws into closer harmony with those of the rest of the United Kingdom, there will, however, remain areas where differences exist. For example, while it is intended that Gaming Machine categories and standards currently used in Great Britain will be adopted here; there is no intention to introduce harder forms of gambling such as Casinos.

North West Regional Science Park

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister for Social Development to detail when the construction of the North West Regional Science Park is due to be completed.

(AQW 29662/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Work began on the construction of the North West Regional Science Park on 29 July 2013 and is due to be completed by 28 July 2014.

Benefits: Universal Credit

Mr Copeland asked the Minister for Social, pursuant to AQW 29478/11-15, for a breakdown on the nature of costs incurred. (AQW 29663/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Northern Ireland Universal Credit Programme was established in May 2011. The costs incurred in running the Programme are set out below (to the nearest £100k):

	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14
Staff Salaries & GAE	1,588,402	3,476,280	3,046,742
Computer Charges	45,881	53,000	270,000
Consulting/Research	311,376	389,500	138,000
Estates Work	-	30,000	24,000
Capital Expenditure	-	600,000	500,000
Total	1,915,659	4,548,780	3,978,742*

Up to 30 November 2013

South Tyrone: Social and Affordable Homes

Ms McGahan asked the Minister for Social Development, in relation to the Programme for Government target to deliver 8,000 new social and affordable homes by 2015, how many of these homes are anticipated for South Tyrone.

(AQW 29686/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Programme for Government (PfG) set a target to deliver 6,000 social and 2,000 affordable homes over the period 2011/12 to 2014/15.

All new social housing is developed by registered housing associations through the social housing development programme. During the PfG period, 135 new social houses are planned for the South Tyrone area. 75 houses have started and a further 60 are scheduled to start during the next financial year.

Affordable homes are currently delivered through the co-ownership scheme with the areas in which properties are purchased being determined by the demands of applicants of the scheme. A total of 37 homes have been delivered in the South Tyrone area through co-ownership as at March 2013. The figures of the 2013/14 financial period are not currently available.

Northern Ireland Assembly Commission

Assembly Commission: Paid Councillors

Mr Flanagan asked the Assembly Commission to detail how many people paid by the Commission also hold a role as a local councillor.

(AQW 29583/11-15)

Mrs Cochrane (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): The Assembly Commission is responsible for processing remuneration payments to four distinct groups of people namely:

- (i) Members;
- (ii) Permanent Assembly Commission employees;
- (iii) Members of statutory and advisory bodies (for example, Members of the Independent Financial Review Panel, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commissioner for Standards and the Secretariat Audit and Risk Committee); and
- (iv) Members' and Parties' support staff.

For categories (i) to (iii) above, there is currently no-one receiving payment from the Commission while holding an office as a local councillor. For category (iv), the Commission does not hold information on whether these staff have a role as a local councillor as they are employed by a Member or Party.

Written Answers to Questions

Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister

Ballykelly Site: Soft Market Testing

Mr Campbell asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, in light of the recent announcement of the 'soft market testing' exercise in relation to Ballykelly Camp, whether any private sector interest will be distinct and separate from the ongoing Department of Agriculture and Rural Development preparation to move onto the site in 2015.
(AQW 28669/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness (The First Minister and deputy First Minister): The soft market testing of the Shackleton site, currently being undertaken by BTW Shiells on behalf of OFMDFM, takes into account the commitment of DARD to use approximately 10 acres of the site to accommodate its new headquarters.

Victims and Survivors' Groups: Funding

Mr McCallister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how much funding Victims and Survivor groups have received since 2011.
(AQW 29394/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Letters of offer totalling £24,588,922.00 have been issued to Victims and Survivors groups for the period 1 April 2011 to 31 March 2015.

Economic Pact: Shared Housing and Education

Mr P Ramsey asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail what projects will be funded from the further £100 million RRI borrowing available across 2014-15 and 2015-16 for shared housing and shared education projects as part of the Economic Pact.
(AQW 29408/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: OFMDFM is currently co-ordinating a bids exercise to identify suitable projects for RRI funding under the Economic Pact.

The Lisanelly Shared Educational Campus, which will bring together six schools serving almost 4,000 pupils in the Omagh area has been agreed. The Department of Education will shortly be launching a programme aimed at identifying further projects suitable for support.

In addition, officials are currently assessing a number of proposals for shared neighbourhood schemes that have been identified by the Department for Social Development.

Assembly Questions: Response Times

Mr Agnew asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the average time it has taken their Department to answer an Assembly (i) Written Question; (ii) Priority Written Question; and (iii) 2 day Priority Written Question.
(AQW 29588/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The information is not held by the Department in the format requested and could not be provided without incurring disproportionate costs.

Ebrington Master Plan

Mr Eastwood asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister why a proposal in Ilex's Ebrington Masterplan, which was subsequently the focus of a feasibility study, to develop Ebrington Clock Tower as the core of a major art gallery did not proceed.
(AQW 29625/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The 2006 draft Ebrington Master Plan identified possible uses for buildings on the site, including the potential for an Arts Gallery at the Clock Tower. A Strategic Outline Case for the development of an Art Gallery, undertaken in 2011, was reviewed and it was unable to demonstrate the necessary support of stakeholders and funders required to generate the £21 million to enable the project to proceed.

Ilex and its strategic partners will continue to explore the potential of developing the Clock Tower for viable projects within the current Ebrington Development Framework consultation process.

Delivering Social Change: Update

Mrs Hale asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the progress of Delivering Social Change. (AQO 5259/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Delivering Social Change framework was set up by the Executive to tackle poverty and social exclusion. It represents a new level of joined-up working across Government departments to drive through initiatives which have a genuine impact on the ground and achieve real, long lasting benefits.

Implementation of the initial 6 Delivering Social Change Signature Programmes, announced in October 2012, is progressing well.

The Department of Education is leading on the Signature Programme to improve literacy and numeracy levels within schools. This programme will see 233 additional teachers placed in 267 primary and post- primary schools to deliver tuition to children who are currently struggling to achieve even basic educational standards.

Over 200 of the posts are now filled and recruitment of the remaining teachers is ongoing.

The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety has lead responsibility for 2 of the signature programmes – the provision of additional Family Support Hubs and Support for Parents.

The Family Support Hubs Programme will see 16 existing Family Support Hubs being maintained and 10 new Family Support Hubs being established.

In the Northern Trust Area, 2 new Hubs have been established and a third is at an advanced stage of implementation. Work is ongoing to identify potential locations for the 7 Family Support Hubs in the Belfast area. It is anticipated that all 10 new Hubs will be online by April 2014.

In respect of the Support for Parents Signature Programme, a suite of programmes have been developed which will see guidance, training and information being provided for up to 1,200 families.

The Department for Social Development and the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment are jointly taking forward the Social Enterprise Incubation Hubs Signature Programme. Eleven Hubs will be established in currently vacant commercial premises and will offer a range of business advice and practical support to social enterprise entrepreneurs.

Good progress has been made with leases for 9 of the Hubs having been agreed; the remaining 2 hubs will be agreed this month. It is envisaged that providers of supporting services will be appointed in March 2014 in preparation for the majority of the Hubs being operational in April 2014.

The Department for Social Development in collaboration with the Department of Education have established 20 new nurture units within school settings. The establishment of these additional nurture units allows us to play a key role in improving the lives and educational attainment of our most vulnerable children by targeting support where it is most needed. One hundred and sixteen children have now undergone observation and assessment and are currently attending the units.

The Department for Employment and Learning is taking forward the Community Family Support Signature Programme which aims to support parents and prevent younger family members from falling into the Not in Employment, Education or Training category.

The programme was successfully piloted earlier this year and the upscaled programme was launched in November. This will reach up to 720 disadvantaged families.

In addition to the initial Delivering Social Change Signature Programmes, on 8 October 2013 Junior Ministers Jennifer McCann and Jonathan Bell announced the Play and Leisure Signature Programme. This will support initiatives in championing play, greater local access to space for play; and planning and support for play at a community level.

Delivering Social Change is about focusing on a smaller number of actions which can really make a difference. Departments are now working together on priority issues to maximise outcomes and improve the lives of everyone living here, and particularly those who need help the most.

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

Animal Cruelty: Legislation

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether there are any plans to review animal cruelty legislation in light of the statistics revealing the low number of custodial sentences imposed for such offences. (AQW 29561/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): My Department brought forward a new Welfare of Animals Act in 2011 to replace the Welfare of Animals Act 1972. The 2011 Act recognises that causing unnecessary suffering to any animal is a very serious offence and the penalties contained in it reflect this. It significantly increased the penalties for animal welfare offences to a maximum of 6 months imprisonment and/or a maximum fine of £5,000 on summary conviction; and on conviction by indictment to a maximum of 2 years imprisonment and/or an unlimited fine.

These new penalties provide the Courts with a range of sentencing options to ensure that the perpetrators receive a punishment that fits the crime. However, sentencing within the legislative framework is a matter for the Judiciary and I understand that in making sentencing decisions Judges take into account the law, the seriousness of the offence, any aggravating or mitigating factors, sentencing guidelines and all the relevant circumstances in each case.

Following the introduction of the new Act I met the Minister of Justice to discuss the possibility of encouraging the Courts to use the maximum sentences available. He informed me that the Lord Chief Justice, in his Programme of Action on Sentencing, was enhancing the structures by which the Judiciary ensure consistent and appropriate sentencing. I am advised that new sentencing guidelines for Magistrates' Courts, on offences of animal cruelty, tail docking of dogs' tails and animal fighting were published in December 2013.

Whilst I fully support tough sentences for serious animal welfare offences, changing legislation will not increase the low number of custodial sentences imposed by the Courts for such offences. I therefore have no plans to review animal welfare legislation.

Coastal Defences: Spend

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the (i) capital; and (ii) resource spend on coastal defences, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 29564/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Rivers Agency's estimate of the annual capital and resource spend on designated coastal defences in the last 5 years is shown below.

Year	Capital £k	Resource £k
2013/14 Projected spend	50	279
2012/13	118	224
2011/12	111	218
2010/11	85	213
2009/10	47	208

Coastal Defences and Emergency Planning

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, in light of the recent extreme weather conditions, whether she has any plans to review the effectiveness of coastal defences and emergency planning.

(AQW 29565/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Rivers Agency is responsible for some 26 km of designated coastal flood defences which are subject to a rolling programme of inspection and maintenance. Rivers Agency's initial assessment following the coastal storms in early January suggests that these defences performed well. A more extensive inspection of these defences is now underway and should this identify the need for works, these will be given appropriate priority.

Rivers Agency organised and led a recent emergency planning exercise on coastal flooding. That exercise was held at the end of November and involved over 70 organisations. There is no doubt that the learning from the exercise meant that when the threat materialised, organisations were well prepared for the co-ordinated response required. I am very pleased with the collective response by Government and the public in preparing for and responding to the storms, and there will be, as with all serious incidents of this nature, a review of the preparations and response to identify any further lessons to be learnt.

Horse Meat Scandal: Elliott Report

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline the steps taken as a result of the Elliott Report into the horsemeat scandal.

(AQW 29614/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I welcome the publication of the interim report of the Elliott Review into the Integrity and Assurance of Food Supply Networks.

In his interim report Professor Elliott has made recommendations, including a number for Government, about action that can be taken now to improve the assurance and integrity of food supply networks. None of the recommendations in this interim report were specifically targeted for action by DARD.

My Department already has legislation in place to meet EU requirements on the identification, movement and traceability of animals. Implementation and enforcement of this legislation is supported by our Animal and Public Health Information System (APHIS) which enables stringent controls and checks to be undertaken to confirm the traceability of food producing animals. DARD also enforces the Beef Labelling legislation, which provides customers with assurance about the origin of beef, in abattoirs and approved cutting plants insofar as they pertain to fresh & frozen cuts of beef and veal.

The report recognises that our consumers have some of the safest food in the world but it is vital to maintain and enhance this reputation. I have always championed our local food and in November my Department hosted a red meat stakeholder meeting along with the Livestock and Meat Commission to promote the integrity, quality and traceability of our local food chain.

Professor Elliott's recommendations will undoubtedly make a significant contribution to the safety and integrity of the food chain and I look forward to taking receipt of the final report, due in Spring 2014, which will set out in more detail what Professor Elliot believes is required of Government as well as the wider industry.

While food authenticity is primarily an FSA responsibility here, it is clearly an issue that will impact on the future sustainability of our entire agri-food sector. I have a fundamental interest in all issues which impact upon the resilience and sustainability of agricultural production, including consumer confidence in the food industry. Once the final report is published, my Department will work closely with the FSA to identify where they can work together for the integrity of our agri-food industry.

Coastal and Flood Defences: North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, in light of the recent tidal surges, what assessment is being carried out of the coastal and flood defences in North Down.

(AQW 29639/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The only coastal defence in North Down for which Rivers Agency has responsibility is located at Kinnegar. Responsibility for the defence is shared with 2 other public authorities. Whilst it was not overtopped during the recent storms, there was some minor ponding of water behind it and the Agency is liaising with the other authorities to clarify responsibilities for any necessary maintenance and repair.

Coastal Defences: North Down

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what work is planned, in conjunction with other agencies, to upgrade sea defences along the North Down coast at (i) Hollywood; (ii) Groomsport; and (iii) Donaghadee.

(AQW 29641/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: In relation to Hollywood, during the recent coastal storms there was some relatively minor ponding of water behind the sea defence. Rivers Agency shares responsibility for sections of this defence with two other public authorities and discussions are currently ongoing to establish where responsibility for maintenance and repair lies.

Whilst Rivers Agency has no responsibility for sea defences at Groomsport or Donaghadee, it has developed detailed mapping of coastal flood risk for the whole of the north of Ireland which it is already sharing with key infrastructure owners and the public.

The Agency is willing to provide whatever additional support is required by other organisations in their assessment of the infrastructure and coastal defences for which they are responsible.

Common Agricultural Policy: Active Farmer

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the definition of active farmer which will apply under the new Common Agricultural Policy arrangements.

(AQW 29728/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: There are a number of provisions in the EU Regulations on CAP Reform which relate to active farmer.

The Basic Act provides for no direct payments to be granted to applicants whose agricultural areas are mainly areas naturally kept in a state suitable for grazing or cultivation and the minimum activity defined by Member States/regions is not carried out on that area.

The Basic Act also provides for no direct payments to be granted to applicants who operate airports, railway services, water-works, real estate services, and permanent sport and recreational grounds unless they can meet one of the following criteria:

- Their annual amount of direct payments is at least 5% of the total receipts from non agricultural activities in the most recent fiscal year for which evidence is available,
- Their agricultural activities are not insignificant,
- Their principal business or company objects consist of exercising an agricultural activity.

It is possible for Member States/regions to add similar types of non agricultural businesses or activities to the list referred to above.

The draft Delegated Act which, has not yet been adopted, states that the in line with the case law of the Court of Justice of the European Union, payment entitlements should be allocated to the person enjoying decision making power, benefits and financial risks in relation to the agricultural activity on the land for which such allocation is requested.

The provision in the draft Delegated Act has particular relevance for land let under conacre arrangements.

I hope you find this helpful.

Broadband: Rural Areas

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQO 4130/11-15 and given her commitment to provide high speed broadband to rural dwellers, for an update on the progress made during the last six months on this objective. (AQW 29826/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department through the 'Next Generation Broadband' project has already invested £2.5m in rural broadband and this has lead to almost 14,500 rural dwellers and businesses now having a connection to broadband.

In addition to this funding my Department is also contributing £5m to the NI Broadband Improvement Project which is being taken forward by DETI. The tender process for this project has completed and the response is being carefully evaluated to ensure best value for money. Assuming a satisfactory conclusion to the evaluation process and, pending necessary approvals, it is anticipated that a contract will be awarded in the next few weeks with implementation commencing shortly thereafter and completing in 2015.

Animal Cruelty: Sentencing

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the sentencing framework and maximum sentence available for animal cruelty. (AQW 30023/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department brought forward a new Welfare of Animals Act in 2011, which significantly increased the penalties for animal welfare offences to a maximum of 6 months imprisonment and/or a maximum fine of £5,000 on summary conviction; and on conviction by indictment to a maximum of 2 years imprisonment and/or an unlimited fine. These penalties reflect the fact that causing unnecessary suffering to any animal is a very serious offence.

Sentencing within the legislative framework is a matter for the Judiciary. I am advised that the Lord Chief Justice, in his Programme of Action on Sentencing, published new sentencing guidelines for Magistrates' Courts in December 2013. The guidelines cover offences of animal cruelty, tail docking of dogs' tails and animal fighting and are available on the Judicial Studies Board website.

Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure

Capital Projects: North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the major capital projects in the North Down constituency that will be funded by her Department in (i) 2014; and (ii) 2015. (AQW 29510/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): Thank you for clarifying the meaning of major in this context to be capital investments in excess of £50k.

Budgets are allocated according to financial years. I can report that no capital investment meeting your definition has yet been allocated to the North Down constituency for the financial year 2014/15.

The Executive has not yet set budgets for 2015/16 so no allocations have been made in any constituency.

I am able to draw the member's attention to capital investment in his constituency in previous years. From 2008/09 to 2012/13, Sport NI invested £14.439m in partnership with North Down Borough Council to fund the Olympic Standard 50m pool.

In addition to this, resource projects with a total value of £1.081m were funded by the Department and its sponsored bodies in the North Down constituency during this period.

Loughside Playing Fields

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail what information she or her Department has on the proposal by Crusaders Football Club to develop a new stadium at Loughside Playing Fields. (AQW 29651/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I do not have any information regarding development proposals by Crusaders Football Club.

Furthermore, as funding for the development of sub-regional association football stadiums has yet to be secured, no decision of any kind on funding to assist the development of any sub-regional stadiums has been taken.

Brandywell Stadium: Redevelopment

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail (i) the funding awarded to Derry City Council for the redevelopment of Brandywell Stadium; and (ii) how this funding will be allocated.

(AQW 29690/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: DCAL has awarded no funding to Derry City Council for the redevelopment of Brandywell Stadium.

On 23 October 2013, I announced that my Department will invest at least £2million towards the Daisyfield/Showgrounds as part of City of Culture capital legacy projects in 2014/15.

My officials are working with Derry City Council as they take forward this project.

City of Culture 2013: Legacy

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, in relation to the legacy of the funding provided for the City of Culture 2013, to detail (i) the projects that will receive funding between January and March 2014; (ii) when the project list was prepared prior to her announcement; (iii) how the list was prepared; and (iv) if these projects were put out to tender.

(AQW 29873/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I have secured over £2m for the January to March 2014 period to support continuation of key projects from the City of Culture's cultural programme and to prevent the loss of key benefits, partnerships and momentum after December 2013. This will also include strategic investment to sports facility development.

Supported projects will include:

- Music projects, for example key elements of the Music Promise project and the return of Other Voices to Derry in February 2014;
- Digital projects, for example continuation of the Portrait of a City project and digital skills provision;
- Literacy skills projects, for example the Disobey Gravity programme;
- Community projects delivered under Community Cultural Strategies developed for neighbourhood renewal areas;
- A pilot creative voucher scheme, which includes a focus on the North West, designed to stimulate new collaborations between creative enterprises and businesses from a diverse range of other sectors;
- Expansion of the Nerve Centre's Fab Lab with a wider North West emphasis; and
- Sports facility development in Coleraine and Dungiven.

In addition I have made funding available for the purchase of Eamonn O'Doherty's Armoured Pram, Lumiere's Stitch in Time piece and a portable community venue, subject to appropriate contractual agreements.

Legacy funding has been allocated on the basis of need to continue key projects from the 2013 cultural programme, and in the context of my Department's priorities and Business Plan. My officials worked closely with stakeholders in Derry, including Derry City Council and Culture Company, throughout 2013 to consider which Cultural Programme projects and benefits might be jeopardised if support ceased at December 2013. Final business cases were approved in November 2013.

The aim is to promote the positive continuance of key benefits, partnerships and momentum after December 2013 and to invest in the development of modern sports facilities.

It is my intention to make a bid to the Executive for funding for the 2014/ 15 financial year to support ongoing and new interventions which maximise City of Culture benefits across the North West of Ireland in tackling poverty, social exclusion and inequality.

Department of Education

Third Sector Organisations: Funding

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) all third sector organisations funded by the Department who provide services to the public; and (ii) the value of each contract.

(AQW 29410/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): The third sector organisations funded directly by the Department are detailed in the table below.

Organisation	Grant -Aid
ChildLine	£260,000
Early Years – the Organisation for Young Children	£1,228,000
East Belfast Partnership – Easter School 2013	£9,030

Organisation	Grant -Aid
Greater Shankill Partnership – Summer Transition School 2013	£20,372
North Belfast Partnership – Easter School 2013	£20,371
North Belfast Partnership - Summer Transition School 2013	£13,525
South Belfast Partnership – Easter School 2013	£17,614
South Belfast Partnership – Summer Transition School 2013	£11,616
West Belfast Partnership – Easter School 2013	£5,906
West Belfast Partnership – Summer Transition School 2013	£35,274
The Pushkin Trust	£25,000
Business in the Community – Time to Read	£50,000

General Teaching Council for Northern Ireland: Registrar

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the qualifications and ability of the Registrar of General Teaching Council Northern Ireland to make a claim that unregulated transfer selection tests are of dubious validity, reliability or comparability.

(AQW 29491/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I have asked officials to check whether such a claim has been made by the Registrar and will write to the Member when I have further information, if I deem it appropriate to do so.

I am also advised that the Registrar has no published background in psychometrics.

General Teaching Council for Northern Ireland: Registrar

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education to provide the Registrar of the General Teaching Council NI's published background in psychometrics.

(AQW 29492/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I have asked officials to check whether such a claim has been made by the Registrar and will write to the Member when I have further information, if I deem it appropriate to do so.

I am also advised that the Registrar has no published background in psychometrics.

Community Relations, Equality and Diversity Enhancement Scheme

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of schools that (i) applied for; and (ii) received funding through the Community Relations, Equality and Diversity (CRED) Enhancement Scheme in (a) 2012/13; and (ii) 2013/14.

(AQW 29626/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I can confirm that in 2012/13 and 2013/14, Education and Library Boards (ELBs) received the following applications for funding through the CRED Enhancement Scheme:

Year	No. of Applications Received for CRED Enhancement Scheme Funding	No. of Applications Approved to Receive CRED Enhancement Scheme Funding	No. of Schools Involved in Projects Approved to Receive CRED Enhancement Scheme Funding
2012/13	113	101	174
2013/14	142	109	181

This response provides information on the number of applications received by ELBs, some applications are for projects which involve 2 or more schools.

Special Educational Needs and Disability Tribunal

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the legal force of a ruling of a Special Educational Needs and Disability Tribunal; and whether parents are compelled to comply with the rulings in relation to school choice.

(AQW 29636/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Article 23A of the Education ( NI ) Order 1996 places a duty on education and library boards to comply with orders made by the Special Educational Needs and Disability Tribunal. Article 23(5) of that Order provides that a person who without reasonable excuse fails to grant discovery of documents or fails to comply with a requirement to attend as a witness commits a criminal offence.

Notwithstanding the legal redress available to any party to an appeal to the Special Educational Needs and Disability Tribunal, Article 16 (4A) of the Education (NI) Order 1996 does not require the name of a school or institution to be specified if the child's parent has made suitable arrangements for the special education provision specified in the statement to be made for the child.

If the child's parent does not make suitable arrangements as specified above or place the child in the school as directed by the ruling of a tribunal then the parent may be in contravention of Article 45 (1) of the Education and Libraries (Northern Ireland) Order 1986, that is:

"The parent of every child of compulsory school age shall cause him to receive efficient full-time education suitable to his age, ability and aptitude and to any special educational needs he may have, either by regular attendance at school or otherwise."

Irish Language

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Education how much is spent annually on teaching the Irish language as a subject in schools.

(AQW 29752/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Modern languages are a statutory requirement at Key Stage 3, and a qualification choice at Key Stage 4 and sixth form. Schools can choose to deliver any of the languages of the 27 EU member states, including Irish.

To support primary schools wishing to deliver language learning the Primary Language Programme was introduced in 2007 to give pupils at Foundation Stage/Key Stage 1 the opportunity to learn an additional language in school. There are currently 88 primary schools learning Irish through this programme.

It is up to individual schools to decide how to deploy the resources available to them from their delegated budgets to fund the delivery of all subjects in the curriculum. The Department does not hold information on the languages schools choose to teach or how much each school spends in this area.

Teachers: Qualifications

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the recent comments by the Chief Inspector of OFSTED on the use of unqualified teachers in schools.

(AQW 29774/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I am aware that the Ofsted Chief Inspector has commented that headteachers in England should be allowed to hire unqualified teaching staff if they consider them to be the right person for their school. However he also said that it was a headteacher's job to ensure that such staff are accredited as soon as possible. The Chief Inspector's statement should be read in the context of England where there is a significant shortage of qualified teachers.

My policy is clear. In order to be eligible to teach in schools here, all teachers should be qualified and registered with the General Teaching Council. The Department's Circular DE 2007/22 sets out the minimum qualification requirements needed to be eligible to teach in our schools.

There may occasionally be circumstances in which it is not possible to employ a qualified teacher, for example, for a short-term period. Legislation enables employing authorities to employ an unqualified teacher for up to four weeks.

My Department has been and continues to be active in challenging schools where it has been found that they are employing unqualified teachers beyond that four week period. I am pleased to say that instances where unqualified teachers are being employed in breach of the legislation are exceptionally rare.

Educational Psychologists: Education and Library Boards

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education how many educational psychologists were employed in each Education and Library board in each of the last three years.

(AQW 29775/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The number of educational psychologists employed in each Education and Library Board, in each of the last 3 years, (headcount as at 15 January) is listed below:

SEELB	31	37	37
SELB	34	34	35
WELB	21	22	23
BELB	34	35	36

NEELB	26	30	30

Educational Psychologists: Waiting Times

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education to outline the average waiting times for a pupil to be seen by an Educational Psychologist in each Education and Library Board; and the reasons for any differences.

(AQW 29776/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education and Library Boards have confirmed that the average waiting time between a pupil being referred to an educational psychologist and having their first appointment, during the period June 2013 to December 2013, is as follows:

BELB	18 days
NEELB	37 days
SEELB	116 days
SELB	63 days
WELB	60 days

These figures refer to Stage 3 (non-statutory assessments) as outlined in the Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs (COP).

With regard to the waiting time for an assessment in terms of statutory requirements, at Stage 4 of the COP, the ELBs consider the need for a statutory assessment of special educational needs which will include an assessment by an educational psychologist. ELBs have 16 weeks from the date that the ELB notifies the parents that it is considering making an assessment or from the date that the request to carry out an assessment is received by the ELB from the parent or the school to complete the assessment.

The reasons for differences in average waiting times between the ELBs are largely due to natural fluctuations in staffing levels caused, for example, by illness, maternity leave or retirement.

School Properties: Disposal of

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Education to outline any plans he has to dispose of unused school properties; and what are the estimated value of these properties.

(AQW 29793/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department does not own property or land; responsibility for property is dependent on the type of school.

Voluntary Grammar, Maintained and Grant Maintained Integrated schools are the responsibility of each school's Trustees, who will make decisions on the use or sale of vacant properties.

The relevant Education and Library Board (ELB) is responsible for school properties in the Controlled Sector. In keeping with Land & Property Services' (LPS) Guidance 'Central Advisory Unit: Disposal of Surplus Public Sector Property in Northern Ireland March 2013' the ELBs keep their property under continual review and release surplus property with the least possible delay. This is important as proceeds from the sale of surplus education assets are reinvested in capital works needed within the existing school estate.

The current available estimated value of ELB properties listed for disposal, between April 2014 – March 2016, is approximately £8 million.

This figure is based on the following factors:

- the total is derived from properties currently listed on the Asset Disposal register as advised by the ELBs
- open market valuations, provided by LPS, are subject to review every 6 months
- several properties are still in the process of being valued by LPS

Not all properties may have reached the final 'open market' stage of disposal which is managed by LPS.

Proceeds actually realised will depend on many factors including legal issues arising and planning permission but most notably the fluctuations in market valuations and the prevailing property market conditions.

Child Abuse or Neglect: Threshold

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Education what is the threshold for which a child abuse or child neglect allegation will be deemed serious enough by the Education and Library Boards to inform the PSNI and Gateway services.

(AQW 29798/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Referrals are made to PSNI or the Gateway teams when there is concern that a child may have been the victim of abuse. Signs and symptoms of abuse are set out in DE circular 1999/10 'Pastoral Care in Schools: Child Protection' and in the DHSSPS guidance 'Cooperating to Safeguard Children'.

Referrals are normally made by schools' staff, as the parties in direct contact with the child and the Education and Library Boards' Child Protection Support Service for Schools acts in support of schools' staff through the provision of advice and training on child protection matters.

Threats and Intimidation: Reporting of

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education whether he has reported to the PSNI the instances of threats and intimidation of which he claimed knowledge in the Assembly on 14 January 2014.

(AQW 29841/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: No.

Special Educational Needs: North Eastern Education and Library Board

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education how many assessments for Special Educational Needs were conducted within the North Eastern Education and Library Board in 2013; and what was the average waiting time from referral.

(AQW 29843/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The North Eastern Education and Library Board (NEELB) has advised that 375 statutory assessments of pupils' special educational needs were completed in 2013.

The average waiting time for those 375 pupils' assessments, from referral to completion, was 20.32 weeks.

Preschool Applications: Administrative Errors

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education, in each of the last three years, how many application forms have been returned to parents of pre-school children in each Education and Library Board because of administrative errors by the local Social Security Agency office.

(AQW 29857/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: This information is not recorded. Pre-school settings are responsible for administering the admissions process and parents submit their pre-school application forms directly to their first preference setting.

Common Funding Formula: Consultation

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Education for an update on the outcome of the Common Funding Formula consultation, which concluded on 25 October 2013.

(AQW 29875/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: At the closing date of 25 October, nearly 15,000 consultation responses were received to the main consultation. A full analysis of those responses is currently underway and as I have previously stated, I will not be making any final decisions until a full analysis of all these consultation responses has been carried out. I will give careful consideration to the views of all those who responded.

The changes to the Common Funding Scheme (CFS) remain on track for delivery for the new financial year and I intend to make my final decisions and advise schools of their actual allocations as soon as possible.

I will arrange for a consultation summary to be published on the DE website, shared with the Education Committee and placed in the Assembly Library in due course.

Free School Meals: Provision and Uptake

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education what plans his Department has to increase the provision and uptake of free school meals.

(AQW 29973/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Children from families on low incomes and those living in poverty face significant barriers in accessing and benefiting from a good education. The provision of healthy free school meals helps address the particular challenges that these children face in accessing and participating fully in school life, in improving their learning outcomes and ultimately their lifetime opportunities. It is a key measure, therefore, through which my Department contributes to the statutory target to eradicate child poverty here by 2020 and to the Programme for Government commitment to tackle disadvantage.

On 11 June 2013 I announced my intention to adjust the eligibility criteria for free school meals so that from September 2014, the same eligibility criteria for free school meals for both primary and postprimary pupils will apply. This will benefit an estimated additional 15,000 children from lower income households.

A number of actions are being taken forward by my Department, working with the Education and Library Boards (ELBs) and the School Catering Service to ensure that all those entitled to receive free school meals receive this important benefit. For example, the Resource Allocation Plans for each of the ELBs include targets to maintain or increase the uptake of all school meals and of free school meals.

Each year the ELBs issue press releases, send out renewal applications and issue letters and posters to schools, the Social Security Agency, the Citizens Advice Bureau and libraries. The School Catering Service continuously seeks to increase uptake of school meals undertaking a range of activities including, for example, the installation of cashless catering systems in a number of post-primary schools to reduce any stigma associated with free school meals, sending menus home and placing these on school websites, providing meal deals, arranging theme days and taster sessions for parents and pupils.

My officials are also working with colleagues in the Department of Social Development to take forward a joint project to encourage the uptake of free school meals as part of the work of the Inter-Departmental Group on Benefit Uptake (IDGBU).

Department for Employment and Learning

Stranmillis University College/Queen's University Belfast: Merger

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, in regard to the proposed merger of Stranmillis College with Queens University, and the issues disclosed by PRONI, whether the Catholic Church has indicated to the Department their current position in regard to a Catholic Teacher Training College.

(AQW 29528/11-15)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): You will be aware that the second stage of the review of the Initial Teacher Education Infrastructure in Northern Ireland is underway. The review panel requested submissions from interested stakeholders on relevant issues that should be taken account of in considering options for a more shared and integrated system for the delivery and funding of teacher education. The panel has received a significant number of submissions which include a number from Catholic Church representatives. The key themes from the submissions will be summarised in a report to be published on my Department's website.

Legal Professional Studies: Magee Campus, University of Ulster

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail how many (i) students are enrolled in this academic year, in legal professional studies, at Magee campus; and (ii) staff teach the course.

(AQW 29530/11-15)

Dr Farry: My Department does not hold information on numbers of students enrolled in this academic year, in legal professional studies, at Magee campus, nor numbers of staff that teach the course. Officials, therefore, sought this information from the University of Ulster and their response is attached at Annex A.

Annex A

- (i) In the 2013/14 academic session 16 trainees are registered on the postgraduate professional legal studies programme offered at the University of Ulster, Magee campus.
- (ii) Four members of University staff contribute to teaching on the programme who are supported by legal practitioners who are specialists in their area.

Stranmillis University College/Queen's University Belfast: Merger

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Employment and Learning in relation to a proposed merger of Stranmillis College with Queens University, to what extent do the issues disclosed by PRONI apply in the present considerations, specifically but not exclusively in the retention of St Mary's Teacher Training College as a unique establishment.

(AQW 29575/11-15)

Dr Farry: The Panel appointed to review Initial Teacher Education Infrastructure in Northern Ireland will take into account all relevant issues, including previous reports, in considering options for a more shared and integrated system for the delivery and funding of teacher education.

The panel has received a significant number of submissions on the review from the Initial Teacher Education providers and a variety of interested stakeholders.

At this stage the findings of the panel cannot be anticipated and they will be meeting with the providers and stakeholders scheduled for the coming weeks.

Further and Higher Education Colleges: Disability Discrimination Act

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 27902/11-15, for his assessment of the provision provided by Omagh Campus and its staff, and whether he has any plans to replicate this provision across other South West College campuses.

(AQW 29589/11-15)

Dr Farry: It is my desire that all students with learning difficulties, who have the ability to participate in FE provision, can access excellent educational opportunities. I am content that all further education colleges continue to provide such opportunities.

In relation to provision at the Omagh Campus of South West College (SWC), I am aware of the range of courses offered, which are reflective of local demand and financial viability.

The scale and level of provision, available across all campuses, remains the responsibility of the College and is in line with the level of demand within the catchment areas of these campuses. Therefore, in view of your question, my officials will seek comment from SWC on any plans, which it may have, for the remaining campuses, and I will write to you again, following receipt of this response.

Steps 2 Success: Pre-qualification Quotation

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, in relation to the Steps2Success Pre-Qualification Quotation, to outline the organisations which (i) applied for consideration for each of the delivery areas; and (ii) were successful in their application for each of the delivery areas.

(AQW 29608/11-15)

Dr Farry:

- (i) The outcome of Stage 1 of the procurement process for Steps 2 Success was notified to all tendering organisations on Monday 18 November 2013. To protect the integrity of the procurement process of the Steps 2 Success competition it is not possible to release information relating to those organisations who applied for each of the contract areas but were not successful.
- (ii) My department has published details of those organisations who were successful at Stage 1 of the Steps 2 Success Competition on its website as follows:

Contract Area 1: Andersonstown, Bangor, North Belfast, Falls, Holywood Road, Knockbreda, Lisburn, Newtownards, Shaftesbury Square, Shankill.

Successful Organisations

G4S has withdrawn from the competition for the Steps 2 Success competition for Contract Area 3.

Steps 2 Success: Pre-qualification Quotation

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to confirm that each of the organisations which were successful in the Steps2Success Pre-Qualification Quotation had applied specifically for consideration in the delivery area in which they were successful.

(AQW 29609/11-15)

Dr Farry: Each organisation was selected on the basis of being one of the top 6 ranked candidates in the area(s) that they had indicated they wished to be considered for as detailed in question CA1 of the Stage 1 published requirements as below.

Below is an extract from the Central Procurement Directorate electronic tendering system:

"[CA1] Contract Areas Applied For: Candidates must list which contract areas they wish to be considered for. Candidates may be invited to tender for more than one (or all) contract areas, but may only be awarded one contract area."

European Commission: Grand Coalition for Digital Jobs

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 28186, to detail his involvement in the work of the EU's Grand Coalition for Digital Jobs.

(AQW 29659/11-15)

Dr Farry: The Grand Coalition for Digital Jobs is an initiative aimed at increasing the overall supply of digitally skilled professionals and to better match supply and demand of digital skills. The European Commission is leading this multi-stakeholder partnership to tackle the lack of ICT skills and the several hundred of thousands of unfilled ICT-related vacancies throughout the European Union.

The Coalition was launched in March 2013 by President José Manuel Barroso, Vice-Presidents Neelie Kroes and Antonio Tajani, Commissioners László Andor and Androulla Vassiliou.

The Grand Coalition has received more than 40 pledges so far, including from large companies such as Google, Telefonica, SAP, Microsoft and Cisco. In addition, national coalitions are being developed in more than 10 Member States with the aim of facilitating action at the local level. For example, Lithuania, Poland and Romania have officially launched their national coalitions.

Officials in my Department are currently engaging with officials in the European Commission to explore how Northern Ireland can pledge its support to the Grand Coalition for Digital Jobs and contribute effectively to its aims and objectives.

I am committed to ensuring that local ICT employers have access to the skilled workforce they need now and in the future in order to grow and enhance the sector. The ICT Skills Working Group, which I established and Chair, utilises a multi-stakeholder approach using collaborative action to address skills mismatches in the digital/ICT sector.

I am very keen to explore how we can share the best practice approach in relation to ICT skills, developed in Northern Ireland, with the European Commission and other national and regional actors in the European Union.

Officials in my Department have also been exploring the possibility of submitting an application to a Call for Proposals under the PROGRESS funding stream which is seeking to identify effective implementation measures, good practice and innovative approaches with a special emphasis on the employment potential of ICT and the Grand Coalition for Digital Jobs.

Special Educational Needs: Post-19 Review

Ms McGahan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on (i) the review of post 19 special educational needs in respect of (a) further educational needs; (b) disability employment service; and (c) transitions; and (ii) how this is progressing in South Tyrone.

(AQW 29762/11-15)

Dr Farry: My Department is committed to ensuring that all students with learning difficulties and/or disabilities, who have the ability to participate in further education provision, can access quality educational opportunities. I am content that all further education colleges continue to provide such opportunities, including those colleges which serve the South Tyrone catchment area.

I am aware that access to such provision can be an issue, especially in rural areas. Therefore I instructed my officials to examine access to transport for students with a learning difficulty and/or disability, aged 19 and over. My Department will consider a course of action and develop proposals, once this initial piece of work has been completed.

The Disability Employment Service is fully committed to playing its part to ensure that young people with disabilities are provided with the tailored support and assistance they need to help them achieve their employment goals.

A strategic review of my Department's Disability Employment Service (DES) is underway. To inform this review, an overarching Disability Employment Strategy is being developed with the aim of having a draft Strategy available by April 2014, which will then be subject to a public consultation.

A Working Group has been established to take forward the Strategy and membership includes a number of key representatives from the local disability sector. In addition, a number of user engagement events have been scheduled throughout Northern Ireland, to ensure that the views of people with disabilities are also considered as part of the development of the strategy.

The Health and Social Care Board commissioned a review of Day Opportunities and recently concluded a public consultation on proposals on a "Regional Learning Disability Day Opportunities Model" for consideration. DEL officials have met with Health colleagues to discuss their proposals and how we, with others, can work together to facilitate improving the Transition services across a number of key Departments' responsibilities.

My Department's Careers advisers are actively involved in the transition planning process and during the 2012/13 academic year, attended 1055 transition planning meetings. Working with multi-disciplinary teams, including teachers and educational psychologists, they contribute to the young person's Transition Plan by providing impartial careers guidance on the range of educational, training and employment opportunities available to them.

In South Tyrone the Careers Service has a partnership agreement in place with Sperrinview School and attended all transition planning, annual review meetings and parents evenings to which they were invited during the 2012/13 academic year. The Careers Service also provides services to learners attending Parkanaur College in partnership with DEL colleagues from the Disability Employment Service. This includes supporting learners as they progress towards completion of their training to assist them in making the transition back to their home area in planning the next stage of their career.

The Careers Service has developed and implemented a social inclusion policy which focuses on addressing the needs of young people facing, or vulnerable to, social exclusion, including young people with a severe learning difficulty. It has established working relationships with the relevant statutory, voluntary and community sector bodies across Northern Ireland with a shared interest in supporting clients vulnerable to social exclusion.

I have raised the issue of transition with the Inter-Ministerial Group on Mental Health and Learning Disability in November 2013. As a result, OFMDFM are co-ordinating discussions between all relevant departments under the auspices of the Executive's Disability Strategy.

Veterinary Degree: Coleraine Campus, University of Ulster

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the introduction of the Veterinary Degree at the Coleraine campus of the University of Ulster.

(AQO 5312/11-15)

Dr Farry: The University of Ulster has signalled an intention to offer courses in veterinary medicine commencing in the 2015/16 academic year. My Department has requested that the university prepares a strategic business case to demonstrate that there is demand for such courses in Northern Ireland, that they are sustainable, and to outline how these will contribute to the economic growth of the region. My Department awaits the submission of the strategic business case and further more detailed analysis may be required once the strategic case has been considered by the Department.

Manufacturing: Skills Gap

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline any discussions he has had with representatives of the manufacturing industry to help fill the current skills gap in the sector.

(AQO 5314/11-15)

Dr Farry: I recognise the importance of the manufacturing sector to our economy and I have established two sectoral working groups: the Advanced Manufacturing and Engineering Services Working Group, which I Chair; and the Food and Drink Manufacturing and Processing Future Skills Action Group, which I co-chair with Tony O'Neill, Director of Moy Park Limited.

These Groups bring together employers, academia, employer representative bodies and Government, such as the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, the Department of Education, the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, and Invest NI.

This ensures departments, together, can address the current and future skill needs of the sector.

Each Group has an action plan setting out what they intend to implement under three themes: Skills Provision; Sector Attractiveness; and Co-ordination and Communication.

My Department has recently commissioned research into advanced manufacturing and engineering services skill needs, and this report will be published shortly.

Currently, the Groups are taking forward a number of agreed initiatives such as:

- the commencement of the first phase of a higher level apprenticeship in engineering;
- the creation of a Computer Numerical Control Machining Conversion course;
- a Food Engineering Apprenticeship, which commenced on 6 January 2014;
- a Tasty Careers Programme led by Improve Sector Skills Council, which promotes the food and drink manufacturing industry; this is being funded for a second year by my Department; and
- Breakfast Clinics for food manufacturing employers, in conjunction with other Government Departments; these aim to raise awareness of skills provision available and how to access it.

In addition, my Department's Skills Solutions team works with individual businesses in the manufacturing sector to help employers understand and access available training provision. This service is available to local industry to enable companies to up-skill and re-skill their employees.

Unemployment

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of the opportunities to reduce levels of unemployment in 2014.

(AQO 5315/11-15)

Dr Farry: The Department for Enterprise Trade and Investment takes the lead in job creation with Invest NI having responsibility for promoting 25,000 new jobs by 2015. This is being achieved by supporting new business starts, encouraging locally-owned businesses to grow and develop in external markets and by winning new and follow-on investment. During this Programme for Government period, Invest NI support has already led to the promotion of over 18,000 jobs.

Delivering the actions set out within the Executive's Economy and Jobs Initiative will lead to increased job opportunities and reduced levels of unemployment in the future.

To support this excellent work, my Department offers a wide range of programmes and initiatives to equip people with the necessary knowledge and skills to find and sustain employment.

A priority for 2014 is to ensure that employers have access to appropriately skilled employees and provide people, particularly young people, with the opportunity to secure and sustain meaningful employment.

The Training for Success Programme enables participants to progress to higher level training, further education, or employment by providing opportunities to address personal and social development needs, develop occupational skills, employability skills and Essential Skills in literacy, numeracy and ICT.

The Assured Skills programme has led to the delivery of graduate academies as a short term intervention to meet the identified needs of companies.

The Employment Service has a network of offices that support employers and jobseekers. We are developing a new adult employment programme, Steps 2 Success, as a replacement for Steps to Work which will provide more flexible, individually tailored, longer- term support.

My Department is also leading on the development of an Economic Inactivity Strategy. I, together with the Minister for Enterprise, Trade and Investment, will launch the public consultation exercise this month. I encourage members to contribute to the consultation process.

Invest NI: Foreign Direct Investment

Mr Mitchel McLaughlin asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how his Department works with InvestNI to identify the reasons for foreign direct investors opting not to locate locally.

(AQO 5316/11-15)

Dr Farry: Northern Ireland continues to be successful in attracting high value foreign direct investment particularly in the Software and Information Technology sectors, winning a greater share of inward investment, relative to population, than other regions.

I am confident that the joint efforts of Invest Northern Ireland and my Department are making Northern Ireland one of the most attractive locations for investment.

There are a range of factors why some companies do not locate in Northern Ireland and only companies themselves can provide their very specific reasons.

What I do know is that a very substantial focus is being applied across Government to ensure that Northern Ireland is attractive to investors.

The Northern Ireland proposition is based on a combination of quality and cost competitiveness. We have a ready supply of skilled and talented people, excellent links between universities and businesses, an advanced telecommunications infrastructure and world class companies operating in key knowledge-based sectors.

Operating costs are highly competitive and can be significantly lower than many regions of the UK and Europe, including the Republic of Ireland.

My officials work closely with Invest Northern Ireland to ensure that we make the best possible proposition to potential investors, and my Department's Assured Skills programme is now a critical part of the offers made.

Assured Skills is designed to guarantee employers the skills they need to support a growing business can be found in Northern Ireland.

During the financial year 2013/14 Assured Skills has already supported the creation of 1,460 jobs across four projects, with funding of £1.306 million committed from my Department. Set alongside complementary support from Invest Northern Ireland, these results would suggest that Assured Skills support has been crucial in securing jobs for Northern Ireland.

There are regular meetings between my officials and colleagues in Invest Northern Ireland to discuss the pipeline of potential investors.

North/South Ministerial Council: Departmental Priorities

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how his departmental priorities contribute to the work of the North South Ministerial Council.

(AQO 5317/11-15)

Dr Farry: My Department and I are committed to working on a north-south basis and identifying and developing opportunities for co-operation and mutual benefit to both jurisdictions.

The work of my Department does not currently fall within the six areas of co-operation as originally set out in the Good Friday Agreement. I am open to this being reconsidered in the Review of the North South Ministerial Council.

Areas of ongoing co-operation include student flows and student access in both further and higher education, research, unemployment, in particular youth unemployment, employment relations, and apprenticeships.

North West Regional College: McConnell Report

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister for Employment and Learning why changes were made to the agreed action plan on the implementation of the McConnell recommendations at the North West Regional College.

(AQO 5318/11-15)

Dr Farry: North West Regional College developed a plan detailing the actions required to implement the recommendations of the McConnell report. This was developed and agreed with stakeholders, including the University and College Union. I would like to note the encouraging progress which has already occurred in the implementation of the action plan.

The plan included a monitoring role, against a number of actions, for a College Improvement Team. The Governing Body had signalled that this Team would be established to lead a process of college strategy development and improvement across the College as a whole. However, there has been considerable delay in establishing this team with its wide ranging role, because the Governing Body has prioritised the implementation of the McConnell report.

The Department's role in the process is to monitor progress and ensure that the changes recommended in the report are fully implemented. The fact that the College Improvement Team was not established and therefore not performing its required function in respect of the Action Plan, was a matter of concern. As a result, it was agreed with the College to strengthen the accountability arrangements and formally transfer oversight responsibility for those actions, initially assigned to the College Improvement Team, to the full Governing Body. In practice, the Governing Body had been fulfilling this role in the absence of a College Improvement Team.

This is the only change which has been made to the Action Plan. There has been no change to any action within the plan. The change ensures that the process is robust by providing direct lines of accountability to the Governing Body, which has ultimate oversight of both the implementation of McConnell and the improvement programme in the College.

Irish-medium Courses: Further and Higher Education

Ms Ruane asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the introduction of courses at Further and Higher Education level being delivered through the medium of Irish.

(AQO 5319/11-15)

Dr Farry: Further education colleges currently deliver a range of Irish language courses, including short courses and accredited courses, such as GCSE and A-Level. In addition, four colleges list their mainstream Irish language provision on the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure's Líofo website.

All further education colleges remain prepared to deliver further education courses through the medium of Irish, where sufficient demand exists.

Higher Education courses are currently being delivered through the medium of Irish at Queen's University, the University of Ulster and St. Mary's University College. Courses include Diploma in Irish Language, Bachelor's Degree in Irish Language, Master's Degree in Irish Translation and an Irish Medium Postgraduate Certificate in Education.

Beyond the statutory further education sector, a pilot was established within my Department's Training for Success programme, to deliver vocational training through the medium of Irish. This was provided through a sub-contracting arrangement between one of my Department's contracted training suppliers and GaelChursaí, which was formed in February 2011, to provide training and develop employment opportunities within the Irish medium sector. Furthermore, my Department also sought to extend Steps to Work provision to support training through the medium of Irish. In both cases, there was insufficient demand.

Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment

Energy: Unconventional Oil and Gas

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail whether (i) she will introduce additional regulations and/or legislation to govern the development of unconventional oil and gas; and (ii) new regulations or legislation will be in place before unconventional oil/gas extraction is permitted to take place.

(AQW 29654/11-15)

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): The preparation for possible unconventional oil and gas development in Northern Ireland, and its regulation, will require input from several government departments and other bodies. Whilst DETI has the initial role in licensing and regulating of petroleum exploration, DOE would be the principal regulator for Shale Gas development through its environmental and planning responsibilities.

The Shale Gas Regulators' Forum, established as a joint initiative by myself and the former DOE Planning Minister continues to keep the legislative and regulatory requirements needed to support possible development under review; and where appropriate, will coordinate these functions and facilitate cooperation.

Trade: Island-wide Proposals

Mr G Kelly asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline her proposals to enhance island-wide trade. (AQO 5328/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Through my Department Invest NI and InterTradeIreland both work on a collaborative and individual basis to progress trade and business development in Northern Ireland and Ireland. Latest figures show that the total combined cross border trade in goods increased by 10.5% in 2012, to £2.3 billion. This has largely been achieved through the delivery of a wide range of activities and programmes including InterTradeIreland's All-Island Procurement initiative and their cross border sales programme Acumen, where Invest NI and InterTradeIreland work closely. Invest NI also provides Northern Ireland businesses with a wide range of financial assistance and other support to help them sell their products and services in export markets, including the Republic of Ireland.

Along with UK Trade and Investment, Invest NI and Enterprise Ireland continue to work together to identify suitable joint initiatives to grow global trade and exports. This is in recognition of the importance of other emerging export markets that Northern Ireland needs to exploit.

Renewable Energy: Meetings

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what recent meetings she has had with the Irish and British Governments on the proposed Inter-Governmental Agreement on Renewable Energy. (AQO 5329/11-15)

Mrs Foster: I have had no meetings with either Government as the Intergovernmental Agreement is a matter between the UK and Irish Governments. However, my Department has representation on the Steering Group which has been formed by the two Governments to examine if a trading arrangement may be beneficial to both parties. This Steering Group meets on a monthly basis.

Unemployment: Foyle

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, outside of the Economic Inactivity Strategy Framework, what action her Department is taking to address unemployment rates in the Foyle constituency. (AQO 5330/11-15)

Mrs Foster: High levels of Economic Inactivity have been a persistent feature of our economy over the past thirty years. The Executive has prioritised the development of an Economic Inactivity Strategy to tackle this key structural problem which will help increase overall levels of employment.

However, taking action to support economic growth and employment creation is the responsibility of the whole Executive.

The path we have chosen to increase employment and prosperity is to rebalance the economy by building a larger and more export-driven private sector. The Northern Ireland Economic Strategy, and the complementary Economy & Jobs Initiative, set out what the Executive is doing collectively to deliver higher levels of employment across Northern Ireland.

Energy: Costs

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, given Bombardier's move to lower its energy costs, what steps she is taking to facilitate similar moves among other companies and groups of companies. (AQO 5331/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Opportunities to lower costs by developing self-generation capability and coming off the grid are a commercial decision for companies to take and market arrangements exist to cover such decisions. I have no plans to intervene in these arrangements. Mechanisms such as the Northern Ireland Renewables Obligation and the Renewable Heat Incentive are available to those companies who are considering generating their own energy.

Job Creation and Promotion: North Down

Mr Cree asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what level of assistance her Department has provided for job promotion and creation in the North Down Constituency since 2011. (AQO 5332/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Between 1st April 2011 and 30th September 2013, Invest NI offered financial assistance totaling £1.85 million in support of job promotion and creation in the North Down Constituency.

Tourism: Funding

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether her Department, or its Arm's-Length Bodies, provide funding to the Regional Tourism Organisations.

(AQO 5333/11-15)

Mrs Foster: There are no longer Regional Tourism Organisations.

There are a number of Regional Tourism Partnerships which include, Causeway Coast and Glens, Derry Visitor and Convention Bureau, Fermanagh Lakeland Trust and Greater Belfast Regional Tourism Partnership.

These bodies obtain finance from local authorities and membership subscription.

As you are aware there is a Review of the Northern Ireland Tourist Board and wider tourism structures currently being undertaken.

Renewable Energy: Business

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline the role that her Department plays in supporting the development of renewable energy businesses.

(AQO 5334/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest NI has been proactively working with Northern Ireland companies for over five years to help them enter the renewable energy market. Northern Ireland companies have been successful in the Renewable energy market, winning an estimated £52 million in new business in 2012-2013.

A database has been developed detailing over four hundred Northern Ireland companies involved in the various Renewable supply chains. A programme of specialised workshops and supply chain events is ongoing to highlight business opportunities.

Advice is also available on the use of renewable technologies and support in the form of resource efficiency visits and interest-free loans to help businesses install these technologies.

Broadband: Rural Areas

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment at what stage are the negotiations on additional funding for the rollout of high speed rural broadband.

(AQO 5335/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The procurement for the Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement Project has completed and the tender response is being carefully evaluated to ensure that best value for money is achieved. This project is attracting public funding of £19.3 million. It is hoped to award the contract for this project in the next few weeks with implementation commencing immediately thereafter for completion in 2015.

The UK Government announced a further £250 million of funding in 2013 to support the extension of superfast broadband services into the most challenging areas. Details are yet to emerge as to how this funding will be allocated but my officials are formulating a project aimed at accessing a share of this funding and, in doing so, are working closely with colleagues in the Department of Culture, Media and Sport.

Department of the Environment

Flooding: Risk Assessment

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of the Environment whether he will include a statutory flood risk assessment query on all future planning application forms.

(AQW 29515/11-15)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): Planning plays an important role in managing future development that may be at risk from flooding or that may increase the risk of flooding elsewhere.

There is no statutory requirement for a flood risk assessment to be carried out in respect of any planning application however the susceptibility of all land to flooding is a material consideration in determining planning applications.

Applications are assessed having regard to Planning Policy Statement 15 (PPS15) 'Planning and Flood Risk' which sets out the Department's approach to flood risk and adopts a precautionary approach to development and the use of land. If a proposed development is likely to be affected by or impact on flooding elsewhere the Department will consult Rivers Agency for advice and a flood risk assessment may be requested in order to inform consideration of the planning application.

The Department is currently carrying out a review of PPS 15 and the public consultation period ended on 10 January 2014. The revised draft was published in order to fulfil a commitment in the original PPS that the policy would be reviewed after 5 years, in order to take account of emerging information relating to flood risk and climate change and also experience in the implementation of flood risk policy.

The Draft PPS requires the planning authority to take account of the most up to date flood risk information in carrying out its development plan and development management functions. It also refers to the role and responsibility of developers to use the publicly available flood risk information to assess the flood risk implications of their development proposals.

Currently I do not consider it necessary to include a statutory flood risk assessment on all application forms as I am satisfied the ongoing review will provide the necessary policy framework to ensure that flood risk is fully taken into account in the processing of future planning applications.

Flooding: Sustainable Development

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of the Environment what action he is taking to ensure that sustainable development happens so that detailed flood risk maps are produced under the EU Floods Directive and PPS 15.

(AQW 29516/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My Department seeks to promote safe and sustainable development that takes full and proper account of flood risk. This is carried out by applying the policies contained in Planning Policy Statement (PPS) 15 'Planning and Flood Risk' through the Department's development plan and development management functions. The overall aim of PPS 15 is "to prevent future development that may be at risk from flooding or that may increase the risk of flooding elsewhere."

Last October I launched Revised Draft PPS 15 for public consultation. This fulfils a commitment in the original PPS to review the policy after 5 years, in order to take account of emerging information relating to flood risk and climate change and also experience in the implementation of flood risk policy.

PPS 15 and the emerging revised draft document seek to promote sustainable development in a number of ways. These include avoiding development in flood plains in all but the most exceptional circumstances and encouraging the use of sustainable drainage for new development.

In applying the policy, Planning officials take full account of the most up to date flood risk information provided by DARD Rivers Agency, which as the competent authority for the implementation of the EU Floods Directive in Northern Ireland, is responsible for the Strategic Flood Map and its ongoing development and refinement. The Department works closely with Rivers Agency and further changes to the Strategic flood Map will be accompanied with training and guidance for planning officials where appropriate.

Waste Disposal: Radioactive and/or Toxic

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment to detail all undisclosed locations where radioactive and/or toxic waste has been disposed.

(AQW 29550/11-15)

Mr Durkan:

- (i) Premises that accumulate and dispose of radioactive waste must have a certificate of authorisation issued under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993 (previously 1960). Such premises in Northern Ireland include hospitals, universities, research centres and a small number of industrial sites. One of the routes for the disposal of low level solid radioactive waste historically included in the authorisations was via controlled burial in landfill sites. Two locations for controlled burial were identified in authorisations: a) Culmore Point Landfill, Derry and b) Duncrue Street Landfill, Belfast. The authorisations contained limits and conditions to help ensure the waste was disposed of without presenting a radiation risk to either people or the environment. The practice of controlled burial ceased in Northern Ireland in 2006.
2. The authorisations also allowed, subject to limitations and conditions on the radionuclide content and method of disposal, the removal of certain types of very low level solid radioactive waste to local refuse sites for disposal with large quantities of non radioactive waste.
3. Copies of authorisations issued under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993 for the disposal of radioactive waste are on public registers held in NIEA offices in Belfast and in District Council offices.
4. Prior to 1981 there was no requirement to keep separate records for the deposition of hazardous waste (previously known as Special Waste). From 1981 to 1998 local authorities in Northern Ireland were required to manage records for all movements of special waste under the Pollution Control (Special Waste) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1981. In 1998 this function transferred to my Department under the Special Waste Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1998 having since been amended by the Hazardous Waste Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2005. Since late 1998 to date the Department holds records for all hazardous wastes being deposited in Northern Ireland. Following the end of landfill co-disposal of non-hazardous and hazardous waste in 2004 there was only one landfill site (Lisbane Landfill, County Armagh) accepting hazardous waste (asbestos waste only) which ceased accepting such waste in June 2013.

Minerals: Boreholes

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (i) what constitutes a mineral in The Planning (General Development) Order (Northern Ireland) 1993; (ii) whether this legislation allows borehole drilling as permitted development, despite being excluded under equivalent legislation in England and Scotland; (iii) whether drilling boreholes under petroleum exploration licences qualifies as permitted development under Part 16 of the Order, and if so, whether the Order will be amended so that this can be more effectively regulated by the planning system.

(AQW 29551/11-15)

Mr Durkan: What constitutes a mineral is not specifically defined by the Planning (General Development) Order (NI) 1993; however the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 does define minerals as “includes all minerals and substances in or under land of a kind ordinarily worked for removal by underground or surface working, except that it does not include turf cut for purposes other than sale”.

There are certain permitted development rights under Part 16 of Schedule 1 to the Planning (General Development) Order (NI) 1993 for Mineral Exploration where planning permission is not required, which includes exploration for petroleum. They allow certain specified development on land in any period not exceeding four months consisting of drilling boreholes, carrying out seismic surveys or making other excavations. Any operation within an area of special scientific interest or site of archaeological interest is specifically excluded from these permitted development rights.

There are also certain limitations and conditions associated with this temporary permitted development right including pre-commencement notification to the Department of the Environment giving details of the location, target mineral, details of plant and operations and anticipated timescale which a developer, should they wish to invoke these permitted development rights, must notify the Department of in order that a decision can be taken on whether or not the permitted development right should be removed and the proposal made subject to the full planning application process..

In addition, where development is identified in either of the Schedules to the Planning (Environmental Impact Assessment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2012 and Environmental Impact Assessment is applicable based on the details of the proposed development, permitted development rights do not apply (Article 3(8) of the Planning (General Development) Order (NI) 1993 refers).

In the interests of clarity, it is important to note that the temporary permitted development rights for minerals exploration do not allow the commercial extraction of minerals, including petroleum. Such activity will be subject to the full planning application process as well as relevant Environmental Impact Assessment, licensing and environmental permitting arrangements.

There are no plans at present to amend the existing legislation in N. Ireland in relation to permitted development rights for Mineral Exploration under Part 16 of Schedule 1 to the Planning (General Development) Order (NI) 1993. The Department takes the view that the permitted development right as currently drafted strikes an appropriate balance between permitting the carrying out of legitimate exploratory activity and at the same time protecting amenity interests and the environment.

Quiet Areas

Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment whether his Department has considered designating more quiet areas.
(AQW 29554/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Environmental Noise Directive (2002/49/EC) (“END”) requires Member States to create noise maps and draft action plans, which amongst other things, “aim to protect quiet areas against an increase in noise”. Such quiet areas are to be designated within the Belfast Agglomeration.

Following the production of the round one noise maps and action plans in 2008/9, the Department of the Environment designated all areas within the Belfast Agglomeration with a consolidated noise level (noise from all sources combined) of less than 55Lden as Candidate Quiet Areas. The purpose of this was to highlight these areas for further investigation once more precise policy on the designation of Quiet Areas had been developed.

The END does not define Quiet Areas. Nor does it prescribe noise limits or the features of such an area. It is for each Member State to develop this policy.

The Department is in the process of developing a Quiet Area policy taking into account issues around the form, content and legal status of the final document and will issue the draft policy for public consultation later this year.

Taxis, Belfast: Registration

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment how many public hire taxis were registered in Belfast, in each of the last three years.
(AQW 29566/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The number of Belfast public hire taxis licensed in each of the last three years was as follows:

2010/11	548 <sup>1</sup>

1 The figures represent totals as at 31 March each year. Please note these figures are not part of official statistics and have not been subject to data validation.

Energy: Unconventional Gas

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment whether he will seek to ensure that a representative of the local community is on the steering committee dealing with the research programme into unconventional gas exploration and exploitation.

(AQW 29584/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The primary aim of the all island research programme is to produce outcomes that will assist regulators (North and South) in fulfilling their statutory roles regarding this proposed activity. The Steering Committee is therefore composed of those regulators, as they are best placed to ensure that relevant research is carried out to provide the robust evidence base to make decisions on this controversial industry.

The extensive consultation exercise carried out on the Terms of Reference for the research programme resulted in calls for a Health Official to join the Steering Committee. As a result of this feedback a Health expert has been invited onto the Steering Committee. No other comments or concerns were received in relation to the membership of the Steering Committee.

Keeping all interested stakeholders, including representatives of the local community, abreast of the progress of the research programme will be a key part of the dissemination plan, the specific detail of which is part of the current tender process.

George Best Belfast City Airport: Car Park

Ms Lo asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the rationale for reversing the decision on the planning approval for a private car park at George Best Belfast City Airport.

(AQW 29598/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Department did not reverse its decision in this case. A recommendation to approve was made on 21 February 2013 but was deferred by the Town Planning Committee of Belfast City Council. Following deferral, a meeting was held with the objectors who raised further legal and policy matters.

On re-assessment the Department concluded that determining weight should not have been given to the spare parking capacity at the Ikea site and that the applicable policy was Policy AMP 10 of Planning Policy 3 - Access, Movement and Parking. This provides the key policy test for the provision of new car parks with the requirement that they 'meet a need identified by the Department for Regional Development in Transport Plans or accepted by DRD following robust analysis provided by the developer'.

The applicant was given the opportunity to submit a case of need which he submitted in August 2013. The Department fully considered the case presented but concluded that the case of need presented by the applicant did not meet the policy test. The Department re-presented the application to Belfast City Council Town Planning Committee on 12 December 2013 as a refusal on this basis. This decision was taken locally by planners and I was not involved in any capacity as a decision maker.

The process in this case is not unusual as often applicants or third parties, through the deferral process, will bring further matters to the Department for consideration in relation to an application.

There is a process of appeal available for anyone dissatisfied with a decision made by planning officials.

Coastal Communities Fund: Awards

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment how much funding has been awarded, or distributed, from the Coastal Communities Fund in each of the last five years.

(AQW 29612/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Coastal Communities Fund (CCF) was launched by Treasury in 2012-13, and its annual budget is equal to 50% of the annual revenue from the Crown Estate's marine activities in that area.

In 2012-13, the NI budget was £450,000 of which £423,465 was awarded to two projects. The Seaview Heritage Activity Centre in Glenarm was awarded £265,000, and the Water Wheel Project in Magheramorne was awarded £158,465.

In 2013-14, the NI budget was £500,000 of which £447,342 was awarded to two projects. The NI Lobster and Marine Hatchery Research Centre in Kilkeel was awarded £260,782, and the Coastal Centre at Waterfoot was awarded £186,560.

Any funds not awarded in one year are added to the available funds for the following year. Up to 5.87% of the Fund over the lifetime of the programme is used to cover administration fees incurred by the Big Fund in delivering the CCF. This amounted to £26,520 in 2012/13 and will amount to a maximum of £29,350 in 2013/14.

The third round of the CCF will open in early February 2014.

The CCF is a UK-wide programme and the single outcome is that "coastal communities will experience regeneration and economic growth through projects that directly or indirectly create sustainable jobs, and safeguard existing jobs". However there are also some country specific requirements and priorities.

Here the CCF is aimed at projects that help contribute to the Executive's Economic Strategy. The Strategy's key priorities include growing a sustainable economy, investing in the future, creating jobs and tackling disadvantage.

CCF priorities in Northern Ireland are focussed on applications:

- from small and medium size coastal communities facing economic challenges;

- that promote regeneration and job creation through investment in tourism, business and the built and natural environments of coastal settlements; and
- that promote training and skills development, linked directly to the project activity, to enable local people to secure jobs in local industry growth sectors.

The key decision-making criteria are UK wide and are:

- Whether the project will directly or indirectly create jobs, and/or sustain existing jobs, and promote economic growth;
- Whether the need for the project has been clearly demonstrated;
- How well the project meets the CCF's outcome and country requirements;
- How well the project fits with local plans and priorities;
- How likely the project is to successfully deliver its intended outcomes;
- How likely the project is to be delivered within two years;
- How the benefits of the project will be sustained after the CCF funding finishes;
- Whether the project represents good value for money, that is, how much it will cost to create or safeguard jobs in relation to the overall project funding requested.

Grants of £50,000 and over are available, and the following types of organisations can apply:

- local authorities;
- development agencies;
- other public sector bodies;
- charities;
- voluntary and community sector organisations;
- social enterprises, including cooperatives and community ownership initiatives; and
- private sector companies.

Here funding decisions are made by a publicly appointed panel and endorsed by me.

Coastal Communities Fund: Availability

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment when the next tranche of Coastal Communities Fund money will be available. (AQW 29613/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Coastal Communities Fund (CCF) was launched by Treasury in 2012-13, and its annual budget is equal to 50% of the annual revenue from the Crown Estate's marine activities in that area.

Coastal Communities Fund: Criteria

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment (i) to detail the criteria used for awarding funding from the Coastal Communities Fund; (ii) who is eligible to apply for funding; and (iii) who makes the decision on whether applications are successful.

(AQW 29615/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Coastal Communities Fund (CCF) was launched by Treasury in 2012-13, and its annual budget is equal to 50% of the annual revenue from the Crown Estate's marine activities in that area.

Coastal Communities Fund: Budget

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what is the annual budget of the local Coastal Communities Fund. (AQW 29616/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Coastal Communities Fund (CCF) was launched by Treasury in 2012-13, and its annual budget is equal to 50% of the annual revenue from the Crown Estate's marine activities in that area.

Taxi Operator Licences: Foyle

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 29122/11-15, to list the operators of each of the 94 licenses; and how many licenses, broken down by year, each operator holds.

(AQW 29620/11-15)

Mr Durkan: A list of the 94 taxi operator licence holders is attached at Annex A. Each operator holds only one operator's licence.

Lisburn City: Status

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of the Environment whether Lisburn's city status will be affected by the postponed merger with Castlereagh Borough Council.

(AQW 29644/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My Department is working towards taking the necessary steps to ensure that the city status in respect of all five cities in Northern Ireland, including Lisburn, is not affected by the reorganisation of local government.

As city status is conferred by Letters Patent issued under Royal Prerogative, my officials are working closely with the Northern Ireland Office to ensure that city status is preserved. Draft legislation will be brought before the Assembly in due course.

Councils: Ratepayers

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of the Environment how his Department intends to ensure that ratepayers, who currently live in an area where council debt is lower per capita, are not required to pay towards the debt previously incurred by a Council area that they are being joined with.

(AQW 29645/11-15)

Mr Durkan: District Councils are bodies corporate as defined in the Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 1972 and, as such, are directly responsible for decisions regarding their own financial affairs.

Furthermore, my Department has no indication from the Chief Local Government Auditor that there is any defect in councils' strategies in relation to debt management.

However, I understand the specific concerns that some ratepayers may have in the run-up to local government reform in April 2015. As I have previously stated to the Assembly, there are controls in place to ensure that local government does not over-stretch in terms of borrowings. In line with Section 13 (1) of the Local Government Finance Act (Northern Ireland) 2011, "a council shall determine and keep under review how much money it can afford to borrow." A council may not borrow money if doing so would result in a breach of the limit determined by it under Section 13. This is examined each year by the Local Government Auditor as part of the audit process.

In terms of the expenditure of current councils in the run up to April 2015, I have issued a direction and guidance on expenditure controls for Statutory Transition Committees. This gives Statutory Transition Committees the power to examine and approve three year capital plans and revenue expenditure forecasts in their constituent councils.

The Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act (Northern Ireland) 2010, taken together with the Departmental direction, provides that councils must seek the consent of the relevant Statutory Transition Committee before:

- making a disposal of land where consideration exceeds £100,000;
- entering into a capital contract where consideration exceeds £250,000; or
- entering into a non capital contract where consideration exceeds £100,000.

This is to ensure that the current 26 councils cannot enter into new contracts that will have an impact on the finances of the newly created councils without first seeking permission from the Statutory Transition Committee. This power will also be applied to the new councils during the period when they will be operating in shadow mode from end May 2014 – March 2015.

Loughside Playing Fields

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment to detail what information he or his Department has on the proposal by Crusaders Football Club to develop a new stadium at Loughside Playing Fields.

(AQW 29652/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My Department is not aware of a proposal by Crusaders Football Club to develop a new stadium at Loughside playing fields. Planning permission was refused on the site in 2012 for a mixed use development that included a foodstore and new playing fields. This proposal did not make provision for a football stadium however.

Coastal Defences: Questions Referred

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of the Environment why his department has referred questions tabled for him to answer in relation to coastal defences to the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development.

(AQW 29656/11-15)

Mr Durkan: DARD has powers under the Drainage (NI) Order 1973 to maintain watercourses and sea defences that have been designated by the Drainage Council for NI; and to construct and maintain drainage and sea defence structures.

DARD's Rivers Agency performs this flood defence role; and consequently monitors and maintains some 26km of designated sea defences (some of which are in the Strangford constituency) and two tidal barriers. In addition, DARD is the competent authority in terms of implementing the EU's Floods Directive.

It was on these grounds that my department approached DARD seeking the formal transfer of AQWs 29513 and 29514, which DARD accepted.

Climate Change Bill

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the introduction of a Climate Change Bill.

(AQW 29689/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I am committed to reducing greenhouse gas emissions and growing a sustainable, productive low carbon economy. The introduction of a Climate Change Bill is an option under active consideration.

There was a divided response to the pre-consultation on the need for a Northern Ireland Climate Change Bill which closed on 24 May 2013. As a follow up to this pre-consultation, I am meeting with businesses, agri-food, energy and environmental stakeholders, the Cross Departmental Working Group on Climate Change and the Environment Committee over coming weeks to hear their views on the optimum outcome focused approach to tackling climate change. Following this engagement I will confirm my course of action.

Used Cars: Changes in Ownership

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment to quantify the number of changes to the ownership of used cars, indicated by changes to the name on vehicle log books, in each of the last ten years.

(AQW 29691/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The figures provided below detail the number of changes of ownership transactions processed in each of the last ten years.

Year	Number of Change of Ownership Transactions
2013	197,491
2012	192,255
2011	196,605
2010	205,197
2009	209,028
2008	257,083
2007	283,520
2006	259,499
2005	241,818
2004	307,227

The figures are provided from Agency records and do not form part of published and validated DOE Official Statistics.

Energy: Public Consultation Responses

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQO 5204/11-15, to detail (i) the number of respondents to the public consultation; and (ii) the number of respondents advocating that the research programme should include a health impact assessment.

(AQW 29692/11-15)

Mr Durkan:

- (i) 1356 valid submissions were received.
- (i) The exact number was not recorded when submissions were processed, however a significant number of responses referred to the specific issue of health impact assessments and the general issue of public health.

A summary report, as well as links to all the submissions, is available from the Environmental Protection Agency (Ireland) website: <http://www.epa.ie/researchandeducation/research/striveprogramme/water/ugee%20research/>

Taxis: Mandatory Metering

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what steps are being taken to notify the taxi industry of the introduction of mandatory taxi metering by September 2014.

(AQW 29699/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I acknowledge the importance of effective communication with the taxi industry over the coming months on issues such as the introduction of mandatory taxi metering.

As such, as part of the Taxi Reform Implementation Programme officials are developing a comprehensive communication plan, aimed at maximising awareness of the new provisions and effective dissemination of information relating to them to the industry.

Although the details of the communication plan have not yet been finalised, measures are likely to include use of direct mailshots to the taxi industry, promotion of the new provisions on the internet (including NI Direct), the dissemination of posters and leaflets through DVA test centres and local offices, and a news release will be issued to media outlets. These communications will be taken forward in advance of the provisions of the Regulations coming into effect.

Taxis: Mandatory Metering

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what assurances he can give that mandatory taxi metering will take place by 1 September 2014.

(AQW 29700/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The introduction of mandatory taxi metering is an important element of the Taxis Act and one that will bring significant benefits to consumers.

In response to the Environment Committee's request that the suite of legislation implementing the Taxis Act 2008 should be made operative from September 2014, my Department has been progressing the various draft Regulations to ensure that these targets are met.

The Regulations will become operative in September and will make it an offence to use a taxi without a taximeter fitted from March 2015, giving the industry 6 months to comply with the new regulations. Similarly, the mandatory requirement to have and use a receipt printer will take effect in January 2016.

My Department is engaging with the private sector in order to promote the establishment of a network of Approved Taximeter Centres, where it is intended that meters will be fitted, calibrated and sealed in accordance with prescribed conditions. It is intended that these Centres will be operating from September 2014. A programme of work is underway, working towards this date.

Taxis: Mandatory Metering

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what is the timescale for the implementation of mandatory taxi metering for taxis that do not currently have a meter.

(AQW 29701/11-15)

Mr Durkan: When the Regulations implementing the Taxis Act 2008 are fully implemented, taxis will fall into one of four categories.

Class A and Class B taxis, which will comprise the vast majority of the taxi fleet, will be required to have taximeters fitted. This requirement will take effect from March 2015. The requirement to have a receipt printer will take effect from January 2016.

Class C taxis (including limousines, chauffeured cars and wedding cars) and Class D taxis (taxibuses) will not be required to have taximeters or receipt printers fitted.

Taxis: Fitting of Meters

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what checks will be in place to ensure that taxi meters are fitted to a safe and high standard.

(AQW 29702/11-15)

Mr Durkan: By September 2014 my Department will have established a network of Approved Taximeter Centres (ATCs). These will be privately owned and operated and will be authorised by the Driver and Vehicle Agency once officials are satisfied that they have met the prescribed requirements. Only ATCs will be permitted to fit, calibrate and seal taximeters. They will be subject to regular quality audits to ensure that the required standards continue to be met.

All taximeters will be required to undergo an annual calibration test. When a vehicle is submitted to DVA for a taxi vehicle test, the person presenting the vehicle will be required to present proof of a recent calibration test by an ATC. Additionally, the installation of the taximeter will be checked to ensure that the requisite seals are present and that there is no evidence of tampering.

Where an ATC is found to have failed to meet the required standards, the Department has the power to withdraw its approval, after which it will no longer be able to legally install or test meters.

Taxis: Metering

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment how his Department will inform the public of the introduction of taxi metering. (AQW 29703/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Communication of the introduction of taxi metering to the general public will be included in an overall communications plan which is currently being developed by my Department. Measures are likely to include the promotion of the new provisions via the internet including NI Direct, posters and leaflets to be disseminated through DVA test centres and local offices and other outlets, and a news release to media outlets.

The main communication effort focussing on the public is likely to be scheduled closely to precede the mandatory fitment of meters, in order to maximise its effectiveness.

Electricity Substation: Rasharkin

Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment whether the current planning application for an electricity sub station in Rasharkin meets the criteria for an Environmental Impact Assessment to be undertaken in accordance with Article 2 of The Planning (Environmental Impact Assessment) Regulations. (AQW 29720/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The current planning application for an electricity substation at Finvoy Road, Rasharkin meets the criteria for a determination to be carried out as to whether the proposal is EIA development. In this case the Department determined on 13 December 2013 that the proposal was not EIA development and that an Environmental Statement was not required.

Crawfordsburn Country Park: Vehicle Access

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what consideration is being given to ensuring that vehicular access for visitors to Crawfordsburn Country Park is available all year round. (AQW 29745/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I have been advised by officials in the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA), who manage access to Country Parks and State Care Monuments, that the opening of Crawfordsburn Country Park is reviewed on an annual basis. This review takes into account matching available resources to best meet public demand at Country Parks, historic castles and other State Care Monuments.

In 2013, the main entrance to Crawfordsburn Country Park was only closed to vehicular access via the main entrance on three days (25th, 26th and 27th December 2013 inclusive). Access to the park via other access pathways remained open at all times of the year.

Officials in NIEA have advised me that it may be a necessary to restrict access to properties at short notice due to health & safety concerns, such as extreme weather events, which could lead to damage to property, injury or worse still a fatality. They have also advised that it may be necessary to restrict access to allow maintenance works such as resurfacing. It is therefore not possible to guarantee all year round vehicular access to Crawfordsburn Country Park due to these reasons.

Most recently you may be aware that due to a severe weather warning and public holidays access was not permitted via the main access route to Crawfordsburn Country Park on 25th, 26th and 27th December 2013. This decision was undertaken by NIEA due to a risk of falling branches and trees during high winds along the main entrance avenue and lower car park area. During this period alternative car parking was however made available at two car parks nearby at Grey Point Fort and Fort Road which are both owned by NIEA from which Crawfordsburn Country Park can easily be accessed.

It appears however that despite NIEA staff closing the main access gate on 24th December 2013 a person, who was not an NIEA staff member, unfortunately opened the main entrance gate which led to traffic disruption on the main avenue on 26th December 2013 due to access barriers being closed further into the park. These second barriers are in place to allow access outside of hours to the scout centre but not to the main car park so as to deter anti-social behaviour. To ensure this does not happen again NIEA staff have changed the locks on access gates and will ensure that signage will be placed, in the event this gate is closed, to advise of alternative nearby parking facilities from which the park can be accessed.

Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan: Update

Mrs Hale asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 26630/11-15, for an update on the adoption of the Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan. (AQW 29781/11-15)

Mr Durkan: After extensive assessment of the recommendations made by the Planning Appeals Commission, my Department submitted BMAP to the Department for Regional Development for assessment of the Plan against the Regional Development Strategy 2035. I can confirm that the Plan was awarded a Certificate of General Conformity on 21 October 2013. The other outstanding statutory processes have recently been completed and my Department is now taking forward the next steps in the adoption and publication process.

Taxis: Hire Company for Meters

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment whether his Department has any plans to establish a hire company for taxi meters; and what initial steps have been taken to date.

(AQW 29782/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My Department is working to establish a network of Approved Taximeter Centres (ATCs), which will be owned and operated by the private sector. These are likely to be affiliated with or agents of particular taximeter manufacturers, and will be able to sell and fit taximeters, as well as to carry out calibration testing and sealing.

It will be up to individual ATCs to decide which products to offer, and whether to sell or hire them. However, given that it is common practice in both Britain and Ireland to offer hire packages for taximeters and receipt printers, it is likely that ATCs in this jurisdiction will offer this service also.

Taxis: Fitting of Meters

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment whether any concerns have been raised by the Committee for the Environment on the issue of taxi metering and installation.

(AQW 29788/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I attended a meeting of the Environment Committee on 24 October 2013 during which concerns were raised about the impact of the costs of implementing all of the taxi reforms at the same time. One of the main costs mentioned was that of the purchase of a taximeter and receipt printer. Accordingly I instructed officials to stagger the implementation of the provisions in order to mitigate the financial impact on the industry.

I am not aware of any other concerns having been formally raised by the Committee.

Taxis: Fitting of Meters

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what actions are being taken to ensure that the installation of taxi meters will be carried out by accredited installers.

(AQW 29789/11-15)

Mr Durkan: When the Regulations implementing the Taxis Act are implemented, it will be an offence for a company or individual who has not been authorised as an Approved Taximeter Centre by the Department to install or calibrate a taximeter. When a taximeter is approved and tested, a test certificate will be issued by the ATC and a small plaque will be fixed to the dashboard of the vehicle close to the meter, including details of both the installation and the installer.

When the vehicle is presented for its annual taxi vehicle test, the certificate and the plaque will both be examined. Where they have not been validly issued by an authorised ATC, the examiner may refuse to complete the test.

The certificate and plaque may also be examined at any time by a DVA enforcement officer, who will be able to take appropriate enforcement action if the certificate and plaque are not valid.

All ATCs will be subject to a periodic audit by DVA.

Taxis: Calibration of Meters

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what steps are being taken to ensure that the calibration of taxi meters will be undertaken by an independent company.

(AQW 29790/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Under the new arrangements due to come into effect from September 2014, the opportunity to become an Approved Taximeter Centre (ATC) will be open to anyone in Northern Ireland. It is likely that applications will be received from existing taximeter installers and from in-car entertainment fitters. Applicants will have to satisfy the Department that they are competent and able to fulfil the conditions prescribed by the Regulations; such companies will be subject to periodic auditing by DVA. These conditions will cover the equipment used to install and calibrate meters, the training of installers, procedures to be followed and records to be kept.

All such ATCs will be independent from the Department. Further, it may not be appropriate for taxi operators to establish themselves as ATCs, given the potential for a conflict of interest. Consideration is being given to this issue as the conditions for the approval of ATCs are developed.

Taxis: Calibration of Meters

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what checks are in place to ensure that the calibration of taxi meters and equipment is carried out correctly.

(AQW 29791/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Taximeters are at present only mandatory for Belfast Public Hire taxis. They are checked annually by DVA and a calibration test is carried out by DVA staff. When the test has been completed successfully, seals are applied by the DVA examiner. The calibration check is carried out by confirming that the approved fare charging programme code installed in the taximeter matches that supplied by the taximeter manufacture. The taxi is then driven along a measured test route where the fare being charged is checked at periodic distance points. Finally, the taximeter waiting time clock and related fare charges are checked using a stop watch.

Public Hire Vehicles: Age

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of the Environment to list the ages of public hire vehicles licensed to carry passengers. (AQW 29792/11-15)

Mr Durkan: A summary table providing the age of public hire vehicles licensed to carry vehicles is attached at Annex A of this response.

Please note these figures are not part of official statistics and have not been subject to data validation

Electricity Substation: Rasharkin

Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment whether the current planning application for an electricity sub station in Rasharkin is a Schedule 2 development as outlined in Article 2 of The Planning (Environmental Impact Assessment) Regulations. (AQW 29805/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The current planning application for an electricity substation at Finvoy Road, Rasharkin meets the criteria under Schedule 2 of The Planning (Environmental Impact Assessment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2012 for a determination to be carried out as to whether the proposal is EIA development. In this case the Department determined on 13 December 2013 that the proposal was not EIA development and that an Environmental Statement was not required.

Ravenhill Stadium: Taxi Operators

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 28809/11-15, whether any specific taxi company have a Taxi Operator Licence granted for an Operator Centre at Ravenhill Rugby Ground on Mount Merrion Avenue, Belfast.
(AQW 29847/11-15)

Mr Durkan: There are no taxi companies with an operating centre at Ravenhill rugby ground listed on their Operator Licence.

Taxis, Belfast: Cross-departmental Meetings

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment on how many occasions he, or his staff, have met with their colleagues in the Department of Regional Development on the taxi situation in Belfast; and to list the dates of these meetings.
(AQW 29851/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I met with Minister Kennedy on 17 December 2013 to discuss issues relating to taxis in Belfast which cut across both our portfolios, including ranks, parking enforcement and bus lanes.

My officials met with DRD colleagues to discuss taxi licensing/ranking issues on 13 February 2012, 9 August 2012, 24 April 2013, 10 May 2013 and 5 December 2013. There were also meetings around taxibus issues on 14 May 2013, 20 June 2013, 25 September 2013 and 24 October 2013.

Road Safety Forum

Mr Boylan asked the Minister of the Environment, given the recent rise in road fatalities, to outline the discussions of the recent meeting of the Road Safety Forum.
(AQW 29971/11-15)

Mr Durkan: As Minister with lead responsibility for road safety, I remain committed to the partnership work that has so greatly reduced road casualties over the last 40 years. I will work with all stakeholders to improve road safety and to reduce road casualties further.

To that end, and in response to the rise in road deaths at the beginning of 2014, I last week convened an urgent meeting of the Road Safety Forum. The turn-out for the meeting at such short notice, and members' obvious commitment and resolve to tackle road safety issues, demonstrated the importance of doing so. The meeting was attended by a range of road safety stakeholders including all relevant government departments, statutory agencies and the emergency services.

At the Forum the police presented an anonymised report on the fatal collisions, which was followed by discussion on what more might be done.

The meeting agreed that we need to continue our efforts, need to take every opportunity to communicate road safety messages and need to take a number of early actions to add to current work. DOE is providing additional focussed road safety advertising and messages. You will perhaps already have seen new messages on television and in the newspapers. We will also provide young people's groups with more materials to help them better communicate key road safety messages to their members. PSNI will continue its focus on visible road traffic policing, including increased focus on inappropriate speed, particularly in areas where there is known to be a risk of speed related collisions. DRD will, as Minister Kennedy announced in the Assembly chamber on 13 January, review the provision of information for those who make decisions on road gritting.

The Forum agreed to meet again before Easter to review progress on a range of other measures to be taken forward in 2014, including:-

- the Road Traffic Amendment (NI) Bill, for which I hope to have Executive approval soon;
- two new road safety public information campaigns on cyclist safety and speeding, that I will launch this year;
- Northern Ireland's first Safety & Lifeskills Centre; and
- a new Motorcycling Safety Strategy.

Everyone who uses the roads has to play a part in making our roads safer and must adjust their behaviours to suit the conditions. Drivers, particularly, need to concentrate and not get distracted, always wear a seatbelt, never drink and drive and moderate their speed to the road and the conditions. We all need to heed the key messages that will help keep us all safe.

I have asked all those in public life to seize every opportunity to communicate these messages to help keep their constituents and communities safe on our roads, and thank those that have, and continue to do, so.

We need to focus on the fact that travelling on our roads is probably the most dangerous thing that most of us will do on most days, and continue to work towards a vision of zero road deaths.

Department of Finance and Personnel

Parliament Buildings: Electric Car Charge Points

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline any plans to install electric car charge points in the lower east car park, Parliament Buildings.

(AQW 29507/11-15)

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): DFP has been in discussions with DRD in relation to the installation of electric car charge points at a number of Government car parks including the lower east car park, Parliament Buildings. The required work will be subject to a future funding bid by DRD.

Institute of Professional Legal Studies

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of students that have taken the Institute for Professional Legal Studies examination in each of the last five years, including the number seeking and obtaining barrister and solicitor admission.

(AQW 29519/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Department does not directly hold this information.

Land Registry: Property Sales

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline why the Land Registry's system of making property sales values available to the public, differs from the system operated in England and Wales.

(AQW 29574/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Each of the Land Registries in the UK and Ireland operate under different legislation and use different methodologies to hold and store information. Therefore the information available and how it is categorised and published, differs from Registry to Registry.

Civil Service Properties: Shower Facilities

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, pursuant to AQW 27675/11-15, to detail the two buildings for which additional shower facilities are planned.

(AQW 29593/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The answer to AQW 27675/11-15 stated that provision of additional shower facilities are planned in a further two buildings, both of which are detailed below.

Building Name	Address
County Hall	Drumragh Avenue, Omagh
Forestview	Purdy's Lane, Newtownbreda

Rates Debt

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, pursuant to AQW 28958/11-15, to detail the quantitative assumptions made concerning the write off of bad debt in the setting of the Regional Rate and the Penny Product calculations in 2013/14.

(AQW 29607/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: When undertaking the Penny Product calculations for 2013/14, LPS analysed debt for each district council as at September 2012 by category and age and based on this analysis applied a provision percentage. Results were then discussed with individual councils, some of whom amended their total write-off figure slightly to reflect circumstances specific to their council area. Based on this work, £27.1M was set aside for write-off in the 2013/2014 year.

A further £6.7M was provided in the estimate for writing-off debt relating to Rating of Empty Homes (REH) assessments leaving the total estimated write-off at £33.8M. As REH was only implemented in October 2011, there was no trend information available and a percentage was applied to the assessments in order to calculate an estimated write-off figure for 2013/2014.

Welfare Reform: Penalty Process

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline the process regarding the penalty arising from the failure to implement welfare reform.

(AQW 29678/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Chief Secretary to the Treasury wrote in June 2013 advising that it was the intention of the UK Government to adjust the Northern Ireland Executive DEL allocation should welfare reforms not be agreed by January 2014.

HM Treasury has not yet advised how this penalty will be applied. However, in anticipation of a penalty being applied, the Executive has agreed, on my recommendation to make a provision of £15 million to cover the remaining three months of this financial year.

Travel Expenditure

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the total expenditure on departmental Ministerial travel in the periods (a) January to June 2013; and (b) July to December 2013, respectively.

(AQW 29680/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Information on the travel expenditure of Northern Ireland Ministers is not held centrally.

Trade: Proportions

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail, for the most recent consecutive five years, the proportion of trade (i) to Britain, (ii) to the south of Ireland; (iii) to countries for which the proportion of total trade is above three percent; and (iv) not included in the categories above.

(AQW 29695/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: HM Revenue & Customs (HMRC) Regional Trade Statistics (RTS) series provides information on the exports of goods from regions of the UK to other countries; however it does not measure trade between Northern Ireland (NI) and Great Britain (GB).

Table 1 presents the proportion of NI exports to Ireland and all other countries with a share of exports greater than three percent. Information is presented for 2008 to 2012 (the latest year for which complete figures for NI are currently available from the HMRC RTS series).

The proportion of trade to GB is available for the manufacturing sector only from the Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency's (NISRA) NI Manufacturing Sales and Exports Survey (MSES).

Table 2 presents the sales by NI manufacturing companies to GB as a proportion of total sales (i.e. regardless of destination) and as a proportion of external sales (i.e. sales to destinations outside Northern Ireland), sourced from NISRA's MSES.

Table 1: Proportion of exports<sup>1</sup> of goods<sup>2</sup> for selected countries (with at least 3% share of exports) from Northern Ireland (%)

Total Sales <sup>3</sup>	41.2	45.6	46.9	45.9	47.9
External Sales <sup>4</sup>	53.1	58.0	60.4	59.3	61.1

Source: Northern Ireland Manufacturing Sales and Exports Survey, NISRA

Footnotes:

- Exports include all sales outside the United Kingdom
- Including live animals
- Total sales includes all sales regardless of destination
- External sales include all sales outside Northern Ireland.

Legal Action: Expenditure

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the total amount spent by his Department on the recent legal action taken against the Department for Agriculture and Rural Development regarding European funding.

(AQW 29704/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I refer the Member to AQO 5363/11-15 which was answered on 21 January 2014.

Family Law

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the consideration he has given to changing family law to enable penalties to be put in place by parents who do not grant each other access to their child following a break up.

(AQW 29709/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Under our current law, the court can impose penalties on those parents who breach a contact order, for example a custodial sentence or a fine. It has been suggested that additional enforcement measures should be available. However, it has also been suggested that more should be done to help parents to better understand their responsibilities toward their child and avoid disputes about contact. In the coming months I hope to elicit views on the issues, with a view to determining whether any legislative amendments are required.

Cancer Deaths

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many people have died from (i) lung; (ii) throat; and (iii) mouth cancer in each (a) constituency; and (b) council area, in each of the last ten years.

(AQW 29712/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The attached tables detail the number of registered deaths due to (i) lung cancer; (ii) throat cancer; or (iii) mouth cancer (2003-12), by Local Government District and Assembly Constituency.

Universal Credit

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel in regard to the introduction of universal credit, to ensure that any changes being considered for rate relief will continue to provide rate rebates to low income households.

(AQW 29796/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The second consultation on the future of rate rebates closed recently, a report on the consultation is available on the Department's website.

I will be considering the responses shortly and providing direction on the way forward. I do however support the view that rate rebates should continue to protect households least able to pay domestic rates.

Government Contracts: Procurement Process

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how he intends to reform the procurement process to make it easier for small and medium sized businesses to bid for government contracts.

(AQO 5357/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: A key focus of the Procurement Board for Northern Ireland, which I chair, has been to make it easier for small and medium size businesses to bid for public sector contracts by simplifying procurement processes and making them less bureaucratic. Much of this work has been taken forward in consultation with the construction industry and business sector representatives.

Actions taken include:

- advertising all government contracts over £30,000 on a single portal;
- breaking larger contracts into lots to bring them within the scope of smaller businesses;
- simplifying procurement processes resulting in reduced bidding costs;
- requiring contracts which are over the value of the EU threshold to have a procurement strategy which includes engagement with the supply base;
- reducing liability and insurance requirements by making them proportionate to the risks associated with the contracts; and
- encouraging the advertisement of subcontracting opportunities.

The levels of small business and local business participation in the delivery of public contracts in Northern Ireland compares very well with the other devolved UK Administrations and is well above the levels achieved in England. For example:

- 80% of all contracts awarded by departments, agencies and non departmental public bodies in 2011/2012 were awarded to SMEs. 75% of these contracts went to businesses with fewer than 50 employees. In the construction sector 93% of contracts were awarded to SMEs.
- 79% of all contracts awarded in 2011/2012 went to companies based in Northern Ireland. Within the construction sector some 96% of contracts went to local businesses.

The work to improve procurement processes continues. A key priority is to ensure that Northern Ireland takes maximum advantage of the additional freedoms provided by the new EU procurement Directives to be adopted in the near future.

We continue to work closely with business organisations and a procurement conference to be held later this month will highlight improvements to the procurement process resulting from work carried out in conjunction with CBI.

Economy

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for his assessment of the economic prospects presented by the Chancellor in his Autumn Statement.

(AQO 5358/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: After a long period of slow economic growth it is encouraging to hear the Chancellor of the Exchequer reporting that the UK economy gathered momentum during 2013. I am also encouraged by the revised OBR projections suggesting that overall UK growth will increase from 1.4% in 2013 to 2.4% in 2014, reaching 2.7% by 2017-18.

However, despite the promising growth within the UK economy as a whole, the outlook for 2015-16 and beyond will continue to be challenging for public sector finances as evidenced by the continuing cut to Whitehall departments and the Chancellor's recent comments about further cuts in future years. As a result the Executive will undoubtedly face tough decisions going forward.

Budget Review Group

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for an update on the work of the ministerial Budget Review Group.

(AQO 5359/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Ministerial Budget Review Group last met on the 15th January. On the agenda were a range of strategic issues, including streamlining the procurement process to speed up the delivery of capital projects.

We also discussed key budget issues such as Revenue Financed Investment, transfer of social housing stock and local government reform.

Office for Budget Responsibility: Projections

Mr Douglas asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for an update on the latest Office for Budget Responsibility Expenditure Projections for the determination of the NI block grant in future years.

(AQO 5360/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Office of Budget Responsibility's UK public expenditure projections were set out in their latest Economic and Fiscal Outlook report, which was published alongside the Chancellor's Autumn Statement back in December. This report showed that overall UK Resource DEL is expected to decline until at least 2018-19, with overall UK Capital DEL expected to increase marginally.

It is important to note that the Office for Budget Responsibility projections are at a UK level and that Northern Ireland's funding will be determined through the Barnett Formula. It therefore matters for us how the UK Government prioritise its budget in future Spending Reviews.

However given the latest UK public expenditure projections, it is prudent to assume that our Resource DEL will continue to be heavily constrained, with perhaps slight increases in our Capital DEL.

Rates: Amateur Sports Clubs

Mr Sheehan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for his assessment of abolishing rates for amateur sports clubs. (AQO 5362/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: In 2011 the Assembly passed a motion which asked that DFP examine the rate relief afforded to sports clubs.

Following that debate it was agreed that DCAL would initiate the work, as the policy competent department. That Department have advised that they are currently considering the issue, having engaged with key stakeholders in the sports and recreation sector via the Northern Ireland Sports Forum. I am also aware that Daithi McKay has recently raised the issue of seeking enhanced relief for Community Amateur Sports Clubs (CASCs) by proposing a private members' bill that would bring relief up to 100% from the current level of 80%. I understand he is consulting with the sector.

I would like to wait for some findings before I give my view on the matter. What I would say, however, is that this is not a straightforward issue of Northern Ireland 'playing catch up' with the rest of the UK, as many have suggested, because in GB they also apply 80% mandatory rate relief to amateur sports club facilities. Local authorities there can choose to top up the relief to 100% but only do so in limited circumstances where additional criteria are met. There are also issues with clubs that have substantial social facilities because this raises the question of unfair competition with private enterprise, as businesses are required to pay full rates on their restaurants and licensed premises. This is not to say that change should not occur but we need to consider the evidence and await a proper assessment of the issues.

Legal Action: Expenditure

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline the cost of the recent legal action taken against the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development. (AQO 5363/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The final bills in respect of the case for DFP have not yet been received but it is estimated that the case will cost DFP less than £20,000 which is less than 0.02% of the amount of the proposed transfer from Pillar I to Pillar II.

Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Pensioners Parliament

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail his response to motions HS12, HS13, HS14, HS15, HS16, HS17, HS18 and HS19 recently passed by the Northern Ireland Pensioner's Parliament. (AQW 29430/11-15)

Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): As we move forward with home as the hub, I expect the statutory, independent and voluntary sectors to work together to ensure we have the necessary flexible and responsive domiciliary care services and relevant training will be an important part of that. I have paid tribute many times to the enormous contribution that carers in our community make towards helping family members and friends to remain in their own homes, and live more independent and fulfilling lives. It is vitally important that carers are able to avail of their statutory right to assessment, to discuss their own needs as a carer, and be considered for services in their own right.

More widely I also recognise the issues of dignity and engagement raised in the motions: I have shared the Dignity Code with the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) and have asked that it be publicised throughout the HSC. On 07 May, in light of concerns about Trust engagement, I stopped Trust consultations on the potential closure of statutory residential homes. I instigated a new regional process, led by the HSC Board which is designed to facilitate widespread engagement and includes two periods of public consultation, the first of which is currently underway.

In the TYC Strategic Implementation Plan, the Health and Social Care Board indicated that it would review the list of TYC projects in order to identify which of those will be subject to equality screening. The results of screening exercises will subsequently identify those requiring a full Equality Impact Assessment.

The intention is that screening and impact assessments will be conducted once each specific project reaches the appropriate stage, in line with the HSCB's equality scheme.

The scale of financial challenge facing my Department over the coming years is significant and, in that context, the Health and Social Care Trusts are currently considering all options, including efficiencies and savings opportunities, to maximise the amount of funding available to meet identified needs.

Whilst this is likely to mean difficult decisions must be taken, I am committed to ensuring that the needs of patients and clients are placed at the centre of this process.

Prescriptions

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what guidelines are provided to GP practices in relation to the time taken to transfer prescriptions from surgery to pharmacy.

(AQW 29522/11-15)

Mr Poots: GPs are not responsible for the transfer of prescriptions from surgery to pharmacy.

Community pharmacies generally offer patients a collection and delivery service for prescriptions. This service is not commissioned by the Health and Social Care Board. Guidance has however been provided by the Pharmaceutical Society of Northern Ireland. Under this guidance pharmacies should have an agreement with the GP practice about the procedures when a prescription collection service is offered to patients which should ensure that prescriptions are available in a reasonable and timely manner for dispensing, patient data is protected and consent recorded.

When providing a collection and delivery service the pharmacist must obtain consent to collect/receive patients' prescriptions and explain fully to patients, or their carers, what the service involves, including the time period required to collect/receive and dispense their prescription.

Bamford Review: Update

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the actions contained in the Bamford Review.

(AQW 29532/11-15)

Mr Poots: Progress against the Bamford Action Plan 2012-15 is monitored on a six-monthly basis by the Bamford Inter Departmental Senior Officials Group, and by the Inter-Ministerial Group on Mental Health and Learning Disability.

When I launched the Bamford Action Plan 2012-15 in March last year, I committed to publishing regular monitoring information to highlight progress. The first monitoring report has been drafted and was approved by the Inter-Ministerial Group on Mental Health and Learning Disability in November 2013. An easy read version of this report is currently being prepared, and I hope to publish both versions within the next few weeks.

In general terms, there has been good progress made on the Bamford Action Plan 2012-15, with 83% of the 76 actions on target for completion, and the remaining 17% are progressing, with some delay against the target date. The monitoring report, when published, will provide a detailed update against each of the 76 actions.

Accident and Emergency Departments: Attendance

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people attended Accident and Emergency departments (i) between 30 and 39 times; (ii) between 40 and 49 times; and (iii) more than 50 times a year, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 29569/11-15)

Mr Poots: This information is not currently available at a regional level.

My Department is in the process of developing a regional dataset for attendances at emergency care departments, and it is intended that this information will be available from 2014/15 onwards.

Funding

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to list the funding sources available to Health Service institutions for investment in new and innovative technologies; and who has responsibility for administering and dispersing these grants.

(AQW 29599/11-15)

Mr Poots: Funding for new and innovative technologies is provided through the Departmental capital DEL programme which is allocated to Trusts on an annual basis and set as part of the Executive's overall budget. In the current year, EU funding became available through the European Regional Development Fund and just over £21.5m was allocated to research and development and other new and innovative projects across all Trust areas. This programme was administered by the Department.

On occasions Trusts receive funding directly for research and development activities for the facilitation, support and governance arrangements for Clinical Trials of new pharmaceutical agents and medical devices from Pharmaceutical and Medical Technology Companies. Responsibility for administering these funds lies with the organising body.

Dental Appointments in Hospitals

Mr Eastwood asked Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the waiting times for dentistry appointments in each hospital.

(AQW 29624/11-15)

Mr Poots: Information is not available in the format requested. The Department collects the current waiting time for a first consultant-led outpatient appointment and the current waiting time for inpatient treatment, by specialty. For the purpose of this question, waiting times for dentistry appointments are taken to include the following specialties: Oral Surgery, Restorative Dentistry, Paediatric Dentistry, Orthodontics, Dental/Oral Medicine Specialties and Special Care Dentistry. Hospitals may provide dentistry services in one or more of these specialties. The figures detailed in the tables overleaf are presented for the total waiting times of these specialties combined.

1 Dental services in the Northern HSC Trust are provided by visiting consultants from the South Eastern and Western HSC Trusts. However, Northern Trust has responsibility for these patients waiting times. The Northern HSC Trust have stated that they are unable to provide waiting times for each hospital as joint waiting lists are used, and patients could be treated at either Antrim, Braid Valley, Causeway or Mid Ulster Hospitals.

- 2 A first consultant-led outpatient appointment within the Oral Surgery specialty in Craigavon Area Hospital is provided by a visiting consultant from the South Eastern HSC Trust.

Horse Meat Scandal: Prosecutions

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many prosecutions have resulted from the horsemeat scandal.

(AQW 29630/11-15)

Mr Poots: To date, no one has been charged by the police, however the investigations are still ongoing. The Government recognised very early in the incident that there was likely to be complex international criminal activity involved, which is why the UK Police, SOCA and Europol were contacted at an early stage in the incident and the FSA and the police have been working jointly across the UK since February 2013.

Blood Donation

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why there is a probation on blood donation in respect of those recently in receipt of dental treatment; and whether a routine visit to the dentist in the previous 24 hours is sufficient to activate the prohibition.

(AQW 29634/11-15)

Mr Poots: The requirement of the Blood Safety and Quality Regulations (2005), as stated in the Guidelines for the Blood Transfusion Services in the UK, regarding dental treatment is that people must not donate blood if:

- it is less than seven days since root canal treatment, dental capping (crown or veneer), dental implants or having a tooth removed;
- it is less than 24 hours since a filling, scale and polish or other superficial treatments;
- all wounds are not healed;
- there is any infection or has been on antibiotics within the last seven days, or
- allogeneic human tissue (bone) has been used.

Dental extractions and other treatments can result in bacteria getting into the blood stream. The waiting times after treatment are to allow healing and for any bacteria that have entered the blood stream to be cleared.

Royal Victoria Hospital: Critical Care Building

Mr McGimpsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the total planned expenditure for the construction of the critical care building at the Royal Victoria Hospital; and for a breakdown of (i) building cost; and (ii) equipment cost.

(AQW 29643/11-15)

Mr Poots: In line with the approved capital costs for the Critical Care Building at the Royal Victoria Hospital, the total planned expenditure for the construction, including the costs for adapting the top 3 floors for Maternity facility, is detailed in the table below:

Total Planned Expenditure - Critical Care Building, R.V.H.

Description	Critical Care (Phase 2B)	Maternity Variation	Totals Combined
Building	£137,500,228	£7,702,349	£145,202,577
Equipment	£6,000,000	£480,000	£6,480,000
Totals	£143,500,228	£8,182,349	£151,682,577

Hospital Discharges: Care Packages

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 28910/11-15 and AQW 28911/11-15, how many patients within the Northern Health and Social Care Trust area were unable to be discharged from hospital due to the required care package not being available for delivery by a private provider, in the last twelve months.

(AQW 29658/11-15)

Mr Poots: Information on the number of patients who were unable to be discharged from hospital due to the required care package not being available for delivery by a private care provider is not collected by the Department.

My Department currently has a key performance target (detailed below) to ensure that patients care needs are identified and assessed as swiftly as possible, and that they have prompt access to appropriate care to meet those needs in the most appropriate setting, within a suitable timescale.

"From April 2013, ensure that 90% of complex discharges from an acute hospital take place within 48 hours of the patient being assessed as medically fit for discharge, with no complex discharge taking longer than 7 days, and all non-complex discharges from an acute hospital taking place within 6 hours".

Information on performance against this target for the Northern HSC Trust is detailed in the table below for each month in 2013.

Northern HSC Trust	Jan 2013	Feb 2013	Mar 2013	Apr 2013	May 2013	Jun 2013	July 2013	Aug 2013	Sep 2013	Oct 2013	Nov 2013	Dec 2013
Complex <48 Hours	88.6%	91.0%	87.6%	89.3%	89.8%	93.5%	90.1%	92.9%	93.5%	91.7%	91.5%	90.3%
Complex > 7 Days	8	3	7	3	8	5	10	7	2	9	8	5
Non-complex 6 Hours	94.6%	96.2%	96.5%	95.7%	96.1%	96.2%	96.4%	95.5%	96.4%	95.6%	95.6%	95.2%

During December 2013, 90.3% of complex discharges within the Northern HSC Trust took place within 48 hours of the decision to discharge, with 5 complex discharges took longer than 7 days and 95.2% of non-complex discharges taking place within 6 hours of the decision to discharge.

Ambulance Service: Turnaround Times

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the turnaround time for ambulances in (i) December 2012; and (ii) December 2013, broken down by hospital.

(AQW 29670/11-15)

Mr Poots: It should be noted that the NIAS do not capture information on the date/time of admission of patients to emergency care departments. As a consequence, information on turnaround times detailed in the response refers to the time between the ambulance arriving at the emergency care department and it 'clearing' the location. The crew will remain with the patient until they have been handed over to the relevant clinical personnel within the HSC Hospital environment. The ambulance turnaround time will include patient handover and other aspects such as the time to clean and replenish the ambulance for the next call.

Ambulance turnaround times for each Acute hospital in December 2012 and December 2013 are detailed in the tables overleaf. The information provided relates to all ambulance journeys, including urgent and routine patient journeys in addition to those resulting from emergency calls.

Ambulance Service: Turnaround Times

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the target turnaround time for an ambulance when bringing a patient to hospital; and how many times this was exceeded in December (i) 2012; and (ii) 2013. (AQW 29671/11-15)

Mr Poots: At present, there is no target turnaround time for ambulances at Northern Ireland hospital emergency departments (EDs). However, the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) monitors the time taken for patients to be handed over to ED medical staff and for ambulances to be made ready for their next journey for a range of categories ie less than 15 minutes, 15–30 minutes, 31–60 minutes, 61–120 minutes and more than 120 minutes.

The table below shows performance in these categories at December 2012 and December 2013.

Category Minutes	Less than 15	15 - 30	31 - 60	61 - 120	More than 120	Total
December 2012	1,844	5,472	5,516	665	21	13,518

Cancer Treatments

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he has any plans to introduce Intensity Modulated Radiation Therapy, Stereotactic Body Radiotherapy and Proton Beam Therapy for the treatment of cancer patients. (AQW 29676/11-15)

Mr Poots: Intensity modulated radiotherapy (IMRT) is provided to all suitable prostate cancer and an increasing number of head and neck cancer patients at the Northern Ireland Cancer Centre. Further capability will be added when new (planned) equipment is commissioned later this year.

Stereotactic ablative body radiotherapy (SABR) is a relatively new and highly specialist form of radiotherapy presently not routinely commissioned in Northern Ireland. However a pilot service is currently provided to Northern Ireland patients alongside existing arrangements to send patients to Leeds, Sheffield and London. The Belfast Health and Social Care Trust have plans to expand the pilot service.

Proton beam therapy is also a highly specialist service; it is currently unavailable UK wide. However, current plans are that this treatment will be provided at two specialist sites in England (London and Manchester) by 2018. Currently Northern Ireland patients are referred to specialist centres either in the United States, Germany or Switzerland and this arrangement is expected to continue for the foreseeable future; the arrangement will be reviewed in 2018 should UK provision become available.

The Health and Social Care Board's extra contractual referral (ECR) process provides a mechanism to consider requests for treatment that fall outside the range of services normally commissioned in Northern Ireland. Each request sent to the Board must be supported by the relevant Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust manager and clinical director.

The common position across HSC in the UK is that referrals to other countries should be controlled by prior authorisation, exercised by local health authorities. Because of the existing reciprocal arrangements with EU countries, where a referral outside the UK is clinically necessary, that referral would normally be made to a hospital in the EU before referrals would be initiated to non-EU countries.

Causeway Hospital: Accident and Emergency Services

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, given the pressures the Royal Hospital's Accident and Emergency department faced recently, whether he will take steps to ensure an adequate provision for A & E services is retained at the Causeway Hospital.

(AQW 29687/11-15)

Mr Poots: The delivery of emergency department services at Causeway Hospital is a matter for the Northern Health and Social Care Trust. The Trust has advised that the emergency department in the Causeway Hospital is an essential component of the unscheduled care response in the Northern Trust and maintaining emergency services in Causeway is a Trust priority. There have been improvements in the systems and flow design within the Causeway Hospital which have resulted in significant improvements in performance. The Trust is continuing to develop and stabilise the medical workforce in the emergency department to ensure the sustainability of this service.

Craigavon Area Hospital: Ambulance Diversions

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, in relation to the ambulance divert which occurred on the 6 January 2014, how many ambulances were diverted from Craigavon Area Hospital; and to which hospital were they diverted.

(AQW 29694/11-15)

Mr Poots: The ambulance divert which occurred at Craigavon Area Hospital on the 6th January 2014, was in place between 5.40pm on 6th January 2014 and 8.14am on 7th January 2014. During this period, 12 ambulances were diverted from Craigavon Area Hospital to other Hospitals (table below).

Number of Ambulances Diverted from Craigavon Area Hospital to other Hospitals (6/7 January 2014)

Hospital Diverted to	Number
Daisyhill	10
Royal Victoria	1
South West Acute	1
Total	12

Source: Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS).

It is important to note that when a full 999 ambulance divert is in operation, the Command and Control records do not indicate that the ambulance would have gone to Craigavon Area Hospital, and then diverted to Daisyhill Hospital. However, they record that a 999 call was responded to where the patient had an assumed address within the Craigavon Area Hospital catchment area, but was taken to Daisyhill Hospital.

Craigavon Area Hospital: Ambulance Diversions

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many working hours were lost as a result of ambulances being diverted from Craigavon Area Hospital on 6 January 2014.

(AQW 29696/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) routinely monitors activity at Emergency Departments as part of the planning process to ensure patients are seen as quickly as possible. In the period 6-7 January 2014, NIAS diverted A&E ambulances to other hospitals in response to increased demand at Craigavon Area Hospital Emergency Department which was busier than usual. During this time, NIAS personnel were at all times appropriately employed. As there was no reduction in ambulance provision over the period, no working hours were lost.

Craigavon Area Hospital: CT Scanners

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many times the CT scanner in Craigavon Area Hospital has broken down in the last six months; and how many patients had to be transferred to an alternative hospital for their CT scan.

(AQW 29697/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Southern Health and Social Care Trust advise that the CT scanner has broken down twice in the last six months. Five patients were transferred to Daisy Hill Hospital and one patient to the Royal Victoria Hospital.

Cancer

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people in each constituency are currently being treated for (i) lung; (ii) throat; and (iii) mouth cancer.

(AQW 29713/11-15)

Mr Poots: Information on the number of people currently being treated for cancer is unavailable. However, information is available on the number of patients diagnosed with (i) lung, (ii) throat and (iii) mouth cancer who subsequently received treatment within one year of diagnosis:

(i) The number and percentage of patients diagnosed with lung cancer (ICD-10* C33-C34) in N. Ireland in the years 2006 to 2010 who received treatment (surgery, chemotherapy, radiotherapy) within one year, by Parliamentary Constituency

Emergency Doctors: Training

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many meetings he has had with the Minister for Employment and Learning on the training and skilling of emergency doctors; and whether he has any plans to raise the shortage of emergency doctors with Ministerial colleagues at the Executive, in Dublin and London, and in Europe.

(AQW 29716/11-15)

Mr Poots: The training of junior doctors including doctors in emergency medicine is the responsibility of the Northern Ireland Medical and Dental Training Agency (NIMDTA). My Department is very aware of the shortage of emergency doctors and we continue to work closely with NIMDTA and with Trusts on this issue. However, there is currently a national shortage of doctors in emergency medicine making it very difficult for Trusts to fill these vacancies.

I have previously raised the junior doctor vacancy issue with the Home Office, particularly in relation to the impact of the immigration rules on the recruitment of junior doctors from outside the EEA. Although there are no plans for Minister Farry and I to meet to discuss this specific issue my officials hold regular meetings with the Department for Employment and Learning on a range of strategic issues of mutual concern, including future planning of the medical workforce.

Western Health and Social Care Trust: Medical Consultant Vacancies

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many medical consultant vacancies exist in each department of the Western Health and Social Care Trust; and what measures are being taken to fill the vacancies.

(AQW 29735/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Western Trust has informed my Department that there are currently 30.5 medical consultant vacancies across the Trust. These vacancies have been broken down by Directorate in the table below:

Directorate	Consultant Vacancies
Acute	16
Primary Care and Older People Services	9
Womens & Childrens	4.5
Adult Mental Health & Learning Disability	1

The Western Trust is actively taking steps to fill these vacancies. Some posts have been advertised on several occasions. The Trust has recruited locum consultants into posts that have proved difficult fill. It has advised that 26.4 posts (out of the 30.5 vacancies) are currently filled by locum consultants.

Western Health and Social Care Trust: Savings Plans

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether jobs in the Western Health and Social Care Trust are at risk in 2014/15 as a result of the Trust's savings plan for the current funding period.

(AQW 29738/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Western Trust, like other Trusts, is continuing to carry out detailed analysis of its financial position for 2013/14, taking account of emerging cost pressures and implementing, where possible, options to reduce expenditure which do not impact on front line services.

The scale of financial challenge facing my Department over the coming years is significant and in that context, all Health and Social Care Trusts are currently considering all options, including efficiencies and savings opportunities, to maximise the amount of funding available to meet identified needs.

I am committed to ensuring that the needs of service users and patients are placed at the centre of this process.

Special Educational Needs: Music Therapy

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether the Review of the Allied Health Professionals' Support for Children and Young People with Statements of Special Educational Needs in Special Schools and Mainstream Education has requested, or plans to consider, evidence from parents of children with the most complex needs on the inclusion of music therapy in special education.

(AQW 29769/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Review's focus is primarily on the services provided by Occupational Therapy, Speech and Language Therapy, Physiotherapy, Dietetics, Orthoptics and Podiatry for children with Statements of Special Educational Needs (SEN). In addition, it has been agreed that there will be an opportunity for engagement with representatives from other Allied Health Professions (AHP), including those providing music therapy, who work with children with SEN Statements.

Furthermore, the Public Health Agency will seek views on the provision of AHP services, including music therapy, from the parents of children with Statements of Special Educational Needs.

Special Educational Needs: Allied Health Professions

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether the need for additional allied health professional input and services to meet the needs of children with profound multiple learning difficulties and multiple complex needs is being included as part of the Review of the Allied Health Professionals' Support for Children and Young People with Statements of Special Educational Needs in Special Schools and Mainstream Education.

(AQW 29770/11-15)

Mr Poots: The review will focus on Allied Health Professions (AHP) services for all children with statements of special educational needs, including those with profound multiple learning difficulties and multiple complex needs. In phases 1 and 2 the level of AHP provision will be scoped for these children and will culminate with the identification of issues and recommendations for action. In phase 3 an agreed regional model and implementation plan will be drafted, based on the findings of the scoping exercise and recommendations for further action.

Royal Victoria Hospital: Accident and Emergency Department

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what additional resources, including staff and finance, have been put in place in the Royal Victoria Hospital Emergency Department to deal with the impact of the early closures of Emergency Departments at the Lagan Valley and Downe Hospitals.

(AQW 29813/11-15)

Mr Poots: The following additional resources (contingency arrangements) have been put in place at the Royal Victoria Hospital:

- 6 additional inpatient beds;
- 2 additional emergency department nurses at weekends to cover 12-hour day time period both Saturday and Sunday;
- 2 additional emergency department senior doctors at weekends to cover 12-hour day time period both Saturday and Sunday;
- Consequential acute medicine, social work, radiology and laboratory activity.

In addition, the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service has increased the cover provided to the Royal Victoria Hospital site by a Hospital Ambulance Liaison Officer to assist with expediting patient transfers via ambulance.

Fire and Rescue Service: Training

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the lifesaving potential of training greater numbers of Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service personnel in Large Animal Rescue techniques.

(AQW 29846/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service (NIFRS) approach to providing emergency cover is based on a comprehensive analysis of risk. The assessment of training needs to ensure the availability of adequately trained personnel is an operational matter for the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service (NIFRS). NIFRS places a strong focus on operational training to prepare staff for all of the challenges they face, including large animal rescue.

NIFRS currently have two dedicated Animal Rescue Teams based in Omagh and Newcastle. These teams provide full coverage across Northern Ireland with a specific focus on the rural communities. The Animal Rescue Teams have access to specialist equipment and use approved rescue techniques. In addition a number of officers are trained as Farm Animal Handling Awareness Officers and all station based personnel receive annual training in animal rescue with each fire station having its own animal rescue instructors.

Air Ambulance Service

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an up to date assessment of the current air ambulance service provided to the Health Service.

(AQW 30006/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) has in place an air ambulance contract with a private provider for the transfer of adult and paediatric patients to and from Northern Ireland. This is a planned service, initiated by individual Health and Social Care Trusts and is used primarily to transport seriously ill patients from a referring NI hospital to Belfast International Airport for onward transfer by dedicated aircraft to NHS services in Great Britain. It is also used to repatriate patients back to NI hospitals following treatment if they are deemed too unwell to travel by other means.

The framework scope and service specification for the contract sets out in detail the requirements the provider must meet in providing safe, responsive, value for money air transport and associated services to the population of Northern Ireland.

I have been assured by the HSCB that all aircraft involved in patient transfers are operated in full compliance with the current European Aviation Safety Agency (EASA) regulations, which includes a certificate of airworthiness and that all maintenance is carried out in accordance with the Civil Aviation Authority requirements.

Accident and Emergency Departments: Funding

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether the funding rule, applicable in England and Wales, that Accident and Emergency departments receive only 30 per cent of the cost of treating patients admitted, over and above the number of patients treated in 2008-09, applies locally.

(AQW 30067/11-15)

Mr Poots: There is no equivalent funding mechanism in place in Northern Ireland.

There are many measures in place in Northern Ireland to reduce/divert Accident and Emergency activity. These include; GP out of hours services; Co-location of GP out of hours with emergency departments; Emergency department related pathways (e.g. DVT protocols); Extra GP clinics in winter; NIAS treat and leave initiatives; and Public campaigns such as "Choose well".

Department of Justice

Harry Maguire

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice to outline how Harry Maguire, a person convicted of the murder of Corporals Howes and Woods, recently sat on a promotion board within the Northern Ireland Prison Service.

(AQW 29520/11-15)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): No external representative sits on Prison Service promotion boards. A number of staff applied for a temporary secondment to a project involving the Prison Service working in partnership with the Probation Board for Northern Ireland and two community-based restorative practice groups – Northern Ireland Alternatives and Community Restorative Justice Ireland. This was not a promotion opportunity.

In line with normal practice for secondments these staff were invited for an informal chat with a panel which comprised a senior NIPS manager, a senior PBNI manager and the Director of one of the two community-based groups.

Third Sector Organisation: Funding

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Justice to detail (i) all third sector organisations funded by his Department who provide services to the public; and (ii) the value of each contract.

(AQW 29544/11-15)

Mr Ford: Since its formation in April 2010 the Department of Justice, including its Agencies but not its arm's length bodies, has provided the following funding to third sector organisations who provide services to the public in each of the last three financial years:

Third sector organisation	Value of funding £k
	2010/11	2011/12	2012/13
Barnardos	168	156	167
NI Prison Service Central Benevolent Fund	13	17	19
Challenge for Youth	40	-	-

Third sector organisation	Value of funding £k
	2010/11	2011/12	2012/13
Colin Early Intervention Partnership	-	-	25
Community Restorative Justice Ireland	50	50	50
Domestic Violence Helpline	97	105	110
Extern	385	347	342
Include Youth	90	89	88
Migrant Help	27	124	45
Mindwise	298	313	246
NIACRO	984	1,322	1,511

Quaker Service	241	191	341
Respect	6	6	6
SLS Legal Publications	25	25	13
Victim Support Northern Ireland	2,213	2,180	2,147

In addition to the above, the Youth Justice Agency (YJA), an executive agency of the Department of Justice, runs a Small Grant Scheme for amounts up to £1,500 to support the work that local community and voluntary groups do with vulnerable and marginalised young people. The total amounts funded under this scheme are as follows:

	Value of funding £k
	2010/11	2011/12	2012/13
YJA Small Grant Scheme	111	203	154

Court Cases: Mixed Committals

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to the number of mixed committals held in each of the last five years, to detail how many (i) legal firms and (ii) counsel each equates to per year, to date.

(AQW 29567/11-15)

Mr Ford: The table below details the number of distinct solicitors' firms and counsel in mixed committal proceedings for the period 2009-2013.

Year	Number of mixed committals	Number of solicitors' firms	Number of counsel
2013P	30	29	22
2012	24	29	23
2011	42	35	28
2010	32	29	15
2009	52	40	22

Source: Integrated Court Operations System

P Data currently provisional and may be subject to change.

Court Cases: Mixed Committals

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to detail the cases heard or listed for hearing as a Mixed Committal in each of the last five years, and of these (i) how many were/are not legally aided; and (ii) how many were/are legally aided, including the cost of each.

(AQW 29590/11-15)

Mr Ford: Information in the requested format is not readily available and could only be compiled at disproportionate cost

Legal Aid: Local Courts and Proceedings

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice whether legal representatives defending in local courts and proceedings, particularly those funded by Legal Aid and in which high costs are accumulating, have a responsibility to inform clients of potential convictions if relevant evidence indicates guilt, or whether they can continue to put forward their client's denial in absence of the defence disproving or moving to disprove guilt, even though the outcome is inevitable and delay will contribute to increasing costs which could be avoided.

(AQW 29591/11-15)

Mr Ford: The responsibilities of legal representatives towards their clients are regulated by the Law Society of Northern Ireland and the Bar Council.

Subject to the Assembly's wider legislative programme, I intend to introduce a Justice Bill in the first half of 2014. The Bill will propose placing a statutory duty on a defence representative to make clients who are guilty of an offence aware of the benefits of admitting their guilt at an early stage.

Legal Aid: Payments

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice to detail the highest ten amounts paid, and to whom, in Legal Aid payments for the year ending 31 March 2013, including the average annual amount paid to each person/firm.

(AQW 29602/11-15)

Mr Ford: Top ten legal aid payments and average payments in 2012/13.

Ranking	Description	Highest Payments	Average Gross Payment	Average Net Payment
1	Kevin Winters & Co Inc Krw Law Llp	2,439,301	508	357
2	Mcconnell, Kelly & Co	1,620,474	897	678
3	Madden & Finucane 11	1,465,712	845	610
4	Mckenna Sweeney Mckeown	1,414,116	731	551
5	Trevor Smyth & Co	1,216,970	675	520
6	Mr P Lyttle	1,070,029	4,350	3625
7	Donnelly & Wall	1,023,396	910	680
8	Higgins, Hollywood, Deazley	945,675	842	851*
9	Mccann & Mccann	857,726	631	475
10	John Reavey	780,561	2,455	1948

* The total payments for this firm include a recoupment of an interim payment in respect of disbursement.

Notes:

- The figures tabled are gross figures which are subject to tax liability.
- Payments are made retrospectively for work completed. They can reflect payments in respect of cases conducted over a number of years but which were paid in the same year.
- Average payments have been calculated by dividing the total payment made by the number of payments made.
- Net average payments reflect the professional fee paid to each individual/firm, exclusive of disbursements and VAT.

On 23 December 2013, the Northern Ireland Legal Services Commission published details of the 100 solicitor practices and 100 barristers receiving the highest payments from legal aid in Northern Ireland during the financial year 2012/13. Supporting notes were published alongside the NILSC's Disclosure of payments. These can be found on the Commission's website at www.nilsc.org.uk.

Criminal Justice: Informed Warnings

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice to detail (i) the status and genesis of Informed Warnings in the criminal justice system; (ii) the distinctions with adult cautions; and (iii) the use of informed cautions to date.

(AQW 29604/11-15)

Mr Ford: An informed warning is a formal reprimand administered by the PSNI on the direction of the Public Prosecution Service. It is not a criminal conviction but is recorded on a person's criminal record for 12 months. Informed Warnings were an alternative to prosecution used by the police, the use of which transferred to the PPS when it was set up in 2005.

Adult cautions are also formal reprimands administered by the PSNI on the direction of the PPS. A caution is not a conviction but is recorded on a person's criminal record for five years if an adult, and for 30 months if a youth.

Both Informal Warnings and Adult Cautions require an admission of guilt and details of the disposal remain available to criminal courts after the periods stated.

The Public Prosecution Service has provided the data below on the number of cautions and informed warnings issued from 2007 to December 2014

	2007/08	2008/09	2009/10	2010/11	2011/12	2013/ 2014 (to end Dec)
Cautions	6678	7367	7252	7078	5438	3495
Informed Warnings	2865	2158	2242	1669	958	519

Human Tissue Retention

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the actions taken and the current situation relating to the body parts controversy which arose in 2012.

(AQW 29610/11-15)

Mr Ford: The review of retained human tissue by the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) published in June 2012 included a number of recommendations directed towards the PSNI, Office of the Police Ombudsman, Coroners Service for Northern Ireland, State Pathologist's Department and Department of Justice.

Public confidence in the procedures for management of human tissue is important and so I requested Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary (HMIC) to carry out a review of progress against the recommendations of the ACPO audit. HMIC published its report in July 2013 and the report is available on the DOJ website.

The HMIC report acknowledged the progress made by the agencies in updating their practices and procedures. However, it noted that further work was needed to ensure a consistent approach across all of the justice agencies. The relevant agencies are currently progressing those recommendations and I have committed to a further review of progress against the recommendations being carried out during the summer.

Cannabis Cultivation

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to cannabis factories operated by Chinese nationals and the convictions and cases currently within the court system, whether any evidence of (i) human trafficking; (ii) forced labour; and/or (iii) illegal gangmaster practice has been discovered.

(AQW 29627/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Department of Justice does not hold this information. The Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland (PPSNI) have advised that information is not kept in a form which would enable it to be examined without a significant exercise. They have confirmed, however, that when taking decisions as to prosecution, prosecutors will apply the PPS Policy for Prosecuting Cases of Human Trafficking and if it is considered that a suspect has committed an offence as a direct result of their having been trafficked then this will be a strong public interest factor mitigating against prosecution.

I understand that the PPSNI has exercised prosecutorial discretion not to prosecute in a number of cases where the alleged perpetrator was believed to be a victim of human trafficking, including cases of cannabis cultivation.

The Department of Justice has commissioned research on all the cases of potential victims of human trafficking that have been referred into the National Referral Mechanism from Northern Ireland, in order to identify any issues that need to be addressed. We will be examining any evidence relating to the prosecution of victims which that research might reveal.

Finally, the cultivation of cannabis is an illegal activity, defined in legislation within The Misuse of Drugs Act 1971, and therefore falls outside the remit of the Gangmasters Licensing Authority.

Court Cases: Mixed Committals

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 29450/11-15, whether guidance has been issued to staff of the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service from any other agency or Department in relation to the listing of mixed committals, and if so, to detail (i) the content; (ii) the reasons for such guidance; and (iii) when it was issued.

(AQW 29628/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service (NICTS) has not issued guidance to staff from any other agency or Department in relation to the listing of mixed committals.

Barry McCarney: Legal Aid

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to detail the total cost of Legal Aid for the defence of Barry McCarney in the Millie Martin murder trial, broken down by (i) solicitor; (ii) junior counsel; and (iii) senior counsel; and to clarify if this matter will be appealed.

(AQW 29629/11-15)

Mr Ford: The total cost of legal aid for the defence of Barry McCarney in the Millie Martin murder trial, broken down by (i) solicitor; (ii) junior counsel; and (iii) senior counsel is as follows:

Solicitor	£167,029.92
Junior Counsel	£29,748.12
Senior Counsel	£121,085.51
Total	£317,863.55

The matter has been appealed but the appeal has not yet been heard.

Magistrates' Court: Summary Charge

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice to outline the circumstances in which, a summary charge, which is subject to a six month limitation, can be proceeded outside that timeframe; and whether the Form 1 mechanism is available in respect of a charge sheet process, or only in respect of an unserved summons.

(AQW 29632/11-15)

Mr Ford: Under Article 19 of the Magistrates' Courts (NI) Order 1981 the magistrates' court does not have jurisdiction to deal with a summary offence unless the complaint was made within 6 months from the time when the offence was committed or ceased to continue.

In broad terms, a complaint is deemed to have been made when a summons is signed by a lay magistrate or, in charge sheet cases, when the case is first listed in court. A complainant may choose to raise a formal complaint, known as a Form 1, before a lay magistrate to ensure that the statutory time limit is complied with.

The statutory time limit for summary offences applies whether proceedings are brought by summons, charge sheet or Form 1. If the Form 1 is used it is normally followed by a summons not by a charge.

Where there is a time limit for an offence, the prosecution must prove, if the issue arises, that the time limit was observed. The time limit does not however apply to an indictable offence or to a hybrid offence. Nor does it apply where a specific time limit is set down by any enactment.

The time limit applies to the making of the complaint and not to the serving of the summons. There is no jurisdictional time limit for the service of a summons on foot of a complaint.

Magistrates' Court: Summary Proceedings

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice how many summary proceedings have failed to proceed in the last twelve months as a result of the summons not being served within the limitation period.

(AQW 29633/11-15)

Mr Ford: Under Article 19 of the Magistrates' Courts (NI) Order 1981 the magistrates' court does not have jurisdiction to deal with a summary offence unless the complaint was made within 6 months from the time when the offence was committed or ceased to continue.

In broad terms, a complaint is deemed to have been made when a summons is signed by a lay magistrate or, in charge sheet cases, when the case is first listed in court. A complainant may choose to raise a formal complaint, known as a Form 1, before a lay magistrate to ensure that the statutory time limit is complied with.

The statutory time limit for summary offences applies whether proceedings are brought by summons, charge sheet or Form 1. If the Form 1 is used it is normally followed by a summons not by a charge.

Where there is a time limit for an offence, the prosecution must prove, if the issue arises, that the time limit was observed. The time limit does not however apply to an indictable offence or to a hybrid offence. Nor does it apply where a specific time limit is set down by any enactment.

The time limit applies to the making of the complaint and not to the serving of the summons. There is no jurisdictional time limit for the service of a summons on foot of a complaint.

Maghaberry Prison: Security

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 29468/11-15, to detail when prison officers last lost control of a wing or section of a prison.
(AQW 29657/11-15)

Mr Ford: Prison Officers last lost control of an area of Maghaberry Prison on 21st June 2011. During that incident of mass indiscipline, prisoners set fires in Lagan House recreation room and yard. The incident lasted for approximately seven hours before staff regained control of the area.

Legal Aid: Savings

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to detail the estimated savings following the introduction of the reforms to Legal Aid.
(AQW 29688/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Department of Justice has developed a comprehensive programme of legal aid reforms aimed at improving access to justice, bringing legal aid expenditure within budget and improving governance.

Reforms to criminal legal aid, already introduced, when fully implemented will achieve estimated savings of £20million; other savings will be achieved from further planned reforms to both civil and criminal legal aid.

A further reform to Crown Court Fees has been subject to consultation. If fully implemented, it would deliver further saving of up to £5.6million. In addition, my Department has undertaken consultations on a number of proposals including reforms to publicly funded legal Representation in the Civil and Family Courts, changes to Financial Eligibility for Civil and Criminal Legal Aid and proposals to introduce standard fees in the Civil Courts. If fully implemented these reforms would save up to a further £18 million per year.

All of these projects will contribute to my strategic objective of bringing legal aid expenditure within budget.

Rural Crime: Successful Prosecutions

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to tackling rural crime, to detail the number of successful prosecutions and value of equipment recovered in 2013.
(AQW 29717/11-15)

Mr Ford: Datasets held by my Department do not contain information on the location and circumstances in which offences were committed. It is not, therefore, possible to identify convictions resulting from rural crime. Similarly, information on the value of equipment recovered through the successful prosecutions of such crimes is not held by my Department.

Victims: Personal Statements

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice to detail the timescale for the introduction of a statutory right for victims to be able to tell a court how a crime affected them.
(AQW 29736/11-15)

Mr Ford: I plan to legislate in the forthcoming Justice Bill to give victims of crime a statutory entitlement to make a written victim personal statement. Subject to the agreement of the Executive, and the Assembly's legislative timetable, I intend to introduce this legislation in the early part of this year.

A new formalised process for submitting victim personal statements was introduced in December 2013. These statements give victims, or their representatives, the opportunity to make the court aware of how a crime has affected them. Where a case goes to court and a person pleads or is found guilty, victim personal statements can be used before sentencing to make clear to the judge the harm caused by the crime.

Human Trafficking and Prostitution: Victims' Fund

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, following the conviction of Bronislav Rybensky for human trafficking and controlling prostitution and Lyle Lamont for controlling prostitution, whether the funds seized at the scene of the crimes have been placed into a victims fund, specifically for those who were trafficked and/or exploited in the case.
(AQW 29747/11-15)

Mr Ford: This matter remains under police investigation.

Criminal Justice: Non-Northern Ireland Nationals

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of Non-Northern Ireland nationals that have been convicted of (i) human trafficking; (ii) controlling prostitution or any similar related offence; (iii) rape or a similar related sexual offence; (iv) murder; and/or (v) manslaughter; and of these, how many have been recommended for deportation on release, or have since been deported.

(AQW 29749/11-15)

Mr Ford: Information relating to prosecutions and convictions in respect of human trafficking offences is collated and included in the annual Inter-Departmental Ministerial Group on Human Trafficking (IDMG) Report. There have been three human trafficking convictions in Northern Ireland in 2012 and 2013. None of the individuals convicted in each of these cases were UK nationals.

Convictions databases held by my Department do not contain information on whether or not an offender is a "Non-Northern Ireland" national. It is therefore not possible to provide the exact figures requested for each of the crimes specified in the question. Instead, numbers for all convictions in relation to the crimes specified have been provided.

The latest published convictions data relates to 2009. Information in relation to the latest three years available, 2007-2009, is included in the table below.

Convictions for specified offences, 2007-2009

	2007	2008	2009
Human trafficking	0	0	0
Controlling prostitution	0	3	3
Rape	15	16	22
Murder	18	12	24
Manslaughter	12	13	7

Notes:

1. Data are collated on the principal offence rule; only the most serious offence for which an offender is convicted is included.
2. The figures provided relate to convictions for all classifications of the offence specified.

Deportation is a matter which falls under the remit of the Home Office.

Magilligan Prison: Replacement

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice to detail the current timescale of the (i) commencement; and (ii) completion of the replacement Magilligan Prison complex.

(AQW 29802/11-15)

Mr Ford: Following my updates to the Assembly on March 19th and October 21st 2013, NIPS Officials continue their work in developing the plans for all the projects outlined in the Estate Strategy including that of the rebuilding of Magilligan.

Following Department of Finance and Personnel approval of the Strategic Outline Business Case for Magilligan's redevelopment, NIPS Officials are in the process of developing the Outline Business Case (OBC). The future programme is dependent on the OBC being approved and capital funding being made available. Until the OBC is approved and capital funding made available, I am unable to provide any further details of the timetable.

Prisoners: Christmas Parole

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of prisoners released for Christmas parole in each of the last five years; and of these, how many prisoners failed to return to prison.

(AQW 29860/11-15)

Mr Ford: The number of prisoners released under the Christmas Home Leave Scheme in each of the last five years, and of these the number who failed to return to prison, is detailed in table A below:

Table A

Calender Year	No. of prisoners released	No. of prisoners who failed to return at the appropriate time or who breached bail conditions
2009	76	0

Calender Year	No. of prisoners released	No. of prisoners who failed to return at the appropriate time or who breached bail conditions
2010	57	1
2011	87	3
2012	72	3
2013	92	3

Prisoners who breached their leave conditions or failed to return to prison at the appropriate time were posted unlawfully at large (UAL). All were subsequently returned to prison.

Thomas Ward

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, following the judgement on 16 January 2014 and the subsequent dismissal of the appeal against conviction and sentence brought by Thomas Ward, whether he will publish the report of the Serious Case Review in respect of handling and monitoring following his release from custody for a similar attack, and his arrest and charge of the second attack.

(AQW 29921/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Court of Appeal has delivered its judgment and once the statutory time limit for any remaining avenues of appeal has passed the PPANI Strategic Management Board will be in a position to consider the publication of the conclusions of the report in this case.

Threats: Orange Halls and Personnel

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the threat to Orange Halls and personnel resulting from the deputy First Minister's claiming the UVF and Orange Order are one and the same in Belfast.

(AQW 29982/11-15)

Mr Ford: It is not for me as Minister of Justice to make any assessment of threat. At recent meetings neither the Chief Constable nor the Secretary of State raised any specific concerns regarding this issue.

Drug-related Offences: Upper Bann

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of prosecutions and convictions for drug related offences in the Upper Bann constituency, in the last twelve months.

(AQW 30010/11-15)

Mr Ford: Drugs offences may be prosecuted under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971, the Medicines Act 1968, the Criminal Attempts and Conspiracy (Northern Ireland) Order 1983 and the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979.

There were 66 convictions for drug related offences in 2009 (the latest year for which figures are currently available), where the known address provided for the offender was within the Upper Bann constituency. It is not possible to provide prosecution data.

Note:

3. Data are collated on the principal offence rule; only the most serious offence for which an offender is convicted is included.
4. The figures provided relate to convictions for all classifications of the offence specified.

Department for Regional Development

Speed Limits

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 13221/11-15, how many 20mph zones have been implemented in (i) 2012; and (ii) 2013; and how many are planned to be implemented before 2014.

(AQW 29155/11-15)

Mr Kennedy (The Minister for Regional Development): I can confirm eight 20 mph zones were implemented during 2011/12, and a further 14 during 2012/13. One further 20 mph zone is due to be implemented during 2013/14.

Barrack Street, Belfast: Closure

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the benefits that have resulted from the closure of Barrack Street in Belfast to through traffic.

(AQW 29509/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The closure of Barrack Street, Belfast to through traffic derived from the 'Belfast On The Move' strategic review of traffic within Belfast City Centre. Roads Service had previously been aware of local residents' concerns over the volume and nature of through traffic in this street and took the opportunity to address those concerns within the overall scheme proposal.

Whilst there has been no formal assessment carried out on the specific benefits of the closure of Barrack Street, it is considered the stopping-up has returned the area to being a residential street for the benefit of all those who live there.

Whitechurch Road, Ballywalter: Repair

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the timescale for the repair of the A2 Whitechurch Road in Ballywalter, which subsided as a result of the recent tidal surge.

(AQW 29512/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Roads Service has assessed the damage at Whitechurch Road, Ballywalter as a result of the recent tidal surge. Design work will soon be completed and it is anticipated the repair work will take up to three months, given the extent of the damage.

Cycling: Programme for Government

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development how they are ensuring that the Executive meets the Programme for Government 2011-15 target to increase the number of pupils that cycle to school.

(AQW 29531/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Programme for Government 2011-15 makes a commitment to 'by 2015 create the conditions to facilitate at least 36% of primary school pupils and 22% of secondary school pupils to walk or cycle to school as their main mode of transport'. In order to deliver this commitment my Department, in partnership with the Public Health Agency, is funding a three year Active School Travel Initiative which involves delivering a programme of cycle and walking skills training to pupils in 180 schools across Northern Ireland. The programme is being delivered by Sustrans and its objective is to encourage school children to adopt cycling and walking as their main mode of travel to school.

A robust programme of monitoring and evaluation has been developed by my Department's Statistics and Research Branch to measure achievement of the PfG targets and provide improved information on the progress made under the Active School Travel Initiative.

I have also established a Cycling Unit within my Department to ensure that cycling provision is a key element in both transport strategy and delivery. In addition, my Department continues to invest in the Safer Routes to School programme which is an initiative aimed at encouraging the use of sustainable transport options to school such as walking, cycling, public transport or car sharing to school. We are also exploring opportunities to work with other Departments to improve walking and cycling infrastructure and facilities at participating schools.

My Department continues to work with other stakeholders in the forthcoming Giro d'Italia Big Start to ensure that it provides a lasting legacy for cycling among our school children. We are actively involved in the schools sub-group which is chaired by the Department of Education.

Moneydig Waste Water Treatment Works

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister for Regional Development what base maintenance is planned for Moneydig pumping station.

(AQW 29546/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water that it plans to upgrade the Moneydig Wastewater Treatment Works as part of the Rural Wastewater Investment Programme and work is expected to be completed by March 2015.

Moneydig Waste Water Treatment Works

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister for Regional Development when Moneydig pumping station is expected to reach its population equivalent.

(AQW 29547/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water that Moneydig Wastewater Treatment Works has already surpassed its design population equivalent (PE). The current Works has a design PE of 44 while the actual PE discharging to the Works is 61. NIW plans to upgrade the Works under the Rural Wastewater Investment Programme and it is expected that this will be completed by March 2015. The upgrade will increase the capacity to 100 PE.

Bloomberg Associates

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he has considered availing of the free services offered by the new Bloomberg Associates Group in relation to the development of public spaces and improved pedestrian and cycling participation and their experience in New York City.

(AQW 29556/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I have advised my officials to liaise with Belfast City Council regarding the details of Bloomberg Associates Group as this would appear to represent a better match to the potential wide and varied support offered by the group for cities around the world.

In relation to improved facilities for walking and cycling I will seek to explore best practice examples both worldwide and nearer to home as we develop a workable and achievable means to promote both as alternative and sustainable modes of travel.

Cycling: Departmental Unit

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development when the first meeting of the departmental cycling unit will be held. (AQW 29557/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Cycling Unit is a work group within my Department which is developing an ongoing programme of work as it aims to ensure that cycling provision is a key element in both transport strategy and delivery. Staff within the Cycling Unit meet internally on a daily and ongoing basis and have met with various other stakeholders since the creation of the Unit in November 2013.

The Cycling Unit looks forward to meeting with the Committee for Regional Development and the All Party Group on cycling in due course.

Cycling: Eye-level Traffic Lights

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he has considering introducing eye level cycling traffic lights which were approved by the Department for Transport in December 2013. (AQW 29558/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I am aware the Department for Transport has issued a site-specific authorisation for the use of eye-level cycle traffic lights at Bow Roundabout in London for a trial period.

My officials will review the outcome of the trial before making recommendations on their use here.

Dunhill Road, Coleraine: Traffic

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 22367/11-15, to outline the reasons for the announcement of the further potential traffic problems over the course of 2014 at the same location on the Dunhill Road, Coleraine due to more work being carried out. (AQW 29601/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Northern Ireland Electricity (NIE) previously laid a high voltage (33kv) underground cable along the Northern side of Dunhill Road to serve Dunmore Wind Farm. A second Wind Farm, known as Dunbeg Wind Farm, requires a similar service which, for technical reasons, cannot be laid in the same trench or within three metres of the Dunmore cable.

In order to minimise traffic disruption, the new cable will be laid on the Southern side of Dunhill Road using Temporary Traffic management arrangements, similar to those used during the previous works. No works will be undertaken during public or bank holidays and special consideration will be given to traffic management during major public events throughout the period. The works are expected to be completed by the end of July 2014.

Roads Service is also aware of imminent plans by Firmus Energy to lay approximately 400 metres of gas main along Dunhill Road to service local quarries and other customers, if requested. My officials have met with both utility companies involved and through regular progress meetings will ensure the works are co-ordinated in order to minimise inconvenience to road users, affected residents and businesses, and implemented efficiently.

In addition to the usual press releases, Firmus Energy intends to make a special presentation to Coleraine Borough Council regarding the specific details of its proposed works.

Flooding: Adopted Roadways

Mr Campbell asked Minister for Regional Development to outline the steps he will take, following the recent severe weather, in assessing the need for improvements to road infrastructure to help prevent flooding on adopted roadways. (AQW 29603/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Department's road drainage systems are the first line of defence from flooding on adopted roadways with the primary purpose of removing surface water to prevent flooding of the road itself. Roads Service has a well-established system of maintenance, which includes cyclic inspections of roadways, including gullies, footways and adjacent seawalls and, where necessary, implementation of improvements to the infrastructure, taking account of the available funding.

To help reduce the impact of run-off from the adopted road network, all new housing development projects are required to provide separate foul and storm water drainage systems. In most instances the storm water run-off from a site, post-development, must be no greater than the existing storm water run-off and in many cases this can only be achieved by the use of Sustainable Drainage Systems, which attenuate surface water to prevent flooding.

My Department has also created a Flood Investment and Planning Group, chaired by my Water Policy Division with membership from NI Water, Roads Service and the Rivers Agency. This group aims to help mitigate flooding by providing a co-ordinated approach to the investigation of multi –agency flooding issues including proposing potential solutions, prioritising investment, agreeing responsibilities and funding proposals, and ensuring joint responses including making the case for investment.

The Member may also be aware the PEDU 'Review of Response to Flooding June 2012' recommended that Rivers Agency, Roads Service and NI Water work with their parent departments to review current flood defence expenditure priorities and report to the Executive on their adequacy to meet the potential threats over the next 10 years. This review was completed and the Executive noted the requirement for an additional targeted programme of £120m over the next 10 years and agreed that it should be prioritised in the next iteration of its Investment Strategy.

Electric Cars: Charge Points

Mr McClarty asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (i) the frequency of use; and (ii) income generated from each electric car charging point.

(AQW 29622/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The usage for each publically accessible ecar Charge Point in Northern Ireland is detailed in the attached table.

To incentivise uptake, no charge has as yet been made for electricity used at ecar Charge Points. Therefore no income has been generated.

Fast Charge Points (22kW AC)

Cycling: Schoolchildren

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the steps his Department is taking to facilitate the opportunities for school children to cycle to and from school.

(AQW 29640/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department, in partnership with the Public Health Agency, is funding a three year Active School Travel Initiative to deliver a programme of cycle and walking skills training to pupils in 180 schools across Northern Ireland. The programme is being delivered by Sustrans and its objective is to encourage school children to adopt cycling and walking as their main mode of travel to school.

A robust programme of monitoring and evaluation has been developed by my Department's Statistics and Research Branch to measure achievement of the PfG targets and provide improved information on the progress made under the Active School Travel Initiative.

I have also established a Cycling Unit within my Department to ensure that cycling provision is a key element in both transport strategy and delivery. In addition, my Department continues to invest in the Safer Routes to School programme which is an initiative aimed at encouraging the use of sustainable transport options to school such as walking, cycling, public transport or car sharing to school. We are exploring opportunities to work with other Departments to improve walking and cycling infrastructure and facilities at participating schools.

My Department continues to work with other stakeholders in the forthcoming Giro d'Italia Big Start to ensure that it provides a lasting legacy for cycling among our school children. We are actively involved in the schools sub-group which is chaired by the Department of Education.

A6: Improvements

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 28511/11-15, to detail whether a finance alternative to Executive funds could be secured to fund improvements to the A6.
(AQW 29675/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: As advised in AQW 28511/11-15, the Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland 2011-21 sets out plans to augment Executive funds by accessing alternative finance for some projects. The plans include a £390 million package of high-priority road schemes, which would include improvements to the A6. This package may be a Revenue Funded Investment (RFI) initiative through which the private sector would finance, construct and maintain the assets over a defined period, typically for 25 to 30 years. However, a commitment to fund the revenue consequences of such a road package will be required from the Executive.

Executive funding, whether it is from capital or resource budgets, is required to support the improvements to the A6. The UK Government's policy of increasing capital funding at the expense of revenue funding makes RFI relatively less attractive in terms of value for money and affordability. The Executive is continuing to explore the potential role of Revenue Finance in the delivery of the Investment Programme, and the Department will continue to advance road schemes through the statutory processes so as to be able to make use of whatever funding is available in future years.

It should be noted that the Government could not borrow from the European Investment Bank (EIB). The EIB would, however, be a finance option for private sector suppliers in the case of potential RFI schemes.

Cregagh View Residential Development, Cushendun

Mr McMullan asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 29416/11-15, whether he has asked departmental officials to keep the situation under review; and to detail the stage at which enforcement action would be taken.
(AQW 29742/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can confirm I have asked my officials to keep the situation at Cregagh View, Knocknacarry under review.

Enforcement action is usually taken when the development has progressed sufficiently to be classified as a backlog site. This is normally when 80% of the dwellings have been completed and occupied for over one year, whereas only 8 out of 24 have been completed on this site.

Alternatively, action under the Private Streets Order can be considered, if at least one-half of the dwellings on both sides of the road are completed. This, however, is currently not the case on this site.

Street Light Replacement Schemes: Newry and Armagh

Mr Irwin asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (i) the rationale behind the street light replacement schemes in local housing developments across Newry and Armagh; and (ii) how he will address the concerns of local residents that the light output from the new units is inadequate.
(AQW 29825/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The street lighting replacement schemes in the Newry and Armagh areas are part of an ongoing programme throughout Northern Ireland to replace those street lighting systems which have reached, or are nearing, the end of their safe structural or electrical lives.

The replacement lighting schemes are designed to conform fully to the relevant current British Standard and British Standard Euronorm recommended lighting levels, distributions and uniformities. These standards are currently BS5489-1 and BS EN 13201-2 and they also apply equally to lighting installations on new roads and housing developments. Checks are also carried out following installation to ensure that the designed levels of lighting have been achieved.

However, if local residents have particular concerns about lighting levels at specific locations, they should notify officials from my Department's Roads Service who will carry out further investigations.

Drumardan Road, Portaferry: Resurfacing

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the timescale for the resurfacing of the Drumardan Road, Portaferry.
(AQW 29951/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department's Roads Service plans to commence resurfacing approximately 600 metres of Drumardan Road before the end of February 2014. This section of the road is in particularly poor condition and therefore warrants attention now.

Roads Service had originally planned to resurface the entire length of the road but, given that NI Water proposes to lay a replacement watermain along Drumarden Road, the scale of the resurfacing will be reduced until after the watermain has been laid.

Upon completion of the works carried out by NI Water, and the subsequent maintenance period, resurfacing of the remainder of Drumarden Road will be given consideration, subject to the availability of funding at that time.

Department for Social Development

Housing Executive: Contracts

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) the contractor that is currently completing the work in each district for the All-Trades contract; and (ii) the reason for any change of contractor.

(AQW 29536/11-15)

Mr McCausland (The Minister for Social Development): The table below, provided by the Housing Executive, gives details of the contractor completing work in each Housing Executive district and the reason for any change of contractor.

Benefits: Disability Living Allowance

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development how many people have successfully appealed a decision to (i) refuse; and (ii) reduce their Disability Living Allowance entitlement, in each year since June 2011.

(AQW 29568/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Appeals Service does not routinely record the successful outcome of Disability Living Allowance appeals in relation to relation to refused or reduced entitlement. The Chairman of The Appeals Service records whether the decision made on appeal was either more or less advantageous than a previous decision*.

Below is a breakdown of more advantageous decisions made in each year since June 2011.

1June 2011 – December 2011	852
1 January 2012 – 31 December 2012	1,469
1January 2013 – 31 December 2013	1,309

* A more advantageous decision may increase the allowance or direct that a new award be made

Benefits: Disability Living Allowance

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 29124/11-15 and given that the examining criteria is unchanged, to detail the comparative statistics for (i) the three years prior to; and (ii) since Atos Healthcare took over the medical examinations in June 2011 of (a) successful first time applicants; and (b) successful renewals.

(AQW 29596/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The tables below show the success rate for Disability Living Allowance new claims and renewals from 2008 to date.

Year	DLA New Claims Success Rate	DLA Renewals Success Rate
2008	48%	79%
2009	52%	81%
2010	53%	81%
2011	58%	83%
2012	60%	83%
2013	59%	85%

The variations in success rates will be due to the nature and type of applications received in any particular year. It is important to note that entitlement to Disability Living Allowance is determined by Decision-Makers in the Social Security Agency who consider and weigh up all the available evidence in reaching a decision. This includes information on the claimant's application form and reports from Health Care Professionals who the claimant has identified on the form and/ or in a small number of cases the Medical Service Provider is requested to complete a report. This approach is in line with the legislation governing the benefit, is supported by decision making guidance and has not changed since Atos Healthcare commenced providing the Examining Medical Practitioner service for the Social Security Agency in June 2011.

Housing Executive: Repairs

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 28936/11-15, whether a tenant could be informed by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive that it is their, or their agents, responsibility to repair an airlock in their central heating system; and where the responsibility for any future damage to the system or to property would lie should work was to be completed by the tenant or their agent.

(AQW 29661/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has explained that should a tenant report an airlock in a heating system which was installed by the Housing Executive, they request their heating contractor to inspect and determine the cause of the airlock and carry out any necessary repair. They confirm that the only instance where clearing an airlock is the tenant's responsibility is where the tenant has installed their own heating system which has not been adopted by the Housing Executive, or where the tenant has made modifications to the existing heating system. In such cases the Housing Executive would advise the tenant they are also responsible for any future damage to the system or property.

Private Tenancies (Northern Ireland) Order 2006

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Social Development to detail how many (i) complaints; and (ii) convictions have resulted from The Private Tenancies (Northern Ireland) Order 2006.

(AQW 29667/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Department does not hold the information in the exact format requested. Responsibility for enforcing the Private Tenancies Order falls to Council environmental health departments. The tables below detail the information, which is reported to my Department by Councils on a quarterly basis.

Table (i) details the number of complaints/disputes that did not result in court action and Table (ii) details the number of cases where court action has been taken by Councils.

Ministerial Meeting: Request

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development why a request for a meeting with him on behalf of P K Murphy Construction Ltd, on 9 May 2012, was refused.

(AQW 29682/11-15)

Mr McCausland: When I announced on 9 May 2012 that I had asked the Housing Executive to review their specification for the supply and fitting of double glazing, I also advised that the Housing Executive should hold further double glazing installations until the review was completed, though where a contractor had a contract in place with a supplier for the delivery of frames and cancellation would lead to nugatory expenditure, these contracts could proceed.

PK Murphy Construction Ltd then requested a meeting with me about the suspension of double glazing units that were due to be installed. As I had already agreed what category groups and double glazing schemes could proceed and had also asked the Housing Executive to urgently write to all contractors to confirm the position, I decided that a meeting at that time was not required.

Ministerial Meeting: Request

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development why a request for a meeting with him on behalf of the contractor Paddy McIlhatton, on 11 May 2012, was refused.

(AQW 29684/11-15)

Mr McCausland: When I announced on 9 May 2012 that I had asked the Housing Executive to review their specification for the supply and fitting of double glazing, I also advised that the Housing Executive should hold further double glazing installations until the review was completed, though where a contractor had a contract in place with a supplier for the delivery of frames and cancellation would lead to nugatory expenditure, these contracts could proceed.

Daithi McKay MLA then requested a meeting on behalf of Mr Paddy McIlhatton to discuss the suspension of the double glazing scheme. As I had agreed what category groups and double glazing schemes could proceed and had also asked the Housing Executive to urgently write to all contractors to confirm the position, I decided that a meeting at that time was not required.

Ministerial Meeting: Request

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development why a request for a meeting with the Minister requested by an Ulster Unionist MLA on behalf of Super Window Systems Ltd on 20 June 2012 was refused; and a meeting requested by a DUP representative on 29 June 2012 was granted.

(AQW 29685/11-15)

Mr McCausland: In June 2012 Mrs Sandra Overend, MLA, requested a meeting on behalf of Super Seal Window Systems Ltd to discuss the situation regarding the company's double glazing contracts. However, as I had previously written to Mrs Overend MLA, on 31 May 2012, confirming that the six double glazing contracts with Super Seal Window Systems Ltd could proceed, I decided that a meeting would not be required at this time.

I subsequently then received a request from Dr William McCrea MP to meet with Super Seal Window Systems Ltd. I agreed to this meeting as this was to discuss the review of the specification and savings relating to the alternative type of hinges and casement windows which were being proposed.

Abacus Housing Consortium

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister for Social Development what procurement the Abacus Housing Consortium has (i) tendered for; and (ii) awarded, since forming as a group of housing associations.

(AQW 29724/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Details of all procurements that Abacus Housing Group has (i) tendered for; and (ii) awarded, since forming as a group of housing associations is detailed in the table below:

Abacus Housing Consortium: Procurement Activity Summary as at January 2014

Abacus Housing Consortium

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister for Social Development why the Abacus Housing Consortium terminated the procurement for Heating Systems, Service, Response Maintenance and planned Maintenance/Replacement in October 2013 after starting the process in November 2012.

(AQW 29725/11-15)

Mr McCausland: An OJEU advertisement was published on 19 October 2012 on behalf of 10 Abacus members for the provision of mandatory heating systems service, response maintenance and planned maintenance works, plus additional discretionary works. Following due process a contract award letter was issued on 19 July 2013, but the decision was challenged by an unsuccessful tenderer before the 'standstill' period had expired.

Abacus engaged Carson McDowell (Solicitors) to assist with the procurement process and they in turn provided legal advice in relation to the challenge received. A number of meetings of the procurement group facilitated by Carson McDowell took place through the months of August and September to consider the options available to Abacus, culminating in the issuing of a set aside application to the Courts. The set aside hearing had originally been scheduled by the court for 14 October 2013 but was subsequently postponed at the request of the plaintiff until 24 October 2013.

An affidavit from the plaintiff was received on Thursday 10 October 2013 and the Chief Officers Group met on Friday 11 October 2013 and Monday 14 October 2013 to consider next steps. As before, the legal advisers provided an overview of the options available with respective merits. After a lengthy debate it was clear that Abacus members had different views as to the costs and benefits of sustaining the defence to the challenge received. As a consequence and without the necessary consensus the procurement process could not continue. The competition was then formally terminated at the end of October 2013. Abacus members are currently exploring new competitions to deliver best value for money and ensure excellent service to tenants.'

Boiler Replacement Scheme

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for Social Development whether his Department is on target to spend the full budget allocation of the Boiler Replacement Scheme.

(AQW 29757/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Boiler Replacement Scheme commenced on the 1st September 2012 with a total budget of £12m, allocated by the NI Executive over the three financial years 2012/13, 2013/14 and 2014/15. In addition, £6m match funding has been secured from the European Regional Development Fund for the final two years of the scheme.

In the 16 months up to the end of December 2013, almost £7m of the total funding allocation has been spent which indicates that my Department is on target to spend the full budget allocation.

Housing Repossessions Task Force

Mr Rogers asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the repossessions taskforce.
(AQW 29759/11-15)

Mr McCausland: I recognise that further action is needed to address the issue of repossessions, and possibly the impact of negative equity, in Northern Ireland to help alleviate the impact of this distressing situation for many households here.

I have agreed draft Terms of Reference for the Taskforce and invites have issued to the proposed members. Officials await responses to these invites before arranging the inaugural meeting of the Taskforce for mid-February.

Housing Repossessions Task Force

Mr Rogers asked the Minister for Social Development whether the repossessions taskforce will be in a position to liaise with lenders to ensure that repossessions are only undertaken as a last resort.
(AQW 29760/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Yes, engagement with lenders will be key in tackling the issue of repossessions and I am pleased to confirm that the Council of Mortgage Lenders have agreed to participate in the Housing Repossessions Taskforce.

Housing Repossessions Task Force

Mr Rogers asked the Minister for Social Development whether the repossessions taskforce will give consideration to the American model of Principal Reduction.
(AQW 29761/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The objective of the Taskforce, outlined in the Housing Strategy Action Plan, is to engage with stakeholders and identify actions to mitigate the impact of repossessions and, where possible, prevent them occurring in the first place.

The Taskforce will draw on the comprehensive knowledge and experience of its members to consider a range housing initiatives and mitigation measures from across other jurisdictions to determine their suitability for adoption in Northern Ireland.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr Copeland asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the changes to statutory sick pay in light of the abolition of the Percentage Threshold Scheme.
(AQW 29859/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Following a major Government review of the sickness absence system the Percentage Threshold Scheme (PTS) will be abolished from 6 April 2014 as it has been found to provide a disincentive for employers to effectively manage sickness absence. The funding from the PTS will be recycled into providing a Health and Work Service (HWS) scheme which will support a proactive approach to sickness absence management. The HWS will provide an alternative to the compensation currently provided by the PTS by helping employers to better manage sickness absence and provide interventions to help get employees back to work more quickly. Interventions costing up to £500 a year per employee will be exempt from tax.

As a consequence, the regulation requiring employers to keep specific SSP records to support claims under the PTS will also be abolished. Employers will still be required to produce SSP records to show they are meeting their legal SSP obligations but will have the freedom to keep records in a more flexible manner, better suited to their organisation. Claims for reimbursement of SSP (paid for sickness periods up to 5 April 14) will still be able to be made by employers until the close of the 2015/16 tax year.

Benefits: Disability Living Allowance/Employment and Support Allowance

Mr Lynch asked the Minister for Social Development whether claimants of Employment Support Allowance and Disability Living Allowance, who are in face to face assessments and tribunals, are entitled to have those meetings recorded, as is the case in England, Scotland and Wales; and if not, why this is the case.
(AQW 29986/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Claimants of Employment and Support Allowance may request that their medical assessment is recorded. However requests can only be agreed with the prior consent of the examining healthcare professional. The recording can only take place if stringent safeguards have been put in place to ensure the recording is complete and accurate. The recording must be made by a professional operator, on equipment of a high standard, properly calibrated by a qualified engineer immediately prior to the recording being made. The equipment must also have the facility for reproduction so that a copy can be retained by all parties. The responsibility for meeting the costs of the recording rests with the claimant.

In a small number of Disability Living Allowance cases, a decision-maker in the Social Security Agency will request an Examining Medical Practitioner report to help them determine eligibility to the benefit. The Examining Medical Practitioner report gathers information on the diagnosis, the history of the condition, treatment and the severity and likely disabling effects of the condition on day-to-day living and the vast majority of these reports are completed in the claimant's home. It is not a medical assessment. Given the nature of an EMP report they have never been recorded in Great Britain and the same arrangement applies in Northern Ireland.

There is legislative provision for formal note taking in benefit appeal tribunals to support the decision making process. Regulation 55(1) of The Social Security and Child Support (Decisions and Appeals) Regulations ( Northern Ireland) 1999 stipulates that a record of the proceedings at an oral hearing, which is sufficient to indicate the evidence taken, shall be made by the Chairman or a member sitting alone in an appeal tribunal in such medium that he may determine. Currently the practice is for a hand written note to be taken. Parties to the proceedings may take a note of the hearing with the permission of the Tribunal.

A pilot project on the recording of benefit appeals is at a preliminary planning stage and the scope has not yet been agreed. Therefore it is not possible to give a commencement date for the pilot. My previous answer to AQW 27407/11-15 refers.

Northern Ireland Assembly Commission

Assembly: Resources

Mr Flanagan asked the Assembly Commission for their assessment of whether the Assembly is adequately resourced to hold the Executive to account.

(AQW 29582/11-15)

Mrs Cochrane (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): Section 40 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 (the Act) requires that “the Assembly Commission shall provide the Assembly, or ensure that the Assembly is provided, with the property, staff and services required for the Assembly’s purposes”. This legislative requirement guides the Assembly Commission’s Corporate Strategy, business planning and risk management processes.

The Assembly Commission’s budget for the four financial years from 2011-2012 to 2014-2015 was set within the constrained budget position for the Northern Ireland Block as part of the wider Spending Review 2010 exercise.

While the Spending Review 2010 settlement saw a cut in the Assembly Commission’s budget of 8.9% in cash terms, the Commission took the view that it could deliver the services required for the Assembly’s purposes (including holding the Executive to account) within the agreed Spending Review 2010 settlement. The budget allocation is reviewed annually to ensure that it is sufficient to meet the Assembly’s needs.

Written Answers to Questions

Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister

Numeracy and Literacy Signature Programme

Mr Kinahan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the schools that will receive teaching assistance as part of the Signature Programme on numeracy and literacy; and when the assistance will commence.
(AQW 25953/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness (The First Minister and deputy First Minister): The Department of Education is taking forward the Delivering Social Change Signature Programme to provide additional literacy and numeracy support within primary and post primary schools, announced by us on 10 October 2012. As a result of these measures, a total of 233.3 full-time equivalent graduated teachers, who are not currently in work, are being recruited to deliver tuition to children in primary and post-primary schools who are currently struggling to achieve educational standards.

Recruitment of the teachers, funded under the Delivering Social Change Signature Programme, is ongoing.

A list of Primary Schools due to receive extra teaching support under the Delivering Social Change Signature Programme on Literacy and Numeracy has been placed in the Assembly Library.

A list of Post Primary Schools due to receive extra teaching support under the Delivering Social Change Signature Programme on Literacy and Numeracy has been placed in the Assembly Library.

North/South Bodies: Savings Targets

Mr Nesbitt asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail (i) the efficiency saving targets for each of the North South Bodies within this budget period; and (ii) the savings which have been realised to date.
(AQW 26080/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Since 2011, all North South Bodies have been required to deliver efficiency savings of 3% year-on-year calculated against their 2010 budget.

To date all bodies have met these targets.

Together: Building a United Community: Summer Camps

Mr Copeland asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, in relation to the 100 summer camps to be delivered in Together: Building a United Community, to detail the purpose of the camps; and whether there is a planned year round engagement with the young people involved in the camps.
(AQW 27775/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The preparation work for the planned summer camps is currently in a co-design phase with voluntary and community groups, external stakeholders and other interested groups. We plan to deliver a number of pilot summer camps in Summer 2014 well in advance of the 2015 target set out in the Together: Building a United Community Strategy.

Legal Actions

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail how much their Department spent on (i) legal costs; and (ii) paying damages or compensation as a consequence of legal actions, in each of the last five years.
(AQW 27957/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: In the last five financial years from 2008-09 to 2012-13, our Department has spent £191,870.74 on legal costs. Nothing has been spent on paying damages or compensation as a consequence of legal action.

‘Building a Prosperous and United Community’: Economic Package

Mr Lyttle asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline the progress made to date under the Building a Prosperous and United Community economic package.

(AQW 28149/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Executive and the UK Government are continuing to make progress towards the commitments made in the Economic Pact.

We have delivered a successful G8 branded Investment Conference with Tourism Ireland developing a considerable PR campaign to build on the G8 legacy.

Securing the right policy levers, and in particular the devolution of Corporation Tax powers, remains a priority for the Executive. We are continuing to advance the case for devolution of Corporation Tax within the timeframe set out in the Pact.

We have confirmed that we will continue to benefit from 100% assisted area status until at least 2017.

We have undertaken analysis to help inform a number of policy options on the establishment of Enterprise Zones. Officials have also had discussions in relation to establishing Enterprise Zones, including engagement with England, Scotland and Wales.

The Joint Ministerial Taskforce is examining whether tailored support is required for local banks and how support for local businesses can be maximised to improve access to finance. An Access to Finance Implementation Panel has been established as recommended in the Economic Advisory Group’s “Review of Access to Finance for NI Business”. The first meeting was held on 3 October 2013.

Work is underway to address barriers to access for tourists such as visa recognition and processing.

The Executive has agreed the Asset Management Strategy which includes recommendations to improve processes and deliver significant projects that will unlock value through more efficient and effective management of assets.

We have also made good progress with the Better Regulation Executive, to progress a review of business red tape in the local economy.

Childcare: Bright Start

Mr Agnew asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the (i) funding available for the early actions contained within Bright Start; and (ii) budget to implement the actions of the childcare strategy, when it is released in 2014.

(AQW 28246/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The £12 million Executive Childcare Fund was put in place in 2011. Its remaining funds are available to support the key first actions.

Childcare: Bright Start

Mr Agnew asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline the rationale for choosing a figure of 5,000 to 7,000 school aged childcare places, which are contained within the early actions of Bright Start; and what further actions are being taken to sustain the current level of funding for childcare within the voluntary and community sector.

(AQW 28301/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The principal rationale for Bright Start aiming to sustain or create up to 7,000 school age childcare places is that school age childcare is the single biggest area of unmet childcare need. That was made clear by parents and stakeholders during consultation.

The places are intended to bring about a measurable increase in services and, thereby, begin to close the gap in current provision. However, they are just a start. Work will continue under the full Bright Start Strategy. We plan to prepare this over the coming months and for it to run until 2020. Preparation will include identifying any additional actions that might be required.

Equality Coalition

Ms Fearon asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on their discussions with the Equality Coalition.

(AQO 5008/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Junior Minister Bell and Junior Minister McCann attended a Biannual meeting with the conveners of the Equality Coalition on Wednesday 6 November.

A range of current issues was discussed including: OFMDFM’s equality co-ordinating role; Together: Building a United Community Strategy legislation; Delivering Social Change/Social Investment Fund and Anti-Poverty Strategy and OFMDFM led equality strategies.

Together: Building a United Community: Urban Village Regeneration Projects

Mr Douglas asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what criteria will be used to determine the location of the four Urban Village Regeneration Projects which were included in the Together: Building a United Community Strategy.

(AQO 5014/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The process and criteria for identifying the four urban villages will consider a number of options. These could include, but would by no means be limited to, community readiness; area need; geographical spread; and overall cost considerations.

We are currently considering areas that could potentially become sites for the urban villages and will make decisions and announcements on those in the near future.

Victims and Survivors Service: Available Services

Mr Lyttle asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how they assess whether victims and survivors, health professionals and non-governmental organisations are being made adequately aware of the services available from the Victims and Survivors Service.

(AQW 28638/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: In order to communicate their services effectively, the Victims and Survivors Service (VSS) has ensured that:

- Victims and survivors have been made aware of the services available via direct communication with all those who previously availed of support through the Northern Ireland Memorial Fund and via ongoing communication with victim/survivor support organisations.
- Health Professionals have been made aware of the services available via ongoing communication with the Health Board, specifically with reference to ensuring that service delivery by the VSS adheres to the developments of the Psychological Therapies Strategy, and via direct communication with individual clients' General Practitioners (GPs) where necessary.
- Non-government Organisations have been made aware of the services available via communication with VSS-funded groups who are embedded in the community and voluntary sector.
- In addition, all of the above have been made aware of the services available via advertisements in the regional and local press regarding the opening of the Individual Needs Programme in April 2013.

Haass Talks: Attorney General's Submission

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to clarify and comment on the status of the Attorney General's submission to the Haass talks.

(AQW 28715/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Attorney General is an independent statutory officeholder and, as such, has contributed his views on the issues which the Panel of Parties has been established to examine. The rationale for appointing an independent Chair and vice-Chair to the Panel of Parties was to protect the integrity of the process and its independence. It would be entirely inappropriate, therefore, for us to offer clarification of any submission made to Dr Haass in the course of his engagement with members of civil society.

Public Services Hub: Fermanagh

Mr Flanagan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the efforts of the Strategic Investment Board to help Fermanagh District Council establish a public services hub on the site of the former Erne Hospital in Enniskillen.

(AQO 5109/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Work is currently underway on the site of the former Erne Hospital to procure demolition of existing buildings, to assess and deal with contamination, and to develop business cases as a prelude to the sale of the site by the Western Health and Social Care Trust.

In response to a request from the Budget Review Group, the Strategic Investment Board has provided a part-time Project Manager to co-ordinate the activities involved in the sale of the site and has part funded contamination reports.

A Site Transfer Project Team has been established with representation from the Strategic Investment Board, the current owner of the site and those public sector organisations with an interest in acquiring or occupying the site.

We understand that Fermanagh District Council is interested in buying the site subject to certain prior conditions being met in relation to demolition, decontamination and agreements with the South West College. If all goes according to plan, transfer of the site is expected in the next financial year.

The Strategic Investment Board will continue to support the actions required for the sale of the site and will be closely involved with the new owners in developing plans for a public sector hub at the site.

We applaud Fermanagh District Council and the other organisations that are committed to the development of a public sector hub at the Erne Hospital site and we expect this to be an example which others will follow in the future for the delivery of excellent and citizen-focused public services.

North/South Ministerial Council: Communiqués

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether all the Executive Ministers who attend a particular North South sectoral meeting are taken to endorse the resulting communiqué from that meeting.

(AQW 28802/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Joint Communiqué arising from a North South Ministerial Council meeting is agreed by Ministers in attendance.

Assembly Questions: Response Times

Mr Eastwood asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what actions they will initiate to ensure that all written and oral Assembly Questions tabled to their Department are answered within the stipulated timescales.

(AQW 28835/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Our Department has detailed guidance, systems and procedures in place to ensure that questions are answered as expeditiously as possible.

Visits: Japan

Mr Nesbitt asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to provide details on the meetings they had during their recent trip to Japan.

(AQW 29169/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The visit to Japan was at the invitation of Prime Minister Abe and we met with him on Monday 2 December.

The visit was focused on strengthening trade links and, along with Invest NI support, we had a wide range of meetings with existing and potential investors including Fujitsu. We are pleased that these engagements have already created results. In addition, we met with the British and Irish Ambassadors and their trade and investment staff; and the Japanese Senior Vice Foreign Minister. In addition, we hosted a NI Connections event.

Visits: Japan and the Taoiseach

Mr Kinahan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what correspondence they had with the Taoiseach, or his office, prior to their recent trip to Japan.

(AQW 29174/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: We had no formal correspondence with the Taoiseach or his office. We discussed our visit with the Taoiseach informally when we last met shortly before our visit.

Visits: Japan and the Taoiseach

Mr Kinahan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what meetings and events they attended with the Taoiseach during their recent visit to Japan.

(AQW 29175/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: We met the Taoiseach and the Irish Ambassador to Japan briefly at the start of the Ambassadors' reception on Tuesday 3 December.

Visits: Japan and the Taoiseach

Mr Kinahan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether their recent trip to Japan was the result of a joint invite with the Taoiseach.

(AQW 29176/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: This was not a joint invitation. Prime Minister Abe extended his invitation to us to visit Japan during the G8 Summit to strengthen Government to Government relations and to explore opportunities for business collaboration.

Visits: China and the Prime Minister

Mr Kinahan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what correspondence they had with the Prime Minister or his Office about promoting Northern Ireland prior to his trip to China.

(AQW 29177/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Our officials have been in contact with the Foreign Office regarding our plans for China and the Prime Minister was fully informed and supportive of our objectives and future actions prior to his visit.

Visits: Japan and Vice-President Biden

Mr Nesbitt asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what prior knowledge they had that their trip to Japan coincided with a visit from Vice-President Biden.

(AQW 29179/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: We were aware of US Vice-President Joe Biden's visit to Japan prior to our going there.

Visits: Japan and Vice-President Biden

Mr Nesbitt asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what meetings during their recent trip to Japan were cancelled or rescheduled as a result of Vice-President Biden visiting at the same time.

(AQW 29180/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: None of our meetings were cancelled or rescheduled as a result of our visit to Japan coinciding with the US Vice-President Joe Biden.

Visits: Japan and Vice-President Biden

Mr Nesbitt asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what meetings they had with Vice-President Biden or the US Ambassador to Japan during their recent visit to Japan.

(AQW 29181/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: We did not meet with Vice-president Biden or the US Ambassador to Japan during our visit.

Executive Website

Mr Flanagan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister on how many occasions the proposed agreement among the Executive parties on parades, select commemorations, and related protests, flags and emblems and contending with the past, has been downloaded from the Executive's website.

(AQW 29586/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Since publication on 31 December 2013 the proposed agreement has been downloaded 3,434 times.

Derry: Jobs Promoted

Mr Eastwood asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, pursuant to AQW 28009/11-15, why information on the total number of jobs promoted in Derry in 2012/13, broken down by company, has not yet been made available.

(AQW 29655/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Information on the number of jobs promoted, broken down by company, has not been provided as some of the information would be considered as commercially sensitive.

Derry: Jobs Created

Mr Eastwood asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, pursuant to AQW 28009/11-15, when details of how many jobs were created in Derry in 2012/13 will be available.

(AQW 29672/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Information provided to date includes jobs created and jobs promoted within that period. Ongoing monitoring of this information by the 'One Plan' team will indicate the number of jobs created converted from the jobs promoted.

Children's Services: Legislation

Mr Agnew asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail any policy or legislation that their Department is developing which is aimed at improving the integration of planning, commissioning and delivery of children's services; and on which date they will be published.

(AQW 29827/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: As the Member will be aware from the answers to previous questions, the planning, commissioning and delivery of children's services is primarily a matter for the Department of Health Social Services and Public Safety.

He may wish to note however that a new strategy 'Delivering Social Change for Children and Young People', is being developed and is currently out for public consultation. This strategy will provide an integrated policy framework encompassing policy on children and young people, including child poverty and children's rights.

The 'Delivering Social Change for Children and Young People' strategy proposes a more focused approach to outcomes and more collaborative working across Government and key stakeholders to deliver better outcomes for children and young people. The consultation document is available on our website at www.ofmdfmi.gov.uk/dsc-children-young-people. The final strategy will be published in March 2014.

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

European Funding: Legal Case

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the total amount spent by her Department on legal costs for the recent court case taken against the Department of Finance and Personnel regarding European funding. (AQW 29706/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): My Department has not yet received the final legal costs associated with the legal action taken against DARD by the Department of Finance and Personnel.

Fishing: Nephrops

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the adoption of quad rigs or four nets by the local nephrop fleet, and if not, if she will undertake an investigation into the merits of their use. (AQW 29763/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Multiple rigs are permitted under EU Technical Conservation Regulations for the Irish Sea. I have no immediate plans to undertake an investigation into the merits of their use as our research focus must remain on developing highly selective fishing gear in order to reduce catches of unwanted fish by the Nephrops fleet. However my Department will monitor use of such gear and its potential impact.

Farm Safety Partnership: Update

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the work on achievements on the Farm Safety Partnership, including the funding costs. (AQW 29806/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: In response to the worsening situation regarding fatalities on farms, the Farm Safety Partnership was established in May 2012 between the Health & Safety Executive NI, DARD and the Ulster Farmers Union. Since then the Partnership has also been joined by NFU Mutual, the Young farmers Clubs of Ulster and NIAPA.

The aim of this Partnership is to improve health and safety standards on farms and strive to significantly reduce work-related deaths, injuries and illnesses. The Farm Safety Partnership developed an Action Plan that sets out its priorities and objectives over 18 months ending March 2014. This was launched at Ravenhill Rugby Ground on 27 November 2012.

The Action Plan contains 44 commitments of which DARD has lead responsibility for 7. The 7 actions allocated to my Department are set out in the table below and includes my Department's actions to date:

Action Number	Action	Comments
2.2	Develop new health and safety training materials and presentation slides for new course for farmers.	Completed. Subject to monitoring and evaluation.
2.6	Deliver a new health and safety awareness course to 3,000 farmers using existing Farm Family Options, Focus Farms and existing trainers by March 2014	To date there have been 2559 registrations with 129 workshops completed with 2400 attendees. A further 9 courses are scheduled.  There has been increased activity at Focus Farm events and an additional 127 local halls/venues have been put forward for use.  To date DARD have spent £159,896 in relation to the Farm Safe Awareness courses which are funded under the Rural Development programme.

Action Number	Action	Comments
2.10	Deliver appropriate health and safety messages at DARD events attended by farmers, which would include CAFRE's training events, open days and focus farm visits.	A number of events have taken place where farm safety material has been disseminated including Balmoral Show, DARD Direct offices.  Since November 2012, CAFRE have held 1027 events with over 17,500 participants where in addition to the main topic of the event, farm safety material has been made available to those attending.
2.11	Deliver key health and safety presentations to all CAFRE students studying agriculture or horticulture.	All CAFRE courses have always contained a high level of farm safety as part of the course. Since the introduction of the farm safety partnership there is a heightened focus on safety. CAFRE have been working with HSENI in relation to course content aiding the increase of focus on safety. Translink have also presented to students in relation to the safety of farm machinery at railway crossing.  There are 250 FSA packs being delivered to all students who will be on work placements during the 2013/14 academic year.
3.1	Examine the potential for health and safety standards to be taken into account when awarding grants or loans to farmers and report back to the FSP with recommendations.	The Department is considering the potential to take health and safety standards into account as part of the NEW RDP 2014 - 20
3.2	Explore the potential for financial assistance to farmers to promote improved health and safety on farms.	Over the three Tranches of the Farm Modernisation Programme, some £4.6m of financial support for items that promote safer working on farms was awarded in letters of offer to successful applicant.
4.1	Explore the potential to repeat the Farms and Farm Families in Northern Ireland Social Survey, in order to update information on non-fatal accidents, farm safety awareness and training in the use of hazardous equipment.	A pilot survey was posted to a random sample of 1,000 farmers in December 2013. The survey will remain open until the end of January.  The pilot exercise will be evaluated in February 2014  Any lessons learned will be incorporated into the main survey which is planned to begin in March 2014.  The survey results will provide useful; baseline information and inform the Partnership's forward work post March 2014, when the current action plan will end.

As part of its farm Safety Partnership involvement my Department provided £139k in funding towards the cost of the Partnership's 2013 Multimedia Campaign. My Department will also be providing an additional £111k for the 2014/15 year to extend this highly effective campaign.

Single Farm Payments: Non-compliance

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many farmers have been convicted of, and/or had their Single Farm Payments reduced, for non-compliance regarding environmental matters, in the last three years.
(AQW 29819/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The number of farm businesses that have had their Single Farm Payment reduced for non-compliance regarding environmental matters in the each of the last three years is:

2011	455
2012	386
2013	244

My Department has not prosecuted any farmer under the Environmental Impact Assessment (Agriculture) Regulations (NI) 2007 for non-compliance regarding environmental matters in the above three years.

Single Farm Payments: Outstanding Claims

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the number of Single Farm Payment claims that are yet to be paid, including the number of those that were subject to an inspection in 2014.

Mrs O'Neill: 2,510 claims for 2013 Single Farm Payment remain to be paid

This figure includes 1,418 claims that were subject to a 2013 inspection

Single Farm Payments: Outstanding Claims

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, in relation to the number of Single Farm Payment claims yet to be paid, to detail the number and percentage based in (i) lowland areas; (ii) Severely Disadvantaged Areas; and (iii) Disadvantaged Areas.

(AQW 29822/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The total number of claims received for the 2013 scheme year was 37,636

The number of 2013 claims remaining to be paid is 2,510 the requested breakdown is as follows:

- 1 Lowland areas = 618 claims, that is, 1.6% of the claims received
- 2 Severely disadvantaged areas = 1,024 claims, that is, 2.7%
- 3 Disadvantaged areas = 868 claims, that is, 2.3%

Common Agricultural Policy: Pillar 1 to Pillar 2 Transfer

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what efforts she made to reach a compromise on the Pillar 1 to Pillar 2 transfer, after losing the High Court challenge and before the end of year deadline, including before she sought emergency approval through the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister.

(AQW 29832/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: As a result of the High Court judgement on the Pillar 1 to Pillar 2 transfer on Friday 27 December 2013, I immediately sought urgent Executive approval that 7% of the funds available to the north of Ireland under Pillar 1 of the Common Agricultural Policy 2014-2020 should be transferred to Pillar2. I clearly explained the pressing timescale for a decision and that this decision was required no later than 30 December. This was a matter that needed to be dealt with urgently, as the European Commission had indicated that a Member State wishing to avail of the provisions in 2014 must notify its decision by 31 December 2013.

As approval was not granted by this deadline, Defra were advised that Executive agreement had not been reached. As a result, a 0% rate of transfer for the north of Ireland was notified to the European Commission by Defra.

Single Farm Payments: Maximum Eligible Area

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 29493/11-15, of the 3,529 farm businesses where one or more fields were claimed with an area greater than the Maximum Eligible Area, and that responded to the Department's letter requesting an explanation from the farm business within a ten day period, how many subsequently received payment in December 2013.

(AQW 29878/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Of the initial 3,529 farm businesses where one or more fields were claimed with an area greater than the Maximum Eligible Area

2,721 of these businesses were paid in December 2013.

A total of 3,104 of these businesses have now been paid up to 23 January 2014

Every effort is being made to progress the remaining 425 cases as quickly as practical to payment. Reasons for delay include the need to apply inspection findings and outstanding information, such as bank account or probate details, which has been requested from relevant farm businesses.

Single Farm Payments: Maximum Eligible Area

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 29493/11-15, of the 3,529 farm businesses where one or more fields were claimed with an area greater than the Maximum Eligible Area, and that responded to the Department's letter requesting an explanation from the farm business within a ten day period, how many faced delayed payments due to a departmental error.

(AQW 29879/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Of the initial 3,529 farm business where one or more fields were claimed with an area greater than the Maximum Eligible Area none were delayed payment due to a departmental error.

Farms: Inspections

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what statutory notice must her Department give to farmers prior to (i) on farm inspections; and (ii) aerial inspections.

(AQW 29880/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: There is no requirement to provide notice of an on-the-spot control.

Movement Authorisation Licence

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the circumstances in which a movement authorisation licence (MC2L) can be issued in respect of cattle; and by what criteria can discretion be exercised and by whom.

(AQW 29901/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: An MC2L is a licence to move cattle that are restricted either individually or on a herd basis. The restrictions are applied for disease control reasons e.g. Tuberculosis (TB) or Brucellosis (Br), or Identification, Registration and Movement (IRM) reasons. MC2Ls must be applied for, by completion of an MC2LA application form. Herd keepers must obtain an MC2L before restricted animals leave the farm. These movement licences cannot be issued retrospectively.

Animals individually restricted for TB/Br such as TB and Br reactor animals and animals with inconclusive test results, if moving direct to slaughter can only be moved using the MC2L movement authorisation licence.

In exceptional circumstances, for example significant animal welfare or human hardship problems, discretion can be exercised for the movement of restricted animals. Permission for such moves may be granted following consideration by the local Divisional Veterinary Officer (DVO) or by the Regional Senior Principal Veterinary Officer (SPVO) after advice from the local DVO, depending on the reason for the restriction.

Rural Development Programme: Mid Ulster

Mr Milne asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how much investment has been provided in Mid Ulster via the Rural Development Programme, broken down by each council area.

(AQW 29906/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Table 1 below provides a breakdown of expenditure on Axis 1 and Axis 3 of the Rural Development Programme 2007-13 by each Council area in the Mid Ulster Constituency.

Table 1

Constituency Mid Ulster	Priority	Total
Cookstown	Axis 1 - improving the competitiveness of the agricultural and forestry sector	1,018,068.55
	Axis 3 - the quality of life in rural areas and diversification of the rural economy	2,303,958.24
Cookstown Total		3,322,026.79
Dungannon & South Tyrone	Axis 1 - improving the competitiveness of the agricultural and forestry sector	1,002,462.01
	Axis 3 - the quality of life in rural areas and diversification of the rural economy	858,007.15
Dungannon &amp; South Tyrone Total *		1,860,469.16
Magherafelt	Axis 1 - improving the competitiveness of the agricultural and forestry sector	683,039.56
	Axis 3 - the quality of life in rural areas and diversification of the rural economy	2,274,273.15
Magherafelt Total		2,957,312.71
Mid Ulster Total		£8,139,808.66

Expenditure up to and including 31 December 2013

*Dungannon & South Tyrone represents only those electoral wards which fall into the Mid Ulster Constituency.

DARD does not hold records of expenditure by Council area for Axis 2 measures. Table 2 below shows Axis 2 expenditure for the Mid Ulster Constituency.

Table 2

Measure 2.1 Less Favoured Areas Compensatory Allowance Scheme	2,125,549
Measure 2.2 Agri-environment Programme:	16,575,705
Measure 2.3 & 2.4 Forestry Measures	135,000*
Mid Ulster Total	£18,836,254

Expenditure up to and including 31 December 2013

* DARD does not hold records by Parliamentary Constituency for expenditure on support for existing woodland. Therefore this figure is expenditure for new woodland creation only and excludes support for existing woodland.

British-Irish Council and North/South Ministerial Council Meetings

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the ministerial meetings on agriculture issues which have taken place under the auspices of (i) the British Irish Council; and (ii) the North South Ministerial Council.

(AQW 29984/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Agriculture issues are not formally listed amongst the areas of work considered by the British-Irish Council. However, the previous DARD Minister attended two meetings at which 'Marine' issues were discussed.

Since May 2007, there have been 14 North South Ministerial Council Meetings for Agriculture and 15 North South Ministerial Council meetings for the Foyle, Carlingford and Irish Lights Commission (FCILC).

The above response relates to specific Sectoral meetings in Agriculture and FCILC format. However, the NSMC also meets in Plenary and Institutional format and Agriculture issues may also be raised within these forums.

Rivers Agency: Inspection Programme

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the timescale for the completion and reporting of the Rivers Agency's post-event inspection programme following the recent tidal surges.

(AQW 30052/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Rivers Agency's post-event serviceability inspections are progressing well, with completion anticipated by early February 2014. In parallel, more detailed structural inspections are being progressed, with completion anticipated by the end of March 2014. There are no current proposals to report externally on the outcome of these inspections.

Common Agriculture Policy: Pillar 1 Consultation

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, in relation to Question 17 of the recent CAP Pillar 1 Consultation, to outline why she is proposing that a Level 3 qualification in agriculture, or an equivalent subject, should be a requirement for young farmers and new entrants to receive an award from the regional reserve.

(AQW 30053/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Under Regulation (EU) No 1307/2013, the Department has discretion to set objective and non-discriminatory eligibility criteria as regards the appropriate skills, experience and/or education of the claimant when making allocations to young farmers and new entrants from the Regional Reserve.

In the recently closed public consultation on 'Policy Options arising from the Reform of the CAP (Pillar I Direct Payments)', I sought stakeholder views on a suggestion that we would include an eligibility criterion that would require young farmers and new entrants to hold a Level III educational qualification in agriculture or a closely related subject.

The consultation has now closed and I will carefully consider all responses received before reaching a decision on the way forward.

Aerial Inspections

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail how her Department selected the areas that were to be subjected to aerial inspection, including whether an equality assessment formed part of the selection process.

(AQW 30104/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: In accordance with Commission Regulations for area based schemes a minimum of 5% inspections (on-the-spot checks) must be carried out each year. These can be carried out by farms visits or remotely using aerial imager. To meet our target for inspections by remote sensing in 2013 two areas were needed. The location of each of the areas was selected randomly and satellite imagery for each was requested from the European Commission. An equality assessment was not undertaken because of the random selection process.

Finches

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether there are any restrictions or documents required for the import of finches from Great Britain.

(AQW 30228/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: There are presently no restrictions on the import of finches from Britain. A general import licence is in place to permit the import of captive birds, including finches, and only requires the birds to be accompanied by a commercial document signed by the importer. Veterinary certification is not required. Copies of the licence and a sample commercial document are available on the DARD website.

Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure

Casement Park: GAA

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure whether, following funded renovations to Casement Park, it will be available for use by sports other than the Gaelic Athletic Association.

(AQW 29773/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): The matter of the use of the Stadiums by sports other than that of the Governing Body is a matter for the governing bodies in the first instance.

In March 2013, the GAA Annual Congress approved the use of their facilities by the IRFU as part of any proposed bid for the 2023 Rugby World Cup.

The redeveloped Casement Park along with Croke Park is included in the list of potential venues.

Tour of the North Cycle Race

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQT 414/11-15 and the stated need to ensure no funding gaps exist that may prevent the Tour of the North cycling race from going ahead, upon what basis has her Department decided not to fund the event.

(AQW 29852/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Responsibility for major sporting events, including the Tour of the North Cycle Race, rests in the first instance with the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (DETI).

However, as a result of AQT 414/11-15 on 25 November 2013, I asked my officials to meet the race organisers to explore if DCAL could assist in any other way. Officials from DCAL and Sport NI met with the race organisers on 19 December 2013 to discuss such support, including how the event could support my Department's priorities around promoting equality and targeting poverty and social exclusion. Sport NI offered to work with the organisers to explore this further; however, as yet no such request has been received by Sport NI. The organisers were also advised that Sport NI's pilot programme for 2013/14 International Events had closed, however, following a planned evaluation exercise, this may be an option for them to consider in future years, should the programme be implemented beyond 2014.

Department of Education

Schools: Sports Pitches

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to list the schools that have a 3G or 4G sports pitch in their grounds.

(AQW 29722/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): The following schools have a 3G or 4G sports pitch in their grounds.

Southern Education and Library Board: Term Service Contracts for Maintenance

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education, in relation to the operation of the Term Service Contracts for Maintenance within the Southern Education and Library Board, how many compensation events payments have been authorised since the commencement of the contract.

(AQW 29771/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Southern Education and Library Board (SELB) have advised me that they do not maintain a separate record of compensation events on Term Service Contracts for Maintenance. Therefore I am unable to provide the information requested.

Education and Library Boards: Term Service Contracts for Maintenance

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education, in relation to the operation of Term Service Contracts for Maintenance, whether all the Education and Library Boards make compensation events payments similar to those paid in the Southern Education and Library Board.

(AQW 29772/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Currently, only two other Education and Library Boards operate Term Service Contracts (TSC) for the provision of maintenance services. I have been advised by both Belfast Education and Library Board (BELB) and South Eastern Education and Library Board (SEELB), that their TSCs for Maintenance include a clause allowing for Compensation events, which is similar to the Contract operated by the Southern Education and Library Board (SELB).

Similar to the SELB, neither Board maintain a separate record of compensation events on Term Service Contracts for Maintenance.

The Western Education and Library Board (WELB) and the North Eastern Education and Library Board (NEELB) are in the process of introducing TSC arrangements for Maintenance and so have not paid any compensation events to date.

School Closures

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Education to list the name and location of closed schools, that are registered as owned by his Department or an Education and Library Board, including the date on which these schools were closed.

(AQW 29829/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department does not own any schools.

Please see below, a table of properties which are no longer in operation as schools but are still owned by the Education and Library Boards.

These properties may still be under consideration for other educational purposes, bound by covenants requiring legal advice, leased or at some stage of the disposal process.

Demolition of the school building may also have been carried out since the closure of the school.

Free School Meals: Comparisons

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education what percentage of pupils receive free school meals; and how this compares to (i) England; (ii) Scotland; and (iii) Wales.

(AQW 29934/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The most up-to-date validated figures for free school meal entitlement across the jurisdictions relate to the 2012/13 school year and these are detailed in the table below.

Free school meal entitlement – The North of Ireland - 2012/13

Country	Primary	Post-primary
The North of Ireland	29.9%	19.0%

Source: NI school census,

Information relating to the proportion of pupils in England, Scotland and Wales with entitlement to free school meals is detailed in the table below.

Free school meal entitlement –England, Wales and Scotland- 2012/13

Country	Primary	Post-primary
England	18.1%	15.1%
Scotland	22.1%	15.4%
Wales	18.9%	16.2%

Sources: England school census, Scottish Healthy Living Survey and Welsh Pupil Level Annual School Census (PLASC).

Note:

- Figures for primary include nursery, reception and year 1 - 7 classes.
- In Northern Ireland different criteria is applied to primary and post primary age pupils. (See entry for working tax credit in table overleaf)
- Data for primary and post-primary schools in England and Wales include pupils that attend middle schools.
- Data for England excludes pupils in pupil referral units who are registered with other providers and further education colleges.

Free school meal figures for the different jurisdictions are not directly comparable due to the different eligibility criteria applied in each area. These differences are summarised in the table overleaf. For this reason, care should be exercised when making comparisons between regions.

Lisanelly Shared Education Campus: Programme Board

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education to outline the (i) Terms of Reference; and (ii) composition of the Programme Board for the Lisanelly project.

(AQW 30007/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department is in the final stages of reconstituting the Programme Board for the Lisanelly Shared Education Campus with the intention of holding the initial meeting in February. When the composition of the Board has been confirmed and the Terms of Reference agreed the information will be posted on the Department's website.

Lisanelly Shared Education Campus: Stakeholder Consultation Group

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education to outline the (i) Terms of Reference; and (ii) composition of the Stakeholder Consultation Group for the Lisanelly project.

(AQW 30008/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department is in the final stages of reconstituting the Programme Board for the Lisanelly Shared Education Campus with a view to holding the initial meeting in February. The Programme Board will consider the Terms of Reference and composition of the Stakeholder Consultation Group moving forward. When this has been determined the information will be posted on the Department's website.

Education and Library Boards: Salaries

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 28966/11-15, when the last independent review was completed.

(AQW 30009/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Senior Management Pay Review Panel (SMPRP) last reviewed the salary ranges of Chief Executive and Second Tier Officers and made recommendations to the Department in December 2013.

Delivering Social Change: Literacy and Numeracy

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 28475/11-15, how many teaching posts in the Delivering Social Change Literacy and Numeracy Project are yet to be filled.

(AQW 30011/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: As at 23 January 2014, 27.5 FTE posts remain to be filled. In the primary sector this comprises 1 FTE post (5 schools requiring a teacher for 1 day per week) and in the post-primary sector 26.5 FTE posts (12 full-time and 6 part-time English posts, 10 full-time and 3 part-time mathematics posts). The recruitment process for these outstanding posts is currently underway.

British-Irish Council and North/South Ministerial Council Meetings

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education to detail the ministerial meetings on education issues which have taken place under the auspices of (i) the British Irish Council; and (ii) the North South Ministerial Council, since May 2007.

(AQW 30036/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: At the British Irish Council (BIC) summit in September 2008, the Council adopted Early Years Policy as a new work sector with the Welsh Government as the lead administration. Since then there has been 10 Summit meetings where Early Years has been discussed. Early Years was the subject of the BIC summit held in Wales in November 2012 which I attended.

The North South Ministerial Council meets in education sector format in order to make decisions on common policies and approaches in areas such as education for children with special needs, educational under-achievement, teacher qualifications and school, youth and teacher exchanges. Since May 2007 there have been 13 meetings.

Middletown Centre for Autism

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Education how many children are treated in outreach by the Middletown Centre for Autism.

(AQW 30039/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Chief Executive of the Middletown Centre for Autism has advised that 20 children were referred for outreach support from 1 April 2013 to 30 November 2013.

A further 123 children also benefitted from support offered to the referred children within the same school.

Teachers: Ill-health Retirement Benefits

Mr Irwin asked the Minister of Education how many teachers, in receipt of ill health retirement benefits, have had their eligibility for this benefit reviewed in each of the last three years.

(AQW 30040/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The number of teachers in receipt of ill health retirement benefits who have had their eligibility for this benefit reviewed in the last three financial years is detailed in the table below:

Financial Year	No. of Teachers
2013-2014 (to date)	1

Priorities for Youth: Update

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education for an update on the implementation of Priorities for Youth.

(AQW 30072/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Following publication of Priorities for Youth in October 2013, implementation is being taken forward in partnership with the statutory and voluntary sectors on a phased basis with full implementation anticipated by April 2016.

A key priority in Priorities for Youth is the establishment of a Regional Advisory Group which will involve a range of stakeholders with interest and expertise in youth service policy and delivery. Work is in hand to take this forward so that the Group can be established as soon as possible. The Group will provide advice to the Education and Skills Authority or the Education and Library Boards/Youth Council in the interim.

Priorities for Youth: Youth Council

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the impact of Priorities for Youth on the work of the Youth Council.

(AQW 30073/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Youth Council will continue to carry out its statutory duties as outlined in the Youth Service (NI) Order 1989 until the establishment of ESA. Under Priorities for Youth, the Youth Council and Education and Library Boards will work collaboratively to ensure that youth services continue to be provided in line with assessed need. Officials have recently held discussions with the Youth Council and Education and Library Boards in relation to the delivery of key actions arising from Priorities for Youth. I expect the Youth Council to play an integral part in the delivery of the actions arising from Priorities for Youth.

Capital Spend: Projects

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 22718/11-15, for an update on the amount of finance expended to date in each of the projects listed.

(AQW 30077/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Finances expended against the 18 capital build projects announced in June 2012 up to 31 December 2013 are shown in the table below.

School Scheme	Type of School	All Expenditure up to 31/03/2013 £000's	2013/14 Expenditure up to 31/12/2013 £000's	Total Spend to Date £000's

		20,758	4,868	25,626

The expenditure up to 31 March 2013 is based on expenditure reported at 2012/13 Final Outturn.

It should be noted that the figure for Coláiste Feirste, Belfast and Foyle & Londonderry College include site purchases of £2,325k and £14,500k respectively.

Expenditure for the current financial year reflects payments against invoices presented as at 31 December 2013.

Projects: Opening Dates

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 22718/11-15, what is the anticipated date of opening for each of the projects listed.

(AQW 30082/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The anticipated dates of opening for the new build projects below are based on current programmes but, as is the nature of major construction projects, are subject to change.

School Scheme	Anticipated opening date
Coláiste Feirste, Belfast	Qtr 4 2016
St Clare's Convent Primary School	Qtr 3 2015
St Colman's Abbey Primary School, Newry

Preschool Places 2014-15

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of need for pre-school places in the 2014/15 academic year; and how many additional places will be made available to meet this need.

(AQW 30083/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Executive's Programme for Government Commitment is to provide at least one year of pre-school education for every for every child whose parents want it. During the 2013/14 admissions process, 99.8% of children, whose parents engaged with the admissions process to the end, were offered a funded pre-school place.

The Pre-School Education Advisory Group (PEAG) in each Education and Library Board manages the Pre-School Education Programme (PSEP) at local level and, as in previous years, the Department has worked with the PEAGs to assess demand for funded pre-school education places for the 2014/15 academic year.

As a result, funding has been made available for 24,159 pre-school places in statutory and voluntary/private pre-school settings. This is an increase on the previous year. In addition, recognising the need for pre-school places in the area, I have recently approved a further 52 places in Dungannon.

The position will be monitored and should pressures arise I will consider how best to respond.

Craigavon: Post-primary Education

Mrs Dobson asked Minister of Education, in light of the community reaction to the area planning proposals known as Option A concerning the provision of post-primary education in the Craigavon area, whether he has held any discussions with the Southern Education and Library Board on the removal of this option to move on from the current impasse.

(AQW 30090/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: As you are aware the area planning process is being managed by the Education and Library Boards and the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools and the consultation on the controlled post-primary in the Craigavon area has been undertaken by the Southern Education and Library Board (SELB).

It is the responsibility of the SELB to determine the appropriate structure for controlled post-primary provision in the Craigavon area and to bring forward proposals to the Department of Education (DE).

I am aware that the SELB voted in favour of Option A which, if approved, would see the reorganisation of post-primary education in the Portadown, Lurgan and Tandragee areas resulting in new bi-lateral schools with both selective and non-selective intake. I have not held any discussions with the SELB on the removal of this or any other option.

Dickson Plan: Post-primary Education

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Education how students from post-primary schools in the Dickson Plan catchment area can voice their opinion about the present impasse over the future of post-primary education in their schools.

(AQW 30091/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: As you are aware the area planning process is being managed by the Education and Library Boards and the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools and the consultation on the controlled post-primary in the Craigavon area has been undertaken by the Southern Education and Library Board (SELB).

The SELB published their Draft Post-Primary Area Plan for public consultation between 5 July and 26 October 2012 during which time all interested parties had an opportunity to submit their views on the future of post-primary education in the area.

The SELB also advise that they have also consulted with young people directly on the proposals in their Draft Area Plan throughout the process.

I am aware that the SELB recently issued consultation questionnaires to parents of each pupil, governors, teaching and non-teaching staff of the 7 post-primary and 34 designated feeder primary schools in the Craigavon two-tier system.

An analysis of these responses to the consultation will be presented to the Board at its meeting on 12 February 2014. A decision will then be taken on progression of development proposals for any changes proposed.

It is important to note that the Board's decision is only part of the process. Any significant change to the existing provision requires the publication of a statutory Development Proposal (DP) to support that intent. Following publication of a DP there is a statutory 2-month period during which anyone who wishes can forward objections or comments to DE

I will be happy to meet with pupils, parents, schools, elected representatives and other interested parties throughout the consultation process and will listen to their views and concerns before I make a final decision at the end of the two-month period that follows publication of a DP.

Special Schools: Looked-after Children

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Education how many looked after children attend special schools; and what percentage of these children are in (i) foster care; (ii) kinship care; and (iii) residential care.

(AQW 30094/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Data relating to looked after children are collected via the annual school census. The type of care received by looked after children has been collected for the first time in 2013/14. This data will be available at the end of February 2014.

Primary Integrating/Enriching Education Project

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education to detail his plans for (i) continuing the legacy of the Primary Integrating/Enriching Education programme, along with other shared education projects; and (ii) using the project as a pilot to encourage further shared education.

(AQW 30105/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: As I indicated in my statement to the Assembly on 22 October 2013, I am committed to delivering the Programme for Government commitments to advance shared education through a variety of actions. My Department is currently working with the Office of the First and deputy First Minister and the Atlantic Philanthropies on a funding programme to support shared education.

The Primary Integrating/Enriching Education (PIEE) programme, along with two others, was subject to evaluation by the Shared Education Learning Forum (SELF), with the Education and Training Inspectorate taking forward evaluations of a number of other shared education projects. Lessons learnt from these evaluations are being taken into account in developing the new funding programme, thus building on the legacy of the Sharing in Education Programme.

The PIEE project has already been used as an example of shared education and my Department will continue to use this and other similar projects to encourage further shared education.

North Down Schools: PPPs and PFIs

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to list the (i) schools in North Down that are subject to Public Private Partnerships or Private Finance Initiative contracts; (ii) length of each contract and its remaining term; (iii) cost of each contract; and (iv) date on which each contract was signed.

(AQW 30108/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd:

- (i) There is one school in the North Down Constituency, Bangor Academy and Sixth Form College which is part of a Public Private Partnership (PPP) contract. This PPP contract also includes Nendrum College, Comber (Strangford Constituency). Both schools are in the South Eastern Education and Library Board area.
- (ii) The PPP project has a 30 year contract and there are 25 years remaining of this contract.

- (iii) The cost of the contract, covering both schools, is £160m over the 30 years of the project.
- (iv) The contract, for both schools, was signed on 1 September 2006 and Bangor Academy and Sixth Form College became operational on 1 May 2008.

South Eastern Education and Library Board: Capital Development

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the primary schools in the South Eastern Education and Library Board area that have been identified as requiring new capital development, including those that are a priority.

(AQW 30127/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My announcement of June 2012 and January 2013 represents a capital investment of approximately £393m in 40 schools projects.

One of the primary projects in the NEELB area has been withdrawn and of the remaining 39, twenty-four are in the primary sector but none are in the SEELB area.

I am liaising with all Managing Authorities, including those in the South Eastern Education and Library Board area, to identify priorities for new capital investment, and I will continue to review the position within the constraints of the available Education capital budget.

Special Education Needs: Lurgan

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Education whether there are plans to provide a facility for post-primary pupils with Special Education Needs in the Lurgan area.

(AQW 30138/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Assessment of the need for special educational needs (SEN) provision and the delivery of services to meet this need are the responsibility of each Education and Library Board (ELB).

The Southern Education and Library Board SELB has confirmed that it has no current plans to submit a development proposal to the Department of Education for a post-primary facility for pupils with SEN in the Lurgan area.

I can, however, confirm that SELB has lodged an application to my Department under the Schools' Enhancement Programme for an extension to Ceara Special School to meet anticipated need. An economic appraisal has been submitted and is currently being assessed by officials.

Schools: Building Projects

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Education for an update on the forty new school building projects that had been approved in recent months.

(AQW 30151/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: In my Capital Statement of 25 June 2012, 18 schools were announced to receive new facilities as part of a £173m investment in the schools estate. Of the 18, three projects have started construction work on site with a further 4 expected to be on site by the end of April 2014. A further 4 schemes are at procurement stage and the remaining 7 projects are at various stages of the planning / design process.

In my capital announcement of 22 January 2013, 22 school projects are to be advanced in planning representing a further investment of £220. The majority of these projects are at an early stage in planning, principally Development Proposal or economic appraisal stage.

Travel Expenditure

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education to detail the total expenditure on (i) ministerial travel; and (ii) Special Adviser travel in 2013.

(AQW 30184/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Flight Costs only

- (i) £3547.01
- (ii) £4865.43

January Monitoring Round: Bid

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Education why his Department did not submit a bid for funding in the January Monitoring Round.

(AQW 30206/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: As the ability of DE funded organisations to commission and incur significant additional resource expenditure prior to the 31 March 2014 is limited at this late stage of the financial year it was not considered prudent to bid for additional funding; due to the risk that the budget could not be effectively utilised. Similarly, the ability to incur additional capital spend at this late stage of the financial year is also limited.

Schools: Road Safety

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Education whether his Department makes resources available to schools to secure the services of a school crossing patrol; and what opportunities exist for schools to address road safety concerns outside the school gates.

(AQW 30213/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Funding provided within the Department of Education overall Block Grant to the Education and Library Boards is used for the purposes of determining the need for, and, if required, the deployment of school crossing patrols.

The revised curriculum which has been taught to all pupils of compulsory school age in grant-aided schools since 2009/10 provides teachers with a number of opportunities to cover the issue of road safety. For example through their delivery of the Personal Development and Mutual Understanding (PDMU) Area of Learning at primary level and the Learning for Life and Work (LLW) Area of Learning at post-primary level pupils are provided with the opportunity to learn about road safety. As with all aspects of the curriculum, the specifics of what is taught, and how it is taught, under each Area of Learning is a matter for each teacher/school.

The Department of the Environment, which has statutory responsibility for road safety, has produced a number of road safety resources and lesson plans which are available to all schools through the C2k elearning platform, Fronter. Schools may also approach the Department of the Environment to explore further their local traffic conditions and the suitability of introducing a range of safety measures.

Education and Skills Authority

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Education for an update on the progress of the Education and Skills Authority Bill.

(AQW 30311/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I would refer the Member to my answer to AQO 5300/11-15, tabled by Anna Lo MLA and published in the Official Report on 17 January 2014.

Department for Employment and Learning

Procurement Process

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning in regard to his departmental procurement process, to detail the checks carried out to ensure that organisations are only appointed to the areas they applied for during the Pre-Qualification Quotation stages.

(AQW 29611/11-15)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): The Central Procurement Directorate operates an ISO 9001 accredited procurement process and documentation is subject to quality checks throughout the process. This process has ensured organisations will only be appointed to areas for which they applied.

At Stage 2 of the competition separate tenders will be requested and submitted for each individual contract area, this will ensure that organisations can only submit a tender against one of the contract areas they were successful for during Stage 1 of the procurement process.

Consultancy: Costs

Mr Copeland asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail how much money has been spent by his Department on consultancy fees in each of the last two years, including a breakdown of each consultancy firm used.

(AQW 29909/11-15)

Dr Farry: The Department and its Non-Departmental Public Bodies have spent a total of £387,119 on consultancy fees (rounded to the nearest pound) in the last two full financial years and the current financial year to 30 September 2013. The breakdown per supplier is as follows:

1 April 2011 to 31 March 2012

Supplier	Expenditure £
PricewaterhouseCoopers	22,720
Professor Robert Kirk	400

Supplier	Expenditure £

Note: The latest available data broken down by supplier is for the quarter ended 30 September 2013.

Teaching Facility: Coleraine Campus, University of Ulster

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline the perceived benefits of the £5.1 million teaching facility at the Coleraine Campus, University of Ulster due for completion in 2015.

(AQW 29920/11-15)

Dr Farry: The new teaching facility is being built as part of the University's overall estates strategy. It will replace teaching facilities currently located in its South Buildings which have reached the end of their economic life. The new teaching block will improve the functionality of the teaching space for students and improve the research experience at the campus. The development will ensure that the University can maintain its estate more effectively and will improve both its space utilisation and management.

It will also allow the University to reduce its carbon emissions as the new teaching block will be more energy efficient. Finally, the new facility will improve the student's learning experience.

Apprenticeships: Travel Expenses

Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline whether his Department pays travel expenses to apprenticeship students; and if not to detail any plans to introduce travel payments, for apprentices to travel to and from their workplace.

(AQW 30029/11-15)

Dr Farry: The ApprenticeshipsNI programme is an employer-led provision, with employers creating apprenticeship positions and recruiting suitable individuals as apprentices in line with future business needs. The programme aims to provide participants with the opportunity to take part in a Level 2/Level 3 Apprenticeship where the apprentice, in paid employment from day one, works towards achieving an industry-approved Level 2/Level 3 Apprenticeship Framework.

My Department, through the ApprenticeshipsNI programme, funds the 'off-the-job' training element of an apprenticeship and provides an Employer Incentive payment on the apprentice's achievement of the full framework qualifications. ApprenticeshipsNI currently offers no subsidy towards the cost of an apprentice's travel to and from their place of work, nor do we have any plans to offer such a subsidy in the future.

As the member will be aware, I announced my proposals for the future of apprenticeships in Northern Ireland during an oral statement to the Assembly on Monday 13 January 2014. The proposals outlined are now subject to a 12 week consultation period. Feedback received through this consultation will be used to inform our final policy for apprenticeships and this will be published in the early summer of 2014. I am keen to hear views on the findings of a review - a link to the consultation document can be found below.

Higher Education: Looked-after Children

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline any specific packages of support his Department provides for looked after children attending university.

(AQW 30080/11-15)

Dr Farry: Access to Success, my Department's regional strategy for widening participation in higher education, has identified care leavers as an under-represented group in higher education. My Department makes funding available to all higher education providers, including the Further Education Regional Colleges, to support various outreach initiatives in schools and the community, which are targeted at increasing representation in higher education, including by children from a care background. In addition, my Department pays an annual financial premium to support the extra costs to higher education institutions of recruiting and retaining students from disadvantaged backgrounds. In academic year 2013/14 this premium amounts to £1.34m.

Access to Success has introduced a new Widening Access & Participation Plan (WAPP) reporting process, within which all higher education providers must demonstrate their clear commitment to supporting students from disadvantaged backgrounds into and through higher education. Institutions are specifically required to target financial support to under-represented groups, including children from a care background. This support may take the form of bursaries and other direct financial support such as fee waivers, and free or discounted accommodation. It will also include post-entry support activities such as mentoring and additional tutoring to ensure the students' progression and success.

For example, the University of Ulster has committed to providing a support package for care leavers, which includes assistance with the higher education application process, a bursary of £1,000 per annum, access to year round accommodation and increased pastoral care. Under its "Fostering Aspiration" programme it will support a wide range of projects and activities that look to raise the educational aspiration of care leavers.

In addition, the University has joined forces with The Fostering Network Northern Ireland and the Health and Social Care Board to launch the "Tick the Box" awareness raising campaign. This initiative aims to encourage young people who have spent time in care to self report that fact on their Universities and Colleges Admissions Service application form to ensure that they get the extra support that they may need while at university.

My Department has been strongly supportive of the work that has been done by ButtleUK with all higher education providers in Northern Ireland to provide a framework to improve and accredit support for looked after children in higher education.

Further Education: Looked-after Children

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail what specific policies and programmes of support are available to facilitate looked after children to avail of Further Education.

(AQW 30081/11-15)

Dr Farry: Whilst my Department does not have specific policies relating to looked after children in further education, it provided financial assistance to enable two colleges, Belfast Metropolitan College and North West Regional College, to attain the Buttle UK (FE) Quality Mark for Care Leavers, as part of a pilot programme for the award in April 2011.

Since then, Southern Regional College and South Eastern Regional College have attained the Buttle UK Quality Mark in September 2013. The remaining colleges, Northern Regional College and South West College, are currently working towards achieving this quality mark.

The Quality Mark provides a set of standards and guidelines to ensure appropriate action is taken to raise the aspirations of care leavers in relation to accessing further education provision. This is achieved through:

- outreach activities in local communities;
- developing effective links with key organisations;
- adapting application arrangements to ensure that the additional needs of care leavers are met; and
- providing the necessary support to secure recruitment and retention in further education.

All colleges provide a wide range of support for students from this background in relation to entering, sustaining and achieving in further education.

Pre-enrolment

Outreach activities are designed to present the opportunities available in further education, and to highlight the support available to students whilst in provision. These include visiting care homes, regular contact with professional staff in social work teams, Education and Library Boards, the Careers Service and voluntary sector organisations such as Include Youth.

Colleges maintain close links with feeder schools where they deliver information talks. There are also taster sessions and college open days to allow young people to experience colleges at first hand. College literature and websites contain information specifically targeted at looked after children.

Enrolment and on provision support

All colleges already have in place, or are working towards implementing, arrangements to identify looked after young people at an early stage. This allows colleges to establish appropriate additional support arrangements for individual students and also provides information on the level of participation by this particular cohort of students.

Colleges provide additional support for students from a care background by designating specific staff to arrange the support required, as well as delivering training and awareness sessions for all staff on the potential additional barriers faced by these students. Students can then be given extra support, if needed, by learning support staff, counsellors and student finance officers.

Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment

Invest NI: Supported Jobs

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of jobs that InvestNI have supported, broken down by constituency, including (i) the financial assistance offered to secure these jobs; and (ii) the investment provided by business to create these jobs, for each of the last five years.

(AQW 29677/11-15)

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): Tables 1 to 5 below detail the number of jobs promoted and safeguarded in each Parliamentary Constituency Area (PCA) in each of the last five financial years (2008-09 to 2012-13). The tables also detail (i) the financial assistance offered to secure these jobs; and (ii) the investment planned by businesses to create these jobs. It should be noted that the total planned investment figure represents the total value of the funds required to implement the projects being supported, and will be the aggregation of what the business will generate from its operations, and the amount from external sources such as the banks, and other lenders/funders (including Invest NI). It is not possible to collate the investment figure specifically provided by the business itself.

- 2 Jobs Promoted represents the number of jobs expected to be created by the project.
- 3 Jobs Safeguarded represents the number jobs that would have been lost if the project was not supported.
- 4 A further £1.9m was offered to promote 193 jobs, the location of which have not yet been determined.
- 5 Invest NI revises performance data on a regular basis to ensure that it reflects implemented projects; therefore, the data above may differ to previously published information.

Health and Safety Executive: Farm Incidents

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of farm incidents investigated by the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) in each of the last five years, including the number of fatalities in each year and the funding costs of the HSE.

(AQW 29727/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The table below gives the number of fatal incidents, HSENI investigations and total funding for the Health and Safety Executive for Northern Ireland (HSENI) in each of the last five financial years.

Regrettably there have been 31 work related fatalities which have occurred on farms in Northern Ireland during the last 5 years. All of these fatalities have been investigated by HSENI.

In relation to non fatal accidents, as the majority of those working in the industry are self employed, a very high proportion of non fatal incidents on farms are not reportable to HSENI under the Reporting of Incidents Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1999. However, where major injury incidents are reported they are investigated by HSENI.

Going for Growth: Recommendations

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what progress has been made in formulating and funding the Going for Growth policy recommendations of the Agri-Food Strategy Board; and to detail the timescale to which her Department is working.

(AQW 29729/11-15)

Mrs Foster: This matter remains under consideration at the Executive.

Tourism: Irish Community in the USA

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) any proposals it may have to promote tourism to the Irish community in the USA during 2014; and (ii) the total cost of the plans.

(AQW 29755/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The United States is an important tourism market for us.

Tourism Ireland will spend £8.6 million on marketing both Northern Ireland and the island of Ireland in North America in 2014. This will include marketing to a variety of target sectors including the Irish diaspora community.

Opportunities for promoting Northern Ireland throughout the year include:

- The Toronto Irish Film Festival.
- The annual Ireland Fund Canada St Patrick's Day luncheon,.
The USA PGA Merchandising Show in Orlando Florida.
- Sales blitzes in Atlanta, Florida, Texas, Chicago/Boston and in Canada.
- At food fairs in Austin, Texas and Aspen, Colorado.
- The Barclay's Championship PGA Golf tour and at the Deutsche Bank PGA Golf Championship in Boston.

Strategic Partnerships

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the strategic partnerships that have been forged to ensure adequate infrastructure is in place to service any potential new business investment.

(AQW 29783/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Northern Ireland's investment proposition is based on a number of factors, such as its talented and loyal workforce, advanced telecoms and transport infrastructure, high skilled business clusters, the pro-business environment, competitive operating costs and proximity to major markets.

Any perceived weaknesses or reasons not to locate highlighted by potential investors are captured primarily by the Invest Northern Ireland's Investment Managers and overseas business development executives. Invest NI has a range of mechanisms in place to raise and address significant strategic issues, such as infrastructure, that may impact on attracting potential investment.

Invest NI's Chief Executive is a member of the Northern Ireland Economic Advisory Group which consists of a focused group of experts in economics, business and skills who provide advice on the key issues impacting the economy and the measures required to address these issues.

In addition, Invest NI is represented on a wide range of cross Departmental bodies and working groups. For example, there are regular formal meetings between DETI, DEL and Invest NI to discuss skills issues and the development of policies and practices to address skills shortages in specific areas.

In terms of Infrastructure Northern Ireland has world class communications infrastructure with fast reliable road, rail, air and telecoms links between Northern Ireland and the rest of the world. London is one hour away by air from Belfast, with Dublin only two hours by road or rail. There are daily direct flights to a variety of European business locations such as Paris and Amsterdam. In addition Project Kelvin provides a transatlantic link for excellent communications throughout the region.

Invest NI continues to liaise with a number of other Government Departments. For example:

- The Department of Regional Development over key issues of access and, in particular, air route access to Northern Ireland;

- The Department of Social Development over the implementation of those elements of the Jobs Fund initiative which are focused on Neighbourhood Renewal Areas;
- The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure over the development and implementation of support for the Northern Ireland Creative Industries sector; and
- The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development over the development and implementation of agri-food strategies.

Electricity: Regulatory Framework

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline the justification of the Regulatory Framework, which is preventing an increase in electricity infrastructure investments.

(AQW 29785/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The EU Third Package of energy legislation (IME 3) published in 2009 sought, among a range of objectives, to harmonise the powers and independence of regulators at a national and EU level. The Regulator is responsible for considering and approving required investment in the electricity network through Price Determination arrangements. In setting Price Determinations the Regulator is obliged to strike the appropriate balance between necessary investment and the interests of consumers who will ultimately bear the costs.

Energy Prices: Unconventional Oil and Gas

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for her assessment of the impact that locally extracted unconventional oil and gas will have on energy prices.

(AQW 29828/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Local unconventional oil and gas remains at the prospecting stage, and it is therefore not possible to accurately assess any future impact on local energy prices, but experience elsewhere points strongly to a downward pressure on energy prices.

Commonwealth Games 2014: Tourism

Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what plans Tourism Ireland have to promote Northern Ireland during the 2014 Commonwealth Games in Glasgow.

(AQW 29834/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The 2014 Commonwealth Games offer the opportunity to highlight Northern Ireland to local and visiting international media and participants alike.

My Department, through Tourism Ireland, will identify tour operators in relevant Commonwealth countries who are packaging trips to the Games and work to influence them to include Northern Ireland in their programmes. Tourism Ireland will also work with Games committee members and others to identify any other avenues for promoting Northern Ireland.

Whilst plans are not yet finalised, engagement with the media is underway and potential activity will be rolled out through traditional and social media in advance of, during and after the Games.

Energy: Wind Turbines and Anaerobic Digestion Facilities

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the grants and finance opportunities available to individuals who wish to install small scale (i) wind turbines; and (ii) anaerobic digestion facilities.

(AQW 29978/11-15)

Mrs Foster: My Department does not provide grant assistance towards the installation of renewable electricity technologies. Instead, renewable electricity is incentivised through the Northern Ireland Renewables Obligation (NIRO) which provides a revenue stream in the form of Renewables Obligation Certificates for electricity generated by a range of technologies including small scale wind turbines and anaerobic digestion.

The Department does not keep information on finance opportunities from individual lenders; however, the Green Investment Bank will consider anaerobic digestion projects.

Invest NI: Derry

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail how many jobs have been (i) created; and (ii) promoted in Derry by InvestNI's Jobs Fund since it was set up.

(AQW 30019/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest NI's Jobs Fund has (i) helped create 456 new jobs and (ii) helped promote 575 new jobs in the Derry City Council area since its inception in April 2011.

Trading Standards

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, in relation to Regulation 3(1) of The Measuring Instruments (Liquid Fuel delivered from Road Tankers) Regulations 2006, how many companies are licensed by Trading Standards to deliver less than 500 litres in road tankers.

(AQW 30032/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Measuring Instruments (Liquid Fuel delivered from Road Tankers) Regulations 2006 do not require businesses selling liquid fuel to be licensed.

The Regulations apply to equipment for measuring fuel from road tankers first placed on the market or put into use after 30 October 2006. The Regulations do not specify that deliveries must be of a certain minimum quantity. The verification process for equipment that is subject to these Regulations does not require the Department to be notified when they are put into trade use by the operator. The Department, therefore, has no accurate figure as to the proportion of such vehicles that can legally carryout deliveries in quantities less than 500 litres. However, through its enforcement activity with the oil industry the Trading Standards Service estimates that approximately 20% of the Northern Ireland fleet can legally make such deliveries.

Invest NI: South Tyrone

Ms McGahan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail how many jobs have been (i) created; and (ii) promoted in South Tyrone by InvestNI's Jobs Fund since it was set up.

(AQW 30047/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest NI's Jobs Fund has (i) helped create 438 new jobs and (ii) helped promote 501 new jobs in the Fermanagh & South Tyrone constituency area since its inception in April 2011.

Invest NI: Derry

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the firms in which the 456 jobs in the Derry City Council area have been created by InvestNI's Jobs Fund, up to December 2013.

(AQW 30103/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The table below indicates the businesses that created jobs as a result of the Jobs Fund in the Derry City Council area between April 2011 and December 2013. Due to commercial sensitivity, details of firms whose projects have not been publicly announced have been withheld. Please also be aware that for reasons of data protection, the names of individuals trading as sole traders or partnerships cannot be disclosed; therefore, this information has been included on an aggregated basis.

Department of the Environment

Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan: Implementation

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the reasons for the delay in making a decision on the implementation of the Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan.

(AQW 28362/11-15)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): The adoption of a development plan represents the final stage of the plan process and can only be done once the Department is satisfied that all the necessary statutory and procedural requirements have been completed.

The Plan was awarded a Certificate of Conformity with the Regional Development Strategy by the Department for Regional Development on 21 October 2013. An Equality Impact Assessment and a Habitats Regulations Assessment have recently been completed.

My Department has now completed its scrutiny and review of all relevant materials and processes and is satisfied that all necessary statutory and procedural requirements for adoption of the draft plan have been satisfied.

Therefore, subject to the agreement of my Ministerial colleagues, I will instruct my Department, by order under Article 8 (1) of the Planning (NI) Order 1991, to adopt and make operational the Plan.

Energy: Shale Gas

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment, given that the Royal Society Report into Shale Gas 2012 states that at present the environmental regulator does not permit fracturing below freshwater aquifers, whether such a position will be taken locally.

(AQW 29585/11-15)

Mr Durkan: No applications have been received and hence no decisions on hydraulic fracturing have yet been taken. I have publicly stated my position on hydraulic fracturing on a number of occasions. Granting permission relating to fracking operations will only take place when it has been supported by very strong evidence which indicates that fracking is safe for public health and the environment. I believe to do otherwise, given the scale of ongoing research, would be reckless and irresponsible. I have yet to see that evidence.

That is why I have directed my officials in NIEA to work with the EPA in Ireland to take forward a major programme of research to examine the potential impact of fracking on the environment. This programme of research is currently being progressed and the outcomes of this all-island research will help assist the NIEA in making these important regulatory decisions.

Waterways: Pollution

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of the Environment what steps are being taken to ensure that Departments work together to combat the pollution of waterways with refuse such as cooking fat and oils, coffee granules and other food waste, as well as small non perishables being washed down domestic pipes.

(AQW 29718/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I fully recognise the need for Departments to work together on important issues such as the pollution of waterways by cooking fat and oils and other food waste.

My Department has recently completed a consultation on the introduction of restrictions on the landfilling of food waste. One of the policy proposals consulted on was the proposed introduction of a ban on the non-domestic discharge of food waste into the public sewer network in order to ensure the value of this important resource is realised and in response to the detrimental effect food waste is having on the sewer network.

The policy was developed by the Department working closely with the Department of Regional Development and NI Water. This close liaison will be maintained during the post consultation process and in further policy development.

Recent media coverage has highlighted the implications of disposing of fats, oils and grease and other inappropriate items into the sewerage system, which can ultimately lead to sewer blockages, out of sewer flooding and water pollution.

I understand that NI Water recently hosted a "Partners Against Pollution" event on 29 November 2013 which explored opportunities for environmental stakeholders in Northern Ireland to develop partnership approaches to prevent widespread abuse of the sewerage system through raising the profile of education and awareness. Officials from my Department and other Government Departments and Agencies were in attendance at this event. A key theme to emerge was the importance of ensuring that the voluntary sector and government bodies work in tandem to achieve this common goal.

The inappropriate disposal of household items and food waste is a problem for NI Water both in financial and reputational terms, yet it is largely caused by lack of public understanding.

My Department will continue to work alongside NI Water, local councils and other Departments, including the Department of Regional Development, in highlighting the impact of such practices on the water environment and in progressing solutions to this issue and in providing advice, education and guidance for the general public and businesses on the proper disposal of food waste and household items.

Planning Service: Aerial Photography

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of the Environment (i) whether Planning Service use aerial photography; (ii) if so, how often it is used; (iii) what the cost of aerial photography has been in each of the last three years; and (iv) for what purposes is aerial photography used.

(AQW 29778/11-15)

Mr Durkan: While DOE Planning makes use of aerial photography on a regular basis, it can be difficult to quantify. It is used in the normal course of work for a range of activities such as planning enforcement and identifying breaches of planning control, assessing planning applications and work associated with the preparation of area plans.

The Department makes regular use of the range of free aerial photography which is available on the internet for example; Google Maps, Google Earth and Bing Maps. It also has access to online aerial photography from Land and Property Services (LPS), which is supplied as part of the Northern Ireland Mapping agreement (NIMA).

On some occasions, staff may also require aerial photography from Ordnance Survey/LPS directly. While it is not possible to provide an exact figure for these costs, they have not been significant in the last three years.

The Department may also make use of other methods to obtain aerial photographs for specific cases if required, such as hiring of a plane to capture the required information. Table 1 below outlines the cost to the Department for such activities in the last three years;

Table 1

Year	Cost (£)
2011	362
2012	374
2013	350

Taxis: Dual Tariffs

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment whether Belfast public hire plated taxis are permitted to have dual tariffs programmed into their meters.

(AQW 29800/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I can confirm that Belfast Public Hire plated taxis are permitted to have dual tariffs programmed into their meters. The first tariff, the regulated fare, must be displayed when the driver is providing a public hire service. The secondary, lower, tariff can be used when the vehicle has been pre-booked and operating on a private hire basis.

Ravenhill Stadium: Driver and Vehicle Agency Enforcement Officers

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment on how many occasions, between March 2013 and September 2013, Driver and Vehicle Agency Enforcement Officers have attended Ravenhill Rugby Ground on Mount Merrion Avenue, Belfast, for the purposes of making an assessment.

(AQW 29848/11-15)

Mr Durkan: DVA Enforcement Officers have attended Ravenhill Rugby Ground on three occasions between March 2013 and September 2013 for the purposes of assessing compliance with Taxi Operator Licensing requirements.

Taxis: Touting

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment how many private hire taxi drivers have been prosecuted for taxi touting at Central Station, Belfast, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 29849/11-15)

Mr Durkan: DVA has no records of any private hire taxi drivers being prosecuted for taxi touting at Central Station, Belfast.

Ravenhill Stadium: Driver and Vehicle Agency

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 28436/11-15, whether any of the Driver and Vehicle Agency officers involved in the four test purchase booked their taxi via Ravenhill Rugby Ground staff; and if not, where they booked their taxi and were these details collected.

(AQW 29850/11-15)

Mr Durkan: DVA Enforcement Officers did not book their taxis via Ravenhill Rugby Ground staff but rather upon leaving the rugby ground they proceeded to Mount Merrion Avenue where fonaCab taxi marshals made provision for a booking and in conjunction with their drivers recorded the necessary booking particulars.

Council Websites

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what guidance or regulations are in place regarding the domain names for council websites.

(AQW 29858/11-15)

Mr Durkan: There is no specific guidance or regulation on this matter which councils must adhere to, unless the new council name ends in '.gov.uk'. I understand that the UK Cabinet Office has produced guidance for NICS Departments wishing to use domain names ending in '.gov.uk'. Councils are not required by regulation to use a '.gov.uk' domain naming convention, but if they do, they must adhere to this guidance. I understand a number of Statutory Transition Committees have already registered domain names for their new council in preparation for April 2015. However, the final decision on the name of the new council domain names rests with the new successor councils appointed following the local government elections in May 2014.

Taxis: Disability Discrimination

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment (i) whether he is aware of an article published in The Independent on Sunday on 12 January 2014 regarding of people with a disability being charged extra for taxi services in Middlesbrough, and specifically to note operators have been warned that this is discriminatory practice; (ii) if this practice is evident amongst local private hire taxis; and (iii) whether his Department would view this current practice as discriminatory.

(AQW 29881/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I am aware of the article in question and the action taken to remind operators of their duties under the relevant equalities legislation in place in Britain. I have asked officials to liaise with Disability Action and the Inclusive Mobility & Transport Advisory Committee to consider if further advice should be provided by my Department to operators in Northern Ireland regarding their responsibilities around these issues.

The Member will be aware that private hire taxi fares are not regulated in NI. Further, my Department is not aware that the practice is evident amongst private hire taxi operators. Over the past 12 months, there has been one complaint made to DVA in relation to a private hire taxi driver allegedly over-charging a disabled customer. During the investigation by DVA, of which the relevant operator was informed, the allegation was denied and the investigation concluded that no further action should be taken.

I would reiterate my previous statements in my responses to AQW 28439/11-15 and AQW 29126/11-15 that the Equality Commission has advised that DDA legislation makes it unlawful for organisations such as transport service providers, including taxi operators, to discriminate against disabled people in the way in which they provide or do not provide their services.

Taxis, Belfast: Registration

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment how many private hire taxis are currently registered in Belfast; and of those, how many cater for (i) seven passengers; and (ii) are wheelchair accessible.

(AQW 29882/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Departmental records show that 1,119 private hire taxis have a registered keeper postcode within Belfast (BT1-BT17), of which 38 are licensed to carry 7 passengers or more.

It is not possible to say how many of these vehicles are wheelchair accessible as currently there is no legislative requirement for any taxi to be wheelchair accessible unless it is to be licensed as Belfast Public Hire. Therefore, taxi vehicles operating as private hire or as public hire outside Belfast do not have to comply with the legislative wheelchair accessible vehicle specification.

However, I am bringing forward new legislation that will remove this anomaly. From September 2014, all taxis advertising as wheelchair accessible will have to comply with the legal specification for a wheelchair accessible taxi. In addition, the new regulation will update the current specification for a wheelchair accessible vehicle to one more suited to accommodate modern wheelchairs and the safety and comfort of wheelchair users.

Please note these figures are not part of official statistics and have not been subject to data validation.

Taxis: Dual Tariffs

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment whether dual tariffs are permitted in private hire taxis; and if so, in what circumstances this can be applied.

(AQW 29884/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Within the current taxi licensing regime private hire taxi fares are unregulated; therefore there is no requirement to adhere to a particular fare tariff, tariff structure or to use a taximeter.

The number of tariffs installed in taximeters in such taxis is therefore a matter for the taxi operator.

Taxis: Regulation Breaches

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment whether departmental consideration has been given to the images and evidence posted on the Belfast Public Hire Taxi Twitter account which appears to show regulation breaches by private hire sector taxis; and if so, what action will be taken.

(AQW 29885/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The images posted on the Belfast Public Hire Twitter account do not provide any evidence to ascertain whether there are any regulation breaches being committed by private hire sector taxis. They do however raise a possible issue with regard to directing traffic but that would be a matter for the PSNI to consider and take action where they feel appropriate.

Energy: Unconventional Oil and Gas

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment whether unconventional oil and gas development will feature in the new strategic planning policy framework.

(AQW 29918/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I will be publishing the draft Strategic Planning Policy Statement (dSPPS) for public consultation on 4th February 2014.

The dSPPS will be pitched at a broader and more strategic level than existing PPS documents so as to afford councils the flexibility in bringing forward detailed operational planning policy, through new local development plans, tailored to the needs and opportunities of their local areas.

The dSPPS will mainly involve a consolidation of existing planning policies including the prevailing Minerals Policy, within 'A Planning Strategy for Rural Northern Ireland (PSRNI)'. However, the more recent issue of unconventional hydrocarbon extraction will also feature in the SPPS.

I propose to use the SPPS consultation to take into account everyone's views prior to finalising the SPPS in time for the transfer of planning functions to local government.

Mills Report

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment given the findings of the Mills Report (i) for his assessment of whether the failure of his Department's Strategic Planning Division to take effective enforcement action between 2000-2011 has been pivotal in enabling this unprecedented environmental crime; (ii) for his assessment of the Strategic Planning Division's view in 2009 that it had no grounds to take formal enforcement action because it was in receipt of a retrospective planning application; (iii) why it was considered that the Planning Appeals Commission would be an impediment to formal enforcement action; and (iv) whether he intends to initiate an independent public inquiry into why his Department repeatedly ignored warnings of environmental harm, including from other competent authorities.

(AQW 29919/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The report by Chris Mills highlighted many issues with enforcement of waste crime in Northern Ireland including the resourcing needed to provide a robust system, the systems of communication that need to be improved and the overall approach to enforcement of this nature. While it is appreciated that a review of the previous investigations may have highlighted areas for improvement, it is important to note that the operator of the site is the person responsible for the breach, for the infilling and for the failure to meet his responsibilities. The Department's Strategic Planning Division has undertaken numerous site visits and carried out enforcement investigations in relation to this site since 2000 and have secured retrospective applications and compliance through negotiation and formal enforcement action. It is important to remember that these activities developed from minor infringements and it is the cumulative situation that we are now seeing. As each assessment of the situation demonstrates further non compliance the approach of the SPD enforcement unit so too increases. The Department has a range of enforcement powers at its disposal to remedy non compliance and the use of those powers will be reassessed following the Mills Report findings.

Breaches of planning control are not offences and the Department can secure a remedy through a number of approaches. These approaches are detailed in the Department's Planning Policy Statement 9. The approaches range from a written warning to formal enforcement action including stop notices. The approaches require consideration and are based on a number of factors including whether the development is or can be made acceptable. Unauthorised development is not removed or ceased simply because it is unauthorised. The submission of a retrospective application allows the Department to assess, control and mitigate development allowing the economy to continue but at the same time protecting the environment. Formal enforcement action, retrospective applications and written warnings are all approaches that can be taken by the Department.

The ultimate aim of any enforcement action is to remedy a breach. This can be achieved through negotiation or through formal enforcement action, i.e the offender can be advised to cease or legally required to cease. Upon issuing an enforcement notice, the recipient has the opportunity to appeal to the Planning Appeals Commission. This can often lead to lengthy periods of delay, during which the enforcement notice has no effect. The Department may consider that informal enforcement action is a more expedient remedy to ensuring a breach ceases.

The Department in processing applications and investigating enforcement cases will take into account the comments and advice of relevant authorities, however, the Department is the decision maker and the final decision rests with the Department. It is the role of professional planners to consider, challenge where necessary and balance the plethora of advice and representations received in processing cases. The Mills report has highlighted a number of areas where the Department can improve. The Department will be putting in place an action plan to address the issues raised in the report and to reorganise structures to become better, more proactive, more responsive and more coherent.

Driver and Vehicle Agency: Medical Advisers

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of the Environment how many (i) full-time; and (ii) part-time doctors, licensed by the General Medical Council, are employed by the Driver and Vehicle Agency as Medical Advisers; and whether (a) medical records can be accessed; and (b) medical assessments can be made, by personnel who are not qualified medical practitioners licensed by the General Medical Council.

(AQW 29957/11-15)

Mr Durkan:

- (i) and (ii) The Driver & Vehicle Agency (DVA) do not employ doctors. Applications for driver licences which require medical investigation are referred to the Department of Finance and Personnel's (DFP) Occupational Health Service (OHS) who are contracted by the Department to provide professional medical advice.
- (a) Medical records provided in connection with a driving licence application are processed by a dedicated section within DVA Driver Licensing in Coleraine. The records are treated as confidential and are accessible only by the staff who have a business need to view them and, where expert medical opinion is required, by OHS doctors or consultants contracted to provide specialist medical advice to OHS.
- (b) Where an applicant for or a holder of a driving licence notifies the Department of a medical condition staff in the DVA's Medical & Vocational section assess the application using guidelines agreed with OHS. This process enables applications where there are minor conditions not requiring further investigation to be filtered out. Where medical assessment is required the application is referred to OHS.

Where necessary, OHS will seek further medical evidence from the applicant's doctor or consultant, or refer the applicant to an independent specialist consultant for examination. Following consideration of the relevant medical evidence, including that provided by the doctor, consultant or independent specialist consultant, OHS will make a recommendation to DVA as to the applicant's fitness to drive.

While the decision to grant, refuse, restrict or revoke a licence lies solely with the Department, in practice DVA does not act outside the OHS recommendation.

Equality Commission

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 28439/11-15, (i) whether he consulted the Equality Commission about this reply; (ii) if so, what was the Commission's advice; and (iii) if not, whether he will undertake to meet with Equality Commission to canvas its views.

(AQW 29974/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I can advise that the Equality Commission were not consulted about my reply: bespoke advice to taxi operators is available to all on the Commission's website.

Given the issues in the media in recent weeks, I have asked officials to confirm with the Commission that the advice to taxi operators on the Commission's website remains current.

Taxis: Wheelchair Users

Mr Frew asked the Minister of the Environment whether taxi companies are legally obliged to provide wheelchair accessible vehicles.

(AQW 29975/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Currently there is no legislative requirement for any taxi to be wheelchair accessible unless it is to be licensed as Belfast Public Hire (yellow plate). Therefore, taxis operating as private hire or as public hire outside Belfast do not have to comply with the legislative wheelchair accessible vehicle specification, regardless of whether or not they are advertising themselves as wheelchair accessible.

In September 2014 the Department intends to introduce new legislation for taxi vehicles which will address this issue. This legislation will ensure that all taxis advertising as wheelchair accessible will have to comply with the legal specification for a wheelchair accessible taxi. If they do not, they will be guilty of an offence. In addition the new legislation will update the current specification for a wheelchair accessible vehicle to one more suited to accommodate modern wheelchairs and the safety and comfort of wheelchair users.

I have set out the legislative requirements on taxi operators as regards provision of wheelchair accessible vehicles in my answer to question AQW 29977/11-15.

Mills Report

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment to detail all the recommendations of changes made by his Department to the Mills report.

(AQW 30000/11-15)

Mr Durkan: As I stated on 18 December last year when I released the Mills Report, I will be providing a full response to the report. This will include a response and actions in relation to all of Mr Mills' recommendations. I expect to provide this response in the next month.

Taxis, Belfast: Registration

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 29566/11-15, to explain the disparity in the figures put forward by departmental officials to the Committee for the Environment on Thursday 12 December 2013, who advised that around 300 public hire taxis were operating in Belfast; and on what basis officials based their information.

(AQW 30050/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My officials have advised that the figure of 437 vehicles licensed as Belfast public hire quoted in AQW 29566/11-15 is indeed correct, but that it was misread by them as 347 during the 12 December 2013 meeting.

There are a number of vehicles licensed as Belfast public hire (yellow plates) which are in private hire fleets and do not sit at ranks in Belfast; this was the basis on which officials reduced the misread figure of 347 to an estimation of 300 vehicles working as Belfast Public Hire from ranks.

I have asked my officials to inform the Committee Clerk of this incorrect reading of the figure.

Mills Report

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, in light of the findings of the Mills Report, whether he will be bidding to the Department of Finance and Personnel for the estimated £250 million required to clean up illegal waste sites; and where such quantities of illegal waste can be disposed off safely.

(AQW 30070/11-15)

Mr Durkan: DOE is currently commissioning experts to conduct a comprehensive analysis of the major illegal dump at Campsie. This will provide advice on the best environmental management options for dealing with the waste, including possible disposal options and including cost estimates.

It is critical to note that in this and any other cases of illegal waste sites, DOE will pursue the polluters with the full force of the law to make them pay for clean-up costs.

In instances where full clean-up costs cannot be recovered, I will investigate other funding options.

Habitats Directive

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment whether the Habitats Regulation Assessment carried out on planning application K/2013/0072/F (i) was assessed against an established ecological baseline for the Owenkillew Special Area of Conservation; (ii) whether that baseline was informed by the outcome of the required review of extant planning permissions likely to have a significant effect on the integrity of this European Site; and (iii) whether any such review of extant permissions has been carried out.

(AQW 30071/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Habitat Regulations Assessment undertaken on the planning application was assessed against the conservation objectives of the SAC as is required by the Habitats Directive. The Directive does not use the term ecological baseline. The assessment was determined using information from a variety of sources. These include ongoing NIEA monitoring of the protected species, habitats, water quality and morphology, Loughs Agency habitat survey data, preliminary results and data from the INTERREG IVA Freshwater pearl mussel project and information supplied by the developer. The legislation does not require a review of permissions that have been completed. The Department has not undertaken a full review of extant permissions but reviews these on a case by case basis. In this case there were no other significant uncompleted planning applications in the area to review.

Councils: Cluster Costs

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of the Environment how he intends to apportion the costs of the new Shadow Councils between the existing Councils in a particular cluster.

(AQO 5349/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My Department issued specific guidance to Statutory Transition Committees and their constituent councils on 9 January 2014 setting out the process for apportioning the new council costs by total population, as this is the most equitable and accurate solution.

In arriving at this decision, I took into account the views raised at the Regional Transition Committee meeting on 27 November 2013, by considering three separate options.

The option I chose was the apportionment of costs on the basis of total population of the new district. This provides for costs to be apportioned on the basis of total population. This option gives the most accurate representation of the population, as it includes groups such as children and those not registered to vote, since councils provide services for these groups of people too. Defrayal of costs on the basis of this option will ensure that the existing councils will be able to prepare their annual budget for 2014/15 on the basis of this approach without having a further wait for agreement on a method of cost apportionment.

The option of using costs apportioned on the basis of the tax base, as measured by the Gross Penny Rate Product (GPRP) was considered, but this method assumed that the only method of paying for reform was through rates, and this is not the case.

The option of allowing existing councils in each cluster to have the option of selecting the apportionment method to be used was also considered. However, as the purpose of the shadow period is to give the new councils the time and resources to take the key decisions necessary to ensure their effective operation from 1 April 2015, I felt that it would be preferable to avoid any undue doubt in relation to how they will be funded.

Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan: Publication

Mrs Hale asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 29781/11-15, to detail the expected date of publication of the Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan.

(AQW 30142/11-15)

Mr Durkan: As you will be aware from previous correspondence, my Department has progressed the Plan through the remaining statutory and procedural processes.

Subject to the agreement of Ministerial colleagues, I will instruct my Department, by order under Article 8 (1) of the Planning (NI) Order 1991, to adopt and make the Plan operational.

Taxi Operator Licences: Foyle

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 29620/11-15, to detail the number of drivers that are operating under each of the licences outlined.

(AQW 30155/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The number of drivers affiliated to each operator licence at 24 January 2014 has been provided below:

Rates Relief: Land and Property Services

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of applications to the Land and Property Services for Rates Relief that are still awaiting conclusion (i) one month; (ii) two months; (iii) three months; (iv) four months; and (v) over four months from the date of the initial application.

(AQW 29660/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The total number of applications to Land & Property Services for Rates Relief* that are still awaiting conclusion from the date of the initial application are; (i) one month - 507; (ii) two months - 549; (iii) three months - 468; (iv) four months - 320; and (v) over four months - 1,648. The total claims awaiting completion currently stands at 3,628**.

* The total number includes applications for Rate Relief and Housing Benefit. Claimants are assessed for both, depending on circumstances.

** Includes 136 applications received, to date, in January 2014

Inflation: Local Rate

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the local inflation rate of (i) food; and (ii) energy, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 29693/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Inflation rates are not produced on a regional basis.

Northern Ireland Civil Service: Vacant Positions

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the (i) location; and (ii) number of vacant posts in the Northern Ireland Civil Service at (a) Administrative Assistant; (b) Administrative Officer; (c) Executive Officer II; (d) Executive Officer I; (e) Staff Officer; and (f) Deputy Principal grades, broken down by Department.

(AQW 29726/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the following table.

Rates: Vacant Domestic Properties

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the amount generated in rates payments from owners of vacant domestic properties in the year ended 31 March 2013.

(AQW 29794/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Domestic properties move in and out of occupancy on an ongoing basis. From 1st October 2011, vacant domestic property rating liability changed from zero to full liability, with the exception of a number of prescribed exclusions.

In the year ended 31st March 2013 a total of £11.1 million was receipted for vacant domestic properties.

Procurement

Ms Fearon asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the total value of procurement for the most recent consecutive five years for which data is available.

(AQW 29842/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Since 2002 Central Procurement Directorate (CPD) has provided the Procurement Board with details of procurement expenditure by departments and their agencies, NDPBs and public corporations. This information is provided by departments and is published on CPD's website – www.DFPNI.gov.uk/CPD.

A summary table of total expenditure between 1st April 2007 and 31st March 2012 is attached. Figures for 2012/2013 are currently being finalised and will be published when available.

Year	07/08 year	08/09 year	09/10 year	10/11 year	11/12 year
Total	£2.2b	£2.4b	£2.3b	£2.7b	£2.6b

Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency

Ms Fearon asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline the role and functions which the Northern Ireland Statistic and Research Agency undertake relating to the Net Fiscal Balance Report.

(AQW 29845/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency (NISRA) has no role in the production of the Net Fiscal Balance Report.

Pleural Plaques

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail whether any funds have been set aside to compensate sufferers of the asbestos-related lung condition, pleural plaques.

(AQW 29866/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The aim of the Damages (Asbestos-related Conditions) Act (Northern Ireland) 2011 is to ensure that a claim in negligence can be made with regard to certain asymptomatic asbestos-related conditions, including asymptomatic pleural plaques. However, the Act does not provide for an automatic payment of damages, nor does it establish an administrative compensation scheme, similar to the time-limited scheme which was introduced in England and Wales.

As individual claimants are expected to pursue claims under the customary rules of the law of negligence, no funds have been set aside centrally to compensate people who have been diagnosed with pleural plaques. However, individual Departments may have set aside funds to meet claims for which they are responsible.

Business Tenancies (Northern Ireland) Order 1996

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what consideration has been given to bringing the provisions of the Business Tenancies Order into line with provisions in Great Britain in terms of requiring a house owner's consent before a company owning solar panels on the roof of the property can renew their lease at the end of the twenty year term.

(AQW 29902/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Business Tenancies (Northern Ireland) Order 1996 gives business tenants in Northern Ireland a measure of security of tenure. The corresponding legislation in England and Wales enables parties to "contract out" of the protection of its legislation. In Northern Ireland, however, the 1996 Order contains an absolute prohibition on any agreement which purports to "contract out" from the security of tenure regime. Scotland has never introduced a comprehensive system of business tenancy protection legislation.

It is by no means clear whether solar panel agreements would come within the terms of the 1996 Order or the corresponding legislation in England and Wales.

The Northern Ireland Law Commission recently undertook a review of the 1996 Order, and, in the context of that review, considered in some detail the case for and against removing the absolute prohibition on contracting out. However ultimately, it recommended an exemption in respect of complex transactions, rather than absolute market freedom.

My Department is considering the terms of the recommendation. However, even if it was to be implemented, it would not bring the provisions of the 1996 Order into line with the provisions in England and Wales. As the Commission has recently reviewed the 1996 Order I have no plans, at this stage, to undertake a further review.

Rates: South Belfast

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the rates collected in the South Belfast Constituency Area in 2006 and 2007, broken down by ward.

(AQW 29907/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The information requested is not available.

Rates: South Belfast

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether there has been a significant rise in rates collected in the South Belfast constituency area following the implementation of the Rates Amendment Order 2006.

(AQW 29910/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The information requested is not available.

Drug-related Deaths

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the cause of each drug misuse death in 2013, including the drugs involved.

(AQW 29944/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: There were 75 deaths due to drug misuse registered in Northern Ireland in 2012, which is the latest available data.

Table 1 overleaf details the cause of death and a breakdown of the drugs involved, as recorded on the death certificate.

2. Drugs listed may have been mentioned on more than one death certificate, but have only been listed once in each category. For example, if heroin is recorded on five death certificates, it has only been listed once.

Family Law

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the current access rights that grandparents have to their grandchildren, including whether there are plans to make amendments to access rights.

(AQW 29979/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Our law does not set out who may or may not have contact with a child. It does, however, allow a court to make a contact order in favour of a named person and that order will detail the contact arrangements. Ordinarily, a grandparent will need the court's permission to make an application for a contact order. In considering whether to grant permission the court will take a number of matters into account, including the applicant's connections with the child. In the coming months I hope to elicit views on the issue of contact, with a view to determining whether any legislative amendments are required.

Drug-related Deaths: Banbridge, Lurgan and Portadown

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many drug related deaths have been reported in (i) Portadown; (ii) Lurgan; and (iii) Banbridge, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 29998/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The table overleaf shows the number of drug related deaths registered between 2010 and 2012 in District Electoral Areas within Craigavon and Banbridge Local Government Districts.

Table 1: Number of Drug Related<sup>1</sup> Deaths Registered in Northern Ireland by District Electoral Areas within Craigavon and Banbridge, 2010 - 2012

 X85 - Assault by drugs, medicaments and biological substances.
 Y10-Y14 - Poisoning by drugs, medicaments and biological substances, undetermined intent.
2. Mortality data for the 2012 registration year are the latest available. Provisional data for 2013 will be available in summer 2014.

Drug-related Deaths: Upper Bann

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many drug related deaths have been reported in the Upper Bann Constituency in the last twelve months.

(AQW 29999/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: There were nine drug related<sup>1</sup> deaths registered in the Upper Bann Constituency in 2012, which is the latest available data.

- 1 International Classification of Diseases, Tenth Revision codes:
- F11-F16, F18-F19 - Mental and behavioural disorders due to drug use (excluding alcohol and tobacco)
  - X40-X44 - Accidental poisoning by drugs, medicaments and biological substances.
  - X60-X64 - Intentional self-poisoning by drugs, medicaments and biological substances.
  - X85 – Assault by drugs, medicaments and biological substances.
  - Y10-Y14 - Poisoning by drugs, medicaments and biological substances, undetermined intent.

Commercial Debts Legislation

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel in relation to the Late Payment of Commercial Debts Legislation can he (i) confirm whether it is his Department or the Department of Business Innovation and Skills which is the competent authority; and (ii) to list all guidance issued by his Department since August 2002 relating to the Late Payment Legislation. (AQW 30042/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Department of Business Innovation and Skills is the competent authority in this area.

Since August 2002, DFP has issued the following guidance relating to late payment:

- DAO(DFP)19/02: Late Payment of Commercial Debts Regulations 2002 (August 2002)
- DAO(DFP)12/08: Supporting Businesses: prompt payment of invoices (November 2008)
- DAO(DFP)04/13: Prompt payment of invoices (March 2013)

Rates Debt

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, pursuant to AQW 29607/11-15, to detail (i) whether the bad debt of £33.8 million was assumed for 2013/14; (ii) whether the debt was added into the overall rate requirement; (iii) what happens to any recovery of bad debt; and (iv) whether the assumption in the following year is discounted to reflect any recovery. (AQW 30102/11-15)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) The £33.8 million which was set aside for write-off during the Estimated Penny Product (EPP) calculations was calculated using various provision percentages for different categories of rating debt, bankruptcy and liquidation trends, and the age of debt. Once the write-off amount for each Council is set, LPS will not write-off more than the estimate unless approval from the Council is given.
- (ii) The debt which is forecast to be written-off in 2013/14 is a 'loss' in the EPP calculation and therefore is accounted for in the striking of the District Rate.
- (iii) When LPS recovers a debt which has been previously written-off, the amount which is recovered is subsequently written back onto the account. In the Actual Penny Product (APP) calculation, write-ons are netted off against write offs.
- (iv) In setting the estimated write-off LPS looks at debt profile and previous trends which include write ons and so the estimated write-off will take account of subsequent recovery.

North Down: Office Space

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many offices are available in the North Down constituency; and to detail the square footage of 'Grade A' office space. (AQW 30131/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: My Department does not hold the information requested.

Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust: Emergency Doctors

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) what action he has taken to tackle the shortage of emergency doctors available in the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust; (ii) how much has been spent on recruitment campaigns for emergency doctors for the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust; and (iii) how successful were these campaigns. (AQW 29714/11-15)

Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): Part (i): My Department has taken a range of measures over the past few years to address the shortage of doctors in a number of specialties. The current shortage of doctors in emergency medicine is a UK wide problem which has made it very difficult for the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust to fill these posts. My Department continues to work closely with the Northern Ireland Medical and Dental Training Agency and with Trusts to address this issue..

Part (ii): The South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust reports that during the financial year 13/14 to date it has incurred expenditure of £3,956 on two recruitment campaigns for emergency doctors at consultant and speciality doctor grades.

The management costs associated with this recruitment activity have not been separately identified above. Such costs are difficult to identify separately as the recruitment activity is embedded within the respective management team roles.

Part (iii): The Trust reports that the campaign in July 2013 to appoint Specialty Doctors (9 vacancies) in emergency medicine yielded 3 applicants and 2 appointments were made. In January 2014 further advertisements were placed for both Consultant and Speciality Doctor posts in emergency medicine.

Ambulance Service: Speeding Fines

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what liaison has taken place between his Department, the Department of Justice and the PSNI to ensure that ambulances are not subject to fixed penalty speeding fines whilst in pursuit of their work.

(AQW 29723/11-15)

Mr Poots: My Department has not engaged with the Department of Justice or the PSNI on the issue of fixed penalty speeding fines for ambulances as it is not necessary to do so.

The Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) is legally required to adhere to the requirements of the Road Safety Act 2006 which stipulates exemptions that may be applied to ambulance emergency response vehicles relating to "speeding" and "traffic control signals".

However, Fixed Penalty Notices can be issued if speed cameras do not register the blue lights on ambulances engaged on emergency activity. In that case, NIAS checks the details against its records and, if appropriate, advises the Fixed Penalty Processing Centre that an ambulance was on emergency activity and no further action is taken. If it transpires the ambulance was not on emergency activity, its driver is then subject to the same road traffic restrictions as other drivers and is liable to a Fixed Penalty Notice.

Ovarian Cancer Awareness Campaign

Mrs McKevitt asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he has any plans to introduce an Ovarian Cancer Awareness campaign to educate women on the symptoms of the condition during the official Ovarian Awareness Month.

(AQW 29740/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Public Health Agency (PHA) is currently developing a cancer awareness campaign for Northern Ireland. In taking forward this public information campaign the PHA has advised they need to take various points into consideration including an evidence review to determine which specific tumour sites are included and evaluating current cancer awareness campaigns being conducted throughout England and Scotland as a guide to the development of the Northern Ireland campaign.

Public information campaigns are just one element of a communications approach that can be utilised to raise awareness of particular issues. With specific regards to ovarian cancer awareness, the PHA and the Health and Social Care (HSC) Board are currently working closely with GPs and specialists from across the HSC to develop an agreed management pathway for patients suspected of having ovarian cancer. The aim of the pathway is to ensure that all patients presenting with symptoms or signs of ovarian cancer are swiftly investigated and are able to access specialist cancer care rapidly.

The referral pathway will reflect the evidence-based approach as set out in NICE guidance for ovarian cancer. It is expected that the pathway will be issued this month (January 2014).

Fire and Rescue Service: Implementation of EU Directive

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what impact the implementation of EU Directive 561/2006 will have on the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service, including job losses, potential of voluntary severance payments and the reduction in available staff.

(AQW 29768/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service (NIFRS) has advised that there has been no adverse impact as a consequence of this EU Directive. NIFRS also state that there have been no job losses, nor reduction in available staff, as a consequence. NIFRS does not currently operate a voluntary severance scheme

NIFRS continue to monitor the situation on an ongoing basis.

Ambulance Service: Allowances

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether the Five Hours Out of Station meal and subsistence allowance is available to all Ambulance Service personnel in every Health and Social Care Trust.
(AQW 29797/11-15)

Mr Poots: Day meal subsistence allowance is available to all Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) staff employed under Agenda for Change Terms and Conditions of Service provided they are away from base for 'more than five hours'.

Health and Social Care Trusts: Trainee Advanced Clinical Practitioners

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many trainee Advanced Clinical Practitioners are in place in each Health and Social Care Trust; and to list the positions available to the trainees when they qualify, including the location.
(AQW 29810/11-15)

Mr Poots:

Western Trust

The Western Trust has one Advanced Nurse Practitioner working within Neonatal the Services at Altnagelvin. In addition they are 2 trained Advanced Nurse Practitioners in Paediatrics. Advanced Nurse Practitioner posts will only be available when additional investment is secured to develop this service and establish substantive posts.

South Eastern Trust

The South Eastern Health & Social Care Trust currently has no Advanced Nurse Practitioner Trainees. The Trust has two Advanced Nurse Practitioners (ANP) working in Neonatology and, as part of its workforce planning for Emergency Department services, is considering an ANP role in this speciality. On completion of training it is envisaged that these practitioners would work in a Level 1 Emergency Department environment where they would be part of a medical rota supporting a Consultant Led Team.

Northern Trust

The Northern Trust have 2 WTE Advanced Neonatal Nurse Practitioners.

Southern Trust

The Southern Trust has two nurses in training to become Advanced Paediatric Nurse Practitioners (APNP). There are two APNP posts available within the Trust when they successfully complete their programme.

These two staff will augment the APNP workforce already practising within the Trust, as well as the Advanced Neonatal Nurse Practitioners in post in Craigavon Area Hospital.

Belfast Trust

There are three Advanced Paediatric Nurse Practitioners within Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children and two nurses in training for the Advanced Nurse Practitioner role in Emergency care.

Advanced Nurse Practitioner posts will only be available when additional investment is secured to develop this service and establish substantive posts.

Health and Social Care Trusts: Agency Staff

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how long agency staff must work in a Health and Social Care Trust before they are offered a temporary contract.
(AQW 29811/11-15)

Mr Poots: Employment as an Agency Worker in a Health and Social Care Trust does not confer a right to a temporary contract with that Trust. The contract of employment for an Agency Worker is the responsibility of the employing Agency.

Health and Social Care Trusts: Scans

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many (i) outpatient; and (ii) inpatient (a) MRI; and (b) CT scans take place on a daily basis in each Health and Social Care Trust; and whether this figure includes weekends.
(AQW 29812/11-15)

Mr Poots: It is not possible to provide information on a daily basis covering an extended period of time. As such the most recent week, prior to the question being asked, has been provided i.e. 6th January – 12th January 2014.

HSC Trusts were instructed to count one unit of activity for each scan carried out. If multiple areas of the body were investigated using the same scan, this would be counted as one unit of activity i.e. no multiplier was to be applied.

The number of outpatients MRI scans during week commencing 6th January 2014 at each HSC Trust is outlined in the table below:

Western	2	4

Source: HSC Trusts

The working hours of MRI and CT scanners varies across hospitals even within each HSC Trust. The core working hours for MRI and CT scanners are mainly Monday to Friday between 8:00am and 5:00pm although some scanners may only carry out a few sessions per week dependent on the size of scanner or funding available. Additional activity can also be carried out in the evenings and at weekends to meet elective demand or to provide out of hours and emergency on-call services.

Accident and Emergency Departments: Early Closures

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what discussions have taken place with the Ambulance Service about the early closure of the Lagan Valley and Downe Hospitals Emergency Departments; and what formal arrangement are in place to deal with the early closures.

(AQW 29814/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) held discussions with representatives from Health and Social Care (HSC) Trusts, including the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) Trust about the early closure of the Lagan and Downe Hospitals Emergency Departments (EDs). Discussions also took place about the contingency arrangements being put in place to deal with the anticipated impact resulting from the changes.

The HSCB has that advised the following contingency arrangements have been put in place:

South Eastern HSC Trust

Downe and Lagan Valley Hospitals

- Direct admissions will be facilitated through GP Out Of Hours on both sites.
- In Lagan Valley, the GP Out of Hours service will be able to make direct contact with the doctor on duty via mobile phone. If required a consultation with the Consultant on-call will be available.
- For direct admissions to the Downe Hospital, the GP Out of Hours doctor will see patients at home or in the Out of Hours centre, which is co-located with the ED, and will hand over patients for admission to the in-house medical team.
- 6 additional beds will be opened in Lagan Valley to facilitate direct admissions and support timely transfers back from other hospitals. This has the potential to be increased to 10 beds if required.
- Existing repatriation protocols for Lagan Valley and Downe are currently being reviewed; no major changes are likely.

Ulster Hospital

- 2 additional nurses will be rostered from 12 noon until 12 midnight on Saturdays and Sundays in the ED;
- 10 additional beds have been opened to support winter pressures; and
- elective (planned) admissions were capped at 55 per week (currently 75) from week beginning 6 January 2014. This will be reviewed on an on-going basis.

Out of Hours

- Additional shift at Downe and Lagan Valley to be provided.

Northern Ireland Ambulance Service

- Additional Crews
- 1x A&E (from 08.00 to 20.00) on Saturday and Sunday in Downpatrick;
- 1x A&E (from 08.00 to 20.00) on Saturday and Sunday in Lisburn;
- 1x Intermediate Care Vehicle (ICV) (from 11.00 to 19.00) on Saturday and Sunday in Comber; and
- 1x ICV (from 11.00 to 19.00) on Saturday and Sunday in Lisburn.

Additional Hospital Ambulance Liaison Officers (HALO)

- 1x HALO at Royal Victoria Hospital (RVH) from 12.00 to 18.00 on Saturday and Sunday;
- 1x HALO at Ulster Hospital from 12.00 to 18.00 on Saturday and Sunday; and
- 1x HALO at Craigavon Area Hospital from 12.00 to 18.00 on Saturday and Sunday.

Belfast HSC Trust

- 6 additional inpatient beds;
- 2 additional ED nurses in RVH at weekends to cover 12 hour day time period both Saturday and Sunday;
- 2 additional ED senior doctors in RVH at weekends to cover 12 hour day time period both Saturday and Sunday; and
- enhanced acute medicine, social work, radiology and laboratories.

Southern HSC Trust*Craigavon Area Hospital

- 1 additional Emergency Nurse Practitioner (ENP) and one additional band 5 nurse per ED shift;
- 4 additional inpatient beds.

Daisy Hill Hospital

- 1 additional ENP Saturday and Sunday 8am-8pm.

Northern Trust

- The Trust will monitor the position and liaise with NIAS but does not anticipate significant change for its area as a result of the changes at Lagan Valley and Downe.

Accident and Emergency Departments: Waiting Times

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how the mechanism for recording Accident and Emergency waiting times differs from the rest of the UK; and why the mechanism used elsewhere has not been adopted to facilitate service comparison.

(AQW 29816/11-15)

Mr Poots: I have been advised the mechanism to record emergency care waiting times is broadly similar in each of the four UK jurisdictions with only minor differences in how these are measured, mainly due to the slightly different ways in which the services are provided in each region.

Information on performance against the emergency care waiting times targets in the four UK regions are broadly comparable but when making comparisons across regions cognisance must be taken of the minor differences that exist, for example in Scotland and Wales, community emergency care departments or community casualty departments that are GP or nurse led are included. In England, attendances at "Walk-in Centres" for minor ailments are also included.

Accident and Emergency Departments: Staffing

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why Emergency Department staff from the Downe and Lagan Valley Hospitals are not concentrated into one location at weekends, rather than closing both departments at weekends because of staff shortages.

(AQW 29817/11-15)

Mr Poots: The South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust considered a number of options to address the difficulties arising from the shortage of medical staff. The option to open the emergency departments from 8am to 8pm Monday to Friday and close them at weekends was selected because it minimises locum requirements and is sustainable in the short to medium term. The Trust has indicated that the decision to maintain emergency department services at both hospitals under the current arrangements better serves the needs of all of the South Eastern Trust population.

Western Health and Social Care Trust: Income

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 29081/11-15, whether, in the event of the targeted income of £320k per annum not being reached, the Western Health and Social Care Trust, or any other agency within his Department, will have to make up any of the shortfall in revenue.

(AQW 29818/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Western Trust, like any other Trust or Arms Length Body, is required to live within available resources whilst also ensuring that services are delivered in a safe, sustainable and effective way.

Any shortfall in an organisation's savings delivery plans or income projections would be primarily managed by the organisation, through the development of alternative plans and by taking any other steps to ensure financial breakeven is secured. In doing so, it is paramount that front-line services are protected and that patient/client safety is not compromised.

Fire and Rescue Service: Training

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the funding which has been apportioned to Large Animal Rescue Training for Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service personnel, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 29840/11-15)

Mr Poots: The table below details the funding apportioned to Large Animal Rescue Training for NIFRS personnel in each of the last 3 years

Year	Total Cost
2010/11	£46,187
2011/12	£38,320
2012/13	£36,464

Fire and Rescue Service: Training

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service personnel have received Large Animal Rescue Training, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 29844/11-15)

Mr Poots: The table below details the funding apportioned to Large Animal Rescue Training for NIFRS personnel in each of the last 3 years

Year	Total Cost
2010/11	£46,187
2011/12	£38,320
2012/13	£36,464

Staff Suspensions

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of staff in (i) his Department; (ii) the Health and Social Care Board; and (iii) each Health and Social Care Trust, that have been suspended, over each of the last three financial years, including the (a) average length of suspension; (b) number of staff reinstated following suspension; and (c) payments made to suspended staff.

(AQW 29869/11-15)

Interpreting and Translation Services

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 18449/11-15, (i) for an update on the review of Interpreting and Translation Services; (ii) to detail the options which were available for a more cost effective means of delivering translation services; and (iii) to outline his Department's position on each of these options.

(AQW 29871/11-15)

Mr Poots: The public consultation in relation to the Review of Future Arrangements for Language Interpreting and Translation Services ended on 13 December 2013. The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) has undertaken an analysis of the 44 consultation responses and is scheduled to consider the outcome of this process at its Board meeting on 13 February 2014.

The options considered by the Review included:

- Do nothing;
- Transfer the management of the language interpreting service to another Trust;
- Transfer the management of interpreting and translation services to a regional shared service provided by the Business Services Organisation; and
- Transfer the management of the interpreting and translation services to the Health and Social Care Board, the Public Health Agency or an external third party within the private or voluntary sector.

The review also considered the potential to rebalance the proportion of interpreting activity, such as increasing the proportion of telephone interpreting rather than face to face interpreting.

Given that the above issues are still under consideration by the HSCB, it is not appropriate for the Department to comment further at this stage.

Hospitals: Staff Guidance

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what guidelines are in place for hospital staff when using Tomography machines on patients who have Implantable Cardioverter Defibrillators.

(AQW 29872/11-15)

Mr Poots: It is the responsibility of clinicians to advise their patients about their suitability for diagnostic tests according to their individual clinical condition; this includes diagnostic techniques such as computed tomography (CT). Currently there is no UK policy or advice guidance in relation to CT and implantable cardioverter defibrillators (ICDs) however there is no indication of any national guidance alerts relating to cardiac device management during CT.

Operators of this type of specialised machinery are appropriately trained to ensure the safety of patients according to the manufacturer's equipment specifications and professional instruction and recommendations.

Mid Ulster Hospital: Plans

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail his Department's (i) current; and (ii) future plans for the Mid Ulster Hospital.

(AQW 29892/11-15)

Mr Poots: The commissioning of hospital services is the responsibility of the Health and Social Care Board. The Northern Health and Social Care Trust Population Plan indicates that the Mid-Ulster Hospital, along with the other community hospitals, has an important role to play in developing more local provision particularly in relation to community/primary care-led services.

Autism: North Belfast

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what resources have been invested to support people diagnosed with autism and their families in North Belfast; and to outline his Department's policies for assisting these families and the charities that support them.

(AQW 29894/11-15)

Mr Poots: This information is not available specifically for the North Belfast constituency area.

The Belfast HSC Trust has advised that £395k is allocated to provide post-diagnostic interventions by Trust staff within both Children and Adult Autism services. In addition, the Belfast Outcomes Group, mandated by the Children's and Young People's Strategic Partnership, have also invested approximately £120k to assist the voluntary and community sector in Belfast to support children with autism and their families in 2013.

Autism services are underpinned by a range of DHSSPS policies and strategies. The foremost of these is the cross-departmental Autism Strategy (2013 – 2020) and Action Plan (2013 – 2016) which I launched in the Assembly on 14 January 2014. The Strategy and Action Plan document includes a summary of these policies and planned actions.

Autism Strategy and Action Plan: Funding

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what additional funding will be provided by his Department to support the Autism Strategy 2013-2020 and Action Plan 2013-2016.

(AQW 29895/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Health and Social Care Board is investing £500k across 2013-15, to further support Adult ASD-specific service capacity within Health and Social Care Trusts.

Within the Autism Action Plan (2013 – 2016), a key health and social care action is the completion of a regional validation exercise of both the Children and Adult's Autism Care Pathways, by March 2014. When I review these reports – if areas of specific need are identified – I will consider the appropriate action to take for the delivery of effective Autism Services within Health and Social Care.

In addition, my Department has submitted a proposal to have funding approved through the NI Executive's 2014/15 Government Advertising Programme to deliver a public awareness element of a broader campaign to raise awareness and understanding of autism.

Royal Victoria Hospital: Accident and Emergency Department

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of patients that attended the Royal Victoria Hospital Accident and Emergency Department, broken down by residents in each local council area, on each day from 4 to 9 January 2014.

(AQW 29916/11-15)

Mr Poots: Between 4th and 9th January 2014, there were 1,329 attendances at the Royal Victoria emergency care department, similar to the number who attended during the same period in 2013 (1,328). Information on the number of attendances at the Royal Victoria emergency care department, during each period is detailed in Table 1 (4th – 9th January 2014) and Table 2 (4th – 9th January 2013) for each day by local council area.

Cervical Cancer Prevention

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he will take to improve cervical cancer prevention for the 22 percent of women who have not been screened, particularly those in the age cohorts of 25-29 and 60-64 who have the lowest uptake.

(AQW 29924/11-15)

Mr Poots: Screening for cervical cancer is offered to all eligible women aged 25-49 every three years, and to those aged 50-64 every 5 years.

Approximately 120,000 women are screened each year in Northern Ireland. There has been a steady increase in the proportion of eligible women attending for cervical screening, across all the age cohorts. The coverage, which is the percentage of eligible women who have been screened in the previous 5 years, was 78.04% at end March 2013 compared to 73.45% at end March 2008.

The coverage is slightly lower in the age cohorts of 25-29 and 60-64. Raising awareness of cervical cancer prevention through screening is an important step in addressing this. There are a number of ongoing initiatives.

All women invited for screening by the regional call recall centre receive an information leaflet with their invitation letter to support them in making an informed decision on participation. Individual GP practices have also taken specific steps to improve access to screening for their population based on local need, for example providing walk-in appointments with the practice nurse.

A four-year action plan (2012-2015) to help promote informed choice in cancer screening has been developed by the PHA, and is currently being implemented. It contains a number of actions on promoting cervical screening including among the hard to reach groups.

Opportunities are also taken at a regional level to promote the screening programme through local media releases at key times of the year, such as during Cervical Cancer Awareness Week in January.

Autism: North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what resources have been invested in North Down for supporting people diagnosed with autism and their families, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 29930/11-15)

Mr Poots: The information requested is not available specifically for the North Down constituency area.

The South Eastern HSC Trust has advised that £650k was allocated for autism assessment, diagnosis and intervention services in 2013/14 across the whole Trust. This does not include support provided to families, children and adults with Autism through other programmes of care within SEHSCT, the Family Support Hubs or through voluntary organisations with whom the Trust has contracts.

The Trust also advise that the breakdown of resource allocation for the previous five years is not readily available.

Carers: North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many registered carers in North Down are over 60 years old.

(AQW 29931/11-15)

Mr Poots: The information requested is not available.

Cancelled Clinics: North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many clinics in North Down were cancelled in each of the last five years.

(AQW 29932/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Quarterly Outpatient Activity Return (QOAR), which is the present methodology for the collection of consultant-led outpatient activity, was introduced by my Department's Hospital Information Branch from the beginning of 2008/09, as a direct result of a comprehensive review of collection of outpatient activity undertaken in 2007/08. Primarily the methodology changed from the reporting of the number of clinics held and cancelled to the reporting of the number of appointments held and cancelled.

The only hospital that falls within North Down constituency is Bangor Hospital. The number of cancelled outpatient appointments at Bangor Hospital in each quarter of the last five years, is shown in the table overleaf. These figures represent the number of outpatient appointments that were cancelled by the patient (CNA) and whom gave advance warning to the hospital and the number of outpatient appointments that were cancelled by the hospital.

When assessing the level of cancelled outpatient appointments, it is more appropriate to consider these in the context of the total number of outpatient attendances, in order to provide a more comparative trend analysis. This involves the calculation of a standardised measure of patient cancelled appointments, which is called a CNA rate and a standardised measure of hospital cancellations, which is called a hospital cancellation rate. These rates are also presented in the table below.

Number of outpatient appointments cancelled by the patient and by the hospital from 2008/09 – 2012/13

Financial Year	No. Of Patient Cancelled Outpatient Appointments	Could Not Attend (CNA) rate	No. Of Hospital Cancelled Appointments	Hospital Cancellation rate
2008-2009	1807	11.1	3158	17.9
2009-2010	1738	10.8	2649	15.6
2010-2011	1664	11.0	3243	19.5
2011-2012	1464	11.3	1752	13.2
2012-2013	1176	9.2	1071	8.4

Source: Quarterly Outpatient Activity Return (QOAR) Part 1

1 The CNA rate is calculated as follows: (Number of could not attend appointments/(Number of outpatient attendances + Number of could not attend appointments))*100

1 The Hospital Cancellation rate is calculated as follows: (Number of hospital cancelled appointments/(Number of outpatient attendances + Number of hospital cancelled appointments))*100

Details of cancellations by specialty, if required, are available online in the Northern Ireland Hospital Statistics: Outpatient Activity Statistics 2012/13, available at:

Ambulance Service: Response Times

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is the average ambulance response time in (i) Bangor; (ii) Holywood; and (iii) Donaghadee.

(AQW 29933/11-15)

Mr Poots: My Department's current performance indicator for ambulance response times is that 72.5% of all Category A (life-threatening) calls are responded to within eight minutes, with no less than 67.5% in any Local Commissioning Group (LCG).

Performance against this indicator is detailed in the table below for each month since April 2013.

LCG	Apr 2013	May 2013	Jun 2013	July 2013	Aug 2013	Sept 2013	Oct 2013	Nov 2013	Dec 2013
Belfast LCG	75.7%	83.0%	85.0%	83.9%	83.4%	85.9%	84.9%	83.3%	76.9%

Health and Social Care Trusts: High Dependency Cots

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) how many High Dependency cots are available each Health and Social Care Trust; (ii) whether all of the cots are currently available; (iii) whether there has been a reduction in number of cots within in the last two years; and (iv) if so, for what reason.

(AQW 29935/11-15)

Mr Poots: The number of High Dependency cots which were either occupied or available for use at each Health and Social Care Trust at midnight on 17th January 2014, is given in the table below.

HSC Trust	Cots Occupied	Additional Cots available for use
Belfast	5	2
Northern	2	0
South Eastern	4	0
Southern	1.25*	3
Western	4	2

Source: Health and Social Care Trusts

- * At midnight on 17th January 2014, Southern HSC Trust had one occupied high dependency cot. In addition to this a level 2 high dependency cot which is designated as a high dependency cot 25% of the time was also occupied. This has been represented in the table above as 1.25 occupied cots.

All Health and Social Care Trusts reported that there has been no reduction in the number of cots within the last two years.

Defibrillators: Training

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what training his Department provides to teachers on the use of defibrillators.

(AQW 29972/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety has no statutory responsibility to offer training to individuals or organisations that purchase their own defibrillators.

When individuals or organisations purchase a defibrillator ideally they should be advised about training and maintenance of the machine by the supplier. This is an area that has been considered as part of the regional resuscitation strategy for Northern Ireland which is currently out for consultation until the 14 February 2014.

British-Irish Council and North/South Ministerial Council Meetings

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to list the ministerial meetings on health issues which have taken place under the auspices of (i) the British Irish Council; and (ii) the North South Ministerial Council.

(AQW 29988/11-15)

Mr Poots: Since 2007, under the auspices of the British-Irish Council, Ministerial meetings on Misuse of Drugs were held on 20 November 2008 in London, 24 February 2010 in Douglas and 29 June 2012 in St Helier.

In the same time period, under the auspices of the North –South Ministerial Council, Ministerial meetings in the Health and Food Safety sector were held on the 28 November 2007 in Dublin, 28 May 2008 in Belfast, 10 June 2009 in Dublin, 25 November 2009 in Belfast, 2 June 2010 in Armagh, 10 November 2010 in Newry, and 20 July 2011, 2 February 2012, 18 July 2012, 21 November 2012 and 18 October 2013, all in Armagh.

Prosthetic Knees

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to list the makes and models of prosthetic knees available to Health Service patients.

(AQW 29989/11-15)

Mr Poots: The makes and models of prosthetic knees available are shown on the attached list. In addition, a final prosthesis prescription is based solely on the right, best fit and best outcome for the patient, commensurate with their assessed clinical need.

Legal Highs: Health Consequences

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to list the range of possible health consequences of legal highs.

(AQW 29990/11-15)

Mr Poots: Substances referred to as “legal highs” have a psychoactive effect but are not currently covered by the UK-wide Misuse of Drugs Act 1971. However, the term “legal highs” can be misleading, and we therefore refer to them as New Psychoactive Substances.

Many of these substances are new and often have no safety or toxicity data. This makes it very difficult to make an assessment of the active chemical in any New Psychoactive Substance and to give an accurate picture of potential side-effects and dangers. Indeed, there are many different types of New Psychoactive Substances – some act like stimulants, others as depressants. In addition, ingredients and effects can change from batch to batch – and when tested some of these substances have been found to contain illegal drugs.

However, I have no doubt there is a potential for very serious and potentially tragic consequences for anyone taking any substance that has not been prescribed for them. Users have no way of knowing exactly what they are taking and health risks are likely to range from being out of control and/or passing out, through to increased risk of cardiac arrest and overheating, potentially up to overdose and death. In addition, these substances can decrease inhibitions, act as a depressant and increase the risk of suicide, self-harm, and poor mental health.

Legal Highs: Incidents

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many legal high related incidents have been recorded at hospitals in each Health and Social Care Trust over the last five years.
(AQW 29991/11-15)

Mr Poots: Information on the number of legal high related incidents recorded at hospitals is not available.

Legal Highs: Research

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he is aware of any research which shows a link between the usage of legal highs and illegal drug use.
(AQW 29992/11-15)

Mr Poots: My Department has not undertaken or commissioned any research on the links between the usage of so-called “legal highs” and illicit drug use. The term “legal highs” falsely implies that these substances are safe, and are legal for human consumption. They are not necessarily safer than illegal drugs – in some situations their affects can be more devastating. We therefore refer to them as New Psychoactive Substances.

Given that this is an emerging issue, and the sensitive/illegal nature of drug consumption, it is difficult to find out detailed information about these substances and their users. However, I am concerned that the availability of these substances, and particularly in “head shops” on our high streets, may help normalise drug misuse within our society. Indeed, these substances may be a “gateway” to the further misuse of drugs.

I recently raised this issue with the Home Secretary, setting out my concerns about the accessibility of New Psychoactive Substances and seeking a more robust and consistent approach to addressing this issue across the UK. In response to this, the Home Office has now announced a review of how the UK’s legislative response can be enhanced beyond the existing measures of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971. I am pleased that the review will be informed by a range of evidence, including the various international approaches I highlighted to the Home Secretary, including those adopted by the Republic of Ireland, the USA and New Zealand. It is anticipated that this review will be completed by Spring 2014.

I believe it is essential that we take a consistent approach across the UK for any efforts to be effective and I welcome the fact that NI will be part of this review.

Organ Donation

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what percentage of people on the organ donar list are (i) adults; and (ii) children.
(AQW 30018/11-15)

Mr Poots: The information requested has been supplied by NHS Blood and Transplant, which is the organ donation organisation for the UK and is responsible for matching and allocating donated organs. A key part of this work involves managing the registrations of people on the NHS Organ Donor Register.

Northern Ireland registrants on the NHS Organ Donor Register by age (as at 22/1/2014)

	Age at 22/1/2014
Child (<18)	8508 (1.48%)
Adult	565958 (98.52%)
Total	574466

Dementia Diagnosis: Rates

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what are the rates of dementia diagnosis in each Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 30041/11-15)

Mr Poots: Under the Quality & Outcomes Framework (QOF) of the General Medical Services contract, the total number of GP-registered patients diagnosed with dementia is recorded.

The raw prevalence of dementia in each Health and Social Care Trust is shown in table 1 below. The number of patients on the dementia register in each Health and Social Care Trust area has been derived based on the location of the practice. It should be noted that patients may not reside in the same HSC Trust in which their practice is located.

Table 1: Raw prevalence of dementia per 1,000 registered patients, 2013.

HSC Trust	Raw prevalence of dementia per 1,000 registered patients
Belfast	6.82
South Eastern	7.99
Northern	6.05
Southern	5.64
Western	5.89
Northern Ireland	6.43

Register sizes are taken from the Payment Calculation and Analysis System (PCAS) as at National Prevalence Day, 31 March 2013. The prevalence is calculated based on the number of patients on the dementia register as a proportion of the full GP registered list for Northern Ireland as at January 2013.

Hospitals: Avoidable Visits

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many initiatives to reduce avoidable trips to hospital are currently operational in each Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 30084/11-15)

Mr Poots: In addition to the nationwide "Choose Well Campaign", the Local Commissioning Groups in the five HSC Trusts have put in place, or are in the process of establishing, a wide range of initiatives to reduce avoidable trips to hospitals. These include, for example, initiatives to allow GPs to access consultants directly by telephone or email for advice in relation to certain specialties; patient education programmes to help manage long-term conditions; streamlined referral pathways and a greater range of services available in community settings.

The NI Ambulance Service is also putting in place a series of protocols on a phased basis which will allow paramedics to assess and treat patients at the scene and avoid transport to hospital.

In addition, GPs are incentivised to participate in external peer reviews of secondary care outpatient referrals, emergency admissions and A & E attendances. The reviews will include, if appropriate, proposals for improvement to access arrangements in the practice in order to reduce avoidable outpatient referrals, emergency admissions and attendances.

Cancer Drugs: Accessibility

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether a patient's address has an impact on their accessibility to cancer drugs.

(AQW 30089/11-15)

Mr Poots: Northern Ireland patients have equal access to cancer and any other drugs that are clinically suitable, irrespective of their address.

Multiple Sclerosis: Treatment

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the anticipated start and completion dates for the review of the National Institute for Health and Care Excellence's decision to make teriflunomide available on prescription to people with relapse remitting multiple sclerosis.

(AQW 30113/11-15)

Mr Poots: My Department's review of NICE Technology Appraisal TA303 on teriflunomide for treating relapsing forms of multiple sclerosis commenced on 6 December 2013 on receipt of a near-final version of the guidance. Additional material was provided when the guidance was published on 22 January 2014 and the review is expected to be completed by 18 February 2014, 4 weeks after publication. As soon as the local review is complete, the endorsement decision will be published on the Department's website.

Children: Complex Medical Needs

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether a hospital admittance of a child with complex medical needs automatically triggers a review of their care package.

(AQW 30141/11-15)

Mr Poots: The DHSSPS guidance, Developing Services to Children and Young People with Complex Physical Healthcare Needs (2009), sets out an integrated care pathway for the treatment of children and young people with complex healthcare needs, including a planning model which considers the changing needs of these children and their families. Any change in the child's circumstances which may impact upon their care should be assessed and addressed.

Therefore, while admittance of a child to hospital may not automatically trigger a review of their care package, when the child is being discharged, an assessment should be made of any possible change in the child's healthcare needs which would impact on the level of care required at home.

Vaccination

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the approval of the Bexsero meningococcal B vaccine for its potential use in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 30150/11-15)

Mr Poots: In Northern Ireland as in the rest of the UK, vaccination policy is informed by the work of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation (JCVI). JCVI is an independent expert advisory committee that advises the four UK Health Ministers. In formulating its advice and recommendations, the Committee's aim is to ensure that the greatest benefit to public health is obtained from the most appropriate vaccination and immunisation strategies.

JCVI had invited comments on their interim statement regarding the Men B vaccine published in July 2013. They have since issued an update in October in which they advised that they received a number of detailed comments which were considered by JCVI and its meningococcal sub-committee. The submissions received included references to new and recently published evidence and further analyses are necessary to respond fully. The required analyses are being commissioned and will be completed as quickly as possible. I will consider the JCVI recommendation once I have received it.

Cancer Drugs: Funding

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the assistance his Department gives to patients seeking funding for cancer drugs.

(AQO 5386/11-15)

Mr Poots: During 2012/13 more than £40 million was spent on cancer drugs and treatments in Northern Ireland with additional expenditure on the costs associated with cancer care, for example palliative and primary care costs.

The decision about suitable treatments for cancer patients is the responsibility of the patient's clinician. The Health and Social Care Board has responsibility for commissioning specialist drugs, including cancer drugs, in line with guidance from the National Institute for Health and Care Excellence.

For patients who require treatment that falls outside the normal range of services commissioned by the Board their clinician may apply for an individual funding request.

Legal Highs: Progress Against

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what progress has been made to tackle legal highs.

(AQO 5387/11-15)

Mr Poots: Substances referred to as "legal highs" have a psychoactive effect but are not currently covered by the UK-wide Misuse of Drugs Act 1971. However, I prefer not to use the term "legal highs" as it can be misleading, and we therefore refer to them as "New Psychoactive Substances".

I recently raised this issue with the Home Secretary, setting out my concerns about the accessibility of New Psychoactive Substances and seeking a more robust and consistent approach to addressing this issue across the UK.

In response to this, and other concerns raised, the Home Office has now announced a review of how the UK's legislative response can be enhanced beyond the existing measures of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971. I am pleased that the review will be informed by a range of evidence, including the various international approaches I highlighted to the Home Secretary, including the Republic of Ireland, the USA and New Zealand. It is anticipated that this review will be completed by Spring 2014.

I believe it is essential that we take a consistent approach across the UK for any efforts to be effective and I welcome the fact that NI will be part of this review.

Healthcare Staff: Language Skills

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what actions are being taken to ensure that healthcare professionals have appropriate language skills for communicating with patients.

(AQO 5388/11-15)

Mr Poots: It is a fundamental obligation of all HSC organisations that employ or contract with healthcare professionals to assure themselves of their fitness for the post at appointment. This includes their ability to communicate effectively with patients. I consider that current recruitment and appointment processes fulfil these requirements.

It is important however that we continue to enhance existing processes. For example, my officials are currently working with Health colleagues in England to introduce amendments to the Medical Act which will strengthen the powers of the General Medical Council and enable them to carry out proportionate checks on doctors from the EU where there is concern around their English language capability.

I remain strongly committed also to ensuring that those patients, clients and service users who do not have English as a first or competent second language are able to access health and social care services here in Northern Ireland. A key feature in this is the Northern Ireland Health and Social Care Interpreting Service which has over 400 face to face interpreters in a range of 35 ethnic minority languages helping to facilitate effective and meaningful communication between HSC professionals and those service users not proficient in English.

Autism: Support

Mr Girvan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what actions are being taken to support people with autism.

(AQO 5390/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Autism Strategy (2013 - 2020) and Action Plan (2013 - 2016), which I launched in the Assembly on 14 January 2014, outlines the Executive's commitment to improving services and support for people with autism and their families, throughout their lives.

Key actions for my Department and the HSC include:

- autism awareness – training for relevant frontline staff and raising awareness via a public campaign;
- enhancing health and wellbeing for people with autism and their families;
- building on existing early intervention and family support services for children, as outlined in the Six Steps of Autism Care Pathway;
- regional validation review of autism care pathways; and
- developing adult ASD-specific service capacity in HSC Trusts.

Mortuaries

Mr Lynch asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the opening and closing times of mortuaries during the week, at weekends and Bank Holidays.

(AQO 5391/11-15)

Mr Poots: The opening times for the mortuary at the Ulster Hospital are 8.30-16.30 Monday to Friday and 8.30-12.30 at weekends and Public Holidays.

The mortuary at Altnagelvin Hospital is open from 9.00-16.30 every day while the mortuary at the South West Acute hospital opens from 9.00- 17.00 each day.

The mortuary at Causeway Hospital is open 24 hours a day, all year round. The opening times of the mortuary at Antrim Hospital are 9.00-17.00 Monday to Friday (release of bodies' service available until 20.00) and 8.00-13.00 at the weekends and Public Holidays.

The Craigavon Area Hospital mortuary opening times are 9.00-19.00 Monday to Friday, and 9.00-18.30 at weekends and Public Holidays, while opening times at Daisy Hill Hospital are 12.00-18.30 Monday to Friday, and 9.00-18.30 at weekends and Public Holidays.

The Belfast Trust mortuary is open Monday to Friday 9.00-17.00 and Saturday 9.00-12.30.

Outside the above opening times an on-call service is provided for each of the mortuaries.

Downe Hospital: Accident and Emergency Department

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of how the weekend closure of the Downe Hospital Accident and Emergency department will impact on the waiting times at the Ulster Hospital.

(AQO 5392/11-15)

Mr Poots: I am advised that, to date, there is no evidence that the temporary changes to the opening hours of the Downe Hospital's emergency department is having a significant impact on attendances at the Ulster Hospital. The situation will continue to be monitored by the Health and Social Care Board and the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust.

Organ Donation

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline his position on the introduction of a soft opt-out system of organ donation.

(AQO 5393/11-15)

Mr Poots: I am giving careful consideration to the findings in the Public Health Agency's report on public attitudes towards organ donation, including the possible introduction of a soft opt-out system, and will make a statement on my Department's policy position in the near future.

Royal Victoria Hospital: Accident and Emergency Department

Mr McCartney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the actions taken following the recent crisis at the Emergency Department of the Royal Victoria Hospital, Belfast.

(AQO 5394/11-15)

Mr Poots: The major incident at the Royal Victoria Hospital declared by the Belfast Trust was not a crisis. It was a planned response to a higher than normal rate of patients attending the Emergency Department who required admission. The Emergency Department returned to normal service within a matter of hours. The Belfast Trust has an ongoing programme of reform to improve the emergency service at the hospital.

Western Health and Social Care Trust: Income

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 29081/11-15, whether, in the event of the targeted income of £320k per annum not being reached, the Western Health and Social Care Trust, or any other agency within his Department, will have to make up any of the shortfall in revenue to a private company or operator.

(AQW 30300/11-15)

Mr Poots: Neither the Western Trust nor the Department is required to make up any shortfall in the targeted income of £320k per annum to a private company or operator.

Department of Justice

Patrick John McDaid: Legal Aid

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to detail the total Legal Aid costs incurred in the case of Patrick John McDaid following his conviction and subsequent appeal, broken down by (i) legal firm/solicitor, (ii) junior counsel and (iii) senior counsel.

(AQW 29743/11-15)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): A Legal Aid Certificate was granted for representation by solicitor only for proceedings in the Magistrates' Court.

The total fees:	£1,074.00
-----------------	-----------

A Legal Aid Certificate was granted for representation by a solicitor, senior and junior counsel for proceedings in the Crown Court.

The total fees:	Solicitor	£9,007.85
	Senior counsel	£4,464.00
	Junior counsel	£3,412.80
	Total	£16,884.65
	Grand total	£17,958.65

Fees have not been paid on foot of Mr McDaid's subsequent appeal.

Marian McGlinchey: Legal Aid

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to provide the total costs in the prosecution and defence of Marian McGlinchey following her recent admissions and sentencing, including a breakdown of the costs associated with (i) Legal Aid broken down by (a) legal firm/solicitor; (b) junior counsel; and (c) senior counsel, including all additional expenses claimed; (ii) prosecution costs; and (iii) any additional costs incurred since the case entered the court system.

(AQW 29750/11-15)

Mr Ford: Legal Aid was granted on 22 July 2011 for proceedings in the Magistrates' Court for representations by solicitor and junior counsel in relation to charges of "providing money/property for use in terrorism".

The total fees were:

Solicitor	£9,137.71
Junior Counsel	£1,050.00

Following committal to the Crown Court in respect of this charge, a certificate was granted for representation for solicitor, senior counsel and junior counsel at the Crown Court. The defendant was convicted and all fees remain outstanding for all representatives with the exception of the senior counsel who was initially instructed but who was unable to continue representing the defendant.

Total fees:	First senior counsel	£720.00
-------------	----------------------	---------

- 2 Legal Aid was granted on 27 September 2012 for Magistrates' Court proceedings for representation by a solicitor and junior Counsel in relation to charges of "aid/abet addressing a meeting sec 12(3) of the Terrorism Act". A claim has been received from the junior counsel who withdrew from the case.

Total fees	£601.01
------------	---------

No other fees have as yet been paid.

Following committal on the aid/abet charge, a Crown Court certificate for representation by solicitor, senior Counsel and junior Counsel was granted. To date no claim from any of the legal representatives involved in these Crown Court Proceedings have been received.

The PPSNI have provided the following prosecution costs covering two prosecutions:

Senior Counsel	£21,546.00
Junior Counsel	£10,773.60
Senior Counsel	£22,732.00
Junior Counsel	£12,652.00

Court Case 13/122971

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice whether the charges in case number 13/122971 at Dungannon Magistrates Court were committed whilst on bail for other matters, and if so, to detail (i) when was bail was granted; (ii) the court; and (iii) the terms set.

(AQW 29787/11-15)

Mr Ford: This case is currently scheduled for hearing and I am unable to provide a substantive answer to this question at this stage of the proceedings.

Legal Aid: Expert Witnesses

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 28698/11-15, what process is used to determine the amount paid to an expert witness through Legal Aid for evidence provided in legal proceedings.

(AQW 29820/11-15)

Mr Ford: The amounts paid to expert witnesses for evidence provided in legal proceedings on behalf of a legally assisted person are determined on a case by case basis depending on the circumstances of each case.

Fees are determined by reference to the General Authorities, documents which specify the fees charged below which a member of the legal profession may engage an expert without seeking prior approval from the Commission.

Where necessary, ie if the amount exceeds the limits in the General Authority or the expert type is not listed in the General Authority, the Commission will seek full reasons why the engagement of the expert is required and, in such cases will routinely request that the solicitor provide three quotations to ensure that no other comparable expert is available at the standard rates.

The Commission has published guidance in respect of the engagement of expert witnesses in criminal proceedings.

If a request for authority to engage an expert witness in civil proceedings is considered by the Commission to be unusual either in terms of the nature of the request or the amount it will be considered as an "unusually large expense" under the provision of Regulation 15(7) of the Legal Aid (General) Regulations (NI) 1965, and the request will be considered by an internal Panel within the Commission.

The General Authorities and guidance documents are available on the Commission's website at www.nilsc.org.uk.

Police: Officers Retired due to Injury

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Justice whether he is aware, or has sought any details from the Chief Constable, of how many police officers who have retired as a result of an injury on duty hold the designation permanent with no further reviews. (AQW 29867/11-15)

Mr Ford: I have not sought any information from the Chief Constable regarding the numbers of police officers who have retired as a result of an injury on duty. My Department, as I advised in my answer to AQW/23798/11-15, does not have any role in the review of Injury on Duty Awards.

Under Regulation 35(1) of the PSNI and PSNI Reserve (Injury Benefit) Regulations 2006 the Policing Board is legally obliged to arrange periodical reviews of the degree of disablement of an Injury on Duty award.

Court Case 13/056715

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to the trial in case number 13/056715 that was aborted at Craigavon Crown Court on 14 January 2014 due to inaccurate interpretation of the victim's evidence, whether an investigation will be carried out into how a non-registered interpreter was able to be involved in a case to this level before the lack of registration was discovered; and to detail the terms of reference for the investigation.

(AQW 29883/11-15)

Mr Ford: An investigation into the matter has been commenced by the DOJ Contract Manager. The investigation is being conducted under the terms of the contract with the current service provider, and is ongoing.

Consultancy Fees

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Justice to detail how much money has been spent by his Department on consultancy fees in each of the last two years, including a breakdown of each consultancy firm used.

(AQW 29908/11-15)

Mr Ford: Expenditure by the Department of Justice, including its Agencies but not its arm's length bodies, on consultancy fees in each of the last two financial years is shown in the table below. The names of consultancy firms have been withheld in line with DOJ policy.

2011/12	£418,927

Court Case 13/056715

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to the trial in case number 13/056715 that was aborted at Craigavon Crown Court on 14 January 2014, to detail all costs to date of the case, including (i) Legal Aid; (ii) prosecution; (iii) translation/interpretation services; and (iv) jury expenses.

(AQW 29940/11-15)

Mr Ford: The table below details the estimated cost of case number 13/056715 from the start of the proceedings in the Magistrates' Court on 26 August 2011 to 14 January 2014 based on information available as at 22 January 2014.

Cost Type	Estimated Cost (£)
(i) Legal Aid <sup>1</sup>	8,695
(ii) Prosecution <sup>2</sup>	6,840
(iii) Prosecution Interpreter costs <sup>3</sup>	300
(iv) Court Interpretation costs <sup>4</sup>	8,083
(v) Jury expenses <sup>5</sup>	785
(vi) Court (Judiciary and Staff Costs)	3,890
(vii) PSNI costs	1,703
(viii) Facilities (e.g. Courtroom Accommodation)	595
Total	30,891

1 The legal aid cost relates to a co-defendant. Costs in respect of the main defendants have not yet been received.

- 2 The total cost to the PPS is not yet available. An estimate of costs for counsel has been provided.
- 3 Estimate for prosecution interpreter cost.
- 4 Expenses for interpreters received to date.
- 5 Expenses for jurors received to date.

Judicial Reviews

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice how many Judicial Reviews are currently listed in the court system.
(AQW 29941/11-15)

Mr Ford: The table below details the number of Judicial Reviews listed for hearing as at 17 January 2014.

	Number
Applications for leave to apply for Judicial Review	34
Applications for leave to apply for Judicial Review under appeal	4
Applications for Judicial Review	65
Judicial Reviews under appeal	4

Prisons: Drugs

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of searches for drugs that have taken place in each prison in the last two years; and on how many of those searches have illegal drugs been found.
(AQW 29955/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Prison Service (NIPS) conducts searching on prisoners, their visitors and staff as well as area searches. The purpose of searching is to uncover any illicit articles and prevent any breaches of security. In addition NIPS gathers intelligence on the use of drugs within prison which leads to searching resources being directed as appropriate. In this context it is not possible to detail the number of searches which were solely and specifically for drugs.

The total number of finds of illicit drugs for each of the last two years is set out in the table. These figures include prescription medication which was not legitimately held.

Rural Crime: Discussions

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice to detail the recent discussions he has held with the Chief Constable regarding increases in rural crime and the steps required to combat it.
(AQW 29956/11-15)

Mr Ford: I hold regular meeting with the Chief Constable during which we discuss a range of issues including rural crime. You will be aware that reducing the opportunities to commit crime and make rural communities safer is a key strand of the Community Safety Strategy, "Building Safer, Shared and Confident Communities".

A Business and Rural Crime Action Plan is in place and is being delivered by my Department, working in partnership with PSNI and a range of other key statutory and business sector partners. A key outcome of that work has been the establishment of the Rural Crime Unit, an initiative supported by my Department, Police Service of Northern Ireland, the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development and NFU Mutual.

The Rural Crime Unit was formed in a direct response to concerns regarding rural crime and to assist in identifying how best to target resources to reduce crime incidents. The Unit provides a dedicated resource to identify trends and patterns in rural crime to assist District Commanders in making operational decisions and to target their resources and initiatives accordingly.

The information provided by the Unit has also allowed partners from the Rural Crime Unit Steering Group to support crime prevention initiatives aimed at encouraging farmers to take steps to help protect their property. This work was recently evidenced by the announcement of a funding package to encourage farmers in theft hotspots to fit security devices to their machinery.

At a local level, Policing and Community Safety Partnerships (PCSPs) have also developed Action Plans to address local community concerns, which include the development of tailored solutions to address rural crime where appropriate. Actions being delivered include Farm Watch schemes, trailer marking, 4 Tier Security Schemes, CCTV schemes and Neighbourhood Watch Schemes

Fines: Imprisonment

Ms McGahan asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of people that have been imprisoned for failure to pay fines in Fermanagh and South Tyrone.

(AQW 29995/11-15)

Mr Ford: The number of people who have been imprisoned for failure to pay fines with addresses in Fermanagh and South Tyrone for the last three years is set out in the table below.

51	76	8

Legal Highs: Discussions

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Justice what discussions he has had with the PSNI to determine the prevalence of the use of legal highs.

(AQW 29996/11-15)

Mr Ford: Department of Justice officials have regular discussions with the PSNI and a range of other partner organisations regarding the prevalence of new psychoactive substances, inappropriately known as legal highs. Official surveys on illicit drug prevalence now include questions on such substances in order to gain a greater understanding of the extent of use.

The Department of Justice, DHSSPS, the PSNI, and the Public Health Agency have developed and introduced an informal early warning system – known as the “Drug and Alcohol Monitoring and Information System” (DAMIS) – which seeks to identify new substances or drug trends at an early stage, and provide information and advice to key stakeholders.

Legal Highs: Criminalisation

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the criminalisation of the sale and distribution of legal highs.

(AQW 29997/11-15)

Mr Ford: The term “legal highs” can be misleading, and we therefore refer to them as New Psychoactive Substances. While these substances have psychoactive effects they are not currently covered by the UK-wide Misuse of Drugs Act 1971. The legislation associated with the misuse of drugs in Northern Ireland is a reserved matter for Westminster.

In December 2013, in response to the growing concern regarding the adequacy of existing legislation to respond to the challenge presented by new psychoactive substances, the Home Office announced that it would lead a review looking at how the legislative response can be enhanced to maximise its impact and improve the enforcement response. It is anticipated that this review, together with recommendations will be completed by Spring 2014.

It is vitally important that there is a consistent and uniform response to this issue and as the outcome of this review is awaited, my Department continues to engage with key stakeholders to respond to this issue.

Most recently, you may be aware that Environmental Health Officers from Belfast City Council, supported by the PSNI, have pro-actively utilised the General Product Safety Regulations 2005 in responding locally to this issue and I understand that a Court case is currently being progressed.

Animal Welfare

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice to detail the current sentencing guidelines in cases of animal welfare offences.

(AQW 30024/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Lord Chief Justice, in his Programme of Action on sentencing, is enhancing the structures by which the Judiciary ensure consistent and appropriate sentences. Under this Programme, sentencing guidelines for a number of animal welfare offences heard in the Magistrates Courts have been developed. These are published on the Judicial Studies Board website (www.jsbni.com/Publications/sentencing-guides-magistrates-court).

Ticket Touting: Legislation

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Justice whether legislation exists to prevent ticket touting.

(AQW 30074/11-15)

Mr Ford: Ticket touting legislation only exists or previously existed in Northern Ireland by way of legislation from other parts of the United Kingdom law, and only in respect of certain national and international sporting events. Ticket touting is currently illegal in respect of the upcoming Commonwealth Games under section 17 of the Glasgow Commonwealth Games Act 2008.

It was also previously illegal under section 31 of the London Olympic and Paralympic Games Act 2006 though that ceased to have effect once the Games finished.

Chief Constable: Criteria

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Justice to outline why he chose to amend the criteria for the post of Chief Constable. (AQW 30320/11-15)

Mr Ford: In May 2013 the Policing Board wrote to the Department identifying a number of issues relating to the current criteria which they wanted the Minister of Justice to consider.

Following the request from the Policing Board, and given that reforms in these areas had been made in England and Wales in recent years, I initiated consultation at the Police Advisory Board – which includes the Policing Board, the PSNI and Staff Association. I also sought views on the matter from the Justice Committee and the Equality Commission.

The focus of responses largely centred on the criterion relating to the mandatory requirement for 2 years service outside of the current force. It was also suggested that there may be some equality issues in preventing some senior officers from applying for a post they may otherwise be eminently suitable for on the basis that they have not served elsewhere for two years. The Equality Commission suggested that this requirement may be indirectly discriminatory against women, those with dependents, and those with a disability unless it could be objectively justified as an essential requirement for the post.

A draft of my Determination has been issued to Police Advisory Board members for any further representations which I will then consider.

Prisons: Women's Facility

Ms Boyle asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the plans for a purpose built women's prison. (AQO 5401/11-15)

Mr Ford: As I informed the Assembly on 21 October 2013, I remain committed to having a separate prison for women. However, that will not happen in the near future. My intention is to develop a new, separate facility for women offenders combining both custodial provision for those women requiring secure custody and facilities for those women for whom a community based approach is more appropriate.

NIPS Officials are currently progressing a business case for a purpose built facility for women that will be subject to Department of Finance and Personnel scrutiny. However, the current planning assumption is that the development of a new women's facility will fall into the next Budget period. Therefore funding will be determined as part of the Executive's next Budget process.

I am pleased to advise that NIPS officials are in the process of finalising a business case for the development of a step-down facility for women on the Hydebank Wood site for women prisoners nearing the end of their sentence and getting ready to return into the community. I am also pleased to inform the House that work on the upgrade of Ash House infill commenced recently, to provide a range of additional educational, training and support services for female prisoners with a planned completion date of summer this year.

Flag Protests: Costs

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Justice how much the flag protests and civil unrest have cost his Department to date. (AQO 5402/11-15)

Mr Ford: The flag protests and civil unrest have placed, and continue to place, a financial, and indeed a more general, burden or cost on many different sectors.

The estimated cost to PSNI incurred in policing flag protests and related civil unrest from 3 December 2012 to 31 March 2013 is £21.9m (this includes opportunity costs, in other words duty time, of £9.7m). There is also the ongoing cost to police the protest at Twaddell which until 31 December 2013 stands at £5.45m (this includes opportunity costs of £1.6m). These costs impact significantly on the PSNI's ability to undertake other work on behalf of the community.

In terms of the cost to my Department, there are a number of costs which have been incurred in processing and detaining individuals through the court and prison system. These include court time, remand costs and the additional costs associated with those individuals sent to prison. However identifying these costs could only be achieved at a disproportionate cost to the public purse. Other costs would include the cost to the legal aid budget. Given that nearly 400 people have been charged in connection with the protests and associated disorder the cost will be significant.

Compensation Services has advised that they have paid in the region of £250,000, to date, in terms of criminal damage claims associated with the flags protests. This sum is expected to increase as further claims are resolved.

There are also wider costs to local businesses, especially in Belfast, where uncertainty around protests have impacted heavily, particularly in the run up to Christmas 2012. Images of the flags protests and associated disorder were seen across the United Kingdom and Ireland and further afield. The reputational damage that such scenes can cause, the related impact to the economy should not be underestimated.

But the greatest cost of all is arguably to our community. As I have said before, everyone has the right to protest peacefully but there can be no excuse for the scenes of violence we have witnessed. The vast majority of the community are committed to democracy and the rule of law and it is essential that we continue to work together to tackle underlying issues and build a truly shared society for all.

Legal Aid: Savings

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Justice to outline the savings that have arisen from the reduction in criminal legal aid fees since its introduction in 2011.

(AQO 5403/11-15)

Mr Ford: Since devolution, my Department has implemented a comprehensive programme of criminal legal aid reform. Changes to Crown Court fees introduced in June 2011 will deliver £18.3m in annual savings, while changes to legal aid funding for representation in the Crown Court introduced in 2012 will deliver a further £1.5m in annual savings.

Due to the length of time required for old cases to work through the system, these savings will not be fully realised until 2015-16.

Driving Offences: West Belfast

Mr Sheehan asked the Minister of Justice what actions arose from the multi-agency discussions following the recent incidents of 'death driving' by young people in West Belfast.

(AQO 5405/11-15)

Mr Ford: A number of Criminal Justice Agencies, including the PSNI, the Probation Board and the Youth Justice Agency, met with community organisations and local representatives on 6 January 2014 and again on 20 January to discuss the disturbing events that occurred on the Falls Road on New Years Eve.

I welcome the involvement and commitment of all those who took part in these multi-agency discussions and would assure the member that my Department remains committed to tackling car crime across Northern Ireland.

In terms of outcomes, the Agencies represented are committed to work in partnership with the local community as they implement a range of operational measures focused on prevention and detection.

For example I can advise that the Department of Justice is a partner in an inter-agency project, led by Belfast City Council that aims to build relationships and reach out to disengaged youth in the Lower Falls Area who may be engaged in car crime and anti-social behaviour. The Department has contributed £25,000 to the project.

Rural Crime: Sentencing Guidelines

Mr Irwin asked the Minister of Justice, in light of the upsurge in livestock and agricultural machinery theft, particularly in the Newry and Armagh constituency, whether he has any plans to review the sentencing guidelines for people convicted of these crimes.

(AQO 5406/11-15)

Mr Ford: The legislation governing these crimes (Theft (Northern Ireland) Act 1969) already provides significant deterrent penalties. Anyone convicted of theft is liable, on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment of up to 10 years. Indeed, certain specified offences can attract a public protection sentence under which an offender is liable to imprisonment for an indeterminate or extended period, with future release determined by the Parole Commissioners.

Sentencing within this legislative framework is a matter for the judiciary and it is important that the independence of the judiciary is maintained. In making these decisions, judges take into account the law, sentencing guidelines, and all the relevant circumstances in each case. I realise that sometimes the sentence handed down in an individual case can fall short of victim and public expectations. That is why I have been working with the Lord Chief Justice on issues of transparency and consistency of sentencing.

Under his Programme of Action, the Lord Chief Justice established a Sentencing Group to enhance the guidance available to the judiciary, through oversight of the development and publication of sentencing guidelines. Guidelines for theft and burglary offences heard in the Magistrates Courts have been developed and are published on the internet, as are the various guideline judgments for theft and burglary offences heard in the Crown Court.

Legal Aid: Reform

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice for an update on his proposals to reform legal aid.

(AQO 5407/11-15)

Mr Ford: The strategic objectives for my proposals to reform legal aid are:

- To improve access to justice;
- To bring legal aid expenditure within budget; and
- To improve governance and accountability for expenditure of public money.

The current proposals for reform of legal aid are about ensuring that the people who need help receive levels of advice and representation that are appropriate, but this needs to be affordable.

Since launching my Departmental Action Plan in July 2012, I have completed significant reforms in relation to Criminal Legal Aid which are yielding significant savings in the region of £20million per year. A further reform to Crown Court Fees has been subject to consultation and may yield further saving of up to £5.6million. In addition my Department has undertaken consultations of proposals for reforms to publicly funded legal Representation in the Civil and Family Courts, changes to Financial Eligibility for Civil and Criminal Legal Aid and proposals to introduce standard fees in the Civil Courts. It is envisaged that these reforms may save up to a further £18million per year. All of these projects will contribute to my strategic objective of bringing legal aid expenditure within budget.

In line with the recommendation in the Access to Justice Review, I have also consulted on the status of the Legal Services Commission. I will shortly introduce legislation to the Assembly to close the Commission and to transfer its functions to an Agency of the Department of Justice.

Prisons: Annual Reports

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 29154/11-15, why the Annual Reports of the Independent Monitoring Boards for Maghaberry, Magilligan and Hydebank Wood Prison and Young Offenders Centre were only published electronically.

(AQO 5408/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Annual Reports of the Independent Monitoring Boards (IMB) have been published only in electronic form since 2010. Hard copies are available on request from the IMB Secretariat.

Domestic Violence: Public Awareness

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Justice what steps can be taken to increase public awareness of the campaign against domestic violence.

(AQO 5409/11-15)

Mr Ford: My Department is fully committed to raising awareness of domestic violence and recently endorsed the PSNI Crimestoppers campaign – “Behind Closed Doors.” The focus of this campaign was to encourage family, friends and neighbours to report in confidence incidents of domestic violence and abuse known to them.

Domestic violence is an unacceptable crime and members should be aware that the Health Minister and I launched a consultation exercise on a new joint domestic and sexual violence and abuse strategy on 15 January. That consultation exercise will run until 11 April and I look forward to receiving the views of the community and especially any comments that victims or their families may wish to make.

The “Prevention and Early Intervention” strand of the draft strategy clearly identifies the need to raise awareness and promote zero tolerance to such violence.

Department for Regional Development

Translink: Top 20 Bus and/or Rail Stations

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the top twenty bus and/or rail stations in order of the number of passengers using them.

(AQW 29406/11-15)

Mr Kennedy (The Minister for Regional Development): Translink officials have advised me that the top twenty bus and/or rail stations in order of the number of passengers using them are as per the table below:

Station	Passenger Flows 2012/13	NIR / Ulsterbus
Europa / Great Victoria Street Bus & Rail Station *	8,416,333	Ulsterbus & NIR
Bangor Bus & Rail Station *	2,997,637	Ulsterbus & NIR

Dungannon Bus Station	549,750	Ulsterbus
Antrim Bus & Rail Station *	531,583	Ulsterbus & NIR
Newcastle Bus Station	506,700	Ulsterbus

Note: The figures for bus and rail stations represent flows rather than passenger journeys. Bus and rail stations located on the same site are added together.

It is important to say that comparing bus and rail station flows is very difficult because of the bus stop network used by large numbers of people.

Street Lighting: Cost

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 29426/11-15, to detail the cost of electricity used for street lighting in each district, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 29534/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department pays for street lighting electricity for all of Northern Ireland through a single monthly invoice. It is not possible to accurately apportion expenditure by Council district, however, the table below provides details of expenditure on street lighting electricity across Northern Ireland, in each of the last five years:

2008 - 09 £'000	2009 - 10 £'000	2010 - 11 £'000	2011 - 12 £'000	2012 - 13 £'000
11,107	8,083	9,536	10,199	10,323

Parking: Residents' Schemes

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister for Regional Development to provide an update on the introduction of legislation regarding Residents' Parking Schemes.

(AQW 29679/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department is currently developing a number of residents' parking schemes.

Within the Greater Belfast area, Roads Service officials are giving priority to schemes in the Lower Malone and Rugby Road/College Park Avenue areas of Belfast, both of which are well advanced in terms of design and consultation. Formal consultation on the proposals is scheduled to take place in Spring 2014.

Informal consultation is also currently underway to determine if residents' parking proposals for the Donegall Pass and Sandy Row areas have broad local support.

Officials are also drafting the necessary subordinate legislation for the provision of residents' parking schemes in Massereene Street and Clarke Court in Antrim, as well as for the Bogside area of Londonderry, with the aim of introducing these schemes in 2014.

Greencastle Pier Road, Kilkeel: Repairs

Mr Wells asked the Minister for Regional Development what action is being taken to repair the damage caused by recent storms to the Greencastle Pier Road, Kilkeel.

(AQW 29681/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: A 30 metre section of the Greencastle Pier Road was damaged during the recent storms and my Department hopes to complete these repairs within the coming weeks, subject to a positive outcome to consultation with officials from the Loughs Agency.

Parking: Residents' Schemes, Derry City Council Area

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 29139/11-15, to detail the areas considered suitable for the introduction of residents' parking schemes in the Derry City Council area.

(AQW 29730/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: In October 2007, surveys were undertaken in seven Derry City Council areas: Northland 1, Northland 2, Clarendon Area, Rossville Street Area, City Centre South, Waterside 1 and Waterside 2, to determine their suitability for residents' parking schemes. The extent of non-resident parking was considered sufficient to justify the implementation of residents' parking schemes in four of the areas: Rossville Street, City Centre South, Clarendon and Northland 2.

Should the Member require further information, he should contact Mr Sean Mullan (Tel: 028 71321648), Roads Service Section Office, 1 Crescent Road, Londonderry, BT47 2NQ.

Baranailt Road, Claudy: Water Mains

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Regional Development how many homes at Baranailt Road, Claudy have had mains water tested for impurities in 2013, and of these, how many tests showed excessive amounts of (i) iron; and (ii) magnesium.

(AQW 29731/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that during 2013 it collected and analysed 34 water samples from nine properties in the Baranailt Road area of Claudy. Of these samples, 23 had iron levels that exceeded the regulatory standard and none had magnesium exceedances.

In order to improve the quality of the water supply in the Baranailt Road area, NIW has appointed a contractor to replace the section of the distribution main serving the affected properties. Work commenced on 18 January 2014 and is expected to be completed within a month. In the interim, the customers will be supplied through a stringer pipe which should produce an immediate improvement in water quality.

Taxis: Specified Public Service Ranks

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Regional Development whether all Specified Public Service Taxi Ranks are open for the purposes of collecting and leaving fares by all licensed taxi operators.

(AQW 29732/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Not all taxi ranks are open to all licensed taxi operators for the purpose of collecting and leaving fares. Taxi ranks are provided as a service whereby an intending passenger makes their way to the nearest taxi rank and takes the next available taxi.

As you may be aware, there are different types of taxi which are licensed to operate in different ways, and not all taxis are permitted to pick up fares at taxi ranks. Private hire taxis, for example, under the terms of their licence, need either to be pre-booked or accessed from a dedicated taxi depot, whereas public hire taxis are permitted to pick up fares at taxi ranks.

The Department of the Environment has responsibility for taxi licensing.

Taxis: Specified Public Service Ranks

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail all the Specified Public Service Taxi Ranks in (i) Londonderry; (ii) Limavady; and (iii) Strabane.

(AQW 29733/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Whilst there are no Specified Public Service Taxi Ranks in Limavady, details of the locations of those in Londonderry and Strabane are set out in the table below:

Town/City	Location of taxi ranks
Londonderry	William Street Foyle Street Market Street Sackville Street
Strabane	Abercorn Square Main Street

Taxis: Specified Public Service Ranks

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he is considering any legislative or administrative changes to the number or use of Specified Public Service Taxi Ranks in the next twelve months.

(AQW 29734/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Member will be aware that the Department of the Environment is currently carrying out a review of taxi licensing legislation including taxi accessibility and charging issues. Early discussions between officials in my Department's Roads Service and licensing officials have highlighted that the new arrangements may stipulate that only accessible taxis will be permitted to use on-street taxi ranks.

Regarding changes to the numbers of taxi ranks, officials in my Department's Roads Service are currently progressing proposals with a view to providing two additional public hire taxi ranks in Belfast; one in Botanic Avenue, close to the railway station, that will provide five spaces and another in High Street, close to the Hi Park Shopping Centre, that will provide three spaces. There is a legislative process to be completed before these ranks are confirmed, which is open to challenge from individuals/groups opposed to the creation of additional taxi ranks.

Officials are presently discussing a range of taxi-related matters with representatives of the public hire taxi industry, including a request for a change to the taxi rank in Donegall Square North, Belfast. Agreement on a potential revised layout has not yet been reached.

You may be aware that a taxi-bus service operates along some specified routes within Belfast. Officials are also considering a request for locations for taxi-bus services to operate from in both Bridge Street and North Street.

There are also plans to amend the existing taxi ranks at Merchants Quay, Newry and Main Street, Newcastle. The former is being removed as it has been under utilised over the last 10 years. In respect of the latter, it is proposed to reduce the three existing taxi rank spaces to two and replace the other with a new accessibility bay for Blue Badge holders. These matters are currently with Departmental Solicitor's Office for consideration and are likely to be formally advertised within the next 12 months.

Ballygorian Road, Hilltown: Water Mains

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister for Regional Development pursuant, to AQW 23965/11-15, to detail (i) the reasons for delaying the commencement date for the water mains extension on the Ballygorian Road, Hilltown; and (ii) the timescale for when work will commence and conclude.

(AQW 29737/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that commencement of the project to extend the water mains on Ballygorian Road was delayed as a result of Roads Service placing restrictions on the proposed road closure. Roads Service has a 6 week closure on the B8 Newry Road, Hilltown for resurfacing works. The scheme commenced on 13 January and is scheduled to be completed by Mid-February. The diversion route for the NIW scheme would conflict with the diversion route for the B8 resurfacing scheme, therefore it was not possible to facilitate both schemes at the same time.

NIW's project is now scheduled to commence in Mid-February and take approximately 4 weeks to complete.

Moirra Train Station

Mrs Hale asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he has any plans to upgrade Moirra Train Station, given the investment in other train stations such as Antrim, Bangor and Coleraine.

(AQW 29751/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Moirra Station is listed as a heritage building which means that there are limitations to improvement in relation to the general configuration of the premises.

Translink will shortly be starting the construction of a footbridge across the station to join the platforms. Works should be completed in the summer of 2014.

Translink is also exploring the potential for Park and Ride capacity. These investigations are at feasibility study stage and it is likely that any project arising from the study could be completed within 3 years assuming land, planning permission and funding can be obtained.

Translink is actively considering the possibility of a further shelter on the platform. A feasibility study will be undertaken.

It should be noted that in recent years there has been significant investment to make improvements to the station. Park & Ride facilities have been increased and platforms were extended to accommodate the introduction of the new Class 3000 trains.

The station was also included in the network-wide work to comply with Disability Discrimination legislation and to complement the introduction of new trains as part of Translink's New Rail Vision which provided improved station facilities and accessibility features for passengers.

Kirkistown Primary School, Cloughey: Speed Limit

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the progress on the review of the 40mph speed limit at Kirkistown Primary School and the play park in Cloughey village, Strangford.

(AQW 29764/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: A review of the speed limits within Cloughey Village, following consideration of all the relevant factors in conjunction with the PSNI, indicates the current 40mph speed limit remains appropriate.

However, I can confirm that the existing flashing school warning signs are to be upgraded on both approaches to the school and this work should be completed before the end of March 2014. These measures will further enhance the school's presence and heighten driver awareness.

Tamnaghmore Road, Toome: Water Pipe

Mr Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development, in relation to the Tamnaghmore Road, Toome, to detail (i) the number of times the water pipe has been replaced in the last three years including the cost; and (ii) whether he plans to replace the current pipe; and if so, when.

(AQW 29777/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that (i) the water main on Tamnaghmore Road, Toome has been repaired on four occasions during the past three years at a cost of approximately £1,000. (ii) NIW has no immediate plans to replace this water main but it will be considered for inclusion in the PC15 programme which covers the period April 2015 to March 2021.

Public Hire Vehicles

Mr McCallister asked the Minister for Regional Development what flexibility his officials have to allow public hire vehicles to establish ad-hoc ranks during peak times or at major events.

(AQW 29786/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department is required to make a legislative order to establish any mandatory and enforceable rank for public hire vehicles. As the legislation does not provide for temporary or ad-hoc ranks, there is no flexibility to allow the establishment of such ranks for public hire vehicles.

However, my Department has on occasion allowed the temporary relocation of existing ranks to facilitate road-works, and indeed other building works, or for events, although this can only take place with the co-operation of the PSNI. As these ranks are only advisory and cannot be legally enforced, other vehicles may park in them, which can generate complaints, especially from private hire taxi operators.

Roads Service Car Parks: Fires

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 28295/11-15, what action he will take to ensure that no further fires are lit in Roads Service car parks.

(AQW 29823/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: As I stated in my previous response, I do not support or condone the unauthorised use of my Department's land or property for anything other than its intended use. If permission had been sought to use the car park for this purpose, it would have been refused.

As with other unauthorised activities which it encounters, my Department must fully consider the possible consequences of taking action. For example, in the case of the removal of flags or posters this is generally done in conjunction with the PSNI after consultation and negotiation with local community representatives. My Department is not generally perceived to be best placed to lead on such consultations, but provides appropriate support and technical assistance when requested. I consider a similar approach is warranted in this situation, however, I have asked my officials to write to the organisers of this event to advise them of their legal responsibilities in this regard.

Road Safety

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Regional Development what consideration has been given to installing cat's eyes on dangerous stretches of road and corners where there may not be the traffic volumes to meet the policy, but road safety could be improved at that section of the road.

(AQW 29824/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Roads Service policy allows for the installation of reflective road studs in exceptional circumstances, in support of centre and lane markings on any road prone to fog or mist, or where poor alignment exists regardless of traffic volumes.

During the development of the Northern Ireland Road Safety Strategy to 2020, it was recognised that improved driver information would make a positive contribution to road safety, especially at night time on rural roads. A number of action measures were developed to help address this issue. One of these measures was to improve edge and junction visibility on rural roads, through use of a combination of reflective bollards and studs, using advances in reflective technology products.

Work is underway to implement this and other associated action measures at selected sites.

Electric Cars: Parking Bays

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of e-car parking bays which his Department has yet to paint green, in order to prevent them being used as parking spaces by other drivers, including the timescale for when this work will be completed.

(AQW 29830/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The ecar Project Team is surveying the parking bays at each of the charge points to note the exact location, the condition of surface, and any additional whitelining or signage that may be required.

Once the survey has been completed the bays will be painted as soon as possible with work to be completed by 31 March 2014. My Department has not painted any of the bays to date.

Agreement from property owners will be required for charge points located on private property.

Roads: Gritting

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the provisions in place should residents wish to grit the minor roads in their own locality.

(AQW 29831/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Whilst the Roads Service winter service policy targets the majority of the available resources on the busier main through routes, it also provides for the provision of salt bins or grit piles for use by the public, on a self-help basis, on other routes that do not qualify for inclusion in the salting schedule. As a result, residents have access to grit should they wish to treat the minor roads in their own locality.

Approximately 4,800 salt bins and almost 50,000 grit piles are currently provided on Northern Ireland's minor roads with replenishment carried out on an ongoing basis during cold spells.

Door-2-Door Transport Service

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister for Regional Development whether his Department repocured the Door-2-Door Transport Service following his decision to put in place an interim service managed by Disability Action from 1 April 2013.

(AQW 29835/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Currently my Department is undertaking an evaluation of the transport policies and schemes initiated by the Department to promote social inclusion. The outcome of the evaluation will assist my Department to develop proposals to meet the transport needs of elderly and disabled people across Northern Ireland. At this time it is planned to maintain an interim scheme (The Disability Action Transport Scheme) with Disability Action.

Door-2-Door Transport Service

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the current days and times the Door-2-Door Transport Service is available.

(AQW 29836/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Door-2-Door scheme ended on 31 March 2013.

The interim Disability Action Transport Scheme, operated by Disability Action since 01 April 2013 is available from 7.30am until 11.30pm daily Monday to Saturday and from 8.00am until 8.00pm on Sunday. On Public Holidays the service will run as follows:

New Year's Day	No Service
17th March	9.00am - 5.00pm Service
Easter Monday	9.00am - 5.00pm Service
Easter Tuesday	9.00am - 5.00pm Service
May Day (1st Monday in May)	9.00am - 5.00pm Service
May Bank Holiday (last Monday in May)	9.00am - 5.00pm Service
12th July	No Service
13th July	No Service
August Bank Holiday (last Monday in August)	9.00am - 5.00pm Service
Christmas Day	No Service
Boxing Day	No Service

Door-2-Door Transport Service

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the hourly wage of drivers employed by the Door-2-Door Transport Service.

(AQW 29837/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Door-2-Door scheme ended on 31 March 2013.

An interim scheme, the Disability Action Transport Scheme (DATS) is being provided by Disability Action. The issue of wages or hourly rates is an operational matter for Disability Action who believe the actual rates of pay is commercially sensitive information.

Disability Action has however advised me that the drivers who transferred from Moneymore Coaches (in administration), previously Chambers Coach Hire Limited did so under TUPE arrangements and that the rate of pay they now receive is greater than what they received previously.

Door-2-Door Transport Service

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the hourly wage of drivers employed by the Door-2-Door Transport Service, when it was operated by Moneymore Coaches.

(AQW 29838/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: This information is not available as it is not held by my Department.

The issue of wages and hourly rates was an operational matter for Moneymore Coaches (in administration) previously Chambers Coach Hire Limited. The Door-2-Door scheme ended on 31 March 2013 and I understand that the administration was formally closed in October 2013.

Door-2-Door Transport Service

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the days and times the Door-2-Door Transport Service was available when operated by Moneymore Coaches.

(AQW 29839/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The days and times for the Door-2-Door Transport scheme when it was operated by Moneymore Coaches (in administration) were:

- Monday to Sunday, 7.30am to 11.30pm

The service did not operate on New Year's Day, 12th and 13th July, Christmas Day and Boxing Day. A reduced service (9am to 5pm) operated on other Bank and Public Holidays, Christmas Eve and the days between Boxing Day and New Year's Day

Taxis, Belfast: Annual Budget

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the current annual budget for Belfast Public Hire Taxi Ranks.

(AQW 29854/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department does not have a separate budget set aside and does not monitor expenditure specifically in relation to Belfast Public Hire Taxi Ranks. Any works considered necessary are catered for within the normal traffic management or maintenance allocations.

Cycling: Departmental Unit

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the proposed frequency of meetings of the departmental cycling unit.

(AQW 29855/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Cycling Unit is a work group within my Department which is developing an ongoing programme of work as it aims to ensure that cycling provision is a key element in both transport strategy and delivery. Staff within the Cycling Unit meet internally on a daily and ongoing basis and have met with various other stakeholders since the creation of the Unit in November 2013.

The Cycling Unit looks forward to meeting with the Committee for Regional Development and the All Party Group on Cycling in due course.

Cycling: Departmental Unit

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development who will be responsible for organising meetings of the departmental cycling unit.

(AQW 29856/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Cycling Unit is a work group within my Department which is developing an ongoing programme of work as it aims to ensure that cycling provision is a key element in both transport strategy and delivery. Staff within the Cycling Unit meet internally on a daily and ongoing basis. In addition, the Cycling Unit will both organise meetings with other bodies and attend meetings organised by them. The Unit has arranged to meet with the Committee for Regional Development and looks forward to meeting with the All Party Group on cycling at its invitation.

The Cycling Unit has also had meetings with Belfast City Council staff, Government Departments, Sustrans and various other stakeholders and groups interested in cycling and walking as a means of sustainable transport.

Moirs Train Station

Mrs Hale asked the Minister for Regional Development whether there are plans to repair or upgrade the pavements surrounding the Moira Train Station.

(AQW 29861/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can confirm Translink is exploring the potential for Park and Ride capacity at the station. These investigations are at feasibility study stage and it is likely any project arising from the study could be completed within 3 years assuming land, planning permission and funding can be obtained. Subject to the outcome of Translink's study, my Department's Roads Service will review the current footway provision in this area to ensure appropriate facilities are provided.

Translink has provided overspill parking at the nearby 'Tannery' to offer customers safe and secure parking.

Moirs Train Station

Mrs Hale asked the Minister for Regional Development whether there are any plans to increase the size of the car park at Moira Train Station to meet the demand placed on the facility by daily commuters.

(AQW 29862/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink is investigating a number of sites around Moira station to provide additional Park and Ride capacity. These investigations are at early feasibility study stage and it is likely that any project arising from the study would be completed within 3 years assuming land, planning permission and funding can be obtained.

Translink has provided overspill parking at the nearby 'Tannery' to offer customers safe and secure parking.

Moirs Train Station

Mrs Hale asked the Minister for Regional Development whether consideration has been given to health and safety issues in relation to commuters parking their vehicles on the roadside adjacent to Moira Train Station.

(AQW 29863/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can advise the Member that, whilst officials in my Department are aware that some drivers park their cars partially on the footpath at this location, as they do at many other locations, no specific safety issue has been highlighted.

I can confirm Translink is exploring the potential for Park and Ride capacity at the station. These investigations are at feasibility study stage and it is likely any project arising from the study could be completed within 3 years assuming land, planning permission and funding can be obtained.

Translink has provided overspill parking at the nearby 'Tannery' to offer customers safe and secure parking.

Translink: Newry to Bangor Train Service

Mrs Hale asked the Minister for Regional Development how he plans to deal with the severe overcrowding on the Newry to Bangor train service during peak hours.

(AQW 29864/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised that during peak hours Monday-Friday NI Railways operates 6 trains per hour in both directions between Lisburn-Great Victoria Street and Bangor. Highest passenger loadings are experienced between Lisburn and Belfast between 08:00-08:30 hours and 17:00-17:30 hours. During these times two mornings and one evening train is operated as a 6-carriage unit.

There have been isolated occasions when, as a result of engineering issues, there is a shortage of available trains. In these occasional circumstances a 6-carriage unit is replaced with a 3-carriage unit.

Translink: Newry to Bangor Train Service

Mrs Hale asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he has considered adding additional carriages to the Newry to Bangor train service during peak hours to help meet the demand of daily commuters.

(AQW 29865/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: For normal timetabled services the standard 3-carriage unit is sufficient. For exceptionally heavily loaded services e.g. 07:40 and 08:00 Portadown to Belfast services, NI Railways join two 3-carriage units together to form a 6-carriage train.

All of NI Railways new trains are now in service. They have proved very popular and passenger numbers continue to grow across the network. NI Railways believes it has sufficient trains to meet current demand.

Roads: Weather Conditions

Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Regional Development, in relation to the 12 and 13 January 2014, to detail (i) the methods that were used to ascertain if there would be frost; (ii) the time that resources were deployed to deal with the frost and black ice; (iii) the roads that were gritted, including whether this included the regular road network; and (iv) the number of accidents reported as a result of the road conditions.

(AQW 29876/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I am responding on the basis the Member's question relates to roads within the Upper Bann constituency, which is covered by Roads Service's Southern Division.

My Department utilises specialised Met Office winter service forecast services that advise officials of the likelihood of winter hazards across Northern Ireland. Under these arrangements, the Met Office uses information from weather stations, which are located at 21 strategic locations across Northern Ireland, along with its own Meteorological data to provide specialised winter service forecasts, which are then transmitted to Roads Service Duty Engineers' computers. This data is then assessed along with local information from scouting reports, in certain circumstances, to ascertain the likelihood of ice forming. Officials responsible for the delivery of winter service, monitor Met Office forecasts on a 24 hour basis and respond to the predicted weather forecasts and updates that are received.

On 12/13 January decisions regarding what gritting actions were required for the network were made based on the weather forecast and actual conditions being experienced on the network. Monitoring of actual conditions was carried out using data from remote monitoring stations and from driven inspections by scouts.

During the evening of 12 January and morning of 13 January 2014, Roads Service Southern Division did not salt the roads on the salted network. However, I can confirm that on the morning of 13 January 2014, following reports of frost and ice affecting parts of the roads network, Roads Service carried out selective salting to target roads where difficult driving conditions had been reported. Treatment commenced between 07:00 and 08:30 from various depots across the Division in response to the reports received. Details of the routes treated are set out in the table below.

List of Roads in Southern Division where Responsive Gritting was Carried Out on Morning of Monday 13 January 2014

Depot	Location
Craigavon	Carn Road and Carn roundabout. Dungannon Road from the Birches roundabout into Portadown stopping at the Garvaghy Rd roundabout. Gilford Road, Portadown into Gilford, including the Mullahead roundabout and Moyallon Road. Plantation road from Gilford into Lurgan including Gilford Road, Flush Place roundabout and through the Flush Place junction in direction of Lurgan town stopping the grit just beyond the junction. Church Place, Lurgan (around the church). Goodyear roundabout, Ballynamoney Road and Kilvergan Road, Lurgan.
Armagh	A51 Hamiltonsbawn Road starting from Armagh Depot to the Roundabout at the Armagh Road/ Portadown Road junction in Tandragee. This route includes the following roads: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>■ A51 Hamiltonsbawn Road between Armagh and Hamiltonsbawn;</li> <li>■ A51 Marlacoo Road between Hamiltonsbawn and Marlacoo; and</li> <li>■ A51 Armagh Road between Marlacoo and Tandragee.</li> </ul> Between the Armagh Depot and the Newry Road Roundabout in Armagh then onto A28 between Armagh and Newry at the 5 Ways Roundabout. This route includes the following roads: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>■ A28 Newry Road between Armagh and Markethill; and</li> <li>■ A28 Gosford Road/ Armagh Road between Markethill and Newry.</li> </ul>

Depot	Location
Corbet	A50 Banbridge to Scarva to Poyntzpass to Newry to Rathfriland. Knockgorm to Diamond to Dromara to Ballinahinch to Dromara. A50 to Banbridge to Broken Bridge Road to Milltown Road to Banbridge Town Centre to Old A1 to Outlet to Lurgan Road. A50 to Leitrim to Castlewellan to Moneyslane to Rathfriland to Dromara. B3 Loughbrickland to Poyntzpass to Scarva to Loughbrickland to Banbridge. B10 Banbridge to Rathfriland to Loughbrickland.
Newry	A25 from Newry to Kilcoo via Rathfriland returning B8 Hilltown. A25 Newry to Newtownhamilton Road. B78 Markethill Road. C213 &amp; C214 through Whitecross.
Castlenavan	Comber Road Killyleagh between Killyleagh and Comber. Carrickmannon Road from Ballygowan to Raffery.

With regard to your request for information on the number of accidents reported as a result of road conditions, my Department does not hold this information. This information is held by the PSNI, who may be able to assist you with this query.

Roads: Weather Conditions

Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Regional Development what technology is used to ascertain weather conditions for gritting purposes.
(AQW 29877/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department uses the services of the Met Office to ascertain the weather conditions to inform decision-making in relation to gritting actions. Specialised Met Office winter service forecasts are utilised to inform Roads Service officials of the likelihood of winter hazards across Northern Ireland. Under these arrangements, the Met Office uses information from weather stations located at 21 strategic locations across Northern Ireland, along with its own meteorological data, to provide specialised winter service forecasts which are then transmitted to the Roads Service Duty Engineers' computers.

Roads Service officials take informed decisions based on Met Office forecasting and with the help of latest technology, including ice sensors linked to its weather stations, and thermal mapping of all roads on the salted network.

Ballymena Train Station: Park-and-ride Facilities

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans are in place to increase the capacity of the Park and Ride Scheme at Ballymena Train Station.
(AQW 29886/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Following a Strategic Review of Park & Ride, my Department established a Park & Ride Programme Board which is responsible for prioritising the implementation of Park & Ride and Park & Share projects in line with the Department's strategy.

The Programme Board produced a 'Park & Ride Strategic Delivery Programme 2013-15'. This Programme plans to create at least an additional 1,000 Park & Ride and Park & Share spaces across Northern Ireland. To date over 600 additional spaces have been provided under the Programme. Ballymena Train Station is included in the Programme.

I have liaised with Translink officials who have advised me they are actively assessing how best to provide additional Park & Ride spaces at Ballymena. They need first of all to acquire land required for the project. They are also keen to link the provision of Park and Ride with plans to develop a new bus and rail station at Ballymena. Both projects are within the Translink Corporate Plan for 2014/2015 which assumes the necessary approvals and funding will be secured.

Taxis, Belfast: Ranks

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline his Department's plans to (i) increase; and (ii) modernise the number of Public Hire Taxi Ranks in Belfast.
(AQW 29896/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I would refer the Member to my response to his related question, AQW 29900/11-15.

Taxis: Donegall Square North, Belfast

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development for his assessment of the impact of modernising the Public Hire Taxi Rank in Donegall Square North, Belfast, including the eradication of the current overranking.

(AQW 29897/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Officials in my Department's Roads Service have some concerns over proposals put forward by representatives of the taxi industry for taxi ranks in this area and, to date, agreement on a potential revised layout has not yet been reached. I need to be satisfied that any proposed change can be made without compromising the safety of all road-users, including users of other forms of public transport as well as pedestrians and cyclists.

The matter of over-ranking is perhaps one for the taxi industry to address, as it is just not possible to provide the number of taxi ranks in Donegall Square North that would be needed to accommodate every public hire taxi in Belfast. Officials have only very recently been asked to consider the provision of a feeder rank close to the existing rank in Donegall Square North. Whilst officials have not as yet had time to explore this request, changes could have an impact on existing kerb-side usage, as well as on adjacent businesses and premises.

I would also refer the Member to my response to his related questions, AQW 29899/11-15 and AQW 29900/11-15.

Taxis, Belfast: Ranks

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail how much his Department has spent on Public Hire Taxi Ranks in Belfast, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 29898/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department's Roads Service does not categorise or monitor expenditure specifically in relation to Belfast Public Hire Taxi Ranks.

I would also refer the Member to my response to his related question, AQW 29854/11-15.

Taxis: Donegall Square North, Belfast

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans his Department has to modernise the Public Hire Taxi Rank in Donegall Square North, Belfast.

(AQW 29899/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Officials have some concerns about the proposal put forward by representatives of the taxi industry for taxi ranks in this area and, to date, agreement on a potential revised layout has not yet been reached.

I would also refer the Member to my response to his related question, AQW 29900/11-15.

Taxis, Belfast: Ranks

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on departmental proposals to build new and modernise existing taxi ranks in Belfast, as proposed in 2009-10.

(AQW 29900/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department is presently taking forward proposals to provide two additional public hire taxi ranks in Belfast, one in Botanic Avenue, close to the railway station, that will provide five spaces, and another in High Street, close to the Hi Park Shopping Centre, that will provide three spaces.

These proposed ranks will be subject to a legislative process and will be open to challenge from those opposed to the creation of additional taxi ranks.

I understand that, whilst the proposed rank in High Street has had the support of some representatives of the public hire taxi industry, it does not find favour with other taxi representatives who have proposed alternative facilities in High Street and Bridge Street. Officials will be seeking clarification from the various parties in the coming weeks before deciding on how best to proceed.

Officials are presently discussing a range of taxi-related matters with representatives of the public hire taxi industry, including a request to alter the taxi rank in Donegall Square North and to provide a new feeder rank nearby. Officials have some concerns about the proposals and agreement on a potential revised layout has not yet been reached.

European Charter for Regional or Minority Languages: Report

Mr McMullan asked the Minister for Regional Development, following the publication of a report from the Committee of Experts of the European Charter for Regional and Minority Languages on 15 January 2014 and the findings that there have been delays and obstructions over the provision of bilingual street signs and tourist information, whether his Department will carry out a full investigation to address the report's findings.

(AQW 29914/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Department for Regional Development has no responsibility for the erection of street name plates including bilingual street name plates. City, Borough and District Councils are empowered by Section 11 of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Northern Ireland) Order 1995 to allocate postal numbers to houses and buildings in their districts, and to name any new road or street.

The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure (DCAL) has lead responsibility for co-ordinating responses to the Fourth Evaluation Report from the Committee of Experts of the European Charter for Regional and Minority Languages. My Departmental officials will therefore assist DCAL to address any relevant issues, as required.

Larne Harbour: Passenger Numbers

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development, given the falling number of passengers using Larne Harbour, what action he will take to ensure that the train timetable from Larne Harbour coincides with ferry departure and arrival times to help promote more sustainable and better integrated transport.

(AQW 29917/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: NI Railways operate regular hourly train services between Belfast and Larne, with the majority of trains connecting to/from Larne Harbour. This means every ferry arrival/departure reasonably connects with a train.

The current ferry service operates between Larne Harbour and Cairnryan but there is no direct onward rail connection in Scotland. As a result NI Railways now sell very few boat-rail connections to Great Britain. Nevertheless with an hourly rail service operating all day, all departing/arriving ferries will have a reasonable rail connection within Northern Ireland.

Delivering Social Change: Audiovisual Announcements on Buses

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the status the bid for Delivering Social Change funding to install Audio Visual Announcements on buses that would promote equal access to public transport for blind and partially sighted users.

(AQW 29948/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Following completion of a successful pilot involving the provision of audio visual information systems on a number of Metro buses and at designated bus stops, the Department has continued to explore potential funding for the provision of audio visual systems on the bus network. An application to the OFMdfM Delivering Social Change Signature Project was made in June 2013. The Department is still awaiting the outcome of this application and OFMdfM is unable to confirm when a final decision on the bid will be made.

Roadside Fences: Legislation

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the required height for a fence on agriculture land that is being used as a border for a new by-pass, including the EU regulations that legislate for this.

(AQW 29950/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Requirements associated with the provision of roadside fencing are set out within the Manual of Contract Documents for Highway Works, which is jointly owned by the Highways Agency in England and the overseeing organisations in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Volume one of the manual, Specification for Highway Works, sets out the various standards associated with the design and material specification for a range of fence types.

Overall heights can range from just over one metre for a wooden post and rail fence, to over two metres for a tensioned post and wire fence that is intended to stop deer passing. The type of fence specified depends on a number of factors, including the environment and the purpose the fence is meant to serve.

Speed Limits

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 29155/11-15, to detail the street names and constituencies where these schemes are operating.

(AQW 29968/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Details of the street names and locations of the 20 mph zones implemented during 2011/12 and 2012/13 are shown in the table below:

20mph Zones implemented in 2011/12 and 2012/13

Year	Location
2011/2012	Drumannon Area, Omagh
	Lawnbrook Area, Omagh
	Drumcree Area, Cookstown

Year	Location
	Highfield Area, Magherafelt
	Derramore Avenue, Magherafelt
	Parkmore Area, Magherafelt
	Ashbrook, Strabane;
	Ferndale, Strabane
2012/2013	Castlefin Park, Castlederg
	Churchtown Park, Castlederg
	Crockett Park, Castlederg
	Hawthorn Park, Castlederg
	Hillview, Castlederg
	Young Crescent, Castlederg
	Millbrook Gardens, Castlederg
	Currans Brae, Moy
	Carrowshee Park, Lisnaskea
	Cleenish Park, Enniskillen
2012/2013	Melmount Gardens, Strabane
	Gallows Hill Area, Omagh
	Johnston Park, Omagh
	Kensington, Shandon & Cherryvalley Area, Belfast

In addition one 20 mph zone is proposed for implementation during 2013/14, at the Langley Road Estate, Ballynahinch.

Mullaghboy Road, Bellaghy: Gritting

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development whether the Mullaghboy Road, Bellaghy will be included in the gritting schedule, given the volume of traffic on the road, including traffic related to number of large businesses as well as school buses, and the safety concerns felt by local residents.

(AQW 30051/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I am pleased to confirm that the southern end of Mullaghboy Road, from the centre of Bellaghy to its junction with the Tamlaghduff Road, has been added to the salting schedule this season following an assessment of traffic volumes in the spring of 2013. Beyond that junction, however, traffic volumes are not sufficient to meet the criteria to warrant inclusion in the salting schedule, although there are suitable alternative treated routes available for through traffic.

Parking: Residents' Schemes, Holywood and Bangor

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the proposed residents' parking permit scheme in Holywood and Bangor.

(AQO 5415/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department has received a number of requests for Residents' Parking Schemes in various parts of Northern Ireland.

Specifically in relation to Holywood, officials are currently carrying out an initial assessment of the eligibility of residential streets within the town centre for a Residents' Parking Scheme. Consultants have been engaged and are currently undertaking surveys in a number of streets in the town centre. A summary report will issue at the end of February 2014.

You may be aware the centre of Bangor has been identified as an area of parking restraint and my Department intends to progress Residents' Parking Schemes in some residential areas in due course. However, I regret, I am currently not in a position to indicate a timescale, as this will depend, to some degree, on the successful implementation of the initial schemes being taken forward in Belfast.

Northern Ireland Water: Leadership

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development what measures are in place to sustain the stability of the leadership of Northern Ireland Water.

(AQO 5416/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I am satisfied that the Interim Chief Executive continues to provide effective leadership within Northern Ireland Water with the support of the Executive Team and the Board. My Department monitors closely the performance of Northern Ireland Water on a continuing basis.

A competition to fill the Chief Executive position on a permanent basis has just been launched. The interviews should be completed by the end of March.

Moneymore Bypass

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister for Regional Development what consideration has been given to a bypass for Moneymore.

(AQO 5417/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I am aware that Moneymore is the remaining settlement on the Omagh to M2 east-west trunk route that has yet to feature on any programme for the provision of a bypass. However, in the context of potential future major capital works road projects, I am also aware there are many settlements along the A29 north/south Link Corridor, where traffic congestion is more significant, for example, in Dungannon and Armagh.

At this time, a bypass for Moneymore has not been identified in the Strategic Road Improvement Programme being taken forward under the Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland, as agreed by the Executive.

Roads Service's current Strategic Road Improvement programme is likely to take in excess of 10 years to deliver, subject to funding and the successful completion of the necessary statutory procedures. The next Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland review may provide an opportunity for Roads Service to look at the prioritisation of new schemes. At that time, a bypass for Moneymore may be considered along with other existing and proposed schemes elsewhere in Northern Ireland.

As you are aware, the Executive in June 2013, approved the allocation of £40 million for the construction of the Magherafelt Bypass and I welcome your support for the Magherafelt Bypass scheme, ahead of other potential schemes in Northern Ireland.

Transport: Belfast Hub

Ms McCorley asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the proposals for a Belfast Transport hub.

(AQO 5418/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Belfast Transport hub programme is expected to involve four elements: creating a state of the art multi-modal transport interchange; improvements to bus storage and maintenance facilities; centralization of Translink offices and commercial and regeneration options in the area.

A procurement exercise to appoint an integrated design team to begin work on the Master Plan is currently being undertaken by Translink for the whole site and to then take forward the preferred design solution. Tenders are due for return at the end of January 2014.

Translink has identified an extensive list of stakeholders for the project and is in the process of undertaking initial briefings. Translink is also preparing a Strategic Business Case for the whole programme and working with Strategic Investment Board to identify the most beneficial way to finance the programme.

It is currently projected that site works may begin later in 2016, subject to funding and approvals, with a construction programme running into several years depending on the extent of the agreed redevelopment and the number of works phases required to undertake construction around an operational public facility.

The project has great potential in addressing the growing Public Transport demand, creating opportunities for land development and for creating a gateway to Belfast and Northern Ireland with potential tourism, business and job benefits. It is a great opportunity for community regeneration in the area.

Trans-European Transport Network

Ms McGahan asked the Minister for Regional Development what projects his Department has identified as suitable for funding following the TEN-T Multi-Annual Call in December 2013.

(AQO 5419/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The conditionality of calls is determined by the European Commission; and it follows that each and every call has its own unique characteristics. The challenge facing not only my Department, but every Executive Department is to identify, shape and submit applications for European funding in ways that react those conditionalities and are most likely to lead to successful bids for funds from within a highly competitive arena.

I am sure that my colleagues on the Committee for Regional Development who attended the call information day in Brussels will attest to the levels of interest and degree of competition that was clearly evident at the event.

Since I took the decision to establish a dedicated European Unit in my Department last July, over 15 million pounds of competitive European funds has been awarded for the upgrade to the A8. This success clearly proves that my Department is at the forefront of the Executive's collective efforts to avail of competitive funds and that my Department has the capability to operate effectively on the European stage.

The December call for proposals relates very specifically to studies that lead to the preparation of project portfolios to be implemented in the future. It does not address works.

Given this, I have instructed my officials to prepare an application for funding for a study to identify the means by which a programme of work to develop the Great Victoria Street rail and bus station can be most effectively implemented to create 'The Belfast Hub'. Such a study would be the first step towards the establishment of a fully integrated cross-border mainline train and bus facility which would provide amenities for pedestrians, cyclists, taxis and private car users alike as well as a seamless connection to the Rapid Transit System.

The study will be instrumental in identifying and evaluating options that will deliver sustainable transport outcomes that address accessibility from both passenger and network perspectives, alleviate existing congestion issues and strengthen connections to core networks and corridors.

The closing date for applications is the 11th March, and the formal announcement on financing decisions is likely to be in the Autumn.

Translink: Passenger Numbers

Mr Cree asked the Minister for Regional Development how the number of bus and rail passengers in 2013 compares to 2012. (AQO 5420/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I understand that in the 2013 calendar year there were over 67 million passengers journeys on bus, a small increase on the 2012 calendar year. On rail there were almost 13 million passenger journeys in 2013, an increase of over 1.5 million on the previous year.

Thus in total there were 80 million passenger journeys on Translink in the 2013 calendar year.

This confirms a positive trend on both bus and rail for that period.

Rural Roads: Improvements

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Regional Development what measures Roads Service are taking to improve the condition of rural roads so as to reduce road traffic incidents.

(AQO 5421/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: In order to comply with my Department's duty of care under Article 8 of the Roads (Northern Ireland) Order 1993, which places it under a duty to maintain all public roads in reasonable condition, Roads Service has put in place a set of Maintenance Standards for Safety and an inspection programme to ensure roads have a satisfactory level of skidding resistance, which reduces the risk of uncontrolled skids and improves braking efficiency. These standards are based on best practice, research, and consultation with both the public and other professional bodies and industry, and are designed to ensure a consistent service level and a safe highway, while offering value for money.

The procedures currently in operation establish frequencies for road inspections and specify response times for the repair of defects. Inspection frequencies vary according to the type of road with carriageways carrying low volumes of traffic inspected every 4 months. Response times specified for the repair of defects are dependent upon the severity of the defect and range from one calendar day, to routine inclusion in the next work programme for that particular route.

In addition, following each road traffic collision involving personal injury, my officials receive and analyse accident reports prepared by the PSNI that will highlight the specific circumstances and any contributing factors, which can be treated by engineering measures. Priority is given to those sites where accidents have occurred most frequently, or with the most significant impact, and subject to completion of the necessary statutory procedures, schemes are progressed on the basis of the available budget for such works.

My Department has invested, through a targeted collision remedial programme, approximately £3.5million since I came to office in May 2011, which has made a valuable contribution towards significantly reducing the number of fatal and serious collisions.

In addition over £20 million has now been allocated to roads maintenance as part of the January monitoring round. This additional funding will target structural maintenance on the local road network to help address the significant backlog and reduce the actual resurfacing cycles. It will also provide new drainage, some reconstruction and the resurfacing of around 160 kilometres of road.

This is a welcome boost for the public and the construction industry. Carrying out road improvements sustains hundreds of jobs every year and ensures the travelling public enjoy safer and more enjoyable journeys.

Carrickfergus Waste Water Treatment Works

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for Regional Development what further investment is planned for the Carrickfergus Waste Water Treatment Works.

(AQO 5422/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that a project is currently underway at Carrickfergus Wastewater Treatment Works which will deliver approximately £900k investment in base maintenance in the 2013/14 and 2014/15 financial years. For the subsequent planning period covering 2015 to 2021, NIW has identified a further £2,400k of base maintenance work.

Base maintenance is capital investment and represents like for like replacement of assets rather than increasing works capacity or improving the works to meet changes to environmental standards. Carrickfergus Wastewater Treatment Works is performing satisfactorily and upgrades to increase capacity or improve compliance performance are not currently envisaged.

The base maintenance investment is in addition to the routine planned maintenance which is undertaken by NIW staff directly.

Unadopted Developments

Mr Boylan asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on his Department's progress on unadopted developments.

(AQO 5423/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department continues to make good progress on the adoption of roads and sewers in housing developments. Where possible, this has been achieved by working with developers or other responsible parties to have the new streets completed. When required, my Department has also used enforcement measures and called in guarantee bonds to fund works to bring roads and sewers infrastructure up to adoption standard.

In the twelve months up to 1 September 2013, my Department adopted over 64 kilometres of housing development roads into the public road network. The majority were completed by developers, but enforcement was also used in a number of instances where completion through the normal processes was not possible.

In the same period, officials issued 74 Article 11 enforcement notices, under the Private Streets Order, and 84 developments had their streets completed as a result of successful enforcement actions.

Good progress has also been made in tackling developments, categorised as backlog sites. In the year from 1 April 2012 until 31 March 2013, 297 backlog sites have been completed and adopted.

In summary, significant progress has been made in the adoption of new housing development roads and sewers and I remain committed to making further progress to help resolve the problem of unfinished development roads.

Weather: Funding

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he has sought any additional funding in light of the recent adverse weather conditions.

(AQO 5424/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My officials are currently assessing the damage caused by the recent tidal surge, which affected not only the Ards Peninsula, but other parts of our coastline and adjoining roads.

It could be some time before the full impact is known, necessary repairs completed and the full cost realised. However, I can confirm that remedial works have already begun at some locations and additional preparatory work is underway in advance of the commencement of works at other locations.

As officials are still assessing the extent of the damage caused, specific bids for further funding may be required and will hopefully be considered sympathetically at a later date, if repairs cannot be funded from within existing budgets.

One of the most badly affected locations was Whitechurch Road, Ballywalter, where one lane of the carriageway collapsed from the impact of the tidal surge.

I am pleased to report that work to reinstate the carriageway and provide coastal protection to that section of road is progressing well and has been helped by favourable tides. I am hopeful this work can be completed and the road re-opened to through-traffic sooner than the anticipated 3 month timeframe. However, this will be dependent upon favourable weather conditions and no unforeseen difficulties being encountered. I will be in a better position to advise on this after next week, when work on the beach area should be complete.

I am also pleased my Department received an additional £20 million for roads maintenance as part of the January monitoring round. This additional funding will target structural maintenance on the local road network to help address the significant backlog, and reduce the timeframe for resurfacing works. It will also provide new drainage, some reconstruction and the resurfacing of around 160 kilometres of road.

This is a welcome boost for the public and the construction industry. Carrying out road improvements sustains hundreds of jobs every year and ensures the travelling public enjoy safer and more comfortable journeys.

Department for Social Development

Housing: East Antrim

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for Social Development how many people are waiting to be allocated housing in East Antrim, broken down by estate.

(AQW 29758/11-15)

Mr McCausland (The Minister for Social Development): The information is not available in the format requested as the Housing Executive does not routinely collate information by estate. However, the table below details the number of applicants on the waiting list at 1 January 2014 for the Housing Executive District Office areas that cover the East Antrim constituency by Common Landlord Area.

Benefits: Disability Living Allowance

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development to publish the guidance used by examining medical practitioners to determine eligibility through medical examination for people applying for Disability Living Allowance; and when this guidance was last updated.

(AQW 29779/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The guidance used by Examining Medical Practitioners is owned by the Department for Work and Pensions. The Department for Work and Pensions have not published the guidance. Currently there are no plans to publish the guidance. My Department could not publish the guidance without the approval of the Department for Work and Pensions. The guidance was last updated in February 2013.

Examining Medical Practitioners do not determine eligibility to Disability Living Allowance. It is Decision-Makers in the Social Security Agency who determine entitlement to Disability Living Allowance, based on all available evidence including, where appropriate, information gathered through an Examining Medical Practitioner report.

Benefits: Disability Living Allowance/Employment and Support Allowance

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development whether all Atos Healthcare staff carry out medical examinations of both Disability Living Allowance and Employment and Support Allowance, or are different staff used specifically for each type of benefit examination.

(AQW 29780/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Atos Healthcare allocates their medical resource based on operational requirements. Each healthcare professional may perform different medical assessments across various social security benefit areas. Medical assessments in relation to Disability Living Allowance are currently carried out by doctors only. Medical assessments in relation to Employment and Support Allowance are completed by either a nurse or a doctor. Some medical conditions, mostly central neuropathy conditions, can only be assessed by a doctor.

Armed Forces Liaison Forum

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development whether he plans to establish an Armed Forces Liaison Forum within his Department.

(AQW 29903/11-15)

Mr McCausland: I understand that the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety has established an Armed Forces Liaison Forum to provide a single point of contact with Defence Medical Services and veterans' organisations. This reflects the size and complexity of the organisations providing health and social care services in Northern Ireland as well as the wide range of such services being provided to service and ex-service personnel. Given the more modest scale of Housing Executive and Social Security Agency involvement with service and ex-service personnel, I have no plans to at this point to establish an Armed Forces Liaison Forum within my Department. I will however, keep this situation under review.

Home Heating: Pay-as-you-go Oil Scheme

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on any progress on a pay as you go oil scheme.

(AQW 29904/11-15)

Mr McCausland: My Department undertook a pilot with Kingspan Renewables and Carillion Energy Services for a Pay as You Go for Oil system. The pilot commenced in February 2012 and the participants included Housing Executive tenants, householders who had been assisted through the Warm Homes Scheme and private referrals. The homes were in Dungannon, Coalisland, Newcastle and Camlough. The technology was installed in 17 low income households with the aim of testing the technology and the process. Carillion and the Housing Executive both completed separate evaluations of the pilot. The convenience of using the Pay as You Go for Oil system was highlighted as a major benefit. However, the results of the pilot survey were disappointing regarding the proportion of participants benefiting from lower oil costs. Whilst Departmental economists have serious concerns about the feasibility of the Pay as You Go Oil scheme from a cost/benefit perspective, I have asked officials to continue engagement with Kingspan and Carillion as they develop their proposal for a Pay as You Go oil system.

Social Housing: Allocations

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development, further to his evidence provided to the Northern Ireland Affairs Committee on 24 April 2013 and in light of the academic research commissioned by his Department, to detail (i) what steps are anticipated to assist ex-service personnel in meeting their housing needs; and (ii) how this compares with provision elsewhere in the UK.

(AQW 29905/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The team commissioned by my Department to undertake independent academic research on social housing allocations took a range of stakeholders' views and presented these in their reports, before reaching their independent conclusions on that issue.

In terms of (i) the steps anticipated to assist ex-service personnel in meeting their housing needs, I have not yet taken a view on the academic team's proposals for change. However, following my evidence to the Northern Ireland Affairs Committee, my officials wrote to the Chief Executive of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in October 2013, setting out the Department's expectations as to how the Housing Executive currently deals with applications from members and former members of the Armed Forces. This communication set out the Department's view that the NIHE should give applications from former members of the Armed Forces fair and sympathetic consideration in accordance with the rules of the Housing Selection Scheme, including that:

- Former members of the Armed Forces should have the same priority for housing as others with a similar level of housing need.
- The NIHE should not impose residential qualifications which put applicants who have to vacate military-provided housing at a disadvantage compared with other applicants.
- Persons returning after a number of years to the area in which they lived before joining the Armed Forces should be treated no less sympathetically than any other applicant.

- The Housing Selection Scheme requirement for applicants to have a 'substantial connection' with Northern Ireland and that, to establish such a connection, any period of residence here must have been by the applicant's own choice, must not be interpreted in a way that excludes persons who have been based in Northern Ireland as members of the Armed Forces from applying under the Scheme.
- (ii) Provision elsewhere in the UK varies across the jurisdictions. For example, in Scotland, residence in a local authority area because of service in the Armed Forces does not constitute a local connection for housing purposes. However, guidance issued by the devolved administration in Scotland asks housing authorities to give sympathetic consideration to applications from persons being discharged from the Armed Forces even if they have not established a local connection, as well as to applications from "former wives" of members of the Armed Forces who are required to vacate service accommodation.

In England, The Allocation of Housing (Qualification Criteria for Armed Forces) (England) Regulations 2012 require that local housing authorities do not use "local connection" as a criterion in deciding whether certain descriptions of persons connected to the Armed Forces are qualified to be allocated housing accommodation. The Housing Act 1996 (Additional Preference for Armed Forces) (England) Regulations 2012 require local housing authorities to frame their allocation schemes in such a way that certain descriptions of persons connected to the Armed Forces have additional preference for housing.

Housing Executive: Recruitment

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the (i) number; and (ii) percentage of people described as (a) Protestant; (b) Roman Catholic; and (c) Non determined, who were recruited to the Housing Executive in each year since 2008. (AQW 29922/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The table below details the religious composition of staff recruited to the Housing Executive since 2008.

Year	Total Recruited	Protestant		Roman Catholic		Non Determined
		No.	%	No.	%	No.	%
2008	127	52	40.9	51	40.2	24	18.9
2009	178	60	33.7	95	53.4	23	12.9
2010	98	47	48	40	40.8	11	11.2
2011	114	57	50	37	32.5	20	17.5
2012	69	22	31.9	34	49.3	13	18.8
2013 *	52	16	30.8	26	50	10	19.2

* During 2013 – 220 individuals were transferred to the NIHE under the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 2006 (known as TUPE). An exercise to determine the community backgrounds of these individuals is currently underway as part of the annual monitoring process.

The Information provided in this response is governed by the Principles and Protocols of the Code of Practice for Official Statistics. This is enforced by UK Statistics Authority.

Housing Executive: Response Maintenance Contracts

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development whether the independent Gateway Review into the management of response maintenance contracts has been completed; and if so, with what result. (AQW 29927/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that the independent Gateway Review is scheduled to take place on 1-3 April 2014 and any recommendations from the review will be available two or three weeks thereafter.

Housing Executive: Response Maintenance Contracts

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development (i) how many requests for terminations of contracts have been made by contractors in respect of Northern Ireland Housing Executive response maintenance contracts which permit Low Performance Damages; (ii) how many requests were granted; and (iii) to list those granted, including the reason for acceptance. (AQW 29928/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that in relation to (i) three contractors sought termination of their Response Maintenance contracts; (ii) only one of these requests was granted by the Housing Executive; and (iii) the reason for granting termination of the West Belfast Contract was due to the financial position and stability of the contractor (Mel Davison Construction). Several months later the contractor was placed into administration.

Housing Executive: Response Maintenance Contracts

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development, in relation to the current response maintenance contracts, for his assessment of the proportionality that is being applied within the Northern Ireland Housing Executive to the application of Low Performance Damages.

(AQW 29929/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that against the overall expenditure in response maintenance contracts where Low Performance Damages (LPD) can be applied the LPD taken to date represents 0.36% of the spend. The assessment of the LPD is as per the terms of the contract and the level is relatively low compared against the expenditure.

Housing Executive: Dampness

Mr Spratt asked the Minister for Social Development what measures his Department intends to take to treat damp in Housing Executive properties which are programmed for kitchen replacement schemes, in order to prevent damage to new kitchen units.

(AQW 29938/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that where they encounter dampness in their properties which are programmed for kitchen replacement schemes, they generally treat them by either dry lining the walls or utilising the services of specialists by way of an injected Damp Proof Course.

Social Housing: Double Glazing

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Social Development what work will take place in (i) 2013/14; and (ii) 2014/15 on the replacement of double glazing windows in social housing.

(AQW 29952/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that due to the delay in appointing the double glazing and planned schemes contractors there will be no new double glazing installation or replacement schemes started in 2013/14. The double glazing contract has now been awarded and, subject to works starting on site early in the new financial year, the Housing Executive plan to address some 11,000 dwellings in line with the Programme for Government target for double glazing in social housing by March 2015. The Housing Executive's double glazing programme in 2014/15 will be focused on upgrading single glazed and partially double glazed properties up to full double glazing. There may also be a small element of replacement of existing double glazing in External Cyclical Maintenance schemes depending on condition.

Housing Executive: Computers

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Social Development how much the Housing Executive is spending on updating its computers.

(AQW 29967/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that a review which was carried out under its "Technology Refresh Strategy" concluded that a major upgrade of their desktop environment (hardware and software) was required and consequently this was included in their 2013/14 IT Work Programme and their IT budget plan.

The total cost for the upgrade is £2.044m which equates to approximately £680 per desktop. This cost includes hardware, support/maintenance over the five years, software, training, secure data destruction of the legacy hardware and delivery to a local charity.

Housing Executive: Double-glazing Contracts

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Social Development to list the contracts awarded in the current financial year for the installation of double glazing in Housing Executive properties.

(AQW 29970/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that the Double Glazing Framework and the subsequent secondary competitions have now completed and that the following contractors have been successful in the following lots:

Lot 1	Belfast	PK Murphy Construction Ltd.
Lot 2	South	Bann Ltd
Lot 3	North	Dixon Contracts Ltd.

Benefits: Disability Living Allowance

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 29596/11-15, how many cases in each category were decided at appeal after an initial refusal or reduction.

(AQW 30085/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The information is not available in the format requested. The data used in the response to AQW 29596/11-15 related to the outcome of Disability Living Allowance new claims and renewals at the initial decision stage. Any subsequent activity on a claimant's Disability Living Allowance case, such as a more advantageous reconsideration or appeal outcome, is captured separately. The IT system, used to administer Disability Living Allowance, is not configured to associate any subsequent changes in entitlement with the initial outcome decision information at an individual case level.

Fort George Site, Derry

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the development plans for the Fort George site, excluding the North West Regional Science Park.

(AQW 30117/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The agreed regeneration plan for Londonderry – “The One Plan” – states that “the vision for the long term future of Fort George with its close proximity to the Knowledge Corridor is a prestige technology and / or knowledge intensive park. This may include a mix of office, education, research activities together with residential and leisure use”.

My Department's immediate priority is to secure Outline Planning Permission for the Development Framework which will deliver the vision for the site as set out in the One Plan. An anticipated timeframe of 10-15 years to fully develop the site is identified in the Development Framework.

Once Outline Planning Permission is in place the next steps will be to:

- remediate the contamination on the site;
- undertake infrastructure works to improve access to the site and service the developable plots; and
- secure third party interest in developing the plots.

The remediation works are expected to be complete by late 2015 enabling infrastructure works and marketing of the site to then begin. The further development phases planned for the site are:

- a mixed use development on the Riverfront at the Pennyburn Inlet;
- multi storey car park;
- a mixed use development at the Southern portion of the site;
- a mixed use development on the Strand Road frontage; and
- a mixed use development adjacent to the Hibernia building where the Project Kelvin Telehouse is located.

Charitable Status

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the procedure that a commercial enterprise must follow to gain charitable status.

(AQW 30221/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Any organisation wishing to obtain charitable status in Northern Ireland is required to register with the Charity Commission for Northern Ireland. It is for the Commission to determine whether that organisation is or is not a charity.

To register as a charity, an organisation must be established for charitable purposes only and be subject to the law of Northern Ireland. The charitable purposes must be exclusively charitable; an organisation cannot have some purposes that are charitable and some that are not. A charitable purpose must fall within the descriptions of purposes in the Charities Act (Northern Ireland) 2008 and be for the public benefit. Charities may undertake trading or commercial activities but these must contribute directly to the furtherance of their charitable purposes.

Benefits: Christmas Bonus

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Social Development (i) how many of those eligible people have still to receive the £10 Christmas bonus with their benefits for December 2013; (ii) how many have received the payment; and (iii) to detail the reasons for the delay of these payments.

(AQW 30243/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Social Security Agency uses IT systems from the Department for Work and Pensions to administer benefits in Northern Ireland. In virtually all cases where the claimant is eligible to the £10 Christmas Bonus, it is paid automatically through these systems in December each year. Procedures are also in place to identify and pay eligible claimants whose cases are maintained clerically. A very small number of claimants who qualify because they receive Employment Support Allowance (Contribution Based) may not have received their payment automatically this year. DWP are still investigating the cause of this. All other Christmas Bonus payments were paid as normal and at the end of December 2013, 482,700 people in Northern Ireland had received the payment. If a claimant thinks they should qualify for the payment but has not received it, they can contact the Northern Ireland Pension Centre or the relevant local Social Security/Jobs and Benefits office.

Northern Ireland Assembly Commission

Assembly Proceedings: Live Broadcasts

Mr Flanagan asked the Assembly Commission to detail any plans it has to stream live broadcasts of Assembly Proceedings to iPhones and iPads.

(AQW 29874/11-15)

Mrs Cochrane (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): A business case has been developed to procure a new internet video streaming service that will address the issue of smartphone and tablet compatibility so that the Assembly's video and/or audio streams can be made accessible on a wider range of devices and platforms (including iPhones and iPads). The new service will also increase the number of available feeds from two to three simultaneous live streams capable of carrying video and/or audio.

It is planned that the new service will be in place for the 2014/2015 session. Members will be advised via All Party Notice once the new service is available.

Written Answers to Questions

Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister

North/South Bodies: Cost

Mr Nesbitt asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline the total cost of each of the North South bodies in each year since 2007.

(AQW 26079/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness (The First Minister and deputy First Minister): The total cost of the North South Bodies to the Executive since 2007 is as follows:

	Tourism Ireland (£000s)	InterTrade Ireland (£000s)	Loughs Agency (£000s)	SEUPB (£000s)	SafeFood (£000s)	Language Body (£000s)	Waterways (£000s)
2007/08	14,538	3,436	2,647	1,251	2,019	5,590	8,204
2008/09	15,502	3,314	2,504	1,293	2,012	6,514	7,323
2009/10	15,732	3,799	2,567	1,361	2,103	6,467	5,362
2010/11	16,072	3,472	1,909	1,095	2,535	6,516	4,537
2011/12	20,031	2,877	2,312	1,138	2,075	6,258	3,675
2012/13*	15,401	3,367	2,376	1,341	2,011	5,644	4,919

(*In 2012-13 budgeting treatment for North/South bodies changed. These figures are not directly comparable with those in the previous years.)

The Bodies may receive funding or generate income from other sources, including the contribution from the Irish Government; however there is no cost to the Executive for these additional monies.

Together: Building a United Community: Work Placements

Mr Weir asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the establishment of an additional 10,000 work placements for young people, including the timescale for implementation.

(AQW 28060/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Following the hugely successful United Youth Design Day with young people, voluntary and community organisations and other stakeholders on 23 January, we intend to draw upon contributions at that event to inform the final design of the Programme.

In addition, the Department for Employment and Learning has agreed to take on the Senior Responsible Owner role for the project and a dedicated United Youth advisor has been appointed and took up post on 13 January 2014.

A joint OFMD/DEL design paper will now be prepared for Ministers for consideration.

Peace Funding

Mr Lyttle asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to list the programmes under their responsibility which have received funding from the current round of European PEACE funding.

(AQW 28102/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The projects under the responsibility of our Department that have received funding under the PEACE III programme are listed below.

Organ Donation

Mrs Dobson asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, following their statement of 5 February 2013, whether their preferred position on the updating of the Organ Donation system remains a move to a soft opt-out system.
(AQO 5108/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Our position remains as conveyed in our statement of 5 February. You will be aware that the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety is now considering the report of the work he commissioned on attitudes towards organ donation, including an opt-out system. We are on the record as personally supporting the soft opt-out proposal and we await progress from the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety. We will have further discussions with the Minister of Health on the best system to increase organ donation rates.

Civil Servants and Special Advisers: Gifts and Hospitality

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether, since May 2007, in relation to civil servants and Special Advisers in their Department or its arm's-length bodies receiving gifts or hospitality, there have been any requests for approval of matters that fall outside the boundaries of what is normally allowable; and if so, to detail such requests.
(AQW 28960/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: There have been no requests for approval of matters that fall outside the boundaries of what is normally allowable in relation to gifts and hospitality from Civil Servants or Special Advisers.

Delivering Social Change: South Tyrone

Ms McGahan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the Delivering Social Change Framework in South Tyrone, including the impact it is having on addressing poverty and disadvantage.
(AQW 29887/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Delivering Social Change Framework was set up to tackle poverty and social exclusion. It represents a new level of joined-up working across Government to achieve tangible, long lasting social benefits for everyone, in particular those who need it most, across all constituencies.

The early work of the Delivering Social Change has focused on the identification of the needs of children and families to ensure the most urgent and significant problems in our society are addressed.

The initial six Signature Programmes announced in October 2012 are focusing on early interventions both to tackle issues before they develop into problems and to give children a good start in life, for example pre-natal interventions, early years interventions and programmes for those who are not in education, training or employment.

Significant progress has been made in relation to these programmes and they are beginning to make a real impact. Information in relation to activities taking place in the Fermanagh and South Tyrone area has been placed in the Library of the Assembly.

Whilst these programmes are important to the Delivering Social Change framework they will not alone eradicate 'wicked' issues such as poor health, low educational attainment and chronic unemployment.

Reducing inter-generational poverty can only be achieved by all Ministers working together with a longer term view to the next Programme for Government period and the years beyond. In recognition of this, structures have been put in place under the Delivering Social Change framework to look specifically at how the Executive can improve the long-term quality of life for our communities in the areas of health, education, employment, family and community life and cohesion.

It is only through a more joined up approach that changes in children's lives are achievable. In doing so, we believe we can help break the cycle of multi-generational poverty that blights so many communities across our society.

Childcare Strategy: Update

Mr Weir asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the Childcare Strategy.
(AQW 30112/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: On 25 September 2013 we launched the first phase of Bright Start – the Executive's Programme for Affordable and Integrated Childcare. The first phase of Bright Start sets out a strategic direction for the Childcare Strategy along with 15 key first actions that will be put in place to address the main childcare priorities identified during consultation and research. All of the key first actions will be initiated before the end of the current financial year.

Planning Bill

Mr Nesbitt asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for their assessment of the Minister of the Environment's statement on the 22 October 2013 regarding his decision not to proceed with the Planning Bill.
(AQO 5371/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: When the DOE Minister made his statement on 22 October 2013, he made it clear that the purpose and intent of the Bill was to:

"have a better planning system that is more fit to serve the interests of ratepayers post 2015."

That is something that we can all subscribe to. We also need a planning system that allows for strategic decisions to be made in relation to investment and job creation.

Whilst disappointed that the Minister did not proceed with the Bill we are nevertheless determined to find a way forward that ensures that we get the best planning system.

We hope that a solution can be found that will allow the Planning Bill to proceed through this Assembly.

In order to help facilitate the best outcome, we met with the DOE Minister on 28 November to discuss his concerns. At that meeting we agreed that he would bring forward proposals that would facilitate the Bill being brought forward by agreement.

Once we receive his proposals it would be our intention to reconvene our meeting with the Minister to discuss the way forward.

Childcare Strategy: Update

Ms McGahan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the Childcare Strategy.
(AQO 5374/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: In September last year, we launched the first phase of Bright Start – the Executive's Programme for Affordable and Integrated Childcare. The first phase of Bright Start sets out a strategic direction for the Childcare Strategy along with 15 key first actions that will be put in place to address the main childcare priorities identified during consultation and research. All of the key first actions will be initiated before the end of the current financial year.

Economic Pact: Fiscal Powers Review

Mr Brady asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the review of fiscal powers as part of the Economic Pact.

(AQO 5377/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: There is a commitment in the Building a Prosperous and United Community document that the Government and the Executive will examine the potential for devolving specific additional fiscal powers and make recommendations by autumn 2014.

DFP has lead responsibility for this work. A first stage in taking it forward will be to examine the processes and outcomes of the work in Scotland and Wales. They will also look at academic work on this topic. This is an extremely important issue for both the Assembly and the Executive going forward.

However, it is important to recognise the progress that has already been made in this area in terms of the devolution of long haul Air Passenger Duty, and our exemption from the Carbon Price Floor. We have also moved the debate with the Westminster Government on Corporation Tax, significantly forward.

Child Poverty Act 2010

Mr F McCann asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for their assessment of whether the targets set out in the Child Poverty Act will be achieved.

(AQO 5378/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The UK Child Poverty Act 2010 makes it the duty of the Secretary of State to ensure that targets in relation to relative low income, combined low income and material deprivation, absolute low income and persistent poverty are met by 2020.

The Act requires us to publish a child poverty strategy which sets out the measures which our departments propose to take for the purpose of contributing to the compliance by the Secretary of State to meet the targets above and for the purpose of ensuring that children here do not experience socio-economic disadvantage.

The Act also requires us to report annually on the measures taken by our departments in accordance with the strategy, the effects of those measures in contributing to meeting the targets above and other effects of those measures that contribute to the purpose above. We are also required to review our strategy and publish a revised strategy every three years.

We have met all of the requirements of the Child Poverty Act set out above which fall to our administration. We have not made an assessment of whether the targets which fall to the Secretary of State will be met.

On 20 January, we launched a new strategy Delivering Social Change for Children and Young People for public consultation. This represents a new Outcomes Based Approach, which uses additional indicators, in addition to the targets set out in the Child Poverty Act, to measure the impact of our actions to tackle child poverty.

Victims and Survivors Service: Review

Mr Rogers asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister when the Review of the Victims and Survivors Service is due to conclude.

(AQO 5379/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Independent Expert Assessment of the Victims and Survivors Service is expected to conclude mid-February 2014.

Delivering Social Change: Audiovisual Announcements on Buses

Mr Lyttle asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the status of the Department of Regional Development's bid for Delivering Social Change funding to install Audio Visual Announcements on buses that would promote equal access to public transport for blind and partially sighted users.

(AQW 30314/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Delivering Social Change (DSC) framework was set up by the Executive to tackle poverty and social exclusion. It represents a new level of joined-up working across departments to drive through initiatives which have a genuine impact on the ground and achieve real, long lasting social benefits. Departments are now working together on priority issues to maximise outcomes and improve the lives of everyone, particularly those who need help the most.

Whilst work on the first wave of Signature Programmes is ongoing, proposals for further Signature Programmes, primarily linked to key strategies, are still currently under consideration by the Department. However, the totality of potential programmes significantly exceeds the budget that is likely to be available. Consequently, at this stage, only a small number of proposals will be taken forward with funding from the Delivering Social Change Fund.

It is of course possible that the Department for Regional Development may also be able to proceed with this project out of its own funds.

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

Single Farm Payments: Delay

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail how many Single Farm Payments have been, and are expected to be, delayed due to departmental inspections.

(AQW 30012/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): In 2013 Single Farm Payment controls included Land Eligibility checks on 2,129 businesses. At 30 January 2014 there were 1257 inspected cases awaiting payment. Every effort is being made to finalise the remaining claims as early as possible, with the majority of inspections to be paid by the end of February and any remaining cases to be paid by the end of April 2014. This is two months ahead of the 2012 payments timeline, and four months ahead of the previous year, 2011.

Agri-Food Strategy Board: Representation

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail how farmers in Severely Disadvantaged areas are represented on the Agri-Food Strategy Board.

(AQW 30015/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The Agri-Food Strategy Board (AFSB) is made up of the Chair, eight industry members and four senior government officials. The industry members were appointed by the DARD and DETI Ministers following a competitive process carried out in accordance with the spirit of the Commissioner for Public Appointments (NI) Code of Practice. Members were selected not to represent their own particular interests but because they demonstrated the best skills to develop and advise on implementation of a strategy for sustainable growth of the whole agri-food sector. Two of those appointed are from primary production. Full details of the AFSB membership may be found on the AFSB website at www.agrifoodstrategyboard.org.uk.

In addition, the AFSB engaged in an extensive consultation process, involving up to 80 members of sectoral sub-groups, a public Call for Evidence and a website which allows members of the public to communicate with the Board.

The AFSB's Report Going for Growth recognises that each element of the agri-food supply chain must be sustainable and profitable in order for the sector to prosper and grow. The report also recognises that the industry must build on Ireland's clean, green image and that sustainability must be the cornerstone of our branding. Producers from Severely Disadvantaged Areas will make a key contribution to this.

Animal Welfare Officers: Employment

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the number of animal welfare enforcement officers that are currently employed.

(AQW 30025/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Councils are responsible for enforcement of the Welfare of Animals Act 2011 in respect of non-farmed animals, including domestic pets and horses.

Councils currently employ nine Animal Welfare Officers. This number increased from five following a review by Councils in March 2013.

Animal Welfare: Funding

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the funding her Department currently provides to (i) local councils; and (ii) other organisations, to help combat animal cruelty and support animal welfare.

(AQW 30026/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill:

- (i) My Department is committed to providing funding of £800,000 during the financial year 2013/2014 to support local Councils in enforcing the Welfare of Animals Act 2011 in respect of non-farmed animals such as domestic pets and horses.
- (ii) My Department does not provide funding to other organisations to help combat animal cruelty and support animal welfare.

Farming: Health and Safety Measures

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the total financial assistance made available to farming families for Health and Safety measures, in the last three years.

(AQW 30031/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: In the last three years under the Farm Modernisation Programme my Department has awarded £3.35m of financial support to farm businesses for the purchase of items that promote safer working practices on farms.

In addition, my Department has spent in excess of £159k to date in relation to the provision of Farm Safe Awareness courses which aim to improve health and safety standards on farms and strive to significantly reduce work related deaths and injuries. These FarmSafe Awareness sessions are provided free of charge to farm family members and to date there have been 2,545 attendees.

As part of my Department's commitment to the Farm Safety Partnership, my Department has also provided £139k in funding towards the cost of the Partnership's 2013 Multimedia Campaign. My Department will also be providing an additional £111k for the 2014/15 year to extend this highly effective campaign.

Coastal Defences: South Down

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, following the recent storms, whether a post-event inspection programme has taken place along the coastal defences in the South Down constituency.

(AQW 30049/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Rivers Agency did undertake a serviceability inspection programme of its defences in the wake of the new year storms. This is progressing well, with inspections completed at Newry and Strand Lough, leaving the Quoile Barrage to be completed in early February 2014. More detailed structural inspections are also being progressed, with completion anticipated by the end of March 2014.

Agriculture Qualifications

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of how many young farmers would be (i) eligible; and (ii) ineligible to receive an award from the regional reserve if a Level 3 qualification in agriculture or an equivalent subject to become a requirement for young farmers and new entrants.

(AQW 30054/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Under the Regional Reserve, the young farmer would have to be setting up for the first time as head of holding or to have done so within the previous five years and be no more than 40 years of age in the year of first application to the Basic Payment Scheme. A new entrant would not have to meet any age requirement, but would have to be commencing his/her agricultural activity and must not have had any agricultural activity in his/her own name or at his/her own risk in the five preceding years. The Regional Reserve will be open to applications from young farmers and new entrants from 2015 and until further CAP reform changes this provision. Therefore, I have no data on the number of individuals who in 2015 might, or in subsequent years potentially could, meet these mandatory eligibility criteria, but it would be to these individuals that any optional educational criteria could also be applied. As I have indicated in my answer to AQW 30053/11-15, in the recently closed public consultation on 'Policy Options arising from the Reform of the CAP (Pillar I Direct Payments)', I sought views on a suggestion that we would include an eligibility criterion that would require young farmers and new entrants to hold a Level III educational qualification in agriculture or a closely related subject. My rationale for suggesting an educational qualification criterion was primarily to encourage young farmers and new entrants to invest in their skills and to reward those who already have.

The consultation has now closed and I will carefully consider all responses received to this consultation before reaching a decision on the way forward.

Credit Unions: Rural Areas

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline the support her Department can provide to credit unions in rural areas.

(AQW 30059/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I am very aware of the great service provided by credit unions in rural areas and following a recent meeting with representatives of the Irish League of Credit Unions have asked officials for a report as soon as possible if any support can be provided to credit unions, for my consideration.

Animal Welfare Officers: Employment

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the number of animal welfare officers employed specifically to investigate animal cruelty.

(AQW 30065/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Councils are responsible for enforcement of the Welfare of Animals Act 2011 in respect of non-farmed animals including domestic pets and horses. They currently employ nine Animal Welfare Officers who are specifically trained and dedicated full time to this work.

Animal Cruelty: Investigations

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the funding made available to investigate animal cruelty in the last three years.

(AQW 30066/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The welfare of animals here is protected by the Welfare of Animals Act 2011. It contains a range of offences including those relating to activities which may cause an animal to suffer unnecessarily. However, it does not contain an offence specifically referred to as "animal cruelty".

My Department has committed annual funding to help Councils enforce the Act in respect of non-farmed animals. The funding available to Councils over the past three years is as follows:

2011/12	£760,000
2012/13	£780, 000
2013/14	£800,000

Animal Cruelty: Reporting

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many cases of animal cruelty have been reported in the last three years.

(AQW 30068/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The welfare of animals here is protected by the Welfare of Animals Act 2011. It contains a range of offences including those relating to activities which may cause an animal to suffer unnecessarily. However, it does not contain an offence specifically referred to as "animal cruelty".

My Department is responsible for investigating animal welfare cases in respect of farmed animals. Often cases reported do not, upon investigation, reveal unnecessary suffering. Therefore the figures for farmed animals provided in Table 1 below relate to cases investigated by my Department's Veterinary Service and where unnecessary suffering was found.

Table 1 Farmed animal's cases

Year	Number of cases investigated
2011	39
2012	54
2013	43
Total	136

Local Councils have been responsible for investigating animal welfare cases in respect of non- farmed animals such as domestic pets and horses since April 2012. The number of cases investigated over the past three years is provided in Table 2 below.

Table 2 Non-farmed animal's cases

Financial Year	Number of cases investigated
2011/12*	N/A
2012/13	3,634
2013/14	3,977
Total	7,611

* Data relating to non-farmed animals prior to April 2012 is not available.

** Number of cases from 01 April 2013 to 24 January 2014.

Welfare of Animals Act (Northern Ireland) 2011: Custodial Sentences

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the number of people that have been given custodial sentences under the sentence guidelines detailed in the Welfare of Animals Act 2011.

(AQW 30069/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department brought forward the Welfare of Animals Act in 2011, which significantly increased the penalties for animal welfare offences to a maximum of 6 months imprisonment and/or a maximum fine of £5,000 on summary conviction; and on conviction by indictment to a maximum of two years imprisonment and/or an unlimited fine. These penalties reflect the fact that causing unnecessary suffering to any animal is a very serious offence. Under the Welfare of Animals Act 2011, my Department is responsible for investigating welfare cases in respect of farmed animals. Since April 2012 local Councils are responsible for investigating non-farmed animal welfare cases and the PSNI has responsibility in respect of wild animals, animal fighting, and welfare issues where other criminal activities are involved.

As sentencing within the legislative framework is a matter for the Judiciary, input on the number of custodial sentences awarded under the 2011 Act was sought from the Department of Justice. I am advised by the Department of Justice that sentencing and conviction datasets are currently available only up to 2009. The Welfare of Animals Act came into force on 11 July 2011. Therefore, it has not been possible for the Department of Justice to provide the information requested.

However, I can advise that in respect of farmed animals, two cases taken by my Department under the 2011 Act have resulted in convictions, one defendant receiving a conditional discharge for 12 months and the other receiving a £250 fine. In addition, a successful prosecution was taken under the Welfare of Animals (Transport) Regulations 2006 that resulted in the handing down of a custodial sentence of 2 months imprisonment and a £5,000 fine for animal welfare offences during transportation. On appeal the sentence was reaffirmed, however the fine was reduced to £3,500.

I am also aware that since April 2012 Councils have taken four forward cases for non-farmed animal welfare prosecutions, which has resulted in a range of convictions, from suspended sentences to payment of fines and costs. There are also a number of cases currently being prepared by Councils for prosecution.

Rural Crime: Reduction

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what steps her Department is taking to reduce rural crime. (AQW 30098/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I am very aware of the concerns that levels of farm related crime are causing amongst the farming community and my Department continues to work closely with the Department of Justice and the PSNI to tackle rural crime.

I have met the Minister of Justice on a number of occasions to highlight rural crime issues and at our most recent meeting in October 2013 we discussed the sharing of information between Departments and the PSNI Rural Crime Unit. I also agreed that a representative from my Department would be appointed to sit on the Rural Crime Unit Steering Group.

My Department's Veterinary Service Enforcement Branch (VSEB) and the PSNI have been involved in a number of successful operations to recover stolen livestock and continue to jointly investigate livestock smuggling incidents with the Gardai and the Department in the south of Ireland.

VSEB has also recently carried out joint investigation visits with the PSNI to a number of premises in Fermanagh, Eglinton, Armagh and Newtownabbey in relation to stolen livestock. This resulted in one case to the recovery of ten stolen sheep and conviction of the perpetrator. Five stolen cattle were recently discovered at an abattoir and one person has been charged following a joint VSEB / PSNI investigation. Other, similar operations are being planned.

A rural crime event is planned for Dungannon Farmers Market on 3rd February 2014 at which a number of farmers are expected to bring their cattle to be freeze branded. It is hoped that this will lead to other farmers following suit.

Following a request from the chair of Newry and Mourne Policing and Community Safety Partnership, the Head of VSEB attended a meeting on 9th December 2013. This meeting was well attended and the VSEB official gave a presentation and answered questions from the audience.

Joint PSNI and DARD vehicle checks are also continuing out across the north of Ireland. The objectives of these operations are to raise awareness in relation to rural crime and to train police officers in reading ear tag and checking cattle movement documentation. Similar joint operations are taking place in the south.

Although responsibility for combating rural crime falls primarily to the Department of Justice and the PSNI, my Department, through its CAFRE advisers, support the PSNI and the farming organisations in raising awareness of measures which farmers can take to reduce incidences of rural crime. CAFRE College facilities can be used by the PSNI for workshops, seminars and meetings aimed at raising awareness of crime prevention measures among the farming community. Students on CAFRE programmes also learn about appropriate responses to rural crime through input from visiting speakers, information leaflets and participation of the College Farms in PSNI-led programmes such as Farm Watch.

My officials will also be liaising further with the PSNI about how DARD Direct Offices can be used to disseminate information to rural dwellers.

Council Areas: Ballymoney, Ballymena and Moyle: Spending

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how much her Department has spent in the (i) Ballymoney; (ii) Ballymena; and (iii) Moyle council areas since May 2011. (AQW 30116/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The Department does not capture routine running costs by geographical area, however information on grants and subsidies are recorded by postcode. These have been analysed by council area from April 2011 and included in the table below.

DARD Programme Spend in Ballymoney, Ballymena and Moyle Council Areas since April 2011

	Ballymoney £	Ballymena £	Moyle £
Less Favoured Areas	542,471	5,146,690	1,168,249
Single Farm Payments	21,468,074	53,546,819	7,451,870

Fish Farms: Pig and Poultry Protein

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether she will take immediate steps to ban the use of pig and poultry protein in feed used in fish farms.

(AQW 30120/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The European Commission is the legal authority which regulates for the prevention, control and eradication of certain Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathy's (TSEs). In June 2013 the Commission amended the Regulation to allow the feeding of pig and poultry Processed Animal Proteins (PAP) to farmed fish subject to strict channelling controls and the implementation of a new Polymerase Chain Reaction test to detect the presence of pig or poultry material in feed.

EU Regulations take effect as soon as they are published by the Commission and are directly applicable here. As Minister of the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, I have lead responsibility for TSE Regulations here and I am obliged to implement this change in accordance with EU rules. Prior to this change being implemented there was considerable weight of scientific evidence, as well as expert opinions from the FSA Board and the four chief medical officers in Britain and the north of Ireland in favour of the proposal. In addition, the Department engaged with industry stakeholders here who welcomed the availability of a further source of quality protein.

These new arrangements ensure that industry here has an opportunity to access the same sources of protein as businesses in other Member States, should they decide to do so. While it is anticipated that the uptake here will be limited, strict controls remain in place to protect public health and the use of pig and poultry PAP for fish feed is closely regulated by my Department.

To date I have received no applications to incorporate pig or poultry PAP into fish feed.

Fish Products: Pig and Poultry Protein

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether she will take steps to ensure that any fish products fed on pig and poultry protein will be banned from sale in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 30121/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The European Commission is the legal authority which regulates for Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathy (TSE). In June 2013, the Commission amended the regulation to allow the feeding of pig and poultry Processed Animal Proteins (PAP) to farmed fish subject to strict channelling controls and the implementation of a new Polymerase Chain Reaction test to detect the presence of pig or poultry material in feed.

As Minister for the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, I have lead responsibility for TSE Regulations in NI in respect of the prevention, control and eradication of certain TSE's including controls in respect of feed for farmed animals.

Policy responsibility for food intended for human consumption including fish products rests with the Food Standards Agency (FSA).

You may wish to contact the Minister for the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, who is best placed to respond to your query on the banning from sale of such fish products.

Fish Products: Pig and Poultry Protein

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether she will take steps to ensure that any fish products that have been fed on pig and poultry protein, and are sourced outside Northern Ireland, will be clearly labelled in all retail and wholesale outlets where they are offered for sale.

(AQW 30122/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The European Commission is the legal authority which regulates for Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathy (TSE). In June 2013, the Commission amended the regulation to allow the feeding of pig and poultry Processed Animal Proteins (PAP) to farmed fish subject to strict channelling controls and the implementation of a new Polymerase Chain Reaction test to detect the presence of pig or poultry material in feed.

As Minister of the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, I have lead responsibility for the TSE Regulations in the north of Ireland in respect of the prevention, control and eradication of certain TSE's including controls in respect of feed for farmed animals. Policy responsibility for food for human consumption including fish products rests with the Food Standards Agency.

You may wish to contact the Minister for the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, who is best placed to respond to your query in respect of the labelling of fish products for human consumption sourced outside the north.

DARD Headquarters: Ballykelly

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQO 4511/11-15 (i) for an update on the business case to appraise the options for accommodating new departmental headquarters at the Shackleton site in Ballykelly; and (ii) to detail when the outcomes of this exercise will be published.

(AQW 30125/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The business case for the relocation of my headquarters to Ballykelly is currently undergoing internal assurance. The preferred option for development points to a phased approach, with construction of 400 workstations being completed in 2016 and a second phase of around 200 workstations being completed in 2020.

When the business case has received the necessary assurances I will make it available for publication.

Tree Species: Pre-notification Legislation

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (i) for an update on the proposed pre-notification legislation for certain tree species, including the likely date of implementation and reasons for any delay; and (ii) whether she will provide further details on the rural, faith-based community engagement programme, announced at the North South Ministerial Council Meeting in Agriculture Sectoral Format on 13 November 2013.

(AQW 30133/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill:

- (i) Discussions are on-going with the Department of Agriculture, Food and the Marine in relation to the co-ordinated introduction of pre-notification legislation for certain tree species. Following my statement on the North/South Ministerial Council (NSMC) in agriculture sector in the Assembly on Monday 20 January, I explained that the best approach, in plant health terms, is to protect the island as a whole and co-ordinate our actions with the south. In the meantime, administrative processes are in place to monitor plant imports from information available on shipping manifests.
- (ii) There has been a long standing commitment by both Ministers at North South Ministerial Council Agriculture meetings to seek a legacy from the highly successful Rural Enabler Programme. My Department has provided funding for two Project Officers to work in rural areas promoting and supporting the involvement of churches and faith based volunteers in social action projects to alleviate poverty, social exclusion and to improve the quality of life for people living in disadvantaged rural areas.

Stolen Livestock: North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many incidents of stolen livestock have been reported in the North Down area, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 30172/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The following table shows the number of incidents involving missing or stolen cattle in the Newtownards Divisional Veterinary Office (DVO) area in each of the last three years.

Table 1: Incidents of missing or stolen cattle

	2011	2012	2013
Number of incidents	64	97	81

The Animal and Public Health Information System (APHIS) database does not record information on a constituency basis, but the whole of the North Down area falls within the Newtownards DVO area.

Information is not available specifically in relation to stolen cattle, or in relation to other types of stolen livestock. This is because APHIS does not differentiate between missing or stolen cattle, and does not record information on other species of stolen livestock.

I am very aware that livestock theft causes great stress amongst the farming community. I encourage any-one who has information which might help us combat this threat to report their suspicions to my Department or the PSNI.

Areas of Natural Constraint: Consultation

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether she will hold a consultation on the designation of Areas of Natural Constraint.

(AQW 30307/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Over the past five years, DARD has been working in close consultation with a group involving all of the key local stakeholder organisations as the EU development of the Areas of Natural Constraint (ANC) designation criteria have been developed.

DARD has also published the latest state of play on this matter on its website to make it available to a wider audience. This can be accessed at <http://www.dardni.gov.uk/index/grants-and-funding/common-agricultural-policy-reform.htm>.

The designation procedure and criteria are fairly prescriptive but there are some issues on which further Commission clarification is necessary. No decision has been made yet regarding the final timetable for designation.

Therefore, at this stage, I cannot give a timetable for a possible consultation on this matter.

Common Agricultural Policy: Rural Development Programme Funding

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development when she will place the correspondence available on the debate on Common Agricultural Policy: Rural Development Programme Funding in the Assembly Library, as requested on the 20 January 2014.

(AQW 30342/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The correspondence tabled with other Departments was placed in the Assembly Library on 4 February 2014.

DARD Headquarters: Ballykelly

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the progress of the business case for the relocation of her Department's headquarters to Ballykelly, in light of the campaign to have it relocated to Strabane.

(AQW 30414/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The business case for the relocation of my headquarters to Ballykelly is currently undergoing internal assurance. The preferred option for development points to a phased approach, with construction of 400 workstations being completed in 2016 and a second phase of around 200 workstations being completed in 2020.

I can understand the disappointment felt by many local representatives across the rest of the north at my decision to relocate to Ballykelly. However, it must be understood that the relocation of the DARD headquarters represents an important first step to relocate a significant share of public sector jobs to rural locations.

As you know I recently announced that the DARD Direct Office for the North West will be in Strabane. That office will open in 2016 and will have 40 DARD posts. Together with the Rivers Agency move to Loughry, the Forest Service move to Fermanagh, the Fisheries Division to South Down and remainder of my headquarters to Ballykelly this approach supports my commitment to the redistribution of public sector jobs and to the development of rural communities.

Golf Clubs in Rural Areas: Funding

Ms McGahan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what funding opportunities her Department provides to golf clubs in rural areas.

(AQW 30426/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The Rural Development Programme does not provide direct, core funding to sports clubs. However, where such an organisation wishes to promote a project that benefits the wider rural community, and which is separate from their primary activity, this can be considered for funding.

I am pleased to say that Axis 3 has reached 100% commitment for this programme which means it is unlikely that there will be any further calls for applications for grant aid.

Rural Development Programme: Proposals

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what proposals she has finalised regarding the Rural Development Programme for the period 2014 -2020.

(AQO 5453/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: My proposals for the Rural Development Programme 2014-2020 are not yet finalised. A period of public consultation on the draft proposals for the Programme concluded on the 21 October 2013. My Department's response to the submissions received during the consultation will be published shortly. There will be further discussions with stakeholders over the coming weeks followed by a period of negotiation with the EU Commission before the proposals can be finalised.

Rural Development Programme: Cultural Heritage

Ms McCorley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what action she is taking to protect rural cultural heritage through the Rural Development Programme.

(AQO 5445/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Under Axis 3 of the Rural Development Programme, 49 rural heritage projects have been funded so far with an investment of £1.5m and a further 29 projects worth £4.1m are underway having been issued with a Letter of Offer.

The funding has allowed rural people to use our rural heritage to provide interesting additions to the rural tourism offering whilst preserving it. I myself have seen at first hand some examples of this when I opened projects such as the salmon fishermen's restored cottage on Carrickarede and the 17th century Lissan house outside Cookstown which was awarded a grant of £250,000 from South West Action for Rural Development under the Rural Development Programme.

It is the funding available from the Programme that has acted as an enabler to get these projects on the ground. Some of the projects will have a huge impact on tourism such as the Gobbins and the Railway Preservation Society of Ireland project, the only all Ireland group looking after our railway heritage. Others are helping to give a new lease of life to our built heritage such as the Caledon Beam engine, the only such engine left in the whole of Ireland or the restoration for the use of visitors of the disused Chapel beside the Old Cross of Ardboe, an ancient Celtic Cross dating back more than 1,000 years and a significant site in Irish heritage terms.

Additionally under the Department's agri-environment schemes, participants help protect and maintain historic monument sites on their land which are vulnerable to farming practices. Across the north there are 1,394 agri-environment scheme participants currently managing historic monument sites as part of their management agreement. My Department works closely with colleagues in the Department of Environment's NI Environment Agency who have responsibility for designating historic monument sites.

Flood Defences; River Lagan

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what plans are in place to further strengthen flood defences on the River Lagan.

(AQO 5446/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I have received clarification from Mr Beggs that he is interested in the flood defences across Belfast, including the city centre and East Belfast, especially the Sydenham area. In terms of maintenance works, Rivers Agency undertakes routine inspection and maintenance of the designated drainage network in line with its maintenance programme. In terms of flood alleviation works in East Belfast, integrated works associated with the Connswater Community Greenway Project and stand-alone works being taken forward by Rivers Agency extend from Victoria Park on the Connswater River, up to Clara Park on the Knock River, Ladas Drive on the Loop River and Montgomery Road on the Glenbrook River. Construction work is ongoing, with the final phase expected to commence this summer, and completion expected in early 2016.

Rivers Agency had already identified the risk of tidal flooding in Belfast and in light of the recent surge tides is reassessing the level of risk to determine what further measures may be needed.

For example, the Agency is working with DRD Roads Service to assess the risk to the transport network and explore opportunities for incorporating flood defences into the proposals for the York Street Interchange.

In addition, there will be a formal debrief on the handling of the coastal flooding events of early January and I shall be keen to see what emerges from that, in particular, the lessons learned.

Single Farm Payments: Remote Sensing

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development when her Department started the assessment of Single Farm Payment claims on farms which were subject to a remote sensor inspection.

(AQO 5448/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Control by remote sensing involves careful examination of a satellite image or aerial photograph and comparing this with the area declared on the Single Application Form. Farmers claiming Single Farm Payment were required to submit their Single Application Forms (SAF) by 15 May 2013. The satellite images used for remote sensing (RS) inspections were captured in early summer 2013, following which Remote Sensing inspections were undertaken throughout the summer and autumn.

Some businesses required an on-farm rapid field visit (RFV) if an accurate determination could not be made from the satellite imagery or aerial photographs. These rapid field visits took place during autumn / winter 2013 and some are ongoing.

The aim is to have the majority of inspected claims paid by the end of February 2014 with the remainder paid by April 2014. This will mean that inspection cases generally will be processed much more quickly than in previous years.

Rural Crime: PSNI

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline any discussions and correspondence she has had with the PSNI regarding farm-related rural crime.

(AQO 5449/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I have met the Chief Constable of the PSNI on a number of occasions and made him aware of my concerns about the level of agriculture-related crime. I explained the worry this was causing in rural areas and highlighted the need for action. The Chief Constable has recently made rural crime statistics available to DARD.

A DARD representative has been appointed to sit on the PSNI Rural Crime Unit Steering Group.

My Veterinary Service Enforcement Branch (VSEB) and the PSNI have been involved in a number of successful operations recovering stolen livestock. They share intelligence and jointly investigate incidents with the Department in the South and with An Garda Síochána.

DARD has recently carried out joint investigations with the PSNI at a number of premises across four counties in relation to stolen livestock. In one case, this resulted in the recovery of 10 stolen sheep and conviction of the perpetrator. In another, 5 stolen cattle were discovered at an abattoir and one person has been charged.

A Rural Crime event is planned for Dungannon Market on 3 February 2014. Farmers will bring their cattle to be freeze branded in the hope that others will follow suit.

Following a request from Newry and Mourne Policing and Community Safety Partnership, the head of VSEB delivered a presentation and answered questions from those who attended on 9 December 2013.

Joint PSNI and DARD vehicle checks are continuing with the objectives of raising awareness of Rural Crime, training of police officers in livestock identification and movement documentation. Similar operations are taking place in the South.

I am very aware that rural crime causes great stress amongst the farming community. I encourage any-one who has information which might help us combat this threat to rural businesses to report suspicions to my Department or the PSNI.

Rural Health

Ms Fearon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how she is working with the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to improve the health of the farming community and rural dwellers.

(AQO 5450/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department is currently working on a number of such initiatives in conjunction with the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety and its' agencies including:-

- the Farm Family Health checks programme which provides health screening events in farmers markets and community venues and a signposting service to various physical and mental health and wellbeing services;
- the Maximising Access in Rural Areas (MARA) project aimed at maximising access to benefits, grants and local services, supporting the most vulnerable rural dwellers living in or at risk of poverty and social exclusion; and,
- the Connecting Elderly Rural Isolated pilot project, which provides a range of support services to rural older people to reduce social isolation, enhance independent living and to improve wellbeing.

Single Farm Payments: Delay

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what steps her Department is taking in processing delayed Single Farm Payments.

(AQO 5451/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I am pleased to advise that to date we have paid Single Farm Payment to more farmers than in any previous year. 37,637 Single Applications were received for the 2013 scheme year of which 35,228 have been finalised, that is 93.6%, totalling £246.2 million.

90% of 2013 Single Farm Payments were finalised in December 2013, totalling £232.5 million. This was a significant increase from the previous year when approximately 83% of 2012 claims were paid amounting to £184.1 million.

Every effort is being made to finalise the remaining claims as early as practical, with the majority of inspections to be paid by the end of February and any remaining cases to be paid by the end of April 2014. This is two months ahead of the 2012 payments timeline.

EU Regulations (currently Article 29 of Council Regulation (EC) No. 73/2009) requires Member States to make payments in full by 30 June each year and furthermore require that payments cannot be made until verification of eligibility conditions have been finalised.

Children's Services

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the introduction of a statutory duty on government departments and public bodies to co-operate on children's services, in relation to her Department's work to improve outcomes for children.

(AQO 5452/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Children and young people make up a significant part of our rural community and Northern Ireland also has one of the youngest populations in Europe. It is vital for all of us in Government to deliver for our young people, and as DARD Minister this is an area that is very close to my heart. My Department is fully committed to the statutory Section 75 duties to promote equality across our business functions; and age is one of the nine equality duties specifically mentioned.

Our Equality Scheme sets out how we will engage with stakeholders and sectoral interest groups to hear their views and my Department also works closely with other government departments and others in taking forward a range of cross-cutting strategies, policies and initiatives. The introduction of a statutory duty on public authorities here will help underpin the existing collaboration that takes place and encourage further joined-up working and where possible, the sharing of resources across government too.

Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure

Capital Projects: Foyle

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the major capital projects funded by her Department in the Foyle constituency in 2012.

(AQW 28878/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): Spend is recorded by my Department according to financial years. For the purpose of this answer I would, therefore, report that no major capital projects were funded by my Department in the Foyle constituency from the 1 April 2012 to 31 March 2013.

However, I would point out that over £8m has been spent on a variety of resource projects in the year, including on City of Culture.

Capital Projects: Foyle

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the major capital projects funded by her Department in the Foyle constituency in 2013.

(AQW 28879/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Spend is recorded by my Department according to financial years. For the purpose of this answer I would, therefore, report that no major capital projects will be funded by my Department in the Foyle constituency from the 1 April 2013 to 31 March 2014.

However, I would point out that over £9m is planned to be spent on a variety of resource projects in the year, including on City of Culture.

Third Sector Organisations: Funding

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail (i) all third sector organisations funded by the Department who provide services to the public; and (ii) the value of each contract.

(AQW 29414/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The third sector organisations funded directly by the Department and its NDPBs are detailed in the table attached.

Contract value is interpreted as the value of grant provided to organisations in the current year.

In the case of Stadiums' programme, contracts signed to date cover a longer period than the current year and the values provided reflect this. These values contain only DCAL's contribution to the contract total.

Lough Neagh

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on her position on the future Lough Neagh.
(AQW 29647/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Lough Neagh fishery plays an important role in the socio economic life of the communities around the Lough. The fishery is a key priority for my Department and my officials have engaged with fisheries' interests around the Lough to assess how my Department can help support the further development of the fishery in maximising its value and long term sustainability.

There are a range of challenges impacting on the commercial fishing and recreational angling sectors. These issues can be best addressed through the development of an integrated fisheries management plan in conjunction with local stakeholders. My officials are currently taking forward this work which will be underpinned by scientific research and advice. The Plan will provide an important planning framework for the conservation and sustainable use of the fisheries resources and future management of the fishery.

Fish Stocks

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what studies are being carried out to assess fish stocks, with a view to improving fishing tourism.
(AQW 29715/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute (AFBI) is commissioned by my Department to undertake research into salmon and freshwater fisheries. This provides the scientific basis to the conservation and management of inland fisheries.

Healthy fish stocks are essential in supporting sustainable recreational fisheries and this remains a priority for my Department. We have recently commissioned a number of studies to assess fish stocks on Lough Neagh and Lough Erne to help inform the future management of these fisheries and in maximising their recreational value for angling.

Angling is an important part of the tourism product and my Department will continue to work closely with SportNI, NITB and the Loughs Agency in supporting the growth and development of the sport for both local and visiting anglers.

Language Agencies: Funding

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for her assessment of whether the Irish Language Agency and the Ulster Scots Agency have been treated equally since 2006, with regards to funds and resources as promised in the Belfast Agreement.
(AQW 29753/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The North South Language Body is made up of the Ulster Scots Agency and Foras na Gaeilge. The Agencies are jointly funded by the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure from the North and the Department for Arts Heritage and the Gaeltacht from the South.

The Ulster Scots Agency is responsible for the promotion of the Ulster Scots heritage, culture and language and Foras na Gaeilge is responsible for the promotion of the Irish language on an all – island basis as defined in the legislation.

Both Agencies outline their strategic aims and objectives through their business and corporate plans which are agreed by the Sponsor Departments and Finance Departments and the NSMC Ministers.

The Agencies are funded according to their needs, as identified within their approved business and corporate plans. Budget allocations are based on the need in conjunction with the respective plans and are monitored and reviewed throughout the year. Thus it is about delivering to the point of need by ensuring the Agencies receive their required budgetary allocations to meet their approved Strategic aims and objectives.

Glentoran Football Club

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on whether the strategy for the development of local football now includes the £10m redevelopment of Glentoran Football Club, as promised by the previous Minister, subject to a viable business case.
(AQW 29766/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The IFA's draft Facilities Strategy which details development plans for local football, does not include specific reference to a £10m redevelopment of Glentoran Football Club. As funding for the development of sub-regional association football stadiums has yet to be secured, no decision of any kind on funding to assist the development of any sub-regional stadiums has yet been taken.

Legacy Trust UK: Connections Programme

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, following the implementation of the Legacy Trust UK's three year Connections Programme in 2012, what cultural benefits have been derived to date, and to which communities. (AQW 29801/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Dungannon, Derry and Belfast have all benefitted from the Connections Programme and examples are provided below.

Land of Giants

The partners in Land of Giants - The Beat Initiative, Belfast Community Circus and Young at Art- continue to provide high quality participative arts activity and audience experiences within their respective operational programming. This experience has increased each organisation's visibility and positioning at a local and national level.

Luminous Soul

The Luminous Soul project continues to operate, with free weekly classes for disabled participants. The longer term impact of the project has been considerable;

- The dancers have performed in festivals and showcase events within the north of Ireland and London and performed at the closing ceremony of the 2013 World Police and Fire Games, hosted in the north of Ireland.
- Open Arts have established links with leading dancers and dance companies working on an international basis;
- The project has provided opportunities for developing best practice in working with disabled people through contemporary dance and movement.
- Disabled people are encouraged to try out contemporary dance and to consider that with training they have the potential to become professional. To date, Open Arts has worked with over 80 disabled people who have an interest in dance. Luminous Soul made it possible for some of these individuals to try dance for the first time.

Imagine Action

This large scale collaborative project brought Echo Echo, Nerve Centre and Beam Creative Network together working within the north of Ireland. The project increased the profile of the organisations involved and highlighted the benefits of working together

- A number of the young people involved in Imagine Action were from a rural background and had no previous experience of participating in arts activities. Since project end, the Beam Creative Network have undertaken two Arts Council funded projects; 'No Limits' and 'Beyond Limits', both inclusion projects for young people with and without disabilities. A number of the young people involved in these projects were participants in Imagine Action.
- Through Imagine Action, the Beam Creative Network has established links with artists working within the north of Ireland and beyond.
- The Beam Creative Network have reported that the young people involved have increased in confidence and ability through participation in Imagine Action and subsequent Arts Council funded projects.

Echo Echo

- Into Contact allowed Echo Echo Dance Theatre Company, the core company ensemble, to work at the highest professional level with a range of internationally acclaimed artists. The current work 'Without' by Rosemary Lee and Echo Echo is hugely ambitious original work and is set to tour widely.
- 'Motion Ensemble' challenged the most experienced improvisation performers and has developed new audiences and profile for the company's work. The first edition of 'Echo Echo Dance & Movement Festival' will offer a programme of local, national and international performance in the intimate setting of the Echo Echo's beautiful new home building, a unique space and a very tangible physical legacy in 2013 and beyond.

Capital Projects: Funding

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the capital projects funded by her Department in each constituency since she came to office. (AQW 29833/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The spend details requested are summarised in Table 1 attached and covers the 32 month period between 1 May 2011 and 31 December 2013.

I have arranged for further details at project level to be placed in the Assembly Library.

The following considerations should be borne in mind when interpreting this data.

The Department sometimes provides capital funding through intermediary bodies and does not hold information on subsequent allocations at a constituency level. In these cases, funding is allocated according to the physical location of the intermediary body. For example, the Department provides funding to Sport Governing Bodies under its Promoting Equality, Tackling Social Exclusion Agenda. For the purposes of your question, this funding has been allocated to the constituency in which the Governing Bodies lies.

It should be also noted that the pattern of allocation across constituencies will reflect, among other things, the physical location of major venues and organisations which receive funding support.

Please note that the North Down constituency contains £11.23m in respect of the Olympic 50m Pool in Bangor.

Belfast South constituency total contains spend on Ravenhill Stadium of £10.66m and on Windsor Stadium of £1.87m. The West Belfast constituency contains spend on Casement Park of £2.82m.

Finally, allocations are recognised on an actual spend basis, except in the case of Arts Council which reports project spend on the date funding is awarded.

Table 1 – Capital Spend Per All Constituencies

Constituency	Amount £m
Belfast East	2.937
Belfast North	1.836
Belfast South	16.555
Belfast West	4.732

Fisheries Legislation

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on (i) the amendments to fisheries legislation being prepared by her Department and whether these give effect to salmon conservation proposals; and (ii) whether the changes will be in place for the incoming salmon fishing season.

(AQW 29853/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín:

- (i) Proposed changes to angling regulations are currently under consideration and these relate to a range of salmon conservation measures which have been the subject of extensive consultation. It is proposed that there will be a prohibition of salmon netting, catch and release will be mandatory for all salmon and sea trout caught by anglers in the DCAL jurisdiction and that worming will only be allowed for such fishing after the end of June. Only single or double barbless hooks will be permitted for salmon and sea trout angling.
- (ii) It is intended that these regulations will be in place by the start of the game angling season on 1st March.

North-west: Departmental Office

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail (i) under what authority will a departmental office will be set up in the North West; (ii) the proposed lifespan of the office; and (iii) who will be responsible for the costs of the set up and running the office.

(AQW 29888/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: A key City of Culture legacy objective is to ensure that the benefits of DCAL's investment in the City are felt in the towns and villages across the North West. My intention is to open a DCAL office in Derry to further enhance a focus on the North West. This will have responsibility for coordination and oversight of culture, arts and leisure activity in the North West and specifically the current Derry/ Strabane and Limavady/ Coleraine council areas.

DCAL officials are currently preparing detailed arrangements and costs which will be funded through my Department. A business case is being compiled to support the establishment of the office and we will be liaising with DFP properties to ensure value for money. The establishment of this small team in the North West is in line with our normal business. Whilst the intention is to have the new Departmental office in place for the start of the 2014/15 financial year, the lifespan of the office will be considered in the business case.

The North West office will coordinate a new Strategic Oversight Structure for City of Culture legacy. This will include stakeholders across local and central Government, the community and voluntary sector, business and others to ensure that Executive and Departmental targets and priorities are delivered.

DCAL officials focused on North West development will also stimulate strategic linkages and collaboration between multiple stakeholders across government, industry, education, local councils, the wider DCAL family and the community and voluntary sectors to drive joined up approaches to growing the economy and tackling poverty and social exclusion.

Irish City of Culture 2016

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the applications relating to her Department's support for Londonderry's bid to host the Irish City of Culture 2016.

(AQW 29889/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Given the success of City of Culture 2013, I am fully supportive of the Irish City of Culture initiative and would encourage all cities to consider applying for the title.

Derry continues to face significant socio economic problems, with quality of life in the City at a lower level than Belfast and significantly below the best performing European Cities. Therefore, I am keen that the City pursues all opportunities which can improve quality of life for those most in need.

My Department has not yet received any applications for funding in relation to a bid for the Irish City of Culture title in 2016.

Irish City of Culture 2016

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail how Londonderry's bid for the Irish City of Culture 2016 will be funded, including whether all related costs of a successful bid would be funded by (i) her Department; and/or (ii) the Irish Government.

(AQW 29890/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I understand that Derry City Council, together with citywide stakeholders, will formally bid for the title of Irish City of Culture.

My Department has not yet received any applications for funding in relation to the proposed bid.

Commemorations: 1916

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the discussions that departmental officials are engaged in, and the plans that are being prepared, regarding any commemoration pertinent to 1916.

(AQW 29891/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Arm-Length Bodies sponsored by DCAL are playing a key role in telling the stories and different interpretations of significant anniversaries from the 1912-1922 period. My Department continues to work with a wide range of social partners to promote inclusive approaches to marking the Decade of Centenaries. This has included the Roundtable on Centenaries convened by the Community Relations Council and the Heritage Lottery Fund.

My officials have also been working with the Somme Heritage Centre to fund development of an education programme linked to the First World War and including the Battle of the Somme in 1916. Relevant events and exhibitions pertinent to other significant anniversaries will be developed as this Decade of Centenaries progresses.

Language Agencies: Advertising Spend

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the estimated total advertising spend from 16 January 2014 to the 31 March 2014 by (i) The Irish Language Agency; and (ii) The Ulster Scots Agency.

(AQW 29911/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Foras na Gaeilge estimate its advertising spend from 16 January to 31 March 2014 at €9,000 (£7,740).

The Ulster Scots Agency estimate its advertising spend from 16 January 2014 to 31 March 2014 at £2,500.

Fishing: All-island Licence

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the introduction of a single all-island fishing licence.

(AQW 29963/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Loughs Agency, Inland Fisheries Ireland and my Department have established a partnership to develop an electronic e-licensing project that will support the development of angling as a tourism product across the island of Ireland.

The initial element of the project is a scoping study funding by the EU's INTERREG Programme, managed by the Special EU Programmes Body. The study will explore the opportunities within angling's regulatory structures for harmonisation, complementarity and simplification. A future product arising from this work could be the provision of a new All Ireland e license for angling.

The terms of reference of the scoping study have been agreed and it is planned that work will commence in March.

Lough Neagh: Research Project

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the progress of the genetic research project on Lough Neagh and its feeder rivers by Queen's University Belfast.

(AQW 30022/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Work on the genetic project has been progressing well and to date over 7200 brown trout samples have been taken for genetic analysis and more will be taken later this year.

The report on this work is scheduled to be completed and submitted to my Department by the end of November 2014.

Irish Language Act and Ulster Scots: Spend

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the amount spent by her Department on the development of the (i) Irish Language Act; and (ii) the Ulster Scots language. in each of the last two financial years.

(AQW 30028/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín:

- (i) During the two financial years 2011/12 and 2012/13, spend on the development of an Irish Language Bill has been through salary costs of Departmental officials. The Department does not hold a record of the proportion of time these officials spent on work on the Bill.
- (ii) In 2012/13, the Ministerial Advisory Group for the Ulster Scots Academy (MAGUS) spent £17,609 on projects related to the development of the Ulster Scots language. The Ulster-Scots Agency's spend on Ulster Scots language development was £144,840 in 2012 and £132,061 in 2013.

Cultural Tourism

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline the steps she is taking to promote cultural tourism, specifically the history between Scotland and Northern Ireland.

(AQW 30046/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure plays a central role in promoting cultural tourism across the North of Ireland through investment in cultural infrastructure such as museums, theatres, sports venues and the language sector.

A number of the Department's Arm's Length Bodies are involved in projects which explore the history between Scotland and the North of Ireland.

For example, the Ulster-Scots Agency's exhibition entitled "Masters of the Sea – Belfast's Ulster-Scots Shipbuilders" will go on display in the Scottish Maritime Museum in Irvine from March 2014.

Foras na Gaeilge administers the Colmcille project including Slí Cholmcille, which is a heritage and tourism trail linking Scotland and Ireland.

Libraries NI hold Ulster-Scots material and there were three Burns Night celebrations in Ballymena Central Library, Omagh Library and Derry Central Library in January 2014.

The permanent history galleries at the Ulster Museum explore historical links in the context of the Plantation of Ulster and the Ulster American Folk Park includes 'Scotch-Irish' themes.

The Ministerial Advisory Group on the Ulster-Scots Academy has recently worked on a project in partnership with the Ulster Historical Foundation to research the Scots invasion of Ireland in 1315, including identifying possible tourism potential.

The Arts Council support, amongst others, The Royal Scottish Pipe Band Association and the McCracken Society.

The Public Records Office (PRONI) actively promotes cultural tourism and works with peer institutions to host events relating to the shared history of Ireland and Scotland.

I have also supported the continuation of the Ulster-Scots Broadcast Fund which places a high priority on the links and shared history of Scotland and the North of Ireland.

These are just some examples of the ongoing work being taken forward by the Department and its Arm's Length Bodies in terms of the promotion of cultural tourism with particular reference to the history between Scotland and the North of Ireland.

Capital Works: Football Stadia

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the budget provision for capital works in football stadia, other than Windsor Park.

(AQW 30109/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: At present there is no budget provision for capital works in football stadia other than at Windsor Park. The Executive previously endorsed the development of sub-regional stadia as a priority area of spend in the next CSR period. Therefore funding for the development of sub-regional association football stadiums has still to be secured and no decision or timescale on funding to assist the development of any specific sub-regional stadium has yet been taken.

Commonwealth Games 2014

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline her Department's plans for the Commonwealth Games 2014, including its representation at the games.

(AQW 30128/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The NI Commonwealth Games Council is responsible for all aspects of the north of Ireland team competing at the 2014 Glasgow Games. My Department, through Sport NI, continues to work closely with the Council as it takes forward its preparations for the Games.

The Council has established two groups - an Operational Group to take forward the detailed preparations with the local governing bodies, and the Strategic Task and Finish Group which oversees the work of the Operational Group and considers opportunities to maximise the NI Team's performance in Glasgow. DCAL officials have attended the meetings of this group to hear at firsthand how the Games preparations are progressing.

From April 2013 and in the lead up to the Games, my Department, through Sport NI, is also providing direct financial assistance to the NI Commonwealth Games Council totalling £136k. This funding will help with the Council's costs for staff, administration and other costs associated with attendance at the 2014 Games.

Support is also being provided to our top athletes in advance of the 2014 Commonwealth Games. Sport NI, through its Athlete Investment Programme for the year 2013/14, is providing financial assistance of almost £450k to sports and governing bodies who are preparing athletes for the Games. Sport NI provides £2.5M of funding to the Sports Institute NI, for support services to our top athletes, including those athletes preparing for the Commonwealth Games. These support services include performance planning, science and skills; sports medicine; and, strength and conditioning.

As diary commitments for July and August 2014 have not yet been planned, representation from my Department to attend the Games has not yet been decided.

Boxing: Funding

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure whether applications for funding for boxing, under the recent allocation from Sports NI, were (i) rejected; or (ii) monies withheld because it was found that claimed facilities did not exist.

(AQW 30147/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Boxing Investment Programme was established to address the strategic equipment and facility needs of boxing clubs that operate at the core of deprived communities across the north of Ireland.

Recent funding applications to Sport NI, in this regard, were in relation to the capital works element of the programme, with a total of seventy-six completed applications having been received from boxing clubs across the north of Ireland. None of these clubs have been rejected from the process.

In addition, no monies have yet been awarded to clubs. Capital works required in each of these clubs have been ranked in order of priority and indicative grant awards will be allocated accordingly and to the budget available. I understand that Sport NI is currently in the process of informing these funding decisions to all applicants in writing.

Boxing Clubs: Child Protection Obligations

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure whether all boxing clubs are now wholly compliant with child protection obligations.

(AQW 30148/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The governing body for boxing in the north of Ireland, the Ulster Provincial Boxing Council (UPBC) has responsibility for ensuring that all boxing clubs affiliated to it are compliant with child protection obligations. The recent report from the Independent Working Group, set up to examine boxing in Ulster, highly commended the work of the UBPC to ensure that coaches, other representatives and volunteers are vetted and can operate safely within the sport. Furthermore, the Group recommended that the UPBC continue to adhere strictly to the child protection policy and procedures to maintain standards at the highest possible level.

I am aware that the UPBC has a requirement that any person seeking a coaching or judges award must agree to attend a 'Safeguarding Children and Young People in Sport' workshop and complete an Access NI vetting check. I have been advised that over 1,000 Access NI checks have been administered by the UBPC for coaches and officials in regulated activity.

Sport NI, an arms length body of my Department, will continue to provide support to governing bodies, including the UPBC, on their child protection obligations. In addition, Sport NI has processes in place to ensure that any boxing clubs, who apply for direct funding, comply with child protection obligations.

Fishing Licences

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the number of (i) fishing licences that have been issued; and (ii) convictions for fishing without a licence, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 30182/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín:

(i) Table 1 below details the number and types of DCAL angling licences sold in each of the last five years:

Travel Expenditure

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the total expenditure on (i) ministerial travel; and (ii) Special Adviser travel in 2013.

(AQW 30183/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The total expenditure by the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure on Ministerial travel in 2013 was £570.02. No travel costs were incurred by the Special Adviser during 2013.

Salmon Levels

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail (i) her Department's current estimate of salmon levels for (a) wild salmon; and (b) hatchery salmon; and (ii) how this compares with last five years.

(AQW 30222/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department commissions the Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute (AFBI) to monitor the status of Atlantic salmon populations in the DCAL jurisdiction.

The Department's current estimate of salmon levels are based on counts of adult salmon on a number of monitored index rivers. These counts are compared to the conservation limits set and a percentage compliance is calculated.

River	Percentage compliance with Conservation Limits
	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013
Blackwater	N/A	N/A	64	83	45

2011	515	649

Year	Hatchery Salmon	Wild Salmon
2012	789	926
2013	1191	1644

Salmon Stocks

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the departmental rivers for which conservation limits for salmon stocks have been determined.

(AQW 30223/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department, working in conjunction with the Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute, have established conservation limits for the following 13 rivers. They are:

Area	River
North Antrim	Bush
North Antrim	Ballycastle
North Antrim	Dun
Neagh / Bann	Blackwater
Neagh / Bann	Clady
Neagh / Bann	Sixmile
Neagh / Bann	Main
Neagh / Bann	Upper Bann
Neagh / Bann	Ballinderry
Neagh / Bann	Moyola
Down	Shimna
Down	Moneycarragh
Erne	Garvary

Sports: Funding

Ms McCorley asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail (i) the funding available to sporting organisations; (ii) the streams under which funding is available, including for (a) capital projects; (b) operating costs; and (c) equipment; and (iii) whether there are plans for new sporting provision schemes.

(AQW 30235/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Sport NI, an arms length body of my Department, is responsible for the distribution of funding to sport in the north of Ireland.

Currently, Sport NI has no funding programmes open for sporting organisations to apply. However, Sport NI has advised it is in the process of developing the following funding programmes to which sporting organisations may be eligible to apply:

A New Capital Investment Programme - which aims to partially address the under-provision in high performance sports facilities, partially address the identified shortfalls in community sports facility provision, and to significantly increase community participation in sport and physical recreation. It is anticipated that the programme will open to applicants in the latter half of 2014.

Awards for Sport - is a small grants programme primarily aimed at increasing participation in community based sport, especially amongst under-represented groups. The programme will be open to a range of organisations including sports clubs, governing bodies for sport, community/ voluntary groups, and charities. It is anticipated that Awards for Sport will open to applications in February 2014.

Active Clubs - the aim of the programme is grow the coaching, leading and volunteering capacity in sports clubs, especially among under-represented groups and in areas of greatest need. Sport NI hopes to launch the 'Active Club' programme around March-April 2014.

Cycling: Dunlop and Hume Stories

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how her Department's Arms Length Bodies are planning to commemorate the 125th anniversary of the Dunlop/Hume story and its impact on cycling.

(AQW 30312/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am aware that the route on day one of the Giro d'Italia will pass by the location of the Hume/Dunlop race that took place 125 years ago. This event created an important development in the history of cycling with the introduction of pneumatic tyres on safety bicycles which helped to enable cycling for all, especially for women.

Libraries NI, an Arms Length Body of my Department, is planning the following to commemorate the event:

- Two cycling themed talks in May 2014, provisionally booked for Ormeau Road library and Newry City library.
- An exhibition in Ormeau Road library during May 2014 on the history of cycling and referring to the Hume/Dunlop story. This will draw on both Heritage and Information resources including the patent collection.
- On 6th and 10th May 2014, cycling will be the theme for 2 children's story time/ craft sessions in Ormeau Road library in partnership with Belfast City Council.

Libraries NI also provide access to a range of stock to support people with an interest in cycling and the local history associated with these events.

National Museums has no plans to commemorate the anniversary. It is, however, currently in discussions with Carrickfergus Museum about the possibility of lending bicycles for an exhibit scheduled to coincide with the forthcoming Giro d'Italia event in 2014. The loan may include Dunlop's original pneumatic tyred bicycle.

Brandywell Stadium: Redevelopment

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 29690/11-15, why funding has not been granted for the redevelopment of Brandywell Stadium.
(AQW 30398/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Executive previously endorsed the development of sub-regional stadia as a priority area of spend in the next CSR period 2015-2016 therefore no decision or timescale on funding to assist the development of any specific sub-regional stadium has yet been taken. At this point, depending on the outcome of Derry City Council's bid to the Social Investment Fund, a sub-regional stadia programme is also a logical if not immediate channel for any potential funding application regarding a redevelopment of the Brandywell Stadium.

Sport Northern Ireland: Board

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the appointment of members to the Board of Sport Northern Ireland.
(AQW 30401/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am currently considering the selection of suitable candidates to fill the appointment of Vice Chair and four members to the board of Sport NI. I wish to be assured that the best candidates are selected who can help Sport NI to deliver against my Department priorities in the next number of years. I hope to be in a position to announce my decision soon.

Golf Clubs: Funding

Ms McGahan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the funding opportunities available to golf clubs.
(AQW 30402/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Sport NI, an arms length body of my Department, is responsible for the distribution of funding to sport in the north of Ireland.

Currently, Sport NI has no funding programmes open for sporting organisations to apply, including golf clubs. However, Sport NI has advised it is in the process of developing the following funding programmes to which golf clubs may be eligible to apply:

A New Capital Investment Programme - which aims to partially address the under-provision in high performance sports facilities, partially address the identified shortfalls in community sports facility provision, and to significantly increase community participation in sport and physical recreation. It is anticipated that the programme will open to applicants in the latter half of 2014.

Awards for Sport - is a small grants programme primarily aimed at increasing participation in community based sport, especially amongst under-represented groups. The programme will be open to a range of organisations including sports clubs, governing bodies for sport, community/voluntary groups, and charities. It is anticipated that Awards for Sport will open to applications in February 2014.

Gaeltacht Bursary Scheme 2014

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the cost of The Gaeltacht Bursary Scheme 2014.
(AQW 30485/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: This year 100 bursaries are being offered at an estimated total cost of £50k. Final costs will not be known until all the applications are received and assessed against the eligibility criteria. The closing date for the 2014 Gaeltacht Bursary is 4th April 2014.

Windsor Park: Development

Mrs Hale asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the development of Windsor Park.
(AQO 5467/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The IFA Integrated Supply Team tenders have been assessed and the Most Economically Advantageous Tender has been identified. As no challenges were received during the Alcatel period the Funding Agreement was issued to the IFA and the successful contractor (O'Hare and McGovern) was appointed in December 2013.

Design development by the contractor is currently underway and it is anticipated that construction works will commence on site in the next few months.

Provided that significant delays around any legal challenges are avoided, then the Windsor Park development can remain on programme with completion of the construction works planned for September 2015.

Performing Arts

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline any discussions she has had with the Minister for Employment and Learning on developing a framework for the performing arts.
(AQO 5459/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I have not had any discussions with the Minister for Employment and Learning about developing a Performing Arts Framework and the Arts Council have also confirmed that they do not have a Performing Arts Framework nor have they had any contact with the Department for Employment and Learning on the issue.

Libraries NI

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure whether Libraries NI are experiencing any budgetary or administrative difficulties caused by the on-going operation of Education and Library Boards as a result of the delay in the Education Bill.
(AQO 5460/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Chief Executive of Libraries NI has informed me that the organisation is not experiencing any budgetary or administrative difficulties arising from its current operating arrangements with the Education and Library Boards.

Libraries NI has developed a range of beneficial working arrangements with the Education and Library Boards. These include a number of Service Level Agreements which are reviewed annually and work well.

The services provided to Libraries NI by the Boards cover capital works, property and vehicle maintenance, legal and insurance services and job evaluation.

The Boards also provide Centres of Procurement Excellence expertise and services to Libraries NI. In addition, Libraries NI operates under the successful Belfast Education & Library Board's Strategic Partnership which delivers capital projects for libraries within the BELB area. This was the Partnership under which the Falls, Ormeau, Shankill and Whiterock libraries were recently extensively refurbished to a high standard.

Libraries NI is developing plans to ensure that the services it receives from the Education and Library Boards will continue to be available following the creation of an Education and Skills Authority.

Special Olympics Ireland 2014

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what assistance her Department is providing to people who wish to participate in the Special Olympics Ireland games in Limerick in June 2014.
(AQO 5461/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department is providing £459k core funding to Special Olympics Ireland, along with OFMDFM, DHSSPS, DSD and DE, towards a £2.295m cross-departmental package covering the 4-year period 2011/12 to 2014/15. This funding package is enabling the organisation to expand its activities throughout the north of Ireland and extend its reach in providing sports training and competition opportunities for people with an intellectual disability. This includes for those wishing to take part in this year's Special Olympics Ireland Games in Limerick.

I understand that, thanks to the support received through the Executive, Special Olympics Ulster has been able to put in place the largest number of training sessions to prepare athletes for the Games of any region in the Special Olympics Ireland programme.

Fishing: Ballyshannon

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what discussions she has had with Inland Fisheries Ireland to ensure that there is an adequate and functioning fish ladder at Ballyshannon.
(AQO 5462/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Electricity Supply Board (ESB) operates the major hydro electric generating station at Ballyshannon on the River Erne. The facility represents a barrier to fish passage and ESB is required by European law to take steps to minimise the impact on migratory fish.

My officials have regular meetings with Inland Fisheries Ireland (IFI) and ESB to monitor the operation of the fish passes and movement of fish to ensure their uninterrupted passage into the Erne system.

The fish ladder at Ballyshannon is used to enable salmon to navigate their way successfully past the hydro. Another fish pass allows eels to transcend to a holding trap where they are collected and transported by my inland fisheries staff for release into the Erne.

In certain conditions, such as the warm dry summer of 2013, there may be issues with sufficient flow of water through the dam to encourage salmon to move upstream. My officials work closely with the IFI and ESB in monitoring and resolving any issues as they arise. Despite the conditions, the number of salmon recorded passing through the fish pass in 2013 was the largest since 2007.

My officials will continue to maintain regular contact with IFI and ESB in monitoring the operation of the hydro to ensure the safe passage of migratory fish given their importance to the environment, angling, tourism and the local economy around the Erne.

Boxing: Report into Sectarianism

Mr McGimpsey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for her assessment of the report of the Independent Working Group into sectarianism in boxing.

(AQO 5463/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I welcome and acknowledge the findings and recommendations of the Independent Working Group (IWG). The Group were asked to assess the current governance structure of the Irish Amateur Boxing Association (IABA) and its disciplinary practice to tackle racism and sectarianism. As a result of their engagement with clubs, groups and individuals associated with boxing, a comprehensive report has been provided that raises a number of key issues to be addressed.

While this report was dealing with a small minority of cases, based on factors which originate outside the sport, it has highlighted that there must be a robust process in place to deal with incidents of racism or sectarianism as soon as they arise. There is no room for sectarianism in sport and the IABA must take the necessary actions to address this issue.

I welcome the Group's view that a separate boxing governing body for the north of Ireland would not benefit the sport and while issues of national identity are a matter for the individual athlete, it is important that such issues do not disenfranchise our stars of the future from progressing through their sport.

It is important to acknowledge the good work which goes on throughout the sport of boxing. As well as providing health and emotional wellbeing benefits, it has helped to unite communities.

Through this report, and its recommendations, the Group have provided the IABA with a path to modernise the structure of boxing for the future which can enhance its reputation of bringing together communities from across the north of Ireland and beyond.

I encourage the IABA to take forward the recommendations without delay. My Department and Sport NI will provide the IABA with the support they need to move forward in modernising their sport.

Motor Sports: Funding

Mr Irwin asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, in light of the recent success of Kris Meeke in the World Rally Championship in Monte Carlo, what plans her Department has to provide funding for local motorsport events.

(AQO 5464/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I would like to offer my congratulations to Kris Meeke in finishing third in the World Rally Championship in Monte Carlo. This is an impressive result for Kris as he goes forward into the next rounds of the Championship. I wish him well for the rest of the competition.

The Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment has responsibility for funding sporting events, including local motorsport events. My Department's interest in motorsport remains focussed on encouraging motorsport to improve the safety of competitors and spectators.

That said, officials recently met with the organisers of the Circuit of Ireland Rally, to explore how DCAL could help with the event, which will be part of this year's FIA European Rally Championship. Discussion focussed on what opportunities may be available for the event to support my Department's priorities around promoting equality and target poverty and social exclusion. Sport NI has been assisting the organisers to develop a bid for funding in this regard.

I have already stated my commitment to sustaining motorsport within the north of Ireland and met with Ministers Kennedy and Foster to explore opportunities around safety in motorsport and the provision of continued funding for motorsport into future years. Through collaborative working my department will ensure that positive outcomes continue to be delivered for motorsport within the north of Ireland.

Libraries: East Belfast

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what steps her Department is taking to upgrade library facilities in East Belfast.

(AQO 5465/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Our libraries are community hubs and, to ensure that they are welcoming and fit for purpose, a major investment programme is underway to maintain the buildings and provide other facilities, such as IT and appropriate levels of stock. This will enable them to deliver sustainable services to the public.

In relation to Libraries NI's buildings, condition surveys on the 5 libraries in East Belfast identified a need for redecoration work at the Ballyhackamore and Cregagh libraries. This was completed in the current financial year at a cost of £29k. In 2014/15 redecoration is planned for Holywood Arches and there is to be an internal refurbishment of the Woodstock library. These are estimated to cost £14k and £80k respectively.

Libraries NI's investment in IT facilities will primarily be delivered through the £28m 'e2' project. This is a new computer system which will be rolled out across all libraries in the next 9 months. It will provide a wide range of IT systems for the whole of the public library service – including both staff and customers.

The public facing aspects of this system will include:

- Greatly improved broadband speed with better equipment
- Significantly improved on-line library services, and
- Wi-Fi

In addition to providing an IT infrastructure, the levels and range of stock are continuously reviewed to ensure their relevancy for the communities that each library serves.

The ongoing investment in staff, stock and facilities and increased community engagement is helping to realise my vision of providing a flexible and responsive library service that assists people to fulfil their potential.

Fishing: Tourism

Mr Milne asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for her assessment of the impact on fishing tourism of the mandatory salmon catch and release measures applicable to rivers and the ban on the sale of rod caught salmon.

(AQO 5466/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The introduction of mandatory catch and release measures for salmon and sea trout and the ban on the sale of rod caught salmon are important aspects of my new conservation regulations for inland fisheries.

Catch and release has been embraced by many leading fisheries organisations and is regarded as an important and effective fisheries management tool. Many angling clubs and private fisheries in the North already operate this approach.

Angling makes an important contribution to tourism and the economy, and while these new measures may have an impact initially, it will pay dividends in the longer term. The key concept underpinning catch and release is that by releasing fish they will continue to be available for natural purposes including breeding and for other anglers to catch again.

Salmon or sea trout are too valuable a resource to be caught only once and the new measure will lead to an improvement in the quality of fishing with improved stock levels and in furthering the economic benefits of the existing fisheries resource.

In addition to salmon, we also have world class coarse and brown trout fisheries such as Lough Erne and these waters continue attract a significant number of visiting anglers each year.

I am confident that the introduction of the new fisheries conservation measures will lead to the improvement of salmon and sea trout stocks, encourage more anglers to visit Ireland and make a greater contribution to the local economy.

Ulster Rugby

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how her Department supports Ulster Rugby.

(AQO 5468/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department is currently delivering the redevelopment of the Ravenhill Rugby Grounds which is the Headquarters of Ulster Rugby. My Department's investment in the Stadium will total £16.4 by the time the whole project is complete.

In support of my Department's key priority of promoting equality and tackling poverty and social exclusion Ulster Rugby has been awarded £1.5m ( £0.5 each year 2012-13, 2013-14, 2014-15). This funding to Ulster Rugby will be applied to increasing participation in the sport in the top 30% of areas of multiple deprivation, to increasing the number of accredited coaches working within Disability by 10% and also to increase female participation including coaches.

In addition to this support, my Department over the past three years, through Sport NI has awarded just under £850,000 to Ulster Rugby thorough programmes which include the 'Investing in Performance Sport Programme', the 'Stadia Safety (Urgent Works) Programme' and the 'Sport Matters Capital Equipment Programme.'

In terms of planned support, a further £917,000 is anticipated, predominantly through Sport NI's Performance Focus Programme.

Department of Education

Education and Library Boards: Staff Increments

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 27166/11-15, for an update on the current position.
(AQW 30013/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): The appropriate documentation was submitted to DFP for approval to pay Education and Library Board staff's annual increments and 2013 pay award, due in April 2013, on 31 January 2014.

Schools: Defibrillators

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education what training his Department provides to teachers on the use of defibrillators.
(AQW 30020/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The decision on the part of a school to acquire a defibrillator and train staff in its use is a matter for each school individually. The health and safety of pupils and staff is the responsibility of the school management, accountable in the first instance to the Board of Governors.

Training for teachers is delivered to student teachers (in the form of Initial Teacher Education (ITE) courses) by the Higher Education Establishments (HEIs). For serving teachers training is provided by the Education and Library Boards (ELB) through, for example, the ELBs' Curriculum Advisory and Support Service (CASS) or the Health and Safety teams reflecting the specific training requirement identified by schools.

The Department for Employment and Learning has confirmed that the four locally based teacher training institutions do not currently provide ITE students with training on the use of defibrillators.

I am pleased to advise, however, that in light of requests from schools seeking guidance on the purchase of automatic external defibrillators (AEDs) and on the availability of training on their use, the ELBs and the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) established an Inter-Board/CCMS working group (the Group) - which includes representation from the NI Ambulance Service - to consider and address these matters.

The Group is working to develop a specification for the AED and to progress the AED procurement process in line with the statutory requirements under European Union procurement regulations. The ELBs have confirmed that draft school guidelines have also been developed.

In recognition that training in the use of AEDs is required alongside the development of the AED specification, the Group is also working to develop an AED training pack for schools.

A separate tender for training is being developed and it is hoped that the Group will be able to conclude the tender in the very near future.

Ballymena, Ballymoney and Moyle Council Areas: Spend

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education how much his Department has spent in the (i) Ballymoney; (ii) Ballymena; and (iii) Moyle council areas since May 2011.
(AQW 30114/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The information requested is detailed in the table below.

Council Area	Spend from April 2011 to Date
Ballymoney	£65,690,516
Ballymena	£196,007,839
Moyle	£42,788,679

South Down and Strangford: Minor Works in Schools

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Education to detail all instances where minor works were carried out in schools in the (i) South Down; and (ii) Strangford constituencies, including the total financial investment this represented.
(AQW 30152/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The following tables details minor work schemes that have been approved in the (i) South Down; and (ii) Strangford constituencies during the period April 2011 to December 2013:

(i) South Down

Teachers: Pay Award

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Education for an update on the progress of the Teachers' Negotiating Committee discussions regarding the 2013/14 pay award for teachers; and when these negotiations are scheduled to conclude (AQW 30238/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I am aware that on 9 September 2013, NITC (NI Teachers Council), made up of the 5 teaching unions, submitted a claim for uplift on teachers pay from September 2013.

I have urged Management Side of the Teachers Negotiating Committee (made up of employer and departmental representatives) to consider this claim and bring negotiations to conclusion.

Blind and Visually Impaired Children and Young People

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Education to outline the timescale for a cross-departmental review into the provision of habitation services in blind and visually impaired children and young people. (AQW 30245/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: As part of the Action Plan 2014-2016 contained in the Royal National Institute of the Blind's Vision Strategy for the north of Ireland, Visually Impaired sector organisations have agreed to pursue a statutory review of habilitation services for blind and partially sighted children including referral pathways.

Looked-after Children and Young People: Numbers

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of looked after children and young people in each Education and Library Board. (AQW 30283/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The most up-to-date validated figures for looked after children relate to the 2012/13 school year, these are detailed in the table overleaf. Updated 2013/14 figures will be available following the completion of the annual school census which is currently being undertaken.

'Looked after' pupils by Education and Library Board - 2012/13

	Belfast	Western	North Eastern	South Eastern	Southern	Total
Looked after children	223	254	366	315	293	1,451
Total enrolments	57,396	56,572	72,165	63,077	75,045	324,255
% of pupils that are looked after	0.4%	0.4%	0.5%	0.5%	0.4%	0.4%

Source: NI school census

Note:

- Figures include pupils in nursery schools, primary (including nursery, reception and year 1-7 classes), post-primary and special schools.
- 'Looked after children' includes children defined in 'The Children (NI) Order 1995', i.e., 'a child who is looked after by an authority is a reference to a child who is—
(a) in the care of the authority; or
(b) provided with accommodation by the authority.'
This includes children who are fostered.
- ELB refers to the school location rather than the ELB in which the pupil is resident.

Personal Education Plans

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education for an update on the implementation of Personal Education Plans for looked after children and young people.

(AQW 30284/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department co-chairs the Regional Personal Education Plan (PEP) Implementation Group, which is representative of the Health and Social Care Trusts (HSCTs), Education and Library Boards (ELBs) and the Youth Justice Agency.

Following the first year of PEP implementation, feedback from schools, social workers and young people suggested that the PEP should be refined. Work is now underway to do this and to revise the associated guidance.

My expectations for looked after children are no less than for any other child. Given the potential impact of robust PEPs on raising educational attainment for looked after children, I have provided funding for substitute teacher costs to release teachers from the classroom to complete PEPs and to attend looked after children review meetings.

Educational Psychology: Cost

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education what is the unit cost of Educational Psychology services in each Education and Library Board.

(AQW 30288/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education and Library Boards have advised that the unit cost of Educational Psychology services, in the 2012/13 financial year, was as follows:-

	Unit Cost
BELB	£32
NEELB	£26
SEELB	£34
SELB	£27
WELB	£29

The above figures have been calculated based on costs in respect of both core and earmarked funding for psychology services and psychology administration.

Looked-after Children and Young People: Attendance

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education to detail the attendance rates for looked after children and young people in each Education and Library Board, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 30290/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The information requested is detailed in the table below. The most recent data available is for the school year 2011/12. Updated figures for 2012/13 will be available at the end of February.

Schools: Development Proposals

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Education when he will make a decision on the development proposals for (i) St. Mary's Junior High School, Lurgan; (ii) St. Paul's Junior High School, Lurgan; and (iii) St. Michael's Grammar School, Lurgan.
(AQW 30337/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: On 2 September 2013, the Southern Education and Library Board (SELB) published Development Proposal (DP) No. 294, which proposes that St Michael's Grammar School, St Mary's High School and St Paul's Junior High School, Lurgan amalgamate to form a new co-educational 11-18 voluntary grammar school with effect from 1 September 2014, or as soon as possible thereafter. The statutory two-month objection period ended on 4 November 2013.

DE officials are in the process of preparing advice for my consideration and I anticipate being in a position to make a decision on the proposal in the near future.

Schools: Suspensions and Expulsions

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of pupil (i) suspensions; and (ii) expulsions in each Education and Library Board in each of the last three years.
(AQW 30338/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department publishes statistics on pupil suspensions and expulsions on its website. The information is provided annually by the Education and Library Boards (ELBs). The table below details the number of pupil suspensions in each ELB in each of the last three years.

Suspensions

ELB	2010/11	2011/12	2012/13
BELB	835	816	757
WELB	746	753	630

SEELB	879	828	788
SELB	735	616	581
Total	4240	3879	3556

The table below details the total number of school expulsions which have occurred in each of the last three years. This information cannot be broken down by individual ELB as the numbers involved are so small that doing so would carry a high risk of allowing individual pupils to be identified.

This position reflects the Statistics Authority Code of Practice on Official Statistics, in particular Principle 5, relating to confidentiality.

Principal Posts: Vacancies

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education (i) how many vacancies for Principal posts occurred in each employing authority, in each sector, during the last school year; (ii) what was the number of applicants for each post; and (iii) how many were not filled following the initial advertisement.

(AQW 30343/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education and Library Boards and the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools have provided the figures, in relation to Principal vacancies for the 2012/2013 academic year, in the tables below.

Middletown Centre for Autism

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 30039/11-15, in relation to the twenty children referred to outreach support, to detail the total hours of support received in each case; and for a breakdown of the support provided. (AQW 30350/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Chief Executive of the Middletown Centre for Autism has advised that the total hours of support received by the twenty children is as follows:

Referral Number	Hours of Direct Support
1	214
2	197
3	77
4	137
5	191
6	109
7	118

The support received can include specialist interventions from the following disciplines in order to meet the individual needs of each child:

- Specialist Occupational Therapy;
- Specialist Speech and Language Therapy;
- Autism Interventional Specialist Support;
- Educational Psychological Assessment;
- Specialist Teacher Support;
- Specialist Learning Support in the classroom;
- Home Support.

Schools: Unused Premises

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the unused school premises in the South Eastern Education and Library Board area. (AQW 30395/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The following is a list of all unused school premises in the South Eastern Education and Library Board, as at 31 January 2014.

- 1 Newtownbreda Primary School
- 2 Kindle Primary School, Ballykinler
- 3 Brookfield Special School
- 4 Hilden Integrated Primary School

- 5 Newport Primary School
- 6 Ballykeigle Primary School
- 7 Cottown Primary School*
- 8 Rathvernette Primary School

*recently used as Cottown Reading Unit until Autumn 2013.

This list includes only assets where there are still buildings/premises on site. Most have been officially declared surplus and are at some stage of the disposal process.

Schools Enhancement Programme

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Education for an update on the Schools Enhancement Programme.
(AQO 5475/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: There are currently 51 applications to the Schools Enhancement Programme (SEP) going through Economic Appraisals to ensure any investment that is made represents best value for the public purse.

As detailed within the SEP Protocol, and in recognition of the range of infrastructure issues facing schools, the programme will consider proposals within one of 3 streams: rationalisation proposals; insufficient accommodation to meet educational needs; and significant accommodation inadequacies.

Proposals considered as having met the necessary criteria will be considered and ranked within each work stream.

An announcement of projects which will receive funding, and the level of that funding will be made in due course..

Shared Education

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister of Education how shared education is being enhanced in the Area Planning process.
(AQO 5476/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: As the member will be aware my Department has a strong commitment to Shared Education as witnessed by the commitments made in the Programme for Government. I believe the work that I and my Department have been undertaking on a range of fronts will help to advance Shared Education here.

In relation to Area Planning the Terms of Reference I set require engagement by all sectors. They explicitly encourage creative and innovative solutions, including opportunities for shared schooling across sectors.

The Area Planning Guidance emphasise my commitment to shared education and that in bringing forward area solutions or proposals I expect the Planning Authorities to explore opportunities for sharing at all levels.

I would take the opportunity to remind members that in addition to moving forward with the recommendations flowing from the work of the Advisory Group on shared education, I recently launched the Shared Education Campuses Programme. As part of the "Together: Building a United Community Strategy" this programme will help provide shared education facilities as part of delivering sustainable long term area provision.

Education and Library Boards: Staff Contracts

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Education whether his Department has budgeted for the incremental payments that are part of recognised contractual arrangements with existing Education and Library Board employees.
(AQO 5477/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I can confirm the Department of Education Budget 2011-15 takes account of incremental progression payments in respect of Education and Library Board employees.

Education and Training Strategy: 14- to 19-year-olds

Mr Douglas asked the Minister of Education for an update on the development of a strategy for 14-19 year olds in conjunction with the Minister for Employment and Learning.
(AQO 5478/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I will continue to work closely with my colleague the Minister for Employment and Learning on issues that affect the education and training of our young people. We both agree that the needs of our young people must be put first and that the coherent and joined up delivery of our respective policies is of a high priority. I regularly meet with the Minister for Employment and Learning to discuss how we can achieve even better cooperation and my officials from the most senior level down engage directly with their colleagues in the Department for Employment and Learning. This will continue to be the case.

This work will focus on what is important – the young people in our schools, colleges and training organisations. Supporting them, equipping them with the knowledge, understanding and skills they need to drive the economic future of this island we live on. That is my focus, and Minister Farry's focus. And that will continue to be our focus.

Area Learning Communities are where this partnership working is delivered on the ground. Excellent partnerships have been developed between schools and colleges and senior officials from my department have recently visited each Area Learning Community to find out the views and experience of principals and learn how we can make Area Learning Communities even more effective.

I appreciate that Members may be seeking a strategy document but my focus has been on the working strategic partnership between our two departments which remains robust. My officials continue to develop this strategic partnership, building on earlier work and to consider the development of a 14-19 Strategy in conjunction with DEL.

Education: Minor Works Scheme

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Education for an update on his Department's minor works scheme.
(AQO 5479/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: In 2013/14 the Minister allocated £46m for a programme of minor works in controlled schools and £31m to advance a programme of minor capital works in the non controlled sectors.

The budget to progress a programme of minor works for controlled schools is delegated to the each of the Education and Library Boards (ELBs).

Furthermore, to enable a programme of non controlled minor works projects to be taken forward by the ELBs a Memorandum of Agreement (MoA) has been implemented. This MoA established an approach upon which the ELBs and DE will progress minor works for the non controlled sector.

Free School Meals: Social Disadvantage

Mr Boylan asked the Minister of Education to outline any correspondence he has had with the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development regarding the use of the Free School Meal Entitlement as an indicator of social disadvantage among the school population.
(AQO 5480/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: There has been no correspondence with the OECD specifically relating to Free School Meal Entitlement as an indicator of social disadvantage.

The OECD recently published its Review of Evaluation and Assessment in Education here, which made reference to the use of free school meal entitlement as a measure of social disadvantage. They observed that whatever measure is used, we need to be transparent about the analysis and research that has informed this decision. This point was also re-iterated at a recent OECD dissemination event in Stranmillis.

My Department takes the view that entitlement to free school meals is an effective indicator of social disadvantage. Free school meals entitlement has a number of characteristics that make it the most reliable indicator for identifying social deprivation:

- It relates to the individual pupil so is more robust than a spatial measure which assumes everyone in an area is alike;
- It is updated on a yearly basis, so is current;
- It is easily gathered at school level and is available, to us, a part of the census return;
- It is highly correlated with the multiple deprivation measure and with the Income Deprivation Affecting Children Index (IDACI)

The view of the Independent Panel that conducted the Review of the Common Funding Scheme was that free school meals entitlement provides an indication of the relative concentration of potentially disadvantaged pupils in a given school in a way that no other indicator currently does.

I remain open to hearing suggestions as to better indicators that meet the characteristics I have just outlined.

Woodburn Primary School

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Education, in relation to his visit to Woodburn Primary School, Carrickfergus on 23 January 2014, for an update on the proposals for a replacement school building.
(AQO 5481/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: At present, there are no specific plans for a new build project for Woodburn Primary School.

A process is underway within the department to assess potential capital investment schemes. Woodburn PS has been forwarded by the North Eastern Education & Library Board as part of a list of potential candidate projects, and these projects will now be assessed together with potential schemes from the other Boards areas and from the non-controlled sectors.

The reality is that many schools are in need of investment and proposed projects are therefore competing for a limited pot of available capital. I will continue to examine the case for capital investment across the estate and any proposals for Woodburn Primary School will be considered as part of that process.

Department for Employment and Learning

Steps 2 Success: Tendering Process

Mr Copeland asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail (i) the scoring criteria for local companies who tendered for the Steps 2 Success program; and (ii) any disparity in the scoring criteria for companies outside Northern Ireland tendering for the same program.

(AQW 29993/11-15)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning):

(i) All companies who submitted bids were marked against the following scoring criteria.

(Reference) Requirement

- (SC 1) Using an example(s) detail how you planned for and implemented the business model to deliver the service. Your answer should cover the organisational structure, staffing and other resources required to deliver the service.
  - (SC 2) With respect to the example(s) at SC1 above was the timetable of the organisation who awarded you the contract met? If not detail the reasons why and how this was overcome. What challenges did you face in implementing this service? What actions did you take to address these challenges and what was the result of these actions?
  - (SC 3) Using an example(s) detail the processes and approaches you used to identify and meet the needs of both individuals and groups with different employability barriers to achieve the targets and other measures set by the organisation who awarded the contract?
  - (SC 4) Using an example(s) detail how you have managed your own staff and/or sub- contractors to ensure that the targets and other measures set by the organisation who awarded you the contract were met.
  - (SC 5) Using an example(s) detail how your organisation/ business model adapted to changing circumstances, both in terms of changing economic circumstances and changes to the requirements by the organisation who awarded the contract(s)? How was this managed and did it remain within budget.
  - (SC 6) Using an example(s) detail the practical processes and arrangements put in place in order to work in partnership with employers, trade bodies, the Third Sector and/ or statutory bodies to deliver the service and maximise employment opportunities. Detail the obstacles you encountered and the action taken to overcome these.
  - (SC 7) Using an example(s) detail how you have managed performance, describing the management structure, systems (including IT systems) and processes in place to deliver the service.
  - (SC 8) Using an example(s) detail the financial management, administrative and control systems in place to ensure the delivery of the service. Were control weaknesses identified in your systems and if so how were these addressed?
  - (SC 9) Using an example(s) detail the quality management systems and processes in place and the actions taken to identify, report and manage quality issues in delivering the service.
- Note: it is not sufficient to list quality standards achieved. The actual system and processes used must be detailed.
- (SC 10) Using an example(s) detail the risk management systems and processes in place, and the actions taken to identify report and manage risk in relation to the delivery of the service.
  - The Economic and Financial Standing of all bidding organisations were assessed on a satisfactory/unsatisfactory basis.

(ii) All companies were scored against the same published criteria, regardless of their geographical location.

Steps 2 Success: Tenders

Mr Copeland asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to (i) detail any local based tenders for the Steps 2 Success program, (ii) confirm which of these were successful.

(AQW 29994/11-15)

Dr Farry:

- (i) To protect the integrity of the procurement process of the Steps 2 Success competition, it is not possible to release information relating to those organisations who applied for each of the contract areas but were not successful.
- (ii) Details of the successful bidding organisations for all three contract areas have been published on the DEL website. These are as follows:

Contract Area 1: Andersonstown, Bangor, North Belfast, Falls, Holywood Road, Knockbreda, Lisburn, Newtownards, Shaftesbury Square, Shankill.

Successful Organisations

- Avanta Enterprise Ltd
- EOS Works Ltd
- Ingeus UK Ltd
- Pertemps People Development Group
- Reed in Partnership
- Sencia Ltd

Contract Area 2: Antrim, Ballymena, Ballymoney, Carrickfergus, Coleraine, Foyle, Larne, Limavady, Lisnagelvin, Newtownabbey, Strabane.

Successful Organisations

- Avanta Enterprise Ltd
- EOS Works Ltd
- Ingeus UK Ltd
- Pertemps People Development Group
- Reed in Partnership
- Sencia Ltd

Contract Area 3: Armagh, Ballynahinch, Banbridge, Cookstown, Downpatrick, Dungannon, Enniskillen, Kilkeel, Lurgan, Magherafelt, Newcastle, Newry, Omagh, Portadown.

Successful Organisations

- Avanta Enterprise Ltd
- Reed in Partnership
- Sencia Ltd
- Maximus Employment & Training Ltd
- South West College

G4S has withdrawn from the competition for the Steps 2 Success competition for Contract Area 3.

North West Regional College: Vehicle Body and Paint Operations

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of whether insurance costs have prevented students from (i) attending the Body Workshop course at the North Coast College; (ii) attaining placements within the industry; and to detail the action he will take to assist these students and the college.

(AQW 30004/11-15)

Dr Farry: Students attending the Vehicle Body and Paint course at the North West Regional College are participants on my Department's Training for Success programme.

All Suppliers delivering the Training for Success programme have a contractual obligation to ensure that every participant is fully insured during their time in training. Suppliers must also ensure that employers offering work placements hold appropriate insurance.

North West Regional College has assured my officials that no one has been prevented from attending the Vehicle Body and Paint course due to any issue with insurance.

Whilst it is accepted that difficulties exist in securing work placements, insurance costs cannot be isolated as the only factor; the present economic conditions have also contributed to the availability of work placements.

College records show that there are currently 27 participants on the Vehicle Body and Paint course, with 21 participants placed with employers. Please be assured that college staff will continue to engage with employers and make every effort to secure work placements for all participants on the Training for Success programme.

IT Sector: Skills Shortage

Mr Rogers asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline what steps his Department is taking to address the skill shortage that exists within the IT sector, given the continued inward investment by multi national companies.

(AQW 30201/11-15)

Dr Farry: The Assured Skills programme in partnership with Invest NI is designed to help attract new foreign direct investment companies to Northern Ireland, by assuring them that the skills they need to be successful are available in Northern Ireland.

Employers within the IT sector have raised concerns regarding skill shortages and the impact they are having on their ability to grow the sector. In response to those concerns I convened an ICT working group, to identify the skills challenges faced by the sector and put in place an ICT Skills Action Plan which sets out how these issues will be addressed by business, Government and education and training providers in the short, medium and longer term.

The ICT Skills Action Plan was launched in June 2012 and implementation of the actions has been progressing steadily. This work is having a positive impact on the skills shortages in the sector.

Applications to IT-related degrees at our local universities have risen by over 24% in the last year alone and new initiatives continue to be taken forward.

Three cohorts of the Software Testers Academy have been completed. The latest cohort, completed in December 2013, saw 27 students trained as software testers with 21 students finding full time employment in the sector. Four students are currently seeking employment whilst two other students left the course and gained employment.

The Cloud Academy, which provides unemployed graduates with the skills and experience required to take up exciting new opportunities within the cloud computing sector, is an ongoing academy which commenced in September 2013, with 14 students currently being trained. Training will be completed by May 2014.

A Big Data (Deloitte Analytic Training Academy) has also been taken forward. This academy involved a nine week intensive training programme targeted at graduates and provided 17 students with the skills and accredited qualifications identified by Deloitte for new job opportunities in their Belfast Office.

My officials have also worked together with the Department of Finance and Personnel and local ICT employers to develop a Public/Private ICT Apprenticeship scheme. The pilot scheme, launched in August 2012 resulted in 32 apprentices being recruited and trained for the ICT sector. A second cohort of the scheme was launched in August 2013, in response to employer demand, which led to 42 apprentices being recruited. My officials are also working to develop the scheme and launch it in the North West to support employers in that area.

The Department has also worked with local Colleges to develop a Software Professional Course. The course is due to commence on 3 February 2014 and will provide the re-skilling of 250 non-ICT HND or graduates over the next three years.

Both of our local universities are now offering MSc courses for non-IT graduates that have resulted in over 200 graduates receiving training to ensure they are ready to work in the local ICT sector.

Furthermore, in conjunction with the ICT Skills Working Group, the Department of Education has worked with CCEA and local employers to develop a new A level curriculum in 'Software Systems Development'. This A level is now available in schools and the first teaching of the course began in September 2013. Local employers have been working with teachers to ensure they are capable of delivering the new curriculum.

Another significant development is the arrangement between e-skills UK, Sentinus and Momentum to raise the awareness and attractiveness of the ICT sector across all levels of education – from primary school right through to university.

Support for the implementation of the ICT Skills Action Plan has been widespread. In September 2013 I attended a Digital Summit, organised by Momentum, the IT trade association in Northern Ireland. The Summit was extremely positive, attracting involvement from all the stakeholders involved in the ICT sector, including a number of my Ministerial colleagues, to address the issues of access to skills, access to funds and access to markets.

The Summit provided an open forum to discuss the skills requirements of the sector and all stakeholders endorsed the progress being made as a result of the implementation of the ICT Action Plan.

However, it is imperative that we continue to strive to ensure this extremely important sector is supported by a suitably skilled workforce. For that reason the ICT Skills Working Group met again in December 2013 with the purpose of reviewing the ICT Skills Action Plan to ensure it continues to meet the needs of the local ICT sector.

The Group agreed an updated and refreshed ICT Skills Action Plan which will soon be available via my Department's website.

Travel Expenditure

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the total expenditure on Ministerial travel from (i) January to June 2013; and (ii) July to December 2013.
(AQW 30356/11-15)

Dr Farry: From January to June 2013 the total expenditure for Ministerial overseas travel was £1,963; and from July to December 2013 the total expenditure was £4,612.

These figures include travel by train, aeroplane and hire car.

Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment

Tourism: Scots/Irish Community in the USA

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) any proposals to promote tourism to the Scotch-Irish community in the USA during 2014; and (ii) the total cost of any such plans.
(AQW 29754/11-15)

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): The Scots-Irish community in the USA is an important market for us to target in our marketing efforts.

As specified in its Business Plan 2014, Tourism Ireland proposes to highlight Northern Ireland to the Scots-Irish community at a number of events this year. The most prestigious event is the Stone Mountain Highland Games in Atlanta, Georgia, which takes place in October and attracts up to 80,000 individuals of Scots and Scots-Irish descent over a two-day weekend cultural festival featuring music, entertainment, educational and sporting events.

Tourism Ireland plans to hold a festival opening night networking event; to sponsor the festival's music stage and music group "Stonewall"; to provide a tourist information booth with the participation of the Ulster-Scots Association and the Ulster Historical Foundation; and to sponsor the Scots-Irish chef Judith McLoughlin, who will lecture on Scots-Irish cuisine and tours to NI.

Other events targeting the US market (including the Scots-Irish Community) which will provide opportunities for highlighting NI as a tourism destination, and to promote Scots-Irish connections between NI and the US, planned by Tourism Ireland throughout the year, include:

- The USA PGA Merchandising Show in Orlando, Florida, which attracts over 40,000 golf professionals and representation from all 50 US states and 74 other countries.
- Sales blitzes in Atlanta, Florida, Texas, Chicago/Boston and in Canada.
- At food fairs in Austin, Texas and Aspen, Colorado.
- At the Barclay's Championship PGA Golf tour and at the Deutsche Bank PGA Golf Championship in Boston.

Tourism Ireland's total budget for marketing both Northern Ireland and the island of Ireland in North America in 2014 is £8.6 million - this includes all promotional activity targeting the Scots-Irish community.

Farming: Safety Measures

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the amount in her budget that has been allocated for farm safety measures in (i) 2014; (ii) 2015; and (iii) 2016.
(AQW 29949/11-15)

Mrs Foster: In 2014/15 the Health and Safety Executive for Northern Ireland (HSENI) has committed over £350,000 towards its farm safety programme. This programme includes expenditure on a farm safety media campaign, a child safety campaign, farm safety awareness days and a farm safety focus at several agricultural shows.

In addition to this programme expenditure HSENI has a dedicated team of staff working on farm safety issues. Other HSENI staff also contribute to specific farm safety activities, for example the 1000 farm advisory visits currently underway.

HSENI will continue to work hard with the other partners in the Farm Safety Partnership to maximise the resources available to address farm safety issues in Northern Ireland.

The NI Executive has yet to agree and allocate budgets for 2015/16 and 2016/17.

Visits to Constituencies

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of ministerial visits she has made to each constituency since April 2011.
(AQW 29964/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The information sought is not readily available and may only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Invest NI: County Fermanagh

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) the companies located in County Fermanagh; and (ii) the amount of funding each company has received from InvestNI since 2008.
(AQW 29965/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest NI does not hold information on (i) all the companies located in County Fermanagh; however, the table below shows (ii) those companies located in County Fermanagh that have received an offer of financial support from Invest NI during the period 1st April 2008 to 31st March 2013.

Invest NI: Business Plans

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) the number of business plans that have received InvestNI assistance; and (ii) the number of new businesses that have emerged as a direct result of InvestNI assistance, in the last 12 months.

(AQW 29981/11-15)

Mrs Foster:

- (i) Invest NI receives applications for support in many different formats, including Business Plans, Training Plans, Research & Development Plans, Application Forms etc. As a consequence, Invest NI offered support to 4,986 projects in the last financial year (2012-13), 171 of which were classified as new business start-ups. However, it is not possible to provide a more detailed analysis by type of application format used.
- (ii) During the same period Invest NI offered support to 1,574 additional new business start-ups through the Regional Start Initiative (formerly the Enterprise Development Programme).

British-Irish Council and North/South Ministerial Council Meetings

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the ministerial meetings on energy issues which have taken place under the auspices of (i) the British Irish Council, including the reasons for the lack of meetings; and (ii) the North South Ministerial Council.

(AQW 29983/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Details of meetings, including Ministerial meetings, held under the auspices of the British Irish Council are available from the following website: www.britishirishcouncil.org. In each case the published communiqué provides details of issues discussed, including, where appropriate, energy issues.

Details of meetings under the auspices of the North South Ministerial Council and reports on issues discussed, including, where appropriate, energy issues are available from the following website: www.northsouthministerialcouncil.org.

Employment Contracts

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the proportion of jobs (i) created; and (ii) promoted which are (a) permanent contracts versus fixed term; and (b) full-time versus part-time employment, for the most recent consecutive five years for which data is available.

(AQW 30016/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest NI reports jobs on a Full Time Equivalent (FTE) basis. During the period 2008-09 to 2012-13, Invest NI promoted 31,787 FTE jobs. Invest NI's support for job promotion is conditional on the maintenance of the employment created for a minimum of five years (three years in the case of SMEs). Therefore, all Invest NI employment-related assistance relates to permanent jobs.

Invest NI currently only reports on the number of jobs that have been created through the Jobs Fund. Since the scheme's inception in 2011-12 and 31 December 2013, it has created 4,177 new jobs.

Invest NI: Resources

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the amount of InvestNI resources which were targeted towards jobs in the promoted category versus jobs created category, for the most recent consecutive five years for which data is available.

(AQW 30017/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest NI currently reports on the basis of jobs promoted by the companies it supports. Grant support is offered at the start of a project based on a company's commitment to create a set number of new jobs. These jobs are known as promoted jobs. Funding for these jobs is then paid as the new jobs are filled by the company. These are known as created jobs; therefore, created jobs are a product of promoted jobs.

The table below shows the amount of assistance offered by Invest NI to promote jobs in the last five full financial years (2008/09 to 2012/13).

Invest NI Assistance Offered to Job Related Projects (2008-09 to 2012-13)

	Assistance Offered £m
2008-09	76.11
2009-10	78.88
2010-11	52.59
2011-12	31.20
2012-13	49.15

British-Irish Council and North/South Ministerial Council Meetings

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the ministerial meetings on tourism issues which have taken place under the auspices of (i) the British Irish Council; and (ii) the North South Ministerial Council, since May 2007.

(AQW 30033/11-15)

Mrs Foster: There were three British Irish Council Summit meetings between May 2007 and September 2008 at which Tourism issues were on the agenda and discussed. Since then my Department has provided briefing specifically requested on tourism issues related to broader agenda items on two occasions (June 2010 and June 2013).

There have been ten North South Ministerial Council meetings in Tourism Sectoral format since May 2007.

British-Irish Council and North/South Ministerial Council Meetings

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the ministerial meetings on trade issues which have taken place under the auspices of (i) the British Irish Council; and (ii) the North South Ministerial Council, since May 2007.

(AQW 30056/11-15)

Mrs Foster: A total of 10 North South Ministerial Council Trade and Business Development sectoral meetings have taken place since May 2007.

Trade is not one of the twelve mandated British Irish Council work sectors.

Renewable Energy: NIE

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of applications by NI Electricity to the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation for the connection of renewable projects, including the number of those that were successful, for each month since January 2012.

(AQW 30076/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Northern Ireland Electricity advises that it does not apply to the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation for the connection of renewable projects.

Electricity: Self-disconnection

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) the definition used by her Department for self-disconnection of electricity; and (ii) the number of households that currently use prepayment meters for electricity, including the percentage of prepayment electricity users that self-disconnect at least (a) once per year; (b) twice per year; and (c) once per month.

(AQW 30079/11-15)

Mrs Foster:

- (i) While the term "self-disconnection" is not defined in legislation, there are provisions in legislation and supplier licences to protect customers from disconnection.
- (ii) I am informed by the Regulator that as at October 2013, there were 304,098 domestic prepayment customers out of a total of 781,257 domestic customers. I am further informed that the Regulator does not hold information on the percentage of electricity users that self-disconnect.

Foreign Direct Investment: South Down

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how her Department is working to attract foreign investment to South Down.

(AQW 30107/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest Northern Ireland competes for Foreign Direct Investment (FDI) in the global market. Invest NI promotes Northern Ireland as an attractive and viable location for inward investment opportunities to new investors, along with the parent companies of existing foreign owned investors. Northern Ireland's investment proposition is therefore promoted on the basis of a talented and loyal workforce, advanced telecoms infrastructure, highly skilled business clusters, a pro-business environment, competitive operating costs and proximity to major markets.

The requirements will vary depending on the nature of the project, but a company will typically look at existing investors in the same business sector (Invest NI's key target sectors being ICT, business services, financial services and renewables); universities and colleges that offer courses relating to that sector; and suitable, available property.

Areas in which these desired features do not exist, or are not clearly presented, are unlikely to attract the attention of potential investors to visit or locate in the area. In addition, potential investors are often drawn to population centres that they consider will provide the appropriate number of suitably skilled potential employees. Therefore a clear understanding and evidence of skill demographics for any region would greatly assist a potential investor in considering a particular area.

This understanding and appreciation of South Down's key demographics and area attributes is achieved through direct engagement with interested parties. Invest NI is working closely with both Down and Newry & Mourne Councils, and other stakeholders, to develop a sales proposition which shows the strengths and opportunities in their respective areas which will attract potential inward investors to visit, locate there and grow in the surrounding South Down area.

Invest NI has also developed an 'FDI app' and a 'District Council App' which will help present a snapshot of the benefits of setting up in Northern Ireland to potential investors. Both Down and Newry & Mourne Area Councils have indicated that they wish to be involved and Invest NI is working with them on this to develop these downloadable mobile applications which will form part of each Council, or group of Councils, promotional toolkit highlighting each Council area's attractiveness as a potential investment location.

As the South Down offering develops, both councils should reflect this by updating the 'FDI app' and continuing engagement with Invest NI's Southern Regional Office - located in Newry. Continued engagement with Government to develop South Down as a competitive destination, development of relevant skills and increased availability of sites ready for business investment, all have the potential to improve South Down's visible proposition and place it in further contention to attract inward investment.

Ultimately however, the investor will make the decision as to where they locate based on their specific business needs and having considered the options available to them. I hope this provides clarification on your query. Please be assured, that my Department, including Invest NI, are working hard to improve the economic wellbeing of the whole of Northern Ireland.

North West Regional Science Park

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on InvestNI's progress in attracting tenants to the North West Regional Science Park.

(AQW 30119/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The North West Regional Science Park (NWRSP) is due for completion in August 2014 and as such, is not yet part of the Northern Ireland proposition, nor the current offering for the Foyle Constituency in attracting potential Foreign Direct Investors. Invest NI overseas sales teams are aware of the future development of the NWRSP but the lack of a completed physical entity has to date meant no commitment has been secured for an investor to locate there.

However, my Department looks forward to the completion of the NWRSP as the success of this project and the increased availability of sites ready for business investment, all have the potential to improve the North West region's visible proposition and place it in further contention to attract inward investment.

Commonwealth Games 2014

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail her Department's strategy for maximising the benefit of the 2014 Commonwealth Games, including its representation at the games.

(AQW 30129/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The 2014 Commonwealth Games offer the opportunity to highlight Northern Ireland to local and visiting international media and participants alike.

My Department, through Tourism Ireland, will identify tour operators in relevant Commonwealth countries who are packaging trips to the Games and work to influence them to include Northern Ireland in their programmes. Tourism Ireland will also work with Games committee members and others to identify any other avenues for promoting Northern Ireland.

Whilst plans are not yet finalised, engagement with the media is underway and potential activity will be rolled out through traditional and social media in advance of, during and after the Games.

Any representation at the Games will be considered as plans progress.

British Embassy/Irish Embassy: Agrifood Event

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) the involvement of the British Embassy in Washington D.C. in the recent agri-food event in Beltville, in which Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute and InvestNI participated; and (ii) the involvement of the Irish Embassy.

(AQW 30145/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Northern Ireland Bureau was heavily involved in initiating the lead role for Northern Ireland in securing an opportunity for the Agri Food and Biosciences Institute's Director of Sustainable Agri Food Science and five other senior scientific staff to attend and speak at the four day conference in November 2013.

The Bureau, with the support of Invest NI North America, also assisted by arranging a broader itinerary aimed at maximising the time the scientists could engage with a wider scientific audience. Relevant representatives from the Canadian and Irish embassies and the US Department of Agriculture were also present at the Forum. Invest NI North America provided financial support of $5,000 towards the costs of the event.

The Irish Embassy played no part in organising the Forum. The Agricultural Attaché at the Irish Embassy attended some elements of the Forum and provided support to the four person team from Teagasc, the Republic of Ireland's agri-food body, who travelled to the US to participate in the Forum. Teagasc attendance at the Forum was discussed in advance between the Chief Executive of AFBI and the Head of Research and Development at Teagasc.

Energy: Electricity Generation

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether the construction of electricity generation infrastructure will be subject to the allocation of full planning permission before any contractual arrangements are made.

(AQW 30169/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Planning permission and the conditions attached to such permission, if required, are matters for the Department of the Environment. Where any person seeking a grant of planning permission in relation to electricity infrastructure decides to enter into contractual commitments prior to obtaining that permission, that is a commercial decision and not a matter within the scope of my Department's functions.

Invest NI: Rockabill NI Ltd

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether InvestNI has provided Rockabill NI Ltd advice or financial support; and if so, to provide details of this advice or support.

(AQW 30197/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest NI has not provided any financial support or advice to Rockabill NI Ltd.

Belfast: Decentralisation of Jobs

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, given that Belfast is the most congested city in the UK, to outline how her Department is working to decentralise jobs, in particular IT roles, from Belfast.

(AQW 30198/11-15)

Mrs Foster: It is important to note that Invest NI does not determine the location of an inward investment project and is not in a position to sign up to sub-regional targets including decentralisation of jobs created from Foreign Direct Investment (FDI) projects won. Northern Ireland competes for FDI against some much larger nation states. In order to maximise our presence in overseas markets, Invest NI focuses on selling Northern Ireland as a whole.

A typical FDI investor will make the decision as to where they locate based on their specific business needs having weighed up the options available to them - taking into account existing investors in the same business sector, universities and colleges that offer courses relating to that sector; suitable, available property and population centres that they consider will provide the appropriate number of suitably skilled potential employees.

As noted by the Independent Review of Economic Policy, it is important to allow companies the scope to locate where they can operate most profitably. To do otherwise would be detrimental to the chances of securing Foreign Direct Investment (FDI) for Northern Ireland.

In compliance with European Commission's Regional Aid Guidelines, Invest NI can negotiate varying levels of Selective Financial Assistance (SFA) dependent upon where potential investors may choose to locate. Geographically, there are only two categories for consideration, which are FDI projects locating within 1) Belfast District Council Area and 2) Rest of Northern Ireland. The maximum contribution that Invest NI can make to a project under SFA is determined by the European Commission's Regional Aid Guidelines. Currently the maximum additional contribution threshold for a potential FDI project locating outside Belfast DCA is 5% more than the maximum contribution that can be offered towards the same project locating within Belfast DCA.

Within the maximum contribution levels Invest NI will negotiate different levels of support taking into consideration factors such as job quality, a project's impact on local employment, availability of labour etc. Once again, it should be stressed that the investor will make the decision as to where they locate based on their specific business needs and having weighed up the options available to them.

The Independent Review of Economic Policy also acknowledged Invest NI's approach to Inward Investment as being the most appropriate, recognised the importance of FDI in building a more dynamic and innovative private sector and acknowledged that, per capita, Northern Ireland has been one of the most successful UK regions at attracting FDI.

Farming: Funding for Safety Measures

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the level of funding her Department apportioned to on-farm safety measures in each of the last three years, including each project that received funding.

(AQW 30202/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment continues to raise awareness of key safety messages for the farming industry through the work of the Health and Safety Executive for Northern Ireland (HSENI).

In 2011/12, £75,000 was attributed to the delivery of farm safety messages by the HSENI. In response to the increase in farming fatalities, the expenditure was increased to exceed £400,000 in 2012/13. Within the first three quarters of the current financial year (2013/14), over £300,000 has been dedicated to creating a safety first culture amongst the farming community through media, education, publication and events.

DARD also provides ongoing financial contributions towards the work of the HSENI in this area, by means of their involvement in the Farm Safety Partnership and through funding towards the farm safety media campaign. The DARD contributions are included in the figures shown above.

Trade: Kurdistan

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, following recent activity between Northern Ireland and the Kurdistan Regional Government, what potential exists for firms based in the East Londonderry constituency to build trade links.

(AQW 30204/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Kurdistan is a market with potential for Northern Ireland companies. It is, however, not a market for inexperienced exporters. Companies will need to visit this market regularly over a reasonable time period and research the market before selecting the correct partner. Invest NI has worked with a number of businesses located in the East Londonderry constituency, from across a range of industry sectors. Many have been introduced to potential customers or have discussed opportunities in the Kurdistan region.

Newsread Ltd

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what representations she has made to Newsread Limited in relation to the substantial increase in service charges to local newsagents.

(AQW 30225/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The issue of a service charge increase by Newsread Limited has not been raised with me therefore no representations have been made. I have asked my officials to investigate this issue.

The National Federation of Retail Newsagents (NFRN) representatives have raised the issue of a separate increase in carriage charges by EM News. DETI Officials met with representatives from the NFRN on 27 November 2013 to discuss that issue and with representatives from the Competition & Markets Authority on 4 February 2014 to outline the concerns expressed by NFRN members.

Third Sector Organisations: Funding

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) the departmentally funded third sector organisations providing services to the public; and (ii) the value of each funding package.

(AQW 30236/11-15)

Mrs Foster:

(I) Departmentally Funded Third Sector Organisation	(II) Value of Each Funding Package
Outdoor Recreation Northern Ireland (Service Level Agreement 2013/14)	£120,000
Mourne Heritage Trust (Service Level Agreement 2013/14)	£ 55,000
Causeway Coast & Glens Heritage Trust (Service Level Agreement 2013/14)	£ 20,000
Visit Belfast – Business 2 Business (Service Level Agreement 2013/14)	£225,000
Visit Belfast – Visitor Information (Service Level Agreement 2013/14)	£177,000
Social Enterprise Northern Ireland	Maximum of £450,000 over 3 years
AdviceNI funded through a commercially tendered 3 year contract to deliver debt advice across NI. We do not fund AdviceNI as a third sector body other than through the commercial contract and we have no long or medium term commitment to fund outside of this contract.	2012/13 £669,374 2013/14 £953,808 2014/15 £955,430

Tamboran Resources/AMEC

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (i) whether she is aware of discrepancies between the figures presented to her Department by Tamboran Resources and the figures presented by AMEC plc in the UK Strategic Environmental Assessment; (ii) for her assessment and explanation of those discrepancies; (iii) what independent verification of Tamboran's figures her Department has completed; and (iv) what independent verification will her Department carry out on onshore petroleum licence holders.

(AQW 30251/11-15)

Mrs Foster:

- (i) Yes.
- (ii) The figures presented by Tamboran Resources relate to the possible development of shale gas in the Lough Allen Basin (including parts of County Fermanagh) whereas the figures produced by AMEC relate to future shale gas development in Great Britain. Different development scenarios and parameter values are used in the two models.
- (iii) Any estimates about the financial benefits that might arise from shale gas development depend on the production scenario used in the calculation, and ultimately on the quantity and quality of the reserves and the costs of production. At this stage of exploration, before any deep boreholes have been drilled, figures produced in connection with any future shale gas production inevitably contain a large degree of uncertainty and must be treated with caution.
- (iv) My Department will carry out verification of information presented by onshore petroleum licence holders as and when it is appropriate to do so.

Larne Port: Job Promotion and Creation

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what assistance her Department can provide to the Port of Larne for job promotion and creation measures.

(AQW 30260/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest NI principally supports businesses in the manufacturing and tradeable services sectors to grow through support for a range of activities including research and development, people management, strategic development, e-business, environmental impact and export development.

Invest NI has previously provided support to the Port of Larne through a Carbon Trust Loan and a scoping study into opportunities within the sustainable energy supply chain.

Invest NI continues to engage with the Port of Larne to scope any potential project and provide advice on the potential for Invest NI to support the growth of the business and create additional jobs. Invest NI may be able to provide further support to the Port of Larne in the future based on the business satisfying Invest NI eligibility criteria and Invest NI intervention principles.

Ulster Bank: Job Cuts

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what discussions she has had with the senior management of The Ulster Bank or The Royal Bank of Scotland in relation to the Irish Bank Officials Association fears that an announcement of compulsory job cuts, reductions to pay and further branch closures is imminent.

(AQW 30478/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Banking is a reserved matter and, as such, my Department has no statutory oversight of the banking sector. However, I recognise the importance of growing the financial sector in Northern Ireland. I am also aware of the challenges banks are facing as they seek to recapitalise and restructure and the implications this has on local operations and staff.

Along with the Finance Minister, I meet with representatives from Ulster Bank on a regular basis to discuss a range of issues including restructuring and the impact this may have on Northern Ireland. We are scheduled to meet with Ulster Bank officials again on 20 February. At this meeting I will be seeking an update on proposed branch closures and job losses and will emphasise how important it is that senior management in these banks are working to minimise the impacts of these closures.

Department of the Environment

Planning Application K/2013/0072/F

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, in relation to planning application K/2013/0072/F, to detail (i) the current status of the planning application; (ii) why he announced approval of a goldmine in Gortin, near Omagh, on 4 December 2012; and (iii) the outstanding issues that are currently referred to on his Department's website.

(AQW 29650/11-15)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): The current status of this application is 'Permission Granted' as of 22 January 2014.

The 4 December announcement I made followed a presentation to the Omagh District Council with an opinion to approve application K/2013/0072/F to the Omagh District Council's November Planning Committee meeting. Having heard subsequent representations from 3rd parties, I had instructed my officials to consider their concerns before the issue of formal planning approval.

The outstanding issues referred to on the Portal related to the preparation and issue of formal planning approval.

Listed Buildings: Boundaries

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 29284/11-15, why his Department is operating on the 1974 boundaries.

(AQW 29721/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The 'listing' of buildings of 'special architectural or historic interest' was introduced in 1973. Since then, all historic buildings have been given a seven figure reference number to identify them, both for internal record purposes, as well as for consistency for external, interested parties - including owners. These figures happen to relate to the district council area and electoral ward in which they were located in 1974 - for example - the Town Hall at Bangor Castle is recorded as HB 23/07/001A, with 'HB 23' being the North Down Council area.

The Department's focus is upon identifying and protecting listed buildings. Changing references to reflect changing electoral boundaries has a significant resource implication, and would be potentially confusing to owners and researchers.

Drivers: Fatalities

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of the Environment how many (i) men; and (ii) women aged (a) 17-19; (b) 20-29; (c) 30-39; (d) 40-49; (e) 50-59; (f) 60-69; (g) 70-79; (h) 80-89; and (i) over 90 years old hold a valid driving licence; and how many drivers in each category have been the contributing driver in fatal road accidents in each year since 2004.

(AQW 29954/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Details of the number of licence holders with entitlement to drive cars or motorcycles in each of the age categories requested is attached at Annex A. Figures include those with Group 1 licence entitlement – i.e. cars and motorcycles and do not include those with entitlement to drive Group 2 vehicles (lorry and bus) as these drivers hold entitlement to drive cars in addition to the Group 2 entitlement.

It should be noted that drivers with motorcycle entitlement may also hold entitlement to drive a car, so the 2 tables should not be totalled.

Figures in relation to drivers who have been the contributing driver in fatal road accidents in each year since 2004 by age are attached at Annex B. These figures have been supplied by the Police Service of Northern Ireland. Please note that these figures are based on the perception of responsibility by the police officer at the time of the collision. This data is collated for statistics purposes only and does not reflect the outcome of any court proceeding.

Driver and Vehicle Agency: Inspections

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of the Environment how many inspections under the Roadside Enforcement Initiative were carried out in (i) each county; and (ii) Belfast, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 29958/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Driver and Vehicle Agency publish an annual compendium of statistics which details total vehicle checks carried out by enforcement section. The reported statistics for the last three years are as follows:

2010/11	6086 checks
2011/12	6288 checks
2012/13	5706 checks

DVA does not routinely record vehicle checks by county, however, statistical analysis of enforcement data for 2012/13 shows the following:

County	Vehicle Checks 12/13
Antrim	887
Down	1164
Tyrone	972
Armagh	327
Fermanagh	234
Derry	1134
Belfast	988
Total	5706

Taxis: Wheelchair Users

Mr Frew asked the Minister of the Environment how his Department is ensuring that wheelchair users are not being overcharged by taxi companies.

(AQW 29976/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Equality Commission has advised that DDA legislation makes it unlawful for organisations such as transport service providers, including taxi operators, to discriminate against disabled people in the way in which they provide or do not provide their services.

Currently only Belfast Public Hire taxis operate under a regulated taximeter and fare regime. However, it is intended that the new Taximeter and Maximum Fare Regulations to be introduced in September 2014 will set a maximum fare tariff for all taxis in Northern Ireland and introduce a requirement for all taxis to fit a taximeter. These Regulations will make it an offence to charge any consumer more than the maximum fare regardless of the size and type of vehicle being provided, and will therefore provide protection for all taxi users.

Further to this, I have asked officials to liaise with Disability Action and the Inclusive Mobility & Transport Advisory Committee to see what further advice can be provided by the Department to operators regarding their responsibilities around these issues.

Taxis: Wheelchair Users

Mr Frew asked the Minister of the Environment how his Department is ensuring that taxi companies provide sufficient wheelchair accessible vehicles to meet demand.

(AQW 29977/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Whilst there is currently no requirement for operators to have a minimum number of wheelchair accessible vehicles in their fleet, my Department does however have powers under section 2(5) of the Taxis Act (NI) 2008 to specify a minimum percentage of taxis of a different class of use on an operator licence. We therefore keep the situation under review, to determine whether market activities achieve a balancing of supply and demand, or whether there is market failure requiring the Department to intervene.

As part of this, my Department has recently received the conclusions of research undertaken into the taxi industry in Northern Ireland, including the provision of wheelchair accessible vehicles. This research is currently being considered and will shortly be forwarded to the Environment Committee for their information.

The research will assist my Department in determining whether there is undersupply of wheelchair accessible vehicles in taxi fleets in Northern Ireland and, if this is the case, what actions may be appropriate to take to address this situation.

I would be content to share the results of the research with the Member upon its release to the Committee.

Planning Appeals: Enforcement Notices

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the enforcement notices served in November 2011, prior to the immunity timeframe change that were (i) appealed; (ii) successfully defended by the Department; and (iii) quashed.

(AQW 30001/11-15)

Mr Durkan: In November 2011 the Department served 110 Enforcement Notices. Of these 37 were appealed. Of the appeals heard, 14 were dismissed (notice upheld), 9 upheld (notice quashed). 7 notices were withdrawn by the Department, 6 appeals were withdrawn by the appellant and 1 made a nullity. The detail of this is laid out below.

Energy: Hydroelectric Projects

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the status of the document, co-published by the Planning Service, entitled "Small Hydroelectric schemes – Impacts on River Fisheries in Northern Ireland"; and whether this document is being taken into account in the assessment of applications for hydroelectric projects.

(AQW 30002/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The report referred to was commissioned by the former Department of Enterprise (now the Department of Enterprise and Investment – DETI) and was funded by Northern Ireland Electricity PLC. The planning policy context for assessing small hydroelectric schemes is contained within Planning Policy Statement 18 'Renewable Energy' and Best Practice Guidance to PPS 18, both published August 2009.

Following the introduction of the Water Abstraction and Impoundment (Licensing) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2006, NIEA, as the implementation body, introduced a Northern Ireland wide water resource management regime in order to control and licence activities that sustainably use water. Where an activity will or is likely to have, a significant or serious adverse impact on a waterway, protected habitat or protected species, under the terms of the Water Framework or Habitats Regulations the development will be refused. This research document has been referenced and taken into consideration in relation to the determination process for considering abstraction licences submitted for hydro power developments.

Habitats Directive: River Faughan

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, following the Head of Planning's written commitment to the Ombudsman on 7 September 2012 that his Department fully intends to respond in detail on all issues raised by River Faughan Anglers in relation to small scale hydroelectric schemes on the River Faughan Special Area of Conservation, why fifteen months later no response has been forthcoming.

(AQW 30003/11-15)

Mr Durkan: While many of the issues raised pertain to live planning applications and will be dealt with through the course of processing these applications, I have instructed my officials to assess all of the representations made by the River Faughan Anglers Ltd with a detailed response by the 14th February 2014.

Review of Public Administration: Update

Mr Byrne asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the Review of Public Administration.

(AQO 5341/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Local Government Reform programme remains on target for 1 April 2015.

The Local Government Bill was introduced into the Assembly on 23 September 2013 and is currently at Committee Stage. It is my aim to have the remaining Assembly stages scheduled for March 2014 with Royal Assent needed by early May 2014. The Bill is a major step towards making local government reform a reality and will provide the legislative framework necessary to give effect to the Executive's decisions on the future shape of local government.

Plans remain on track for elections to the new councils in May 2014. The Secretary of State has brought forward two pieces of legislation to make arrangements for the elections in May 2014. The District Electoral Areas (Northern Ireland) Order 2014 was laid before Parliament on 18 December.

All 11 Statutory Transition Committees (STCs) are now established and operating as required by the Regulations. The work of the STCs is monitored by the Regional Transitional Committee, which I chair, and I am in the process of conducting a series of visits to all the Statutory Transition Committees to engage with elected members at a local level.

Councils will operate in shadow form for a period of time until April 2015 when the new councils assume full powers and responsibilities. The newly elected councils, acting in shadow form, will have the statutory authority and democratic mandate to make policy decisions.

The advertisement for 10 Chief Executive posts was placed in the press with a closing date for receipt of applications of 9 December 2013. The Chief Executive post for Belfast will be advertised before the end of January 2014. The successful candidates should be selected by the end of March 2014.

George Best Belfast City Airport: Car Park

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the impact of his decision to reverse the planning approval for a private car park at George Best Belfast City Airport.

(AQO 5342/11-15)

Mr Durkan: In this case the Planning decision was not reversed. The Department's opinion changed during the processing of the application, following consideration of further material matters. The decision was taken on 16 December 2013 following consultation with Belfast City Council Town Planning Committee.

In this case, the application did not come to me for consideration. It is not a major planning application of the type where I often act as a decision maker. This decision was made locally and was not a decision taken at Ministerial level. The Department must make decisions based on the prevailing Planning Policy, which has been subject to a rigorous public consultation process.

In terms of impact, the decision appears to be consistent with decisions made in relation to similar cases elsewhere. Mr Boal has the right to challenge this decision through the appeals process.

Councillors: Remuneration

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment when he will publish the details of the remuneration package affecting councillors in the new council structure.

(AQO 5343/11-15)

Mr Durkan: It is important that the new scheme of allowances recognises the commitment of councillors and the work that will be required of them if they are to deliver the Executive's vision of strong, effective local government that has the needs of citizens at its core.

At present, I am carefully considering the recommendations made to me by the NI Councillors Remuneration Panel in November last year and the rationale for those recommendations.

I discussed the recommendations with the Political Reference Group for the Local Government Reform Programme in December. At that meeting, it was agreed that officials would examine the evidence for the Report's recommendations and that we would meet again to discuss the issues in more detail. This further meeting has been scheduled for 4th February.

After the meeting with the Political Reference Group in February, I will seek further views and opinions as necessary to allow me to reach final conclusions. I will then publish the new scheme of allowances.

South Eastern Regional College: Planning Permission, Bangor

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment whether enforcement measures will be taken against South Eastern Regional College for beginning the construction of a theatre in Bangor despite the relevant planning permission having expired; and if so, to detail (i) what action can be taken; and (ii) the cost of renewing the planning application.

(AQW 30160/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Planning permission was granted on 4 November 2008 for the construction of a performing arts and technology innovation centre with associated car parking and landscaping. Planning officials inspected the site on 23 January 2014 and established that a vehicular access has been constructed in accordance with planning permission. Information is currently awaited from the Department for Employment and Learning (DEL) to verify that the access was constructed before the planning permission expired on 4 November 2013. Therefore at the present time there is no evidence to demonstrate that the planning permission has expired or that any unauthorised development has been carried out which would give rise to enforcement action.

I am advised the fee for a similar application would be £18,330.

Exploris: Business Case

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of the Environment for his response to the business case produced by Ards Borough Council for keeping the Exploris aquarium open.

(AQW 30473/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Ards Borough Council approved an outline business plan at their meeting on 29th January. They have not yet considered or approved a business case with the necessary detailed costings and assumptions supporting the options under consideration. It is this detailed business case on which I and the Executive must make our decisions. A business case has been prepared by the consultant who also prepared the business plan and my officials, including the Department's economist, are currently scrutinizing the case. They are in discussion with the consultant and Council officials and they will report back to me on the outcome of these discussions.

The Council will have to agree the business case which must also be approved by DFP.

I remain committed to my Department funding all reasonable costs associated with running the seal sanctuary, and to bringing an agreed business case to the Executive at the earliest opportunity.

Department of Finance and Personnel

Vacant Domestic Properties

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail how many domestic properties since October 2011 have been established as vacant; and how many owners has there been a successful request for rates payment (a) in full, or (b) in part.
(AQW 29795/11-15)

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): Domestic properties move in and out of occupancy on an ongoing basis. From 1st October 2011, vacant domestic property rating liability changed from zero to full liability, with the exception of a number of prescribed exclusions.

During the period from 1st October 2011 to 31st March 2013, 40,143 domestic properties with a known owner were established as vacant.

Due to exclusions, only 28,332 rate assessments were raised and bills issued. A total of (a) 18,213 of these have been fully paid and (b) 1,987 partially paid. LPS has not received payment for the remaining 8,132 bills.

North West Regional Science Park

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the funding provided by her Department to the Northern West Regional Science Park.
(AQW 30118/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The North West Regional Science Park was awarded funding of £12,051,825 under the INTERREG IVA Programme. Of this, the match funding provided by the Department of Finance and Personnel is £2,334,739.

Rates Payments: Land and Property Services

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail how many (i) domestic; and (ii) residential rate payers have had their rates payments returned to them in each of the last three years because Land and Property Services are unable to accept advance payments.
(AQW 30143/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The information requested is not available.

Northern Ireland Civil Service: Grades

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to provide a breakdown of the three highest ranking civil service grades, for each of the last ten years, broken down by gender.
(AQW 30165/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the attached table.

Breakdown of Grades 1, 2, and 3 for each of the last ten years, broken down by gender

Year*	Gender	NICS Grades
		Grade 1	Grade 2	Grade 3
2003	Male	1	12	38
	Female	0	2	7
2004	Male	1	12	39
	Female	0	2	9
2005	Male	1	10	34
	Female	0	2	9
2006	Male	1	9	35
	Female	0	1	12
2007	Male	1	10	35
	Female	0	1	12
2008	Male	1	12	33
	Female	0	1	10

Year*	Gender	NICS Grades
		Grade 1	Grade 2	Grade 3
2009	Male	1	13	34
	Female	0	1	12
2010	Male	1	15	34
	Female	0	2	11
2011	Male	1	14	31
	Female	0	1	9
2012	Male	1	11	28
	Female	0	2	7
2013	Male	1	11	29
	Female	0	1	8

Notes

* Data is at 01 October in each year except 2009 when the date reference is 01 December.

Does not include staff seconded outside the NICS or staff on a career break.

Travel Expenditure

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel pursuant to AQW 29680/11-15, can the information be supplied in respect of his Department.

(AQW 30186/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The total expenditure on Ministerial travel in my Department was (a) £280 for the period January to June 2013; and (b) £3,458 for the period July to December 2013.

Procurement Procedures

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the procurement procedures with which all departments have to comply in relation to the awarding of training programmes to external groups and organisations.

(AQW 30193/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: All NICS departments, their agencies, non-departmental public bodies and public corporations are subject to the Executive's Northern Ireland Public Procurement Policy. This policy requires compliance with the obligations set out in the European Directive, 2004/18/EC, the Public Contracts Regulations 2006 (as amended) and the overarching principles of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU).

The Public Contracts Regulations divide services into "Part A" (or "priority") services and "Part B" (or "residual") services. The award of training programmes to external groups and organisations is defined as a Part B service as listed in Schedule III of the regulations.

Part B tenders must comply with the Regulations in that they must be "adequately advertised", must include a technical specification, and feedback must be available. Part B services are also bound by the general obligations of transparency, equal treatment, non discrimination and proportionality that derive directly from the TFEU. The Treaties and UK competition law also require that "nothing shall be done which in any way prevents, restricts or distorts competition."

Rates: Disabled Persons Allowance

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail whether people who have had adaptations carried out in their home, at the recommendation of an Occupational Therapist or Health Professional, are contacted by a member of the Disabled Persons Allowance team, to inform them of their potential eligibility for Disabled Personal Allowance Rates Rebate.

(AQW 30199/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: There is no prerequisite for the Disabled Persons Allowance (DPA) team to contact either Occupational Therapists or Health Professionals as it is up to the ratepayer to submit an application if they think that adaptations made to property qualify for DPA. Land & Property Services, through its Outreach events, regularly makes informal contact with Health Care Professionals while promoting rate reliefs such as DPA. Many of the adaptations recommended by them during these discussions do not fall within the terms of the DPA scheme however, the Disabled Facilities Grant administered by Northern Ireland Housing Executive covers them.

Rates: Commercial Enterprises/Charities

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail how many commercial enterprises, who have previously been paying rates, have successfully been registered as a charitable foundation, in the last five years
(AQW 30218/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: My Department does not hold the requested information.

Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Locums: Cost

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the cost of the appointment of locums in each Health and Social Care Trust, in each of the last three years.
(AQW 29710/11-15)

Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): The Health and Social Care Trusts advise that it is not possible to separately identify the appointment costs of locums. Locums are appointed from different sources. The main one is the Trusts internal electronic locum sourcing system which is supplemented by the use of agencies who are on a procured contract call off list. On rare occasions agencies not on the call off list can also be used to engage locums. The locum hourly rate includes the agency commission fee.

Needle Stick Injuries

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the cost of needlestick injuries in each of the last three years.
(AQW 29923/11-15)

Mr Poots: It is only possible to provide the compensation and legal costs of needle stick injuries for settled Employers Liability claims for the past three years, as follows:

2012/13 £	2011/12 £	2010/11 £
99,746	151,917	210,033

January Monitoring Round: Intended Spend

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for a breakdown of his intended spend of the extra £30m of resource which he secured from the January Monitoring Round.
(AQW 30035/11-15)

Mr Poots: The January Monitoring allocation will play a critical role in helping to address a range of pressures in those front line services that affect the most vulnerable in our society, including looked after children and our elderly population.

Trusts have been experiencing increasing pressures and demands within unscheduled care / emergency admissions and domiciliary care services. There is also a focus on maintaining and improving the safety and quality of patient care across all our settings. In terms of children's services, there has been an increase in the numbers of Looked After Children during 2013/14, requiring additional expenditure on child protection registration, costs of care (in foster care or residential care), legal costs and social work costs.

January Monitoring Round: Medical Negligence Cases

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how the £30m allocated to his Department in the January Monitoring Round will be spent; and whether it will be used to deal with medical negligence cases.
(AQW 30037/11-15)

Mr Poots: The January Monitoring allocation will play a critical role in helping to address a range of pressures in those front line services that affect the most vulnerable in our society, including looked after children and our elderly population.

The Health and Social Care Trusts have been experiencing increasing pressures and demands within unscheduled care / emergency admissions and domiciliary care services. There is also a focus on maintaining and improving the safety and quality of patient care across all our settings. In terms of children's services, there has been an increase in the numbers of Looked After Children during 2013/14, requiring additional expenditure on child protection registration, costs of care (in foster care or residential care), legal costs and social work costs

Funding has not been provided at this stage for clinical negligence cases.

January Monitoring Round: Intended Spend

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how the £30m allocated to his Department in the January Monitoring Round will be spent.

(AQW 30038/11-15)

Mr Poots: The January Monitoring allocation will play a critical role in helping to address a range of pressures in those front line services that affect the most vulnerable in our society, including looked after children and our elderly population.

Trusts have been experiencing increasing pressures and demands within unscheduled care / emergency admissions and domiciliary care services. There is also a focus on maintaining and improving the safety and quality of patient care across all our settings. In terms of children's services, there has been an increase in the numbers of Looked After Children during 2013/14, requiring additional expenditure on child protection registration, costs of care (in foster care or residential care), legal costs and social work costs.

January Monitoring Round: Western Health and Social Care Trust

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much of the £30m awarded to his Department in the January Monitoring Round will be allocated to the Western Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 30064/11-15)

Mr Poots: The January Monitoring allocation will play a critical role in helping to address a range of pressures in those front line services that affect the most vulnerable in our society, including looked after children and our elderly population.

Trusts have been experiencing increasing pressures and demands within unscheduled care / emergency admissions and domiciliary care services. There is also a focus on maintaining and improving the safety and quality of patient care across all our settings. In terms of children's services, there has been an increase in the numbers of Looked After Children during 2013/14, requiring additional expenditure on child protection registration, costs of care (in foster care or residential care), legal costs and social work costs.

As the extent of each of these pressures will be different in each Trust, the Health and Social Care Board and Local Commissioning Groups are currently working with Trusts to ensure that the funds are prioritised to meet the needs of patients and clients in each of the Trust areas.

Universities: Looked-after Children

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how many looked after children are currently enrolled in universities in (i) Northern Ireland; (ii) England; (iii) Scotland; (iv) Wales; and (v) the Republic of Ireland.

(AQW 30078/11-15)

Mr Poots: This question has been interpreted to mean the number of looked after children from Northern Ireland enrolled at university in Northern Ireland, England, Scotland, Wales and the Republic of Ireland.

Health and Social Care (HSC) Trusts have informed the Department that there were no looked after children from Northern Ireland enrolled at university in Northern Ireland, England, Scotland, Wales or the Republic of Ireland. HSC Trusts do however support a number of care leavers attending university across these nations. Table 1 below details the number of care leavers attending university in each of the requested nations.

Table 1: Care Leavers Attending University by Nation

Nation	No. of Care Leavers
Northern Ireland	28
England	18
Scotland/Wales	9
Republic of Ireland	0
Total	55

* Due to small numbers the Scotland and Wales categories have been merged.

January Monitoring Round: Intended Spend

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how the £30m allocated to his Department in the January Monitoring Round will be spent.

(AQW 30087/11-15)

Mr Poots: The January Monitoring allocation will play a critical role in helping to address a range of pressures in those front line services that affect the most vulnerable in our society, including looked after children and our elderly population.

Trusts have been experiencing increasing pressures and demands within unscheduled care / emergency admissions and domiciliary care services. ### Royal Victoria Hospital: Critical Care Unit

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when the Critical Care Unit at the Royal Victoria Hospital will become operational.

(AQW 30088/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Belfast HSC Trust intends to bring the Critical Care Building into operation on a phased basis from January 2015 to March 2015.

Smoking in Cars: Legislation

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, given that he announced on 14 November 2011 and 28 February 2012 that a public consultation on legislation banning smoking in cars was to be launched during 2012, for an update on these proposals.

(AQW 30092/11-15)

Mr Poots: Banning smoking in private vehicles is one of a range of tobacco control measures under consideration by my Department. While I had intended to launch a consultation seeking views on this issue towards the end of 2012, work on other important measures such as the Tobacco Retailers Bill, and standardised packaging for tobacco products, has meant that progress on smoking in cars has been delayed. I have written to Executive colleagues on a range of options relating to smoking in private vehicles, and I intend to address the issue in the near future.

In the meantime, my officials are continuing to monitor developments in other jurisdictions with regard to the banning of smoking in private vehicles where children and young people are present.

Personal Education Plans: Looked-after Children

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many looked after children in each Education and Library Board have a completed Personal Education Plan.

(AQW 30095/11-15)

Mr Poots: The information requested is not available by Education and Library Board. Figures below have been provided by the Health and Social Care Board and Trusts.

Looked After Children of school age 'in care for 12 months or longer' to have a completed Personal Education Plan

HSC Trust	Completed Personal Education Plan	When collated by Trusts
Belfast	281	January 2014
South Eastern	154	January 2014
Northern	140	December 2013
Western	133	January 2014
Southern	169	November 2013
Total	877

Source: Health & Social Care Board and Trusts

My Department is for the first time collecting information on Personal Education Plans from Health and Social Care Trusts. Provisional information on PEPs for 2012/13 is expected to be available centrally from March 2014.

Air Ambulances

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety who ensures that air ambulances are airworthy for the duration of their contract.

(AQW 30099/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) has a contract with a private provider for air ambulance services to and from Northern Ireland. The service specification for the contract sets out in detail the requirements the provider must meet in providing safe, responsive, value for money air transport and associated services for the population of Northern Ireland.

The United Kingdom Civil Aviation Authority (CAA) issues the Air Operator Certificate, the Continuing Airworthiness Management Organisation Approval Certificate, the Maintenance Organisation Approval Certificate and Dangerous Goods Approval. I am assured by the HSCB that the air ambulance service provider for Northern Ireland holds valid certifications issued by the CAA. The air ambulance service provider undergoes stringent regular auditing by CAA inspectors, who also carry out continuing airworthiness monitoring on the fleet.

Under the scope of the certificates issued by the UK CAA the air ambulance service provider for Northern Ireland is approved to undertake air ambulance activities.

Air Ambulances

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether aircraft used as air ambulances are licensed for that purpose.

(AQW 30100/11-15)

IVF Treatment

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether his Department has made an assessment of the ability of other UK regions to commission more than one full cycle of IVF treatment.

(AQW 30134/11-15)

Mr Poots: My Department has not carried out an assessment of other regions of the UK in relation to the provision of IVF treatment as it can vary between the individual Healthcare Trusts; however, I recognise that some regions across the UK provide a greater number of treatment cycles than the available resources currently permit in Northern Ireland.

Access criteria in Northern Ireland, which were developed following public consultations in 2006 and 2009, are however wider than in some other regions of the UK, e.g. offering treatment to couples who already have a child, thus allowing more people to avail of publicly funded treatment. To increase the number of individual treatments provided within current funding could limit the number of women who could access the service.

IVF Treatment

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether his Department has made an assessment of the ability of other UK regions to commission a full cycle of IVF treatment where there is no cap on the number of viable frozen embryos transferred.

(AQW 30135/11-15)

Mr Poots: My Department has not carried out an assessment of other regions of the UK in relation to the provision of IVF treatment as it can vary between the individual Healthcare Trusts; however, I recognise that some regions across the UK provide a greater number of treatment cycles than the available resources currently permit in Northern Ireland.

To increase the number of individual treatments provided within current funding could limit the number of women who could access the service.

IVF Treatment

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, based on current eligibility criteria, what extra funding would be needed to ensure Northern Ireland had the capacity to provide NHS patients with two full cycles of IVF treatment.

(AQW 30136/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Health and Social Care (HSC) Board currently invests £3 million per year in infertility services, which includes ovulation induction (OI) by oral medication (clomiphene citrate / gonadotrophins) and intrauterine insemination (IUI), as well as IVF and ICSI.

NICE Clinical Guideline CG156 on Fertility has recently been considered and endorsed by my Department, and it is now the responsibility of the HSC Board, as commissioner of services, to prepare a Draft Service Notification, which will set out its approach to implementing the guidance in the context of currently available resources and other HSC priorities. The matter of funding required to provide additional IVF cycles will be considered as part of the Draft Service Specification.

Fertility Treatment

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the current commissioning plans for an improved patient pathway through NHS fertility treatment in order to bring Northern Ireland in line with the revised National Institute for Health and Care Excellence Guidance, 2013.

(AQW 30137/11-15)

Mr Poots: Since 2006, my Department has established formal links with NICE whereby all Clinical Guidelines and Technology Appraisals published by NICE from that date are locally reviewed for their applicability to Northern Ireland and, where appropriate, endorsed here.

NICE Clinical Guideline CG156 on fertility has recently been considered and endorsed by my Department, and it is now the responsibility of the HSC Board, as commissioner of services, to prepare a Draft Service Notification (formerly known as a "commissioning plan" or "Board response"), which will set out its approach to implementing the guidance within the context of currently available resources and other HSC priorities.

IVF Treatment

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 23041/11-15, to outline how his Department can provide up to three cycles of IVF treatment as recommended by National Institute for Health and Care Excellence guidelines.

(AQW 30140/11-15)

Mr Poots: Since 2006, the Department has formal links with NICE whereby all Clinical Guidelines and Technology Appraisals published by NICE from that date are locally reviewed for their applicability to Northern Ireland and, where appropriate, endorsed here.

Families Matter Strategy

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the progress of the Families Matter Strategy.

(AQW 30153/11-15)

Mr Poots: Families Matter, launched in March 2009, emphasised the need to prioritise early intervention and prevention services to support families in Northern Ireland. The strategy focuses on joint and partnership working at strategic and operational levels.

The strategy acts as a framework to support early intervention and prevention family support services. In addition to the £2.8m allocated by the Department, additional funding has been allocated by the HSC to deliver services in support of the aims and objectives of Families Matter.

Since 2009, a wide range of services have been supported, including;

- Family Support Hubs;
- A regional directory of family support and child care services across Northern Ireland - www.familysupportni.gov.uk;
- Parenting education and support programmes;
- Relationship counselling;
- Family mediation;
- Child Contact Centres;
- Children's Court Officers.

Since 2009, the development of new health and social care structures and the formation of the Children and Young People's Strategic Partnership has created new opportunities for partnership working in the field of early intervention family support services. My Department has taken advantage of the opportunities afforded by these new operational structures as it has reviewed and amended the various activities in the Strategy.

In the last year, the Family Support Hub concept has been developed and is being rolled out across Northern Ireland. 10 Family Support Hubs are being opened in the Northern and Belfast HSC Trust areas utilising funding through Delivering Social Change.

The Family Support Website has been a particular success and receives up to 30,000 hits per month. The information available continues to provide a valuable service to families and service providers, and is increasingly used as a platform for delivery of information by other Departments. For example, there has been significant development of the Family Support NI website to help support the Executive's Child Care Strategy, Bright Start.

Officials are in process of reviewing the operation of Child Contact Centres to identify best practice and future support needs for this valuable service.

My Department is leading on a review of alternative dispute resolution services, which will inform the development of family mediation and relationship support work under Families Matter.

The intention of Families Matter was to serve the needs of all families with children. As we have reviewed the implementation of the Strategy, we have identified that the needs of some specific groups are best served by explicitly addressing the issues that they face. For example, in future we will include recognition of the role of fathers, and particularly the importance of a separated father's continued involvement in his child's life. We will also highlight the needs of parents of children with a disability.

Working collaboratively with other Departments and private philanthropy, we are in the process of establishing an Early Intervention Transformation Programme, supported by a £30m fund. The aim of the programme and fund is to transform how we engage with children and families by acting earlier and in different ways to prevent family difficulties emerging or escalating and to produce improved outcomes in later life.

Families Matter has provided the strategic framework that has enabled my Department to collaborate effectively with other Departments and Agencies to improve outcomes for families and children.

Separated Fathers: Policy Papers

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of (i) Parental Separation: A Father's Guide; and (ii) Separated fathers: Fathers, Separation and Co-Parenting policy paper.
(AQW 30154/11-15)

Mr Poots: I would like to commend the partnership behind Man Matters for their excellent work in publishing these documents.

Separated fathers often find it difficult to know where to go for advice and support. A Father's Guide is an excellent resource that can help guide separated fathers through a very difficult period. The Separated Fathers briefing paper highlights a number of key messages to be considered by policy makers and service planners and I can confirm that they reflect the principles set out in my Department's Families Matter strategy.

Parents and families seeking additional information and support can also access the HSCB website www.familysupportni.gov.uk, which is a comprehensive directory of family support and childcare services across Northern Ireland.

A child's best interests are almost always enhanced by a safe and loving relationship with both parents. While divorce is an all too common occurrence in today's society, it is important to remember the important role that each parent plays in their child's development.

A number of my Executive colleagues share my views on this subject and I am committed to working with them to improve the support available to families who have separated, or who are in the process of separation.

Downe Hospital: Accident and Emergency Department

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people were treated at the Accident and Emergency Unit of the Downe Hospital in each of the last five years.
(AQW 30168/11-15)

Mr Poots: Information on attendances (new, unplanned and/or planned reviews) at emergency care departments is published on an annual basis and is available to view or download from:

http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/index/stats\_research/hospital-stats/emergency\_care-3/emergency-care-stats.htm

Alternatively, information on waiting times at emergency care departments (excluding planned review attendances) is published on a monthly basis, and is available to view or download from:

http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/index/stats\_research/hospital-stats/emergency\_care-3/emergency\_care-monthly\_waiting\_times.htm

Downe Hospital: Accident and Emergency Department

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the staff costs of running the Accident and Emergency Unit at the Downe Hospital for the weeks beginning (i) 9 December 2013; and (ii) 16 December 2013; (iii) 6 January 2014; and (iv) 13 January 2014.
(AQW 30170/11-15)

Mr Poots: The South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust has advised my department that the staff costs of running the Accident and Emergency Unit at Downe Hospital are as follows:

- (i) 9 December 2013 – £36,633.50
- (ii) 16 December 2013 - £36,633.50

(iii) 6 January 2014 – £31,621.80 (est.)

(iv) 13 January 2014 - £31,621.80 (est.)

The permanent staff in the trust are paid monthly and therefore the Trust has apportioned the December costs over a 4 week period. The costs for December are therefore an average weekly running cost for the Emergency Department at Downe Hospital, rather than actual.

January costs are not available as yet, therefore the answer to (iii) & (iv) is an estimation based on December costs and figures currently available. Costs are for medical, nursing and administrative staff only and do not include central services such as porters.

Mental Health Service Provision: North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what mental health service provision is in place for young people in North Down.

(AQW 30174/11-15)

Mr Poots: Child and Adolescent Mental Health Services (CAMHS) in Northern Ireland are provided through a stepped care model, based on the clinical needs of the individual. Services are provided by four CAMHS teams, with Belfast HSC Trust providing services to both the Belfast and South Eastern HSC Trust areas, including North Down.

Inpatient care for young people, when required, is provided in Beechcroft, the Regional Child and Adolescent Inpatient Mental Health Unit at the Forster Green Hospital site in Belfast.

CAMHS to the North Down area are provided by a local community based team in James Street, Newtownards. This is a multidisciplinary team which specialises in the assessment and intervention for under 18s with mental health needs and their families/carers.

Services for children and young people presenting in crisis, and requiring assessment and intervention within 24/48 hours, are provided by a mobile Crisis Assessment Intervention Team, available 7 days per week to GPs and Emergency Departments.

There are also specialist services for young people with eating disorders or drug and alcohol issues. A number of voluntary sector organisations also provide support to young people with mental health problems.

Accident and Emergency Doctors: Job Advertisements

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many job advertisements for middle grade Accident and Emergency doctors have been placed in the National Press and medical journals by the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust in each of the last five years.

(AQW 30175/11-15)

Mr Poots: The South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust advises that job advertisements have been placed in the National Press and medical journals for middle grade Accident and Emergency doctors as follows -

2009 – 1 advertisement in February

2010 – 1 advertisement in July

2011 – 2 advertisements in March and July

2012 – 0 advertisements

2013 – 1 advertisement in July

A further advertisement was placed in January 2014.

Nursing Cover

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether his Department provides financial resources, within the budget which is ring-fenced, to deploy additional nursing staff to provide cover for nurses who are undertaking education programmes.

(AQW 30179/11-15)

Mr Poots: My Department provides all Health and Social Care Trusts with the budget required to fund nursing staff to cover for those nurses who are undertaking education programmes.

Clinical Negligence Claims

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much his Department paid out in clinical negligence claims in the last financial year.

(AQW 30187/11-15)

Mr Poots: It is assumed that these questions refer to the total amount paid on clinical/social care negligence cases by each Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust and Legacy HSS Board.

During 2012/13, £26.7 million was paid on clinical/social care negligence cases by HSC Trusts/Legacy HSS Boards (AQW 30187/11-15).

Between 1 April 2013 and 30 September 2013, £26.1 million was paid on clinical/social care negligence cases by HSC Trusts/Legacy HSS Boards (AQW 30188/11-15).

It should be noted that these figures are provisional and may be subject to change.

Clinical Negligence Claims

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much his Department has spent on clinical negligence in the current financial year.

(AQW 30188/11-15)

Mr Poots: It is assumed that these questions refer to the total amount paid on clinical/social care negligence cases by each Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust and Legacy HSS Board.

During 2012/13, £26.7 million was paid on clinical/social care negligence cases by HSC Trusts/Legacy HSS Boards (AQW 30187/11-15).

Between 1 April 2013 and 30 September 2013, £26.1 million was paid on clinical/social care negligence cases by HSC Trusts/Legacy HSS Boards (AQW 30188/11-15).

It should be noted that these figures are provisional and may be subject to change.

Mental Health Charities: Funding

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail any funding provided to mental health charities in the Northern Health and Social Care Trust area in each of the last five years, including (i) to whom this funding was awarded; and (ii) for the provision of which services.

(AQW 30192/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Northern Health and Social Care Trust has advised that it contracts with six mental health charity organisations. These organisations are as follows:

- Action Mental Health
- Carecall
- Family Caring Centre
- Mindwise
- NI Association for Mental Health
- Rehability

The services provided by these organisations include advocacy, counselling, day care, drop in facilities, support and advice and supported living. Each of these organisations provides a combination of these services.

Total funding awarded to these organisations in the last 5 years is set out below:

Financial Year	Funding (approximate) £K
2009/2010	700
2010/2011	700
2011/2012	750
2012/2013	1150
2013/2014	1150

Transcranial Magnetic Stimulation

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on transcranial magnetic stimulation treatment being made available to people with extreme migraine conditions.

(AQW 30214/11-15)

Mr Poots: I have been advised by the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust that transcranial magnetic stimulation treatment is not currently available in Northern Ireland through the Trust. There are no plans for the neurology service to introduce transcranial magnetic stimulation in the future as evidence of its effectiveness is limited.

Gall Bladder Removal Operations

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many gall bladder removal operations have been carried out in each of the last five years.

(AQW 30220/11-15)

Mr Poots: The number of gall bladder removal operations carried out in each of the last five years in HSC hospitals in Northern Ireland is given in the table below.

Year	Number of gall bladder removal operations carried out
2008/09	2,271
2009/10	2,302
2010/11	2,214
2011/12	2,376
2012/13	2,483

Source: Hospital Inpatient System

Note: Figures shown above are for total gall bladder removal operations (cholecystectomies) carried out and do not include partial cholecystectomies.

Looked-after Child: Placement

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) why a looked after child was placed in a residential care home for older people; (ii) why it took four months to find a suitable placement for the child; (iii) whether this incident was reported as a Serious Adverse Incident; and if so (iv) by whom it was reported.

(AQW 30246/11-15)

Mr Poots: I have not been made aware of any looked after child being placed in a residential home for older people. However I have been informed by Belfast Health and Social Care Trust that a young adult aged 19 was placed in a nursing home for adults with learning disabilities for a period of 15 weeks until a placement was found in a specialist unit which was deemed to offer the necessary skills, expertise and physical environment to meet their needs.

In line with current governance arrangements none of the criteria was met to report the matter to the Department as a Serious Adverse Incident.

Avastin

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether Avastin will be made available through the Health Service.

(AQW 30269/11-15)

Mr Poots: Since 2006 my Department has established formal links with the National Institute for Health and Care Excellence (NICE) whereby technology appraisals and clinical guidelines published by the Institute are reviewed for their applicability to Northern Ireland and endorsed where appropriate. NICE is an entirely independent body which provides guidance on the best possible and most effective treatments available using the most up-to-date evidence and expert opinion.

In Northern Ireland all NICE approved specialist drugs are either recurrently funded or available via a cost per case mechanism.

NICE has not recommended Avastin for use in the NHS and therefore I would not expect to see Avastin routinely commissioned in Northern Ireland.

However, for treatments not routinely commissioned in Northern Ireland the Health and Social Care Board has a clear process by which individual patient requests can be considered, the individual funding request (IFR), and I have attached the following link for your convenience: http://www.hscbusiness.hscni.net/pdf/Protocol\_ECR\_and\_IFR\_arrangements.pdf.

As part of the process the patient's consultant is expected to put in writing the clinical circumstances which apply to the case and support the request for treatment. Such requests need to be supported by nominated senior clinicians and managers within the relevant Health and Social Care Trust. Clinical decisions are the responsibility of medical professionals.

Family Fund

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, given the demand for support through the Family Fund grant scheme, the premature conclusion in the processing of grant applications for the 2013/14 financial year and the number of families currently unable to avail of grant support, what consideration he has given to increasing the funding allocation for the 2014/15 Family Fund scheme.

(AQW 30272/11-15)

Mr Poots: Through funding support of £1.57m provided by my Department to the Family Fund in the current year, 2870 families in Northern Ireland with disabled children have been helped.

I am aware that the Family Fund has recently announced that, due to a significant increase in demand for support, all funding received from this Department for the current financial year has been allocated and it is unable to process any further applications from families in Northern Ireland.

I regret this position but due to the ongoing financial challenges facing my Department I am currently unable to increase their funding provision. However, DHSSPS officials will be meeting with the Family Fund in the near future to further discuss this issue and how best it can help support families in NI.

Department of Justice

Ryan McGreechan: Legal Aid

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to detail the total Legal Aid paid for proceedings launched by, and on behalf of, Ryan McGreechan, broken down by (i) solicitor/legal firm; (ii) junior counsel; (iii) senior counsel; and (iv) any and all other costs met by Legal Aid.

(AQW 29980/11-15)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): I am unable to provide this information as Article 24 of the Legal Aid, Advice and Assistance (NI) Order 1981 precludes the Northern Ireland Legal Services Commission from releasing the information requested.

Serious Case Reviews

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to serious case reviews, to detail how many (i) have been completed in each of the last ten years; (ii) are currently being carried out; (iii) have been released; and (iv) are completed and have yet to be released.

(AQW 30164/11-15)

Mr Ford: The information requested is detailed in the table below:

Year	Completed	Ongoing	Released	Completed but awaiting release
2005	0	0	0	0
2006	2	0	1	0
2007	1	0	0	0
2008	1	0	1	0
2009	0	0	0	0
2010	0	0	0	0
2011	2	0	0	0
2012	3	0	1	1
2013	0	0	0	0
2014 (@ 3/2/14)	1	1	0	1

Maghaberry Prison: Staff Injuries

Mrs Hale asked the Minister of Justice how many members of staff have been hurt or injured at Maghaberry Prison in the last twelve months.

(AQW 30176/11-15)

Mr Ford: Between 1 January 2013 and 31 December 2013 inclusive, 274 members of staff have reported being injured at work.

Magilligan Prison: Working Days Lost

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of working days lost due to staff at Magilligan Prison being off as a result of attacks whilst on duty.

(AQW 30271/11-15)

Mr Ford: Table A below shows the number of days lost, in the last three years, by staff following an attack /assault whilst on duty.

Table A

Date	No of working days lost	No of Staff
01/02/11 – 31/01/12	94	5
01/02/12 – 31/01/13	108	2
01/02/13 – 31/01/14	194	7

Hemsworth and McCaughey Cases

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Justice to outline how he is taking forward actions to address the judgements in the McCaughey and Hemsworth cases against the United Kingdom at the European Court of Human Rights and to ensure compliance in relation, in particular, to Article 2 of the European Convention on Human Rights.

(AQW 30292/11-15)

Mr Ford: It is clear that we need a more encompassing and strategic approach to dealing with the past across the justice system, wider government and society. However, in the absence of agreement on such an approach, and reflecting the State's obligation to meet the requirements of the European Convention on Human Rights, my Department is developing a proposed action plan in response to the Hemsworth judgment. The action plan will be brought before the Executive in advance of the Court's 16 April 2014 deadline. Whilst the NIO/MOD lead on the McCaughey and others case, the judgments are in substance fundamentally the same and as such one action plan will be submitted on behalf of the UK Government.

Inquests: Backlog

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Justice to detail the current backlog in numbers of inquests in Northern Ireland, including how many of these are legacy and/or historic.

(AQW 30293/11-15)

Mr Ford: As at 29 January 2014, 584 deaths have been reported to the Coroner in which the investigation is not complete. Not all cases referred to the Coroner will progress to an inquest hearing. There are currently 21 'non – legacy' inquests listed for hearing.

As at 29 January 2014 there were 73 'legacy' deaths at various stages of investigation which will result in 45 inquest hearings.

Inquests: Listed on Website

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Justice whether he intends to list future inquests and verdicts on the website of the Coroners Service of Northern Ireland.

(AQW 30296/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service (NICTS) has no plans to list future inquests and findings on the NICTS website because of the personal and sensitive nature of the information involved.

Prisoners: Medication

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, if a prisoner in charge of their own medication is detected abusing the privilege either by supplying their medication to others or found to be in possession of, or to have taken medication which was not prescribed or illegal substances, are they (i) charged and dealt with by the Prison Service or a court; and/or (ii) banned from being in charge of their own medication; and if so, to detail if this a permanent ban or subject to review.

(AQW 30297/11-15)

Mr Ford:

- (i) Those prisoners found to be abusing prescribed medication are subject to disciplinary processes; in addition many cases are referred to the PSNI with a view to prosecution.
- (ii) In cases where there has been an abuse of the privilege the South Eastern Trust will consider whether it is appropriate for a prisoner to continue possessing his own medication.

Prison Service: Medication

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to detail (i) when; and (ii) why the Northern Ireland Prison Service agreed to allow prisoners to be in charge of their own medication.

(AQW 30298/11-15)

Mr Ford: The decision to allow prisoners to be in charge of their own medication was taken by the Northern Ireland Prison Service prior to the transfer of healthcare to the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust in 2008.

The Northern Ireland Prison Service first issued in-possession medication to prisoners in the early 1990s in blister packs. At the time, there was a move to professionalise Healthcare provision with the introduction of Nurses.

In-possession medication reduced the amount of time professional nurses took to distribute routine medication. In addition, providing prisoners with in-possession medication enabled them to take responsibility for their own medication, which reflects the circumstances that would exist in the community.

National Crime Agency: Discussions

Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of Justice to outline the progress he has made in discussions with the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, the Home Secretary and the SDLP, regarding the expansion of the role of the National Crime Agency locally. (AQW 30319/11-15)

Mr Ford: I wrote to the SDLP and Sinn Féin on 25 November 2013 and again on 25 January 2014 to seek to move this matter forward. I believe that the package I have proposed is reasonable and takes account of the policing architecture here. I am keen to conclude discussions soon as I am being advised that the absence of the NCA in the devolved arena is having an impact on our law enforcement effort.

Since the New Year, I have discussed this issue with the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland and the Home Office are aware of the current position. Both the Secretary of State and the Home Secretary have offered their support.

Desertcreat Community Safety College

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister of Justice why the construction of the Community Safety College at Desertcreat has been set back to June 2014. (AQW 30322/11-15)

Mr Ford: As you will be aware, there was a difference between the costs included in the business case and those submitted by the organisations bidding for the tender. The Programme Board carried out a Bill of Reductions exercise to reduce the cost of the project. The savings identified, in excess of £19m, will not compromise the functionality of the college but will ensure the provision of a high quality training facility which will meet the needs of police, prison and fire services.

On completion of the Bill of Reductions exercise, an Addendum Business Case had to be prepared and approved by the three services and two departments before being submitted to DFP for approval. On 26 November 2013 DFP formally approved the addendum business case.

The preferred bidder, FGP consortium, was appointed on 3 December 2013 and the discussions are expected to take several months which should culminate with a contract being awarded in May 2014, subject to the NI Executive's final approval before the contract is signed.

With the Addendum Business Case approved and the preferred bidder appointed with discussions ongoing, the contract is planned to be awarded by May 2014, subject to Full Business Case and Executive approvals, with construction starting June 2014.

Prisons: Drugs

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to prisons that have drugs-associated problematic areas, to detail why is there not a stringent loss of privileges, such as association, for drug dealers and/or takers in order to reduce supply to other vulnerable prisoners and/or bullying of legitimately-prescribed medication from vulnerable prisoners; and in respect of drug takers, to prevent addiction.

(AQW 30336/11-15)

Mr Ford: Any prisoner who is found to be abusing drugs, including prescribed medication, is subject to disciplinary procedures. Sanctions that are available to the Governor include restriction of association, loss of privileges and referral to PSNI. Those prisoners who come under any form of bullying due to drugs are fully supported and appropriate measures are taken against those found to be bullying. Likewise support is available for those wishing to avoid drugs and for those with addiction problems.

Prisons: Drugs

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to outline why, after so many previous concerns being raised by numerous agencies, there is still a drugs culture in prisons; and whether he will introduce a zero tolerance policy, robustly administered to eradicate the problem, given the risks to all parties involved.

(AQW 30339/11-15)

Mr Ford: NIPS is fully aware of the dangers that drugs present in prisons and has a stated policy of zero tolerance. Working with partners such as PSNI, SET and drug addiction services, NIPS has in place all lawful measures available to reduce the illicit use of drugs.

Magistrates' Courts (Northern Ireland) Order 1981: Article 19

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice how many summary proceedings have not proceeded as a result of failure to comply with the limitation requirements of Article 19 of the Magistrates' Courts (NI) Order 1981, in the last twelve months.

(AQW 30353/11-15)

Mr Ford: This information is not available as it is not recorded.

Rural Crime: Conviction Rates

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Justice why it is not possible to identify between conviction rates for (a) rural and (b) agricultural related crimes.

(AQW 30381/11-15)

Mr Ford: There is no specific offence of rural crime or agricultural crime under criminal law. Conviction data are recorded for generic offences, such as theft, robbery or criminal damage and datasets held by my Department currently do not contain information on the location and circumstances in which offences were committed. Therefore, it is not currently possible to identify from the data whether a conviction relates to rural or agricultural-related crime.

The recently established Rural Crime Unit is working to identify trends and patterns in crimes, that the PSNI have identified as having occurred in rural settlements and offences where the victim is involved in an agricultural-based activity, in order that resources can be effectively targeted to tackle this type of crime.

Hydebank Wood Young Offenders Centre: Prison Escapee

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice why a prison escapee was invited to talk about his experiences to prisoners in HM Young Offenders Centre Hydebank Wood.

(AQW 30480/11-15)

Mr Ford: During 2013 a book club was established for inmates at Hydebank Wood Young Offenders Centre and on a number of occasions individual authors have attended to discuss their works. They include Eoin McNamee, Sheena Wilkinson and Lucy Caldwell.

In December 2013, the group expressed an interest in Gerry Kelly MLA's book "The Escape", and when it became known that Mr Kelly might be interested in attending, an invitation was made for him to visit.

The visit was scheduled for the evening of 4 February 2014, although these arrangements were made without the knowledge of the establishment's Governor. When all the circumstances of these arrangements were considered, he made the decision that the event should no longer go ahead as he did not feel it was appropriate for a Young Offenders Centre.

Road Traffic Accidents: Leaving the Scene

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Justice to detail (i) the current legislation; and (ii) the range of penalties available in relation to a person leaving the scene of an accident without providing any contact details or informing the PSNI.

(AQW 30496/11-15)

Mr Ford: Article 175(2) of the Road Traffic (NI) Order 1981 provides that it is an offence for a driver to fail to stop his/her vehicle after an accident and give to a constable, or any person with reasonable grounds for asking, his/her name and address, the name and address of the owner of the vehicle and the identification mark or number of the vehicle. The driver must also keep the vehicle stationary at, or near, the place where the accident occurred, for as long as is reasonable, to provide his/her name and car details.

Part 1, Schedule 1 of the Road Traffic Offenders (NI) Order 1996 provides that the offence is punishable summarily and carries a penalty of up to a level 5 fine (£5,000) or 6 months' imprisonment or both. The court must also endorse the driver's licence with 5-10 penalty points and has discretion to order the disqualification of the driver.

Department for Regional Development

Cycling: New Lanes

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development how many extra cycle lanes have been provided, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 26170/11-15)

Mr Kennedy (The Minister for Regional Development): In total, for the years 2008-09 to 2013/14 (to date), my Department has provided 65 extra cycle lanes, including a small number of extensions to existing facilities.

However, with the creation of the new Cycling Unit within my Department, which is developing an ongoing programme of work as it aims to ensure that cycling provision is a key element in both transport strategy and delivery, I expect this figure to rise in future years

Translink: Enterprise

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (i) the average cost to process and deliver a Translink Belfast to Dublin train ticket that is booked online; (ii) why the company offers a discount on such tickets booked online given the extra expense of postage; (iii) why users cannot print their own tickets after purchasing online; and (iv) when the system will be updated to enable users to print their own tickets.

(AQW 29915/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I have liaised with Translink officials who advise as follows:-

- i) Vouchers are posted out by 1st class post (at 47p) with up to 4 vouchers per booking.
- ii) The discount reflects a yield management approach similar to, for example, airlines where early booking/purchase is rewarded with a discount. This practice is also common among most rail operators in an effort to generate additional revenue. The lowest fares are offered on off-peak Enterprise services which generally have a lower level of patronage.
- iii) For reasons of fraud prevention – to prevent copying and multiple use of a ticket – current Translink ticketing infrastructure does not facilitate an e-ticketing option to enable self-fulfillment of on line purchases.
- iv) Translink are currently preparing a business case for a system where the ticket can be printed at a machine in station – although it should be noted passengers can opt for tickets purchased on line to be collected in station as opposed to delivered by post. Some train operating companies and other commercial sellers in Great Britain offer 'print at home', 'redeem at station' or 'post' similar to what Translink offers. Most are moving to 'print at home' / 'redeem in station' and Translink is doing likewise.

A6: Dualling Scheme

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Regional Development when he plans to announce the next stage of the A6 Dungiven to Londonderry Dualling Scheme.

(AQW 29936/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The A6 Londonderry to Dungiven dualling scheme has been through Public Inquiry. My officials have considered the Inspector's recommendations and I expect to make a Departmental Statement on the way forward later this financial year.

However, progression of these schemes to construction will be dependent upon the successful completion of the statutory processes and the availability of funding.

Mobuoy Road: Landfill Site

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development whether the discovery of the illegal landfill site at Mobuoy Road is likely to prejudice the construction of the A6 dual carriageway.

(AQW 29942/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The discovery of illegal landfill at Mobuoy Road will not prejudice the construction of the proposed A6 dual carriageway. At Mobuoy, the new road is aligned around the eastern periphery of the City Industrial Waste and Campsie Sand and Gravel sites, avoiding the illegal landfill.

The A6 dual carriageway scheme includes a proposal to reinstate part of the Campsie Sand and Gravel quarry, located between Mobuoy Road and the River Faughan, to replace flood storage capacity lost to the new dual carriageway. If the illegal landfill is still present when the road is being constructed, I am content that installation of appropriately engineered measures to contain the illegal waste will ensure that the compensatory floodplain can be constructed as planned.

Translink: Fares

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the average percentage increase in fares for (i) Ulsterbus; and (ii) NI Railways journeys, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 29953/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised that the average percentage fare increase for Ulsterbus in each of the last 3 years was as follows: 2012 -3% and 2013- 3%; for NI Railways the increase was 2012-3% and 2013- 5%.

You will note that I recently announced that there will be no increase on fares for Ulsterbus, Metro services and NI Railways for 2014.

Parking: Residents' Schemes, North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he has considered the inclusion of areas of North Down in the proposals for residents' parking schemes.

(AQW 29960/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department has considered areas within North Down for Residents' Parking Schemes. The Belfast Metropolitan Transport Plan (BMTP) identifies the centre of Bangor as being an area of parking restraint and it is my intention to progress Residents' Parking Schemes in some residential areas in due course.

Whilst Holywood has not been similarly identified, officials are currently carrying out an initial assessment of the eligibility of residential streets within the town centre for a Residents' Parking Scheme. Surveys are currently underway in a number of streets within the town centre to inform a summary report that will be available at the end of February 2014.

Officials have also received requests for schemes within other areas and these will be given due consideration in the future.

The timing of schemes outside of Belfast will be dependent upon the progress of those being developed at present elsewhere in Northern Ireland and a future prioritisation of remaining areas.

Parking: Residents' Schemes

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the criteria being used to pilot or implement resident's parking schemes.

(AQW 29961/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department's policy allows for the introduction of residents' parking schemes in residential areas where parking from nearby businesses, sports facilities, hospitals, schools, universities, theatres, shopping areas, etc penetrates residential streets and prevents residents from parking in reasonably close proximity to their houses. However, two thirds of households within a scheme boundary must be in favour of the proposed scheme, subject to a minimum response rate of one third of all households.

The policy also allows for the introduction of residents' parking schemes for transportation reasons where, for example, local transport plans stipulate that commuter parking needs to be controlled, or for areas where my Department is implementing an area wide parking strategy that could potentially displace parking to adjacent areas.

To determine whether a parking problem exists in an area, an assessment of the extent of available on-street and off-street parking is undertaken. Where parking difficulties exist during the working day (normally Monday to Friday 8am to 6pm), a scheme is deemed justified if the following criteria are met:

- more than 60% of the available kerbside space is estimated to be occupied by non-residents' vehicles for more than 5 hours; and
- more than 80% is occupied in total for the same 5 hours.

Where parking difficulties occur outside of the working day, the following criteria are used:

- more than 40% of the available kerbside space estimated to be occupied by non-residents' vehicles for more than any consecutive 4-hour period outside of the working day; and
- more than 80% occupied in total for the same 4-hour period.

Parking: Residents' Schemes

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the criteria used to determine whether a street will be included in a residents' parking scheme.

(AQW 29962/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department's policy allows for the introduction of residents' parking schemes in residential areas where parking from nearby businesses, sports facilities, hospitals, schools, universities, theatres, shopping areas, etc penetrates residential streets and prevents residents from parking in reasonably close proximity to their houses. However, two thirds of households within a scheme boundary must be in favour of the proposed scheme, subject to a minimum response rate of one third of all households.

To determine whether a parking problem exists in an area, an assessment of the extent of available on-street and off-street parking is undertaken. Where resident parking difficulties exist during the working day (normally Monday to Friday 8am to 6pm) a scheme is deemed justified if the following criteria are met:

- more than 60% of the available kerbside space is estimated to be occupied by non-residents' vehicles for more than 5 hours; and
- more than 80% is occupied in total for the same 5 hours.

Where parking difficulties occur outside of the working day, the following criteria are used:

- more than 40% of the available kerbside space estimated to be occupied by non-residents' vehicles for more than any consecutive 4-hour period outside of the working day; and
- more than 80% occupied in total for the same 4-hour period.

It is recognised that adjacent streets may also need to be included in a scheme if there is the potential for displacement of parking into them. When identifying an area to be zoned for consideration as a residents' parking scheme, the area will normally be geographically linked and generally seen as being within the same area or part of the same community. The area identified should not be too large and the boundaries of the scheme will normally be defined by main roads, railways, large open space, large commercial areas, etc. In some cases, however, an area with these boundaries may need to be sub-divided to reduce it to a manageable size.

Parking: Residents' Schemes, Bogside

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 29139/11-15, to detail when the residents' parking scheme in the Bogside area of Derry will be implemented.

(AQW 29985/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: It is anticipated implementation of the Bogside residents' parking scheme will take place in the autumn of 2014, however, this is subject to no objections being received to the proposals when they are formally advertised.

Roads: Maintenance

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail how much of his Department's budget has been allocated to (i) maintaining, updating and creating new roads; (ii) maintaining road signs; and (iii) updating road markings, in each of the past five years.

(AQW 30014/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Details of my Department's outturn allocation in each financial year since 2008/09 for maintaining, updating and creating new roads, maintaining road signs and updating road markings are included in the table below:

Allocation of Roads Service Budget

Activity	Financial Year £m
	2008/09	2009/10	2010/11	2011/12	2012/13
Major Road Improvements	132.9	148.5	227.5	32.3	52.0
Minor Local Road Improvements and Road Safety	35.4	31.5	14.6	35.1	11.3
Road Signs	6.8	6.83	6.26	6.34	6.7
Road Markings Inc. Road Studs	2.0	2.1	1.95	2.31	2.32
Structural Maintenance	62.98	85.19	88.31	120.44	109.69

A6: Dualling Scheme

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the next stages of the A6 Dungiven to Derry Dualling Scheme, including when tender opportunities will be published.

(AQW 30021/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The A6 Londonderry to Dungiven dualling scheme is well advanced in terms of development. It has been through Public Inquiry and publication of the Departmental Statement is expected before the end of the financial year. However, progression of the project would, subject to final approval of the business case, be reliant upon funding being made available.

The Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland 2011-21 sets out plans to augment Executive funds by accessing alternative finance for some projects that are suitable to be funded in this way. This includes the progression of a package of high priority road schemes amounting to around £390 million, which would embrace improvements to the A6. However, a commitment to fund the revenue consequences of this road package will be required and so the timing depends on future resource budgets. I will, however, continue to bid for conventional funding for the A6 dualling schemes.

Millennium Way, Lurgan

Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the progress the Millennium Way Phase II project following the submission of a planning application, including whether the project will be delivered in 2014.

(AQW 30030/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department is continuing to develop this scheme and a new Planning Application for a revised alignment was submitted early in September 2013. I am hopeful planning permission will be granted in the near future.

In the meantime, work is ongoing to finalise the detailed design for the proposal, which will inform the extent of land required for the scheme. Upon receipt of planning approval, my officials will meet with lands owners involved, to commence land acquisition procedures. However, the acquisition of this land is likely to require a Vesting Order and a Public Inquiry may also be required, to determine if the level of land take identified is appropriate.

Progression of the proposal onto my Department's Construction Programme remains subject to the proposal continuing to have a satisfactory economic appraisal, clearing the statutory procedures and funding being made available in future budget settlements.

British-Irish Council and North/South Ministerial Council Meetings

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the ministerial meetings on transport issues which have taken place under the auspices of (i) the British Irish Council; and (ii) the North South Ministerial Council, since May 2007. (AQW 30034/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Minister for Regional Development has attended six Summit meetings of the British Irish Council since May 2007. All eleven work sectors of the British Irish Council, including transport issues were discussed at these meetings. Details of the meetings are set out below.

16 July 2007, Belfast
 26 September 2008, Stirling
 20 February 2009, Cardiff
 20 June 2011, London
 26 November 2012, Cardiff
 21 June 2013, Londonderry

There have been no specific British Irish Council Ministerial meetings for the Transport work sector.

The Minister for Regional Development has attended 9 Plenary and 14 Transport Sectoral meetings of the North South Ministerial Council since May 2007 where transport issues were discussed. Details of the meetings are set out below.

17 July 2007, Plenary
 14 September 2007, Transport Sectoral
 12 December 2007, Transport Sectoral
 21 May 2008, Transport Sectoral
 23 January 2009, Plenary
 3 April 2009, Transport Sectoral
 6 July 2009, Plenary
 4 November 2009, Transport Sectoral
 14 December 2009, Plenary
 3 March 2010, Transport Sectoral
 5 July 2010, Plenary
 20 October 2010, Transport Sectoral
 21 January 2011, Plenary
 9 February 2011, Transport Sectoral
 10 June 2011, Plenary
 21 October 2011, Transport Sectoral
 18 November 2011, Plenary
 20 April 2012, Transport Sectoral
 15 June 2012, Plenary
 5 October 2012, Transport Sectoral
 28 March 2013, Transport Sectoral
 17 April 2013, Transport Sectoral
 28 November 2013, Transport Sectoral

A5: Independent Review

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the Terms of Reference in relation to the independent review of advice received from a consultant on the A5 road project. (AQW 30045/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department's Roads Service has commissioned a consultant to independently review the environmental work associated with the A5 Western Transport Corridor (WTC) project.

The scope of the independent review includes the following:

- review the Habitats Directive work carried out by the A5WTC project consultant prior to the court judgement in April 2013 and provide a report on its adequacy;
- review the A5WTC project consultant's proposals, methodology and timeline to comply with the Habitats Directive in light of the Court ruling; and
- carry out a review of the published Environmental Statement (ES) and the proposals, methodology and timeline to provide an Addendum to update the ES.

Hillhead Road, Newry

Mr Brady asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the reopening of the Hillhead Road, Newry. (AQW 30048/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: As the Member will be aware, my Department's Roads Service initially closed a section of the Hillhead Road, Newry on 26 January 2007. A further section of the road was closed on 21 August 2008 and, in December 2012, the closure was again extended.

Roads Service issued legal proceedings against three previous quarry owners in early 2009. Whilst these processes have been progressing, until they are complete, I am unable to comment further on the future of the Hillhead Road.

Parking: Lisburn and Banbridge

Mr Craig asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the location of off-street car parks operated by Roads Service in (i) Lisburn; and (ii) Banbridge council areas.

(AQW 30057/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Details of the locations of off-street car parks operated by Roads Service, in the Lisburn and Banbridge Council areas, are included in the table below:

Off-street car parks operated by Roads Service in Lisburn and Banbridge Council Areas

Lisburn Council Area	Antrim Street, Lisburn	Benson Street, Lisburn
	Barrack Street, Lisburn	Quay Street, Lisburn
	Governors Road, Lisburn	Saintfield Road Roundabout, Lisburn
	Laganbank Road, Lisburn	Union Bridge, Lisburn
	Longstone Street, Lisburn	Sprucefield Park and Ride, Lisburn
	Queens Road, Lisburn	Glenburn Road, Dunmurry
	Smithfield Square, Lisburn	Main Street, Moira
	Ballynahinch Street, Hillsborough
Banbridge Council Area	Downshire Place, Banbridge	Bridge Street, Banbridge
	Bridge Street East, Banbridge	Kenlis Court, Banbridge
	Commercial Road, Banbridge	Castle Street, Rathfriland
	Kenlis Street, Banbridge	Meeting Street, Dromore
	Townsend Street, Banbridge	Cross Lane (2 car parks), Dromore
	Church Square, Banbridge	Gallows Street, Dromore
	Downshire Road, Banbridge	Castle Hill, Gilford

Parking: Gritting

Mr Craig asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the criteria used when determining if off-street car parks are gritted during frosty weather conditions.

(AQW 30058/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department does earmark funds to provide a salting service with the aim of helping main road traffic to move safely and freely in wintry conditions. In general, main through routes carrying more than 1,500 vehicles per day are salted and, in exceptional circumstances, roads with difficult topography carrying between 1,000 and 1,500 vehicles per day.

On the basis of this policy, my Department does not routinely salt public car parks, although it does cover areas within Park and Ride facilities where the operation of the facility requires a bus to leave the main salted road network to service it. In such cases, the route taken is treated including any portion of the bus route within the confines of the car park.

Additional secondary salting may also be undertaken during periods of prolonged and severe wintry conditions, outside of the scheduled routes on the basis of requests and in order to relieve hardship. The extent of secondary salting takes account of the availability of resources and these decisions are made by local Roads Service section engineers.

Lisburn City Council Area: Non-adopted Roads

Mr Craig asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the streets in the Lisburn City Council area that have not been adopted by Roads Service, including the reason for non-adoption and the action being taken to complete the adoption process.

(AQW 30060/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: This information is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. However, if you wish to enquire about a specific area or housing development within the Lisburn City Council area, you should contact the Network Planning Manager, Roads Service Eastern Division, Hydebank, 4 Hospital Road, Belfast.

Drumbeg Mews, Lisburn: Bond Enforcement

Mr Craig asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (i) the communication between Roads Service and NI Water in relation to Bond Enforcement Action in Drumbeg Mews, Lisburn; and (ii) when the process will be completed, given the time lapse since the dwellings were first occupied.

(AQW 30061/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Officials from my Department's Roads Service have corresponded with and met with their counterparts from NI Water regarding the Drumbeg Mews development in Lisburn, following the serving of an Article 11 enforcement notice on the developer on 8 June 2010.

They continue to work together to take forward the adoption of the sewers and streets within this development. A CCTV survey and snagging of the sewers has been completed and a schedule of defects identified. There are substantial problems with the sewers laid by the developer, in particular the storm sewer for which the developer did not construct a section of the on-site surface water sewer to comply with the requirement for a sustainable drainage system (SuDS). Additionally, the process for requisitioning the off-site storm sewers was not completed and storm water from the development does not currently have a dedicated outfall discharge point. It appears the storm water from the development is connected to a soak-a-way.

NI Water is currently undertaking the design of a scheme to provide the missing section of sewer, the SuDS system and the dedicated storm outfall to serve Drumbeg Mews and two other adjacent developments. It is expected that design of the dedicated outfall sewer will be completed by the end of February 2014.

Delivery of the necessary project will be dependent upon the availability of finance and resolution of any third party land owner issues.

Roads Service is aware of the defects in the sewers and that NIW is working towards a resolution, which will enable the streets and sewers within the development to be adopted.

Roads: Compensation, North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the amount of compensation awarded from pothole and other road surface related claims in North Down, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 30110/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The NICS accounting system does not hold details of the cause of accidents and, for that reason, it is not possible to separately identify the amount of compensation awarded from pothole and other road surface claims.

Parking: Residents' Schemes, North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on residential car parking schemes in North Down.

(AQW 30111/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I would refer the Member to my response to his previous related Assembly Question AQW 29960/11-15.

Fishing Rights at Reservoirs

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the procedure followed when offering fishing rights at reservoirs including specifying if this is always completed by tender, and if the process varies, to outline why.

(AQW 30146/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that it currently has 28 impounding reservoirs on which fishing is permitted. Of these reservoirs, 14 are controlled or managed by the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure, whilst the remaining 14 are leased directly to private fishing clubs. Although not part of its core business, NIW and its predecessors have been involved in the leasing of fishing rights for some considerable time and traditionally have renewed the rights with existing clubs.

Historically NIW did not offer fishing leases to public bidding as there was no record of more than one club expressing an interest in any particular location. Clubs are normally local to a particular reservoir and clubs outside of the area are unlikely to be interested. However, in early 2011 a recently formed fly fishing club requested use of one of NIW's reservoirs. The lease had just been extended with the previous club and new club expressed concern that there had been no opportunity for the public to bid for the lease. This caused NIW to reconsider how fishing rights are managed and the decision was taken that all future leases with private clubs or individuals will be subject to open competition. NIW considers that the public advertising of fishing leases for NIW's reservoirs is open, transparent, fair and equitable and it enables NIW to satisfy its regulatory requirement to achieve best value for the public purse. The decision to publicly advertise fishing leases did not require consultation.

All leases are now subject to public advertisement and the submissions are assessed on a 'cost alone' basis. NIW is satisfied that compliance with lease conditions provides sufficient measures to enable it to ensure that the reservoirs are properly managed and maintained. The assessment criteria is made clear in the public notice advertised in local press, therefore any interested party is aware of them.

Penalty Charge Notices

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of Penalty Charge Notices issued in each of the last three calendar years.

(AQW 30156/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Details of the number of Penalty Charge Notices issued in each of the last three calendar years are set out in the table below:

Year	Penalty Charge Notices (PCNs) Issued
2011	125,983
2012	112,755
2013	108,558

Translink: Passenger Numbers

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail how the number of (i) bus; and (ii) rail passengers in 2013 compares to 2012.

(AQW 30157/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The relevant statistics are as outlined in the following table:

	2012 '000s	2013 '000s
Bus	67,163	67,215
Rail	11,335	12,863
Total	78,498	80,078

Speed Limits

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the proportion of roads that currently have a (i) 20mph; and (ii) 30mph speed limit.

(AQW 30158/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I would advise the Member that my Department does not hold the information in the format requested.

School Transport Contracts

Mrs Hale asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the value of the Department of Education's school transport contract.

(AQW 30177/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: This information should be sought from the Department for Education.

Translink: Bus Stations

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the bus stations that will receive funding allocated the January Monitoring Round.

(AQW 30181/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink is carrying out a programme of work aimed at ensuring that all of its bus stations, workshops and garages meet the required standards under current legislation, regulations and British Standards. The £1.5 million granted in January Monitoring will be used, in the main, towards this programme.

The current forecast expenditure associated with the bid is detailed below:

Project	Forecast Expenditure (£'000)
Antrim Integrated Bus/Rail Station	142
Bangor Integrated - Set Down Area	60

Project	Forecast Expenditure (£'000)
Workshop Garage Roof Replacement - Ballymena and Newcastle	81
Pennyburn Depot Storage	13
Building Service Condition Upgrade	126
Voyager Replacement Project	359
Depot Allocation System	270
Minor Capital Works at Depots & Stations	106
Replacement Workshop & Garage equipment	343
Total Forecast Expenditure	1,500

Further expenditure on bus station improvements is planned for 2014/15.

None of the allocated money will be used to fund the upgrade of Ballymena Station. A separate project is being considered by Translink for Ballymena station and this is included in the 2014/15 programme of capital projects. That project will be subject to securing the necessary approvals and funding. However, my Department has provided funding for the refurbishment of the roof at Ballymena Bus Garage and work on this project has been completed.

Translink: Bus Stations

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the total proposed additional investment in bus stations as a result of the reallocations from the January Monitoring Round.

(AQW 30287/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink is carrying out a programme of work aimed at ensuring that all of its bus stations, workshops and garages meet the required standards under current legislation, regulations and British Standards. ## Door-2-Door Transport Service

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development for his assessment of the performance of the Door-2-Door scheme. (AQW 30396/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Door-2-Door scheme ended on 31 March 2013.

An interim scheme, the Disability Action Transport Scheme, operated by Disability Action was introduced on 01 April 2013 and is operating well. Disability Action regularly report on user views to my officials and these are positive.

Currently my Department is undertaking an evaluation of the transport policies and schemes initiated by the Department to promote social inclusion. The outcome of the evaluation will assist my Department to develop proposals to meet the transport needs of elderly and disabled people across Northern Ireland.

At this time it is planned to maintain the interim scheme with Disability Action.

Department for Social Development

Housing Executive: High-rise Flats

Mr Spratt asked the Minister for Social Development whether his Department has any plans to insulate high-rise flats. (AQW 29937/11-15)

Mr McCausland (The Minister for Social Development): The Housing Executive has advised that they are proposing a pilot scheme at Culchulainn House, Belfast, which is a 13 storey block in the New Lodge area for the provision of a contractor designed ventilated insulated rain screen system to the external walls and balconies. The contractor has been successful in obtaining a Building Research Establishment (BRE) Certification for this proposal and the work is programmed to commence shortly. This is the first high rise block to receive such a proposal and following its completion there will be an evaluation carried out to determine the effectiveness and suitability of this proposal which will shape the Housing Executive's strategy for these types of construction.

The Housing Executive is also about to commission research to undertake a survey of all of their multi-storey residential blocks. The appointed consultant will be expected to produce a comprehensive report analysing the findings of their research and to make recommendations on cost effective improvement measures relating to the refurbishment, upgrade, maintenance and management of the blocks. The overall aim of the research project is to establish the short, medium and long term requirements for the multi-storey blocks with the appointed consultant producing a multi-storey report/strategy document.

Housing Executive: Changes of Tenancy

Mr Spratt asked the Minister for Social Development what work is carried out on Housing Executive properties when there is a change of tenancy. (AQW 29939/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that a Change of Tenancy pre-inspection is carried out by their Maintenance Officer who determines the amount of works to be carried out in order to ensure that the property is in a good state of repair. No tenancy should commence until a property has been brought within lettable standards; has passed Health and Safety checks; and has an Energy Performance Certificate. The level of works appropriate may depend upon the nature of the Change of Tenancy which could include Direct Exchange, Assigned and Succession tenancies.

The following work should be considered mandatory in all Change of Tenancy situations:

- Testing and certification of the electrical installation.
- Testing and certification of hard wired smoke detectors.
- Testing and certification of all heating appliances and associated flues.
- Carry out visual safety inspection of solar water heating system and controls.
- Flush out and disinfectant Domestic plumbing system where the property is vacant for more than 30 days.

The following minimum standards will apply at change of tenancy:

- External fabric - items such as roofs, gutters, windows, doors and external joinery must be in good condition and weather proof.
- Security - locks must be working properly and all window panes intact.
- Services – Change of Tenancy electrical inspection and certification. Water and heating system to be checked and free from defect. Roomheater and flueways to be tested. Gas and Oil Heating to be serviced and tested. Visual inspection of Solar water heating and controls. Testing of smoke and heat detectors where fitted by the Housing Executive. Detectors which have not been fitted by the Housing Executive should be removed.
- Internal doors - all doors must be complete and must close properly.
- Kitchen - existing units, doors, cupboards must fit properly. Work tops and sink units should not be prejudicial to health. All units should be silicone sealed.
- Bathroom - All sanitary fittings should be complete, clean and free from cracks. All units should be silicone sealed.
- Tiles - Cracked tiles to be replaced with identical or close matching tile and re-grouted as necessary.
- Walls and ceilings - Large holes to be filled.
- Mould or fungus to be washed and cleaned using anti-fungicide.
- Infestation - Properties must be fumigated if required.
- Gardens - grass and hedges to be trimmed if appropriate.
- Overall - property must be free from debris, rubbish etc. Previous carpets, floor coverings, previous tenant's possessions should be cleared from the property. Floors will be swept or mopped as necessary. All kitchen and bathroom units, window sills etc will be washed down. All Health and safety risks must be removed.
- Re-let dwellings should be thoroughly cleaned to the NIHE specification before the new tenant moves in.

Housing Executive: Offices

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Social Development how much the Housing Executive has spent on (i) furniture; and (ii) double glazing in its offices in each of the last two years.

(AQW 29969/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised of the following expenditure on (i) furniture and (ii) double glazing in its offices in the last two years:-

(i) Furniture:-

2012	£134,961
2013	£123,731

(ii)

Double glazing to NIHE offices – commenced November 2012 and completed May 2013:-

2012/13	£260,132

Housing Executive: Direct Labour Organisation

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development what is the current extent and operational cost of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's direct labour squad; and by how much these costs have changed since April 2013.

(AQW 29987/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that the Direct Labour Organisation (DLO) provided cover for all eight response maintenance contracts vacated by contractors who had gone into administration between April and August 2013. Those contracts * were as follows:-

- West Belfast
- South Belfast
- East Belfast
- North Belfast
- Shankill

- Lisburn Antrim Street
- Lisburn Dairy Farm
- Craigavon

The DLO total turnover including grounds maintenance, void property security and health and safety electrical inspections will have increased from £7.4m in 2013/14 to approximately £19m in 2014/15. The additional costs arise from the DLO taking on some of the contracts formerly undertaken by contractors who went into administration. To do that the Housing Executive has taken on 219# employees (prior to this DLO employed 127 operatives) under the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 2006 (TUPE) and some additional staff where there was a shortfall in the contractors' structures, for example where they did not employ electricians directly but used sub-contractors. The additional costs include the cost of these staff and all the other costs associated with the work that they do, for example, material, transport, overheads.

Notes

- * The DLO is now no longer engaged in the East Belfast or Lisburn contracts.
- # A small number of these staff have since left.

Neighbourhood Renewal

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Social Development what criteria will be used to ascertain the success of the Neighbourhood Renewal programmes.

(AQW 30043/11-15)

Mr McCausland: My Department is currently in the process of evaluating the impact of the Neighbourhood Renewal Strategy and the lessons learned.

In taking forward the evaluation, there are three key areas of work:

- An assessment of the overall impact of the Neighbourhood Renewal Strategy against its stated purpose, key issues, overall aim, goals and objectives;
- An assessment of the effectiveness model for the operational delivery of Neighbourhood Renewal as set out in People and Place; and
- Consideration of the lessons learned from Neighbourhood Renewal that can be provided to Councils in 2015 in the context of their new statutory duty to produce community plans for their areas.

Housing Executive: Double Glazing, East Londonderry

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Social Development when the double glazing of Housing Executive owned homes in East Londonderry will begin.

(AQW 30044/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that it has completed the appointment of contractors to its low rise Double Glazing Framework. It has also completed the secondary competitions for the award of contracts under this Framework. Those contracts have now been signed by the successful contractors and the scheme briefs have been issued to these contractors. The following schemes are in the programme for East Londonderry:-

Greysteel	110 dwellings currently programmed for May 2014
Kennaught/Roe Mill	159 dwellings currently programmed for July 2014
Coleraine	304 dwellings currently programmed for July 2014

Social Housing: Carrickfergus

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Social Development what plans there are to increase the social housing stock in Carrickfergus.

(AQW 30055/11-15)

Mr McCausland: I recently approved the Social Housing Development Programme (SHDP) for the period 2014/15 – 2016/17 and details of the schemes included in it for the Carrickfergus Borough Council area are included in the table attached. Currently there are no schemes included in 2016/17 but the SHDP is reviewed annually and there is potential for additional schemes to be added in-year subject to social housing need and availability of finance.

Benefits: Employment and Support Allowance

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development how many Employment Support Allowance refusals were overturned on the grounds of special circumstances at (i) review; or (ii) appeal, in 2013.

(AQW 30062/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The information requested is not available. The IT system used to administer Employment and Support Allowance is not configured to separate applications that were granted on the grounds of exceptional circumstances.

Benefits: Employment and Support Allowance

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development how many Employment Support Allowance applications in 2013 were granted solely on the grounds of special circumstances.

(AQW 30063/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The information requested is not available. The IT system used to administer Employment and Support Allowance is not configured to separate applications that were granted on the grounds of exceptional circumstances.

Benefits: Employment and Support Allowance

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Social Development for a breakdown by council area of the percentage figures for successful appeals against an ATOS assessment, which resulted in Employment and Support Allowance payments being stopped.

(AQW 30093/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Appeals Service (TAS) does not hold the information in the format requested as Employment Support Allowance (ESA) appeals are heard at various venues throughout Northern Ireland determined by the postal district within which the appellant resides.

TAS also does not record statistics or information relating to the reason a social security benefit claim is disallowed. However, the table below details the number of ESA appeals received by TAS during the period 1 June 2011 to 31 December 2013 that have received a final determination/outcome, how many were successful and the percentage success rate.

Tribunal Centre	Final Outcome	Successful	%

Gambling: Fixed-odds Betting Terminals

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development how many fixed odds betting terminals operate in Northern Ireland; and what assessment he has made of their social impact.

(AQW 30096/11-15)

Mr McCausland: My Department does not maintain a record of the number of fixed odds betting terminals (FOBTs) in Northern Ireland; however, a report produced by PricewaterhouseCoopers in 2011 estimated that there were approximately 568 of these machines in operation.

A gambling prevalence survey was carried out by my Department in 2010 as part of the Review of Gambling. The survey found that 2.2% of adults has had a problem with gambling in Northern Ireland, it was not however possible to identify the social impacts of the use of gaming machines as opposed to other forms of gambling.

Research is currently being carried out in Great Britain by the Responsible Gambling Trust to identify whether there is evidence that consumers are experiencing harm as a result of machines such as FOBTs; I look forward to reading the results of this research.

Gambling: Bookmakers

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of licensed betting shops; and how this compares with five years ago.

(AQW 30097/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Records held by my Department indicate that there were 324 licensed bookmaking offices in 2013/14; the corresponding figure for 2008/09 was 359.

Supporting People

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the (i) target; and (ii) actual expenditure for the Supporting People Programme, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 30101/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The annual target for the provision of housing support services to vulnerable people is 17,000. This target has been exceeded year on year since the introduction of the programme.

The table below details the Supporting People expenditure in each of the last 5 financial years compared to the budget.

Year end as at 31 March	Target £'000	Actual £'000
2013	66,384	65,915
2012	65,184	64,097
2011	63,884	63,154
2010	62,000	63,453
2009	62,570	62,635

A ring fenced budget for Supported Housing (Bamford) starts was introduced in the Comprehensive Spending Review (CSR) period 2011/12 – 2014/15.

The table below details actual spend for Supported Housing units

Year end as at 31 March	Bamford Actual Spend £M
2015	11,630
2014	10,000
2013	10,776
2012	9,566

Please note that anticipated spend has been included for year ending 2014 and 2015.

Benefits: Employment and Support Allowance

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development for a breakdown of Employment Support Allowance claimants from West Tyrone, broken down per council area, who have (i) challenged a decision to disallow benefits; and (ii) been successful in the last three years in overturning decisions to disallow or refuse their relevant benefit; and to detail representation provided for claimants by (a) the Citizens Advice Bureau; (b) Omagh Independent Advice Service; (c) political representatives; and (d) others.

(AQW 30123/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The information cannot be provided in the format requested as The Appeal Service (TAS) arranges for Employment Support Allowance (ESA) appeals to be heard at venues throughout Northern Ireland determined by the postal district within which the appellant resides.

The total number of ESA appeals received by TAS for claimants from West Tyrone in the last three financial years, the number who have been successful and the representation provided by the Citizens Advice Bureau (CAB), Omagh

Independent Advice Service, political representatives and others is set out below.

			Representation at successful appeals
Financial Year	Number of ESA Appeals received (i)	Number of successful appeals	CAB	Omagh Independent Advice Service	Political Reps	Others	No Rep. Involved

2012/13	800	431	42	74	71	139	105

- (i) This is the number of appeals submitted to TAS. Not all appeals submitted to the Social Security Agency (SSA) will progress to TAS

Benefits: Disability Living Allowance

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development for a breakdown of Disability Living Allowance claimants from West Tyrone, broken down per council area, who have (i) challenged a decision to disallow benefits; and (ii) been successful in the last three years in overturning decisions to disallow or refuse their relevant benefit; and to detail representation provided for claimants by (a) the Citizens Advice Bureau; (b) Omagh Independent Advice Service; (c) political representatives; and (d) others.

(AQW 30124/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The information cannot be provided in the format requested as The Appeal Service (TAS) arranges for Disability Living Allowance (DLA) appeals to be heard at venues throughout Northern Ireland determined by the postal district within which the appellant resides.

The total number of DLA appeals received by TAS for claimants from West Tyrone in the last three financial years, the number who have been successful and the representation provided by the Citizens Advice Bureau (CAB), Omagh

Independent Advice Service, political representatives and others is set out below.

Financial Year	Number of DLA Appeals received (i)	Number of successful appeals	Representation at successful appeals

2010/11	295	72	9	5	6	22	30
2011/12	203	101	11	8	8	27	47
2012/13	242	112	21	6	24	29	32

- (i) This is the number of appeals submitted to TAS. Not all appeals submitted to the Social Security Agency (SSA) will progress to TAS

Social Housing

Mr McCallister asked the Minister for Social Development why the supply of social housing is outstripped by the demand. (AQW 30205/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive, who manage the Social Housing Development Programme, assess the social housing need requirement for Northern Ireland taking account of demographic, new build, demolition and vacancy data (Net Stock Model). The annual social housing need requirement for Northern Ireland over the past ten years is set out in the table below; together with the new build social housing programme starts facilitated by the budget for each year of the same period.

The major factors that explain demand exceeding supply are: continued demographic growth, continued low level output in the private sector, availability of suitably located and priced land, and capacity constraints within the housing associations sector. The availability of funding is not considered a constraint at this time.

The cumulative shortfall between social housing need and the social housing starts over the past 10 years is 7,732 units.

	2012/ 13	2011/ 12	2010/ 11	2009/ 10	2008/ 09	2007/ 08	2006/ 07	2005/ 06	2004/ 05	2003/ 04

Warm Homes Scheme: Coleraine Borough Council Area

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of (i) applications; and (ii) approvals for the Warm Homes Scheme in the Coleraine Borough Council area in the 12 months (a) before; and (b) after 31 October 2010. (AQW 30215/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive manages the Warm Homes Scheme on behalf of the Department for Social Development. The Housing Executive collects information on completed measures for the Warm Homes Scheme by Council area.

The Warm Homes Scheme manager arranges to have measures installed by their own contractors once it has been established that an applicant is eligible for assistance.

In the Coleraine area, a total of 644 homes have received measures under the Warm Homes Scheme. The table below shows the measures by type:

Warm Homes Scheme Coleraine

Intervention	01/11/2009 – 31/10/2010	01/11/2010 – 31/10/2011	Total
Insulation	318	259	577
Heating	3	25	28
Heating & Insulation	17	22	39
Total	338	306	644

The Information provided in this response is governed by the Principles and Protocols of the Code of Practice for Official Statistics. This is enforced by UK Statistics Authority.

Charitable Status

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development what barriers exist to prevent an existing commercial enterprise becoming a charitable foundation.

(AQW 30216/11-15)

Mr McCausland: There are no barriers to prevent an existing commercial enterprise becoming a charitable foundation.

A charitable foundation's purposes must be exclusively charitable and for the public benefit. Any profit from trading or commercial activity must be applied in accordance with its charitable purposes and its assets must remain within the charity sector. A charitable foundation is required to register with the Charity Commission for Northern Ireland.

Shared Surface Streets

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development to outline his Department's position on minimum kerb heights in shared surface streets.

(AQW 30244/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Department for Social Development has been working with a number of councils on Public Realm Schemes which may involve shared surface streets. The Department does not have any specific position on shared surface streets but where these are planned the Roads Service is consulted in relation the planning approval for such schemes and must give its approval to the specification and ensure that it meets with their standards as ultimately the Roads Service will be responsible for adopting the completed scheme.

Review of Public Administration

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the areas of responsibility under his departmental remit that will be transferred to local government under the Review of Public Administration, including (i) the budget for each project or programme; and (ii) whether staff will also be transferred.

(AQW 30313/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Executive has committed to the Reform of Local Government and as part of this has agreed a package of functions that should transfer from Central Government to Local Government. The package includes an extension of powers from DSD to Councils to enable them to address area based regeneration and community development; in addition functions to transfer include Houses in Multiple Occupation (HMOs), Housing Unfitness and Laganside. Costs associated with HMOs and Unfitness are in the region of £2m per annum. The annualised cost for Laganside has been calculated as £2.7m per annum. In relation to the budgets for area based regeneration and community development, these are estimated at £62m although this sum may be subject to efficiency savings as part of the Executive's 2015/16 Budget process.

For the HMO, Unfitness and Laganside functions, staff involved in delivery will transfer to Councils under TUPE provisions. For staff involved in the delivery of regeneration and community development, TUPE does not apply but we are working with Councils on the principles of a scheme that will provide Councils with access to experienced DSD staff.

Staff: Support Grades

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Social Development (i) to outline the rationale for his Department's privatisation of its Support Grade Band functions; (ii) whether his Department is aware of any issues regarding the performance of other private sector providers of these services; (iii) if so, to provide further details; and (iv) to outline the rationale for the inclusion in the same tender of the unconnected function of Health and Safety Risk Assessments in departmental buildings.

(AQW 30323/11-15)

Mr McCausland:

- (i) The decision by the Department for Social Development to outsource its Soft Services was an operational one driven by a need to improve performance and achieve efficiencies.

The Department is working to support the affected staff who have the option to: (i) transfer to another NICS department; (ii) transfer laterally to an administrative post within DSD (where staff meet the qualifying conditions); or, (iii) transfer to the new provider under TUPE.

This question was previously asked and addressed under AQW 26721/11-15

- (ii) The Department is not aware of any issues regarding the performance of other private sector providers of these services
- (iii) Not applicable
- (iv) Health and Safety Risk Assessments are to be included in the same tender to assure that they are conducted in a comprehensive, timely and consistent manner across the Departments' estate by professionally trained experts.

Welfare Reform: Impact on Staff

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of civil servants employed at Lisahally to carry out tasks directly related to benefit claims and entitlements in Great Britain, whose employment is directly linked to Welfare Reform proceeding in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 30346/11-15)

Mr McCausland: There are currently 179 staff located in Lisahally who carry out tasks directly related to benefit claims and entitlements in Great Britain. They are part of a wider group of staff who provide such services. The remaining 485 staff are employed in Belfast. This business area is titled the Belfast Benefit Centre and it provides processing for a number of working age benefits for the South East of England (London and the Home Counties) on behalf of the Department for Work and Pensions.

The Department for Work and Pensions have already indicated that their jobs may be at risk if Northern Ireland does not progress with welfare reform because many of the competitive advantages which Northern Ireland offers the Department for Work and Pensions will disappear as the staff will no longer be operating the same social security systems.

Welfare Reform: Social Security Work

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Social Development how many civil servants' jobs will be lost as a result of the removal of Social Security related work carried out locally for agencies in Great Britain should the Welfare Reform Bill not be implemented.

(AQW 30347/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Around 664 staff are currently employed in Belfast Benefit Centre which provides processing for a number of working age benefits for the South East of England (London and the Home Counties) on behalf of the Department for Work and Pensions. There are also 800 staff employed in the Child Maintenance Service providing services to the Eastern Region of England on behalf of the Department for Work and Pensions.

The Department for Work and Pensions have already indicated that their jobs may be at risk if Northern Ireland does not progress with welfare reform because many of the competitive advantages which Northern Ireland offers the Department for Work and Pensions will disappear as the staff will no longer be operating the same social security systems.

Financial Transactions Capital

Mr Copeland asked the Minister for Social Development what projects his Department is exploring for potential delivery under Financial Transactions Capital.

(AQW 30364/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Department is currently utilising Financial Transactions Capital to deliver four projects namely:-

- The purchase of vacant/repossessed homes by Housing Associations for renovation and re-sale;
- A shared equity scheme akin to the current co-ownership model;
- An affordable Home Loans scheme; and
- An empty Home Loans scheme.

Since January 2013, £27.7m in financial transactions capital funding has been made available for these four projects.

Financial Transactions Capital

Mr Copeland asked the Minister for Social Development to outline any plans he has to utilise Financial Transactions Capital in the delivery of housing.

(AQW 30365/11-15)

Mr McCausland: I am of the opinion that Financial Transactions Capital funding provides real opportunity for the housing sector. My Housing Strategy "Facing the Future" outlines a number of commitments where such funding may bear fruit.

Four housing-related projects are currently being taken forward with Financial Transactions Capital. These are:

- 1 Purchase of vacant/repossessed homes by Housing Associations for renovation and re-sale
- 2 New shared equity scheme akin to the current co-ownership model
- 3 Affordable Home Loans scheme
- 4 Empty Home Loans scheme.

Since January 2013, £27.7m in financial transactions capital funding has been made available for these four projects.

These projects will help assist wider economic growth though the income generated for the construction sector in undertaking these works.

Social Housing: Waiting List

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the current number of applicants on the social housing waiting list that are deemed to be in housing stress.

(AQO 5430/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that at 1 January 2014 there were 21,354 applicants on the waiting list who have 30 or more housing need points under the Housing Selection Scheme Rules and are therefore deemed to be in Housing Stress.

The definition of housing stress is a household on the Housing Executive waiting list and assessed to be in the most need, for reasons of health, intimidation, insecurity of tenure and housing conditions.

Social Housing: Newbuilds

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the target for social home starts in the 2014/15 financial year.

(AQO 5432/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Plans, which I approved in December, are to start 2,000 new social homes in 2014/15 and in each of the following two years. The new programme, which details each of the new schemes, can be viewed on the Housing Executive website.

These plans will next year see the biggest number of new homes started for the past four years and underpins my commitment to deliver higher levels of new social housing.

Stepping up to an annual output of 2,000 new homes is a significant challenge. Whilst funding is already in place to deliver the 2014/15 programme, it has yet to be agreed for the following two years. You can be assured that I will be continuing to make the case to Executive colleagues for sufficient funding to allow these higher levels of output to be maintained.

Regeneration: Shared Space

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister for Social Development to outline how he ensures that urban regeneration planning takes account of the need to promote shared space.

(AQO 5433/11-15)

Mr McCausland: As Minister for Social Development I have made it one of my ministerial priorities 'to bring divided communities together by creating urban centres which are sustainable, welcoming and accessible to live, work and relax in peace'. This is one of the strategic objectives in my Department's Corporate Plan for 2011 – 2015 and what we do to implement it is detailed in the Department's Annual Business Plan.

Two of my Department's main policy statements; the Urban Regeneration and Community Development Framework and the Housing Strategy reflect this priority and the need to promote shared space.

The Regeneration Framework, published in July 2013, supports the development of shared and accessible town and city centres and other development sites. But promoting shared space is not just about physical development. It is also important that communities are supported so that they can also contribute to improving their neighbourhoods through the development of networks and partnerships within and between communities.

The Housing Strategy and its Action Plan, also published in July 2013, outlines how proposals will be developed to support shared communities 'which are welcoming to everyone' by building on the success of the Shared Neighbourhood Programme.

Another important planning tool is the Town Centre Masterplans that my Department has developed in partnership with local councils. These have been the catalyst for the successful design and delivery of many public realm schemes and other regeneration interventions which have at their core the creation of attractive open and shared places where people can live, work and visit. My Department's work in this area was highlighted in the Northern Ireland Peace Monitoring report which recognised 'the value of new confident and vibrant shared urban spaces'.

With the transfer of regeneration powers and their associated budgets to councils in 2015 I plan to bring forward the Regeneration and Housing Bill which will ensure that councils have due regard to the policy guidance provided by DSD and continue to promote shared space in our town and city centres in future.

Neighbourhood Renewal

Mr Maskey asked the Minister for Social Development for his assessment of whether councils are fit for purpose in relation to managing the transfer of Neighbourhood Renewal under the Review of Public Administration.

(AQO 5434/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Neighbourhood Renewal is not transferring to the new Councils in terms of a formal transfer of function. However, I would expect that many of the new Councils will wish to continue to tackle area-based deprivation, at least in the short to medium term, using the approaches that my Department has developed and managed over the last decade.

However, I am concerned that significant challenges lie ahead in ensuring that the transfer to the new arrangements is as smooth as possible. In order to assist the new councils in discharging their new responsibilities I have tasked my officials to work closely with the Statutory Transition Committees, and later the Shadow Councils, to assist them in putting in place effective arrangements to meet the needs of their communities.

Welfare Reform: Implementation

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on any discussions on the implementation of welfare reform.

(AQO 5435/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Since coming into office in May 2011, I have been engaged with ministers within the Executive and in Westminster to seek ways to ameliorate some of the more negative aspects of the reform of the welfare system to meet the needs of Northern Ireland.

The outcome of this is that I have developed a package of measures designed to tailor how the reform of the welfare system is implemented in Northern Ireland. This package will not only help simplify the social security system but more importantly it will involve measures which protect the most vulnerable in our society.

I presented the current package of measures to the Welfare Reform Executive sub-committee on 27 January and indicated my intention to bring it to the Executive meeting on the 30 January; however, the ultimate decision to bring it forward rests with the First Minister and Deputy First Minister.

Housing: Funding Bids

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the difference between the total departmental funds bid for, against those received, in the last 4 monitoring rounds, specifically in relation to funds allocated to housing.

(AQO 5436/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Department submitted bids totalling £33.7million and was allocated £23.7million over the period. The difference was £10m.

- In January 2013 no bids were made.
- In June 2013 a £15million bid was made for Northern Ireland Co-Ownership Housing Association (NICHHA). Of this £10million was allocated.
- In October 2013 bids valued at £18.7 million were submitted. This was made up of £10million from NICHHA, £5million Affordable Home Loans and £3.7million Empty Homes Loans. £5million was allocated to NICHHA and the Affordable Home Loans/Empty Home Loans bids were met in full.
- No bids were made in January 2014.

Affordable Warmth Scheme

Mr Cree asked the Minister for Social Development for his assessment of the Affordable Warmth Scheme pilots.

(AQO 5437/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The University of Ulster's evaluation of this Affordable Warmth Pilot has indicated that the area based targeting approach to tackling fuel poverty was a success. Phase one of the pilots was primarily about testing the effectiveness of this targeting tool in identifying those vulnerable households. Phase two commenced in September 2013, testing how the energy efficiency measures can be delivered using local installers to carry out the work. My Department intends to launch a public consultation on the future delivery of energy efficiency improvements for low income households in late February 2014.

Social Housing: Victims and Survivors

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on how Victims and Survivors can be supported through the housing selection scheme for social housing.

(AQO 5438/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that the Housing Selection Scheme includes provision for an award of intimidation points to applicants or tenants who have been the victim of hate crime and have been intimidated from their home. A Health and Social Well Being Assessment is also carried out which includes an assessment of functionality within the applicant's existing accommodation, support care needs, social needs and complex needs. This assessment includes an award of points in recognition of circumstances such as violence or risk of violence, harassment, distress or anxiety caused by trauma.

By way of additional support, the Housing Executive also operates several schemes to help victims of hate incidents. This includes a Hate Incident Practical Action Scheme (HIPA) with the NIO and PSNI. The purpose of this scheme is to provide personal and home protection measures to victims of incidents perceived to be racial, homophobic, disability, sectarian, transphobic and religious. The scheme will ensure that residents of non-Housing Executive as well as Housing Executive properties who have been the subject of a hate incident - at or close to their home - are afforded support both during and after normal working hours.

In addition, the Supporting People programme for housing related support aims to help tenants sustain their tenancies and vulnerable people live as independently as possible in the community.

Northern Ireland Assembly Commission

MLAs' Staff: Register of Interests

Mr Flanagan asked the Assembly Commission to detail any consideration that has been given to introducing a Register of Interests for Members' Staff.

(AQW 29966/11-15)

Mrs Cochrane (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): The Assembly Commission has not given active consideration to the introduction of a Register of Interests for Members' staff. As support staff are employed directly by Member, it would be appropriate for each Member to assure himself or herself that no conflict of interest arises for support staff. However, this would be for each individual Member to decide upon. The eligibility criteria for the use of OCE to pay support staff are no longer a matter for the Assembly Commission. The Independent Financial Review Panel now determines such issues.

Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure

In this Bound Volume, page WA 266 please replace AQO 5468/11-15 with:

Ulster Rugby

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how her Department supports Ulster Rugby.
(AQO 5468/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department is currently delivering the redevelopment of the Ravenhill Rugby Grounds which is the Headquarters of Ulster Rugby. My Department's investment in the Stadium will total £16.4m by the time the whole project is complete.

In support of my Department's key priority of promoting equality and tackling poverty and social exclusion Ulster Rugby has been awarded £1.5m ( £0.5 each year 2012-13, 2013-14, 2014-15). This funding to Ulster Rugby will be applied to increasing participation in the sport in the top 30% of areas of multiple deprivation, to increasing the number of accredited coaches working within Disability by 10% and also to increase female participation including coaches.

In addition to this support, my Department over the past three years, through Sport NI has awarded just under £850,000 to Ulster Rugby thorough programmes which include the 'Investing in Performance Sport Programme', the 'Stadia Safety (Urgent Works) Programme' and the 'Sport Matters Capital Equipment Programme.'

In terms of planned support, a further £917,000 is anticipated, predominantly through Sport NI's Performance Focus Programme.

North Eastern Education and Library Board: New Capital Developments

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) all primary schools in the North Eastern Education and Library Board area identified as requiring new capital development; and those identified as being priorities.
(AQW 29199/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): In my statement to the Assembly in January 2013, I announced the following Primary Schools in the North Eastern Education and Library Board area to advance in planning:

- St Mary's Primary School/Glenravel Primary School;
- Braidside Integrated Primary School;
- Corran Integrated Primary School, Larne;

I had also announced a proposal to meet the needs of children in the Islandmagee area however following discussions with the NEELB the project announced at that time has been withdrawn. The NEELB is considering an alternative solution in that area.

The Department continues to work with all the managing authorities on the strategic planning of the schools' estate, including the potential for future capital investment. There will always be greater demand for investment than funds available and at such time as any future capital announcement is made it will take account of strategic priorities identified across all sectors.

Civil Service: Showers

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel which Civil Service offices that offer shower facilities for people that cycle to work; and whether there are plans to install shower facilities across all offices.
(AQW 27675/11-15)

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): There are a total of 116 buildings in the NICS and Agency estate that have showers available for cyclists. Provision of additional shower facilities are planned in a further 2 buildings.

There is currently no plan to provide shower facilities throughout the NICS estate for cyclists as it is a matter for the Department with premises officer responsibility to consider the appropriateness of such facilities in a particular building.

In existing buildings for which my Department has premises officer responsibility, where circumstances allow, where space is available, it is appropriate to do so and budget constraints permit, shower facilities are provided.

Housing Executive: Meetings about Double Glazing

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Social Development to detail all the meetings he has had in the last year in relation to the Housing Executive double-glazing scheme; and who he met on each occasion.

(AQW 11512/11-15)

The original answer was issued by the Department on 28 May 2012:

Mr McCausland (The Minister for Social Development): I and the Chief Executive of the Housing Executive met with representatives of the Glass and Glazing Federation and Fusion 21 to discuss double glazing specifications in Housing Executive properties in relation to the Glass and Glazing Federations guidelines 'The Good Practice Guide for the Installation of Replacement Windows and Doors'. I also met with DUP colleagues Ian McCrea, Mervyn Storey and Paul McClean on 15 May 2012 to discuss issues they had about the manufacture of double glazing units.

A revised answer was published on 24 January 2014:

Mr McCausland (The Minister for Social Development): I and the Chief Executive of the Housing Executive met with representatives of Turkington Holdings Ltd on 16 April 2012 to discuss double glazing specifications in Housing Executive properties in relation to the Glass and Glazing Federation's guidelines 'The Good Practice Guide for the Installation of Replacement Windows and Doors'.

I also met with Fusion 21 on 23 April 2012 to discuss generally their procurement model. Fusion 21, in early May 2012, then raised the issue of the Housing Executive's double glazing programme with my officials who advised that, as this was an operational matter for the Housing Executive, they should contact the Housing Executive's Head of Procurement to discuss this.

I also met with DUP colleagues Ian McCrea, Mervyn Storey and Paul McLean on 15 May 2012 to discuss issues they had about the manufacture of double glazing units.

I also met with Superseal on 27 September 2012.

5. Private Members' Business

5.1 Motion – Rural Development Funding within the Common Agricultural Policy

Proposed:

That this Assembly expresses dissatisfaction with the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her failure to effectively consult with Executive colleagues on her plans to transfer funds from Pillar 1 to Pillar 2 within the Common Agricultural Policy; notes with concern the ensuing events which saw the issue brought before the High Court; accepts that, whilst farmers will benefit through increased direct payments, they and many rural communities and organisations may now lose out through significantly reduced rural development funding; and calls on the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to commit to seeking sufficient funding for the future Rural Development Programme to efficiently and effectively deliver a range of schemes, including those to support our burgeoning agri-food sector, increase farm safety measures, incentivise farm modernisation and capital investment, promote agri-environment measures and support our rural economy and communities.

Mrs J Dobson

Mr R Swann

5.2 Amendment

Proposed:

Leave out from 'for her failure' to 'plans' and insert:

'and the Minister of Finance and Personnel for their failure to effectively consult with each other or with their Executive colleagues over the recent attempt'

Motion - Crisis Conditions at Accident and Emergency Departments - Amendment

Proposed:

Leave out all after 'concern' and insert:

'the pressures recently experienced at the Accident and Emergency departments in Craigavon Area Hospital and the Royal Victoria Hospital, Belfast and their impact on patients; notes that the operational escalation procedures invoked worked effectively, and expresses gratitude for the dedication and efforts of health care staff who can often work long hours in challenging environments; further notes that the Health and Social Care Board and the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust are reviewing the Royal Victoria Hospital incident to see whether refinement in Health and Social Care business continuity planning is required; and calls on the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to investigate this, and other occurrences where Accident and Emergency departments have been over stretched, with the aim of providing adequate resources to ensure that every patient admitted to hospital is treated in a safe and controlled environment at all times.'

Consideration Stage

Tuesday 28 January 2014

Amendments tabled up to and including Thursday, 23 January 2014

The Bill will be considered in the following order—
Clauses, Schedules and Long Title

Amendment 1 [Made without division]

New Clause

After clause 8 insert—

‘Amendments of the 2013 Regulations

8A.—(1) The Single Use Carrier Bags Charge Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2013 (“the 2013 Regulations”) are amended as follows.

(2) For regulation 3 substitute—

“Meaning of “carrier bag”

3. In these Regulations “carrier bag” means a bag of any material supplied or designed for the purpose of enabling goods to be taken away or delivered.”.

(3) Except in regulation 1(1) (citation) and regulation 3 (meaning of “single use carrier bag”)—

(a) for “single use carrier bag” (wherever occurring) substitute “carrier bag”;

(b) for “single use carrier bags” (wherever occurring) substitute “carrier bags”.

(4) In regulation 6, for the words from “for the purpose” to the end substitute “at a place where goods are sold”.

(5) In paragraph 1 of Schedule 1 (exemptions)—

(a) in sub-paragraph (1), after head (k) add—

“(l) bags which are sold to customers for a price of not less than 20 pence each;

(m) multiple reuse plastic bags that are issued as free replacements for a corresponding number of worn out multiple reuse plastic bags.”;

(b) in sub-paragraph (3), after the definition of “medicinal product” insert—

““multiple reuse plastic bags” means bags which—

(a) are made wholly or mainly from plastic;

(b) have either maximum dimensions of 404 mm (both width and height) or a maximum dimension of 439 mm (either width or height);

(c) are manufactured from material which is greater than 49 microns in thickness;

(d) are purchased by the customer; and

(e) when worn out are returnable to the seller from whom they were purchased to be replaced free of charge.”.

(6) This section comes into operation on 19th January 2015.

(7) Nothing in this section affects any power to amend or revoke the 2013 Regulations.’

Minister of the Environment
