It is slightly ironic that the Department and I are now being criticised because amendments have already been hinted at. I suspect that we would have been in a worse position if we had not given an indication that some amendments were likely. Because of the timescale for getting a Bill of this scale into place, we have literally had the position that most of the wording was finalised some months ago. Therefore, it is perhaps inevitable that possible amendments have been identified in the interim, but I have no doubt that if the goodwill that we have seen from the Committee members so far continues, we will see good work being done on that. I am grateful for the positive words from so many members of the Committee about their willingness to engage, because it is an ambitious blueprint for the transformation of the justice system. As a result of this Bill, we will see a fundamental reshaping of the justice system.

(Mr Speaker in the Chair)

Most elements attracted very little discussion, although Mr Allister just recently objected to a single jurisdiction, which Alban Maginness mentioned in terms of his love for the history. I fear, however, that if we were to recreate Somerville and Ross, memoirs of an Irish DJ might convey a slightly different impression from memoirs of an Irish RM. That particular form of words has been lost. We will have to see that we maintain the best of what is in the past as we seek to streamline. I think that there will be issues to ensure that when we look at a single court jurisdiction, we make sure that it is not in the interests of anybody playing golf but is principally in the interests of the victims and witnesses.

One of the issues that appears to be broadly —

Mr A Maginness: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Ford: Yes.

Mr A Maginness: In relation to the single jurisdiction, I understand the efficiencies and so forth and convenience that could be derived from that, but we have a constitutional position here where the judiciary and the Executive are separate, and the Executive do not interfere with the judiciary.

Sometimes, with all these efficiencies and attempts to regulate the courts, I wonder whether we are treading into that constitutional area of prohibition where, in fact, we should not be interfering with the judiciary. That might appear to be an exaggerated point in relation to the common jurisdiction, but it is something that, I think, we should bear in mind.

Mr Ford: I take Mr Maginness's point on that. I do not agree with him that when we talk about the administration arrangements we are straying into the role of the judiciary. However, I certainly accept that it is an issue that Members need to be very careful about in a number of different areas.

The reform of the committal process appeared to attract general support around the House, except from the two members of the Bar present. I am not sure exactly how to take that. As far as I am concerned, we have to look at the issue. The committal process existed to justify an issue going to trial; it was not to have a pre-trial. My major concerns are based on what I have seen and on what has been highlighted by members of the Committee around when the committal process amounts to a PI and not a PE and, effectively, becoming a first go at vulnerable witnesses. I do not think that that is acceptable in the present day. Whilst I appreciate the concerns that have been raised by the two barristers amongst us on the issue, I think that we need to look carefully. I notice that Lord Morrow, for example, wishes me to go faster and further than we are proposing to go in this area. Perhaps that is something that the Committee may wish to tease out a bit more.

I did not expect Mr Allister to bring in the continental system of the inquisitorial magistrate. I thought that, in our situation, we relied on the PPS to test the quality of evidence when it is put forward by the police after they have conducted their inquiries.

Mr Allister: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Ford: That is an issue where, I believe, we can protect the defendant's right to a fair trial, but it will be for the Committee to work out exactly how it will be done. I give way.

Mr Allister: Unless the Minister should misrepresent me, I was not advocating the inquisitorial magistrate. I was pointing out that, if this goes through, there will be no inquisitorial element in our system until you get to trial. In the interests of justice, there should be some sifting opportunity of an inquisitorial nature before you get to trial, if the presiding magistrate thinks that that is appropriate.

Mr Ford: I think that my point remains: most people, including, I believe, the PPS, believe that the PPS carries out that process under the system that we have. It is not exactly the same as the continental system, nor, of course, is there a procurator fiscal as in Scotland, but I believe that it is a system that shows there.

On a specific point that was also made by Lord Morrow, committal reform is not specifically a financial issue; it is an issue about the protection of vulnerable victims and witnesses. There may well be some financial consequences from it. It has been highlighted that there might be negative financial consequences as well. At this point, the key issue is to protect those who are vulnerable and who will have to give evidence at the full trial rather than the specific issue of funding.

There seems to be a broad measure of support for prosecutorial fines. Initially, Jim Wells, and, subsequently, Jim Allister, suggested that there was the potential that some of these issues could be applied too often, and there was a question as to whether some people would be on a formal record. The reality is that a prosecutorial fine will be recorded and the information will be held. Further details can be taken from that information to establish whether a prosecutorial fine might or might not be appropriate at a future stage.

The legislation, as it sits, does not prescribe the circumstances in which that might be offered. I thought that that was something that we would see as being appropriately decided at the discretion of the PPS. Furthermore, I think that it is similar to what the House has approved previously — the concept of fixed penalties in certain minor offences where there is an issue about how often a fixed penalty can be awarded. Clearly, it is a matter that will have to be followed through, but it is not something that we should get too hung up about. It is a clear issue, where there is the option to provide something that will streamline the court processes by removing a number of minor cases from the courts.

Lord Morrow made points about the difficulties we have with fine collection at present. There are two fundamental issues. The first is the significant issue of resources for the Police Service in the role it currently has in statute for the enforcement of fines. The second point is the recent court decision relating to the imprisonment of non-fine payers and the fact that that route has been closed. That is why we have taken the decision that we need to produce a new system, which is the one proposed for the fines and enforcement Bill. I confirm that it is my intention to proceed with that, as has been outlined to Members in the House in the past. That will provide a civilianised service. It will also take the pressures off the police and deal with the issue of committal to prison without a further court hearing. We would then be in a significantly better place than, frankly, what has been the case for a number of years. It is not a post-devolution problem; it is a problem that existed pre-devolution.

The one area that seemed to attract universal support — I think that every Member who spoke, starting with the Chair and Deputy Chair, mentioned it — was the charters for victims and witnesses. Again, it does no harm to repeat that, building on some preliminary work done by the Department, the Committee did a very extensive piece of work. I am grateful for the very positive comments that were made by a number of Members about the way in which the proposal has been taken forward. There will clearly be a lot more discussion about the two charters. I have no doubt that we will have some interesting debates about exactly what goes into them. The fundamental principle has to be right. It has been almost universally welcomed by all those with an interest. I think that we will see significant improvement.

I am very conscious of some of the comments, particularly from Tom Elliott, about concerns as to how victims and witnesses have been treated in the past. Rosie McCorley's comment about the recent introduction of the victim and witness care unit shows that some of these procedures are already in place administratively at this stage and that they are starting to make significant improvements. We will certainly need to ensure that the charters are in statute, carried through and that they properly make sure that the justice system meets the needs of victims and witnesses to make their experience less bad than what might have been the case previously.

Similarly, the concept of a personal statement has been largely welcomed. The issue of the disclosure of criminal records — the Access NI point — was raised. We have had difficulties for a number of years because of the multiplicity of certificates issued. It is something that we need to continue to deal with. The point highlighted by Jim Wells about somebody carrying out voluntary work in a number of different organisations in one church was probably a slight exaggeration. From my personal experience, that would all be covered by information from Access NI, but there are clearly problems if somebody is a volunteer with different organisations not under the same umbrella. Even then, some cases relate to employment as well. That is why we are very keen to see the concept of the portable certificate, the online application and the ability to get round those difficulties, which will make things much more efficient than had been the case.

It is generally about the key point of making the system more efficient and ensuring that we move forward in a better way. I am delighted that, although the term “faster, fairer” does not appear in the title of the Bill, if nothing else because the Attorney General thought that it was a little bit Orwellian, when most of us in the Chamber today have used the term “faster, fairer” it was because we know what we mean. We mean it in the concept of plain English with a genuine meaning, not in an Orwellian sense.

Speeding up justice has been a focus for the Department since I took office just over four years ago. Some of the specific proposals we have around early guilty pleas and statutory case management will have opportunities in that respect. Tom Elliott asked whether early guilty pleas would produce savings. I assure him and Jim Wells that any savings that may be made from any aspect of the Bill will be well used in the justice system. We are not expecting to see huge savings, but, given the budget problems that we face, there is plenty to spend money on within the Justice Department. I have no doubt that members of the Committee could suggest many more things that we could spend money on.

Early guilty pleas is not an issue of plea bargaining; it is an issue of recognising that the vast majority of cases that come before the courts see a guilty plea or a have a finding of guilt. It is a matter of informing people about the practical realities and ensuring that that information is there. First, by ensuring that clause 77 is publicised to make people aware of it — one might say, in the Voltairian sense, pour encourager les autres — others would realise what happens if you plead guilty at an early stage rather than at a late stage. Whilst it may be that lawyers tell their clients that this is the case, I think that there is no harm in making that explicit, with lawyers made fully aware of that, as we seek to enhance the concept of the better use of early guilty pleas. Jim Allister spoke of the inquisitions in court on a Friday morning in Belfast to ensure that cases are being prepared and well managed, but, sadly, that is not the case in every court in Northern Ireland, and we need to ensure that that does become the case in every court. I believe that there are real issues there.

I was also ever so slightly baffled by Mr Allister's reference to clause 77 in the context of somebody who might be not guilty because, as I read the first part of clause 77, it makes it absolutely clear that it is talking about somebody who is found guilty or who gives a guilty plea at a later stage than might have been the case.

So there are opportunities there to move things forward to help to enhance the efficiency of the system, and, as we face those difficult budgetary issues, there will be some benefits from it, but, primarily, there will be a benefit for victims and vulnerable witnesses in not having cases drag on, not having concerns about when they will appear in court and not fearing that they might have to appear twice to give evidence in cases. Those are the real issues, and that is building on the Committee's work to enhance, as best we can, the experience of victims and witnesses.

Mr Givan: I appreciate the Minister giving way at this point. The Member for North Antrim made an issue about when is the earliest reasonable opportunity for somebody to plead guilty. Does the Minister agree that, to a certain extent, we need to move away from the constant onus that, as some may say, lawyers are very interested in getting people off on a technicality? Does he agree that we need to start saying to the perpetrators of crime that the earliest opportunity to plead guilty is when they know in their heart that they are guilty and have committed the offence?

Instead, the relentless approach often taken by the legal profession — understandably so, to give the best representation to the defendant — is to put victims through the wringer. At times, they do so in the hope that the evidence will start crumbling, not necessarily because the perpetrator is guilty but because those trying to give evidence might withdraw from the case because of the way in which victims are often, as they told the Committee, intimidated by those in the legal profession who, in their view, abuse them through the adversarial approach often adopted in our court system.

Mr Ford: I would be a little cautious about advising lawyers, particularly in this company, of what their duties are to their clients, but there is no doubt that, in some cases, there are major difficulties in sustaining the evidence of vulnerable victims and witnesses. That is why, for example, the Department is about to do the second recruitment tranche for those who will assist vulnerable victims and witnesses and, indeed, defendants to give their best evidence in the legal process. We recognise the need for registered intermediaries to carry out that function, and there is no doubt that, in some cases, there is, if perhaps not entirely adopting the language that Mr Givan used, an effort to wear down witnesses who may be particularly vulnerable, and that is a problem that we have to deal with.

In the wider look at how we manage the process of speeding things up, we now have real opportunities. Later this week, I will have a meeting, which will have present the Chief Constable, the Lord Chief Justice and the Director of Public Prosecutions, as we look at a pilot project to manage some specific reforms in that area. I hope that, within a matter of months in at least one part of Northern Ireland, we will see from the pilot project opportunities to build on the work being done to ensure that the system functions as fairly as it ever did but significantly faster than it has in recent years.

A specific point was raised, perhaps by only one Member, when Patsy McGlone talked about the aims of the youth justice system. Whilst I am aware that there are those in the children's lobby groups who have some concerns about the proposal as it currently stands within the Bill, my advice is that the provision delivers on both the spirit and the letter of the youth justice review and on what is intended by the UNCRC. I will certainly be interested to hear any evidence that comes to the Committee to the contrary, but my advice at the moment is that it is an entirely satisfactory provision.

On that basis, it seems to me that we have achieved a significant balance of agreement around the issues here. There will be an interesting time for the Committee. I trust that it will not take every last minute to do its work. I also trust that, as it looks at some of its other work, and in light of some of the references made by members of the Committee about, for example, legal aid costs, it will continue to assist the Department as we work to deal with that major budgetary problem at the present time. I will put that particular point back to it in the spirit of generosity with which I was rude to Jim Wells earlier.

Tonight we have had an extremely positive and valuable contribution from all sides of the House as we look to reform the justice system and to provide a faster, fairer justice system for all of our people. I commend the Bill to the Assembly with the expectation that it is likely to pass in the next minute or so. I wish the Committee well in the work that it will do and promise the continuing engagement of my officials and myself in assisting the Committee in its due process.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That the Second Stage of the Justice Bill [NIA Bill 37/11-15] be agreed.

Motion made:

That the Assembly do now adjourn. — [Mr Speaker.]

Adjournment

Post-primary Education in County Fermanagh

Mr Speaker: The proposer of the topic will have up to 15 minutes and all other Members who wish to speak will have up to approximately seven minutes.

Mr Elliott: I welcome the opportunity to bring forward this Adjournment topic on post-primary education in Fermanagh. I suppose it has been broadly titled so that it encompasses the wider range of the educational sectors within the county. I know it is something that gets a lot of press and media attention, and even a lot of aggression in some areas in the county at the present time, mainly within the controlled and voluntary grammar sectors, and, indeed, the Catholic maintained sector.

I have attended — and I know other MLAs and public representatives have attended — meeting after meeting in the last couple of years in relation to the subject. I think I am right in quoting the Minister and the Department — “every school a good school” is obviously one of the phrases that are commonly used. I believe that that policy could be wide-ranging and acceptable to everyone. However, I believe that every school could be a good school given the chance and opportunity to develop, move forward and be progressive. That does not mean that every school must be a big school or have large numbers of pupils. Every school does not have to have over 1,000 pupils. In fact, I would contest that you get some of the better educational experiences at the smaller schools with 200 or 300 pupils as opposed to those with larger numbers.

Within the controlled sector, I recall the promises made in 2004 and 2005 of a newbuild for Devenish College. That is a case that has come up over and over again. I am sure that Minister O'Dowd and, indeed, his predecessors have heard it on various occasions. Indeed, the former Duke of Westminster High School at Kesh and Enniskillen High School merged to form Devenish College. I think that was in 2004. However, it was agreed at that time for the two individual campuses at Enniskillen and Kesh to remain until the new school of Devenish College was built on a brand new site. Unfortunately that did not happen. The Kesh site was closed before its time and, 10 years later, we are still waiting on the newbuild that was promised at that time.

Is it any wonder that there is a lack of confidence and trust in the Western Education and Library Board and the Department of Education? One of the big problems at the moment, irrespective of the sector, is that lack of confidence. To be fair, I accept that announcements such as the one that the Minister made this morning help to build a new confidence. However, if promises were made 10 years ago and nothing happens, it dents the confidence not only of the pupils at the school, many of whom have now left, but of the board of governors, the teachers and, indeed, the wider public.

We then go through the succeeding years with no progress being made on that newbuild but with the staff in Devenish College putting in a huge effort to ensure excellent teaching and the provision of a great educational experience for their pupils, even with very limited accommodation. It is fair to say that they should not have to teach in those conditions. Imagine how much easier their role would have been and how much better the experience of the pupils would have been if a new school had been in place 10 years ago.

I have a daughter who is starting Devenish College this year. When we went to the open night, the board of governors told us that it would have the newbuild in place by the time that she leaves. I do not know whether that will be in five years, six years or seven years, but I really hope that the Minister can put my mind at rest, not only from the point of view of a public representative but from that of a parent.

In January 2013, the Minister announced that there would be two newbuilds for Fermanagh: one for a merged Lisnaskea High School and Devenish College; and one for a merged Portora Royal School and Enniskillen Collegiate Grammar School. Then, totally unexpectedly, in that same month, there was an announcement that Lisnaskea High School was to close. It would merge with Devenish College, but the site in Lisnaskea would close. That was one of the biggest blows to the community in south-east Fermanagh. I know that the pupil numbers were dwindling, but the problem again was that it was being closed before its time.

Did we not learn any lessons from 2004 and 2005 when they closed the Duke of Westminster High School in Kesh with no newbuild in place? Did they not learn those lessons and keep the pressure on by retaining Lisnaskea High School and its building? I feel that something was missed there, especially when that school was proposing cooperation with other neighbouring schools such as St Comhghall's College, St Aidan's High School in Derrylin and the other schools in Enniskillen. It was unfortunate that that happened at that time.

At the same time, the two grammar schools in the controlled and voluntary grammar sectors, the Collegiate and Portora, continued to fill their allocated total numbers of 500 pupils each, or 70 new pupils a year, and, unfortunately, other schools were left to pick up what some people would term as “what is left”. That is an unfortunate way to put that, because many pupils who go to Devenish College, the integrated school, Castlederg High School or Omagh High School can have every bit as good an educational experience and opportunity as those who go to either the Collegiate or Portora.

That led to the Minister's announcement in January 2013 of the two newbuilds in Fermanagh, and that has obviously led to significant friction between the schools. Sorry, maybe it is not between the schools but between personnel and individuals in those schools. I accept that people need to fight for their school. They need to be passionate and, at times, maybe even aggressive, but I ask that they respect the thoughts, proposals and positions of the people in the other schools, because they are equally fighting for their school.

Please do not run down the other schools. Please do not have a go at the teaching staff or the board of governors in those other schools, because it is not helpful.

In my church on Sunday, it was the children's prize-giving day. My rector, the Reverend Brian Harper, intimated of the ongoing debate about the post-primary sector in Fermanagh that he was concerned about the focus of the debate being on the individual schools as opposed to being on what the real focus should be, which is the children, and that some schools may be seen as more special than others. He said clearly that all children should be treated equally and that there was a commonality of them all being children of God. If they take that as a starting point, that is a good place to commence.

One of the major concerns is the process that is followed by the Department of Education and the Western Education and Library Board. Again, I have spoken to the Minister about this. You must go through a merger, an economic appraisal and all the other processes before you can access the finance. In the Minister's statement of 22 January 2013, when he announced those new projects for Fermanagh along with many others, he said:

"In making this announcement, it is my intention that the projects will be taken through to construction."

There is always a "but". He continued:

"However, I wish to make it clear that the authorisation to proceed with construction will be based on the level of capital funding available at the time and all necessary approvals being obtained." — [Official Report, Bound Volume 81, p42, col 1].

I know that the Minister will say that this is the process, but we are all here to change processes. Can we not change the process so that funding is allocated first? That would stop the division between so many schools arguing over the issues that may never happen and may never take place. That would be really helpful and appropriate.

I know that there is also an ongoing debate in the Catholic maintained sector, and I noticed the recommendations, from 2012 I think, from the Northern Ireland Commission for Catholic Education. It recommended the retention of the two single-sex schools in Enniskillen — St Michael's and Mount Lourdes — and the all-ability school in Lisnaskea. Generally, my reading of that was the closure of all the other schools in the Catholic maintained sector in the area. Those are the schools in Belleek and Rosslea, St Aidan's High School and St Mary's in Irvinestown. I know that that has caused some significant debate as well. I have attended St Mary's in Brollagh with other MLAs, and I have attended St Aidan's at Derrylin on a number of occasions.

I cannot find the consultation anywhere, but I noticed a report in 'The Impartial Reporter' from May this year that intimated that another consultation was out and that St Eugene's of Rosslea would close in 2016 and a co-educational college for 11-to-19-year-olds across campuses in Lisnaskea and Derrylin was proposed. That means the retention of St Aidan's in Derrylin along with St Comhghall's in Lisnaskea. Obviously, the people of Derrylin and of that school will be very pleased about that proposal. I do not know how far that has got at the moment, and I think that the consultation closed earlier this month. It is an interesting concept of working together, and the people of Lisnaskea will be very sore that they did not have an opportunity to explore and continue that opportunity to work together with those other schools. Obviously, they will wonder why they did not have that opportunity and now St Aidan's has. They will be saying, "Best wishes to St Aidan's" and will wish it well and will want to see that progressing. I know that St Mary's High School, Brollagh, at Belleek is looking around the cross-border opportunities.

Representatives were up here two weeks ago and are exploring those opportunities on cross-border education provision as well as trying to attract more pupils from their immediate area.

I appeal to everyone in the process to hold their nerve and have respect for others in the debate and in the discussion, not just in here but in the wider educational debate in the county, as that is important. The schools have made proposals. Some have stated that, in the controlled sector, we could retain three schools of 600 pupils each at the Collegiate, Portora and Devenish. That is obviously skewing the numbers significantly towards the grammar sector, if that is what the wider community wants. However, I would like a very strong educational academy at Devenish College and for it to be built for at least 800 pupils. I ask the Minister to look at the opportunity of continuing to progress that and not to have it relying on a merger between Portora and the Collegiate. Devenish needs to be moved forward on its own and not be reliant on the merger between those two schools.

Lord Morrow: I welcome the opportunity to take part in this important debate. I warmly congratulate Tom Elliott on securing the Adjournment debate on an issue that is very topical, particularly in County Fermanagh. Last week, my party colleague Arlene Foster laid a petition before the House containing the names of over 7,000 people from across the community in County Fermanagh who value and want to retain the Collegiate Grammar School in Enniskillen. Community opposition has arisen because of recent proposals from the Western Education and Library Board that would mean the closure of the Collegiate and Portora Royal schools by September 2015. We are told that that is to facilitate the creation of a single co-ed non-denominational voluntary grammar school with a lower intake than the two current schools.

There is a particular irony here. The Education Minister stood before the House this morning and made a statement on major capital works. He was able to announce that a number of schools across Northern Ireland would benefit from new buildings: a fine statement and fine words. However, there should be a word of warning to the schools that may be celebrating the good news announced by the Minister. As Tom Elliott said, 10 years ago, when the Duke of Westminster High School closed, the newly created Devenish College was given the promise of a newbuild. Last year, we were told that a new school building would be delivered following the closure of Lisnaskea High School, but that promise has once again not been honoured. There is no new school.

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): That is not true.

Lord Morrow: Lisnaskea High School is closed. I do not see what is untrue about that, and I do not see a new school. Where is the untruth? The Minister will get his chance to refute that.

A decade after the initial promise was made, the closure of the Collegiate Grammar and Portora Royal schools is the latest precondition for the provision of a new school building for Devenish College, so the Minister has added another one. That is the way that the Minister works his wonders to perform. Unfortunately, he never comes up to the standard when it comes to delivering.

It is worth mentioning that the proposed new school would be based on a split site at either end of Enniskillen, with no guarantee of a new building. At least no more promises are being made about a newbuild. I think that my colleague Mervyn Storey accused the Minister this morning of offering a “jam tomorrow” statement, but that might be wildly overoptimistic. Even the jam tomorrow does not come. If the jam is delivered to these schools in the way that it has been to Devenish, pupils starting post-primary education this September will not just have left the school but those who decide to go to university could graduate before the new buildings are delivered. That is the speed at which the Minister delivers.

I do not accept for a moment that it is necessary to close two high-performing schools in order to achieve the best outcome for education in Fermanagh. Rather, the first statement that we should hear from the Minister is that a newbuild for Devenish College will be delivered immediately. He will get that chance in a few minutes, and he can give us the starting date, closing date and all the rest. But we will not hold our breath.

Numbers have fallen at Devenish College. I suspect that is no surprise. It has to be emphasised that this has not been because of a drift towards the grammar sector; the cap from the Department of Education means that intake there has been static. Instead, those numbers have been moving to other non-selective schools in the area or beyond. It is notable, of course, that some of those alternatives have modern buildings and facilities — exactly the facilities promised but not delivered by the Department of Education. I suspect that we will get another promise here later tonight, but we will wait.

The feelings of the community were laid before the House last week. Whilst the Western Education and Library Board has repeatedly failed in its task to deliver a strategic plan that can support all schools and command full community support, the Minister now has an opportunity to see if he can succeed where it has failed. I am sure that he is up for the challenge. Any teacher would remind us that there is a monumental difference between hearing what is said and actually listening to what is said. Will the Minister today prove that he has not just heard the views that have been represented but has actually listened to them?

It is wrong that, instead of being given support, these three schools in County Fermanagh are being played off against each other. That is the game that is being played. Anyone can see that; it is obvious. It is time for the Minister to show that he will stand up to flawed proposals from the Western Board and do the right thing for education in County Fermanagh. The talking is over for County Fermanagh. It is time for the Minister to deliver and prevaricate no longer. We have had all the promises, broken and failed. Can we now get some delivery? That is what we are looking for here today. When the Minister stands up in a few minutes, we want a concrete proposal — not just words but delivery.

Mr Lynch: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I also welcome the opportunity to speak in the debate. Post-primary education in Fermanagh is a very important subject. However, I do not believe it can be looked at exclusively in a Fermanagh context, because some schools are close to counties in the South. Pupils in the Fermanagh area also go from the closed Lisnaskea school to Fivemiletown, which is not that far away.

I will put all of this in some context. In 2007, the Commission for Catholic Education and the Western Education and Library Board separately began reviews of their sectors in Fermanagh, with a view to rationalising their respective schools estates. This resulted in pre-consultation documents that set out options and sought views, followed by consultation papers outlining recommendations. Responses in the county were very high, and that is a good thing. It highlights that people in the county value the education of their children. However, we all know and agree that not all schools are viable or sustainable. The Minister of Education launched area-based planning in 2011, which puts pupils first and ensures that they will get the best education for generations to come. In the new way forward, children and young people and their education must come first, not institutions. It is up to the managing authorities to implement that policy. The Minister will ensure that decisions are consistent with policy, taking on board the views of communities.

All that said, change must come about to prepare our young people for the 21st century. It is understandable, as Members from the region have already outlined, that sectors and schools want the status quo to remain. Staff, boards of governors, parents, pupils and communities often believe that their school is a good school that has served its students with a quality education for decades. That is why you get campaigns across the county. We have all visited schools that feel that they are under threat. On the other hand, some believe that the school estate and education models cannot stand still in an ever-changing society and economy. Education is a particularly difficult aspect of society to bring about change in. I once read that when the biro pen was introduced into the classroom, many educationalists said that it would dilute the quality of education. That was not that many decades ago.

The Member across the way mentioned the issue of Portora versus the Collegiate, and we saw the petitions being handed in last week. I do not want to say what the best solution is. It seems that one school is being pitted against another, which leads to fear, anger and concern amongst parents, pupils, schools, communities and staff. Forced marriages do not work.

I read recently that Professor Gallagher, an educationalist, told the Education Committee, of which I am not a member, that he had engaged with a sample of parents in nearby Omagh on a range of educational issues regarding post-primary education. What came out of that was that most parents were primarily interested in getting a quality education for their children. They were much less concerned about having a full range of choices or whether the education was in one type of school or another. The key point was that parents will be flexible about local provision as long as they feel that it works for their child.

One must ask why the WELB, after many years, has not facilitated the building of a working relationship between the schools. That would be a much better approach to creating fundamental change than forcing organisations together.

No one can escape the frustrations and anger felt in school communities throughout the county. The governing authorities must manage through engagement and by listening to school communities. I have no doubt that the Minister will take on board their views when the consultation period closes.

Mr Flanagan: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Cuirim fáilte roimh an díospóireacht thábhachtach seo anocht. I am pleased to have the opportunity to contribute to this important debate, which is on an issue that is close to the hearts of many people across Fermanagh. From Belleek to Derrylin, from Irvinestown to Rosslea and from Lisnaskea to Enniskillen, it is something that is up for discussion in every village and town. As you know, we do not have any cities. It is an issue that affects everybody. I thank Tom for keeping us here late to debate it, and I must commend him for doing so at a time when Arlene Foster is out of the country. I think that he is getting one back on her for having the petition last week.

Rural Ireland is under serious pressure. The urbanisation of public services and the abandonment of rural areas is a major pressure point for rural communities. The retention of small schools plays a key role in sustaining life for people who live in rural communities, so it is important that we keep a close watch on how services are delivered for people in rural areas.

The starting point for this debate on post-primary education in Fermanagh goes way back. We look at the sustainable schools policy, which recommended enrolment of at least 500 in post-primary schools, although the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) will tell you that it wants to see 900 or 1,000 in schools. The entitlement framework means that schools will have to provide 24 subjects at Key Stage 4 and 27 subjects post 16.

The background to the Fermanagh context, as other Members have indicated, is specifically the separate and disjointed planning by the management authorities in 2007 and 2008 for the rationalisation of the schools estate in the two main sectors.

So, there was a post-primary review of controlled schools in Fermanagh by the Western Education and Library Board and a parallel review of the Catholic sector by the Commission for Catholic Education. Those two reviews laid the foundation stones of this evening's debate. One really must question why the managing authorities, once they have set a proposed direction of travel, appear to do very little to bring these school communities together over time, help to build relationships and start to have mature conversations with and between stakeholders.

7.30 pm

What have the managing authorities done since they produced these documents to effectively manage change? I suppose this debate clearly shows that their approach and strategy leave a lot to be desired. Forcing people together when there is very limited history of working together does not work, and it does not appear to have worked in Fermanagh.

In relation to the Collegiate and Portora proposal, which is the hot topic of conversation at the minute, I understand that for many of the people involved the proposal being advanced is not one of a merger or amalgamation in their view but is seen by many as an aggressive takeover, as it would see all children being educated in a school under the Royal name. It is particularly frustrating for some people that some members of the school community appear to be losing their identity whilst others are retaining theirs. It is not a point about the monarchy but about the identity of people and their close affinity with their school.

It is understandable that many people feel that their voices are not being listened to. On this occasion, it is striking that it is women who feel that their voices are not being listened to on this issue. Across all of Fermanagh, people want their voices heard in relation to education.

There have been lengthy delays regarding Devenish College. I will leave it up to the Minister to tell the truth about what has happened with Devenish College in the past and to challenge the falsehoods that are coming from some Members. The issues facing this school will not all be solved by a newbuild. Without agreement on a way forward for the controlled sector, Devenish will remain in a difficult position.

Some people from Fermanagh are choosing to go to school outside the county. They are choosing to go to the high school in Omagh, to Fivemiletown or to Castlederg. That is their choice. The education and library board predicted that, when Lisnaskea High School closed, pupils would transfer en masse to Devenish College, but a significant number transferred to Fivemiletown College and to the integrated school in Enniskillen. So, you cannot simply predict what is going to happen, and a newbuild will not solve all those problems.

As well as the two reviews that I mentioned, we are further down the road with an area planning process initiated by this Minister, and one that I fully understand the rationale for and fully support him in achieving. However, it is clear to me that the managing authorities have failed to comply with the most basic terms of reference that he set out as part of the process; namely, exploring opportunities for cross-sectoral and cross-border planning.

In Fermanagh, neither the education and library board nor CCMS has engaged in such discussions. They have left it to local communities to drive such options. Not only have they not given them any support, it is my view that they have been hostile and resistant to such alternatives. In west Fermanagh, people have come up with an innovative proposal to work with their closest educational neighbours and develop a cross-border learning community based around St Mary's High School, Brollagh. This is an innovative, forward-looking proposal that is thinking outside the box and has attracted widespread community and political support.

People can land on the moon or live in outer space for months on end but some in our managing authorities seem to think that we cannot educate our children with each other in a cross-border setting. I reiterate my full support for this alternative proposal and to urge the Minister, as he is considering the development proposal at this minute in time, to row in behind it and make the delivery of it a reality.

In Derrylin and Lisnaskea, we have seen the upset and energy that local people brought to the table when they felt that they were being dictated to in a top-down approach by people in Omagh or Holywood. The retention of education in Derrylin is a sensible and serious proposal that should happen.

In Enniskillen, we see stand-alone proposals being brought forward by CCMS for the Catholic sector and by the education and library board for the controlled sector with no acknowledgement that the other sector exists and that school communities wish to work together. What is going to happen there is that we will have one Catholic school for boys with about 1,400 boys in it and a Catholic school for girls with about 1,400 girls in it. So, CCMS's solution to ending academic selection is to remove the choice for young people, and that is simply not good enough.

There is far too much segregation in our school system. We have division based on religion, class and identity but also on gender. That needs to be brought to an end. I am running out of time, and we have not even discussed the future of the integrated sector. We have not discussed the options that are presented for shared education in the county or the opportunities for the Irish-medium sector. I have an awful lot more that I would like to say.

Mr Speaker: The Member should bring his remarks to a close.

Mr Flanagan: It is striking that some of the primary schools want to work together but the managing authorities are resisting it, yet, when schools do not want to work together, the managing authorities are forcing it upon them. That tells us everything that we need to know about what is going on with the managing authorities in Fermanagh.

Mr Byrne: Thank you, Mr Speaker, for allowing me to take part in the debate today. Even though I am not a native of Fermanagh, I have a keen interest in Fermanagh as my wife comes from there. I congratulate Tom Elliott on securing the Adjournment debate this evening.

Education goes to the heart of every community, as we all know. It is natural that parents want the best for their children, which, in many instances, may be contrary to what the Government, Department or, indeed, the stakeholder sectors want. The closure of Lisnaskea High School is sad as it marks the end of an era for the people who were part of and attended that school. I recognise that schools have to be viable, which means that they must be able to prove that they are sustainable, but I do not believe that the current numbers game is a sensible approach in relation to the interests of rural communities.

I travel through Kesh regularly, and it is sad to see the secondary school there — the former Duke of Westminster school — boarded up. If such schools are closed, it is important that the physical building is kept alive through suitable adult education or community activities. I saw that when a secondary school in Plumbridge closed, the building was left abandoned and had to be demolished. I have also seen St Eugene's in Castlederg close. Hopefully, something can happen to that building, but nothing has emanated from anywhere yet.

In the controlled sector, I understand that it is proposed that Lisnaskea be amalgamated with Devenish College in a new building on the Tempo Road in Enniskillen and that Portora be amalgamated with the Collegiate on one site. Portora seems to be the most floated location for that at present. Many are welcoming that development as they see it as the way forward for post-primary education in the area. They see two new school builds that will be modern and cater for the needs of those in the sector. However, there are those who are sceptical and, indeed, opposed to the amalgamation proposal, particularly for the two grammar schools.

A combination of the board of governors, parents and former pupils of the Collegiate has embarked on a strong campaign to retain the school as an independent girls' grammar school in Enniskillen for the county of Fermanagh. We heard about the recent petition with 7,000 signatures that was presented here by Mrs Foster. That is very telling community activity in the interests of that school. Recently, I met a delegation of governors, parent reps and teachers from the school who are united in their campaign to retain the Collegiate as an independent school with its own character and ethos. The wishes and views of that school community should, I believe, be respected. The school has an excellent educational track record built up over many decades, and the local education planning proposal seems at odds with the interests of the Collegiate community.

In the Catholic maintained sector, there are also grave concerns and anxiety about the provision of secondary education throughout the county of Fermanagh. In particular, there is great concern and, indeed, anger about the proposed closure of some rural secondary schools such as St Mary's High School, Brollagh.

The community of Erne North, comprising the Garrison and Belleek communities, feels very strongly that CCMS and the Department of Education made little effort to retain the school as a viable entity for the secondary education of the people of the area. Despite all the talk, and I mean talk, about North/South cooperation on education, nothing meaningful has yet been attempted in order to maintain that school. If it closes, pupils from the Garrison and Belleek area will have to spend one and a half hours every morning and evening on a bus on a bendy road to Enniskillen. The prolonged discussion on the future of the school created a lot of uncertainty, which meant that some parents, concerned about their children's educational future, opted to send them to the bigger schools in Enniskillen. Those are the fortunate children, in that their parents travel to work in Enniskillen. Unfortunately, the children of Erne North are left with no choice but to travel 25 miles or more on that bad road to Enniskillen. The nightmare for parents is that the decision to close may go ahead.

St Aidan's in Derrylin has been fighting to survive, as has St Eugene's in Rosslea.

We have St Mary's College in Irvinestown, again under a cloud of uncertainty. I welcome the fact that St Aidan's High School of Derrylin, along with St Comhghall's College in Lisnaskea, may have a viable future with a shared campus between the two schools.

In Enniskillen, we have St Joseph's College and St Fancha's College, both excellent secondary schools. We have also two excellent grammar schools in the Catholic sector: St Michael's College and Mount Lourdes Grammar School. These schools have built up an enviable reputation. They have a strong history and a strong educational ethos; but sometimes the authorities are intent, with a predetermined policy initiative. That seems to be adding to the pain and difficulties experienced in many communities, but particularly in the county of Fermanagh.

Mr Storey: My colleague who preceded me lives closer to the county; I am further away from the county, but I can assure you that it lessens not my interest in the issue, obviously as Chair of the Education Committee but also here to be of help and support to my colleagues Lord Morrow and Mrs Foster who, unfortunately, cannot be with us.

I congratulate Tom on securing the debate on this issue. I have visited Fermanagh on a number of occasions. The Education Committee was in Fermanagh last Wednesday, and we had a very useful exchange with the Fermanagh Trust. We saw the work that it has done there, particularly with regard to shared education.

What I want to do in the few minutes that are allotted to me is to try to give some sense as someone from outside the county, looking in to what is going on — or not going on. A number of comments have been made in the House this evening which I think need some further clarification and consideration.

As has been said by Tom and by Lord Morrow, the case for Devenish has been well made, and yet despite all the years that have passed and all the promises made, we still find ourselves in a position where the case rests on, "You might get it, provided that we get something else." If that is ever a policy on a promise, I think it is a very poor way to go about delivering education.

The cynic in me would say, if you look at what has happened in some elements in the maintained sector, that if you promise the Minister and the bishops that you will move away from academic selection, then you will be guaranteed your money, as is happening in the Minister's own constituency in Lurgan. That is clearly defined in a letter which he sent to the board just a few weeks ago, in which he actually went so far as saying, "Look at what has happened in regard to St Michael's — £25 million — and if those other schools would only learn the lesson and do what they are told, then they might get the money." I think that there is an issue there as to how the Minister behaves, in terms of the way in which this process rolls out. The case for Devenish has been made. I have to concur with my colleagues: let us move on and get Devenish built. Let us move on.

I want to pick up on a couple of comments that were made by representatives of the Minister's party in the county. I would love to know: what are they for? We have heard a lot of talk about "Let's blame the managing authorities", "Let's have a go at CCMS" and "Let's have a go at the boards", and then they use all the terminology about listening to the community. Previously, Mr Flanagan said, left to local options, that was not a good idea, but you have to still listen to the community. So can the Members opposite really tell us, in terms of the maintained sector, are they supportive of Brollagh? Do they want Brollagh to stay? Are they supportive of the other schools in the maintained sector in the county, or are they trying to ride about 14 different horses in the Grand National and hope that, somehow, no decisions that will impact on them will really be made? Do they think, "As long as the focus stays on Portora and the Collegiate and Devenish, that will take the heat off us"?

That is not shared education. That is not working together.

7.45 pm

I commend Mr Flanagan — I think that it was him, but maybe it was the other Member — for at least having the honesty to say that the managing authorities were doing this process separately. Why? It suits them to do it separately. There are elements in the maintained sector that talk a good talk when it comes to collaboration, but do not ask them to give anything up.

If the Minister and the Members of his party think that, somehow, the easy option here is the controlled sector, I am saying that those days are over. The controlled sector has taken the highest hit of closures —

Mr O'Dowd: That is not true.

Mr Storey: It is true.

Mr O'Dowd: It is not true.

Mr Speaker: Order.

Mr Storey: I will produce the evidence to prove that it is true. It has taken the highest hit of closures. The maintained sector has got around it by way of amalgamations. When it comes to closures, it is quite clear that the controlled sector has been disproportionately affected. What do I want to see in Fermanagh? I want to see the wishes of the community in terms of the Collegiate respected.

I agree with Tom. There is a risk that we now have a situation in which it is them and us. That is not good for provision. Let us remember what is at the heart of this: the provision of education for our children and young people. I believe that the Collegiate's position needs to be respected, as do the concerns being raised by Portora, which has appalling capital provision at this time. Anybody who has ever been in the school's sports hall will know that it is an absolute shambles. It is disgraceful, and the school needs capital.

Let us remember that the Western Board was talking about building one big school on Portora hill and putting everybody there. That was not an option. What can be delivered in Fermanagh for non-Catholic pupils? Let us remember that we are talking about a minority community living in a county where they have had many challenges and issues. The Minister needs to give serious consideration, without any more equivocation and talk about "If you do whatever", to moving Devenish and allowing the Collegiate and Portora to work out a solution when we get to a point at which they can have a conversation that creates the environment in which different things could be done, the premise being that it is for provision and for the best interests of the young people of Fermanagh.

I commend Tom for securing the debate, and I look forward to what the Minister has to say. I trust that soon we will see some clarity in terms of decisions for education in the county.

Mr O'Dowd: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I welcome the opportunity to set out once more my policy on area planning, this time with a particular focus on post-primary education in Fermanagh. In responding to the debate, I wish to put on record that I have noted the concerns raised about area planning by Members in the previous debate and that, as we continue to refine the area planning work and press ahead with the necessary restructuring, I will take Members' concerns into consideration.

I have often said, and I am happy to repeat it, that the vision that we have set for education here is aimed at ensuring that all our young people — all of them — have the opportunity and are encouraged to reach their full potential in education. The problems that beset sections of the controlled sector are not of my making but of others' making. Policy decisions taken outside the Department of Education are having the most detrimental impact on the controlled sector.

Mr Storey may quote selective figures about closures and amalgamations etc but the fact is — [Interruption.] It is very difficult, Mr Speaker, to have a sensible debate —

Mr Speaker: Order. You must allow the Minister to respond without interruption. Order. The Minister must be heard.

Mr O'Dowd: The policy that is causing the biggest problems for the controlled sector in Fermanagh is not my policy but that of the Members on the opposite Benches. It is their subservient relationship with the voluntary grammar sector. [Interruption.]

Mr Storey: Will the Minister give way?

Mr O'Dowd: No, I will not.

Mr Speaker: Order.

Mr O'Dowd: It has been detrimental to attitudes towards education and perceptions around education, and it has been detrimental to non-selective schools in the controlled sector. Belated, misinformed challenges to me will not hide that. If you are serious about education for all and about the needs of communities, whether they be in Fermanagh or elsewhere, you need to review your own policy.

You most certainly need to review your subservient relationship — and it is subservient — to the voluntary grammar sector. Its needs cannot always come first. The needs of the selective sector cannot always come first. If they do, you end up with an imbalanced education system in which non-selective schools suffer. That is particularly evident in the controlled sector.

With regard to the particular issues that face Fermanagh, there are 13 post-primary schools in the area, which currently serve around 5,000 pupils in total. Of those 13 schools, only one has a year 8 to year 12 enrolment that is above the sustainable schools minimum enrolment indicator of 500. Ten of those 13 schools have fewer than 400 pupils, with six having fewer than 300 pupils.

I accept the comments that have been made that Fermanagh presents particular issues with regard to the rurality of the communities that its schools serve. With regard to future planning, I accept that there are also pockets of minority communities in Fermanagh, but the demographics in the region are declining and, based on NISRA statistics, are set to do so for a number of years.

I will concentrate on the rural end of Fermanagh for a second. As I said before, the best way to save a rural primary or post-primary school is not simply by signing a petition, but by signing the admissions form and sending your child to it. That is the best way to save a rural school. I am very supportive of participatory democracy. Petitions have their place. However, if you are serious about it, sign the admissions form and send your child to a local rural primary or post-primary school. That is the best way to save schools.

I will touch on the proposals for Brollagh for a moment. I have had significant correspondence on Brollagh. I recently met its support group. I am taking its views into consideration before I make any final decision on that development proposal. I hope to make that decision in the near future. There are other development proposals in and around that area that are at various states of readiness and publication. They will come my way in due course. I will deal with them based on the evidence that is before me at that time.

In relation to the history of education provision in Fermanagh, I have been a Minister only since 2011. I will not be held accountable for decisions that were made by direct rule Ministers in 2004. If a Member of the House is vexed that Devenish was announced in 2004 and has not been built by 2014, I have to throw the question back: as an elected representative, what have you been doing? You clearly have not been vocal enough or raised the profile of the case. I know that we had a masterclass from you, as we always do when you present yourself in the Chamber to address me, on how not to win friends and influence people. If you want a masterclass on how to do that, you are the classic example.

Lord Morrow: Was I supposed to grovel?

Mr Speaker: Order. Let us have remarks through the Chair.

Mr O'Dowd: You are a classic example of how not to influence someone in a good way. You excel at it. When you approach Ministers with the attitude that you approach me with, perhaps that is why there was a failure to deliver Devenish until I came into office.

Lord Morrow: Will the Minister give way?

Mr O'Dowd: No; I will not. Thank you.

In January 2013, I made a statement that Devenish would be built. It would appear that the Member does not understand how a building is constructed, never mind how you get to the stage of building. When I stand here in the Chamber and say that a new school will be built for Devenish, it does not suddenly appear. It does not magically pop up. There has to be a considerable amount of preparation work on business cases and economic appraisals. All of that takes time to go through.

For the Member's information, my permanent secretary and the chief executive of the Western Education and Library Board meet regularly to discuss newbuild programmes in the Western Board area, and Devenish is on the agenda every time they meet. In due course, there will be an economic appraisal from the Western Board about moving Devenish forward. I have committed in the past to building Devenish, and I will build Devenish going forward.

One challenge facing Devenish is falling enrolments. Is that surprising when elected representatives from the area stand up and tell people that it will never be built?

[Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order.

Mr O'Dowd: They stand up and broadcast across the airwaves that Devenish will never be built. I would not mind if they were on the airwaves saying that and doing something positive in the background to move Devenish forward, but in my time in office, since I made that announcement, none of the Members opposite has asked me for a meeting to discuss the progress of Devenish. Not one Member has asked me for a meeting to press me or influence me on Devenish and ensure that my officials, the chief executive of the Western Board and I are carrying out the work. They go on the airwaves and stand in the Chamber tonight to tell anybody who is prepared to listen that it will never happen. It has to happen for the benefit of education in the area, and it will happen.

The consultation on the Collegiate and Portora runs until 14 July.

Mr Elliott: Will the Member give way before we get on to that?

Mr O'Dowd: Yes.

Mr Elliott: I hear what the Minister says, but will he accept that I raised the issue of Devenish with him on the Floor on at least two occasions? I may not have asked for a meeting, but I assure him that I will now. I raised the issue with his predecessor, with whom I had a meeting. I filled out the admissions form as he has said, and I will send my child to Devenish. I want him to clarify my relationship with the voluntary grammar sector because I am not sure what it is.

Mr O'Dowd: For the benefit of the record and for clarification, I was directing my comments at Lord Morrow. I am happy to clarify that Mr Elliott has raised the issue of Devenish with me on several occasions. I have no difficulty in clarifying that. I was directing my comments at those who choose to tell everyone who chooses to listen that Devenish will never be built and then do nothing about it.

A development proposal has been published for Portora and the Collegiate, and the consultation continues until 14 July. I have agreed to meet a delegation of interested parents and members of the Collegiate, and I am happy to do so. I am happy to meet any interested parties who are representative of the area or who have a stake in the schools.

Following those meetings and the closure of the consultation on 14 July, I will bring together all the evidence available to me and make a decision based on the educational needs of all the young people in Fermanagh. I note that the Western Education and Library Board released a significant, lengthy press release yesterday responding to unhelpful commentary in some local media and other places. I hope that that answers some of the issues that have been raised. I also welcome Mr Elliott's comments about having a respectful debate on the matter as we move forward.

Adjourned at 7.59 pm.

Public Petition: ME: Full Adoption of the Canadian Consensus Criteria

Mr Speaker: Mr Bradley has sought leave to present a public petition in accordance with Standing Order 22. The Member will have up to three minutes to speak on the subject.

Mr D Bradley: Go raibh míle maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Caithfidh mé a rá go bhfuil mé thar a bheith buíoch díot as an deis seo a fháil chun an achainí seo a chur faoi do bhráid agus faoi bhráid an Tionóil. Thank you very much, Mr Speaker, for the opportunity to present this petition on behalf of Newry and Mourne ME/Fibromyalgia Support Group to you and the Assembly. As you know, both of those conditions are extremely serious. They leave the sufferers in great pain and devoid of energy.

For many years, the Newry and Mourne ME group has been working hard to inform people about the illnesses and to provide advice and support to them. For the most part, the work is carried out by volunteers, who, largely, are patients who suffer from ME and fibromyalgia. I have great admiration for people who use their own time and resources to help others who suffer from the same illness. Today's petition asks the Minister of Health to adopt the Canadian consensus criteria on ME and fibromyalgia.

The criteria have been agreed by a plethora of experts in Canada and other countries throughout the world. The Newry and Mourne support group and many others believe that they offer the best option for sufferers to find relief from the illness and, ultimately, to be cured of it.

As I said, Mr Speaker, I am honoured to present the petition to you on behalf of the group. It has been signed by hundreds of people. The group has done amazing work in promoting it. I am sure that our Health Minister will read the petition and the documentation contained in the file very carefully. I hope that his response will be a positive one. On that note, Mr Speaker, it only remains for me to thank you very much.

Mr D Bradley moved forward and laid the petition on the Table.

Mr Speaker: I will forward a copy of the petition to the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety and to the Chair of the Health Committee, Maeve McLaughlin.

Public Petition: Detoxification Provisions: Foyle

Mr Speaker: Mr Ramsey has sought leave to present a public petition. The Member will have up to three minutes to speak on the subject matter.

Mr P Ramsey: I thank you, Mr Speaker, and the Business Office for facilitating this petition. I present the petition to the House on behalf of many people in my constituency who feel aggrieved at the recent decision not to have a detoxification centre in the constituency.

Mr Speaker, you will be surprised and shocked to learn that, today, there are 48,000 signature and 12,000 names online as part of a Facebook campaign. In all my years in the Assembly, I have never seen a petition of such magnitude. That is evidence of the concerns of so many. There is a realisation that there is an unmet need in our city. None of us in the House or in our constituencies can look at our families, our neighbours and members of our community and not see those faced with addiction problems, whether that be alcohol misuse or abuse or, in many cases, alcohol or substance abuse.

There is a human cry from my constituency. Andrew Quigley lost his life several months back. That was a triggering mechanism for many people. I commend the small action group in the city, which very patiently and methodically gathered the names over a number of months, highlighting the issue of a young man whose mother, Colette, said publicly that her son could not get access to addiction services. Had he had access to detoxification, his life may have been saved. I say very honourably in the House that, if there were a detoxification centre in Derry, my heart and soul tells me that lives would be saved.

I ask the Health Minister and the healthcare trust commissioning body to look again at the decision. Derry is not just another town or city; it is the second city of Northern Ireland. It is the capital of the north-west. As such, there are people who believe that the House, the Assembly and the Executive have failed them. I will meet the Health Minister soon after this debate. I appeal to him directly to look at the evidence because, for a number of years, there has been a detoxification centre in Omagh. There was never any evidence that families, and young people in particular, had access to that treatment centre in Omagh.

Mr Speaker, I know that you share some of my concerns. I am glad that you share those concerns and support the campaign wholeheartedly. It is for the House and all political parties in it to support the campaign. We have here the names of almost 60,000 people from the city of Derry, which has a population of 110,000, who are saying that we need a detoxification centre.

Mr P Ramsey moved forward and laid the petition on the Table.

Mr Speaker: I will forward the petition to the Health Minister and send a copy to the Chair of the Health Committee, Maeve McLaughlin.

Executive Committee Business

Budget (No. 2) Bill 2014: Final Stage

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel):
I beg to move

That the Budget (No. 2) Bill [NIA 36/11-15] do now pass.

The passing of the Final Stage of the Budget (No. 2) Bill by the House will provide legislative cover for the currently agreed Budget and enable Departments to continue to use resources and spend cash on public services for the remainder of this financial year. Of course, as I said on many occasions, the Budget position is continually moving and in-year changes will amend the opening position reflected in the Bill. That will be of particular importance this year as most departmental budgets will have to be reduced if we do not progress welfare reform. As is customary, I will bring updated legislation to the House in February 2015 to authorise the final position for this financial year.

The public expenditure issues and many other issues around this Bill have been debated fully over the past two weeks, and I do not propose to repeat them today in my opening remarks. However, I want to reinforce the issue of welfare reform, which dominated the Budget Bill debates a few weeks ago. We in the Executive and in this Assembly are faced with a stark choice. Delivery of welfare reform will see the welfare budget rise more slowly but it will see that budget being funded by Her Majesty's Treasury. Should we not implement welfare reform, Her Majesty's Treasury will expect to see the savings being taken from our budgets and the Executive must then take action to address this issue. That will undoubtedly require tough decisions. Those decisions must be made early in the financial year to allow Departments to plan accordingly.

We must either implement welfare reform or plan early to address the budgetary reductions. Inertia on this position would simply have the effect of paralysing our public services as funding would be held back in anticipation of a reduction further down the line. I am sure that some Members will again raise the issue of welfare reform and may even challenge my assessment during this debate, so I may well return to it in my concluding remarks.

It is important to state that the provision in the Bill represents the final year of the Budget 2011-15 as agreed by the previous Assembly in March 2011. Members will be aware that there have been a number of changes to the position since then, and these have been agreed by the Executive and brought before the Finance and Personnel Committee for scrutiny in advance of this debate. The Committee agreed accelerated passage, and I am grateful for that. The Committee's work in examining the changes to budgets that have led to the Bill before us today is often unheralded but it is a crucial aspect of devolved government. I will ensure that my officials continue to provide financial information in a timely manner to allow the Committee to continue exercising its important role.

Transparency in public finances and the financial process that underpins those finances is to be welcomed. However, as we heard in the Chamber over the course of debating this legislation, transparency is not uniform across all Assembly Committees. I encourage all Departments to provide transparent and timely information to Committees to allow them to exercise a proper scrutiny role over departmental Estimates information.

In terms of that transparency, the Finance and Personnel Committee and, indeed, a number of Members expressed frustration about its technical nature and the lack of read-across to the Budget position. My officials have provided summary tables that I understand are helpful to the Committees in reconciling the Estimates and Budget figures, but I agree that the process remains somewhat opaque. I believe that there is an opportunity for the Assembly to transform this process, and I hope that we can progress that in the near future.

This year, we as an Assembly find ourselves facing substantial pressures on the Budget. Most, if not all, Departments face additional pressures in some form and, unfortunately, I do not have an infinite supply of funding. We are able to supplement our block grant with additional receipts, regional rates and reinvestment and reform initiative (RRI) borrowing, but even that is not sufficient. Going forward, we must find better ways of doing what we do. We must look to reforming our public services so that we can deliver more for less.

I firmly believe that reform is the only way that we will be able to provide world-class public services within the future budgetary constraints that we face. We must ensure that every penny spent on the provision of public services is spent wisely and spent on high-priority services, but we must also ensure that we live within the constraints placed upon us by Her Majesty's Treasury, including reductions in relation to welfare reform. They cannot be ignored and we must plan accordingly.

With that appeal, I bring my remarks to a close and ask Members to support the Bill.

Mr McKay (The Chairperson of the Committee for Finance and Personnel): Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. As I said during the previous debate, the Committee has agreed, under Standing Order 42(2), to grant accelerated passage to the Budget Bill on the basis of having been consulted appropriately on its expenditure provisions. It is imperative that the Department meet its requirement for appropriate consultation on each occasion, given the importance of such Bills progressing through the Assembly before the summer recess.

As for the remainder of this financial year, I reiterate my previous point on the contribution of Assembly Committees to the Budget and financial processes, and the importance of regular, timely and effective scrutiny of the financial forecasting and performance of Departments. That will enable Committees to identify issues in real time and obtain assurances that the necessary corrective or preventative action will be taken. It will help to ensure that no moneys are returned to the Treasury as a result of underspends beyond the thresholds agreed in the Budget exchange scheme and that retrospective action is not needed to regularise any excess spend.

I also explained during previous budgetary debates that the Committee is taking forward work, in collaboration with the Department, to develop a memorandum of understanding (MOU) on the Budget process. That should, in conjunction with other measures, help to improve the Budget and financial processes and related parliamentary scrutiny and accountability.

The proposal for the MOU arises from the previous Committee's inquiry into the Assembly's scrutiny and advisory role in relation to the Executive's Budget and expenditure. It was also a key recommendation from the Executive's review of the financial process. It will facilitate the constructive and meaningful input and scrutiny by Members and Committees, which will assist in overseeing the effective and efficient delivery of the Executive's strategic priorities. It will support the Executive in their role of managing public expenditure and further promote good working relationships between Departments and their Committee, as well as Departments and individual Members.

The Committee recently wrote to the Minister to ask for an update on his consideration of the draft memorandum of understanding, which was developed jointly by Committee staff and DFP officials. Perhaps the Minister will provide some positive indications in his winding-up speech today.

In anticipation of exercising its coordination function in the Assembly scrutiny of the draft Budget 2015-16, the Committee has been undertaking preliminary research and investigation into strategic finance issues, most recently financial transactions capital, efficiency savings, performance against savings delivery plans and borrowing from the European Investment Bank. Further such cross-departmental work will be undertaken on preventative spending and on the year-end surge of spending by Departments.

I will move on to speak from a party political point of view. The Minister referred to welfare reform, as it is called, which not only exercises many politicians here but, quite clearly, many across the water. I was reading 'The Economist' last week, and it was interesting that even it now states that universal credit is one of the great Whitehall disasters of recent times. We also see that the Westminster Public Accounts Committee has deemed the personal independence payments situation a "fiasco" and described the incompetence of DFP as "shocking". So a number of things happening with welfare reform in Britain clearly indicate that the entire process is on the rocks. That being the case, we have to ask ourselves whether it is wise to tie our load to what is, effectively, the sinking ship of welfare reform and the agenda of the present Tory/Lib Dem coalition in London.

Whilst Labour is taking a contrary position and following some of the welfare reform agenda, it is quite clear that the strategy and the agenda that has been pursued by Iain Duncan Smith is not working and will not work. Given that the Government are breaching their own welfare caps and cannot even put their own IT system in place, I do not see the need for us to follow them down that road, when it is quite clear that it is not going to work.

I want to refer back to the Westminster Public Accounts Committee report on welfare reform in Britain. According to the report, the implementation of welfare reform has been so poor that terminally ill people have been waiting months for their entitlements. That is a commonplace problem across the water, and we have to ask ourselves how we, as human beings, can oversee, or consider overseeing, a welfare agenda that leads to a situation in which terminally ill people lose their entitlements, sometimes weeks before they lose their life.

We will continue to oppose the welfare agenda of the British Government at Westminster, and it is absolute lunacy to tie ourselves to what is now a sinking ship. Understandably, the DUP wants to get into bed with the Tories next year, and perhaps a lot of this is more to do with that than welfare reform itself.

We need to look at other costs as well. We are obviously facing into another summer, and, unfortunately, there is the potential for conflict on parades. We need to deal with that. Some of the greatest risks to our peace process are parades and conflict on our streets —

Mr Speaker: Order. I am very conscious that the Member is moving slightly away from the subject matter. I am trying to be helpful, so I ask him, as far as possible, to keep to the debate before the House.

Mr McKay: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Those represent a big threat to costs and the policing budget, and we need to cognisant of that. They are also a tourism and investment deterrent and undermine stability. Anyone who listened to the radio this morning will have heard representatives from the business community say that they want politicians and political parties to sort out the remaining issues over the summer. All political parties need to get to grips with that. They affect not only communities in parts of Belfast and elsewhere but our economy, community relations and all our futures. We need to start to get to grips with the issues.

The Minister has made much of public sector reform, and the Committee is certainly interested in pursuing that further. He has put some changes in place, but we really need to see some delivery. The Committee will soon conclude its inquiry into flexible working. All of that is important in freeing up resources for future budgets. Once the Committee concludes its inquiry, we will want to hear more positive soundings from senior officials in the Department about introducing flexible working and freeing up resources and space in public sector buildings. We have heard from a number of organisations, particularly those in the private sector, that do not understand why the public sector cannot catch up or try to introduce a degree of risk-taking into the process to ensure that the agenda is successfully pursued.

We have also heard from a number of organisations and businesses based here that are taking technology to public sector organisations in lots of other countries but feel that they are up against the wall with the public sector here. We really need to get technological improvements in place, and with the Department of Health in particular, because the inefficiencies there are absolutely enormous. The Minister of Health has not got to grips with that. Sometimes it seems that he is the Oliver Twist of the Executive: every time that there is a monitoring round, Mr Poots says, "Please, Mr Finance Minister, give me some more". The Health Minister has to look in the other direction and deal with the inefficiencies in his Department.

To conclude, I support the Budget Bill, and my party supports the Budget Bill as it is presented. However, there are a number of challenges with the economy and with dealing with some of the wastage that is still taking place in the public sector. That involves dealing not only with public sector reform but with the big issues around parades and the issues that are affecting civil society and which the business community is alarmed about at the moment. That is something that the Executive as a whole need to get to grips with over this summer.

Mr Girvan: I, too, stand to speak in favour of the Final Stage of the Budget (No. 2) Bill. In doing so, I appreciate that a number of the discussions have already taken place and that, within the Committee, there has been quite an extensive look across what is happening from Department to Department. However, I appreciate that there is a review of the process and that clarity is required within that. The budgets as they are presented are extremely difficult to interpret from one Department to another, so there is a certain amount of crossover that needs to be linked into to ensure that we are looking at everything in the whole.

The Bill, primarily, is to allow the Departments to go ahead and make the spend to the end of this financial year. I appreciate that there have been difficulties in trying to manage the Budget right through the whole term of this Assembly in that we set the Budget in March 2011, as has been mentioned. That is the Budget that we are working on currently. That Budget indicated a £4 billion reduction from what we receive as a subvention from Westminster over that whole period. I appreciate that you cannot really cut £4 billion without having some pain. It has not necessarily been a painless process, but we have risen to the occasion. We have dealt with what we have in what I believe to be a reasonable and mature approach towards that. In having agreed that, I think that, from that point of view, it needs to be looked at positively.

Additional pressures have been brought upon the Budget. Irrespective of what the Chair of the Committee has said, failing to deal with the welfare reform issue will have and is having an input to our Budget as it is this year. If Westminster were to decide to do something different along the line, we would take the benefits of that, but we are currently receiving penalties. As that stands, we can ill afford to stand the reduction, which will hit not only DFP but every Department. That is something, because it is a block grant that we receive, and that block grant will, therefore, have to be cut accordingly to manage that. I appreciate that it has been said that we are watching what is happening in Westminster, but I think that there is more to be gleaned from what is happening within the process in this House as to what is going on in the Republic of Ireland. There are those who are playing politics, with Northern Ireland as the small pawn in their bigger pitch.

Mr Weir: Will the Member give way on that point?

Mr Girvan: Yes.

Mr Weir: Some dire warnings have been made about the financial impacts for future budgets. On the radio this morning, it was mentioned that the Minister of Justice may well be writing to the Policing Board to say that, because of the cuts, he will be looking for £10 million to come off the police budget. Will the Member agree that it is a mythological hope that, from across the water, Labour will in some way come riding to the rescue and abandon this and put us in a much better financial position? Last week on the radio, even Eamonn McCann, somebody who is not of the same way of thinking of many of the people on these Benches, indicated that, if people were expecting the Labour Party to come riding like the cavalry to the rescue on this issue and then to pump a lot more money into the Budget, they were living in a fool's paradise. With the exception of the bedroom tax, which has already been dealt with by imaginative means by the Executive, as has been indicated, this has focused not on Northern Ireland but on the opportunity for appearance of opposition to austerity in Dublin. The problem is that, one way or the other, Sinn Féin, North and South, whichever way round you see it, is like being shackled to a corpse on its part.

12.30 pm

Mr Girvan: I like the analogy and think that it is very apt. I agree with the Member's comments.

Many comments have been made on how our public sector can work more effectively and efficiently, and that area needs some imaginative thinking. Unfortunately, once you start to mention anything to do with public sector reform, there is always a fear that job losses will be incurred. As a consequence, there will be those who will be opposed to any change. I am not necessarily saying that we look at job losses but that we look at economies. We must ensure that we invest to save, and some people maybe misinterpreted what the invest-to-save scheme is. It needs to be made clear to all Departments that they should look at the initiative holistically and on the same basis. On occasions, people have classed the invest-to-save scheme as not that at all.

The Committee carried out a flexible working inquiry. Flexible working is alive and well in the Civil Service, including hot-desking and other aspects, and it could maybe be rationalised on the estate. We should consider that.

We are working under the constraints of HM Treasury's five-year budget that was set in 2011. We have to be positive about other areas. We have come through what is probably the worst recession that the world, not just our economy, has encountered over the last 100 years. Some people have said that there has never been anything like the cuts and the depth of recession that we have come through since the 1930s. We hear announcements about jobs being created by the positive intervention of the Assembly and the Executive. Some say that that is happening not because of the Assembly but in spite of it, which is not necessarily the case. There are areas where we need to be positive to ensure that we not only grow our private sector economy but retain and support our public sector.

Nigel Smyth was on the radio this morning talking about the business sector and what needs to be dealt with to encourage inward investment into Northern Ireland. Parties in the Chamber have a role to play to ensure that things go smoothly over the marching season, which could ultimately have an impact. There are those who are stirring it up behind the scenes, and they are doing it quite effectively. Those from the Benches opposite have decided to threaten to bring us back to where we were with certain parades, and that has a negative impact on our economy.

I support the Final Stage of the Budget (No. 2) Bill and hope and pray that everyone else will do the same so that we can allow the Bill to progress to its next stage.

Mr D Bradley: Go raibh míle maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle, as an deis cainte a thabhairt domh sa díospóireacht seo ar an Bhille Buiséid uimhir a dó.

Thank you very much, Mr Speaker, for the opportunity to contribute to the debate on the Budget (No. 2) Bill.

As you know, Mr Speaker, the SDLP has consistently outlined its opposition to the current Budget. We did not vote for it at the beginning and we have, on a number of occasions, outlined a significant number of concerns relating to its shortcomings, chiefly in relation to the health service, job creation and housing, all of which are areas that have come under great pressure in the years since the Budget was passed.

However, having made our concerns known, we have also contributed in a positive and constructive way to all the debates around the budgetary issues. We put forward proposals as to how we could manage Northern Ireland's finances differently, most notably by the introduction of an annual Budget process and the establishment of a Scottish-style commission to assess the opportunity for greater devolution of fiscal powers to Northern Ireland. We also highlighted numerous areas from which more money could be raised, and we emphasised projects on which extra money could be spent for the benefit of people here. Our mantra has consistently been that the whole purpose of devolution is so that Northern Ireland's leaders can do things differently in order to improve the lives of our people. For those reasons, we will again not support the Budget Bill today.

The second element that I want to focus on is the need for a new Budget next year to take us through until the Assembly election. The SDLP hopes that this new, one-year Budget will better provide for the people of Northern Ireland and we will fight to ensure that it does. We have criticised the Executive in the past for developing a Budget without a Programme for Government. Yes, the existing Programme for Government is at least a broad framework upon which the Executive can base their final budgetary year before the election; however, it is flawed and somewhat outdated three years on. You could say that it is an old Ordnance Survey map when a satnav with real time updates is required.

So, I look forward, in hope, to the 2016 Programme for Government and Budget. The SDLP believes that any future Northern Ireland Executive should publish a Programme for Government as their first act following the 2016 election. Agreement on a Programme for Government would demonstrate unity of purpose and commitment to delivery by the parties involved, alongside the provision of measurable budgetary targets that are available for scrutiny by the Assembly and through public consultation. Such action would follow examples of best practice set by coalition Governments in the Republic of Ireland and in the UK.

Finally and most importantly, as we look towards the 2015 Budget and the 2016 Budget and Programme for Government, the SDLP will continue to highlight how those documents must reflect the needs of people here. The North's consumers have had to deal with a jump of over 20% in the price of goods since the start of the global economic crisis. At the start of the year, the Ulster Bank highlighted the key economic issue for 2014 as being the cost of living crisis, stating:

"Normally in economic downturns financial hardship is confined to those people out of work. However, in recent years, a growing number of households in work are finding it increasingly difficult to make ends meet."

This is because wages have not kept pace with inflation, climbing only 10% in the six years since the peak of the housing market bubble in August 2007, compared to an 18.8% rise in the UK consumer price index. In fact, that means that most people took a pay cut of 8.8% between 2007 and 2013. To tackle this, a new Budget must begin to create a living wage society. A number of elements are required to do that, and the first, of course, is job creation.

The SDLP has consistently highlighted the need for job creation outside Belfast and capital investment in infrastructure, to underpin economic growth in the long term, and investment in shovel-ready capital programmes, which boost employment in the construction industry, to stimulate the economy in the short to medium term. Even the coalition Government in London have realised that and proposed an Infrastructure Bill for England. Sadly, however, the Budget failed to adequately prioritise such development.

The second element necessary to creating a living-wage society is protecting the interests of low-paid workers and ensuring that their conditions and wage levels increase. Sadly, the SDLP was the only Assembly party to vote against the increase in pension age for public servants and the reduction in redundancy payments for civil servants. In doing so, the SDLP demonstrated its commitment to protecting the interests of hard-pressed households and trade union members. It would have been welcome if the rest of the Assembly had also done so.

It is also imperative that we tackle the scourge of zero-hour contracts, the use of which can mask whether an employee is truly receiving a living wage. In recent times, we have seen an increase in zero-hour contracts, and the volatile job market has meant that many low-paid workers and those on short-term contracts are finding it harder than ever before to pay their family bills.

It is clear that the Northern Ireland Executive must take action on those issues to develop the North as a living-wage economy. Food and energy prices continue to rise, and the governor of the Bank of England is telling us to expect an interest rate rise this very year. If the Executive and the Assembly fail to take action in budgetary planning, our hard-working households will continue to suffer.

I thank you for the opportunity to contribute to today's debate, and I will leave it at that for the moment.

Mr Cree: At the Second Stage of this Bill, I referred to several resource bids that were anticipated to be made in the June monitoring round. These were classified as "inescapable" or "high priority". I asked why they were being treated by way of in-year monitoring instead of being included in the core Budget. The question remains unanswered, and now that we appear to have major problems with agreeing June monitoring, the fate of those bids, and the important work that they are expected to finance, becomes a crucial issue. Perhaps the Minister will advise us on that matter and on whether any steps are necessary to alter the Budget figures that are before us.

I gave him two examples: £160 million to health and some £2 million to the Victims and Survivors Service. Again, I would appreciate it if the Minister could advise on that. There was also a planned capital surrender of £5.5 million.

Is that also likely to be available from OFMDM in the June monitoring round?

Another concern that I and the Ulster Unionist Party have is the carrying forward of year-end underspends from 2013-14 through the Budget exchange scheme. No provision was made in the Estimates for that, as it is usually allocated in the June monitoring. It may be contained in the spring Supplementary Estimates, but that is a long way off, and we really need to know what we are talking about now.

The major issue with our Budget is that we do not know how welfare reform will affect it. No decision has been made, and penalties are being applied to the block grant. Again, an update from the Minister on that would be appreciated.

When we last debated the Budget, I was interested in knowing the detail of the £800 million that was being held in the centre. What is the situation in the centre?

Someone once said that all politics is local, and, just to prove that is so, I would be grateful if the Minister would confirm that the £9 million remains included in the DEL figures for the performing arts, technology and innovation centre at the South Eastern Regional College in Bangor. That work has been eagerly awaited for many years.

My colleague Robin Swann, as a member of the Committee for Agriculture and Rural Development, raised an important issue earlier this month. At its meeting on 3 June, the Committee discussed a wind farm development and anticipated that it would generate savings of £1 million in 2014-15. Major development and planning issues remain to be resolved, so it appears highly unlikely that those savings can be achieved in the current year. So why are they included the Budget? That is totally unrealistic.

As a contingent action — its words, not mine — the Department has stated that Forest Service intends to use additional income from the sale of timber to mitigate that risk. I wonder whether the Minister agrees that the Department's strategy in this instance is open to major criticism and, indeed, is significantly flawed. Its budget is based on environmental and green issues to generate savings, but those cannot realistically be achieved in the time frame. The reality is that Forest Service will be forced to embark upon a very anti-environmental deforestation programme, which will have been authorised by the Department to meet the financial deficit that it has created. Surely that is misleading, to say the least, in any budget plan.

My colleagues in the Ulster Unionist Party will raise other points and contribute to today's debate in due course. Before I finish, I would like to raise a point that has been a concern for me for several years. I last raised it during the Second Stage debate, and the Minister will not be surprised that I raise it now. We need to have a financial process that is clear, accountable and fit for purpose. We do not have that at present, virtually everyone has agreed. Perhaps the Minister could again detail any progress since our last discussion on this by way of introducing the new process, which will greatly improve the situation.

Mr Dickson: I rise on behalf of the Alliance Party to speak in support of the Bill, despite those areas where we have serious concerns. Nevertheless, the progress of the Assembly and Executive requires that we support a finance Bill.

When we debated the Supply resolution for the Main Estimates in early June, I noted the looming crisis faced by public services due to the failure of the implementation of welfare reform. Therefore, it should come as no surprise that I return to that subject. We are nearly a month further down the line, and it would appear there has been little progress, given that last week the Social Development Minister told me in the House that the matter is sitting at the Executive table and that is as far as it goes in his contribution.

I ask the Finance Minister directly: can he tell the Assembly what he is doing to meaningfully engage with those who are blocking welfare reform? It is all very well to lay the blame squarely at the door of those who are blocking the legislation. However, does the Minister feel that the dire financial consequences could be communicated more effectively? Sinn Féin and the SDLP are either unmoved by the figures we are talking about coming out of Health, Education and other Departments or they are not convinced that the situation is as bad as the Minister has portrayed it.

I say again to them that they are playing a very dangerous game. As well as the penalties imposed, Northern Ireland, like the rest of the United Kingdom, is facing further substantial cuts in the coming years, which will also have to be addressed. Perhaps the Minister would like to outline what he considers the extent of that to be. Therefore, it is unlikely to change even if there is a change of Government following next year's Westminster election.

We share many of the concerns about the changes to welfare that are being implemented by the United Kingdom Government. We opposed those changes at every stage of the Bill's passage at Westminster. However, the concern of Members across the House does not negate the fact that the UK Government have made it perfectly clear that they are not prepared to give us further concessions.

Members need to be prepared to take difficult decisions or we will face a financial disaster. I was expecting to see some of the results of that demonstrated in the June monitoring round, but that has not yet appeared. Can the Finance Minister tell the House where it is, given that today is the last day of June? He previously told us that we should expect a 1.5% cut across the board in June, which will have a profound effect on the delivery of services. We need to know what the cuts will be and how the services will be affected.

Until welfare reform is resolved, we will continue to face major uncertainties. We can debate Budget allocations, but, until the Assembly faces up to its responsibilities, we do not know what further sanctions could and will arise and what the implications will be for all Departments. The only way the matter can be resolved is through the working group that has been set up, and I encourage the working group to redouble its efforts. We need agreement between the DUP and Sinn Féin. We are under no illusion that that requires the First Minister and deputy First Minister to reach consensus on the matter. Today is time for leadership, not procrastination, when it comes to our Budget. It is time for responsibility to be taken and for the public to be told the reality about public finances. We support the Bill.

Mr McKinney: I welcome the opportunity to contribute to the Budget Bill Final Stage today. I am speaking as the SDLP spokesperson on health.

The health portfolio takes up a large proportion of the Budget, with a net cash requirement approaching £4.5 billion. In that context, every pound is significant, and it is for that reason that the SDLP has sought out evidence of measurement around how the money apportioned to health is being used. It is a prudent and reasonable approach, and so prudent and reasonable is it that the House has, on several occasions, backed motions brought by the SDLP to make that very point. Is health funding being used prudently? Is there wastage? Are we measuring across that spectrum? Those are logical questions that must be answered.

Where is the money going? In the Main Estimates, some of the areas marked for funding are as follows: £209 million for health, community and social care services; £102 million for dental services; £487 million for pharmaceutical services; the trusts are taking a sizeable amount of £3.6 billion; and the Business Services Organisation (BSO) weighs in with some £36 million. In pharmacy, the Minister is proposing prescription charges, but has there been an interrogation of how we are spending that nearly £500 million, particularly around the use of branded drugs and general drug use and wastage?

Alongside all that and more, we have a change agenda, Transforming Your Care (TYC), to fund. That is currently underfunded. Bids have been made and not matched. A sum of £28 million was requested last year; £9 million was received. That puts a question mark over the whole Transforming Your Care process. It is a significant underspend and may get worse. For example, community health and social care services receive over £200 million in total. The Health Committee, through its engagement with community care stakeholders, has constantly heard of the same problem: they are not being funded. Imaginative community initiatives that have proven their success, such as the one operating in the Western Trust to prevent long-term heart problems, could not sustain themselves as the investment simply was not made. How is that transforming your care? They cited a convoluted commissioning process and overall weak community health infrastructure as the problem. Let us remember that the objective of TYC was to utilise that sector more. We were supposed to fund the community side, and that was supposed to take the heat off the very expensive A&E and hospital side. It has not happened.

So, where do we draw our conclusions? We can see the £209 million in the Estimates but we cannot see where it will be put in practice. Another example is the BSO, to which the Estimate is £36 million, but we know that there has been a catalogue of errors with the new pay system that the BSO manages. How much has that cost over what was initially anticipated? Has that been accounted for or is that merely chalked up as wastage? Transforming Your Care was agreed upon by most when it was first presented. The overall aims, as I said, were laudable. However, the SDLP has serious concerns about how it is being measured.

In the last debate on this Budget, I read out the contributions from unions on TYC. Some think that it is about privatisation, and others simply think that it is a cost-cutting mechanism. The Royal College of Nursing really does not know what it is. It is saying that today in real time. That is not a historic comment. I remind the Minister that the respected community and voluntary associations said last year that their concern was that the opportunity will be taken to save money by stealth, that not all the savings will be recycled back into the system and that more resources may be required than are currently allocated during the transitional period. I suspect that they are getting close to the nub. Those opinions are testament to the very point I am making: Transforming Your Care implementation is not being measured sufficiently. There are not clear points of progress that the SDLP can see.

In response to our questions, the Minister gave an update on the 99 targets initially present in Transforming Your Care. Very few of those have been fully implemented and, at worst, they are haphazard. They are stop, they are start and they are certainly not measured. The limited successes that the Minister was able to outline pale in comparison to the number of targets that were stagnant. For example, one of the claims was that an information infrastructure had been established for information on mental health. The reality is that that is a website, and it is a year late and still has not started.

There can be no doubt that the party opposite brings welfare reform into this debate, as it already has done. However, I have to ask this: if welfare reform is coming and cuts to budgets along with it, is it not now more imperative that we measure our current system to make sure that it is as efficient as it can be, given the significance of the spend that there is in the Health Department? Should we not now analyse in detail the millions of pounds of transitional TYC money? That includes the £3.6 billion that has been given to the trusts, the operational costs of the Health and Social Care Board and the huge monetary resource given to administration, which, in the Estimates, takes up a column of its own: admin costs for community care, £26 million; admin costs for ophthalmic care, £96 million.

It is worth noting that this House, as I said on a number of occasions, has backed the SDLP in motions calling for measurement. Instead of acting on that call for measurement and the reasonable request from the House, the response from the Health Minister and the Finance Minister has been to scaremonger. During the last debate, the Finance Minister stressed the point that simultaneous press releases had not gone out from him and his party colleague, the Health Minister, in relation to funding. I remind him that, when Minister Poots was warning of the dangers of a Health deficit, Minister Hamilton was echoing his words at exactly the same time. Both stories went up on the BBC on the same day, 15 minutes apart from each other. So, instead of having a Finance Minister who is measuring and scrutinising the Health spend, we see party counterparts cheerleading each other. That is not accountability, and it is in stark contrast to how the former Finance Minister treated the situation when Mr McGimpsey was in charge.

In relation to cancer drugs, Minister Poots told the public that, in order to get the funding for increased drugs spending, we need to impose prescription charges. He did not tell us that he was already receiving money through the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme (PPRS), which may be used for this very purpose. In fact, his Department could not say where the £9 million given to the North in the last three years through PPRS had gone. I ask again today: where has that money gone, how much are we getting now and what are we spending it on? Given the nature of the PPRS deal — that money should be spent on innovative drugs — where is the new money going to be spent? Just this morning, we saw a press release from the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry (ABPI) in relation to the new deal. In this quarter alone, the Department of Health, nationally, will get back £74 million. It is projected that our share of that will be 9.92%. We can all do the maths. That is in the first quarter, and it is going to be replicated over the next three quarters. At a rough estimate, just shy of £30 million may come back. It should be spent on innovative drugs and is a comprehensive and solid answer to the Minister's claims that only prescription charges and welfare reform will answer this issue. The money has been there, the money is there and the money will be there for cancer drugs and the development and encouragement of innovative drugs.

Incidentally, it does not end there. If we incorporate this, there is the potential for us to develop our biomedical research and biotech industry around this. There can be jobs, taxes and further encouragement to our overall economy as a result of taking a holistic approach to this. The Minister, I suggest, should jump off the prescription charges and welfare reform arguments and use the money that is there. It will benefit patients on cancer drugs and this society as a whole.

The point is clear: health is a huge budget, and every pound spent should be measured in terms of its outcome. The SDLP does not see evidence that the Department, the board or the Minister is undertaking the measurement that is required.

1.00 pm

Mr Eastwood: I did not expect to be called so quickly, Mr Speaker, but thank you for that.

The Members from my party who have spoken, Mr Bradley and Mr McKinney, who has just sat down, talked very eloquently about some of the issues that face us. Mr McKinney laid out clearly the issues with the health service, and Mr Bradley spoke more generally. I will take up some of the issues and then, as I usually do, revert to talking about Derry, as you might have imagined that I would. I will probably try to weave Derry into all the other issues as well — I am a bit like Mr McElduff in that respect.

One important issue that Mr Bradley touched on was the idea of a Calman-style commission to look at the opportunities for the North around fiscal powers. There has been much debate about corporation tax. I do not believe that it is a silver bullet, but I do believe that it is a very important issue. Anybody who has been to the States and spoken to anybody there about trying to attract investment to this part of the world will know that we are up against it, because our direct competitor — I argue that it should not be our direct competitor but our partner — is the Republic of Ireland, just across the border, which is able to offer a much more attractive package.

Mr A Maginness: Will the Member give way?

Mr Eastwood: Yes.

Mr A Maginness: The Member raises very interesting points, not just on corporation tax but on the general range of fiscal powers, the Calman commission and so forth. Given the current situation in Scotland, with the referendum on independence, and the fact that all the major parties have conceded that Scotland deserves to receive and will receive greater fiscal powers in relation to its self-governance, is there not an even stronger argument that we in Northern Ireland should also seek stronger powers in fiscal matters?

Mr Eastwood: I thank the Member for his intervention. His point is very well made. I have a view on what might happen in Scotland in the next few months, and I hope that a certain side of the campaign is very successful. I think that it will have an impact here that might be immeasurable, and I am not sure that everyone has quite grasped how important it is for us. The Member is right: Scotland will not be governed in the same way after the referendum, no matter what happens. If they get independence, they will obviously have much greater fiscal powers; if they do not, “devo max” is, I think, very much on the cards, and we need to start looking at what impact that could have on us.

We also need to think a bit more creatively. I keep telling people that we have a 12.5% rate of corporation tax in our city — in Muff, Bridgend or Killea. There are opportunities for us to work on a cross-border basis with the Irish Government and the organisations in the South that are trying to attract investment to the Republic. We can do that by asking them to look at a cross-border enterprise zone for the north-west. I know that there was a recent announcement for Coleraine — good luck to Coleraine — but we have been asking for one for quite a bit longer. We think that the cross-border element provides a tremendous opportunity, and we have everything in place. The area around Bridgend in Donegal has that very attractive tax system. Look at one company that has relocated from Derry to Burnfoot, just down the road: E&I Engineering employs hundreds of people, and I think that about 80% of them are from Derry. They spend money in Derry and buy houses in Derry. The company may pay tax in the South, but both sides of the border benefit. We need to start looking at ideas like that to reinforce the fact that we should not be in competition with the South but in partnership. It is not about us on this side of the House waving a tricolour in anybody's face; it is about common sense. We had a document called ‘North South Makes Sense’, because it just does. Nobody's allegiance to any nationality or nation is threatened by that. There are massive opportunities in the way in which we do things, particularly in the economy, that should run across every Department. I know that in our city and in other places the border becomes less and less relevant in people's everyday lives, but it should be less relevant in government policies, particularly those for the economy.

Mr Bradley also spoke of the need for Budgets and Programmes for Government to be done in unison. The idea that we all turn up after an election and we are all in government and then we have a row about what the Budget and the Programme for Government should be does not make any real sense. I would far rather see parties go into a negotiation around a Programme for Government and a Budget that has a connection to it at the beginning of the term. We have an opportunity in the final year of the mandate to begin that process, and, hopefully, at least after 2016's elections, we can start to do things a little differently.

That brings me to the important point. One of the major issues in our city is that we have had countless plans. We have loads of plans. We know exactly what needs to be done on the economy for Derry, and it is important that that be done, not just for Derry but for Northern Ireland. We do not want to see queues of people leaving our city or any other place in the North for Australia or England and never coming back, nor do we want to see people continuously claiming benefits when they could contribute to the economy in a very positive way. We had the answer, and it was called the “One Plan”. I know that the Executive seemed very committed to it, because, when I was mayor, I stood beside the First Minister and the deputy First Minister when they came to the Waterside in Derry to launch it. That was after 18 months of people in the community and business sectors and all the local statutory agencies and political parties getting together. It was a difficult process and maybe not one that anyone would want to repeat. We came up with 11 catalytic projects that would make a huge impact, in our view, on the city's economy and social deprivation indices.

We all signed up to the plan, which was pretty much unheard of. It was a great process, in that political parties from in here were able to work together out there, somewhere else, like we do in a lot of areas in the city, and come up with a plan that we thought the Government should adopt. As I said, the First Minister and the deputy First Minister came down, launched it and praised us for doing all the hard work, and then, when we saw the first draft of the Programme for Government, it was not even mentioned. We kicked up a fuss, and the strategy board in Derry wrote a strongly worded letter, and then it was mentioned. It said that the Executive were committed to developing the One Plan, with particular reference to the sites at Ebrington and Fort George. We had already developed the plan: the problem was that we needed it implemented. Unfortunately, if it was not going to be in the Programme for Government, it was not going to be in any of the ministerial commitments after that. For me, that was a major mistake, and we have ended up seeing the outworkings of that.

We had a fantastic week in Derry, with probably hundreds of thousands of people walking along the quay. It was like walking through Cannes or somewhere like that. They were looking at yachts and spending money, enjoying the weather and one another's company. There were people from every background getting together. Derry can do things like that very well, but, unless we get the economic drivers and the infrastructural fundamentals correct, those things will come and go.

Mr Dallat: Will the Member give way?

Mr Eastwood: I will, yes.

Mr Dallat: I detect a certain smugness from my colleague from Foyle, and I can understand it perfectly. I accept that Derry is the envy of the rest of Northern Ireland in how unionists and nationalists can get together and carry out the kind of fete that happened last week or, indeed, last year. However, does the Member agree that there is one thing missing: transport infrastructure? Derry is, I think, the only city in Europe that is not connected by a motorway, and it still struggles with a railway that is hugely successful. I was on the train on Saturday, and it was packed, but it irritates me when somebody on a bicycle can complete the journey to Belfast more quickly. Yes, you got the boats, but only for a week. They are away now. We also need that ferry between Magilligan and Greencastle. I know that our colleagues in Belfast in particular must feel envious of the maiden city's success, but surely it is time to put the capital investment into our second city and make it the showpiece that unionists and nationalists up there have worked hard for. They have won the arguments. What is needed now is the money.

Mr Eastwood: I thank the Member for his eloquent intervention. The House will probably thank him for shortening my speech because he said most of what I wanted to say. He is right. The point that I was making is that we can do fantastic things when people in Derry get together and decide to work together to get these things done. We can attract world-class events. It is a pity that Radio Ulster seemed a wee bit more interested in Glastonbury than in the Clipper festival this morning, but that is another issue.

The Member is right: unless we get the infrastructural development correct, we cannot reach our full potential. We are not asking for anything special; we are asking for the opportunities and tools to do these things for ourselves. There needs to be a proper road network that does not just end in one part of Northern Ireland and does not go to another part where a huge number of people live. A couple of weeks ago, a man cycled to Belfast more quickly than he could go by train. He beat the train. What does that tell us about where we are and where we need to be? I could probably do it. You could even do it, Mr Weir. [Laughter.] Mr McKay could definitely do it. Another point is that, when you try to get a train from Derry to Dublin, you find that the Dublin train leaves Belfast five minutes before the Derry one arrives. You would nearly think that it was deliberate. [Laughter.] There is another issue. I will not focus my anger about it on Mr Farry because I think that he gets all the focus on it when it is a bigger issue. It goes back to the point that it was not put into the Programme for Government. It is the issue of the development of Magee. It is nothing to do with welfare reform, as Mr Farry told me last week: it is a 50-year-old debate. We were even debating it back when John Hume and the unionist mayor came to this place with a lot of other people to demand a proper university for our city. The One Plan commitment is for 9,400 places by 2020. The way things are going at the minute, we will not make that. Again, it is not just about us asking for more places for the university so that people do not have to go to Liverpool; it is about underpinning the city's economy. It is not just about the number of students but about the type of courses and being able to create jobs and attract jobs to the city. It just needs to be done. We send 15,000 students from the North somewhere else every year. That is a university a year that leaves here. We spend all the money to educate them in our schools, then we send them somewhere else. Eighty per cent of them do not come home and do not contribute to our economy.

I know that it is kind of broken-record stuff from us. We are often called whingers. It is not about whingeing; it is about asking for what is fair and right. Derry has proven that, given the opportunities and tools, we can deliver something very good and exciting for the people of the city and the North of Ireland.

Mr Hamilton: I genuinely want to thank Members for their wide-ranging contributions today. It is important that the impacts of the Bill on local people are debated fully in the context of a local Budget. I welcome the contributions today. I will do my best to respond to the issues raised as comprehensively as possible during the rest of the debate. At the outset of my remarks, I thank again the Chairman and the Committee for Finance and Personnel for their assistance in the accelerated passage of the Bill. The support of the Committee enables the Bill to receive Royal Assent by 31 July, ensuring that the flow of funding to public services will continue uninterrupted throughout the remainder of the year.

1.15 pm

I will address some, if not all, of the comments made by Members this afternoon, and I turn first to those of the Chairman, Mr McKay. In his capacity as Chair, he mentioned the development of a memorandum of understanding between my Department and the Committee on the Budget process. I am content to support that in principle and will respond in more detail to the Committee in due course. I will say one thing, though, which is important. Given the opportunity that a one-year 2015-16 Budget presents to develop and test a draft memorandum of understanding against the one-year process, I am content to do that. However, to pick up on a point that Mr Cree regularly makes in the Chamber when I am here, that is not a substitute in any way for a fundamental review and reform of our financial process, which has been long outstanding and is very much needed.

We have gone through the process again, and the criticisms about this Budget process were the same as were made about the previous process and the one before that and so on and so on. That shows the need for that reform not just because of the openness and transparency that it will bring to an important process — the Budget — but because it will hopefully lead to a better use of resources. If Members and those who use money to provide services can see better where it is spent, you would hope that it would lead to a better use of resources. I throw it back to the Committee Chairman, given the party that he is a member of, and urge him to bring whatever influence he can to bear on his party colleagues who are not as enthusiastic about the review of the financial process. He urged me to be reforming — I thank him for that — but I also encourage him to be an advocate for reform when it comes to the review of the financial process.

If Mr McKay reflects on his remarks, he will see that he said that the Public Accounts Committee (PAC) report talked about the incompetence of DFP being shocking. To be fair, there may be occasions on which he may have the right to say that, but I think that, in this instance, he was referring to the Department for Work and Pensions's (DWP) incompetence as being shocking.

It is fortuitous that the Minister for Social Development has arrived not just so that he can hear what I have to say but so that he can help me if I get flummoxed and get the information wrong.

As for criticisms of the roll-out of welfare reform or, indeed, some of the elements of welfare reform that have been legislated for across the water, who would not criticise many aspects of the Welfare Reform Act, as it is now, across the water? I can stand proudly and say that members of my party were in the House of Commons to vote against many elements of the Bill when it was going through the House of Commons. As a party, we have been consistent in referencing those parts of the Bill, even the Bill that was initially before this House, and in saying which bits we did not like. We are content with some bits. Everybody in the House should endorse the principles of trying to make work pay and trying to simplify the benefits process. Nonetheless, there are bits of the welfare reform agenda that are not what we would propose if we had a blank sheet of paper. That is why, within a week of taking up office, Minister McCausland dispatched himself to London to negotiate with DWP to ensure that the exemptions and flexibilities that could be negotiated were negotiated, and he has been exceptionally successful in doing that.

We have a package of measures that, while not ameliorating all of the worst of welfare reform, certainly goes some way to doing that and reaching that objective, to the extent that the bedroom tax will not affect people in Northern Ireland in the way that it affects people in Great Britain. We also got various payment flexibilities, which were demanded not just by Members of the House but by people outside it in the community and those dealing with vulnerable people. As I have said in the House before, this package of measures is the envy not just of English MPs but of my governmental counterparts in Scotland and Wales. We should be very pleased with what the Minister for Social Development has been able to achieve.

Mr McKay ran through a series of reports — I am glad to hear that he also reads ‘The Economist’ — about IT delays and issues with implementation. Whilst I am sympathetic to the points that he raises and, no doubt, my ministerial colleague is also sympathetic, they are, in many respects, immaterial to the debate that we are having in Northern Ireland. We are faced with a Government in London who remain ideologically committed to doing this, even though they face escalating costs and delays in the implementation of ICT systems and the negative implications of those things for the implementation of the new benefits and the changes to existing benefits. They are determined that their vision of welfare reform will be implemented. As Members in the House know, without me having to rehearse it all again, we are bound by the 1998 Act to follow parity and ensure that the system of benefits that will apply in London, Newcastle, Manchester or Liverpool is applicable here in Northern Ireland. Despite the delays and rising costs of implementation, it is very clear that the Government in London are proceeding.

The cost for us of not proceeding, as I have said in the House many times during the Budget process, is that we have already lost £13 million. That is £13 million worth of services that could be delivered and are not being delivered. I remind Members, particularly those opposite who come with a list of very meritorious projects that they would like to see developed in their constituency or for the benefit of people across Northern Ireland, that losing £13 million from our Budget does not help the Assembly or the Executive in funding those projects, never mind dealing with existing pressures. What we will lose will rise to an additional £87 million this year, and so it goes on. It will be over £100 million next year and more and more as the years go on. This is not something that will impact on services in the future; it is starting to impact on services now.

As for my party cosying up to the Tory party, I note that the party opposite has been seeking meetings with the Prime Minister on a one-to-one basis since he came into office in 2010. I understand that he has finally acceded to their request and is meeting them this week. I do not know what is on the menu, I do not know what they will be entertained with and I am not even sure what they will discuss, but it is rich for the party opposite to lecture my party about our relationship with any party in Westminster when they are running around trying to pal up to the Tory party as well for whatever reason.

I will jump ahead a little and refer to Stewart Dickson's comments about whether the parties that oppose movement on welfare reform are unmoved by the figures or believe that they are not as bad. I think that it is a bit of both. I think that they are unmoved by the figures. I will play devil's advocate, which is difficult for me to do, but £13 million being lost probably does not sound like a lot of money in the grand scheme of the Budget. However, when you increase that to £87 million, it will be a grand total of £100 million, and then you will have £100 million next year and then more than that. Then it will start to bite, and they will realise that it is as bad as we have been saying. It would be bad enough if we were just losing £100 million out of our Budget this year, unfathomable as that is, but, when you have the pressure from Ministers such as the Health Minister, the Justice Minister, the Education Minister or other Ministers coming into the Chamber and saying, “I am already under pressure to the tune of x hundreds of millions of pounds, and you are taking money off my budget to pay for these penalties” —

Mr G Robinson: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Hamilton: Yes, I will.

Mr G Robinson: Which Departments does the Minister think could lose out on that £13 million?

Mr Hamilton: To address Mr Robinson's point, ultimately, it is a matter for the Executive to agree on how best they think those pressures of the £13 million, the £87 million to come and the future pressures that will affect next year's Budget are to be dealt with. It is hard to escape the conclusion that, given the quantity of reductions and pressures involved, no one should be immune. That is not a position that I relish, and the Minister for Social Development will shift uneasily in his seat at hearing that news, as it will put pressure on his budget as well. Unfortunately, it is the reality of the situation that we face. If we face that degree of reduction, I do not think that any Minister in the Executive can or will be immune from that degree of reduction, critical as all the services that they provide are.

It is something that is being discussed, and, while I cannot get into the granular detail of the June monitoring round, to finish Mr Dickson's points, we are discussing a June monitoring round. It is the most challenging monitoring round that the Assembly has faced since it came back in 2007, because of the pressures that we are under. The Member said that we needed to know what cuts there would be. That is precisely the point. The Social Development Minister will agree that I have been laying out in fairly stark terms to colleagues the degree of reduction required to deal with the existing welfare penalties and those that are yet to come in this year, as well as addressing pressures that have built up at the centre anyway. I have been putting in fairly stark terms the difficult choices and tough decisions that I think Executive colleagues have to make now so that Departments have the certainty that they need to plan for the remainder of the financial year. That is creating a stumbling block. I suppose that we would expect that, given the degree of cuts and reductions that there are.

I go back to the original point: when Members opposite and the Ministers from those parties see in bald terms what those figures are and what it means for their Department and then take it back to their Department and calculate what it means in service reduction, they will, I hope, start to understand. Unfortunately, however, many still seem to be unmoved by the degree of reduction required to deal with the penalties that we face.

I will go back to some comments that Mr McKay made on reform and the use of technology. I will highlight some of the achievements that we have made, and I am grateful to him for highlighting the fact that some things have been achieved, not just the use of technology, which I will come to in a second, but in property management. Since 2009, the property division in my Department has saved over £15 million in rent, rates and service charges by providing much more modern, higher-density, open plan office space. IT Assist, one of the shared services for which Enterprise Shared Services in my Department is responsible, has reduced the cost per user for computers and telecommunications equipment by over 30%. It is not just about reduction; it is about service improvement. Our own PAC described our prompt payment work in Account NI, where over 90% of invoices are paid to suppliers within 10 days, as world-class.

I agree with the Member that the better use of technology is a key driver and a major part of my reform agenda. This year alone, we have seen the launch of initiatives like Spatial NI, through which all of our mapping and geographical information has been put online and made accessible to the public. All of our genealogical information has also been put online through the General Register Office. Those are two small examples of where it can happen. The next phase, which will be led by the digital transformation service, which, again, is within DFP, will be to take many more of those services and put them online where people want to use them and where, of course, it saves us a considerable amount of money. As I am sure the Member and the House will appreciate, making such a degree of change and reform is not always simple and straightforward. It takes some time to roll it out.

Mr McKay also talked about companies coming to Departments selling technology. We have got to be careful, in the first instance, particularly around procurement law, that somebody does not just walk into the Department headquarters and say, "I've got something that will revolutionise how you work". They may well have something that will revolutionise how we work, but we cannot simply have Departments buying from the first person who comes into their offices. It is important that Departments identify need first and then go out to purchase the appropriate technology, which will save money but also improve the customer experience.

Dominic Bradley who, up until now, has been a loyal and faithful servant at Budget times — he is missing now — rehearsed pretty much every point that he made about the Budget. He talked about the 2015-16 Budget and the need to better provide for the people of Northern Ireland. I agree. As a principle, better providing for the people of Northern Ireland is, surely, why we are all here. In response to Mr Bradley I say that, in a situation where we already have less money coming from Treasury — there are about 1.5% to 2% reductions to our 2015-16 Budget, compared with 2014-15 — and we have all the welfare penalties that we talked about, it is hard to see how those aspirations can be met. It is bad enough that we have that 1.5% to 2% reduction, but to have all of those additional penalties slapped on top of us makes providing better for the people of Northern Ireland that bit more difficult than it already is.

Mr Bradley also said that the economy needed to do better and, as he did at Second Stage, proceeded into a bit of a moan about job creation. He bemoaned the Executive's record on job creation, the fact that they did not spread that out beyond Belfast and the thinking that there was some sort of ring around Belfast beyond which job creation did not extend. I thought that that was incredibly ironic, because, as we stand here today, 484 new jobs are being announced by First Derivatives in Newry, which, I think, is in the constituency that Mr Bradley represents.

I think that, on reflection, he will welcome the record of the Executive in creating jobs not just in Belfast; we are supporting the creation of high-quality jobs in places like Newry as well.

1.30 pm

He talked about the Programme for Government. There is an ongoing review of the Programme for Government that will look at the extension of existing targets for a year and the creation of new targets. He said that we should consider using something other than an old Ordnance Survey map. As the Minister responsible for Ordnance Survey, I am very proud of our mapping; it is one of the very good services that we provide in Land and Property Services (LPS). He encouraged me to use a satnav more. As somebody who has just advocated technology in response to Mr McKay's comments, I caution about the use of satnav because, in my constituency, poor people have articulated lorries being sent up their street even though it is a cul-de-sac. That is a bit like Mr Bradley's satnav; he wants to spend lots of money, but he does not offer me any ways in which I can raise that money. That sounds a bit like a road to nowhere.

Mr Cree raised a number of very detailed points, which, if need be, I will try to respond to in writing. He talked about pressures — I think that I referred to them in response to Mr Dickson — developing in year, such as £160 million in Health and some in the Victims and Survivors Service. He asked whether budgetary adjustment was required for those. It will be required only if decisions are taken in this monitoring round or future ones to fund those pressures in some way. The adjustment would then happen in the Budget Bill early next year. It was very narrow of him to talk about the North Down constituency, South Eastern Regional College (SERC) and DEL's work at Bangor with the performing arts. Again, I can come back to him, but there is nothing I am aware of to suggest that that money is not there. However, that is primarily a matter for the Minister for Employment and Learning.

I welcome Fearghal McKinney's backhanded admission that he was wrong in terms of the release of two statements by the Health — he is shaking his head; he is not saying that he was wrong. The record shows that there was not a simultaneous release of statements by my Department and the Health Department in mid-May, as the Member suggested at Second Stage. I corrected him at Second Stage. I thought that he was being humble, and I would have taken it in that regard had he backed away from his previous statement. The former UTV man was perhaps blaming the BBC for putting them on its website at the same time. I am happy —

Mr McKinney: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Hamilton: Oh, you want to get into this one. OK.

Mr McKinney: I thank the Minister for giving way. The point is that the Health Minister made a point about prescription charges and welfare reform, saying that there was no option other than the alternatives. The Finance Minister made the same point at the same time on a programme on the BBC. Both of them went up on the BBC within 15 minutes of each other. The Health Minister and the Finance Minister were singing off the same hymn sheet at the same time, saying the same things. Where is the scrutiny in that? Where is the scrutiny that was demonstrated by Mr Wilson, the former Finance Minister, when he was interrogating the Health Minister Mr McGimpsey and suggesting ways for him to save money? The Finance Minister was backing the Health Minister, and the Health Minister was backing the Finance Minister.

Mr Hamilton: The point is not what the Member has said; the point is that, at Second Stage, Mr McKinney questioned whether I had released both statements, whether the Health Minister had released both statements, or whether the DUP press office had released both statements. He talked about two statements being released when, in fact, no statement was released by me or the Health Minister. It was inaccurate of the Member to come to the House —

Mr McKinney: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Hamilton: No. I have heard enough.

It was inaccurate of the Member to come to the House at Second Stage and say that, on a date in May, the Health Minister and I colluded in some way and released simultaneous press statements. No press statements were issued on that day by me or the Health Minister.

I shudder to think that the Health Minister and I might have some sort of symmetry and be working together and trying to do things to provide services better for the people of Northern Ireland, as Mr Bradley wanted me to do. I shudder to think that I would have a working relationship with Mr McCausland. Maybe I should do business by being at loggerheads with party colleagues. Mr Ford is in the House; he and I have a very good working relationship even though we are not members of the same party. The colour is draining from his face as I say that I have a good working relationship with him. He is looking for more money. Maybe he does not think that it is a good working relationship, but I like to pride myself on having a good working relationship with the Minister of Justice, as indeed I do with other Ministers. That is what I should be doing. I should be working with and listening to them. I cannot address all the concerns that they have; I do not have the money to do that. However, I try to work with Mr Ford and Mr McCausland, and I certainly try to work constructively with Mr Poots, when he is responsible for spending 45% of the Budget in Northern Ireland. That should be welcomed by the party opposite.

Mr Weir: I thank the Minister for giving way. He may be being a little bit harsh on Mr McKinney. Surely the Minister is only emulating the good working relationship that exists between the leader of the SDLP and the deputy leader?

Mr Hamilton: I suppose that, if that is all that you have to go on, that is maybe what you would expect. Mr McKinney said at the start of his comments that he was speaking as health spokesman, but he then went on to give a speech that was by and large about operational matters that are better dealt with by the Health Minister. This is the last year of the 2011-15 Budget, and spending on health has increased from £4.3 billion in 2010-11 to £4.65 billion in 2014-15, which represents an 8.3% increase over those three years. It will expand again this year. Last year alone, over £100 million in additional expenditure was granted to the Department of Health. The Health Minister has made £490 million of savings between 2011-12 and 2013-14.

I also heard Mr McKinney criticising the Minister on the non-delivery of his Transforming Your Care policy. I did not know that the SDLP was supportive of that policy. I am sure that the Minister of Health will welcome its volte face.

Colum Eastwood talked about a wide range of issues, including tax-varying powers. I remind him of the review that has been undertaken as a result of the economic pact, which is looking at scoping out the potential for further tax-varying powers, although I have always been very clear that, if we were to consider those, they must produce a defined economic and social benefit for Northern Ireland, and they must be affordable. I will look at them all on a case-by-case basis.

He also talked about enterprise zones, and I remind him that the first Northern Ireland pilot of that is in fact in the north-west. Without getting into the higgledy-piggledy or the nitty-gritty of the rules of enterprise zones, they are not something that we can create everywhere in Northern Ireland or, indeed, for the whole of Northern Ireland, as some people in the business community have suggested. However, there are certain circumstances, particularly where capital-intensive industries are developing, starting or growing, where we can potentially look at new enterprise zones, but I think that it is important that people come forward with a compelling case before we go to Treasury.

To be fair to Mr Eastwood, he said at the start that he would talk extensively about Londonderry, and he was a man of his word. Other Members from the Foyle constituency likewise have spoken during previous stages of the Bill and bemoaned the lack of investment in the north-west. I understand that everybody in every constituency will say that they need investment in this, that and the other, and I do not deny that. Mr Dallat intervened and talked about roads, saying that it was the only city in Europe that did not have, did you say a dual carriageway or a motorway going into it?

Mr Dallat: A motorway.

Mr Hamilton: I am sure that the people of Armagh will be disgusted to hear that you have excluded them from the definition of a city in Europe that does not have a motorway going into it.

Look at what has been happening in the Foyle constituency and in Derry/Londonderry over the last number of years. Mr Dallat used the word “envy”, and I think that many people representing other constituencies are rightly envious of what has been happening in the north-west. Look at its job situation and the recent investments by companies such as Convergys, which has brought several hundred jobs into Londonderry; Fujitsu is expanding its existing footprint there; and Ilex has been developing the north-west regional science park. As for tourism and events, there has been the success of the first UK City of Culture, so there is a lot for people in Londonderry to be proud of. Sometimes, what I think they lack is the positivity around what is happening there being enunciated by some of their representatives. By all means, come into this House and say to me and to other Ministers that we need investment here and there: it is not just a Member’s right; it is their duty to do that. However, let us celebrate the great things that are going on there, the great things that this Executive have been able to help —

Mr Dallat: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Hamilton: Yes, I will, very briefly.

Mr Dallat: Does the Minister agree that the envy that I was referring to was the envy of the people and the extraordinary way that they have put their differences behind them? I include the Speaker in that, if I am allowed to. That has not really been matched by the amount of capital investment and infrastructure that our second city — I should have said — needs.

Mr Hamilton: I am not going to be tempted or be drawn into a debate along the lines that the Member is referring to. There is much that has happened in Londonderry that the people have achieved, that I think is admirable and that could well be copied and emulated by others, but, equally, I would not just dismiss the extent of capital investment that has gone into that constituency. It has been huge, in terms of physical infrastructure and community and social infrastructure, which perhaps comes back neatly to the point that the Member made.

I think it is sometimes easy — it is something that we all do in this House and this country — to almost instantly forget the good investments that have been made, which have reaped benefits and have allowed events like the City of Culture, the Clipper festival and other positive things that have happened in the north-west over the last number of years. We should not forget that some of those things would not happen if it was not for investment by the Executive. We should welcome that and not dismiss the investment that has taken place over the last number of years.

I will bring my remarks to a close by thanking Members for their contributions today and, indeed, over the last number of weeks. As we move further into 2014-15, there will be many challenges for the Assembly and the Executive. Tough decisions lie ahead for Ministers in seeking to deal realistically and appropriately with the apportionment of funding to front line and priority services. We as an Assembly must not shy away from those decisions but must work together to ensure that priority public services are maximised within the available funding.

More widely, we continue to see the evidence of improvement in our local economy and there are now opportunities that we need to grasp. The Executive are determined to support those getting back into work and ensure that the unemployment claimant rate continues its downward trend. We need to continue supporting our private sector in delivering economic recovery and growth. The Assembly and Executive must continue to make a difference by seeking to drive down public sector costs, increase private sector opportunity and use all the levers available to help Northern Ireland businesses and hard-working families towards a brighter economic future.

I will endeavour to ensure that the focus of the Executive remains on delivering key front line public services as efficiently as possible. I know that the Assembly will endorse that objective. On that note, I commend to Members the Budget (No. 2) Bill.

Mr Speaker: Before we proceed to the Question, I remind Members that this is a Budget Bill and it requires cross-community support.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved (with cross-community support):

That the Budget (No. 2) Bill [NIA 36/11-15] do now pass.

Business Improvement Districts (Miscellaneous) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2014

Mr McCausland (The Minister for Social Development):
I beg to move

*That the draft Business Improvement Districts
(Miscellaneous) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2014
be approved.*

The regulations are made under sections 5(2)(f), 6(3), 9(3) and 17(2)(b) of the Business Improvement Districts Act (Northern Ireland) 2013. I will outline briefly the purpose of the business improvement districts (BIDs) legislation. The Business Improvement Districts Act provides for the establishment for the first time of statutory BIDs in Northern Ireland. It empowers interested traders and business owners across Northern Ireland to get together with their local council to look at improvements that their area may need. A plan is then developed and costed and, subject to a successful ballot, an annual levy is set, which each business involved in the BIDs area would be required to pay over a five-year period.

The Business Improvement Districts (General) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2014, which were laid before the Assembly on 29 May 2014, provide significant supporting operational detail and procedures, including detailed instructions on the processes for developing a BID proposal, the holding of ballots, appeals and the administration of the BID levy, all of which support the framework for the establishment of BIDs provided by the Act.

The miscellaneous regulations will further support the establishment of BIDs in Northern Ireland by providing detail on the power of veto by councils over a BID proposal; the procedures to be followed in the provision of rating information from the Department of Finance and Personnel for the purposes of developing and canvassing on a BID proposal; and deciding who is entitled to vote in the BID ballot.

1.45 pm

Councils will have a statutory responsibility to support the development of BIDs and facilitate their establishment. That will include confirming that a proposed BID does not conflict with council plans for the area. The power of veto provision in the regulations sets out the matters and circumstances that a council shall have regard to when deciding whether to exercise a veto on a BID proposal.

One of the first steps in the BID development process is for the BID proposer to obtain non-domestic rating data from the local rating authority, and, in Northern Ireland, that is Land and Property Services of the Department of Finance and Personnel. That information will be used to evaluate the viability of establishing a BID in the area. The information is also required for the canvassing and ballot stage of the process to ensure that the correct ratepayer is identified and is able to vote. Although the sharing of that information is covered by the Data Protection Act, the regulations introduce fines and penalties to protect against any misuse.

It is up to the BID proposer to determine which non-domestic ratepayers will be eligible to vote, and that will be set out in the BID proposals submitted to the council.

A person shall be entitled to vote in a BID ballot if, on the date on which the notice of the ballot is published, that person falls within the class of eligible ratepayers who are entitled to vote as described in the BID proposals.

I recently announced support for BIDs through a pilot BID programme, and a number of pilot areas are working on developing their proposals. It is important that the final stage of the legislative process is completed and that the regulations are put on the statute books as soon as possible to allow the pilots to continue as planned. I am sure that Members across the Chamber will welcome and support the regulations.

Mr Brady (The Deputy Chairperson of the Committee for Social Development): Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. The Committee for Social Development considered the Department's proposal to make the Business Improvement Districts (Miscellaneous) Regulations at its meeting on 5 June and again at its meeting last week on 26 June.

The Business Improvement Districts Act is an enabling Act, and the Committee, in its consideration of the Bill, acknowledged that much of the detail would come through subordinate legislation. The regulations are subject to the affirmative resolution procedure, which addresses Committee concerns that they should be subject to wide consultation and that the Assembly should have an opportunity to consider them.

The regulations support the establishment of business improvement districts, known as BIDs. They allow for the Department of Finance and Personnel to provide information from its non-domestic rates records for the purposes of developing and canvassing in relation to a ballot on a BID proposal; and to introduce fines for the misuse of that information. That relates to the assertion that Land and Property Services will take on a role in the administration of the BID levy.

The Committee, on the basis of the evidence that it took at Committee Stage, viewed business improvement districts as a positive scheme overall, but it is clear, of course, that in any instance of business incurring a cost, even if the results are positive, the businesses affected should have a chance to have their say on whether they are content. That step is included in the primary legislation and the regulations provide the required detail.

The regulations are particularly important as they outline who is entitled to vote in a ballot, which is a crucial element of the BIDs legislation because all businesses within a business improvement district are required to pay a levy. Evidence from stakeholders led Committee members to agree that the benefits to be reaped by a business within a BID outweighed the price of a levy. Nevertheless, it is vital that any businesses that would be affected have the opportunity to vote on whether they want the BID to go ahead.

Before closing, it is important to note that the Department informed the Committee that the Examiner of Statutory Rules had identified a couple of technical errors in the regulations. The Department corrected them, and the Committee agreed that it was content with the amended regulations. I therefore recommend that the amended draft statutory rule be affirmed by the Assembly.

Mr McCausland: I am pleased with the consensus of support across the Assembly for the regulations, and I thank the Deputy Chair and the rest of the Social Development Committee for the positive way in which the Committee dealt with the regulations. I am certain that we all want to see our towns and city centres flourishing once more, and providing a statutory basis for BIDs will contribute to that aim. So, I thank Members for their interest in the regulations and commend the motion to the House.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That the draft Business Improvement Districts (Miscellaneous) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2014 be approved.

Police Act 1997 (Criminal Record Certificates: Relevant Matters) (Amendment No. 2) Order (Northern Ireland) 2014

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): I beg to move

That the draft Police Act 1997 (Criminal Record Certificates: Relevant Matters) (Amendment No. 2) Order (Northern Ireland) 2014 be approved.

The draft order amends a drafting error in Part V of the Police Act 1997, which was made by the Police Act 1997 (Criminal Record Certificates: Relevant Matters) (Amendment) Order (Northern Ireland) 2014, which provided for the introduction of the filtering scheme. The error relates to the provisions covering the treatment of convictions for those aged under 18. In one place in the order, instead of reading:

"the person was aged under 18 on the date of conviction"

it reads:

"the person was aged 18 or under on the date of conviction".

That needs to be amended. Following the original order, decisions on the filtering of convictions for those aged under 18 have been made by Access NI in line with the intention of that order as passed by the House. This order, if passed today, will come into operation on 8 July this year.

I thank the Justice Committee for its consideration of the draft legislation. I apologise to the Assembly for the need for the amendment. Pausing for anything further to say in the absence of the Committee Chair but hoping that others will respond, I commend the draft order to the House.

Mr Wells: The Committee is broadly content with what is being proposed. It is a sensible modernisation of the situation, and we have no objections whatsoever.

Mr A Maginness: I will not speak for very long. I support the Minister. It is a sensible amendment and something that the Justice Committee fully approves of.

Mr Ford: I thank Mr Wells for the eloquent way in which he stepped in for the Committee Chair at very short notice. I am sure that the Committee Chair will be reprimanded, and I seriously do thank Mr Wells, Mr Maginness and the Committee in general for their help as ever in dealing with this minor correction. I ask Members to support the motion.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That the draft Police Act 1997 (Criminal Record Certificates: Relevant Matters) (Amendment No. 2) Order (Northern Ireland) 2014 be approved.

Mr Speaker: Order, Members. Question Time begins at 2.00 pm, so I suggest that the House take its ease until then. The business will continue after Question Time, when the next debate will be the Adjournment debate. The Assembly is now adjourned.

2.00 pm

(Mr Principal Deputy Speaker [Mr Mitchel McLaughlin] in the Chair)

Assembly Business

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I will clarify for Members that, following Question Time, there will be an Assembly consent motion on the Public Bodies (Abolition of Food from Britain) Order 2014. I wish to correct the impression that we will move straight to the Adjournment.

Oral Answers to Questions

Environment

Dereliction Intervention Funding

1. Mr Moutray asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the second tranche of the dereliction intervention funding programme. (AQO 6447/11-15)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): I thank the Member for the question. With your permission, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle, I perhaps require an extra minute or so to answer it.

I understand that the Member has clarified that his question refers to the next tranche of dereliction intervention funding rather than the second tranche.

I recently invited bids in anticipation of further financial resources becoming available for the next tranche of dereliction funding. It is encouraging and concerning to note that 23 of the 26 councils made submissions for proposals to effect improvements and enhancements in their areas. It is encouraging because it provides clear evidence that the scheme is welcome and effective, since nearly every council wishes to benefit from it. It is concerning because it draws to our attention the fact that there is still a real and significant job to be undertaken across the North in tackling eyesores that have a detrimental visual effect.

The dereliction intervention programme has a fine history. The initial proposal was to reduce the potentially negative impact of some run-down areas in the Portrush and Portstewart area quickly and in time for the influx of visitors to the prestigious Irish Open in 2012. It did exactly that. The next major project was to make improvements to my home city — our home city, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker — in the run-up to and during its tremendous City of Culture year in 2013. I know from personal experience how effective the project was in supporting and enhancing the visitor experience. Another high-profile intervention improved the visual environment for visitors to the G8 summit meeting in May of that year.

As well as these larger projects, there have been many smaller improvements across numerous council areas. By all reports, these have been welcome and acclaimed. It is obvious that the scheme has had a remarkably positive impact, particularly when measured against the comparatively modest sums employed. It is also clear that there has been a beneficial impact, in that adjacent and nearby private property owners have been encouraged by the uplift to the area generated by small and large schemes, and have responded by tidying and renovating their own properties. This helpful by-product had been envisaged in the creation of the programme.

I have made a strong bid in the June monitoring round for £1 million for dereliction intervention funding. The Executive have not yet completed their considerations of the round, but I will be pressing the case for provision for this excellent scheme. It is fundamentally important that the Executive ensure that the impetus and momentum that was built up in the programme's early years should be maintained. If Executive colleagues provide resources for the dereliction programme, as I hope they will, I will ensure that they are allocated amongst councils as soon as practicable thereafter.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: You did that in the three minutes, Minister.

Mr Moutray: I thank the Minister for his response. I accept what he said about the success of the funding that has been allocated so far and what it has achieved. If he is successful and more funding is allocated, will he personally see to it that councils that were not successful on the last occasion, like Craigavon Borough Council, will be able to avail themselves of it next time?

Mr Durkan: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle, agus go raibh maith agat fosta as an am breise. Thank you for that wee bit of extra time. Hopefully, it does not lead to penalties.

I thank Mr Moutray for that supplementary question. He quite rightly identifies the success of the fund, which is evidenced by the demand from councils. Hopefully, my bid will be successful, and, if it is, I will have my officials consider the bids from all 23 councils that made submissions. If a council has been unsuccessful to date in applying for the fund, there might be work that needs to be done between that council and my officials. I will ensure that that work is done and that suitable bids are put forward by councils for much-needed work in their areas.

Mr McElduff: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. The Department recently hardened its definition of "dereliction". The Minister might agree that it would be a good thing if provision could be made within the grant for work to be done in areas between buildings, disused and underused land and dilapidated streetscapes, even if it required some element of match funding. I welcome the Minister's thinking on that.

Mr Durkan: Go raibh maith agat as an cheist shuimiúil sin. I thank the Member for that interesting question and the interesting point he has raised. Dereliction goes beyond buildings. He referred to gap sites, which are like a row of teeth: it is the one that is missing that causes the row to be ugly rather than the ones that are there.

I am aware that, in some bids from some councils, there has been a covering up of those gaps with hoardings and so forth that have been creatively adorned, maybe by local community groups and artists. However, I am unaware of any significant building work being initiated on those sort of sites as a direct result of the dereliction fund. I am certainly open to the Member's suggestion.

Mr Copeland: I thank the Minister for his answers thus far. What cooperation, if any, has his Department enjoyed with the Department for Social Development regarding these matters, particularly public realm schemes?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for that supplementary question. This is a very important matter, and it is one on which I am happy to say that there has been coordination between my officials and officials in the Department for Social Development. The reason that many people, including me previously, cite for dereliction and problems, such as vacant properties, in our towns and city centres is the lack of coordination between Departments. So it is extremely important that all Departments work together. I can ensure that my Department and my officials work with other Departments. In this case, the relevant Department is the Department for Social Development, which is charged with urban regeneration and community development. It is vital that we work together, particularly in these times of straitened budgets, to ensure that we and the public are getting the biggest bang for our buck.

Councils: DRD Functions

2. Mr Easton asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the discussions he has had with the Minister for Regional Development in relation to transferring current Department for Regional Development areas of responsibility to the new councils. (AQO 6448/11-15)

Mr Durkan: On 11 April 2013, the Executive agreed the functions of Northern Ireland Departments that should transfer to the new 11 councils on 1 April 2015. It was agreed that off-street parking — with the exception of park-and-ride and park-and-share parking places — and Donaghadee harbour and its management would transfer to councils from the Department for Regional Development.

In accordance with the Executive's agreement, it is for individual Ministers to decide on the detail and manner of functions and services transferring from Departments to new councils.

The Department for Regional Development and the other transferring Departments, including my own, have been working closely with local government sector stakeholders in the transfer of functions working group, which was established to facilitate the effective transfer of new powers to councils. The group has been working to identify the governance, operational and financial implications of the transfer and consider possible solutions to addressing them before they are presented for political decision.

The progress of the working group has been regularly reported to me in my capacity as chair of the regional transition committee. Each Department that is transferring functions or powers has submitted comprehensive information on the resources — budget, staff and assets — attached to the package of functions and powers that are to be transferred to local government. Work is under way to provide final allocation models for each of the new councils.

Officials in my Department will continue to work in conjunction with Department for Regional Development officials to facilitate the smooth transfer of the agreed functions from Departments to the new councils.

Mr Easton: I thank the Minister for his answer. Can he give reassurances that the terms and conditions of staff will be the same once they transfer over to councils?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for his supplementary question and assume that it refers directly to DRD staff who are carrying out the functions that will be transferred to local councils. Different Ministers, as I have said, will take different views on how assets should transfer, those assets being such things as budgets and, very importantly and crucially, staff.

As regards DRD, the staff will come across. My Department will be transferring the staff associated with the functions that it is transferring to local councils. I know DSD is taking a different approach. It is transferring the functions of community development and urban regeneration and the budget that is currently associated with the staff. Then it will be up the councils to decide how to spend that budget — whether or not they will take the staff on secondment from DSD. It is vital that staff are protected within this whole transfer or transformation of local government. They are what makes local government work and it is not going to work without them.

Mr Brady: I thank the Minister for his answers so far. What training will be offered or provided to councils and councillors who will soon have statutory powers for parking in town centres?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for that supplementary question. Having seen him try to park outside, I think he could certainly do with the training himself. [Laughter.] I have on several occasions within this Chamber spoken of the importance of capacity building and training for members of the new councils. A lot of the focus has been on the headline functions that are transferring, such as planning, or the brand new functions, such as community planning, and how we will build members' capacity to deal with those issues. This is the first occasion on which capacity building for this particular function has been raised, but I can assure the Member that it will be addressed within the extensive capacity building programme that is being rolled out for the members of the new councils.

Mr Dallat: Was the Minister suitably impressed by the proposals from the Department for Social Development to reduce the transferring budget to meet its own comprehensive spending targets?

Mr Durkan: I thank Mr Dallat for that question. I am aware that the most recently proposed DSD budget allocation, which was issued just a fortnight ago on 16 June, continues to be based on the assumption that transferred resources will be subject to a 4% reduction as part of the 2015-16 Executive Budget process. This is an area that, in my opinion, will certainly require further discussion to resolve. In my view, this position is certainly not consistent with the assurance provided to councils that the transfer of functions would be rate neutral at the point of transfer. I will continue to make this case, as I have been doing, with the Minister of Finance and Personnel and other Executive colleagues.

We spoke about the importance of transferring the functions. It is vital that the staff are equipped and have the capacity to deal with them. It is also important that the budget is there to deal with these issues. There could be a detrimental impact on confidence within councils and confidence in the whole process of local government reform should we start cutting budgets before we even transfer the functions.

Mr Kinahan: Thank you to the Minister for his answers so far. You have touched on the transfer of planning powers. Will you give more detail on the process for the transfer of those planning powers and Planning Service staff? Are you confident it will all be in place for next year?

2.15 pm

Mr Durkan: I thank Mr Kinahan for his question. I will certainly not try to hide the fact that this is very challenging. Planning, in itself, is an often contentious and complicated area. Transferring that function to local government is, in my opinion, fraught with risk. However, I have confidence in the capacity building programme that was put in place by my Department and is being rolled out. In planning, Community Places is on board to assist with training for the new members, and I believe that that will give the competence and the confidence to councillors to deal with planning issues.

We will not just cut them adrift at 1 April. The Department will retain an oversight role, as other transferring Departments will over the functions that they have transferred, to ensure that new councils are dealing with planning applications as they should be. Next week, I intend to attend the first shadow planning committee meeting of the Derry and Strabane council. I know that part of the training process will include role play, mock meetings and so forth, but it is a very extensive and intensive programme of training, and I believe that it will deliver.

Exploris: Business Plan

3. Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the process in place to progress the business plan for Exploris through the Northern Ireland Executive. (AQO 6449/11-15)

Mr Durkan: From my perspective, the process is relatively straightforward although, as of yet, unproductive. I tabled a paper for Executive decision on 30 April this year and followed it up with an urgent procedure paper to the First Minister and deputy First Minister on 8 May. I then followed that with a second version of my original paper on 18 June. My Department also made a bid for capital funding of £900,000 at June monitoring, the outcome of which requires an Executive decision. To date, the business case has still not been discussed by the Executive, and no decision has been made regarding the capital funding requested by the council. I am still committed to funding all reasonable costs associated with the seal sanctuary up to a limit of £120,000 a year.

Mr McCarthy: I thank Minister Durkan for his fairly positive response and, indeed, for his support all along. I also thank Ards Borough Council, Friends of Exploris, trade unions, the public in general and, indeed, Members of the Assembly for their support to see Exploris retained and rejuvenated. Will the Minister give us an assurance that he will do all in his power, in the interests of Exploris staff and the economy of the Ards peninsula, to ensure that the capital required to rejuvenate Exploris will come along as soon as possible? That will enable Ards Borough Council to withdraw, hopefully, the closure plans that it has put in place and will enable the council and Exploris to move forward positively.

Mr Durkan: I thank Mr McCarthy for that supplementary question. I will try to make my answer as long as it was. I recognise the value of Exploris to the local economy in the Portaferry area and also what it contributes as an educational facility. I visited Exploris recently and was quite taken by its intrinsic charm. I can assure the Member that I have done and will continue to do all within my power to ensure that the capital investment required to keep Exploris open is forthcoming from the Executive. I have brought that to the Executive table and will ensure that it stays on the Executive table, and I look forward to a positive announcement in the not-so-distant future.

Mr McKinney: Is the Minister aware of any support from any other Department in relation to the Exploris business plan, particularly, for example, in relation to its tourism potential?

Mr Durkan: I thank Mr McKinney for his question. Various Departments have expressed support for Exploris and the business plan prepared by Ards Borough Council. However, as of yet, no Minister, including the Enterprise Minister, who is responsible for tourism, has formally agreed to the proposals set out in the business plan, including the provision of the capital grant of £900,000. The purpose of the Executive paper that I have tabled is to obtain their formal approval.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Before I ask Mr Cree to speak, I remind Members to avail themselves of the nearest microphone when speaking. Doing otherwise causes difficulties for Hansard.

Mr Cree: I also thank the Minister for his positive responses. There has been talk about capital for this. Has any work been done on, or does the business plan cover, the resource required going forward?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for his question. The business case basically outlines the fact that, without this capital injection, Exploris must close. However, with this cash injection and these necessary improvements made, Exploris can be put on a sound business footing for years to come. I have committed — as I reiterated to Mr McCarthy today — up to £120,000 per year of revenue funding from my Department. That is the cost associated with the seal sanctuary. It does not usually come anywhere near that amount, but that is how much I am prepared to fund it.

Wind Energy

4. Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of the Environment to outline his plans to address the need for harmonisation of planning policy on wind energy on an all island basis. (AQO 6450/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I strongly support the principle of increased cooperation between North and South and greater harmonisation of planning policy to address the common environmental challenges that we face, wherever that is appropriate. Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland share similar strategic development issues, and it makes sense to work together on these matters of common interest where that can provide mutual benefit to all parts of this island.

In working towards increased policy harmonisation, my planning officials already regularly communicate, cooperate and share practices with officials from the South on issues of common interest, and I will ensure that they continue to do so. In addition, high-level cooperation exists between both jurisdictions in relation to strategic planning for infrastructure, and there are also well-established trans-boundary consultation arrangements in relation to planning applications and development plans being considered under the Planning (Environmental Impact Assessment) Regulations 2012 and the Environmental Assessment of Plans and Programmes Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2004.

I acknowledge that wind energy development has, in recent times, become a controversial issue in both the North and South. In response to those concerns, I undertook to use the opportunity of the consultation on the single strategic planning policy statement to listen to the views of people on the issue. I will also seek to take account of any recommendations that may emerge from the ongoing Environment Committee inquiry into wind energy.

At the same time, I am also aware that the planning rules governing wind energy in the Republic of Ireland are subject to review and potential changes. Last year, the Department of the Environment, Community and Local Government (DCLG) published consultation proposals on proposed revisions to that Department's 'Wind Energy Development Guidelines' in relation to noise, separation distance and shadow flicker. DCLG indicated that, following consideration of the submissions, the revisions to the guidelines will be finalised and adopted. When that happens, my officials will consider them and advise me accordingly.

Mr Ó hOisín: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as ucht an fhreagra sin. I thank the Minister for his answer. Will he ensure that this matter will be brought up at the next meeting of the North/South Ministerial Council (NSMC)? What plans has he to meet Phil Hogan on the matter?

Mr Durkan: Go raibh maith agat as an cheist. I thank the Member for that supplementary question. As outlined in my first answer, I believe that cooperation on strategic, environmental and planning matters is an issue of great importance that can provide mutual benefit to all parts of the island. As I said, the North and the Republic of Ireland share similar strategic development issues, opportunities and challenges. High-level cooperation already exists between both jurisdictions, and I will ensure that my officials continue to communicate, cooperate and share practices on a regular basis. I will also discuss it with Minister Hogan. In my view, a formal arrangement through the NSMC would be to everyone's benefit.

Mr Campbell: I am sure that, upon reading the text of the question and listening to the Minister's answer, particularly the references to an all-island basis, the good people of Rathlin Island might feel excluded.

On a more serious issue, will the Minister talk about offshore wind energy, particularly when it comes to areas of outstanding natural beauty off the north-east coast of Northern Ireland? Will more attention be paid to ensuring that they are protected in the event of any future application, such as that of about seven years ago?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for his question. I assure him and the residents of Rathlin that I mean them no offence.

Offshore wind has come to the fore in recent months and is an issue that will divide opinion, undoubtedly. I believe it is vital that, as the Department of the Environment and an Executive, we have in place policies on offshore wind, as well as onshore wind, and how we can best deal with those types of applications in a way that can generate the electricity that we require and the employment and investment that we desire, yet protect and preserve the environment that we cherish.

Mrs D Kelly: I welcome the Minister's commitment to an all-island energy policy. Will he highlight whether he has any concerns around the security of all-island energy availability? Does he agree that there needs to be greater education amongst the public in terms of alternative energy sources?

Mr Durkan: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank Mrs Kelly for that question. The security of the electricity supply is one issue that keeps coming up, again and again, in meetings that I have on a constituency level and in a ministerial capacity. I believe that we all have a duty, as elected representatives, to educate our electorate on those matters, the importance of establishing security of supply and the role that embracing renewable energies will have in providing us with that security of supply. It is about providing potential and existing inward investors with security as well, and the knowledge that our electricity market is going to remain stable and that we, as a region, are not going to be undercut or out-priced by other regions bidding for inward investment.

Mr Elliott: Given that much more renewable energy is going into the electricity grid at the moment, including wind energy, will the Minister explain why electricity prices continue to rise for the consumer instead of coming down, as predicted, through the use of renewable energy sources?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for that supplementary question. However, I must advise him that, as I am sure he well knows, it would be better directed towards another Minister in the Assembly. As Environment Minister, I bear responsibility for climate change policy and the reduction of greenhouse gas emissions. I believe that is something that we share collective responsibility for. While I deal with the planning aspect of renewable energy, particularly energy from wind, the Minister responsible for energy is Minister Foster, the Enterprise, Trade and Investment Minister.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Talking about wind, that very successfully spun that out. We end the period for listed questions. We now move on to 15 minutes of topical questions.

Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan

1. Mr Dunne asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the progress of the Belfast metropolitan area plan (BMAP), which has been running for some years, is on the DOE website in draft form dated 2004 and still has not been adopted by DOE even though, as he understands it, its lifetime is to run out in 2015. (AQT 1341/11-15)

2.30 pm

Mr Durkan: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank Mr Dunne for that question. Quite rightly, he has brought to the Chamber concerns in the wider community in Belfast and beyond about the lack of appearance to date of BMAP. He points to the dates: this has been in creation since 2004 and there is a notional end date of 2015. As Minister, I am responsible for its publication, and I believe that it is vital that it appears on the shelves before it passes its “best before” date.

I have raised the issue of BMAP at the Executive. BMAP went through all the necessary statutory processes, was signed off by Minister Kennedy and got its certificate of general conformity. I have brought it to the Executive for approval and that is where it sits. From that, an Executive subgroup on BMAP was established, a meeting of which I chaired, to hear concerns from some Ministers about some aspects of BMAP. However, I am coming under increasing pressure, as I believe all Members will, from businesses, social housing providers and so forth to ensure that we get BMAP published as soon as possible and practicable. I ask Mr Dunne to implore his Executive party colleagues to ensure that I can do so.

Mr Dunne: I thank the Minister for his answer. How will BMAP fit in conjunction with other council plans, such as that in North Down and Ards, where two plans will run under the one council — BMAP and the Ards plan? How will planning decisions be made in that case, in which there are two different policy documents?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for that interesting question. It is vital that these documents complement each other rather than compete with each other. Many of these questions will be addressed as we move forward with the transfer of planning to local government. I am aware that some shadow councils have already commenced work on their new local development plans in conjunction with my planning officials. That is vital, but it again brings the focus back to why we need to publish and adopt BMAP. In my opinion, it is high time that the Executive acceded to my request to adopt it.

Planning Service: Staff Relocation

Mrs D Kelly: Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, I thought that I would be addressing you as Mr Speaker by this stage, but that appears not to be the case just at the moment.

2. Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of the Environment, in light of the many letters she is receiving from Planning Service staff, to outline how the location of Planning Service staff will be decided on, how staff will be consulted and what criteria will be used to inform the decision-makers. (AQT 1342/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank Mrs Kelly for her very pertinent question. It is not dissimilar to a question that Mr Easton asked in ordinary Question Time, except that he was referring to DRD staff who may be relocated to deal with the functions transferring from that Department. I should not stand here slagging off other Departments about what they have to do to allay the concerns of their staff without being able to do so myself.

Great steps have been taken to ensure that planning staff will be placed where they want to be placed. That process has been under way for some considerable time, and I am sure that Members will have noticed quite a bit of rearranging of the furniture in their local planning office as new faces appear and others move on to other offices. Not all planning staff will transfer to local government. We will have to retain planning staff centrally. Those decisions will be looked at in the round, and that will come very soon.

Mrs D Kelly: In particular, it is women with caring responsibilities who have concerns about how it will be managed. Will people who have particular family responsibilities be given an opportunity to have their say and have their needs taken into account?

Mr Durkan: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. I assure Mrs Kelly that that certainly will be taken into account. It is vital that we protect the workforce and ensure that we do not render people incapable of work — meaning that those with caring responsibilities would have to travel an impracticable number of miles to get to work, especially if that is on a part-time basis. So, yes, the needs of staff are very much to the fore in my thinking when dealing with staffing issues.

Tyres: Illegal Dumping

3. Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of the Environment what enforcement measures his Department has in place to deal with the illegal dumping of tyres. (AQT 1343/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. It seems that Members never tire of questions about tyres. I have had a Goodyear of them now. [Interruption.]

Mr Allister: You could always retire.

Mr Durkan: Tread carefully. [Laughter.] The illegal dumping of tyres is an issue that cause headaches for my Department, local councils and the general public. I am happy to say that — no pun intended this time — we are, slowly but surely, getting to grips with the issue. I am working on it with my counterpart in the Republic of Ireland. It is important that we have a cohesive, joined-up approach, as it is often the case that tyres from down South are dumped here and vice versa. That work will actually go as far as establishing a producer responsibility scheme, which, I believe, will be vital in the long term in the battle against the dumping of tyres, which are extremely damaging and detrimental to the environment. In the short term, my officials work closely with councils on the issue through the fly-tipping protocol. However, I believe that there is room for improvement in the relationship between my officials and certain councils on the issue. It is vital that we work together to address it.

Mrs Cameron: I thank the Minister for his answer. More specifically, a number of residents have expressed concerns about the number of tyres that have recently appeared at the Ballyduff bonfire site in my constituency. Can the Minister assure us that his Department, working with the residents, the PSNI and other groups, will work to ensure that those tyres are removed?

Mr Durkan: I thank Mrs Cameron for her supplementary question. I am glad that, in it, she pointed out the fact that my Department can do that only in conjunction with other agencies, the council, the local community and the PSNI. I assure Mrs Cameron and all Members that my Department will not be found wanting when it comes to working with other agencies and the community to address the issue.

Newry: Carbane Development

Mr Brady: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. I want to make a point of information before I ask my question. The Minister referred to my parking abilities earlier. First, I have to say that I arrive at the Building far too early for the Minister even to see me park. [Laughter.] Secondly, someone of his elevated status does not have to worry about parking when he has a driver. [Laughter.] I think that we will leave it at that. I could not let that pass, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle.

4. Mr Brady asked the Minister of the Environment whether he will reconsider his decision to allow an out-of-town development at Carnbane, which is approximately 3 kilometres from Newry city centre, given that he will be aware that there has been a lot of local opposition, particularly from city centre traders and the chamber of commerce. (AQT 1344/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Go raibh maith agat as an cheist. I thank the Member for the question. I know that Mickey always arrives early just to make sure that he gets a parking space. [Laughter.]

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I remind Members that it is topical questions, not topical debate.

Mr Durkan: The Member quite rightly points out that my decision to proceed with an approval for an out-of-town, multi-use development on the edge of Newry has caused some consternation in the Newry area, and he asks whether I have decided to reconsider my decision. Subsequent to my decision, which, I believe, will be good for the Newry area in the long term, and the announcement of my approval, I have granted a meeting to the Newry chamber of commerce and other local interests who are vociferous in their opposition to my decision. They have outlined a very strong case, I have to say, and have brought new information to my attention. They have asked me to visit Newry with a view to having a look around the city centre, and I have agreed to do so in advance of my issuing any green form. I have also agreed to a site meeting with the applicant in this case, as I believe that that is only fair.

Mr Brady: I thank the Minister for his answer. I am sure that he will be very welcome in Newry. Newry city centre has approximately 70 acres for redevelopment. I just wonder whether the Minister can give us some idea of what he considers an appropriate distance from a city centre for an out-of-town development. Go raibh maith agat.

Mr Durkan: I thank Mr Brady for his supplementary question. He alluded to the current space available in Newry city centre. The issue was raised with me by representatives of the chamber of commerce when they came to see me, and I look forward to seeing it for myself. When we talk about appropriate distance, I was going to say and have said since taking on this Ministry that each application will be judged on its own merits or otherwise. What is suitable for one area may not be deemed suitable for another. Asking what distance would be deemed suitable is akin to asking, "How long is a piece of string?"

Crawfordsburn Country Park

5. Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment, given the media reports of large quantities of alcohol being cleared away from Crawfordsburn Country Park — not for the first time because there have been a number of incidents over the last few years, along with the resultant litter problems — what additional help or resources he can give to the hard-pressed staff there to ensure that everyone can get the fullest enjoyment from that magnificent facility. (AQT 1345/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I thank Mr Weir for the question and for bringing the issue to my attention, as it has not been brought to my attention before. Since being appointed Minister 11 months ago, I have had occasion to visit Crawfordsburn Country Park twice, and I must say that it is an excellent and beautiful facility. Therefore, I am happy to give my pledge to Mr Weir that I will ensure that my officials work hard to support those charged with maintaining Crawfordsburn Country Park as a clean place that we can all enjoy.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: That brings an end to topical questions. I thank the Minister. We must move on to questions to the Minister of Finance and Personnel.

2.45 pm

Finance and Personnel

Public Procurement: SMEs

1. Mr Brady asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline his proposals to ensure the removal of the barriers faced by small and medium-sized enterprises when accessing public procurement opportunities. (AQO 6462/11-15)

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): Improving the access of SMEs to public procurement opportunities has been a key area of focus for the procurement board over the last three years. Under my chairmanship, the board has overseen a programme to simplify processes, reduce bureaucracy and remove potential barriers to SMEs. Building on the recommendations made in the Finance and Personnel Committee's report on public procurement, Central Procurement Directorate (CPD), in conjunction with centres of procurement expertise (COPEs), has implemented a significant number of measures aimed at improving SME access. They include simplifying processes by focusing on the production of clearer specifications; standardising terms and conditions for all contracts; removing the minimum eligibility requirements for low-value supplies and services contracts; and awarding contracts on lowest acceptable price when possible.

In taking the programme forward, CPD has worked with business representatives and the construction industry to ensure the widest possible acceptance of the proposals. The list of measures is too long to read today, but I will arrange to make it available to Members. More improvements are planned, with the development of a new procurement portal — eTendersNI — to be introduced in the autumn. The new portal will help to reduce the administrative burden on SMEs through the use of standardised templates and processes across the public sector. The portal will be aligned with the latest European procurement directives. Together with others, Northern Ireland has lobbied strongly for the relaxation of European regulations that have acted as barriers to SME participation in public contracts. I am pleased to say that there has been a positive response, and the new directives are more SME friendly. Northern Ireland is working with the Cabinet Office to ensure that the benefits are reflected through the transposing regulations.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: If Members are having conversations, I ask them not to interfere with proceedings. There were very loud murmurings of conversation.

Mr Brady: I thank the Minister for his answer. I was going to ask him what steps are in place to level the playing field between SMEs and larger companies, but he has answered that to a large extent. SMEs feel that they are not often on a level playing field when making procurement bids against larger companies.

Mr Hamilton: The Member talks about perception. There is definitely a perception that small and medium-sized enterprises in Northern Ireland, which are the bulk of our economy and account for some 99% of businesses, are somehow disadvantaged when they are up against larger companies. All the evidence suggests that small and medium-sized firms from Northern Ireland are outperforming much larger companies, which is what the Committee found when it did its work on procurement a couple of years ago. The experience that those firms gain from public procurement in Northern Ireland stands them in good stead when they bid for work in, for example, the Irish Republic, and there is an interesting statistic that companies from Northern Ireland get more work in the Irish Republic in public procurement than the other way round.

While there is a downside, particularly on the capital side, in that a significant amount of the work being carried out by our major construction firms, which are still medium-sized firms, is now happening across the water, the fact that they are able to win huge construction contracts — a lot of them in Scotland and some in England — is testimony not just to the skills that those Northern Ireland-based firms have but to the fact that they have been able to use significant capital spend in the past in Northern Ireland to get used to public procurement. They are able to go over to Scotland, compete with Scottish firms, win that work and bring that value back to Northern Ireland.

Mr Clarke: I am pleased that the Minister sees the importance of small and medium-sized enterprises in Northern Ireland. Will he indicate how many of those SMEs win public sector contracts and how it compares with other parts of the UK?

Mr Hamilton: I thank the Member for his question. As I said in response to the now-departing Mr Brady, who is obviously very satisfied with the answers that he got —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: He is past caring.

Mr Hamilton: That is unfair, Mr Deputy Speaker. I will give you a Northern Ireland example to back up my comments to Mr Brady. In 2012-13, 2,889 contracts totalling £1.4 billion were awarded by COPEs, of which 79% were awarded to local businesses, 80% were awarded to SMEs, and 66% were awarded to SMEs based in Northern Ireland. Those figures compare quite favourably with Scotland and Wales. The other day, I noticed that the leader of the Labour Party, Mr Miliband, I think, said that, should his party be elected to form the next Government, one of its targets would be that 25% of all contracts let in England would go to small and medium-sized businesses. As the Member can tell, if 66% of those 2,889 contracts are awarded to SMEs based in Northern Ireland, we are well ahead of the national average.

Mr D Bradley: Go raibh míle maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. What processes are in place to ensure that small and medium-sized enterprises that supply goods to government are not excluded by the requirement in some tenders that a certain number of products have to be supplied and that any company that cannot supply that number is excluded?

Mr Hamilton: Clearly, nobody is excluded, in the sense that any firm can bid for a range of contracts, but it is important that, when we as a customer procure goods, services or even capital projects, we are mindful of the capacity of the firm that we are procuring and buying from to deliver. That is why, as the Member has highlighted, there will be occasions when criteria around the viability of a business to deliver are assessed in the process. I cannot think of a specific example, nor would I go into a specific example in relation to procurement, but you cannot have a multimillion-pound contract being delivered by a firm that has no experience of getting anywhere near that. In such a situation, you would have considerable doubts about its ability to deliver and, therefore, provide the service that we need. Ultimately, we are not buying these goods just for the sake of it. People rely on the services that are delivered using those goods, so it is important that we, as a customer, have some certainty. That is why, from time to time, those thresholds will be part of the criteria on which we assess tenders.

Mr Elliott: I thank the Minister for that. He will be aware that one of the drawbacks and difficulties that SMEs have when going through public procurement is experience. It is a magic circle: how do they get experience without first getting into the contracts? Can the Minister explain what his Department is doing to help contractors get the experience?

Mr Hamilton: Again, that, in many ways, relates to the question asked by Mr Bradley. This is important: you would not want to let a tender for a huge construction project, such as a hospital, to a firm that has no experience of building a hospital or healthcare facilities on that scale. You would be worried about the ability of that firm to deliver the project on time and within budget. Experience is one of the components that has to be there, along with price and other considerations, when you are weighing tenders. This gets to one of the conundrums with procurement and why, frequently, there is no right answer. Certain circumstances will suit some suppliers, and other circumstances will suit others. I understand some of the valid reasons why we want to go with experience, but, when you go heavily on experience, it is seen to exclude new or, perhaps, smaller firms. When you go down to no experience, you maybe have risks about the ability to deliver the project, and you have concerns about their experience in managing large projects.

Procurement is a fine balancing act. One of the things I have learned over the past number of years is that there are competing factors, whether it is value for money or getting SMEs to get more contracts. It is a fine balance to find. I think that we have got the balance more or less right in Northern Ireland, but that does not mean that we should not constantly and continuously improve our processes.

With the help of the procurement board, that is what we have been trying to do over the past year.

Mr Allister: Why does the Minister not move towards the multi-supplier framework agreements that pertain in large measure in Great Britain? The work is divided into lots, and those with a particular interest who are smaller contractors can apply and compete. Is that not a road worth travelling and testing, as it seems to work much better in the rest of the UK?

Mr Hamilton: I am not sure if it works much better in the rest of the UK. There are issues of scale in respect of what might happen, say, in Whitehall Departments. They have had less concern about trying to use procurement to support SMEs, not least because their economy is structured somewhat differently from ours. The point that the Member raises reminds me of discussions that took place in the House and in Committee rooms seven or so years ago but from a reverse perspective, when the procurement service and CPD had been moving towards bigger framework contracts with lots. People were turning their face against that, and a lot of suppliers were concerned about that. You will recall the reason or one of the reasons, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, from your time on the Committee. I agree that frameworks can deliver experience and value for money, which is incredibly important in my position — at the end of the day, we should never lose sight of the fact that we are trying to get services or projects delivered in a value-for-money way through procurement — but there was concern from some suppliers that, if you failed to get onto, say, a five-year framework contract, that was you out of that type of work for a full five years. That might negatively impact on that business. Procurement is not here to solve all our social or economic ills, but that concern was listened to at the time, and there was something of a retreat from wholesale framework contracts.

We have been trying to make progress in a related way through our collaborative procurement strategy, which was approved by the procurement board in June last year. That looks at all the areas across government where common services, goods and supplies are purchased, and it tries to drive value for money through that. I am pleased to say that, against a target of saving £30 million over a three-year period — the first two contracts we looked at related to security and electricity — 8.7% in savings, which equates to nearly £2 million saved to the public purse, has already been achieved through collaborative procurement. However, to go back to the point made by Mr Elliott —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: You are out of time.

Mr Hamilton: — there are balances to be struck.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: That was a useful question and a detailed answer, but can we try to work to the two-minute rule?

Public Sector Reform

2. Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline how he intends to take forward his public sector reform agenda. (AQO 6463/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Executive recently endorsed my proposal to engage the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, more commonly known as the OECD, to conduct a strategic review of public sector reform in Northern Ireland. That independent review will outline what we are doing well and identify areas where we can improve, benchmarked against international best practice. The recommendations of the review will help to shape the reform programme going forward. In parallel, the public sector reform division in my Department has been developing a range of reform tools available to the Civil Service and wider public sector to support Ministers in progressing public service improvements. For example, an innovation laboratory project took place last week. I have also recently launched an innovation scheme, inviting staff to submit ideas to generate real financial savings and/or service delivery improvements. The scheme has been piloted initially in my Department. Since February 2014, I have been engaged in a series of bilateral meetings with my Executive colleagues. The support for the wider reform measures has been encouraging. We need to work collaboratively with Departments, business areas and front line staff as a catalyst and an enabler of reform.

Mr Moutray: I thank the Minister for his response. Will he outline the sort of work the OECD will carry out as part of its review?

Mr Hamilton: I thank the Member for his question. I repeat that I am pleased that Executive colleagues have agreed to engage the OECD to look at what we are doing in respect of public sector reform in Northern Ireland. There are two broad areas that the terms of reference will enable them to look at in terms of reform in Northern Ireland. The first is in what might be described as cross-cutting areas and levers for making reform happen, which is things like procurement, HR policy, IT and digitalisation. Those areas, by and large, are my responsibility as Minister of Finance and Personnel. I want them to come in and look at those areas and suggest where we could improve what we do in procurement, HR, IT and digital delivery, at all times benchmarking us against international best practice across the 34 OECD member states.

The second area of work that I have also received support from Executive colleagues to look at is particular areas of policy. It could be in health, justice or education, where our Ministers have either already started reform projects and want to mark those against international best practice or where they are considering reform and want to use the breadth of knowledge from OECD to suggest where they might head in respect of reforming the policy areas in their Department. It is encouraging that an organisation of the stature of the OECD has been willing to engage with the Northern Ireland Executive on that work. I look forward to that starting over the next couple of months. It will be the first time that the OECD has done a public governance review of a sub-national Government like ours. In that respect, it is quite a prestigious thing for Northern Ireland to take the lead in.

3.00 pm

Mr Dallat: I am sure that, as I represent the Coleraine area, the Minister will not be a bit surprised when I ask him for assurance that the reform agenda does not include cutting public service jobs.

Mr Hamilton: It is not just Coleraine; this could apply to any part of Northern Ireland. Of course, we sometimes fall into the trap of thinking that the jobs that the Member refers to are in just Coleraine, but other people around Northern Ireland are affected too. I have been careful to say from the start that the objective of reforming the public sector has not been to reduce headcount. We have to accept, mind you, that we face significant public spending challenges over the next number of years.

As I was saying during the Final Stage of the Budget Bill earlier — I think that the Member was present — we are going into 2015-16 with around 1.5% coming off our Budget compared with this financial year. That puts our Budget and our public services under extreme pressure. My mantra around reform has been fuelled not just by that fact but by the fact that, if you project the next five years down the line, Treasury and the Office for Budget Responsibility are saying that that is the picture that is here and it is here to stay, particularly with the pressure on current expenditure. That is why I have encouraged Ministers to agree — I welcome the fact that they have, to a man and a woman, done so — with the sentiment that I have been pushing that they do not look at cutting public services, but, where services are not working or where they have succeeded, there is scope for stopping them or toning them down. Ministers need to look at how they can deliver and achieve better outcomes with what they have. Doing more for less is an elusive goal. It is challenging and difficult, but it is something that we have to embrace because, in the years ahead, because of public spending cuts and welfare reform penalty pressures, it will be essential that we continue to reform public services and make the best use of the people we have. They will have to use the innovation and creativity that, I think, they all possess.

DFP: Late Committee Papers

3. Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel why his Department continues to issue late papers to the Committee for Finance and Personnel. (AQO 6464/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: My Department has regular, constructive engagement with the Committee for Finance and Personnel. I am satisfied that my Department has appropriate procedures in place regarding the provision of papers to the Committee and will ensure that these are followed. However, as Minister, I am responsible for ensuring that I am content with all the output of my Department, including briefings for the Committee. It is inevitable that there will be occasions where briefing material is not ready in time to meet Committee deadlines.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin: Go raibh maith agat. I thank the Minister for his response. Does he accept that there has been a slowdown in the processing of papers and an increase in the lateness of papers coming to the Committee? Does he accept that this is not good enough and can and would potentially undermine the workings of the Assembly?

Mr Hamilton: I welcome the Member's interest in the workings of the Finance and Personnel Committee. I would have thought that she had enough to worry about, being Chair of the Health Committee, but I am sure that her colleagues will welcome her concerns about the tardiness or otherwise of papers being presented to the Finance Committee. My party colleagues tell me that they have plenty of work to do with what the Committee does and what the Department supplies it with.

I communicated this to the Committee in April: I value having a good working relationship with the Committee, as, I am sure, any Minister in the House would, but occasionally — it is only occasionally, as, I think, the statistics will bear out — papers will not be ready to be with the Committee, for a host of reasons, within the arbitrary deadlines that it sets. It is ironic that a member of Sinn Féin should raise an issue about delaying things from moving forward, given the track record of that party in many respects in the House and the Executive. When I saw this question, it sparked something in my head about a paper from my Department. It was not even from me; it was a paper from Mr Wilson when he was Minister — Mr Cree will smirk as he realises which issue I am talking about — about a review of the financial process. That paper was put forward by my Department to the Executive for agreement to change and reform our outdated budgetary process in this place.

That paper has been with the Executive since 9 March 2012, held up by Sinn Féin, and I am being criticised because papers are arriving a couple of days later. I think that that says it all.

Social Clauses

4. Mrs McKevitt asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for his assessment of the inclusion of social clauses in government contracts. (AQO 6465/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Programme for Government includes a commitment to include social clauses in all public procurement contracts for supplies, services and construction. I can confirm that all contracts should include social clauses for equality and health and safety. Beyond that, Departments are free to define those social considerations that are to be linked to the subject matter of the contract, those that will be furthered by contract-performance clauses, or those that will be by a combination of both.

The procurement board agreed that Departments should set targets for the inclusion of social clauses, and it monitors progress against those biannually. However, reporting has been inconsistent. I am disappointed to note that not all Departments make returns and that levels of assurance on the accuracy and completeness of the figures provided are low. The Central Procurement Directorate (CPD) is working with Departments to improve the quality of returns. However, I urge my ministerial colleagues to ensure that activity in their departmental areas is maximised and accurately recorded.

More positively, CPD has, with effect from 1 January 2014, implemented the detailed monitoring of training and employment clauses in construction contracts with values over £30,000 awarded by centres of procurement expertise. Returns for the first quarter, which ended on 31 March 2014, indicate that contracts awarded during the period include 2,949 weeks of training, 308 weeks of student placements and 8,733 weeks of employment opportunities. That is substantially ahead of the figures reported by Departments and presents a more positive picture. The scope for training and employment clauses on supplies and services contracts is less as they tend to be of shorter duration. However, CPD is working with Departments to increase the level of activity in larger services contracts.

Mrs McKevitt: Does the Minister have any plans to increase the profile of the social clause in public contracts, with particular reference to the likes of giving more opportunities to the young apprentice?

Mr Hamilton: It is something that is a Programme for Government commitment, although I was not in the Executive at the time and have to admit that I thought that it was an ambitious target to have them in all contracts. Some other jurisdictions are only including social clauses in contracts above a certain level, which is easier to do for lots of different reasons. I am quite pleased that what we have been able to achieve in training, student places and employment opportunities seems to be going very well. It is harder to say that categorically, given that Departments are not consistent in reporting what they are doing. That issue is frequently raised at the procurement board, and it was raised at our last meeting a couple of weeks ago.

It is important that CPD, in managing all those on behalf of the whole Executive, can create the mechanisms for all Departments to consistently report how many social clauses they are including in contracts, whether it is for training, student placements, prompt payment, equality or health and safety. Then we could have a better picture of how we are performing. I suspect that we are performing infinitely better than we were a number of years ago; nevertheless, it is important that we can track progress up or down over the next number of years.

Mr Campbell: By way of comparison, can the Minister outline how assessments of social clauses in government contracts are monitored in, say, Scotland and Wales?

Mr Hamilton: It is important that we benchmark ourselves, particularly against our near neighbours, in respect of things like that, particularly as I do not think that there is another policy area that I am responsible for in which I hear — Mr Allister was at it earlier — everybody else being described as better at it than we are in Northern Ireland. We are always talking about how wonderful Scotland is at procurement. However, I recall that the Scottish Labour Party, in its parliamentary election manifesto a couple of years ago, said that public procurement in Scotland needed to be improved and that it wanted to look at Northern Ireland for examples of how to improve it. There is a bit of a grass-is-always-greener attitude about those things.

In respect of social clauses, the Welsh Government have developed guidance to support public sector organisations to adopt what they refer to as community benefits. There is a list of priority policy areas that match up with their Programme for Government, but it does not set targets, as they recognise that community-benefits approaches can vary significantly from project to project.

In Scotland, legislation on community benefits passed Stage 3 in May 2014. Again, that is for all regulated procurements with values above £4 million. So, whilst we may be having some difficulties measuring and assessing exactly and precisely where we are across all Departments, I think that we should be commended for the fact that our target is to include community benefits or social clauses — however they are referred to — in all public procurement contracts. Whether they are in capital contracts, where it is easier, or in supply contracts, where it is a little bit more difficult, we have said that it must be in all contracts, it is not above a certain threshold and no targets have been set as in Wales. So, in many respects in that regard, we are more advanced than our neighbours in Wales and Scotland.

Ms McCorley: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as ucht a fhreagraí go dtí seo. I thank the Minister for his answers thus far. How are the outcomes from social clauses measured and tracked against local needs?

Mr Hamilton: Before I start talking down what we have done too much, or appear to, we need to bear in mind that we are in the early stages of developing our approach to social clauses. Guidance was issued to Departments only in the last little while to try to more clearly define what social clauses are and what Departments should be adding into contracts in respect of social clauses.

There are arguably social clauses of a kind in all contracts, particularly in construction contracts where there are health and safety and prompt payment issues. There are, of course, always equality matters in terms of employment. However, those sort of broader clauses, whether they deal with apprenticeships, youth employment or student placements, are sometimes a bit harder to define. So, there is flexibility for Departments to define social considerations that they see fit for particular circumstances.

We always need to bear in mind that, at the end of the day, we still want contracts delivered, and we should not be deflected from the good delivery of contracts by dreaming up ever more imaginative and weird and wonderful social clauses. However, I understand that there is that degree of flexibility in the procurement guidance note that allows Departments to consider social considerations and the benefits that might flow from social clauses in a particular contract without it being a sort of generic thing that is just slapped down from on high.

Mr Copeland: I also thank the Minister for his answers thus far. Will the Minister detail the number of apprenticeships that have been achieved through the process so far within Northern Ireland, GB, the European Union and elsewhere from contracts that have been issued by Northern Ireland Departments?

Mr Hamilton: I am tempted to say that I cannot give that answer, certainly not off the top of my head. I will have to go away and start doing some long table addition for all that. It may not be possible to follow that through to the extent that the Member wants, and I am not sure whether he wants us to compare our performance versus others or just what Northern Ireland firms are doing elsewhere. I am happy to converse and communicate with him and try to get him the answer he is looking for.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: That ends the period for listed questions. We now move to topical questions.

Emigration

1. Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether he will recommend to the Executive the development of a strategy to tackle emigration, in light of the fact that his Department has published figures that show that over 25,000 people left the North last year — a figure higher than at any other time, including during, for example, the conflict. (AQT 1351/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I take the Member's point. I think that he is genuinely concerned about a mass movement of people outside Northern Ireland, and clearly we want to see as many people who are from Northern Ireland and who are educated here taking root, setting up homes, having families and contributing to our economy. That is why I very much welcome that our economic strategy, which is lead by DETI and Arlene Foster, is reaping benefits and bringing in more jobs. I also very much welcome the announcement of nearly 500 jobs in First Derivatives in Newry today; it is good to hear an announcement of a local firm increasing to that sort of scale. One of the most important ways in which we can keep local people who are educated in Northern Ireland here and ensure that they take root here is by ensuring that our economy works.

I understand the Member's concerns. Before we jump to a range of conclusions, we need to spend a little bit of time analysing the figures published at the tail end of last week to see whether people leaving Northern Ireland perceived their move as enforced because of a lack of labour opportunities or whether it was more a matter of their choosing to avail themselves of economic or education opportunities presented to them.

3.15 pm

Mr McElduff: I thank the Minister. I suggest to him that young people need a future and employment prospects. I take on board the points made about job creation and the job announcements in Newry and other areas recently, but will the Minister consider applying pressure on the European Union to widen the youth guarantee scheme so that it operates on an all-island basis?

Mr Hamilton: That is the responsibility of the Minister for Employment and Learning. I am racking my brains to try to remember what I picked up at the last North/South Ministerial Council plenary meeting. If I recall rightly, Dr Farry and his counterpart Ruairi Quinn, the Education Minister in the South, looked at whether the youth guarantee scheme could be extended across the whole of Ireland. The South gets a more generous benefit from the scheme than we in Northern Ireland do. I think that, because of some situation with the criteria — they are called NUTS criteria, which seems appropriate sometimes when you think about it — the scheme does not apply to Northern Ireland in the way that it does to the South. Maybe there are more nuts there than here. I do not know — that is a dangerous one to get into.

It is primarily an issue for the Minister for Employment and Learning. I think that the Member's point is right and echoes my point that improving economic conditions is key to ensuring that people migrating out of Northern Ireland for labour opportunities and the young unemployed have opportunities. I hope that, with our economy growing by 2.6% and projected to grow by more than that this year, with unemployment continuing to fall and with investment by indigenous companies like First Derivatives and others, there will be opportunities so that the migration that there has been, particularly from some parts of Northern Ireland, will become a thing of the past.

Photovoltaic Payback: Public Buildings

2. Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, given that there are companies that can provide free, profitable photovoltaic (PV) schemes, with homeowners receiving payback in seven years, how he can stand over the payback period supplied by his officials on 28 May when they gave a briefing to the Finance and

Personnel Committee in which they said that there was a 50-year payback for PV systems on public buildings. (AQT 1352/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: There was a bit of noise in the Chamber. Did you say 15 or 50?

Mr Agnew: Fifty.

Mr Hamilton: I freely admit that I am not an expert on the payback of various renewable sources of energy, power and heat, but that sounds a little high to me when you consider the plethora of them appearing on domestic properties across Northern Ireland. There is nobody as savvy as a homeowner when it comes to calculating whether this is a worthwhile investment, albeit, in most cases, with a publicly funded subsidy.

I am not against using any form of renewable heat or energy in public buildings. Part of the asset management strategy that my Department is responsible for looks at saving money, not just through rent, service charges, rates and things like that but in our energy consumption. A lot of the buildings that civil servants currently populate are quite old and, therefore, less energy efficient. When the leases run out, there is an opportunity to move to new buildings. We want to save money on rent, rates and service charges and by getting more people into the space, but we also consider energy efficiency as part of that. That does not exclude using the sorts of renewables that the Member is talking about in the existing buildings that we own.

Mr Agnew: I welcome the Minister's answer. For his information, the officials also said that the payback period for solar thermal energy was 100 years, which to me seems incredulous. Given what the Minister said, will he look at this issue and push officials in his Department to support the work of the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment in promoting renewable energy by ensuring that we look at the public estate and put more renewables into public buildings?

Mr Hamilton: I am happy to give that assurance. The Member will appreciate that, whether it is 50 years, 100 years or considerably less, it is a technology that is very much developing. We could make a sizeable investment now and find that, in a couple of years, it was not good value for money as the technology advances. I suppose that there is always a risk, particularly with that type of thing. We also have to bear in mind whether we own the building, and, if we do not own the building, it is not necessarily our responsibility to make the investment, even though we may be the beneficiary of it. There are wheels within wheels in all of this, but it is not something that I object to taking a look at in principle, particularly if the investment does have a shorter payback period than 50 years. I think that 50 years would see all our time in politics, and then some. [Interruption.] Sorry, there is some resistance to that. Not only is the technology good for the environment but it saves a few pounds, and it is important that we look at those opportunities when they arise.

Bank of England: Meeting

3. Mrs Hale asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline what was discussed when he and the First Minister met the governor of the Bank of England. (AQT 1353/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I thank the Member for her question. It was my first opportunity and that of the First Minister to meet the relatively new governor of the Bank of England, Mr Mark Carney, when he was in Belfast at the tail end of last week. I very much welcomed the opportunity to have a full, frank, long conversation with him on a range of subjects. As the House would expect from somebody in my position, we focused on the economy and what he thought the prospects are for our economy, which I have to say are positive.

We also concentrated on the issue that we have talked about many times in the House, which is national lending initiatives not reaching Northern Ireland and having a positive impact on businesses in Northern Ireland. From talking to business representative organisations in Northern Ireland, I can say that there still appears to be issues with access to finance. The governor listened to our concerns and understood the issues that we have with access to finance. He also understood the very different nature of the banking system in Northern Ireland and the problems that that has caused, particularly the issue of property overhang, influenced by our Irish banks. It was a useful conversation and the start of a dialogue that we hope to keep up in the years ahead.

Mrs Hale: Did the Minister discuss the impact of the likely interest rate rises on the people of Northern Ireland?

Mr Hamilton: We did. Before we had our meeting, I noticed that he had been quoted in the national news talking about likely interest rate rises and the level that they might reach. Inevitably, that did come up in conversation. The First Minister and I obviously came from a particular Northern Ireland perspective, and we agreed with the governor that, if the economy rapidly improved, there might be scope for him and the monetary policy committee to look at interest rates. We impressed on the governor the particular circumstances in Northern Ireland and told him that, whilst we are seeing an improvement in our economy — the 2.6% growth last year that I mentioned — falling unemployment and rising employment, there are still problems with disposable income in Northern Ireland. Therefore, any sudden and sizeable increase in interest rates may have more of a negative effect here than it might have in London, the south-east of England or the rest of the United Kingdom.

Family Law Review

4. Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for his opinion on the family law review, particularly in respect of fathers' custody and visiting rights in light of Justice Coleridge's recent statement about access. (AQT 1354/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I am not particularly au fait with the specifics of the judge's recent statement. As the Member knows, this is an incredibly sensitive area and one in which it is very difficult for any state or its Government to be in a position to arbitrate in those very difficult positions in which families have broken down and there is little scope for them coming together to agree the best way forward. At the end of the day, we should all focus on the children and their needs.

That is why we are seeking to consult on this issue. I move towards consultation on family law in Northern Ireland, knowing full well that the very consultation itself will see diametrically opposed views in respect of what is the best way forward. It is important that all of us in the House always bear in mind that we should consider, first and foremost, the children and what is best for them in these sorts of circumstances.

Mr P Ramsey: I thank the Minister for his response and welcome it. We are all aware of families becoming estranged and the difficult circumstances that arise from that. Will the Minister reflect on Justice Coleridge's statement in the court and whether, at some stage, we might meet to discuss it and a way forward?

Mr Hamilton: I am happy to do that. I will familiarise myself with the statement that the Member refers to. It is an area that I know, as I said, is fraught with difficulty in trying to move forward. Given that there are lots of conversations about trying to reform what is, in some respects, viewed as a bit of an outdated legal position, I think that we need to consider carefully all contributions that have been made. In doing so, as I said, we must always bear in mind that we have to consider and weigh up in the balance of it all what is best for children and their rights.

Infrastructure Projects: Delivery

5. Mr Douglas asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how he hopes to progress the plans he listed last week when he outlined his proposals to improve the delivery of major infrastructure projects. (AQT 1355/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I am pleased to have been able to announce and to have, so far, gained widespread support for my suggestions and proposals for improving the delivery of major infrastructure projects. They include a lot more centralisation of procurement and delivery of our projects; the development of a strategic pipeline of projects; and trying to change the culture within the Civil Service, so that projects are delivered on time and professionally.

Some progress has already been made on the first objective, which is to create a centralised procurement and delivery service. The Health Minister and I have agreed that the transfer of health estates come to the Central Procurement Directorate later this year. It is important that the expertise and experience that is there is brought to the centre. That will benefit us all. A strategic pipeline of projects will require Executive agreement. However, as I have said in the House a few times, the objective merits of taking such an approach are obvious. To have a list of strategic economic infrastructure projects that we can pick from as money becomes available can only ensure that we are spending our infrastructure capital budget wisely. That, of course, will require Executive agreement, but, given that the proposals are sensible, I hope that we get support.

Mr Douglas: I thank the Minister for his answers thus far. What is Northern Ireland's capital budget looking like over this next few years?

Mr Hamilton: We can speak with certainty only about this year and next. This year, after having experienced a 40% reduction to our capital budget over this Budget period, we are starting to get back up to the trend that we had before the 2011 downturn. For the first time in three years, we entered this financial year with a starting position of over £1 billion of capital spend. That rises quickly to £1.6 billion when you consider our reinvestment and reform initiative borrowings and our capital receipts. That gets us up not quite but close to where we were before 2011. I am obviously keen to see all of that money spent on strategically important projects.

Moving forward, it would appear that, certainly in 2015-16, about 1.5% to 2% increase in our capital budget is likely, even on top of that £1.6 billion. So that also bodes well for Northern Ireland and our ability to develop and improve our infrastructure.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Thank you, Minister. That ends the period for questions to the Finance Minister. I ask the House to take its ease while we change the top Table.

Public Bodies (Abolition of Food from Britain) Order 2014: Assembly Consent Motion

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): I beg to move

That this Assembly consents to the Public Bodies (Abolition of Food from Britain) Order 2014 in the form of the draft laid before the UK Parliament on 6 May 2014.

The Public Bodies (Abolition of Food from Britain) Order will abolish the Food from Britain (FFB) council, which ceased operations on 31 March 2009. In practice, the order dissolves FFB in law. It will also transfer any property, rights and liabilities of FFB to the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, so there will not be any liability for this Assembly from its abolition.

The order also requires the Secretary of State to make arrangements for the provision of final reports and accounts to go up to the date of abolition. That is a normal requirement in these circumstances, and the cost will be met by the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs.

The proposed abolition of FFB is not new. Members may recall that, in March 2011, the Assembly gave its consent to the Public Bodies Act 2011. That Act granted British and North of Ireland Ministers the authority to abolish, merge or transfer the functions of various public bodies. FFB is listed in schedule 1 of that Act as one of the public bodies that could be abolished.

The abolition of FFB is the joint responsibility of the four Agriculture Ministers in Britain and the North of Ireland. The making of the order therefore requires, in line with section 9 of the Public Bodies Act 2011, the consent of the Scottish Parliament, the Assembly for Wales and this Assembly. The British Government have requested such consent from us, and that is the purpose of today's debate.

By way of brief background, FFB is a non-departmental public body (NDPB) whose function was to assist British and North of Ireland food and drink companies in export markets and to promote speciality food and drink products. Government funding for FFB activities was provided by the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs.

Following a decision by British Ministers to end government funding, FFB ceased operations on 31 March 2009, so it has been defunct for over five years. The cessation of activities by FFB has had a minimal impact on the North, because Invest NI has provided a comprehensive range of support to food and drink companies. My Department also operates a regional food programme.

Last year, there was a public consultation on the proposed abolition of FFB. Whilst only one response was received from the local industry, it was an important one. It came from the NI Food and Drink Association (NIFDA), which is a key industry body and is well placed to assess the impact, if any, of the proposal on the local industry. In NIFDA's reply, it supported the abolition of FFB.

Furthermore, the Agri-Food Strategy Board continues to play an important role in ensuring that the potential of the sector is maximised. As Members will be aware, the board recommended the creation of a single agrifood marketing organisation in the North to consolidate all marketing and promotional activities. The board believes that that is essential to securing new and developing export markets.

In response to that recommendation, the ETI Minister recently initiated a review of agrifood marketing and promotional activities. My Department is represented on the steering group for that important work. The review offers the potential to identify options for the improved delivery of marketing and promotional arrangements that are tailored to the specific needs of agrifood businesses here as well as opportunities for working with bodies in other jurisdictions, such as Bord Bia and Scotland Food and Drink. I therefore commend the motion to the Assembly.

Mr Frew (The Chairperson of the Committee for Agriculture and Rural Development): In March 2012, the Assembly agreed to a legislative consent motion on the Public Bodies Act 2011, which allowed certain public bodies to be dissolved or abolished. One such body was Food from Britain, which was a non-departmental body that was established to assist UK food and drink companies in export markets.

Food from Britain has been non-operational since March 2009, and it has no budget or staff. Following its abolition, a regional food programme was introduced to address any concerns, and the range of programmes from Invest NI was strengthened. It is generally accepted, therefore, that the official abolition of Food from Britain will not have any major material impact on the Northern Ireland agrifood industry.

As part of the process, a UK-wide consultation took place, with DARD advising local stakeholders. A total of eight responses were received, with one from Northern Ireland in favour of the abolition.

As a Committee, we considered the proposal from the Department at a meeting on 27 May 2014. The information received by the Committee clearly showed that the abolition will have minimal effect in Northern Ireland. Therefore, the Committee is content for the Department to proceed in seeking the Assembly's consent to the Public Bodies (Abolition of Food from Britain) Order 2014.

Mrs Dobson: I welcome the opportunity to make a few brief comments on the legislative consent motion. As the Minister and Chair outlined, the Food from Britain body was playing no real role in the promotion of the produce of the agrifood sector here or in Great Britain. Indeed, its uselessness was further highlighted by the work of the Agri-Food Strategy Board. Its abolition is, therefore, the logical thing to do.

I would like to raise another body that many feel is long overdue for abolition: the Agricultural Wages Board plays no real beneficial role in Northern Ireland.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Could I ask the Member to return to the subject, please.

Mrs Dobson: I would like to now call on the Minister to abolish that along with others quangos that are unnecessary. The difference to the one being abolished today is that it costs public money and gets in the way of the sector it is meant to support.

Mrs O'Neill: I thank Members for their comments. The issue raised by Mrs Dobson is not relevant to today's debate but I continually keep all bodies under review. I think that the Agricultural Wages Board does a piece of work that is necessary in protecting the rights of farm workers, particularly workers from the migrant population so, in my view, it plays an adequate role.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly consents to the Public Bodies (Abolition of Food from Britain) Order 2014 in the form of the draft laid before the UK Parliament on 6 May 2014.

Adjourned at 3.37 pm.

Northern Ireland Assembly

Tuesday 1 July 2014

The Assembly met at 10.30 am (Mr Speaker in the Chair).

Members observed two minutes' silence.

Assembly Business

Mr P Ramsey: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. As we have a long day ahead of us, are you minded to relax the guidance on the wearing of jackets?

Mr Speaker: Yes. I am very happy with the point of order that the Member raises.

Mr Allister: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. Last week, there was what was billed as an important announcement about the future of single farm payments. It was made outside the House, and the Minister has had the opportunity, yesterday and today, to come to the House and make a statement about that important matter. Is there any explanation why there is no statement on single farm payments and the future of CAP in Northern Ireland?

Mr Speaker: As the Member will know, I always encourage Ministers to come to the House. I do that continually. The Member will know that, under Standing Orders, I have no power to pull Ministers into the Chamber. It is an important issue, but those decisions very much rest with the Executive and with individual Ministers.

Mr Attwood: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. Last week, I unavoidably missed a question at one of the Question Time sessions. My colleague Mr Ramsey tried, I think, to communicate with your office that I was called at short notice to a hospital where a close friend was undergoing emergency surgery. As a consequence, I was absent. So, apologies to the House, but there were extenuating circumstances.

Mr Speaker: I understand that there are some circumstances where Members just cannot be in the House. I appreciate the Member coming to the House and apologising.

Public Petition: Loane House, Dungannon

Mr Speaker: Bronwyn McGahan has sought leave to present a public petition in accordance with Standing Order 22. The Member will have up to three minutes to speak on the subject matter.

Ms McGahan: Go raibh maith agat. Over 8,000 people have signed this petition, and, on behalf of Sinn Féin, I want to take this opportunity to thank the businesses in Dungannon town, the Clogher valley, Blackwatertown and the Torrent area. I also want to take this opportunity to thank Eithne McCord of the South Tyrone hospital forum. I want to thank members of other political parties who also contributed to this petition, and, last but not least, I want to thank my own parish of Killeeshil, which also greatly assisted us.

In its consultation, the Southern Health and Social Care Trust is proposing to close Loane House. There are 45 non-acute beds in Loane House, and eight of those are for stroke patients. A multidisciplinary team of professionals provides care to patients with medical and rehabilitation needs during their stay in Loane House. The closure of Loane House would lead to the further blocking of acute beds in the trust's two acute hospitals, neither of which can cope with their workload as things stand.

There are equality issues, in particular when it comes to gender, as most of the workforce are women. There is an equality issue around age, in particular for those aged 65-plus, and for people with disabilities. There is also an equality issue for people who live in rural areas who will have to travel considerable distances to access services if Loane House closes. The Southern Trust states that it finds it quite challenging to provide equality of access to services. To be quite frank, I find that not good enough. NHS chief, Simon Stevens, recently stated that community hospitals should play a greater role in the care of older people. Loane House in Dungannon meets that criteria, and I ask the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to ensure that the facility remains open.

Ms McGahan moved forward and laid the petition on the Table.

Mr Speaker: I will forward the petition to the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety and send a copy to the Chair of the Health Committee, Maeve McLaughlin.

Committee Membership

Mr Speaker: As with similar motions, the motion on Committee membership will be treated as a business motion. Therefore, there will be no debate.

Resolved:

That Mrs Jo-Anne Dobson replace Mr Samuel Gardiner as a member of the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety; that Mr Danny Kinahan replace Mrs Sandra Overend as a member of the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment; that Mrs Sandra Overend replace Mrs Jo-Anne Dobson as a member of the Committee for Education; that Mr Tom Elliott replace Mr Robin Swann as a member of the Committee for Agriculture and Rural Development; and that Mrs Sandra Overend replace Mr Tom Elliott as a member of the Committee for the Environment, with effect from Friday 4 July 2014.

Assembly Commission Membership

Mr Speaker: As required under Standing Order 79(4), I wish to inform the Assembly that Mr Lesley Cree has given notice of his resignation as a member of the Assembly Commission, with effect from 4 July 2014. Therefore, a vacancy on the Commission will exist. The motion to fill that vacancy will be treated as a business motion. There will, therefore, be no debate. Before we proceed, I advise Members that the motion requires cross-community support.

Resolved (with cross-community support):

That, in accordance with Standing Order 79(4), Mr Samuel Gardiner be appointed to fill a vacancy on the Assembly Commission, with effect from Friday 4 July 2014.

Review of Initial Teacher Education Infrastructure in Northern Ireland: Stage 2 Report

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning):

Today, I am publishing 'Aspiring to Excellence', the final report of the international review panel on the structure of initial teacher education in Northern Ireland. The report constitutes the key aspect of stage 2 of the review of the teacher training infrastructure. Members will recall that, in November 2011, I announced this two-stage review. The first stage was an objective analysis of the financial stability and sustainability of the two university colleges. The focus of the second stage was designed to set out options for an educationally excellent, financially sustainable and more shared and integrated approach to the delivery and funding of teacher training.

When I assumed office in May 2011, a consultation exercise had been initiated by my predecessor into a then recommended merger between Queen's University and Stranmillis University College. However, it was clear that there was not sufficient support in the Assembly to take forward the necessary legislation to implement it. Therefore, at that stage, while keeping on the table the option of that particular merger proceeding, I took the opportunity to take a more holistic view of our teacher training infrastructure.

It struck me that with five different providers of initial teacher education for a population of 1.8 million, our system was very fragmented and inefficient. It was also apparent that, while all the institutions were open to everyone irrespective of their background, there is, nevertheless, considerable religious separation in the training of teachers. At a time when greater efforts are being made to promote more sharing and integration in our education system as a whole, it was debatable how far this could go in practice if sharing in teacher training was itself not yet being maximised. Therefore, in November 2011, I made a statement to the Assembly to initiate the two-stage review.

For the first stage, independent consultants Grant Thornton were appointed to carry out an analysis of the financial stability and sustainability of the two university colleges. This was reported to the Assembly through a statement in May 2013. That study found that the cost of training teachers in the university colleges is significantly higher than elsewhere, and it provided sufficient evidence to signal the need to examine the case for reform. While the unit of funding was historically linked to that used in England, it was then enhanced in Northern Ireland by several premia. These payments were intended to compensate the colleges for the unavoidable additional costs incurred as a result of their small size and other diseconomies of scale. The primary objective was to ensure the sustainability of the two colleges.

Stranmillis University College and St Mary's University College are the only teacher training establishments in the UK that receive premia additional to their core funding. This amounts to over £2 million per annum and has led to significant differences in the costs incurred in training a teacher here compared with elsewhere. In 2011-12, the cost of training a teacher in the colleges in Northern Ireland was almost 40% higher than in the comparator English institutions cited in the report. The annual cost of training a teacher in our university colleges is also significantly higher than the average cost of training a teacher at our local universities. One year of a BEd course at St Mary's and Stranmillis costs the taxpayer 32% more than a one-year postgraduate certificate of education (PGCE) course at Queen's University or the University of Ulster.

Furthermore, these differential costs are not the full story. The teacher training activities in the two university colleges are further supported by income from my Department for non-teacher training courses in other areas. The funding provided to the two colleges for those places amounts to almost £2 million a year. Notwithstanding their inherent value, there is clearly a substantial opportunity cost attached to them, particularly in light of the economy's need for more graduates in science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM) subjects. Even with these de facto subsidies, there are questions regarding the medium-term financial sustainability of the colleges, and without those subsidies, their future would be in even greater peril. In summary, our two university colleges are highly dependent on the number of teachers being trained, on the levels of grant per student and on funding for non-teacher education courses to remain financially viable.

On the back of that stage 1 report, I announced that I would proceed to stage 2 of the review. The terms of reference for this stage focused on the need to examine the case for the reform of teacher education provision in Northern Ireland and whether the funding being provided could be better used by the teacher training institutions if they were prepared to move towards a more shared or integrated system.

In September last year, I appointed a panel of international education experts to conduct the review. The panel consisted of a team of five international education experts: Dr Pasi Sahlberg, Professor Patricia Broadfoot, Professor John Coolahan, Professor John Furlong and Professor Gordon Kirk.

I would like to record my appreciation to the panel for the significant contribution that each of them made to understanding the complexities of our current teacher education provision and for using the information that they gathered, alongside their own knowledge and experience, to focus on how best to develop the Northern Ireland teacher education infrastructure in order to facilitate world-class teacher training.

10.45 am

Initially, the review panel provided an overview of current best practice in the field of initial teacher education provision internationally. Following that, teacher education providers and other stakeholders were invited to make submissions outlining their vision for the structures necessary to create a world-class system of initial teacher education that would also enhance and improve sharing and integration. Over 100 submissions were received and all were considered by the panel.

The panel then directly engaged with each of the five initial teacher education providers and other relevant stakeholders. The discussions focused on the international trends identified by the panel and the issues raised in the stakeholders' submissions.

The panel presented me with its report before the end of June deadline. In the interests of transparency, I have decided to publish it immediately. I urge MLAs, stakeholders and the wider public to read the full report and form their own judgment. For now, I will provide a summary and briefly set out the way forward.

The panel recognised the quality of many aspects of the current teacher training provision, including endorsement by the General Teaching Council for Northern Ireland (GCTNI); very positive evaluations from the Education and Training Inspectorate (ETI); alignment with the standards of university quality assurance regimes; and high rating in the National Student Survey. It also recognised a commitment from all the providers to participating in shared education and preparing students for an increasingly shared educational environment.

Nevertheless, it also pointed to significant weaknesses in the existing provision, such as its size and relatively fragmented nature and its quality when judged against international standards. It commented on the lack of an overarching Northern Ireland teacher education strategy and urged that such a strategy be developed. It noted a disjoint between initial teacher education and continuous professional development (CPD) and interpreted its terms of reference to focus on the necessary institutional design to address both aspects of teacher education. It further observed that, notwithstanding the existing partnerships between the institutions, the potential for collaboration was not yet fully developed. Finally, it reflected upon an uneven research performance between the universities and the teacher training colleges.

The panel also pointed to a number of anomalies and inequities in the current system. The first was the differential access for students in different institutions to the certificate in religious education. The second was the implications that arose from there being two different admissions procedures. It also noted the difficulties arising from the imposition of non-departmental public body (NDPB) status on the teacher training colleges by the Office for National Statistics.

The panel has given the study a key international focus, analysing international trends in teacher education and identifying them as principles that should underpin a world-class system of teacher education here, and it examined local provision in light of those principles.

The panel emphasises that programmes should be academically strong, practice focused and based on relevant research. In particular, it was keen to stress the importance of the intellectual underpinning of provision, especially the need for practice-focused teacher education built on relevant educational research.

On that, the panel states:

"In our view, teacher education in Northern Ireland needs to be strengthened academically and cognitively. Provision has not yet been sufficiently infused with the intellectual power which university involvement in teacher education makes possible. That intellectual power derives from the universities' research activities. Like any other field of human endeavour, teaching requires a continuing pursuit of fresh ways of conceptualising, innovative approaches to professional action, and more sophisticated appraisals of how human learning is to be facilitated. All of those involved in teacher education in Northern Ireland must therefore make more determined efforts to bring to the education of teachers and their continuing professional development the fruits of research and other scholarly activity. Without recourse to the findings of such activity teacher education will stagnate and the quality of the education provided by the schools will slip into steady decline, with irreparable damage to the life chances of young people, the country's economic standing and its social well-being."

It also noted that the OECD has recently placed a strong focus on the importance of quality teacher education as a driver for improved educational performance and recommended that teacher training have closer links to universities or university-like institutions.

Across all societies, but in particular given the context of Northern Ireland, it maintains that teacher education should be pluralist, in that it acknowledges the competing interpretations of teacher education and its nature and purpose. The panel viewed that as including the Catholic tradition, other faith traditions, those agnostic on faith matters and specific preparation for a more integrated or shared approach.

In turn, the panel, while recognising that teacher education provision in Northern Ireland should recognise and support different philosophies of teacher education, believes that more should be done to support a shared approach to teacher education. It maintains that pluralism cannot be accepted in isolation of a complementary commitment to sharing.

For instance, it states:

"we maintain that all programmes of teacher education, irrespective of the tradition to which they adhere and within which they operate, should make provision for students of different faith and none to engage with each other across existing lines of social division, through at least the shared use of premises, where possible, through mixed classes, through shared teaching and other forms of social engagement, which bring students from different faith traditions into full participation in forms of activity that increase mutual understanding."

The panel sets out that the establishment of a world-class teacher education system can best be fostered in a certain context. It emphasises four particular elements: an agency or body providing strategic direction for teacher education; an agreed pattern of teacher education programmes; the introduction of a more rational and dependable system of workforce planning; and the effective use of resources.

It is fair to say that the issues involved impact on the work of the Department of Education and my Department. In the report, the panel makes it clear that, in the overall interest of promoting the quality of teacher education, it is hoped that both Departments can work together on the issues. In making that clear, the panel also stressed at many points in the report that comments on the wider teacher training and educational context are not intended to be formal recommendations to the Department of Education. Rather, they should be seen as an articulation of the best circumstances for a successful institutional model.

Four options have been identified for reconfiguring the infrastructure of initial teacher education in Northern Ireland. Each is evaluated by the panel with reference to four key criteria: sustaining and building on existing quality; securing the efficient use of resources; the need to respect pluralism, including different faith traditions; and practicality of implementation.

The panel has rejected the status quo as an option, commenting that it is not robust enough to deliver the change that is required. While recognising that the options proposed differed in character, the panel detailed a number of common features that should be exhibited under each, including that every teacher education course should include a programme of shared education and that all undergraduate recruits should apply through the UCAS system.

The first option, option A, is a collaborative partnership. Under that, initial teacher education would continue to be provided by all four current providers. St Mary's and Stranmillis would continue to exist as autonomous colleges but in an enhanced partnership. It would be a condition of the funding grant to Queen's University, Stranmillis and St Mary's, that they be required to work more closely together, with QUB actively exercising its role as the validating university in the collaborative delivery of a comprehensive programme of initial teacher education, induction and in-service training.

Option B provides for a two-centre model, including a Belfast institute of education. Under that model, there would be two main centres for teacher education in Northern Ireland. The first, based at the University of Ulster, would concentrate its provision in the north-west, including developing its CPD role.

For the second centre, provision in Belfast would build on the existing academic relationship between Queen's and the university colleges to create a QUB institute of education. St Mary's and Stranmillis colleges would continue to exist in their current locations, although with a somewhat changed role and constitutional status.

The institute would offer a single undergraduate BEd programme through its two colleges, with the colleges free to develop the majority of their undergraduate teaching in ways that are appropriate for their particular ethos and mission. All other teaching, including for masters degrees, and research would be conducted under the supervision of the institute.

Under option C, initial teacher education would be coordinated as a federation across Northern Ireland. That supra-institutional agency would be entrusted with ensuring that the various institutions achieve greater efficiency and increase standards. The federation would be at the hub of collaborating institutions.

Under the final option, option D, initial teacher education across Northern Ireland would become the responsibility of a single institution — the Northern Ireland institute of education.

The institute would have a single budget, a single suite of academic programmes and a single set of academic and support staff. It would have responsibility for coordinating and quality assuring the delivery of initial teacher training and in-service provision across the whole of Northern Ireland. The governance of the institute would be constituted to ensure the long-term protection of the historic mission and ethos of the existing institutions. That could include the provision of a separate religious pathway in the BEd degree, capacity for the activities of chaplains and the continued availability of a chapel for worship.

All the options are set out fully in the report and are evaluated against current international trends in teacher education.

This is a very comprehensive report, covering complex issues, and is worthy of careful consideration. I plan to use the summer months to consider it carefully and recommend that Members, the current institutions and other stakeholders do the same. As previously indicated, in the autumn, I intend to use the report and the options for discussions with the institutions and other stakeholders, with a view to finding agreement on a configuration of institutions that delivers world-class standards, achieves financial sustainability and promotes greater sharing and integration.

Mr Swann (The Chairperson of the Committee for Employment and Learning): I thank the Minister for his statement. This process has been ongoing for quite a while. I, as Chair of the Committee, and members of the Committee possibly thought that the report would bring a more focused final recommendation rather than the four options that are in front of us, but it gives us something to move on from. In the Minister's summarising, he expressed all the positive sides of option D, but he failed to highlight that the panel sees option D as scoring lowest in practicability. Will the Minister still consider that as an option?

I also note that none of the four options overtly tackles the inequalities that are introduced by the Catholic certificate of education. Will the Minister ensure that whatever outcome he pursues will tackle that inequality? Can he also give an assurance that he will include the Committee for Employment and Learning and this House in any final decision?

Dr Farry: I thank the Chair for his comments and questions. This has been a long-standing issue before the Assembly. I suppose the question is how far you want to go back. The Chair and I were talking this morning about Lord Londonderry back in the early 1920s taking an interest in these matters. In more recent times, Members will be aware that there were efforts in the Chilver report back in the early 1980s, and, more recently, in the early 2000s, there were similar exercises. My predecessors in the Department initiated the formal consultation around the potential merger of Queen's and Stranmillis, but I think that this is the first time that, under devolution, we have the opportunity for a more holistic view as to the future of the teacher training infrastructure.

The panel was deliberately asked to provide a range of options. That is important because it gives us flexibility for how we take forward discussions with the stakeholders in the autumn. There is no preferred option that the panel has endorsed. While, personally speaking, I have my own views, and I am on record in that regard, I, too, remain open-minded about the option that will find favour and will be one that we can deliver here in Northern Ireland.

The panel has provided the commentary alongside each of the options that I have outlined today in a brief manner, in the spirit of a statement to the Assembly. While option D is the most radical in its reforms, hence the comment that it is perhaps the least practical to deliver, it is also worth noting that it scores most heavily in improved efficiency and in the delivery of a world-class system of teacher education. So, it is important that we have a rounded view of each of the options. Again, Members and others can consider those in full detail.

Finally, the Chair made comment in relation to access to the certificate of religious education. The panel identified that as being an inequity in the current system. There are two different ways that the issue can be addressed. Outwith my responsibilities as Minister, there is an issue about our equality law in Northern Ireland and whether schools should have the ability to take decisions based on whether someone does or does not have that certificate. That is a matter for OFMDFM and the Department of Education to take forward.

Plan B, as we could perhaps term it, is to ensure a more readily available equality of access for all students to the certificate, which enhances their employment prospects across the board, rather than the situation today, in which those who can access the certificate more readily have a wider range of schools to apply to than those who do not.

The Chairperson also mentioned engagement with the Committee. Ultimately, we will have to consider how decisions are taken, depending on how the discussions go with the stakeholders in the autumn. I am certainly committed to keeping the Committee fully informed of progress. My officials are appearing before the Committee tomorrow to discuss the report, and I know that attempts are being made to organise a session with the panel in the early autumn for further discussion and scrutiny of the report and its options.

11.00 am

Mr Speaker: This is a very important detailed statement to the House. Apart from the Chair, to whom I gave some latitude, there is an extensive list of Members who want to ask a question. Members should not make further statements on the statement; it should be a question on the statement.

Mr Buchanan: I will certainly stick to the question. I thank the Minister for his statement to the House. Will he advise whether any costings have been done for the four options? Will St Mary's adhere to the panel's recommendation that all undergraduate recruits should apply through the UCAS system?

Dr Farry: I thank the Member for his questions. The options have not been costed as such, but, in terms of finance, we know that the status quo is not sustainable. We made a statement on that already, and Members will be aware of the Grant Thornton report, which sets out the compelling arguments on that situation. It is worth putting it on record that the panel members found the analysis in the Grant Thornton report to be very persuasive.

(Mr Principal Deputy Speaker [Mr Mitchel McLaughlin] in the Chair)

The UCAS issue was addressed by the panel as being an inequity in the system because it means that students can hold offers from Stranmillis and St Mary's at the same time, and St Mary's is maybe in a better position to control entry than Stranmillis. Even though teacher education is sometimes oversubscribed, we have a strange situation in which Stranmillis has had to fill places through clearing at times, because people have had the double admissions option due to the approach that St Mary's has taken. We have encouraged St Mary's to use UCAS and will certainly continue to do that outwith the wider discussions that we want to have over the general way forward.

Mr F McCann: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for his statement to the House. Does he agree that the review cannot consider the future of St Mary's in isolation from its place in the community of west Belfast and further afield? He is also fully aware that our party supports the right of St Mary's to have the financial autonomy and government support that it requires to promote its mission of academic excellence, teacher education, Irish-medium education and access to higher education for disadvantaged groups. I call on the Minister this morning to engage positively with St Mary's and to support the college in developing measures that will ensure its long-term sustainability. It is time to put an end to the years of uncertainty for the college, years in which management has been forced to be preoccupied with the issues. It is clear that St Mary's resolved to remain autonomous. I ask the Minister, in all good faith, to sit down with —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Order. We are waiting for a question.

Mr F McCann: Does the Minister not believe that it is time to sit down and work with St Mary's on its long-term future and that the purpose of the report is to close St Mary's either through the front door or the back door?

Dr Farry: There is no set agenda for the outcome of the report. Suffice it to say that the status quo is not an option. I am more than happy to sit down with St Mary's to discuss not only the future of the college but the wider system of teacher education in Northern Ireland. The report is designed to facilitate that. I obviously recognise and, indeed, the panel recognised the important place that St Mary's holds in the community, particularly in west Belfast. The panel has gone to great lengths to stress the importance of pluralism in teacher education, and the point about pluralism and diversity is recognised in all the options set out. It is worth stressing that pluralism and diversity can be accommodated through a range of institutional formulas.

Obviously, the public sector contributes very heavily to St Mary's, but we have to bear it in mind that we have to deploy taxpayers' money with a degree of responsibility and efficiency. We do not have an efficient approach to teacher education in Northern Ireland; our costs are out of step with those in teacher education in other parts of these islands and elsewhere. The panel is keen to stress that, if we find efficiencies in the current provision, they should, in the first instance, be reinvested in the improved provision of teacher education. There are ways in which that could be accommodated. We have a duty to look seriously at the way in which public money is used and to consider doing things differently. St Mary's needs to be part of that discussion. We cannot carry on with the way we are doing things at present.

Mr P Ramsey: I thank the Minister for bringing the report today. He will acknowledge that it has been fairly contentious, and the Committee did not find favour as we went through the process leading up to this.

I refer the Minister to paragraph 8.21 on page 48 of the report, where the colleges will be required, under the new funding arrangements, to increase shared education and engage in greater collaboration. Will the Minister give an assurance to the House that, irrespective of what option goes forward, he will protect and respect the ethos and integrity of each of the institutions and that they will not be financially penalised?

Dr Farry: I thank the Member for his questions. Obviously, this issue is highly contentious. In some ways, education and the particular issue of teacher education go deep to the heart of identity issues in Northern Ireland. No one is under any illusions that it is anything to the contrary. In terms of the issues around the ethos and identity of the colleges, the options provide different means by which those can be respected as we move forward. There is the issue of whether that is accommodated through different institutions, through the institutions coming together in collaboration or through a single institution. The historical missions and each ethos need to be consolidated and protected in the new designs.

Mr Lyttle: I thank the Minister for his statement. How do the options set out in the report compare with international best practice?

Dr Farry: To an extent, that question builds on the one asked by Mr Ramsey. It is worth stressing that the trend is strongly towards the consolidation of teacher training in a university setting. There are numerous examples of that across these islands and the wider world. While there may be exceptions in that regard, where small teacher training facilities continue, they are very much in the minority.

Closer to home, we see examples of successful change. A major reform programme is under way in the Republic of Ireland to consolidate their teacher training institutions, including bringing a number of them together under Dublin City University. In that regard, it is worth stressing that what is primarily a secondary institution is finding a means of accommodating institutions coming into it that have had a very clear denominational background. That should give people reassurance that it can be done.

We also have to look at situations elsewhere in these islands, where you have a number of single institutions that address a number of religious and denominational issues. For example, you have Liverpool Hope University and the University of Roehampton. Roehampton is an interesting example: it was formed by four different religious-based colleges coming together in the mid-1970s. You also have the example of Homerton College becoming a part of the University of Cambridge in the past few decades. Again, that is a college with a long history going back to the mid-18th century. Perhaps the most interesting example is Glasgow, where you had St Andrews, which was a Catholic training institution, forming a partnership with the University of Glasgow and subsequently becoming a part of the university, with a new institute of education. Again, in that merger, the means were found to respect that historical religious ethos and mission.

Mr Hilditch: I thank the Minister for his statement this morning. Last October, when officials appeared before the Committee, and again in November, there was a high degree of criticism of the process. There was mention of political interference and the independent review panel having been steered. How do you respond to that?

Do today's report and recommendations vindicate that criticism?

Dr Farry: I am not sure whether that comment is valid. This was an independent review panel, and it is its work that has been produced today. The five people involved are of huge standing as international experts in the field of education. They have been very robust in the methodology that they have adopted in engaging with the stakeholders and have sought to find options that accommodate the mission and ethos of the institutions. I have no difficulty in commending and recognising the quality of the work, and I believe that it provides us with a solid foundation on which we can proceed to have further engagement with the stakeholders with a view to finding an agreed way forward.

Ms McGahan: Go raibh maith agat. I thank the Minister for his statement. What does the report have to say about teacher education for the Irish-medium sector? Does the Minister agree that St Mary's is a specialist and high-performing provider of teacher training through immersion in the Irish language?

Dr Farry: I certainly recognise that, in a general sense, St Mary's is a quality provider of teacher education. The panel members recognised that in the report. They also recognised that we could do a lot better in teacher education across the piece. That is not meant to be a comment on any individual institution, but it is a reflection of the fact that we have an overly fragmented system and that, through a more collaborative approach through a range of options, we all stand to gain a better outcome.

The Member is right that St Mary's has developed a specialism in Irish language. In all the options, there is a commitment to respecting diversity in the education system and to ensuring that teachers are prepared for the range of sectors that may exist in Northern Ireland in the future, including the Irish-medium sector. Where that type of specialism needs to be catered for through all the options, that space can be carved out to ensure that people are prepared for that sector.

Mr Ross: Will the Minister remind the House of his personal preference of the four options that are laid out; tell us when he anticipates that he will bring his final decision to the Executive; and tell us when he believes the landscape of teacher training in Northern Ireland will be changed?

Dr Farry: I thank the Member for his questions. I am on record as a supporter of integrated education. I would favour having a single, integrated system of teacher education in Northern Ireland, but, in saying that, I recognise that mine is only one of many voices and that we need to have an agreed way forward on teacher education. I have to respect the views of others, and we have to ensure that what we put in place will be sustainable for the future and will cater to all needs in our society. I believe that the process I intend to embark on in the autumn will address that.

The initial plan will be to have meetings individually with the different providers and some other stakeholders, before moving quickly to round-table discussions. After we have had that initial round of discussions, we will map out further what other work needs to be done to find common ground. I appreciate that this will not be an easy task, in that there are a lot of strongly held views on the future, but I hope that, as a result of the report today, particularly when people properly scrutinise it and fully understand the importance of the comments and observations that have been made by the panel members, people will appreciate that we need to change from the current status quo.

It is not simply about coming up with a different financial arrangement. It is not simply about moving in the direction of sharing and integration, important as they are. There are important educational implications that arise from the particular institutional focus that we have. Ultimately, the real prize here is ensuring that we prepare teachers for the modern world of education.

11.15 am

Mr Flanagan: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as an mhéid atá ráite aige go dtí seo. The Minister's agenda is abundantly clear, as, indeed, is that of his panel, which has done likewise in other places. As the Chair said, it demonstrates how bureaucratic the system of governance here is when, three years after getting the job, no decision has been made and we are no clearer about what the Minister is actually going to do. St Mary's has indicated that it is resolved to remain autonomous, and we support that, but it is willing to embrace —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: We need a question.

Mr Flanagan: — shared education if its position is respected. Can I ask the Minister whether he believes that there is something wrong with a teacher training college that has a deeply held Catholic ethos?

Dr Farry: Let me say a couple of things in response to what the Member has said. First of all, this is the first time under devolution that we have had a holistic view across the range of teacher education providers in Northern Ireland. A consultation was initiated by my predecessors in the Department around the Queen's/Stranmillis merger. If there had been sufficient consensus in the House for the necessary legislation to go through, we would have proceeded with that. The opportunity for action in this area was there, but it was not going to find support, so we have taken the opportunity for a much wider look at the issue.

What we have done is taken a structured approach to providing the evidence and the strong case for change in the system. The Grant Thornton report has looked at the financial issues and has clearly spelt it out that the status quo is not financially sustainable, including a context of continued subsidy, never mind a situation where subsidy is gradually removed from the institutions.

The report that we are publishing today sets out the evidence, particularly in light of international trends, for how we can reconfigure our situation. I am clear in accepting that we have to have a system that respects religious pluralism. For the foreseeable future we will have a Catholic sector in Northern Ireland that, of course, has to operate in the context of a stronger framework of shared education. It is important that we prepare teachers for all the different sectors and that we can accommodate the needs of diversity in Northern Ireland through a range of institutional formats. All the options set out are worthy of consideration in that regard.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Before I call the next Member to speak, I want to make it clear that I do not expect to have to remind Members that it is not statements on the statement: it is questions. I hope that is sufficiently clear. The Speaker himself made it clear before he left the Chair, so it is questions, if you do not mind, on the statement today.

Mr Rogers: Thanks to the Minister for his statement. I am sure, Minister, you will applaud the work of our teacher training colleges in providing good teachers to educate our children. Many parents still choose a faith-based education. What steps are you taking to ensure that there is more equitable access to a certificate in religious education?

Dr Farry: Building on the answer that I provided to Mr Flanagan, I accept that we will see pluralism in our education system for the foreseeable future, and it is important that we prepare teachers in that regard. Let me also say that, in so far as we may have a Catholic sector, that does not mean that children in those schools are taught exclusively by teachers who come from the Catholic faith or a Catholic background. We should have a situation here where any professional teacher, irrespective of their background, should be capable of teaching in any educational setting in a professional manner, irrespective of the particular ethos of that type of school.

In relation to the certificate in religious education, there is a view across a number of parties in the House that we need to address that issue. One option is through amendments to equality legislation, which is beyond my responsibilities. The other option is through ensuring more ready access to that certificate. At present, students from Stranmillis normally access the certificate through distance learning via the University of Glasgow. In other institutions, that is more readily available or, indeed, is hardwired into the curriculum. That creates a certain inequality in opportunities for employment on the far side, and we need to address that — there is no question about that.

Mr Douglas: I thank the Minister for his statement. Does he agree that the two university colleges — Stranmillis and St Mary's — work on joint projects at the moment? Will he assure the House that he will work with the two colleges to ensure that will ensure their sustainability into the future?

Dr Farry: Again, I thank the Member for the questions. I obviously recognise the existing collaboration. In so far as the options recommend deeper collaboration, that is not at the expense of recognising the good practice that pertains. That includes the joint special needs literacy project that Stranmillis and St Mary's are engaged in, some shared continuing professional development (CPD) programmes and the Classrooms Re-imagined: Education in Diversity and Inclusion for Teachers (CREDIT) programme that is funded by the International Fund for Ireland. Those are all good projects that we can build on and deepen.

The process that we are engaged in is all about finding a sustainable solution for teacher education in Northern Ireland as a whole, and the views of Stranmillis and St Mary's are critical in that regard. We are committed to working with them to provide and find a sustainable solution for the system as a whole.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I call Mr Mervyn Storey, the Chairperson of the Education Committee. We will extend some latitude to you.

Mr Storey (The Chairperson of the Committee for Education): That is a very dangerous thing to do, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker.

Speaking initially as the chair of the Education Committee, I welcome the statement. It includes issues that are of particular interest to the Education Committee, including a highlighting of the disjoint between initial teacher training, continuing professional development for teachers and the issue that has been raised in the House of the differential in access to the certificate in religious education. In the spirit of seeking to promote working together, will the Minister join the Education Minister and work towards an agreed policy that will see the removal of the certificate on the basis of the Fair Employment and Treatment Order? As a member of the Executive, will he ensure that he joins his Education Minister colleague in that?

I want to conclude by asking some questions as a Member. Will the Minister tell the House that the access arrangements for the certificate are fundamentally flawed? Currently, if someone seeks a certificate, they need a letter of recommendation from a local parish priest, which creates considerable difficulties for many young people. Does he believe that Stranmillis is fundamentally hampered? It no longer has representatives from the Transferor Representatives' Council because of actions taken by Sir Reg Empey?

Dr Farry: I thank the Chair of the Education Committee for the questions. The report is very far-reaching, and, while the panel has a very specific terms of reference on options for institutional design, it made wider commentary that is applicable across the piece for education and, in particular, teacher education. I am more than happy to have discussions with my colleague the Minister of Education in that regard.

The Member focused particularly on issues about the certificate in religious education. Again, it is worth stressing that there are two ways in which we can address this, one of which is through amending equality legislation. I am more than happy to give my personal support to working with the Minister of Education and OFMDFM to address that issue.

I concur that the situation that applies today regarding the relative ease of access or otherwise is a major inequity in the system that impacts on equality of access for graduates to employment. I also concur that we have to address that.

Mr Lunn: I thank the Minister for his answers so far. Will he comment further on the importance of links to universities to maximise potential linkages to educational research?

Dr Farry: I thank the Member for the question. In some ways, this is probably the key implication that I take away from the report. I appreciate that a lot of Members are focusing on the future of the institutions individually. This morning, equality issues have been a major theme as well. However, the real prize that we have to focus on is the infusion of teacher education into a rich research environment, and that is what is provided through the university setting or through closer links to universities. That is perhaps the background to the trend internationally towards teacher education in the context of a university. It is why there has been a consolidation or reconfiguration of teacher education in different jurisdictions, including our neighbours in the Republic of Ireland, in recent years.

There is a real prize to be found, and it means that the robustness of the qualifications that teachers receive will stand on a par with those achieving other academic qualifications. It is important that we ensure that we provide the best opportunities for our graduates, not only for their potential pathway into education but into other fields and endeavours.

Mr Allister: In the best — or is it the worst? — Alliance tradition, the Minister is sitting on the fence when it comes to telling us which option he prefers. I suspect that most of us can work it out. What is the essence of the difference, if any, between the impact of options A and C on the autonomy of each of the colleges? Under any of the options, is the UCAS requirement enforceable and, if so, under which?

Dr Farry: I thank the Member for the question. Let me make it clear that my approach is one of seeking to build consensus. I have put my very clear views on the matter on the record on numerous occasions, including earlier today in a response to Mr Ross. If we are to find something that is sustainable, it is important that it has broad-based support, and that is why it is important that we have options that can be the basis for further discussions with all the stakeholders.

The difference between options A and C is that option A is a collaboration and option C is a federation. In a federation, you will see a move of some constitutional issues towards the central authority. There is a distinction in terms of governance between the two options, and, again, I encourage the Member to read the report in full. Indeed, those options can be further elaborated on in the discussions that we may have with the stakeholders in the autumn.

The UCAS issue is important. I have already commented on the differential opportunities that arise from that and the particular impact on Stranmillis in terms of planning ahead and student entry. It is in the bizarre situation of being simultaneously oversubscribed and having to fill places through clearing because of people holding an offer for St Mary's at the same time through the non-UCAS strand. I certainly will use my best endeavours to ensure a common admissions policy across the institutions, and, indeed, the panel members were keen to stress that point as well.

Improving Unscheduled Care

Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): The Assembly is well aware of the growing concern among the public last winter about the quality of care provided by our emergency departments (EDs) and the robustness of governance procedures across the health and social care system in Northern Ireland. I made clear in my statements to the Assembly earlier this year my disappointment about the events that had contributed to the public's unease and announced a series of actions that I had taken or would take to respond to the concerns. Today, I want to inform the Assembly of the progress on these actions and the next steps to further improve the quality and governance of health and social care in Northern Ireland.

On 10 February, I announced that I had commissioned the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority (RQIA) to conduct a review of unscheduled care services in the Belfast Trust with a view to the wider regional context.

That followed the RQIA's inspection of the emergency department and acute medical unit of the Royal Victoria Hospital (RVH) following the major incident declared by the Belfast Trust on 8 January. The RQIA has completed its review and submitted its report to me. I have accepted its findings and recommendations, and the authority will publish its report today. I thank the RQIA and the expert team, led by David Stewart, for their thorough examination of the issues and their proposals for transforming the delivery of unscheduled care.

11.30 am

On the major incident at the RVH, the RQIA has identified planning and systems failings by the Belfast Trust in the period leading up to the incident on 8 January. Management of the flow of patients, in the Royal Victoria Hospital and across the trust as a whole, could have been handled better. I am very disappointed by the trust's apparent inability to identify and plan for those anticipated pressures. I am contacting the chairs and acting chief executives of the Belfast Trust and the Health and Social Care Board to ask them to account for those systems failures. I require their assurance that they have learnt lessons from the RQIA's findings and are taking steps to prevent the failures from happening in the future.

While none of the other trusts was in the same position as Belfast, the RQIA has made a number of recommendations for concerted action across the region to improve the delivery of unscheduled care. I believe that, if we are to secure improvements in the delivery of unscheduled care, a regional approach is essential. I am therefore announcing my decision to establish, from today, a regional task group to take forward the RQIA's recommendations, under the leadership of my Department's Chief Medical Officer, Dr Michael McBride, and its Chief Nursing Officer, Charlotte McArdle, who will co-chair the task group. The task group will take immediate action to oversee and coordinate the implementation of the RQIA's recommendations. I want to see results, and I have set the clear aims for the task group of eliminating all avoidable 12-hour waiting time breaches from this winter onwards and, over the next 18 months, of making significant progress towards achieving the four-hour waiting time standard.

Members will recall that I commissioned the Health and Social Care Board to examine serious adverse incident (SAI) reporting arising from our emergency departments in the five-year period from 2009 to 2013. The findings are being shared with the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety and will be placed on the Department's website.

In summary, the findings are that, in the five years covered, 83 serious adverse incidents were reported. Of those, 48 involved the death of a patient, while 13 identified some element of delay in aspects of a patient's care. Delays arose for a range of reasons, including issues around the triage process, a missed diagnosis, the accurate and timely communication of information, and the speed with which medications or treatments were delivered. It is impossible to say definitively to what extent any delay contributed to any death.

I am very well aware that we often talk about systems and processes designed to prevent things from going wrong or to learn from mistakes that have been made, such as the SAI process. However, we must never lose sight of the fact that at the very heart of all of this is the patient — a son, daughter, father or mother — and families deeply affected and hurt by what happened to their loved one. I am determined that all our processes and systems will be as open and transparent as they can be, while respecting the need for patient confidentiality, and that they fully meet the expectations of patients and their families in being informed and receiving clear and unambiguous answers to their questions. Those are some of the governance aspects that I have asked Sir Liam Donaldson to consider in the work that I am commissioning from him.

There has been some confusion in public discussion and commentary about the role and purpose of the SAI system. It is intended as a means by which incidents and unexpected events are investigated so that learning can be identified, shared and implemented. If things have gone wrong, it is important that lessons are learned, thereby preventing a recurrence. The reporting and learning from SAIs can have a positive impact on the quality and safety of healthcare. An open and learning culture encourages the reporting of SAIs as a valuable means of highlighting and resolving potential problems with services. All our services — emergency services are no exception — are becoming increasingly complex, and there will always be incidents from which we can learn.

Elimination of lengthy delays is critical to ensuring high-quality care and to improving patient experience. I believe that this can be done. The HSC achieved a 44% reduction in the number of 12-hour waiting time breaches during last year. That is a considerable achievement, and I pay tribute to all staff in the HSC who worked hard to deliver this improvement, but there is still much more to do.

I have therefore directed the task group to address, in particular, the design and implementation of more effective patient pathways for our frail elderly people and patients with respiratory conditions. To achieve this, the whole system will have to work together, including our GPs, Ambulance Service, community care teams and staff in acute hospitals.

I believe that the integral involvement of the HSC's professional staff in the work of the task group is essential to its ultimate success. This is not a managerial-focused initiative. It will be strategic in its intent but practical and operational in its delivery. It will also be vital that learning and perspectives emerging from the Royal College of Nursing and the College of Emergency Medicine summits, held earlier this year, are acted on, as appropriate, by the task group.

The task I have set is challenging. However, I am convinced that it can be achieved. The winter period will, no doubt, bring its own challenges. When pressures emerge, as they no doubt will, we must put our wholehearted support and encouragement behind front line staff, who have been tasked to deliver transformation in unscheduled care. It can be achieved by harnessing the talents of our staff, whether they are doctors, nurses and social workers or managers and policymakers. I believe that they will have your support, and I commend this statement to the House.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin (The Chairperson of the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety): Go raibh maith agat. I thank the Minister for his statement. It is clear that RQIA has identified planning and systems failures by the Belfast Trust. In the Minister's statement is his quite stark comment:

"I am very disappointed by the Trust's apparent inability to identify and plan for these anticipated pressures."

Will the Minister give the House an insight, first, as to what the systems failings were and what recommendations will be progressed? Will he also go as far as to comment on the response of the ombudsman this morning to high levels of dissatisfaction with the complaints processes in health trusts?

Mr Poots: I met all the trusts in early autumn and was given assurances that actions were being taken to anticipate rising demand for emergency and unscheduled care, as always happens in the winter. One of the failings in the Belfast Trust that we could identify clearly is that it had too much scheduled care coming in immediately after Christmas. It had a lot of elective surgery and so forth to take place. People had been booked in, and, therefore, beds were taken up. The trust should have anticipated that a greater number of people would come in on the unscheduled pathway and held some of those procedures back further. That was a very clear failing.

It is important that we ensure that we deal with complaints from the public in a clear, transparent and consistent way. Some trusts perform better than others in managing complaints. I have experience of that and would, therefore, like to see a greater level of consistency applied throughout trusts in how they respond to complaints. I am and have been trying, with some success, although work is still to be done, to make the health service a more open and transparent organisation.

We are coming from years and years — decades — of not having the level of openness and transparency in health that there was in a range of other services. I want to change that. If we get it wrong, I want the public to know at an early point and for us to deal with the issues that arise from that.

That is what serious adverse incident reporting is about. I do not want the press and media to jump all over serious adverse incidents because we do them, because that has the potential to actually drive people not to carry out serious adverse incidents when they should be carried out. I want us to do that, and I want us to be very clear with the people who suffered as a consequence of not receiving the care that they should have. That will be made known to them at the earliest possible point.

Mr Wells: The Minister, in his statement, has given a commitment that all avoidable 12-hour waits at A&E departments will be eliminated. Some Members will be fascinated by the definition of “avoidable”. Obviously, we all want to see a very significant decline in these waits. Will the Minister define what he means by “avoidable” so that we have clarity on his commitment?

Mr Poots: On occasion, there will be surges. Sometimes, those surges cannot be anticipated. That is one instance in which you would have an unavoidable delay. One of RQIA’s recommendations will be for the trusts to update their escalation plans to ensure that, when things go wrong and when something outside the control of the hospital happens and large numbers of people are in attendance, they can escalate the plans much quicker to get more staff in, make more beds available and ensure that those people are treated more quickly.

So we recognise that unavoidable delays will be there, but that will not leave us with thousands of 12-hour breaches. They will happen quite infrequently, and therefore “avoidable” is not a term that we are putting in to leave the door open for thousands of 12-hour breaches to continue occurring.

Mr McKinney: We were saddened to learn this morning of the scale of the SAIs. We should remember that at the heart of each one is an individual and a family. Given the scale of them, does the Minister accept that there must be a question mark over whether we are actually learning from the SAI process? In that context, does the Minister agree that it is appropriate or necessary to have an external eye looking over the SAI processes, underpinned by legislation, to ensure that the growing dissatisfaction and concern in the public mind is addressed?

Mr Poots: The Member is absolutely right that we are dealing with human beings and individuals. The SAI process takes place over a long period — five years — but that does not lessen the impact for any individual who did not receive as good a quality of care in that period of time as they might otherwise have received.

We are going to have that external eye, and the Member should be aware that we have commissioned someone of real standing to carry out that piece of work: Sir Liam Donaldson. He will be looking at all of this, including the SAIs and all the issues around the quality of care. Quality is something that we want to prioritise, and we have the ‘Quality 2020’ document, which sets out very clearly what we believe we should be achieving on quality. That is not merely an aspiration: it is something that we intend to deliver on.

Mr Beggs: In the Minister’s statement and, indeed, in some of his answers, he placed much focus on 12-hour breaches, which are coming down. However, the 2013-14 A&E waiting time statistics show that there has been a further reduction in the number of patients treated within four hours and a worryingly increasing bulge in the number of those waiting between four and 12 hours — almost 150,000 in the last year. My question to the Minister is this: is he simply dealing with a symptom at the upper end of our A&E rather than dealing with the problem, and does he accept that there will be an ongoing risk of serious adverse incidents whilst there continue to be delays of more than four hours?

Mr Poots: I certainly think that there has been a greater concentration on dealing with 12-hour breaches. Obviously, 12 hours is a considerably longer period of time than four hours, and it was deemed that tackling that was of greatest importance. The Member knows that we have made considerable progress on this issue. For example, when I inherited the job, we were looking at something like over 10,000 12-hour breaches in that year. We are now down to 3,000. That is 3,000 too many, in my opinion, but the figure has come down by 7,000 breaches. That is a significant improvement, and I am sure that the Member will take an opportunity at some point to welcome that improvement and say that it has been a major step forward.

I recognise that there has been a decline in the number of patients treated within four hours, and that is also something that we intend to tackle. So, whilst the focus this year will be on delivering further improvement in the 12-hour breaches, we are looking at the four-hour breaches over an 18-month period. It is something that we will be looking at and addressing, but we will do it in a holistic way. We will deal with the first challenge, which is the 12-hour breaches, but seek to carry out improvement across and throughout the system. The RQIA report and the task force group will assist us in doing that. There are quite a number of focuses that will be applied in how we deal with our elderly population, respiratory conditions and so forth that will assist us in all of that.

Mr McCarthy: Like our Committee Chairperson, I note the Minister’s disappointment at the Belfast Trust’s inability to plan for unscheduled pressures. We all share that disappointment. The Minister wants someone to account for what he calls “systems failures”. What action will the Minister take when someone from the trust or the board is found to have fallen down on the job, resulting in a bad experience for our patients? Will it be a case of heads rolling, a slap on the wrists, or simply just carrying on and hoping?

Mr Poots: The Member knows that the way that the system works is that I appoint a board and a chair, and the board holds the trust to account in terms of the Executive. There are monthly, public meetings that Members can attend to see how the board is performing in holding the trust to account.

I am pleased that, earlier this year, I was able to appoint a new chair to the board to hold the trust to account; that was a direct appointment by me. I will ensure that the chair knows at all times what my expectations are of the Belfast Trust and that I apply appropriate pressure on the chair to ensure that that organisation, which has over 20,000 employees, a budget of £1.2 billion, and which is by far the largest organisation in Northern Ireland and one of the largest public service organisations anywhere in the United Kingdom, actually delivers on the targets that we set for it. It is absolutely vital to do that, and it is incumbent on the trust to ensure that that is the case.

Mrs Cameron: I welcome the Minister’s statement to the House this morning. Can he provide detail of the unannounced hospital inspections to be carried out by the RQIA?

Mr Poots: The RQIA is tasked with carrying out a series of inspections. It has sometimes been said to me that the RQIA places a large focus on our nursing homes and so forth and that there has not been enough focus on our hospitals. So we have asked the RQIA to undertake a rolling programme of unannounced inspections, which will examine the quality of services in all acute hospitals in Northern Ireland each year from 2015-16 onwards. Those inspections will focus on a number of quality indicators about triage, admission, assessment, care, monitoring and discharge of patients. They will focus on a selection of quality indicators that will not be pre-notified to the trusts for each inspection, and no advance warning will be provided to trusts as to which sites or services within a hospital will be visited as part of an unannounced inspection. It is intended that the RQIA inspection reports will be published on a hospital-by-hospital basis as they are completed.

The proposal is to introduce these unannounced inspections from 2015-16, rather than immediately, because the RQIA already has a number of planned reviews under way, which focus on acute hospitals and which are, coincidentally, more wide-ranging than focusing on particular services. Those reviews include: a review of the experience of older people in acute hospitals, which will be completed within the next three months; a review of discharge arrangements from acute hospitals, because effective discharge arrangements are an essential part of the smooth flow of patients through hospitals, and the work of this review will inform the recommendations of the wider review of unscheduled care; and also a review of the inspection of the regional stroke strategy, the hospital aspects of which are of relevance to the unscheduled care review, and which will examine whether arrangements for fast-tracking stroke patients through the system are working effectively. Combined with the current review covering the Belfast Trust emergency department and the management of flows through the trusts, which also includes some regional elements, our advice is that the programme of unannounced inspections could begin next year.

Mr Brady: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for his statement and I welcome the fact that he has accepted that a regional approach is essential because there are other areas outside Belfast, and other hospitals such as Daisy Hill. I accept that the RVH is a regional centre.

In your statement, Minister, you said that you directed the task group to address particularly the design and implementation of more effective patient pathways for frail elderly people and patients with respiratory conditions. That is very much to be welcomed. I ask that people with mental health problems who present at emergency departments also be considered because they often have particular problems that need to be dealt with, possibly in a different way, and a more effective pathway could be put in place for those particular people.

Mr Poots: With the frail elderly, I have to say that I think my focus is the appropriate one. I do not want to take away from the needs of people with mental health conditions, but I think that it is wholly inappropriate for elderly people to be on trolleys beside all the mayhem that goes on in emergency departments and have to wait for long periods of time, either to be admitted to hospital or to be treated and discharged. Therefore, it is my first priority that we deal with the elderly population, and particularly our frail elderly, with dignity and the care that would be expected for those people. This is an area in which we can deliver considerable improvement. RQIA has made recommendations to the Belfast Trust. I have discussed those with the chair of the Belfast Trust, and he accepts that those recommendations are viable and the trust will act on delivering them. It is very important that that is the case and that we have treatment pathways, particularly for our frail elderly, that will ensure that we can carry out that level of service with the dignity that should be afforded to those people.

Mr Dunne: I thank the Minister for initiating the report and bringing forward its findings. I think we all agree that it is important that they are actioned to stop any recurrence of what has been found within the Royal. Can the Minister advise as to what is being done to improve staffing levels within the Royal Victoria Hospital A&E?

Mr Poots: In terms of staffing levels within the hospital, we have advertised and recruited considerable numbers of additional nursing staff. I believe that it is around 100 nurses for the emergency department and, indeed, the acute medical unit. At present, there are 10 consultants in the RVH ED. My wife used to work in the ED in the RVH, and I think that it had one or two consultants back in the 1980s, during the Troubles. So, people can see how things have changed even since that period, and the usage of the hospital has changed in that period, because one would assume that it was an extremely busy place when dealing with all the trauma from the bombs, the bullets and so forth.

We have recently recruited four substantive emergency department consultants, although the full complement will not be in post for another number of months. The trust will also increase the out-of-hours consultant cover at the weekend in line with when the additional consultants come into post. It has also recruited three locum ED consultants, whom it hopes will commence on 14 August. The RVH emergency department has senior clinical decision-makers on site from 8.00 am until 1.00 am Monday to Friday, and a consultant on-call rota operates from 8.00 am and from 5.00 pm at weekends. The extra posts will improve weekend out-of-hour consultant cover. Middle-grade doctors work in ED throughout the night, and the Belfast Trust's ED consultant complement is greater than that in any other trust in Northern Ireland, though it does not yet meet the College of Emergency Medicine's recommendation, which is a challenge for all trusts right across the United Kingdom, not just in Northern Ireland. It certainly is not specific to the Belfast Trust.

Mr Dallat: I welcome the Minister's statement. Indeed, I have enormous sympathy for him in his endeavours. I pay tribute to the staff of our hospitals for the sterling work that they do. Will the Minister agree with me that the ongoing hemorrhaging of adverse reports is sapping the energy of those people? Can he assure the House that the people who are now charged with implementing the recommendations are the people to do it, or does he feel that it is perhaps time he relied on some independent source of energy to make sure that he is not let down yet again?

Mr Poots: The Member makes a number of valid points, and if I am let down, the population is let down as well. So, that is not a good situation to be in. Setting up the task group and tackling this in a reasonable way will move some of the responsibility away from the Health and Social Care Board and give additional sustenance and support to the trust in delivering those things, and we should view that positively. We have capable people in our Chief Medical Officer and Chief Nursing Officer to help us address that challenge, and I think that they are appropriate people to co-chair the task group. We will give them appropriate support.

We have had a series of issues to deal with in health and social care, but unscheduled care has come up over and over and over again. To this point, we have not got on top of it in the way that we would like to have. I think that what we are announcing this morning is significant and puts us in a very challenging position. I will be held to account next January, February and March if things do not show a significant improvement, but, again, I will be holding those people to account. We have inherited a difficult problem and we have been working hard to resolve it. We have not got there as yet, but we are putting the right systems in place to tackle this so that we can deliver a better quality of care in Northern Ireland.

The one caveat is that people need to use the services wisely. I recently noticed on social media that a row had broken out because someone had called 999 and got an ambulance out to take them to hospital because they were dizzy. We have a misuse of ambulance services, but we need those ambulance services to transfer patients and to be there when people have emergencies.

We have a misuse of our emergency departments. We need our nurses, doctors and professional staff to be able to respond to real emergencies and deal with the frail elderly and the nasty knocks that people will take. However, people abuse the system. We need to get that message out as well. We need the media and the public to support us in saying that it is wrong for people to abuse the service in the way that a significant percentage of users do. We need to challenge those people. It is all well and good for us to seek to correct things, but, if the level of abuse goes up, it will undermine the correction that we carry out.

12.00 noon

Mr D McIlveen: I thank the Minister for his statement. He will, I am sure, be aware that, until the incident at the Odyssey, the term “serious adverse incident” (SAI) was probably not in the vocabulary of a lot of people in Northern Ireland outside the healthcare family. Bearing in mind that, since the incident, the media, and perhaps even those seeking to score political points, have jumped upon the term and called it what it is not, does the Minister feel that it is now time to reassess how fit for purpose the serious adverse incident system actually is?

Mr Poots: I say at the outset that the purpose of the serious adverse incident reporting system is to identify and promote learning from events. The investigation of an SAI provides a mechanism to effectively share learning in a meaningful way with a focus on safety and quality, ultimately leading to improvements for service users. Where SAI's have been reported, I expect four main things: that there will be an investigation at an appropriate level by people with the right skills to carry it out; that patients and families will be told that the case is an SAI and that an investigation is ongoing; that patients and families will be involved in the process to the level that they choose and will be informed of the outcome; and that learning must be identified and shared.

Whilst the process is a non-statutory system that exists to identify learning and support improvements in the quality and safety of Health and Social Care services in Northern Ireland, it is not the only mechanism in place to identify and support learning. A wide range of work is ongoing nationally and in Health and Social Care to develop and update evidence-based best practice and improve safety and quality. As a learning process, it complements the processes of statutory accountability, which apply to all parts of HSC, in dealing with deaths that meet the relevant criteria for some form of formal investigative process. We will look at all the learning processes, in conjunction with other parts of the United Kingdom. If we feel that the processes need to be enhanced further or that improvements can be carried out, certainly we will enact those.

North/South Ministerial Council: Special EU Programmes

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Minister of Finance and Personnel wishes to make a statement.

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): The North/South Ministerial Council (NSMC) met in special EU programmes sectoral format in Armagh, on 30 May 2014. I represented the Northern Ireland Executive and was accompanied by junior Minister Jennifer McCann. The Government of the Republic of Ireland were represented by Brendan Howlin TD, Minister for Public Expenditure and Reform.

The meeting began with a short discussion on areas of mutual responsibility as part of the ongoing review into sectoral priorities. Minister Howlin then provided a short outline of the informal ministerial meeting on cohesion policy that he attended in Athens at the end of April 2014.

The chief executive of the Special EU Programmes Body (SEUPB) updated the Council on progress since the previous special EU programmes sectoral meeting in December last year. At the end of March 2014, the Peace III and INTERREG IVa programmes were fully committed. Funding from the withdrawal of the peace-building and conflict resolution centre and the Narrow Water bridge projects has now been reallocated. It was noted that all expenditure targets for the Peace III and INTERREG IVa programmes have been met to date. The INTERREG IVa programme must spend approximately £85 million by the end of 2015 and the Peace III programme approximately £90 million. Those targets are challenging, but the importance of maximising full EU funding allocations was emphasised.

Ministers confirmed that they remain supportive of the concept of the Narrow Water Bridge.

Council noted that the INTERREG IV transnational and inter-regional competitive funding programmes were successful in providing an additional £9 million to Northern Ireland in the 2007-2013 funding period. SEUPB continues to work to promote the positive impacts of EU programmes through public events and confirmed that it would hold two conferences later in the year to highlight the achievements of the Peace III and INTERREG IVa programmes.

Council was updated on the progress of the development work for the 2014-2020 INTERREG V and Peace IV EU programmes. It was noted that the public consultation for the programmes would begin in early June, and, as I am sure many Members are aware, it opened on Tuesday 3 June for a period of eight weeks. I urge those who are interested in shaping the programmes to input into this consultation process. Post consultation, the operational programmes will require approval from the Northern Ireland Executive, the Government of Ireland and the Scottish Government before onward transmission and negotiation with the European Commission.

Ministers discussed the recommendations outlined in the SEUPB staffing review and noted that there is to be further consideration by officials of the recommendations.

Council approved changes to the North/South pension scheme and noted that consultation on further reform of the scheme is under way. Council agreed to hold its next special EU programmes meeting on a date to be agreed in autumn 2014.

Mr McKay (The Chairperson of the Committee for Finance and Personnel): Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Minister, you will be aware that delays in processing applications for INTERREG in particular are a problem that has dogged European funding here for many years. Given that the South and elsewhere in Europe simply do not suffer from these problems, what actions will you take in the months ahead to ensure that the new tranche of funding will not be dogged by the same problems and to reduce the application processing times?

Mr Hamilton: I am aware of the characterisation of the processing of our INTERREG programmes as slow. I support any attempts to hasten approval processes so that from application to decision, whether that is approval or rejection, the process is as quick as it possibly can be. There are some necessary stages in the process, and, having looked at the various stages, I do not think that there are any that, in their totality, can be removed. I want to keep those very necessary legal steps in that process, but that does not mean that the time taken to do each stage could not be sped up. My officials are working with their counterparts in the Irish Republic and with the SEUPB to examine the possibility of doing just that.

It is easy for individuals in the process who, perhaps, have a particular perspective or agenda to say that Northern Ireland is the slowest and worse than everybody else. I accept that, on average, the process takes a year, which is high and could do with coming down, but, if you compare, for example, the Irish Republic/Wales INTERREG scheme with ours, you will see that it is much smaller. The average size of their projects is about €900,000 versus ours at €2.5 million, yet they are only about eight weeks quicker on average at processing. It is a much smaller scheme in its totality: our current scheme is about €260 million; theirs was much lower. Their average project size and, therefore, the complexity of any assessment, was lower, yet their processing was only marginally quicker. It is easy for someone to characterise what we are doing in Northern Ireland as being incredibly slow, but, in reality, when you compare it with others not that far away, you see that they are not much better.

Mr Girvan: I thank the Minister for his statement. Will he outline some of the details of the outcome of the staffing review?

Mr Hamilton: A staffing review has been ongoing since 2012. The motivation to review staffing was that, over the years prior to that, the number of staff in the SEUPB had grown, for understandable reasons. It dealt with the early stages and critical middle stages of the Peace and INTERREG funding, and it was felt that there was a requirement to have more staff to ensure that all the assessment work, which the Chairman asked about, was done as quickly as possible and that the money that we were drawing down from Europe, or our entitlement from Europe, could be spent. Given that those projects are now coming to an end and indeed the fact that future programmes are of a smaller quantity, there was a feeling that there was a need to look at the SEUPB's staffing situation again with a view to bringing that down.

In fact, at the last Special EU Programmes Body's sectoral meeting in December, we agreed the staffing review that would see the number of staff come down to 60 last year and 57 this year. There is an expectation that additional staff savings of 10% that were mooted in that report should also be achieved. It is only right and proper that, in circumstances in which programmes are spending less money and there is not the pressure that there was back in 2012 and indeed the years before that, we should, like in all parts of the public sector, look at trying to reduce cost.

Mr D Bradley: Go raibh míle maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Tá ráite ag an Aire ag an chruinniú den Chomh-Aireacht ar an 30ú lá Bealtaine gur dheimhnigh na hAirí go bhfuil said fós ag tabhairt tacaíochta do choincheap Dhroichead an Chaol Uisce. An féidir leis an Aire a mhíniú cad é atá i gceist leis an ráiteas tacaíochta seo don todhchaí? The Minister stated that, at the meeting of the NSMC on 30 May:

"Ministers confirmed they remain supportive of the concept of the Narrow Water Bridge."

Will the Minister explain what that expression of support will mean in practice?

Mr Hamilton: It means what it says. In fact, support for the concept of the bridge was given initially at the last NSMC plenary meeting. I am trying to recollect when exactly that was. It was a number of months ago. It was certainly towards the tail end of last year. Sorry — it was at the early stages of this year. Given what has happened with the inability to proceed with the Narrow Water bridge and its not being able to be completed, and the associated problems that that caused in getting the money that was allocated to the scheme spent in time on good projects, I am glad that we have been able to do that. In fact, that was discussed at the recent sectoral meeting. The money has been allocated to two projects. One was the upgrade of the cross-border Enterprise rail scheme. The other is the upgrade of the Boyne viaduct, which is obviously related to the Enterprise scheme as well. I am glad that we have been able to ensure that that money has been reallocated and has not been lost.

I can understand the desire of some to perhaps want Ministers to go beyond supporting the concept of the bridge and actually say that they support it and that there will be funding for it. However, in a situation in which we have only recently secured the budget for INTERREG, there is no programme in place. In fact, as I mentioned in the statement, we are consulting on what the themes should be on which we spend that money. It would be jumping the gun somewhat to say anything more than that we are supportive of the concept of the bridge. I think that the record will show that in the past, with the first attempt to build the bridge, nothing was done to stop, prevent or hinder it from happening, going through its processes. I would expect the same degree of professionalism, if indeed a future application were permitted by the next INTERREG V programme, to be carried out by all relevant Departments in Northern Ireland and indeed the South as well.

Mr Cree: I thank the Minister for his report and congratulate him on getting it onto one A4 sheet of paper. That ticks a box.

The Minister expressed the £175 million that there is for Peace III and INTERREG IVa as being both "fully committed" and "challenging". What safeguards are there that that money will be spent by the end of 2015?

Mr Hamilton: Unfortunately, we have wasted a second side of A4, which we should have used for something worthwhile or useful — a crossword or something perhaps.

All of that is challenging. The money has been fully committed, so projects are there for the money to be spent on. If everything goes according to plan, all of the money will be spent. Obviously, there is continual monitoring and assessment by SEUPB.

Of course, some of the projects will be led by some of our Departments here, which will ensure that there is appropriate oversight of the expenditure to ensure that it gets out the door and none of it is lost.

I suppose there is always a degree of risk. As we know in this place, from time to time, there are reasons why the money that we allocate to Departments cannot be spent. The difficulty we have with European funding is that we do not have some of the flexibilities that we have with our own funding, not that we have many flexibilities. We do not have the same flexibility, and, if we find out very late in the process — we are about 18 months away from the date by which expenditure has to be made — there may be issues.

As for managing that, I understand that, whilst the end date for actual expenditure is December, the SEUPB is keen that most things come to it midway through 2015 so that some of the problems that the Member talks about can perhaps be seen early on.

Mr Weir: I thank the Minister for his statement. Will he outline what he believes will be the proposed themes and budget for the INTERREG V programme?

Mr Hamilton: I am pleased that the INTERREG Va programme now has an indicative budget of €282 million, which is comparable with INTERREG IV. At this minute, there is no agreement on which areas and themes the money should be spent on. The draft scheme that is out for consultation at the minute proposes four programme themes. They are research and innovation; environmental protection and resource efficiency; social inclusion and combating poverty; and sustainable transport. I am pleased that sustainable transport has been included as a result of negotiations led by my Department but obviously influenced by the Department for Regional Development. We have been able to include that as one of the proposed programme themes. Indeed, research and innovation also includes a substrand for developing renewable energy technologies.

I was very keen that, whilst not denigrating or downplaying themes like environmental protection and social inclusion, there was much greater emphasis and focus on themes that boost the economy, given the economic pressures that Northern Ireland, the Republic and, indeed, Scotland face, hence the need to push sustainable transport and research and innovation, including renewable technologies. Hopefully, both those themes and, indeed, the others will be agreed as part of the consultation and find their way on to the final INTERREG V programme.

Ms Boyle: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for his statement to the House today. Minister, through the INTERREG V and Peace

IV programmes, there are many cross-border projects in health and sustainable transport, which you just mentioned. With many councils and organisations going into summer recess, will the Minister give assurances that work through the SEUPB will be ongoing to ensure full cross-border cooperation on those important projects?

Mr Hamilton: I am not sure whether the Member is aware of a particular problem perhaps in her constituency. If she is, I am happy for her to raise that with me, and we will try to deal with it.

We should not fuel the perception that work stops just because this place and councils are perhaps in summer recess; there are people who remain in the country. We are not quite like France yet, where everything seems to be abandoned in August. Work is ongoing, and I hope that there will not be any issues with the continued work on some of the very good projects that are happening across Northern Ireland. If the Member is aware of particular issues, I am happy to investigate them and to do what we can to iron out any problems.

Mr I McCrea: The statement refers to the reallocation of funding for the peace centre at the Maze. He will be aware that the reason behind that reallocation was our party's withdrawal of support, because the requirement for buy-in from the unionist community had not been met. Until that is the case, it will not be built. Will the Minister give us an idea of what that reallocation has meant and how it has been redistributed?

Mr Hamilton: Much like the Narrow Water bridge issue, which was mentioned by Mr Bradley, this presented a significant challenge in terms of the quantum of funding that could not be spent by the end of 2015. Given the time frame that was available to the SEUPB, it was decided — I think, rightly — that it was not possible to conduct an open call for new bids to come in for the reallocation of the Peace III funding that could not be spent on the peace-building and conflict resolution centre. What the SEUPB did — I think that it was right to do it — was to revisit projects that had been on a sort of waiting list. I am very pleased that projects like the Voices from the Valley project in Newtownabbey, which I am familiar with, having had a meeting with council officials from that area, and the EARLS project in Dungannon, as well as extensions for activity to local authority peace partnerships, have mopped up that funding and will now ensure that none of that money, albeit on the basis that all those projects spend all their money, is now lost back to Europe.

Mrs McKevitt: I thank the Minister for his statement. I will touch on the Narrow Water bridge project, as Mr Bradley did. I welcome the comments that the Ministers are behind the project, but does the Minister agree that the Narrow Water bridge project would fit well into the theme of sustainable transport and removing bottlenecks and key infrastructure networks?

Mr Hamilton: I am cautious about getting into assessing the relative merits of projects against a funding programme that has not been agreed. I do not disagree that the project that the Member talks about may well fit into the broad concept of a theme around sustainable transport. However, it would be foolish of me — indeed, it would be foolish of any of us — as we stand at the minute with the scheme out for consultation, nothing agreed and no indicative budget allocation to each of the themes in the programme, to say, "That it is a good scheme, and we should go in there. That is another good scheme that should go into something else" and start to pre-commit funding to certain projects without also knowing the merits or otherwise of other projects that might come forward. There might be a raft of sustainable transport or other projects that come forward through a call as part of INTERREG V that might be even better for meeting those achievements than, say, the Narrow Water bridge or some other project. It is a little too early to start saying, "That is a good scheme, and it fits in there. Therefore, it should get funding". We need to be incredibly cautious about taking that approach.

Mr Allister: Since its inception, SEUPB has been quite a bloated bureaucracy. Whereas I welcome the indication of some reductions in staffing, are those reductions not much less than was anticipated at an earlier stage? Given that the budget for it to handle is falling so dramatically, surely they should be more substantial? Has any progress been made on bringing balance in community background to the staffing of SEUPB, where, notoriously, the Protestant community has been grossly underrepresented in the complement?

Mr Hamilton: On the first point that the Member raised, we should all welcome the fact that staffing levels in SEUPB are heading in the right direction. I agree that they are not as low as I think they should be, and I would like to see them falling further. There is agreement to get them down to 57 this year. The report that was carried out and conducted by my Department and the Department of Public Expenditure and Reform in the Irish Republic identified scope even beyond that 57 for a further 10% reduction in staffing numbers. We are also investigating the situation where this organisation has three offices across Ireland, two in this jurisdiction. That is also excessive and unnecessary moving forward, given the reduction in the organisation's budget or the budget that it manages on behalf of both Governments. That is something that I hope to report some positive news on after our next sectoral meeting.

Figures from 1 January 2013 show the community breakdown of staff as 21 from the Protestant community, 34 from the Catholic community and four non-determined. That was slightly up on the Protestant side, but it was slightly up on the Catholic side as well. When you look at the April 2014 figures, you will see that it has fallen back again on the Protestant side. I take a view on this sort of issue — it does not matter whether it is SEUPB, parts of my Department or, indeed, parts of anybody's Department, as I look at them in my role as being responsible for HR and personnel issues in the whole of the Civil Service — that I do not care what an official's religion is, as long as their work is up to scratch and up to standard and their advice is good. If there are issues, however, and individuals from a particular community background are being deterred from applying, work needs to be carried out to encourage people from that community to apply for work, as we have done across Departments, agencies, arm's-length bodies and grade levels in the Civil Service. If there are certain barriers, work needs to be undertaken to remove those barriers. I have no concern whether the staff are Catholic or Protestant, as long as their work is up to scratch.

Mr Dallat: I concur with the Minister's last remarks. Recently, however, we have talked a great deal about scaling back the staff and about reduced budgets. Does anyone in the House seriously believe and does the Minister believe that we have reached a stage of integration, cohesion, peace and infrastructure at which we can seriously engage in a conversation of that type, rather than looking for increased budgets and for more work that could be done to rebuild what was destroyed in the past?

Mr Hamilton: As the Member was so nice to me at the start, I do not like to be nasty back to him — it is not my style, anyway — but this is not a matter of seeking to increase the budgets at the disposal of, in this case, the SEUPB. The budgets that it administers are set by Europe, and the match funding is set by this Executive and the Government of the Irish Republic. It is not a matter, therefore, of increasing its budget; the reality is that the budget that it has been administering has been going down and down and down. The budget for the programmes that it will administer in the future is much lower than it was in the past. That is a reflection of tight times across the whole of Europe. In those circumstances, it is completely unjustifiable for us to have less money to administer but to keep the same staffing in place. That is not how any business in Northern Ireland or, indeed, the Republic of Ireland would do business. If they were doing less, they would have fewer staff. It is absolutely sensible, prudent and right for myself and Brendan Howlin to look at what the right quantum of staff is to do the job that we require them to do — not a person more than that should be in place.

Whilst I have doubts over the merits of many parts of our North/South apparatus, one thing that it absolutely is not — everybody in the House should agree — is a job creation agency. It is there to do a particular job, and, if it does not require the staff who are there to do that job, they should be reduced. That is the plain and simple way in which business should be done.

Private Members' Business

Parading: Demonstrating Respect, Restraint and Tolerance in Contested Parades and Associated Protests

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Business Committee has agreed to allow up to one hour and 30 minutes for the debate. The proposer of the motion will have 10 minutes to propose and 10 minutes in which to make a winding-up speech. One amendment has been selected and is published on the Marshalled List. The proposer will have 10 minutes to propose the amendment and five minutes in which to make a winding-up speech. All other Members who wish to speak will have five minutes.

Mr Elliott: I beg to move

That this Assembly notes, in the absence of a formal agreement on a new way forward for contested parades and associated protests, that it is essential that everyone involved, whether participants, spectators or protestors, demonstrates respect, restraint and tolerance for those of differing opinions.

12.30 pm

Thank you very much, Principal Deputy Speaker. I trust that, given the current circumstances here in Northern Ireland, the motion will be debated in a calm and respectful manner and that comments will be helpful to the situation as opposed to being unhelpful. It is unfortunate that, during the multi-party talks, we could not find agreement on the issue of parades and related protests. We came reasonably close to getting an overarching agreement. However, even if we had reached that agreement, it would not have dealt with a number of the contentious parades. That is a major difficulty that we will have, even if we find the resolution that we are looking for.

While we accept that the vast majority of people are content to have respect and tolerance for a culture or event that they do not have any affinity with, do not agree with or do not support, it is clear that there is a section of people who will not tolerate an opposing culture or opinion. That is not new: intolerance has been ongoing for decades and, indeed, centuries. Many citizens have been murdered by terrorists due to the intolerance of the terrorist community, who could not accept them for what they were, whether that was because of their religion, their basic principle of wanting to serve the community as a member of the security forces, their culture or because of some twisted or vindictive reason. Even in recent decades, it has been an ongoing problem. In the mid-1980s, republicans opposed parades in the Obins Street area of Portadown. An agreement was eventually reached that the Orange Order would not use that route; instead, it would use the Garvaghy Road route. However, of course, as we are aware, just 10 years later, republicans opposed that route, and they have stopped the parade for many years.

Around the same time, we had similar problems in places such as the Ormeau Road in Belfast, Bellaghy, Pomeroy and Newtownbutler to name but a few. We have seen another upsurge in more recent times, particularly in parts of Belfast. Ardoyne and Twaddell is an example of how republicans have increased tensions in the area and put a wedge between communities and community relations in general. Of course, that is a means to an end for republicans. Anything they can do to create problems for the unionist and British culture, they will do.

Mr Lyttle: Will the Member give way?

Mr Elliott: I am happy to give way.

Mr Lyttle: I am conscious that the Member has quite a time to go. I do not dispute the rightful condemnation of violence, but is the Member going to address any offences committed by people participating in parades that have contributed to community tension?

Mr Elliott: Of course. The point that I was going to make, had the Member waited, was that, sometimes, those on parade and those supporting parades have questions to answer. Not every action that they carry out is appropriate or acceptable. However, small numbers on both sides of the argument are determined.

I may not support, appreciate or accept every part of society here; I may not like some events or the organisations that participate in them. I highlight one example, as I quite often do: the GAA. I do not have an affinity with GAA culture or sport at all. Some people from that organisation have given me personal abuse in the past. However, I do not link the organisation to that; I have respect and tolerance for that organisation, what it does and how it plays its games. I do not point out that a small number of people in that organisation do not give me respect. I do not lump them all in as one, just as I ask others not to lump in all those in the parading organisations who do not behave in the way that most would expect them to behave. I hope, in fairness to Mr Lyttle, that that goes some way to addressing his query.

The point about republicans is that nothing will ever be enough. If they do not get what they want, they will increase tensions and, what is more worrying, increase violence. That is what happened in recent years in the Ardoyne/Twaddell area. I have here a number of police reports going back to 2009. If you analyse them, you will establish that a small amount of the violence and tensions came from the loyal orders and the Protestant/unionist community, whereas the vast majority of the trouble, tensions and violence came from the republican/nationalist sections. I believe that that is what prompted the Parades Commission to make its decisions in recent times. Why else, if it had read those reports, would it have banned last year's return parade past Ardoyne and through Twaddell? In my opinion, it was for no other reason than the fact that the threat of violence from the nationalist/republican community was greater. In recent weeks, the same attitude has been adopted by the Parades Commission. It gives in to the greatest opportunity for violence.

I will refer to my more localised situation in Newtownbutler. For many years, parades in Newtownbutler were banned or restricted. Indeed, they are still restricted. If you ever want to watch an inoffensive parade, go to Newtownbutler in County Fermanagh, where you will see one small band leading a group of loyal orders, whether Orangemen or Royal Black Preceptory members, up the street. One of the most disgraceful decisions that the Parades Commission made was when it stopped the Orange Order parade at the bottom of the lane that goes on to the main road and did not allow people to go back to their hall. What do you do when you stop a parade? Loyal orders normally play the national anthem. They were stopped right outside a home that people would term nationalist. Out of respect, the Orange Order members moved away from that home so that they would not be playing the national anthem outside it. If they had have been allowed to go back to their hall, they would have gone inside to play the national anthem, away from any prospective trouble that it might have brought about. That was a Parades Commission nonsense, and we still witness that to this day.

Where will we develop the respect and tolerance that I referred to? Over recent years, even Members of the Assembly have inhibited the Police Service in its role. I hope that people take cognisance of this debate, but, most importantly, I hope that the Parades Commission takes cognisance of it. At this stage, I warn that nothing will ever be enough. The Parades Commission has insisted in recent years that dialogue take place. We have read many of its determinations that dialogue must take place. I can tell you that, for the last 10 months, and others will be able to relate this much better than I can, dialogue has taken place with all sections of the community in the Ardoyne/Twaddell area. At least, I understand from the community that I represent that dialogue has taken place. Some from the nationalist/republican community may be sore that they have not been involved in that dialogue, but that is not the fault of the loyal orders; that is for others to answer.

The talks have taken place. We have heard that, for the last number of years, talks were offered by the Orange Order in Portadown but rejected by the nationalist/republican community. The loyal orders have done what they can.

Mr Anderson: Will the Member give way?

Mr Elliott: My time is nearly up, I am sorry.

They keep moving forward, they want to progress and they want tolerance and respect, but that is not being reciprocated.

Mr Lyttle: I beg to move the following amendment: At end insert

“; and calls on all organisations and parties involved, particularly elected representatives, to demonstrate unambiguous adherence to the rule of law.”.

I rise to support the motion and to propose the amendment. I welcome the opportunity to speak on the issue. I welcome the motion and agree that, in the absence of new arrangements to adjudicate on parades and protests, principles such as respect, restraint and tolerance should govern our approach to parades and protests in Northern Ireland. However, the Alliance Party believes that the motion could be strengthened by an explicit reference to the need for the principle of an unambiguous adherence to the rule of law as well. We have put that forward, and we hope that the motion as amended will receive the united support of the House today.

I do, however, hope that these words will be followed by positive actions. On a number of occasions, we have seen statements put forward by the Executive and the Assembly but the actions following that have not met the high standards of the statement. We have seen members of the proposing party, the Ulster Unionist Party, frankly, whip up tension by telling international mediators to go home when their party leader was in negotiation with that international mediator around these difficult issues.

We have seen people paint the Alliance Party as anti-British in relation to some of these issues, which is a disgrace and is false, not least considering the members of our party who have given service to Britain and British values in most important ways. Those people have talked cultural war and community tension into existence, the consequence of which is sustained dereliction and deprivation in areas that need redevelopment the most, relocation of business and reduced foreign direct investment. It is putting our Police Service in the position of being a shock absorber for failed political leadership. Although I do not agree with every PSNI approach, I would like to put on record my thanks to every PSNI officer who has served our community by upholding the law in some of the most difficult circumstances imaginable. I encourage them to maintain their restraint and professionalism in those situations that they find themselves in.

I hope that the motion that has been put forward today is a departure from some of that difficult behaviour that we have seen in recent times, and I hope that we will see more leadership. I hope that we will see more reference to the positive aspects of cultural expression in Northern Ireland. Queen's University research has shown that the number of parades in Northern Ireland has doubled since 2005. We now have around 4,600 parades, the vast majority of which pass without restriction in a peaceful, enjoyable manner for those involved. Indeed, our marching bands are at an all-time high. Some would say that loyalist culture has never been better represented.

Mr Campbell: Will the Member give way?

Mr Lyttle: I am happy to give way.

Mr Campbell: The Member alluded to the Queen's University research. Does he agree with me that a considerable amount of the increase can be vouched for by applications that are put in by people who have their legitimate parades thwarted and who go through the motions of reapplying on hundreds of occasions to try to get the one parade, which, if it had been granted, would have meant that that increase would be nothing like what it has been perceived by the research, and also that many of the parades that he has alluded to are not loyal order parades but are ordinary annual band parades that occur on a regular basis?

Mr Lyttle: There is obviously a mixture of parades. I do not think that anybody should object to following the proper procedure in order to have a peaceful, democratic right to exercise their parade. I will also reference the positive work that goes on in community development with many of the people involved in that cultural expression and, indeed, the fact that, in any democratic society, parading, festivals and those types of organisations should be regarded as positive and as making a positive contribution to society.

It is remiss, however, in an unfortunately still deeply divided society like Northern Ireland not to realise that there are real issues and that it will require fine human rights balances at times. We must ensure that all cultural expression is done within the rule of law and in an inclusive manner. Indeed, the OFMDFM community relations strategy, Together: Building a United Community (T:BUC), clearly suggests that all public space is shared space. It is not an aspiration, but a principle that is set out in the strategy. It is not, as I have heard many people falsely say, neutral or anaemic space, but is about the behaviour that takes place while you are in that space. It should be based on dignity and respect and should not be about triumphalism or intimidation.

12.45 pm

From the point of view of the Alliance Party, the approach to parades and protests must be based on human rights, take account of responsibilities and be about improving relationships. There are, of course, rights to assemble and rights to a private life, key principles in the Good Friday Agreement about freedom from sectarian harassment and, indeed, the aspiration of our Executive to see all public space as shared space. As MLAs, we should make it absolutely clear that violence never pays. It has always been counterproductive and self-destructive and it has always divided rather than united this community.

Mr Humphrey: Will the Member give way?

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Mr Lyttle: Who to? I will take here and then here. Go for it.

Mr Humphrey: I thank the Member for giving way. Can you tell me, as someone who has spent his entire adult life working with young people in north Belfast, how I tell people, particularly young people, that violence does not pay, when the Parades Commission rewarded the violence of republicans in 2012 and when the House, only a few weeks ago, refused to sanction a Member who willfully broke the law? How do I tell people — how do you tell people — that violence and lawbreaking does not pay?

Mr Lyttle: I want to make it very clear that I supported the sanction. I think that it was a missed opportunity for the Assembly to make clear what type of behaviour is unacceptable. Unfortunately, we missed those opportunities on other occasions with MLAs from other parties.

I say that violence does not pay. You tell me the state of community relations in the area where you are having to work extremely hard to repair them? Violence and the threat of violence is not productive, and because other people behave in a violent manner should not lead you to encourage anyone else to meet that violence with violent behaviour.

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Mr Lyttle: Yes.

Mr Allister: The Member rightly says that violence should not pay. However, how can anyone analyse the Parades Commission's decisions on the Ardoyne and not conclude that violence most certainly has paid for those who have used and threatened it. It has shaped the determinations of the Parades Commission, which simply bowed to the biggest stick. Is that not the story of Ardoyne?

Mr Lyttle: I am sure that the Parades Commission would robustly disagree with that analysis. I do not think it is helpful. The Parades Commission has to consider a number of things, and once a determination is made it is incumbent on all elected representatives to uphold that lawful determination.

Frankly, words are not enough. There have been opportunities. We had the shared future strategy in 2005, a draft cohesion, sharing and integration strategy in 2010, Together: Building a United Community in 2013, the Haass process and now another opportunity with party talks.

Elected leaders need to get their heads out of the sand, and we need to deal with these issues. If people want an alternative way to deal with parades and protests they should show leadership and create it, but, in the absence of any new arrangements, as the motion suggests, Parades Commission rulings must be respected and adhered to as the rule of law.

There can be no equivocation or cherry-picking of what the rule of law is. That equivocation and cherry-picking is heard by people across our community, who take their lead from elected representatives, and it is wholly unacceptable.

A statement was released by the leaders of the DUP, UUP, Sinn Féin, SDLP and Alliance last year. In it, they said:

"violence is not acceptable in a democratic society, nor is it inevitable".

They also called for:

"the law to be respected and upheld at all times."

They continued:

"Whatever any of the parties may believe about the wisdom of any Parades Commission determinations, it is the lawful authority dealing with these matters and its decisions must be observed."

I appeal to all elected representatives to make their actions in the coming season match those words that were set out last year.

Mr Humphrey: The context for the Ardoyne situation is that, in July 2012, 2,000 republicans came onto the Crumlin Road. They attacked Twaddell Avenue, they set fire to a car and pushed it into the police ranks, and they attempted to murder police officers with automatic gunfire. Contrast that with how the Orange institution behaved when it returned on that same day from the field, adhering to an appallingly discredited determination. A token number of them returned at 4.00 pm, and they passed without incident, as they had always done in the interests of peace and community relations.

All violence is wrong and should be condemned from whatever quarter it comes. The former Parades Commission, however, clearly rewarded violence, and it rewarded wrongdoing. It is important to remember that it also rewarded the threat of potential violence.

For republicans at Ardoyne, there is no shared space and there is no shared future. The current Parades Commission, of course, has followed sadly along those same lines of continuing to reward the threat of violence and enshrine a nationalist veto. Rewarding violence, evil and wrongdoing is wrong. It undermines democracy, and it undermines the rule of law. For some 125 years, lodges from Ligoniel have processed down the Crumlin Road. I have to say to nationalists, if they do not come down the Crumlin Road — and nationalists are happy for them to come down the Crumlin Road; they are just not happy for them to return along the Crumlin Road, even at 8.00 am or 9.00 am. Where do they process, then, for their human rights and civil rights to be recognised? Do they go down the Oldpark Road or the Cavehill Road, or do they go down the Cliftonville Road? It is strange that nationalists are prepared to tolerate morning parades but that they absolutely reject an evening parade on 12 July. Six minutes of intolerance.

I believe in civil and religious liberty. I am a proud unionist, and I am confident of my history, tradition, culture, heritage and politics. I am confident, and I accept others' traditions and their right to celebrate their culture, and I respect their right to do so. "Tolerance", "respect", "accommodation" and "dialogue" are words that we have heard much of from nationalists, and I hear constantly from nationalist and republican politicians about dialogue and the need for dialogue to resolve issues.

Around the issue of Ligoniel lodges, there has been dialogue now for over 10 years. The current process started before Christmas, when nationalists failed to turn up. There were intensive talks in March and April, and, unfortunately, they led to no resolution. I have to say that when nationalists talk about dialogue, they are being completely disingenuous. Sinn Féin, the SDLP, the Crumlin Ardoyne Residents Association (CARA) and the Greater Ardoyne Residents Collective (GARC) have opposed an evening parade. Their starting point is no evening parade, and that veto is continuing to be protected.

The opposition to a traditional Orange parade was not simply a policy that was thought of on the hoof. It was hatched by Sinn Féin and the IRA, going back to a speech when Gerry Adams revealed it all in Athboy, when his mask slipped. People like Mac Cionnaith, Nelis and Rice were deliberately put in place.

How can unionism and loyalism reach accommodation with those who talk of dialogue and want local solutions when these parties campaign against parades, lobby the police against parades, lobby the Parades Commission against parades and, in the case of the SDLP and Sinn Féin, protest at those same parades, including church parades? Gerry Kelly said last year in relation to the Orange brethren at Twaddell and the Crumlin Road:

"They can stand there all they like. They won't be getting up."

Paul Carson recently said on 'Spotlight':

"We will mobilise thousands to come to Ardoyne if a parade is allowed up."

His words were echoed by Dee Fennell, another dissident spokesperson from Ardoyne in the 'Belfast Telegraph' last week. I was recently part of a joint delegation to the Parades Commission, when the chair of the commission said in relation to Ardoyne:

"There is absolute rejection from what we have heard from all nationalist parties to an evening parade."

So, accommodation, shared space, shared future, dialogue, tolerance, respect — there is not any. There is absolute rejection from all sides.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Will the Member bring his remarks to a close?

Mr Humphrey: Last week, Gemma McKenna of Sinn Féin said:

"We maintain the view that there is no rationale for any loyal order parade in this area".

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is up. I call Daithí McKay.

Mr Humphrey: There is no tolerance for the Orange tradition in this place.

Mr McKay: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. We will be supporting the motion and the amendment. It is important that the motion highlights the absence of agreement, because that is the real issue here — the absence of agreement on parades, flags and the past. When I looked at the research paper and at the speech that I made the last time that we discussed parades, it seemed like Groundhog Day; we are going over the same issues again and again. The only way that we are going to resolve that is by engaging with the talks process that is being put in place, following on from the developments of the Haass proposals, engaging positively, and not having an eye on the next election down the road but thinking about how this will secure better outcomes for the future of all society.

Indeed, I wish the new Chief Constable well in his role over the summer period. The proposer of the amendment was right to say that the police, in recent years, have become the shock absorbers because there has been an absence of agreement around all these issues.

Many parades take place that are respectful and where participants do not wish to cause offence. They are dignified and pass off peacefully. There are good examples, and we look to Crumlin and Derry, where accommodation and agreements can be made if there is a willingness on all sides.

But this is not an issue that cropped up only in the past number of years; it is not something that was conjured up by Gerry Adams, Gerry Kelly or anybody else. This has been going on for hundreds of years. This is part of our history. If you go back to the 1800s or back to the early 20th century, you will see that there were always issues around parades, and they have never been resolved. This is an opportunity to resolve these issues once and for all.

We need to learn from last year's mistakes. We cannot afford to see a repeat of any Grand Old Duke of York act up to Ardoyne, whether that is at the behest of the Orange Order leadership or elsewhere, because that is not good for police officers and their safety, it is not good for business or the image of Belfast, and it is not good for young unionists who get involved at the interface and end up having to go into the criminal justice system, the process and the slippery slope that leads to unfortunate social outcomes. Those are the consequences of a lack of leadership on parades in Belfast and elsewhere.

The Parades Commission should be allowed to get on with its job without being threatened by the DUP, the Orange Order and others, and without pressure being exerted by the NIO and other parties. We need to ensure that the role of the Parades Commission is respected, because we have not come to an agreement on the way forward on parades, flags and the past. Until we reach that agreement, I cannot see how anybody can complain about the Parades Commission, given that they did not follow through on previous negotiations.

The public want these issues dealt with. I spoke to a taxi driver in Belfast the other day, and he was fearful because of some of the rumours that he had heard about what might happen over the coming days and weeks. That will obviously permeate throughout the city and the business community, and it will affect tourists as well. The economic and social consequences of this are not a price that I feel is worth paying.

We need to move this issue forward. People do not want to see the policing budget spent on camps and parades and being taken away from community policing in rural and urban communities. They want to see that money put on the front line where it belongs.

Ms Ruane: Will the Member take an intervention?

Mr McKay: Yes.

Ms Ruane: Does the Member agree with me that the money spent currently on Twaddell Avenue would be far better spent on welfare and protecting the most vulnerable?

Mr McKay: I absolutely agree.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Mr McKay: Some of the areas and interfaces that are affected as a result of parades are some of our most deprived societies. The proposer of the amendment —

Mr McCausland: Will the Member give way?

1.00 pm

Mr McKay: I will not take another intervention, sorry.

The proposer of the amendment referred to that as well. So, those who end up being involved at the behest of some politicians' words end up entering the criminal justice system and a vicious cycle of deprivation. We need to break that cycle. We need to ensure that there is agreement on parades, flags and the past — issues that dog our society every summer. People are sick and tired of it; the police are sick and tired of it; we are sick and tired of it. It is about time that unionist parties in the House showed some leadership, first and foremost for the benefit of their community.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Before I call the next Member to speak, I remind Members of two things: first, the actual language and text of the motion; and, secondly, to be mindful that words spoken here resonate in our community. The mover of the motion was wise enough to remind us of that.

Mr Attwood: The SDLP will support the amendment and the motion. However, when you cut through all of this, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker — this may touch on the point that you have just made — in the times and weeks in which we are living and in the debate that we are having, does it not come down to whether people in every party are prepared to say today that, whatever may happen over the next two weeks, their parties will advise people, wherever they may be in Northern Ireland, to accept the decision of the Parades Commission?

I make that point for a number of reasons. First, more than any other party, last autumn the SDLP was publicly and privately profoundly critical of the Secretary of State's decision to stand down the previous Parades Commission, to reduce the membership of the current commission to five, to reduce the number of days that it works and so on and so forth. That was because we saw, in doing that, the potential for bad outcomes. Despite our concerns about how the British Government, and the Secretary of State in particular, conducted themselves at that time, and whatever about the democratic right to peaceful protest, we are telling people, unambiguously, to accept the decisions of the Parades Commission. Save for the Alliance Party, we can say that with more integrity and authority than any other party in the Chamber.

Not very long ago, the party on the Benches to my right referred to the Parades Commission as “cheerleaders for sectarianism” and “obsolete”. Those words have been echoed by other parties in the Chamber too often and in too many disputes over too many years. In doing so, they undermined the rule of law. Whether you like it or love it, the Parades Commission, as an institution over all these years, is the expression of the rule of law in our society. So the question is this: is every party prepared to say, during and at the end of this debate that — whatever transpires over the next days; whatever our misgivings about the Secretary of State and her conduct; whatever our views might be about the Parades Commission and the democratic right to peaceful protest — we accept the determinations?

Mr Elliott: Will the Member give way?

Mr Attwood: I will. We in the SDLP have found certain Parades Commission determinations over the years difficult, but we told people to accept them. That is the standard of this debate; that is the standard of these days; that is the standard that we have to live up to on 12 July.

Mr Elliott: I thank the Member for giving way. Will he reflect back to — I need to check the date, but I think that it was 1998 — when their elected representatives in Portadown strongly opposed the decision to allow a parade down Garvaghy Road and, as far as I recall, protested very strongly, [Interruption.] maybe legally.

Secondly, will he reflect on supporting the petition of concern that stopped the Assembly bringing sanctions against Mr Gerry Kelly, who broke the law in north Belfast recently?

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Attwood: Thank you, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. On the first point, I was with Bríd Rodgers on the Garvaghy Road when the decision was made at a political and policing level to send a parade down it. It was the first Parades Commission that then laid down the principles at the heart of disputes in this society. In the year that it was established, and in making the first decision about the Garvaghy Road, it said that, at the heart of disputes about parades, were relationships and that relationships needed to be resolved in order to resolve parading disputes. It said that to resolve relationship disputes, you needed sustained, direct and meaningful dialogue.

Mr Anderson: Will the Member give way?

Mr Attwood: I will in a second.

That is what the Parades Commission said. So, yes, there were times when even I was on the Garvaghy Road, objecting to what the police and the political authorities had decided, but the Parades Commission then laid down principles. If our society, our communities, our protesters and our Orange lodges had lived up to the standards of sustained, direct and meaningful dialogue in every year since, we would be in a better place.

In the next number of days, the political parties will have to challenge themselves again to engage in direct, sustained and meaningful dialogue. We do not need the appearance of talks, which is what we have; we need direct, sustained and meaningful dialogue. In that space, we can create the paradigm shift that we need to resolve the multiple expressions of conflict and division that are all around us in the Chamber and in our society.

Mr McCausland: The motion refers to the need for “respect, restraint and tolerance”. Is it too much to ask, then, that nationalists and republicans show sufficient respect, restraint and tolerance to enable them to get to the point at which they do not oppose and object to three small lodges and one band returning home on the Twelfth night along the main Crumlin Road to their starting point at Ligoniel? Is it too much to ask? Is there sufficient respect, restraint and tolerance on that side of the Chamber to allow them to do that?

They may vote for a motion that speaks about those things, but the reality is that there is no respect or tolerance. Five minutes — 10 minutes at the most — is all that it would take for the brethren and the band to return home. However, 10 minutes of tolerance is too much for the SDLP and too much for Sinn Féin. They could not even find it in their hearts to show 10 minutes of tolerance.

My colleague William Humphrey referred to the speech by Gerry Adams in 1995, in which he pointed back to 1992 and said:

“Three years of work went into creating that situation and fair play to those people who put the work in.”

On the Ormeau Road and in Portadown, Fermanagh, Newry, Armagh, Bellaghy and Londonderry, the work was put in by Sinn Féin to create that situation. Daithí McKay took us on a journey back through the centuries. However, in the years since 1992, when the Sinn Féin machine went into operation on this, there has been a sustained attack by republicans on Orange culture and tradition, and not just on parades. Alongside and linked in some way to it, as pointed out earlier this year by the Grand Secretary of the Grand Orange Lodge, has been the burning down of Orange halls. In the 25 years before the Sinn Féin campaign, 39 Orange halls were burned down; in the 10 years after it began, 192 were burned down. Between 2010 and 2012, some 114 attacks on Orange halls were reported to the police. If burning down that number of Orange halls is not a cultural war — and I noted that Mr Lyttle said that he does not like the term “cultural war” — I do not know what it is.

As regards the parade at Ligoniel up the Crumlin Road, the first Orange lodge was formed there in 1865. They have been parading there for 150 years. That road is generally seen as a shared road. It has on it a car wash, a public library, an ambulance station, a health centre and shops. Those are, or should be, used by people from both traditions. Is it too much to ask that Orange brethren are allowed to return along that road?

What republicans want to do is sectarianise the road. They want to claim control of it. The reality, in the case of Ardoyne, is that it is people who are not in the Chamber, the dissident republicans and GARC, who are the tail wagging the nationalist and republican dog. They are scared to face them down. Two years ago, GARC brought 1,000, 2,000 or whatever number of people — a howling mob — out onto the front of the Crumlin Road. That was a shambles that was authorised and approved by the Parades Commission. At the very point where Orange brethren should have been having a peaceful, dignified parade up the road, the road was occupied by a howling mob of people going down, throwing missiles and howling abuse. Is that the sort of society that we want?

I noted that Alex Atwood spoke about the principles of the Parades Commission. The principle of the Parades Commission is to reward violence. Dee Fennell said in the 'Belfast Telegraph' the other day:

"We told the Parades Commission that in the past we have shown our willingness and ability to use radical means to stop parades taking place. We said we would do so again ... We would have mobilised people and we would have blocked the road".

We have seen what "radical means" actually means on the streets of north Belfast. Talk about dialogue. There have been 10 years of dialogue.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is almost up.

Mr McCausland: What is there left for brethren there to talk about with republicans and nationalists? Are we down to discussing the colour of the laces on their shoes? That must be about the only thing that has not been talked about after 10 years of dialogue, and still there is no tolerance.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. I support the motion and the amendment. The motion rightly calls for the principles of respect, restraint and tolerance to be upheld. The motion and the amendment highlight the responsibility that is placed on elected representatives. The Assembly should, and must, endorse these principles. Equality should not be simply a buzzword; it must be actioned.

My constituency in Derry has done that. Derry has very clearly sent out the message that we can negotiate, take risks and accommodate. Increasingly, in Belfast, the lack of engagement with residents' groups, the illegal protests, the cost of policing these protests set alongside —

Mr McCausland: Will the Member give way?

Ms Maeve McLaughlin: No, I will not.

All that, set alongside the continuing work in Derry, means, as the deputy First Minister said recently, that it has become a tale of two cities.

If we are genuinely serious about inward investment, tourism, job creation and the ensuing economic growth, we also need to be serious about resolving the parades issue. We, in the House, must all ask ourselves this question: why is there not dialogue or negotiation with a view to finding agreement? Negotiation should not take away from anyone's culture. We can work collectively towards marches that are not contentious. Equally, residents who have problems or issues should be listened to.

We should effectively take on what are our responsibilities. After all, we are the elected representatives. We are the people who are supposed to give leadership, come up with the initiatives, programmes or projects, and sit down in a calm, rational and mature way. We do not have to do it in this Chamber. We were able to do it in the city of Derry, in a process very much accommodated by the DUP's own Willie Hay.

1.15 pm

Mr Humphrey: Will the Member give way?

Ms Maeve McLaughlin: No, I will not.

It was a process very much facilitated through the Speaker of the House. It was greatly encouraged by, and did indeed greatly encourage, the process of negotiation and accommodation. It was a process that involved dialogue and risks, but it also involved accommodation based on the principles of respect and equality. The question before us is this: if that process can work in Derry, why can it not work in Belfast?

Mr Anderson: I must declare an interest: I am proud to say that I am a member of the Orange Institution, the Royal Black Institution and the Apprentice Boys. As a representative of Upper Bann, I come from a constituency that has experienced more than its fair share of difficulties over parades. Despite what some would have us believe, the parading issue in Portadown has not been resolved; far from it. We have just had another example of it in the last few days, and I will return to that in a few minutes.

The motion speaks of "respect, restraint and tolerance". I agree that those things would go a long way towards resolving the problems surrounding parades. For many decades, there was little or no difficulty over parades simply because there was that mutual respect, restraint and tolerance. For many years, traditional loyal order parades passed off in a peaceful manner, and I believe that the vast majority of the nationalist community is still quite prepared to let the Orangemen have their day.

The parading issue has been hijacked by republicans determined to create a range of contentious parades, conveniently selected to cause maximum tension and disruption. Sinn Féin and the SDLP lecture us about civil rights, equality and parity of esteem, but this is nothing but hypocrisy, for it is quite clear that those parties are determined to do all in their power to deny the Protestant/unionist community its civil and religious liberties. I go further: to me, Sinn Féin and the SDLP are guilty of bigotry and sectarianism. Loyal order parades are Protestant parades. Nationalists demand the rerouting of sectarian marches, but this really means Protestant parades and often Protestant Church parades. The real sectarianism is to be found among those who oppose these loyal order parades.

All that is well illustrated by the parade planned for last Saturday in Portadown. That one-off parade and service was simply to rededicate an arch in memory of a member of the Parkmount arch committee who sadly passed away a few months ago. It was along a short stretch of road known locally as Victoria Terrace, which is not part of the Garvaghy Road; neither is it part of the impasse over the Church parade returning from Drumcree Parish Church along Garvaghy Road. False assertions about the whole issue are part of the propaganda and war waged by Breandán Mac Cionnaith, who was once trained by Sinn Féin, and today is still supported by Dolores Kelly, who is not in the Chamber, and John O'Dowd, who is in the Chamber.

Victoria Terrace contains 22 houses occupied by ethnic minorities, Protestants and those of mixed religion. I surveyed most of those homes last week and not one of the residents had any objection to the parade. In fact, they saw it as part of our culture and they said that they had enjoyed the recent junior Orange parade at the end of May. Some residents felt that they were being used by those opposed to the parade and no one had sought their views. Residents also felt that they were being placed in danger because of this particular campaign.

What we are now witnessing in Portadown is another illustration of republicans and nationalists seeking to further exclude and alienate Protestants and to take control of another area, which is adjacent to and within yards of a public park, which is undergoing a shared space programme to the tune of over £5 million of EU funding. That park has been a no-go area to the Protestant/unionist people for over 40 years, and now we have these same people trying to further extend the alienation of the Protestant/unionist people by denying them their right to walk along Victoria Terrace.

The hard-line attitude being taken by Mrs Kelly and Mr O'Dowd in supporting Breandán Mac Cionnaith sends out a very alarming signal to the Protestant/unionist people of Portadown and beyond. It is a case of "not a Protestant about the place" and marking out more territory.

I was part of a delegation led by David Simpson MP that recently met the Parades Commission about last week's parade. We presented new evidence and were left with a clear impression that it would consider the issue again. Of course, that was a forlorn hope.

Mr Givan: Will the Member give way?

Mr Anderson: OK.

Mr Givan: Having met the Parades Commission, does the Member agree that, given the way it handled that decision by doing that U-turn, it has, some would say, lost any credibility that it ever had, if it had credibility in the first place to lose?

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Anderson: I certainly agree with my colleague. We put forward an argument on that occasion and thought that the issues were being addressed. We thought that we had put forward a very robust argument as to why this should be overturned, but the decision that was originally taken and then overturned shows that the Parades Commission was prepared to listen to untruths, because that is what they were. As I have already said, the Parades Commission was told untruths about the people along Victoria Terrace.

There are those on Garvaghy Road who state that the parading issue in Portadown is a dead duck. Let me assure those people that it is still very much a live issue and will continue to be so until nationalists and republicans display respect, restraint and tolerance towards their Protestant and unionist fellow citizens. That way, Portadown and other areas can move forward with genuine hope.

Mr Maskey: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. It is very regrettable that we are even here in the Chamber this afternoon discussing this matter. As both my colleagues have said, our party will support the motion and the amendment, and why would we not? When you consider what the motion suggests and says and what the amendment calls on all of us to do, why would we not subscribe to all of that? Quite clearly, we are more than happy to support the motion and the amendment.

The remarks from Tom Elliott, who proposed and spoke to the motion, really added nothing to the discussion. With all due respect to Tom, it added nothing to the debate. It gave us no new information and nothing additional to consider; it merely rehearsed a number of the arguments that we hear frequently. I do not believe that the vast majority of the public out there, if they tune into this debate this afternoon, would, first of all, be at all surprised. I think that they are likely to be disappointed and more likely to be bemused that we are having this discussion in the Chamber today despite the fact that talks are starting tomorrow. So, within 24 hours, all the parties at senior levels will have dedicated discussions/negotiations around this and other very important matters that are left over from the Haass discussions. I think that most people will be scratching their heads and wondering, since we are going into negotiations, why we are having this debate in the Chamber today at all. I would have liked Members either not to have moved the debate this afternoon at all, which I think would have been the sensible thing to do, or, in the absence of that, if we are to have a discussion, I would have liked us at least to address how we might conduct ourselves in the negotiations that are starting tomorrow.

(Mr Speaker in the Chair)

It is very late in the day. This is already 1 July, and the Haass talks ended six months ago. Notwithstanding that, they recommence tomorrow, and we have had a period of party leaders' discussions on and off for the past couple of months. Tomorrow commences a set of negotiations, and none of us knows where they will go. Our party is very committed to making sure that they are successful and that we conclude the business laid out by the Richard Haass and Meghan O'Sullivan final paper because, quite clearly, the way to resolve these issues is through dialogue, respect and, unfortunately, regulation and enforcement, if that has to be the end result. We have many examples — Members have addressed this already in the debate — of where parades have been more successfully conducted because there has been some local dialogue. We have heard how the situation in Derry was addressed. We have heard what happened in Crumlin and other places. Even in my city, Belfast, there have been some examples of, where there have been discussions, some understanding being reached locally to minimise a lot of the problems. However, we still have a small number —

Mr Campbell: Will the Member give way?

Mr Maskey: Yes.

Mr Campbell: The Member referred to a number of locations where dialogue has occurred but he did not mention Portadown. Portadown Members are here on all sides, but my understanding is that repeated attempts have been made to get dialogue in Portadown, but that those who say they represent people on the Garvaghy Road will not have that dialogue.

Mr Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Maskey: Thank you, a Cheann Comhairle. The fact is that, when people want dialogue, it is like everything else: if people are invited in to dialogue, they have to have an understanding that it will be meaningful and respectful. It is up to people to decide — [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order. Allow the Member to continue. The Member has the Floor.

Mr Maskey: I am doing my level best to be very patient and generous. [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order.

Mr Maskey: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I am trying not to rile Members opposite because I know that, getting into this period of the year, it is quite difficult for them to keep settled. [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order. The Member has the Floor.

Mr Maskey: That is my direct personal experience of growing up in the city of Belfast, which I will never leave, by the way, because I love my city. I do not like aspects of it, but that is par for the course.

I am determined to send the message that, tomorrow, an opportunity will commence for all parties to enter negotiations with an absolute commitment to resolve the problems. That is what we need to do. That is what people out there want to hear. They do not want to hear a meaningless debate in the Chamber that only facilitates some people rehearsing the arguments.

Daithí McKay and other Members referred to other situations. Ardoyne is not just a current problem. Many would cite Ardoyne, 1969, as a milestone in this phase of the conflict. But Portadown, 150 years ago, was a problem. I am not even going to say where the problem emanated from, but the problem was there. Parades in that part of the world were universally banned for quite some time because of difficulties. For me, the legacy of what we have learned over the years has to be that, where people are committed to respectful dialogue and serious engagement, we can get a positive outcome for those who want to parade or those who feel offended by certain aspects of some parades. Where we have tolerance, respect and a dignified celebration of our culture, rather than people going to the toilet outside chapel gates —

Mr Speaker: Will the Member bring his remarks to a close?

Mr Maskey: — we can get a resolution that meets everybody's needs in a respectful manner. Tomorrow, the clock starts ticking for all the parties to do that.

Mr Eastwood: It is very difficult, as has already been said, to play any part in the debate and, at the same time, try to keep tensions reduced and things calm. Everybody has their own perspective on the issue. There is not just one issue but a number of issues, across the North. People have different feelings about all those issues and difficulties. I will do my best to try to heed Mr Elliott's advice. Whatever the content of his speech, his plea for calmness and tolerance is the right one.

We need to acknowledge, as the Principal Deputy Speaker said, that what happens in here is heard out there and that we are in a very difficult time. Every year, we come to this time of year, and, unfortunately, it is difficult. Whatever people say, a lot of the issues that have already been talked about have not just arrived in anybody's in tray; they have been there for a long time. Parading is a historic issue in Ireland and one that we have never really got to grips with. Luckily, parades can pass off peacefully in many areas, but there are many reasons why they do not in other areas and why people feel that parades should not go through particular areas. The bottom line in all this is that, whatever we come up with in these talks, we have a process for dealing with parades right now. I cannot honestly see a very different process coming out of any negotiation.

1.30 pm

The process at the moment is that we have an independent commission that decides on controversial parades. That is as good as we are going to get. We go to negotiations, as we do in all negotiations, with a will to try to solve things, and I hope that everybody else does the same. However, we need some sort of independent arbiter to decide on these issues. If people cannot decide on them themselves through negotiation, respect and long, hard slog, somebody will have to make the call. Many times, I will not like the call and, many times, other people will not like it either, but we have to be prepared, as Mr Attwood said, to live with those decisions. It does not mean that we cannot protest them, but it means that we have to do so in a peaceful, dignified and respectful way. That goes for everybody, whatever the decision may be.

Members talked about the PSNI. Over the last 18 months to two years, we have put members of the PSNI in the firing line from people from different sections of our community, and that is not good enough. We have all, thankfully, signed up to the justice system, to policing and to the rule of law, and we need to do everything that we can to protect those PSNI officers whom we put in harm's way but also to protect the communities that have to suffer this, year in, year out.

Derry was mentioned. I am not going to stand here and lecture anybody, because Derry is not Ardoyne, Portadown or a whole lot of other places. However, the principle that underpins what has happened in Derry — you know it very well, Mr Speaker — is one of constant conversation, where people will get round the table when difficult issues are on the horizon and talk things through. That is not always easy; we do not always come to it

Mr Humphrey: I am grateful to the Member for giving way. You are quite right; I do not know the situation in Londonderry, but, clearly, both sides in Londonderry were willing to reach an accommodation and to show tolerance and respect. Given what other unionist representatives and I were faced with when we went to the Parades Commission, if you are confronted with a situation where it is said that there is absolute rejection of a parade from all nationalist parties — including yours — what exactly do people who want to parade do in that context?

Mr Speaker: The Member has an added minute.

Mr Eastwood: Sometimes, we are all very good at talking about our rights, but with rights come responsibilities. Sometimes, you have to step back and say, "I do not want to exercise that right today", because you think that it will cause mayhem on the streets of Belfast, Portadown, Derry or somewhere else. We all have responsibilities to ensure that everything that we do is done in a respectful way and in a way that understands that we have to appreciate everybody else's opinion. I encourage everybody in north Belfast and Portadown to get round the table to try to resolve these issues. My party will not be found wanting when it comes to that; it never has been before.

Someone on the other side of the Chamber said that we were scared to face dissidents down. I can tell you that we are not afraid to face dissidents down; we face them down every day. I just hope that the same spirit of facing down the dissidents in our community and those who are determined to cause mayhem in the streets of Belfast or anywhere else is carried through by Members on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr Allister: Parading is, above all, an expression of culture and, particularly in our historic situation, that is how it has evolved. Of course it is right that for centuries, perhaps, there have been instances of conflict in that regard. However, it is indisputably clear that, in recent times, there has been an accentuation of the difficulties over parades, not by accident but by design. That design has already been identified in this debate by the quoting of the remarks of Gerry Adams in the mid-90s, when he pointed out that what was now happening with parades, stopping and protesting about parades, was, indeed, no accident but was the design of Sinn Féin.

That is what we have seen ever since.

This year, the focus is, of course, on Ardoyne. That is because it epitomises much of the issue at the heart of this. If parading is an expression of culture, it comes down to a question of the capacity for toleration of others not of that culture to abide and permit the expression of pursuit of that culture. The very fact that Sinn Féin had a hand in orchestrating opposition to that indicates where it is coming from. That is why unionists, and I include myself, see all of that as part of that orchestrated cultural war in which Sinn Féin is engaged. You can reduce that to a number of quite compelling factors. One is that Sinn Féin is a party that demands shared government but is not prepared to share the public road. It has the audacity to say, "We demand, as of right, to share in government, but we will not tolerate, permit or allow the sharing of public space." That attitude persists. Maybe the lesson should be learned that it is a quid pro quo in some respects.

It was pointed out that what is asked for at Ardoyne is for public space to be processed for a few minutes. Those who say no demonstrate their deep belligerence and bigotry in so doing. Then, of course, they are helped on by the pernicious, perverse Parades Commission. I say "perverse" because — take the Ardoyne decision — it decides, quite rightly, that it is appropriate for the Orangemen to leave their hall, but, perversely, that they cannot return. Why is that being said by the residents of the area, who put themselves in the way of being annoyed by that parade? It is another way of their saying to the Orangemen that, "There is no home for you here. You are not coming home here. This is not your area. This is our exclusive, 'Ourselves Alone' area." That is why they argue that, "You can leave it in the morning, but you shall never return to it because it is not your home."

That is the message that Sinn Féin and the SDLP, by their belligerence, convey to those of the Protestant and unionist tradition about what should be that shared space up the Crumlin Road. We had some sanctimonious lectures from Mr Maskey about all of those things. They should look in the mirror and see why it is that they are so belligerent and bigoted in their inability to show the modicum of tolerance required for a resolution to the situation.

Mr Speaker: The Member must bring his remarks to a close.

Mr Allister: They have been told, "No talk, no walk".

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is gone.

Mr Allister: Maybe, if there is no walk, there should be no talk.

Mr Lyttle: Some Members have questioned the purpose of the debate. I think that the opportunity to endorse the important principles of respect, restraint, tolerance and upholding the rule of law is an important one. I thank the Members who took that opportunity and responded in the spirit of the motion. I regret that some used the type of inflammatory language that does not help these extremely sensitive situations.

Tom Elliott rightly condemned extreme violent intolerance from some people who call themselves republicans, and I agree with that condemnation.

William Humphrey said that, for republicans in Ardoyne, there is no shared future. Whilst today's debate was about principles rather than individual areas or decisions, I regret that the challenge was not taken up by some of the Members and parties that it was aimed at to try to explain what their vision of a shared future actually is. I agree with Mr Humphrey about comments from Gerry Kelly like:

"They can stand there all they like."

That is some of the unhelpful, inflammatory language that I referred to earlier. To say that there is absolutely no rationale for loyal order parades in that area challenges some of the principles set out in Together: Building a United Community, including that all public space should be shared space. I think that there are challenges for all Members of the House to respond to some of those types of comments.

We have to get away from labelling areas as nationalist or unionist. That flies in the face of the OFMDFM Executive target of building one united community in this region, where all public space is shared space. I think that Members, especially those in the DUP and Sinn Féin, which hold the positions of First Minister and deputy First Minister, should respond to the contradiction that lies within that.

William Humphrey asked me what he should say to young people in his area about violence. I encourage him to tell them that violence has done absolutely nothing for this community, other than achieve criminal records, injury and loss, destroy community cohesion and prevent community development across our community. To engage in violence also does a great disservice to the many responsible people involved in the organisations that he said he represents and engages with. Peaceful, lawful and democratic action is key to responding to these issues, and I am willing to represent and meet anybody who has legitimate concerns within that context.

Alex Attwood rightly said that a core concept that must come out of today is that, regardless of disagreements, we must accept the determination of the Parades Commission as the rule of law. He also helpfully said that, whilst rights and responsibility are important, relationships are key, and I agree with that. If Mr Attwood were in the Chamber, I would ask him — I am sure that he can respond to this on another occasion — whether he therefore agrees that to deal with parades in isolation will not get the job done and that, although we can change the architecture for parading, we must have robust good relations strategies in place that encourage equality, good relations and mutual respect across our community.

Nelson McCausland —

Mr A Maginness: Will the Member give way?

Mr Lyttle: Yes, briefly.

Mr A Maginness: On the contentious parade in Ardoyne, does the Member agree that it is vital that local resolution not only be tried but be successful to resolve that continuing situation?

Mr Speaker: The Member has an added minute.

Mr Lyttle: I wholeheartedly agree. Strong leadership from the Assembly and from elected representatives is obviously key, but, ultimately, local dialogue has to take place to reach a resolution to what is now an extremely entrenched issue, unfortunately.

We again had accusations of a “cultural war”, which I regard as an astoundingly dangerous and unhelpful phrase. Nelson McCausland and Jim Allister both mentioned that. Burning down Orange halls, attacking Catholic churches and other sectarian crimes are heinous, counterproductive and violent sectarianism, but to talk of wars against entire cultures is astoundingly dangerous, and, to be frank, to associate the Alliance Party with that at times is an absolute disgrace. We need to get away from that type of language and get back to building the united community that we want to see.

Maeve McLaughlin said that this was an opportunity for the Assembly to endorse the principles set out by the motion, and I wholeheartedly agree with that.

Paul Givan again questioned the credibility of the Parades Commission. This is a Member who, during an OFMDFM Committee meeting, called the Parades Commission “anti-Protestant” and was suitably rebutted by a parades commissioner whose family holds Orange Order membership. So the credibility of that accusation towards the Parades Commission is wholly unfounded, and it is unhelpful in the spirit of today’s debate.

1.45 pm

In conclusion, an increasing number of people in our community are fed up with our inability to address these types of issues and move on from them. Derry/Londonderry has shown leadership on these issues, and, indeed, people want to hear about other issues, such as the increasing number of jobs and apprenticeships that are being created. People want to hear about and focus on those issues. So I hope that is the message that we send from this Chamber today.

Mr Speaker: I call Michael Copeland to wind on the motion. The Member has 10 minutes.

Mr Copeland: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I may not even need the 10 minutes on this occasion, which, I am sure, will be very welcome. This portion of a debate is traditionally called “winding up”, and I would say that there have been a good deal of useful contributions from pretty much all quarters, and I found something of merit in some of the things that were said by most people. I did note a degree of winding up, which could be expected in a debate of this nature, even when it is not the winder-up who is winding up.

The truth is, if we aspire to live in a democracy, incumbent on that is the notion that you will hear things that you do not like. Incumbent on that notion is the reality that you will see things that you do not like, and the truth is, when you take it upon yourself to restrict someone else’s freedom to say things and do things, you actually challenge your rights in that society.

Parading, walking and demonstrating were the terms that I always heard used in connection with Orange, Black and Apprentice Boys’ parades in the past. Marching — and I know something about marching, having once been a soldier — does not equate to a lot of what goes on at Orange, Black and Apprentice Boys’ demonstrations. They are walks and parades, and they were not designed to give offence, following the routes that they traditionally followed. Then, some years ago, for whatever reason, there was talk of marching, which gave, in my view, a militaristic and aggressive resonance to the parades that was not there originally.

Tolerance, respect and restraint should not only be confined to contested parades. Those values should be present in every relationship that every citizen has with every other citizen in this country. We can talk in this place until we are blue in the face, and the truth is that on a particular night, at an interface or at a protest or demonstration, our society will be reduced to the lowest common denominator by he who throws the first stone.

There is much myth about the content, even of the music, which, on occasions, is contested. I well remember Michael Fisher of RTÉ pursuing me up Templemore Avenue, wanting to know why one of the better-known flute bands in east Belfast had just passed by playing ‘The Patriot Game’, which is a well-known tune in Irish nationalism and, indeed, republicanism. The truth is that the band was not playing ‘The Patriot Game’; it was playing a tune called ‘Tramp! Tramp! Tramp!’, which grew from the American civil war, came to Ireland with the Fenian movement and became ‘The Patriot Game’. It then came north of the border with the words, “No Priest, Pope or Holy Water”, set to the same piece of music. The same piece of music.

The people for whom I feel most sorry are those who have been made to feel that their sense of being is in some way unfit to be seen by their neighbours. The people who feel that the colours that they wear render them a lesser human being and that their expression of who they are should be subject to regulation by a body such as the Parades Commission. I am sure that body is well intentioned, but some of the decisions that it has made down the years have, on occasion, made things worse because, once you surrender the principle of citizenship in a democracy, all else — all else — comes onto the table.

God knows, the United States is an example of many good things, but it is also an example of many bad things. Some years ago, protected by the constitution of the United States, an awful grouping of people — neo-fascist white supremacists — paraded through the Jewish district of one of the major cities, the notion being that if the constitution protected scum like them, it protected everyone. We need to create the notion that a person's liberties and rights are not restricted by law, but defended by law. That, at some stage, I am sure, will give a very major difficulty when the coin flips on to its other side.

Mr Lyttle: Will the Member give way?

Mr Copeland: Chris, not today. There is an angst felt by members of loyalist flute bands. They are viewed in disparaging terms by many, yet they are extremely democratic organisations. They raise their own money. Their leadership is only as good as the first vote of no confidence. They teach young people music, and they take them off the streets, but they are castigated because of initials on a drum or because of a symbolism on a uniform. Then they see those who castigate them for those things perambulating around with children armed with AK47 rifles, and they see sporting clubs being named after people who would be adjudicated by them as being dead terrorists. The thing does not seem fair. It may well be — I may be stupid — but it does not seem fair.

It is that growing sense of resentment and feeling of being under pressure, coupled with economic decline and the removal of the great things that were once there when people were proud to go to work and make things and stamp "Made in Belfast" or "Made in Northern Ireland" on them. They now find that education prepares them for a life of being dependent on others.

Culture is a very valued thing. Aberrations of culture can be dangerous. This is the ninety-eighth anniversary, I think, of the commencement of the Somme offensive. It is coming close to 2:00 pm here. In our time, it began at 7:00 am. There are famous pictures of soldiers of Irish, Catholic, Ulster and Protestant heritage performing deeds that I can only stand in awe of. Tonight, in my constituency, there will be one of the oldest Somme anniversary parades. It will be accompanied by tension and by screens to separate the citizens of the Short Strand from the citizens of the Albertbridge Road, for their mutual safety. There will be young people there with Union flags tied round their waists — they are young. There will be alcohol consumed on the streets from blue bags. All the ingredients are there in preparation for the first stone. They do it because they do not know what it is about. They do not know the magnitude of what took place over 100 years ago in France, yet an aberration of history drives them to express themselves in ways that will cause them no good. The answer to this lies not in those who wish to parade, but with those who wish to restrict the basic freedoms that should be available in every democracy.

The amendment includes the word "law". I thought that the aspiration inculcated in the initial motion made respect for law quite clear. I served the law. Sixty three thousand people served the law with me, and many hundreds of them were killed. To this day, many thousands are affected by the injuries that they received, and many thousands more are affected by the mental trauma of what they witnessed.

My wife was 18 years of age when a bullet passed through the constable beside her on the Springfield Road before hitting her. No one can tell me about the price of defending law. I have tried to explain my thoughts to those in the Chamber as best I can. I hope that, as this place settles down and begins to discharge its obligation towards people to defend them from the real ravages of poverty, unemployment and educational underachievement, which affect all our people, regardless of race, religion, colour, creed or gender, the sacrifice on the Somme may well have been worth something.

Question, That the amendment be made, put and agreed to.

Main Question, as amended, put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly notes, in the absence of a formal agreement on a new way forward for contested parades and associated protests, that it is essential that everyone involved, whether participants, spectators or protestors, demonstrate respect, restraint and tolerance for those of differing opinions; and calls on all organisations and parties involved, particularly elected representatives, to demonstrate unambiguous adherence to the rule of law.

Mr Speaker: As we move to Question Time, I propose, by leave of the Assembly, to suspend the sitting until 2.00 pm. The first item of business when we return will be Question Time. The sitting is, by leave, suspended.

The sitting was suspended at 1.55 pm.

Oral Answers to Questions

Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Mr Speaker: Order. Unfortunately, we have to wait for the Health Minister. That disadvantages Members who are in the House for Question Time.

Question No 3 has been withdrawn.

GP Out-of-hours Framework

Mr Boylan: Go raibh míle maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I would like to take the opportunity to apologise to you for missing a recent Question Time.

1. Mr Boylan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the GP out-of-hours framework. (AQO 6476/11-15)

Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): I approved the GP out-of-hours framework in January 2014. A project board chaired by the Regional Health and Social Care Board is in place to take the work forward. Implementation of the GP out-of-hours framework is necessarily dependent on alignment with a number of health and social care projects, including the 111 telephone number and the development of a directory of service and web portal. It is therefore not possible at this stage to give a definitive timetable for the business case process and the overall implementation of the framework.

Mr Boylan: With the Minister being late, I thought that this was out-of-hours Question Time. Can the Minister clarify that GP out-of-hours activity has increased by 18% whilst activity through emergency departments has decreased by 2%?

Mr Poots: GP out-of-hours centres are busy places. In 2012-13, providers dealt with 606,000 patients. Of those, 220,000 received telephone advice; 174,000 visited an out-of-hours centre for treatment; and 31,000 received home visits. There is a considerable amount of work going on, and we understand that GPs who work in out-of-hours services feel considerable pressure in the service that they provide. It is a challenging environment for them.

Mr G Robinson: What is the Minister's assessment of the out-of-hours service in the Limavady area? My understanding is that the out-of-hours doctors are being diverted to Altnagelvin Hospital several nights a week.

Mr Poots: I suspect that the Member could better tell me what the service is like in the Limavady area. Nonetheless, there have been occasions when out-of-hours centres have been unable to provide face-to-face consultations due to trusts being unable to secure full medical cover. Patients requiring face-to-face consultations were directed to other out-of-hours centres in the trust area, and it should be emphasised that telephone advice and home visits were provided as normal.

The issue is not unique to the Western Trust area. Over the past five years, there has been an 18% increase in demand for GP out-of-hours services, which is particularly high during bank holidays and at weekends. That places significant pressure on the system. The board, as commissioner of the service, is acutely aware of the ongoing challenges faced by trusts, including difficulties in recruiting and retaining GPs and other clinical staff, and is working with all providers, including Western Urgent Care, to address them. Measures include the new way of working with GPs and out-of-hours staff and the use of skill mix. The board remains focused on providing safe and effective GP out-of-hours services while working with staff, the public and stakeholders to develop and shape the future provision of out-of-hours services. I encourage the Member to continue discussions with senior trust representatives to secure the service that the people of Limavady expect.

Mr Rogers: Thanks to the Minister for his answers thus far. Minister, what is your assessment of the recent report citing the concerns of out-of-hours GPs in the Southern Trust area?

Mr Poots: We requested that report, and it is important that we did so that we could establish the level of job satisfaction and where the concerns and problems are. The report gives us the ability to address those issues. It was a tad unfortunate that some parts of the report were leaked in a way that sought to undermine the service. It is important that we work closely with the providers — the people on the front line — to ensure that it is a service that they want to be involved in, one that they are delivering to the best of their ability and one of which the general public are the beneficiaries.

Welfare Reform: Block Grant Reductions

2. Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what savings he plans to make in order to accommodate his Department's share of the cuts in the block grant, which will result from the failure to implement welfare reform. (AQO 6477/11-15)

Mr Poots: As I have previously outlined to the House, my Department faces a considerable challenge in 2014-15, with some £160 million of additional resources estimated to be required in order to balance the books. The deficit remains despite my commitment to deliver some £170 million of savings. I have therefore requested further resources in the June monitoring round. If they are not forthcoming, the Executive will, effectively, be agreeing to a number of serious implications, such as a pay constraint on hard-working staff, a reduction in the range or standard of services offered, the introduction of additional charges or co-payments for services and longer waiting times for scheduled care.

Let me be clear: I have not taken and will not take actions by myself that impact on front line care for patients and clients. Equally, I will not plan or make cuts in vital health and social care services to pay for the current refusal of some Members to take the necessary decisions on welfare reform. Doing nothing on welfare reform is not an option for the Executive. The failure to agree welfare reform is unforgivable, as the financial penalties being imposed by the Treasury are surely better directed at meeting the real and pressing health and social care needs of some of the most vulnerable people in our society.

Mr Wells: The Minister paints quite a bleak picture for the present financial year. If welfare reform is not settled and settled soon, what are the implications for the Department's future budgets of having to continue to pay penalties to Westminster because of our inability to deal with the issue?

Mr Poots: The pressures will increase. Every Department will feel the pinch, and the Department of Health, as the largest recipient of funding, will feel the pinch more than anyone else. The things that we have put in bids for — Members will, rightly, challenge me on them — include £13 million for safety and quality of services, and we will see whether we get that. People are always shouting about emergency departments: we have put in a bid for £22 million for unscheduled care. If some people think that that is better spent on welfare, that is a matter for them. We have also bid for £6.2 million for family health services; £10.5 million for public health; £9 million for children's services, protecting our youngest and most vulnerable; £8.5 million for supported home, largely domiciliary care for vulnerable elderly people; £20 million for specialist services; £0.5 million for the historical institutional abuse inquiry; £10 million for clinical negligence; £30 million for elective care, dealing with hip replacements, knee replacements and all of that; £21.3 million for TYC transitional funding; and £9 million for mental health and learning disability. Perhaps other Members would like to tell me which bids I should not make.

Mr Flanagan: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I do not want to steal Mr Beggs's thunder by asking about budgets and the previous Health Minister, but would the Minister be better served by not wasting money on following his own ideological campaigns against delivering equality for people, as opposed to blaming every mess that he has overseen in the health service since taking office three years ago on welfare reform and fines that have not even started to be implemented by the Executive?

Mr Poots: I really despair at the lack of knowledge demonstrated by the Member who has just spoken.
[Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order. Allow the Minister to answer.

Mr Poots: Members close their eyes to the fact. If you take a decision, that is fine, but stand by your decision. Come to the House and say, "We believe that we are better spending that money on welfare than on health". Stand up and say it, and do not be such a coward. People need to be very clear: money is being taken from the Northern Ireland budgets. The consequence of that money being taken from the Northern Ireland Budget is impacting on Health, Education and Justice, and the Members opposite are the people who are doing it. Let us stand up and be counted. If you are going to do it, tell the public why you are doing it and quit hiding behind the point that the money is not really being taken when we all know that it is.

Mr Beggs: The Minister has indicated that he has bid for £160 million in the June monitoring round, but such a deficit to maintain existing services did not suddenly develop. Will he confirm the level of debt that existed in our health service in the last financial year, despite the £100 million in-year monitoring round allocation? Will he also confirm that that exists despite or even aside from the welfare reform issue?

Mr Poots: Over the last three years, we have received an increase of around 2% each year, and I suppose that demand has increased by around 6% each year. We have been able to absorb £500 million of savings whilst increasing the number of nurses, doctors and allied health professionals. We have been able to reduce waiting times for most of the scheduled care and 12-hour waits in our emergency departments. Against the backdrop of the budget that we have been given, we have been able to make savings and deliver a better service.

In all those things, we had our cycle, and we have come to the end of that. Another year has been added on, and, at this time, there is a £160 million gap. We are making £170 million of savings, but there is a further £160 million of a gap that I cannot deliver on. That is why I have come to the House over the past number of months and consistently told it that that gap exists. It remains to be seen whether we can drive another £20 million or £30 million out of it, but the reality is that the figure will not move fundamentally. I will not find £160 million of further savings without hugely negative impacts on the health service, and that is a message that needs to be got out.

If people think that they are better spending that money on welfare, that is fine; get out there and tell the public that you would rather spend the money on welfare than on health and that, consequently, people will wait longer for operations, we will not be able to deliver to the same standards of safety and we will not be able to make the changes in unscheduled care that everybody has been demanding. If you want to say that, get out there and tell the public that. I am telling the public that I want to improve the health service and I want to deliver, but, if you are going to cash-strap me in key areas, that will make it extremely difficult to carry out that delivery.

Mr McKinney: I thank the Minister. Would his arguments not have greater weight and credibility, not just in the House but in the wider public mind, if he was able to demonstrate some measurability in his Transforming Your Care plan against the 99 targets that he has set in place? People would understand not just that he needs the money but what the money is being spent on. Would that not achieve a greater understanding in the public mind and maybe an understanding of his position?

Mr Poots: I do not think that I have any problem explaining the position to the public. I also do not think that I can add much weight to the argument. The trusts identified a problem and brought it to the Department. That problem was identified around the middle of last year, and consequently we overran our budget by £15 million last year. We were not able to live within our means, even last year, as a consequence of rising demand, and we anticipate that that demand will continue to increase because of the demography of our population. Mr McKinney may not have realised that our population has been getting older over the last number of years, and we have far more frail elderly people to deal with. We also have far more issues out there with childcare services and ensuring that we protect vulnerable children, particularly on the back of the BBC revelations.

In all of that, we have a pressing demand. Mr McKinney may want to ignore the pressing demand and say, "Oh yes, we support the current welfare procedures. We don't mind that someone gets £26,000 on benefits, which is the equivalent of £35,000 before tax — that cap should not be there — or that the low-paid workers in the health service, who are maybe earning half of that, are not getting a pay rise”.

That is OK for the SDLP and Sinn Féin. It is not OK. It is not right. We should not be doing it, and it is time that the SDLP and Sinn Féin came into the real world, came into government and did things right and ensured that we deliver for the public, instead of delivering to agendas.

Armed Forces: Healthcare Providers

4. Mr Newton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he is taking to recognise the people who provide healthcare to the armed forces. (AQO 6479/11-15)

Mr Poots: On Monday 16 June, I was delighted to launch in Northern Ireland the annual Military and Civilian Health Partnership Awards for 2014. These prestigious awards aim to promote and publicly recognise the efforts of health professionals in providing care to service personnel, their families and veterans throughout the United Kingdom.

This is an opportunity for us to celebrate their work, which often goes unseen but is vital to ensuring that the armed forces community receives the care and support that it deserves. Last year, we had two finalists from Northern Ireland, 204 Field Hospital and 253 Medical Regiment, who were quite rightly recognised for their exceptional work. I am sure that they are not alone, and I encourage nominations from Northern Ireland to ensure that the skill, dedication and commitment of those who work in this field is recognised.

Mr Newton: I thank the Minister for his answer so far. It is appropriate, especially today on this 1 July, that we pay tribute to those who gave their lives for our freedom and, indeed, those who have served this nation well over the past years, and respect them and the fact that many of them will have physical and health needs. Minister, will you comment on how the individual serviceman or servicewoman might access the health provision?

Mr Poots: It is very important that we do recognise that and that we also recognise that the army is moving to be more reliant on reserves and less reliant on regular soldiers and that Northern Ireland, in spite of its make-up, is contributing twice as many reserve soldiers to the army per head of population than any other part of the United Kingdom. That is a very clear recognition of the support that there is for the British Army here in Northern Ireland and the work that it is doing.

My Department has taken a number of actions to support access to healthcare services by the armed forces, such as the armed forces liaison forum. Engagement in mental health services and prosthetics is working well, and I recognise that there will be new challenges for us to address. Through the armed forces liaison forum, we are alerted to innovations elsewhere that could be of use here, and my Department is currently working with the Royal College of General Practitioners to obtain access to the e-learning package for military personnel, which is available to GPs in England, to assist in dealing with former military personnel who may access primary medical services from their local GP practice.

Accident Prevention Initiatives

5. Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what initiatives his Department is taking to reduce the number of accidents in the home. (AQO 6480/11-15)

Mr Poots: On 17 June 2014, my Department launched a draft 10-year home accident prevention strategy for consultation. I expect to publish the final strategy by the end of the year. My Department also provides core funding for the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents (ROSPA) in Northern Ireland. In addition, the Chief Medical Officer, Dr Michael McBride, is leading a UK group to look at how we can prevent further tragic deaths in children and injuries caused by blind cord strangulation. Finally, my Department continues to work with the Health and Safety Executive to promote awareness of the dangers of carbon monoxide poisoning. DHSSPS has produced a public information leaflet entitled ‘Carbon monoxide: Are you at risk?’ This is available online.

Mr D McIlveen: I thank the Minister for his answer. Can he advise the House of any further initiatives that his Department is taking forward in this regard?

Mr Poots: As I indicated, Dr McBride is working with ROSPA, UK health agencies and the British Blind and Shutter Association on that particular issue. Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service has been working in partnership with the PSNI and a broad range of public, private, voluntary and community-based organisations on Northern Ireland's first interactive learning education centre, which is called RADAR, standing for risk avoidance danger awareness resource. When opened, the centre will provide a safety-focused learning experience for children and young people throughout Northern Ireland. Children and young people who visit the centre will develop their own personalised radar, and these radars will help them to manage everyday risk and guide them in making better decisions.

It may surprise people that, in Northern Ireland, when I left the DOE we were looking at around 50 people being killed on our roads — although that has gone up during the last couple of years — but twice as many are being killed in the home. There are two deaths a week in the home, similar to what we are finding with drug abuse. We need to be aware that our homes can be dangerous places for many people and that we need to take steps to make them safer. The more we get that message out, the better it will be for everyone.

Mrs McKevitt: I want to pick up on the Minister's point that twice as many people die as a result of accidents in the home than in the like of driving a car or on a farm, even. Given that there has been a hard-hitting advertising campaign on TV delivering that message, has the Minister any plans to initiate a similar campaign that would help to raise awareness of accidents in the home?

Mr Poots: Obviously, the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister has taken over the issue of advertising, and that is now dealt with at the centre, as opposed to individual Departments. DOE made the case that it should be able to maintain the same level of funding.

I made the argument that we should actually focus on some other things, including home safety.

We have our home accident prevention strategy that was launched for consultation on 17 June, which is aimed at the entire population of Northern Ireland but focuses on the most vulnerable groups in our society — the under-fives, the over-65s and the most socially deprived. The vision of the strategy is that the population of Northern Ireland will have the best chance of living safely in the home environment. The partners in the strategy will seek to deliver the vision and aims through the following objectives: to empower people to better understand the risks and make safe choices to ensure a safe home with negligible risk of unintentional injury; to promote a safer home environment; to promote and facilitate effective training, skills and knowledge in home accident prevention across all relevant organisations and groups; and to improve the evidence base.

In all of that, we will be making bids to carry out advertising as appropriate and get the key messages out there as the more simple steps that people can take to ensure that their home is a safer place.

Early Intervention Transformation Programme

6. Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the early intervention transformation programme. (AQO 6481/11-15)

Mr Poots: The early intervention transformation programme (EITP) is one of three strands being developed under the Delivering Social Change framework. The EITP, which will be launched formally in the near future, seeks to transform mainstream children's services through embedding early intervention approaches in order to deliver sustained improvements in outcomes for children that continue beyond the lifespan of the programme. With contributions from five Departments, including my own, Justice, Education, Employment and Learning, and Social Development, the EITP represents a commitment across Government to work together to break the intergenerational cycle of poor outcomes that some children and families experience throughout Northern Ireland. The programme is being led by my Department. A programme manager is now in place, and the preparatory work to identify the first wave of projects that we intend to take forward under this initiative is under way.

Mr Ó hOisín: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Gabhaim leis an Aire as ucht an fhreagra sin. I thank the Minister for his answer. Will the fund be targeted at areas of rural deprivation and high social need?

Mr Poots: The fund is aimed at areas of high social need. A course of work has been done across the trusts to ensure that we set up the hubs in the appropriate places. We all need to recognise that many children have poor outcomes because they do not get the right start in life and, very often, parents lack the skills to give those children the right start in life. The more support that we can provide to those parents and the more that we sustain and help them and help those children in those early years, whether it be through nurturing, nutrition, education — all of those things — the more substantial difference we will make in the very earliest years for children to progress and do well. If they start school behind the rest, they tend to fall further behind. Poor educational outcomes very often deliver poor health outcomes and poor employment outcomes and, therefore, a much higher level of people will end up in the justice system. We want to challenge and change all of those things.

Mr Weir: It is important for these sorts of programmes to get buy-in from local people. What community engagement has taken place about the programme?

Mr Poots: Considerable engagement is under way, including via the five children's outcomes groups and locality planning groups to help shape the development of the IT project proposals. Outcomes groups comprise the local community, voluntary and statutory sectors, and organisations involved in delivering services to children, young people and families. We are slightly behind in establishing the project in north and west Belfast, largely because the engagement there has not been as good as we would have liked. We will catch up and deliver on that programme, but we are absolutely certain that we need the buy-in of the community sector. Therefore, we will want to ensure that it is on board before we move ahead.

Mr Dallat: I fully support what the Minister has said. However, does he agree with me that, in a modern western European society, the gap between the health and education of the haves and the have-nots is embarrassingly wide? Will he continue to strive for additional resources to engage with local communities and ensure that this programme really impacts on the people who need it most?

Mr Poots: I agree. That is why we need to look at the problem and the issue. I believe that the main problem is that where people have poor educational outcomes, they have poor health outcomes. So, they do not get the right start in life, they do not get the opportunities at school and they do not get delivery on health and, indeed, job opportunities. We need to give children brought into this world the best start in life. That is why we want to provide support where the capacity does not exist.

A lot of social change took place, particularly in the 1970s. Many urban villages in Belfast were broken up. Families did not have the support structure that had been in place for generations, and, consequently, we are looking at people who are second-, third- or fourth-generation unemployed. All of that has a trickle-down effect that is damaging to young people. We need to change that, and that is why I am very supportive of this programme.

Mr Agnew: I welcome the Minister's announcement that five Departments are working together on this. How is the programme funded? Has there been a pooling of budgets by the Departments involved?

Mr Poots: The programme is funded through Atlantic Philanthropies providing £15 million and the five Departments providing the other £15 million.

Cancer Drugs

7. Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on access to cancer drugs in Northern Ireland. (AQO 6482/11-15)

Mr Poots: All cancer drugs approved by the National Institute for Health and Care Excellence that are available in England are either recurrently funded or available via a cost-per-case mechanism in Northern Ireland. The Health and Social Care Board also has a clear process by which unapproved cancer drugs can be made available to patients in Northern Ireland. The board has informed me that 98% of the applications for unapproved drugs are accepted.

I have therefore instructed my Department to evaluate whether the individual funding request (IFR) process is meeting its objectives and taking account of measures that other devolved Administrations are considering in their approach to access to specialist drugs. That evaluation will get under way shortly, and I will report the findings to the Assembly later this year.

Mr Dunne: I thank the Minister for his answer. Will he clarify how much is spent annually on cancer drugs? Will he also clarify how effective individual funding requests are? Certainly, during our recent visits to the cancer centre at the City Hospital, the evidence was that individual funding requests are not being honoured. May we have clarification on that, please?

Mr Poots: The 2013-14 expenditure on cancer drugs was around £26.7 million, and that does not include the cost of other cancer treatments, such as radiotherapy. Other costs related to cancer are also difficult to determine, such as voluntary and community care. From April 2013 to 31 January 2014, £1.14 million was spent on individual funding requests for cancer drugs, and 98% of those were given out. Oncologists will be circumspect in what they apply for. They will apply where they believe that it makes a real and fundamental difference. That is something that oncologists support and buy into.

So, it is very important that we recognise that, where oncologists make the case, those cases are largely found to be acceptable.

2.30 pm

Ms Maeve McLaughlin: I thank the Minister for his responses so far. Given the debate around the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme (PPRS), has there been an increase in the use of branded medicines in the last three months of this year? If so, by how much?

Mr Poots: There certainly has been a considerable increase in the use of branded medicines across Northern Ireland, not just in the last three months but in the last three years. The Assembly pressed for and endorsed that, because it means that, in terms of drugs and the health budget, we are not giving as much to pharmaceutical companies and we are delivering more on the ground. So, moving from generic to branded drugs has the support of the Assembly.

A lot of that money has been used in various elements of the budget. For example, we are spending more on domiciliary care than we were last year, the year before and the year before that. We are also spending more on protecting children than last year, the year before and the year before that. There is a series of things that we are spending more money on. We are spending considerably more on cancer drugs than we were three years ago.

Individuals may think that it is as easy as saying, "We will take money from this bit of health and apply it there, but we will ignore the fact that there are more older people and they need more domiciliary care, and there are more children who are vulnerable, so we will not bother doing that bit this year." We cannot do that. We have to look at it in a holistic way. We have £160 million of a gap, and we do not have the money to buy the additional drugs.

PPRS has been around for some 50 years; it is not something new. We anticipated the savings that would be coming in from it: they will not buy the cancer drugs that England's cancer fund is paying for. Let us get those facts out into the domain and debate them rationally.

Mr Speaker: We now move on to topical questions. Question 2 has been withdrawn.

ITH Pharma: Contaminated Products

1. Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail which health trust has purchased paediatric parental nutritional products from ITH Pharma. (AQT 1361/11-15)

Mr Poots: I did not pick up the question right. I am not aware of what we have purchased from ITH Pharma. I can endeavour to find the answer for the Member, although I suspect that he already knows it. I will see what I can find out on his behalf.

Mr Elliott: I do not know the answer; that is why I asked. There was a contaminated batch of one of that company's products. I was just looking for assurances that none of the contaminated batch, which had significant consequences and resulted in deaths in England, has come to Northern Ireland.

Mr Poots: I usually tried to ask questions that I knew the answers to, because that was an easier way to catch the Minister out when I was a Back-Bencher. Nonetheless, it is a good question. We will identify what we have been sourcing from that organisation, and, if there has been any risk posed, we will make that clear to the Member in due course.

Legal Highs

3. Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what contact he has had with the Westminster Government about so-called legal highs. (AQT 1363/11-15)

Mr Poots: The issue of legal highs is one that we have been challenging on. The British-Irish Council met in Dublin, at which Norman Baker represented the Westminster Government. Again, the issue was high on the agenda.

Legal highs have contributed to many deaths across Northern Ireland. Many of the psychoactive substances in them are not legal, so the definition probably needs to be changed, because these are not things that people should be taking.

Westminster have almost completed the course of work that I had asked them to do about six months ago. That is being brought forward over the next two to three weeks, and recommendations will flow from it. They have been looking at what is being done in the United States of America, the Republic of Ireland and New Zealand, where stronger actions have been taken. It will be very difficult to stay ahead of the curve on legal highs. I very much want to do so, but, if we cannot stay ahead of it, we need to be right up there in ensuring that we stop people who peddle these legal highs and get in quickly to ensure that they are banned straightaway.

Mr Hilditch: I welcome the Minister's comments. Minister, what was your assessment of last week's British-Irish Council meeting?

Mr Poots: I thought that it was very useful. Everybody was very impressed by the actions that Belfast City Council took against legal high shops on the back of a proposal by Councillor Gavin Robinson. The council has been able to close down a number of facilities as a result of its actions. Other countries are looking at doing the same thing, so they were very interested in that.

There has to be a UK-wide response. We need actions from Westminster, which has the legislative powers to move this forward. It must be legislation that enables us to respond very swiftly, within hours or a few days of discovering something, to close down these shops. The pharmacists producing these drugs in many parts of the world need make only a slight alteration, and, all of a sudden, something that had been deemed illegal could be legal. We need to be very quick to respond to that.

Prescription Charges

4. Ms Fearon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the administration costs of reintroducing prescription charges. (AQT 1364/11-15)

Mr Poots: It all depends on how they were introduced. Under the previous system, the costs would be higher because you would have to identify the 11% who would pay and the 89% who would not. Let us be very clear that, under the old system, 89% of prescriptions were free in any event; only 11% of prescriptions were paid for. One consequence, perhaps unenvisaged, of introducing free prescriptions was that it drove up the number of people who went to their doctor requesting prescriptions for things such as paracetamol, which costs 40p in a local supermarket. That was an unintended consequence.

If you introduced a very small charge for every prescription with a maximum yearly payment for each person — I suggested a maximum yearly payment of £25, which is less than 50p a week — the administration costs for that type of system would be very modest indeed.

Ms Fearon: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Will the Minister outline the extent of prescription charge fraud in the past? Who was the most likely to partake and what was the most common source?

Mr Poots: There were greater levels of fraud in particular areas. I will not name areas today; nonetheless, it was higher in particular areas. Many people were quite happy to pay for their prescription. In fact, many people, including me, feel quite guilty about getting a free prescription when we know that others could be receiving and benefiting from drugs that are currently unaffordable. They may not be life-saving drugs, but they could prolong your life for two or three months, and there may be special family events coming up. You want to see your child's birthday or a particular wedding, yet someone like me does not have to pay for a prescription. Everybody in here can well afford to pay, but we do not have to, while others who need the drugs cannot get them.

I think that a good socialist would support what I am doing. A good socialist would not say, "Give the rich and everybody else free prescriptions and deny people who have cancer the opportunity of living a little longer." I do not think that that is right.

Public Health Framework

5. Mr Douglas asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what impact he anticipates the new public health framework will have. (AQT 1365/11-15)

Mr Poots: With the public health framework, it is critical that we respond to the needs of the public, and unless we actually challenge and get people into a better place — because public health has been declining — we are going to have to live with the difficult consequence. The generation that we are currently bringing up in Northern Ireland is likely not to live as long as the people who are around now. This is the first time for years that that is going to happen. For years, life expectancy has been increasing, but for those born now, life expectancy will be shorter. So, it is vital that the public health framework is out there and that we support it financially and get the messages out to the public of what is beneficial to them.

Mr Douglas: What is the Minister's assessment of the potential benefits of new technology for diabetes care, such as the d-Nav?

Mr Poots: This is a fantastic opportunity. I am delighted that the South Eastern Trust is doing that work. Incidence of type 2 diabetes is growing. We can be at the forefront of the world with this d-Nav technology. The device allows people with diabetes to easily regulate their own insulin dosage by using a small device around the size of a mobile phone. I have called it "the doc in the poc", because it is the equivalent of going to a consultant and getting a check-up. By having this in your pocket, you can get a check-up every day. Consequently, your dosage can be adjusted upwards or downwards to meet your true needs. Generally, we are finding that people's dosages are coming down. So, this is very positive. I believe that it will become commonplace over the course of the next decade, and Northern Ireland will have led the way in delivering that.

Mr Speaker: Robin Newton is not in his place for question 6.

Cancer Drugs: Trials

7. Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how he sees the Connected Health initiative being a driver for improving drugs trials at the Belfast cancer centre. (AQT 1367/11-15)

Mr Poots: We have been hugely successful with drugs trials. Most people will not know that around one fifth of people in Northern Ireland who have cancer are engaging in trials. The opportunity for many hundreds of people to avail themselves of the most modern drugs has been created because we are engaged in that way. We have been developing a Connected Health integration platform, which will help us to optimise our delivery of Connected Health in the establishment of an international analytics centre in Northern Ireland. That will ensure that we have a network that is amongst the smartest and most capable of linking people who have illnesses with the potential opportunities to cure those illnesses. Stratified medicine and all those things create for us wonderful opportunities to identify the right resources for individuals, so that we can provide the right courses of treatment to them.

Mr Dunne: Does the Minister recognise that the Queen's University Centre for Cancer Research and Cell Biology has the potential to become a world leader in drugs trials and research?

Mr Poots: Absolutely. I met the new vice chancellor of Queen's recently about what the opportunities are. At the moment, significant elements of Queen's University are world-class in clinical and medical research. We can make that university's clinical research truly world class throughout. I think that we should. It is something that Minister Farry, Minister Foster and I need to take to the Executive. Northern Ireland can be up there as a place that is of the highest standards anywhere in the world in the medical research that it is carrying out in cancer and a number of other fields. That is something that I am totally up for, and I am sure that my ministerial colleagues will want to do that as well. It will deliver huge health benefits. It will also deliver benefits for jobs, and it will advance the academic institutions in Northern Ireland.

RQIA: Unscheduled Care Review

Dr McDonnell: I thought that the Minister was going to talk me out there.

8. Dr McDonnell asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority (RQIA) review of unscheduled care, which was published today. (AQT 1368/11-15)

2.45 pm

Mr Poots: Yes. I think that the Member would have a great interest in what I was previously talking about, I might add.

I can talk a little more about the RQIA review now. It is saying that the trusts need to have stronger escalation plans in place. It is looking at the Belfast Trust and using the City Hospital as a route for the frail elderly to go there directly instead of going to the emergency department. I embrace that because I do not believe that our frail elderly people belong in emergency departments, with all the other mayhem that goes with that. We are looking at using the City Hospital as a route for most respiratory patients and at enhancing the services provided for emergency care at the Mater Hospital. So, there are a lot of very useful recommendations there. I spoke to the chair of the Belfast Trust, and we will work on delivering those in the near future, including elements this autumn.

Dr McDonnell: Does the Minister believe that there is any benefit in going further up the demand chain and looking into unscheduled care and perhaps looking at what is leading to the pressures that are causing the problems?

Mr Poots: Things are fundamentally different than they were years ago, and far more people are being admitted to hospitals through emergency departments than was previously the case. A better relationship needs to be developed between general practitioners and hospitals on the admissions process. Flows are a big problem, and that is one of the areas that is recommended there. It will be very challenging for us, but we need to get the flows right so that when people are leaving the hospital we are getting them out more quickly, that we do not have delayed discharges, and that those beds become available for more people who are in emergency departments. So, there is a considerable amount of work to be done there.

In my opinion, the recommendations from the RQIA are sound, and I will press the Belfast Trust and all trusts to implement them as early as possible. I indicated that we had bid for £22 million or £26 million to deliver that and said that it will better spent on emergency departments than on welfare. I would welcome the support of others to ensure that we spend that money on emergency departments as opposed to complaining about the outcomes but not giving us the resource to do the job.

Mr Speaker: That concludes questions to the Health Minister.

Justice

Magilligan: Newbuild Prison

1. Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice when work will begin on the new prison at Magilligan. (AQO 6491/11-15)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): As I announced to the House on 19 March last year and in a further statement on 21 October, I am committed to the redevelopment of Magilligan prison. I noted in my response at Question Time on 10 June that Northern Ireland Prison Service (NIPS) officials are nearing completion of the outline business case (OBC) for the redevelopment, which will be submitted for approval within the next month. I said at that time that the completed outline business case will be submitted to DFP and it will be DFP's decision as to whether the business case will be approved for the rebuild. Any approval will advise the availability of capital funding for the project. The prison must remain operational during the redevelopment, and a combination of operational need and capital availability will determine the timeline for the work. If approval is given and funding is made available, NIPS would plan to commence work at Magilligan in 2016.

Mr Campbell: I welcome the Minister's recommitment to the Magilligan project. Given that the outline estate strategy was released in June 2012 and that the strategic outline case was released in June 2013, does the Minister think that the outline business case should be with the Department of Finance and Personnel immediately in order for it to respond to it, rather than him saying that he could not guarantee anything without the approval of the Department of Finance and Personnel?

Mr Ford: I am sure that Mr Campbell's colleague Mr Hamilton would take it ill if I were to suggest that it should be entirely up to the DOJ to approve its own outline business cases. The reality is that procedures have to be gone through. As I said, the OBC will be with DFP within the next month, and the challenge will be to ensure that we have the kind of funding that has just been spoken about by the Minister of Health to deal with some very urgent priorities in justice as well as in health.

Mr Ó hOisín: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Gabhaim leis an Aire as ucht an fhreagra sin. I thank the Minister for his answers to this point. Can he give us an update on the work of the stakeholder group aimed at bringing Magilligan closer to the local community and on greater opportunities for prisoners on release schemes?

Mr Ford: While I appreciate Mr Ó hOisín's question about what was, of course, one of the key factors that led to the decision to redevelop Magilligan on-site, I have not been directly involved with the stakeholder group recently and am not quite sure what the state of meetings is. However, there is absolutely no doubt that the commitment from local businesses and councils will be a continuing necessity to ensure that we make the most of the opportunity to redevelop Magilligan on-site and provide the opportunities that we need, particularly for things like work placements, over the coming months. I will certainly check the record and see whether there is anything that I am not aware of, and will report to the Member if that is the case.

Mr Dallat: I thank the Minister for his answer, but question every word that he said. He will understand why. Will the Minister put on record, once and for all, that he acknowledges that Magilligan prison is not just a place that creates employment but a place that gives prisoners a special chance of repatriating? Will he ensure that that is not lost by some centralisation programme worked out by economists?

Mr Ford: I am not sure whether Mr Dallat has ever accused me of misleading the House before, but he appeared to come perilously close to it just then. I am very happy to give the commitment of the Prison Service and the Department of Justice, working with the partners that I have just identified to Mr Ó hOisín, to follow through on the commitments that I have just given to Mr Campbell. I do not know whether that is enough to satisfy people, but the reality is that decisions on capital funding are not decisions for my Department alone. They are decisions that require funding to be committed by DFP, which is why I stated specifically that that issue has to be followed through.

The commitment is absolute from my Department that Magilligan is where the redevelopment will be, which is contrary to the original recommendations from the prison review team. However, I cannot give a commitment to capital. I am very happy to recommend that Mr Dallat ask the same question of Mr Hamilton in September.

Parading

2. Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Justice how he plans to engage with the Parades Commission in advance of the parading season. (AQO 6492/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Parades Commission is an independent body appointed by the Secretary of State and therefore not accountable to me. I have said before, however, that I will engage with the commission on general issues but not individual cases, and have already done so this year. Parading remains a contentious issue and I am ready to engage with any renewed political talks, which I trust will achieve success, this week and next, on the issue.

Mr D McIlveen: I thank the Minister for his answer. I certainly would be the last person to try to deflect him towards any specific case. However, the Minister will be aware that, among the inhabitants of these Benches, the Parades Commission has never received full applause, if I can put it that way. The Parades Commission that we are currently working under, more than any — given that its members say one thing in private and then do something different in public — is causing huge frustration in the Protestant/unionist community. Bearing in mind that it is police officers, prison officers —

Mr Speaker: I encourage the Member to come to a question.

Mr D McIlveen: — and obviously the constituents of each and every one of us who are affected by poor decisions on the part of the Parades Commission, will the Minister be suggesting that, in the absence of there being another show in town, we have to make sure that this Parades Commission is dealt with effectively in the way that it makes its decisions?

Mr Ford: There are clearly two points in what Mr McIlveen said. One is that, at the moment, the Parades Commission is the only show in town, and the other is that it might become not the only show in town, if the five-party talks achieve something over the next couple of weeks, looking to the future. However, while it is the only show in town, there is no alternative but for those of us who support the rule of law to accept that the determinations of the commission, whether appreciated or not, have the force of the rule of law. Those who parade and those who protest should do so lawfully and peacefully in all circumstances.

Ms McCorley: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as a fhreagraí go dtí seo. Has the Minister taken any proactive measures to remind those who might engage in violent or disruptive actions that such behaviour will not be tolerated, so that we can avoid the scenes — [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order.

Ms McCorley: — that we witnessed last year, when great damage and great cost were involved?

Mr Ford: Whilst I appreciate Ms McCorley's question, I am not sure that many of those who engage in that violent and disruptive behaviour listen to me. I thought, in the comments I made in the Great Hall a few moments ago alongside the Chief Constable and in the comments I just made in the Chamber, I made absolutely clear my belief that everybody has a duty to act lawfully and peacefully, and all those in a position of leadership should see that they use their influence as best they can.

Mr Attwood: I want to touch on something the Minister said. Whether we like or do not like the Parades Commission, or whether we agree or do not agree with its determinations, do you accept that the only sure path over the next couple of weeks is that all parties, organisations and communities should accept Parades Commission determinations and that if anybody errs from that pathway and that approach, they will be on the wrong side of democracy in Northern Ireland?

Mr Ford: I entirely agree with the points that Mr Attwood has just made. Not only would anybody in those circumstances be on the wrong side of democracy, they would be on the wrong side of the law as well.

Mr Elliott: I thank the Minister for those answers. I appreciate that the Parades Commission does not come under his jurisdiction, but we have gone into some detail here today. Would he support having the Parades Commission attend the multiparty talks that he has just mentioned to try to resolve the parading issues in those specific difficult areas?

Mr Ford: Mr Elliott is inventive, as ever. I am not sure that the Minister of Justice has any opinion on who should attend particular talks, but it seems to me that the Parades Commission is willing to meet anybody and everybody. The key issue, frankly, is whether those who have responsibility in those talks are prepared to engage in finding a better way, without reservation and without some of the qualifications we have seen so far.

Mr Allister: If the Parades Commission, in respect of Ardoyne, again rewards violence, does the Minister, as Minister of Justice, not think he might have a role in encouraging it to review such a rewarding of violence?

Mr Ford: Mr Allister's question is based on what I regard as a false premise of rewarding violence.

Victims of Crime

3. Mr McCartney asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the impact that the Justice Bill (NIA 37/11-15) will have on the experience of the victims of crime. (AQO 6493/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Justice Bill, which was introduced in the Assembly on 16 June, marks an important new stage in an ambitious programme of work to create a faster, fairer justice system. The main purpose of the Bill is to reshape the system to improve victims' experiences and the general effectiveness of the justice process. The Bill responds directly to a number of key recommendations in the Justice Committee's report of its inquiry into the criminal justice services available to victims and witnesses of crime.

Some of the key provisions in the Bill include statutory victim and witness charters, setting out clearly the standards of service victims and witnesses can expect to receive and how they can expect to be treated by criminal justice agencies; a legal entitlement for a victim to make a statement about the impact that a crime has had on them; reform of the committal process to avoid victims having to undergo the ordeal of giving evidence twice; and the introduction of statutory case management and a number of other measures to speed up the progress of cases.

I believe that these provisions, combined with other measures in the Bill to enhance public protection and safeguard vulnerable groups, should lead to a measurable difference in victims and witnesses' experience of the criminal justice system.

Mr McCartney: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as an fhreagra sin. I thank the Minister for his answer and for his acknowledgement of the Justice Committee's inquiry into victims and witnesses. Is he satisfied that, given, perhaps, that demands will be made on resources, he has enough resources to ensure that, when the Bill is passed by the Assembly, we will have the proper structures for a victims' charter in place?

Mr Ford: In current circumstances, there is a very real question there from Mr McCartney about resources. I believe that, in line with our commitments under the new European directive, we are well on the way to having the necessary measures in place. Clearly, all these things cost a degree of money, but some of the proposals that we have had recently, such as the registered intermediary scheme, are in a position to be expanded because they are proving so successful, and the costs of that are being absorbed in the Department's budget. We will continue to make progress, but we cannot give guarantees as to what the finances will be over the next few years.

3.00 pm

Mr McCarthy: I welcome the Bill and congratulate the Minister and his staff. I commend him for his ongoing commitment to improving the experience of victims and witnesses during their contact with the criminal justice system. Can he outline any steps that he has taken, or further steps that he will take, to improve the lot for victims?

Mr Ford: I thank Mr McCarthy for that question. The two key things that immediately come to mind are the work that is being done to inform victims post-crime of the work that is being done by the single point of contact through the joined-up information scheme, which is having significantly positive effects, and the work that is being done to provide alternatives to appearing in court for vulnerable victims and witnesses. Just this morning, I visited a new arrangement in Lisburn that will allow children and vulnerable adults to give evidence by video link from outside the court building, as is already in place for Laganside courts and Londonderry courthouse and is in the process of being provided for Ballymena courthouse. Those are key issues that show that a relatively modest investment is significantly enhancing the opportunities for vulnerable victims and witnesses in both those cases.

Juvenile Justice: Education

4. Mr Douglas asked the Minister of Justice how his Department records the educational status of young people entering Youth Justice Agency services in the community and in the juvenile justice system. (AQO 6494/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Youth Justice Agency undertakes a full assessment of all young people on referral, and their education, training and employment status is recorded and assessed as part of that process.

For those who are remanded or sentenced to custody, education staff in Woodlands Juvenile Justice Centre carry out a detailed assessment during the first three days following admission to assess levels of literacy, numeracy and ICT. Throughout the young person's time in custody, the centre will record levels of attainment in those subjects, as well as vocational studies and programmes.

Mr Douglas: I thank the Minister for his answer. What proportion of young people who are engaged with youth justice services is regarded as being not in education, employment or training? How does his Department support those vulnerable young people?

Mr Ford: Mr Douglas has asked a very pertinent supplementary question. I understand that, at the moment, something like 45% of young people in the juvenile justice centre would be regarded as coming under not in education, employment or training status. A key part of the work that is being done to address that is looking at the provision of learning and skills in Woodlands. Obviously, a number of those in Woodlands will move on to Hydebank Wood at the age of 18, or shortly thereafter, where the proposals for a secure college are premised on running courses through providers from the general further education sector, which can be continued when people are discharged. I note, for example, that, of the relatively small sample of the first five who went through the social enterprise scheme Mugshots in Hydebank Wood, four found either employment or training when they left. That is a significantly higher proportion than we expected. So, good work is being done. However, I acknowledge, as Mr Douglas hinted, that a lot more needs to be done.

Mr Eastwood: Given the fact that the oversight body talked about progress on Hydebank Wood being limited, what work are he and his Department doing to ensure that progress is no longer limited but real and substantive?

Mr Ford: We are now expanding slightly beyond the subject of the Youth Justice Agency. However, since Mr Eastwood is in more or less the same area, I will happily give some indications on that.

A lot of work has been done to join up the provision of education services in Hydebank Wood. Belfast Metropolitan College is providing the courses, which, and this is the point that I made to Mr Douglas, enables them to continue them afterwards. Work is also being done around the social enterprise area, where we will shortly see a full-scale operation in catering services alongside the Mugshots enterprise. I have recently approved a further proposal that will see an ongoing social enterprise for young men as they leave Hydebank Wood. They will be engaged in continuing activity as they go out into the community. All those are steps in the right direction, but, given the numbers that we have in custody and their previous status, as I have just said to Mr Douglas, there is a lot more still to be done.

PSNI: Complaints

5. Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the protocol between the PSNI and the Police Ombudsman to facilitate the ombudsman's office in carrying out its duties in relation to complaints against the PSNI. (AQO 6495/11-15)

Mr Ford: The PSNI and the Police Ombudsman have a number of protocols in place to facilitate the conduct of investigations by the ombudsman's office. The development and outworkings of such protocols are for the bodies concerned, as each has operational independence.

If the Member is referring to the protocol on the sharing of sensitive information, that was shared with the Committee for Justice and noted without comment in January 2014. The issue is the subject of legal proceedings, and it would not be appropriate, therefore, for me to comment, except to say that I understand that discussions are ongoing and hope that an agreement can be reached as soon as possible.

Mrs D Kelly: Minister, I am sure that you will join me in wishing the new Chief Constable, George Hamilton, the wisdom of Solomon and the patience of Job in his new role; he will certainly need it. I welcome the fact that he has already met the ombudsman to try to avert legal action. Minister, hopefully you are of the view that the ombudsman's office should have full accountability mechanisms in place for the PSNI for all actions of the police, past or present.

Mr Ford: Mrs Kelly is very inventive, but having just said that it would not be appropriate for me to comment, I will repeat the point. I certainly will endorse her good wishes for George Hamilton as Chief Constable, which I conveyed a short while ago, as I have previously done informally and by telephone on the day that he was appointed. I certainly believe, from the reports that I am getting from officials and, indeed, from a brief part of a meeting with George Hamilton this afternoon, that there is a strong chance that an agreement will be reached before the issue comes back to court in September. I hope that we all see that as a sign of good progress and a better relationship, which dealt with the very difficult issues that both agencies have to resolve.

Mr Lynch: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Does the Minister agree that, when the ombudsman states publicly that he is being prevented from carrying out his duties, confidence in justice and policing and their relationship with the rule of law is being undermined?

Mr Ford: I agree that there was a danger of that some weeks ago. The fact that significant progress has been made recently suggests that that need not be the case.

Mr Elliott: Will the Minister indicate whether he has any intention of putting in place an appeal mechanism for any of the Police Ombudsman's reports?

Mr Ford: I must say that that is a long way from the original question. The simple position is that ombudsmen in the United Kingdom are largely seen as the final point of referral. The logic of what is suggested by that question is that we would have an ombudsman of ombudsmen, but then we would also have to have an appeal mechanism against the ombudsman of ombudsmen's decisions. I do not think that it is possible to work in our current system beyond the point that an ombudsman's decision is final.

PSNI: Districts

6. Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Justice whether he has spoken to the Chief Constable with regard to introducing more coterminous boundaries between PSNI districts and the new council areas. (AQO 6496/11-15)

Mr Ford: My officials continue to discuss the implications of local government reform with the PSNI, the Policing Board, the Department of the Environment, the shadow councils and other stakeholders. From a very recent informal discussion with the Chief Constable, I am aware that the PSNI is considering options for restructuring, and it will continue to brief the Policing Board on the matter.

Mr Beggs: Does the Minister acknowledge that a level of accountability, which was designed in our system, will be difficult under the current arrangements? I think specifically of the Carrickfergus area, which will join the new Ballymena, Larne and Carrickfergus super-council, yet its response officers are tasked from the Newtownabbey area. Does he agree that it would be much more beneficial if response officers did not have to be tasked from Ballymena but were perhaps based locally in Carrickfergus police station?

Mr Ford: Though Mr Beggs may tempt me into those operational issues, I cannot give a response to the latter part of his question about what would be appropriate. I can, however, indicate — I am sure that he will be pleased to know this — that the specific issue of Newtownabbey and Carrickfergus as one current police area being split between two councils was one of the issues mentioned about an hour or so ago when I spoke to the Chief Constable.

Mr D Bradley: Go raibh míle maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. If new boundaries were to be established, when might we expect that to happen?

Mr Ford: That is a very good question, and the answer is this: ask the Chief Constable. We are living with eight police districts, which are based on a split Belfast area and seven other council areas, as originally designed in a plan shortly after Noah came out of the ark. That is the reality of where the police are. Now that they know what the council pattern will be from 1 April 2015, they are fully aware of the composition of districts and of some of the immediate border issues that will affect, for example, Magherafelt and Limavady, which have a shared area command, as well as Newtownabbey and Carrickfergus. The answer to the timing question is this: ask the Chief Constable.

RUC GC Widows' Association

7. Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Justice for an update on funding for the Royal Ulster Constabulary George Cross Widows' Association. (AQO 6497/11-15)

Mr Ford: My Department stands ready to consider grant funding of the RUC GC Widows' Association on receipt of an appropriate application from the association. My officials have sought to engage with the association on a number of occasions to assist in the development of their application and remain willing and available to continue to offer such support. The application for funding must, however, come from the association.

Mr Dunne: I thank the Minister for his answer. Can he give us an assurance that all reasonable efforts will be made to facilitate such funding for what is a very worthy cause — the RUC widows.

Mr Ford: I can give Mr Dunne and everybody else an assurance that all reasonable efforts have been made to make that position clear. However, because of a reclassification exercise carried out on devolution by DFP, the RUC GC Widows' Association is regarded as being in the private sector. The only way the association can be funded is by grant application rather than by the previous method where it was simply regarded as if it had been an arm's-length body of the Department. Frankly, it would be more beneficial if the widows' association would fill in the form rather than merely lobby MLAs because nothing can be done if the association does not fill in an application form.

Mr Cree: Minister, do you recognise that the decision to change the status of the widows' association was discriminatory and unnecessary?

Mr Ford: No, I do not regard it as discriminatory. It was clearly necessary because it was a DFP decision on how policies are formulated. Moreover, it was not discriminatory since the Department has offered to continue funding on the basis of a grant application just as is the case for every other body outside the justice system.

Mr Allister: How many times have the Department's officials knocked back an application from the widows' association? How many times have they sat down with them to explain what the officials say is wrong with the applications that they have made?

Mr Ford: I am not aware that officials have knocked back an application, but officials have referred back applications that were not complete and which did not convey all the necessary information. I am aware that, on a significant number of times, there has been contact in person or by phone between my officials and officers of the association. I repeat the point that it has been offered. It is not a matter of its being offered in the future; it has been offered on a large number of occasions but has not been taken up by the widows' association.

Prison Service: Chaplaincy

8. Mr A Maginness asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the provision of chaplaincy services within the Northern Ireland Prison Service. (AQO 6498/11-15)

Mr Ford: Discussions between the Prison Service and senior Church representatives are ongoing in relation to implementing a review of chaplaincy services. On 7 April 2014, in response to concerns raised, NIPS identified an alternative model to the one originally proposed. It was circulated for discussion, and responses have now been received from all the Church bodies. It is anticipated that the new model will be implemented this summer. I fully appreciate the contribution that chaplains make to supporting prisoners in custody. Any changes brought about by the review of chaplaincy will aim to deliver the maximum benefit to prisoners within the resources available.

Mr A Maginness: I thank the Minister for that very helpful reply. It is very helpful for resolving this problem. I hope that the new model, which has been agreed, will be up and running soon. Will the Minister assure the House that there will be sufficient funding to maintain the new model?

Mr Ford: I thank Mr Maginness for his compliments. I assure him that the funding proposed for this financial year is exactly the same as in the last financial year. Given the number of cuts that have had to be made elsewhere, I think that it is a fair commitment to chaplaincy services.

Firearms: Certificate Renewal

9. Mr Wells asked the Minister of Justice to outline the average cost of processing an individual application for a new or renewal firearms certificate. (AQO 6499/11-15)

Mr Ford: This issue has been the subject of a lean efficiency review of the firearms licensing branch by a DFP consultant and a different DFP consultant regarding the fee itself. It was then subject to a public consultation exercise. That work identified the cost of processing a firearms certificate or regranting a firearms certificate as £121 for five years. That figure of £24 per annum is based on the process time for applications and the hourly staff costs. I have proposed an interim fee, agreed with the PSNI and DFP, of £100.

3.15 pm

Therefore, the PSNI has a shortfall of some £1.8 million per annum at the present fee of £50, which was set over 10 years ago, before the concept of full-cost recovery was introduced. The Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) said that £196 would achieve full-cost recovery in England and Wales, where the cost is being reviewed. The figure in the Republic of Ireland is €80 per firearm for a three-year certificate.

Mr Wells: Apologies to the Minister that, for the first time in my life, he could not hear what I had to say. He will certainly get my supplementary, loud and clear. He gave us the price based on the cost to the police, but what would the price be if it were done in the private sector, for instance? Are those who use firearms paying for the bloated bureaucracy of Lisnasharragh? Could it not be done an awful lot more cheaply and with more efficiency?

Mr Ford: I know that the review was done on the basis of ensuring the most efficient process but with necessary procedures. Is Mr Wells seriously suggesting that an issue such as firearms licensing — the control of lethal weapons — be handed over to the private sector? That is what I heard. I cannot understand the concept that something so vital to maintaining the safety of the people of Northern Ireland would be privatised.

Mr Speaker: That concludes the listed questions to the Justice Minister. We move now to topical questions.

Prison Service: Staff Entitlements

1. Mrs Hale asked the Minister of Justice whether all Prison Service staff who left under the voluntary early retirement scheme have received their excess holiday entitlement and will receive the same payment for excess leave as those who have remained in service, given that he may well be aware that some of those former staff are experiencing some difficulties in relation to their holiday entitlement. (AQT 1371/11-15)

Mr Ford: I cannot give Mrs Hale the detail of that personnel issue. I am aware that matters were being addressed, but I am not sure that I can confirm that everything is entirely clarified at the moment. If she has specific issues that she wants to highlight now, or later by letter, I will certainly follow them up.

Mrs Hale: I thank the Minister for his answer. I have specific issues, and I will probably speak to you outside the Chamber about them. I am looking for confirmation that you will ensure that any staff member who took early retirement will not be unjustly penalised in the payment of holiday entitlement.

Mr Ford: I can give a commitment. It is my understanding that a number of people left with some holiday entitlement. Whatever the Civil Service handbook prescribes for staff should be provided to them. If it has not been, I will do my best to ensure that it is done rapidly. I will take the details later.

Policing and Community Safety Partnerships

2. Ms P Bradley asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the new policing and community safety partnerships (PCSPs) for the 11 new councils. (AQT 1372/11-15)

Mr Ford: The legislation provides that there will be a PCSP for each district council. It does not prescribe that there will be 26 PCSPs; it prescribes one per council and four subgroups for Belfast. The legislation also prescribes that PCSPs have the opportunity to set up subgroups to which they may co-opt others, be they councillors who are not members of the principal partnership or members of the public. If there are issues on which people feel that there is a need for local representation, I trust that, after 1 April next year, the new PCSPs will address them by using the legislation that exists for that purpose.

Ms P Bradley: I thank the Minister for his answer. The Minister talked about subgroups, but, given that we are going into larger council areas, has he considered changing the legislation to increase the number of people who sit on the PCSPs, which is 19 for the existing councils?

Mr Ford: No, at this stage, consideration has not been given to that point, given that there is an issue about ensuring that bodies do not become excessively large, and especially when you think that the number is not actually 19. By the time that you add the other members — up to 10 or 12 in some cases — there is the potential for the overall membership of a new district partnership to be in the region of 30. If Members wish to suggest that as part of the review, we can certainly look at that, but, at this stage, I believe that the numbers are probably right. If we had looked at this, we might have had slightly bigger numbers, but I doubt whether we would have wanted them to be significantly so.

Another issue being raised, with some concerns, is the local subgroups, but that can be addressed in the existing legislation.

Joe Campbell

3. Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Justice, in regard to the Police Ombudsman's report into the murder of RUC Sergeant Joe Campbell, whether he is concerned about attempts to frustrate that office's investigation through the systematic destruction of evidence. (AQT 1373/11-15)

Mr Ford: I need to be very careful, especially as Sergeant Campbell was murdered long before I came into office and in very different circumstances, about exactly what I say. I record my sympathy with Sergeant Campbell's family for what they are currently having to go through because of the re-publicity. It would be a matter of concern if, in any circumstances, evidence was being destroyed that could lead to an investigation. However, there is a division in the House about other factors, such as the compellability of witnesses. The possibility of making progress in that area would be an issue of concern for some people.

Mr D Bradley: Just on that point, does the Minister agree that there is a need for legislation to ensure that retired members of the RUC cooperate with the ombudsman's investigations?

Mr Ford: I have a paper before the Executive looking at a number of matters relating to the ombudsman's work, including the issue of the compellability of retired police officers. It is fairly clear that, as yet, there is no political consensus. Therefore, it is unlikely that any such legislation would pass the House. I certainly see why Members or families like the Campbell family would wish to see full compellability. We also have to acknowledge that, when we are going back so far, there might be no valid evidence forthcoming in many cases, but it is entirely understandable why people would wish to explore that.

Police Ombudsman: Funding Request

4. Mr G Kelly asked the Minister of Justice to explain why, as reported recently in the newspapers, he turned down a request from the Police Ombudsman for £1.1 million to deal with conflict-related complaints, especially given that the Minister and others are going into talks to try to deal with the legacy issue in a comprehensive way. (AQT 1374/11-15)

Mr Ford: I certainly agree with Mr Kelly that there is a need to look at those issues in a comprehensive way, but the reality is that we also have to look at the budget available. There is no point in promising money that cannot be delivered. Part of the issue needs to be to see whether we can get a coherent, joined-up way of dealing with all the issues of the past. It is quite clear that there are issues that could be better done by something like a legacy unit than by the historical enquiries of the ombudsman's office, some elements of the legacy inquests and the work of the Historical Enquiries Team (HET). Let us see what we can get from those five-party talks in the first place.

Mr G Kelly: Go raibh maith agat. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as an fhreagra go dtí seo. I thank the Minister for his answer so far. Alongside that, with respect, he is the Minister. The requests have been done before we have come to the conclusion of the talks. He mentioned the inquests; is he happy that resources are available? There are also reports in the papers that not enough resources are being given for proper disclosure to a number of the inquests.

Mr Ford: Again, Mr Kelly highlights significant issues relating to resources. The Department of Justice has a budget for dealing with the present and has responsibilities for dealing with the past. No other Department is in that position. That is the challenge we face. Particularly in the difficult financial circumstances that are looming because of the inability to agree welfare reform, it is impossible to make commitments to fund some of the services from the past.

Parades: Criminal Justice Issues

5. Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Justice whether he agrees that the only way to avoid some of the criminal justice issues around controversial parades is to bring people round a table, as happened in Derry, to talk the issue out and to ensure respect and tolerance across the board. (AQT 1375/11-15)

Mr Ford: I am certainly very happy, with an MLA for Foyle asking the question and an MLA for Foyle sitting in the Speaker's Chair, to agree that there are clearly positive examples that have come from people from Derry/Londonderry getting together and discussing those issues. The challenge is to get that kind of mood into areas like north Belfast, where it is sadly lacking. I certainly hope that the leadership available in the House will provide some of that joining up.

Mr Eastwood: Further to that, was the Minister glad today to see that the House unanimously supported a motion calling for unambiguous adherence to the rule of law around these issues?

Mr Ford: Yes, indeed. I am not sure whether Mr Eastwood was in the Chamber at an earlier stage of Question Time when I repeated the point that I have made on a number of occasions: it is absolutely necessary that everybody in the community accepts the determinations of the Parades Commission as having the force of the rule of law, which they do. It is important that those who wish to parade and those who wish to protest both do so entirely lawfully and peacefully.

Mr Speaker: Order. Mr Ian McCrea is not in his place to ask a question.

Capital Works: Business Cases

7. Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice how long would it normally take for an outline business case to be transferred to the Department of Finance and Personnel when progressing a major capital works scheme, such as for a prison. (AQT 1377/11-15)

Mr Ford: That depends on the complexity of the capital scheme in question.

Mr Campbell: I thank the Minister for the vagueness of that reply. Maybe we could get it down to a more precise nature now. The Minister caused some uncertainty three weeks ago when he answered a question from my honourable friend by saying that there was no guarantee that the prison at Magilligan would proceed. At that point, he did not mention that his Department had not put an outline business case to the Department of Finance and Personnel. Thankfully, he has done so today, but can he explain why he did not mention it three weeks ago?

Mr Ford: Maybe it was easier to get the full detail in the context of a prepared answer to a question. Mr Campbell seems to suggest that I have somehow been covering up what is happening. There is a lengthy and complex process, which he outlined in a non-topical question a few moments ago, around strategic business cases, outline business cases and all the details that have to be worked through. I did not think that that was any secret to Members in the House, especially not to those who have themselves been a Minister.

Legal Criticism: DOJ

8. Ms Boyle asked the Minister of Justice how he responds to criticism levelled against his Department by solicitors for the most senior coroner, who have said that the lack of resources allocated to legacy issues is an enormous embarrassment to the state. (AQT 1378/11-15)

Mr Ford: As I have said to other Members of the House, it is absolutely clear that there are fundamental issues of resources. Issues such as obtaining all the necessary information for inquests are enormously complex and demanding of time and skilled personnel, of whom there are a limited number. The reality is that there have been difficulties encountered in doing that. That has never been denied. What is an issue is to ensure that we provide the system in as joined-up a way as possible. That would best be done if we could agree on some of the outstanding issues of the past and find some ways that we could deal with them collectively without using the existing inquest system. Those legacy matters are more complex and are not easily carried through by implementing the standard system of today.

Ms Boyle: Go raibh maith agat. Minister, to ensure that families get to the truth, how do you explain the shocking lack of resources to families such as that of Roseann Mallon, an elderly lady from my county who was shot dead 20 years ago and whose family is still waiting for answers around her death?

Mr Ford: I do not accept that there is a "shocking lack of resources". Significant resources are being put into dealing with legacy inquests, but, given the complexity, the work required and the limited number of people with the capacity to do it, these things are taking time at the moment. Unless we find some better way of dealing with this or find experts to whom we do not currently have access, it will continue to be a major issue. We are well aware of the difficulties that arise from that.

I am aware of the recent court decisions in the context of those who believe that they suffered as a result of delays. We are doing what we can to address that, but I would be foolish to stand here and promise that things could be done when we simply do not have the resources and the expertise in the numbers that we need to deal with everything as fast as we would wish.

Mr Speaker: Order. Mr David McIlveen is not in his place.

3.30 pm

Legal Aid and Coroners' Courts Bill

10. Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Justice whether, given recent public concerns over the SAI process and health service investigations, he feels that an amendment to the Legal Aid and Coroners' Courts Bill, to allow for independent investigation, would be within the scope of the Bill. (AQT 1380/11-15)

Mr Ford: I am not sure whether it would be within the scope of the Bill. Mr McKinney makes an interesting point, but the reality is that the scope of that Bill is extremely narrow. There is certainly an issue of the wider reform of coronial law, which is being looked at in the Department, and I believe that that is where it would best sit.

Mr McKinney: I thank the Minister for his answer. By what mechanism could that be introduced?

Mr Ford: That would be on the basis of a wider Bill looking at coronial law in general. There are a number of factors that need to be taken into account. I know it has been suggested by the Attorney General that we should look at that particular point, but the difficulty is in dealing with matters piecemeal rather than looking at a single piece of legislation that would deal with a number of outstanding issues around coronial law. However, it is an issue that is being actively explored in the Department at present.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Dallat] in the Chair)

Ministerial Statement

Tourism: Public Consultation

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): With your permission, Mr Deputy Speaker, I wish to make a statement to update Members regarding the review of the Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) and wider tourism structures.

On 14 November last year, I announced that an independent review of the Northern Ireland Tourist Board and wider tourism structures was to be undertaken. The overall aim of the review is to ensure that current organisational structures are the optimum necessary to deliver the targets and actions set out in the Programme for Government and the economic strategy and that they are effectively aligned with the work of Invest Northern Ireland. Mr John Hunter CB was appointed to undertake the review, and, following extensive stakeholder engagement with 90 representatives from some 54 organisations, a final draft report is now available.

The executive summary of the report highlights 10 key recommendations, which are as follows: the Northern Ireland Executive should publish an updated strategy for tourism; the Northern Ireland Tourist Board should continue its work with Invest Northern Ireland to develop an economic development brand for Northern Ireland; the Northern Ireland Tourist Board should clarify roles and responsibilities with key partner organisations, including the new district councils, through memoranda of understanding; the Northern Ireland Tourist Board and Tourism Ireland should deepen their relationship through improved communication and enhanced collaboration, with robust targets for increasing tourism numbers based on the updated strategy for tourism; the Northern Ireland Tourist Board should appoint pillar managers for each of its five experience pillars, working alongside destination managers; Invest Northern Ireland and DEL/People 1st should continue to provide business support services and training services respectively to the tourism industry; DEL should initiate a review of the skills needs of the tourism sector; NITB's organisational structure should be built around support for its new destination managers and proposed pillar managers in a new directorate for destination areas and experiential pillars; NITB should engage in an organisation development and culture change programme to embed a renewed focus on the client; and, finally, NITB's name should be changed in order to signal the scale of its envisaged transformation.

In the main body of the report there are a total of 33 recommendations, which include the 10 key recommendations I have mentioned. It will be important that all the recommendations contained in the report are given full consideration. Given the importance of tourism to the local economy, my priority is to ensure that we have the right structures in place to maximise the benefits that this crucial sector can bring right across Northern Ireland. I have therefore decided that the review report will go out for public consultation to provide the many stakeholders involved in the tourism sector with an opportunity to comment on the report's recommendations. The public consultation exercise will commence later this month and will run until late September to allow plenty of time for responses, given that the summer period is very busy for the tourism industry. I will update the Assembly again in the autumn when the consultation period has ended and my officials have analysed the responses received.

I am certain that all Members will join me in thanking Mr Hunter for his work in carrying out the review, which will help to inform and underpin any future changes required to ensure that organisational structures in DETI are the optimum necessary to achieve our long-term goal of making tourism in Northern Ireland a £1 billion industry by 2020. I commend the statement to the Assembly.

Mr McGlone (The Chairperson of the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as a ráiteas ar an phróiseas comhairliúcháin. I thank the Minister for her statement on the consultation process.

I want to raise a couple of points. One of the bullet points in the statement states:

"DEL should initiate a review of the skills needs of the tourism sector".

Obviously, that is an ongoing requirement. Will the Minister outline what skills she or her Department see as being necessary as part of that review? Secondly, I note that, on the draft tourism strategy, the consultation document says:

"The NI Executive should publish an updated Strategy for Tourism".

Given that the draft strategy for tourism came before the Assembly in 2010 and then disappeared into the black hole of the Executive, does the Minister rate the chances of success of a fresh strategy for tourism any higher than the previous one?

Mrs Foster: I thank the Member for those two points. He is right about the last strategy, which came about after an industry-led panel brought forward recommendations. We then brought it to the Executive. Unfortunately, that was just before the last Assembly elections, and it never came out again. Therefore, the reviewer, John Hunter, has indicated that we need an updated tourism strategy.

I have to say that the fact that we have not had an officially endorsed tourism strategy has certainly not prevented the tourism industry from growing, and I pay tribute to the industry for the way in which it has continued to grow, particularly during that very important year of 2012. When Members have a chance to look at the review report, they will see that 2012 was pointed out by Mr Hunter as a hugely important year for the industry. Indeed, he has suggested that we should perhaps look at another year of a similar type so that we can again coalesce around that branding for Northern Ireland.

It will be an updated strategy. It will take into account the fact that business tourism here has grown, particularly in and around Belfast. Mr Hunter pointed to the success of Visit Belfast in that regard. It will also take into account the experience brand and the five pillars that he has pointed to, and, again, those need to be reflected in the updated strategy. Finally, the review of public administration will also have to be factored in to any new tourism strategy because roles and responsibilities have changed in that regard.

We have been working very well with DEL on skills throughout a number of sectors. The hospitality sector has been important in that regard, and People 1st has provided a lot of training for the sector. Londonderry was also very recently named as the first city to have WorldHost city status.

This means sitting down with the industry and finding out what its needs are in particular destinations. It could be welcoming skills, skills in the kitchen or skills at front of house. It is really what the industry needs to move forward. Mr Hunter has suggested that DEL needs to have a close look at the skills required by the industry and have that sectoral review. I know that my officials have been speaking to officials in DEL, and I hope that the Minister will also recognise that there is a need to do that. We will discuss that during the consultation period.

Mr Dunne: I thank the Minister for her statement, and I trust that we will see progress made on the development of tourism. Can the Minister advise on what plans there are to replace the chief executive, Alan Clarke, who, I understand, is retiring later this year?

Mrs Foster: Indeed, Mr Clarke has indicated that he wishes to retire. He has been in post whilst tourism has grown in Northern Ireland, and we thank Alan for all that he has done for the tourism industry here. I hope that the consultation responses will be looked at by the end of September or the beginning of October. I do not think that we are in a position to appoint a new chief executive until that consultation is finished and we decide once and for all on the way forward for the Northern Ireland Tourist Board. So, I will be speaking to the chair of the Tourist Board, Dr Howard Hastings, to make sure that we have the appropriate cover in place. Once the decisions are taken, we will, of course, move very swiftly to appoint a new chief executive.

Mr Flanagan: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as ucht a ráitis. I thank the Minister for her statement and look forward to reading the detailed report over the summer months.

Will she accept that a single body charged with promoting tourism across all of Ireland, which could promote attractions such as the Ring of Kerry, the Marble Arch Caves and the Cliffs of Moher as a single and more enhanced product, as opposed to two separate products, would encourage more holidaymakers to visit this part of Ireland and that that has been a problem for the Tourist Board in recent times?

Mrs Foster: No, I do not accept that. I accept that the Member has not had an opportunity to look at the report, which will be up on the website after I leave the Chamber. In his report, Mr Hunter talks about the fact that:

"A homogenised approach fails to capture the diversity that is on offer across the island"

— he is talking not just about Northern Ireland but about parts of the Republic of Ireland —

"as a whole and its attractiveness to a wide range of tourist audiences as illustrated by the market segmentation in GB proposed by the Tourism Recovery Task Force."

The Tourism Recovery Task Force was something that a number of the industry bodies and NITB and Tourism Ireland brought together to look at the fact that they were concerned about the GB market. One of the recommendations that came back was the fact that, because that is our closest and nearest market, we need to have a standout approach for the different destinations. That is true for the Republic of Ireland, and it is certainly true for Northern Ireland. We need to have that standout and consider how we best achieve it. The review report is saying that we must work together in the Northern Ireland Tourist Board, or whatever its name will be in the future, along with Tourism Ireland to make sure that Northern Ireland gets that standout, particularly in the GB market, because that is where we feel that the biggest market is for us. That has been the case historically, and it will be the case in the future as well.

Mr Kinahan: I thank the Minister for her statement. From my time in the Assembly, it seems to me that we are not particularly good at how we do consultations. Will the Minister ensure that, when the actual wording to the consultation is built on, it will be done in such a way that the tourism industry has a say. We need to get the right answers, and the right questions into it, and then get everything in place to have a strategy for tourism that we can all work on together and that is in place in a year or two.

Mrs Foster: I thank the Member for his question. The whole point of the consultation is that we have stakeholder involvement in the answers. Regardless of what the questions are, knowing the tourism industry, it will tell me what it thinks. It will come forward and make sure that I am aware of what it believes is the best way forward for what is currently the Northern Ireland Tourist Board.

We are having quite a long consultation period to allow the tourism industry to respond. We recognise that the summer months are very busy, so we have left the closing date to 22 September, which gives a lot of time for people to have a look at this. Hopefully, they will come forward. Indeed, I know that they will come forward with their suggestions on and responses to the report.

Mr Lunn: I note the long-term goal to make Northern Ireland tourism a £1 billion industry by 2020. I do not know what the current figure is, but I am sure that that goal is quite challenging. Can the Minister tell us whether there has been, or will be, any further discussion about the VAT rate on the hospitality industry in Northern Ireland compared with that in the Republic?

3.45 pm

Mrs Foster: The tourism industry in Northern Ireland feels very strongly about VAT rates. Of course, it is a UK issue as a whole, and the industry has made representation to the Treasury. We do not have the power to vary VAT rates here in the Assembly, and I support the tourism industry on that because I believe that it leaves us in an uncompetitive situation.

The £1 billion figure is taken from the Programme for Government. I am delighted to say that our key Programme for Government targets for visitor numbers and tourism revenue have been achieved for 2013, and we are well on our way to achieving the 2014 targets and have, in fact, already exceeded our 2014 visitor spend targets. Therefore, we are very much on track to make this a £1 billion industry by 2020. I pay tribute to the Tourist Board, to Tourism Ireland and to everybody in the tourism industry for really driving the industry forward. It has been a very bright part of the new Northern Ireland, and I am very proud of the way in which they drive forward the industry.

Mr Douglas: I thank the Minister for her statement. She revealed today that the consultation exercise will start next month, so will she ensure that local community organisations that are involved in tourism, such as the East Belfast Partnership, which is organising another C S Lewis event later this year, will also be consulted?

Mrs Foster: I very much hope that it will take part in the consultation. It is an opt-in process as opposed to my having to go out to people; they should opt in to the consultation, and I hope that community groups do that. An interesting point about engagement during the Giro d'Italia was the fact that so many community organisations got involved with the Northern Ireland Tourist Board. Some 800 organisations from across Northern Ireland went along to hear about the Northern Ireland Tourist Board's toolkit for getting involved in the Giro d'Italia.

The success of the Giro d'Italia was down to community organisations coming out and getting involved and, of course, embracing the pink. I hope that it is a good model and that other community organisations will do the same in the future, because tourism is everybody's business, from the taxi driver, to the person who meets you at your hotel or B&B, to the person who cleans your room: everybody has a stake in the tourism industry in Northern Ireland. I hope that community organisations will see this as important and respond accordingly.

Mr McKinney: I thank the Minister for her statement. I want to touch on the relationship between Tourism Ireland and the NITB and what appears to be a criticism of diminished communication and collaboration. I noted her earlier answer on the UK market. Would enhanced collaboration and communication lead to the North being sold as part of an island-wide package to avoid confusion among overseas visitors?

Mrs Foster: That is exactly what happens in our faraway destinations at the moment. Tourism Ireland has a remit to promote the whole of the island of Ireland across the world, but its terms of reference state that it has to give Northern Ireland standout, so Tourism Ireland does that at present. My difficulty is that the standout piece does not seem to be working as well for us as it is for the rest of the island because the Republic of Ireland is moving ahead on visitor numbers, which is, of course, to do with direct access. I am encouraging Tourism Ireland to work with the Northern Ireland airports to improve our direct access with the rest of the world. The Member will know about the importance of that access to North America, having been there just last week. It is vital that we continue not only to have direct access there but to look at new markets.

Mr Storey: I thank the Minister for her statement. I also express our appreciation to Mr Hunter for the way in which he engaged and the opportunity that we had to put our views to him. As someone who represents the North Antrim constituency, which has many of the premier tourist attractions in Northern Ireland, you will not be surprised that I want to ask the Minister about the engagement that she has had with key partners such as the Causeway Coast and Glens Tourism Partnership to ensure that it plays a part in getting the maximum benefit from a new policy and a new focus on tourism.

Mrs Foster: With the updated strategy, it is important that the nine destination areas that have been identified are taken forward. Under RPA, we have 11 new local government structures. There are nine new destinations. Therefore, there will be some overlap. That is why Mr Hunter states in his report that there is a need for clarity and certainly about the different roles that each of the organisations will have, and to make sure that we do not have duplication. In other words, that a council or partnership does not decide to do marketing that is the responsibility of Tourism Ireland or the Northern Ireland Tourist Board. Some work is to be carried out on that over the summer. It will be interesting to hear from the different organisations how they view those relationships because decisions will have to be taken about that in September/October.

Private Members' Business

Cancer Research and Treatment

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Business Committee has agreed to allow up to one hour and 30 minutes for this debate. The proposer of the motion will have 10 minutes to propose and 10 minutes in which to make a winding-up speech. One amendment has been selected and is published on the Marshalled List. The proposer will have 10 minutes to propose the amendment and five minutes in which to make a winding-up speech. All other Members who wish to speak will have five minutes.

Mr McKinney: I beg to move

That this Assembly recognises the prevalence of cancer in Northern Ireland and the efforts made by front line staff and professionals to counteract the disease; notes the advances in cancer treatment being made here and the achievements of the cancer centre in South Belfast, which, in collaboration with the pharmaceutical sector, has made significant and unique strides in biomedical diagnostic research; applauds the global and local economic and health benefits of such research; acknowledges that the predicted increased rates of cancer dictate that more needs to be done in terms of furthering research and treatment; and calls on the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety and the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to support this work to develop Northern Ireland as a world-class centre for cancer research and treatment.

I welcome the opportunity to bring this debate to the House, and I support the motion, as amended. The amendment is welcome, but it must be followed by action. The encouragement towards a biomedical research centre is a step on the road to fully capturing the health and economic benefits, but it is only that: we really need to be looking at an innovative, academic-led hospital to drive innovation. Invest NI will have learned that during its recent trip to San Diego where it was illustrated that countries such as Austria are making strides in that regard.

This issue is very important, and I first wish to highlight the positive work in cancer treatment and research that is going on across the North. I brought a similar motion to the House as the topic of an Adjournment debate, and it is worth re-noting the strides in cancer treatment advances that I outlined then.

One of the seminal reports dictating the nature of cancer services here was the Campbell report of 1996. It made a number of key recommendations, including the establishment of a cancer centre, as noted in the motion today. The advances made in cancer treatment and research here in the last 15 years are huge. Staff in our hospitals and universities have played their role in that and continue to deliver high-quality care to cancer patients.

Let us look again at some of the strides that have been made. In 1993, breast cancer screening was established throughout Northern Ireland. In 1994, the first cancer registry was established. In 1999, the first cancer incidence data was compiled. In 2004, the Northern Ireland Cancer Network was established. In 2006, the cancer centre was opened. On top of that, in 2011, we created a cancer services framework.

The progression has taken us an enormous distance, but that is, unfortunately, tainted by current health policies. The cancer drugs issue has been brought up by the SDLP on numerous occasions. The current system for access — the individual funding request (IFR) — is unjustly prohibitive. The Minister has previously come to the House and cited a 95% uptake for non-National Institute for Health and Care Excellence (NICE) approved drugs. What he did not say, though, was that only 5% apply in the first place. So if, for example, we have 100 people in need of a drug, the Minister's 95% uptake figure equates to only four or five of those 100.

The Minister's response to the public outcry over this inequality was to instantly tout as an answer prescription charges and welfare reform. However, the SDLP has found an answer that the Minister has not told us about: the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme (PPRS). The pharmaceutical industry said that the Minister could use that to open access at the stroke of a pen. Why has he not done that? Why has he sought to waste time by reviewing an IFR process that almost everyone in the healthcare sphere agrees is defunct? Why has he dragged welfare reform and prescription charges into the debate when the arguments for a cancer drugs fund model have already been won? The money is there.

In Scotland, the peer-approved clinical system (PACS) has replaced the individual patient treatment request. It is estimated that the new system, which incorporates increased patient-clinician engagement, will help up to 1,500 people in the first year. The Minister has said that he is taken by that model, but what is he doing to replicate it?

Cancer is the leading cause of premature death in 28 of 53 European countries, and it is projected that, by 2035, someone will die from cancer every 10 seconds in Europe. That is a startling forecast. The European Cancer Patient's Bill of Rights has sought to bring equal access, and the work done by Queen's — Paddy Johnston and Mark Lawler in particular — has been integral to that progression.

Here, nearly 13,000 people are diagnosed with cancer every year, and just over 4,000 lose their battle with the illness. At this point, I acknowledge the death of Noleen Adair, who was buried yesterday. She led a charity that did enormously good work.

It is against that backdrop that the improvements in research and innovative treatment in the North are heartily welcomed. From a clinical perspective, the cancer centre, which is located in the City Hospital and opened in 2006, has made a huge difference to cancer provision here. It offers an extensive range of specialist treatment, including radiotherapy, in a modern and professional setting. The centre for cancer research at Queen's University has also played a pivotal role. The centre has an array of core competencies and is filled with the expertise of over 300 cancer, clinical and basic researchers. We saw recently how the research taking place here can have a very positive effect: the work of Almac has produced information that will improve ovarian cancer diagnosis, and I commend the role of Invest NI in providing capital for that work.

All of that is inconsistent with the current cancer drugs access policy and the red herring that prescription charges are needed to pay for greater access. That is a more significant red herring when we consider the amount given yesterday to the whole of the UK through the PPRS: £74 million per quarter. We get around 3% of that, which could translate into something like £9 a million year. The money is there. Furthermore, it is projected that we will get 9% next year, which equates to £27 million. Prescription charges are simply not needed to fund cancer drugs.

I would like to talk about the work of clinicians. I know, through discussions with them and cancer patients, that doctors are being placed in an invidious position — a moral conundrum, if you like — when it comes to prescribing treatment for cancer. They know the gravity of any potential diagnosis, the chances of survival and, most importantly, that treatment available elsewhere is not available here. That means that, often, the treatment path recommended may not be the most effective one.

Clinicians here know that, due to the flawed nature of the IFR system currently in operation, most patients will not qualify for the latest and most effective drugs. That is unacceptable: it is unacceptable for the patients and unacceptable to put clinicians in that position. I have written to the Royal College of Physicians to ask whether knowing that presents its members with any moral or ethical dilemmas. Without breaching the private nature of any correspondence, I can tell you that the college is treating the matter very seriously and will debate it thoroughly.

The Minister may wish to use the welfare reform argument, as he has done, and he echoed it today on several occasions, but let us look at welfare reform in relation to this topic. There has been substantial work done by Macmillan Cancer and others, and research has shown the financial impact of receiving a cancer diagnosis, with some almost £300 a month worse off on average. What will welfare reform do to them? The reforms to our welfare system will only hurt those people further.

4.00 pm

The role of the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment in the attempt to make Northern Ireland a world leader in cancer research and treatment should not be underestimated. Last week, I accompanied Minister Foster and other members of the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment to the United States and talked at length about cancer research and drugs development. We have to put cancer drugs into perspective. In reality, they are the conclusion of a process that is often started here through research and medical trials. For that reason, it is almost logical that those patients should get the drugs. Many are developed and trialled here but, in a cruel irony, not available here.

My experience in America tells me that there are significant jobs and many other economic benefits in the development of drugs infrastructure. We have one here, but, if the experience of San Diego is anything to go by, it could grow far more. Here, too, was a city that was facing potential economic downturn. Here, too, was a city that had the beginning of a biotech future and decided that it wanted to build on it. It is now sitting on a multibillion-pound industry that employs thousands and brings wealth, prosperity and improvements, not just to the people of San Diego but globally. This should be the vision for here, too.

What are our barriers to this? We are taking a very narrow focus on cancer drugs, seeing them as a cost and not a benefit. We are not seizing the day in promoting our drugs industry. That is why our motion calls not just on the Health Minister to do something but for joined-up government, in this case linking with the Enterprise Minister in developing this place as a global centre of excellence. Good work has already been completed. As I have noted, the role of Invest NI in helping with R&D moneys has resulted, for example, in the good work of Almac on breakthrough treatment, but that is only the tip of the iceberg.

We can approach this argument from a number of different angles, whether cancer, drugs development or jobs. However, we will not achieve the full ambition and vision unless we see this as a journey that will develop all of them equally, with cancer patients benefiting from the latest diagnostic treatment and drugs, and drugs that are developed and trialled here through well-paid jobs that are based here, bringing income that stays here —

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is almost up.

Mr McKinney: — as part of Northern Ireland plc, a global centre of excellence.

Mr Dunne: I beg to move the following amendment: After first "research and treatment;" insert "supports efforts to broaden access for local patients to innovative treatments and clinical trials; encourages the establishment of a university-linked biomedical research centre,".

I, too, welcome the opportunity to speak in this debate on what remains a terrible disease in our society that affects virtually every family in Northern Ireland. I thank Mr Fearghal McKinney for bringing the motion. I commend the amendment to the House and trust that Members will see fit to support it as it complements the original motion.

Cancer continues to be a serious health risk to all our population, with 13,000 patients affected in Northern Ireland every year. The treatment of cancer is carried out through our hospital services, with multi-professional hospital teams, and support from a number of charities, including Marie Curie and NI Hospice, which all do an excellent job and to which we must pay tribute. During a recent visit to the Marie Curie Hospice at Beaconsfield, a number of us saw at first hand the excellent work that is being carried out for patients and their families at an extremely challenging time in their lives.

In relation to cancer research, the Health Committee recently visited the Northern Ireland Centre for Cancer Research and Cell Biology to see the excellent work led by Professor David Waugh and Professor Manuel Salto-Tellez. Professor Waugh is a very committed and enthusiastic professional who is very keen to promote the development of cancer treatment and research through locally based research and trials. Last week, he spoke at an event in San Diego prior to the large bio-conference, highlighting the opportunities that exist for the development of cancer drugs and treatments in Northern Ireland.

At the international bio-conference, which was supported by Invest NI, we had on display the work of our two largest universities, Queen's and the University of Ulster, highlighting that skills are available to do such research involving partnership working between industry and academia. We also had on display local firms like Almac, which is involved in extensive research and development of new drugs with financial support from Invest NI. It is important that we showcase our skills to the world as we seek to attract new investors to work alongside our top medical researchers. Some of the best in the world are here as they seek to find solutions through bio-research into cancer. Bio-research includes work on biological molecules, cell tissues and processes to turn research knowledge into new diagnostics. The real focus for the future treatment of patients is in the need for a focus on the individual needs of such patients. One treatment — such as is carried out at the moment — does not suit all. There are many patients out there, getting standard treatments that are having a negative effect on them.

There is a clear need for more focus-specific treatments in relation to cancer, and we have the professional skills and enthusiasm to make it happen. The recent Connected Health initiative, which involves a memorandum of understanding between the Department of Health and DETI for developing new methods of working, could lead to support for such initiatives and help gain commercial support for further clinical trials and drug development. We need to do more to see the development of a world-class centre of excellence in cancer research and the development of drugs here in Northern Ireland.

In relation to cancer drugs, there is a real need for access to the 38 drugs that are available in the rest of the UK. There is a strong lobby for such treatments, and I know that the Minister has a lot of sympathy for the provision of such drugs. I think we all recognise the strong lobby that has come from our local charities. As MLAs, we have all received the emails, and we appreciate the concern out there.

Again, during our recent visit to the Belfast cancer centre, the consultants there were very clear that it was virtually impossible to get access to the rare cancer drugs under the existing individual funding request (IFR) system. We are advised that the system is so difficult that the professionals are not putting in such applications as it is virtually impossible to get approval.

I look forward to the Minister's response in relation to how successful the IFR system is in getting patients access to the rare cancer drugs that are available in the rest of the UK. I commend the amendment to the House.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the proposer of the motion. I support the motion and the amendment. I believe that cancer, its treatment and research, must be of concern to us all. It is very clear that cancer does not recognise age, gender or borders and, therefore, it is proper that we strive to position, if you like, the North of Ireland as a world-class centre for cancer research and development.

As the proposer of the motion outlined, much has been done and much achieved. I acknowledge and pay tribute to all professional front line staff who commit their daily lives to those endeavours. Our recent visit to the centre for cancer research very clearly showed the professionalism and, indeed, the developments that have been taking place, even over a short number of years. It is certainly very impressive to be a part of that.

The reality is that more than one in three of us will develop some form of cancer during our lifetime. Around 7,000 cases are diagnosed each year. I have referred to the significant developments in research and treatments but, as the proposer of the motion quite rightly stated, we have equality issues when it comes to accessing the type of drugs that are required. It should be very clear to us all that access to drugs and treatment should not be by dint of postcode.

It is worth noting that the recent Active Citizenship Network conference in Brussels heard calls for a review of access to cancer drugs. I look forward to the Minister's response to that, and further, to his actions on it. It is also very clear that empowering patients has a clear resonance with the 'European Cancer Patient's Bill of Rights', and that is something that the Assembly should support and endeavour to develop.

Cancer research over the last number of years has led to a significant increase in cancer survival rates in the North, and that is very much to be welcomed, but, as the proposer of the motion said, much more needs to be done. In this debate today, people need to get a sense of actions and outcomes flowing from the discussion. Cancer is the leading cause of premature death in 28 out of 53 European countries, and it is projected that, by 2035, someone will die from cancer every 10 seconds in Europe. It is also worth acknowledging that cancer is the single largest cause of death from disease in children and young people. Treatment normally starts immediately, but it is quite often given many miles from home and lasts up to a number of years.

In welcoming developments, I want to single out the progress on the radiotherapy unit in my constituency in Altnagelvin, and I hope that that will allow for further improvement of capacity in the regional cancer centre in Belfast. In welcoming today's motion and supporting the motion and the amendment, I believe that the real ambition for a centre for global health innovation can be supported and developed and is very much welcome.

Mr Beggs: I thank the Member for bringing the motion forward and indicate the support of the Ulster Unionist Party for it.

The prevalence of cancer has been increasing, with some 8,700 patients a year being diagnosed locally and, sadly, some 4,000 passing away, with cancer attributed as contributing to the cause of death. A third of us can expect to suffer from some form of cancer in our lives. Life expectancy is increasing and, with an older population, the prevalence of cancer also increases, so this will be an increasing problem.

In 1997, Northern Ireland was at the bottom of the survival tables. Thankfully, as a result of a number of developments, we are nearer the top today. We are fortunate to have benefited from a number of developments at the Belfast City Hospital site in south Belfast that are collectively contributing to that improved outcome for patients. We have the new cancer treatment centre, where modern treatment facilities are provided at Belfast City Hospital, and I pay tribute to the doctors, the specialist nurses and the support staff who are enabling those better outcomes.

We also have the Centre for Cancer Research and Cell Biology, and I acknowledge that, in particular, the work of Professor Paddy Johnston over many years has allowed the development of research here in Belfast. Cutting-edge research has occurred, along with state-of-the-art diagnostic equipment being provided and collaboration between the private sector and the public sector, and that has enabled direction towards appropriate treatment to suit the needs of individuals and close monitoring of progress of any particular cancer and its treatment.

The close working and support of Cancer Research UK has also enabled significant research in Belfast; that must be acknowledged. I also wish to indicate our thanks to Professor Manuel Salto-Tellez and his colleagues. The close working and integration between our health service and the cancer centre is a significant advantage that we have here and enables us to link the treatment and the testing and, ultimately, the trials. That has not been able to be replicated in many other parts of the world and is a significant advantage that we have, and I believe that that integrated working has been a significant factor in driving up our outcomes.

The other significant feature is the Northern Ireland Cancer Trials Centre. I recently met the clinical director, Dr Richard Wilson, along with the Health Committee, and he highlighted the fact that clinical trials allow the development of personalised medicines that are specifically targeted to each individual and their cancer.

No longer does one treatment suit all. Scientific research and development has enabled particular treatment for particular people to be identified and developed.

4.15 pm

The support of a number of charities in allowing the development of cancer treatment in Belfast must be recognised. So, too, must the support of companies such as Almac, as has been mentioned, which carried out clinical trials for ovarian cancer patients following a local discovery in collaboration with Queen's University. Again, we must recognise that the close working of the Department of Health with DETI, the charities and the private sector — the pharmaceutical industry — has been to the benefit of local patients. A virtuous circle has been created between the cancer treatment centre, the Centre for Cancer Research and Cell Biology and the Cancer Trials Centre. However, the question I have, Minister, is this: why are the 38 specialist cancer drugs available in England not able to be used and trialled in Belfast, as that is inhibiting the progress that can be made? Clearly, we need to move forward.

Mr McKinney: I thank the Member for giving way. Does he acknowledge that there is considerable appetite in the public mind for this, as reflected through the online petition organised by Cancer Focus NI, which has now cleared its 10,000 signature target and doubled it to 20,000?

Mr Beggs: Clearly, the public are questioning why the drugs that are available in England are not available in Northern Ireland, particularly, as I understand it, when all 38 drugs — the Minister can confirm this — would be covered by the UK-wide PPRS and could be provided in Northern Ireland without any significant additional costs. Indeed, I understand that the scheme would guarantee no increases in the provision of branded and specialist medicines until 2015 and limits the potential increase for a number of years thereafter. Given that, why are those drugs not available in Belfast? Why are we putting the trials that could be available at risk? Why are we not allowing the Northern Ireland public to benefit from those specialist drugs —

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is almost up.

Mr Beggs: — which have been proven to enhance life and the quality of life for those who suffer from cancer?

Mr McCarthy: I thank Mr Fearghal McKinney and Mr Seán Rogers for bringing to the Assembly such an important motion on an issue that affects every family in Northern Ireland.

On behalf of the Alliance Party, I wish to put on record our total support for all our front line staff and professional people who work tirelessly to counteract and overcome this terrible scourge on the life of far too many of our friends and neighbours. A few days ago, as a member of the Health Committee, I had the pleasure, along with others, of visiting the biomedical diagnostic research unit sited on the City hospital complex. I want to sincerely thank our hosts on that day for their hospitality and the important information we received on the work that they are engaged in. I pay tribute to them and the passionate and dedicated manner in which they go about that work on our behalf. Indeed, it is such a shame that, with all the innovation and new medicine, cancer patients here cannot benefit from that success, as other Members have indicated, simply because our Health Department, to date, has not funded those vital cancer drugs. I understand that there are some 38 or 39 such drugs. If you reside in England, you can access those life-saving drugs. Surely, that cannot be right.

On 24 June — only last week — in the Assembly, in answer to a question from me on cancer drug funding, the Minister, who is with us today in the Chamber, replied:

"I am firmly of that view. I need the support of the House to deliver cancer drugs, and I implore the House to give me that support to buy the cancer drugs instead of putting me in some sort of chained-up position where I cannot do it and then condemning me for not doing it. Give me the support to do it, and I will certainly buy the cancer drugs. I will buy them straight away if the House gives me the support to do it."
[Official Report, This Bound Volume, p279, col 2].

Today, I am certain that the House will, by voting to support the motion and the amendment, give our Health Minister the OK to go out and buy those drugs without delay.

Mr Wells: Will the Member give way?

Mr McCarthy: Wait until I am finished if you will, please, Jim.

The First Minister said clearly and openly recently that, if Edwin needs more money for our health service, he will get it. To all Ministers in the Executive I say this: do the decent thing now, and put your money where your mouth is. There should be no more excuses or pontificating and no more unnecessary suffering for many of our constituents. Give the Health Minister your approval today for him to carry out his commitment to purchase these cancer drugs straight away. Too much time has already been wasted.

On further research and treatment, I have no doubt that, given all that is going on in the centre that we visited last week, we have the ability to innovate further and produce world-class medicines and drugs. We can be world leaders; in fact, I believe that we already are. At present, as Fearghal said, Cancer Focus is rightly engaged in a massive publicity campaign to get equality in Northern Ireland for all cancer patients. We must give 100% support to that campaign. It is also supported by the local press, and the stories in recent times — certainly in the 'Belfast Telegraph' — have been heart-rending. So many good people have been cut down by this disease that it must surely make us all totally determined to provide medicines to ease pain and prolong life for every sufferer.

The Minister recently suggested the reintroduction of prescription charges to fund cancer drugs. That is something that the Alliance Party is prepared to consider, provided that safeguards for vulnerable patients are put in place.

Mr Beggs: Will the Member give way?

Mr McCarthy: No, not at the moment, Roy.

Devolution gives the Assembly the power to provide for our own people. Surely being able to access life-saving drugs must be paramount to every Member of the Assembly. We do not want to see headlines such as these I have in my hand:

"I may have to leave my family for England to get cancer drug that I need".

There is a story about Una Crudden with the headline:

"Terminally ill Una Crudden fights on: I'm now in palliative care, no chemotherapy left".

We are all ashamed that that has to be the case for so many people. Can we give Mr Poots the support he needs to buy the life-saving drugs?

I will give way to Jim Wells first.

Mr Wells: The honourable Member suggested that we as an Assembly can wave a magic wand, and, by giving our support to him, the Minister could introduce the cancer drugs. It is a wee bit more fundamental than that. It is about finding the cash to do so, not the political will. It is about finding the money to meet all the competing demands on the health budget.

Mr McCarthy: I fully appreciate what Mr Wells says, but the Minister made an impassioned plea in the Assembly last week for Members to give him support. We give him that support today by supporting the motion and the amendment, and Mr Poots can go out and buy the drugs straight away.

Mr Beggs: Will the Member give way?

Mr McCarthy: Go ahead.

Mr Beggs: I understand that the 38 specialist drugs available through English cancer drugs funds are included in the PPRS. Therefore, their inclusion and availability in a specialist scheme in Northern Ireland would be at no extra cost. Does the Member not think that it is rather strange that they are not available in Northern Ireland, given that background?

Mr McCarthy: I totally agree with Mr Beggs.

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is almost up.

Mr McCarthy: I plead with the Assembly to support the motion and the amendment. It is over to the Minister to go and do what he told us last week he would do: buy them immediately.

Mrs Cameron: I am happy to support the motion and the amendment. It is well documented that one in three of us will be diagnosed with cancer at some point in our life, which, to put it in perspective, is a staggering 36 out of the Assembly's 108 MLAs. With an increasingly ageing population, the need to do everything possible to raise awareness, provide effective treatments and provide long-term outcomes has never been greater.

Around 10,000 people will be diagnosed with cancer in Northern Ireland each year, a figure that has increased by approximately 3.2% year on year, putting an even greater pressure on our healthcare system and the professionals employed in it. Northern Ireland is at the forefront of advances in cancer management, with academics such as Professor Patrick Johnston and Professor Mark Lawler from Queen's University leading the way in the development and innovation of new drugs and treatment methods. Working in an interdisciplinary manner, scientists, doctors and nurses at the Centre for Cancer Research and Cell Biology are aiming to provide an internationally competitive centre of the highest quality to improve patient care and develop new treatments.

Having recently visited the centre and seen at first hand the work that is being carried out, I take this opportunity to thank the staff and Cancer Research UK for the groundbreaking achievements at the facility.

Since the publication of the Campbell report, the establishment of five cancer units and a regional cancer centre has greatly changed the way in which patients are looked after in the healthcare system. In my constituency, the unit at Antrim Area Hospital provides excellent care for people with more common cancers such as lung, breast and colorectal cancer. It also provides chemotherapy services, which enables patients to be treated closer to home. The health service, working closely with charities such as Macmillan Cancer Support, Marie Curie Cancer Care, Action Cancer and Cancer Focus Northern Ireland, is able to provide a holistic approach to cancer services, including screening, prevention, support and palliative care.

A recent announcement by Almac highlighted the importance of capital investment and research, and its £8 million project resulted in information that will significantly benefit the treatment of ovarian cancer. The scheme, which was part-funded by Invest NI, will provide vast improvements to cancer treatment and will also make significant financial savings to the health service.

The advances in the treatment of cancer are evident in the increasing survival rates, but we cannot rest on our laurels. Prevention and education must remain at the heart of those advances in the future. With around half of all cancers being attributable to lifestyle choices, we need to encourage people to give up smoking, reduce their alcohol intake, eat a balanced diet, exercise more and protect their skin in the sun. A multi-agency approach must be adopted to reduce the ever-increasing trend of cancer diagnosis. Of course, there are many cases of fit, seemingly healthy individuals who will also be diagnosed with some form of cancer.

We must ensure that the specialist drugs that can enhance or extend life are made available. It is unfair that some drugs are available in other parts of the UK but not in Northern Ireland. I encourage the Health Minister to continue to work towards finding the funding solution to make that happen. We owe it to cancer sufferers and campaigners such as Una Crudden, who have given selflessly of their own limited time and displayed incredible courage to fight for awareness and equality of treatment for those who will come after them. We must do all in our power in the Assembly, leaving political posturing aside, to do the right thing and find solutions that will be a fitting legacy to those who have campaigned so passionately.

In Northern Ireland, we are extremely fortunate to have a fantastic health service that is free at the point of use. We must channel our efforts into ensuring that we continue to provide that world-class service to all through investment and in research and development. We have made enormous inroads into the treatment and prevention of cancer. I look forward to that continuing for future generations.

Mr Brady: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I also support the motion and the amendment. The motion is a positive endorsement of those who deal with patients and those who further research. The amendment refers to the encouragement of a university-linked research centre, and that should also be supported.

We have dealt with the statistics relating to cancer. It is the main cause of death of one in three people here. Obviously, incidence is likely to increase alongside the ageing population. It continues to put increasing demands on the services provided. The costs associated with the treatment of cancer are substantial.

Cancer results in costs not only to patients but to their families. As someone who lost my spouse to cancer a number of years ago, I am well aware of the situation that it puts families in. It can place families in financial difficulty. Treatment often means that patients have to take sick leave and, in some cases, give up their jobs. There are other financial costs such as those associated with childcare etc. After treatment, people need more heat in their homes. There are travel costs associated with medical appointments, and patients often have to be accompanied by relatives, who also have to take time off work.

Specialist cancer drugs are expensive. Trusts tend to work on the principle that, if NICE recommends that a drug should not be used in the NHS, it is unlikely to be used or funded here. In England, as was stated, 38 life-extending cancer drugs are available to patients through the cancer drugs fund. Certainly, here in the North, we have contributed significantly to the field of cancer research, clinical trials and new treatments. Ironically, some of the medicines available on the cancer drug fund list were developed and trialled here but are still not available to patients living here. That simply means that, in some cases, our cancer patients are unable to access treatments with proven clinical benefits.

4.30 pm

It is important to recognise the imperative driving patients and their families to seek and secure access to treatment that may extend life. We have to understand that patients whose prognosis for recovery through conventional treatments is poor may wish to participate in trials, and those trials should be made available.

As for the provision of treatment and the availability of drugs, the PPRS can be looked at by the Minister, and I am sure that he is already doing that.

I support the motion, and I thank the Members who proposed the motion and the amendment. Go raibh maith agat.

Mr D McIlveen: I, too, support the motion and the amendment. First, it is worth mentioning the problem that we have in Northern Ireland with diagnosing cancer. Mr McKinney made the point that, in a very short space of time, over 10,000 people signed a petition asking for a cancer drugs fund to be implemented in Northern Ireland. Those figures are hardly surprising, given that, on average, 13,000 people every year are diagnosed with cancer in Northern Ireland. That is 13,000 people — our constituents — who go to their doctor and get that news. I think that all of us would dread the thought of ever having to have that conversation with our doctor. We are, therefore, constantly reminded by family, constituents and friends just how serious an issue this is. I believe that we should spend our time on it and put our shoulder to the wheel to try to ensure that the provision of diagnoses and the search for a cure continue to be funded. I know that the Minister is committed to doing that.

One group of people omitted from today's debate are those who help and are crucial in the development of new cancer treatments and new treatments in general by taking part in clinical trials. We have to commend those who volunteer to take part in such trials. I know that there have been campaigns about that even in this Building. In May, we had the OK To Ask campaign, which encouraged patients to ask their doctors about which trials are available at any given time, because those could be used to help to find a cure and to develop drugs that are coming to market.

Cancer research is a major driver for investment as well. Mr Dunne mentioned that in his opening remarks. Of course the investment side in this context is secondary, and quite rightly so. However, if we were to develop a world-leading product here, we would be very proud of it.

The argument about England and —

Mr McKinney: I thank the Member for giving way. I would like to extend the thought on that. If we were to develop that in a holistic way, either for tertiary or secondary, would it not be possible to attract more trials and even more innovative drugs, which our cancer patients could avail themselves of?

Mr D McIlveen: I thank the Member for his intervention. When we deal with something that is for many people a ticking time bomb once they get a diagnosis, we have to deal with people for whom things can never happen fast enough, and I take the point that there will always be a time pressure. However, with the memorandum of understanding that has been signed between DETI and the Department of Health, which, in many ways, is very innovative thinking on the part of both Departments, I believe that we are getting to a point now where that can and will be the case. I am sure that the Minister will be able to update us on how that relationship with DETI is going.

We are hearing a lot about the 38 cancer drugs that are available. We would all support absolute equality for patients in Northern Ireland with patients in the rest of Great Britain, but we have to be conscious of the fact that, in many ways, we are comparing apples with pears: there are 38 cancer drugs available in the rest of the United Kingdom, but there are also drugs that we fund here that are not available over there, so we have to accept that there are differences.

In many ways, that has also led to confusion, particularly about the PPRS. The Minister will correct me if I am wrong, but my understanding of the PPRS is that it does not bring new money into the system; it is a scheme designed to mitigate the price rises in branded medicines. My interpretation is that the rest of the United Kingdom receives considerable income from prescription charges, which we do not have to pay, so we do not have that income. So the Department in Great Britain has the flexibility to divert the PPRS money, which we cannot do because we would leave ourselves financially exposed to any price hike in a brand of medicine already approved. Balancing the funds has to be taken into account, and Mr Wells made that point very well.

Mr Beggs: Will the Member give way?

Mr D McIlveen: I am sorry, Mr Beggs, I am running very short of time. The Minister made it clear to the Assembly that he would support the reintroduction of a small prescription charge in Northern Ireland. Whilst I know that there were caveats attached, and I would not expect anything different, I take encouragement from Mr McCarthy saying that the Alliance Party is at least open-minded. So, hopefully, we can get buy-in from the other parties as well.

We have to deal with not just the cure but the prevention. There is a lot of work going on in the Department on prevention, including the use of alcohol and tobacco. I thank the Deputy Speaker for the opportunity to contribute.

Mr McCallister: Like colleagues, I support the motion and the amendment. Like huge numbers of our constituents, there is not, sadly, anyone in the House who has not been affected in some shape or form by cancer or had a relative or loved one who, at some point, has had that diagnosis. That gives us some idea of the scale of the problem that we face in tackling cancer.

As Mrs Cameron said, there are many preventative things, and we have a duty to start a drive on those. The Minister, in conjunction with the Public Health Agency (PHA) and other agencies, right through from our education system, needs a much more coherent and joined-up approach to tackling the very issues that Mrs Cameron talked about: dealing with the effects of poor diet, alcohol abuse, or misuse, and looking at the number of units that individuals consume. All are contributory factors. The glorious weather over the last few days can also be a contributory factor. There are many preventative things that we have to do.

Mr Brady talked about the financial impact. Over a number of years, the work of groups such as Macmillan has highlighted not only the turmoil of dealing with a cancer diagnosis but the impact that it can have on a family.

When it comes to developing new drugs, Northern Ireland has, over the past few years, developed a certain reputation and expertise. We want to continue to build on that.

We want to encourage as much of that innovation as possible, and partnerships between Queen's University and the cancer centre are welcome and build on that. That is something that we must do all that we can do to encourage.

Many Members have talked about the statistics and some of the welcomed improvements that there have been in survival rates. We are still not doing as well as many other comparative parts of Europe. That is something that we need to keep a focus on. I commend the work that the health service is doing in being much better at addressing the patient's journey from diagnosis to treatment. It is an example of where we could provide a much quicker, faster response from the health service for other conditions. Thankfully, we are doing better in some of those measures in cancer treatment, but we need to keep the focus on research and development and on bringing in new partners to develop clinical trials, as Mr McIlveen talked about. We need to focus on how we can encourage that and on how we can make sure that those treatments are being developed.

There is also the important point about new and approved drugs being accessible to members of society — our constituents. It is of enormous regret, and, I am sure, very disturbing to Members, that we seem to be lagging behind other parts of the country in respect of the number and range of approved drugs that are available in Northern Ireland. I support some of what the Minister has talked about with regard to looking at a modest prescription charge and directing it to that. That would be important, if he could guarantee that the money would go to that, as I would hope he could.

Mr Deputy Speaker: Bring your remarks to a close, please.

Mr McCallister: That is something that is certainly worth having a debate on.

Mr Beggs: Will the Member give way?

Mr McCallister: Yes.

Mr Beggs: Will the Member explain why he would want to introduce prescription charges if there is a backstop on the pharmaceutical budget?

Mr McCallister: If money was available in the pharmaceutical budget, you would, of course, go there first. You would not introduce a prescription charge when you are not using all of the moneys available in the pharmacy budget. I have heard the Minister talk about how we might develop a dedicated cancer drugs fund that would be used to fund the very high cost, sometimes experimental drugs that are very, very expensive to use. That is something that I want to see people across Northern Ireland having access to. It is vital that they have access to those drugs; I want to see that.

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr McCallister: We are lagging behind the rest of the country in doing that, and that is something that the Assembly and the Minister should be aiming to put right.

Mr Agnew: My election to the House was filled with mixed emotions. The day before I was elected, I buried a good friend of mine, Conor Shaw, who unfortunately lost his life at age 31 as a result of cancer. As many Members have mentioned, it is a disease that will affect almost all of us in some way, directly or indirectly, so prevalent is it in society. Pam Cameron gave the statistic that one third of people will likely die from the disease. Indeed, our former colleague David McClarty, unfortunately, was lost to the illness.

A number of Members have made mention of the impressive campaign from Cancer Focus NI calling for equal access to cancer drugs. I think that it has been so successful in getting support because it is something that all our constituents will have had some degree of experience of.

4.45 pm

The Minister took questions on access to cancer drugs during Question Time earlier, and I regret that he chose to turn it into a debate about welfare reform. Access to drugs for many illnesses, but for cancer in particular, was a problem for the health service before the debate about welfare reform came up; one did not cause the other. Whilst we need to have mature conversations around Budget allocation, it is a shame to turn such an important and emotive issue for people into a political squabble.

Conversely, I welcome the fact that the Minister has brought forward proposals, such as an annual charge for prescriptions. It is certainly something that we can look at as a possible option although, as has been stated, we need transparency around finances. Would a charge go directly to providing funds for cancer drugs? What would the line of financial accountability be? What other options can and are being considered? I know many people who feel strongly that there should be no prescription charges, but there could be a voluntary payment scheme whereby people could choose to pay for prescriptions if they believe they can afford to. I prefer that approach, but let us look at the evidence and research on what approaches have been taken elsewhere and let us present proposals rather than simply a take-it-or-leave-it proposal. That would be the best way forward.

My intention, on behalf of the Green Party, and, seemingly, the intention of all parties in the House, is to support the motion and the amendment. The Minister can see that when he is willing to work with his ministerial colleagues, his Committee and the Assembly the political will is there. I think we can agree on the destination of getting equal access to cancer drugs for people in Northern Ireland. Let us have a reasoned and sensitive debate about how we get to that destination, what steps are required and what steps we are willing to take to achieve that because, whilst financial issues are, of course, a consideration, people feel that they are part of the National Health Service and that there is an injustice when treatment is available to people in GB that is not available in Northern Ireland. I think that we would get much more understanding from our constituents if we were seen to work together on this issue.

Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): I welcome today's motion. I am grateful to the honourable Members for raising the important issue of cancer research and treatment. A reduction in the number of people who develop cancer and in the number whose lives are ended prematurely are goals that we all desire.

We are in the midst of demographic change. Every day brings new statistics on how our ageing population will change our future society. One change is that, with higher numbers of older people, we may see more people with cancer. Other things are changing, too. Through research and the clinical application of research findings, we have improved how we diagnose and treat cancer, so we should not resign ourselves to a future with more cancer. We can do something about that.

Prevention reduces the impact of cancer on our services, and, of course, on people. Our Public Health Agency has campaigns in place and in development to raise awareness and provide advice to minimise the risks through our lifestyles — it is always worth repeating — whether it is tobacco and the absolute necessity to stop smoking altogether; alcohol consumption and making it very clear that you should not consume alcohol or consume it in moderate quantities; taking exercise, which is abundantly important; weight management, or sunlight exposure.

These programmes are based on the best available evidence from research on how to prevent cancer. Our screening programmes raise awareness of symptoms of early cancer and opportunities for early intervention. Excellence in cancer diagnosis is essential to support the best outcomes for patients. Our cancer diagnostic services include one of the UK's most advanced in molecular pathology, deploying cutting-edge technologies to serve both research and cancer services.

On that particular front, I think that it is absolutely critical — Mr McCarthy is here — that DEL, my Department and DETI engage with Queen's University in developing a programme for them to advance further. That will involve a capital investment, and it will involve a recurrent investment, but it will put Northern Ireland in an even more advanced place when it comes to cancer research. I do not have much time for people who suggest that we are in danger of losing cancer research. People are here because of the quality of the research that is carried out, the quality of the people who are carrying out that research and the availability of people who are willing to participate. The fact that we have an electronic care record puts us in an advantageous position. Northern Ireland has worked hard to get to that point with key research people.

We have also more recently, just last year, started contributing to a national fund of some £2 million, which reaps around £4.50 for every £1 that we spend on research. Research is well placed in Northern Ireland. For one in five cancer patients in Northern Ireland who participate in such research, those tests enable patients to receive the most appropriate treatment specific to their tumours — the treatment to which they are most likely to respond. The staff and facilities that enable the development of the most advanced, personalised treatment are supported in part through funding from Cancer Research UK and our own regional Health and Social Care R&D funds. That is something that we should not discount when we are having this discussion. That is something that many people in other parts of the United Kingdom are not benefiting from and will not benefit from, but we in Northern Ireland are delivering right here. One in five cancer sufferers are probably at the cutting edge of technology and of research in the services that they are receiving.

Radiotherapy services and research have been boosted significantly in recent years, and our capacity for effective and efficient treatment of patients will be enhanced when our regional radiotherapy facility at Altnagelvin Hospital is completed. I know that the Ulster Unionist Party did not think that we should do that project. I know that it wanted to pull that project. It was patently obvious to me, within the first week that I took office, having visited Altnagelvin, having met the Pink Ladies, having discussed the matter with my Chief Medical Officer, my permanent secretary and key people in cancer research, and having been to the cancer centre at Belfast City Hospital, that it was something that was absolutely necessary, and not just for the people of the north-west — although it is a good enough reason that people who are suffering from cancer and need 15 minutes of radiotherapy should not have a four-hour round journey to receive that treatment. However, it was necessary not just for the people in the north-west, but because of the rising number of people with cancer. Belfast City Hospital would not have been able to cope with the numbers. It was an absolute necessity.

So I will tell you something, Mr Deputy Speaker: I will not be playing politics with cancer. It is far too important. We are looking at about one in three of our population developing cancer at some stage in their lives. Look around this Room; it will probably affect every family in this Building. This is not something to play politics with; it is something to get real about, and we must be absolutely serious about how we respond to it.

Radiotherapy services and research have been boosted recently, and that is something that we are proud of. I am proud of the improvements in cancer prevention, diagnosis and treatment that are deriving from research undertaken in Northern Ireland. For example, the Northern Ireland Cancer Registry has shown that we now have the best breast cancer survival rate of any part of the UK, yet I read a headline in a newspaper scaring people about breast cancer, when we are actually delivering the best results in breast cancer in the United Kingdom. Cancer is not something to scare people about. It is scary enough if you have breast cancer, without reading newspaper headlines that compound that.

We are committed to minimising the number of people whose lives are impacted by cancer, and research is one of the surest ways of achieving that. In addition to the evident benefits for people's health, investing in cancer research also makes sense for economic development. Locally, we have seen initiatives that began as straightforward research projects being translated into commercial developments and products that are destined for the global markets, with the support of local and global industry and Invest Northern Ireland, to provide better care for people across the world, with Northern Ireland being a place that people are looking to for doing things that are significantly better and carrying out improvements that can help others advance in their treatments.

According to a report published two weeks ago, on June 16, each pound invested in cancer research generates a continuous stream of benefits equal to 40p a year thereafter. The report was commissioned by the Academy of Medical Sciences, Cancer Research UK, the Wellcome Trust and the Department of Health in England.

On all of those things, I have heard Members says that all they want is equality. Really? Is that what you want? At this moment in time, England is the only place with the cancer fund in place. Scotland introduced a rare conditions medicine fund in 2013 to cover its orphan drugs — medicines for illnesses that affect fewer than one in 2,000 people. Not all will be cancer, but some will be. It has also replaced its IFR process with a new peer approval process, and the first decisions under that approach are expected this autumn. So, it is not doing the same as England, but you are asking me to do the same as England at this moment in time, and I am listening to that. I am saying that I would like to do the same as England. Scotland's processes will be considered under the evaluation of our IFR system along with systems in England and Wales in reaching our judgements.

One of the Members said that he wants equality with England. England charges £8 a head for prescriptions. I am not proposing that we do that. I want to do something considerably less. The Member said it. I will take an intervention from that Member who wanted equality with England. Does he want an £8-a-head prescription charge? It would be equality with England to do that. I want to do something considerably less to ensure that we have the funds.

The truth is that the PPRS, which has been mentioned by quite a few Members today, delivers around £3 million a year for us. We are in the PPRS. Let us not be in any doubt about that. We are in it, and that is what it benefits us each year.

Last year, for example, in terms of introducing new drugs, Queen's had a breakthrough on cystic fibrosis, and a drug was identified that impacted people who have the Celtic gene of cystic fibrosis. Such was the breakthrough and the quality of the drug that was produced that people who have cystic fibrosis and have the Celtic gene can now, if they receive that drug, expect to live a full life. They do not die at 20 or at 40; they live a natural life. They can expect to live to 70 or 80 years of age, the same as everybody else, and not die from cystic fibrosis. They may die from something else earlier, but cystic fibrosis is not something that will take them earlier. For those 23 people, those drugs cost us £3.7 million. That is more than the PPRS delivers.

The Assembly can make itself into a talking shop — I think you are about to speak for 10 minutes, Mr McKinney — or it can be absolutely serious about the job in hand. I am absolutely serious when I come to the Assembly and say that I am £160 million short this year. I did not come and tell you that last year or the year before, because that was not the case. My permanent secretary has just taken up a new role in DETI today. I was with him last week. He is also the accounting officer.

I said to him, "I want you, as accounting officer, to tell me this: do you believe that the £160 million is for real, or can we make significant reductions in the requirement?". His response, as someone who is going to be an accounting officer in another Department, was that any savings that could be made would be on the margins. I have a new accounting officer/permanent secretary coming in, and one of his first jobs will be to try to drill through that £160 million and see whether we can make savings that will not have that negative impact.

5.00 pm

If Members want equality with England, do they want me to apply charges on domiciliary care? We spend £40 million providing domiciliary care, mainly to elderly people and vulnerable adults, that you have to pay for in England. Does the Member who wants equality with England want that? Does the Member who wants equality with England want to charge the over-60s for using public transport, because free transport is not available to them in England. Does the Member who wants equality with England want us to charge our students £9,000 a year for fees instead of £3,200? Does the Member who wants equality with England want to have water rates? Does he also want to increase our rates, which would mean that every member of the public pays twice as much for household rates? Those are the real decisions of government, and we have to take responsibility on occasions. Being in government and delivering governance involves taking difficult decisions on occasions. I am glad —

Mr McKinney: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Poots: I am not giving way, Mr McKinney, because you will be speaking for 10 minutes shortly.

I am glad that we are in a situation in which we have been able to do so much for our public. I am also glad that we have that £3 million coming in from the PPRS, because it will help us. However, the truth is that, if we have not got it in us to put our hand in our pocket and produce a few pence for a prescription to enable people who are dying from cancer to have that support for longer and have the potential to live that bit longer and have a greater chance, there is something inherently wrong. I honestly think that, morally, we cannot continue to do what we are doing, which is saying that we would rather spend money on welfare than on health and we would rather give everything out for free, ignore our responsibilities and just keep demanding that others contribute. On some occasions, we have to step back and say, "Do you know what? This will involve a small margin of pain". It will be a few pence, and a maximum of 50p a week for any individual in Northern Ireland. We will have to bear that pain to enable others to enjoy the benefits and the good.

The arguments to me are clear, simple and absolutely valid. Do you know what? I do not blame the previous Minister for taking away prescription charges. He made a decision, and it was absolutely fair at the time. We are in different circumstances today, and I want a ring-fenced amount of money —

Mr Deputy Speaker: I ask the Minister to bring his remarks to a close.

Mr Poots: — for specialist drugs. That will include drugs for cancer but will also include drugs for other illnesses, such as multiple sclerosis, through which people's health has been greatly inhibited as a consequence. A specialist drugs fund that is ring-fenced.

Mr Wells: The Minister has stolen much of my thunder, because I was going to make exactly the same points as him. I assure honourable Members that there has been no collusion. I will sum up on behalf of those of us who tabled the amendment.

Mr McKinney started his comments in a surprisingly reasonable way. He paid tribute to the huge advances that have been made: the start of the breast screening campaign in 1993; the publication of the cancer services framework in 2011; and, five years earlier, the opening of the Northern Ireland Cancer Centre. He was absolutely right to pay tribute. Two weeks ago, we passed a very important milestone in the history of cancer treatment in the United Kingdom. For the first time ever, there are more people who will be alive 10 years after a diagnosis of cancer than will have passed on. That is a remarkable achievement.

When I was young — a very long time ago — a child who was diagnosed with leukaemia had a death sentence. It was a dreadful thing to happen, and in school at the time

I remember hearing about children who had leukaemia. Today, almost 90% of those children will live. That is a huge advance, and the Minister has already outlined the huge success that we have had in breast cancer, where the survival rate is over 80% in five years. Northern Ireland has played a leading role. We have punched way above our weight as a society in the research that has brought about those dramatic developments. Unfortunately, we are running very hard to stay still because, as a result of demographics, we will inevitably have more cancer because cancer is often linked to age. As we get older as a society, there will be more individuals with cancer, so we will have to continue to work hard. However, success has been achieved.

Apart from the Minister's contribution, I was disappointed by the debate because so many Members homed in on one issue. Indeed, some of us might suggest that the motion was deliberately tabled to continue the debate on the cancer drugs fund. The Minister has been able to explain the situation that he is in quite clearly. There is no new money. There is no pot of gold at the end of the rainbow. The drug companies are not trying to force-feed the Minister with extra cash to buy these drugs. Whatever is saved on the PPRS is eaten up by other vital services in the health budget. There is no money —

Mr McKinney: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wells: Yes, I will.

Mr McKinney: I appreciate that the Minister did not take an intervention because he thought that I was making a winding-up speech whereas I had moved the motion. Will the Member accept that we are trying to address inequality and transparency, particularly of funding? You pointed out that the Minister is trying to fill another hole. The PPRS, however, is supposed to be about price regulation and innovative drugs, not filling the other hole. When the Minister talks about prescription charges — by the way, we do not see the costings for those — we think that that is about addressing his wider financial problems and not cancer drugs treatment and provision.

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member will be glad to know that he has an extra minute.

Mr Wells: I have been on the Health Committee for a lot longer than the Member. I have been on the Committee for five years today, and, if truth be known, it feels like 50 years. The Member fails to understand the huge conflicting demands that are also inherent in the Minister's budget at the moment. It is not a question of £3 million or £4 million sitting gathering dust with nowhere to go. There are hundreds of competing demands that the Minister has to answer.

Mr McKinney: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wells: Yes.

Mr McKinney: The agreement is that that money should be spent on innovative drugs. The House has also learned that, under the new deal, with a 10% share of the overall money, we could receive £27 million this year.

Mr Wells: That £27 million could be spent 10 times over, given the present financial situation. I do not think that Members have really grasped the situation. Have they not noticed that, for the first three years, the Minister has made it clear that he could live within his budget? It was going to require a lot of belt tightening —

Mr McKinney: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wells: No, I think that I have been very fair.

It involved a lot of belt tightening and a lot of very hard work. He was not crying wolf, unlike the previous Minister, who said almost daily that he did not have enough money in much more benign financial circumstances than we are in today.

This time round, the Department means business. The Department has a monitoring round budget request of £161 million. Last year, the same June monitoring round yielded £80 million, so it does not take a genius to see that, on this occasion, it is unlikely that the Minister will get all that he needs to balance the books. We are in great difficulties, Members of the Assembly, and we have to be realistic and realise that the good times are over as far as large increases for health services are concerned. The demands continue to rise inexorably by between 5.9% and 6.1%, and resources are increasing at 1.9%. We must have the courage of our convictions. I have had a few health problems recently, and, unfortunately, I have visited the pharmacist quite a lot. It makes me feel guilty to get a bagful of material and not have to pay for it. Why should I, on my salary, not pay for my prescriptions? It is madness.

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is almost up.

Mr Wells: The Minister is asking only for a small contribution to try to balance the books, yet we are running away. Remember, equality works both ways, and the Minister has outlined —

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr Wells: — some very difficult decisions if you want equality.

Mr Rogers: I support the motion and the amendment. On a personal level, I know only too well the devastating impact that a cancer diagnosis can have on an individual and on a family. However, access to screening and early detection mean that there are more cancer survivors and more positive stories like my own. The Chamber needs to send out a clear message to the public today that we need to encourage our people to come forward and get tested, because early diagnosis saves lives.

As elected Members, we must ensure that the medical profession can conduct and access the necessary research that many Members have spoken of today. That research is required to deliver the best possible outcomes. The present inequity of access to innovative cancer drugs in Northern Ireland is not only impacting on patients; it is inhibiting researchers' ability to attract trials. Despite the Minister's statistics in a recent statement, when he said that 1,200 patients were participating in clinical research, only about one sixth of them are involved in clinical trials.

We must always be mindful and thankful for the expert care and medical treatment that many people have spoken about today and which I and my family members received in our hospitals and specialist centres across the North. The dedicated and well-trained staff in our hospitals play a major role in the successful outcome of the treatment of our citizens.

It is time to tackle the cancer drugs inequality in Northern Ireland. Patients here must be able to avail themselves of the necessary medical help. My SDLP colleague has repeatedly raised the issue in Committee, and we in the SDLP are appalled that, in Northern Ireland, citizens are denied access to treatments that could make a positive impact on their health outcomes. Why should that be? Surely we in the House are tasked with safeguarding the health and well-being of our constituents; therefore, we are obligated to ensure that all available resources are used to promote good health in our population. Access to cancer drugs has been raised with the Health Minister on many occasions, and we have called on the Minister to address the inequalities concerning cancer drug treatment here.

The principal question is this: why should 38 cancer drugs be available in England but not in Northern Ireland? Many Members mentioned that. As we heard from Mr McKinney, the situation is even more troubling when you learn that some of those drugs are being developed and trialled here but are ultimately not available here, even to some of those who helped in the trials. We call on the Minister to say clearly that he will address the fundamental cancer drugs inequality. The lack of action on the provision and accessibility of cancer drugs is similar to the inaction that we have witnessed on the need to adequately review the wider health service. We must recognise the substantial work that has been done on cancer research and treatment.

I now come to Members' comments. Mr Dunne talked about the importance of high-quality research and the fact that there must be more focused and targeted treatment and said that we really needed to do more. He outlined the good work carried out by cancer charities, particularly the lobbying by Cancer Focus. The Chair of the Committee, Ms McLaughlin, made the interesting comment that cancer does not recognise age, gender or borders and that a third of us will develop cancer. She also talked about the positive developments in the radiotherapy unit at Altnagelvin. Mr Beggs highlighted the fact that the 38 drugs that we are talking about are part of the PPRS and do not need more money. He praised the work of the cancer centre, Paddy Johnston and many others. Mr McCallister said that we needed to drive on preventative health and that we needed a joined-up approach. He also commended the work of the National Health Service.

Like many of us, Mr Agnew has lost good friends through cancer. We need better access to these drugs, and there needs to be a reasonable and sensible debate for us to get to the desired place. Mr McCarthy said that we needed to give the Minister all the support that he needs to ensure that this unnecessary suffering is reduced. Mrs Cameron made a very positive contribution and said that she had visited the cancer centre. I have visited it too, but I did not visit it until I had to visit it on 35 occasions. However, it was a positive outcome for me. She talked about the holistic approach, as did other Members — the preventative side, education, early intervention, reducing or giving up smoking, reducing the intake of alcohol, a balanced diet, etc. As a House, we need to leave the political posturing aside.

5.15 pm

Mr Brady, too, has personal experience of losing a loved one through cancer. He talked about the financial impact on the family and of living with cancer in the home. Mr McIlveen acknowledged those who help by taking part in clinical trials, and he supported equality for patients in Northern Ireland. We need to have the same opportunities as those in the rest of the UK. It is not just about caring; it is also about the preventative side. Mr Wells, who will make a very good Health Minister, brought home to me how cancer treatment has changed. My experience is that, 20 years ago, my daughter had leukaemia, and I remember the quality of the care that she got. She has lived to tell the tale. Most Members talked about how research has come on over those years.

Minister, we need to keep working. There are positive stories: the Minister mentioned that cancer survival rates have doubled over the last 40 years, and Mr Wells talked about more people living through than dying from cancer. That is testament to the good work being carried out by committed doctors and nurses across the North.

As legislators and public figures, we must ensure that our communities receive positive public health messages. However, the message that came across from everybody was that more must be done to address the more than 4,000 deaths here every year as a direct result of cancer. The key to dealing with this is investment in early diagnosis and screening. Early diagnosis can make that big difference, and I urge anyone who notices any unusual or persistent changes in their body to attend their GP to get them checked.

The cost of healthcare must not fall on the most vulnerable. It is important that, while facing up to the challenge of caring for our ageing population, we do not place the cost burden on the most vulnerable. Areas of health and social care policy will present us with real and deep financial challenges in the future, not least the cost of social care. Given that we have an integrated health and social care system in Northern Ireland, we cannot and should not have to ask people of limited means to contribute to social care for elderly people, particularly those for whom doing so is well beyond their means.

The Minister talked a lot about equality. Minister, equality is the equality of treatment. I will finish by saying that, 10 years ago, I was diagnosed with cancer. I was given treatment and the right drugs. Are you really saying no to people like me today, to the hundreds of people out there who need these drugs? As an Assembly, we must unite behind our Minister and ensure that the 38 drugs are made available here.

Question, That the amendment be made, put and agreed to.

Main Question, as amended, put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly recognises the prevalence of cancer in Northern Ireland and the efforts made by front line staff and professionals to counteract the disease; notes the advances in cancer treatment being made here and the achievements of the cancer centre in South Belfast, which, in collaboration with the pharmaceutical sector, has made significant and unique strides in biomedical diagnostic research; applauds the global and local economic and health benefits of such research; acknowledges that the predicted increased rates of cancer dictate that more needs to be done in terms of furthering research and treatment; supports efforts to broaden access for local patients to innovative treatments and clinical trials; encourages the establishment of a university-linked biomedical research centre; and calls on the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety and the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to support this work to develop Northern Ireland as a world-class centre for cancer research and treatment.

Mr Deputy Speaker: The House will take its ease for a moment while we change the top Table.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Beggs] in the Chair)

Motion made:

*That the Assembly do now adjourn. —

Transitional Family Support Services: West Belfast

Mr Deputy Speaker: The proposer of the topic will have 15 minutes. All other Members who wish to speak will have approximately eight minutes.

Ms McCorley: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Tá mé an-bhuíoch as an seans an cheist seo a ardú sa Tionól inniu. I am grateful for the opportunity to raise this issue in the Assembly.

Integrated Services has been an extremely positive programme for west Belfast and has provided much-needed support at many levels for a number of years. It has been a model of good practice in the partnership work that it does with local community groups, schools and statutory agencies to provide the best service available for families that are in the greatest need.

It has often been the case that families with complex needs have been sitting on the edge but have managed to stay on track because of their ability to avail themselves of services provided by early intervention. In such cases, it can be detrimental if that support is suddenly withdrawn, and, ultimately, that causes them to go into the statutory services environment, where the route back can often be difficult and not always straightforward.

It is readily accepted that where a family can be prevented from entering the social services arena, action should be taken to ensure that that happens. Integrated Services carried out very positive and meaningful work, which filled that gap. As a result, families have been assisted in turning their lives around and moving onto a more positive, independent path.

Quotes from users of the services are the best indicators of what Integrated Services has done best. As one young mother put it:

“Without the family support I received, my mental health would have got worse rapidly. I want to thank Integrated Services for helping me to be the mum I used to be.”

Similarly, a father of two young children who had challenging behaviour and autistic spectrum disorder (ASD) struggled to deal with those issues whilst trying to cope with an eating disorder and dealing with trauma. He stated clearly:

“Integrated Services was able to provide a full service for me and my son, dealing with everything we had going on. I wouldn’t have known where else to go. We were at our wits end.”

What exactly happened at the end of March this year? Funding for Integrated Services came to an end, and the tender was awarded to Extern to provide services at tiers

3 and 4. That meant that there was a gap in tier 2 early intervention services.

Under Integrated Services, 265 families were supported between April 2013 and March 2014. That number reduced by 128 over that period due to cases being closed for various reasons. In some of those cases, families were ready to move on due to the progress that had been made. The remaining families were reviewed and were found to be in need of different types of support, including statutory involvement. However, several families have been left unsupported as they only qualified for tier 2 services, which are no longer available.

Given that west Belfast is an area of high deprivation that has some very complicated social needs, it is reasonable to expect that families will continue to emerge that require the type of support services that were provided by Integrated Services. We need to ensure that the services required to provide those families with the appropriate interventions, capable of supporting them out of their difficult circumstances, are made available. We also need to find a way to ensure that the families who have most recently had their integrated services terminated will be supported in all of their needs.

Not only did Integrated Services provide support at the most appropriate level, it averted families from the likelihood of becoming known to the statutory agencies at a later date, as problems and issues tend to escalate due to a lack of support services.

There are processes in place to implement the early intervention transformation programme (EITP), but I am concerned about what exactly that will mean for west Belfast. I seek assurance that the EITP will be appropriately resourced and hope that any transitional family support services will also be supported.

Ultimately, it would be wrong to stop the vital service provision, and I urge that appropriate resources are put in place to ensure that the vulnerable families that are in the greatest need are not let down due to a failure to continue to provide them with the services that are appropriate to their needs.

Mr Attwood: I thank Ms McCorley for bringing this matter to the attention of the Assembly.

I concur with her that the best voices to rely upon when it comes to dealing intensively with individual, family and community difficulties — multiple difficulties — are those of the people who, under Integrated Services, were being supported. It is curious what they say, because any of us who have met the individuals and families who have been supported through Integrated Services, have been impressed by their conviction that the model has worked for them and needs to be sustained to continue to work for them. Ms McCorley relied on what they said. One woman said:

"Some mothers are frightened by social workers; they take power away from parents. The staff and family support had a more rounded approach and empowered us."

Another said:

"Integrated Services and the staff were so valuable to my family. They gave me and my family a glimmer of hope. Why is the rug being pulled from underneath the project?"

Similarly, one person said:

"We have not felt this good in years. Our new family members, as we call Integrated Services, have been a rock and life saviours to our family."

As I said, anybody who heard those families speak up here earlier this year or who has met any of them over the lifetime of Integrated Services would corroborate what they say. Therefore, this question arises: if it is a model of good practice that you work intensively with individuals and families who have multiple areas of need and requirement, why would you put that in jeopardy?

Since 2008, the life of Integrated Services has been a turbulent one. I remember, in March 2011, when I was the Social Development Minister, putting £500,000 on the table in order to try to sustain Integrated Services beyond 2011 and up to 2015. Difficult thought it was, other Ministers eventually came to the table and, over a period of time, even if it were in an ad hoc manner, funding was secured to sustain it.

Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): Will the Member give way?

Mr Attwood: I will, yes.

Mr Poots: Does the Member recognise that it was the Department of Health that came to the table whilst the Department of Education, under a Sinn Féin Minister, ran away from the people of the Falls Road, the Shankill and the most deprived areas and took the money away from Integrated Services in the first instance?

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Attwood: I certainly recall that when people were sitting on the fence — to put it at its least — some of us got off the fence in order to ensure, in the spring of 2011, that Integrated Services was sustained and to try to work up the full funding package. There is more than a grain of truth in what the Health Minister has just said about the conduct of other Ministers at the Executive table.

This question now arises: why was the rug pulled from under people's feet earlier this year? In March 2014, funding for this scheme came to an end. As Ms McCorley rightly indicated, as a consequence, those with lesser needs, even though they are significant needs, are left with nowhere to turn, and those with greater needs, which are very significant indeed, have to rely on the new project, around which there is still some need for certainty and definition.

So, I have some questions for the Health Minister, who is responding to this debate and who I welcome to the debate. First, why was it that a programme that had such an impact on the lives of many people across west Belfast, the Shankill and the Falls, and had such advocates at a community and political level, not continued?

Secondly, why was the tender for the new scheme only for specialist services and not also for general services in order to ensure that those who have "so-called" lesser needs are not left in the lurch? Thirdly, what is now going to be done in order to ensure that those who are outwith the capture of the new tender being awarded to Extern will get the support required?

Fourthly, where are we precisely in respect of the Extern scheme?

It was meant to commence on 1 April, and we are now three months later to the day after it was meant to be up and operational. Where is it, what is its practice and what is its impact?

5.30 pm

Question six: why were good community representatives and activists on the Shankill left to dip into their reserves in order to maintain Integrated Services since March of this year, whilst a new project gets up and running, given its limitations? Why were they required to dip into reserves which are now running out, as I speak, and which would see the end of the support programme that they put in place beyond the end of Integrated Services — would see that secondary scheme itself run out of space, time and money? If a project has such a good impact — in the way that Ms McCorley and I have tried to articulate through the voices of women who have spoken to us and who have reduced to writing what they believe — why would you ever want to put that in jeopardy? Why was there not certainty, throughout the period of Integrated Services, to see that scheme continue beyond 1 April?

Ms J McCann: I, too, thank my colleague Rosie McCorley for bringing this debate to the Floor. It is a very important debate, and I hope that people will not use it for point scoring. That said, most of us — whatever work we are involved in in the Assembly and Executive — are interested in trying to make life better for people, particularly children, young people and families out there.

As has already been said, not just today but in other debates in the Chamber, of all the constituencies right across the North, West Belfast has the highest proportion of people in poverty and child poverty. It has poor health outcomes; indeed, it has the lowest life expectancy for both women and men, and the highest number of post-primary pupils on the special educational needs register. Those are just some of the statistics: I do not want to stand here quoting statistics, because there are Members present from all parties who know too well the difficulties that people, and families in particular, face in that constituency.

Unfortunately, we see that a lot of our children do not have the same equal start in life as some other children. That is no fault of their own; it is because of the family circumstances that they are born into, or the social and economic situation of the family. There is a duty and responsibility on us, as a Government, to ensure that any support mechanisms or help that those families need are given to them.

In terms of Integrated Services, I was involved the last time, as Mr Attwood pointed out, when the first funding became unavailable. I, Paul Maskey MP and my other colleagues here — MLAs, some of whom are here today — went to a range of Ministers and Departments to ensure that everybody was aware of the difficulties and also put money there from their Departments to carry it forward.

My colleague Rosie McCorley pointed out that, unfortunately, in the situation that we are in today, a number of families that were involved in the Integrated Services programme have not been picked up by the new programme. We have to be concerned about those families. It is very important that we provide services for families with complex needs, particularly for children and young people who have those social needs. We also need to ensure that we intervene early with those families to give them the support and services that they need, to ensure that they do not become a family that actually has more complex needs. That is important. I just want to concentrate on —

Mr Humphrey: I am grateful to the Member for giving way, and I appreciate all that she has said. I pay tribute to the staff of the Integrated Services programme in west Belfast and greater Shankill. Along with Members across the Chamber, I have had the experience of dealing with those staff, when they were dealing with our constituents and troubled families in the most difficult circumstances.

I welcome what the Member said and her clarification about her party's support, but that has not always been the case. It has to be said that, previously, when there was a gathering of people from west Belfast and Shankill outside this Building in March 2011, this Minister came down to speak to the people, but the Education Minister could not be found and would not come out and speak to the people. I appreciate that Sinn Féin is now in a different place on this, and that is to be welcomed. We will see what potential funding will come from the Department of Health now.

Mr Deputy Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Ms J McCann: I want to say again that I hope people do not use this debate for political reasons and point scoring. We are talking about vulnerable families, about need and about trying to help people. The new early intervention transformation programme will be rolled out, and we need to ensure that the commissioning of those services and engagement with community organisations that already have skills and expertise in delivering those services continues, because, at the end of the day, we do not want to throw the baby out with bath water. We want to be able to ensure that models of best practice are continued. I worked as family support worker across west Belfast before I came into the Assembly, and there is good working engagement between people and organisations in west Belfast and greater Shankill, and I would like to see that continuing.

As I said, a number of families are out of the loop now because integrated services have stopped. I and some of my party colleagues have had a number of meetings with people from the Health Department and other Departments. I see it as a joined-up project, not primarily just an issue around health. I think that it includes Education, Health, Justice and the Department for Social Development. This is part of the Executive's Delivering Social Change framework, and we need to be working in that integrated way and in that capacity. I want any proposals that are brought forward not simply to be driven by the family support hubs, because, again, this work is ongoing. We talk about this all the time in the Assembly, and it is unseen work that goes on in communities every day. Those community organisations and groups deliver those services and the valuable way that they do that is sometimes not recognised. It is about the services for the families. I want to reiterate that. That is what we are talking about here. We are talking about vulnerable families who need the continuation of those services. I hope that the Minister takes that on board. Other programmes are getting rolled out. It will be targeted at specific families, and I think that is a good thing, but we should not lose sight of the fact that other families are maybe not just at the level of need that some families with more complex needs are, and we should not overlook them.

I thank my colleague for bringing this important debate forward, and I hope that we can all work together — all the Ministers and all the Departments in the Executive — to ensure the continuation of this project.

Mr Poots: I thank the Member for tabling this debate and the Members who have contributed. In my role as Health Minister, I have been actively engaged in seeking to address the issues outlined by the Members in the west Belfast and greater Shankill areas following the cessation of funding for integrated services for children and young people. Whilst Ministers McCausland, O'Dowd, Farry, Ford and I have worked together to fund a new £5 million intensive family support service across Belfast, which will benefit some of the families previously supported by Integrated Services, I am aware that both partnerships between them have identified 99 families with lower-level needs who will not benefit from that new service and who may not have been able to transfer to other local family support services available in the area. It is my understanding that those families do not meet the threshold for statutory social work involvement.

Before addressing the transitional needs of those families, I would first like to say a few words about the new intensive family support service being funded by me and my fellow Ministers. The service seeks to intervene with families with very complex needs across Belfast. Those families often experience very poor outcomes across generations, including long-term unemployment, addiction, poor health, poor school attendance or exclusion, involvement with the justice system and homelessness. The new service, modelled on the Troubled Families initiative in England, seeks to break the cycle of poor outcomes for the most socially complex families in Belfast. The families that will benefit from the service are engaged with a range of statutory services, including youth justice, social services and educational welfare. As well as providing additional support to those families, the new service will seek to improve the level of coordination between the various statutory agencies that are often involved with the families on a single-issue basis. The new service is being delivered by Extern, following an open procurement process. That is something that I cannot involve myself in. Procurement has to be fully above board, and that is how it was done.

I recognise the importance of the 99 families with lower-level needs who are not eligible for the new intensive service, and who have not been able to be transferred to other local services, receiving the support that they need to effectively transition from the integrated services for children and young people project. That said, the support offered should be transitional in nature. It needs to be time-limited and focused either on helping those families engage with other tier 2 services in the area or on successfully addressing the issues that they face in the period of transition. The establishment of family support hubs in Belfast, which I will say more about, should help with that process.

Having recognised that a need exists, as verified by the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust, I have been working with Minister McCausland, given his neighbourhood renewal responsibilities, to agree a transitional funding package. Some transitional funding has already been provided by the Health and Social Care Board and the Public Health Agency to facilitate the transfer of those families who meet the criteria for entry to the new intensive family support service.

From a longer-term perspective, I am aware that, in addition to the large number of existing services already in place for those types of families, a number of new services are being planned that will enhance the level of family support provision across Northern Ireland, including a number of initiatives being developed under the social investment fund and Delivering Social Change programmes that will benefit children, young people and families. For example, under Delivering Social Change, and with the support of private philanthropy, we have established an early intervention programme, underpinned by a £30 million fund. Between five Departments, we have contributed £10 million to the fund over three years. One of the principal aims of the transformation programme is to embed early intervention approaches across all mainstream children's services.

There is a proposal to develop a new early intervention service across Northern Ireland. The proposed service will aim to provide a consistent level of support to families with problems at an early stage, before those problems become embedded. If we are successful, that will prevent the need for future statutory involvement in the lives of many children and families across Northern Ireland. The design and development of the proposed service is currently being undertaken in partnership with the five outcomes groups and locality planning groups, which are part of the children and young people's strategic partnership arrangements, to ensure robust engagement with the community, voluntary and statutory sectors. The proposed development of the early intervention service, along with other proposed developments by way of initiatives such as the social investment fund, will seek to complement and integrate with existing family support services in areas such as west Belfast and the Shankill.

As I have referred to briefly already, my Department is developing a network of family support hubs across Northern Ireland. There will be 25 hubs in total, seven of which will be created in the Belfast area, across all parts of Belfast. The family support hub for Upper Springfield and Whiterock is already up and running, and other hubs will be coming on stream over the next weeks and months. It should be noted that the hubs do not deliver services directly but will play a vital role in coordinating the activities of local providers that will jointly identify appropriate tier 2 services for specific families.

As for integrated services, I pose a question to Mr Attwood. I welcome the fact that, when he was Social Development Minister, he put his money where his mouth was when other Ministers, in the Department of Health and the Department of Education, were not supportive. Subsequent to me becoming the Minister of Health, I have put my money, or my Department's money, where my mouth is. I recognise the vulnerability of the families involved. I recognise the need for children in those areas to receive additional support to give them an opportunity in life that they would not otherwise be able to avail themselves of.

In doing that, I gave ministerial direction to make this happen whilst Minister O'Dowd and the Department of Education walked away. That is not playing politics; that is telling the facts. When it came to west Belfast and the Shankill, the Sinn Féin Minister walked away, and he has to answer for himself why that was the case.

5.45 pm

Work has been ongoing in the last two months to deal with the issue. The MP for North Belfast has been in with me on three or four occasions to discuss the issues, pressing for the people in the Shankill and west Belfast whilst I have not yet had a request for a meeting from the MP for West Belfast. I am pleased that I have been able to clear a paper that was received this week, which will allow up to £270,000 to go to Integrated Services to ensure that it can continue until the hubs are fully established.

To summarise, I am pleased to be able to announce the additional support for the West Belfast Partnership Board and the Greater Shankill Partnership Board in meeting the transitional needs of the families identified. I also outlined a range of new developments, some of which are aimed at supporting families with complex needs while others are targeted at families who require earlier interventions. These new developments are intended to complement and improve coordination between existing services across Northern Ireland, including west Belfast. Our aim is to ensure that families who need a range of supports are able to access them locally and earlier.

It is time that people stepped up to the mark as opposed to complaining a lot about equality, poverty and everything that is happening. When it was within their gift as Ministers to deliver for people in circumstances such as this, they were nowhere to be seen, whereas people such as us carry out actions to ensure that we can help people in the worst possible circumstances.

Capital Investment Advancing New Schools in Planning

Published at 10.00 am on Thursday 3 July 2014

Mr John O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): On 24 June I made an Announcement to the Assembly on Capital Investment for Schools to be advanced in planning. This announcement included major works projects for 8 primary and 7 post primary schools.

One project that had passed the gateway checks, achieved a high score as a result of the protocol process and qualified to be listed had to be held back from the announcement as it was the subject of a judicial review. This judicial review has since been dismissed by the Judge, Mr Justice Treacy, on 25 June 2014.

The project is for a new build school to house pupils following the amalgamation of Knockbreda and Newtownbreda High Schools. This amalgamation is to be carried out in September 2014 or as soon thereafter as possible. As a result of the Judge's decision the project can now be appended to those that I announced to the Assembly on the morning of 24 June.

Taxis Act (NI) 2008: Implementation

Published at 10.15 on Thursday 19 June 2014

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): Members of the Assembly will, I am sure, share my view that taxis are a vital and valuable part of our economy. Every year they greet many of the million plus visitors who come to Northern Ireland. They make tens of thousands of trips to bring people to and from work or safely home after a night out. They also help some of our most vulnerable people, young and old, travel in the way the majority of us take for granted.

The majority of our taxi legislation, however, dates back to the early 1980s – in fact, in Belfast it goes back to by-laws devised in the early 1950s. The problem is, quite simply, that it not up to the task of effectively regulating taxis in the 21st century.

For this reason the Taxis Act was debated and approved by this House and received Royal Assent in April 2008. It is a piece of enabling legislation, designed to create a new legislative framework for the operation and regulation of taxis here.

The aims of the Taxis Act are to raise the standard of taxi services, reduce illegal taxiing and improve compliance. Its objectives are to promote road safety, improve accessibility for older people and people with disabilities, and facilitate fairer competition for taxi services. In short, it is about creating a safe, fair and fit for purpose industry that allows those involved in it to make a living from it.

For the last six years my Department has been working to implement the Act by way of subordinate regulations. To date, the only part of the Act that has been commenced is the introduction of Taxi Operator Licensing, which came into force in 2012. This, for the first time, made operators accountable for the operation of their business and the actions of their drivers. High levels of compliance with these provisions have already been achieved, and improvements to the accountability of the industry delivered.

The purpose of this statement is to set out my intentions for the implementation of the remaining aspects of the Act. These include new arrangements for taxi vehicle licensing (including new plating and roof sign requirements), taxi driver licensing (including the introduction of a taxi driver test for new drivers and periodic training for all drivers) and other elements including provisions for a maximum fare and the use of taximeters and receipt printers, new powers of seizure, and a revised specification for Wheelchair Accessible taxis.

There has been much debate, going back some years, about the need for these changes. Since taking office, I have listened carefully to many representations and have considered many points made in favour and against implementing the remaining provisions of the Taxis Act. After careful consideration, I have decided that it is essential we implement these changes now, to give full effect to this legislation and to deliver improvements to the industry for the benefit of users and suppliers alike.

A key element of the taxi reform programme is the arrangements for taxi vehicle licensing and the classes of taxis that will be recognised across Northern Ireland.

The Act's provisions, one of which is introducing a single tier licensing regime, have been well-known and much debated for many years, and has been the subject of consultation on more than one occasion. Indeed, I have lost count of the number of Assembly questions that I have received on this one issue.

I believe that the current dual tier system in place in Belfast, with some taxis able to be hailed and others only available through prior bookings, cannot adequately address a number of problems that the Act was designed to tackle. The public (residents and visitors alike) are confused as to which taxis they can use in different circumstances. There are insufficient numbers of taxis which can pick up on the street in Belfast, particularly at peak periods, to meet demand and ensure public order. Furthermore, there is too much enforcement activity addressing relatively minor licensing offences, which reduces the resources available to address the illegal and dangerous taxis which are out there.

I have listened to, considered and reconsidered the concerns expressed that the change would adversely impact on Belfast Public Hire taxi drivers, and that enforcement difficulties around illegal picking up in Belfast have given cause for concern about the Department's ability to enforce a new licensing regime. I must advise members that I am not persuaded by these arguments.

The changes that are proposed will, I believe, enhance the reputation of the taxi industry as a whole, increasing the confidence of the public in Northern Ireland to use taxis because we will have a professional and fit for purpose service. The demand for the services of Belfast Public Hire, which represent around 5% of taxis in Northern Ireland and around 10% of taxis in Belfast, should be determined by the service they provide and the price at which it is provided. I am convinced that any sector of the industry that provides a good quality and price-competitive service will be able to thrive in the improved regulatory regime that the Taxis Act provides for.

Further, consumers will, and should, be able to exercise choice and their preferences in terms of how and when to secure the services of a taxi and which type of taxi they wish to use. It is the responsibility of my Department, as regulator, to set the minimum standards which all operators, vehicles and drivers must meet, so that taxi users can receive the service they expect; and then to ensure compliance with those standards.

Picture the scene when on a Saturday night a member of the public wants to hail a fully compliant, licensed taxi, licensed driver and licensed operator in any part of the North. I don't believe that there is justification for my Department to deny such a transaction.

I feel that my Department has given very great consideration to the concerns of the Belfast Public Hire drivers and has gone a long way to help them prepare for change. The measures that we have put in place include that all taxi drivers currently in possession of a taxi driver's licence will be unaffected by plans to introduce a new taxi driver test. Belfast Public Hire taxis will be granted grandfather rights in respect of any changes to the specification for Wheelchair Accessible Taxis. Furthermore only Wheelchair Accessible Taxis will be permitted to stand at ranks in Belfast, securing to some degree the status quo for the current Belfast Public Hire fleet in relation to ranks.

My officials have engaged extensively with Belfast Public Hire representatives to help them arrange meetings with other parts of government on a range of issues including, training, taxi ranks and access to bus lanes. We have also delayed the reform programme to provide all taxi operators – not least Belfast Public Hire – additional time to prepare for the reforms. So while I am aware of the concerns of the Belfast Public Hire taxi drivers, I must balance these with the requirements, clearly set out by consumer and disability groups, to improve regulation for a safe, fair and fit for purpose taxi industry. It is high time the remaining elements of the Act were implemented.

The alternative is to continue to operate a dual tier regime, limited to Belfast, and to prevent taxi users in Belfast from exercising the same choice available in all other parts of the North, in order to continue to protect the commercial interests of Belfast Public Hire taxi drivers.

I have a number of serious concerns in respect of such a system. A dual tier approach provides more confusion, not less, to Belfast consumers in terms of which taxis they can legally hail in the street or access at ranks. It provides less choice, not more, to Belfast consumers – they are constrained in the choice that is extended in every other part of the North, in terms of which type of taxi they want – instead they are limited to using the small Belfast Public Hire fleet unless they pre-book a taxi.

I am concerned that the dual tier model is unable to cope with the need to empty the city of people in a timely manner in the evenings, particularly at weekends. Suspension of the regime for these high peak periods could be considered, but would create even further confusion for users and would prove difficult, if not impossible, to enforce.

The Taxis Act is based on a single tier licensing regime. During the development of the then Bill, two options were consulted on – single tier; or a clearer distinction between public hire and private hire taxis (along the lines of the London model of 'black cabs' and 'mini-cabs'). A public consultation at that time showed a preference for single tier, and this was included in the Bill and passed by this Assembly, without division, as part of the Act.

Since enactment, a 2011 public consultation showed 84% support for single tier licensing. Those in favour included the Consumer Council (who stated that single tier would remove public confusion and free up enforcement resource), Inclusive Mobility and Transport Advisory Committee (IMTAC) and Disability Action.

Recently, I have received explicit support for single tier licensing from Disability Action, IMTAC, the Consumer Council, Women's Aid, Victim Support, Belfast Chamber of Trade & Commerce, the Northern Ireland Hotels Federation, Pubs of Ulster and Visit Belfast, all of whom see the clear benefits to consumers, tourists and the industry itself. I have also received 913 letters from Belfast private hire taxi drivers in support of single tier. And that is in addition to the 4,200 postcards the Committee received from private hire taxi passengers of a similar mind.

I therefore remain of the view that a single tier model should be introduced throughout the North. I am aware that the Law Commission has recently recommended the retention of two tier licensing for taxis in England and Wales, and that the Department for Transport is currently considering those proposals. With respect to those that say that we should do the same here, I would point out that exactly this point was debated in the development of the Taxis Act, with decisions made to progress a single tier regime. I would point out that the two tiers of taxis here are less differentiated than those in England and Wales have traditionally been. It is also worth noting that a Comparative Study on Regulation in Europe concluded that taxi licensing regimes differ based on local circumstances. Devolution has been designed to allow local solutions to local issues. We have debated this issue for far too long and should now implement our intent.

Understandably, given the delays and changes in the timings for the various elements of taxi reform, the industry has expressed concerns and has sought clarity about my intentions. I intend to provide this clarity today.

I am, therefore, today giving notice that I intend to make Taxi Vehicle Licensing regulations introducing single tier licensing in October 2014 with the provisions coming into force at the end of January 2015. Alongside this, I intend to commence the new Powers of Seizure regulations in January 2015 so that, from day one, these powers are available to enforcement officers to take action against illegal taxis.

This delay in the implementation date for the new arrangements is a result of the time needed to consider the different options put forward; and to avoid changes for the industry in its busiest period of the year in the run up the Christmas and New Year.

In advance of that, in October 2014, a new taxi driver test will be introduced for new taxi drivers only. This will be followed in September 2015 with the start of periodic training requirements for all taxi drivers.

In relation to taximeters and printers, I intend to make regulations before the end of the year, with the requirements coming into force in September 2015.

Finally, in respect of the new specification for Wheelchair Accessible Taxis, I intend to make these regulations in April 2015, coming into force in May 2015. Importantly, this new specification will ensure that users with disabilities will be better served by the taxi industry.

I look forward to continuing to work with the industry, the Environment Committee and other consumer and disability groups in the coming months as we introduce the relevant legislation to deliver on the aims of the Act in relation to this vital industry.

Northern Area Plan 2016: Planning Appeals Commission Report

Published on Thursday 3 July 2014

Mr Mark Durkan (The Minister of the Environment):

Development plans inform the general public, statutory authorities, developers and other interested bodies of the policy framework and land use proposals that will be used to guide development decisions in their area. They provide a basis for rational and consistent decisions and provide a measure of certainty about which types of development will and will not be permitted.

The Northern Area Plan 2016 (NAP) is one of the last two plans due to be adopted before planning functions transfer to local councils in April 2015. The Plan covers the council districts of Ballymoney, Coleraine, Limavady and Moyle. This area also comprises the new Causeway Coast and Glens District. The adoption of the Plan will ensure an adequate supply of development land to meet needs beyond the notional end-by date of the Plan in December 2016. As such, it will provide a sound basis for the new Council to prepare future plans under the reformed system provided for under the Planning (NI) Act 2011.

The Planning Appeals Commission (PAC) has recently completed its Report on the Examination in Public into objections to the Draft Northern Area Plan 2016. The final reports were delivered to the Department on 30th May and 5th June 2014. These reports contain the PAC's recommendations to the Department on the objections which were made to Draft NAP.

It had been normal practice for my Department to consider the contents of the PAC Report on a development plan, and then release the PAC recommendations at the same time as the Plan is adopted. This approach allowed an adoption statement, which contains my Department's decision on each of the recommendations, to be published along with the PAC Report.

However, during 2012 in the case of the Belfast Metropolitan Area Plan (BMAP) and also the Banbridge, Newry & Mourne Area Plan (BNMP), a decision was made to release the PAC Report at an early stage in advance of Plan adoption. This was done because of the considerable length of time since the draft Plan, the complexity of objections received, the forthcoming changes to local councils and to the planning system, and primarily to introduce further certainty about potential development opportunities in the area before the final Plans were adopted.

With similar circumstances pertaining to the Northern Area Plan, I have decided to follow the precedent of BMAP and BNMP and consequently I am now releasing the PAC Report relating to the Northern Area Plan. I believe it is the right thing for the Department to do in terms of openness and transparency. In many cases, it will help to remove uncertainty for the local community, the development industry, the Councils and other elected representatives.

It is important, however, to clarify the status of the PAC Report. As I have already stated, this Report only contains the recommendations of the Planning Appeals Commission, on objections received and they do not give the final position with regard to the objections that were made to the draft Plan. My Department is in the course of preparing NAP for adoption, and will be assessing the PAC recommendations before reaching final decisions, and these decisions will only be known when the Plan is adopted early next year.

One advantage that I envisage arising from my decision to publish the PAC Reports is that in instances where the PAC state that they 'recommend no change to the draft plan as a result of the objections, it is more likely, although not guaranteed, that these recommendations will be accepted by my Department. Consequently, if a planning application is submitted on a site where it is likely the proposals in the draft plan will not be changed as a result of PAC recommendations, the application will be decided on basis of the Plan, but also with regard to all other material considerations. However, in other cases, where the PAC recommendation will require further consideration by my Department, the public cannot make any assumptions as to the development status of sites until such times as the final report is issued and the Plan adopted.

The PAC Report on the Plan will be published on the planning website www.planningni.gov.uk today, Thursday 3rd July 2014.

To conclude, I must emphasise, this is not re-opening the debate about the issues in the Plan. In order to allow resources to be focused on the adoption of Plan, neither I nor my officials will be entering into correspondence or discussions on any matters relating to the recommendations contained in the PAC Report for NAP.

Building a Prosperous and United Community: One Year On

Published at 12.00 noon on Thursday 3 July 2014

Mr P Robinson and Mr Martin McGuinness (The First Minister and the deputy First Minister): We are today announcing the publication of the annual progress report, Building a Prosperous and United Community: One Year On, following our meeting with the Prime Minister yesterday.

Background

It is one year after the publication of the 'economic pact', Building a Prosperous and United Community. In that pact, we agreed a series of measures consistent with our joint aim to rebalance the economy and build a shared future. Twelve months on we can now reflect on the progress made in areas such as job promotion, research and development, investment and infrastructure, and consider the further challenges that lie ahead.

The annual report which we have published shows that the Government and the Executive remain committed to our shared objective of rebalancing the economy. We have been working together on a range of issues, for example, through the Ministerial Taskforce on Banking and Access to Finance, to address the economic issues faced by our local economy.

Summary of Progress

Improving Economic Outlook

The local economy has gained significant momentum over the last year with signs of improvement across a wide range of indicators. Economic activity expanded in three successive quarters and increased by 2.6 per cent across 2013. The number of employee jobs has also increased by 16,000 over the last year with the vast majority of these new jobs being in the private sector.

Government schemes have continued to have a direct impact with £34 million of investment from the Enterprise Finance Guarantee Scheme and the recent introduction of the Business Finance Partnership (£2.4 million) and Start-up Loans scheme (£400,000) here. The Green Investment Bank will now also make two separate investments of £1.5 million and £1.7 million to help increase the efficiency of the local agri-food sector.

Business and consumer confidence has been buoyant over the last year, with local surveys from both Ulster Bank and Danske Bank regularly registering record highs. The Northern Ireland Centre for Economic Policy (NICEP) now anticipates growth of 2.8 per cent in 2014, a higher growth rate than that expected for most advanced economies around the world. NICEP also expects an additional 23,000 jobs to be created in the economy across 2014 and 2015.

Investment being delivered

The Government and the Executive have continued to work together to maximise the opportunity provided by the G8 summit to present Northern Ireland as a great place to do business. These efforts mean that we remain the most attractive region for inward investment outside of London.

Invest NI recently published its results for 2013-14 which show it had a record year. They promoted almost 11,000 jobs with associated wages and salaries of £190 million. Invest NI also provided support to nearly 3,000 businesses making combined investments of £239 million.

The International Investment Conference held in October and attended by the Prime Minister had an important role in supporting this success. As a direct result of the Conference, including roundtable discussions with the Prime Minister, projects by Convergys in Derry-Londonderry and EY in Belfast promoting over 800 jobs have now been announced.

The ability to attract inward investment is supported by continued efforts to provide a stable, long-term platform to promote investment.

Projects Building a Shared Future

The Executive's wide ranging strategy to improve good relations, Together: Building a United Community (TBUC), was published in May 2013. It is an ambitious framework that includes commitments on education, housing, regeneration, sports, youth development, community interaction and interfaces.

The Executive has brought forward shared education and shared housing proposals to use the £100 million additional borrowing available as part of Building a Prosperous and United Community. This will allow the prioritisation of spending on a package of measures including integrated primary schools in Omagh, Portadown and Corran, shared neighbourhood schemes such as Ravenhill Road and further education facilities at Craigavon.

The Government has agreed to reprofile this borrowing to help accommodate these and the Executive is committed to funding the remainder of the capital required.

Together these projects will help increase the availability and quality of shared education places and increase the opportunities for people across different communities to live together.

The additional borrowing made available has made it possible to prioritise this investment in a shared future. A number of these projects have been accelerated and will be delivered earlier than would be the case under the usual approach to funding.

The Executive has established a pilot for the United Youth Programme with further pilots being developed to engage with around 300 young people from September. These will inform the design and content of the 10,000 one-year placements committed to in TBUC which will make use of the €50 million added to the PEACE IV Programme by the Government from its European Territorial Co-operation allocation.

Further progress to be made

There are a number of commitments in Building a Prosperous and United Community that continue to be developed. This update represents progress so far but also an opportunity to continue the important work helping to rebalance the local economy and build a shared future.

Before the end of the year, five of the shared housing schemes are expected to be under construction. The pilot reciprocal visa arrangements between the UK and Ireland should also be in operation by the end of the year, boosting tourism. This represents visible progress that will help deliver better outcomes for us.

A number of further commitments will also be met by the end of 2014 including: a final report from the Executive's Red Tape Review; proposals will be made to Government and Executive Ministers about the scope for further fiscal devolution; and consideration of the Implementation Panel's interim report on access to finance.

The Government and the Executive will also work together to deliver three Ambassador-led trade missions to Northern Ireland to reinforce the opportunities for investment available.

The Government remains committed to making a final decision on the potential devolution of corporation tax no later than this year's Autumn Statement. If a decision to proceed with devolution is made then the Government remains on track to introduce a stand-alone Bill with the aim of it becoming law in this Parliament.

The Government and the Executive will continue to work together on our commitments on the economy and to make sure that the announcements made today are successfully delivered and implemented.

Together we remain committed to our ambition of a genuinely shared society that can fulfil its economic potential and strengthen the foundations for continued peace, stability and prosperity.

Concordat Between the Voluntary and Community Sector and the Northern Ireland Government: 2014 Annual Report

Published at 2.00 pm on Wednesday 2 July 2014

Mr Nelson McCausland (The Minister for Social Development): As you are aware, the Concordat between the Voluntary and Community Sector and the Northern Ireland Government included an undertaking to report annually to the Northern Ireland Executive and Assembly on issues impacting on the Sector. In accordance with the principles contained within the Concordat, I wish to present Assembly colleagues with the third report on the implementation of the Concordat. This report includes detail on issues impacting the Voluntary and Community Sector, the progress made against selected commitments contained within the Concordat and progress made against recommendations made by the Public Accounts Committee in their report 'Creating Effective Partnerships between Government and the Voluntary and Community Sector'.

The Concordat, which is the formal agreement between this Assembly and the Voluntary and Community Sector, is the means by which we work together as social partners with the Sector to create more responsive and people-centred public services and since its launch in 2011, work has been ongoing to create the circumstances where these outcomes can be realised.

This pledge by government and the sector committing to work together is underpinned by the establishment and implementation of an agreed set of commitments. The report presented today demonstrates how serious this commitment has been taken and how much can be achieved when we work together.

This government has long recognised and valued the contribution the Voluntary and Community Sector makes to the social, economic, environmental, political, and cultural life of Northern Ireland and recognises and supports the independence of the Sector and its right to campaign within the law and to comment on and, where appropriate, challenge government policy.

This is where the Concordat agreement has been pivotal: placing the Sector on an equal footing with the public sector bodies it interacts with on a daily basis and giving the Sector a voice that can now be clearly heard. The Concordat, as a written agreement, has been transformed into a living document with the power to build capacity and the capability to make more responsive and people-centred public services by harnessing the expertise available to us.

This is the third report on the Concordat from the Joint Forum and this is what makes the progress on the commitments all the more significant. The report demonstrates that the Joint Forum has tackled what have previously been considered difficult issues. Last year I reported to my Ministerial colleagues, the tangible progress made on reducing bureaucracy in the administration of funding to voluntary and community organisations. This work has since moved on to develop a Code of Practice which is due to become standard operating practice across Executive Departments later this year. This will make a significant impact on reducing the bureaucratic burden on the Sector.

Significant progress has also been made in the area of policy development with the Joint Forum gaining recognition as a vital link in the machinery of government in stakeholder engagement in the policy development process. The Joint Forum has also provided a platform for Government Departments to communicate with the sector on key issues. Recent meetings have included presentations on the Reform of Local Government, the Welfare Reform programme, the Financial Capability Strategy and the consultation on the framework for the Economic Inactivity Strategy.

The Joint Forum has evolved as an effective, operational body for the implementation of the shared values and principles of the Concordat agreement.

I am very pleased to commend this report to my Executive and Assembly colleagues and to endorse the progress made over the past year. The implementation of the Concordat commitments and the identification and resolution of issues affecting the Voluntary and Community Sector can only assist Government and Voluntary and Community Sector partnership working, which aims to better serve the people of Northern Ireland.

and Rural Development*

The Chairperson: This session will be split into two parts. The first part will deal with further amendments, and then we will move to formal clause-by-clause consideration. Last week, the Committee expressed its discontent with the risk designation clauses — clauses 17 to 23. We did that by voting “not content” with clauses 17 to 20; by indicating that the Committee would recommend that, at Consideration Stage, the Assembly votes that clauses 17 to 23 not stand part of the Bill; and by agreeing to write to the Minister outlining our concerns with those clauses. We stopped at clause 21 because there is another, separate amendment here regarding the regulations for fees for appeals and awarding of costs that we had not received at that point. That is why we stopped.

The amendments for the provisions to make regulations in connection with the Water Appeals Commission for fees and awarding of costs were received and sent out to you on Friday, as were the amendments on the cost recovery issues. All of those, and all the other amendments previously received, are in your tabled papers. They are in order.

OK, subsequent to the decisions taken last week on risk designation, Rivers Agency has come forward with a set of amendments to address the Committee's concerns. We had an informal meeting yesterday, at which we got an opportunity to discuss this. The actual amendments are being tabled today and are in your tabled papers.

I ask the Committee to note that I intend to deal with the various sets of amendments in two different ways. First, the amendments to the regulations for fees etc, for the Water Appeals Commission and on cost recovery have been discussed in Committee on numerous occasions, both in oral presentations and written briefings. I am therefore content that the Committee has had sufficient time to consider those. The Committee will vote on the clauses, as amended by these two sets of amendments.

On the amendments dealing with risk designation, I intend to take a different approach. These have been seen by members only today. They represent a substantial policy change, and, in my opinion, we need time to consider them. Whilst we will discuss them today, we will not have had sufficient time to decide whether the amendments address the concerns of the Committee. I do not propose that the Committee take a position today on whether they are acceptable. We will put that discussion on the agenda for next week, so that the Committee report can be finalised.

Are members content with this approach?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: As always, I welcome David Porter and Kieran Brazier to the Committee. We have had previous written and oral briefings on the amendments to do with the provision to make the regulation for the appeals and costs awarded to parties being moved from DARD to OFMDFM and on the cost recovery and new appeals aspects. The amendments were emailed to members on Friday and are in your tabled papers.

David and Kieran, given the time constraints that we face, will you quickly explain those amendments once again? That is, basically, the amendments to do with the provision of making the regulation for the appeals, the costs awarded to parties moving from DARD to OFMDFM, and the costs recovery and appeals aspects.

Mr Kieran Brazier (Department of Agriculture and Rural Development): Shall I do that now?

The Chairperson: Yes please.

Mr Brazier: The power to charge fees and award costs is an issue that was identified by the Examiner of Statutory Rules. The Bill as currently drafted gives the Department the power, by regulation, to make provision for determining a fee and for the charging of that fee in relation to appeals under clauses 21, 73, 74, 77, 79, 82, 84 and 86. The Bill as currently drafted also gives the Department the power, by regulation, to make provision for the awarding of costs of the parties to such appeals under those clauses.

The Examiner of Statutory Rules suggested that it may be preferable to confer that power on the Office of the First and deputy First Minister rather than on this Department, as OFMDFM has similar functions in respect of the Water Appeals Commission and the Planning Appeals Commission. The Department has accepted the suggestion and proposes to address it as follows. First, in all the clauses that I referred to, we propose to remove all reference to determining a fee, the charging of a fee and the awarding of costs. Secondly, to confer that responsibility on the Water Appeals Commission and OFMDFM, we propose three new clauses: clauses 103A, 103B and 103C.

Clause 103A gives power to the Water Appeals Commission to award costs for all appeals that it hears under the Reservoirs Bill. Clause 103B is a bit technical in that it allows the Water Appeals Commission the power to award costs if it has invited people to a hearing in the appeal, even if those people have not attended. Clause 103C allows OFMDFM the power, by regulation, to specify fees that may be paid to the Water Appeals Commission by appellants under the Reservoirs Bill. This approach is now entirely consistent with the approach being taken in the Planning Act (Northern Ireland) 2011, which the Examiner of Statutory Rules referred to in his suggestion.

The Chairperson: OK. We will move on to the risk designations, but do members have any comments or questions on those specific amendments?

Mr McMullan: Under clause 103B, costs can be awarded if you are not there. Can you give an example of that?

Mr Brazier: In hearing an appeal, the commission may invite people to come along and give evidence verbally. However, if they do not accept that invitation or do not turn up, the Water Appeals Commission can still award costs to the appellants without the hearing having taken place. It allows costs to be awarded even if the people they have invited or who have expressed an interest in appearing before the commission have not done so.

The Chairperson: OK. If there are no further questions on those amendments, we will move on. I will ask David and Kieran to explain the proposed amendments to the risk designation process and the content from yesterday's informal meeting; I know that not all members were there.

Mr David Porter (Department of Agriculture and Rural Development): I will lead on this one. I am going to do two things. I will refer to the clauses — there are two clauses in particular to which I wish to draw your attention — and I will also explain the risk matrix that we have developed. This is operational; it is about trying to put the Bill into some sort of context to explain how this would work in practice.

In essence, the issues that the Committee have are, first, around the definition or the issue of risk designation and living below something that is high risk. That is an issue of terminology and the consequential reaction to that. Secondly, there is an issue where a reservoir manager could do some works but cannot influence either the probability of release or the consequence of it. We are trying to grapple with those two issues and, hopefully, you will see those through our proposed amendments to the Bill.

First, I will turn your attention to the changes to clause 17. You will see quite clearly in the amendments that we propose to remove the word “risk” from the Bill to make it absolutely crystal clear that the Bill is based on consequence. We have said that consistently throughout. When we were drafting the Bill, we were trying to make it future-proof, because risk is a function of two things: impact and likelihood. There continues to be no agreed methodology to determine the likelihood or probability of failure. We were trying to write a Bill that was future-proof, but because of that we were, potentially, tying ourselves in knots. In light of the Committee's concerns, we decided to take a step back and strip that word out and put in “consequence”. Then we needed to make sure that there is provision in the Bill to allow us, if there is an agreed methodology, to revert to that. That is the first thing that will give some comfort to people that they no longer live below something that is, in statute, considered to be high risk. It is now going to be known as “high consequence”. People will understand the consequence of failure, because of what is below it, as opposed to associating risk with something like the high risk of failure, which is not really what we are trying to describe. So that is the “consequence of failure” and the use of the word “risk”.

That, then, got us to a point where we had to work out how a reservoir manager can influence what the risk designation is. How can they influence the consequence and the probability? They are going to be required to do some works by the inspecting engineer. If they carry those out, what is the tangible benefit that they can see? That is set out in the table: turn to that now. Where a structure is high consequence — ie the failure will impact on many people and potentially cause death — we have a range of boxes. Each one steps up as the probability of failure increases. We start on the left, where the reservoir has no outstanding matters in the interests of public safety, so the reservoir manager is fully compliant and has carried out their works. To the right of that is where matters have been identified, and that case we classify as a higher risk. What we are suggesting is that, operationally, we would know that as a high-risk structure. And then comes the case where the reservoir manager fails in their duty and does not carry out those matters in the interests of the public safety, and the Department has to step in. In that case, operationally, we would know that as a very high-risk structure.

There still remains an issue about whether the reservoir manager can influence the consequence. Can they move from a high consequence to a medium consequence? That is where I want to take you in this final moment or two: to clause 22. There is a very important point here that, I think, will tackle some of the concerns of the Committee. The Bill as originally drafted only enabled us to take a range of factors, such as the purpose for which a reservoir is being used, materials, the way it has been constructed and how it has been maintained into consideration in determining the probability of failure. We are proposing a very significant amendment here.

Mr Porter: You will see in clause 22(3) that we have taken out the provision that we can only use those matters in determining, as it says in paragraph 22(1)(b), the probability of failure, and we have changed that to:

That is very significant, because it allows us first, as I have said before, to determine those reservoirs which could cause harm, ie where there is some dwelling, person or economic activity at risk. So then we know that those are not low; we know that they are either medium or high. In the past, we have described how, to differentiate those, we would use detailed flood inundation maps to determine the speed, velocity and depth of water. That was like an on/off switch. There was very little that you could really do to influence whether you were high consequence or medium consequence. The change to clause 22 allows the Department to take into account more factors in determining whether you are high consequence or medium consequence. So the use of the reservoir, and how it has been maintained — there are now factors whereby a reservoir manager can influence whether it is high consequence or medium consequence, and not just by knocking down buildings. Previously, that was what you would have had to do. Now, there may well be certain works that a reservoir manager could do that could then change the reservoir's consequence designation.

To summarise that, there are two things that we have done to the Bill. First, we have removed the word "risk" and entirely focused on "consequence". Secondly, by drawing in other matters that we can take into consideration in determining the consequence of failure, we have significant room to determine between high and medium consequence, and it also allows a reservoir manager to undertake works that could influence that and, therefore, the designation of a reservoir could potentially change.

The Chairperson: OK. Any questions on the risk designation amendment? Again, it is in clause 17 but its affects go right up to clause 22 and is, of course, entwined right throughout the Bill.

Mr Porter: That is correct.

The Chairperson: Any questions on that?

In the absence of members' questions, I will ask a question. We referred to your colour chart. Again, I appreciate and see the gains in what you have done here through the amendment by bringing into play factors that could be used to measure probability. So I understand that, and I see it as a gain. The fact that you have moved the labelling — the designation — from "risk" to "consequence" is, again, common sense to me; it is a gain. Having the consequence of reservoir failure mixed in with the probability to give you this part designation and the actions therein can change that.

However, I still have a problem with the actions within. The whole motive for me in this — and why I was not content — was that I thought that it was unfair that a reservoir owner could not change from the current rigours of the legislation to a better place with regard to regulation. From what I see here in front of me, the only differential now is that, whilst things may remain the same, if a reservoir owner initially does capital works at the start, his reservoir could well move from a high to a medium consequence. However, the actual risk probability does not really go to a better place because of his actions. In fact, if anything, it seems as if we have a new segment, which is very high risk. That does not mean anything different, because it was always there. It basically means that, where interests of safety are identified, a reservoir manager needs to do it, and if he does not do it, his reservoir goes straight into the very high risk category, which basically means that there will be enforcement.

Mr Porter: That is correct.

The Chairperson: Can you explain to me where the gain is? I can understand that you are starting to bring in a bit of fairness by the fact that you can change your consequence designation, but the probability which is now in has been given teeth by the fact that you are adding conditions by which you measure it. That is still the same as before, and we are still left with a regulatory burden because, under clauses 25 and 23, there is still at least one supervising engineer visit a year, and so on. So, if anything, we have not seen a gain in that regard. We have just seen a redesignation of the enforcement issue.

Mr Porter: There has been a gain in that that has moved from two per year to one per year. So, in essence, that gain has already been achieved. As I have said before, if the Committee wishes to push that out further, I have no objection to it. However, I do not believe that, contractually, anybody will be able to negotiate any better than what is written there, because we are exposing an engineer's professional indemnity (PI) insurance, and they will not take on a risk that they think is unreasonable. What is in the Bill is very reflective of what a reservoir manager who has a structure that is in good condition could expect to achieve. Irrespective of how pristine it is, I genuinely do not believe that they will be able to negotiate a better deal than what is shown. That is why I am absolutely comfortable with those as minimum standards. If the Committee wishes to push it out further, we can do so. We would be doing that to satisfy ourselves; there will not, as I explained, be any real gain on the ground.

The big difference is that the reservoir manager can now control two different things. First, he controls the probability of failure: by not having measures required in the interests of public safety, he brings his structure into a reasonable condition. In the event of failure, that is his defence: he has done everything that the law asked of him.

Secondly, and more importantly, there may well be measures that he could undertake to reduce the risk from high to medium. That will make a difference to the regulatory burden because it is now based on consequence. If he could take some measure to divert the water, move the property or improve the structure, there is the potential to change from high consequence to medium consequence and therefore gain the benefit of not being required to have an inspecting engineer's report other than initially and not going from one inspection a year to two. That is now possible in the Bill; it was not when I spoke to you last week. That was the sticking point when the Committee voted on it. That has fundamentally changed. A reservoir manager can influence the consequence because of the range of factors that we can now take into consideration.

The Chairperson: OK. Are there any further questions on that amendment? No.

Thank you, David and Kieran, for that explanation of the amendments. Members, as I proposed earlier, given that we have not had sufficient time to consider all the policy implications, I propose that any decision made by the Committee on whether it feels that an amendment addresses its concerns be deferred until next week. I remind members that we retain the right to register formal opposition by the Committee to the Question that the clause stand part of the Bill at Consideration Stage.

Before we begin the formal clause-by-clause scrutiny, I refer members to the draft letter to the Minister. The Committee agreed last week that it be drafted for approval. I suggest that we defer a decision on issuing the letter until next week. I invite members to read it. It may well need to be amended, but that can be done next week, if we defer sending it until the discussion on the risk designation amendments. Are members content that we defer making a decision on the letter until next week?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson: Members should refer to their formal clause-by-clause matrix. It contains comments, responses and clarification from Rivers Agency on various clauses. Members will also find all the proposed amendments in sequence. These should enable members to follow the text of the amendments. Members should also have their copy of the Bill in front of them.

I will advise members of the options available to the Committee. We will take a formal vote on each clause and schedule. The options available to the Committee are to agree that it is content with the clause; agree that it is content with the clause as amended; agree that it is content with the new clause; or agree that it is not content with the clause or new clause. It can vote that it is not content with the clause or agree that a Committee amendment is required.

If we decide that we are not content with a clause, I remind members that, in advance of Consideration Stage, we also have the option to register our formal opposition to the Question that a clause stand part of the Bill. That will ensure that the clause is debated at Consideration Stage. If a member is not happy with something and wants to vote against a clause or propose an amendment, they will need Committee agreement. For a Committee amendment, they need to be very clear what they do not like about the current clause and what the policy objective is of an amendment or what they want the amendment to do. Please remember that, given the complexity and technical nature of the Bill, it is likely that only relatively simple amendments could be tackled in the time available. Members will know that they always have the option as individuals to table their own amendments, and Bill Office staff will assist with that.

I also want to inform members that I intend to group clauses about which there has been no query during the informal clause-by-clause scrutiny and no proposed amendment. If that is clear, we can start the formal part of the proceedings. Are there any questions at this point?

OK. Members will recall that, at last week's meeting, we considered up to clause 20. We will commence formal clause-by-clause consideration at clause 21. Finally, please be aware that it is my intention to finish the formal clause-by-clause consideration today. That will mean getting through some 100 clauses and four schedules. If we do not get that done today, there will be an additional meeting.

Clause 21 (Appeal against Department's decision in a review under section 20)

The Chairperson: Two decisions need to be made today. The first relates to the regulation or fees for appeals and the awarding of costs by the Water Appeals Commission. The second decision will be on the risk designation process. I will, therefore, put two Questions. The first will relate to the Water Appeals Commission and is a technical amendment. The Examiner of Statutory Rules recommended that the responsibility for making regulations in clause 21(9) rest with the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister rather than the Department in order to avoid a conflict of interest. An amendment is, therefore, required to clause 21(9). For clarity, 21(9) deals with the regulations to make provisions for the fee for the appeal and the awarding of costs of the parties to an appeal. There are also amendments to clauses 73(6), 74(2), 77(2), 79(7), 82(8), 84(6), 86(4) and 118(1) and to schedules 2 and 3. Those amendments are of a technical nature. The proposed amendment is at page 3 of the tabled papers.

Question, That the Committee is content to amend clause 21 in line with the departmental amendment, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson: I will now put the Question on the clause as amended. The Committee has serious concerns about the risk designation mechanism. Although it is content to amend the clause in line with the recommendation of the Examiner of Statutory Rules, it is not content with the clause as amended in so far as it relates to risk designation.

Is the Committee content with clause 21 as amended? I have to say that I am not. Are members agreed that we are not content?

Mr McMullan: Chair, can you state why you are not content?

The Chairperson: The crux is risk designation. We will talk about it next week, but we must push through the formal consideration.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 21, subject to the proposed amendment, put and negatived.

The Chairperson: I formally acknowledge receipt of the amendments on risk designation from the Department. Unfortunately, the Committee has already started its clause-by-clause decision-making on the Bill. We are therefore content to consider the amendments proposed by the Department once the Committee has had adequate time to consider their text and impact on what is a complex and interconnected Bill.

Clause 22 (Matters to be taken into account under sections 17(3), 18(2), 20(3)(b)(ii) and 21(5)(a))

The Chairperson: As with clause 21, two decisions need to be made today. The first decision is on a recommendation from the Examiner of Statutory Rules on the number of regulations in the clause and its technical nature. The second decision will be on the risk designation process. I will therefore put two Questions. The first Question will be on the technical amendment. The Examiner of Statutory Rules said that there were two distinct rules at 22(4) when there should perhaps be one. The Department has suggested an amendment, which was considered at the meeting on 27 May. There is a consequential amendment to clause 117 as a result of the amendment to clause 22. The amendment is at page 4 of your tabled papers. The Committee has also requested clarification on the definition of cultural heritage, and the response is in the matrix.

Question, That the Committee is content to amend clause 22 in line with the departmental amendment, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson: We will now ask the Question on the clause as amended. The Committee has serious concerns about the risk designation mechanism and, although content to amend the clause in line with the Examiner of Statutory Rules' recommendations, is not content with the clause as amended in so far as it relates to risk designation.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 22, subject to the proposed amendment, put and negated.

The Chairperson: I wish to state the following, which can be added to the minutes. I formally acknowledge receipt of the amendments on risk designation from the Department. Unfortunately, the Committee has already started its clause-by-clause decision-making on the Bill. We are therefore content to consider the amendments proposed by the Department once the Committee has had adequate time to consider the text of the amendments and their impact on what is a complex and interconnected Bill.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 23 put and agreed to.

Clause 24 (Supervision requirement and commissioning of supervising engineer etc.)

The Chairperson: The Committee has expressed concern about whether the level of penalties is commensurate with the offence. There was also concern about the responsibilities of a supervising engineer. The responses from the Department are in the matrix.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 24, put and agreed to.

Clause 25 (Duties etc. in relation to supervision)

The Chairperson: The Committee has received an amendment to the clause to take account of the number of supervising engineer visits to high-risk and medium-risk reservoirs. The amendment is at pages 4 to 6 of the tabled papers. There is a consequential amendment at clause 33(4)(i).

Before I put the Question, I will say my piece. I am not yet content with clause 25(2)(k), which deals with the visits to a high-risk reservoir. The number of visits will change with the amendment to at least once in every 12-month period for a high-risk reservoir and at least once in every 24-month period for a medium-risk reservoir.

Again, there are two factors to my concerns. One is the words "at least". More could have been done on the minimum and maximum number of inspections in any given time. I am not content with the periods, namely 12 months and 24 months. I revert to my MOT analogy. A car goes through an MOT once a year. Is that comparable with a reservoir that has been in existence for a long time? Those are my concerns and the reasons why I am not content with the clause.

Members may well ask me whether we should amend the clause. The problem is that I do not see that I, and maybe even the Committee, are informed enough technically to put a time on it. We could push it out, but how far? You have heard the arguments from David and Kieran on what engineers are saying about their PI protection. So where would it be suitable for the Committee to draw the line? Again, I put the onus back on the Department. Really, the onus on setting a period should be placed there and not with the Committee.

My issues are with the words "at least" for a minimum; the absence of a maximum period; and with the intervals specified. I acknowledge that amendments were made and that the number of inspections was pushed out from twice every 12 months to once every 12 months for high-risk reservoirs and from at least once in every 12 months to at least once in every 24 months for medium-risk reservoirs. However, I am not content that that is enough. That is my spoke. Do members have any comments or questions?

Mr McMullan: How many times is a high-risk reservoir inspected before it is downgraded to medium risk? It will not always stay as a high-risk reservoir. Therefore, if it comes down to medium consequence, it will have a 24-monthly inspection. Are you looking for one inspection in every 36-month period?

The Chairperson: I am not content with the periods as they sit. This is all very much wrapped up with clause 17 and the risk designation and probability issue. That is where I sit. I see that gains have been made, and we now have the amendment, which we will discuss and debate next week. In the amendment, factors come into play that change the designation.

Mr McMullan: At the same time, you cannot let a reservoir go too long without inspection. I know that you may want to have a three-, four- or five-year inspection period, but you could be letting it go too far.

The Chairperson: It is about finding the balance. I do not know whether the Committee has the technical information to be able to make that informed judgement. That is why I am not proposing an amendment, but I am not content with the clause.

Mr McMullan: These decisions are all predicated on cost. Without the cost, we could, I think, take the decisions much more easily. However, we know that there is a cost to the inspections, so we are trying to find a suitable inspection period to cover that cost. That is what is really driving —

The Chairperson: It is the regulatory burden and then making sure that it is effective.

Mr McMullan: Yes, so we are keeping in our head the costs to the people who own the reservoirs. If a high-risk reservoir is inspected once a year, after three years, it should be ready for downgrading to medium risk. It cannot remain high risk every year if it complies with the regulations; it has to be downgraded at some stage.

The Chairperson: Yes, that is one of the points that I made before. A reservoir might have been there for 100 years without any movement. The new regime means visits by supervising engineers and inspection engineers' reports. If nothing has changed over that initial period, there could be a way to relax that regime. Given that it is time framed, I do not know how you would ever write that into a Bill. Do we have to do the same thing over and over again? Does a supervising engineer need to see the same thing over and over again? Rivers Agency would say that you would start with more visits in a 12-month period and a 24-month period, and then you get to the point at which you have one a year and one every 24 months. That is, I think, just too burdensome, and that is why I am not content.

Any other questions or queries?

Mr McMullan: How long does an inspection take? If you have an inspection once a year and write up your report, you are no sooner finished than you are into the following year.

The Chairperson: Every reservoir will be different.

Mr McMullan: It is about cost. We have cost in our head rather than the period of inspection. Costs are driving this decision.

The Chairperson: If you have an engineer supervising a reservoir every month —

Mr McMullan: If we are not content, we may leave that and come back to it next week.

The Chairperson: We have to do it formally. This has always been a fundamental issue. I am not content with it as it is. I do not have enough technical information to make an amendment.

Before I put the Question, do members have any other comments? No.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 25, put and negated.

Question, That the Committee is content with clauses 26 to 28 put and agreed to.

Clause 29 (Inspection timing: reservoir subject to pre-commencement inspection report)

The Chairperson: Whilst no comments were received in relation to the clause, there is a consequential amendment in clause 120. The amendment is at pages 6 and 7 of the tabled papers.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 29, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with clauses 30 to 32 put and agreed to.

Clause 33 (Duties etc. in relation to inspection)

The Chairperson: No comments were raised in relation to the clause. However, it is consequential to the proposed amendment to 25(2)(k), which was considered at the meeting on 27 May. The amendment can be found at pages 7 and 8 of the tabled papers. Clause 33 is linked to clause 25(2)(k). I am not going to rehearse the issues, but I have a problem with the minimum time and the period between inspections. It is exactly the same issue.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 33, subject to the proposed amendment, put and negated.

Question, That the Committee is content with clauses 34 and 35, put and agreed to.

Clause 36 (Offences: supervision, inspection, record keeping)

The Chairperson: The Department is considering an amendment to the clause to ensure that, where a reservoir manager is required by other legislation to obtain consents, sufficient time is allowed to obtain such consents before enforcement action is considered. The amendment can be found at pages 8 and 9 of the tabled papers and includes a new clause 36A. There is a consequential amendment to clauses 37 and 70.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 36, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

New Clause

The Chairperson: New clause 36A is entitled:

“Offence in connection with inspection: failure to secure compliance with safety direction or recommendation”

The new clause 36A is at page 9 of the tabled papers.

Question, That the Committee is content with the new clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 37 (Defences: offence under section 36(1)(f))

The Chairperson: There is now a consequential amendment to clause 37 due to the amendment to clause 36. The amendment is at page 10 of the tabled papers.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 37, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with clauses 38 to 48 put and agreed to.

Clause 49 (Offences: construction or alteration)

The Chairperson: There is an amendment to this clause, which can be found at pages 10 and 11 of the tabled papers.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 49, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

“Offences: failure to comply with safety direction in safety report, preliminary certificate or final certificate”

The new clause 49A is at pages 10 and 11 of the tabled papers.

Question, That the Committee is content with the new clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 50 (Defences: offences under section 49(1)(b) or (c))

The Chairperson: There is a consequential amendment due to the new clause 49A. It amends the title to “Defences: offences under section 49A(1)(a) or (b)”, and it is at page 11 of the tabled papers.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 50, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with clauses 51 and 52, put and agreed to.

Clause 53 (Flood plans)

The Chairperson: An amendment is proposed to this clause, and it can be found at pages 11 to 13 of the tabled papers.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 53, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with clauses 54 to 64 put and agreed to.

Clause 65 (Commissioning of engineer by Department)

The Chairperson: We now come to the first of a number of clauses that deal with the issue of cost recovery. These are clauses 65(4), 67(6), 69(6), 71(7), 71(8), 86(1) and 92(8) and the new clauses 103A, 103B and 103C.

The Committee in its deliberations noted that, when the reservoir manager fails to comply with certain requirements of the Bill, the Department has provided itself with the powers to meet those requirements. This covers areas such as commissioning of an engineer, carrying out safety works etc. In most of these instances, the Department must recoup or recover the full costs. The Department seems to be working on the assumption that, in such cases, it would be because the reservoir manager was refusing to comply. The Committee understood that, in fact, in many cases, it could be because the reservoir manager would be financially unable to comply. This was a fundamental issue for the Committee. It did not want the Department having to pursue a community-based club or farmer when there was no likelihood of the reservoir manager being able to pay.

The Department agreed that it would amend a number of clauses to enable it to have discretion on cost recovery. Thus in cases where there was no possibility of a reservoir manager being able to pay or where payment would cause severe financial difficulties or even bankruptcy or, indeed, where it did make economic sense to seek to recover costs, the Department will have some discretion. However, as the Department will be making a decision on whether to recover costs, that has necessitated the provision of an appeal system in the Bill. The appeal system will be managed by the Water Appeals Commission for Northern Ireland. OFMDFM is the sponsor Department for the Water Appeals Commission, and its approval is therefore required for that new function and the relevant amendments. The amendments have been received, and we will come across them individually as we go through the clauses.

The first amendment is to clause 65, and it is on page 13 of the tabled papers. This was a major issue for many members of the Committee, and so the amendment is, if you like, a gain for the Committee.

I will put the Question: is the Committee content with clause 65 as amended?

Mr McMullan: Would the word "reasonable" not be better on the other side of the word "costs", rather than "costs reasonably incurred"?

The Chairperson: This is at clause 65.

The Committee Clerk: It is just the way that it is drafted.

Mr McMullan: Yes, but if you were reading it, what would you think?

The Chairperson: I can bring the officials forward if you wish, but they will probably say that that is the way that it is drafted.

Mr McMullan: OK. I will go with that.

The Chairperson: Are you happy enough?

Mr McMullan: Yes.

Mr Buchanan: On that, the amendment states that the Department:

"may by notice served ... require the manager to pay".

Therefore, the Department will have the flexibility to seek to restore any moneys that it has spent. However, the word "may" is used. How far can the Department go? It is still somewhat open-ended. If the Department moves in, does a bit of work and is looking to recover its money, is there a possibility that the reservoir manager could lose his house or part of a holding that he has? If he does not have the money to pay, is it possible that he is going to lose part of a business, a farm, a house or whatever?

The Chairperson: I ask the officials to come to the table. Did you hear all of that?

Mr Porter: Yes. The fundamental point is that those are the responsibilities of the reservoir manager. They are responsible for the structure. We have passed the point in the Bill of establishing that it is their responsibility as is the cost associated with that. When the reservoir manager does not fulfil their duty, which is established in law, the flexibility is there for the Department to step in and carry out the works. The question is then what costs we will recover.

The word "may" is there to give us some flexibility. We will not pursue when there is no prospect of cost recovery. That is the element that is in there. However, where there is a prospect of cost recovery and somebody is quite capable of carrying out that duty but chooses not to, we need the legislation to be quite strict. It is their responsibility. They own the structure, and if it fails, they are liable for the harm that is caused. We are regulating that function. It is highly important that that is made clear and that we do not write in a legal loophole whereby people who are quite capable of carrying out their duty just sit on their hands and wait for the Department to do it and have wriggle room to get out of it. It needs to be quite tight to make sure that we do not leave that prospect of people playing out legal arguments with us.

The Chairperson: OK. Are there any further questions for the officials, David and Kieran?

Mr Buchanan: It is still not overly clear. Somebody may not have the money to do what is required of them, but they have a holding or property, something like that. For example, if they have property, is there the possibility that that property could be seized to make up for the money that the Department is looking for?

Mr Porter: It would be exactly the same as if you owed the taxman money. In law, it says that you owe that money and, if you have the ability to pay that, it is right and proper that you are pursued for it. Just because you are going to lose something is not a good enough argument. If you dodge your tax, and you have assets, it is entirely right and proper, in law, for that to be pursued because you owe that money. That principle needs to be maintained. We recognise that there are people who hold this in a charity trust or who have been left a reservoir or a body of water in a will and they have no other assets. We need the discretion in a genuine case like that, so that the Department can put a case — internally to the Department and potentially to the Minister — to say that there is no reasonable prospect of cost recovery and it is not mischievousness by an individual or clever management of their assets. We need a little bit of wriggle room for those cases. However, if somebody is just avoiding their responsibility — in the same way as they might avoid paying tax or any other bill — and they have the ability to pay, they should pay in law. Just because you do not like paying is not a good enough defence. We have to be careful that we do not write that in.

The Chairperson: Various members want to speak. We have covered this, week in and week out. It is one of the fundamentals. We are going over ground that we have already covered. You used the example of tax, David, but you pay tax because you have made money. That is not the case if you are a reservoir owner. In most cases, the person has inherited it, and it may be a millstone round their neck.

Mr Porter: It applies irrespective of how you got it. If you were willed a house, not a reservoir, and it had a leaking roof, unfortunately it comes as a package, and you cannot separate out the bits that you would like to be left to you and give up the bits that you do not like. Unfortunately in life, that is what happens. You get good bits, and there are risks and responsibilities. We have established through history that, in common law, the owner of the land is responsible for this hazard; we have established that they are not managing it in a way that means that we can give an assurance to people, particularly those living downstream, that it is being managed in a reasonable way; and we have established that something needs to be done. Unfortunately, we cannot just say that we will let them off the pain bit of owning it because of the circumstances. However, we have put in a little bit of wriggle room so that we do not see people being made destitute over this. It is difficult in law to write that in, and this is as good as we can get it.

The Chairperson: I understand.

Mr Swann: I am looking for some clarity. If a reservoir owner has assets, the Department will pursue them for those assets.

Mr Porter: The Department would have to consider whether it was right and proper to pursue them. We are establishing the powers in law. The difficulty is the individual cases that you have to deal with. We cannot go through and say that there are 40 individual cases and that we will pursue this one because of this circumstance, but that we might not pursue that one. We have to take it on a case-by-case basis when it arises. That is where we need it to be tight, so that we do not leave a loophole. However, we need a little bit of discretion for the Department, so that, when we are presented with the facts of an individual case, we have the ability to apply a little bit of discretion.

Mr Brazier: As currently drafted, the Bill says that we “must” recover; the Department will pursue in any circumstances. The amendment gives the Department discretion and more accurately reflects its policy on cost recovery. We cannot write into the primary legislation all the scenarios that might come up around this. If the Department has incurred costs that should otherwise have been incurred by a reservoir manager, it has a responsibility to consider recovering those costs. That is what this is doing. That might lead to full-cost recovery in certain circumstances and no-cost recovery in others because of the circumstances of the individual reservoir manager. As drafted and introduced in the Assembly, there was no discretion around that. In addition, we have brought in, in the amendment, that if we decide to recover costs, the reservoir manager will have the right to appeal to the Water Appeals Commission as to the amount and the decision to recover.

Mr Swann: As far as I am aware, the Department’s policy on cost recovery is full-cost recovery.

Mr Brazier: We checked that and that is not the case. This Bill accurately reflects the policy, and we checked that with our policymakers. We showed this proposed amendment to our policymakers, and they agreed that it accurately reflected the position.

Mr Porter: Maybe the example is better not to think of the extremes but the very small cases. For instance, if the Department had to step in and spend a few hundred pounds to do something, and it is going to cost us £10,000 to recover that cost, clearly we would put a case that it is not value for money to spend £10,000 to pursue and recover a few hundred pounds. In that case, irrespective of whether it was in the Reservoirs Bill or any other bit of the Department, there would have to be a judgement made on whether cost recovery was the correct thing to do.

Mr Swann: David, we pass SRs here quite regularly where we go for the cost recovery of the price of plastic shoes. So, when you are talking about the Department going after a few hundred pounds, they go after a few pence in certain cases. This example is purely theoretical: if somebody has been bequeathed a reservoir that then needs money, which they do not have, spent on it, and the Department moves in to seize the asset, the only asset they have is the reservoir. Will the Department take the reservoir or is that too big a risk for the Department?

Mr Porter: Again, I am not sure. We would need to consider that.

Mr Swann: But if he had a house, you would take the house.

Mr Porter: No, we would not say that.

Mr Brazier: Not necessarily.

Mr Swann: Not necessarily, but you may.

Mr Brazier: Yes, it is a possibility. It needs to be considered. The Department has incurred costs that would otherwise have been incurred by the reservoir manager, and it needs to consider the recovery of those costs. Whether it does or not —

Mr Porter: — is a different matter.

Mr Brazier: — depends on the circumstances.

Mr Swann: The flexibility may be in the legislation, but I think that it will be a different matter in practice.

Mr Brazier: The way the Bill is written, we would be in breach of the legislation if we did not apply how it is written.

Mr Irwin: I have issues similar to Robin’s whereby someone can inherit a reservoir and quite possibly be asset-rich, but they do not have the funds. It would be a travesty if those people had to sell property.

Mr Porter: Unfortunately, that is a hazard associated with getting willed something. I am not sure how, in legislation, we can deal with that.

Mr Irwin: I know that. Put it this way: those who cannot afford it, you do not go after them; those who have assets, you do go after them. It is not fair either way.

Mr Porter: We are happy to revert to the previous one that says that we will just go after everybody, if that is what you want. That is the alternative.

Mr Irwin: Most of the time, you would be wasting your time.

Mr Swann: Put it this way, going back to that would make our decision an awful lot easier. [Laughter.]

Mr Porter: At least that is equally unfair on everybody. I do not know what to do here.

Mr Brazier: We brought that forward because that is what we thought the Committee was looking for: discretion. If we are hearing otherwise, we can revert.

Mr Irwin: Discretion is good, but —

Mr Brazier: We cannot give guarantees, if that is what the Committee is looking for. We just cannot.

Mr Porter: We cannot because we are bringing in a power in order to do something. We cannot write in, "In this particular case, we will do this, and in that particular case, we will do that". It is then how we deal with individual cases after that. The flexibility is good because at least it means that we do not have to recover costs. At least it requires us to pose that question to ourselves. Will we recover costs? Is it reasonable? At least that flexibility is a movement.

The Chairperson: We have opened up this debate again. We have had this countless times, and I know that the Department has moved and the Committee has made gains. I am happy to go into a five-minute closed session if members want to discuss the issue further. Otherwise, I will put the Question. It is completely up to members. A five-minute informal?

Members indicated assent.

The Committee went into closed session from 3.31 pm until 3.43 pm.

The Chairperson: I remind members that we are back in open session. We have discussed clause 65 in open and closed sessions.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 105, put and agreed to.

Clause 106 (Assessment of engineers' reports etc.)

The Chairperson: The Committee expressed concern regarding the possibility of overengineering by engineers and the lack of checks and balances on engineers in the Bill. The Department has proposed an amendment and a new clause 106A. A briefing was given on this amendment at the meeting last week. Members should refer to the Hansard report of that briefing.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 106, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

New Clause

The Chairperson: New clause 106A is entitled "Publication of information as regards ranges of costs of engineers' services". It is directly related to the issues raised by the Committee on some sort of checks and balances on the engineers, as well as dealing with the information vacuum around the cost of hiring the various types of engineer.

Question, That the Committee is content with new clause 106A, put and agreed to.

Clause 107 (Notice to the Department of revocation of commissioning, or resignation, of engineer)

The Chairperson: The Committee sought clarification on the defence at clause 107(6).

Mr McMullan: No, it's OK.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 119, put and agreed to.

Clause 120 (Commencement)

The Chairperson: The Committee considered a proposed amendment to clause 120 at the meeting on 27 May. This is an amendment to allow for the two-phase approach as defined in discussions and the letter from the Minister that was considered last week. There is a further amendment to clause 120. The Committee was very much of this mind with regard to the two phases of the Bill, given the fact that we did not have all the information that we should have had with regards to initial audit and the information that would flow from that. Pardon the pun.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 120, subject to the proposed amendments, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson: There is an amendment to schedule 3.

Question, That the Committee is content with schedule 3, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with schedule 4, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with the long title, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson: That concludes clause-by-clause scrutiny of the Reservoirs Bill. The Committee staff will now draft the Committee report for consideration and approval by the Committee on 17 June.

Mrs Dobson: You will do that tonight.

The Chairperson: You would probably need to do it tonight to keep everything in your head.

We can have a discussion next week on the amendments that we have received today. Having said that, we have already completed formal clause-by-clause scrutiny. Everything else will go into the Committee report that the staff will compile for our approval. The letter to the Minister will also need to be amended next week. I had better not be counting out numbers in my sleep. [Laughter.]

Legal Aid and Coroners' Courts Bill [NIA 33/11-15]

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Paul Givan (Chairperson)
Mr Raymond McCartney (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr Sydney Anderson
Mr Tom Elliott
Mr Seán Lynch
Mr Alban Maginness
Ms Rosaleen McCorley
Mr Patsy McGlone

The Chairperson: We now move to the formal clause-by-clause consideration of the Bill. A paper outlining the Committee's position on each of the clauses and the Hansard report of the Committee's deliberations at last week's meeting were circulated to members yesterday and copies are in your information packs.

As the Attorney General's proposed amendment is not currently part of the Bill, it will not be covered in the formal clause-by-clause consideration. However, the Committee deliberations on the proposed amendment will be reflected in the report on the Bill. If members are clear, I will work through each clause and schedule. I will then put formally the Question on each. Where there are proposed amendments, I will put the Question on the proposed amendment first and then the clause.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 1, put and agreed to.

Clause 2 (Designation of Director of Legal Aid Casework)

The Chairperson: Some members expressed the view that clause 2(1) could be better drafted and they may wish to consider this further at a later stage. The views will be reflected in the Committee report.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 2, put and agreed to.

Clause 3 (Exercise of functions by Director)

The Chairperson: Some members expressed reservations about the framework in place to ensure the independence of the director regarding decisions in individual cases, whether policy constraints could impact negatively on the exercise of that independence because a category of cases could be excluded from consideration by the director and whether proper safeguards are in place.

Some members indicated that they may wish to consider this further at a later stage.

Other members were satisfied that any direction issued by the Department could not override the provisions of the relevant primary or secondary legislation and noted that the requirement to follow directions and guidance issued by the Minister already exists. The different views of the Committee will be reflected in the Committee report.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 3, put and agreed to.

Clause 4 (Delegation of functions of Director)

The Chairperson: Some comments were made regarding the make-up of the appeals panels, which are covered under schedule 2. No other issues were raised by members in relation to clause 4.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 4, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 5, put and agreed to.

Clause 6 (Amendment of law relating to legal aid, civil legal services and criminal defence services)

The Chairperson: No issues were raised by members in relation to clause 6, but the Committee agreed to support two amendments to schedule 2, which we will come to in due course.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 6, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 7, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 8, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 9, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 10, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 11, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 12, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 13, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with schedule 1, put and agreed to.

Schedule 2 (Amendments)

The Chairperson: One member expressed some reservations about the proposed make-up of the appeals panel and the intention to include laypersons as well as legally qualified persons. It was noted that the detail of the appeals mechanism, including the make-up and procedures of the panels, will be set out in subordinate legislation, which will be scrutinised by the Committee and the Assembly, with the first set of regulations being subject to the affirmative resolution procedure and subsequent regulations subject to the negative resolution procedure. The Committee discussed the advice provided by the Assembly Examiner of Statutory Rules indicating that the regulation-making power is of some great significance to the Bill and therefore should be subject to draft affirmative procedure on the first and subsequent occasions. The Committee agreed with that assessment and indicated that we would support an amendment to make that change.

The Committee also noted the advice provided by the Examiner of Statutory Rules that the rules in respect of the assignment of solicitor and counsel where a criminal aid certificate has been granted should also be subject to the draft affirmative procedure on the first and subsequent occasions given the significance of the powers. The Committee again agreed with that assessment and indicated that we would support an amendment to make that change.

The Department has now written indicating that, in light of the Committee's decision, it will instruct Legislative Counsel to draft the necessary amendments. A copy of the letter has been circulated to members. That saves the Committee from having to draft the amendments, but they will do what we wanted.

Is the Committee content with the proposed amendments to be brought forward by the Department of Justice to ensure that all rules made under the provisions in respect of the new article 36A, 36B and 38A provisions in the 1981 Order and article 20A provision in the 2003 Order in respect of appeal panels should be subject to the draft affirmative resolution procedure on the first and subsequent occasions?

Members indicated assent.

Question, That the Committee is content with schedule 2, subject to the proposed amendments, put and agreed to.

Mr Elliott: Subject to us being agreed to them.

Question, That the Committee is content with schedule 3, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson: As this is the end of the clause-by-clause consideration of the Bill, the Committee now needs to consider the long title of the Bill.

Question, That the Committee is content with the long title, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson: OK; thank you. The draft Committee report on the Bill will be prepared for consideration and agreement at next week's meeting.

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

Single Farm Payment: Submission

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether she has submitted proposals to the Executive on the distribution of Single Farm Payments; and if not, to detail when they will be submitted.

(AQW 33750/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): I have already announced a significant number of important CAP reform decisions relating to payment entitlements, eligible land, active farmers, greening, the Regional Reserve, the Young Farmers' Scheme, the Redistributive Payment, the Small Farmers' Scheme and capping. However, a small number of key decisions remain to be taken.

As I have stated on several occasions, the allocation of almost €2 billion of taxpayers' money over the remainder of this decade has to be done carefully, wisely and fairly. We need to be mindful not just of the distribution of CAP support, but of the potential bureaucratic burdens and risks we create in whatever choices we make.

Given the importance of these remaining decisions, it is right that they be agreed by the Executive. Political discussions are ongoing in relation to the remaining key issues and it is my intention to bring my final proposals on these issues to the Executive in the coming weeks.

I am, of course, mindful of the 1 August 2014 deadline to notify the EU Commission of our implementation plans and it is my intention that we will have an agreed CAP Pillar I structure before that date.

Single Farm Payment: Unpaid

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the total Single Farm Payment that remains unpaid; and the amount that has been denied in the current year.

(AQW 33757/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The total amount of Single Farm Payment that remains unpaid for the 2013 scheme year is £1,048,684. Claims can remain unpaid due to probate proceedings, businesses failing to supply required information such as bank account details and disputes between businesses. In most cases, payments can be made when businesses supply the necessary information.

The amount that has been denied, due to penalties applied under scheme rules, in the 2013 year is £1,205,990 from a total budget of £265.25m.

Single Farm Payment: Impact Assessment

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the impact assessment completed on farm incomes and viability in the event of the default position becoming operative in respect of Single Farm Payments on 1 August 2014.

(AQW 33758/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The default position for implementation of CAP reform from 1 January 2015 is a single region model with a uniform payment per hectare under both the Basic Payment and Greening Payment Schemes. Any deviation from this default position needs to be notified to the EU Commission by 1 August 2014.

During the public consultation on 'Policy Options Arising from the Reform of the Common Agricultural Policy (Pillar I Direct Payments)', my officials undertook and published significant analysis on the potential impacts of a redistribution of direct payments on farm income.

The data in Tables 1 and 2 (Annex A) show the impact on farm incomes of a flat rate payment regime. The analysis is based on information from the annual Farm Business Survey, which is used to assess Farm Business Income (a measure of the return to unpaid labour and the capital invested in a farm business) for businesses above 0.5 standard labour units across a range of farm types.

A move to flat rate support regime from 2015 would significantly reduce incomes on all farm types except for sheep (SDA) and mixed cattle and sheep (SDA) when compared with the status quo. The risk of significant adverse consequences arising from the immediate adoption of a flat rate payment regime is highest in the beef sector, where incomes tend to be lowest. However, difficulties could also arise in the inherently more profitable dairy sector, especially if it were to coincide with a period of falling producer milk prices.

There would be other impacts on farm businesses, such as a sudden change in cash flow, which are not fully articulated by an analysis of farm incomes. It should also be noted that the analysis does not allow for any offsetting actions and adjustments at individual farmer or aggregate level (i.e. it is a static analysis rather than a dynamic analysis). Of course, the possible extent of such adjustments in the very short term would probably be very limited.

I have stated previously that I am very mindful of the deadline of 1 August 2014 for decisions to be notified to the EU Commission and it is my intention to seek Executive agreement on an appropriate CAP Pillar I payment regime in advance of that date.

Poultry Beak Trimming

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether her Department has any plans to outlaw the practice of the beak trimming of poultry.

(AQW 33817/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Beak trimming of poultry here is permitted in The Welfare of Animals (Permitted Procedures by Lay Persons) Regulations 2012. It can only be performed on chicks under 10 days old in order to prevent feather pecking or cannibalism, and can only be carried out by a person who has been provided with suitable and sufficient information, instruction and training so that they are qualified to perform the procedure.

My Department is working with the Beak Trimming Action Group, which includes representatives from industry, welfare groups and scientists, to find ways to manage flocks of birds without the need to beak trim. Defra is currently funding a peer reviewed research study on this issue and the results of this pilot study will feed into their evidence review in 2015, with a view to banning beak trimming of laying hens in 2016. Other similar research is also being undertaken in Scotland.

I will consider what action is appropriate here in light of developments in Britain and elsewhere.

Broadband Services: West Tyrone

Mr Byrne asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline the steps her Department is taking to extend and strengthen broadband services in West Tyrone.

(AQW 33858/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Within the overall list of 7,539 broadband 'not spots' there are a number of West Tyrone post codes included. Details of the proposed intervention area for the NI Broadband Improvement Project (NIBIP) were published on the DETI website for both basic (2Megabits per second) and superfast (24 Megabits per second or more) at the commencement of the procurement process.

http://www.detini.gov.uk/nibip_postcodes_-_basic__3_oct_2013___.pdf

(http://www.detini.gov.uk/nibip_postcodes_-_superfast__3_oct_2013_____.pdf)

Responsibility for broadband provision within the north of Ireland and the publication of information relating to the BDUK project comes under the remit of DETI.

BT is presently undertaking a detailed survey and design exercise based on this intervention area which utilises an engineering model employed in other areas of Britain and accepted by BDUK as a credible and practical methodology.

This exercise is complex, taking account of a number of factors including technical feasibility, quality of existing infrastructure in the area, reasonable costs, number of anticipated customers etc.

DETI is working with BT and BDUK to make the outcomes of the survey and design process available as soon as possible and while there has been progress, due to the complexity involved, it is taking longer than anticipated to complete.

As I'm sure you are aware I am mindful of the public interest in this project and what areas are likely to benefit and I will continue to request this information from DETI and BT as a matter of urgency. However, it is important that the material published is as accurate as possible.

Livestock Carcasses: Illegally Dumped

Mr Byrne asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what financial assistance her Department is offering to councils that remove illegally dumped livestock carcasses.

(AQW 33859/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Disposal of animal carcasses is required under Regulation EC 1069/2009 Articles 13 & 21 and subsequently the Animal By-Products (Enforcement) Regulations (NI) 2001. DARD is the Competent Authority for the implementation of these regulations.

The responsibility for the disposal of fallen animals lies with the occupier of the premises or the person considered by DARD to be in charge of the premises.

Where a carcass is dumped on private land, wherever possible the owner of the animal will be identified and held responsible. If ownership cannot be proven, responsibility for disposal rests with the landowner.

Where a carcass is dumped elsewhere, including on public land or highways, and ownership of the carcass cannot be ascertained, responsibility for disposal rests with the local authority. DARD, through the local Divisional Veterinary Office, can assist the district council wherever possible to try and establish ownership of the carcass on a case by case basis, but no financial assistance is offered.

Single Farm Payment: Claims

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for a breakdown of the (i) number; and (ii) percentage of Single Farm Payment claims that were submitted online, broken down by council area, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 33880/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The numbers of Single Applications submitted online to my Department, by District Council area, for each of the last three years are provided in the table below.

Wind Farm Development Project

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the wind farm development project.
(AQW 33894/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Previously the Strategic Investment Board (SIB) supported Forest Service to examine opportunities for obtaining better value for money from the forest estate. As part of a 2009 "Market Sounding" exercise carried out by Forest Service it asked industry for "innovative and optimal suggestions on how to best sweat the existing asset base ... assisting in delivering value for money to NIFS". This exercise helped identify and prioritise the opportunities to be considered in a Commercialisation Plan and this work was taken forward in a Strategic Outline Case (SOC) in June 2010. A conceptual Outline Business Case (OBC) followed. This document remains in draft format.

In January 2014 Forest Service appointed a Wind Energy Development Manager (seconded from SIB). He is presently revising and taking forward this previous work. This involves a range of multi-disciplinary issues from looking at how best to address community benefits and engagement to technical site assessments and financial analysis. As this analysis is ongoing I am not in a position to say which sites, if any, my Department propose to take forward.

In the 2014-15 Forest Service Business Plan my Department has said it will publish a procurement strategy for the exploitation of opportunities for wind farm development on the Forest Service estate. At that point there will be more clarity regarding the nature of Forest Service involvement in wind energy.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on how she is addressing the Common Agricultural Policy issue which could impact low land farmers in North Down.
(AQW 33914/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The current reform of the Common Agricultural Policy will have a significant impact not just in North Down, but on farmers right across the north. I continue to work towards delivering a fair outcome that will balance the needs of all farmers.

I have already announced a significant number of important CAP reform decisions relating to payment entitlements, eligible land, active farmers, greening, the Regional Reserve, the Young Farmers' Scheme, the Redistributive Payment, the Small Farmers' Scheme and capping. However, a small number of key decisions remain to be taken.

As I have stated in response to similar Assembly Questions, the allocation of almost €2 billion of taxpayers' money over the remainder of this decade has to be done carefully, wisely and fairly for all farmers. We need to be mindful not just of the distribution of CAP support, but of the potential bureaucratic burdens and risks we create in whatever choices we make.

Given the importance of these remaining decisions and the impact on local farmers, it is right that they be agreed by the Executive. Political discussions are ongoing in relation to the remaining key issues and it is my intention to bring my final proposals on these issues to the Executive in the coming weeks.

Common Agricultural Policy: Reform Decisions

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether she plans to progress the final Common Agriculture Policy reform decisions, including the transition period, by urgent procedure; and if so, to detail how the procedure will be conducted.

(AQW 34007/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I have already announced a significant number of important CAP reform decisions relating to payment entitlements, eligible land, active farmers, greening, the Regional Reserve, the Young Farmers' Scheme, the Redistributive Payment, the Small Farmers' Scheme and capping. A small number of key decisions remain to be taken.

As I have stated in response to similar Assembly Questions, the allocation of almost €2 billion of taxpayers' money over the remainder of this decade has to be done carefully, wisely and fairly for all farmers. We need to be mindful not just of the distribution of CAP support, but of the potential bureaucratic burdens and risks we create in whatever choices we make.

Given the importance of these remaining decisions and the impact on local farmers, it is right that they be agreed by the Executive. Political discussions are ongoing in relation to the remaining key issues and it is my intention to bring my final proposals on these issues to the Executive in the coming weeks. I shall seek Executive agreement by the most appropriate means available to me at that point in time.

Lough Neagh: Ownership and Control

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development when the report on the ownership and control of Lough Neagh will be published.

(AQW 34016/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The Report of the Cross Departmental Working Group on Lough Neagh was published on 5 June 2014 and can be viewed on the Department's web site at:

<http://www.dardni.gov.uk/potential-for-bringing-lough-neagh-into-public-ownership.doc>

Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure

Elver Kill: Cathaleen's Fall Dam

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure whether a substantial elver kill took place at Cathaleen's Fall Dam on the River Erne recently; and if so, for assessment of why this happened and what action is being taken to rectify the situation.

(AQW 33391/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): During an inspection by Electricity Supply Board (ESB) staff of eel collection boxes at the Cathaleen's Falls facility at Ballyshannon on 22nd April 2014, approximately 100kgs of dead elvers were discovered.

When my officials were made aware of this matter, they immediately contacted Inland Fisheries Ireland (IFI) and investigations are ongoing into how the incident occurred. My Department is working closely with the Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute (AFBI), IFI and ESB, to formalise protocols to ensure that this situation does not arise in future.

I am most concerned at this incident and have written to Mr Fergus O'Dowd TD, Minister of State at the Department of Energy, Communications and Natural Resources, to express my concerns and for the appropriate action to be taken against ESB.

Eel Management Plans: European Council Regulation

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail (i) the amount of funding her Department will draw down to implement the 2007 European Council Regulation establishing measures for the recovery of the stock of European eel and associated eel management plans; and (ii) how the funding has been allocated.

(AQW 33394/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín:

- (i) Since 2009, the Lough Neagh Fishermen's Co-operative Society Ltd. (LNFCS) has invested a total of £1,796,000 in elver restocking, of which they have successfully claimed £1,078,000 under the European Fisheries Fund (EFF) programme (£539,000 from EFF and £539,000 from DCAL).
- (ii) The restocking of elvers into Lough Neagh is a critical element of the Neagh/Bann Eel Management Plan and DCAL has agreed to provide assisted funding to the LNFCS to help ensure elver recruitment is maintained at an acceptable level. DCAL successfully applied to DARD for assistance from the EFF. The maximum amount of grant aid payable under EFF is £750,000 which represents up to 30% of total eligible project costs (£2,500,000). DCAL will endeavour to match-fund EFF funding. The maximum grant payment in any one financial year therefore will be 60% of eligible project costs up to £500,000 and the period of grant aid will not exceed 5 years.

Elver Kill: Ballyshannon

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail (i) the extent and cause of the elver kill at Ballyshannon in April 2014; and (ii) when the elver trap boxes had last been checked before the kill was discovered.

(AQW 33518/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín:

- (i) An incident occurred at the Electricity Supply Board (ESB) facility at Ballyshannon on 22 April 2014 in which approximately 100kg of elvers were reported dead. Inland Fisheries Ireland (IFI) is currently investigating the matter and it would not be appropriate for me to comment on the possible cause at this time.
- (ii) The IFI investigation will establish the facts of the matter and this will be made public in due course.

Department of Education

Uniforms and Sports Gear: Stock

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education what action he is taking to ensure that clothes retailers are able to stock uniforms and sports gear for all types of schools.

(AQW 33529/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): The wearing of a school uniform in the north of Ireland, as in the south of Ireland, England, Scotland and Wales, is not governed by legislation but falls to schools to determine. The Department of Education issued guidance on school uniforms to all schools here in March 2011 which advises that schools should ensure that their school uniform policy is fair and reasonable, in practical and financial terms, and should have regard to their duties under relevant equality and other legislation.

The guidance makes it clear that the Department expects Boards of Governors (BoGs) to give a high priority to cost considerations when designing their uniforms. Schools were further advised to ensure that their uniform is widely available in High Street shops and other retail outlets, and internet suppliers rather than from an expensive sole supplier.

Whilst I recognise that the day-to-day management of schools, including school uniform policy, is a matter for school Principals, subject to any directions that might be given by the BoGs, I consider that it is of particular importance that schools adhere to the guidance on school uniforms so that pupils or their families do not feel excluded from being able to apply to or attend a particular school due to the cost of a uniform.

Consequently, I wrote to all schools on 27 September 2012, reminding BoGs of their responsibilities in relation to the guidance, with particular reference to the core considerations outlined in paragraph 2.1 of the Circular, emphasising that Governors should ensure that regard is given to the guidance when drawing up their school uniform policy.

I also wrote to the Office of Fair Trading in January 2014 to register my concern about the continued use of restrictive practices in the supply of school uniforms and to enquire about the OFT's plans to take action to address this matter or to undertake further research on such arrangements. Whilst the OFT advised that there were no plans at that time to carry out further work in this sector I understand that a copy of my correspondence has been passed by the OFT to the recently established Consumer and Markets Authority (CMA).

You may also wish to note that I have asked my officials to review potential further actions which might be taken forward to address the high cost of some school uniforms and I will be giving further consideration to this matter over the coming months.

Drumragh Integrated College: Education Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 1989

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Education whether he will publish the guidance he received from departmental officials following the court ruling on his approach to the development proposal by Drumragh Integrated College, on the application of his duty to encourage and facilitate integrated education under Article 64 of the Education Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 1989.

(AQW 33733/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Court has provided a ruling in this case. Legal opinion provided in relation to the case is privileged and will not be published.

Drumragh Integrated College: Education Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 1989

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Education, in relation to the guidance issued to departmental officials on the application of his duty under Article 64 of the Education Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 1989, to detail who, apart from his officials, has had access to this guidance, given his statement of 15 May 2014 in response to the court ruling on his approach to the development proposal by Drumragh Integrated College that no objections to the guidance had been received.

Mr O'Dowd: The guidance formed part of the evidence put before the Court, and could be accessed by all the parties involved in the Judicial Review.

No objections to the guidance were received from Drumragh Integrated College, or their Counsel.

Education and Skills Authority

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education what has been the cost to date of the Education and Skills Authority.
(AQW 33754/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education and Skills Authority (ESA) has not yet been established therefore it has incurred no cost. The member may be referring to the Education and Skills Authority Implementation Team (ESAIT) and associated costs within my Department.

The total cost of expenditure from 2005 to 31 March 2014 is £18.145m. Since the 31st March, 2014, the ESA Implementation Team has been reduced to a core team and retained as an integral part of DE. The team has been redirected largely onto work necessary to make education administration compatible with local government reform. Work on ESA has ceased.

Controlled Sector Schools

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education how many new controlled sector schools have been built over the last five years.

Civics: Teaching

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education what provision is made for teaching Civics in the school curriculum.
(AQW 33786/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department of Education has no plans to increase the teaching provision of Civics in schools.

Civics is embedded in Personal Development and Mutual Understanding (PDMU) in primary schools, and Local and Global Citizenship in post-primary schools. Both subjects contribute to the curriculum objective of developing the young person as a contributor to society and have been statutory elements of the revised curriculum since 2007.

At Foundation Stage and Key Stage 1 and 2 there is a focus on building relationships in the school and community, respect for diversity and how to respond to conflict. Pupils' learning experience of PDMU at primary school provides a foundation for developing their skills, knowledge and deeper understanding of Local and Global Citizenship at Key Stages 3 and 4.

At Key Stage 3 and Key Stage 4 Local and Global Citizenship aims to prepare pupils for playing an active role in society. Knowledge and understanding are covered under four key concepts: Diversity and Inclusion; Equality and Social Justice; Democracy and Participation; and Human Rights and Social Responsibility.

A GCSE qualification is available at Key Stage 4 in Learning for Life and Work and Local and Global Citizenship is a GCSE component module.

Civics: Teaching

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education what plans he has to increase the teaching provision of Civics in schools.
(AQW 33787/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department of Education has no plans to increase the teaching provision of Civics in schools.

Civics is embedded in Personal Development and Mutual Understanding (PDMU) in primary schools, and Local and Global Citizenship in post-primary schools. Both subjects contribute to the curriculum objective of developing the young person as a contributor to society and have been statutory elements of the revised curriculum since 2007.

A GCSE qualification is available at Key Stage 4 in Learning for Life and Work and Local and Global Citizenship is a GCSE component module.

Pupils: Expenditure

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education to detail the current ratio of per pupil expenditure in each education sector.
(AQW 33795/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Schools are not funded on a ratio basis. The Department does not hold information on costs per pupil at individual school or school sector levels.

Pupils: Year One, North Down

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education how many children in North Down have yet to receive a primary one place.
(AQW 33837/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The South-Eastern Education and Library Board advises that as at 4 June 2014, there are three children in the North Down area who remain unplaced, one from Donaghadee, and two from Bangor (one of whom was a late applicant).

Elective Home Education: Policy

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Education whether any consultation events for the draft Elective Education Policy have been advertised (i) in the local press; (ii) on radio; and (iii) television.
(AQW 33839/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education and Library Boards (the Boards) have prepared guidance which reflects their legislative responsibilities in the area of the education of children other than at school including those who are educated at home and they are currently consulting on this guidance.

The Boards have advised that they did not advertise consultation events for the draft home education guidance document in local press, on radio or on television but have adopted a range of methods to facilitate engagement and consultation with all those who have an interest in home education. For example, each Board has written to the parents of all children who have notified them that they are presently electing to home educate their children and also to other key stakeholders to advise of the consultation exercise.

Each Board's Consultation Strategy document details the range of activities through which the Boards will actively seek to engage with those who have an interest in home education. This is published on each Board's website alongside their draft guidance and the Boards will also make this available in various formats upon request.

I would note that as part of that Board's consultation I have made clear that I expect the Boards to ensure engagement with as wide a range of stakeholders as possible including young people and their families and to ensure also that the feedback they receive is considered very carefully in reviewing the draft guidance.

I will wish to review each Board's guidance once it has been subject to consultation and reviewed and refined in response to the engagement that has taken place.

Primary Schools: Admission Criteria

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education what plans his Department has to standardise admission criteria for enrolment into primary schools.
(AQW 33852/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Statutory responsibility for setting admissions criteria rests with the Board of Governors of the primary school concerned and reflects the particular priorities they wish to use when considering applications for admission to their school. My Department does not have a role in this other than to offer guidance.

Working in close collaboration with the five Education and Library Boards, my Department conducted a series of workshops during September 2013 for representatives of primary schools and their Boards of Governors, to provide advice on best practice when formulating their admissions criteria for the 2014/15 school year.

This training was scheduled to assist schools in reviewing the criteria they wished to be included in booklets for parents, which are published by the ELBs in November each year. All primary schools were invited to attend. School feedback on the events was positive and attendance of oversubscribed primary schools was good.

The guidance given to primary schools at the workshops, and the training materials, was published on the Department's website and a link sent to all primary schools by the end of September 2013.

Any move to standardise admissions criteria would require consultation, legislative amendment and the agreement of the Assembly. There are no current plans to introduce such legislation.

Dunclug High School

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Education whether the North Eastern Education and Library Board has approached him in relation to the possibility of Dunclug High School operating on a split site basis following permission being given for it to increase its numbers.
(AQW 33854/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I have not been approached by the North Eastern Education and Library Board in relation to the possibility of Dunclug High School operating on a split site basis following permission being given for it to increase its numbers.

Enniskillen Collegiate and Portora Royal School

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Education whether he has any plans to review the process for developing the proposals for Enniskillen Collegiate and Portora Royal School, given the concerns raised in the local community.

(AQW 33890/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Western Education & Library Board and the Fermanagh Protestant Board of Education, the bodies responsible for planning for Enniskillen Collegiate and Portora Royal School, brought forward the proposals to amalgamate the schools through the Development Proposal (DP) process.

This process is statutory and governs any and all proposals involving significant change to a school or schools. The process involves consultation before a decision is taken on whether or not to proceed with publication of a proposal and a further two-month public consultation following publication of a DP. It is only after this consultation is complete that I take my decision on the proposal, taking account of all relevant issues and the comments received.

This affords all interested parties the opportunity to offer their views on the proposal before any decision is taken.

The DPs for amalgamation of Enniskillen Collegiate and Portora Royal School were published on 14 May 2014 and the consultation period ends on 14 July.

Ballee Community High School: Suitable Alternative for Pupils

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Education what measures have been put in place to ensure that all the current pupils from Ballee Community High School are placed in a suitable alternative by September 2014.

(AQW 33891/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I would refer the Member to my answer to AQW 33732/11-15, tabled by Paul Frew MLA and published in the Official Report on Friday 6 June 2014.

School Closures: New School Uniforms

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Education what financial assistance is available to parents who have to buy new school uniforms because their children's school has been closed.

(AQW 33892/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Financial assistance is available through the Education and Library Boards' (the Boards) Clothing Allowance Scheme (the Scheme) to support families on low incomes with the costs of school uniforms. Parents may apply through their Board for assistance under the Scheme provided they meet the relevant eligibility criteria. My Department has allocated £5.4 million to fund the Clothing Allowance Scheme in 2014/15.

My predecessor, Caitríona Ruane, extended the scheme here to cover primary school uniforms with effect from the 2009/10 academic year and introduced the Working Tax Credit criterion in 2010/11 for primary age pupils to help address the pressures felt by low income families. I also announced last year that the Working Tax Credit criterion will be extended from September 2014 so that the same eligibility criteria for uniform grants applies to primary and post-primary pupils. This means that from September 2014 post-primary pupils from lower income families will be supported with access to this benefit in the same way as primary pupils.

The current levels of assistance are as follows:

Primary School	£35.75
Post-Primary/Special School under 15	£51
Post-Primary/Special School over 15	£56
Post-Primary/Special School PE	£22

Elective Home Education

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education how his expectation of engagement with stakeholders by the Education and Library Boards on Elective Home Education will be obtained if the said consultation has not been advertised in local newspapers.

(AQW 33907/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education and Library Boards (the Boards) have prepared guidance which reflects their legislative responsibilities in the area of the education of children other than at school including those who are educated at home and they are currently consulting on this guidance.

The Boards have advised that they did not advertise consultation events for the draft home education guidance document in local press, on radio or on television but have adopted a range of methods to facilitate engagement and consultation with all those who have an interest in home education. For example, each Board has written to the parents of all children who have notified them that they are presently electing to home educate their children and also to other key stakeholders to advise of the consultation exercise.

This is published on each Board's website alongside their draft guidance and the Boards will also make this available in various formats upon request.

I would note that as part of that Board's consultation I have made clear that I expect the Boards to ensure engagement with as wide a range of stakeholders as possible including young people and their families and to ensure also that the feedback they receive is considered very carefully in reviewing the draft guidance.

I will wish to review each Board's guidance once it has been subject to consultation and reviewed and refined in response to the engagement that has taken place.

Teachers: Voluntary Redundancy

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education when his Department will approve or reject the voluntary redundancy package offered to teachers in voluntary grammar schools.
(AQW 33911/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department is not offering a voluntary redundancy package to teachers in schools.

Ballee Community High School: Pupils' Alternatives

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Education to detail the admission criteria for pupils attending Ballee High School who have been informed that (i) Cullybacky High School; (ii) Dunclug High School; (iii) Parkhall High School; and (iv) Cambridge House Grammar School are alternative options.
(AQW 33918/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Admissions criteria of schools are formulated by the Board of Governors of the individual school concerned. These are published by the relevant Education and Library Board for schools in their area in booklets for parents and can be viewed on their websites. The admissions criteria of the schools you refer to can be viewed on the North-Eastern Education and Library Board's website at <http://www.neelb.org.uk/parents/enrolment-transfer/> (then select "Post Primary School Booklet 2014").

Teachers: Voluntary Redundancy

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education when his Department approved or rejected the voluntary package offered to teachers in each (i) maintained sector; and (ii) controlled sector school in 2014.
(AQW 33934/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department is not offering a voluntary redundancy package to teachers in schools.

Teachers: Voluntary Redundancy

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the impact on school timetables of the delay in approving or rejecting the voluntary redundancy package offered to teachers in voluntary grammar schools.
(AQW 33935/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department is not offering a voluntary redundancy package to teachers in schools.

Home Tuition

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education what requirements are placed on Education and Library Boards to provide home tuition for children who are unable to attend school due to long term illness.
(AQW 33955/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Education and Library Boards (ELBs) operate their Home Tuition services as part of their legal responsibility under Article 86 (1) of the Education (NI) Order 1998, to provide 'education otherwise than at school' (EOTAS) for 'those children of compulsory school age who by reason of illness, expulsion or suspension from school or otherwise, may not for any period receive suitable education unless such arrangements are made for them'.

Article 86 (2) of the Education (NI) Order 1998 provides a similar enabling power permitting, but not requiring, the extension of EOTAS services to children above compulsory school age.

It is an operational issue for each ELB to decide how it meets its legal obligations, and exercises its powers, in this matter.

Freedom of Information Requests

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of Freedom of Information requests he has received in each of the last three financial years; and of these, how many have been considered under Section 12 of the Environmental Information Regulations, rather than the Freedom of Information Act 2000.
(AQW 33989/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The numbers of Freedom of Information (FOI) requests received in the Department of Education for each of the last three financial years are as follows:

11/12 Financial Year	213
12/13 Financial Year	183
13/14 Financial Year	229

During this period, no cases were considered under Section 12 of the Environmental Information Regulation 2004.

Department for Employment and Learning

Youth Employment Scheme

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 33212/11-15, to confirm if Youth Employment Scheme placements who were in place prior to the revised guidance being issued on the 8 May 2014, utilised for canvassing for a political party.

(AQW 33607/11-15)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): In response to your questions above I can confirm that from the launch of the Youth Employment Scheme July 2012 until 6th May 2014, four political parties (DUP, SDLP, Sinn Féin and UUP) have provided a total of six placements under the Work Experience element of the Scheme. I can confirm that none of these employers indicated canvassing as part of the placement activity provided to my Department.

Staff guidance for the Youth Employment Scheme was revised on 8th May 2014 to bring it into line with the Departments Steps to Work programme. This will ensure that staff in Jobs & Benefits offices and Jobcentres who have responsibility for the delivery of the Scheme will advise employers that placements should not involve canvassing for political parties.

Youth Employment Scheme

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 33212/11-15, to outline why his Department issued revised guidance to the Youth Employment Scheme program on the 8 May 2014.

(AQW 33608/11-15)

Dr Farry: In response to your questions above I can confirm that from the launch of the Youth Employment Scheme July 2012 until 6th May 2014, four political parties (DUP, SDLP, Sinn Féin and UUP) have provided a total of six placements under the Work Experience element of the Scheme. I can confirm that none of these employers indicated canvassing as part of the placement activity provided to my Department.

Staff guidance for the Youth Employment Scheme was revised on 8th May 2014 to bring it into line with the Departments Steps to Work programme. This will ensure that staff in Jobs & Benefits offices and Jobcentres who have responsibility for the delivery of the Scheme will advise employers that placements should not involve canvassing for political parties.

Condition Management Programme: Benefits

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline the benefits of the Condition Management Programme. (AQW 33710/11-15)

Dr Farry: The Condition Management Programme (CMP) is a person-centred, work-focused rehabilitation programme. The key aim of the programme is to help and support people with health related barriers to employment to progress towards and make a successful return to work.

Clients referred to CMP present with both physical and mental health difficulties and the vast majority are unemployed. This, in turn, impacts negatively on their confidence, self-esteem and mood. Almost 60% of CMP referrals present with a mental illness as their primary condition.

The programme, which is delivered by healthcare professionals on behalf of the Department for Employment and Learning, is helping many of these individuals to improve their health and well-being, as well as make a positive move towards employment.

On completion of CMP, participants understand more about their health condition and how it can be positively managed. It also actively encourages people to consider work as a means of ongoing health recovery and provides the individual with a number of strategies to help them deal with their own condition.

During the 2013/14 year, of the 1,211 people who participated on CMP, 98% indicated a positive attitude towards work and training as a result. There has also been a number of telephone surveys carried out with participants six months after they completed the programme. On average, 20% had made a successful transition into paid employment, whilst others had progressed into employment programmes or vocational training courses.

Some of the specific feedback from individuals included: greater confidence about seeking work and the prospect of remaining in work; less fear about their illness as they would now recognise the early signs of a relapse or worsening of the condition and therefore would be more able to take appropriate, timely steps to address the problem or seek appropriate help.

Condition Management Programme: Funding

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how much funding his Department provided to the Condition Management Programme in each of the last three years; and to detail the budget for this year and proposed budget for next year.

(AQW 33711/11-15)

Dr Farry: In the last three years, the Department for Employment and Learning has provided the following level of annual funding to the Condition Management Programme (CMP):

2011/12	£3,964,000
2013/14	£3,500,000

In November 2013, following extensive, but ultimately unsuccessful negotiations with the Department of Health and Social Services and Public Safety (DHSSPS) regarding a proposed partnership approach to the funding and management of this health and employment programme, I took the decision to continue my Department's support for the CMP at existing funding levels (£3.5m) for the 2014/15 financial year.

I can confirm that it would be my intention to continue funding the Condition Management Programme beyond this financial year. However, given the many priorities and pressures within the Employment Service at this time, the level of funding available from my Department for the CMP will be reduced to £2.5million for 2015/16.

Officials from my Department's Disability Employment Service will be meeting with each of the CMP teams over the next month to discuss the implications of the reduced funding, as well as proposals to ensure that the programme has a greater focus on measurable employment outcomes.

In the meantime, if the DHSSPS or other interested stakeholders are willing to make a financial contribution to the funding of the programme, my officials, and of course, the respective CMP management staff, would be very happy to discuss the options and potential benefits thereof.

Civics: Teaching

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the provision available to increase the teaching of civics in Further Education Colleges.

(AQW 33775/11-15)

Dr Farry: While my Department sets the strategic direction for the further education sector, individual colleges are responsible for designing a curriculum offer to meet the needs of learners and employers in their areas. Decisions on courses offered are driven by the level of demand locally and it is the responsibility of individual colleges to meet the needs of learners and employers in a cost effective way that ensures best use of public money.

While course availability is a matter for colleges, I can confirm that there is no taught subject available in "Civics". However, colleges are involved in a range of activities related to the area of civic responsibility.

For example, in Belfast Metropolitan College, the Collaboration and Innovation Fund (CIF) 'Threshold Project' within the School of Community Education and Life Skills has delivered the accredited OCN course 'Introduction to Aspects of Citizenship' to a cohort of young people who are disaffected from education and training and who are furthest from the labour market. This project is part of the implementation of the Department's Pathways to Success strategy. The college is also running a new qualification focusing on how students with learning difficulties understand their role as citizens of the City of Belfast.

In 2012/13, across all colleges, there were 250 enrolments on a range of Level 2 and 3 Diploma Courses in Public Services. These courses offer a module in 'Citizenship, Diversity and Public Services', which is part of the students' main programme of learning and an integral part of the course.

Politics Modules

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many students in the further education sector have studied politics modules, in the last ten years.

(AQW 33776/11-15)

Dr Farry: From the Further Educational Statistical Record (FESR) it is not possible to determine how many students have studied politics 'modules' within the Further Education sector. However, information is available for those students on accredited courses that have been assigned as 'Politics' as the sector subject area. The data indicates that there were 3,651 students who studied accredited courses in politics between 2003/04 and 2012/13.

Individuals have been calculated within each academic year therefore the same individual may appear in multiple years.

Employment Refusals

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what redress or action can be taken by applicants, in the public and private sectors, who have been refused employment due to a health issue or disability.

(AQW 33825/11-15)

Dr Farry: Individuals who believe that they have experienced unlawful discrimination in connection with a recruitment process on the grounds of a disability can seek redress by making a claim to an industrial tribunal.

A health issue, however, does not necessarily legally constitute a disability.

This is a complex area of the law and an individual may wish to seek advice from the Equality Commission or obtain independent legal advice.

Universities: Public Bodies

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether his Department classifies universities as a public sector body.

(AQW 33848/11-15)

Dr Farry: The public sector is defined by the Office of National Statistics (ONS) by reference to the European System of Accounts 1995 in accordance with EU requirements. Classification as public or private sector depends on who controls the general corporate policy of the body concerned. Universities are classified by ONS as private sector bodies.

Disability Discrimination Act 1995

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what departmental support is available to ensure people with a disability who wish to enter the workforce due to welfare reforms are not refused employment posts due to their disability or health issues; and whether guidance on the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 is issued to all potential employers.

(AQW 33879/11-15)

Dr Farry: Through its Disability Employment Service (DES), the Department for Employment and Learning provides a range of programmes and services to assist people with disabilities find and keep employment. These include:

- Workable (NI)
- Access to Work (NI)
- Work Connect
- Job Introduction Scheme
- Condition Management Programme
- Occupational Psychology Service

The Department also works in close partnership with a range of disability organisations to assist and support people with a disability to gain the skills and experience to help them obtain employment.

Specifically, over the past two years, officials from DES have worked with the local disability sector and a number of employers to secure ring-fenced recruitment and employment opportunities for people with disabilities. This partnership support model with employers has resulted in successful job outcomes for the target group.

The programmes and services currently being offered by the Department will not be impacted upon by the introduction of Welfare Reforms, and therefore disabled clients will continue to receive the full range of support available to them.

With respect to the Disability Discrimination Act (DDA) 1995, all employers in Northern Ireland are subject to the statutory obligations and duties as stipulated within this well established and widely accepted piece of legislation. My Department does not issue guidance to all employers regarding DDA as information is readily available from a number of sources, including websites, public bodies, advice centres, and the local disability organisations.

Instead, my Department will continue to work with employers and disability support organisations to go beyond what is required under DDA, and to ensure that people with disabilities are provided with the individual help and support that they require to enter the labour market, and once this has been achieved, to help them remain and progress within their chosen occupation.

Disability Employment Strategy

Mr McMullan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 32165/11-15, to detail (i) how the Disability Employment Strategy is being developed; (ii) when public consultation on the Strategy will take place; and (iii) what events have taken place, or are planned, in East Antrim with consultees to develop the Strategy.

(AQW 33925/11-15)

Dr Farry: The Disability Employment Strategy is being developed in close partnership with the local disability sector.

My Department fully recognises the role that the sector have to play in helping to achieve the key objective of this new strategy, which is to assist as many disabled people as possible to find, sustain and retain paid employment.

A strategic working group, including a number of representatives from disability organisations, was established at the outset, and has been working collectively since then. The working group is in the process of finalising the draft consultation document, which is now scheduled for issue in September 2014. This will initiate the period of formal public consultation, during which time, people from throughout Northern Ireland will be invited and encouraged to provide an input.

In order to inform the discussions thus far, a number of engagement events have been facilitated by the Department. Five large regional events were part of this exercise, and the strategic working group deliberately targeted a mix of those people with a disability who have or do use existing services, and those who, up until now, have not done so. One of the events took place at the Action Mental Health premises in Antrim and another took place at NICVA in North Belfast. Travel arrangements were organised through the local disability organisations and both of these locations would have been accessible for people from the East Antrim area.

The feedback from all involved, especially the disabled participants, has been overwhelmingly positive and all of the events were very well attended. The discussion and contributions at the events have been very useful and constructive, and these will be reflected within the consultation document.

Following on from the consultation process, it is intended that the Disability Employment Strategy will be launched in April 2015.

Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment

Hydraulic Fracturing

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the (i) incoming; and (ii) outgoing correspondence that she, or her officials, have received from organisations in relation to hydraulic fracturing and/or unconventional oil and gas, since the beginning of 2013, including (a) the date of the correspondence; (b) the subject of the correspondence; and (c) the name of the individual in the organisation that made contact.

(AQW 29587/11-15)

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): The following table lists the (i) incoming and (ii) outgoing correspondence that DETI received from organisations in relation to hydraulic fracturing and/or unconventional oil and gas, since the beginning of 2013, including (a) the date of the correspondence and (b) the subject of the correspondence. Renewable Energy Projects

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether NI Electricity has the capacity to manage the 30 on-farm renewable energy projects as envisioned by Assured Asset Energy Ltd, in terms of connection to the grid and cost. (AQW 33738/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The ability of the grid to accommodate individual renewable electricity projects is a matter for NIE and will be determined by a number of factors including the size and electricity export requirements of the generating station, the amount of renewable energy already connected or committed to connect, and the capacity of the primary substation to which it is connected.

Renewable Energy Projects

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what overview and lead is being taken within government to ensure that renewable energy projects can be commissioned at tenable costs because of the inability of the NI Electricity infrastructure to cope and the resulting connection charges. (AQW 33740/11-15)

Mrs Foster: My Department has put in place the Northern Ireland Renewables Obligation (NIRO) to incentivise the generation of renewable electricity through renewable obligation certificates. Support delivered through the NIRO means that we are on target to meet the Executive's Programme for Government target of 20% renewable generation by 2015.

The price paid to obtain connections from NIE are cost reflective and must be met by developers. Departing from this principle, for example, to provide further investment in the distribution network could impact on customers' bills. Determining this balance is a matter for the Utility Regulator, taking into account its statutory duty to work in the interests of all customers.

My Department attends the Regulator-led Renewables Grid Liaison Group which also includes industry and NIE representation. NIE has been exploring options for increasing the grid's ability to accommodate small scale renewable generators without substantial grid investment. This work is ongoing.

Strabane: Visitors

Ms Boyle asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether the target of 4.2 million visitors in 2014 has been achieved; and to detail how many have visited Strabane. (AQW 33760/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The key Programme for Government (PfG) targets on tourism for 2014 relate to the 2014 calendar year and outcomes will not be known until spring 2015.

Interim milestone targets were set for 2013 which were to increase visitor numbers to 4.1 million and visitor revenue to £637million by 31 December 2013. Official Statistics recently released by the Northern Ireland Statistics & Research Agency (NISRA) show that these targets were achieved. Visitor numbers for 2013 were 4.1 million with total visitor expenditure of £723million.

The 2014 targets are to increase visitor numbers to 4.2 million and visitor revenue to £676million. Our focus has been to grow visitor spend faster than visitor numbers and therefore, importantly, increase spend per visitor.

Based on these latest figures we are currently on track to achieve both the PfG targets for 2014 and our long term goal to make tourism in Northern Ireland a £1billion industry by 2020.

Regarding visitor numbers to Strabane, the latest NISRA tourism statistics at Local Government District level relate to average figures for the years 2011 and 2012. These figures which were published on 13 December 2013 estimate that the Strabane District Council Area received a total of 36,000 overnight visits in 2011/12. Further detail on the statistics at Local Government District level can be accessed via the following link:

http://www.detini.gov.uk/tourism_statistics_by_local_government_district_2011-2012.pdf?rev=0

Strabane/Lifford Border Region: Investment

Ms Boyle asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how she is working with her Irish Government counterparts on the North South Ministerial Council to attract investment to the Strabane/Lifford border region through InterTradeIreland. (AQW 33761/11-15)

Mrs Foster: As a cross border body InterTradeIreland's remit is not to attract investment to individual areas but to exchange information, carry out research and enhance the capabilities of companies.

Strabane Area: Commercial Investment

Ms Boyle asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for her assessment of the lack of commercial investment to the Strabane area. (AQW 33762/11-15)

Mrs Foster: In the five year period 2008/09 – 2012/13 Invest NI made 284 offers of support totalling over £5million of assistance. This support has contributed towards approximately £30million of investment in the Strabane District Council area and has promoted 481 new jobs.

Most notably this included an announcement by Allstate to seek to locate 100 jobs at its Strabane site as part of a wider expansion across its Northern Ireland operations.

In addition, during the last financial year Invest NI also offered support to O'Neill's International Sports Company Limited totalling £322 thousand to undertake a £3million expansion project which, when fully implemented, will create a further 61 jobs in the area. Invest NI's Jobs Fund programme has also continued to prove beneficial in the area, helping to support a £2million investment by Frylite Limited which will bring a further 19 jobs to Strabane.

In February 2011 Invest NI acquired 43 acres of land at Melmount Road, Strabane for the purpose of developing a new business park to enhance the economic infrastructure within the Strabane Council area. Upon completion of the first phase of construction work in the development of Strabane Business Park, 16 acres of serviced land was released in support of economic development within the Council area.

There are currently six recorded interests from companies in respect of locating to the Park. Whilst it can take some time for expressions of interest to convert to actual sales and investment, this is a pleasing level of interest so far. Invest NI continues to proactively market this land to potential investors, both indigenous and foreign direct to encourage further investment in the Strabane area. However, ultimately the final location decision rests solely with the investor and they choose their location based on many factors including availability of skills, the location of other businesses operating in a similar industry and infrastructure.

I am keen to ensure the progress demonstrated by these announcements is maintained and would encourage all local stakeholders to work together to maximise opportunities for investment.

Strabane Area: Tourism Jobs

Ms Boyle asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what share of the 40,000 tourism jobs are based in the Strabane area. (AQW 33763/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The latest Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency (NISRA) tourism statistics at Local Government District level were published on 13 December 2013 and relate to average figures for the years 2011 and 2012. The bulletin includes information on employee jobs within Tourism Characteristic Sectors from the 2011 Northern Ireland Census of Employment. These figures show that there were 553 such jobs in the Strabane District Council Area in 2011.

Further detail on the statistics at Local Government District level can be accessed via the following link: http://www.detini.gov.uk/tourism_statistics_by_local_government_district_2011-2012.pdf?rev=0

Strabane Area: Tourism-generated Revenue

Ms Boyle asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the revenue generated from tourism in the Strabane area, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 33764/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The latest Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency (NISRA) tourism statistics at Local Government District level relate to average figures for the years 2011 and 2012. These figures which were published on 13 December 2013 estimated that tourism expenditure in the Strabane District Council Area for 2011/12 was £7 million.

Gran Fondo Stage Event

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) the work her Department has carried out to secure a Gran Fondo stage event following the success of the Giro d'Italia 2014; and (ii) whether the Mournes will be included in the plans for any future event.

(AQW 33864/11-15)

Mrs Foster:

- (i) As an event the 2014 Giro d'Italia Big Start captured the imagination. It is being hailed as a resounding success. As a result of our investment there will also be long term benefits in terms of our economy, tourism and interest in cycling. People will now come to ride the Giro stages in our beautiful countryside, including the Mournes.

My Department, through the Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB), has entered into negotiations with the event organisers to secure Northern Ireland as a venue for an official Giro sportive event currently known as The Gran Fondo. This includes the development of a Full Business Case and Economic Appraisal, which NITB is hoping to complete in the next month.

- (ii) If successful in securing The Gran Fondo, as with The Giro d'Italia Grande Partenza, the final race route will be a matter for the event organisers.

Giro d'Italia: Website Hits

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for her assessment of the number of hits on the Giro d'Italia website when the event was in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 33903/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The official Giro d'Italia website (www.gazetta.it/giroaditalia/2014) is owned and operated by RCS Sport Italy and is not affiliated to the Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB). NITB does not have access to information regarding their website.

Discovernorthernireland.com hosted a suite of Giro related pages before and during the event. From 8 May 2014 to 11 May 2014, the pages received 136,906 page views. This accounted for 54% of pages viewed on the website during above dates.

From 1 January 2014 to 11 May 2014 the Giro d'Italia pages on discovernorthernireland.com supported 420,054 page views.

In addition, Discover Northern Ireland Giro Start 2014 social media messages were seen by 10,655,455 people across Facebook, Twitter & YouTube, and generated 337,463 engagements.

NITB's Giro related videos received 164,000 views in total.

CHx Industrial LLC: Petroleum Licence

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether she plans to bring the decision to issue a petroleum licence to CHx Industrial LLC to the Executive.

(AQW 34005/11-15)

Mrs Foster: I would refer the member to the answer I gave to a previous priority AQW 27613/11-15.

Department of the Environment

Lough Neagh Special Protection Area: Unregulated Minerals Extraction

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment whether his Department has awarded any contracts to any of the operators of the unregulated minerals extraction taking place in Lough Neagh Special Protection Area for the supply of sand for use in publicly funded plans or projects.

(AQW 32562/11-15)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): The Department has not awarded any contracts for the supply of sand to any operators who may be extracting minerals from Lough Neagh Special Protection Area.

Poultry Sheds: Planning Approval Delays

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of the Environment whether he is aware of the frustration felt by the local poultry industry at delays in providing planning approval for new poultry sheds; and whether he has had discussions with the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development regarding this issue.

(AQW 33513/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Last year, I created a dedicated planning team to deal specifically with applications for poultry houses in order to support and facilitate developments in the agri-food industry. The aim of this team is to reduce processing times for poultry house planning applications. The team, whilst dealing specifically with applications for Moy Park poultry houses across Northern Ireland, also provides advice and support to Area Offices dealing with other poultry house applications.

In processing applications for poultry houses, expert advice from consultees, including NIEA, must be sought to enable full consideration of any potential environmental impacts. This consultation process can result in requests for additional information which can prolong the application process, and I can understand how this may lead to frustration. However I need to be clear that whilst I support a planning system that engages proactively in delivering timely planning decisions, I must also ensure that this is not at the expense of our environment.

Poultry litter has high phosphorus content and can contribute to the phosphorus surplus of local agriculture. We therefore need to ensure that adequate control measures are in place to mitigate any potential associated environmental impacts before making a decision on a planning application. This includes screening of proposed broiler farms by NIEA prior to the submission of applications to give an indication of any potential environmental impacts and location suitability. During the planning application process the applicant is required to provide information, for consideration, detailing the manner in which the chicken litter resulting from a proposal is to be utilised. This is to satisfy my Department that the proposal will not result in an unacceptable impact on the environment.

I have not met with the Minister for Agriculture and Rural Development on this matter, but I am aware of engagement at official level.

Community Benefit Summit

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment, in light of the commitments given by his predecessor at the Community Benefit Summit in June 2013, including agreeing to implement a number of actions and then reconvene again in September 2013, whether he will review what has been achieved to date; and revisit his answer to AQW 33188/11-15.

(AQW 33674/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I will be meeting officials to review the recommended actions and what has been achieved to date in the very near future. Following this, I propose to reconvene a further Summit as and when I consider it appropriate to do so.

Renewable Energy Projects

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment, in light of his support for the renewable energy project launched through the Assured Energy Asset Ltd Fund, how delivery can be achieved if NI Electricity does not have the capacity to manage the 30 on-farm renewable energy projects as envisioned by Assured Asset Energy Ltd, in terms of connection to the grid and cost.

(AQW 33739/11-15)

Mr Durkan: As Minister of the Environment, I support and encourage renewable energy projects that can have a positive impact on the environment and the economy, and I encourage the efficient processing of any such planning applications.

I am aware that there can be significant issues in relation to grid connection for renewable energy projects, however, responsibility for grid connection, including capacity and associated costs, rests with NIE and is outside of the planning process and my Department's responsibilities.

Public Service Vehicles (Northern Ireland) Regulations 1985

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 33599/11-15, whether his Department will undertake to update the Driver and Vehicle Agency's senior staff's assertion and interpretation of this matter for future reference for their meetings with service providers.

(AQW 33751/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I am content that my officials are providing consistent and appropriate guidance as to the Department's interpretation of Article 49 of the 1985 Regulations. A copy of my response to this question and to AQW 33599/11-15 has been copied to officials in the relevant policy and operational teams.

Planning Applications: Information Process

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the process utilised to inform people within the vicinity of a planning application that they can input into a consultation process.

(AQW 33756/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Department has a statutory requirement to advertise an application for planning permission in at least one local newspaper circulating in the area and on the Department's website. In addition, the Department currently has a non-statutory policy of sending neighbour notification letters to occupiers of premises who are most likely to be affected by a proposed development. I consider neighbour notification an important element of the planning system which should be continued after the transfer of powers to local councils.

I recognise that improvements can be made in this area, which is why I am proposing that neighbour notification be made a statutory requirement once new legislation comes into operation in April 2015, when the majority of planning functions will move to councils.

On 28 May 2014, I launched a 12 week consultation on proposals for planning reform and its transfer to new councils where I am seeking views on the improvements I intend to introduce to planning. The proposals for a statutory neighbour notification process are included in this consultation.

Freedom of Information Response

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 33508/11-15, (i) to explain the disparity in this answer with a recent Freedom of Information response on 17 April 2014 which detailed a total of £129,988 spent on research and the report into draft speculation for wheelchair accessible taxis; (ii) what other research or reports of this nature on this matter have been funded by his Department; and (iii) what was the cost to his Department of this research.

(AQW 33766/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The reports completed for my Department by Integrated Transport Planning (ITP) related to, amongst other matters, a revised specification for Wheelchair Accessible Taxis. They did not relate to the introduction of single tier licensing, which was the subject matter of AQW 33508/11-15. I can confirm that the £129,988 was the cost of the work undertaken by ITP.

No other reports on either single tier licensing or Wheelchair Accessible Taxis specifications have been funded by the Department.

Department of Finance and Personnel

Shared Education: Funding

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether he has been asked by the Minister of Education to provide additional funding for the facilitation of shared education projects since May 2011.

(AQO 6290/11-15)

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): Shared education funding and projects can take different forms. For example, as well as capital funding for shared education campuses, there can be resource funding aimed at enabling individual, separately located schools to engage in sharing services and facilities.

My Department received several bids from the Department of Education relating to shared education funding. Of course, the provision of any additional funding to a department would be a decision for the Executive to make, subject to a recommendation from me.

A number of shared education bids are currently being considered with the UK Government under the Economic Pact announced in June 2013. These include funding for Lisanelly Shared Education Campus and a number of Integrated Primary Schools.

The Shared Education Campuses Programme is a key commitment under the Together: Building a United Community Strategy which aims to identify up to ten potential shared campus type projects. In January this year the Minister for Education called for expressions of interest in this Programme, and I understand he will make an announcement shortly regarding those selected to proceed in planning. No bids have been made in this regard.

I understand the Department of Education is also planning a programme of enhanced shared education amongst schools to be part-funded under Delivering Social Change. This will need to be considered by the Executive against competing priorities.

Civil Service Estate: Unoccupied Buildings

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel which unoccupied buildings are part of the Civil Service Estate.

(AQO 6297/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: At present the unoccupied buildings in the Northern Ireland Civil Service Office Estate managed by the Department of Finance and Personnel are:

Ballyclare Community Benefits Office, Hillhead Road, Ballyclare; Rosepark Workshop, Newtownards Road, Belfast;

35/39 Bridge Street, Ballymena.

Energy Efficiency

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for his assessment of the success of programmes to improve the energy efficiency of public buildings.
(AQO 6292/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I can only answer the question in relation to Northern Ireland Civil Service (NICS) Office Estate for which my Department has responsibility. Energy consumption of this Estate equates to 4% of the total Northern Ireland public sector consumption. Energy efficiency programmes for all other public buildings are the responsibility of the Department which manages those buildings.

A three year Energy Efficiency Plan for 2011-14 for the Office Estate has been completed and an updated Plan covering 2014-17 will be published shortly. Both Plans identify three primary mechanisms by which energy consumption can be reduced:

- reduction in the footprint of the Office Estate;
- capital investments in energy efficiency measures and equipment; and
- behavioural change of staff occupying the Estate.

Steps taken so far to improve energy efficiency include:

- the implementation of recommendations from comprehensive energy surveys;
- the implementation of Display Energy Certificate (DECs) recommendations;
- voltage optimisation pilot projects; and
- providing premises officers with limited access to Building Energy Management System (BEMS).

Energy consumption data has shown that in first year of the 2011-14 Office Estate Energy Efficiency Plan, a 3.5% reduction in energy consumption was achieved and assessment of the following two years indicates that the Department is on track to meet the combined 2011-14 plan target of 10% energy reduction (approximately 9,500 megawatts hours (Mwh)).

Rate Relief: Shop Windows

Mr Girvan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what consideration he has given to changing the current rate relief for shop windows in vacant retail space.
(AQO 6293/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I am currently looking at a proposal put forward by representatives of the Buttercrane Shopping Centre in Newry to allow the commercial use of window displays in otherwise vacant shops, without triggering a liability to pay the occupied rate. This came up at a meeting I held last month.

On the face of it, it strikes me an innovative measure worth trying, if it helps arrest the decline in some of our shopping centres and high streets.

There are practical issues, however, that need to be addressed to ensure it is effective and would not lead to widespread abuse or disadvantage to other businesses in the vicinity. Furthermore, there are issues for Land and Property Services who would be charged with administering and policing such a scheme.

As the Member may be aware, the use of window displays in otherwise vacant shops for non-commercial use is currently disregarded for rating purposes. This was a temporary measure introduced in the 'economic downturn' and the legislative provisions are due to expire on 31st March 2015. Unfortunately, to extend and enlarge this power would require a further bill to be taken through the Assembly.

I have asked my officials, however, to consider the case for including such a measure in a Rates Amendment Bill, which is already scheduled for next year.

Rate Relief: Amateur Sports Clubs

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for his assessment of the proposed Private Member's Bill on rate relief for community amateur sports clubs.
(AQO 6294/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I cannot support the proposed Private Member's Bill at this time. I have no objection to the Assembly considering measures to further assist community amateur sports clubs, alongside all the other priorities we face. I am concerned, however, with shortcomings in the Member's research; shortcomings that the DFP Committee has already identified and which the member has agreed to address.

This is about engaging with the business community on the issue because some of these clubs directly compete with pubs, restaurants and even hotels. Indeed, it is worth noting that a State Aid case has been lodged recently with the European Commission regarding the preferential treatment of CASCs in relation to business rates in the rest of the UK.

This being the case, it would be unwise to proceed with such a measure until the outcome of the state aid case is known, as otherwise it would pose a risk of infraction on my Department.

It is also worth mentioning that I would be willing to look at introducing enhanced relief for unlicensed clubs and take this through a Rates Amendment Bill which is scheduled for next year, as a safer alternative to the Private Members Bill proposals. And that would also ensure parity of treatment with community halls.

Reinvestment and Reform Initiative

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, in light of the recent Northern Ireland Audit Office report on Reinvest and Reform Initiative borrowing, to outline the Executive's future borrowing strategy.

(AQO 6295/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I have written to Executive colleagues setting out my proposals for a future borrowing strategy and these proposals are currently being considered by the Budget Review Group.

The draft strategy sets out the costs of borrowing and highlights two ways in which future borrowing may be capped to ensure that borrowing remains affordable going forward.

If agreement is reached in the Executive on this borrowing strategy, I plan to include details in future Budget documents.

Corporation Tax

Mr Sheehan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for an update on the preparations for the proposed devolution of Corporation Tax powers.

(AQO 6296/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Government will make its decision on whether to devolve responsibility for corporation tax in the autumn - with an announcement to be made no later than the 2014 Autumn Statement.

The Government has previously indicated that if it did decide to devolve responsibility for the rate of corporation tax in the autumn, then a stand-alone Bill would be introduced in the normal way with the aim of it becoming law before the prorogation of Parliament prior to the 2015 General Election.

This is a very tight timescale and the First Minister and deputy First Minister have previously highlighted the need for an early decision to the Secretary of State.

In the meantime, officials continue to engage with their Treasury counterparts on preparatory work with respect to the development of the proposed technical design of a devolved regime.

This will inform the content of the necessary legislation and follows on from the previous work by the Joint Ministerial Working Group on Rebalancing the Northern Ireland economy.

Public Sector Reform

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what engagement he has had with his Executive colleagues on public sector reform.

(AQO 6298/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Since February 2014 I have been engaged in a series of bi-lateral meetings with my Executive colleagues. To date I have completed ten of the eleven scheduled meetings.

These meetings have covered a generic agenda on Reform together with separate departmental specific items as appropriate. The generic agenda included:

1. Rationale for public sector reform;
2. The role of Public Sector Reform Division (PSRD);
3. Strategic review of public sector reform in NI; and
4. Proposed governance of public sector reform.

The meetings have provided the opportunity to promote the role and responsibilities of PSRD and highlight the need for PSRD to work collaboratively with departments, business areas and frontline staff, as a catalyst and an enabler for reform.

Ongoing work on reform evident within many departments has been recognised and assurance provided that no additional reform activities will be undertaken without the agreement of the respective Minister(s) and the final outcome of any analysis, including implementation plans, will be subject to the agreement of the relevant Minister(s).

Equal Pay: Outstanding Claims

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for an update on any discussions his Department has had on outstanding equal pay claims.

(AQO 6299/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: With regard to valid claims submitted following the Abdulla ruling on behalf of former staff who have now left the Northern Ireland Civil Service, my Department has had a number of discussions with relevant parties leading up to my agreement to the settlement terms which are now being implemented. At the end of May, 346 former NICS staff have been paid their settlements and others are in progress.

With regard to PSNI/NIO staff, I refer the member to AQO 6287/11-15.

June Monitoring Round

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what bids his Department is making as part of the June Monitoring round.

(AQO 6300/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: My Department is submitting a bid for £3.6m current and £40m capital to take forward a number of the recommendations made in the NI Executive's Asset Management Strategy.

Budget 2015-16

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what is the timeline for producing the Executive's 2015-2016 budget. (AQO 6301/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Executive would ideally need to have a final 2015-16 Budget in place by Christmas this year. To allow for public consultation this means we would need to publish a draft Budget by September.

In December last year I sought the Executive's agreement to formally commence the 2015-16 Budget process. However, my proposals have not been endorsed and time is now pressing. I have therefore asked my officials to prepare a draft Budget position over the summer, which I intend to present to the Executive in early September.

Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

South West Acute Hospital and Altnagelvin Area Hospital

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what consultations took place between the Public Health Agency, the Health and Social Care Board and the Western Health and Social Care Trust over the use of the facilities at (i) the South West Acute Hospital; and (ii) Altnagelvin Area Hospital.

(AQW 33658/11-15)

Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): I understand that that the facilities to which you refer are maternity facilities. I can confirm that Western Health and Social Care Trust has been engaged in on-going discussions with the Public Health Agency (PHA) and Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) in respect of assuring that the Trust provides safe maternity services in line with the medical staffing infrastructure and is committed to providing safe maternity services in both its acute hospitals in line with my Department's Maternity Strategy 2012-2018.

It is the Trust's intention to maintain its current service model to meet the standards outlined in the Maternity Strategy.

Cancer Patients: Available Services

Mr Byrne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the services currently available to cancer patients in (i) West Tyrone; and (ii) the Western Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 33703/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Western Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust is responsible for providing services in West Tyrone. Cancer patients in the West Tyrone area have full access to all of the cancer services in Altnagelvin Area Hospital, which is an acute hospital and one of Northern Ireland's designated cancer units. Outreach chemotherapy is provided for some types of cancer at the Tyrone County Hospital.

At Altnagelvin Hospital cancer services are provided in a purpose built facility within the new South Wing and consist of:

- Inpatient ward - combined haematology and oncology, with 14 beds operational 7 days a week 24 hours a day;
- Chemotherapy suite with 17 chairs and 4 treatment rooms operational Monday to Friday;
- Outpatient clinic with 9 consultation rooms operational Monday to Friday 0800 – 1700.

The unit has seven multidisciplinary tumour teams:

- Lung – Linked to South West Acute Hospital (SWAH) and the regional cancer centre in Belfast;
- Colorectal – Linked to SWAH;
- Upper GI – Linked to SWAH and the regional cancer centre in Belfast;
- Breast – Linked to SWAH;
- Urology – Linked to the Northern HSC Trust and the regional cancer centre in Belfast;
- Gynaecology – Linked to SWAH and the regional cancer centre in Belfast;
- Haematology - Linked to the Northern HSC Trust

In addition the Western HSC Trust continues to make progress on the radiotherapy development project. It is planned that a new radiotherapy unit will be fully operational at Altnagelvin Hospital by summer 2016.

DHSSPS: Post-project Evaluations

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail each post-project evaluation that is currently overdue, including the date on which the evaluation was due and the reasons for the delay.

(AQW 33720/11-15)

Pancreatic Cancer: Early Diagnosis

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he is taking to ensure that the medical training curriculum promotes the early diagnosis of pancreatic cancer.
(AQW 33721/11-15)

Mr Poots: I refer you to my earlier response to AQW 33549 regarding medical training. The medical professional bodies are responsible for developing the content of post graduate medical curricula which is then approved by the General Medical Council (GMC). Undergraduate programmes are developed by individual medical schools in line with standards set by the GMC. I understand that pancreatic cancer is included in that training.

Pancreatic Cancer: Raising Awareness

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he will consider running a dedicated campaign to raise awareness of the symptoms of pancreatic cancer.
(AQW 33722/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Public Health Agency (PHA) will launch a campaign to raise awareness of cancer signs and symptoms later this year.

Pancreatic Cancer Patients: Treatments

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he is taking to ensure that treatments proven to benefit pancreatic cancer patients will be made available throughout the Health Service as quickly as possible.

(AQW 33723/11-15)

Mr Poots: In Northern Ireland arrangements are in place through health service commissioning to ensure appropriate and timely access to evidence-based treatments.

The Health and Social Care Board and the health authorities in England are guided by the same appraisal organisation i.e. the National Institute for Health and Care Excellence (NICE) when considering the introduction of new drug therapies and treatments. When these are assessed and gain approval from NICE the Department seeks to ensure their introduction as soon as is practically possible.

Pancreatic Cancer: Clinical Nurse Specialists

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he is taking to ensure that patients diagnosed with pancreatic cancer will be assigned a clinical nurse specialist.

(AQW 33724/11-15)

Mr Poots: I am advised that all patients with a confirmed diagnosis of pancreatic cancer are discussed at the Regional Hepato-Pancreatico-Biliary (HPB) Multidisciplinary Team meeting. The HPB clinical nurse specialist is a core member of that team. All patients suitable for surgical intervention are assigned to the HPB Clinical Nurse Specialist.

Pancreatic Cancer: Dieticians

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps he will take to ensure that dieticians are made compulsory members of the pancreatic cancer multidisciplinary team that review patients with pancreatic cancer.

(AQW 33725/11-15)

Mr Poots: All patients with a confirmed diagnosis of pancreatic cancer are discussed at the Regional Hepato-Pancreatico-Biliary (HPB) Multidisciplinary Team meeting. Dieticians are currently not core members of that team however in line with current NHS England guidance for reviewing HPB cancer, dieticians are considered members of the extended HPB Team. Extended team members are required to attend the HPB team meeting for discussion on relevant cases – this is determined on a case by case basis on grounds of clinical need. As such there are currently no plans to change the status of dietetic membership of the HPB team in Northern Ireland - although this will be reviewed with the publication of a NICE Pancreatic Cancer Clinical Guideline due late 2014 or early 2015.

Craigavon Area Hospital: Bluestone Unit

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, in relation to inpatients discharged from the Bluestone Unit at Craigavon Area Hospital, to detail (i) the support available in a community setting; (ii) whether a key worker is appointed prior to or after discharge; (iii) how soon after discharge the key worker is expected to make contact with the patient; and (iv) whether arrangements differ if former patients were admitted voluntarily or were detained.

(AQW 33726/11-15)

Mr Poots:

- (i) Patients of the Bluestone Unit who are considered by the multi-disciplinary team as suitable for early discharge yet still require acute treatment are discharged into the care of the Home Treatment Crisis Response (HTCR) service who continue to deliver, monitor and review the patient's treatment plan according to their needs. For those patients not discharged to HTCR a pre-discharge meeting is convened at the Bluestone Unit to agree with the patient what support arrangements need to be put in place. Support can include voluntary services input, independent sector input and statutory services input.
- (ii) If the patient was known to the community mental health team prior to his/her admission, they will retain their previous key worker, who will also be participating in the discharge process. Otherwise a key worker will be appointed during the pre-discharge meeting.
- (iii) All patients on discharge from the Bluestone Unit are allocated an appointment with the community mental health team within 7 days of discharge under the Card before You Leave protocol. It is normal to expect a patient to be seen within a fortnight following the Card before You Leave appointment.
- (iv) There is no distinction made regardless of the legal status of the patient at point of admission or throughout their time in hospital.

Organ Donation

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, in relation to approaching families and next of kin to discuss potential organ donation, how many approaches were made in each month of the last three years which did not involve a specialist Nurse in Organ Donation; and to detail who made the approach.

(AQW 33727/11-15)

Mr Poots: The table below indicates the numbers of approaches to families of all potential deceased donors for each month over the last 3 years, and the numbers and percentages of such approaches involving a Specialist Nurse in Organ Donation (SNOD).

Belfast Health and Social Care Trust: Senior Managers

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the percentage of Voluntary Early Redundancy (VER) and Early Retirement Packages that were awarded to senior managers in the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust; (ii) whether this was an initiative to only benefit senior members of staff; (iii) how many people within the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust have left using VER; (iv) the total cost of VER packages; and (v) a breakdown of the pay bands included in VER packages.

Mr Poots: I understand the information requested relates to the last three years i.e.2011/12 -2013/14.

- (i) The Trust has advised that there were no Voluntary Early Retirement (VER) or Voluntary Redundancy (VR) packages awarded to senior managers during the period 2011/12 to 2013/14.
- (ii) The Trust has advised that this initiative was not confined to senior members of staff.
- (iii) & (iv)

Consultant Orthopaedic Surgeons

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many Consultant Orthopaedic Surgeons are employed in each Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 33767/11-15)

Mr Poots: The headcount and whole-time equivalent (WTE) numbers of consultant orthopaedic surgeons employed by each Health and Social Care Trust are shown in the table below.

Trust	Headcount	WTE
Belfast HSC Trust	24	22.7
Northern HSC Trust	0	0.0
South Eastern HSC Trust	8	8.0
Southern HSC Trust	7	7.0
Western HSC Trust	9	9.0

Notes:

- 1 These figures have been provided by the HSC Trusts, and have not been validated by the Department.
- 2 Southern HSC Trust also noted that 1 of the consultants listed above is currently working notice and will vacate his post in August 2014. A further consultant has been appointed and is due to start in August 2014. Three (new) posts remain unfilled at present and recruitment campaigning is ongoing.

Prescription Charges

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he plans to introduce prescription charges for people with long term conditions.

(AQW 33770/11-15)

Mr Poots: I have indicated that I am willing to consider the re-introduction of prescription charges to protect vital front line services and to help expand access to new treatments and specialist drugs. I will have further discussions with Executive colleagues.

However, as I have also indicated any proposal to reintroduce charges for prescriptions, including any proposals as to who would be charged would be subject to full public consultation.

Diabetic Retinopathy Screening

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people invited to attend for Diabetic Retinopathy Screening in the year 1 April 2013 to 31 March 2014.

(AQW 33789/11-15)

Mr Poots: In the year 1 April 2013 to 31 March 2014, the number of people invited to attend for Diabetic Retinopathy Screening was 72,902; the number of people screened was 55,084; and the number of people who received their first invitation was 554.

The Diabetic Retinopathy Screening Programme (DRSP) operates a call / recall system which offers GP Practices the opportunity for their patients with diabetes to be screened. Patients are called by their GP Practice to attend a screening clinic.

In August 2012 it was recognised that the screening interval had extended beyond the 12 months recommended and was up to 20 months for some practices.

In the year 1 April 2013 to 31 March 2014 approximately 24,000 eligible patients were invited to be screened within a period of 12 months since they were last screened and approximately 28,500 eligible patients were invited to be screened within a period of 13-15 months since they were last screened. Around 20,000 eligible patients were invited to be screened within a period of 16+ months since they were last screened.

The Belfast Health and Social Care Trust produced a recovery plan aimed at bringing the screening interval back into line and the screening interval was reduced to 12 months by September 2013.

GP practices are responsible for identifying patients eligible for screening, following agreed criteria, and whilst the Diabetic Retinopathy Screening Programme aims to offer screening at 12 monthly intervals to GP Practices, variables to this do arise including capacity at the Practice to accommodate screening within the period offered for the screening and whether patients can attend.

Diabetic Retinopathy Screening

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people who received their first invitation to attend for Diabetic Retinopathy Screening in the year 1 April 2013 to 31 March 2014.

(AQW 33791/11-15)

Mr Poots: In the year 1 April 2013 to 31 March 2014, the number of people invited to attend for Diabetic Retinopathy Screening was 72,902; the number of people screened was 55,084; and the number of people who received their first invitation was 554.

Diabetic Retinopathy Screening

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the proportion of people attending for Diabetic Retinopathy Screening in the year 1 April 2013 to 31 March 2014, whose screening took place within a period of twelve months since they were last screened.

(AQW 33792/11-15)

Mr Poots: In the year 1 April 2013 to 31 March 2014, the number of people invited to attend for Diabetic Retinopathy Screening was 72,902; the number of people screened was 55,084; and the number of people who received their first invitation was 554.

Diabetic Retinopathy Screening

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the average waiting time for Diabetic Retinopathy Screening.

(AQW 33793/11-15)

Mr Poots: In the year 1 April 2013 to 31 March 2014, the number of people invited to attend for Diabetic Retinopathy Screening was 72,902; the number of people screened was 55,084; and the number of people who received their first invitation was 554.

Nurses: Recruitment

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the programme of recruitment of nurses in each of the (i) last three years; and (ii) last six months, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 33801/11-15)

Mr Poots: Details relating to recruitment competitions for nursing are not held centrally, therefore the information has been provided directly from Health and Social Care Trusts.

To provide details for all grades of nursing would be disproportionate therefore the information provided below refers only to Band 5 nurses, the main entry grade for nursing.

Trust	Competitions run within the last 6 months	Number recruited	Competitions run within the last 3 yrs	Number recruited
Belfast	9	45	44	878

Fire and Rescue Service: Employee Morale and Job Satisfaction

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service has taken to date to measure or survey the level of employee morale and job satisfaction at Lisburn District Headquarters. (AQW 33808/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service (NIFRS) conducted a Quick Pulse Employee Survey in 2009. It also operates an Area and District Audit Assurance Programme and, as part of this Programme, Lisburn District Headquarters was visited during 2014. During the Audit, staff are given the opportunity to raise any issues or concerns they may have.

NIFRS is planning to conduct an employee engagement survey in 2014/15. This will include staff from Lisburn District and will be designed to measure the level of job satisfaction and morale.

Safefood Corporate Plan and Business Plan

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether the Safefood Corporate Plan and Business Plan will be brought before the next North South Ministerial Council Health and Food Safety meeting in autumn 2014. (AQW 33840/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Food Safety Promotion Board's draft Business Plan 2014 and draft Corporate Plan 2014 – 2016 are progressing through the approval process involving my Department and the Department of Finance and Personnel and their counterparts in the Republic of Ireland. I hope to have both plans formally approved at the next available NSMC meeting, which will be the Aquaculture & Marine sector format meeting, scheduled for 27 June 2014.

Food Safety Promotion Board: Salary of CEO

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether there will be a reduction in annual terms and conditions of the salary of the CEO of the Food Safety Promotion Board; and if so, to what extent. (AQW 33841/11-15)

Mr Poots: Following the retirement of the Chief Executive Officer of the Food Safety Promotion Board in May 2014, it has been agreed that the salary for the post should be reduced by €6,150 per annum. The annual leave allowance for the post is being reduced by two days.

Down's Syndrome: People Aged 40+

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people with Down's syndrome are aged 40 years and over. (AQW 33868/11-15)

Mr Poots: There were 532 people with Down's syndrome aged 40 years or older in Northern Ireland at 4 June 2014. This figure was not centrally available and has been sourced from the Health and Social Care Trusts. It has not been validated by the Department.

Down's Syndrome: Children

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of children born with Down's syndrome in each of the last five years, broken down by hospital. (AQW 33869/11-15)

Mr Poots: Table One below details the number of children born with Down Syndrome in each of the last five years. Given the small number of births of children with Down's syndrome, it was not possible to provide these figures broken down by hospital due to issues of personal disclosure. Figures have therefore been provided by Health and Social Care Trust area.

Table 1: Children Born with Down's syndrome (2009/10 – 2013/14)

GP Surgeries: Telephone Numbers

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action his Department can take to eradicate the use of 0844 telephone numbers by GP surgeries in North Down.

(AQW 33870/11-15)

Mr Poots: I do not have the legal authority to ban the use of 0844 telephone numbers by GP Practices who are currently tied into telephone contracts. However, in March 2013 my Department amended the Health and Personal Social Services (General Medical Services Contract) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2004 requiring GP Practices not to enter into, renew or extend a contract or arrangement for telephone services unless they are satisfied that, having regard to the arrangement as a whole, persons will not pay more to make relevant calls to their practice that they would to make equivalent calls to a geographical number. GP Practices were also required to review their telephone contract before 1st April 2014, to ensure that, having regard to the arrangement as a whole, persons will not pay more to make relevant calls to their Practice than they would to make equivalent calls to a geographical number. This amendment brought Northern Ireland into line with the Department of Health's policy on use of non-geographical numbers.

My Department closely monitors the use of 0844 numbers to ensure that they are complying with their statutory obligations not to renew or extend their current 0844 telephone contract. Of the 351 GP Practices in Northern Ireland only 18 use a 0844 number, of which there are 5 Practices in North Down: one Practice's contract is due to expire at the end of June 2014, and the other four contracts will expire in 2015 – two in May, one in August and the last one in December 2015. Two of the Practices in North Down have installed separate geographical numbers which patients can use instead of using the 0844 number.

Eye Clinic

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of patients who attended the artificial eye clinic provided by the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust in the year 1 April 2013 to 31 March 2014.

(AQW 33871/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Belfast Health and Social Care Trust have advised that during 2013/14 there were 595 patients who attended the Artificial Eye Clinic. Given that patients can attend more than one appointment during the year, this equates to 1,001 attendances.

Eyes: Enucleation

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of patients currently waiting to receive a permanent artificial eye following enucleation.

(AQW 33872/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Artificial Eye Clinic is a regional service, provided by the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust.

Belfast Health and Social Care Trust advised that, as of week commencing 2nd June 2014, there were 3 patients waiting to receive a permanent artificial eye following enucleation.

Prostate Cancer: Raising Awareness

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether his Department plans to launch a publicity campaign to raise the awareness of prostate cancer as well as promote the assistance available.

(AQW 33927/11-15)

Mr Poots: A campaign to raise awareness of cancer signs and symptoms is planned and expected to be launched late autumn 2014.

The Public Health Agency (PHA) has commissioned quantitative research to assess public knowledge, attitudes and actions in relation to cancer and its applicability in informing the prioritisation of specific work areas. The outcome of this research is not expected until July 2014 and the PHA will want to consider the findings of the quantitative research before reaching a decision on which particular cancers will be the initial focus of the campaign.

The Public Health Agency will also take due account of the evidence of effectiveness of campaigns in England and Scotland and the feedback from a stakeholder workshop held on the 8th May in determining the optimum approach for Northern Ireland.

Serotonin: Classification

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what actions have been taken following the advice of the Chief Medical Officer in 2013 regarding the classification of the legal drug containing serotonin. (AQW 33941/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Chief Medical Officer, Dr Michael McBride, issued a formal alert to the health and social care system on the potentially fatal substance para-methyl-4-methylaminorex, also known as 4,4-DMAR, once we were made aware of its availability in Northern Ireland in October 2013. This information was circulated to all healthcare professionals providing information on the potential dangers of this substance, advising staff to alert those people they come into contact with who may misuse drugs, and providing advice on treatment options for those who may enter the healthcare system. In addition, the alerts were circulated through our Drug and Alcohol Monitoring and Information System to all key stakeholders, including alcohol and drugs services, those working with at-risk groups and young people, criminal justice services, education, service users, etc. In addition, information was made publicly available through a number of media messages issued at the time.

The Public Health Agency also developed a range of information and harm reduction advice that was circulated to all key groups and was also discussed widely on the media. My Department also tasked the Public Health Agency with the development of a local rapid community response protocol to deal with future clusters of potentially drug-related sudden deaths. This protocol is currently being tested in the Belfast area and should help to improve co-ordination and response.

4,4-DMAR was identified by the Forensic Science Service of Northern Ireland, and we understand it was brought to the attention of the European Monitoring Centre for Drugs and Drug Addiction (EMCDDA) of which the UK wide Forensic Science Early Warning System is member. The EMCDDA and EUROPOL have just completed a Joint Report on the substance, and across the UK we are supporting the proposal that 4,4-DMAR is taken forward for a risk assessment under the 2005 Council Decision 2005/387/JHA. In addition, the Home Office has informed the Advisory Committee for the Misuse of Drugs – the body that makes recommendations on whether or not substances should be classified under the UK-wide Misuse of Drugs Act – about this substance and its risks.

More generally, new substances are appearing on a regular basis and causing harm to individuals and communities right across Northern Ireland. As the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 is a reserved matter, I raised this issue directly with the Home Secretary in August 2013 outlining my concerns about these New Psychoactive Substances and asking for a more robust UK-wide approach. In response, the UK Government announced the establishment of an expert panel to review the current legislation and to make recommendations on how this can be improved to tackle this issue. It is anticipated that the expert panel will report during Summer 2014.

Supported Housing Programme: Greenisland House

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the supported housing programme at Greenisland House, including (i) the transfer of the site; (ii) when work is expected to start; and (iii) when work is expected to finish.

(AQW 33944/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Northern Health and Social Care Trust has advised that the transfer of the site at Greenisland is being taken forward through established public sector disposal arrangements involving legal services for both parties and agreement on sale price through Land and Property Services. Once this process is complete, the transfer of land will occur and Trinity Housing Association can commence their work. The Trust is keen that this work commences during early summer.

Upon completion of transfer and prior to work commencing, the Housing Association will confirm a programme of work which will include a completion date. During this period, the Trust will continue to work with the Housing Association over the design, development and delivery of the scheme.

Neuromuscular Nurse for Adults

Mrs McKevitt asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to introduce a neuromuscular nurse for adults with Muscular Dystrophy and related neuromuscular conditions.

(AQW 33947/11-15)

Mr Poots: My previous answer to AQW 30086/11-15 refers. I am further advised that the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) has clarified that in response to Recommendation 3 of the McCollum Report, which relates to the need for care advisor posts rather than nurse specialist posts, it has secured funding to appoint two neurological care advisors during 2014/15. The HSCB has advised that this need was also highlighted during the Board's and Public Health Agency's engagement with service users, carers, and other key stakeholders.

The care advisors will provide advice, support, and information to people living with neurological conditions including Muscular Dystrophy.

Neuromuscular Nurses: Employment

Mrs McKevitt asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many neuromuscular nurses are employed in each Health and Social Care Trust to provide specialist care services to children with Muscular Dystrophy and related neuromuscular conditions.

(AQW 33948/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Belfast HSC Trust currently provides the regional children's neuromuscular nursing service at the Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children. This service currently employs one (1.0 whole-time equivalent) specialist neuromuscular nurse.

Renal Unit

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many patients have been repatriated from consultants at the Renal Unit at the Belfast City Hospital to Renal Consultants in other Health and Social Care Trusts in each month of the last two years; and how many were (i) by patient request; and (ii) at the instigation of the consultant.

(AQW 33961/11-15)

Mr Poots: Information on the number of patients who have been repatriated from consultants at the Renal Unit at the Belfast City Hospital is not available.

Belfast Trust has advised that it is possible to identify patients discharged to another hospital. However, if a patient is transferred to a hospital outside the Belfast Trust it is not possible to identify the specialty under which they were subsequently admitted.

Family Support Interventions

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 33583/11-15 and regarding the additional funding that has been used to enable a minimum of 1700 additional family support interventions across a two year period, (i) what is the timeframe for its implementation; and (ii) where any of these additional interventions have taken place to date.

(AQW 33964/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Delivering Social Change Family Support Hubs programme is on schedule to be delivered by early 2016. A total of 669 additional family support interventions were delivered in 2013/14. The breakdown by Health and Social Care Trust area was:

Belfast	139
Northern	163
Southern	132
South Eastern	120
Western	115

Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much money was apportioned to Northern Ireland through the Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme in each of the last three years.

(AQW 33969/11-15)

Mr Poots: The attached table details how much money Northern Ireland was apportioned through the Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme (2009) in each of the last three years.

Financial Year	£m
2011/2012	3,426
2012/2013	3,003
2013/2014	2,853

ITH Pharma Supplies

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether ITH Pharma supplies either total parenteral nutrition or parenteral nutrition to any Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 34015/11-15)

Mr Poots: I have been advised that of the five Health and Social Care Trusts, four purchase adult parenteral nutrition products produced by IPH Pharma either directly from them or indirectly through a third party.

All the Trusts have advised that they do not purchase paediatric or neonatal parenteral nutrition products either directly or indirectly from IPH Pharma.

Urology Nurse: Funding

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, in relation to the Macmillan Cancer Trust business case to fund a specialist urology nurse in the Northern Health and Social Care Trust for three years, whether his Department or the Northern Health and Social Care Trust will undertake to fund the specialist nurse when the three year period ends.

(AQW 34032/11-15)

Mr Poots: Macmillan has agreed to support the Northern Health and Social Care Trust with a Macmillan urology nurse specialist post for three years initially, with a possibility of a further two- year extension as a project post. The Northern Health and Social Care Trust plans to work with the Health and Social Care Board in the intervening period on how to take forward this service when Macmillan funding ceases.

Down's Syndrome: Organ Transplants

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many (i) children; and (ii) adults with Down's syndrome have had an organ transplant in each of the last six years, broken down by organ type.

(AQW 34044/11-15)

Mr Poots: NHS Blood and Transplant (NHSBT) is the organ donation organisation for the UK that has responsibility for matching and allocating donated organs and managing the national organ donor register and transplant waiting lists.

NHSBT has confirmed that the information requested is not available as it does not record whether a patient has Down's Syndrome when listing them for transplant.

Health Service: Staffing

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how the overall number of health service staff has changed since May 2011.

(AQO 6311/11-15)

Mr Poots: Information is centrally available at each quarter end only. The most recent information therefore, of directly employed Health & Social Care staffing levels, is at 31 March 2011 in comparison with 31 March 2014 and shows a 5% increase in whole-time equivalent staff or 2,558 wte.

This does not include bank staff, home helps, staff with a whole time equivalent of less than 0.03 or staff on career breaks.

Our healthcare staff are our greatest resource. They are at the centre of the performance and modernisation initiatives and vital to providing safe, effective and high quality services.

Notes:

- Figures were sourced from the Human Resources Management System (HRMS) and the Human Resources, Payroll, Travel & Subsistence system (HRPTS).

Bangor: Proposed Health and Care Centre

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the timescale for the proposed Health and Care Centre in Bangor.

(AQW 34105/11-15)

Mr Poots: It is not possible, at this stage, to outline the timescale for the Bangor or any future health & care centres. The Health and Social Care Board, has developed a high level Strategic Implementation Plan for future investment in primary care infrastructure, such as new health and care centres including one in Bangor. This is currently being considered but future capital investment right across my Department, not just in primary care infrastructure, will be dependent on the outcome of future budget exercises and confirmation of value for money and affordability.

Insulin Pumps

Mr F McCann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how he is addressing the issue of insulin pumps not being made available to patients across various trust areas.

(AQO 6307/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Health and Social Care Trusts are engaged in a programme of allocating insulin pumps to those patients who are suitable for this treatment as recommended by the guidance issued by the National Institute for Health and Clinical Excellence (NICE). This guidance recommends insulin pump therapy as an option for treating Type 1 diabetes mellitus. I am aware of the potential benefits insulin pump therapy can offer patients with diabetes and I secured additional funding in the 2011/12 financial year to procure 1,100 additional insulin pumps for adults and children to be phased in over the four year period to 2015/16.

Currently there are a total of 690 patients using insulin pump therapy in Northern Ireland, with 161 patients waiting to commence treatment.

Paediatric Orthopaedics

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the paediatric orthopaedic service at Altnagelvin Hospital.

(AQO 6308/11-15)

Mr Poots: I am advised that emergency paediatric trauma and orthopaedic surgery is provided in the Western Health and Social Care Trust by consultants from the Trust's Trauma & Orthopaedic service. Children of all ages are treated within this service. Orthopaedic consultants from the Western Trust also treat children aged 13 and over for elective orthopaedic surgery and outpatient care.

Elective paediatric orthopaedic surgery for children aged under 13 years is provided in the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust. Outpatient services for this patient group are provided at Altnagelvin Hospital by paediatric surgeons from the Belfast Trust, who currently provide 38 all-day clinics per year at Altnagelvin Hospital.

Unscheduled Care

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the progress made in relation to unscheduled care following the recent Emergency Care Summit.

(AQO 6309/11-15)

Mr Poots: In January of this year I commissioned RQIA to examine the fundamental underpinning systems, processes, resources and model for unscheduled and emergency care, including how we build sufficient resilience regionally. I expect to receive a detailed report from them before the end of this month. The RQIA's review team is comprised of eminent healthcare professionals who will each bring their wide experience of emergency care to bear on the issue of delivering further improvements in the delivery of this vital service. The team has taken forward an intensive fact finding process engaging with the Trusts and has held two regional summits with key leaders in the health and social care which will inform the report's recommendations.

The College of Emergency Medicine on 9 June held a follow-up meeting to their Emergency Care Summit in order to finalise proposals for improving the delivery of emergency care. I expect to receive those proposals in the near future. The RQIA's review and the work taken forward by the College and the Royal College of Nursing are complementary and will contribute to the development of the next phase in improving emergency care services which I am aiming to announce in the near future.

My Department continues to look to the Health and Social Care Board to work with the Trusts to deliver the improvements in the delivery of unscheduled care services that we all want to see.

Provisional figures for April 2014 show that the number of people waiting more than 12 hours was 246, the lowest number for the month of April in the last five years. This is a significant improvement compared to April 2013 when 1,003 people waited longer than 12 hours.

Ballymena Health and Care Centre

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the Ballymena Health and Care Centre.

(AQO 6310/11-15)

Mr Poots: I am pleased to confirm that construction work on the new Ballymena Health and Care Centre is progressing well on site and is expected to complete in May 2015.

Upon completion of the construction works the Trust will require a short period to commission the building and move services from their current location to the new health centre. It is expected that the new health and care centre will open to the public in the summer of 2015.

Organ Donations/Transplants

Mr Anderson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how the number of organ donations and transplants have changed in the last five years.

(AQO 6312/11-15)

Mr Poots: Recent statistics published by NHS Blood and Transplant show that there has been a record number of donations by, and transplants for, Northern Ireland residents.

In 2009/2010, there were 38 donors (18 deceased and 20 living); at the end of 2013/14, this had increased to 107 donors (46 deceased and 67 living). During the same timescale, transplants increased from 80 (59 deceased and 21 living) to 133 (72 deceased and 61 living).

This is a remarkable achievement, but I recognise that more needs to be done as there are approximately 160 people waiting for a transplant in Northern Ireland.

The Public Health Agency continues to raise awareness of the need for all of us to consider donating our organs and recently launched a high profile campaign to further this aim. I look forward to the results of this campaign which will be established by way of a public survey after the campaign finishes in the latter part of 2014.

In the meantime, I would encourage everyone to join the organ donor register and discuss their wishes with family and friends.

Mental Health Capacity Bill

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what protections are in place for people under 16 who are currently excluded from the draft Mental Health Capacity Bill.

(AQO 6313/11-15)

Mr Poots: The key protections that will continue to apply to all children when the draft Mental Capacity Bill is enacted are contained in the Children (NI) Order 1995. That Order requires the child's welfare to be given paramount consideration. Importantly, it also recognises that children should be given a voice in relation to what happens to them and provides opportunities for working in partnership with children as far as their age and development allows.

A number of protections are also contained in the Mental Health (NI) Order 1986. Pending the outcomes of a proposed children related project in the next mandate, the Department is seeking views on how the protections in that Order could be made more child-focused and enhanced where appropriate. Any proposal brought forward during the current consultation that better protects children will be given careful consideration.

Both the Children (NI) Order 1995 and the Mental Health (NI) Order 1986 are part of a wider legal framework that already exists to protect children and govern decision making in relation to them. This is the main reason why the draft Mental Capacity Bill (and capacity legislation elsewhere in the UK) does not apply to those aged under 16. The Republic of Ireland has gone further in deciding that its proposed capacity legislation will not apply to those aged under 18.

Transforming Your Care

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, given that it was envisaged as a three to five year plan, for his assessment of the progress of Transforming Your Care.

(AQO 6314/11-15)

Mr Poots: The implementation of TYC is indeed a 3 to 5 year journey and I have kept the House regularly updated on my assessment of progress.

In my Oral Statement of the 11th Match 2014, I provided examples of real changes in patient care and the solid foundations being laid for future healthcare services.

I also provided an update on the progress of actions to deliver the 99 recommendations for service change, set out in the TYC Review, in my response to the recent request from the Health Committee.

To quote one example: TYC Proposal 90 was for the "Establishment of a forum to take forward how technology will support the new model of care linking the services to industry and academia". This was achieved through the establishment of the Connected Health and Prosperity Project Board and the NI Connected Health Eco-System.

Monitoring of progress in implementing TYC is being measured through the Commissioning Plan and the associated Indicators of Performance measurements; through achievement of Public Health Agency and Departmental business plan milestones; and through the measurement of benefits and outcomes identified for individual service change projects.

Primary Schools: Health Checks for Children

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he will consider instigating health checks for all children when they start primary school.

(AQO 6315/11-15)

Mr Poots: My Department has a framework in place known as 'Healthy Child, Healthy Future' which delivers the universal child health promotion programme for all children and young people from birth and throughout the school years. The programme includes a specific set of contacts delivered by school nurses for children throughout their school life including when they start primary school as a Year 1 pupil.

General health appraisal takes place in years 1 and 8 and includes individual child health assessment to identify any mental or emotional health issues, review of speech and language development, oral health review, TB risk assessment, measurement of Body Mass Index (BMI) and review of the child's immunisation status. Parents are always invited to attend.

Targeted reviews are also carried out across all school years for example for children with long term conditions. This is in addition to the school based immunisation programme. These are all delivered within the school setting by Trust employed school nurses.

If problems are identified, children are signposted to other services when new or existing physical, emotional or developmental problems are not being addressed. For example weight management programmes may be offered to children, they may be reminded about overdue immunisations, or offered support with long term conditions.

Schools are essential to the delivery of a comprehensive range of health promotion and health protection activities.

Department of Justice

Colin Bell Case: Appeals

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33410/11-15 and AQW 33100/11-15, whether any meetings took place between the Labour Relations Agency and the Northern Ireland Prison Service to discuss arrangements for the hearing of appeals in the Colin Bell case and the outcome, given that such appeals were convened outside the NIPS 1995 Code of Conduct and Discipline.

(AQW 33655/11-15)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): I do not intend to revise my previous responses.

The Introduction and Background of the Ackah and Deane Report states that they were: "independent arbitrators," and "The proposed review stemmed from an agreement made by the Prisons Minister Paul Goggins, in discussions with the POA and NIPS management."

In 2009 the Labour Relations Agency held proximity talks with each side i.e. the Northern Ireland Prison Service Senior Management and the Prison Officers' Association separately, in order to move forward with the disciplinary cases. Subsequently NIPS and the POA agreed to the review. Each side then used the LRA list of arbitrators to select Ackah (selected by NIPS) and Deane (selected by the POA). The Ackah and Deane Review commenced in August 2009 and the Terms of Reference of their report stated that the exercise would have regard to the LRA guidelines.

The Member will also be aware that the Ackah and Deane Review concentrated on the application of the NIPS Code of Conduct and Discipline in the cases of officers subjected to disciplinary procedures following the death in custody of Colin Bell.

The Ackah and Deane Report did recommend that the NIPS Code of Conduct and Discipline should be revised, as did the Pearson Report published earlier and Dame Anne Owers Report published subsequently.

PSNI: Disclosure Obligations

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice to detail the review he has initiated into how the PSNI meets its disclosure obligations in a frank and timely manner in light of the failures evident in how the aborted case against William Frazer was handled in respect of alleged flag protest incidents.

(AQW 33662/11-15)

Mr Ford: I have not initiated any such review.

Prison Service: Code of Conduct and Discipline

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33410/11-15 and AQW 33100/11-15, to detail (i) whether he plans to revise the latter part of his answer in view of several previously tabled written questions and his answers concerning the review of the 1995 Northern Ireland Prison Service Code of Conduct and Discipline, in particular, Dr Tony Pearson's comments in the June 2009 Prison Review Team Report regarding concerns relating to the Code of Conduct and Discipline and the Report's confirmation that Prison Service was in the 'process of reviewing' the 1995 Code and given that the Ackah and Deane Report was not published until December 2009, and the review was not facilitated by the Labour Relations Agency as outlined in the Introduction and Background and the Terms of Reference of this Report; and (ii) whether he will provide an explanation as to why the information contained in his answer is not accurate.

Mr Ford: I do not intend to revise my previous responses.

The Introduction and Background of the Ackah and Deane Report states that they were: “independent arbitrators,” and “The proposed review stemmed from an agreement made by the Prisons Minister Paul Goggins, in discussions with the POA and NIPS management.”

Supporting Prisoner-at-risk Booklet

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to provide a copy of a Prison Service Supporting Prisoners at Risk booklet, or alternatively have one placed in the Assembly Library.
(AQW 33666/11-15)

Mr Ford: A copy of the Supporting Prisoners at Risk booklet has been placed in the Assembly Library.

Investigation into Case 13/056715

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 29883/11-15, to provide a copy of the report in this investigation; and to detail when it was completed.
(AQW 33668/11-15)

Mr Ford: The report is currently being finalised. I will write to the Member when it is complete.

Magistrates Court

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice how many cases at Magistrates Court proceeded as a preliminary enquiry in (i) 2011; (ii) 2012; and (iii) 2013; and of these, how many were presented as prima facie cases by the prosecution at hearing, but rejected as such by the defence stating contrary submissions, broken down by court division.
(AQW 33692/11-15)

Mr Ford: The table below details the number of Magistrates' Court cases that proceeded as a preliminary enquiry during the period 2011 to 2013, by court division.

Table 1: Preliminary Enquiries at the Magistrates' Court: 2011 to 2013P

P Data are currently provisional and may be subject to change

All preliminary enquiries are presented as prima facie cases by the prosecution at hearing. If the defence objects to such an enquiry, the court conducts either a mixed committal or a preliminary investigation.

The number of cases that proceeded to either mixed committal proceedings or a preliminary investigation during the period 2011 to 2013 is presented below, by court division.

I plan to include changes to committal proceedings in Magistrates' Courts, including the abolition of preliminary investigations and mixed committals and the direct transfer of certain serious offences, in a Justice Bill to be introduced into the Assembly later this month.

CCTV: Court Grounds

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33512/11-15, whether he will accept representations made by constituents and conduct a review into this matter, including examining CCTV of court grounds; consulting with staff from the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service and G4S; court users and residents in the immediate area, as well as examining forthcoming court listings and those of the last six months.

(AQW 33693/11-15)

Mr Ford: My officials will meet with any constituents concerned about parking congestion caused by court sittings and appropriately investigate any issues arising.

Suicides in Custody

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to provide a breakdown of the nature of convictions and allegations against prisoners who died in custody and were either confirmed or suspected death by suicides, in the last ten years.

(AQW 33694/11-15)

Mr Ford: The breakdown of convictions or alleged offences in respect of each suicide or suspected suicide in prison custody is attached at annex A. There are two deaths where the information about convictions or alleged offences is not available due to information loss at the introduction of the PRISM information management system.

Prisoners: Bullying

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of prisoners adjudicated for bullying fellow prisoners and the penalty in each case, broken down by prison, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 33696/11-15)

Mr Ford: Under Prison Rules there are a number of offences against prison discipline that could relate to bullying. The Northern Ireland Prison Service (NIPS) do not specifically record when adjudications are in response to bullying. For those reasons it is not possible to provide the information requested.

Superinjunctions

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice how many super-injunctions have been (i) sought; and (ii) granted through applications to the High Court of Justice in Northern Ireland, each year from 2007 to date.

(AQW 33719/11-15)

Mr Ford: There is no legal definition of the term “super injunction” and the question has been interpreted as seeking information on orders prohibiting publicity on the granting of injunctive relief.

Information on the number of injunctive relief applications sought is held on the originating application. A manual review would be required to identify the nature of the application and would incur a disproportionate cost.

The table below details the number of orders granted since 2007 prohibiting publicity on the granting of injunctive relief.

Legal Aid Costs

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to outline the current proposals in respect of reducing Legal Aid costs payable for Crown Court cases; and for his assessment of whether cuts will lead to the withdrawal of legal representatives from cases, similar to the action of 2011.

(AQW 33728/11-15)

Mr Ford: My proposals for reform of Crown Court legal aid fees are intended to deliver value for money. The proposals include replacing the existing Guilty Plea 1 and 2 fees for both solicitors and counsel with a single guilty plea fee with enhancements designed to remunerate counsel for trial preparation and solicitors for dealing with large amounts of served evidence.

Overall, I propose to reduce the fees for solicitors by 27% and barristers by 22%. I have listened carefully to representations from the legal profession and made a number of concessions to my original proposals to ensure that the fees payable in more complex cases or those with large amounts of served evidence are protected.

Trial refresher fees, the fees in the Table of Additional Fees will be preserved; the fees in Classes A and D will be preserved at existing rates for counsel; the classification of cases in respect of hijacking and driving offences causing death will be re-classified upwards to class D; specific fees will be provided for confiscation hearings; and I will amend the existing interpretation of the rules governing the payment of the full day refresher.

I would hope that action similar to that taken in 2011 would be avoided as the fees payable in Northern Ireland following the implementation of the changes will remain attractive in comparison with England and Wales.

Appeal Tribunals: Human Rights Act 1998

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice whether all benefit appeal tribunals are compliant with the Human Rights Act 1998, particularly Section 6, and the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, and all panel members are fully briefed and supplied with copies of the Act and Convention.

(AQW 33729/11-15)

Mr Ford: Responsibility for the operation of tribunal hearings and panel member training are statutory functions of the President of Appeal Tribunals, Mr Conall MacLynn who is an independent judicial office holder. The President can be contacted directly at Office of the President of Appeal Tribunals, 6th Floor Cleaver House, 3 Donegall Square North, Belfast BT1 5GA.

Court Hearings

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to the High Court ruling by Mr Justice Gillen in the case of Marcin Marciniak, Arkadiusz Gruszczynski and others, to detail (i) a breakdown of costs and projected final costs, including Legal Aid for both lower and high court hearings; and (ii) whether an investigation will be carried out into the circumstances of the case.

Mr Ford: The table below details the estimated cost of the case as at 30 May 2014.

Cost Type	Estimated Cost (£)
(i) Court (Judiciary and Staff Costs)	2,232
(ii) Facilities (e.g. Courtroom Accommodation)	410
Total	2,642

Article 24 of the Legal Aid, Advice and Assistance (NI) Order 1981 precludes the release of information in relation to civil cases in which legal aid has been granted.

There are no plans to investigate the circumstances of this case. However, it is a matter for any party with an interest in the case to consider if they wish to make a criminal complaint against the plaintiffs. Any such complaint should be referred to the PSNI for investigation.

Community Services Funding

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33561/11-15, to list the 35 organisations that received grants/ payments from 2013-14, including how much each organisation received.

(AQW 33747/11-15)

Mr Ford: Further to AQW/33561/11-15, the table below lists the 35 organisations that received grant funding from Probation Board for Northern Ireland for community service placements during 2013/2014. As requested, the amount received by each organisation is also included.

Legal Aid Costs

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice whether he intends to extend the reduction of Legal Aid costs payable in High Court challenges, particularly judicial reviews.

(AQW 33749/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Department is currently reviewing the fees paid for civil cases, where legal aid has been granted, across all types of proceedings at the three court tiers, namely the magistrates' court, the County Court and the High Court, with a view to streamlining the existing arrangements and delivering savings to the legal aid budget. The Department's work on the fees payable for High Court cases will include judicial reviews.

Community Services Funding

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33561/11-15, whether all providers of community services places are funded.

(AQW 33799/11-15)

Mr Ford: Probation Board for Northern Ireland (PBNI) do not fund all providers of Community Service placements. Community and voluntary groups and charitable organisations can, and do, apply for funding through the PBNI Community Grant Scheme which is advertised on an annual basis. Funding received through the scheme can be used to facilitate and develop placements and to ensure adequate oversight and supervision of offenders undertaking community service in these sites.

European Convention on Human Rights

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice whether all departmental agencies, as well as those contracted to provide services, are in full compliance of the EU Convention on Human Rights, specifically Articles 3 and 8, and are fully aware of sections 6 and 7 of the Human Rights Act 1998, as required of all public bodies and those contracted to provide services on their behalf.

(AQW 33800/11-15)

Mr Ford: My Department is fully conversant with both the European Convention on Human Rights and the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights and aims that all actions of the Department and its contractors will be compliant with its legal obligations.

CCTV: Courts and Tribunal Service

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice (i) to detail the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunal Services CCTV policy; (ii) to provide a copy of the policy; (iii) when the policy was last updated or amended; and (iv) what monitoring is in place to ensure all aspects of the policy are adhered to.

(AQW 33802/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service (NICTS) policy on the usage of CCTV on NICTS premises sets out the stated purpose of CCTV cameras, including the operation, retention, access and disclosure of recorded images to third parties. As the data owner, NICTS can monitor and download CCTV footage at any time. The policy, issued on 5 September 2012, has not been amended and a copy has been placed in the Assembly Library. G4S Solutions (UK) Ltd, the NICTS contracted security and ancillary service provider, has delegated responsibility for viewing and downloading CCTV footage. NICTS monitor policy compliance and it is a Key Performance Indicator in the G4S contract.

Contract Services

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice what meetings have been held with G4S, including correspondence received by his Department, in relation to alleged undercharging for contract services at tender stage for supplying services to the NI Courts and Tribunal Service.

(AQW 33805/11-15)

Mr Ford: My Department did not hold any meetings or receive any correspondence from G4S Secure Solutions (UK) Ltd in relation to alleged undercharging for contract services at tender stage for supplying services to the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service.

Preliminary Investigations/Mixed Committals

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice how many preliminary investigations/mixed committals are currently pending per court division; and of these, how many are legally aided.

(AQW 33806/11-15)

Mr Ford: The table below shows the number, in each court division, of preliminary investigations and mixed committals pending as at 2 June 2014. All of these cases are legally aided.

Court Division	Preliminary Investigations	Mixed Committals	Total Cases

Prostitution: Project Steering Group

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Justice to detail (i) the job titles of the staff; and (ii) the organisations represented on the Project Steering Group for Research into Prostitution.

(AQW 33809/11-15)

Mr Ford: As stated in the tender specification schedule for Prostitution Research, published on eSourcing NI on 24 January 2014, the Project Steering Group consists of members of the Department of Justice Criminal Policy Branch, and Analytical Services Group. They are: Head of Criminal Policy Branch; Deputy Principal, Criminal Policy Branch; and Principal Statistician, Analytical Services Group. They were appointed because of their knowledge of the policy area and of research methodology.

There was no prior consultation on their appointment. The Project Steering Group is an internal panel with responsibility for management of the contract in line with the terms of the tender.

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Justice who has been selected to sit on the Project Steering Group for Research into Prostitution.

(AQW 33813/11-15)

Mr Ford: As stated in the tender specification schedule for Prostitution Research, published on eSourcing NI on 24 January 2014, the Project Steering Group consists of members of the Department of Justice Criminal Policy Branch, and Analytical Services Group. They are: Head of Criminal Policy Branch; Deputy Principal, Criminal Policy Branch; and Principal Statistician, Analytical Services Group. (AQW 33815/11-15)

Services Group. They are: Head of Criminal Policy Branch; Deputy Principal, Criminal Policy Branch; and Principal Statistician, Analytical Services Group. They were appointed because of their knowledge of the policy area and of research methodology.

There was no prior consultation on their appointment. The Project Steering Group is an internal panel with responsibility for management of the contract in line with the terms of the tender.

Courts and Tribunal Service: Disability Audits

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33601/11-15, (i) which organisation or persons were used to carry out the disability audits for the Courts and Tribunals Service; (ii) whether these reports are available to the public; and (iii) when the Omagh and Strabane premises were last inspected.

(AQW 33818/11-15)

Mr Ford: Central Procurement Directorate (CPD) in the Department of Finance and Personnel or consultants commissioned by CPD completed the disability audits for the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service (NICTS). These reports are not available to the public for security reasons as they contain specific information on the layout of court buildings and illustrative photographs. The report for Strabane was completed in July 2010 and the report for Omagh in March 2009.

Charitable and Voluntary Organisations: Community Services

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33561/11-15, how charitable and voluntary organisations are selected to provide community services; and to detail how they can apply to be involved.

(AQW 33826/11-15)

Mr Ford: Charitable and voluntary organisations can contact Probation Board for Northern Ireland (PBNI) directly at any time via the PBNI website, www.pbni.org.uk, which provides information on community service and details on how organisations can apply for PBNI placements. PBNI staff based in local offices also actively seek out charitable and voluntary organisations and local community groups to facilitate Community Service placements. PBNI undertake an assessment of all applications received with regard to health and safety and capacity of the organisation to deliver the placement to the required standard.

If funding is required organisations can apply through the PBNI Community Grant Scheme which is advertised on an annual basis. Further information on the scheme is also available on the PBNI website.

Public Protection Arrangements

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, given the deadline for potential appeal has now passed, what is causing the delay in the Public Protection Arrangements in Northern Ireland publishing the Serious Case Review into the case of David Paige.

(AQW 33827/11-15)

Mr Ford: The serious case review summary was published on the Public Protection Arrangements website on 11 June after the victim's family had been afforded the opportunity to read and discuss its contents with officials.

Courts and Tribunal Service: Contract Services

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice how many staff, employed by G4S, provide contract services to the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunal Service at court houses; and of these, how many are registered as key holders.

(AQW 33828/11-15)

Mr Ford: There are currently 352 staff (243.74 full time equivalents) employed by G4S Secure Solutions (UK) Ltd on the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service contract for the provision of security and ancillary services, all of whom are registered key holders.

Legal Representation

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33196/11-15, how many cases had representatives as (i) solicitor only; and (ii) solicitor and junior counsel.

(AQW 33829/11-15)

Mr Ford:

Roe House: Forced Strip Searches

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33306/11-15, to detail the number of forced strip searches that have taken place in Roe House.

(AQW 33860/11-15)

Mr Ford: New search arrangements were introduced in accordance with the Agreement of the 12th August 2010. From that date routine Full Body Searching of separated prisoners housed within Roe House no longer takes place. This does not affect the requirement for searches to be carried out in other areas of the prison. The total number of such Full Body searches carried out in other areas of the prison, primarily on entering and leaving the prison, was 491 in 2013 and 332 to date in 2014.

Trial Process: Total Cost

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33550/11 -15, when he will be able to provide the total cost of the trial process that began in May 2009.

(AQW 33881/11-15)

Mr Ford: The total cost of this trial will not be available until all claims are received and subsequently assessed. The Legal Services Commission anticipates that legal aid claims will be received for assessment and payment no later than September 2014.

Further payments have been made in respect of legal aid and prosecution costs since the response to AQW/33550/11-15. The table below details the estimated costs as at 6 June 2014.

Cost Type	Estimated Cost
(i) Legal Aid ¹	£149,173
(ii) Prosecution ²	£117,723
(iii) Court (Judiciary and staff costs)	£24,921
(iv) Facilities (e.g. courtroom accommodation)	£5,606
Total	£297,423

- 1 Legal aid costs to date include fees and disbursements paid to legal representatives. A number of costs have yet to be received or assessed.
- 2 The Public Prosecution Service has finalised fees for counsel and witness expenses have been paid. Further witness expenses may still be received.

Prison Service: Chief Finance Officer

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Justice to outline the circumstances surrounding the recent departure of the Chief Finance Officer of the Northern Ireland Prison Service.

(AQW 33895/11-15)

Mr Ford: It would be inappropriate to comment on the circumstances surrounding the career management of a specific individual within my Department.

The Chief Finance Officer is a member of the Senior Civil Service and, as such, the movement and placement of such staff is managed centrally within the NICS as a corporate resource.

Prison Service: Staff Duties

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Justice which member of Prison Service staff is currently responsible for the work formerly undertaken by the Chief Finance Officer; and what other duties they are performing in conjunction with this role.

(AQW 33896/11-15)

Mr Ford: Responsibility for the work formerly undertaken by the Chief Finance Officer has been split between the existing Directors of HR and Organisational Change and of Estates.

This is an interim arrangement pending implementation of a decision recently taken by the Department of Justice Board to deliver corporate services, such as Finance, through a shared service model. This will result in the Finance Director in the Department assuming responsibility for the delivery of Finance Services to the Northern Ireland Prison Service.

Consultants: Hotel Expenses

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Justice whether the Prison Service pays for the hotel expenses of the consultants it engages.

(AQW 33897/11-15)

Mr Ford: There are currently two suppliers of external consultancy contracts covering four separate contracts.

No hotel expenses have been paid to date. However, the terms of an individual contract would determine whether such expenses could be paid.

Prison Officers: Compulsory Redundancy and Retraining

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice whether he plans to review the decision taken by his Department and the Prison Service to reduce from nine months to fifteen weeks, the decision time allowed for Prison Officers who have, or will avail of, compulsory redundancy to retraining, whilst agreeing to uphold the decision to permit RUC and PSNI reservists a 9 month decision time in similar circumstances, and in the light of equal opportunities legislation to have the decision reversed to permit Prison Officers availing of compulsory redundancy the same opportunities as those retiring from similar occupations. (AQW 33899/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Prison Service (NIPS) launched a Voluntary Early Retirement (VER) Scheme on 8 November 2011 and staff were released under these terms between 31 March 2012 and 31 May 2014. From the outset, this included a re-training package of core courses held over a 15 week period. This scheme is now closed and NIPS will not be revisiting any of the associated terms.

The PSNI Reserve (Full-Time) Severance Regulations 2006 included an offer of nine months re-training before the formal date of their leaving the PSNI.

Prison Officers are employed by the Northern Ireland Civil Service whereas PSNI officers are appointed by the Chief Constable. Equal opportunities issues do not arise between separate employers.

G4S Staff Keyholders

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to detail the policy for G4S staff keyholders who provide contracted services to the NI Courts and Tribunal Service estate and are required to return to work premises outside working hours, including (i) how many staff attend out-of-hours call outs; (ii) how often risk assessments are carried out to ensure the safety and security of staff; (iii) what enhancement is provided to staff who are on call; (iv) when the policy was last updated or amended; and (v) what, if any, updates or amendments were replaced. (AQW 33900/11-15)

Mr Ford: Under the terms of the contract, two G4S Secure Solutions (UK) Ltd (G4S) site officials are required to attend out of hours call outs as key holders. The Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service (NICTS) advises G4S of the results of annual security assessments that provide an evaluation on the level of threat to staff and the NICTS Estate. G4S is responsible for carrying out risk assessments to ensure the safety and security of its staff, the remuneration of its staff who are on call, and updating the policy.

Stephen McCook

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, following the ruling of Mr Justice Stephens on Wednesday 4 June 2014 which included the awarding of costs against Mr Stephen McCook, whether the costs will be met by Legal Aid. (AQW 33923/11-15)

Mr Ford: A copy of the ruling of Mr Justice Stephens is not currently available to the Northern Ireland Legal Services Commission and it would be inappropriate for the Commission to comment on the press coverage without having sight of the ruling.

Article 24 of the Legal Aid, Advice and Assistance (NI) Order 1981 precludes the release of information in relation to civil cases in which Legal Aid has been granted.

I would expect the Commission to follow all avenues open to them to recover costs where this is applicable.

Ballymena: Farmwatch

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the Farmwatch Scheme in Ballymena. (AQO 6317/11-15)

Mr Ford: Since the launch of the Ballymena Farm Watch Scheme 31 January 2014, 226 individuals have registered for a text alert scheme operated by the PSNI; 160 trailers have been security marked; 50 Guardcams have been distributed; and members of the Scheme have been given crime prevention advice and the opportunity to avail of roadside and property signage advertising the Scheme.

Working with the PSNI, Ballymena Policing and Community Safety Partnership continues to highlight the scheme. A recent example of this work was the promotional event held by Ballymena Policing and Community Safety Partnership at the Ballymena Show on 31 May, where 12 farmers signed up for the text alert and trailer marking services offered by the PSNI under the Farm Watch scheme.

Given the impact which this type of crime has on farming and rural communities, my Department will continue to support the development and delivery of initiatives designed to tackle rural crime.

Legal Aid

Mr Milne asked the Minister of Justice what assessment he has made of any impact the reduction of the legal aid budget may have on increases in miscarriages of justice.

(AQO 6325/11-15)

Mr Ford: I have not made any reduction in the legal aid budget, but I have taken steps to ensure that the fee structure meets the value for money test.

I do not believe there will be any impact on the potential for miscarriages of justice arising from legal aid reform. My reforms do not reduce the scope of legal aid and anyone entitled to criminal legal aid will continue to receive it. I have also listened carefully to representations made to me and have ensured fees are targeted at most serious cases.

Department for Regional Development

Taxis: Public Hire at Belfast City Hall

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 33445/11-15, to supply the information used by departmental officials and passed to their Department of the Environment and Driver and Vehicle Agency (DVA) counterparts in respect of alleged public hire taxi drive-offs at Belfast City Hall on sight of traffic wardens, including (i) when the information was gathered; (ii) who gathered the information; (iii) the minutes of any meetings with DVA officials when this matter was discussed; (iv) statements taken by those reporting the alleged drive-offs; and (v) what levels of staff held the interdepartmental discussions.

(AQW 33656/11-15)

Mr Kennedy (The Minister for Regional Development): Senior management (Grade 6 and Grade 7) from my Department met with their counterparts in December 2013, to discuss taxi related policy matters, such as, use of bus lanes, illegal parking, non-use of taxi stopping area in Chichester Street, Belfast, enforcement at ranks etc. During this meeting my officials provided an indication that approximately 900 taxi drive-offs had occurred during the period 01 January to 30 November 2013, from an area in front of Belfast City Hall. This figure was based on estimates provided by Traffic Attendants (TA).

TAs, in carrying out their duties, do not record the nature of business in which vehicles are involved. In front of Belfast City Hall, the taxi rank is patrolled by TAs on a regular basis. Taxis that are parked in contravention of parking and bus lane restrictions will regularly drive off when a TA appears. Whilst a TA will record the vehicle registration number (VRN) of the drive off vehicles, the fact that it is a taxi will not be recorded. TAs do not take statements from any vehicle driver when issuing Penalty Charge Notices (PCN) or when recording VRNs. Presently, there is no demand for this information and therefore, it is not recorded.

Fintona and Trillick: Flooding of Roads

Mr McElduff asked the Minister for Regional Development how his Department helped alleviate the flooding of roads in Fintona and Trillick on 22 May 2014; and to detail his Department's plans to keep traffic flowing in the event of any future flooding in this area.

(AQW 33669/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department deployed staff to erect warning signs and distribute sandbags to the area. Officials liaised closely with the PSNI, which had set up an incident centre in Fintona, and issued sandbags as requests came in. As soon as the river levels lowered, the floods quickly cleared through the drainage systems. In total, my Department had nine Industrial staff and three supervisory staff on site until 03:30 am on 23 May, over 100 sandbags were distributed and 35 warning signs were erected.

My Department is part of a multi-agency group which has been set up to deal with such incidents. On the instructions of the PSNI, some local traffic diversions were set up for a short time around the flooded area in Fintona. The flooding in Trillick did not result in any road closures.

Crockanboy Road: Omagh

Mr McAleer asked the Minister for Regional Development how his Department plans to address the state of repair of the Crockanboy Road in Omagh, Co. Tyrone.

(AQW 33680/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Crockanboy Road is a medium trafficked B Class route which is 17km long and connects the villages of Gortin and Creggan. Over the past four years, 3kms of this road have been resurfaced and 11kms surface dressed. It continues to be subject to eight-weekly inspections in accordance with established Roads Maintenance Standards and all defects identified are repaired within stipulated timescales.

Whilst a 1.9km stretch of the route immediately west of Greencastle village has been identified as a priority for resurfacing, the scheme cannot be delivered within current 2014/15 funding allocations. However, should additional in-year funding become available to my Department, this scheme will be considered for inclusion in an enhanced works programme.

Millennium Way Project

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the funds that have been allocated to the Millennium Way project in the current financial year.

(AQW 33685/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department is continuing to develop the Extension to Millennium Way scheme and work is ongoing to finalise the detailed design for the proposal.

The acquisition of land for the scheme requires a Vesting Order and it is hoped to publish the draft Notice of Intention to Make the Vesting Order in the near future. A Public Inquiry may also be required to determine if the level of land take identified is appropriate.

I can confirm the appropriate level of funding for progression of the design and other scheme development work has been made available. In relation to funding for lands acquisition and compensation, I can also confirm funding is available should the Vesting Order become operative during this financial year. However, this does not include funding for construction as the Extension to Millennium Way proposal is not in a position to start in the current financial year.

However, a bid has been submitted with a view to commencing construction in 2015/16, subject to the bid being successful, the proposal continuing to have a satisfactory economic appraisal and clearing the Vesting Order statutory procedure.

Footpath Resurfacing: Total Spend

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the total spend on footpath resurfacing, broken down by constituency, in the last financial year.

(AQW 33697/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department does not maintain details of spend on roads on a parliamentary constituency basis.

Road Resurfacing: Total Spend

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the total spend on road resurfacing, broken down by constituency, in the last financial year.

(AQW 33698/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department does not maintain details of spend on roads on a parliamentary constituency basis.

Street Lighting

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the total spend on new street lighting, broken down by constituency, in the last financial year.

(AQW 33699/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department deployed staff to erect warning signs and distribute sandbags to the area. Officials liaised closely with the PSNI, which had set up an incident centre in Fintona, and issued sandbags as requests came in. As soon as the river levels lowered, the floods quickly cleared through the drainage systems. In total, my Department had nine Industrial staff and three supervisory staff on site until 03:30 am on 23 May, over 100 sandbags were distributed and 35 warning signs were erected.

My Department is part of a multi-agency group which has been set up to deal with such incidents. On the instructions of the PSNI, some local traffic diversions were set up for a short time around the flooded area in Fintona. The flooding in Trillick did not result in any road closures.

Dropped Kerbs

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the total spend on dropped kerbs, broken down by constituency, in the last financial year.

(AQW 33700/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department does not maintain details of spend on roads on a parliamentary constituency basis.

Traffic-calming Measures: Expenditure

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the total spend on traffic calming measures, broken down by constituency, in the last financial year.

(AQW 33702/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department does not maintain details of spend on roads on a parliamentary constituency basis.

Community Transport Services: Additional Funding

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 33252/11-15, what efforts are being made by his Department to seek additional funding for community transport services in addition to baseline budgets for 2014-2015, so that current service levels can be maintained.

(AQW 33718/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: In addition to the significant levels of funding provided to the Rural Community Transport Partnerships by my Department, my officials are in discussions with the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development (DARD) and the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister (OFMDM) (Active Aging Strategy) in an attempt to secure additional funding.

No final decisions on funding have yet been made by DARD or OFMDM.

Sewage Pumping Station at Derryhale: Upgrade

Mr Irwin asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the plans and timeframe to upgrade the sewage pumping station at Derryhale in Portadown, given the defects with the current system.

(AQW 33773/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: A comprehensive study of the problems associated with both the Brompton Park and Derryhale Wastewater Pumping Stations within the Derryhale catchment has concluded that the preferred solution to defects at the current sites involves the abandonment of the existing stations and the transfer of flows by gravity to a newly built station pumping into the existing Derryhale sewer system. This solution will require land purchase for the new pumping station and agreements with landowners in relation to access and decommissioning of the existing pumping station sites.

A detailed solution is being worked on by Northern Ireland Water and it intends to engage with the Northern Ireland Environment Agency with the intention of including the project in the prioritised capital quality programme. It is not possible at this time to give a commitment on delivery but Northern Ireland Water will continue to maintain the existing system until an upgrade can be progressed.

Portavoe Reservoir: Cost of Repairing

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the cost of repairing Portavoe Reservoir.

(AQW 33780/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The total cost of refurbishing Portavoe Reservoir is approximately £124,000. This consists of £99,000 construction costs plus additional professional costs (including project management, site supervision, environmental surveys and public communication) amounting to £25,000.

Street Lighting

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the cost of street lights being switched on during daylight hours, in the last financial year.

(AQW 33788/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Member will be aware from my response to his previous Assembly Question, AQW 14529/11-15, that electricity for my Department's street lighting is not metered and therefore there is no additional monetary cost if street lights are operating during daylight hours.

However, when officials are made aware of street lights operating during the daytime, which may be as a result of faulty equipment or for routine maintenance purposes, they endeavour to attend to such issues promptly so that energy is not used unnecessarily.

Greystone Road/Broad Road: Works

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQO 6143/11-15, why no work will be carried out in the next 12 months; and whether he will expedite the works at the Greystone Road/Broad Road.

(AQW 33807/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can confirm that, whilst my officials are currently examining a number of proposals to improve safety at the Greystone Road/Broad Road junction in Limavady, the work programme for this year based on current budget allocations has already been finalised.

However, I can assure you my officials are working to bring forward a worthwhile solution for this junction and I have asked for this to be progressed as quickly as possible.

Footpaths: North Belfast

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (i) whether an assessment has been carried out on the condition of footpaths in the North Belfast constituency; (ii) the total spend on upgrading and repairing footpaths in North Belfast during each of the last five years; and (iii) the planned spend on upgrading and repairing footpaths in North Belfast in the next 12 months.

(AQW 33865/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department inspects the footpaths in North Belfast on a cyclical basis and any defects considered hazardous to the public are identified and programmed for repair.

In addition, my Department also undertakes an annual programme of reconstruction and resurfacing, which is implemented on a scheme priority basis, taking account of the available funding for such works.

The information relating to expenditure on footpaths is not available in the form requested by the Member, as my Department does not hold financial information on a constituency basis. However, details of total spend on footway upgrading and repair in the Belfast North Section Office area for the last five years are set out in the table below:

Year	2009/10	2010/11	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14
Expenditure	£750,671	£768,626	£1,092,999	£615,777	£1,246,880

My Department has currently programmed approximately £280,000 of work in the Belfast North Section Office area for 2014/15, with the potential for further schemes to be added to the programme based on the availability of additional funding.

Rural Borewells Scheme

Ms Boyle asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail what help is available to people living in homes which were built after 2000, did not qualify for the Rural Borewells Scheme and are without a mains water supply.

(AQW 33873/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: For those properties built after 2000 that are not eligible for the Rural Borewells Scheme, NI Water provides a Reasonable Cost Allowance (RCA) of around £2,000 per property to connect householders to the mains system. More recent properties are entitled to a lesser RCA because householders are expected to include the cost of a water main in the overall cost of a new build.

Portavoe Reservoir

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development whether any tests have been carried out on dead birds or fish at Portavoe Reservoir.

(AQW 33906/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: To date there have been no tests carried out on dead birds or fish at Portavoe Reservoir. Should any further carcasses be recovered in a state capable of being subjected to tests this will be undertaken.

Drainage Systems: Ballymena

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Regional Development what work is planned to upgrade the drainage system in the Toome Road and Queen Street areas of Ballymena to prevent serious flooding, given there has been serious flooding each year from 2008.

(AQW 34012/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The cause of the recent flooding in the Queen Street and Toome Road areas of Ballymena is currently being investigated. At present it appears that the sheer volume of heavy rainfall in a very short period overwhelmed the capacity of the drainage infrastructure in the area.

As part of the Drainage Area plans for this area NI Water has identified a number of structural sewer defects in the Toome Road and Queen Street areas. A scheme to rectify these issues including relining some sections of the sewer and replacement of a number of manholes to prevent ingress of water from a local watercourse into the sewer, was scheduled to commence in August 2014. However, I have asked NI Water to bring this scheme forward and it will now commence before the end of June 2014 with completion due during September 2014.

I am advised that this planned work may not significantly impact on the capacity of the sewer network and I have therefore asked the interdepartmental Flood Investment Planning Group, led by my Department, to urgently examine what can be done to help reduce the flood risk in this area.

Background

- Locally heavy rainfall on Sunday evening, 8 June 2014, led to flooding in a number of areas across the north and west of Northern Ireland, some of the worst affected areas were reported as Ballymena, Antrim and Ballymoney. The intensity of the rainfall overwhelmed road gullies, storm drains and the sewerage system causing flooding of roads and properties.
- Transport NI staff were on the ground within 1 hour from receiving the first calls and approximately 1000 sandbags were distributed to assist property owners during this event. NI Water staff also attended a number of locations to provide assistance.

- Transport NI has advised that the existing gullies and connections are adequate to cope with road surface water and are cleaned and maintained on a regular basis and there no plans to upgrade the road drainage systems at this location. The road drainage systems are similar to the majority of drainage on the road network and rely on connections to existing NI Water infrastructure.
- There is a history of external out of sewer flooding at fifteen properties in this area (Thirteen properties in Toome Street and two at Queen Street). In 2008 river flood defences were put in place to protect these properties and area. However since 2008 in periods of heavy rainfall there has continued to be issues with out of sewer flooding at these locations. Following flooding in August 2012 investigations carried out by NI Water confirmed a number of structural defects in its sewer network. Work to rectify these defects will commence in August of this year and take approximately 4 months to complete.
- NI Water does not believe that there is a capacity issue with its sewer network in the Toome Road area during normal conditions. However, during periods of intense rainfall, such as that experienced on Sunday evening, it is possible that the system was overwhelmed. NI Water is currently awaiting an assessment from the Met Office in regard to the return period of this weather event.
- DARD has advised that no watercourses contributed to the recent flooding at this location.

Wakehurst: Severe Flooding

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development, in light of two episodes of severe flooding in Wakehurst; Queen Street; and Toome Road areas of Ballymena in the last week, to detail the current plans to alleviate the causal problems.
(AQW 34083/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The cause of the recent flooding in the Wakehurst, Queen Street and Toome Road areas of Ballymena is currently being investigated. At present it appears that the sheer volume of heavy rainfall in a very short period overwhelmed the capacity of the drainage infrastructure in these areas.

As part of the Drainage Area plans for this area NI Water has identified a number of structural sewer defects in the Toome Road and Queen Street areas. A scheme to rectify these issues including relining some sections of the sewer and replacement of a number of manholes to prevent ingress of water from a local watercourse into the sewer was scheduled to commence in August 2014. However, I have asked NI Water to bring this scheme forward and it will now commence before the end of June 2014 with completion due during September 2014.

In light of the recent flooding, Transport NI has checked the road gullies and transfer pipes in these areas and these were found to be working properly. In addition NI Water will be carrying out a detailed inspection of the sewer network to ensure there are no issues that it is currently unaware of and this work will be completed in the next two weeks.

I have also requested that the interdepartmental Flood Investment Planning Group, led by my Department, urgently examines what can be done to help reduce the risk of flooding in these areas.

Department for Social DevelopmentVisually Impaired People

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Social Development whether his Department and its agencies will take a proactive approach with people who are visually impaired by providing correspondence in accessible formats.
(AQW 33524/11-15)

Mr McCausland (The Minister for Social Development): The Department for Social Development Equality Scheme commits the Department to providing information in alternative formats on request, where reasonably practicable.

In line with the Department for Social Development's policy the Social Security Agency provides publications in a range of suitable alternative accessible formats for people who are visually impaired. The Agency will also make arrangements for correspondence to be provided in Braille, larger font or audio format if requested.

Bloomfield Estate: Clanmil Housing Association

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the reasons for the delay in transferring the pensioners' bungalows in the Bloomfield Estate to Clanmill Housing Association.

(AQW 33742/11-15)

Mr McCausland: By way of clarification I would advise that the housing association involved in this transfer is Oaklee Homes Group; it is not Clanmil.

There are 72 Housing Executive properties in the Bloomfield Estate which have been selected for inclusion in the Stock Transfer Programme. The Programme is overseen by the Housing Executive and they have advised that the delay in the transfer has been caused by the length of time it has taken to prepare and agree the Transfer Agreement and Development Agreement, which are both bespoke and complex documents. Considerable work has to be completed by solicitors to ensure that the interests of tenants are protected and the respective obligations of both the Housing Executive and Oaklee Homes Group are clearly set out and agreed.

I do, however, share the frustrations being experienced by tenants and I am extremely disappointed at the ongoing delay with this scheme which I find unacceptable.

NIHE have advised that the outstanding matters should be cleared up by the end of June and I sincerely hope that this transfer can proceed as soon as possible thereafter.

Bloomfield Estate: Clanmil Housing Association

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the current timescale for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive to transfer the pensioners' bungalows in the Bloomfield Estate to Clanmil Housing Association.

(AQW 33743/11-15)

Mr McCausland: By way of clarification I would advise that the housing association involved in this transfer is Oaklee Homes Group; it is not Clanmil.

The Stock Transfer Programme is overseen by the Housing Executive and they have advised that they met with Oaklee Homes Group and their respective solicitors on 3rd June to resolve a few outstanding minor matters and although the exact date to complete the transfer is still to be confirmed, it is anticipated that it will be by the end of June.

Bloomfield and Jubilee Estates: Bangor

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's current timescale to repair insulation in the twenty homes affected in the Bloomfield and Jubilee Estates in Bangor.

(AQW 33744/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive have advised that the insulation scheme, which includes twenty homes in the Bloomfield and Jubilee estates in Bangor, is programmed to commence in September 2014 and complete at the end of November 2014.

Landlord Registration Scheme

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 33150/11-15, what action his Department has taken upon discovery that no landlords in Magherafelt and Downpatrick are registered under the Landlord Registration Scheme.

(AQW 33819/11-15)

Mr McCausland: My response to AQW 33150/11-15 reflects the number of landlords living in the council area and not where the private rented properties are situated. Where no new tenancy is created a landlord has until 25 February 2015 to register.

While my Department is responsible for the policy and legislation around the Landlord Registration Scheme, enforcement of the Regulations is a matter for each local council. The council which is responsible for taking enforcement action depends on where the property is and not where the landlord lives.

Department officials and the Landlord Registration Registrar work closely with district council representatives to provide information and support enforcement. A series of seminars will take place at the end of June for all council environmental health officers to stress the importance of the enforcement of both landlord registration and tenancy deposit schemes requirements.

Meter Installation: Responsibility

Mr Clarke asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 33620/11-15, where an electric meter has been removed, prior to the allocation of the house, who is responsible to have a meter installed; and if it is the tenant's responsibility, how much notice they are given to have this work carried out.

(AQW 33820/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that it would not be their normal policy to allocate a property where the electric meter had been removed. However, if the new tenant preferred a "pay as you go" or "credit type" meter then it would be their responsibility to arrange that with their chosen electricity supplier. The new tenant would be advised of this when signing for the tenancy.

Graffiti: North Down

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the cost to the Housing Executive of removing graffiti from its properties in North Down, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 33835/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that the cost of removing graffiti from its properties in North Down in each of the last three years was as follows:

2011/12	£7,082.40
2012/13	£1,674.11
2013/14	£4,211.17

Northern Ireland Assembly Commission

Parliament Buildings: Local Goods

Mr Dallat asked the Assembly Commission to outline the steps it has taken to ensure contractors engaged in work in Parliament Buildings use and promote local goods and materials.

(AQO 6334/11-15)

Mr P Ramsey (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): While the Commission would be keen to use and promote local goods and materials, EU legislation does not permit us to specify them in the contract. Building Services Branch utilises a local contractor from a DFP framework agreement to carry out the maintenance of Parliament Buildings. Except when framework rules prevent him from doing so, the contractor relies on locally sourced goods and materials for this work.

The Assembly Commission is pleased to have appointed a locally based contractor, Tracey Brothers from Enniskillen, to carry out the repair and refurbishment work to Parliament Buildings roof and associated services. Many of the products used in the project will be locally produced and where that is not possible, local suppliers will be used to source the products.

At this early stage of the project we can confirm that some of the major mechanical and electrical components, including air handling units, solar thermal panels and switchgear panels will be locally manufactured.

Although already part of the previous contract terms and specifications, Support Services once again, at tender stage in 2012, specified that the appointed catering services provider must support the Northern Ireland Assembly policy for sustainability. This is achieved by embedding in its contract and its tender competition the principles of sustainable procurement of fresh and local produces, when possible. This aspect of the contract is continuously monitored as part of the contract monitoring process. For example, in March 2014, some 50% of food products used originated either from Northern Ireland or Ireland. This percentage might be lower than expected by some Members however it is important to note that March is a "winter month", preceding the main growing season for the region.

In terms of promoting non-food items within the Assembly Gift Shop, Support Services, implemented the Crafter Initiative designed to showcase designer makers exclusively from Northern Ireland.

Parliament Buildings: Car Parking

Mr Copeland asked the Assembly Commission whether the car parking facilities at Parliament Buildings meet existing staff and visitor need.

(AQO 6336/11-15)

Mr P Ramsey (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): The Assembly Commission is aware of the difficulties faced by staff and visitors as regards parking at Parliament Buildings, particularly on sitting days, and recognises that the provision of additional car parking spaces would be of benefit. Extensive discussions between Assembly management and DFP have taken place which have resulted in the securing of a further 42 car parking spaces. This has been very well received by all.

Whilst Assembly management will naturally continue to explore further possibilities that might improve the overall situation, DFP have already carried out a broader review of car parking within the Stormont Estate, and they have confirmed that they have no plans at this time to build additional car parks or further develop existing ones.

DFP have indicated however that on particularly busy days, there may be some easing of current parking restrictions on Prince of Wales and Massey Avenues, thus freeing up more car parking space for users of Parliament Buildings. Assembly management will liaise closely with DFP in that regard.

It may also be possible to generate a small increase in car parking space at the rear of Parliament Buildings on completion of the roof project in 2015.

Illegal Dog Breeds: Sale

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the sale of illegal dog breeds in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 33930/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The current legislation regarding the control of dogs here is the Dogs Order 1983, as amended by the Dogs (Amendment) Act 2011, which provides for the licensing of dogs by Councils and other related enforcement matters.

The legislation also designates certain types of dogs that it is an offence to breed from, sell or exchange and (except in exceptional circumstances) to possess. Responsibility for enforcing the Dogs Order rests with Councils.

The four breeds of dogs banned under this legislation are:

- Pit Bull terrier;
- Japanese Tosa;
- Dogo Argentino; and
- Fila Brasileiro.

Councils are not required to supply statistics in relation to the sale of banned dogs to my Department. However, my officials contacted Councils, through their Dogs Advisory Group, and were advised that they are not presently aware of any investigations being carried out regarding the sale of illegal dog breeds.

The NI Courts and Tribunals Service has advised that, since 2007, there has been one prosecution for this offence, however the defendant was found not guilty.

Dangerous Dogs Act 1991

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether his Department plans to reduce or extend the breeds of dog regulated under the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991.

(AQW 33931/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The Dangerous Dogs Order 1991 amended the Dogs Order 1983 to designate four types of dog that it is an offence to breed from, sell or exchange and (except in exceptional circumstances) to possess.

The Dogs Order 1983 was further amended by the Dogs (Amendment) Act 2011. This clarifies the status of any dogs that are exempted from the ban on dogs bred for fighting, and includes measures to promote responsible dog ownership and improve dog control to safeguard the public and other animals.

Given that a comprehensive review of the dog control legislation was undertaken so recently, and the terms of the Dogs (Amendment) Act 2011 were fully considered and agreed by the Agriculture and Rural Development Committee and the Assembly, I have no plans to carry out a further review at this time.

Illegal Dog Breeds: Cross-border Smuggling

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for his assessment of the extent of cross border smuggling of illegal dog breeds.

(AQW 33932/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The current legislation regarding the control of dogs here is the Dogs Order 1983, which provides for the licensing of dogs by Councils and other related enforcement matters. The Dangerous Dogs Order 1991 amended the Dogs Order by banning types of dogs specifically bred for fighting and empowering Courts to order the destruction of these dogs.

This legislation also designates four types of dogs that it is an offence to breed from, sell or exchange and (except in exceptional circumstances) to possess. The four breeds of dogs banned under this legislation are:

- Pit Bull terrier;
- Japanese Tosa;
- Dogo Argentino; and
- Fila Brasileiro.

No concerns have been brought to the attention of my Department in relation to cross border smuggling of banned dog breeds. As Councils are responsible for enforcement of dog control legislation, my officials contacted them through their Dogs Advisory Group. Councils have advised that they do not have any knowledge of this type of activity.

Dangerous Dogs Act 1991

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the effectiveness of the Dangerous Dog Act 1991.

(AQW 34000/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The current legislation regarding the control of dogs here is the Dogs Order 1983, which provides for the licensing of dogs and other related enforcement matters. The Dogs Order was amended by the Dangerous Dogs Order 1991 to designate certain types of dog that it is an offence to breed from, sell or exchange and (except in exceptional circumstances) to possess.

The Dogs Compensation and Exemption Schemes Order 1991 allows for exemptions to the ban on certain types of dog where a District Judge (magistrates' court) is persuaded that a dog, if kept under certain conditions, will pose no danger to the public. A breach of the exemption conditions is likely to lead to the destruction of the dog concerned.

A Review of the dog control legislation, commissioned in 2007, led to the development of a range of policy proposals to address certain ongoing problems, including attacks by dogs on people, livestock and other dogs. That Review considered the views both of those who called for the removal of the prohibition on certain types of dogs and those who supported the prohibition. Given the lack of consensus on this issue, and because breeds such as pit-bull terriers have a high pain threshold and a jaw structure developed specifically for fighting - which means that the risk that they pose to public safety remains qualitatively greater - it was concluded that the prohibition should remain.

Following this Review, the Dogs Order was amended by the Dogs (Amendment) Act 2011. It maintained the ban on the four types of dogs bred for fighting, clarified the status of any dogs that were exempted from the ban on dogs bred for fighting, and included measures to promote responsible dog ownership and improve dog control.

Councils are responsible for enforcing the Dogs Order and I am not aware of concerns about its effectiveness in this area. Given that a comprehensive review of the dog control legislation has been undertaken so recently, and that the terms of the Dogs (Amendment) Act 2011 were fully considered and agreed by the Agriculture and Rural Development Committee and the Assembly, I have no current plans to carry out a further review.

Rural Development Programme

Mr Anderson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the projects in Upper Bann that currently receive funding from the Rural Development Programme.

(AQW 34030/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Under various funding measures of the Rural Development Programme there are currently a number of projects being implemented in the Upper Bann area with financial support of around £5.78m awarded, these are:-

Axis 1

- Measure 1.1: Under the Focus Farms and Supply Chain Development (Training) 2 projects have been awarded Letters of Offer totalling £99k.
- Measure 1.2: Under the Agricultural and Forestry Processing and Marketing Grant Scheme 6 projects have been awarded Letters of Offer totalling £1.6m.
- Measure 1.3: Under the Tranche 3 extension of the Farm Modernisation Programme 2 farm businesses have been awarded Letters of Offer totalling £6k.
- Measure 1.4: Under Supply Chain Development 1 project has been awarded Letters of offer totalling £13k

Axis 2

- Measure 2.1: Less Favoured Areas Compensatory Allowance scheme, 107 projects have been awarded Letters of Offer totalling £88k
- Measure 2.2: Agri-Environment Programme, 322 projects have been awarded Letters of Offer totalling £508k
- Measure 2.3 and 2.4: Afforestation/Forest Environments, 67 projects have been awarded Letters of Offer totalling £78k

Axis 3

- Measure 3.1: diversification into non-agricultural activities 6 projects have been awarded Letters of Offer totalling £199.6k
- Measure 3.2: business creation and development 5 projects have been awarded Letters of Offer totalling £172.7k
- Measure 3.3: encouragement of tourist activities 3 projects have been awarded Letters of Offer totalling £362.4k
- Measure 3.4: basic services for the economy and rural population 16 projects have been awarded Letters of Offer totalling £2.02m
- Measure 3.5: village renewal and development 10 projects have been awarded Letters of Offer totalling £633.7k

Freedom of Information Requests

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the number of Freedom of Information requests she has received in each of the last three financial years; and of these, how many have been considered under Section 12 of the Environmental Information Regulations, rather than the Freedom of Information Act 2000.

(AQW 34052/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The position in the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development is set out in tabular form below:-

Financial Years	Total number of Freedom of Information Act Requests received	Total number of Environmental Information Regulations Requests (EIR) received	Number of EIR requests considered which had a section 12 exception applied
2011 - 2012	212	65	54

Financial Years	Total number of Freedom of Information Act Requests received	Total number of Environmental Information Regulations Requests (EIR) received	Number of EIR requests considered which had a section 12 exception applied
2012 – 2013	194	132	98

Section 12 of the Environmental Regulations 2004 sets out a number of exceptions to the duty to disclose environmental information. Section 12(3), which prevents the release of personal data where the requester is not the data subject, was the most commonly applied exception during the periods in question.

You may wish to be aware that this information is published in a series of Freedom of Information Annual Reports, although these are compiled on the basis of calendar rather than financial years. The reports can be accessed from the OFMDFM website at: http://www.ofmdfmni.gov.uk/index/improving-public-services/information_management_and_central_advisory_branch/annual-reports-and-statistics.htm”.

DARD: Full Cost Recovery

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether her Department pursues a policy of full cost recovery where costs are incurred against her Department.
(AQW 34119/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The Department operates full cost recovery as the standard approach to setting charges for public services.

In cases where full cost recovery is not likely to be achievable, the normal process would be for the Department to seek the approval of the Department of Finance and Personnel.

Common Agricultural Policy: Reform

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development when she intends to submit a paper to the Executive detailing her proposals on Common Agricultural Policy reform.
(AQW 34122/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I refer the Member to my answer to AQW 33750/11-15.

Hydrogen Sulphide Detectors

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what guidance is provided to farmers in relation to the use of hydrogen sulphide detectors when working with or near slurry.
(AQW 34158/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The Health and Safety Executive for NI advise that Hydrogen Sulphide gas monitors are not a substitute for a safe system of work. My Department advises farmers to follow the HSENI good practice guide on working with slurry, only using a monitor as a backup if desired, and not relying on a monitor at the start of mixing; gas concentration rises so quickly it is dangerous to remain in the building. The message from HSENI is that a monitor will not give adequate warning or time to escape.

More information is available at – http://farmsafe.hseni.gov.uk/will_hydrogen_sulphide_monitors_keep_me_safe_when_working_with_slurry_web.pdf

My Department as part of the Farm Safety Partnership continues to urge all farmers to remain vigilant to the dangers of slurry usage, and to stop and think SAFE before starting any job on the farm. Further information and advice is available on the FarmSafe website (<http://farmsafe.hseni.gov.uk>).

Farm Safe Awareness Courses

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the budget allocated to Farm Safe Awareness courses in (i) 2014; (ii) 2015; and (iii) 2012 and 2013.
(AQW 34161/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Farm Safe Awareness training is funded under the Rural Development Programme. The training programme has been extended for 2014/15 as part of the transition arrangements for the New Rural Development Programme 2014 -2020.

My Department spent £35,168.30 in the year 2012/13 and £154,709.50 in the year 2013/14 on Farm Safe Awareness courses.

For the year 2014/15 my Department has committed £91,495.76 for Farm Safe Awareness courses.

Farm Safe Awareness Courses

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the number of participants who have completed the Farm Safe Awareness course in each of the last three years.

(AQW 34162/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Farm Safe Awareness training is funded under the Rural Development Programme (RDP). The training programme has been extended in 2014/15 as part of the transition arrangements for the New RDP 2014 -2020.

Training on the Farm Safe Awareness programme started in December 2012 and to date 3,575 people have been trained.

53 people were trained in December 2012. From January 2013 to December 2013 a total of 2,179 people were trained and from January 2014 to May 2014 another 1,343 people were trained.

Driver and Vehicle Agency: Job Relocation

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, in light of the recent announcement that 300 employees of the Driver and Vehicle Agency will be made redundant in the near future, whether she will follow the example set by the Minister of the Environment and relocate jobs from within her Department to Coleraine.

(AQO 6374/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: After the announcement was made on 13 March that all vehicle registration and licensing services would be centralised in Swansea, I asked my Permanent Secretary to consider the ways in which my Department could help to facilitate those affected by the announcement. My officials initially carried out a detailed examination of the Department's functions to consider whether there was scope to move specific functions from my Department to Coleraine. That examination bore in mind my decision to relocate my Department's headquarters to Ballykelly and the timeframe for that move which is planned for 2017. In advance of the relocation date my officials have concluded that the current grading mix of specific functions within Headquarters did not match the affected staff in Coleraine and therefore there is no scope to move functions or relocate jobs to Coleraine.

However in line with my agreement to the proposals of the Minister of Environment regarding restrictions on recruitment, promotion and transfer of staff to the grades most affected, my officials have been working to make available posts to DVA staff for transfer. A number of posts have subsequently been identified within my Department and these have been offered to the affected DVA staff in Coleraine.

Regarding affected DVA staff in other locations, the relocation of Forest Service to Fermanagh and Fisheries to South Down from June 2015 may create the scope for some posts becoming available for DVA staff currently located in Enniskillen and Downpatrick and DARD will assist if any opportunities arise in these areas.

I remain committed to doing all that I can in helping all those affected by the decision of the Department of Transport.

Single Farm Payment: Distribution

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail "the political process" in which she claims to be involved with a view to getting agreement on the future distribution of Single Farm Payments, including the date and nature of each meeting.

(AQW 34399/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: As I have indicated in response to recent Assembly Questions, the allocation under Pillar 1 of the CAP of almost €2 billion of taxpayers' money over the remainder of this decade has to be considered very carefully, with final decisions representing a fair and balanced outcome. Political discussions are ongoing in relation to the remaining key policy issues and it is my intention to bring proposals on these matters to the Executive for final agreement in the coming weeks. The issue of CAP reform has been discussed at a significant number of meetings held at political level. If the member would like to participate in this process of dialogue I am happy to meet with him at a mutually convenient time.

Single Farm Payment: Flat Rate

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the impact that the introduction of a flat rate of Single Farm Payment will have on the number of people employed in, or making a living from, farming.

(AQO 6370/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I cannot project how the introduction of a flat rate direct support payment model might affect the pace of long term and on-going restructuring of the agricultural industry. It is clear the move towards a flat rate payment regime will cause significant redistribution of support by altering the level of direct payments that individual farmers receive. Economists from the Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute carried out an assessment of the production impacts of moving to a flat rate payment regime. Their results indicated that a move to flat rate support had a minimal production impact on most agricultural sectors. However, this modelling work did not examine the impact on agricultural structures or employment.

If we look back over the last 20-30 years, through fluctuations in farm income and repeated, sometimes radical, reforms of the CAP, the rate of structural adjustment in the local agricultural industry has been relatively constant. There is no evidence to suggest that this latest reform will markedly change the long term rate of structural adjustment. However, the pace of transition towards flat rate support and the ability of farm businesses to adjust to this change are important factors in relation to the financial stability of farm business at least in the short term.

Cattle Movement: Penalties

Mr Girvan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what discussions she has had with the Northern Ireland Meat Exporters Association in relation to the penalties that are imposed for four or more movements of cattle.

(AQO 6376/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I met with NIMEA on 24 February 2014 to discuss the concerns about beef prices and the new pricing mechanism. At that time they indicated that the changes were in response to market requirements but they would consider deferring introduction of the changes. NIMEA did delay these changes, however, I am aware that some plants have now introduced penalties for cattle which have had 4 or more residencies.

Clearly, robust traceability is the cornerstone of our beef industry. However, it is not fair that farmers who bought animals in good faith should be penalised by these changes in this difficult trading environment. I want to see a profitable and sustainable local beef industry with farmers seeing a fair return for their efforts.

I am encouraging all elements of the supply chain to work together. To that end, I am planning to meet again with processors, and with retailers, in the coming weeks to discuss the impact the changes are having on the farming industry and the marts, and to explore what role they can play in achieving a successful resolution to the current difficulties in the beef sector.

In the meantime, my Department is offering practical support to help address some of the issues facing this sector. As part of our customer service we can provide herd keepers with a report on the movement history of all cattle in their herd. This information can help farmers to decide if their cattle meet the processors' specifications. DARD can also help facilitate more co-operation and collaboration in beef supply chains, and provide training and advice to improve efficiency in the chain.

Young Farmers

Mr Boylan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, following her recent announcement at the Balmoral Show, to outline the measures she will put in place for young farmers.

(AQO 6377/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: From 2015, young farmers will be able to access support under the Young Farmers' Scheme and from the Regional Reserve under Pillar I. The European Regulations require that young farmers must be no more than 40 in the year of first application and setting up as head of holding for the first time, or have had already set up as such during the five years preceding their first application. At the Balmoral Show, I announced that 2% of the direct payments budget, about €6.5m per annum, will be allocated to the Young Farmers' Scheme. The level of payment received by a young farmer will be based on 25% of the total direct payments regional average per hectare (€84/ha) and limited to 90ha per applicant. A Level II qualification in agriculture (or related subject containing at least a farm business management module) will also be a requirement. I announced that a Level II qualification in agriculture will also be a requirement for young farmers and new entrants to receive awards from the Regional Reserve.

I have asked CAFRE to provide the necessary courses to enable young farmers who do not have this qualification to obtain them within a relatively short period.

In April, I announced that entitlements will be allocated to farmers in 2015 who never held SFP entitlements previously but who can submit verifiable evidence that on 15 May 2013, they produced, reared or grew agricultural products. This will allow those young farmers who commenced farming after 2005 but have never held SFP entitlements to receive an allocation of entitlements in 2015 if they are not in a position to receive support from the Regional Reserve.

As the development of my Rural Development Programme continues, I am also looking at ways in which the needs of young farmers can be accommodated.

Flooding

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on her Department's work to reduce the impact of future flooding.

(AQO 6378/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: While continued investment in flood alleviation has reduced the risk of flooding to people and property, a significant element of risk remains. Rivers Agency is taking forward a programme of flood alleviation schemes which seeks to maximise the benefit of flood protection to people and property. The most significant of these is the flood alleviation work associated with the Greenway Project in East Belfast, which when completed, will provide protection to some 1,700 properties.

Rivers Agency officials have been working with other departments and key stakeholders for some months now in preparing proposals for an Individual Property Protection Scheme for people in the north of Ireland. These proposals will be the key vehicle for providing funding assistance to residents to improve protection against flooding for their properties. To underpin these measures, Rivers Agency carries out inspections to designated watercourses and culvert inlet grilles. The timing of these inspections is dependent on the likely maintenance requirements, drainage impact and flood risk.

Rural Development Programme

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the current status of the Rural Development Programme 2014-2020.

(AQO 6379/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Good progress has been made in developing the proposals for the 2014-2020 Rural Development Programme. A public consultation was carried out on DARD's proposals for the future programme between July and October last year. There was considerable interest in the consultation and my department's response has been published on the DARD website. As part of the public consultation we also sought views on the Equality Impact Assessment and the Strategic Environmental Assessment.

A Stakeholder Consultation Group was established in November 2012 to provide a forum for key stakeholders to discuss and influence the development of the next programme. This Stakeholder Group has met seven times and my officials will continue to work with this Group to develop the proposals further over the next few months.

My officials are discussing the proposed content of the next programme informally with the EU Commission prior to formal submission later this year.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on her Department's implementation plans for the Common Agricultural Policy.

(AQO 6380/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: A CAP Reform Programme board was established in January 2012 to take forward the implementation of both Pillar 1 direct payments and Pillar 2 rural development.

Five projects report to this Board. Two focus on the development of policy for Pillars 1 and 2. Two projects focus on the development of delivery arrangements for area-based schemes and the remainder of the Pillar 2 schemes respectively. The final project is tasked with development of the Farm Advisory Service in line with EU regulation to provide advice to farmers applying to farm-based schemes.

I am planning to open Direct Payment area-based schemes for application in 2015.

Work is ongoing to develop a draft Rural Development Programme in consultation with Stakeholders for submission to the EU for approval later this year.

My Department will deliver a Farm Advisory System which will provide farm businesses with advice, training and support to meet their obligations as part of the new CAP Reform.

Tree Diseases

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on her efforts to prevent the spread of tree diseases.

(AQO 6381/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: A CAP Reform Programme board was established in January 2012 to take forward the implementation of both Pillar 1 direct payments and Pillar 2 rural development.

Five projects report to this Board. Two focus on the development of policy for Pillars 1 and 2. Two projects focus on the development of delivery arrangements for area-based schemes and the remainder of the Pillar 2 schemes respectively. The final project is tasked with development of the Farm Advisory Service in line with EU regulation to provide advice to farmers applying to farm-based schemes.

I am planning to open Direct Payment area-based schemes for application in 2015.

Work is ongoing to develop a draft Rural Development Programme in consultation with Stakeholders for submission to the EU for approval later this year.

My Department will deliver a Farm Advisory System which will provide farm businesses with advice, training and support to meet their obligations as part of the new CAP Reform.

Less-favoured Area Land

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the effectiveness of measuring less-favoured area land by electoral ward.

(AQO 6382/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The methodology defined by the Rural Development Regulation (EU) No 1305/2013 and EU Commission guidance for the designation of Areas of Natural Constraint is prescriptive. The Regulation requires compliance "at the level of local administrative units ("LAU2" level) or at the level of a clearly delineated local unit which covers a single clear contiguous geographical area with a definable economic and administrative identity". This derives from a World Trade Organisation obligation and requires designation at the electoral ward or townland level.

Designation is a two stage process, the first stage being the application of prescribed biophysical criteria to eligible agricultural land to identify those administrative units affected by biophysical constraints and the second a fine tuning exercise to remove those administrative units where it can be demonstrated that the constraint has been overcome. Some flexibilities exist within the second stage with regard to the data that may be used. However, the application of fine tuning is mandatory.

Significant work has been carried out to date on the application of the methodology contained within the Rural Development Regulation and guidance from the EU Commission. Preliminary results were published on the DARD website in December 2013 for information. Work on the designation of Areas of Natural Constraint is ongoing and my officials are currently seeking clarification from the EU Commission on a number of detailed issues.

Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure

World War I: Commemoration Funding

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline any plans she has to open a funding stream for community groups who wish to commemorate the centenary of the Great War.

(AQO 6389/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): An extensive range of events, exhibitions and initiatives aimed at commemorating the First World War has been and continues to be funded by DCAL, its ALBs and funded organisations. DCAL will also continue to support 'Creative Centenaries' which provides a suite of resources and an online platform to showcase events and activities related to the Decade of Centenaries. The Department will continue to coordinate and maximise the impact and reach of such initiatives and opportunities to enhance community involvement.

I plan to meet with the Community Relations Council and Heritage Lottery Fund to explore further ways to work together to promote the Decade. DCAL will continue to work with other stakeholders to explore opportunities to promote and enhance funding opportunities for community organisations to deliver projects at a local level to commemorate the Decade of Centenaries including World War I.

DCAL has and will continue to play a key role in telling the stories and different interpretations of the First World War and other important events from this Decade of Centenaries. Other government departments also need to consider how they can play their part.

Driver and Vehicle Agency: Job Relocation

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, in light of the recent announcement that 300 employees of the Driver and Vehicle Agency will be made redundant in the near future, whether she will follow the example set by the Minister of the Environment and relocate jobs from within her Department to Coleraine.

(AQO 6390/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: DCAL is a small department with approximately 300 staff and the mix of grades and specialisms of these staff presents limited opportunity to assist in the redeployment of the surplus DVA staff who are mostly Administrative Assistants (AAs) and Administrative officers (AOs). I do nevertheless affirm my Department's support, where possible, in assisting with the redeployment of the DVA staff.

My officials will continue to work collaboratively with Corporate HR in the Department of Finance and Personnel and other Departments to accommodate surplus staff using NICS vacancy management and staff redeployment processes.

My Department is also committed to maximising the impact of the City of Culture 2013 year and tackling socio-economic challenges across the North West of Ireland. My new North West Office will coordinate this commitment. And I have made a bid to the Executive for additional funding which will determine the level of staffing for this office.

Museum Visits

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, in light of the Triennial Review into participation in culture, arts and leisure showing that 55 per cent of young people visited a national museum last year, what action she is taking to increase this figure.

(AQO 6391/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am pleased that the 'Young Persons' Behaviour and Attitudes Survey' which the member refers to has shown an increase in the number of young people visiting a National Museum from 46% in 2007 to 55% in 2013. The Annual Continuous Household Survey also shows an increase amongst all individuals from 24% in 2007/08 to 35% in 2013/14.

This has been possible as a result of the increased outreach work that National Museums has undertaken amongst young people particularly those from socially deprived backgrounds.

In the last financial year I was pleased to provide an additional £306k which allowed National Museums to take forward 18 projects targeted at those most in need. These initiatives have been a success with almost 14,000 people attending and taking part in the different projects.

This excellent work was recognised last week when National Museums won two awards at the DCAL Learning Forum. These awards recognised creative approaches to education and lifelong learning.

In the coming financial year National Museums is focused on attracting visitors from the 20% most deprived areas in the north; including providing free admission to paid-for sites for 5,000 households and an aim to achieve 35-40% audiences from lower income households as well as increasing access to collections and outreach engagement initiatives. National Museums will also deliver 45,000 formal learning visitor events. 7,000 of these are for children from areas of multiple deprivation.

In the coming year National Museums also plan to develop a range of new strategies aimed at increasing general participation in the Museums Sector.

However more can be done and the challenge that I have set The Trustees is to find new and innovative ways of reaching and meaningfully engaging with those who do not traditionally come to museums.

Ulster-Scots Agency: Belfast

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure whether the Ulster Scots Agency's budget for 2012/13 has been approved.

(AQO 6392/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The North South Language Body's budget is based in the calendar year, 1 January to 31 December. The budget for 2012 has been agreed and approved. The 2013 budget has not yet been approved.

Public Services: Provision

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how her Department and its arm's-length bodies will work with the new super councils in the provision of public services.

(AQO 6393/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department will work in partnership with the new councils to advocate and integrate the valuable contribution that culture, arts and leisure can make to people's lives. This will support local social and economic development and maximise the impact and reach of public services and particularly to areas and groups of greatest need.

I will personally play an active role in partnership arrangements being brought forward by the Executive to enhance strategic cooperation between central and local government.

I have directed my officials to further develop a programme of engagement with local communities across the north and to help build effective partnerships between the DCAL family and the new councils. This will support community planning and joined-up approaches to social and economic development.

Enniskillen Library: Relocation

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for her assessment of the potential benefits of relocating Enniskillen Library to the old Erne Hospital site and sharing with other public sector services such as the new build for the South West College.

(AQO 6394/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Libraries NI is currently developing a business case aimed at securing resources for the development of a new and improved public library in Enniskillen. The possibility of moving the existing branch library to the old Erne Hospital site and sharing with other public sector services, like South West Regional College, is being considered as an option in the appraisal process alongside other options such as redevelopment on the present site.

While I consider there may be potential benefits to be gained from relocating Enniskillen Library to the old hospital site, it is not possible at this point to provide a full assessment of these as the business case is not yet completed. Moreover, any benefits that may be identified will need to be balanced against benefits that might emerge from other options including the library remaining at its present location.

Sandy Row Boxing Club

Mr Cree asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the grants awarded to Sandy Row Boxing Club in each of the last two years.

(AQO 6395/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Sport NI, an arm's-length body of my Department has a responsibility for the general provision of funding for the development of sport in the north of Ireland, including boxing.

As part of this, Sport NI established the Lottery funded Boxing Investment Programme to meet the needs of boxing, with a clear focus on improving facilities and building capacity in the sport. Sandy Row Amateur Boxing Club (ABC) was eligible to submit an expression of interest for this funding; however, in order to progress to the next stages of the programme, all clubs, including Sandy Row ABC, were required to be affiliated to a recognised governing body. This is a standard requirement for all Sport NI funding programmes.

Therefore, Sandy Row ABC was not eligible to receive funding, and consequently, in each of the last two years, Sport NI has not awarded any grants to Sandy Row Amateur Boxing Club.

I have offered to meet with Sandy Row ABC on several occasions. To date the club has not taken up this offer which remains open to them.

Walking

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline her proposals to promote walking as a leisure activity. (AQO 6396/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department through Sport NI and in partnership with DOE and DETI funds Outdoor Recreation NI in support of its outdoor recreation Action Plan 'Our Great Outdoors' 2013-2020. This plan details a range of activity to ensure that outdoor recreation as a leisure activity contributes significantly to healthy lifestyles for local people from all communities; delivers economic growth in the sector through the encouragement of visitor participation at outdoor walking venues; and supports the protection of landscapes and eco-systems for future generations.

The plan highlights the objectives of WALK NI and has set a target through to 2018, to increase the number of quality walks on WALK NI by 10%.

Additionally my Department through its Strategy for sport, Sport Matters, sets out a number of targets specifically designed to increase participation generally in sport and exercise. DCAL's delivery body Sport NI continues to invest heavily in a number of regional consortia of district councils to increase participation in sport and physical activity, including walking.

My Department also maintains and provides access to a total of 18.5 miles of traffic free walking and cycling routes, along towpaths and in regional parks and water recreation sites which provide a variety of riverside walking routes.

Ulster-Scots Agency: Budget

Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what discussions she has had with the Ulster-Scots Agency about extra resource and finance. (AQO 6397/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: There are established financial processes and procedures in place for North South Implementation Bodies and the Ulster-Scots Agency is aware of these.

I understand that there are ongoing discussions between the Ulster-Scots Agency and the Sponsor Departments about ways in which the Agency might be able to access additional resources.

The Agency has been asked to provide a business case to enable Sponsor Departments to consider a modest increase in its staffing complement.

The MAGUS and the Agency are working with the Sector to develop a collaborative approach to scoping a Líofo type initiative of Ulster-Scots that will include History, Heritage, Culture and Language.

I have supported a bid for £20K as part of the June monitoring to fund this scoping and development work.

Department of Education

Hospitality: DE

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education what was the total cost of hospitality provided by (i) his Department; and (ii) its arm's-length bodies in 2013/14. (AQW 33797/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): The total cost of hospitality provided in 2013/14 by:

- (i) the Department was £32k; and
- (ii) its arm's-length bodies was £710k.

The 2013/14 figures are based on draft accounts which are in the process of being audited.

Elective Home Education

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Education, in relation to the consultation by Education and Library Boards on Elective Home Schooling, what prompted the Northern Education and Library Board to seek legal advice on this issue; and who provided this legal advice. (AQW 33838/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I understand that in light of legal advice received by one of the Education and Library Boards (ELBs) following litigation in which an issue surrounding home education arose, the ELBs decided to review their arrangements for ensuring that the parents of children and young people who are electively home educated provide an efficient full time education for their children appropriate to their age, ability, aptitude and any special educational needs they may have. The Boards may seek legal advice from in-house experts or through Counsel as may be considered appropriate.

Voting

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education whether his Department has had any discussions with the Electoral Commission, or other organisations, in relation to educating people on the importance of voting.

(AQW 33851/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: While my Department has not had any recent discussions with the Electoral Commission, or other organisations, regarding educating young people on the importance of voting, it does encourage schools to play their part in the electoral registration process by completing the annual returns to the Chief Electoral Officer and by facilitating the visits to schools of Electoral Office staff.

Throughout the curriculum there are also a number of opportunities for pupils to explore and discuss the issue of voting.

Drumadonnell Primary School: Pupil Transport

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Education why school transport has been withdrawn for pupils attending Drumadonnell Primary School who live in Down District area.

(AQW 33919/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I am advised that Drumadonnell Primary School lies within the Southern Education and Library Board (SELB) area, but close to the junction between SELB and the South Eastern Education and Library Board (SEELB). As a result, some SEELB pupils attend Drumadonnell PS. Those SEELB pupils that are eligible have been assisted with transport by SELB on a discretionary basis. However, the number of pupils living in the SELB area requiring transport assistance to Drumadonnell PS will increase from September 2014. This will lead to overcrowding on the SELB bus, which is not permitted. As the SELBs priority is to pupils living within its area, it has written to the families living in the Down District (SEELB) area to advise that it cannot guarantee ongoing discretionary travel on its bus next year. Any displaced eligible pupils attending Drumadonnell PS from the Down District area will, therefore, become the responsibility of SEELB.

Woodlands Speech and Language Unit

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Education to detail the range of opinions expressed in the consultation on the proposal to close Woodlands Speech and Language Unit at the Belmont site in Londonderry.

(AQW 33928/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I approved Development Proposals 233-236 on 16 September 2013. These relocate the current four classes at the Woodlands Unit to two at Ebrington Primary School and two at St Anne's Primary School, both in Derry City, and extend the service by approving two new classes at Ballykelly Primary School.

The Development Proposal submission which includes a summary of the opinions expressed in the consultation is available on the Department of Education website at:-

http://www.deni.gov.uk/dp233-236_woodlands_unit_-_copy_of_submission.pdf

Special Educational Needs: Statements

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education should a Statement of Special Education Needs state that a child requires (i) speech and language therapy; (ii) occupational therapy; and (iii) physiotherapy, to detail (i) the responsibility of the Education and Library Board to provide therapy; and (ii) the timeframe a child can reasonably expect to receive such treatments.

(AQW 33956/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education and Library Boards have advised that, as outlined in the Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs, prime responsibility for the provision of therapeutic services, following the issue of a statement of special educational needs (SEN), rests with health and social services. Where a statement specifies such therapy as educational provision in part three of the statement of SEN and this is not provided by a health authority, ultimate responsibility for ensuring that the provision is made rests with the ELB.

Agencies work together so that this support is provided as soon as possible following the issue of a statement of SEN. However the timeframe in which a child will normally receive therapy support is beyond the immediate control of the ELB.

Occupational Therapist Advice: Schools

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to detail the requirement on schools to act on advice provided by occupational therapists in respect of the support required by a child to meet their education needs.

(AQW 33957/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education and Library Boards have advised that if an occupational therapist recommends a programme of support to be provided by a school there is a legal requirement, as detailed in the Special Educational Needs and Disability

(NI) Order 2005, upon the school that the child is not discriminated against because of their disability. While there is no legal requirement for the school to act on the occupational therapists advice schools do have a responsibility to liaise with therapists to consider their recommendations and in most cases will act on the advice of an occupational therapist.

Long-term Planning: Judgement of Mr Justice Treacy

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education when he will publish his Department's senior counsel's opinion on the Judgement of Mr Justice Treacy on his Department's approach to long-term planning.

(AQW 33962/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Mr Justice Treacy's judgement clarified the scope of the Article 64 (1) of the Education Reform (NI) Order 1989 duty, following a judicial review brought by Drumragh Integrated College. The Court rejected the argument by the Applicants that the Area Planning process was unlawful. Legal opinion provided in relation to the case is privileged and will not be published.

Education Reform: Judgement of Mr Justice Treacy

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education when he will be issuing guidance based on the court judgement of Justice Treacy in relation to Article 64(1) of the Education Reform (NI) Order 1989; and to whom will the guidance be issued.

(AQW 33963/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The court judgement has provided clarity as to whom the Article 64 (1) duty is owed. In light of this clarification I will review the internal guidance to my Officials to ensure this is consistent with the judgement.

Elluminate: Protocol

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Education for an update on the introduction of a protocol to deal with Elluminate.

(AQW 33968/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I understand that development of the protocol is progressing and both management and union side are working to resolve any outstanding issues. This is a complex issue and one that needs time for full consideration from all perspectives to ensure that a workable solution is put in place regarding the use of the Elluminate software.

Elective Home Education

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education, in light of the intention to further regulate Elective Home Education, what assessment has been conducted in respect of achievements and outcomes for children educated in this way; and what was the result of this assessment.

(AQW 33974/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: There is no intention to further regulate home education at the present time. The Education and Library Boards (the Boards) have directly prepared guidance in relation to home education which reflects their existing legislative responsibilities and are currently consulting on that guidance. The outcome of the consultation process will be of assistance in informing any future proposals in this regard.

The Boards have confirmed that they do not undertake assessments of the achievements and outcomes of children who are educated at home.

Elective Home Education: Further Regulation

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education, in light of the intention to further regulate Elective Home Education, why it is appropriate to subject this sector to more frequent inspections than other sectors.

(AQW 33975/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: There is no intention to regulate further home education at present. The Education and Library Boards (the Boards) have directly prepared guidance in relation to home education which reflects their existing legislative responsibilities and are currently consulting on that guidance. The outcome of the consultation process will be of assistance in informing any future proposals in this regard.

The Boards have advised that they do not undertake inspections of home education and that the draft home education guidance document does not include any reference to an inspection process.

Ballee Community High School: NEELB Advice

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 33732/11-15, to provide the letters that the North Eastern Education and Library Board (NEELB) sent to parents of children currently attending Ballee Community High School, who have to now find a new school; and to outline the nature of the advice given by NEELB about the issues to consider when choosing another school and any assistance on admission and transport matters.

(AQW 33976/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The letters sent by NEELB to the parents of children currently attending Ballee Community High School are attached, along with the guidance provided by the Board outlining what to consider when choosing a post-primary school and how to make an application. Alternative schools with places available are also listed.

Teacher:Pupil Ratios

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education what is the local teacher pupil ratio compared to (i) England; (ii) Scotland; and (iii) Wales.

(AQW 34035/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The information is provided in the table below. All figures refer to the 2012/13 school year. Direct comparisons are not advised, as there are differences in the coverage and scope of the data collections.

	NI ¹	England ²	Scotland ³	Wales ⁴
PTR	17.5	17.7	13.8	18.2

Post-primary Schools: Upper Bann

Mr Anderson asked the Minister of Education how many (i) primary; and (ii) post-primary schools in Upper Bann are using mobile classrooms compared to 2010.

(AQW 34038/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Southern Education and Library Board does not normally hold historic detail in relation to the number of mobile classrooms however in 2009 the Department provided this information and it has been included in the table below together with current numbers.

	Number of mobile classrooms in primary schools (i)	Number of mobile classrooms in post primary schools (ii)	Total
April 2009	50	33	83
June 2014	55	36	91

Nursery Places: Upper Bann

Mr Anderson asked the Minister of Education how many applications were received for nursery places in Upper Bann for 2014/15; and how many were unsuccessful.

(AQW 34039/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Pre-School applications process is a preference based system comprising two stages.

The Chief Executive of the Southern Education and Library Board (SELB) has advised that of the 1723 children whose parents stayed with the pre-school application process to the end, only one child remained unplaced.

At the end of stage one of the pre-school applications process, 1757 applications had been received and 1664 children were offered a funded pre-school place. The parents of unplaced children were invited to submit further preferences and advised of a range of providers in the area with places still available.

During Stage two, the parents of 40 unplaced children submitted further preferences and an additional 19 new applications were received. All 40 unplaced children and 18 of the 19 new applications were offered a funded pre-school place during stage two.

Preschool Places: September 2014

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education how many children in each constituency have yet to be allocated a pre-school place for September 2014.

(AQW 34085/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Chief Executives of the Education and Library Boards (ELBs) have advised that 24 children, whose parents engaged fully with the pre-school application process to the end, have yet to be allocated a funded pre-school place.

The table following provides this information on a constituency basis.

Pre-school places remain available in each child's local area, should their parents wish to apply for them. I would, therefore, expect this number to fall in the coming weeks.

Constituency	No. of Children Unplaced – June 2014
East Belfast	13
South Belfast	5
North Down	3
Foyle	3
Total	24

Primary Schools: Places

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education how many children in each constituency have yet to be allocated a primary school place for September 2014.

(AQW 34086/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education and Library Boards advise that as at 16 June 2014, there are 30 children who remain unplaced in the primary school admissions process for September 2014. One of the children is moving to the north of Ireland from England. The constituencies in which the other 29 children reside are listed in the following table:

Constituency	Number
Belfast East	2
Belfast North	3
Belfast South	4
Fermanagh & South Tyrone	3
Lagan Valley	5
Mid Ulster	2
Newry & Armagh	3
North Down	3
South Down	2
Upper Bann	2
Total	29

Schools: Formal Intervention

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the criteria used, and the process followed, to determine whether a school is subject to formal intervention.

(AQW 34087/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I would refer the Member to my answer to AQW 23938/11-15 which he previously tabled and was published in the Official Report on 14 June 2013.

Examination Statistics: Excluding Pupils

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education to outline the rationale for making changes to the criteria for excluding pupils from school examination statistics.

(AQW 34096/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The requirement for the Summary of Annual Examination Results data collection is underpinned by legislation, the Education (School information and prospectuses) Regulations (NI) 2003. Under the above named regulations, post primary schools are required to provide information about public examination performance for the year immediately preceding the publication of the prospectus.

Schedule 3, paragraph 14(c) and 14(d) require schools to report particulars about the performance in public examinations of pupils who on the 31st October of the school year before the school year in which the prospectus is published were enrolled in year 12, year 13 and year 14.

While the current legislation dictates that schools should report on all pupils, the Department has historically, in discussion with schools, provided reasons under which pupils may be recorded as ineligible for inclusion in this data collection. The current list of 8 reasons for ineligibility has been in place since the 2004/05 academic year.

However, during the 2012/13 annual data collection a number of schools raised concerns with Statistics and Research Team regarding the scope and relevance of the current 8 reasons for ineligibility. In response to these concerns the Department formed a working group in January 2014 with a remit to review the current ineligibility criteria and, where appropriate, develop and action short term measures to ensure clarity for schools in the interpretation and scope of the current 8 reasons as well as to develop and action longer term changes.

It is important to emphasise that the criteria under which a pupil may be deemed ineligible in 2013/14 has not changed from the 2012/13 data collection. Rather, the Department has sought to clarify the existing guidance for schools, as it had become apparent that the reasons were being incorrectly interpreted by some schools. Reasons were clarified in the interests of fairness to all schools, in order that there was no ambiguity in the interpretation of their scope.

Education and Training Inspectorate: Collaborative Working Arrangements

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education to outline the collaborative working arrangements between the Education and Training Inspectorate and relevant inspectorates in other jurisdictions.

(AQW 34097/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education and Training Inspectorate (ETI), along with the inspectorates from neighbouring jurisdictions, is a member of the Standing International Conference of Inspectorates (SICI) a European-wide network of educational inspectorates. It also represents the Department of Education in a European network for Special Education.

Since 2008, ETI has had a Memorandum of Understanding to guide working relationships with the Department of Education and Skills (DES) Inspectorate in the South of Ireland.

At a workshop in Cardiff in 2013,, attended by representatives of the educational inspectorates from Scotland, English, Wales, the South of Ireland and the North of Ireland, the inspectorates from Wales and Scotland both asked that links be set up in ETI which would be guided by an MOU similar to that in use with the DES Inspectorate.

It was agreed that Education Scotland would link with ETI in the 2013-2014 academic year and that the Welsh Inspectorate (Estyn) would link with ETI during the 2014-2015 academic year.

Education and Library Boards

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Education (i) how many staff employed by the Education and Library Boards are on the wrong pay band for their job role due to a moratorium imposed because of the Education and Skills Authority project; (ii) when affected staff will be moved to their correct pay band and have their pay harmonised with that of their colleagues; and (iii) when any back pay owed will be calculated and paid.

(AQW 34101/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The moratorium on job evaluation does not relate to the proposal to establish the Education and Skills Authority. It was introduced on 27 November 2007, following the publication of a Public Accounts Committee Report into Job Evaluation in the Education and Library Boards (ELBs).

The Education and Library Boards have advised that there are currently 137 requests to have posts re-evaluated, once the moratorium is lifted.

The moratorium will remain in place until a way forward for job evaluation has been agreed. I understand that negotiations between Management Side and Trade Union Side regarding new job evaluation procedures are ongoing and I have encouraged all parties to actively work together to reach an early agreement on this issue.

ICT Facilities

Mr Hazzard asked Minister of Education what sources of non-departmental funding have been secured by local schools to improve ICT facilities, such as computer suites.

(AQW 34106/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Any decision to apply for non-Departmental funding is a matter for each school and the Department does not hold information on the sources of funding available for, or received by, schools.

GCSE and A-level Irish Language: West Belfast Schools

Ms McCorley asked the Minister of Education to list the schools in West Belfast that offer (i) GCSE; and (ii) A Level Irish language.

(AQW 34108/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The table below sets out the schools in West Belfast that offer Irish at (i) GCSE and (ii) A Level. This is based on the 2013/14 school year information held by the Entitlement Framework Online Audit.

School	GCSE	A Level
Christian Brothers School	Yes	Yes

School	GCSE	A Level
Colaiste Feirste	No – but offer Gaeilge	Yes

Mandarin Language

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Education what plans he has to include the Mandarin language on the statutory curriculum for schools, thereby allowing pupils to choose this as their other language, and to study to GCSE level or equivalent.

(AQW 34111/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Modern languages are a statutory requirement at KS3 and a qualification choice at KS4 and Sixth form. Schools are encouraged to offer a wider range of modern languages, and the curriculum offers schools more flexibility in the choices of subjects they can offer to meet the needs of their pupils. The curriculum has broadened the range of modern languages that schools can now offer so that, instead of being limited to choosing from 5 languages as previously, schools are now able to choose any of the languages of the 27 EU member states to meet the minimum requirement, as well as any other additional languages they wish, including Mandarin/Chinese. The curriculum also includes scope for schools wishing to offer language learning at primary level before it becomes a statutory requirement at Key Stage 3.

Ballee Community High School: Pupil Placements

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 33891/11-15, what checks his Department undertakes to ensure that all the pupils affected have gained a place in another school, and none have been over looked.

(AQW 34113/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Responsibility for ensuring that pupils currently enrolled at Ballee Community High School are placed in other schools rests with the North-Eastern Education and Library Board. The Board is working to ensure that all pupils are suitably placed in advance of the new school year.

The Board has a record of all pupils currently enrolled in Ballee Community High School and is tracking their progress in gaining a place in another school. The principals of schools in the area have been asked to advise the Board of any pupils who have applied to their schools and the status of their applications. The principals have also been asked to bring any issues which arise as a result of the applications to the attention of the Board in order that solutions can be considered.

The Board is recording information gained from parents who telephone for advice or information and wrote on 12th June, to the parents of pupils who have been identified as not yet having made an application to another school. These parents will be offered individual support to complete their application if required.

Schools: Intervention Stage

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to list the schools currently in the intervention stage.

(AQW 34131/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: As at 13 June 2014 the following schools, for which inspection reports have been published, were in formal intervention.

School

|---|---|
| ■ Ballee Community High School, Ballymena | ■ Glenwood Primary School, Belfast |
| ■ Crumlin Integrated College*1 | ■ Harryville Primary School, Ballymena |

*1 These schools have had recent follow-up inspections and the Education and Training Inspectorate has reported that overall the quality of education provided is satisfactory or better. The Department is currently considering whether these schools can exit the Formal Intervention Process.

A list of schools in formal intervention during the current school year is published on the Department of Education website. The list can be accessed via the following link:

http://www.deni.gov.uk/mw_schools_in_the_formal_intervention_process_8_may_2014.pdf

Temporary Classrooms: North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education what steps he will take to reverse the increase in the number of temporary classrooms in North Down.

(AQW 34132/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I utilise all means at my disposal to ensure the capital infrastructure is in place to support the educational needs of pupils. This may include the provision of good quality modular buildings as a way of addressing accommodation deficiencies within a relatively short timescale.

I would emphasise that statutory approvals such as planning and building control require modular accommodation to be provided to the same building performance standards as that of permanent builds.

I would add that in considering projects for inclusion in any major capital investment programme the undue reliance on temporary accommodation within schools is taken into account.

Computer Infrastructure: Upgrade

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Education for an update on the recent transformation process to upgrade the computer infrastructure in schools.

(AQW 34151/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: By Friday 13th June, approximately 70% of schools had their C2k Local Area Network (LAN) upgrade completed, the LAN upgrade being the final part of the transformation process being undertaken in schools.

By the end of June, 77 % will be completed with the remaining schools scheduled for transformation over the summer break. Many of the schools being installed in July and August requested a summer date so that their school could avoid any disruption during the term and C2k and Capita have worked with schools to facilitate this.

C2k System

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 32495/11-15, whether authorisation can be given to Education Welfare Officers to access the C2k system from their place of work, rather than having to physically attend a school to analysis unauthorised absences.

(AQW 34155/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: C2k has actively been pursuing giving Education Welfare Officers (EWOs) access to pupil information, which is currently based on schools C2k servers.

This is a complex area as EWOs require access to multiple servers in schools and C2k must be sure that the best way to do this is identified and that no security risks are taken.

Schools are being transformed to the new services at present and new network services are part of this, so it is important that EWO access is based on the new services. Transformation of all schools to the new services is scheduled to be completed by September 2014 and the Department has been informed that a pilot can only be taken forward after transformation is complete.

C2k propose to conduct the pilot from September 2014 to December 2014.

Ballee Community High School: Closure Impacts

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Education what impact the closure of Ballee Community High School will have on the North Eastern Education and Library Board's Youth Service provision.

(AQW 34160/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The North Eastern Education and Library Board's intention is to continue to provide 'centre based' youth provision at the Ballee Community High School site while the premises remain available to it. Any additional costs against the 'Leader in Charge' role presently covered by the Youth Tutor Post will be covered from the NEELB Youth Service budget

In the area served by the school, the NEELB Youth Service presently operates two other full-time controlled youth units (Ballykeel and Waveney Youth Clubs) along with two full-time Area Youth Worker posts. In addition, it supports twenty-two uniformed youth groups and thirteen part-time youth groups, which operate on various evenings each week.

Middletown Centre for Autism

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of (i) pupils; (ii) parents; and (iii) professionals from (a) Northern Ireland; and (b) the Republic of Ireland, supported by the Middletown Centre in each of the last three years. (AQW 34169/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Chief Executive of the Middletown Centre for Autism (MCA) has confirmed that the number of pupils, parents and professionals who have been supported by MCA, in each of the last three financial years, in the north and south of Ireland, is as follows:

	Pupils North	Pupils South	Parents North	Parents South	Professionals North	Professionals South
2011/12	10	0	710	1,854	3,171	2,180
2012/13	10	0	597	2,261	3,331	2,024
2013/14	33	0	895	6,410	2,962	4,495

Teachers: Redundancies

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education what is the current projected number of teacher redundancies over the next three years, broken down by (i) sector; and (ii) Education and Library Board.

(AQW 34171/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department does not project the number of teacher redundancies. It is a matter for Boards of Governors, in conjunction with Employing/Funding Authorities, to decide if teacher redundancies are required within their school taking into account all relevant information, including projected enrolments and budgetary position.

'British Values': Promotion in Schools

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education whether he plans to follow Michael Gove's plans to promote 'British values' in schools. (AQW 34201/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I have no plans to make any changes to this area of the curriculum at this time.

Examination Statistics: Excluding Pupils

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education how many pupils have been excluded from school examination statistics, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34202/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The information requested is in the table below:

Year 12 pupils ineligible for inclusion in Summary of Annual Examination Results returns.

	Number of year 12 pupils - Annual School Census	Number of pupils ineligible for inclusion in Summary of Annual Examination Results returns	% of pupils ineligible for inclusion in Summary of Annual Examination Results returns
2008/09	24,444	1,123	4.6
2009/10	24,244	1,043	4.3
2010/11	23,858	1,356	5.7
2011/12	23,382	1,488	6.4
2012/13	24,343	1,650	6.8

Mandarin: Qualified Teachers

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education how many teachers are qualified to teach Mandarin.
(AQW 34203/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The General Teaching Council (GTCNI) assesses the qualifications of teachers for the purposes of registration. I have been advised that it does not have a record of any registered teacher currently holding a qualification in Mandarin.

A teacher who holds a recognised teaching qualification and is registered with the GTCNI is able to teach a range of subjects in any grant-aided school. It is possible that individual teachers can speak Mandarin and may therefore be able to teach it. Employers should ensure that such individuals are appropriately trained.

Elective Home Education

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Education to detail the inspection process of the Elective Home Education system.
(AQW 34220/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The home education system is not subject to an inspection process.

Whilst the Education and Training Inspectorate provides inspection services for a number of organisations it does not undertake inspections of home education provision.

The Boards have also advised that they do not undertake inspections of home education.

C2k: Attendance Records

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 32495/11-15, when Education Welfare Officers will be able to access C2k attendance records from their own offices in order to have access to live attendance records.
(AQW 34278/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: C2k has actively been pursuing giving Education Welfare Officers (EWOs) access to pupil information, which is currently based on schools C2k servers.

This is a complex area as EWOs require access to multiple servers in schools and C2k must be sure that the best way to do this is identified and that no security risks are taken.

Schools are being transformed to the new services at present and new network services are part of this, so it is important that EWO access is based on the new services. Transformation of all schools to the new services is scheduled to be completed by September 2014 and the Department has been informed that a pilot can only be taken forward after transformation is complete.

C2k propose to conduct the pilot from September 2014 to December 2014.

World War I: Schools Commemoration

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Education, following the Prime Minister's announcement that all secondary schools in England would receive support to ensure that children and a teacher could go to battlefield sites to commemorate the hundredth anniversary of the First World War, what plans are in place for schools here to do likewise.
(AQW 34361/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department delegates as much funding and decision-making as possible to schools which are best placed to assess the needs of their pupils and we take the view that it is very much a matter for schools themselves to reach a judgement on programmes or visits they wish to participate in to enhance their teaching and learning.

I therefore have no plans to assist post-primary schools that wish to visit First World War battlefields to commemorate the hundredth anniversary of the First World War – such a decision will be a matter for each school.

Department for Employment and Learning

Extraordinary Ventures of North Carolina

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether he is aware of the work of the not-for-profit organisation Extraordinary Ventures of North Carolina who are creating employment opportunities for young adults with developmental disabilities, including those on the autism spectrum; and if he intends to bring forward a similar scheme to help local people who suffer from this disorder to find employment.
(AQW 33777/11-15)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): My Department was not aware of Extraordinary Ventures until now. It is worth noting that there are a number of similar employment operations being delivered throughout Northern Ireland, primarily through the social enterprise business model. Indeed, my Department, through the European Social Fund and the Disability Employment Service is directly supporting some of these schemes. Specifically, there are social enterprise businesses in operation that are providing services and products such as; catering and hospitality, arts and crafts, business administration support, as well as a very successful bottle sorting operation in Belfast. The common factor amongst all these social enterprise organisations is that they are directly employing people with disabilities, and specifically people with learning difficulties and those on the autism spectrum.

The Department for Employment and Learning is delighted to support such initiatives and will continue to encourage similar models of best practice.

The Department's Disability Employment Service has extensive experience of working in partnership with a number of local organisations engaged in training adults with developmental disabilities, including those on the autistic spectrum and helping them move into and retain employment. Examples of effective partnership projects include; the design and publication of an employer booklet with The National Autistic Society; work with Queens University Autism Research and Treatment Centre, (QUART) to evaluate the Orchardville and NOW Project Able programme; developing referral and signposting partnerships with Specialisterne, a new Community Interest Company dedicated to providing IT job opportunities for people on the autistic spectrum; and working with the Northern Health and Social Care Trust to establish an Adult Autism Advisory Service in the Northern Trust Region.

During the past two years, staff from the Disability Employment Service have worked very closely with local disability organisations and a number of employers to secure ring-fenced recruitment and employment opportunities for people with disabilities. This initiative resulted in a considerable number of successful job outcomes for the target applicant group, including people with autism or Asperger's syndrome. It is critical that the Department, in conjunction with its partner organisations, tries to maximise the breadth of employment opportunities available to people with disabilities, and the ultimate aim is to help those who are capable of doing so, to secure employment in the open labour market where they become a valued member of a fully inclusive and diverse workforce.

Finally, the department's Occupational Psychology Service is currently working with colleagues from Analytical Services to examine research literature and rehabilitation projects on an international basis. This will provide greater opportunity to identify initiatives such as Extraordinary Ventures that may inform the service delivery landscape of the future.

Hospitality: DEL

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what was the total cost of hospitality provided by (i) his Department; and (ii) its arm's-length bodies in 2013/14.

(AQW 33831/11-15)

Dr Farry: The total cost of hospitality provided by the Department in 2013/14 was £44,009. The total cost of hospitality provided by the Department's arm's-length bodies in 2013/14 was £155,257.

Voting

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what discussions his Department has had with the Electoral Commission in relation to educating college students on the importance of voting.

(AQW 33847/11-15)

Dr Farry: My Department has not had any discussions with the Electoral Commission in relation to educating college students on the importance of voting. However, Colleges NI, the membership body for the further education colleges in Northern Ireland, has had contact with the Electoral Office for NI over the years. In this respect, they have provided contact details for each of the six colleges. Subsequently, staff from the Electoral Office have attended 'fresher'/open days at the colleges to promote their role and to educate students. As part of their student services, all colleges offer information on topics which are considered beneficial to students.

This year, one of the principal aims of the Electoral Commission's Communications Policy in Northern Ireland was to increase the number of eligible people registered to vote and to provide information on upcoming elections.

It is a matter for individual colleges how they organise these contacts, for example, South Eastern Regional College's (SERC) Student Union held Voter Registration Days during Refreshers Week in February this year, in line with the NUS-USI campaign. SERC invited Electoral Office staff into each campus where students could register to vote, and electoral officers also informed students of the benefits and importance of voting. I understand there was a very positive uptake at these events.

In addition, the Electoral Office for NI has accessed contact information on full-time students in the colleges and has used this to write to students to encourage them to register to vote.

Disabled Students' Allowance: Review

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether there will be any changes to the support provided for students with a disability following a decision by his Great Britain counterpart to undertake a review of the Disabled Students' Allowance.

(AQW 33951/11-15)

Dr Farry: I have no current plans to undertake a review or change the student financial support offered to Northern Ireland domiciled students applying for, or in receipt of, Disabled Students' Allowances.

I can further advise that my Department will offer the following Disabled Students' Allowance support package for academic year 2014/15: A specialist equipment allowance of up to £5,266 for the whole course; a non-medical helper's allowance of up to £20,938 per year; a general allowance of up to £1,759 per year to help towards other disability related spending such as printer cartridges and Braille paper; and, any extra travel costs the student may have to pay to attend University or College because of their disability.

Belfast Metropolitan College

Mr Newton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what progress he has made regarding the development of a new build for the Belfast Metropolitan College campus on Montgomery Road, Belfast.

(AQW 33979/11-15)

Dr Farry: I have met with the Senior Management team from Belfast Metropolitan College and I am aware that they have plans for the Castlereagh campus on Montgomery Road. Approval has been granted to the College to prepare a Strategic Outline Case (SOC). This will provide a high level analysis of the plans and supply initial estimates of capital costs. The college has advised that the SOC is expected to be submitted to my Department by the end of June 2014.

Until the Strategic Outline Case is received and assessed, I am unable to provide further information.

Freedom of Information Requests

Mr Rogers asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of Freedom of Information requests he has received in each of the last three financial years; and of these, how many have been considered under Section 12 of the Environmental Information Regulations, rather than the Freedom of Information Act 2000.

(AQW 33988/11-15)

Dr Farry: The number of Freedom of Information requests received by the Department in each of the last three financial years is set out in the table below. One request was considered under the Environmental Information Regulations, but not under Regulation 12.

Year	Number of Requests Received	Number of Requests Considered Under EIRs
2012/13	132	1

The statistical information concerning requests dealt with under Freedom of Information and Environmental Information Regulations is combined within a series of published Freedom of Information Annual Reports; these are on the basis of calendar years rather than financial years. The reports can be accessed from the OFMDFM website at:

http://www.ofmdfmni.gov.uk/index/improving-public-services/information_management_and_central_advisory_branch/annual-reports-and-statistics.htm

The Member should note that statistics for 2013 are provided on a quarterly basis and cannot be regarded as validated until the publication of the 2013 FOI Annual Report.

National Minimum Wage

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps are taken by his Department to ensure that workers are not paid less than the minimum wage.

(AQW 34013/11-15)

Dr Farry: The Department does not have specific policy responsibility in relation to the National Minimum Wage (NMW). The enforcement of breaches of NMW legislation is the responsibility of Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs (HMRC) who carry out this function on behalf of the Great Britain Department for Business, Innovation and Skills. HMRC's remit extends to Northern Ireland in this respect.

The Department's Employment Agency Inspectorate, which enforces the regulations governing the private recruitment sector, does however liaise with HMRC colleagues in instances where there are concerns about agency workers who may not be receiving NMW.

Marine Environment: Welders

Mr Newton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what action he is taking to provide training to address the need to upskill individuals who may secure jobs as welders through short term marine contracts.

(AQW 34218/11-15)

Dr Farry: My Department is currently working with Harland and Wolff and Belfast Metropolitan College to address the need for highly skilled welders in the marine environment. Based on the academy model, which has been successfully used to meet demand for skills in the ICT sector, this pilot exercise will provide the opportunity for unemployed people with relevant background skill sets and aptitude to enhance those skills to meet the specific needs of Harland and Wolff. These specialist welding skills can also have application to the broader advanced engineering sector.

Harland and Wolff has a crucial role to play in articulating the high-specification skills required if the individuals are to get the training they will need to operate effectively. Belfast Metropolitan College has both the expertise and facilities to provide that training. It is also hoped that the training can include experience of the type of practical working environment trainees would find in employment, rather than being purely workshop based.

Work on the project is at an early stage and issues such as initial numbers to be trained and timescale remain to be addressed, but all parties involved believe this is an excellent opportunity to address skills shortages in this specialism.

Employment and Regeneration: Strabane

Ms Boyle asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for her assessment of the type of business and industry that will create employment and regenerate Strabane, given the areas historic reliance on the textile industry.
(AQW 33821/11-15)

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): Invest NI has identified food & drink, tourism, ICT & electronics, financial services, life sciences, materials handling and aerospace as sectors in which Northern Ireland has existing capability. Sectors in which Northern Ireland has the potential to develop are creative industries, renewable and sustainable development.

Invest NI provides a wide range of advisory and financial support to help business grow. In the five year period 2008/09–2012/13 Invest NI made 284 offers of support totalling over £5million of assistance in Strabane District Council area. This contributed towards approximately £30million of investment, which promoted 481 new jobs in the Strabane District Council area. Almost 90% of these offers were made to locally-owned businesses, which accounted for 65% of the assistance offered in the area and 70% of the investment planned by these projects.

Invest NI's Jobs Fund has provided support to 21 businesses in the area, promoting 63 jobs (2011-2013) including a £2million investment by Frylite Limited which will bring a further 19 jobs to Strabane in the Food sector.

Invest NI works closely with Strabane Council to provide support in the area through a range of initiatives including the Local Economic Development measure. These include a suite of tailored mentoring support programmes to improve the capability of local businesses in the areas of Sales Growth, Financial Management and Procurement.

Support is also available through the Regional Start Initiative which is designed to support locally focussed entrepreneurs into self employment.

Invest NI also promotes Northern Ireland as an attractive and viable location for new inward investment opportunities. Key target sectors are ICT, business services, financial services and renewables. It also works with existing investors to grow and expand in Northern Ireland. A recent example of this is Allstate (a major US ICT company) which announced plans to create 650 new jobs across its three sites in Strabane, Londonderry and Belfast.

Textiles still has an important role to play in the area illustrated by the success of O'Neills which announced a £3million expansion project, with £322,000 support from Invest NI. As a result the company plans to create a further 61 jobs in the area.

Small Businesses: North Down

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether InvestNI have any plans to organise a conference to provide information on the grants available to small businesses in the North Down area.
(AQW 33822/11-15)

Mrs Foster: My Department and Invest NI provide information on grants available to small businesses in the North Down area on an ongoing basis and also offer a wide range of initiatives to provide support and guidance.

For example, the Regional Start Initiative is free to participants and offers the services of a business advisor to support the development of a business plan.

In addition, Invest NI's Business Support Team (contact 0800 181 4422) and www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk provide a valuable source of business information and signposting to relevant, specialist advice.

Moreover Invest NI is planning a series of pop up offices across Northern Ireland. These pop ups provide an opportunity for local businesses to avail of advice and guidance and to hear about the support Invest NI can offer. Dates and locations of the pop ups are to be confirmed.

Invest NI's Executive Director, Bill Scott, is due to meet the new Chief Executive for the North Down and Ards area in July and will discuss the potential to further address this issue with him.

Cross-border Initiatives

Mr Byrne asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the current cross-border initiatives aimed at boosting job creation in border towns such as Strabane.

(AQW 33857/11-15)

Mrs Foster: InterTradelreland is responsible for cross border trade and business development, and it does this through a wide range of trade and innovation initiatives. It also supports companies in taking advantage of and making full use of cross border co-operative opportunities to improve capability and drive competitiveness, jobs and growth.

You will also be aware, from the recent adjournment debate on 3 June, about Invest NI and its role in providing a wide range of support to encourage investment in Strabane and the West Tyrone Constituency area. Invest NI continues to be proactive in its efforts to help local businesses develop and grow through important interventions and programmes such as, the Regional Start Initiative, the Boosting Business Programme and the Jobs Fund which helps to create jobs quickly.

As we await confirmation of Invest NI's 2013/14 figures, I can confirm that in Strabane alone, the Jobs Fund has promoted 91 jobs with 72 jobs created from its launch in 2011 to December, 2013. Other examples include O'Neill's International Sports Company Limited and Frylite Limited which are jointly expected to bring a combined 80 jobs to the area, are very welcome.

Invest NI also provide support to Strabane District Council with a range of new initiatives under the Local Economic Development measure, designed to improve the capability of local businesses.

Invest NI: Return Investment

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether InvestNI target companies, who have previously held contracts outside Northern Ireland, receive assistance to regain this business and return investment to Northern Ireland.

(AQW 33945/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest NI provides a wide range of assistance to help local businesses access international markets and secure sales outside Northern Ireland. It works with businesses at each stage of the exporting journey, offering a range of Trade Solutions. These solutions range from early-stage export skills development programmes and access to market intelligence, through to financial assistance toward overseas travel, exhibitions and Trade Missions, along with export-focused market visits. Also, assistance is available toward the costs of procuring legal advice and translation services. While we seek to meet the needs of any business targeting export sales, it is the company that will pursue specific contracts and sales opportunities. Invest NI does not get involved in specific contract negotiations.

Invest NI: Financial Assistance

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail all investment into the sandwich sector of the foodservice market by Invest NI, or any other source linked to her Department, in each month of the last three years, including the (i) amount invested; (ii) company name; and (iii) location.

(AQW 33946/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The below table details all assistance from Invest NI to companies related to the sandwich sector within the past three years:

Invest NI: Religious Demographics

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 33774/11-15, of the countries that InvestNI enjoys productive and mutually beneficial relationships with, to detail those that are predominantly Muslim countries. (AQW 33980/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest NI is responsible for attracting high quality inward investment to Northern Ireland and developing export opportunities for Northern Ireland companies. Religious demographics are not a consideration for Invest NI's decision to explore business opportunities in a particular region or country.

Freedom of Information Requests

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of Freedom of Information requests she has received in each of the last three financial years; and of these, how many have been considered under Section 12 of the Environmental Information Regulations, rather than the Freedom of Information Act 2000.

(AQW 33991/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The details requested are as follows:

Financial Year	Number of Requests	Number of Requests considered under the Environmental Information Regulations
2011/12	128	14
2012/13	135	14
2013/14	159	22

The Member should note that the figures covering January 2013 to March 2014 cannot be seen as validated until the publication of the 2013 and 2014 FOI Annual Reports by OFMDFM.

FOI Annual Reports provide detailed information on the basis of calendar years and combine data on requests considered under FOI and the Environmental Information Regulations. The Reports can be accessed from the OFMDFM website at:

http://www.ofmdfmi.gov.uk/index/improving-public-services/information_management_and_central_advisory_branch/annual-reports-and-statistics.htm

Electricity Prices

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, given that electricity users in Great Britain have the option to fix the price of electricity for a period of time, why NI Electricity companies are not allowed to offer the same arrangements to customers.

(AQW 33996/11-15)

Mrs Foster: This issue was raised with Power NI by the Enterprise, Trade and Investment Committee as part of its review of electricity policy and pricing. Power NI informed the Committee that as its licence conditions do not allow it to discriminate between customers it cannot promote a product that only a certain number of domestic customers might benefit from.

I am informed by the Utility Regulator that no other suppliers to domestic customers currently offer the option to fix prices for a longer period of time. Instead they map to the Power NI tariff or offer a discount off their own standard tariff. The Regulator has also advised that all of the suppliers may provide contract offers to business customers and large energy users, which may be fixed over a period of time. These contracts are on an individual customer by customer basis.

CHx Industrial LLC

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the issuing of an onshore petroleum licence to CHx Industrial LLC.

(AQW 34004/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Departmental officials are continuing to process an application for a Petroleum Licence from CHx Capital LLC.

Invest NI: Outreach Programmes

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the current Invest NI outreach programmes designed to ensure that small businesses are aware of available grants.

(AQW 34018/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest NI provides information on grants available to small businesses throughout Northern Ireland on an ongoing basis and also offers a wide range of initiatives to provide support and guidance.

For example, the Regional Start Initiative (RSI) is free to participants and offers the services of a business advisor to support the development of a business plan. In addition, Invest NI's Business Support Team (contact 0800 181 4422) and www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk provide a valuable source of business information and signposting to relevant, specialist advice.

www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk, a free service offered by Invest NI, is the official online channel for business support, advice and guidance in Northern Ireland. The website offers updates on funding opportunities, key events and contains essential information on support and services to help start, maintain or grow a business.

Moreover, Invest NI is running a series of pop up offices across Northern Ireland. These pop ups provide another opportunity for local businesses to avail of advice and guidance and to hear about the support Invest NI can offer. Dates and locations of all the pop ups are to be confirmed but some have already been held in Enniskillen, North Belfast and Limavady, with Newtownabbey taking place on the 24-26 June.

Tamboran Resources

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether her Department has received notification of an intention by Tamboran Resources to drill a borehole; and if so, to provide details of the notification.

(AQW 34065/11-15)

Mrs Foster: My Department has not yet received an application for consent to drill a borehole from Tamboran Resources Pty Ltd. A stratigraphic borehole forms part of the agreed work programme for PL2/10.

Communities and Renewable Energy

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, further to the report Communities and Renewable Energy: A Study, and the Department of Energy and Climate Change Community Energy Strategy, for an update and timeline on her Department's plans to formulate and consult on a draft action plan to support communities and renewable energy.

(AQW 34082/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Since publication of the Department of Energy and Climate Change's (DECC) Community Energy Strategy earlier this year, my officials have met with DECC and the Scottish Government in relation to their Community Energy plans and strategies.

This engagement has been very useful in identifying how some of the key issues, such as the development of a Community Benefits Register and best practice guidelines, have been taken forward in Great Britain. Community energy is a cross departmental matter and discussions are underway with relevant departments to develop a draft action plan for Northern Ireland.

Following engagement with community and industry stakeholders, it is envisaged that a draft action plan will issue for consultation in early 2015.

Business Start-up Programme

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether she will consider providing a guide to service provision, similar to that produced by the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety with the Equality Commission, Racial Equality in Health and Social Care, for ethnic minority groups who access business startup programmes.

(AQW 34109/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest NI currently offers two publications that can assist individuals thinking of starting a business. These are the 'No Nonsense Guide' to starting a business and 'My New Business Pack'. These guides are available in a translated form upon request.

In line with commitment to equality of opportunity, Invest NI provides additional support to individuals who are considering starting their own business and do not speak English as their first language. This support takes the form of translation and interpretation services. An interpreter can attend business advice interviews with individuals on request. Invest NI also provides translated corporate literature where it is reasonable to do so.

Invest NI's Business Support Team provides information and support to all businesses across Northern Ireland, including start up businesses. The team provides signposting and advice to those wishing to avail of business support services delivered by Invest NI and other organisations.

The Business Support Team is complemented by online support through www.nibusinessinfo.co.uk.

Ethnic Minority Communities: Economic Mobility

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how her Department is promoting economic mobility amongst ethnic minority communities.

(AQW 34110/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The challenge the Executive set out in the Economic Strategy is to support the rebalancing of the NI economy, through a focus on export-led economic growth, as the means to deliver higher levels of prosperity and employment for all, regardless of community background or ethnicity.

We are committed to implementing actions to support our business base to invest in research and development, embrace new processes and technologies, build the skills of their workforce and broaden their horizons by embracing global opportunities all across the world in both existing and emerging markets.

We are taking action to improve the essential skills and employability of the entire workforce to help people can have access to the right move into employment and also progress within the workplace.

Across the Executive our actions to grow the economy are guided by the cross-cutting principles of balanced sub-regional growth, equality and sustainability.

Regional Development: Working Paper 2013/20

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) the actions and recommendations which will be identified for implementation from the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development Regional Development Working Paper 2013/20 The Case of Ireland; and (ii) whether she plans to table the report for discussion at the next North South Ministerial Council meeting.

(AQW 34114/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Please refer to my previous response to AQW 33390/11-15 on 28 May 2014.

Hydrogen Sulphide Detectors

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether consideration has been given to making the wearing of hydrogen sulphide detectors a health and safety requirement for farmers working with or near slurry.

(AQW 34157/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Health and Safety Executive for Northern Ireland (HSENI) has given careful consideration to the potential for hydrogen sulphide gas monitors to be used on farms during slurry mixing operations.

HSENI has consulted regarding the possible use of gas monitors on farms with other organisations including the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service, Ulster Farmers' Union and the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development.

Hand held hydrogen sulphide gas monitors are readily available and can, if properly maintained and calibrated, provide an additional safety precaution for farmers working with slurry. However, the measurement range for many hydrogen sulphide monitors is 0 – 100 ppm and during slurry mixing operations readings of over 500 ppm of hydrogen sulphide are common in livestock houses within minutes of mixing commencing. Levels of hydrogen sulphide in excess of 100 ppm may saturate the gas sensor and will result in the monitor having to be replaced. In addition the majority of monitors require regular calibration by the manufacturer (potentially every 6 months) and the first and second alarms on many detectors are set to go off between 5 – 30 ppm of hydrogen sulphide. Thus most personal alarms will sound almost immediately mixing commences.

Due to the reasons outlined above, HSENI is of the opinion that monitors can only ever be a back-up to a safe system of work, not a substitute. Therefore, HSENI encourages all farmers to develop and follow a safe system of work before even considering the purchase of monitors.

The Farm Safety Partnership recommends that any person mixing slurry should follow the following safe system of work:

Safe system of work for mixing slurry

The safe system of work is based on many years experience of working with farmers. The key points are:

- 1 If possible, mix on a windy day.
- 2 Keep children away from the area at all times when working with slurry.
- 3 Take all animals out of the building before starting to mix slurry.
- 4 Open all doors and windows.
- 5 Use outside mixing points first.
- 6 If slats are removed, cover exposed areas of the tank beside the pump/mixer to stop someone falling in.
- 7 Start the pump/mixer and then stay out of the building for as long as possible - at least 30 minutes or longer depending on the size of the tank.
- 8 If you have to go into the building make sure that another adult, who knows what you are doing, stays outside the building and can get help if needed.
- 9 If you have to re-enter the house to move the pump, or change the direction of the pump, then you need to leave the building as soon as this is done. Do not go back in for as long as possible - at least another 30 minutes or longer depending on the size of the tank.
10. Avoid naked flames, as slurry gas mixture is flammable.
11. Do not stand close to the pump/exhaust of a vacuum tanker when it is being filled.

Renewable Energy

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the proportion of energy production from each renewable source, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34166/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Table 1 details the proportion of electricity exported to the grid by renewable technology in the period 2009/10 to 2013/14. Data on renewable electricity consumed on site is not captured.

Table 1 – Proportion of energy from each renewable source in megawatt hours from 2009/10 to 2013/14

Broadband Services

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) why the Programme for Government 2011-15 commitment to deliver broadband services of 2mpbs to 100 per cent of premises by 31 March 2015 will not be reached; (ii) the areas that will not be served by at least 2mbps broadband; and (iii) the percentage of premises that will be covered.

(AQW 34212/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The DETI Corporate Plan has a target of 'services of at least 2 Megabits per second (Mbps) to 100% of premises by 31 March 2015'.

The position is, currently all premises in Northern Ireland have access to a broadband service of 2Mbps and more delivered via a mix of technology options including fixed line, fixed wireless, satellite and mobile.

In its 2013 infrastructure report Ofcom reported that in June 2013, 88% of fixed line broadband connections in Northern Ireland were achieving speeds of 2Mbps or more.

In February 2014 my Department signed a contract with BT for the delivery of the Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement Project (NIBIP) the aim of which is to increase the percentage of premises that can access fixed-line broadband services of 2Mbps and extend the coverage of fixed-line superfast broadband services of 24 Mbps or more.

It is anticipated that the project, which is due to complete by end December 2015, will impact on at least 45,000 premises across Northern Ireland. The deployment of services will be determined by the use of an engineering model which takes account of technical feasibility, quality of existing infrastructure in the area, reasonable costs, number of anticipated customers etc. This methodology seeks to achieve the greatest value for money and the highest number of beneficiaries. This model has already been used by BT across the UK and is accepted as a credible and practical methodology. Until this process has been completed it will not be possible to be precise as to which areas are to benefit.

Border Region: Economic Development

Mr McAleer asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline the key steps required to align border region economic development and wider economic strategies to ensure maximum return to the local economy.

(AQO 6356/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Executive's Economic Strategy identifies export led economic growth as the means to deliver the rebalancing of the economy and higher levels of prosperity and employment for all. The strategy prioritises innovation, R&D, skills development and infrastructure investment as the drivers of future growth.

It is important that all new councils across Northern Ireland, when considering their economic priorities, align these to those identified within the Executive's Economic Strategy. DETI, Invest NI and IntertradeIreland will engage with the new councils and other stakeholders, through the community planning process, to ensure a joined-up approach that provides maximum return for the local economy.

Mackies: Site Development

Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the development of the former Mackies site on the Springfield Road, Belfast.

(AQO 6357/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest NI's landholding at Forthriver Business Park totals some twenty three acres of which thirteen acres are available to support qualifying projects.

Invest NI is currently working with Belfast City Council over the sale of a two acre serviced site within the Park to support the development of their proposed Innovation Centre.

Forthriver Business Park will continue to be proactively marketed by Invest NI to potential investors, both indigenous and foreign direct. However, the final decision on investment location rests solely with the investor.

Broadband: Business Premises

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what assistance is available to businesses seeking to upgrade broadband speed at their premises.

(AQO 6358/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Belfast and Derry City Councils are currently participating in the UK 'Super Connected Cities Programme'. This programme, which is administered by the Department of Culture, Media and Sport, provides vouchers of up to three thousand pounds each, to help small and medium sized enterprises and third-sector organisations, to get connected to broadband, or to improve their current broadband connections.

The Belfast City Council Programme has recently been widened to cover the extended boundaries of Lisburn, Castlereagh and North Down. It is understood that Department of Culture Media Sport is currently considering extending the Programme to other cities across the UK but no further details are available at present.

DETI is also currently involved in implementing a number of projects, aimed at extending the reach of Superfast broadband services across Northern Ireland. The latest of these, the Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement Project will improve broadband access for a further forty five thousand, premises, both domestic and business, across Northern Ireland by the end of 2015

R&D: Economic Benefits

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for her assessment of the value of research and development projects to the local economy.

(AQO 6359/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Business Expenditure on R&D is important as it leads to new innovative products and processes, increases in productivity and sustainable export growth.

Economic Benefits also spill over in to the local economy with collaboration with the local universities, increased skills and the development of industry clusters

Over the last five years (2007-2012) total R&D spending in real terms in NI has risen by 57%. Most encouragingly Business R&D expenditure rose by 120% between 2007 and 2012 in real terms.

We are determined to build on this progress through the Executive's forthcoming Innovation Strategy, which is led by DETI, but also recognizes the role of the wider public sector in driving Innovation in the economy.

3G Mobile Network: East Londonderry

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the action taken by her Department to improve 3G mobile network services in rural areas and smaller towns, such as those in the East Londonderry Constituency.

(AQO 6360/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The telecommunications market is fully privatised and independently regulated. Operators make network investments on the basis of commercial return.

The UK's four main mobile network operators are currently investing significantly to improve their 2G and 3G networks. Ofcom's latest infrastructure report would indicate that between June 2012 and June 2013 Northern Ireland has seen the biggest improvement in reducing 3G not-spots of any UK nation, dropping by some nine point one percent.

For those areas that are not currently being addressed by market forces the Department of Culture, Media and Sport has launched the one hundred and fifty million pounds Mobile Infrastructure project which aims to address mobile voice and basic data not-spots across the UK by March 2015. While the project is focused on 2G technology, it is understood that opportunities will be taken to upgrade to 3G where possible. Northern Ireland is in line for nineteen percent of the sites to be deployed under this project despite representing just three percent of the UK population. Three of the sites identified are located in the East Londonderry Constituency.

DETI is maintaining a watching brief on these ongoing initiatives and will assess the need for further government intervention once they have completed.

Tourism: Giro d'Italia

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what her Department is doing to capitalise on the tourism potential following the Giro d'Italia.

(AQO 6361/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The highly anticipated 'Grande Partenza' of the Giro d'Italia was a tremendous success – showcasing our spectacular scenery to a potential seven hundred and seventy five million viewers in one hundred and sixty four countries across the world.

NITB and Tourism Ireland will continue to capitalise on the success of this event by highlighting Northern Ireland as a top cycling and outdoor activities destination in both their promotional activity and by Tourism Ireland at events linked to the Giro such as the Gran Fondo in Italy in 2014; and at other international cycling events and outdoor activity shows.

NITB is working closely with RCS, owners of the Giro, in terms of delivering a Giro Sportive currently known as Gran Fondo to Northern Ireland from 2015 onwards and it is hoped that Minister Foster will be in a position to provide an update on this shortly.

Tourism: Commonwealth Games

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what steps Tourism Ireland have taken to promote Northern Ireland as an additional tourist destination during the forthcoming Commonwealth Games in Glasgow.

(AQO 6362/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The 2014 Commonwealth Games in Glasgow offer the opportunity to highlight Northern Ireland to local and visiting international media and participants alike.

Tourism Ireland has developed a programme of promotional initiatives, which include;

Working with the Northern Ireland Commonwealth Games Committee to secure access to Northern Irish athletes for a promotional campaign to generate positive publicity for Northern Ireland.

Promoting Northern Ireland in a series of ads in the Opening Ceremony and Preview Guide using the tagline "Northern Ireland is right on your doorstep" and featuring iconic Northern Irish landscapes and attractions such as Titanic Belfast, the Carrick-a-Rede Rope Bridge, The Giant's Causeway and Dark Hedges.

In cooperation with Northern Ireland Connections, using leading Northern Irish sporting icons to host business leaders and highlight Northern Ireland as a great place to do business;

Providing an international media information pack including USB devices featuring information and stories about Northern Ireland as a holiday destination and sample Northern Ireland touring itineraries.

Cross-border Trade

Ms Fearon asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, given the importance of cross border trade to the local economy, for an update on the research undertaken by both her Department and the Centre for Economic Policy on the cost of cross border business.

(AQO 6363/11-15)

Mrs Foster: To clarify, this study is not focused on the cost of cross border business.

Research is being undertaken to identify which costs represent the greatest burden to local businesses and benchmark these against elsewhere in the UK and other relevant comparators, including the Republic of Ireland.

Work is ongoing with a business survey having been completed and a review of local costs underway. DETI will publish initial results later this year, with the Northern Ireland Centre for Economic Policy providing additional policy advice in this area.

Electricity: ROC Support

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether changes in Renewables Obligation Certificate support will apply retrospectively to renewable electricity generation projects which were in the planning process before her statement to the Assembly on 19 May 2014.

(AQO 6364/11-15)

Mrs Foster: No. Amended Renewables Obligation Certificate levels apply to ground mounted solar photovoltaic generating stations with an installed capacity above 250 kilowatts which are accredited under the Northern Ireland Renewables Obligation from 1 June 2014. A generating station cannot apply for accreditation until after it has obtained planning permission. The date of full accreditation will determine the ROC banding level that will apply.

Disposable Income

Mr F McCann asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for her assessment of the most recent statistics published by the Office of National Statistics showing that the average local disposable income is lower than in Britain. (AQO 6365/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Northern Ireland has historically had lower household income per head than elsewhere in the UK, and these new statistics highlight that this continues to be the case.

Although some progress in closing this gap was made up to 2007, the severe impact of the recession on the local economy has led to this widening again in recent years even though local household income has been rising.

The Economic Strategy clearly outlines an aim to improve the wealth and living standards of everyone. This is not just about creating well paid jobs, which Invest NI works to deliver on, but also requires the Executive to address a range of wider socio-economic issues facing households.

Events

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, given the success of recent major events, to outline any other events scheduled to take place in the next 12 months. (AQO 6366/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The following International Tourism Events are scheduled to take place in 2014/15:

- The Foyle International Maritime Festival including the Clipper Round the World Yacht Race in June;
- The Dale Farm Milk Cup in July & August;
- The Happy Days Enniskillen International Beckett Festival in July & August;
- The West Belfast Festival in August;
- The International Ulster Grand Prix in August;
- The Northern Ireland Open Challenge in August;
- The MAC International in October; and
- The Belfast Festival at Queen's in October and November 2014.

As well as this range of International Events Northern Ireland has also secured two major events for 2015 including The Irish Open at Royal County Down in May 2015 and The Tall Ships returning to Belfast in July 2015.

Mobile Infrastructure Project

Mr Boylan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the roll out of the Mobile Infrastructure Project in conjunction with the Department for Culture, Media and Sport. (AQO 6367/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The contract for the Mobile Infrastructure Project (MIP) is being fully administered, resourced and managed by the Department of Culture, Media and Sport. DETI therefore has no direct involvement in its implementation.

DCMS does however keep DETI informed of progress under the terms of the Economic Pact between the UK Government and the NI Executive. Work is progressing although there have been challenges around planning policy at District Council level and technical issues related to transmission links between the MIP sites and the existing mobile networks.

Indications are that the first MIP site in Northern Ireland will 'go live' in the Autumn.

Department of the Environment

Lough Neagh: Unauthorised Sand Extraction

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 32086/11-15, whether his Department has granted any planning permissions for any onshore operations associated with the unauthorised mineral extraction of sand from Lough Neagh Special Protection Area. (AQW 33055/11-15)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): My Department has granted a number of onshore planning permissions associated with sand extraction from Lough Neagh.

The permissions include plant, stockpiles, buildings, car parks, settlement ponds and weighbridges. The permissions (nine in total) date from 1982 until 2005 and relate to four sites. Please refer to Table 1 for details of permissions granted.

Ballinlea: Drilling

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment whether the recent environmental information submitted by the applicant on the project to carry out exploratory drilling at Ballinlea, County Antrim (E/2013/0093/F) now confirms an intent to undertake hydraulic fracturing; and whether he will seek clarification from the applicant why this information was originally withheld from his Department and local residents.

(AQW 33056/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Planning application E/2013/0093/F seeks permission for the temporary works of drilling an exploratory borehole to approx 2700m depth to investigate underground strata for hydrocarbon exploration under DETI license PL3/10 issued to Rathlin Energy Ltd. The application also includes road widening of the Kilmahamogue Road and ancillary site works.

The application does not propose high volume unconventional hydraulic fracturing. However at the extended testing phase, should the operator have difficulty obtaining the natural flow of the gas/oil, a conventional hydraulic stimulation fracture may need to be conducted.

A conventional hydraulic stimulated fracture is different from the unconventional hydraulic fracturing currently being considered as a means of shale extraction in the Lough Allen Basin. It has been common practice in the industry over many years and was not controversial prior to the horizontal fracking debate.

A shale gas fracking operation is multiple fracking zones over a significant length through a horizontal section in the shale requiring a significant amount of equipment, water and high pressure.

The conventional hydraulic stimulation would only be carried out if the oil or gas production rate was poor during previous flow tests.

A stimulation test would likely be done over a small interval circa 2365m to 2480m depth which is the prognosed depth of the lower carboniferous sandstone.

The volumes of fluid likely to be used (115 cubic metres) are significantly lower than those specified by the European Commission in their definition of High Volume Hydraulic Fracturing (1000 cubic metres per stage or 10,000 cubic metres per well) to which the recent recommendation paper on the 'Exploration and production of hydrocarbons (such as shale gas) using high volume hydraulic fracturing in the EU' (Jan 2014) applies.

Following a review of this aspect of the scheme and discussions with DETI, DOE Planning Officials are content that this development constitutes a conventional borehole and is not for the unconventional exploration of hydrocarbons, neither does it propose to use any unconventional testing techniques.

Following a review of the application and a subsequent meeting with the company and agent held on 4 September 2013, it became apparent that further information was required to accompany the application. Information concerning the extended testing phase of the application has been readily provided by the agent at the request of the Department. It is not uncommon for the Department to seek additional clarification to assist the determination of any planning application.

I can assure you that the application will be subject to the full scrutiny of the planning process and at this time no decision on the planning application has been taken.

Moorland: Definition

Mr Swann asked the Minister of the Environment to detail his Department's definition of moorland.
(AQW 33230/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Moorland is not a recognised technical term with environmental legislation. It is though often used to refer to unenclosed land in the uplands that includes a range of different habitat types.

When describing upland habitats, Departmental officials use the terminology set out in either Biodiversity Priority Habitats or Habitats Directive Annex 1 habitats.

North Western River Basin Management Plan

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 33555/11-15, whether the North Western River Basin Management Plan will include measures to protect and enhance the numbers of eel, salmon and sea trout.
(AQW 33855/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The North Western River Basin Management Plan which covers the period 2009-2015, was published in December 2009 to meet the requirements of the Water Framework Directive (WFD). A Programme of Measures was published as part of the Plan setting out the actions required to meet the objectives to improve the status of all water bodies. The Programme includes measures to protect and enhance fisheries (eels, salmon and sea trout).

Fisheries has been identified as a Significant Water Management Issue (www.doeni.gov.uk/niea/swmi.htm). The Department of the Environment is working closely with Fisheries Agencies (DCAL and Loughs Agency) to monitor and assess fish populations for WFD classification reporting in 2015.

The DOE will publish a draft North Western River Basin Management Plan for the second cycle for consultation by 22 December 2014. The North Western River Basin Management Plan will then be published by 22 December 2015.

There is already positive work happening on the ground and we are moving in the right direction but it is still clear to me that we need to do more. Healthy numbers of eels, salmon and sea trout will boost recreation and tourism, help to create a better environment and a stronger economy. As such, I have directed my officials to ensure that updated measures to protect and enhance fisheries will be included in the second cycle North Western River Basin Management Plan.

Planning: Response Rates

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 33617/11-15, for those applications not responded to in time in 2012/13 and 2013/14, to list the total number of days it took to respond in each case; and what steps are being taken to improve these response rates.
(AQW 33861/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The total number of days it took to respond to the overdue cases is detailed in the attached tables. As can be seen, the majority of cases returned outside of the 15-day target fall into the '1-5 days overdue' category in each year.

As I have already indicated the Historic Buildings Unit of NIEA has consistently exceeded its published target for the return of planning applications relating to listed buildings. Performance is regularly and routinely reviewed. I have directed the NIEA Chief Executive to further improve the planning consultee performance of all parts of the Agency as part of my programme of planning reform.

Total Overdue Planning Applications = 304Dumping Sites: Illegal

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the action taken to tackle illegal dumping sites.
(AQW 33893/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Tackling illegal dumping, and the organised criminality associated with it, is one of my Department's key priorities.

NIEA, assisted by the PSNI, is continuing its actions against illegal dumping through 'Operation Toothfish', a major push against those undermining our environment and our economy through large scale environmental offending. Under Operation Toothfish there are currently 31 ongoing investigations, involving 37 locations – most of these focus on illegal waste management.

I have demonstrated my commitment to making the changes needed to drive our action forward. Through the recommendations of the Mills Report and the NIEA steering group progressing them, my Department is in the process of making significant improvements to the overall design and implementation of Northern Ireland's waste regulation system.

A new Resource Efficiency Division has been created to bring together the various regulatory and enforcement teams in NIEA. This will enhance communication and the sharing of information about potential illegal dumping, particularly in the waste industry.

Within this Division, my officials will continue to work closely with colleagues in other enforcement agencies especially developing a new partnership approach with local councils on the overall management of waste. On the enforcement side, there is a Strategic Partnership with the PSNI for joint work on the prevention of illegal dumping.

Explosives: Storage

Mr Boylan asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (i) why his Department approved the location of the explosives store associated with planning approval K/2013/0072/F; (ii) whether his Department was in possession of the full details of the store prior to approval; and (iii) the advice he has received from Planning Service as to why the explosives store was approved without the required information.
(AQW 33952/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My Department approved the explosives store location as was shown by the applicant on their Site Layout drawing and annotated 'Proposed temporary surface explosives store', having considered the entire proposal against the relevant policies.

The building may only be used for the storage of explosives once a licence has been given by the DOJ under the Management and Storage of Explosives (NI) Regulations 2006, subject to the facility satisfying an explosives inspector from Health and Safety (GB) and meeting security requirements set out by PSNI. Final details of the building must satisfy the stringent requirements of the above named Regulations. Certification cannot be given by the DOJ until after construction is complete as it requires a physical inspection to take place by both HSE (GB) and PSNI. It is understood that this process remains ongoing with DOJ.

Explosives: Store Relocation

Mr Boylan asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of Dalradian Gold Mining Company's 'minor amendment' to relocate an explosives store, which was not approved under the original planning application K/2011/0072/F.
(AQW 33953/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Planning permission K/2013/0072/F includes provision for a temporary explosives store building. The minor amendment for the relocation of this store is currently under consideration.

Retrofitting

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment what consideration he has given to encouraging the retrofitting of older diesel powered vehicles and construction machinery with diesel particulate filters.
(AQW 33959/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Given the younger age of the vehicle fleet in Northern Ireland compared to Britain, and the levels of particulate matter monitored and reported here compared to other parts of the UK, I have no plans at this time to take specific steps to encourage the retrofitting of older diesel powered vehicles and construction machinery with particulate filters. DVA testing centres check the presence of a particulate filter during annual roadworthiness (MOT) tests. If a filter was originally fitted to a vehicle and has subsequently been removed, this is a reason for test failure.

Driver and Vehicle Agency

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 33644/11-15 and AQW 33445/11-15, whether he will undertake to advise Driver and Vehicle Agency officials of this response and have them formally correct their previous statement regarding this matter, made to the Committee for the Environment on 12 December 2013.

(AQW 33970/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My officials are aware of the responses to both AQW 33644/11-15 and AQW 33445/11-15. My officials, in their 12 December 2013 appearance at the Environment Committee, mentioned a figure in relation to drive offs in the area outside Belfast City Hall that was provided by officials from the Department for Regional Development, as was acknowledged in the Minister for Regional Development's response to AQW 33656/11-15. I therefore do not share the member's view that any correction or other action is required.

River Faughan: Hydroelectric Scheme

Mr McCartney asked Minister of the Environment whether the processing of planning application A/2011/0246/F for a hydroelectric scheme on the River Faughan Special Area of Conservation has been suspended pending the outcome of the investigation into the unauthorised in-river works carried out by the applicant at the site of the proposed weir.

(AQW 33977/11-15)

Mr Durkan: On 8 March 2013 the Department was made aware of alleged works being undertaken at the site. This information was forwarded to the Planning Enforcement Team and an enforcement file was opened. The matter is under investigation and consideration will be given to any further enforcement action.

To date no recommendation has been made on the above planning application. On 12 February 2014 the Department wrote to the applicant highlighting that serious issues exist relating to the proposal and outlined that it will proceed to make a decision based on the current information in the near future.

River Faughan: Special Area of Conservation

Mr McCartney asked the Minister of the Environment whether any of the planning applications for hydroelectric schemes affecting the River Faughan Special Area of Conservation, A/2011/0219/F, A/2011/0237/F, A/2011/0242/F and A/2011/0246/F, propose development located outside of the red lines of the application sites; and whether this is acceptable under planning law.

(AQW 33978/11-15)

Mr Durkan: In the submission of any application all proposed works must fall within the red line of the application site boundary unless those works do not require planning permission by virtue of permitted development or not constituting development. Potential impacts of development within and beyond the application site are material considerations in determining an application.

Freedom of Information Requests

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of Freedom of Information requests he has received in each of the last three financial years; and of these, how many have been considered under Section 12 of the Environmental Information Regulations, rather than the Freedom of Information Act 2000.

(AQW 33990/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Department receives requests for information the majority of which are handled under the Environmental Information Regulations (EIR) 2004. The table below shows the total number received, those handled under EIR and the number of cases where Regulation 12 has been engaged.

Financial Year	Total Requests Received	Requests considered under EIR	Requests where Regulation 12 of EIR was applied
2011/2012	431	274	125
2012/2013	497	318	159
2013/2014	539	351	177

It should be noted that more than one exception may be applied to one request.

Information regarding requests under the Freedom of Information Act and the Environmental Information Regulations is collected and published on a calendar year basis by OFMDFM for all departments. Annual Reports for the years 2010, 2011 and 2012 which contain statistical data concerning requests dealt with under both legislative regimes can be accessed from the OFMDFM website at: http://www.ofmdfmni.gov.uk/index/improving-public-services/information_management_and_central_advisory_branch/annual-reports-and-statistics.htm.

Statistics for 2013 are provided on a quarterly basis but should not be regarded as final until the publication of the 2013 FOI Annual Report.

Gas Flares

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment what his Department regards as best practice regulation of flaring.
(AQW 34003/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Gas flares are currently regulated under Waste Management Licences and Pollution Prevention Control Permits. When regulating these installations inspectors apply the requirements set out in the following Environment Agency Guidance

Notes:

- EA Guidance LFTGN 03 Guidance on the Management of Landfill Gas
- EA Guidance on Landfill Gas Flaring
- EA LFTGN 05 Guidance for Monitoring enclosed Landfill Gas Flares when regulating Landfill Gas Flares.

Planning: CTY 10

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of the Environment, in light of the recent Judicial Review (Lamont [2014] NIQB 3) which quashed a decision by the Planning Service to grant planning permission for the building of an additional dwelling on a farm, whether he has asked Divisional offices to hold certain CTY 10 applications until he has reviewed the relevant policy; and if so, how long these applications are likely to be held.

(AQW 34036/11-15)

Mr Durkan: There were a number of factors associated with rural planning policy which resulted in me asking officials to hold certain planning applications in relation to CTY 10. This has allowed me to fully consider the issues involved.

Following the judgment of the judicial review to which you refer, officials have withdrawn internal guidance which had previously issued on CTY 10 regarding applications where there were no buildings on the farm.

I have also had time to consider some other operational issues in relation to policy CTY10 and am content that all planning applications which have been held, by previous instruction, can now be processed to decision.

Committee for the Environment

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 33656/11-15, whether his officials can propose legislative alteration or amendment to the Committee for the Environment, without presenting factual evidence and using an estimate which provides no tangible proof; and whether he will conduct a review into the manner in which his officials based this issue and brought it to committee.

(AQW 34047/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The estimate which was provided by my officials, when appearing at the Environment Committee meeting on 12 December 2013, was used to provide context to a discussion around the enforcement challenges facing both DOE and DRD enforcement officers in respect of parking non-compliance at ranks in Belfast City Centre.

My Department is not planning to bring legislation before the Committee based on the estimate; therefore I do not believe that it is necessary to review this matter further.

Aggregates Levy Credit Scheme Certificates

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment how many Aggregates Levy Credit Scheme Certificates were granted by his Department in association with minerals extraction operations which did not have planning permission.

(AQW 34367/11-15)

Mr Durkan: An ALCS Certificate was only granted under the Scheme once the criteria, as set out in the ALCS Code of Practice, had been applied. These required the Department to be satisfied that the operation was complying with the regulatory framework, e.g. relevant planning conditions, environmental authorisations, etc.

Department of Finance and Personnel

Interest Rates

Dr McDonnell asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether his Department, or any of its arm's-length bodies, have carried out research or analysis on the impact that potential interest rate rises will have on households, especially those in housing negative equity.

(AQW 33716/11-15)

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): Neither my Department, nor any of its arm's length bodies, have carried out research or analysis on the impact that potential interest rate rises will have on households.

Public Expenditure

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how much of the total expenditure calculated through Public Expenditure Statistical Analyses and presented in the departmental Net Fiscal Balance Report as non-identifiable expenditure was committed to nuclear defence programmes for the most recent five consecutive years for which data is available.

(AQW 33746/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Public Expenditure and Statistical Analyses (PESA) report does not provide a breakdown of defence expenditure committed to nuclear defence programmes.

Net Fiscal Balance Report

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (i) the total revenue, as estimated in the Net Fiscal Balance Report, by capita for each of the most recent five years for which data is available; (ii) how the total revenue per capita compares with (a) Britain; (b) England; (c) Scotland; (d) Wales; and (e) the South of Ireland, during these years; (iii) the per capita figure for each revenue stream estimated in the Net Fiscal Balance report for the most recent five years for which data is available; and (iv) how these figures compare with (a) Britain; (b) England; (c) Scotland; (d) Wales; and (e) the South of Ireland, during these years.

(AQW 33752/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The table overleaf provides per capita estimates of the various revenue streams included within the 2011-12 Net Fiscal Balance Report.

My Department is not responsible for producing revenue estimates for Great Britain, England, Scotland, Wales or the Republic of Ireland.

Budget 2015-16

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether the Executive has agreed the next Budget; and if not, what is the estimated timescale for agreement.

(AQW 33755/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Executive has not yet agreed its Budget for 2015-16.

Corporation Tax

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for an update on the devolution of Corporation Tax powers.

(AQW 33814/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Government will make its decision on whether to devolve responsibility for corporation tax in the autumn - with an announcement to be made no later than the 2014 Autumn Statement.

The Government has previously indicated that if it did decide to devolve responsibility for the rate of corporation tax, then a stand-alone Bill would be introduced in the normal way with the aim of it becoming law before the prorogation of Parliament prior to the 2015 General Election.

This is a very tight timescale and the First Minister and deputy First Minister have previously highlighted the need for an early decision to the Secretary of State. In advance of that, my officials continue to engage with their Treasury counterparts on preparatory work in respect of the development of the proposed technical design of a devolved regime.

This will inform the content of the necessary legislation and follows on from the previous work by the Joint Ministerial Working Group on Rebalancing the Northern Ireland economy.

Solicitors: Complaints

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the outcome from solicitors firms that had more than one complaint made against them in 2013.

(AQW 33824/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Department does not hold this information. The report of the Lay Observer revealed that 15 firms had more than one complainant in 2013, but the outcome of such complaints is not analysed in the report. The information may be held by the Law Society.

Civil Servants: Stormont Estate

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many Civil Service employees based in the Stormont Estate reside in the (i) Fermanagh; (ii) Omagh; (iii) Dungannon; and (iv) Strabane council areas.

(AQW 33888/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table overleaf.

European Territorial Co-operation 2014-2020

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the role his Department and the Executive has in formulating and approving the content of the Consultation Information Document on European Territorial Co-operation 2014-2020.

(AQW 33936/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Consultation Information Document was prepared by the Special EU Programmes Body (SEUPB). As joint Sponsor for SEUPB, officials from my Department worked with it on the content of the document.

Input was also provided by the other co-sponsor, Ireland's Department of Public Expenditure and Reform (DPER), along with the Scottish Government in the case of INTERREG.

Executive approval will be sought prior to the submission of draft PEACE IV and INTERREG V European Territorial Co-operation programmes to the European Commission.

Rates: Business Rates

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the business rates in each council area, in each of the last ten years.

(AQW 33942/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The business rates for each council area is not available as data is collated at 'Domestic', 'Non-Domestic' and 'Mixed' sector level only. Information is only available for the financial years 2009/10 to 2012/13.

The table overleaf provides information on rates assessed (before the award of reliefs) for the 'Mixed' and 'Non-Domestic' sectors in each of those financial years broken down by District Council.

Rates: Business Rates

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the total annual revenue generated from business rates in each council area, in each of the last 10 years.

(AQW 33943/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The total annual revenue generated from business rates is not available as data is collated at 'Domestic', 'Non-Domestic' and 'Mixed' sector level only. Information is only available for the financial years 2009/10 to 2012/13. The table overleaf provides information on receipts relating to the 'Mixed' and 'Non-Domestic' sectors in each of those years broken down by district council.

Equal Pay Settlement: PSNI

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether the equal pay settlement proposals for the PSNI, Department of Justice and Northern Ireland Office staff were submitted to the Executive on 29 May 2014; and when the proposals will be published.

(AQW 33958/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: It has been clearly established that there is no valid equal pay claim upon which to base a settlement for this group. However, I have circulated a paper to Executive colleagues setting out proposals which I hope will recognise the moral argument put forward and satisfactorily resolve the issue for this group of staff. Since my proposals are currently under consideration by Executive colleagues, and will require the approval of the Executive, it would not be appropriate to provide details until agreement is reached.

Financial Transaction Capital

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline the current balance of the Financial Transaction Capital available to the Executive until the end of this mandate; and what applications have been (i) made; (ii) approved; and (iii) rejected as part of the scheme.

(AQW 33981/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Information on the current balance available to the Executive is outlined in the Financial Transactions Overview Paper available on my Department's website:

<http://www.dfpni.gov.uk/ced-financial-transactions-capital-overview-paper.pdf>

This paper outlines the criteria for applying for funding as well as detailing a list of projects that have applied for and received Executive funding. Whilst a number of projects are being considered by departments, no further bids have been submitted to date and no bids have been turned down by the Executive.

Floodline

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how reports to Floodline of flooding or blocked sewers are subsequently passed on to the relevant agency, namely the River Agency, Roads Service or NI Water.

(AQW 34033/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: On answering calls to the Flooding Incident Line, the Customer Service Representatives capture details of the reported flood from the caller by means of a series of scripted questions. These questions are used to establish the relevant Agency responsible for the operational response. Once established, the information is passed to that Agency by electronic means. This is done via e-mail to Rivers Agency and Transport NI, formally Roads Service, and by means of the transfer of an electronic interface file directly into NI Water's Incident Management System. The Customer Service Representatives also follow up e-mails to Rivers Agency and Transport NI with a telephone call to confirm receipt.

Freedom of Information Requests

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of Freedom of Information requests he has received in each of the last three financial years; and of these, how many have been considered under Section 12 of the Environmental Information Regulations, rather than the Freedom of Information Act 2000.

(AQW 34050/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The information requested is set out in the table overleaf.

Financial Years	Number of requests considered under FOI by DFP	Number of requests considered under EIR by DFP	Number of EIR requests considered which had a section 12 exception applied
April 2011 - March 2012	386	4	0
April 2012 – March 2013	320	4	0
April 2013 – March 2014	322	6	1

Welfare Reform: Cost to Health Service

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what the estimated added cost is to the Health Service arising from Welfare Reform proposals; and whether his Department has carried out the estimates for this cost.

(AQW 34089/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: In the first instance it is for the Health Minister to determine any additional costs for his Department as a consequence of the introduction of Welfare Reform. Should any such costs arise, the Health Minister may seek additional funding from the Executive through in-year monitoring rounds or the Executive's Budget process. To date, DHSSPS has not brought any cost pressures to my attention as a consequence of Welfare Reform.

Of course HM Treasury has advised that should the Executive not agree Welfare Reforms, then it will cut the Executive's DEL budget by £87 million in 2014-15 and £114 million in 2015-16. This cost will continue to increase beyond 2015-16. Whilst it will be for the Executive to decide how this pressure is funded, there is a significant risk that the Health budget will be impacted.

Green Investment Bank Workshop

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel why no officials from his Department were in attendance at the Green Investment Bank Workshop on public sector investment in green technology, which was held in the Long Gallery on 10 June 2014.

(AQW 34121/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Officials from my Department could not be in attendance at the event on 10 June since they were otherwise engaged in providing support for the Assembly Budget debates and preparing for the Executive's 2014-15 June Monitoring round.

Finance: Ministerial Spending

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if a Minister has spent any part of their budget on a matter which has not been agreed by the Executive, on the basis of which finance is initially allocated following the approval of a spending plan. (AQW 34222/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: As you will be aware, spending plans are set at a level of detail known as Unit of Service. Following publication of the spending plans, the in-year Monitoring process provides the Executive with the opportunity to react to changing financial requirements by approving changes to the previously published spending plans.

As part of the in-year process, departments, with the approval of DFP Supply can make a marginal change within controlled parameters.

The Executive does not approve these internal technical transfers, therefore in answer to your question, there will be a wide range of marginal movements across most departments, but these will have been scrutinised by DFP Supply to ensure they are in line with Executive priorities.

Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Mental Health Service Provision

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many posts will be lost in 2014 in front line mental health service provision in each Health and Social Care Trust as a result of efficiency savings.

(AQW 33400/11-15)

Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): All of the Health and Social Care Trusts have advised that there are no current plans for a reduction in frontline mental health service provision as a result of efficiency savings in 2014.

Intensive Care Provision

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 31365-11-15, for his assessment of local intensive care provision per 100,000 of the population when compared to the European average of 11.5 as identified in the 2012 report 'The variability of critical care bed numbers in Europe'.

(AQW 33576/11-15)

Mr Poots: It is assumed this refers to an article in 'Intensive Care Medicine' published online on 10 July 2012 which reported that the overall number of critical care beds for Europe was 11.5 per 100,000 head of population with individual countries ranging from 4.2 to 29.2 per 100,000 per head of population. I understand that while the article identified that there were major differences between countries it does not express a view on what the optimum level of provision might be.

The Health and Social Care Board is responsible for commissioning health and social care in Northern Ireland, including intensive care provision. The Board has advised that there are 86 general adult critical care beds within Northern Ireland, which equates to 4.8 per 100,000 head of population. The 86 beds comprise 54 Intensive Care beds (Level 3) and 32 High Dependency beds (Level 2). All units are combined (Level 2/3) and can be flexed between the two levels in response to clinical demands. Intensive care provision, although located across different sites in Northern Ireland, functions as a single system in response to the needs of the total population.

In addition to the 86 critical care beds there are 18 Cardiac Surgical Intensive Care Unit beds (10 Level 3 and 8 Level 2), ring fenced specifically for cardiac surgical patients in the Royal Victoria Hospital and 12 Paediatric Intensive Care beds (Level 3) located in Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children.

A 24/7 dedicated specialist adult transport and retrieval service operates alongside the intensive care service, staffed by critical care clinicians, to ensure that patients are able to be rapidly and safely transferred to available beds even if these are outside their geographic area of residence. The system is supported by the Northern Ireland Critical Care Network which works closely with intensive care services in each of the HSC Trusts, monitoring capacity and ensuring best use of available beds in keeping with clinical demand. At times of high demand for intensive care services, the Network will instigate agreed escalation protocols across the region to ensure that the service can rapidly respond to changes in demand in a coordinated way.

Pancreatic Cancer: Improvement of Treatment

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how his Department is improving the (i) awareness; (ii) diagnosis; and (iii) treatment of pancreatic cancer.

(AQW 33765/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Public Health Agency recently hosted a workshop to ensure that key individuals and stakeholders, including cancer charities, are fully engaged in planning and supporting the development of a cancer awareness campaign. This essential planning work will be finalised by October with commencement of the campaign shortly thereafter.

Because the symptoms of early pancreatic cancer are non-specific it is often diagnosed at a late stage and as a result has poor outcomes. Whilst current practice in the HSC is informed by the latest evidence based guidance published by NICE and NHS England (NICE intends to publish pancreatic cancer specific guidance later this year), more research offers the best prospect of improving diagnosis and treatment of this disease. I have supported the work of the work of the Pancreatic Cancer Research Fund which seeks to increase the amount of money available to research that will lead to the development of more effective detection, diagnosis and treatment.

My Department also funds core staff and facilities of the Northern Ireland Cancer Trials Centre (NICTC). The centre has had a successful pancreatic cancer clinical trials portfolio which has added to global knowledge that is available to clinicians who are treating pancreatic cancer. Several new trials are being set-up currently involving potentially beneficial new drugs to be used alone or with radiotherapy. I trust that this work will continue and that we will be able to use the knowledge gained to secure the improvements in diagnosis and care that we all would wish to see.

Bangor: New Health and Care Centre

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the need to consult with local GPs on the services that will be provided at a new health and care centre in Bangor.

(AQW 33836/11-15)

Mr Poots: An essential element of TYC is the provision of care closer to home, making the citizen the focus of healthcare services rather than the organisation; this means placing primary and community care at the heart of the work, providing services that ensure that preventative and early intervention work is undertaken enabling people to take responsibility for their health.

As GPs will have a central role in delivering services associated with TYC it is imperative that they should be consulted on the services that will be provided at a new health and care centre in Bangor.

Payroll Systems: Health and Social Care Trusts

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what discussions he has had with the Health and Social Care Trusts regarding their payroll systems to ensure that no employees have discrepancies in their June 2014 salaries.

(AQW 33889/11-15)

Mr Poots: I have made it clear that I expect Departmental officials and Trust and Business Service Organisation management to work collectively to ensure that all outstanding payments are made quickly and that, on a case by case basis, there is urgent consideration given to any losses experienced by staff arising from employer responsibilities.

A range of measures have already been taken to rectify the payroll issues affecting health service staff. The new payroll system puts an emphasis on employees and managers submitting claims for additional payments in a timely and appropriate way. The BSO and Trusts continue to re-emphasise the importance of adhering to these protocols. There is also on-going training and awareness work with managers who complete and submit timesheets.

In addition to this, my Department has approved further expert support for the HSC payroll functions over the coming months. This will provide additional resource to help with the familiarisation of the new HRPTS system and will also help staff develop solutions to staff queries. Looking forward, a range of continuous improvement measures will also be introduced to both stabilise and enhance services. This will include the consideration of moving all staff to monthly payroll cycles to improve efficiency and also reduce the opportunity for errors.

Patients: Placement in Border Areas

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how his Department works with the Department of Health in the south of Ireland to place patients in border areas in nearby nursing homes such as Shannagh Nursing Home, Belleek.

(AQW 33922/11-15)

Mr Poots: In 2009, the Republic of Ireland's Health Service Executive (HSE) introduced the 'Fair Deal for Nursing Home Scheme'. This scheme permits the HSE to place clients only in private nursing homes, voluntary nursing homes and public nursing homes in the Republic of Ireland (ROI) and registered with the ROI regulator.

This is similar to our legislative position in Northern Ireland whereby Health and Social Care (HSC) Trusts can only place clients in care homes in Northern Ireland that are registered with the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority (RQIA) under Health and Personal Social Services (Quality, Improvement and Regulation) (Northern Ireland) Order 2003.

Dog Attacks: Injuries and Deaths

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people who have (i) been killed; and (ii) seriously injured as a result of dog attacks, in each of the last ten years.

(AQW 33933/11-15)

Mr Poots:

- i) The latest available data on deaths registered with the General Register Office in Northern Ireland, shows that from 2003 to 2012, there have been no deaths where being bitten or struck by a dog was the recorded cause of death.
- ii) Information on the number of admissions to HSC Hospitals in Northern Ireland with a diagnosis of being bitten or struck by a dog over the same period is detailed in the table below.

UK Rare Disease Strategy

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on Northern Ireland's Implementation Plan of the UK Rare Disease Strategy.

(AQW 33949/11-15)

Mr Poots: Northern Ireland's Statement of Intent in regard to the UK Strategy for Rare Diseases will shortly be available on my Department's website (www.dhsspsni.gov.uk). The statement sets out the Department and the Health and Social Care system's commitment to implement the 51 recommendations from the UK Rare Disease Strategy.

The Statement of Intent will be followed by a public consultation on the Northern Ireland Implementation Plan later this year.

Patients: Transfer

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether it is accepted practice for consultants to transfer patients to another consultant in another Health and Social Care Trust without prior discussion with the patient.

(AQW 33960/11-15)

Mr Poots: As part of appropriate clinical care pathway for patients, consultant to consultant referrals will be made to ensure that the patient is seen by the most appropriate clinician within clinically appropriate timescales, this may necessitate a referral to a consultant in another Trust.

The General Medical Council (GMC) issued advice on Delegation and Referral in 2013. The guidance states that:

- a You should explain to the patient that you plan to transfer part or all of their care, and explain why.
- b You must pass on to the healthcare professional involved:
 - relevant information about the patient's condition and history;
 - the purpose of transferring care and/or the investigation, care or treatment the patient needs.
- c You must make sure the patient is informed about who is responsible for their overall care and if the transfer is temporary or permanent. You should make sure the patient knows whom to contact if they have questions or concerns about their care.

Care Packages

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people, in each quarter of the last three years, have been assessed as requiring (i) residential care packages; (ii) domiciliary care packages; and (iii) supportive living packages.

(AQW 33983/11-15)

Mr Poots:

- (i) & (ii) Information on the number of completed care management assessments which recommended (i) residential care and (ii) domiciliary care is presented in Table 1 below.

The information could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Northern HSC Trust

For the period 1 April 2011 to 31 March 2014, there were 134 applicants requiring supported living in the Frail Elderly client group. It is not possible to break this down into each quarter.

South Eastern HSC Trust

In the past 3 years, 127 people have been assessed as requiring supportive living packages. Of these, 56 people were in Adult Disability services which cannot be broken down by quarter. The remaining 71 were in Older People and Mental Health services as detailed in Table 2 below.

Paracetamol: Prescriptions

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many prescriptions have been dispensed for paracetamol since 2010.

(AQW 33985/11-15)

Mr Poots: (i) The number of prescriptions and prescription items for drugs containing paracetamol for which a prescription was written, dispensed by a community pharmacist, and presented for payment in each of the last four financial years is shown in table 1 below.

Figures relate to prescriptions which were dispensed by a community pharmacist, dispensing doctor or appliance supplier, and presented for payment during the period. Not all prescriptions issued are subsequently dispensed and presented for payment, so the number of prescriptions issued is not known centrally.

The figures shown are presented by the financial year in which the prescription was paid to the pharmacist; it should be noted that there may be a time lag where prescriptions have been dispensed by the community pharmacist in a particular year but paid the following year. The data provided only covers drugs dispensed in primary care, as drugs prescribed and dispensed in hospital cannot be captured centrally due to the use of different hospital IT systems

Table 1: The number of prescriptions and prescription items for drugs containing paracetamol, which were dispensed and presented for payment by community pharmacists within each of the last four financial years.

Financial Year	Number of prescriptions that included paracetamol items	Number of prescription items for paracetamol
2010/11	784,117	788,171
2011/12	761,729	764,550
2012/13	781,985	784,463
2013/14	778,860	781,015
Total	3,106,691	3,118,199

Source: Family Practitioner Services, Information and Registration Unit, BSO.

The figures in the first column above refer to the number of prescriptions that included at least one item of paracetamol, whereas the figures in the second column refer to the total number of items containing paracetamol.

A prescription may contain more than one paracetamol item, for example a doctor may prescribe both a tablet and a soluble form for patients who have trouble taking pills, and therefore the number of paracetamol items prescribed is higher than the number of prescriptions containing paracetamol.

Prescriptions

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many prescriptions have been dispensed for items up to the value of 50p in since 2010.

(AQW 33986/11-15)

Mr Poots: (i) The number of prescription items up to the value of 50p for which a prescription was written, dispensed by a community pharmacist, and presented for payment in each of the last four financial years is shown in table 1 below.

Figures relate to prescriptions which were dispensed by a community pharmacist, dispensing doctor or appliance supplier, and presented for payment during the period. Table 1: The number of prescriptions including individual items up to the value of 50p, and the number of prescription items with a value of up to 50p, which were dispensed and presented for payment by community pharmacists within each of the last four financial years.

2010/11	463,231	463,533
2011/12	675,267	675,428
2012/13	590,546	590,848

The figures in the first column above refer to the number of prescriptions that included at least one individual item with a value of up to 50p, whereas the figures in the second column refer to the total number of items with a value of up to 50p.

A prescription may contain two or more items each with a value of up to 50p, and therefore the total number of items with a value of up to 50p is higher than the number of prescriptions.

The cost of items are the Gross Ingredient Cost of the item, i.e. before discounts have been applied.

Prescriptions: Single and Multiple Items

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many prescriptions have been dispensed for (i) single; and (ii) multiple items, since 2010.

(AQW 33987/11-15)

Mr Poots: The number of prescriptions for (i) single; and (ii) multiple items for which a prescription was written, dispensed by a community pharmacist, and presented for payment in each of the last four financial years is shown in table 1 below.

National Insurance and Tax Deductions

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many employees within the Health Service are having the wrong National Insurance and Tax deductions made from their salaries; and how many of these employees are on an incorrect Tax Code as a consequence of the payroll issues affecting Health Service staff.

(AQW 33995/11-15)

Mr Poots: All employees affected by incorrect NIC contributions have received payments to address this issue and a corrective fix has been applied to the system to prevent this issue from recurring.

In terms of the application of emergency tax codes, the HMRC has reviewed the tax codes for all affected staff and, where appropriate, has revised the tax codes in time for the May pay run. The HMRC has confirmed that some staff will still remain on an emergency tax code in line with normal business – these are being considered on a case by case basis.

Health and Social Care Board Meeting

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the nature of the discussions, referred to in the minutes of April's Health and Social Care Board meeting, between the Board and the BBC.

(AQW 34017/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Health and Social Care Board (Board) requested and held a meeting on the 24th March 2014 with the BBC. The purpose of the meeting was to highlight a number of issues relating to the fairness and balance of how some health and social care stories were being covered by the Corporation. The meeting was attended by the Head of News BBC, the HSCB Chair, Chief Executive and Head of Communications.

During the meeting, the Board emphasised the importance of the general public being fully informed about all aspects of health and social care - both the positive and negative developments. As the vast majority of care delivered by the Health and Social Care system is successful, the Board stressed its view that it is important that media coverage accurately reflects this in a balanced way.

Going forward, the Board offered to provide the BBC with regular briefings on areas of major change.

Cervical Screening Awareness Week

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans his Department has to support Cervical Screening Awareness Week.

(AQW 34027/11-15)

Mr Poots: National Cervical Cancer Prevention Week is held in January and Cervical Screening Awareness week in June each year and the Public Health Agency (PHA) use these key times as an opportunity to promote the importance of women attending for cervical screening through local media releases and activities.

Raising public awareness of cervical cancer prevention is important because in Northern Ireland almost a quarter of women still do not attend for cervical screening. Individual GP practices have taken specific steps to improve access to screening for their population based on local need: for example providing walk in appointments with the practice nurse and undertaking opportunistic screening.

The overall coverage rate in Northern Ireland has been increasing year on year for the last 5-6 years. The overall coverage of 78.04% at end March 2013 compares to 73.45% at end March 2008. This is the highest coverage rate ever reported by the cervical screening programme in Northern Ireland.

The PHA has undertaken work to explore how potential inequalities in the uptake and coverage of all cancer screening programmes can be addressed. Following a series of meetings and a workshop with representative voluntary groups, a four year 'Informed Choice Action Plan' (2012-15) was developed. The Action Plan provides a coordinated approach to promote informed choice of the three cancer screening programmes. It includes commissioning focus group work in 2014/15 with non-attenders for cancer screening to better understand the barriers to participation and identify any actions which can be taken to overcome these. For cervical screening, the barriers for participation by younger women will specifically be explored.

The Demos 'Behind the Screen' report commissioned by Jo's Cervical Cancer Trust is to be published for Cervical Screening Awareness week in June 2014 and an event is planned in Parliament Buildings on 24th June for the launch of the report. I will consider the recommendations of the report once it has been formally published.

'Behind the Screen' Demos Report

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the Demos report 'Behind the Screen', which shows a decline in screening rates for all age groups, particularly for women 25 to 29 years and 50 to 64 years old, and highlights the costs to both the Health Service and individual women as a result of screening uptake levels.

(AQW 34028/11-15)

Mr Poots: National Cervical Cancer Prevention Week is held in January and Cervical Screening Awareness week in June each year and the Public Health Agency (PHA) use these key times as an opportunity to promote the importance of women attending for cervical screening through local media releases and activities.

'Behind the Screen' Demos Report

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps his Department will take to progress the recommendations of the Demos report 'Behind the Screen' and increase the uptake of cervical screening.

(AQW 34031/11-15)

Mr Poots: National Cervical Cancer Prevention Week is held in January and Cervical Screening Awareness week in June each year and the Public Health Agency (PHA) use these key times as an opportunity to promote the importance of women attending for cervical screening through local media releases and activities.

Freedom of Information Requests

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of Freedom of Information requests he has received in each of the last three financial years; and of these, how many have been considered under section 12 of the Environmental Information Regulations, rather than the Freedom of Information Act 2000.

(AQW 34053/11-15)

Mr Poots: The information requested in response to your question is set out below:

Financial Year	Total requests Received	Number considered under EIR Regulation 12
2011-2012	158	0
2012-2013	151	5
2013-2014	175	1

Cognitive Behavioural Therapy

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people who have been referred by their GP to cognitive behavioural therapy provided by the Health Service, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34061/11-15)

Mr Poots: Information on the number of people who have been referred by their GPs for Cognitive Behavioural Therapy (CBT) provided by the Health Service is not available centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Cognitive Behavioural Therapy

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of places available for patients on a standard course of cognitive behavioural therapy provided by the Health Service, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34062/11-15)

Mr Poots: Details on the number of places available for patients on a standard course of cognitive behavioural therapy provided by the Health Service, in each of the last five years, is not available centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Otto Bock C-leg Trial: Waiting List

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many patients in each Health and Social Care Trust are currently on the Otto Bock C-Leg trial waiting list.

(AQW 34090/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Belfast Health and Social Care Trust has advised that, at week commencing 9th June 2014, there were 9 people in Northern Ireland on the Otto Bock C-Leg trial waiting list. These are broken down by Health and Social Care Trust in the table below.

Health and Social Care Trust	Number of patients waiting

Otto Bock C-leg Trial: Waiting Time

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is the average waiting time for patients to take part in the Otto Bock C-Leg trial.

(AQW 34091/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Belfast Health and Social Care Trust have advised that the average waiting time for patients to take part in the Otto Bock C-Leg trial is 17.5 months. This information is for patients waiting in the period January 2011 to May 2014.

Prescriptions: Repeat

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether his Department issues guidance to GPs on the length of time between issuing repeat prescriptions to patients.

(AQW 34098/11-15)

Mr Poots: My Department does not issue guidance to GPs in respect of repeat prescribing. That responsibility rests with the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB). Any guidance issued in relation to repeat prescribing, cannot specify a length of time as this will vary depending on the medication and length of use.

ITH Pharma Supplies

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 34015/11-15, what assurances he can give that no ITH Pharma parenteral nutrition or total parenteral nutrition is used for home treatments for adults or children.

(AQW 34273/11-15)

Mr Poots: My response to AQW 34015/11-15 on 13 June 2014 was based on information received formally from the HSC Trusts.

However, my officials have continued to liaise with HSC Trusts in respect of this matter and the most recent information from Belfast Trust advises that they do provide parenteral nutrition products produced by ITH Pharma to adults and children as part of a regional service which they provide to home-based patients in all five Trusts. I am assured that this is in line with the current advice of the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA) who are the body responsible for regulating all medicines in the UK and ensuring their safety.

The MHRA advice is that, based on the information it currently has, it believes that the contamination of the ITH neonatal product was an isolated incident and that the appropriate immediate action has been taken at ITH Pharma's facility to avoid a reoccurrence. MHRA has allowed ITH Pharma to continue production and supply of these critical products while their investigation proceeds.

GP Services: Out of Hours

Ms McGahan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the recent media reports on the Out of Hours GP services in the Southern Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 34346/11-15)

Mr Poots: I am aware of the recent media reports concerning the GP OOHs service in the Southern Health and Social Care Trust. The Trust is currently reviewing its GP OOHs service and recognises that the service has been under increasing pressure over the past year and has faced many challenges in sustaining a responsive service while dealing with steadily rising demand.

The Trust has already taken action to address issues around the delivery of GP OOHs services such as on-going recruitment for GPs, flexible working arrangements, enhanced payment rates for difficult to fill shifts and the phased introduction of skilled nurses, including advanced nurse practitioners. The Trust has also run a series of workshops open to all staff in the GP OOHs service through which staff were encouraged to share their views on the service now and in the future. Following these workshops a confidential report was compiled which highlighted areas of concern which senior staff within the Southern Trust are currently working to address.

The Trust takes all views of the service extremely seriously and is committed to working with all staff in looking at changes needed and working through the suggestions and recommendations discussed at the workshop. The work will be taken forward in partnership between the Trust, GPs and OOHs staff, the Local Commissioning Group and the Health and Social Care Board to ensure a safe and effective service continues to be provided for all patients across the Southern Trust. The HSCB has already provided additional funding to the Southern Trust in order to address the issues of GP recruitment and retention as well as the provision of staff training.

Department of Justice

Hospitality: DoJ

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice what was the total cost of hospitality provided by (i) his Department; and (ii) its arm's-length bodies in 2013-14.

(AQW 33830/11-15)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): In 2013-14 the Department of Justice spent the following on providing hospitality:

- (i) Department (including Agencies) - £53,036
- (ii) Arms-length Bodies - £243,017

The audit process for 2013-14 expenditure has not been finalised.

Teenage Dating Violence

Ms Fearon asked the Minister of Justice to detail the (i) awareness raising schemes; and (ii) support mechanism in place to deal with teenage dating violence.

(AQW 33912/11-15)

Mr Ford: Preventing and responding to violence and abuse within all intimate relationships remains a key priority for my Department and our partners in the statutory, voluntary and community sectors through the work of the Regional Strategy Group on Domestic and Sexual Violence and Abuse.

Local delivery networks, such as the Policing and Community Safety Partnerships and Domestic Violence Partnerships had led and funded initiatives for children and young people aimed at promoting and raising awareness of healthy relationships and providing information on the full range of support available.

The DOJ funded support service provided by Victim Support is available to all victims of crime, including all victims of violence within intimate relationships. Further help and support is available to teenage victims of intimate relationship violence through the Government funded 24 hour Domestic and Sexual Violence Helpline. Should this abuse include sexual violence and abuse teenage victims can also avail of the services of The Rowan (Sexual Assault Referral Centre).

It is important to note that children and young people up to the age of 18 who have been abused in an intimate relationship will be responded to under the requirements of The Children (NI) Order 1995; the Safeguarding Board for Northern Ireland child protection policy and procedures; and the Protocol for Joint Investigation by Social Workers and Police Officers.

The member will be aware that during the recent public consultation on the new draft strategy 'Stopping Domestic and Sexual Violence and Abuse', which ended on 11 April 2014, officials met with young people aged fourteen to eighteen years old. These groups have now responded formally to the consultation. It is anticipated that their feedback will help to inform the strategic priorities for raising awareness of and supporting victims of teenage dating violence.

Courts and Tribunal Service: Service Providers

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice whether an investigation was carried out by the NI Courts and Tribunal Service into former service providers, Resource, and if so, to detail (i) the reason for the investigation; (ii) the dates the investigation commenced and concluded; and (iii) the outcome and any subsequent recommendations and actions; and to provide a full copy of the investigation report.

(AQW 33915/11-15)

Mr Ford: An investigation into Resource timekeeping and key holding practices commenced in August 2011 following correspondence from a whistleblower and concluded in February 2013. The investigation report recommended that the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service recover £1,233 from Resource, review key holding procedures and review existing contract management processes. These recommendations were subsequently implemented.

The investigation report contains information relating to third parties whose interests may be affected by any disclosure. Your request for a copy of the report will be considered in line with the Freedom of Information Act 2000 and Data Protection Act 1998 and I have asked my officials to reply to you directly.

Dangerous Dogs Act 1991

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of prosecutions for offences under the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991, in each of the last 10 years.

(AQW 33929/11-15)

Mr Ford: The table below outlines the number of defendants who have appeared in court on at least one charge contrary to the Dogs (Northern Ireland) Order 1983 as amended by the Dangerous Dogs (Northern Ireland) Order 1991.

These charges relate to a range of offences in respect of dangerous dogs and not only those offences that relate to illegal dog breeds.

2007	98
2008	85

P Data are currently provisional and may be subject to change

Provision of data for years prior to 2007 would require a manual trawl of court records and would incur a disproportionate cost.

Serotonin

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Justice whether recommendations have been made to classify the legal drug containing serotonin as illegal following the deaths of 18 people.

(AQW 33939/11-15)

Mr Ford: Controlled substances are classified through the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 and classification remains a reserved matter, led by the Home Office in Westminster. For substances not already controlled under the Act the Home Secretary may place a new psychoactive substance under temporary control by invoking a Temporary Class Drug Order (TCDO), following advice from the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs (ACMD).

The recent analysis, carried out by the Forensic Science Northern Ireland (FSNI) and published in the Journal of Analytical Toxicology identified the presence of para-methyl-4-methylaminorex (4,4'-DMAR), reportedly known, among other names as "serotoni" (and not serotonin as published) in a total of 18 fatal cases.

I understand that, in line with current reporting practice, the emergence of this substance was notified by FSNI through the European Union Early Warning System to the European Monitoring Centre for Drug and Drug Addiction (EMCDDA) of which the UK wide Early Warning System is part.

There will be a forthcoming EMCDDA and EUROPOL Joint Report on this new psychoactive substance which I understand forms an integral part of a process prior to control measures being implemented by member States across the European Union. Whilst a Temporary Class Drug Order is not in place in the UK at the moment, I understand that the Home Office has identified this particular substance to ACMD as one of concern.

Serotonin

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Justice whether the legal drug containing serotonin can be removed by local authorities under the General Product Safety Regulations.

(AQW 33940/11-15)

Mr Ford: Enforcement activity relating to the powers provided within the General Product Safety Regulations 2005 was recently utilised by Belfast City Council to remove a number of new psychoactive substances from sale through "head-shops". I understand the lessons learned have been disseminated across all local councils and wider afield.

Whilst the source of this illicit substance is not known at this stage, reports would suggest that the substance was supplied at street level through dealers as "Ecstasy" type pills.

I have been advised that the Consumer Safety legislation is a reserved matter under Schedule 3 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 and that any enforcement activity of this legislation in Northern Ireland is undertaken by local Councils.

However, it is clear that the risks associated with any substance of misuse can have fatal consequences and I would support the efforts of all related agencies and local Councils as they continue to work to remove these dangerous substances from our communities.

Committal Proceedings

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33648/11-15 and AQW 33196-11-15, to provide an estimate of the requested information.

(AQW 33965/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Legal Services Commission estimates that, for the years specified in the answer to AQW 33196/11-15, mixed committal proceedings would have cost the legal aid fund the following amounts:

- 2011 - £211,000
- 2012 - £123,000
- 2013 - £104,000

Court Hearings: Parking Spaces

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33643/11-15, whether he is aware that since this issue was raised, police in the area have supplied cones to the primary school opposite the court house to prevent parking spaces in the lay-by used by parents/guardians and school buses, being taken up by court users.

(AQW 34001/11-15)

Mr Ford: Prior to the Member's question, I was unaware of this issue.

This is a matter for the Chief Constable, who is accountable to the Northern Ireland Policing Board. I am committed to respecting the operational independence of the Chief Constable and the role of the Policing Board.

You may therefore wish to direct your question to the Police Service of Northern Ireland.

Prostitution: Project Steering Group

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice to detail the (i) remit; and (ii) reporting timescale of the Project Steering Group for Research into Prostitution.

(AQW 34020/11-15)

Mr Ford: The remit of the Project Steering Group for Research into Prostitution is to manage the contract in line with the terms of the tender and to ensure that the final report on the research is presented to the Department by 31 October 2014.

Police Pensions

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 31594/11-15, whether new instructions have been issued by his Department in relation to the review of injury on duty police pensions.

(AQW 34021/11-15)

Mr Ford: I can confirm that my officials issued guidance on 1 April 2014. The guidance withdrew Annex A together with paragraphs referring to compulsory retirement age within DoJ Circular 6/2007.

Fines and Enforcement Bill

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33642/11-15, in relation to the forthcoming provision for courts in respect of additional sentencing, collection and enforcement options in the Fines and Enforcement Bill, whether this will only apply to fines imposed once these measures are introduced or will they be effective on all currently outstanding fines.

(AQW 34040/11-15)

Mr Ford: Subject to Assembly approval, it would be my intention to apply the new collection and enforcement proposals retrospectively, thereby allowing deductions from income to be available for fines that are currently outstanding as well as fines imposed in the future.

A consultation on additional powers that might be available to allow, for example, access to bank accounts has just closed. I will be considering the way forward and taking further legal advice on the issue of also allowing these powers to be applied retrospectively.

Trafficking: Associated Sexual Charges

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice why a number of cases within the court system involving associated sexual charges in which trafficking was included on the original charges, have since had the human trafficking element dropped.

(AQW 34042/11-15)

Mr Ford: It is the role for the Public Prosecution Service to be satisfied that the evidence which can be adduced in court is sufficient to provide a reasonable prospect of conviction. There are a variety of reasons why charges can be dropped, any of which could lead to the Test for Prosecution no longer being met for a particular offence. Every case is different and considered on its own merits.

While evidence may be insufficient to prosecute for the offence of human trafficking a prosecution may proceed for other offences such as controlling prostitution for gain, brothel keeping or proceeds of crime offences. It should be acknowledged that an effective means of combating human trafficking is disruption, which includes prosecution and the confiscation of criminal assets. The prosecution of other, also serious offences is still effective in disrupting trafficking and making Northern Ireland a hostile place for traffickers, and most importantly, that victims have been recovered.

The Public Prosecution Service is independent of me as Justice Minister and I am not in a position to comment on individual cases. You may however wish to seek advice from the Director of Public Prosecutions.

I am committed to ensuring that those who would traffic and enslave others will be made to feel the full force of the criminal law. Ensuring that we have a robust and effective legislative framework is a vital part of the fight against human trafficking and slavery. Following public consultation, I intend to bring forward legislative changes to strengthen further Northern Ireland's response to these crimes. These include new measures to consolidate offences which will make it administratively simpler for investigators and prosecutors to bring forward prosecutions.

As set out in the 2014-15 Northern Ireland Action Plan on human trafficking and exploitation these legislative measures will be supported and complemented by a range of other administrative and non-legislative responses including training, awareness raising and support for victims and witnesses.

Prisons: Discipline

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33696/11-15, to detail the number of prisoners adjudicated for offences against prison discipline that could relate to bullying and the penalty in each case, broken down per prison facility, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34043/11-15)

Mr Ford: Consistent with my previous response there are a number of offences against prison discipline that could relate to bullying.

The information provided in Annex A shows the number of prisoners in the last five years who have been found guilty of an offence at adjudication and the offence could potentially have been related to bullying.

It is not possible to provide details of the penalties incurred as this is decided on a case by case basis.

RUC GC Widows' Association

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Justice to detail (i) why the decision was taken to withdraw funding from the RUC George Cross Widows' Association; (ii) the advice on which the decision was taken; (iii) when the advice was provided; and (iv) who provided the advice.

(AQW 34057/11-15)

Mr Ford: Following devolution, the Department of Justice undertook a review of its arm's-length bodies, the purpose of which was to strengthen the governance arrangements and ensure that all bodies with a funding relationship with the Department had the appropriate governance arrangements in place. A classification exercise was undertaken to determine the status of a number of bodies, including the RUC George Cross Widows' Association.

- (i) As a result of the classification exercise the Association was classified as being in the private sector. The Department has not withdrawn funding from the Association. Following this classification, the mechanism available to the Association to access funding from the Department is now via a grant application.
- (ii) The classification was based on information provided in a classification questionnaire which is a HM Treasury function, implemented in Northern Ireland by the Department of Finance and Personnel.
- (iii) The classification exercise was initiated by DOJ in July 2012 and a classification questionnaire was provided to the DFP Classification Assessment Committee. The DOJ was advised of the outcome of the assessment in April 2013 by DFP.
- (iv) DOJ sponsor branch for the Association completed the classification questionnaire. DFP assessed the classification questionnaire, based on the information provided by DOJ.

Anne Owers Report

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the implementation of the Anne Owers Report.
(AQW 34063/11-15)

Mr Ford: Good progress continues to be made against the extensive programme of end to end transformational reform, guided by the 40 recommendations made by the Prison Review Team.

To date, 14 of the 40 recommendations have been signed off as complete by the Prison Review Oversight Group. Additionally, the Oversight Group has referred a further two recommendations to Criminal Justice Inspection Northern Ireland and six recommendations to the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority for independent assessment, bringing to 22 the number of recommendations signed off or under assessment.

The Oversight Group has a robust independent element and provides the Justice Committee with an update on progress after each meeting, with the latest update due to be issued to the Committee before recess.

Freedom of Information Requests

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of Freedom of Information requests he has received in each of the last three financial years; and of these, how many have been considered under Regulation 12 of the Environmental Information Regulations, rather than the Freedom of Information Act 2000.

(AQW 34068/11-15)

Mr Ford:

(i) Number of FOI requests received;

1 April 2011 to 31 March 2012 – 149 requests received

1 April 2012 to 31 March 2013 – 149 requests received

1 April 2013 to 31 March 2014 – 193 requests received

Information regarding requests under FOI and EIRs is collected and published on a calendar year basis. The annual reports are published on the OFMDFM website and the statistical figures up to September 2013 can be viewed at the links below. Please note that statistical data concerning requests dealt with under FOI and the EIRs is combined within the figures above and the reports at the links below.

(ii) How many have been considered under Regulation 12 of the EIR;

None of the requests received by the DOJ have been considered under regulation 12 of EIRs.

Sexual Offences Act 2003: Victims

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33659-11-15, whether the alleged victims in these cases are adults or children.

(AQW 34071/11-15)

Mr Ford: There is one child and two adult alleged victims in the three cases identified in AQW33659-11-15.

Bullying

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33696/11-15, given that concerns have been raised by a number of agencies, including the Prisoner Ombudsman for Northern Ireland, whether he plans to introduce a system permitting this information to be collated and accessed, particularly in respect of a duty of care and justice to the victims of prisoner bullying and to allow a prisoner's previous behaviour to be held for future reference in order to identify potential prisoner profiles including bullying, should there be any further incidents.

(AQW 34073/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Prison Service will consider whether a mechanism for recording this information should be introduced in any future review of the approach to tackling bullying.

Prison Service: Staff Criminal Offences

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Justice how many staff employed by the Northern Ireland Prison Service have been convicted of a criminal offence in each of the last 5 years.

(AQW 34115/11-15)

Mr Ford: As the Member's questions address the same issue I will provide an amalgamated response.

In 2010 seven members of Northern Ireland Prison Service (NIPS) operational staff were convicted of a criminal offence and six were subjected to disciplinary proceedings following a criminal conviction.

In 2011 six members of NIPS operational staff were convicted of a criminal offence and six were subjected to disciplinary proceedings following a criminal conviction.

In 2012 five members of NIPS operational staff were convicted of a criminal offence and six (including a case from 2010) were subjected to disciplinary proceedings following a criminal conviction.

No members of NIPS staff at a Governor grade have been convicted of a criminal offence in each of the last five years.

Where there have been fewer than five members of (NIPS) operational staff convicted of a criminal offence; subjected to disciplinary proceedings following a criminal conviction; or dismissed from the service following a conviction for a criminal offence in each of the last five years the actual number has been withheld. This is to protect the identity of the individuals concerned as disclosure would be contrary to the Data Protection Act 1998.

Compliance: Testing

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33800/11-15, whether an audit has been carried out to test compliance across contractors that supply departmental agencies; and if so, to detail when this occurred and the result; and if not, when he will conduct an audit and report on the findings.

(AQW 34184/11-15)

Mr Ford: With regard to the EU Convention on Human Rights and the Human Rights Act 1998 the Department is unaware of, and has not carried out, an audit to test compliance among contractors who supply departmental agencies. The Department has no intention at present to conduct such an audit.

Zero-hours Contracts

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of zero-hour contracts in relation to staff within his departmental remit.

(AQW 34185/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Department of Justice, including its Agencies, has no staff members on zero-hour contracts. In the Northern Ireland Civil Service HR Handbook there is no provision for a Department to provide zero hours working for permanent civil servants.

European Convention on Human Rights

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33800/11-15, what action can be taken against a departmental agency or contractors who are found to be in breach of the European Convention on Human Rights and the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights.

(AQW 34239/11-15)

Mr Ford: It is difficult to answer this question without further details. Accountability through the courts or the Assembly may be appropriate, depending on the circumstances.

Department for Regional Development

Portavoe Reservoir: Fauna and Wildlife

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the impact to fauna and wildlife since drainage commenced of Portavoe Reservoir.

(AQW 33785/11-15)

Mr Kennedy (The Minister for Regional Development): NI Water has worked closely with the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) and the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure (DACL) throughout this project to ensure that the agreed method of lowering the water in the reservoir, to complete essential safety work, will minimise the impact on the environment. The work will have some impact to fauna and in the short term, some species may be impacted more than others by the reservoir drawdown. Regrettably, this is unavoidable.

A number of site surveys have been undertaken by NIEA staff and ecological consultants acting on behalf of NI Water to gather data to assess the potential impact of the water lowering on nesting birds. Based on the results of those visits, it is the opinion of the NIEA that no nesting birds were directly impacted by the lowering of water levels in Portavoe.

A swan mussel mitigation plan has also been devised by NI Water in conjunction with NIEA. This plan has involved collection, translocation, storage and monitoring of live mussels in reservoir cages and tanks. On completion of the reservoir works, and once the water has reached a suitable depth, the swan mussels will be returned to their original habitat.

DCAL's Inland Fisheries Group has undertaken a major netting operation at Portavoe to remove fish from the reservoir. Operations of this nature are difficult in nature and regrettably fish losses occur however DCAL has advised that approximately 16,000 fish, mostly rudd and eels, have been transferred to the River Quoile. DCAL will restock the reservoir on completion of the works.

Tidal Urban Clearway Scheme: Antrim Road, Belfast

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister for Regional Development whether his Department will carry out an assessment of the suitability of a tidal urban clearway scheme for the Antrim Road, Belfast.

(AQW 33823/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department introduced an experimental Traffic Regulation Order to provide a tidal urban clearway on three routes in south Belfast, namely the Lisburn Road, Malone Road and part of the Stranmillis Road in November 2013. This order was recently extended by a further six months to allow a fuller assessment of its impact and if it should be made permanent.

A final decision on this has not yet been made but the outcome of the assessment will influence if other urban clearway routes, such as the Antrim Road, should be considered for similar treatment.

Illegal Landfilling

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 33421/11-15, given there is a valid enforcement notice which requires the offender to remove the illegally deposited landfill which is now confirmed to lie directly in the path of the A6 road proposal, whether it is his Department's intention to vest this land for the construction of the new road prior to compliance with the enforcement notice.

(AQW 33866/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I am considering the report on the August/September 2012 Public Inquiry into the Londonderry to Dungiven dualling scheme. If I decide to proceed with the scheme, I will make the Direction Order to ensure planning protection. The draft Vesting Order to acquire the necessary lands to construct the scheme, and will remain in draft form until confirmation of funding to construct the scheme is received.

As you are aware, the scheme includes a proposal to reinstate part of the Campsie Sand and Gravel quarry located between Mobouy Road and the River Faughan to replace flood storage capacity lost to the new dual carriageway. It is hoped the illegal waste issue will have been resolved by the time funding is confirmed. However, if the illegal material is still present when the road is being constructed, I am content the installation of appropriately engineered measures to contain the illegal waste will ensure that the compensatory floodplain can be constructed as planned.

Illegal Landfilling

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 33421/11-15, given that his Department's ground investigation did not find anything untoward in March 2010, why in October 2011 the Northern Ireland Environment Agency raised concerns regarding the composition of the illegal landfill associated with retrospective planning application A/2010/0596/F.

(AQW 33867/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Natural Heritage branch of the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA), in compliance with planning law, has to treat retrospective applications as if the work has not yet begun and therefore, in this particular case, it asked for additional information to allow it to fully consider the planning application.

As the proposed development could have potentially serious adverse impacts on the features of the River Faughan and Tributaries Special Area of Conservation and Area of Special Scientific Interest, NIEA objects to the proposal until a fuller evaluation can be undertaken that demonstrates there will be no adverse impacts on the qualifying features of these sites.

NI Railways: Dog/Animal Policy

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development what consultation took place prior to changing the NI Railways Dog/Animal Policy.

(AQW 33904/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Consultation on this condition of carriage was included as part of the Autumn 2013 independent Passenger Charter monitoring review. Translink had been challenged on its operational policy in this area and specifically why its approach differed from operational policies applied by rail operators in the rest of the UK.

Manhole Covers: Non-slip

Mr Wilson asked the Minister for Regional Development whether his Department plans to install non-slip manhole covers in order to reduce the number of motorcycle accidents.

(AQW 33905/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: All manhole covers installed on the public road network should meet the requirements of European Standard BS EN 124, which stipulates minimum standards for strength and skid resistance.

In addition, during the development of the Northern Ireland Road Safety Strategy to 2020, it was recognised that motorcyclists have particular road safety issues that needed to be addressed. One of these was riders sliding on wet and worn manhole covers.

A series of Action Measures has been developed targeting the motorcycling road user group. Amongst these will be the development of a motorcycle strategy, being taken forward by the Department of the Environment, to investigate the issue of manhole covers and propose solutions in areas where this is a problem.

Park-and-ride Scheme: Dungannon

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the areas, other than Stangmore, that have been considered for the proposed Dungannon park-and-ride Scheme.

(AQW 33917/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Regional Strategic Transport Network Transport Plan 2015, published in 2004, detailed the following areas for Park and Ride in the Dungannon and South Tyrone Borough Council Area:

- A4/A5 Ballygawley Roundabout;
- A29/M1 at Stangmore Roundabout; and
- A45/M1 at Tamnamore Roundabout.

The Ballygawley site has already been provided and the Tamnamore site is currently under construction. A Park and Ride facility is currently also provided adjacent to the Translink Depot located at Beech Valley, Dungannon.

In 2005, my Department employed ATKINS Consultants to carry out an options study of proposed Park and Ride sites including the A4/M1 junction 15 at Stangmore.

As access to such a site would not be permitted from the M1 slip roads, a number of sites were considered along the A29 on both the Moy and Dungannon sides of Stangmore Roundabout. The preferred site was identified as being on the A29 Moy Road between Stangmore Roundabout and Dungannon, close to Stangmore Villas.

NI Water

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (i) the total revenue raised; and (ii) the operating costs of NI Water in each of the last three years; and to outline how these compare with budgeted figures.

(AQW 33921/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: NI Water's total revenue raised and operating costs compared to budget in each of the last three years is as follows:

	2011/12		2012/13		2013/14
	Budget £m	Actual £m	Budget £m	Actual £m	Budget £m
Income	94	91	91	90	88
Operating Costs	191	188	200	199	198

- The information contained in this response reflects public expenditure reporting and will not accord with the information contained in NI Water's regulatory and company accounts for which elements are prepared on a different accounting basis. The 2013/14 Actual position will be available following the Finance Minister's Statement to the Assembly on Provisional Outturn.
- Total Revenue consists of Income including charges, largely to non-domestic customers, for water and wastewater services and related services (eg Septic Tank emptying) and road drainage income payable by DRD. It excludes the transfer of assets from customers.
- Operating Costs includes staff costs and other operating costs. It excludes capital costs, depreciation, interest costs, corporation tax and dividend paid to the Department as Shareholder.
- In addition, the Department provides a subsidy in lieu of domestic charges to domestic customers reflecting the Executive's decision on the deferment of charges and its ongoing Programme for Government commitment not to introduce additional water charges during the current mandate.

Antrim Coast Road

Mr McMullan asked the Minister for Regional Development whether the work carried out on the Antrim Coast Road prior to the Giro d'Italia 2014 will be maintained to the same standard and budget.

(AQW 33926/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department and the local councils committed a significant amount of additional resource to a very successful Giro D'Italia event to ensure the best possible exposure for Northern Ireland. Routine maintenance operations will continue in line with my Department's 'Road Maintenance Standards for Safety'.

The importance of the Antrim Coast Road is recognised by my Department as evidenced by the recent significant investment made in this strategic infrastructure, such as the stabilisation of the slopes at Straidkilly, Glenarm and the sea defence work, north of Carnlough.

Traffic Weight Restrictions

Mrs Hale asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 9038/11-15, for an updated list of the locations where traffic weight restrictions are in force.

(AQW 33954/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Details of locations where traffic weight restrictions are in force, in respect of roads, are set out in the following tables. The roads are listed under the appropriate weight restriction at each location identified, with restrictions having been put in place by means of an Order under Article 4 of the Road Traffic Regulation (Northern Ireland) Order 1997.

The reason for the restriction is not stated in the legislation and given that many of the restrictions have been in place for a considerable number of years and in some cases decades, this information is not readily available. However, the Member will be aware from my answer to her Assembly Question AQW 8961/11-15, of the factors that my Department considers when determining whether a weight restriction is necessary at any particular location to protect the underlying road.

Weight Restrictions

2 Tonnes Maximum Gross Weight

Dogleap Road, Limavady, carried by the Largy Bridge over the River Roe.

Belfast Rapid Transit System: South Belfast

Dr McDonnell asked the Minister for Regional Development whether his Department, or its agencies, have carried out any research or scoping on potential routes for a Belfast Rapid Transit extension to South Belfast; and if not, when they propose to do so.

(AQW 33994/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department has recently commenced the implementation of the pilot Belfast Rapid Transit (BRT) routes which will link East Belfast, West Belfast and Titanic Quarter via the city centre. Subject to the success of this pilot and the availability of finance, we would intend to extend the BRT network to serve both North and South Belfast.

In order to assess the viability of potential BRT routes to North and South Belfast, my Department undertook a number of surveys in 2013. The results of these, along with other surveys, will be used in the development of a new transport model for Belfast. It is anticipated the transport model will be completed in early 2016 and at that stage, the options appraisal and business case for the extension of the BRT system to North and South Belfast will be able to commence.

My Department is already engaging with those responsible for proposed developments on potential routes outside the current pilot network to ensure, as far as possible, that the future provision of BRT to key areas is not prejudiced.

Park-and-ride Schemes: Greater Belfast

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development whether there are plans to increase the number of park-and-ride schemes in the Greater Belfast area.

(AQW 33999/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department's Strategic Park & Ride Delivery Programme 2013-15 aims to deliver at least an additional 1,000 Park & Ride and Park & Share spaces across Northern Ireland. Over 600 additional spaces have already been delivered as part of the Programme.

There are plans for several sites that will serve the Greater Belfast area. In relation to major sites in and around the Greater Belfast area, the following projects are currently being developed:

- Dundonald Park & Ride, Dunlady Road, Dundonald
Work has started on the provision of this new 520-space Park & Ride facility. It is anticipated this will be operational later this year.
- Sprucefield Park & Ride
This new 650-space Park & Ride facility will replace the existing 320-space facility. Work is scheduled to commence later this year with completion by mid 2015.
- Ballymartin Park & Ride, Templepatrick
Work on this new 420-space Park & Ride facility is scheduled to commence later this year with completion due in 2016.

Environmental Contamination Issues

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail all the environmental contamination issues in the Belfast Harbour Estate.

(AQW 34064/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Department of the Environment, through its Environmental Policy Division and the Northern Ireland Environment Agency has responsibility for the formulation, development and implementation of Government policy, strategy and legislation in Northern Ireland.

My department is aware that an element of contamination has been identified at a development site off Airport Road. It is understood that discussions and agreements on mitigation/decontamination measures have taken place between the Belfast Harbour Commissioners and the Northern Ireland Environment Agency in its role as the appropriate authority.

The Belfast Harbour Commissioners have further identified two potential contamination issues; these are:

- a) Potential tri-butyl tin contamination in the sediments off the outfitting quay in a section of Musgrave Channel and;
- b) Potential tri-butyl tin / heavy metal contamination in the sediments off the Alexandra Wharf.

It is my Departments understanding that both issues are subject to verification by testing and that the sediments in question are currently believed to be undisturbed.

Any discussions on these and other environmental issues are unlikely to involve my Department in anything other than a peripheral role, but I have indicated to the Belfast Harbour Commissioners that I would like my officials to be appraised of any developments in relation to the issues identified, should they occur.

Portavoe Reservoir

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development whether his Department has had talks with North Down Borough Council to discuss purchasing Portavoe Reservoir.

(AQW 34103/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: NI Water representatives have held a number of meetings with both North Down and Ards Borough Councils regarding Portavoe Reservoir. At the last meeting on 25 April 2014 the possibility of the Councils acquiring the reservoir was discussed and the representatives of the Councils advised that they were considering their position. However, they indicated that a decision may not be made until the new Council arrangements are established in 2015.

Down Armagh Rural Transport

Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Regional Development why funding has been reduced for the Down Armagh Rural Transport (DART) in the Craigavon area.

(AQW 34198/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The allocation of funding for 2014/15 will be notified to each of the Rural Community Transport Partnerships week ending 20 June 2015. The allocation for the southern area of which Down Armagh Rural Transport is part will not be reduced.

Translink: Employees Community Background

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Regional Development for a breakdown of the community background of Translink employees in the Dungannon district at (i) management; and (ii) inspector level.

(AQW 34217/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised that given the small number of employees in the two categories within the Dungannon district area it feels unable to provide the community background. This is in order to protect the identity of individual staff members.

Down Armagh Rural Transport

Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he will intervene and continue funding the Down Armagh Rural Transport (DART) provision in the Craigavon area.

(AQW 34245/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I refer to my answer to AQW 34198/11-15.

Car Parks: Control

Mrs Hale asked the Minister for Regional Development, following the transfer of off-street parking to local council control, whether he can provide an assurance that sites will not be sold.

(AQO 6343/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: It is unfortunate following the Executive's proposed transfer of off-street car parks to the new councils, which form part of the package of new responsibilities and assets transferring under RPA, there has been comment which suggests some Councils will be reckless or not act in the public interest in their management of these car parks.

Of course, no assurance can be given that at some future point a council may decide, in the interest of their ratepayers, it would be appropriate to dispose of a car park. I am, however, confident the new councilors, including the 88 from my own party, will be very well aware of the views of local stakeholders on parking issues. It will be a matter for the new councils, to take account of the view of these stakeholders who will include those with local business interests, as well as ratepayers and other members of the public, when they make decisions relating to off-street parking provisions and costs.

I can also confirm that my Department proposes to issue an Off-Street Parking (Functions of District Councils) Bill for consultation soon. It is scheduled to be introduced to the Assembly in September at which stage Members will have an opportunity to debate and propose changes.

Transport: Mid-Ulster

Ms McGahan asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the public and community transport pilot scheme in mid-Ulster.

(AQO 6344/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I am pleased to advise that good progress continues to be made on the Integrated Transport Pilot Project currently underway in the Dungannon and Cookstown areas.

To date, the project has seen the integration of Translink and Southern Education and Library Board (SELB) services for four routes to post primary school services in Dungannon. This has enabled the spare vehicles and drivers to be redeployed to other priority work within SELB. A new evening visitor service to Craigavon Area Hospital has also been introduced, providing improved access for passengers, particularly those travelling from rural areas.

The pilot has also seen Community Transport providing school transport services in the Castlecaulfield area, an important example of how transport providers could deploy their resources more flexibly. Following a review, improvements have been made to the provision of information to passengers about the services available.

However, more can be done and, over the coming months, my Department will be working with the SELB to plan the wider utilisation of its vehicles in the Clogher Valley area, in order to provide additional services at times when the vehicles are not needed for school transport. There is also ongoing liaison with the Southern Health Trust to develop options for the more flexible use of the Trust's transport fleet.

My Department is also collecting information on routes, vehicles and costs from all service providers: Translink, the Education and Library Boards, the Health Trusts and the Rural Community Transport Partnerships. The Department has recently appointed expert transport planners to help identify how the lessons learned from the pilot can be implemented on a wider scale across Northern Ireland. The conclusions from this work will form the basis of the Economic Appraisal, which should be completed by late 2014.

Water Bill

Ms Boyle asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the main components of the proposed Water Bill.

(AQO 6345/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I am currently consulting on policy proposals to be taken forward in a new Water Bill.

The consultation includes a proposal to extend my Department's power to pay subsidy to NI Water on behalf of domestic customers to 2017 to cover the extension of the current assembly mandate.

The consultation includes proposals to provide powers to direct the Utility Regulator to abide by Social and Environmental policies issued by my Department and to consolidate requirements on NI Water to produce separate Water Resource Management and Drought Plans.

Grit: Stockpile

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister for Regional Development, given the recent mild winter, how much grit is now in stock. (AQO 6346/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I assume the Member's question relates to Rock Salt, which is the primary material used in the delivery of my Department's winter service programme.

Whilst the 2013/14 winter was relatively mild, my Department still carried out a significant number of salting actions as weather forecasts for frost remained at levels consistent with an average year's winter.

By the end of the 2013/14 winter season, my Department had used approximately 63,000 tonnes with approximately 56,000 tonnes of rock salt held in storage. Should the Member wish to visit one of my Department's salt barns, I would be happy to make the necessary arrangements.

Jan Gehl

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the issues he discussed at his meeting with the architect Jan Gehl.

(AQO 6347/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Jan Gehl led a discussion on the theme of 'Cities for People', and highlighted a number of world cities, including Melbourne, New York and Moscow where significant work has been undertaken to encourage higher levels of walking and cycling and greater engagement in the public realm. Jan Gehl talked about the world's most liveable cities, of which Copenhagen is ranked number one, and highlighted the criteria which is applied to generate this ranking.

The meeting was beneficial because it presented valuable examples of the types of transport planning and innovative urban design interventions that have worked well elsewhere. It confirmed to me that while my Department is taking positive steps towards creating an environment which invites people to walk and cycle as much as possible, maximising the potential requires the adoption of a strategy which involves many Government Departments.

The issues dealt with by Jan Gehl are presented in a film entitled 'The Human Scale'. I have found these concepts very challenging but they are influencing my approach to the drafting of a Bicycle Strategy for Northern Ireland.

Dungiven: Roads

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans are in place for the realignment of the dangerous corner, approximately two miles north from Dungiven, on the B68 Ballyquin Road.

(AQO 6348/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department has developed a scheme to realign the bend on the Ballyquin Road in the townland of Scriggan. Unfortunately, due to difficulties acquiring the land required to carry out the scheme it has not yet been possible to bring this proposal forward into a works programme.

However, my officials will continue to pursue this matter and subject to progress on this and the availability of funding, the scheme will be considered for delivery in a future works programme.

Cycling Unit

Mr Milne asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the other departments and stakeholders he has engaged with in relation to the new Cycling Unit.

(AQO 6349/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Since setting up the Cycling Unit in November 2013, the Unit has met with an extensive range of stakeholders including the Committee for Regional Development, the All Party Group on Cycling and the Department of Health, the Public Health Agency and the Department of Education and the Department for Social Development. Meetings involving other Departments are planned. The Cycling Unit has also met with the Belfast Active Travel Task and Finish Group, Sustrans, a number of councils, Translink, Waterways Ireland, the Blackwater Regional Partnership and the Connswater Community Greenway. In developing a Bicycle Strategy for Northern Ireland, my Department has engaged with Councils and various interested bodies through five informal consultations workshops across Northern Ireland.

I wrote to Ministerial colleagues in April, informing them of my intention to establish, and Chair, a Cross-sectoral Cycling Group which would bring together the key organisations which need to work together to deliver the health, economic, social and environmental benefits already identified in the Active Travel Strategy and assist in the development of the Bicycle Strategy for Northern Ireland. DHSSPS, DE, DCAL, DSD, DOE, DOJ and DETI have nominated members to this Group which will include several other organisations. The first meeting is arranged for 26th June.

Transport: Public Attacks

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline any departmental studies that have measured the attitudes of people with a disability, and older people, towards public transport.

(AQO 6350/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department has commissioned a survey into the attitudes of disabled and older people towards public transport which is expected to be completed in the autumn.

There have been previous studies into the attitudes of people with a disability and older people towards public transport and these are listed below.

Travel Survey for Northern Ireland 2000 – 2002 through to 2010 -2012	http://www.drdni.gov.uk/index/statistics/stats-categories/northern_ireland_travel_survey.htm
Northern Ireland Concessionary Fares Users Survey May 2011	http://www.drdni.gov.uk/index/statistics/stats-categories/traffic_and_transport_research.htm

Sewage Odours: Enniskillen

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on his Department's efforts to rectify the sewage-related odour problems in the Danny's Mill Road area of Enniskillen.

(AQO 6351/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I am aware that there has been a long standing issue in this area due to odours emanating from the sewerage system. The root cause is the pumped sewage flows entering the system from Rossory Wastewater Pumping Station (WWPS) which is part of the Enniskillen sewerage drainage system. NIW has met local residents on a number of occasions and has developed a four phase programme of work to address the issue.

The first phase, which was completed in January 2013, involved the removal of five private house connections and sealing manhole lids on the trunk sewers that run through the area, in order to help contain odours within the sewerage system. The second phase, which involves undertaking essential cleaning/repairs to the trunk sewers and sealing additional manhole lids, commenced in March 2014. It is scheduled for completion in mid-July 2014. Unfortunately, during this construction work the odours in the area temporarily increased owing to the disturbance of the drainage system.

The third phase relates to the feasibility of re-routing the pumping sewer and upgrading the Enniskillen sewerage system. A number of options are currently under consideration including re-routing the pumping sewer from Rossory WWPS, septicity dosing to neutralise odours in the pumping main and upgrading Rossory and Killynure WWPS as part of the Enniskillen Drainage Area Plan (DAP). The re-routing of the pumping sewer is emerging as the most economical option to permanently address the immediate odour issues at Danny's Mill. This phase is expected to commence later this year with completion in early 2015.

A business case is currently being developed to consider the longer term requirements for the upstream drainage system and in particular Rossory WWPS and Killynure WWPS, as part of the Enniskillen Drainage Area Plan. It is envisaged that this final phase will complete the work needed to provide a long term solution to the sewerage problems in this area.

NI Water representatives shall be meeting local residents affected to reassure them of NI Water's commitment to have the matter resolved.

Driver and Vehicle Agency: Job Relocation

Dr McDonnell asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of jobs in his Department that could be located in County Hall, Coleraine in order to reduce the impact on the upcoming redundancy of Driver and Vehicle Agency staff. (AQO 6352/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Firstly I would like to take this opportunity to, once again, pledge my support to the efforts being made to redeploy those staff affected by the decision to withdraw licensing work from Northern Ireland.

My Department has already made a positive contribution towards finding posts for the affected staff. Three DVA staff have transferred to DRD's Transport NI offices in County Hall, Coleraine and a further three posts have been offered to staff from DVA. When combined with contributions offered by other Departments, I would hope this will make a positive impact in terms of addressing the surplus staff position.

I understand from the Minister of the Environment's recent announcement that a number of DOE posts will be moving from Belfast to Coleraine. Given that this decision is likely to lead to a number of staff being displaced in Belfast, my Department will continue to work closely with DOE officials to identify redeployment opportunities which might be made available to staff affected by this decision.

My Department's officials are also actively engaged in work with DOE and DFP colleagues to identify other job opportunities which may be made available. In tandem with this, DRD is an active member of the NICS Inter-Departmental Redeployment Group tasked to consider ways of resolving the surplus situation.

I can assure Members that my officials will continue to work closely with the appropriate personnel to find ways in which we can further assist the affected staff.

Department for Social Development

Homelessness Monitor Northern Ireland

Mr Copeland asked the Minister for Social Development what actions his Department will take as a result of the findings of The Homelessness Monitor Northern Ireland, produced by Crisis and the Joseph Rowntree Foundation.

(AQW 33803/11-15)

Mr McCausland (The Minister for Social Development): NIHE presented at the launch in Belfast of the Homelessness Monitor Northern Ireland. This report provided a 'baseline' account of how homelessness stood in Northern Ireland in 2013. It also highlighted emerging trends and forecasts of some of the likely changes, identifying developments likely to have the most significant impacts on homelessness. These include welfare, housing and other social policy reforms, including cutbacks in public expenditure.

The report indicates that rates of statutory homelessness are higher in Northern Ireland than the rest of the UK. However, it did qualify that this was partly as a result of different policy and administrative practices that differ than those in Great Britain as can be seen in the two quotes from the report below:

- i "This reflects in part the fact that acceptances have fallen in England and Wales as a result of the vigorous implementation of the Homelessness Prevention/Housing Options model. There has also been a more recent but similarly substantial drop in the levels of statutory homelessness in Scotland as a result of the later adoption of the Housing Options model"
- ii. "Another contributory factor to the rates of statutory homeless in Northern Ireland may be local administration tradition of the treatment of certain categories of applicants. In particular, older people whom it is unreasonable to expect to continue to occupy their current accommodation (e.g. because they cannot manage the stress), are treated as statutory homeless in Northern Ireland whereas they are generally accommodated via mainstream allocation processes elsewhere in the UK."

This means that the information on levels of statutory homelessness compared to Great Britain are not directly comparable.

The Housing Executive has produced a Homeless Strategy 2012 – 2017 to address homelessness in Northern Ireland with the aim of eliminating long term homelessness and rough sleeping across Northern Ireland by 2020. The Homeless Strategy 2012 – 2017 has recently been reviewed, taking account of the findings of the Homeless Monitor Northern Ireland 2013. Key themes have been identified going forward;

- Given the significant impact within Great Britain the adoption of a Housing Options approach in Northern Ireland will be investigated which will examine an individual's options and choices in the widest sense when they look for housing advice. This approach features early preventative intervention and explores all possible housing options including social renting, private renting, owner-occupation and remaining in current accommodation.
- The implementation of a Housing First approach is based on the concept that a homeless individual's first and primary need is to obtain stable housing, and that the other issues that may affect them can and should be addressed once housing is obtained. This approach moves away from the use of temporary accommodation hostels towards an emphasis on placing homeless households directly into mainstream accommodation with appropriate support provided. A Housing First pilot scheme managed by the Depaul organisation is currently operating in Belfast. It helps chronically homeless people with complex needs move from a hostel environment to independent living with necessary support and prevents repeat homelessness.
- The development of a Common Assessment Tool to comprehensively assess the health and social care needs of those presenting as homeless. This approach, which has been agreed with the sector, would ensure that an initial assessment of a homeless person's housing and support needs would be easily accessible to a wide variety of agencies across Northern Ireland thus allowing appropriate help to be provided in a timely manner.
- The introduction of a Central Access Point for all homeless services will be explored examining the creation of a centralised facility which advises on current temporary and permanent housing vacancies and has access to a range of support services. This model, which will remove the need to travel or contact a range of homeless agencies, will provide a known single point of contact for a homeless person who requires immediate help with accommodation or other support requirements.

The Housing Executive will establish revised inter-agency structures to develop these themes both centrally and locally. Within these new forums it will continue to work with a wide range of voluntary, statutory and private stakeholders to produce and deliver on action/commissioning plans.

Homelessness

Mr Copeland asked the Minister for Social Development to outline his Department's plans to address the level of homelessness.

(AQW 33804/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has produced a Homelessness Strategy 2012 – 2017 with the main aim that long term homelessness and rough sleeping is eliminated across Northern Ireland by 2020. There has been steady progress to date relevant to the strategy's 38 recommendation action plan. The Housing Executive achievements funded from the Homelessness Budget include;

- Simon Community undertaking a preventative homeless programme within schools
- Housing Rights Service working with prisoners to find suitable accommodation on release
- Women's Aid extending their Domestic and Sexual Violence Helpline to aid vulnerable women
- The procurement of a Private Rented Sector Access Scheme by Smartmove NI
- The establishment of a Multi-Disciplinary Team in Belfast to support homeless people with complex needs
- The development of crisis facilities an accompanying street outreach services for rough sleepers and street drinkers in Belfast and Londonderry.

In addition through the Housing Related Support Strategy £26.6 million funding for homeless linked services has been provided within the Supporting People programme for 2014/15. The Homeless Strategy 2012 – 2017 has recently been reviewed, taking account of the findings of the Homeless Monitor Northern Ireland 2013.

Key themes have been identified going forward;

- Given the significant impact within Great Britain the adoption of a Housing Options approach in Northern Ireland will be investigated which will examine an individual's options and choices in the widest sense when they look for housing advice. A Housing First pilot scheme managed by the Depaul organisation is currently operating in Belfast. It helps chronically homeless people with complex needs move from a hostel environment to independent living with necessary support and prevents repeat homelessness.

This approach, which has been agreed with the sector, would ensure that an initial assessment of a homeless person's housing and support needs would be easily accessible to a wide variety of agencies across Northern Ireland thus allowing appropriate help to be provided in a timely manner.

Housing Executive: North Down Properties

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the Housing Executive stock in North Down are being considered for transfer to a housing association.

(AQW 33834/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that their stock in North Down which is currently on the Stock Transfer Programme are all located in Bangor:

- Drumawhey Gardens (54 properties)
- Rathgill Park (16 properties)
- Jubilee Court (38 properties)
- Ballynoe Gardens (8 properties)
- Ravara Gardens (12 properties)

A review of the Stock Transfer Programme is currently taking place to determine whether the Programme in its current form is the best way to effectively deliver the desired outcomes. The expectation is that the review will be completed in the next few weeks at which stage any revised approach and recommendations will be presented for consideration.

Although it is accepted that any revisions to the current planned process may delay progress initially, the intention is to make the Programme more readily deliverable overall. If it is decided that the Stock Transfer Programme should be reconfigured, the Housing Executive will write to all of the affected tenants to clarify the timescale for their properties.

In the meantime the Housing Executive will continue to undertake normal response maintenance works to the properties in the Stock Transfer Programme, where necessary.

Housing Executive: Planned Maintenance Contracts

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Social Development what has been the change in the audited assessment of planned maintenance contracts carried out by the Housing Executive in each of the last three years.
(AQW 33842/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that in 2011/12 their Corporate Assurance Unit (CAU) completed 28 inspections with 43% obtaining a satisfactory or substantial classification. This improved slightly in 2012/13 with 44% of the 43 inspections completed being satisfactory or substantial.

2013/14 saw a further improvement in the inspection results with 83% of the 18 completed inspections achieving a substantial or satisfactory rating. As part of the planned merger of the Internal Audit Department and Corporate Assurance Unit, the Housing Executive's Acting Chief Executive has requested a due diligence exercise to review the current reporting arrangements. The exercise is due to be completed and reported on by 30th June 2014.

There has been a continuous improvement each year in terms of the inspection results. In the 2013/2014 inspection programme, CAU staff provided feedback highlighting the main recurring issues found specifically within Kitchen installations and window replacement schemes as well as identifying the main Health & Safety issues found within these work streams to ensure further improvement. CAU has found the quality of work on site has generally improved and is widening its inspection regime to include the wider scheme delivery process from inception to completion, which includes contract management.

Housing Executive: Superannuation Scheme

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development who is responsible for the training of Northern Ireland Housing Executive staff in the administration of the superannuation scheme, particularly when it relates to severe ill health.
(AQW 33845/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that it is not responsible for the administration of the superannuation scheme. This is handled by the Northern Ireland Local Government Officers' Superannuation Committee (NILGOSC) of which the Housing Executive is a participating employer.

The Housing Executive has further advised that their HR staff deal with cases of severe ill health by referring them, on receipt of an independent Occupational Health Advisor's opinion, to NILGOSC for their consideration. NILGOSC then deal with such cases on the basis of their own Occupational Health advisor's opinions.

NILGOSC provides regular refresher training on the administration of the scheme to Housing Executive payroll and HR staff and advice on the aspects of the scheme when required to Housing Executive's HR managers.

Ethnic and Religious Minority Groups

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister for Social Development what financial, or other, resources his Department has provided to ethnic and religious minority groups, in each of the last five years.
(AQW 33875/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Detail of funding provided by my Department to ethnic and religious minority groups in each of the last five years is attached at Annex A.

My Department provides funding to the Churches Community Work Alliance to enable it to deliver generic faith-based community development services to groups across Northern Ireland, including those from an ethnic minority background. Additionally, in 2010 the Community Faiths' Forum was established to bring together representatives from Christian and non Christian backgrounds to discuss social and community issues. This Forum contains representation from Bahai, Buddhist, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh faiths alongside members from various Christian traditions.

Through the Neighbourhood Renewal Strategy funding was provided where a priority need for action was identified within local Neighbourhood Renewal Action Plans and where resources were available. An example of such funding was provided to Strabane Ethnic Community Association, which is an organisation delivering services to people from ethnic minorities living in the Strabane Neighbourhood Renewal Area and to An Munia Tober, which is the Travellers' Support Programme for Northern Ireland.

Through the Regional Infrastructure Support Programme the Department provides support for Advice Services, Women's Services and Volunteering Services across Northern Ireland, including those from ethnic and religious minority groups.

While the Social Security Agency does not provide financial support for religious and minority groups, the Agency does provide telephony and face to face interpretation and translation services to ensure that claimants from a minority ethnic background, whose first language is not English, are able to access the benefit system. The Social Security Agency has also delivered programmes of work aimed at improving the uptake of benefits to the whole population across Northern Ireland, including those from ethnic minority groups.

Ethnic and Religious Minority Groups

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister for Social Development what financial, or other, support is available from his Department for religious and ethnic minority groups.

(AQW 33878/11-15)

Mr McCausland: My Department provides funding to the Churches Community Work Alliance to enable it to deliver generic faith-based community development services to groups across Northern Ireland, including those from an ethnic minority background. Additionally, in 2010 the Community Faiths' Forum was established to bring together representatives from Christian and non Christian backgrounds to discuss social and community issues. This Forum contains representation from Bahai, Buddhist, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim and Sikh faiths alongside members from various Christian traditions.

Through the Neighbourhood Renewal Strategy funding is provided where a priority need for action is identified within local Neighbourhood Renewal Action Plans and where resources are available.

Through the Regional Infrastructure Support Programme the Department provides support for Advice Services, Women's Services and Volunteering Services across Northern Ireland, including those from ethnic and religious minority groups.

The Social Security Agency provides telephony and face to face interpretation and translation services to ensure that claimants from a minority ethnic background, whose first language is not English, are able to access the benefit system. The Social Security Agency has also delivered programmes of work aimed at improving the uptake of benefits to the whole population across Northern Ireland, including those from ethnic minority groups.

Housing Executive: Rent and Rates Charges

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister for Social Development what steps he will take to rectify the situation whereby Northern Ireland Housing Executive tenants, especially elderly tenants, who receive notifications regarding variations in their charges for rent and rates, find that these notifications do not adequately explain the impact that these changes will have on how much they have to pay.

(AQW 33916/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that they are aware through customer feedback that some tenants are not satisfied with the volume and content of Housing Benefit notifications currently being sent to them. They have already identified through engagement with tenants that many people would prefer to receive their information in a more straightforward, conventional letter format. This would better meet the needs of the tenants rather than the computer generated Benefit Decision Notices that are currently issued.

The Housing Executive is to some extent constrained by legislative requirements but they have already entered into discussions with their software suppliers with a view to making notifications clearer and more easily understood.

Finally, the Housing Executive hopes to start issuing revised notifications later this year and will be seeking further feedback from tenants both directly and via the Community Housing Forum before implementing further changes

Social Housing: Grosvenor Barracks Site

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant AQW 33567/11-15, to detail (i) when the decision was taken not to provide additional social housing on the Grosvenor Barracks site, given that it was previously announced that 500 mixed tenure homes were to be built on the site; (ii) who took the decision; and (iii) why no further social houses are planned for this site.

(AQW 33920/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The twenty acre Grosvenor Barracks site is divided into two sections. The smaller of these is 2.7 acres in size (referred to as Ballaghmore Heights) which has been developed by Clanmil Housing Association to provide ten units of social housing. The remaining 17.2 acre site contains a range of former military buildings and installations. Outline planning permission was submitted in January 2011 for a 200 dwelling (mixed tenure) scheme on this site. A remediation plan has been completed and submitted to the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) Regulator. Planning consent is dependent on the approval of this remediation plan.

However, it is worth noting that under the reform of Local Government, Fermanagh District Council was notified by the Department of the Environment on 13 November 2013 that this development site would be transferring to the new Fermanagh/Omagh Council from 1 April 2015.

My officials continue to work with the appointed Consultants and DFP to resolve the outstanding issues to progress planning approval.

Migrant Residents

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development what research has been undertaken to determine the number of migrants currently resident in areas classified or regarded as unionist and nationalist.

(AQW 34024/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has two studies in progress which involve migrant residents: the first involves mapping segregation and will include migrant households and communities; the other will examine the impact of migrant workers on the housing market by comparing Dungannon, with large numbers of migrants, with Larne where numbers are low.

The Community Relations Council published an article, "Moving apart or moving together? A snapshot of residential segregation from the 2011 Census"¹ in November 2013, which examines residential segregation and refers to where migrants are settling. The Northern Ireland Longitudinal Study also examines these issues.

Freedom of Information Requests

Mr Rogers asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of Freedom of Information requests he has received in each of the last three financial years; and of these, how many have been considered under section 12 of the Environmental Information Regulations, rather than the Freedom of Information Act 2000.

(AQW 34049/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The number of Freedom of Information requests received in my Department, in each of the last three financial years, was as follows –

- 2011-2012 - 240
- 2012-2013 - 239
- 2013-2014 - 287

Information was withheld under the Environmental Information Regulations exceptions in two of the requests received during the 2011/12 financial year. One exception was applied in the 2012/13 year and none in 2013/14.

The Member may wish to note that information regarding requests under the Freedom of Information Act 2000 and the Environmental Information Regulations 2004 is published in a series of FOI Annual Reports. It is collected on the basis of calendar years, not financial years. This has been the case since 01 January 2005, when the legislation came fully into force.

The reports can be accessed from the OFMDFM website at:

http://www.ofmdfmi.gov.uk/index/improving-public-services/information_management_and_central_advisory_branch/annual-reports-and-statistics.htm

The report for 2013 is in preparation and cannot be seen as validated until it is published.

Charity Commission: Staffing

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development how many staff in the Charity Commission are involved in investigative work; and how many of those staff have been trained in this work, broken down by grade.

(AQW 34164/11-15)

Mr McCausland:

Grade 7 (x1):

- Almost 20 years experience of audit and investigation work
- CIPFA/Bond Solon: Advanced Professional Certificate in Investigative Practice
- CMIIA (Chartered Membership Institute Internal Auditors)

Grade SO (x1):

- 25 years investigative experience
- Forensic specialist
- PEACE Interview Trainer
- Accredited Counter Fraud Specialist

Grade EO (x2):

- Completed training in CIPFA/Bond Solon: Certificate in Investigatory Practice
- Both regulatory/investigative background

Criteria Used by the Charity Commission

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development what criteria the Charity Commission uses to decide whether to carry out a statutory inquiry; and how does it apply the risk-based approach described on its website.

(AQW 34165/11-15)

Mr McCausland: There are a number of criteria, which include the seriousness of the issues presented, the risk to governance within the charity, the risk to the charities assets and the need to use the powers assigned to the Commission under the Charities Act (Northern Ireland) 2008. A risk assessment is carried out on initial receipt of the concern and this risk assessment is repeated throughout the life of the investigation as new information is received and conclusions drawn. The opening of a statutory inquiry is ratified by at least three Commissioners before being taken forward.

Grove Park: Roof Replacement Scheme

Mrs Hale asked the Minister for Social Development when final approval will be granted for the roof replacement scheme for Grove Park, Culcavy, given that the initial date for completion was November 2012.

(AQW 34338/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that it is their expectation that tender documents will be with their contracts department week commencing 16 June 2014. The Housing Executive's aim is to be on site by late August with completion scheduled for November 2014.

Northern Ireland Assembly Commission

Disability: Members Declaration

Mr Hussey asked the Assembly Commission how many Members have declared a disability.

(AQW 34125/11-15)

Mrs Cochrane (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): At the start of each mandate (or whenever a Member joins the Assembly midway through a mandate), each Member is provided with a disability audit form. So far in this mandate, 4 members have declared a disability.

Written Answers to Questions

Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister

Ethnic and Religious Minority Groups

Mr Nesbitt asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what financial, or other, resources their Department has provided to ethnic and religious minority groups in each of the last five years.

(AQW 33874/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness (The First Minister and deputy First Minister): For the past five years, including this financial year, the Minority Ethnic Development Fund has been set at £1.1m per annum.

The Racial Equality Unit also provides day to day assistance and guidance to individuals and groups in respect of their funding awards.

Markethill: Main Street

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what propriety interest their Department has in the premises at Main Street, Markethill, formerly occupied by SAVER/NAVER.

(AQW 33908/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Department has a charge over the premises at Main Street, Markethill along with two other funders (Rural Development Council and International Fund for Ireland). A pari passu agreement is in place between the funders.

Social Investment Fund

Mr P Ramsey asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline any changes that have been made to the Area Plans of the Social Investment Fund.

(AQO 6286/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Following our decision on the allocation of the Fund across the nine Zones, the Steering Groups were given the opportunity to revise the priority ranking of projects submitted within the Area Plans. As a result, a number of projects were reprioritised within the Belfast South, Western, Southern and Belfast East area plans by the Steering Groups. This took account of progress since submission of the plans and the current needs of the local communities, as well as to maximise the impact of available funding.

Active Ageing Strategy

Mr Storey asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the Active Ageing Strategy 2014-20.

(AQO 6280/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The purpose of the Active Ageing Strategy is to transform attitudes to and services for older people. It is important that we fully acknowledge the enormous contribution that older people make to our society and that we challenge the negative stereotyping of older people. The Strategy will provide direction for departments' policies, make connections between Strategies and lead to the improvement of services for older people.

It will increase the understanding of the issues affecting older people and promote an emphasis on rights, value and contribution, as opposed to needs, costs and burden.

The public consultation on the Active Ageing Strategy ran from Friday 21 February and ended on Friday 23 May.

Consultees were asked for their views on the draft Vision, Strategic Aims and signature programme proposals in the Strategy.

Nine public consultation events were held and these included an intergenerational event at which younger and older people worked together to provide feedback on the Strategy.

Over 300 people attended the events and approximately 140 online or written responses have been received.

The consultation responses are currently being analysed and it is planned that following Ministerial and Executive approval the finalised Strategy will be launched in the autumn.

The Strategy will be implemented under the Delivering Social Change initiative and the Ageing Strategy Advisory Group, chaired by Claire Keatinge the Commissioner for Older People, will play a key role in overseeing its delivery.

St Patrick's Barracks

Mr Frew asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the progress made at the St Patrick's Barracks site. (AQO 6281/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The St Patrick's Barracks site occupies a significant position within Ballymena. It is consequently very important that when looking at the future of the site all potential uses are examined and consideration is given to the wider regeneration and development needs of Ballymena Town Centre and its environs.

With that in mind, a stakeholder group was formed and our Department is working closely with both the Department for Social Development and representatives of the new shadow Mid and East Antrim Council to consider how the site can best be developed for the economic and social benefit of the community.

To ensure that all of the public sector interests in the site are consulted as part of the wider stakeholder group, our Department recently arranged for Land and Property Services to undertake a trawl for interest in the site by public sector bodies. We are still awaiting the final report on the outcome of that trawl but we understand that a number of interests have been expressed including in the education and housing sectors.

We will continue to work with the shadow council and the Department for Social Development to determine the most advantageous uses for the site and the best way in which these can be delivered.

Bright Start

Miss M McIlveen asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the level of interest expressed in Bright Start. (AQO 6282/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Bright Start School Age Childcare Grant Scheme was launched on 27 March 2014. The Scheme is open to existing and prospective providers of school age childcare services and aims to create or sustain up to 7,000 childcare places. Public interest in the Grant Scheme has been significant. Our promotional events in April 2014 attracted close to 300 potential applicants and, to date, 76 full applications and 60 expressions of interest have been received.

Social Investment Fund: East Belfast

Mr Douglas asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the Social Investment Fund projects in East Belfast. (AQO 6283/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Five projects have been prioritised by the Steering Group within the funding allocation for the Belfast East Social Investment Fund Zone. One of these projects, a capital development of Bryson Street Surgery, has been formally approved and a draft letter of offer has been issued. Our officials are working to issue and agree a revised letter of offer in the coming weeks to enable work to commence on delivery. The remaining four projects, details of which can be found at <http://www.ofmdfmi.gov.uk/index/delivering-social-change/social-investment-fund/sif-projects.htm> are currently being progressed through the economic appraisal approval process. We hope to be in a position to secure approvals for these and move to delivery over the remainder of the year.

Victims and Survivors: Support and Financial Assistance

Mr Nesbitt asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for their assessment of the delays whereby victims and survivors have yet to receive offer letters for packages of support or financial assistance which have been registered since February 2014. (AQW 34224/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Victims and Survivors Service (VSS) has received 2,041 applications via the Gateway Process since 4 February 2014. This was higher than anticipated and to date the Service has issued 787 award letters, which was the maximum possible based on the budget available for 2013-14.

The remaining applications are currently being processed to ensure that when the schemes and budgets are opened for 2014-2015, the Service will be in a position to respond with minimum delay.

The Financial Assistance Scheme (Scheme 6) was opened to the seriously injured on the higher care component of Disability Living Allowance in April 2014. It opened to remaining clients on 2 June 2014 and will close on 30 June 2014.

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

Flooding: Greystown and Sicily Park

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the recommendations proposed by the November 2012 Performance and Efficiency Delivery Unit report on flooding in the Greystown and Sicily park area of Belfast. (AQW 34174/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): The PEDU Report made a number of recommendations relating to many aspects of flood risk management. Many of these recommendations have already been implemented and others are at various stages of progression. The Report did not refer specifically to Greystown and Sicily Park, but I can confirm that significant work has been done and is ongoing at these locations to improve drainage infrastructure.

DARD Direct Office: Claudy

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development why the decision was taken to abandon a Direct Office in Claudy; and how the needs of farmers in the Limavady, Dungiven, and Claudy areas will be met. (AQW 34206/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Since the announcement that there would be a network of 12 DARD Direct offices across the north of Ireland in 2009, DARD has been working with (Department of Finance and Personnel) DFP to identify, secure and refurbish office accommodation at the named locations, which included Claudy. Whilst suitable premises were identified in Claudy, DFP were unable to confirm a procurement programme and clarify payment conditions with the developer for delivery within 2012/13.

In September 2012, I announced that the new DARD HQ would be located at the Ballykelly site. Given the position with the Claudy premises, I asked my officials to re-consider the options for the DARD Direct office in the Northwest. Following analysis of the options, I decided that locating the office in Strabane meets the DARD Direct criteria, is a good fit with DARD's Estate Strategy, and ties in with the Regional Development Strategy 2035.

Customers in the Limavady, Dungiven and Claudy areas who need to visit a DARD Direct office will have the choice of Coleraine, Magherafelt or Strabane DARD Direct offices, whichever is the most convenient.

Headquarters Relocation

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether there will be any front of office service to deal with the queries of local farmers when her Department's headquarters relocates to Ballykelly. (AQW 34207/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I intend that the new DARD headquarters at Ballykelly will carry out broadly similar functions to those currently carried out at our existing headquarters at Dundonald House. These do not include front of office services.

Veterinary Offices: Londonderry and Limavady

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the future plans for the veterinary offices in Londonderry and Limavady, including the timeframes that apply. (AQW 34208/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: In November 2013, I announced the final DARD Direct office would be incorporated within a new purpose built Government office on the site of the current Social Security Office at Urney Road, Strabane. The building will also include a new modern Jobs and Benefits office. Work is due to begin at the site in Autumn 2014, subject to planning permission and the Central Procurement Division's tender process.

Once delivered, this office will complete the roll-out of DARD Direct and will bring together DARD staff currently headquartered at Orchard Industrial Estate, Strabane; Asylum Road, Derry and from our offices at Killane Road, Limavady.

Following staff re-location, I expect the full range of DARD services will be available to farmers in the surrounding area by Spring 2016. Feedback from farmers has always been very positive and I believe co-locating with DSD and DEL is a very cost effective way for DARD to ensure our customers in the North West enjoy the same benefits as others.

Heat, Electricity and Water: DARD Spend

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how much her Department has spent on (i) heat; (ii) electricity; and (iii) water in each of the last five years. (AQW 34247/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The total spend incurred by the Department on heat, electricity and water over the past five financial years is analysed in the table below.

Year	(i) Heat/Fuel	(ii) Electricity	(iii) Water
2009/10	£412,915.58	£677,660.29	£118,883.96
2010/11	£486,103.95	£781,684.80	£168,780.49
2011/12	£507,646.76	£849,218.28	£105,258.96
2012/13	£563,068.03	£873,368.05	£69,646.38
2013/14	£515,469.29	£923,429.44	£106,446.12
Total	£2,485,203.61	£4,105,360.86	£569,015.91

- (i) There is no specific account code to collate all spend incurred specifically on heat. Therefore, for the purposes of answering this question, the total spend in relation to fuel for accommodation has been used.

Programme for Government 2011-15

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to what extent her Department has implemented the Programme for Government 2011-15 commitment that all public procurement contracts for supplies, services and construction works will include social clauses; and to what level such clauses have been implemented.

(AQW 34310/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: In 2013-14 all 20 of the contracts awarded by my Department included Community Benefit clauses in relation to early payment commitments and health & safety and equality in the workplace requirements. Rivers Agency contracts afforded the opportunity to include other clauses in addition to these, particularly in relation to sustainability.

Two of the contracts in this period were construction projects and these included the award of apprenticeships and work placements.

Fisheries Task Force

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the work of the recently announced Fisheries Taskforce.

(AQW 34340/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The inaugural meeting of the Fishing Industry Task Force will take place on Friday 4 July 2014. I want the Task Force to undertake a fundamental examination of the challenges and opportunities facing the industry and to identify options for reform to help to ensure the future sustainability of the local fishing sector. I expect the Task Force to make initial recommendations by the end of 2014.

Livestock Carcasses

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (i) for a breakdown of the number of illegally dumped livestock carcasses in each council district which were removed by the local authority; (ii) to detail the financial cost to the local authority of removing these illegally dumped livestock carcasses, in each of the last four years.

(AQW 34347/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Disposal of animal carcasses is required under Regulation EC 1069/2009 Articles 13 and 21 and subsequently the Animal By-Products (Enforcement) Regulations (NI) 2001. DARD is the Competent Authority for the implementation of these regulations.

The responsibility for the disposal of fallen animals lies with the occupier of the premises or the person considered by DARD to be in charge of the premises.

Where a carcass is dumped on private land, wherever possible the owner of the animal will be identified and held responsible. If ownership cannot be proven, responsibility for disposal rests with the landowner.

Where a carcass is dumped elsewhere, including on public land or highways, and ownership of the carcass cannot be ascertained, responsibility for disposal often rests with the local authority. DARD, through the local Divisional Veterinary Office, can assist the district council wherever possible to try and establish ownership of the carcass on a case by case basis.

DARD is not responsible for the disposal of illegally dumped livestock carcasses nor has DARD any responsibility for collating information about local authority removal of waste and associated costs. Information on carcass collection and costs should be sought from individual councils.

Livestock Carcasses

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what advice she can offer to local authorities attempting to tackle repeat offences of illegal dumping of livestock carcasses in a particular rural area.

(AQW 34348/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Responsibility for investigating and enforcing illegal dumping lies with the NIEA and local councils. DARD is responsible for enforcing animal by-products legislation, including the proper disposal of animal carcasses. DARD is very aware of the issue of dumped carcasses and the environmental, animal and public health risks which result. DARD's Veterinary Service are consulted on a regular basis by District Council officials about the disposal of animal by-products, which includes livestock carcasses. Veterinary Service staff have also met local district councillors (including Newry and Mourne District Council) to discuss issues associated with this activity. Where the carcass identity can be established, Veterinary Service provides keeper details to the District Council.

Livestock Carcasses

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what action her Department is taking to address the issue of illegal dumping of livestock carcasses.

(AQW 34349/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The disposal of animal carcasses, is required under the Animal By-Products (Enforcement) Regulations (NI) 2011 (ABPER). DARD is the Competent Authority for the implementation of these regulations. The responsibility for the disposal of fallen animals lies with the occupier of the premises or the person considered by DARD to be in charge of the premises.

Where a carcass is dumped on private land, wherever possible the owner of the animal will be identified and held responsible. If ownership cannot be proven, responsibility for disposal rests with the landowner. When such cases are reported to DARD, local Veterinary Service (VS) staff will collect information and establish responsibility. VS will then require the proper disposal, if necessary by serving a Statutory Notice and taking enforcement action.

Where a carcass is dumped elsewhere, including on public land or highways, and ownership of the carcass cannot be ascertained, responsibility for disposal often rests with the local authority. DARD, through the local Divisional Veterinary Office, can assist the district council wherever possible to try and establish ownership of the carcass on a case by case basis.

Farm Safe Awareness Courses

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 34162/11-15, to detail the number of participants in each financial year.

(AQW 34461/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: In 2012/13 some 238 people were trained. In the 2013/14 year 3,030 people were trained and for 2014/15 some 307 people were trained.

Since my last reply an additional 28 people have been trained bringing the total for 2014/15 to 335.

To date 3,603 people have now been trained since the Farm Safe Awareness programme started in December 2012.

Young Farmer Scheme

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether the Young Farmer Scheme payment will include people who have become active farmers in the five years preceding their first application.

(AQW 34488/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: To benefit from the Young Farmers' Scheme, a young farmer must be setting up as head of an agricultural holding for the first time, or must have set up as such during the five years preceding the first submission of an application under the new Basic Payment Scheme.

Regulation (EU) 1307/2014 is clear that support is available for a maximum of five years, but this must be reduced by the number of years that have elapsed between setting up as head of an agricultural holding and the first submission of an application to the Young Farmers' Scheme.

Therefore, a young farmer who has been head of an agricultural holding for less than five years preceding his/her first application to the Young Farmers' Scheme will potentially be eligible for a payment under that Scheme, subject to meeting all eligibility criteria for the Basic Payment Scheme. Young farmers who have farmed in their own right for more than five years as head of holding will not be entitled to receive additional support under the Young Farmers' Scheme.

Slurry Mixing Operations: Safe Practice

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the research project at the Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute on Safe Practice in Slurry Mixing Operations.

(AQW 34519/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The research project on Safe Practice in Slurry mixing Operations started in April 2013 and was due to finish in March 2014.

While the project itself has been completed the report detailing the outcomes of the project is still being finalised in the Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute. We expect to receive the report by the end of July.

Slurry Tanks: Safety

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the financial assistance available to farmers to improve the safety of slurry tanks.

(AQW 34520/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department currently does not provide financial assistance to improve slurry tanks.

As I have outlined previously, my Department, through its work with the Farm Safety Partnership, is already doing as much as it can to help ensure farmers are better informed about safety on their farms, including the key issue around the mixing of slurry which is one which concerns me greatly. The key message to farmers remains "think SAFE". Getting that message across will promote good practice and help to mitigate against the dangers on our farms.

Guidance on the handling of slurry during mixing, and one that I strongly recommend, can be found on the Farm Safe website at http://farmsafe.hseni.gov.uk/will_hydrogen_sulphide_monitors_keep_me_safe_when_working_with_slurry_web.pdf

In the current proposals for the draft Rural Development Programme (RDP) 2014-2020 a Farm Business Investment Scheme is proposed with the potential to support investment in larger capital items that would help improve farm safety, among other aspects of farm competitiveness. This scheme, if agreed, will allow for investment in larger items that could not be accommodated in the existing Farm Modernisation Programme.

Livestock Grazing

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the estimated farmland that is not in the ownership of individuals who have livestock grazing without the permission of legal owner of the land.

(AQW 34612/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The Department does not hold the information necessary to estimate the area of farmland that is not in the ownership of individuals who have livestock grazing without the permission of legal owner of the land.

Land ownership is not in itself an eligibility condition of area-based schemes and claims can legitimately be made on land that is not owned.

Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure

Hospitality: DCAL

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what was the total cost of hospitality provided by (i) her Department; and (ii) its arm's-length bodies in 2013/14.

(AQW 33832/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): The Department spent a total of £38,790 on hospitality during 2013/14.

The Department's arm's-length bodies (excluding North/South bodies) spent a total of £63,713 on hospitality during the same period.

The Department's North/South bodies have a financial year which mirrors the calendar year. Spending on hospitality during 2013 for these bodies was £2,384.

Ethnic and Religious Minority Groups

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what financial, or other, resources her Department has provided to ethnic and religious minority groups in each of the last five years.

(AQW 33876/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department supports ethnic and religious minority groups through the funds it provides to its arms length bodies which deliver a wide range of grants, programmes and other support. The financial assistance provided in each of the last five years by my Department and delivered through its arms length bodies is in the table below:

2009/2010	£18,962
2010/2011	£9,128
2011/2012	£18,029
2012/2013	£26,960
2013/2014	£49,404

The following are some examples of events and programmes that have been supported.

- Community Festivals Fund supports numerous ethnic events that help people engage with and learn from other cultures for example the Belfast Mela and Polish Christmas Festival;
- In 2012/13 £8,000 was awarded from the City of Culture's Cultural Programme to the Chinese Welfare Association for Chinese New Year celebrations;
- In 2013/14 DCAL provided £7,225 to the NI Community of Refugees and Asylum Seekers (NICRAS) project which organised trips to the Ulster Folk and Transport Museum. This collaboration resulted in a programme of work experience being set up for a core group of nine refugees and asylum seekers from African countries including Ethiopia, Zimbabwe, Malawi, Sudan and Algeria who availed of the opportunity to gain work experience and skills at the Museum; and
- Sport NI has provided direct investments to ethnic and religious groups including £3,177 to the Polish Saturday School Ballymena to improve integration through sport and physical activity.

Ethnic and Religious Minority Groups

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what financial, or other departmental support, is available to each of the ethnic and religious minority groups in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 33898/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Department of Culture Arts and Leisure supports ethnic and religious minority groups through the funds it provides to its arms length bodies which deliver a wide range of grants, programmes and other support.

The Arts Council (ACNI)

ACNI provides funding through schemes that directly target ethnic minority groups such as:

- the Intercultural Arts Grants Programme which provides opportunities for minority ethnic communities to access the arts and use artistic activities as a creative vehicle to explore and highlight social issues that impede access to the arts.
- Support for the Individual Artist Programme – Minority Ethnic Individual Award for specific projects, specialized research, personal artistic development and certain materials or equipment that support professional arts practice specifically targeted at artists from Minority Ethnic communities.
- The Community Festivals fund is available to applicants from all communities including those from ethnic and religious minority groups. It is administered by Local Councils who match fund allocations provided by DCAL.

LibrariesNI

All library services are available to people from minority ethnic communities, but in addition a range of tailored services are provided which includes reading materials and other resources that meet the needs of people from minority ethnic communities and in the context of building a shared future, opportunities are taken to raise awareness of, and celebrate, different cultures. For example, in partnership with the Belfast Migrant Centre, Libraries NI is hosting an exhibition called 'Belonging' a multimedia project that showcases the individual stories of migrants in the North of Ireland through personal items and stories. The exhibition is integrated with a series of workshops on immigration, cultural diversity and equality.

National Museums (NMNI)

National Museum sites and programmes are available to all groups including those from ethnic/religious minority backgrounds. A forthcoming event in June to celebrate Community Relations Week involves the Ulster American Folk Park partnering Omagh Ethnic Communities Support Group to host 'Foodfest' where visitors are invited to taste ethnic traditional foods.

Sport NI (SNI)

SNI's Active Clubs programme is aimed at targeting underrepresented groups which has the potential to secure funding for programmes that will target ethnic/religious minority groups. Sport NI can provide organisations representing ethnic/religious minority groups with advice and support in a range of sport related areas including performance, coaching, technical guidance, sport facility development and funding.

Cliff Project: Seacourt Estate, Larne

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail (i) Larne Borough Council's role in the operating and governance issues of the Cliff Project in Seacourt Estate, Larne; (ii) the role councillors have in decision making; and (iii) the councillors who are members of the relevant committee.

(AQW 33924/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The terms and conditions for the Sport NI lottery award which assisted the construction of The Cliff facility did not stipulate (i) Larne Borough Council's role in the operating and governance issues of the Cliff Project in Seacourt Estate, Larne; (ii) the role councillors have in decision making; or (iii) the councillors who are members of the relevant committee. These are matters therefore for The Cliff Association and Larne Borough Council, and not appropriate for me to comment on.

Freedom of Information Requests

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the number of Freedom of Information requests she has received in each of the last three financial years; and of these, how many have been considered under Section 12 of the Environmental Information Regulations, rather than the Freedom of Information Act 2000.

(AQW 34051/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The information requested is published in a series of Freedom of Information (FOI) Annual Reports which are based on calendar years, not financial years. Statistical data concerning requests dealt with under FOI and Environmental Information Regulations (EIR) is combined within these reports.

The reports can be accessed from the OFMDFM website at: <http://www.ofmdfmni.gov.uk/annual-reports-and-statistics>

The member should note that statistics for 2013 are provided on a quarterly basis and cannot be seen as validated until the publication of the 2013 FOI Annual report. The specific number of information requests dealt with under EIR is as follows:

Year	Total number of requests received	Number of requests handled under EIR
2010	348	12
2012	490	16

Fencing: Financial Support

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how much financial support has been provided to the sport of fencing in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34088/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Sport NI, an arms length body of my Department, has a responsibility for the general provision of funding for the development of sport in the north of Ireland, including fencing.

In the last five financial years up to March 2014, Sport NI provided £78,695 of Exchequer and Lottery funding to the sport of fencing as detailed below:

Fiscal Year	Organisation	Programme	Grant Amount	Fund
2013	NI Fencing Ltd	Performance Focus	£15,000	Lottery
2011	Lisburn Gladiators Fencing Club	Awards For Sport	£7,438	Exchequer
2011	NI Fencing Ltd	Pre-Games Training Camps	£5,000	Exchequer
2010	Friends of Grosvenor Fencing Club	Sport Matters: Capital and Equipment Programme	£13,692	Exchequer
2010	NI Fencing Ltd	Pre-Games Training Camps	£5,000	Exchequer
2009	University of Ulster Coleraine Fencing Club	Awards For Sport	£9,200	Exchequer
2009	NI Fencing Ltd	Athlete Support Programme	£4,500	Lottery
2009	NI Fencing Ltd	Athlete Support Programme	£3,000	Exchequer
2009	NI Fencing Ltd	Investing in Performance Sport	£15,865	Exchequer

In addition, in 2013/14 financial year, Sport NI provided £1,670 of Exchequer funding to Cairnshill Primary School through the Active Schools Programme. This funding was for multisports which included the sport of fencing.

Braid River

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure whether the Rivers Agency or the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development consulted with her Department prior to work commencing on the Braid River to remove gravel shoal and reinforce the banks; and if so, to detail (i) the information passed on; and (ii) the powers her Department have in matters related to the work and maintenance of rivers.

(AQW 34126/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Rivers Agency staff consulted with the DCAL Fisheries Officer responsible for the area regarding the impact of the proposed works on fish stocks. Rivers Agency indicated that the work was considered to be urgent.

- (i) It was agreed with my officials that works would not commence on the river bed until after 1 April, to give as many juvenile fish as possible time to emerge from the gravel.

- (ii) The powers available to my Department in relation to in-river works and maintenance of rivers are detailed in Section 48 of the Fisheries Act (NI) 1966.

Derry: City of Culture 2013

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 33681/11-15, to detail (i) the options being explored for possible inclusion in the funding bid to the Executive for 2014/16 to maximise the impact and sustainable legacy of Derry as the City of Culture 2013; and (ii) when the bid will be formally submitted.

(AQW 34148/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My officials have prepared a business case for the development and delivery of a creative, sporting and cultural programme of activity in the North West of Ireland. It contains a range of options including proposals to continue key projects from City of Culture 2013 and establish new interventions to tackle on-going challenges in terms of poverty, social exclusion and inequality. As the business case is still in draft form, it would be inappropriate to disclose precise details at this stage.

Subject to a successful bid to the Executive for additional funding to take forward these proposals, I will seek to build on the success of 2013 by continuing to invest in key projects such as Music Promise, Portrait of a City, Community Cultural Strategies and to support development of cultural hubs and step up activity for organisations across the North West.

A bid for funding was submitted to DFP as part of the in year monitoring round on 5 June 2014.

Edward the Bruce: Anniversary of Landing

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure whether she has engaged with any other agencies or Departments to gain support for a programme of events to mark the 700th Anniversary of the landing of Edward the Bruce and his campaign in Ulster.

(AQW 34223/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The MAG Ulster-Scots Academy which is funded by my Department commissioned the Ulster Historical Foundation to research the 700th anniversary of Edward the Bruce in Ireland and recommend how it could be developed as a tourism initiative.

The Foundation made several recommendations including the development of a travelling exhibition, tourism trail and mobile app. The potential for a series of high profile events to coincide with the anniversary of key milestones in the 1315 invasion campaign, such as the Landing at Larne in May, the Coronation of Edward Bruce as King of Ireland at Carrickfergus in June, the Battle of Connor (outside Antrim) in September and his eventual death and burial at Faughart in Co Louth were also identified.

On the basis of this research, my Department has made funding available for a partnership project between the MAG Ulster-Scots Academy, the Ulster-Scots Agency and the Ulster Historical Foundation to produce a Bruce tourism trail map and app, interpretative signage on trail sites and a travelling exhibition.

My officials have shared the Ulster Historical Foundation report with the Ulster-Scots Agency, Northern Ireland Tourist Board, Tourism Ireland and Mid and East Antrim District Council and have been in contact with them regarding the development of commemorative events. The 700 year anniversary presents an excellent opportunity to maximise the tourism potential for north-south and east-west connections and capitalise on the worldwide interest in the Bruce story generated by the anniversaries of the Bruce invasion of Ireland and the Battle of Bannockburn.

North/South Language Body

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on 2013/14 budget of the North/South Language Body.

(AQW 34234/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The North South Language Body's budget for Foras na Gaeilge and the Ulster-Scots Agency is based on the calendar year, 1 January to 31 December. The budgets for 2013 and 2014 have not yet been approved.

Hockey: Portadown and Lurgan

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what steps she is taking to support hockey in Portadown and Lurgan.

(AQW 34235/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Sport NI, an arms length body of my Department, has a responsibility for the general provision of funding for the development of sport in the north of Ireland, including hockey.

In the last three financial years up to March 2014, Sport NI provided £3,361 of Exchequer funding to multisport, which includes hockey, in Portadown and Lurgan, as detailed below:

Fiscal Year	Organisation	Programme	Grant Amount
2013	Derryhale Primary School (Portadown)	Active Schools	£1,375
2013	Maralin Village Primary School (Magheralin)	Active Schools	£1,986

Active Awards for Sport is a Lottery funded small grants programme primarily aimed at grassroots community based sport and is due to re-open for applications in September 2014. Hockey clubs in Portadown and Lurgan can register their interest for future funding programmes at www.sportni.net/Funding.

Sport: Children Involvement

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for her assessment of the number of children who are actively involved in sport on a weekly basis; and how this compares with 2009.

(AQW 34270/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Findings from the sport module of the Young Persons' Behaviour and Attitudes Survey (YPBAS) conducted by NISRA in 2007, 2009 and 2013 indicate that young peoples' (11-16 years) involvement in sport and physical activity in the north of Ireland has remained very high:

- 2007 - 98% of all young people surveyed has taken part in one or more sports during the last 7 days.
- 2009 - 97% of all young people surveyed has taken part in one or more sports during the last 7 days.
- 2013 - 96% of all young people surveyed has taken part in one or more sports during the last 7 days.

Sport: Adult Involvement

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for her assessment of the number of adults who are actively involved in sport on a weekly basis; and how this compares with 2009.

(AQW 34271/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department commission questions in the Continuous Household Survey (CHS) to collect information on frequency of sport participation.

Two-fifths of respondents (40%) said that they normally participate in some type of sport or physical activity on at least one day a week in 2009/10. Almost a half of adults (48%) normally participate in sport and physical activity on at least one day a week in 2013/14.

Procurement Contracts: DCAL

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to what extent her Department has implemented the Programme for Government 2011-15 commitment that all public procurement contracts for supplies, services and construction works will include social clauses; and to what level such clauses have been implemented.

(AQW 34306/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department's priority is to promote equality and to tackle poverty and social exclusion. The inclusion of social clauses in procurements aligns perfectly with this. As I highlighted at a social clauses event my Department recently held in Colaiste Feirste, I am determined to use my DCAL's spending power to drive out as much benefit for the wider community as possible while still maintaining efficient and cost effective public services.

A review of DCAL's performance in 2013/14 has just been completed and I am therefore able to report on our success stories so far as well as reflect on areas where we can expect progress and improvement in the future.

In 2013/14, DCAL and its ALBs entered into 25 large contracts, with a total value of £94m. I provide detail below on some of the social clauses contained in these.

Stadiums programme

Contracts for IFA/ Windsor Park and UCGAA/ Casement Park were entered into in the year. Both contracts required the following: employment of 17 Long Term Unemployed; and the creation of 8 new apprenticeships and 2 student placements. Where contractors/sub-contractors had over 20 employees, they must have over 5% of their workforce in recognised apprenticeships. The contractor must also produce 5 practical projects to deliver community initiatives and to return public benefits to the local community. The relevant contractors have now been invited to submit their own proposals to satisfy this requirement.

City Of Culture

The Letter of Offer between DCAL and Derry City Council required the Council and the Culture Company to: promote equality and sustainability in all procurements undertaken as part of the City of Culture project; maximise the sustainable socio-economic impacts achievable through the investment of public resources in ways that can target and deliver measurable and monitored employment opportunities and socio-economic outcomes at those sectors of society assessed as suffering the greatest objective need and inequalities in the North of Ireland, specifically in the Derry City and surrounding area, in conjunction with DCAL, as public authorities under S.75(1) of the NI Act 1998; and ensure the provision of a wide range of social returns targeted on the basis of S.75(1) of the NI Act 1998 at the most deprived communities living in proximity to the Project in the context of effective and meaningful community consultation to achieve agreed outcomes.

National Museums

Contracts in relation to the UFTM residential centre development contained the following clauses: for every £250k of contract labour value, the contractor provides directly, or through the supply chain, 13 person weeks of work experience, or employment opportunities for the un-employed; and 5% of the contractor's workforce and the workforce of its first tier subcontractors (with 20 or more employees) should be employed on formally recognised paid apprenticeships.

While I am very pleased with the progress demonstrated, I am also conscious that improvement is always possible. I want to explore, for instance, the extent to which social clauses can be meaningfully incorporated into smaller procurements. I also want to ensure that, going forward, a consistent approach to social clauses is taken right across the DCAL family of ALBs and that collaborative procurements and more specialised procurements such as financial services also benefit from the inclusion of social clauses.

Meanwhile, I believe that sufficient momentum has now gathered around this initiative to ensure that sustainable and material benefits will be generated into the future, especially for those experiencing poverty, inequality and exclusion.

Heat, Electricity and Water: DCAL Spend

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how much her Department has spent on (i) heat; (ii) electricity; and (iii) water in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34344/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Departments occupy buildings on either a single or multiple occupancy basis.

Departments are directly responsible for paying the utility bills (heat, electricity and water) associated with single occupancy buildings. DCAL has a number of single occupancy buildings including PRONI at Titanic Quarter and several regional Fisheries offices.

DFP Properties Division (PD) is responsible for paying utility bills associated with multiple occupancy buildings. The Department's headquarters are located in a multiple occupancy building and as such figures supplied in the DFP response to this AQW will include utility costs relating to DCAL's headquarters.

The figures provided below therefore refer to utility costs incurred at single occupancy buildings in which the Department operates.

Year	2009-10	2010-11	2011-12	2012-13	2013-14
Electricity	£114,673	£163,336	£200,965	£225,073	£176,057
Heating	£37,731	£53,774	£55,445	£49,148	£33,094
Water	£5,426	£9,979	£22,816	£18,252	£6,811
Total	£157,830	£227,089	£279,226	£292,473	£215,962

Public Record Office of Northern Ireland: Parking Spaces

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the number of parking spaces at the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland; and of these, how many are available for people with a disability.

(AQW 34356/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Parking facilities for the area adjacent to PRONI are provided by Titanic Quarter Ltd who decide on the number of spaces which are available for people with a disability.

Public Record Office of Northern Ireland: Car Parking Charges

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how car parking charges are calculated at the Public Record Office of Northern Ireland.

(AQW 34357/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Parking facilities for the area adjacent to PRONI are provided by Titanic Quarter Ltd who calculate their own parking charges.

Irish Language Information

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 33404/11-15, (i) what steps Libraries NI is taking to ensure Irish language information and reading material is available in the majority of its libraries; (ii) what steps Libraries NI is taking to make its Irish language collection more readily accessible to the entire community; and (iii) what training is provided to Libraries NI staff regarding its Irish language collection and the promotion of the Irish language.

(AQW 34373/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín:

- (i) Libraries NI has informed me that in order to ensure that Irish language information and reading material is available in the majority of its libraries it makes available 103 service points which have Irish language stock. This includes branch libraries, mobile libraries and homecall vans, as well as its heritage libraries.

The amount of Irish language stock in individual libraries varies, depending on a range of factors including the size of the branch and the audience for material in the Irish language in the catchment area of that library. Where there is an Irish Medium school in the vicinity of a branch library there will also be children's material in Irish. 56 libraries hold children's collections in Irish.

- (ii) All libraries are shared spaces, open to all sections of the community and Libraries NI's general approach to all its collections, programmes and events is one of inclusivity. For example, Libraries NI works closely with ULTACH, an independent charitable trust based in Belfast whose principal aim is to promote the Irish language throughout the entire community in the North. During 2013/14 ULTACH facilitated talks on aspects of the Irish language and provided taster sessions in Irish in 12 libraries.
- (iii) Libraries NI has stated that no specific training has been provided for staff regarding Irish language material, although there are a number of staff employed by the service who are Irish language speakers and who support reading groups and activities as well as class visits from Irish language schools.

European Business Network Congress

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail (i) the amount paid to each of the guest speakers at the European Business Network Congress from 29 to 31 May 2013; and (ii) the amount of funding provided by her Department for this event.

(AQW 34441/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The NI Business Innovation Centre (NORIBIC) has confirmed that the costs for speakers for the Annual European Business Network (EBN) Congress in 2013 were met through the generation of ticket sales and by securing private sector sponsorship. No public funds were used to contribute towards any of the speaker costs. NORIBIC have also confirmed that the contracts signed with individual speakers and NORIBIC are commercially sensitive.

My Department provided NORIBIC a 'principal sponsor' grant of £50,000 as a contribution to costs associated with holding the Annual EBN Congress. This grant was used to support pre-event marketing and networking costs during March 2013 as well as a contribution to staff and development costs incurred during 2012/13.

World War I: Commemoration

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how many First World War commemoration events she will be attending (i) this year; (ii) in 2015; and (iii) in 2016.

(AQW 34585/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I have received two invitations regarding the First World War commemorations, one of which was a meeting and the other was an event both of which I was regrettably unable to attend.

My diary commitments for the rest of 2014, and the years 2015 and 2016 have not yet been planned. I will respond to future invitations when I receive them.

Department of Education

Dunclug High School

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Education what additional resources (i) his Department; and (ii) the North Eastern Education and Library Board has provided to Dunclug High School to support its permitted increase in numbers.

(AQW 33853/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): The approved Development Proposal to increase pupil enrolment numbers is only due to take effect from the commencement of the 2014/15 Academic Year in September 2014. No additional resources for the school have been considered by the Department at this current time.

The North-Eastern Education and Library Board (NEELB), as Funding Authority for Dunclug College, has advised me that, in the short term and under the terms of the School Reorganisation agreement, a number of staff from Ballee High School which is scheduled to close on 31 August 2014 can be reallocated posts in Dunclug College. The Board is liaising with the Principal to identify the staffing needs, levels and expertise required to accommodate the increase in enrolment at the school.

Dunclug College has identified a number of spaces within its existing building which can be re-commissioned for use as additional teaching spaces. Dunclug Primary School has also offered the use of a classroom. To support these interim measures the Board has allocated an initial budget of £10,000 of recurrent funds to allow a number of rooms to be refurbished in time for September. In addition the NEELB is also costing the option of possibly renting 3 mobile classrooms, to be in place for September.

Ligoniel Primary School: Pupil Enrolment Numbers

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education, given increasing pupil enrolment numbers at Ligoniel Primary School, what action his Department is taking to address the school's accommodation needs.

(AQW 33984/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Belfast Education and Library Board (BELB) is the managing authority responsible for the Controlled schools in its area. BELB's draft primary area plan notes the enrolment increases at Ligoniel PS over the past six years and highlights the Board's intention to increase the school's approved enrolment from 171 to 205 places. Effecting this change will require the support of an approved statutory development proposal (DP).

Over the past 2 years there has been significant investment in the school with a total of £634,000 having been spent on improved toilet facilities, window replacement, road improvements and the heating system.

IT Strategy

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education what mechanisms exist to coordinate IT strategy within the education service.

(AQW 34093/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department of Education (DE) sets policy and strategy for, and approves investment in, ICT across the education sector. I have approved a Strategic Outline Case for the modernisation of ICT systems from 2013/14 – 2017/18.

DE has established an ICT Programme Board to oversee ICT modernisation. The Board includes the Chief Executives of the Education and Library Boards, the Chief Executive of the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment and representatives from DE.

C2k, which supports ICT infrastructure in schools, also has its own Programme Board. It reports into the ICT Programme Board via its chair, the Chief Executive of the Western Education and Library Board.

IT Systems

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education how his Department is supporting Pupil Services IT systems within Education and Library Boards.

(AQW 34094/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Pupil Services System comprises a range of software packages used by schools and Education and Library Board (ELB) headquarters.

I approved the replacement of the Pupil Services System in the Strategic Outline Case for the modernisation of ICT systems from 2013/14 – 2017/18

This is being overseen by the ICT Programme Board, established by DE and including the Chief Executives of the Education and Library Boards and the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment.

IT Systems

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education when the Pupil Services IT systems were last subject to competitive tendering.

(AQW 34095/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Pupil Services System comprises a range of software packages used by schools and Education and Library Board (ELB) headquarters.

Since 2004 the ELBs have used the C2k contract with Capita Children's Services for the purchase of licences and support maintenance for this system.

Elective Home Education

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education how many children in the South Eastern Education and Library Board area receive elective home education.

(AQW 34129/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The South Eastern Education and Library Board (SEELB) has advised that, at 1st January 2014, 75 children and young people were registered with the SEELB as being educated at home. However, the Department recognises there may also be other young people who are being educated at home who are not currently registered with the SEELB hence the actual figure may be higher.

Maintenance and Repairs Spending: Western Education and Library Board Area

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Education how much has been spent on maintenance and repairs in each school in the Western Education and Library Board area in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34145/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The following table details expenditure on maintenance and repairs in Controlled, Voluntary Maintained and Irish Medium Schools in the Western Education and Library Board area in each of the last five financial years:

Capital Funding: Western Education and Library Board Area

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Education how much capital funding has been allocated to each school in the Western Education and Library Board area in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34146/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department does not allocate capital funding to schools. At the beginning of the financial year capital funding is allocated to each of the five Education and Library Boards who are responsible for capital projects in the controlled sector.

Estate Operations Team (EOT) within the Department is allocated a capital funding minor works budget for the non-controlled sectors. EOT recently made a call for applications for capital minor works schemes. When submitted each application is assessed on its merits. Grant aid is allocated to successful schemes.

The following table details capital expenditure in all schools in the Western Education and Library Board (WELB) area in each of the last five financial years:

Dunclug High School

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 33854/11-15, where Dunclug High School will accommodate the additional pupils.

(AQW 34154/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I understand that the North Eastern Education and Library Board is currently working with Dunclug College to ensure that the additional pupils can be accommodated from 1 September 2014.

Elective Home Education

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Education to outline the arrangements for elective home education; and for his assessment of the success of the system in relation to educational achievement.

(AQW 34219/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education and Library Boards (the Boards) have advised that the arrangements for elective home education vary across the 5 board areas. However, when notified of children being educated at home, all Boards will make contact with the families.

Boards can then provide a range of support and advice to parents in educating their child at home. This may include, for example, guidance on learning materials and on examination options which are suited to the child's needs, age, ability and aptitude.

In addition, the Boards may seek further information from parents with regard to the suitability of the education being provided, and follow this up with annual contact. If a Board has a concern regarding the adequacy of the education provision the Board's Curriculum Advisory Support Service (CASS) will consider the matter and may undertake a full assessment. If necessary, Boards may also refer the details onto the Educational Welfare Service for follow up.

The Boards have further confirmed that they do not undertake assessments of the achievements and outcomes of children who are educated at home. The Department also has not undertaken an assessment of the system.

Heat, Electricity and Water: DE Spend

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education how much his Department has spent on (i) heat; (ii) electricity; and (iii) water in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34246/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department has spent the following on (i) heat; (ii) electricity; and (iii) water in each of the last five years.

	2009-10 £'000	2010-11 £'000	2011-12 £'000	2012-13 £'000	2013-14 £'000

Down's Syndrome

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education what resources are provided to educate children diagnosed with Down's syndrome in each Education and Library Board area; and whether there are any plans to increase this funding in any of the Board areas.

(AQW 34251/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Chief Executives of the Education and Library Boards (ELBs) have advised that children identified with Down's syndrome are ordinarily the subject of a statement of special educational needs (SEN) which will identify the extent of the child's SEN and the additional support programmes required, tailored to meet the individual needs of each child. Whilst the majority of pupils with Down's syndrome are educated within a special school setting, some are educated within a mainstream school or in a Learning Support Centre attached to a mainstream school.

Funding to support this cohort of children, across all ELBs, will continue to be closely linked to the individual needs as ELBs are required to fund the tailored provision identified within a child's statement.

Pupils: Expenditure

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 33795/11-15, to detail the total expenditure in 2013-14 in each sector; and the number of pupils enrolled in each sector.

(AQW 34264/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The total expenditure in 2013-14 is not available by sector until the publication of LMS outturn statements in the autumn.

Pupil numbers by sector are listed in the table below:

Sector	FTE
Controlled Nursery Schools	3,276
Maintained Nursery Schools	1,672

Educational Welfare Service

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Education what steps are being taken by his Department and the Education and Library Boards to address the concerns of the Educational Welfare Service (EWS), given that 20,000 children missed more than 15 per cent of their lessons in 2011-12 and less than 4000 have been referred to the EWS for support.

(AQW 34272/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Chief Executives of the five Education and Library Boards (ELBs) have advised that they have given serious consideration to the recommendations of the NIAO Follow-up Report on Improving Pupil Attendance. They have established a working group which will take forward the key actions that relate to the Education Welfare Service (EWS). This should bring enhanced consistency to the strategies and interventions that are implemented at school based level to support the enhanced attendance of all pupils of compulsory school age.

School Starting Age

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Education for an update on the work being undertaken to identify potential options to introduce flexibility around the school starting age; and whether flexibility can be applied to pupils due to start school in September 2014.

(AQW 34300/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: In order to allow parents to defer their child's entry to primary 1e changes to primary legislation will be required.

My officials are working with the Departmental Solicitor's Office, Education and Library Boards and others to work on matters of detail and it would be my intention to consult on specific proposals towards the end of 2014.

Programme for Government 2011-15

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Education to what extent his Department has implemented the Programme for Government 2011-15 commitment that all public procurement contracts for supplies, services and construction works will include social clauses; and to what level such clauses have been implemented.

(AQW 34301/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department is committed to the full implementation of the Programme for Government commitment to integrate social clauses across procurement contracts.

Where DE grant aids the construction work, all schools' capital infrastructure projects are let in compliance with Central Procurement Directorate (CPD) guidance relating to social clauses. Departmental supplies and services are generally sourced via CPD as A Centre of Procurement Expertise and as such, where practical, incorporate social clauses.

Education and Library Boards (ELB'S) supplies and services contracts now include, as a minimum, social clauses that cover prompt payment to suppliers, equality and health and safety. Where practical other social clauses such as employment, training and environmental issues are incorporated.

ELB's have integrated social clauses into construction works and related services contracts. Construction works projects incorporate social clauses in respect of employment, training and apprenticeships.

Ballee Community High School

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Education (i) how many Ballee Community High School pupils have been placed in other schools for September when the school closes; (ii) how many have yet to be placed; and (iii) what action the North Eastern Education and Library Board is taking to accommodate these pupils into suitable places.

(AQW 34327/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The North Eastern Education and Library Board (NEELB) has provided the following up-to-date position as of 20 June:

- 85 pupils have been placed in other schools including 5 with Statements of Special Educational Needs
- 4 applications are currently being considered by schools
- 5 pupils have either failed to gain admission to their initial choice of school, are SEBD pupils (pupils with behavioural difficulties) and are being assisted by Board officers, are pupils whose parents have not been in contact with the Board and are being followed up by Board Officers, or are pupils who are leaving the jurisdiction.

The NEELB is also continuing to work with schools and parents where there have been applications submitted and pupils are awaiting a reply. With regard to a minority of parents whom Ballee CHS has been unable to contact, the NEELB has sent another letter, made telephone calls and undertaken home visits. Together with all board services, the NEELB is actively seeking appropriate placements in order to meet pupil needs.

Middletown Centre for Autism

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) the number of children referred to the Middletown Centre for Autism in each month of the last three years; (ii) the number who received assistance; and (iii) the nature of the assistance provided; and for his assessment of the referral process.

(AQW 34388/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Chief Executive of the Middletown Centre for Autism (MCA) has advised that the number children and young people referred to the MCA by the Education and Library Boards (ELBs) in each month of the last three years is as follows:

	Number of Referrals
July 2011	0
August 2011	0
September 2011	0
October 2011	1
November 2011	0
December 2011	0

October 2012	0
November 2012	1
December 2012	2
January 2013	0
February 2013	0
March 2013	1
May 2013	0

	Number of Referrals
June 2013	2
July 2013	0
August 2013	0
September 2013	3
October 2013	4
November 2013	2
December 2013	6*
January 2014	0
February 2014	2
March 2014	5
April 2014	2
May 2014	3
June 2014	2

Of the 40 children and young people that have been referred to MCA over this period, all of them have received assistance from the Centre.

In terms of the nature of the support provided, these children and young people will have been engaged in a period of intensive assessment and learning support led by the MCA's multi-disciplinary team. This includes the delivery of speech and language assessment, educational psychology assessment, occupational therapy assessment and curriculum focussed assessment in addition to informal assessment practices and the assimilation of information from first level services. The intervention is normally delivered across environments: home, school and community settings where possible.

I am content that the agreed referral process between the ELBs and MCA is effective in enabling the children identified by the ELBs as being suitable for assistance from the Centre to receive this specialist support.

* Following requests from the relevant Education and Library Board, MCA will occasionally deliver their multi-disciplinary learning support and assessment on a whole school basis rather than to specifically referred children. This form of referral allows the Centre to engage with children, staff and parents in order to support a broader range of pupils attending the school with complex autism. The Centre has identified the resources involved in a whole school referral as equating to three pupils that were individually referred. The referrals documented in December 2013 involved two whole school referrals.

St Louis Grammar School, Ballymena

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education for an update on the works to be carried out at St Louis Grammar School, Ballymena. (AQW 34416/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The education and library board are progressing a programme of capital minor works for schools in the non-controlled sectors on behalf of the Department.

The North Eastern Education and Library Board (NEELB) have agreed with the Department a planned programme of minor works at the school over the current, and the two following, financial years as set out in the table below.

Financial year	Project	Current position
2014/15	Refurbishment works to the canteen/kitchen	Tender approved at £30,972.40. I understand that the pre-start meeting is to take place within the next few weeks.
2014/15	Replacement of 4 mobiles	I am advised by the NEELB, this project will be tendered in Autumn 2014.
2015/16	Fire Risk Assessment works	Business case under consideration
2015/16	New Modular Canteen	Business case under consideration
2016/17	Refurbishment of the Home Economics accommodation	I understand that the NEELB has advised the Department that this project will be planned for commencement in 21016/17.

A further eight applications were received from the school as part of the 2014/15 call for minor works. These will be considered and assessed alongside all other competing priorities.

The school enhancement programme scheme to refurbish and extend the existing convent building to provide a creative and expressive arts facility, including music, drama, art and moving image and media studies have had economic appraisals approved and a design team appointed. Subject to NIEA Requirements, Planning Permission and revised costs it is hoped that work will commence on site March 2015.

Academic Selection

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education to list the schools that have phased out academic selection over the last five years; and which schools are in the process of phasing out academic selection.

(AQW 34417/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: St MacNissi's College in Carnlough abandoned academic selection in March 2010 when it amalgamated with two other Co. Antrim schools, St Aloysius' College, and St Comgall's College, to become St Killian's College. Loreto College in Coleraine has been operating successfully as a non-selective grammar school since September 2012. In March this year I approved development proposals for St Michael's Grammar School in Lurgan and St Patrick's Grammar School in Armagh to end the use of academic admissions criteria.

I understand that four other Catholic grammar schools are exploring the possibility of moving in the same direction: Loreto Grammar School in Omagh, Omagh Christian Brothers' Grammar School, Dominican College in Portstewart and St Mary's Christian Brothers' Grammar School in Belfast. However, before any such change can be made, statutory development proposals will need to be published. The statutory two month consultation period provides an opportunity for the public to make their views known and following this I will consider all the pertinent information before making my decision.

Schools

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Education to outline the difference between a school (i) closing; (ii) discontinuing; and (iii) amalgamating.

(AQW 34422/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: There is no difference in meaning between a school (i) closing and (ii) discontinuing. The term 'discontinue' is included in the legislation underpinning the Development Proposal process (Article 14 of the Education and Libraries (NI) Order 1986).

The term (iii) amalgamation is described in the Sustainable Schools Policy which states at section 6.13 that a new school is formed to replace two or more schools of similar size coming together and usually means a new name, uniform etc. An amalgamation is achieved by the closure/discontinuance of two or more schools and establishment of a new school to replace them.

Drumragh Integrated College

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Education, given the decision of Mr Justice Treacy in relation to Drumragh Integrated College, what impact the implementation of Article 64 of the Education Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 1989 will have on Area Planning.

(AQW 34448/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department's positive approach to Article 64 is set within a wider statutory framework. I take decisions in relation to the area planning process in line with my policies and priorities which shape the education system and make it fit for purpose to ensure it meets the current and future needs of pupils.

Bangor: School Development Proposals

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education for an update on the (i) Kilcooley; and (ii) Clandeboy Primary schools development proposals.

(AQW 34450/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I approved the Development Proposals for Kilcooley and Clandeboy Primary Schools on 3 June 2014. The approval for Clandeboy included a modification to the admissions number and implementation date to 31 August 2015.

Details of my decision can be found on my Department's website, using the following link: http://www.deni.gov.uk/index/schools-and-infrastructure-2/area-planning/14-schools_estate_devprop_pg/dp_decisions_2014.htm

Holywood: New Schools

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education for an update on proposals for new school builds for Holywood.

(AQW 34451/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: From my responses to your previous questions you will be aware that the South Eastern Education & Library Board (SEELB) identified schools in Holywood (Priory College; Holywood Primary School and Holywood Nursery school) along with its other priorities for major capital investment.

The need for clarity on enrolments at Priory College and the potential to increase these above sustainable schools thresholds and for alliances with other secondary schools in the SEELB area in relation to 6th form provision meant that the schools project for Holywood was not included in my previous announcements. This remained the position when I made my recent announcement on 24 June on a number of further schools to be advanced in planning.

In addition, a protocol was applied to prioritise the potential major works projects which I announced on 24 June. The outcome of this was that Holywood Primary School did not achieve a high enough ranking when the protocol was applied and therefore it was not one of the schools that I was able to include in my announcement.

Garvagh High School

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Education to detail the total cost incurred to date by the North Eastern Education and Library Board since the closure of Garvagh High School in June 2013 on (i) security; (ii) building maintenance; (iii) grounds; and (iv) any other costs associated with keeping the school under the ownership of the Board.

(AQW 34459/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The North Eastern Education & Library Board (NEELB) has confirmed that it has incurred the following costs since the closure of Garvagh High School.

Reason for Expenditure	£
(i) Security	21,294.58
(ii) Building Maintenance	10,516.00
(iii) Grounds	990.00
(iv) Any other costs:
Rates	32,086.00
LPS Fees	784.20
Total Costs	£65,670.78

Note:

The cost for security includes the following: boarding-up of all windows and doors, temporary security ring fence of the building, intruder alarm repairs/maintenance and a security key holding service to react in an event of a break-in.

The NEELB is currently in the process of disposing of Garvagh High School in line with the procedures laid out in the Land and Property Services' document 'Central Advisory Unit – Disposal of Surplus Public Sector Property in Northern Ireland (March 2013)'.

County Hall: Ballymena

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Education to detail the annual cost of providing accommodation and services for the North East Education and Library Board at County Hall in Ballymena; and what contingent liabilities are planned in the financial year 2015/16 for the use of this facility.

(AQW 34508/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The annual cost of providing accommodation and services for the North East Education and Library Board at County Hall in Ballymena is listed in the table below in respect of the 2013-14 financial year:

Costs	2013/14 £
Security	75,040
Cleaning & Caretaking	21,925
Water & Sewerage	10,295
Energy	54,288
Rent	146,500
Rates	68,259
Maintenance	109,008
Telephones	56,754
Waste Disposal	2,438
Carbon Reduction Tax	3,076
Admin Charges	23,450

Costs	2013/14 £
Total	571,034

NEELB has advised there are no contingent liabilities.

Minimum School Starting Age

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Education for an update on introducing flexibility to the minimum school starting age.
(AQW 34560/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: In order to allow parents to defer their child's entry to Primary One changes to primary legislation will be required.

My officials are working with the Departmental Solicitor's Office, Education and Library Boards and others to work on matters of detail and it would be my intention to consult on specific proposals towards the end of 2014.

Head Teachers: Coaching

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Education whether his Department has considered the introduction of one-to-one coaching of newly appointed Head Teachers and Principals as a means of improving their professional competence.
(AQO 6423/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Regional Training Unit (RTU) supports the professional development of leaders in all schools in the North. This support includes matching newly appointed principals with a high quality serving head for one-to-one mentoring/coaching support aimed at improving their professional competence.

Cycle Parking Facilities

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education what plans he has to increase cycle parking facilities at schools.
(AQW 34569/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department has been working closely with Sustrans, a charitable organisation that is currently funded by the Department for Regional Development and the Public Health Agency, to deliver a three year Active School Travel Programme across the north of Ireland. Part of this programme includes the provision of additional cycle parking facilities at schools. The initiative is now in Year 2 with approximately 54 primary and 13 post primary additional schools joining the initiative in September 2014.

Educational Centre for Speech and Language

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the criteria used by the Southern Education and Library Board when placing children with speech and language difficulties in the Educational Centre for Speech and Language; and whether children with the most severe difficulties receive greater consideration.
(AQW 34570/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Southern Education and Library Board (SELB) has advised that the criteria used to place children with speech and language difficulties in the Educational Centre for Speech and Language address cognitive ability and speech and language skills. Children referred exhibit a significant discrepancy between non-verbal cognitive score and language score.

When a child meets the criteria for admission to the Centre, they are prioritised based on the information provided by Speech and Language Therapists and Educational Psychologists. Speech and language scores used to determine the level of severity of each child's language needs are taken from the most up to date speech and language therapy reports and are ranked in accordance with the Speech and Language Therapy criteria for severe, moderate, mild and average speech, language and communication needs. When demand exceeds the number of places available, the severity and complexity of impairment will be taken into account and children with the most severe difficulties are prioritised.

I am content that the criteria used by SELB are appropriate.

Language and Communication Service

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Education how the Southern Education and Library Board is meeting the needs of children with speech and language difficulties who are referred to the their Language and Communication Service.
(AQW 34571/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Southern Education and Library Board has advised that their Language and Communication Service (L&CS) supports children from pre-school through to the end of Key Stage 2 with support being provided, through capacity building for teachers and training for classroom assistants, to assist them in meeting the needs of children with Language and Communication needs. This includes accredited evidence-based programmes which allow teachers and classroom assistants to be trained in specialist programmes to support language such as Makaton Language Programme and Talking Partners@ Primary training.

The Service also provides targeted advice and support at all stages of the Code of Practice. This teacher support includes advice on strategies, preparation of materials, and assistance in Language and Communication specific building resources, including information technologies.

At Stage 3 of the Code of Practice, individual pupil support is provided by the L&CS as considered appropriate by the Board's Educational Psychology Service. This is a more intensive level of support for pupils and teachers and typically children are supported once a week for a year with a programme of work specific to their identified need.

BT Young Scientist and Technology Exhibition

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Education what support his Department provides for local schools that want to participate in the annual BT Young Scientist and Technology Exhibition in Dublin.
(AQO 6413/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The promotion of STEM is one of my Department's priorities and I have been taking significant action on a number of fronts to ensure that STEM subjects are seen as exciting, stimulating and fulfilling by our young people.

This includes sponsoring annual competitions and exhibitions such as the BT Young Scientist and Technology Exhibition. However it must be remembered that uptake of competitions and events are essentially a decision for individual schools to determine.

Currently my Department provides funding of £30k per annum to the BT Young Scientist and Technology Exhibition, and this is used by BT to assist with accommodation grants, the prize fund and north of Ireland specific marketing activity.

To demonstrate support for the event, my Department promotes the competition directly to schools and I host an annual reception in Parliament Buildings, prior to the finals in Dublin, in recognition of all north of Ireland schools that entered the competition.

I have also reviewed the potential cost barriers associated with schools from the north that qualify for the final in Dublin, and I have recently agreed that my Department will provide an additional 50% of the BT bursary grant to those schools from the north that qualify for the Dublin finals.

In addition my Department also works with BT to maximise media coverage at key points in the competition's calendar; such as at the entry stage and at the time of the finals in Dublin.

I intend to build on this effort to encompass not just the BT Young Scientist Event, but the 'Sentinus Young Innovators', another successful competition that is sparking a passion in STEM subjects among our young people.

Seagoe Primary School

Mr Anderson asked the Minister of Education what are the implications of Justice Treacy's ruling on his decision not to approve an increase in the enrolment of Seagoe Primary School, Portadown; and whether he has any plans to revisit this decision.

(AQW 34619/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Judge Treacy's ruling provided clarification on the scope of the Article 64 duty and to whom it is owed i.e. integrated schools. The ruling therefore has no implications for Seagoe Primary School. I have no plans to revisit my decision.

Education and Library Boards: Spending

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education how much money has been spent on Education other than at school, in each of the Education and Library Board areas in each of the last five financial years.

(AQW 34623/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The amount of money spent on Education Otherwise Than At School (EOTAS) in each of the Education and Library Board (ELB) areas in each of the last five financial years is as set out below:

Earmarked EOTAS Allocations by Board Area (£,000S)

Domestic Violence: Education in Post-primary Schools

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of Education whether he has any plans to introduce a programme of education on domestic violence to post-primary schools.

(AQW 34637/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I have no plans to introduce a programme of education on domestic violence to post-primary schools.

The Department of Education is contributing to the draft joint Domestic Violence and Sexual Violence Strategy (led by the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety and the Department of Justice). The Department's contribution focuses on teacher skills and quality assurance arrangements to ensure that the preventative curriculum offered in schools is effective.

At post-primary level Learning for Life and Work, which includes Personal Development and Citizenship, offers pupils opportunities to explore the qualities of respectful relationships and develop strategies to promote personal safety.

Primary Schools: Admissions

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education how many appeals against the failure of an application for admission to a primary school have been lodged against each Education and Library Board in each of the last five years; and how many were successful.

(AQW 34659/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The number of appeals against decisions of primary schools not to admit children in the admissions process, and the number which were upheld, are set out in the table below:

Primary Schools Appeals 2009/10 - 2013/2014

Bangor Central Integrated Primary School

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education for an update on the proposed purchase of land at the old Bangor Leisure Centre site to facilitate a new school build for Bangor Central Integrated Primary School.

(AQW 34696/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Following my last response the South Eastern Education and Library Board (SEELB) made a formal offer to secure part of the former leisure centre site for use by Bangor Central Integrated Primary School. SEELB is currently in negotiations with the Council with a view to acquiring the former leisure centre car park. The Council anticipates a draft contract being provided to SEELB by 31 July 2014.

My officials have advised SEELB that it should prepare a business case setting out how the acquisition of the site provides the best value solution for the school and its pupils. The Department will assess the business case presented and make a decision based on its merits and the availability of capital budget. If acquisition of the site is approved, the Board would then be required to bid for capital funding to purchase the additional land.

Dunclug High School

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Education, following his announcement on a new build for Dunclug High School, whether he has considered the opportunity of developing a split site, utilising the current Ballee Community High School.

(AQW 34704/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The announcement recognises the need for a new school for Dunclug College following the recent approval of a development proposal related to the school. The first step in progressing the newbuild will be the preparation of an Economic Appraisal (EA). All site options will be considered and assessed as part of the normal process of preparing the EA.

Primary School: Belfast City Hospital Site

Mr McGimpsey asked the Minister of Education for an update on the consolidated primary school proposal on part of the City Hospital site in South Belfast.

(AQO 6419/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The responsibility for planning the controlled schools' estate in Belfast lies in the first instance with the Belfast Education and Library Board.

The Board has advised my Department that it is liaising with DHSSPS on this matter and the potential site on the Belfast City Hospital complex remains available for the proposed new south Belfast primary school.

The Board has also confirmed that it has identified two other potential sites. All three will be assessed in an Economic Appraisal in order to determine the preferred option.

Capital investment in a new school building cannot be considered by my Department without a development proposal to amalgamate the three schools involved. The Belfast Board will have to publish a proposal which I will then consider following the statutory consultation period. However to date, no such proposal has been published by the Board.

Any future capital investment will depend on the appropriate approvals being in place and availability of resources.

Racism: Young People

Mr Maskey asked the Minister of Education what action his Department is taking to target the effects of racism among young people.

(AQO 6420/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: First of all, may I say that the impact of these racist attacks reaches further than the family who have been subjected to them. We have over 10,000 newcomer children in our schools here; an increase of over 900 from this time last year. These pupils bring with them over 70 different home languages.

No matter where these children come from, what language they speak, they are entitled to an education. My Department's Newcomer Policy, published in 2009, supports newcomer pupils to access the curriculum. My Department funds the regional Inclusion and Diversity Service (IDS) to assist newcomer pupils and their schools. Schools also receive additional funding for all newcomer pupils on their register.

I am concerned about the recent racist attacks and the impact that they have on our newcomer pupils, their families and their friends. I am meeting with the PSNI in the near future to discuss how my Department could be of assistance in any proposed initiatives.

My Department is represented on the Racial Equality Forum (chaired by OFMdfM) and will continue to work with OFMdfM (and other relevant Departments) on the out workings of the Racial Equality Strategy.

Education: Contingency Fund

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Education to outline the rationale behind the £9 million contingency fund set up by his Department.

(AQO 6421/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I have always been open and transparent with how I utilise the Education budget and I consider it prudent, proactive financial management to set aside funding which enables me to deal with unforeseen pressures that emerge subsequently. In fact, this is a principle recognised in Treasury's own budgeting guidance. To put this in context, the £9m I set aside for 2014-15 represents 0.5% of the overall Education budget.

Ballyclare Primary School

Mr Girvan asked the Minister of Education for an update on the proposed new school facility for Ballyclare Primary School.

(AQO 6422/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Currently there are no plans for a new build for Ballyclare Primary School. However a minor works scheme, in two phases, is currently underway to improve facilities and access provision at the school.

Phase 1 is expected to complete this month at a cost of £355,000 comprising a hygiene room, new staff room and toilet facility.

Phase 2, expected to complete in October 2014, is for a new lobby/reception area at a cost of £235,000. This also includes provision of 3 small multi-purpose rooms and refurbishment of toilets.

Department for Employment and Learning

Disability Arts Strategy

Mr McMullan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether his Department has had discussions with the Arts Council regarding the development of a disability arts strategy.

(AQW 34014/11-15)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): Currently my officials are not directly engaged with the Arts Council over the development of a disability arts strategy. However, we are open to engaging with appropriate bodies on this matter and willing to discuss how we, and our delivery partners, may be able to contribute.

My Department delivers a range of services which utilise arts mediums to offer development opportunities for people with disabilities, although not always as a specific targeted group.

While not specifically focussed on young people with a disability, the Executive's 'Pathways to Success' strategy, which my Department leads on, includes input from Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure. This strategy features provision for disengaged young people to help them gain employment and includes opportunities in the arts and creative industries.

Eight projects, awarded total funding of over £3.8 million, will utilise arts mediums to assist with project delivery. These projects will assist over 1,700 young people and to date have engaged with over 1,200. For example, one of these, The Appleby Trust Print Room project, has been awarded funding of £262,926 to provide support to 50 young people with Autism Spectrum Disorder and has engaged with 32 young people to date.

My Department's Disability Employment Service provides a range of programmes and services to help and support people with disabilities to progress towards and move into employment. It also works closely with many organisations from the local disability sector, many of whom deliver employment support services on behalf of the Department. Officials from the Disability Employment Service are always willing to engage with other stakeholders to develop new ideas and initiatives that will promote employment and career progression for people with a disability.

Further Education Colleges offer some arts and crafts, painting and glass painting courses as part of discrete programmes which form part of their curriculum offer.

Finally, my Department's officials are engaging with colleagues in the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure over the contribution that Department and its delivery partners may have in addressing the needs of young people with severe learning disabilities who are transitioning from statutory school provision to adult services.

Academic Underachievement

Mr Anderson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for (i) his assessment of; and (ii) statistics relating to the academic underachievement amongst Protestant working-class communities in Upper Bann.

(AQW 34029/11-15)

Dr Farry: I refer to my answer to AQW 32697/11-15 on 17 April 2014; no further information has become available since that date.

Workers' Educational Association

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the recent support his Department provided to the Workers' Educational Association prior to its dissolution.

(AQW 34054/11-15)

Dr Farry: My Department had no direct funding relationship with the Workers' Educational Association Northern Ireland (WEA NI), prior to the decision by the organisation to enter into voluntary liquidation.

My Department previously provided funding to WEA NI. However, following legal advice, a decision was taken to end that funding relationship during 2006.

Officials from my Department's Redundancy Advice Service, in partnership with the Social Security Agency, Further Education Colleges, HMRC and other agencies have contacted the WEA and offered to provide advice on alternative job opportunities and access to training courses and a range of other issues such as benefits and taxation.

Disabled Students' Allowance

Mr McMullan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 33591/11-15, whether extra costs include the use of a car.

(AQW 34099/11-15)

Dr Farry: The travel allowance component of Disabled Students' Allowances is intended to help with any additional travel costs a student may have to pay to attend their Higher Education Institution because of their disability. For example, if a student needs to take either a taxi or private car because their disability prevents them from taking public transport on medical grounds. In this instance, the amount of travel allowance would be the excess between public transport costs and the cost of the same journey by taxi or private car. Students are not eligible for help with everyday travel costs which any student would expect to pay. The travel allowance does not include the purchase of a car.

Careers: Guide to Service Provision for Ethnic Minority Groups

Ms Lo asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether he will consider providing a guide to service provision, similar to that produced by the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety with the Equality Commission, Racial Equality in Health and Social Care, for ethnic minority groups who access his Department's careers service.

(AQW 34107/11-15)

Dr Farry: While my Department's Careers Service has no plans to provide a guide to service provision, ethnic minority groups are very much a priority.

The Careers Service social inclusion policy focuses on addressing the needs of young people facing, or vulnerable to, social exclusion, including clients from an ethnic minority background.

DEL's Careers Service currently employs over 100 careers advisers all of whom are professionally qualified to deliver careers services. The careers advisers are members of the Career Development Institute (CDI) and adhere to the CDI's Code of Ethical Practice. This Code states that careers advisers will "promote equality and diversity and help clients to overcome barriers to personal achievement resulting from prejudice, stereotyping and discrimination".

To assist clients from ethnic minority groups overcome possible barriers to understanding careers services on offer, the Careers Resource Centres display posters in several languages and use DEL's Translation Service to assist in the delivery of careers services. Careers Advisers also access UK NARIC to provide comparison statements for clients with international qualifications planning to work or study in the UK.

The Careers Service will be delivering training to careers advisers on the delivery of services to ethnic minority groups this year as part of a Continuous Professional Development Programme.

A formal review of careers policies (including overcoming barriers) and practices in Northern Ireland conducted jointly by DEL and DE will take place during 2014. The aim of the review is to ensure that provision reflects the needs of a 21st century economy in which all individuals (including ethnic minorities) have access to independent, high quality guidance which helps them to maximise their potential and contribute to their community and the NI economy.

We may consider providing a guide to service provision within the review.

Qualifications Equivalence Service

Ms Lo asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how he plans to improve the promotion of the qualifications equivalence service as recommended by the Joseph Rowntree Foundation Report on the Economic and Social Mobility of Ethnic Minority Communities.

(AQW 34112/11-15)

Dr Farry: My Department provides a service for non-UK nationals, who have taken up residence in Northern Ireland, to have their qualifications mapped to UK equivalents. This is done using the United Kingdom National Recognition Information Centre (UK NARIC) databases, to which my Department subscribes.

The service is available through EURES (the European Employment Services) in Belfast; at Jobs and Benefits Offices in Dungannon, Antrim, Carrickfergus, Limavady, Lisburn, Shaftesbury Square and Portadown; and at careers service offices throughout Northern Ireland.

Details of the qualifications equivalence service are available on both my Department's website and the NI Direct website. The recommendation in the Rowntree report indicates that there is an opportunity for my Department to further promote this valuable service and officials from the Employment Service and Careers Service intend to review the current promotion of the service and agree steps to increase its usage by employers and jobseekers.

Unemployment Statistics: Fermanagh District Council Area

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the (i) sought occupations; and (ii) usual occupations of people who are unemployed, from April 2013, in the Fermanagh District Council area.

(AQW 34213/11-15)

Dr Farry: Officials from my Department have analysed the preferences for jobs recorded by unemployed clients in the Fermanagh District Council area on their personal Jobseekers Agreements and I can confirm that the main occupation sought from April 2013 is Sales/Retail assistants, followed by the following sectors:-

Office/Clerical workers; Carpenters/Joiners; Cleaners/Domestic assistants; Van drivers; Bricklayers/Masons and Farm workers.

The usual occupations of the unemployed clients closely reflects the sought occupations, and if they remain unemployed beyond 13 weeks, they are advised to widen their jobsearch by considering additional occupational areas. As a result Sales/Retail assistants, Van drivers and Labourers/Construction are the most common sectors selected as second preferences.

There has been an approximate reduction of over 10% unemployed clients in the Fermanagh area since April 2013 but the change in profile from April 2013 to June 2014 has been minimal.

South West Regional College

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 31013/11-15, (i) to provide a copy of the correspondence sent to the South West Regional College; (ii) the date he sent the correspondence; and (iii) whether there has been an acknowledgement or any further correspondence received since, including an intention to respond and supply the relevant information.

(AQW 34243/11-15)

Dr Farry: I attach as requested at (i) a copy of the correspondence sent to the Director of South West College.

Regarding (ii), the correspondence was dated and sent by officials on 27 February 2014 and received by the Director on 28th February 2014.

Regarding (iii), I can advise that officials have confirmed that no copy of a reply was received from South West College, as requested in the letter of 27th February. As a matter of urgency, officials contacted the Director to determine the current situation regarding the information requested on the original assembly question AQW 31013/11-15. The Director has confirmed that, unfortunately, the reply had been overlooked. However, I can confirm that the information requested by you has now been sent by post to you directly, dated 20 June.

Thank you for bringing this to my attention.

As we do hold the requested information Minister Farry has replied, copy attached and I would ask you to reply directly to Lord Morrow with the information requested by this member.

I would appreciate a copy of your reply for our records and information.

Dear Lord Morrow

Assembly Question:AQW 31013/11-15

I may have overlooked supplying some additional information you requested in AQW 31013/11-15; apologies if that is the case.

Currently, SWC provides 20 hrs/annum "Supply" teaching to special schools in the Dungannon area i.e. SWC teachers delivering in the special schools. I have also attached the overall provision to Special Schools over the last three years.

The salary of the teachers varies depending on the pay scale point and their promotions. However, as an indicator, the part-time hourly rate would be £22/hr.

Yours sincerely

Malachy McAleer

Heat, Electricity and Water: DEL Spend

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how much his Department has spent on (i) heat; (ii) electricity; and (iii) water in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34249/11-15)

Dr Farry: Expenditure incurred by this Department on heat, electricity and water in each of the last five years has been as follows:

Financial Year	Heat	Electricity	Water
2013/14	£38,499	£168,853	£2,493
2012/13	£34,972	£160,958	£2,903

Zero-hours Contracts

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of zero hour contracts.

(AQW 34319/11-15)

Dr Farry: Information on the number of zero-hours contracts in Northern Ireland and the variety of forms that these contracts can take is imprecise. Given the public interest in this issue I launched a consultation on 23 June 2014 that seeks to determine the extent of the use of zero-hours contracts and to provide a clearer picture of their benefit or impact within our economy. The consultation period will run from 23 June 2014 until 29 September 2014.

In parallel to the public consultation I have also commissioned quantitative and qualitative research to provide a better understanding of the numbers of zero-hours contracts and where they are most prevalent.

The consultation and parallel research will allow me to determine whether there is a need to bring forward legislative proposals or clearer information, advice and guidance for employers and employees availing of these contracts.

European Business Network Congress

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail (i) the amount paid to each of the guest speakers at the European Business Network Congress from 29 to 31 May 2013; and (ii) the amount of funding provided by his Department for this event.

(AQW 34442/11-15)

Dr Farry: The European Business Network Congress was organised by the Northern Ireland Business Innovation Centre or NORIBIC as it is more commonly known. My Department therefore does not hold any information on the amount paid to each guest speaker.

However, as a Northern Ireland Executive Department involved in the Barroso Taskforce, my Department was approached by the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister for a sponsorship contribution. As the event was adjudged to provide opportunities for consortia-building and was a platform for highlighting the work of my Department, and indeed the Northern Ireland universities, to an international audience, we contributed £4,500 for this event.

Unemployment: North Down

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what action his Department is taking to reduce unemployment levels, through training and apprenticeships, in North Down.

(AQO 6432/11-15)

Dr Farry: My Department is committed to reducing unemployment across Northern Ireland, irrespective of where an individual lives.

Bangor Job Centre offers a range of services, initiatives and programmes to help jobseekers in the North Down area find employment or improve their employability skills; in the period June 2013 to May 2014, 1,046 people move into work.

In addition to the current provision of Training for Success and ApprenticeshipsNI, my officials are examining vocational training provision at level 2; the aim is to ensure that any future offer enables those who are capable, to progress to an apprenticeship at level 3, a level 3 further education programme, or into employment.

The review will seek to ensure that the future youth training programme enables young people across Northern Ireland, including those in North Down, to access training opportunities that will allow them to progress into further training and make a successful start to their future career.

Cross-border Mobility: Students

Mr McEluff asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on his Department's efforts to address mobility problems for undergraduate students across the island of Ireland.

(AQO 6430/11-15)

Dr Farry: In implementing Graduating to Success, my Department has established a project group to facilitate cross-border co-operation and student mobility. Membership includes representation from the Higher Education Authority and the Institutes of Technology.

A key part of this project is addressing the relevant recommendations from the Irish Business and Employers' Confederation and the Confederation of British Industry Joint Business Council's study of obstacles to cross-border undergraduate education.

In particular, my Department's Careers Service continues to build the knowledge of its advisers to ensure that students are fully informed about opportunities in the UK and the Republic of Ireland. A Professional Development day on cross border opportunities is planned later this year.

Careers advisers, together with careers teachers, also attend the annual Northern Ireland Schools and Colleges Careers Association Conference. In November 2013, this event was sponsored by Dublin City University and included information from Sligo, Galway-Mayo and Dublin Institutes of Technology, Trinity College Dublin and the National University of Ireland, Galway.

An anomaly in relation to student finance has been resolved and, since 2013, students from Northern Ireland studying in the Republic of Ireland have had access to a repayable Student Contribution loan and other financial support.

The Department of Education is in the lead regarding

A Level and Leaving Certificate equivalences. The Irish Universities Association continues to consider the position at a strategic level, and a number of individual universities are considering interim measures to attract Northern Ireland students.

Dublin City University recently launched the McAleese Scholarships, providing up to forty scholarships for our students, and Trinity College Dublin is also considering an access programme.

My officials are working with officials in the Department for Education and Skills to research and analyse cross border student flows. A joint report, which will inform policy development, is scheduled for completion in the autumn.

Queen's University: Centre for Doctoral Training

Mr Lunn asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the new Centre for Doctoral Training at Queen's University, Belfast.

(AQO 6431/11-15)

Dr Farry: I am pleased that my Department has been able to facilitate this Centre for Doctoral Training, led by Queen's University and a number of significant industry partners, including Seagate Technology.

This is a good news story for Northern Ireland and a strategically important development as we strive to ensure that we develop the scientists, engineers and researchers of tomorrow.

This Centre is the first of its kind in Northern Ireland. Due to its involvement with the Engineering and Physical Sciences Research, Queen's will benefit from a variety of opportunities open to their full portfolio of Centres for Doctoral Training, such as information exchanges.

The first student intake will be in October this year and, in terms of actual numbers, this new Centre will support a cohort of 50 future scientists and engineers over the next five years. Its focus will be on nanofabrication and photonic integration, both recognised areas of skills shortage.

This Centre therefore provides an exciting opportunity that is not only of regional benefit to Northern Ireland but, in my view, will also become a strategically important resource for the United Kingdom.

This new Centre will help create new working cultures; these will present the ideal environment for our future PhDs to carry out high quality, significant research while also developing the skills that are crucial for themselves and for the wider economy. This will help increase the international profile of our higher education research base.

For Queen's University and the other partners, involvement in such a Centre will also act as a catalyst for further industry and academic linkages. It will also provide leverage in relation to other areas of funding, such as EU programmes. This is particularly important, given the tightening fiscal climate in which our Higher Education Institutions are working.

Migrant Community

Ms McGahan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how his Department engages with people from the migrant community.

(AQO 6433/11-15)

Dr Farry: There are a number of ways in which the Department engages with the migrant community. The Department is a Board Member of the Northern Ireland Strategic Migration Partnership which was set up in 2011 to fulfil a strategic leadership, advisory and co-ordination role for migration in Northern Ireland. The Northern Ireland Strategic Migration Partnership works to ensure that Northern Ireland is a welcoming place for migrants, refugees, and asylum-seekers in a way that supports their retention and integration and contributes to economic growth.

The Department is also represented on a number of other groups which have been set up to address issues experienced by migrant workers/communities, including the Racial Equality Forum's Immigration Sub-group which is chaired by the Law Centre, the Belfast City Council's Migrant Workers Forum, and the Department of Justice's Organised Crime Task Force, Immigration and Human Trafficking Sub-Group.

In 2012 the Department introduced free English classes for speakers of other languages, specifically for asylum seekers and their dependants in recognition of their vulnerable position in our society.

My Department's Employment Service provides a wide range of services to its customers, including members of the migrant community.

Specific support is available to help to overcome barriers that might prevent members of the migrant community access the labour market including specific provision to address language barriers, and specialist help to compare international qualifications. Members of the migrant community may also avail of translation and interpretation services in any of the 35 Jobs and Benefits offices and JobCentres throughout Northern Ireland.

Literacy and Numeracy

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline the assistance available for unemployed people over the age of 30 to improve their basic literacy and numeracy skills.

(AQO 6434/11-15)

Dr Farry: Essential Skills is my Department's primary programme to help people gain literacy and numeracy skills, including those who are unemployed.

Individuals can, and do, enrol directly onto Essential Skills courses. In addition, many of my Department's programmes, including further education, identify people with low levels of literacy and numeracy. These individuals are either required or encouraged, depending on the programme they are on, to follow an Essential Skills course.

For example, Essential Skills needs are addressed through employment programmes such as Steps to Work, and the Local Employment Intermediary Service. These provide entry level tuition within community organisations for unemployed adults living in areas of high unemployment, to prepare them for participation on essential skills courses.

Employment Service frontline staff are trained to identify if clients' literacy or numeracy skills are a barrier towards employment. If so, referrals are made to Employment Service Support for an Essential Skills Assessment, which is carried out by contracted providers. This service is available to clients irrespective of age.

Those aged 50 or over may also undertake an Essential Skills qualification within the Step Ahead 50+ employment initiative.

The Learner Access and Engagement programme provides support to "hard to reach" adults to undertake suitable further education, including Essential Skills.

The recent OECD International Survey of Adult Skills showed that, in Northern Ireland, only adults in the 35-44 and 55-65 age bands had statistically significant improvements in literacy performance since the previous survey in 1996.

In 2012-2013, the last academic year for which full data are available, there were 4,297 enrolments of unemployed or economically inactive people in the 30 plus age-group in Essential Skills courses. In the current year, so far, there have been around 3,000 enrolments of those who are either unemployed or economically inactive in the 30 plus age group.

Education: Rural Areas

Mr McAleer asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how his Department meets the needs of those living in rural areas who wish to pursue Further and Higher Education.

(AQO 6435/11-15)

Dr Farry: I am committed to ensuring that further and higher education opportunities are available to all who have the ability, regardless of their background or location.

Further education colleges offer a varied further education curriculum, which people can access through their main campuses and network of approximately 500 community outreach centres.

My Department offers a range of financial incentives to encourage further education participation in rural areas. These include a home to college transport scheme for full-time students aged up to 19; for students aged 19 and over, means-tested college hardship funds and further education awards are available which, together, can award a student up to £3,500 per annum in total, plus assistance with childcare costs.

I support the delivery of higher education in the further education colleges, as it provides opportunities for "close-to-home" study. Since December 2011 I have approved an additional 377 full-time higher education places in the colleges.

There are also around 6,500 part-time higher education enrolments in further education. My Department does not place a cap on part-time higher education places; expansion of part-time provision within existing budgets therefore offers colleges another route to widen higher education in rural areas.

In Graduating to Success, my Department's strategy for Higher Education, I am committed to making higher education more accessible by offering wider geographical access. In co-operation with the higher and further education sectors, my Department is developing pilot schemes for the creation of university bases at two further education colleges. This will provide the opportunity for higher education students to undertake distance learning with access to university materials and resources they need on a planned basis. The pilots will take place in the 2014/15 academic year and, subject to the outcome of a review of the pilots, other colleges will provide access to university resources in subsequent years.

Capital Projects

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline the current capital projects being considered by his Department in this financial year.

(AQO 6436/11-15)

Dr Farry: I have considered a range of projects for funding in 2014-15.

The following projects have been allocated funding or will be allocated funding subject to the provision of an agreed business case.

The Further Education projects are:

The South Eastern Regional College's Performing Arts and Technology Innovation Centre in Bangor;

The Southern Regional College's Armagh and Banbridge campus developments;

The North West Regional College's Springtown campus refurbishment; and Colleges' Minor Works funding for a range of projects.

The following Higher Education projects will be undertaken.

The Queen's University Ashby building refurbishment for the Faculty of Engineering; the enhancement of the University infrastructure to stimulate new ways of learning to improve the student experience; the refurbishment of the health sciences building; and the main site masterplanning which includes the Lynn Building.

The University of Ulster will continue its estates refurbishment; develop its provision of a data centre & disaster recovery facility; rationalisation of the Coleraine campus; and upgrades to the telephony system.

Stranmillis University College will carry out the Stranmillis House disability project; improvements to the central building foyer; and removing asbestos from the main building.

St Mary's University College have commenced the installation of a biomass heating system; upgrade of its network infrastructure; and a programme of windows replacement.

There are numerous small capital projects across the Department and its Executive Non-Departmental Public Bodies

Training for Success

Mr Rogers asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, in relation to the Training for Success programme, whether students who completed a Level 1 qualification last year and are currently on the first year of their Level 2 qualification will be able to complete their Level 2 qualification in 2014/15.

(AQO 6437/11-15)

Dr Farry: Training for Success offers a guarantee of 104 weeks training for all unemployed 16 and 17 year old school leavers.

In June 2013 my Department issued new contracts for the Training for Success provision. Arrangements were included within the new programme to allow for students who had achieved qualifications at level one, under the old programme, to progress to provision at level two within the new programme.

Under these progression arrangements, the minimum target for achievement for students is the attainment of 37 credits drawn from the Knowledge-Based qualification on the specified apprenticeship framework at level two.

This target is in addition to qualifications in Essential Skills.

According to Ofqual, the qualifications regulator, one credit will usually take ten hours of learning. It is my Department's view that 52 weeks is sufficient to cover the qualification requirements outlined for this cohort.

Employment Law Reform

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Employment and Learning when he intends to present his proposals for employment law reform to the Executive.

(AQO 6438/11-15)

Dr Farry: Having completed analysis of responses to public consultation on the employment law review, Departmental officials gave a presentation to the Employment and Learning Committee on 4 June. The presentation included a number of options on the way forward. My intention was to take the Committee's views before moving to seek Executive agreement.

Having reviewed the Committee's feedback, it is now my intention to bring a paper to the Executive following the summer recess.

Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment

Invest NI

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the financial or other forms of support Invest NI has provided to (i) Emersons; (ii) Scotts; (iii) Mulhollands; (iv) RMC; (v) Lagan; and (vi) Walls in the last five years.

(AQW 34006/11-15)

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): In the five year period 1 April 2009 to 31 March 2014 the support to the listed companies has been offered as follows:

Company	Financial Assistance Offered
(i) Norman Emerson & Sons Ltd (Emersons)	£50,234
(ii) Northstone (NI) Ltd (formerly known as Scotts)	£49,500
(iii) A E Mulholland & Sons and Mulholland Bros. (B&S) Ltd (Mulhollands)	£0
(iv) Cemex (NI) Ltd (formerly known as RMC)	£0
(v) Lagan Cement (Lagans)	£17,600
(vi) P&J Walls (Walls)	£0

Hospitality: DETI

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what was the total cost of hospitality provided by (i) her Department; and (ii) its arm's-length bodies in 2013-14.

(AQW 34079/11-15)

Mrs Foster:

- (i) The total cost of hospitality provided by the Department in 2013-14 was £15,520.
- (ii) The total costs of hospitality provided by the arms length bodies in 2013-14 was £534,502.

Jobs Fund: North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of jobs (i) promoted; and (ii) created from the Jobs Fund in North Down in the last 12 months.

(AQW 34084/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The most recent figures available for a full twelve month period are from the 2012-13 financial year. Invest NI is currently working on the presentation of jobs promoted at sub-regional level in 2013-14, including North Down. It intends to publish the information once the figures have been fully validated.

In 2012-13 the Jobs Fund (i) promoted 74 jobs and (ii) created 23 jobs in North Down.

Please note that projects are implemented across a period of several years. Therefore a proportion of the jobs created during this 12-month period relate to jobs which were promoted in an earlier period.

An example of a business supported by the Jobs Fund in North Down during this period is Mango Direct Marketing which received support to promote 55 new jobs.

Energy Prices

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for her assessment of the impact on energy prices of the increased use of energy from wind and other renewable sources.

(AQW 34167/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Although generation from renewables (mainly onshore wind) rarely sets the price of wholesale electricity, it does influence the price on a continual basis. At peak demand times, wind can offset more expensive peaking plant. Also, if there is a lot of wind on the system, then remaining demand will be met by conventional generators with the more efficient and cheaper being despatched next.

Invest NI

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, of the 11,000 jobs promoted by InvestNI in 2013-14, to detail the number of these promoted in the (i) aerospace and defence; (ii) education and training; (iii) materials handling; (iv) business and professional services; (v) financial services; (vi) food and drink; (vii) security, ICT and electronics; (viii) connected health, renewables and energy; (ix) creative industries; and (x) tourism and life sciences sectors.

(AQW 34352/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest NI records job data according to the sector groupings listed in Table 1 below. The table breaks down the jobs promoted in 2013/14 apart from those promoted through the Regional Start Initiative (RSI), delivered in conjunction with Enterprise Northern Ireland, as we are unable to allocate these by sector.

Department of the Environment

Waste: Exports to Spain

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment whether waste from Northern Ireland is being exported to Spain for incineration; and if so (i) how much waste is being exported; (ii) how much of the waste is estimated to be renewable; (iii) how much is being paid to export the waste; (iv) what is the duration of the contract to export the waste; (v) how much waste must be supplied; and (vi) why is the waste being exported.

(AQW 33768/11-15)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): I can confirm that Refuse Derived Fuel waste (European Waste Catalogue Code 19 12 10) is being exported from Northern Ireland to Spain destined to an Energy from Waste thermal treatment plant located in Mallorca.

Under the requirements of the European Waste Shipment Regulations 1013/2006 my officers in the Northern Ireland Environment Agency have consented to 15 shipments totalling 30,000 tonnes over a 12 month period in conjunction with the Spanish Competent Authority.

The waste being exported is composed of residual municipal waste which has undergone further treatment at a material recycling facility to produce a refuse derived fuel. Residual municipal waste contains a significant proportion of materials like food and wood (biogenic material) and energy from this proportion is considered renewable. The treatment process at the recycling facility includes mechanical segregation and manual positive sorting (hand picking of recyclates). Although this will involve the removal of some biogenic material it will also involve the removal of fossil sourced waste. It is therefore estimated that between 45% and 65% of the energy produced from the waste is renewable.

The finances involved in exporting this waste is a commercial issue between the parties involved and is not something that is disclosed nor is required to be disclosed to my Department.

The Agencies' consents for the export of this waste to Mallorca, Spain, are valid from 29/05/2014 until 31/03/2015. Commercial contracts may be in place for a longer period of time; however as such commercial contractual obligations between relevant parties are not required to be disclosed to the Competent Authorities, my Agency does not hold this information.

The maximum amount of waste that can be exported under the NIEA's approval cannot exceed 30,000 tonnes over the 12 month period. If the facility has agreed to a certain volume of waste being provided by the supplier this will be detailed in contractual arrangements which have not been disclosed or required to be disclosed to my Agency.

The Landfill Directive sets increasingly strict limits on the amount of waste that Member States can send to landfill. In Northern Ireland this takes effect through the Northern Ireland Landfill Allowances Scheme which restricts the amount of waste that individual councils can send to landfill. Any waste over and above councils' allowances must be disposed of by other means. There are currently no energy from waste facilities in Northern Ireland, leaving councils no option but to send residual waste, which cannot be recycled or disposed of to landfill, elsewhere for recovery.

Climate Bill

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment when he will introduce the Climate Bill to the Assembly; and for the estimated timeline for the passing of this legislation.

(AQW 34002/11-15)

Mr Durkan: As I stated in the Assembly debate on the impacts of flooding in February 2014, I want to make Northern Ireland a leader in carbon reduction, and I am fully committed to ensuring that we play a full part in minimising our greenhouse gas emissions. Although I see the benefits of a Northern Ireland Climate Change Bill, and have been mandated by the Assembly to take this forward, I also recognise that there are concerns about how we tackle this issue and at what cost. I am therefore currently considering the best way forward, in terms of immediate and longer term actions, required to best meet the shared challenge, to grow a more sustainable, productive, low carbon economy and to ensure a cleaner, healthier, sustainable future for us all.

Government cannot meet this challenge alone. That is why I have taken time to meet with a range of stakeholders to hear their views and build on a successful partnership approach to tackling climate change. I want us to work together in a way in which we will begin to make the transition towards a more resource-efficient, sustainable society. When I have concluded my considerations with interested parties I will bring my proposals to Executive colleagues.

Listed Buildings: Glens of Antrim

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of the Environment to list the listed buildings in the glens area of Antrim; and to detail the spend on each of these buildings in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34046/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Information on Northern Ireland's listed buildings is held on the Northern Ireland Buildings Database, on a Council and Ward basis.

This information has been cross checked against the Causeway Coast and Glens Heritage Trust map of the Glens area, to help identify the relevant wards.

A large amount of information has been produced to answer this question; therefore it has been placed in the Assembly Library. You should note that this information on 'spend' relates solely to grant aid provided by the Northern Ireland Environment Agency. Any expenditure that may have been incurred by the private owners of properties or other agencies or bodies is not recorded by the Department and has not been included.

Significant Cultural Interest Items: Protection

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of the Environment what process the new councils must follow in order to preserve buildings or items of significant cultural significance.

(AQW 34059/11-15)

Mr Durkan: New councils can write at any time to the Northern Ireland Environment Agency seeking the protection of a building or item of significant cultural interest. The Agency will acknowledge this request and investigate the case. It will then assess the information relative to published criteria and determine if further detailed research is justified. The Council will be informed of this decision. If protection as a listed building is proposed, the Council will also be consulted as a statutory consultee before a final decision on protection is made.

From April 2015, councils will also have the power, under Article 81 of the Planning Act (Northern Ireland) 2011, to issue a Building Preservation Notice. This will protect a building, as if it were listed, for a period of six months while NIEA considers if permanent listing is justified. A notice can only issue if it appears to the council that the building:

'(a) is of special architectural or historic interest; and

(b) is in danger of demolition or of alteration in such a way as to affect its character as a building of such interest,'

Furthermore, consideration is also being given to putting in place strategic planning policy that will enable councils to draw up a 'community list' of buildings of architectural or historic interest that do not quite meet the test for statutory protection. This process referred to elsewhere in the UK as 'local listing', has recently been subject to public consultation as part of work to bring forward a new Strategic Planning Policy Statement for Northern Ireland (page 34 refers). Responses are currently being considered. Guidance on the process that councils should follow in order to designate such assets is also currently being developed by NIEA. The designation will allow the interest of these features to become a material consideration in the planning system.

In regard to buildings or fixed items of significant cultural significance already designated, councils will have the power to protect these from inappropriate change through the planning process and, if listed, through listed building consent process. The detail of this process will be finalised once the outcome of the current consultation on: 'Planning Reform and Transfer to Local Government: Proposals for Subordinate Legislation' has been concluded.

Bituminous Coal

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment what assessment has he made of the impact the burning of bituminous coal has in built up areas on air quality and human health; and whether he has considered taking any action to mitigate against any damage.

(AQW 34081/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The burning of bituminous coal in built up areas can contribute significantly to poor air quality – in particular due to raised levels of particulate matter and polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons (PAHs).

Results from a national PAH monitoring network, which measures levels across Northern Ireland, England, Scotland and Wales, shows that annual mean levels of PAHs monitored in Northern Ireland are frequently among the highest recorded.

A report commissioned by my Department and published in 2012, showed that the high levels of PAHs monitored here are most likely the result of a higher proportion of households in Northern Ireland using bituminous coal for domestic heating.

While the health effects of air pollution from burning bituminous coal have not been studied in Northern Ireland, two reports give estimated human mortality levels resulting from exposure to particulate matter (which is produced from road vehicle emissions, solid fuel combustion and power generation):

- 1 COMEAP (Committee for Medical Effects of Air Pollution) (2010) – New Calculations Of The Effects Of Air Pollution On Health In The UK – estimates a six-month reduction in average UK life expectancy as a result of exposure to particulate matter.
http://www.comeap.org.uk/images/stories/Documents/Reports/COMEAP_Mortality_Effects_Press_Release.pdf
- 2 Public Health England (2014) – Estimating Local Mortality Burdens associated with Particulate Air Pollution – estimates that in 2012, 3.8% of total deaths in Northern Ireland were attributable to exposure to very fine particulate matter:
<http://www.hpa.org.uk/Publications/Environment/PHECRCEReportSeries/PHECRCE010/>

This percentage of deaths attributable to exposure is less than that estimated for Scotland (3.9%), Wales (4.3%) and England (5.6%).

At the North South Ministerial council on 10th July 2013, Terms of Reference were agreed for a joint North-South study to examine policy options for dealing with air pollution from bituminous coal and solid fuel combustion across the two jurisdictions. The main tasks which have been undertaken for this research are:

- gathering evidence on current air pollution from the residential heating sector;
- examining policies and regulatory measures;
- examining the solid fuel market;
- examining fuel poverty;
- examining public health impacts from solid fuel burning;
- looking at examples of regulation of solid fuel use in other EU Member States;
- engaging with stakeholders for their views on this policy area, and to obtain information or data which may be relevant to the study.

This study will go on to look at policy options for consideration in tackling air pollution in this area. It is anticipated that a final report will be published in September 2014.

Planning Fees

Mr Craig asked the Minister of the Environment whether Section 4.1 d of the Planning Fees Explanatory Notes for Applicants applies to churches seeking to develop or replace facilities which would improve their work in the community.
(AQW 34120/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Department has sought legal advice on this issue and, in light of this, considers that Churches are not eligible for the exemption.

Hospitality: DoE

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment what was the total cost of hospitality provided by (i) his Department; and (ii) its arm's-length bodies in 2013/14.
(AQW 34138/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The total cost of hospitality provided by my Department in 2013-14 was £38,146.31. The total cost of hospitality provided by my Department's arm's-length bodies for 2013-14 was £11,035.34.

Taxi Drivers: Fare History

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 33568/11-15, how long taxi operators are required to retain records of fare history.
(AQW 34141/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Taxi operators are required to retain records of fare history for not less than six months following the date of the last entry.

Ravenhill Rugby Ground

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 33569/11-15, whether 50 percent of the test purchases carried out at Ravenhill Rugby Grounds on 23 August 2013 were not recorded by the taxi operator; and if so, (i) how this was rectified; (ii) whether provision exists for extensions in these circumstances; (iii) whether an extension of time to locate records was granted; and (iv) who granted this extension.
(AQW 34142/11-15)

Mr Durkan: All records assessed in relation to the test purchases carried out at Ravenhill Rugby Ground on 23 August 2013 were deemed to comply with Regulation 9 of the Taxi Operator Licensing Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2012 in that they contained all the prescribed particulars.

Ravenhill Rugby Ground

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 31206/11-15, (i) to state the dates and times of the stated visits to Ravenhill Rugby Ground; (ii) the job titles of those who carried out the visits; and (iii) to provide the same information for any subsequent visits.

(AQW 34143/11-15)

Mr Durkan:

- (i) AQW 31206/11-15 confirms that two examinations of booking records were carried out in respect of the provision of private hire taxi services at Ravenhill Rugby Ground. These did not involve a visit to Ravenhill Rugby Ground but rather to the operator's premises where the records were kept. The first visit was conducted on 3 October 2013 with a general compliance audit being carried out on 6 February 2014.
- (ii) The first visit was conducted by a Higher Professional and Technical Officer and a Senior Traffic Examiner. The general compliance audit was carried out by two Traffic Examiners.
- (iii) No subsequent visits have been carried out at the operator's premises.

Taxi Drivers: Fixed Penalty Notices

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, in relation to taxi drivers who are given a fixed penalty notice by Driver and Vehicle Agency Enforcement for an alleged regulation breach, (i) whether they can contest or appeal the notice; (ii) whether these notices can be rescinded; and if so, (iii) who has the discretion to rescind.

(AQW 34144/11-15)

Mr Durkan:

- (i) A taxi driver who is issued with a Fixed Penalty Notice (FPN) for an alleged regulation breach can contest or appeal the FPN within 21 days of issue of the notice. In the majority of cases the offence identified on the FPN will then be reported to the Public Prosecution Service (PPS) with a view to prosecution.
- (ii) FPNs can only be rescinded in exceptional circumstances where an administrative error becomes apparent.
- (iii) FPNs are generally only rescinded with the authority of the Chief Enforcement Officer.

Aggregates Levy Credit Scheme Certificates

Mr Agnew asked Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 32872/11-15; (i) why his Department granted Aggregates Levy Credit Scheme (ALCS) certificates to unregulated mineral extraction developments that require, but have not yet received, planning permission; and (ii) how the granting of these certificates equates to his previous answer to AQW 32086/11-15 where he stated that under the ALCS criteria, unauthorised sites did not receive an ALCS certificate, and therefore were ineligible to apply for a rebate from HMRC on the levy payable.

(AQW 34149/11-15)

Mr Durkan:

- (i) In each case where an ALCS application was received, the relevant regulating authority was contacted. In each case where an ALCS Certificate was granted the regulating authority (including Planning Service) were satisfied that there were no issues surrounding the application.
- (ii) In each case where a Certificate was granted under the ALCS Scheme, the ALCS criteria as set out in the Code of Practice was followed.

Springfarm Rath, Antrim

Mr Girvan asked the Minister of the Environment who is responsible for cutting grass at Springfarm Rath, Antrim; and when the grass will be cut.

(AQW 34150/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Springfarm Rath is one of 190 Monuments in State Care, owned by the Department of the Environment. The NIEA is responsible for maintenance of this monument. The Grounds Maintenance Contract which provides this service is at tender and so maintenance is currently being undertaken by local NIEA staff.

The grass at Springfarm Rath was cut on Friday 13th June.

Greenhouse Gas Emissions

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the performance against the target for greenhouse gas reductions; and what revisions have been made concerning the ability to meet the target to reduce greenhouse gas source emissions by 35 per cent by 2025.

(AQW 34163/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Northern Ireland Executive has a target to continue to work towards a reduction in greenhouse gas emissions by at least 35 per cent on 1990 levels by 2025. My department's latest statistical bulletin on emission figures (1990-2012¹), published on 10 June 2014, shows a decrease of 16 per cent in 2012 in Northern Ireland emissions since the base year (1990).

My department's statistical analysts use a projection tool to estimate reductions based on the latest figures. A 2012-based projection figure will be available in December 2014. However, the 2011-based projection figure for Northern Ireland is a 27.6 per cent reduction in greenhouse gas emissions between 1990 and 2025.

It is good to see that there is a long term reduction since the base year of 1990. However, it is clear that progress towards long term reductions, including to the Programme for Government target, will be uneven due to factors beyond our control. Natural climate/weather variations and economic factors greatly impact on results.

I would hope that the long term reduction trend is evidenced in coming years as significant local low carbon policies on renewables, energy efficiency, resource efficiency, sustainable transport and agriculture make a positive impact.

The Cross Departmental Working Group on Climate Change's third annual progress report, published on 11 June 2014², contains action plans that show there is considerable activity across government that will help to reduce emissions and highlights proposals to increase the range of measures.

Minerals Permissions Legislation

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (i) who will be responsible for the review of old minerals permissions following the devolution of planning to councils; (ii) whether the liability for any past failure by his Department in adhering to environmental or planning legislation will transfer to local councils when planning powers are devolved; and (iii) how new councils will undertake reviews of old minerals permissions if such permissions were not issued in the first instance.

(AQW 34187/11-15)

Mr Durkan:

- (i) When commenced, Section 129, and the provisions introduced by Schedules 2 and 3 of the Planning Act (NI) 2011, will enable councils to start a process resulting in an initial review of all mineral permissions granted in Northern Ireland, thereby ensuring that their conditions meet modern expectations and current environmental standards. The provisions also prevent dormant sites from reopening without a review of the conditions attached to their permissions. A further duty is placed on councils to instigate additional periodic reviews of all mineral sites. Although the majority of these functions will fall to councils, the Department will be able to require that certain applications for review are referred to it.
- (ii) Any liabilities arising from any failure by the Department of the Environment to adhere to environmental or planning legislation will remain with the Department and will not be transferred to local government on 1 April 2015. The local councils will, of course, take responsibility for any failures of such a nature that arise after they have responsibility in these areas from 1 April 2015.
- (iii) The proposed Review of Old Mineral Permissions (ROMPs) legislation sets out a means for reviewing long standing minerals permissions and it follows that the legislation is not relevant if no permission exists.

Lough Neagh Special Protection Area: Lignite

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 33482/11-15, what investigation has been undertaken to determine whether lignite has been disturbed from the bed of Lough Neagh Special Protection Area as part of the process of unregulated sand extraction.

(AQW 34188/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My Department has not undertaken any investigations to determine if lignite has been disturbed by sand extraction in Lough Neagh.

Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty

Ms Lo asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to halting National Parks draft legislation in November 2013, to outline how opportunities have been sought to better manage Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty, including how he proposes to identify such opportunities.

(AQW 34210/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Management Plans have been drawn up for the majority of the Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty (AONB), some covering a period of ten years. I am delighted with the long term commitment that has been made by the various stakeholders who are working in partnership to actively deliver projects that promote and conserve our AONB landscapes.

My Department continues to provide a broad range of services and support to the various bodies that manage AONBs in Northern Ireland. These include financial assistance, participation in management bodies and other areas of work which assist with the conservation and protection of these valuable assets. Such services and support provide opportunities to better manage AONBs.

For example the Natural Heritage Grant Programme has provided £2.5 million during the previous three financial years to these management bodies. This support is a critical catalyst which enables them to draw down other funding from a variety of sources such as the Heritage Lottery Fund.

I am fully aware that the natural beauty of our environment has the potential to create prosperity through tourism, industry and sustainable agriculture and promote wellbeing through clean air and water and through outdoor recreation. My Department has worked with other partners including Sport NI and the Northern Ireland Tourist Board to develop the Outdoor Recreation Action Plan. I am fully supportive of this Plan which identifies strategic objectives needed to develop outdoor recreation opportunities over the next seven years thereby helping to achieve health, well being, economic outcomes, and appreciation of our environment. NIEA officials also chair the interdepartmental Wildfire Stakeholders Group which is engaging with and provides the opportunity for AONB management bodies to promote awareness and for sharing learning in seeking to prevent wildfire damage to our countryside.

My Department has also taken the opportunity to engage with DARD to inform the new Agri Environment Schemes which can help deliver for our natural environment. We are developing partnerships to seek to draw down EU funding and engaging with other groups to explore how best we can work together to maximise the benefits and draw down from other sources of funding.

Planning Applications: Target Times

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what consideration is being given to replacing target times for processing planning applications with time limits.

(AQW 34263/11-15)

Mr Durkan: There are no plans to replace target times for processing planning applications with time limits.

Article 11 of the Planning (General Development) Order (Northern Ireland) 1993 specifies time periods for the processing of planning applications following which a non determination appeal under Article 33 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) 1991 may be made to the Planning Appeals Commission.

In the last few years, DOE Planning has had a strong focus on improving timescales for reaching planning decisions and on ensuring our statutory and other consultation processes operate effectively, to ensure that relevant planning issues are identified and addressed early in the decision making process.

We are also now focused on ensuring a smooth transfer of responsibility for most planning decisions to the new councils next April. In support of this a number of specific initiatives are being pursued to improve the policy, operational, procedural and legislative framework within which the planning system operates and which will impact on how the councils operate their new planning powers from next April. These include initiatives to improve and shorten the response times for planning consultees, preparing a new simplified single planning policy statement, and introducing new guidelines to facilitate pre application discussions especially for major projects.

Illegal Waste: Arney

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 32200/11-15, how disclosing the volume of illegal waste discovered at Arney, County Fermanagh could prejudice future legal proceedings, given that he has disclosed the volume of illegal waste at Mobuoy Road, Derry; and whether his disclosing of this information regarding the Mobuoy site has prejudiced those proceedings.

(AQW 34415/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The disclosure of an estimated waste tonnage for the Mobuoy Road site is not evidential, but it is a generalised, 'broad brush' figure placed in the public domain, given the exceptional circumstances with this particular case, to illustrate the unique nature of the Mobuoy site in light of the sheer volume of waste found, the licence revocation and the effect on local council waste contracts.

My predecessor obtained detailed legal advice prior to the disclosure of any information about the Mobuoy situation in general in order to avoid any prejudice to legal proceedings.

Evidence that will form part of likely criminal proceedings will not be disclosed prior to consultation of legal proceedings. My Department issues press releases following operational activity which contain as much information as possible in order to inform the public, protect the rights of those being investigated and ensure that a fair trial can result. Press releases are also issued at the conclusion of proceedings which contain further information and this is the proper route for the handling of such information.

Illegal Waste: Total Volume

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment for an estimate of the total volume of illegal waste making up the 26 priority sites that are currently being investigated by the Environmental Crime Unit of the Northern Ireland Environment Agency. (AQW 34480/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The sites in question are part of Operation Toothfish. As outlined in my response to the Mills Report, DOE is pursuing a number of activities, ranging from waste reduction initiatives with business, new partnerships with local councils and improvements in the regulation of waste. Operation Toothfish is part of the enforcement component of this strategy.

NIEA is now investigating 37 priority sites under 'Operation Toothfish' and not all these cases involve a fixed amount of waste as such. I am, therefore, not in a position to provide such an estimate at the present time, or indeed in the foreseeable future.

There are various factors behind these particular investigations with a major impetus being the suspected level of criminality. Due to the varied waste management and illegal disposal methods, it is not always possible nor helpful to quantify volumes of waste.

To stop the waste offending activity as quickly as possible, officers must by necessity prioritise other elements of these investigations. In addition, in the case of landfills in particular, a considered assessment must be made as to the environmental conditions surrounding the waste. In some cases, digging up the site – which is the only accurate way of assessing the amount there – may cause more damage in the short term.

GAA HQ: Owenbeg

Mr Ó hÓisín asked the Minister of the Environment (i) to outline the actions taken by the Driver and Vehicle Standards Agency at the GAA HQ at Owenbeg on Friday 20 June 2014; (ii) whether any offences were detected; and (iii) what cognisance was given to the number of young people present. (AQW 34624/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Driver and Vehicle Agency (DVA) enforcement officers visited Owenbeg GAA HQ on 20 June 2014 to carry out road safety inspections on buses being used to transport passengers to and from the opening ceremony of the Féile na nGael competition. Taking account of circumstances on the day, officers decided not to proceed with the inspection.

Woodburn Forest: Oil and Gas

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment whether fluid will be used to fracture sub-surface rock as part of the oil and gas exploratory drilling proposed by InfaStrata in Woodburn forest. (AQW 34692/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Department received a request on the 28 August 2013 from InfaStrata to carry out exploratory drilling at Woodburn Forest, Carrickfergus. The Department has been advised that the exploration activities are for the exploration and recovery of conventionally extractable hydrocarbons. The Department has not been advised that any fluid will be utilized at the site to fracture sub-surface rock.

Healthcare Staff: Incorrect Pay

Mr Byrne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for a breakdown of the percentage of health care staff in each constituency that have been paid incorrectly due to the payroll system glitch. (AQW 33781/11-15)

Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): It is not possible to provide this information by constituency. However, the percentage of healthcare staff by HSC trust that have been paid incorrectly due to issues with the payment of enhancements (overtime, allowances etc) and the incorrect deduction of National Insurance Contributions is estimated as follows:

HSC Trust	% total errors to total number of payments processed ⁽¹⁾
Western	0.89%
Belfast	1.75%

HSC Trust	% total errors to total number of payments processed ⁽¹⁾
Southern	0.31%
South Eastern	2.17%
Northern	0.96%
NIAS	15.82%(2)
	1.43%

Notes:

- (1) For the period Sept-13 to May-14. (2) NIAS errors were due to incorrect NIC deductions in the April payruns. A systems fix has been implemented to prevent this from recurring – this issue is therefore resolved.

The BSO and Trusts have already implemented a range of measures to correct any errors – this includes running additional payment cycles to make good any underpayments and where this has not addressed the problem (for example hardship), then emergency payments have also been used.

In addition to this, my Department has approved further expert support for the HSC payroll functions over the coming months. This will provide additional resource to help with the familiarisation of the new HRPTS system and will also help staff develop solutions to staff queries. Looking forward, a range of continuous improvement measures will also be introduced to both stabilise and enhance services. This will include the consideration of moving all staff to monthly payroll cycles to improve efficiency and also reduce the opportunity for errors.

Care Packages

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people, in each quarter of the last three years, were assessed as requiring (i) residential care packages paid for in full by the Health and Social Care Trust; and (ii) residential care paid for by the individual, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 33982/11-15)

Mr Poots: The information is not collected centrally and was requested from the five Health and Social Care (HSC) Trusts. Their responses are detailed below:

(i) Belfast HSC Trust

The Belfast HSC Trust stated that no clients were assessed as requiring residential care packages paid for in full by the Trust as all clients contribute to their care, albeit this may be through their social security benefits. The number of partially Trust funded residential care packages in the last 3 years is presented in Table 1 below.

Cognitive Behavioural Therapy

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the average waiting time between referral and beginning a course of cognitive behavioural therapy, in each of the last five years; and the target waiting time.

(AQW 34080/11-15)

Mr Poots: The information was requested from the five Health and Social Care (HSC) Trusts. Their responses are detailed below.

Belfast HSC Trust

Year	Average waiting time (weeks)
2010	9-10
2011	11-12
2012	12-13
2013	12-13
2014*	13-14

* Current waiting time is 13-14 weeks.

Northern HSC Trust

Year	Average waiting time (days)

2010/11	-
2011/12	81 days
2012/13	80 days
2013/14	87 days

'-' denotes information cannot be provided by the Trust.

South Eastern HSC Trust

For the period between March 2009 to beginning of 2013 the waiting list time for Cognitive Behavioural Therapy offered by both Clinical Psychologists and CBT Therapists from referral received to first appointment was 13 weeks. From early to mid 2013 onwards the waiting list time has fluctuated between 16 and 35 weeks.

Southern HSC Trust

The Trust is confident that the current waiting time target from point of referral to CBT Intervention of 13 weeks is met on an on-going basis. It is not possible to provide exact figures as the Trust has no available statistics of this nature prior to 2010 and to collate subsequent years figures would be a significant piece of work as these are not routinely requested.

Western HSC Trust

Sept 2010 – Dec 2010 *	81
2011	84
2012	81
2013	93

* Prior to September 2010 waiting list figures for CBT were integrated with those for Adult Psychological Therapies Service.

For 2014/15, the target waiting time between referral and beginning a course of cognitive behavioural therapy is 13 weeks (91 days).

Health Service Employees: Salaries and Expenses

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 33422/11-15, (i) what assurances he can give that the problems encountered in relation to payments of salaries and expenses to Health Service employees are now resolved; (ii) to outline any further cost implications required to ensure that the system is fit for purpose; and (iii) what steps can be taken to ensure there are no further failures in the system.

(AQW 34092/11-15)

Mr Poots: There have been three key payroll issues: firstly regarding the receipt of enhancements (such as overtime), secondly incorrect National Insurance deductions and finally the incorrect application of emergency tax codes.

In terms of addressing the issues involving the enhancements to basic pay, the new payroll system puts an emphasis on employees and managers submitting claims for additional payments in a timely and appropriate way. The BSO and Trusts are therefore continuing to re-emphasise the importance of adhering to these protocols and providing further training and support. In addition to this, we have also recently approved further expert support for the HSC payroll functions over the coming months. There is also on-going training and awareness work with managers who complete and submit timesheets, and work is well underway preparing for the release of a more robust electronic timesheet.

All employees affected by incorrect NIC contributions have received payments to address this issue and a corrective fix has been applied to the system to prevent this issue from recurring.

In terms of the application of emergency tax codes, the HMRC has reviewed the tax codes for all affected staff and, where appropriate, has revised the tax codes in time for the May pay run. The HMRC has confirmed that some staff will still remain on an emergency tax code in line with normal business – these are being considered on a case by case basis.

Looking forward, a range of continuous improvement measures will be introduced to both stabilise and enhance services. This will include the consideration of moving all staff to monthly payroll cycles to improve efficiency and also reduce the opportunity for errors. This is coupled with a robust management and governance structure underpinning the BSTP project.

Parkinson's Disease: Specialist Nurses

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of nurses specialising in Parkinson's disease in each Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 34133/11-15)

Mr Poots: The current number of Parkinson's disease specialist nurses as at June 2014 is shown in the table below.

Health & Social Care Trust	Headcount	Whole-Time Equivalent
Belfast	1	1.0
Northern	1	1.0
South Eastern	1	1.0
Southern	1	1.0
Western	2	1.8

Notes:

1 These figures were provided by the Health & Social Care Trusts, and have not been validated by the Department.

Diabetes: Training and Resources for Children in Schools

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what work his Department has been undertaken with Education and Library Boards to provide training and resources in schools for children with diabetes.

(AQW 34134/11-15)

Mr Poots: Training for teachers and school staff regarding specific health conditions is provided by the relevant Health and Social Care Trust.

Following the diagnosis of diabetes in a school age child, a paediatric diabetic specialist nurse will liaise with the child's school and school health team and provide training for staff in the management of diabetes which may include insulin administration and will be in line with the pupil's individual healthcare plan.

The guidance "Supporting Pupils with Medication Needs" (2008) was developed jointly by my Department and the Department of Education. The aim of the guidance is to provide schools and educational establishments with assistance in drawing up policies on managing medication, where teachers and staff are willing to assist in the administration of medication.

At present time, a "Best Practice Guidelines to Support Children and Young People with Diabetes in Schools" has been drafted and is being finalised for use in the HSC Trusts.

At the request of the Minister for Education, a booklet "What Diabetes Care to Expect in Schools" has been developed. This was co-ordinated by Diabetes UK in association with the Education and Library Boards and paediatric diabetes specialist nurses. It is anticipated that this booklet will be launched in Autumn 2014 with a target audience primarily of parents of children with diabetes.

D-Nav Insulin Self-management System

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what potential exists for the use of the new handheld D-Nav insulin self-management system by diabetic patients, as piloted by the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 34135/11-15)

Mr Poots: I am aware of this device and have been apprised of its potential to improve the management of diabetes and optimise outcomes in patients.

The device has been piloted at the Ulster Hospital with an initial cohort of approximately 150 patients. Around one quarter of the cohort dropped out. However the evaluation reported by Consultant Diabetologist Dr Roy Harper is that there have been substantial improvements in blood sugar control amongst those remaining, with a realistic prospect of future decreases in complications from diabetes such as heart and kidney disease. The evaluation concluded that;

- The system provided a powerful and effective approach to managing insulin therapy;
- Patients need to be supported, particularly in the early stages of using the technology;
- There was a slight but expected weight gain in some participants;
- Patients were likely to experience increased mild hypoglycaemic episodes;
- This product shows promise in delivering real value from insulin therapy.

The system has now been commissioned by the SEHSCT and Hygeia who manufacture the device are currently providing a service to approximately 500 patients across the Trust area through the diabetes care team and community based GP surgeries.

Skin Camouflage Services

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people have accessed skin camouflage services in each of the last three years.

(AQW 34153/11-15)

Mr Poots: Information on the number of people who have accessed skin camouflage services in the last three years is not collected centrally by the Department and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Supported Living Schemes: North Down

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how the provision of Supported Living Schemes is progressing in North Down.

(AQW 34176/11-15)

Mr Poots: The South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust has provided the following information:

Disability Services

Over the past 2 years the following Supported Living schemes have been developed by the Learning Disability Programme within the Trust:

- An extension of Bangor Supported Living scheme for 8 people
- A new build of 10 single person apartments in the Newtownards area, which are shortly to become occupied

- 8 new Supported Living placements in Stricklands, with a further 2 due for occupation in July and another 1 in December 2014.

A submission has also been made to extend the Positive Futures East Coast scheme by 3 and the Portavogie scheme by 6. Project groups have been established to review provision at Croft Community and the Praxis Kimberley scheme.

Mental Health Services

In partnership with contracted independent sector organisations, PRAXIS and the Northern Ireland Association for Mental Health (NIAMH), 2 additional places have been secured this year in the NIAMH Enterprise Court scheme and a further 4 places in the PRAXIS Carmen Lane scheme.

Older Peoples Services

The Trust is developing an Outline Business Case with the Ark Housing Association for a Supported Housing facility on the former Ravara House site in Bangor. At this stage the Trust has agreed an outline design brief which is being progressed.

Prescriptions: Number Issued

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of prescriptions issued in (i) 2009; and (ii) 2013.

(AQW 34200/11-15)

Mr Poots: The number of prescription items for which a prescription was written, dispensed by a community pharmacist, dispensing doctor or appliance supplier, and presented for payment in (i) 2009 and (ii) 2013 is shown in table 1 below.

Figures relate to prescriptions which were dispensed by a community pharmacist, dispensing doctor or appliance supplier, and presented for payment during the period. Not all prescriptions issued are subsequently dispensed and presented for payment, so the number of prescriptions issued is not known centrally.

The figures shown are presented by the calendar year in which the prescription was paid to the pharmacist; it should be noted that there may be a time lag where prescriptions have been dispensed by the community pharmacist in a particular year but paid the following year. The data provided only covers drugs dispensed in primary care, as drugs prescribed and dispensed in hospital cannot be captured centrally due to the use of different hospital IT systems

Table 1: The number of prescription items for which a prescription was written, dispensed by a community pharmacist, dispensing doctor or appliance supplier, and presented for payment in (i) 2009 and (ii) 2013.

Calendar Year	Number of prescription items

2013	38,661,481

Pregnancies: Guidance on Terminations

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) for an update on the guidance for the termination of pregnancy; (ii) whether he will commit to a timeframe to bring this forward; and (iii) whether this guidance will go out to consultation.

(AQW 34221/11-15)

Mr Poots: I intend to bring revised guidance to the Executive for agreement this summer. The revised guidance will not be issued for public consultation.

Crossroads Care: North Down and Ards

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what level of commitment of resources his Department can provide to Crossroads Care in the North Down and Ards area.

(AQW 34276/11-15)

Mr Poots: My Department has provided a core revenue grant to Crossroads Caring for Carers for a number of years. In 2013/14 this amounted to £57,576. A decision on the 2014/15 budget will be made shortly. I am also advised that the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust provided support of £260,847.15 during 2013/14 and has provided £31,418.46 so far in 2014/15.

My Department's grant is awarded as a contribution to the salary costs of the organisation's Chief Executive Officer and Finance Officer. The grant also supports the organisation's core functions of promoting and supporting the delivery of high quality services for carers and people with care needs.

Children with Eating Disorders: Professional Services

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what professional services are available for children under 12 years of age who are diagnosed with eating disorders.

(AQW 34281/11-15)

Mr Poots: Eating Disorder Services are provided by specialist community-based teams in each Health and Social Care Trust area. The Belfast Trust provides these services for the South Eastern Trust.

Inpatient care for children and adolescents with eating disorders is usually provided at Beechcroft, the Regional Child and Adolescent Mental Health Inpatient Unit. The Unit provides inpatient care for children and young people up to the age of 18.

However, if a patient's condition is primarily physical, clinicians may decide that the best place for treatment is an acute hospital setting. In this case, acute paediatric medical and CAMHS eating disorders services work in partnership.

If a patient requires intense specialist treatment for an eating disorder, Trusts can access beds in England, Scotland and Ireland through the Extra Contractual Referral (ECR) process. Developments in local Eating Disorder Services in recent years have resulted in a significant reduction in the number of children and young people having to be referred outside Northern Ireland for treatment.

Out-of-hours Service: Southern Health and Social Care Trust

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the out-of-hours service in the Southern Health and Social Care Trust, given the views expressed by staff in a report into these services; and what steps he will take to improve the service and patient safety.

(AQW 34284/11-15)

Mr Poots: I am aware of the recent media reports concerning the GP OOHs service in the Southern Health and Social Care Trust.

The Trust is currently reviewing its GP OOHs services in light of the increased pressure on the service in the last year. The Trust has already taken action to address issues around the delivery of GP OOHs services such as on-going recruitment for GPs, flexible working arrangements, enhanced payment rates for difficult to fill shifts and the phased introduction of skilled nurses, including advanced nurse practitioners. The Trust has also run a series of workshops open to all staff in the GP OOHs service through which staff were encouraged to share their views on the service now and in the future. Following these workshops a confidential report was compiled which highlighted areas of concern which senior staff within the Southern Trust area currently working to address.

The Trust takes all views of the service extremely seriously and is committed to working with all staff in looking at changes needed and working through the suggestions and recommendations discussed at the workshop. The work will be taken forward in partnership between the Trust, GPs and OOHs staff, the Local Commissioning Group and the Health and Social Care Board to ensure a safe and effective service continues to be provided for all patients across the Southern Trust.

The HSCB meets regularly with the Trusts to review performance and will continue to explore opportunities to improve OOHs services. It has already provided additional funding to the Southern Trust in order to address the issues of GP recruitment and retention as well as the provision of staff training.

I am aware that there has been an ever increasing demand for OOHs services and the challenges this brings and I recently approved the HSCB's Regional Strategic Framework for GP OOHs services which focuses on:

- Simplifying access;
- Improving organisational efficiency; and
- Improving alignment with other healthcare services.

In implementing the changes in the framework the HSCB will work with providers to ensure high standards in the handling of calls from patients; maintaining the safety and quality of services currently provided, both during the transition to, and in delivery of, the new working arrangements.

Fire Officers: Wicking T-shirts

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why wicking T-shirts are no longer issued to fire officers; and whether the replacement shirts meet the same health and safety standards.

(AQW 34296/11-15)

Mr Poots: The contract for the supply of wicking tee shirts to the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service (NIFRS) has expired. During a review of the technical specification, it was found that the wicking T-shirts issued were compromised by the addition of an embroidered corporate badge. As a result NIFRS issued a replacement tee shirt which meets Health and Safety Requirements.

Omagh Fire Station

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether the new fire station in Omagh has met all the safety requirements of such a building; and whether a valid fire certificate has been issued.

(AQW 34297/11-15)

Mr Poots: I have been advised by the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service that the new Omagh Community Fire Station has met all the safety requirements and that all the necessary certification is in place to allow the safe use of the building.

Fire Certificates are no longer issued on any premises since the enactment of Part iii of The Fire and Rescue Services (NI) Order 2006 which came into force on 15 November 2010.

Central Register: Children and Adults

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he will set up a central register for children and adults with (i) Down's syndrome; and (ii) other learning disabilities.

(AQW 34304/11-15)

Mr Poots: I do not presently plan to establish a central register for children and adults with Down's syndrome or other learning disabilities.

Health and Social Care Trusts currently monitor voluntary lists of people with a Learning Disability for planning purposes. These detail client level data on each person in contact with the Trust under the Learning Disability programme of care, the number of contacts and the services that have been, and continue to be, delivered to them.

I am advised that a central register, which would require constant updating, would not necessarily add sufficient value to planning processes to be worth the expenditure of effort and resource. A central register is not considered to be the most efficient way to gather information on the health needs of this group, or to be used as a basis of allocating resources. Additionally, concern has been expressed that a register can be seen to stigmatise people, as other groups with specific needs do not need to be on a register to get services.

Rather, the focus is on refining and improving existing services and sources of information, and particularly the Directed Enhanced Services for people with learning disabilities - delivered through primary care and GP practices. This, and related initiatives, should assist in general health promotion, early detection and monitoring of conditions, and improve access to health services generally for people with learning disabilities.

Statutory Care Homes: New Admissions

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he has the power to issue a policy direction to the Health and Social Care Trusts to lift the restraints on new admissions to statutory care homes.

(AQW 34318/11-15)

Mr Poots: At a public meeting on 12 June the Board of the HSC Board considered and approved the post consultation report on 'Making Choices: Meeting the Current and Future Needs of Older People'. The report, available on the HSC Board's website at: http://www.hscboard.hscni.net/consult/Previous%20Consultations/index.html#P-1_0, outlines final criteria which will be used to evaluate statutory residential homes for older people.

I have already reassured existing residents that they can remain in their residential home for as long as their needs can safely be met there. In this context I believe that the HSC Board's process, which will see HSC Trusts asked to review admission policies in respect of homes where the evaluation indicates a strong case for the continued provision of residential care, is an appropriate way forward.

Flooding: Northern Health and Social Care Trust Hospitals

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail any occasions of serious flooding in Northern Health and Social Care Trust hospitals in the last three years.

(AQW 34320/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Basement of Causeway Hospital flooded with approximately 3-4 inches at the deepest level on the 22 June 2012 following an extreme heavy rain fall.

Neuromuscular Nurse for Adults

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the recruitment of a specialist neuromuscular nurse for adults.

(AQW 34325/11-15)

Mr Poots: In my answer to AQW 30086/11-15 I advised that the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust was unable to identify the necessary resources to recruit a neuromuscular nurse specialist post for adults. I instructed my officials to raise this matter directly with the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB).

The HSCB advised that it has secured funding to appoint two neurological care advisors during 2014/15. These care advisors will provide advice, support, and information to people living with neurological conditions including Muscular Dystrophy. This is in line with Recommendation 3 in the McCollum Report which asks the NI Executive to ensure that the care advisor post in Northern Ireland is secured long-term within HSC, and takes urgent steps to create more of these posts.

Neuromuscular Nurse for Adults: Funding

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the funding provision of a specialist neuromuscular nurse for adults.

(AQW 34326/11-15)

Mr Poots: I refer the member to my answer to question AQW 34325/11-15.

Maghaberry Prison: Psychiatric Care

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the extent of psychiatric care available to inmates at Maghaberry prison.

(AQW 34328/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Mental Health Team was established by the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust in HMP Maghaberry in November 2012. It is comprised of a mental health lead Nurse, Community Psychiatric nurses, Home Treatment Team, Specialist Occupational Therapist, Personality Disorder Practitioner, Registered Mental Health Nurses with an interest in Addictions, Dual Diagnosis Worker and Consultant Psychiatrist.

There is a process in place for early identification of new committals with a diagnosis of severe mental illness or who were previously known to Community Mental Health Services. Within HMP Maghaberry, Community Psychiatric Nurses provide services equivalent to those provided in the community. The Home Treatment Team, an integrated Multi-Disciplinary Team, provides a service to those prisoners experiencing an acute crisis and/or severe mental health difficulties and requiring same day assessment and intervention.

Learning Disabilities Complex: Oakridge, Dungannon

Ms McGahan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update for the business case submitted by the Southern Health and Social Care Trust in relation to the development of a centre for adults with complex learning disabilities at Oakridge, Dungannon.

(AQW 34496/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Department has considered this business case and has passed its comments to the Southern Health and Social Care Trust who are now in the process of making the necessary revisions. The business case will also need to be assessed and approved by the Department of Finance and Personnel before DHSSPS approval can be given.

Timing of any development will then still be subject to the budget process for 2015/16 onwards and its relative priority against all other Trust and regional capital proposals.

Department of Justice

Appeals Service

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33729/11-15, as the body in question is government funded and tribunals fall under his remit, to detail (i) why he will not answer this question directly; and (ii) whether he will raise this matter with all agencies under his Department's remit.

(AQW 34041/11-15)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): The Department for Social Development (DSD) is statutorily responsible for The Appeals Service (TAS) including the provision of all funding. The Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service is administratively responsible for TAS under a Service Level Agreement with the DSD.

The President of the Appeal Tribunals is statutorily responsible for the training of panel members who are judicial office holders and therefore independent of Government. All questions relating to the compliance of appeal tribunals with legislative obligations can only be addressed by the President.

All agencies within the Department of Justice are aware of their obligations within the Human Rights Act 1998 (the Act) and the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms and of the requirement on all public authorities to comply with their obligations under section 6 of the Act.

Legal Aid Costs

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33730/11-15, in light of Mr Justice Gillen's ruling, whether some or all of the Legal Aid costs will be recouped from those who brought the case.

(AQW 34072/11-15)

Mr Ford: As previously advised Article 24 of the Legal Aid, Advice and Assistance (NI) Order 1981 precludes the release of information in relation to civil cases in which legal aid has been granted.

I am advised by the Legal Services Commission that it is their policy to seek to recover costs on behalf of the Legal Aid Fund in all cases where the Civil Legal aid Certificate has been revoked.

Supporting Prisoner-at-risk Booklet

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33666/11-15, when the current Supporting Prisoner at Risk booklet was last updated and amended; and to detail the number of previous versions of the booklet.

(AQW 34127/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Supporting Prisoners at Risk booklet was last updated and amended in 2012. There have been two previous versions.

European Arrest Warrants

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Justice how many people have been returned to Northern Ireland pursuant to a European Arrest Warrant in each year since the scheme has been in operation, broken down by member state; and to detail the average time for execution of European Arrest Warrants where the individual has returned to Northern Ireland, broken down by member state.

(AQW 34168/11-15)

Mr Ford: In total 37 people have been extradited to Northern Ireland on European Arrest Warrants since the scheme has been in operation. Details of the member states where the individuals who are the subject of an arrest warrant have been returned from is as follows: -

■ Republic Of Ireland	- 26
■ Spain	- 5
■ Germany	- 1
■ Lithuania	- 1
■ Gibraltar	- 1
■ Poland	- 1
■ Sweden	- 1
■ Portugal	-1

The average time to arrest and return individuals to Northern Ireland who have been subject to a European Arrest Warrant is not recorded.

European Arrest Warrants

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Justice how many European Arrest Warrants issued in Northern Ireland are outstanding, broken down by member state or nationality of the suspect.

(AQW 34170/11-15)

Mr Ford: At present there are 11 European Arrest warrants that were issued in Northern Ireland outstanding. A breakdown of the suspects' nationalities and the state to which the warrant was issued is as follows: -

Member state EAW issued to	Nationality
Republic of Ireland - 9	1 x Cameroonian, 4 x Irish, 1 x Lithuanian, 2 x British/Irish, 1 x Chinese
Lithuania - 1	Lithuanian
Portugal -1	Portuguese

Dungannon Courthouse: Car Park

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice whether he will liaise with the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service to ascertain their assessment of the overcrowding of vehicles around Dungannon Courthouse car park on 11 June 2014, which caused difficulty for an attending ambulance to manoeuvre due to the lack of space.

(AQW 34181/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service has confirmed with the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service that the ambulance which attended Dungannon Courthouse on 11 June 2014 had no difficulty accessing the patient or gaining entry to or manoeuvring within the car park due to lack of space.

G4S Proposed Contract Undercharging

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33805/11-15, whether his Department has been made aware of an issue of proposed contract undercharging by G4S from any other Department; and if so, to detail the date.

(AQW 34182/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Department has not been made aware of an issue of proposed contract undercharging by G4S from any other Department.

G4S Staff Keyholders

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33900/11-15 and in respect of staff safety, and taking into consideration dissident republican activity and the close proximity court staff have with its supporters, to detail (i) the procedures that are put in place if a member of G4S is under threat as confirmed by the PSNI; (ii) whether his Department is notified of a threat against a staff member in order to ensure not just the safety of the individual but also co-workers, court staff and the public; and (iii) whether support is provided by his Departmental or G4S when an individual is under threat.

(AQW 34244/11-15)

Mr Ford: My Department does not comment on personal security matters.

Counterfeit Tobacco Products

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of convictions for the sale or distribution of counterfeit tobacco products, in each of the last ten years.

(AQW 34253/11-15)

Mr Ford: Tackling the issue of excise evasion on tobacco or alcohol is primarily a matter for HMRC and Border Force.

HMRC has figures from 2010. It has advised that in 2010-11 there were 6 convictions relating to tobacco, in 2011-12 there were none, in 2012-13 there were 12 convictions and in 2013-14 there were 12 convictions. These are convictions for evasion of duty, but will include cases relating to counterfeit products.

There have been no standalone alcohol convictions for the period but HMRC advises that the cases listed may involve both tobacco and alcohol, as they are prosecuted under the same legislation.

Counterfeit Cosmetic Products

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of convictions for the sale or distribution of counterfeit cosmetic products, in each of the last 10 years.

(AQW 34257/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment's Trading Standards Service has advised that there has been 1 conviction, in 2010, in relation to counterfeit cosmetic products.

Police Service: Voluntary Early Retirement

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to detail (i) the sum of money agreed, on a per capita basis, between his Department, the Prison Service and the Police Rehabilitation Trust for the retraining of Prison Officers leaving the service on Voluntary Early Retirement; (ii) the number of officers who have left the service under the scheme; (iii) the number who opted for retraining; (iv) the total cost for training under the scheme to date; and (v) the total amount of money not yet used for training under the scheme and whether this money will continue to be held by his Department.

(AQW 34387/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Prison Service launched a Voluntary Early Retirement Scheme on 8 November 2011, with a re-training package secured through the Police Rehabilitation and Retraining Trust (PRRT). PRRT provided six core courses aimed at coaching and training staff to improve their chances of securing a new job at a cost of £1,500 per person. In addition to these core courses, a bursary of £3,500 per person was available to allow staff to purchase courses to help improve their employment goal.

A total of 520 staff left the Northern Ireland Prison Service under the Voluntary Early Retirement Scheme. 214 of these staff attended one or more core modules with PRRT, and 181 staff were granted funding from the bursary for courses provided by PRRT or other external providers. To date a total of £224,916 has been spent on re-training.

There is currently £100,000 in the budget for 2014/15 to pay for re-training. This will be reviewed throughout the year to ensure that the allocation is adequate.

Policing Board: Adult Survivor Award Applications

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the Policing Board taking over a year to review its procedures for dealing with Adult Survivor Award applications, following an adverse finding by a Medical Appeal Tribunal on 31 May 2013, whilst applicants await decisions.

(AQW 34400/11-15)

Mr Ford: Applications for Adult Survivor awards are made under the Injury Benefit legislation. The administration of the Injury Benefit Scheme is the responsibility of the Northern Ireland Policing Board. I am committed to respecting the independence of the Board and am therefore not in a position to comment on its review of procedures for dealing with Adult Survivor Award applications.

Prison Officers: Retraining

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33899/11-15, whether Prison Officers opting for retraining under the terms agreed by his Department, the Prison Service and the Police Rehabilitation and Retraining Trust were permitted to avail of a fifteen week period in which to decide on suitable retraining courses with a further two years to complete such courses; and to detail the rationale for the authorisation of fifteen weeks as the timescale to make these decisions.

(AQW 34429/11-15)

Mr Ford: Prison Officers leaving the Northern Ireland Prison Service under the Voluntary Early Retirement Scheme were invited to register with the Police Rehabilitation and Retraining Trust (PRRT). There was an option to avail of six core training courses over a 10 week period to create a strong foundation of knowledge to assist individuals in making an informed career choice. Up to four one-to-one coaching sessions were also available between weeks one and 13 to explore career, employment, and self-employment options that matched their strengths, interests, and personal circumstances. This structured approach enabled individuals to make a decision about their alternative career goal and develop an action plan with the careers and training professional staff by the end of the 15 week period. Approved training courses could then be completed over a two year period.

Heat, Electricity and Water: DoJ Spend

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Justice how much his Department has spent on (i) heat; (ii) electricity; and (iii) water in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34444/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Department of Justice occupies a mixture of Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP) owned, leased and DOJ owned property.

DFP Properties Division (PD) is responsible for paying utility bills associated with multiple occupancy buildings. As PD hold the energy budgets for core government departments, figures supplied in the DFP response will include utility costs associated with both DFP and other core departments, including DOJ, who occupy buildings in multiple occupancy capacity, as well as the costs for buildings solely occupied by DFP.

The following figures are for those buildings, which are owned and leased by the DOJ since the Department's creation in 2010 and fall outside the remit above and as such are not included in the DFP return.

	2010/11	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14	Total
Heat	£23,087	£23,212	£17,905	£18,849	£83,053
Electricity	£92,512	£79,440	£81,389	£83,263	£336,604
Water	£3,941	£3,699	£3,833	£3,541	£15,014
Total	£119,540	£106,351	£103,127	£105,653	£434,671

Legal Aid: Preliminary Enquiry Fees

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to detail the (i) the current composite Legal Aid fee for representation/attendance at preliminary enquiries for (a) solicitor; and (b) counsel; and (ii) in cases where counsel is assigned, whether a fee is paid to solicitor and counsel for appearing for the preliminary enquiry.

(AQW 34470/11-15)

Mr Ford: The current fees payable for preliminary enquiries are as follows:

- a Solicitor - £820
- b Counsel - £800

The standard fee is supplemented by an additional fee of £200, which is payable for each additional day required for the proceedings.

From the 26 June an additional fee of £410 for solicitors and £400 for counsel will apply in cases which include more than 750 pages of prosecution evidence.

In cases which have been certified for counsel, by virtue of the case being unusually grave or difficult, both solicitor and counsel are entitled to their respective fees for appearing in the committal proceedings.

Legal Aid: Solicitor Advocate Fees

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice whether a solicitor advocate receives a different level of the composite Legal Aid fee to a solicitor; and if so, (i) whether this is comparable with counsel fees; and (ii) to detail the figures for each.

(AQW 34473/11-15)

Mr Ford: A solicitor advocate can act as a solicitor; as a solicitor advocate with a separate solicitor instructing him/her; or as a solicitor advocate with sole carriage of the case.

The solicitor advocate does not receive any more than a solicitor when performing solicitor's duties. If a solicitor advocate exercises his right of audience in the Crown Court, (instructed by another solicitor and in place of counsel), he is entitled to an enhanced fee, equivalent to the standard fee that a sole junior counsel would be entitled to, subject to having the required three years standing. If the solicitor has less than three years standing he is entitled to fifty percent of the fee payable to sole junior counsel. Where the same solicitor prepares the case and conducts the advocacy the enhanced fee is reduced by 10%. The various fees payable to counsel in the Crown Court are set out in tables of fees in the Legal Aid for Crown Court Proceedings (Costs) (Amendment) Rules (Northern Ireland) 2011.

Legal Aid: Fees

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to detail (i) the current composite Legal Aid fee for representation/attendance at preliminary investigations and/or mixed committals for (a) solicitor; and (b) counsel; (ii) whether the fee is absolute or payable on a per day basis; and (iii) in cases where counsel is assigned, whether a fee is paid to solicitor and counsel for appearing for the preliminary investigations and/or mixed committals.

(AQW 34476/11-15)

Mr Ford: The standard fees payable for committal proceedings, including preliminary enquiries, preliminary investigations and mixed committals, are as follows:

- a Solicitor - £820
- b Counsel - £800

I recently introduced an Additional Committal Preparation Fee of £410 for solicitors and £400 for counsel in cases which include more than 750 pages of prosecution evidence.

Where proceedings last more than one day an Additional Hearing Fee of £200 per day is payable.

In cases which have been certified for counsel, by virtue of the case being unusually grave or difficult, both the solicitor and counsel are entitled to their respective fee for appearing.

Prison Officers: Retirement

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Justice how many Prison Officers have retired in the last five years due to being diagnosed with post-traumatic stress disorder.

(AQW 34512/11-15)

Mr Ford: It is not possible to confirm how many Prison Officers have retired in the last five years due to being diagnosed with post-traumatic stress disorder.

The Occupational Health Service (OHS) confirms if an employee meets the criteria for retirement on medical grounds. The OHS does not confirm the nature of the employee's medical condition as this information is confidential.

Legal Highs: Dangers

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Justice whether he has had discussions with the Minister of Education on how young people in school can be warned about the dangers of legal highs.

(AQW 34526/11-15)

Mr Ford: The availability of counterfeit, sub standard and unlicensed medicines, particularly via the internet, is a global issue and regulatory bodies recognise that a multi-faceted approach is essential to ensure any illegal activity is countermanded.

Within a Northern Ireland context, the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, through the Medicines Regulatory Group, is working with partner agencies including police and border authorities to act against those illegally importing or selling such medicines.

Whilst 'counterfeit' medicines are periodically detected, it is those medicines falling within the more general description of 'unauthorised' or 'unlicensed' that are more commonly encountered here and for which DHSSPS has statutory investigative responsibility under medicines legislation.

The figures available from the Medicines Regulatory Group indicate that there have been 16 convictions in relation to the illegal importation, possession or supply of unlicensed or unauthorised medicines over the last 10 years. During the same period, however, there have been interceptions of significant quantities of high value illegal medicines which have been destroyed before reaching their intended recipient in Northern Ireland.

National Crime Agency: Northern Ireland

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Justice to detail the talks that have taken place, or will take place, between his Department and his Executive colleagues with regard to securing the full operation of the National Crime Agency in Northern Ireland. (AQW 34706/11-15)

Mr Ford: I have brought the issue of the National Crime Agency to the Executive previously and there was no agreement. I plan to do so again after a further exchange with interested bodies and parties on a revised possible model within which the National Crime Agency could operate within the devolved arena.

Department for Regional Development

Car Parks: Off-street

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the current valuation of all off-street car parks. (AQW 33993/11-15)

Mr Kennedy (The Minister for Regional Development): The current valuation of all off-street car parks, as at the financial year end 31 March 2014, is some £46 million.

Residents Parking Schemes: Outside Belfast

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the residents' parking schemes that are planned for outside Belfast. (AQW 33998/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Legislation governing all Residents' Parking Schemes is currently being finalised with the Departmental Solicitor's Office (DSO). As you will appreciate it is extremely important that my Department drafts the first residents' parking legislation correctly, as it will provide a template for all future schemes. The legislation needs to cover the intricacies of each proposed Residents' Parking Scheme. This task has proven to be fairly complex, particularly as there are may be differences between the requirements of each specific scheme, due to local needs and circumstances.

At present, officials aim to have the draft legislation ready for the first schemes by autumn 2014, with the formal consultation stage following as soon as possible thereafter. Subsequently, scheme implementation will depend upon the outcome of the consultation process, particularly whether objections are received.

The first Residents' Parking Schemes to be formally consulted upon are in Antrim, Londonderry and within Belfast. The first two schemes to be advertised will be several streets in the Lower Malone area, that is, Malone Avenue, Eglantine Avenue, Wellington Park, Wellesley Avenue and linking streets, and in the Rugby Road/College Park Avenue area. The schemes in Antrim and Londonderry will be advertised shortly afterwards.

These initial schemes, once implemented, will have to be monitored for a period to gauge their success or otherwise. If these initial schemes prove to be successful, further consideration will be given to schemes outside Belfast.

Drainage: Ballymena

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (i) the work planned to upgrade the drainage system in the Wakehurst Park area of Ballymena to prevent serious flooding such as that on 8 June 2014; (ii) the investigations that are now ongoing following the flooding incident; and (iii) the work that has been completed on the drainage system in this area in the last five years.

(AQW 34008/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The cause of the recent flooding in the Wakehurst area of Ballymena is currently being investigated. At present it appears that the sheer volume of heavy rainfall in a very short period overwhelmed the capacity of the drainage infrastructure in the area.

In light of the recent flooding, NI Water will be carrying out a detailed inspection of the sewer network to ensure there are no issues that it is currently unaware of, that could affect the operational effectiveness of the sewers. This work will be completed in the next two weeks. Transport NI has also checked the road drainage system in Wakehurst Park and found it to be clear of any blockages.

Work on the drainage systems in this area during the last five years has been limited to routine maintenance operations.

I have also requested that the interdepartmental Flood Investment Planning Group, led by my Department, urgently examines what can be done to help reduce the risk of flooding in the area.

Drainage: Ballymena

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Regional Development what work has been completed on the drainage system in the Toome Road and Queen Street areas of Ballymena to prevent serious flooding from occurring, such as that in 2008; and to detail why the system failed on 8 June 2014 and the investigations that will take place following the failure.

(AQW 34011/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The cause of the recent flooding in the Queen Street and Toome Road areas of Ballymena is currently being investigated. At present it appears that the sheer volume of heavy rainfall in a very short period overwhelmed the capacity of the drainage infrastructure in the area.

As part of the Drainage Area plans for this area NI Water has identified a number of structural sewer defects in the Toome Road and Queen Street areas. A scheme to rectify these issues including relining some sections of the sewer and replacement of a number of manholes to prevent ingress of water from a local watercourse into the sewer, was scheduled to commence in August 2014. However, I have asked NI Water to bring this scheme forward and it will now commence before the end of June 2014 with completion due during September 2014.

In light of the recent flooding, Transport NI has checked the road gullies and transfer pipes in these gullies and these were found to be working properly. In addition, NI Water will be carrying out a detailed inspection of the sewer network to ensure that there are no other, previously unidentified issues that could affect the operational effectiveness of the sewers. This work will be completed within the next two weeks.

Work on the drainage systems in this area has been limited to routine maintenance operations.

I am advised that the planned repairs may not significantly impact on the capacity of the sewer network and I have therefore asked the interdepartmental Flood Investment Planning Group, led by my Department, to urgently examine what can be done to help reduce the flood risk in this area.

Freedom of Information Requests

Mr Rogers asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of Freedom of Information requests he has received in each of the last three financial years; and of these, how many have been considered under Regulation 12 of the Environmental Information Regulations, rather than the Freedom of Information Act 2000.

(AQW 34067/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: In the last three financial years, my Department has received a total of 990 requests for information under the Freedom of Information Act 2000 (FOI) and the Environmental Information Regulations 2004 (EIR). Of these, 224 were processed under the EIR. Following consideration of the public interest in each case, information was withheld under Regulation 12 exceptions on 27 occasions.

The table below summarises the position.

Financial Year	Number of Requests	EIR	Reg. 12 Exceptions
2011-2012	358	22	9
2012-2013	325	89	12
2013-2014	307	113	6

It should be noted that it is possible for more than one exception under Regulation 12 to be engaged for a single request.

Information regarding requests made under FOI and EIR to NICS Departments is collated and published in a series of FOI Annual Reports on a calendar year basis. The last three published reports (2010, 2011 and 2012) can be accessed from the OFMDFM website at:

http://www.ofmdfmni.gov.uk/index/improving-public-services/information_management_and_central_advisory_branch/annual-reports-and-statistics.htm

Statistics for 2013 are provided on a quarterly basis and cannot be regarded as validated until the publication of the 2013 FOI Annual Report.

Drainage: Ballymena

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development what age is the below ground drainage infrastructure serving the Toome Road; Queen Street; and Wakehurst areas of Ballymena.

(AQW 34075/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The NI Water sewer networks in the Queen Street, Toome Road and Wakehurst areas of Ballymena were laid by previous providers of water and sewerage services and some of the records that transferred to NI Water are incomplete.

The main combined sewer in Toome Road was laid in the early 1950's. Two smaller sewers in Toome Road are believed to have been laid prior to 1950 but NI Water cannot be more specific about the actual installation date. Similarly, it is believed that the combined sewer in Queen Street was laid prior to 1950. The main combined sewer in Wakehurst Road was laid in 1961.

Transport NI has advised that no records are available in relation to the exact age of the road drainage systems in these areas of Ballymena, which were inherited from Antrim County Council in the early 1970's.

Drainage: Ballymena

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development why the below ground drainage infrastructure serving the Toome Road; Queen Street; and Wakehurst areas of Ballymena cannot cope during heavy rainfall.

(AQW 34076/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The cause of the recent flooding in the Toome Road, Queen Street and Wakehurst areas of Ballymena is currently being investigated. At present it appears that the sheer volume of heavy rainfall in a very short period overwhelmed the capacity of the drainage infrastructure in these areas.

However, in light of the recent flooding, NI Water will be carrying out a detailed inspection of the sewer network to ensure there are no issues of which it is currently unaware, that could affect the operational effectiveness of the sewers. This work will be completed within the next two weeks.

Transport NI has checked the road gullies and transfer pipes in these areas and these were found to be working properly.

I have also requested that the interdepartmental Flood Investment Planning Group, led by my Department, urgently examines what can be done to help reduce the flood risk in these areas.

Drainage: Ballymena

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans his Department has to upgrade the below ground drainage infrastructure serving the Toome Road; Queen Street; and Wakehurst areas of Ballymena so that it can cope with heavy rainfall.

(AQW 34078/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The cause of the recent flooding in the Queen Street and Toome Road areas of Ballymena is currently being investigated. At present it appears that the sheer volume of heavy rainfall in a very short period overwhelmed the capacity of the drainage infrastructure in the area.

In light of the recent flooding, Transport NI has checked the road gullies and transfer pipes in these gullies and these were found to be working properly. In addition, NI Water will be carrying out a detailed inspection of the sewer network to ensure that there are no other, previously unidentified issues that could affect the operational effectiveness of the sewers. I am advised that this planned work may not significantly improve the capacity of the sewer network and I have therefore asked the interdepartmental Flood Investment Planning Group, led by my Department, to urgently examine what can be done to help reduce the flood risk in this area.

Road Safety Measures

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the proposed road safety measures for the A48 Newtownards Road and Cotton Road junction.

(AQW 34100/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department has a proposed scheme involving the provision of two sections of footway along the A48 Newtownards Road, at the junction of Bailie Terrace and improvements to sightlines at the junction. Whilst the scheme is included in the current Minor Improvement programme for the Ards area and scheduled to commence during the 2015/16 financial year, progression will be dependent upon the successful acquisition of land from a number of individual landowners.

Councils: Services Develoved to New Councils

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the services his Department will be devolving to the new councils.

(AQW 34102/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: In order to implement one of the Executive's proposals under the Review of Public Administration (RPA), to create stronger local government in Northern Ireland, my Department will shortly be seeking views on the content of a draft Off-Street Parking (Functions of District Councils) Bill.

The Executive's proposal is to transfer ownership of all off-street car parks from my Department to the councils, with the exception of park and ride and park and share parking places, which would remain the responsibility of my Department.

The Bill would empower the 11 new councils, with effect from 1 April 2015, to employ traffic attendants and to operate and manage all off-street car parks. Councils would also become responsible for setting tariffs and enforcing parking contraventions in those car parks.

Responsibility for Donaghadee Harbour will also transfer to the new councils.

Footway Upgrading and Repair: Belfast North Section Office

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 33865/11-15, for a breakdown of the locations of spend on footway upgrading and repair in the Belfast North Section Office area in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34156/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Details of the footway resurfacing and reconstructions schemes completed by my Department in the last five years in the Belfast North Section Office area are provided in the following tables. In addition, my Department has completed over 147,000 repairs to footways in the Belfast North Section Office area during the same period, however, it would not be practicable to list every location at which works have been undertaken.

Flooding: Ballymena

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Regional Development whether the Flood Investment and Planning Group will coordinate an investigation into the recent flooding incident in Wakehurst Park in Ballymena.

(AQW 34159/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can confirm that the interdepartmental Flood Investment Planning Group, led by my Department, will coordinate an investigation into the recent flooding in Wakehurst Park, Ballymena to examine what can be done to reduce the risk of flooding in the area.

A6 Derry to Dungiven: Dualling Scheme

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister for Regional Development when a response will be made to the Inspector's Report on the public inquiry into the A6 Derry to Dungiven dualling scheme.

(AQW 34172/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Following the public inquiry into the proposed dualling of the A6 between Londonderry and Dungiven, the Inspector has produced a report comprising a number of recommendations. I am currently considering a response to these recommendations and will issue the Departmental Statement in due course, when I am satisfied that all issues have been appropriately reviewed.

Sewerage Works: Greystown and Sicily Park

Mr McKinney asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the proposed improvements to sewerage works in the Greystown and Sicily Park area of Belfast.

(AQW 34173/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: NI Water completed a short term scheme in this area in September 2013 when over £100,000 was invested to improve and rehabilitate existing infrastructure and assist Rivers Agency to identify additional utility services within undesignated culverts in the area.

NI Water's business case for the medium/long term solution, which involves a multi-agency project to reduce the risk of flooding in South Belfast (including Sicily Park and Greystown Avenue) is nearing completion.

It is anticipated that the Business Case will be completed by the end of July 2014 and will then be submitted to my Department and the Department of Finance and Personnel for approval.

Construction: Lower Carbon Materials

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development what efforts have been made by his Department to source lower carbon materials for construction.

(AQW 34186/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Transport NI uses best practice and UK-wide standard documentation for road construction and maintenance activities, developed on a whole life performance basis, with specifications which permit the reuse of recycled materials.

A range of options exist to design and specify a process that results in reduced need for material and energy intensive construction and maintenance methods. Potential options for re-use/recycling construction materials and by-products are applied, where feasible.

Within the quarry products sector, reductions are ongoing in our carbon footprint with energy efficiency being a key priority, this includes:

- the use of cold and warm mix asphalt which requires no, or less, heating prior to use, thus reducing the carbon footprint of the manufacturing and application processes;
- Bitumen emulsions for use in spray injection patching machines and cold applied edge sealer in asphalt concrete reinstatements. These materials require less heat input compared to hot applied materials, again reducing the carbon footprint both during the manufacturing and application processes;

- the use of reclaimed aggregates and asphalt, where aggregates and hot applied asphalt concretes have recycled materials incorporated into the product mix; and
- thinner or more durable road surfaces as a way of using less material per kilometre of road.

Public Private Partnerships and Design and Build procurement have also been used to promote greener procurement methods that adopt whole life costing and life cycle analysis.

Northern Ireland Water (NIW) encourages the sourcing of lower carbon materials for construction by including Low Carbon Design as a requirement within the Design Consultants fee agreement. NIW also re-uses and recycles a significant quantity of materials on site, thereby reducing carbon generated from transportation and manufacturing processes. The sourcing of materials from renewable and sustainable locations is assessed as part of NIW's environmental reporting process. Going forward, the use of energy efficient processes and plant will be assessed as part of NIW's tender assessment when appropriate.

Currently all of Translink's construction projects over £1million in value are BREEAM (Building Research Establishment Environmental Assessment Method) assessed, which is an accredited environmental rating scheme for buildings. As part of this assessment, the materials used are rated using 'The Green Guide'. This data is set out as an A+ to E ranking system, where A+ represents the best environmental performance/least environmental impact, and E the worst environmental performance/most environmental impact. Translink is committed to achieving high BREEAM ratings and can confirm that all of its qualifying projects aim to score as high as possible within the 'Green Guide' in sourcing sustainable materials.

Hospitality: DRD

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development what was the total cost of hospitality provided by (i) his Department and (ii) its arm's-length bodies in 2013-14.

(AQW 34204/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The amount spent on hospitality by my Department and its arm's-length bodies in 2013-14 is detailed below:

Year	Department £'000	NITHC £'000	NI Water £'000	Total Cost £'000
2013 / 14	38	21*	18	77

* The figures above do not include expenses claimed by Translink executives, if claimed through payroll systems. To extract such information would involve disproportionate cost.

Sewerage and Drainage Systems: Derry

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps will be taken to upgrade the sewerage and drainage systems in the Ballymagroarty and Foyle Springs areas of Derry.

(AQW 34269/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: NI Water is aware of the flooding issues in the Ballymagroarty and Foyle Springs area of Londonderry and the impact this has on its customers.

Investigations carried out by NI Water in this area have included CCTV surveys and flow modelling of the sewerage system in order to develop options for reducing the risk of flooding. A preferred option has been identified and a business case has been approved which represents a capital investment of £825,000.

NI Water is presently developing a detailed design for the scheme and subject to obtaining all the necessary approvals and reaching agreement with landowners, it is anticipated that construction will commence towards the end of this calendar year with a construction period of six months.

Residents Parking Schemes: Antrim

Mr Girvan asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on plans for residents parking schemes in the Massereene Street and Clarke Court areas of Antrim.

(AQW 34280/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Legislation governing all Residents' Parking Schemes is currently being finalised with the Departmental Solicitor's Office. It is extremely important that my Department drafts the first residents' parking legislation correctly, as it will provide a template for all future schemes. The legislation needs to cover the intricacies of each proposed Residents' Parking Scheme. This task has proven to be fairly complex, particularly given the differences between the requirements of each specific scheme, due to local needs and circumstances.

At present, my officials aim to have the draft legislation ready for the first schemes by autumn 2014, with the formal consultation stage following as soon as possible thereafter. Subsequently, scheme implementation will depend upon the outcome of the consultation process, particularly whether objections are received.

The first Residents' Parking Schemes to be formally consulted upon include both Massereene Street and Clarke Court. The first two schemes to be advertised will be several streets in the Lower Malone area, that is, Malone Avenue, Eglantine Avenue, Wellington Park, Wellesley Avenue and linking streets, and in the Rugby Road/College Park Avenue area. The schemes in Antrim at Massereene Street and Clarke Court will be advertised shortly afterwards.

Resurfacing: Bangor

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the cost of resurfacing the road and footpaths in the Dellmount area of Bangor.

(AQW 34285/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department carried out carriageway resurfacing and footway reconstruction work to a value of £380,000 in the Dellmount area of Bangor during the 2013/14 financial year.

Resurfacing: Bangor

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what footpath resurfacing schemes are planned for the Towerview area of Bangor.

(AQW 34288/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Details of my Department's work programmes for 2014/15 will be published in the Transport NI Spring and Autumn Reports to Councils. Once completed, the Council Reports for the 2014/15 financial year will be placed on my Department's internet site.

Road and Traffic Schemes: West Belfast

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the (i) traffic calming; (ii) traffic management; and (iii) resurfacing work schemes due to take place in the West Belfast constituency in the current financial year.

(AQW 34291/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Details of my Department's work programmes for 2014/15 will be published in the Transport NI Spring and Autumn Reports to Councils. Once completed, the Council Reports for the 2014/15 financial year will be placed on my Department's internet site.

Gifts or Hospitality: Civil Servants

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development, in relation to civil servants in his Department receiving gifts or hospitality in 2013/14, whether there have been any declarations of gifts or hospitality in excess of £250; and if so, to detail the declarations.

(AQW 34313/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department maintains registers which detail all offers of gifts or hospitality received by staff from third parties. These registers show the actual or estimated value of each such offer and indicate, in each case, whether the offer was accepted (with management approval) or declined.

The entries in the registers show that, during the 2013/14 financial year, one declaration in excess of £250 was made in DRD. The offer was received and accepted by a member of the Senior Civil Service on a personal basis and, as registers for DRD Departmental Board Members and Senior Civil Service staff are published, details can be accessed from the DRD website at <http://www.drdni.gov.uk/index/publications/publications-details.htm?docid=9444>

No declarations in excess of £250 were made within DRD's arm's length bodies, Northern Ireland Water and Translink.

Environmental Pollution: Kinnegar Sewage Works

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Regional Development why there has been a delay in the commencement of the scheme to stop the environmental pollution at Kinnegar sewage works in Holywood.

(AQW 34353/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: NI Water is currently investing £3.5 Million in a two phased project to help resolve the sewerage pollution issue at Kinnegar Lagoons in Holywood. The first phase of the project is progressing well, however procurement issues during the tendering process have delayed the anticipated commencement on-site. The construction contract has been tendered and is expected to be awarded to a successful contractor in early July 2014, with commencement on-site soon afterwards. The work is expected to be completed by late Spring / early Summer 2015.

Traffic Light System: Dungannon

Ms McGahan asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he plans to review urgently the new traffic light system recently installed in Dungannon, given that it is causing traffic gridlock and has had a negative impact on local traders.

(AQW 34379/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: You will be aware Dungannon and South Tyrone Borough Council is currently undertaking a public realm improvement project within Dungannon town centre. This project includes the provision of a new signalised junction at the Market Square Church Street, Scotch Street and Irish Street junction and I assume this is the new traffic light system to which you refer.

The design of this public realm scheme, including the traffic signal design, was carried out by Council appointed consultants, White Young Green, who liaised closely with my officials during development of the scheme. The site is still a "work in progress" and consequently the traffic signals do not currently have the normal vehicle detection system in place to effectively control the timings and operation of the signals. This proposed detection system cannot be provided until all resurfacing works are completed in late August 2014 and until then the signals will not operate at optimum levels.

Upon completion of the scheme, the traffic signals will operate with a modern Microprocessor Operated Vehicle Activation (MOVA) system which should ensure that traffic moves efficiently through the junction. The project is scheduled to be completed at the end of September 2014.

Glencull: Booster Pumping Station

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 32742/11-15, whether the proposed booster pumping station at Glencull Ballygawley will be completed in September 2014.

(AQW 34385/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: NI Water is currently fast tracking the scheme to provide the booster pumping station at Glencull Ballygawley. The landowner has agreed in principle to sell the required lands and construction is expected to commence on-site in August 2014 and be completed in late October 2014.

Rural Transport Agencies: Non-core Funding

Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Regional Development, given that the core funding for rural transport agencies will not be cut, to detail the non-core funding element that has been cut for each of the agencies.

(AQW 34521/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Allocations to the Rural Community Transport Partnerships for 2014-15 issued on the 18 June 2014.

The level of support provided to the Rural Community Transport Partnerships has increased from £3.4M in 2013-14 to £3.6M in this financial year.

Officials are also in discussions with the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development (DARD) and the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister (OFMDFM) (Active Aging Strategy) in an attempt to secure additional funding which could be used by service providers, including the rural partnerships to deliver enhanced services. However at this time no final decisions on funding have yet been made by DARD or OFMDFM. Last year DARD provided additional funding to the Rural Community Transport Partnerships of £100K to partly fund Dial-a-Lift services rather than any specific routes.

DART and the neighbouring Rural Community Transport Partnerships, which together form the Southern Area Partnership, were issued with a letter of offer on 18 June 2014 and have subsequently, requested payment, which is currently being processed.

Lough Cowey: Portaferry

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister for Regional Development whether departmental officials have received any expressions of interest from the public sector with regard to the sale of Lough Cowey in Portaferry.

(AQW 34559/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: A total of twenty three redundant reservoirs, including Lough Cowey, are currently being trawled within the public sector by NI Water. Responses from interested parties are required to be returned to the Department of Finance and Personnel's Land and Property Services (LPS) by an extended return date of 27 June 2014, to allow for consideration by the newly elected councils. Any expressions of interest will be passed to NI Water after this date.

DoE/DRD Meeting: December 2013

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 33656/11-15, to detail the date in December 2013 that the meeting between senior management from his Department and their counterparts in the Department of the Environment took place.

(AQW 34599/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The meeting referred to, between officials from my Department and the Department of the Environment, took place on 5 December 2013.

Department for Social Development

Housing Executive: Criteria for Defining a Public Sector Body

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development what criteria the Housing Executive uses to define a public sector body. (AQW 33850/11-15)

Mr McCausland (The Minister for Social Development): The Housing Executive has advised that it does not have a definition of what constitutes a public body. This is defined by the Office of National Statistics by reference to the European System of Accounts 1995 in accordance with EU requirements.

Benefit Claims

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister for Social Development how many people living in the south of Ireland are currently claiming (i) Employment Support Allowance; (ii) Job Seekers Allowance; (iii) Disability Living Allowance; and (iv) any other benefit, broken down by constituency.

(AQW 33950/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The information is not available in the format requested.

In general a person moving to reside in another EEA country can take the following benefits with them if they have satisfied the conditions of entitlement: State Retirement Pension; Contributory Employment and Support Allowance; Contributory Jobseekers Allowance; Bereavement Benefits; Industrial Injuries benefits; Winter Fuel Payments; Disability Living Allowance (care component) Attendance Allowance and Carer's Allowance. The right to retain the benefit is tied to conditions specific to each benefit.

Employment and Support Allowance, State Retirement Pension, Bereavement Benefit and Winter Fuel Payments for claimants residing in the Republic of Ireland are maintained by the Department for Work and Pensions International Pensions Centre on behalf of the Social Security Agency. The IT systems used to administer these benefits cannot provide information on the number of people from Northern Ireland receiving benefit and now residing in the Republic of Ireland.

For the remaining benefits, the Social Security Agency administers payments to people who live outside the United Kingdom. There are currently 62 claimants living in the Republic of Ireland who are receiving Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit and 25 claimants receiving Disability Living Allowance (care component). There are no recipients of any other benefits residing in Republic of Ireland.

Reform of Local Government: Transfer of Land

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development to list the land that will transfer to the control of each new council under the Reform of Local Government.

Migrants: Housing

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development what steps his Department has taken to ensure that new migrant arrivals are provided public and social housing equally across areas classified or regarded as unionist and nationalist.
(AQW 34023/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The information is not available in the format requested because the Housing Executive does not classify housing areas as unionist or nationalist. Access to public/social housing is via the Housing Selection scheme. An applicant makes an application to the waiting list or presents as homeless to one of the Housing Executive offices.

The Housing Executive has a statutory duty to ensure that an applicant who is a Person from Abroad is eligible for an allocation of accommodation and homelessness assistance.

When an applicant is determined to be eligible for an allocation of accommodation they are required to select two areas of choice where they would prefer to live and are registered on the waiting list. Allocations are made under the rules of the Housing Selection Scheme and each dwelling which becomes available is offered to the applicant on the list with the highest number of points for that area.

The selection of areas made is a personal decision by the applicant. Advice and support can be given to inform this decision if requested by the applicant. Foreign Nationals, Black and Minority Ethnic families and Migrant Workers make housing choices for a range of reasons which often have no bearing on the religious or political composition of the area they wish to live in. The Housing Executive facilitates this choice through the application of the Housing Selection scheme without actively directing families to specific areas. However, recent research has shown that families from Europe and beyond now live in public housing across all of the Housing Executive's districts.

Carbon Monoxide Alarm Installations: Upper Bann

Mr Anderson asked the Minister for Social Development how many Housing Executive properties in Upper Bann have had a carbon monoxide alarm installed in each of the last three years.

(AQW 34037/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that the information is not available in the format requested. The figures below detail the number of properties in Craigavon and Banbridge which have had a carbon monoxide alarm installed within the last three years.

Year	Number of alarms installed
2011/12	1,651
2012/13	103
2013/14	148

Appeals Service: Staffing

Mr McKinney asked the Minister for Social Development whether his Department has examined the possibility that temporary on-going transfers within the Civil Service could be used to ensure that Appeal Services offices are operating with the necessary number of staff.

(AQW 34055/11-15)

Mr McCausland: As of 16 June 2014 there were no outstanding vacancies within The Appeals Service. Where vacancies do arise within my Department they are filled in line with the Northern Ireland Civil Service vacancy management policy, which includes the potential for permanent and temporary transfers of staff.

Appeals Service: Staffing

Mr McKinney asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of staff employed in each appeals service office; and the number of cases that each office has handled over the last 12 months.

(AQW 34056/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Appeals Service has offices in Belfast and Omagh. There are 96 staff employed in the Belfast office and there are 49 staff employed in the Omagh office. The number of appeals handled by each office is detailed in the table below.

Appeals Service Office	01/06/2013 – 31/05/2014
Belfast Office	12,953
Omagh Office	8,260
Total	21,213

Work Capability Assessments

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development, given that the definition of persons placed in the Employment Support Allowance Support Group is sufficiently impaired to prevent them making any steps towards moving into work, why they are required to complete further Work Capability Assessment forms, particularly in cases of severe impairment where there remains no improvement in condition or any prospect of an improvement.

(AQW 34074/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Work Capability Assessment (WCA) is a functional assessment, and is based on the premise that eligibility for Employment and Support Allowance should not be determined by the description of a person's disability or health condition, but rather by how their ability to function is affected.

All claimants of Employment and Support Allowance, including those in the Support Group, are subject to reassessment of their work capability in order to ensure that they are receiving the correct amount of benefit and support, as it is accepted that over time medical conditions can improve or decline with treatment. Under the reassessment policy, all claimants, irrespective of their impairment, are asked to complete the medical questionnaire ESA 50 to give details of their medical condition. The Healthcare Professional will then consider the information and evidence provided by claimants to determine whether they can be assessed based solely on this information, whether further evidence from their doctor is needed, or whether there is a need to arrange a face-to-face medical assessment.

Based on the outcome of the WCA reassessment, claimants may be continue to be placed in the Support Group, or may be removed from that group and placed in the Work Related Activity Group. The assessment will also include the consideration a new reassessment date that can range from three months to three years, depending on the medical condition

In his 'Independent Review of the Work Capability Assessment – year 4' Dr Paul Litchfield has recommended that consideration is given to a new reassessment period extending to five years in the Support Group for people who have very severe incapacity resulting from brain disorders that are degenerative or which will not realistically improve. The Department is carrying out a policy impact assessment to determine if there are any policy or legalisation implications before moving forward with this recommendation.

Employment Support Allowance: Appeals

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development how many Employment Support Allowance appeals have taken place in the last two years.

(AQW 34104/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The table below details the number of Employment Support Allowance appeals that have taken place in the last two financial years, which reached a final outcome.

Year	Final Outcome Reached
2012/13	8,559
2013/14	12,193

Social Housing: Allocation

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the average waiting time for allocation of social housing in (i) North Down; and (ii) Ards, in each of the last three years; and how this compares to the Northern Ireland average.

(AQW 34130/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The table attached details the average waiting times for the allocation of social housing in the Housing Executive's North Down and Newtownards local offices and for Northern Ireland as a whole over the last two years. The Housing Executive has advised that the information is not available for 2011/12 as they were implementing a new Housing Management system during that year.

Atos Healthcare

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the level of medical examinations currently carried out by Atos Healthcare for one benefit impacting on another benefit; and whether the unit administering Employment Support Allowance and Disability Living Allowance share such information.

(AQW 34183/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Social Security Agency makes benefit award decisions. Atos Healthcare has been providing medical advice to support the Social Security Agency to make benefit award decisions since June 2011 on the following benefits:

- Attendance Allowance;
- Child Maintenance and Enforcement referrals;
- Compensation Recovery referrals;
- Disability Living Allowance;
- Employment and Support Allowance;
- HMRC – Statutory Sick Pay, Statutory Maternity Pay, Statutory Paternity Pay, Tax Credits;
- Industrial Injuries Benefits;
- Jobseeker's Allowance;
- Overseas cases where reciprocal agreements in place.

The Agency's decision makers take into account all available evidence, which includes medical advice provided by Atos Healthcare and information provided by the claimant when making the benefit award decision. Although Employment and Support Allowance Centre and Disability and Carers Service do not currently share such medical information, there are no legislative barriers to prevent information sharing and claimants are able to submit the same medical information in support of a claim for both benefits.

Employment Support Allowance: Withdrawals

Mr F McCann asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of people who have had Employment Support Allowance withdrawn following a work capability assessment by Atos Healthcare, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 34190/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The following table details the number of people who failed to meet threshold at a Work Capability Assessment in each financial year from June 2011 to February 2014. The figures provided are those Employment and Support Allowance claimants who have undergone a Work Capability Assessment as part of the re-referral process which is provided for under the legislation.

Year	Fail WCA
June 2011 - March 2012	2730
April 2012 - March 2013	4090
April 2013 - February 2014	3270

Affordable Homes

Mr Brady asked the Minister for Social Development, of the 2,000 new homes proposed for the 2014-15 financial year, how many will be affordable homes.

(AQW 34191/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The 2,000 new homes proposed for the year 2014/15 are all social homes.

In addition to these social homes, 500 affordable homes are planned to be delivered in 2014/15.

Glen 10 Development Group

Mr F McCann asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the members of the Glen 10 Development Group, including who they represent.

(AQW 34192/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Glen Road Development Framework (GRDF), which was commissioned by my Department, recommended the establishment of a Delivery Executive to formulate an agreed workplan that leads to the development potential of the Glen Road area being realised. Full membership of the Delivery Executive has not yet been established. However, officials from my Department and Belfast City Council (BCC) have brought together a number of stakeholders to advise on the Terms of Reference (ToR) and the final membership of the Delivery Executive – a list of the stakeholders is below. At a meeting last month, it was agreed that officials from my Department and BCC should engage Planning Service with regard to adopting the GRDF as a statutory document before making any further decisions on the ToR or membership. It is envisaged that local landowners, Members of the Local Assembly and other stakeholders will be considered to join the Delivery Executive.

Affordable Housing: Definition

Mr F McCann asked the Minister for Social Development to detail his Department's definition of affordable housing as contained in the consultation on developer contributions.

(AQW 34193/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Affordable housing, as contained in the Developer Contributions consultation, is defined as both social rented housing and intermediate housing for eligible households. This definition is set out at Section 2 of the consultation document.

Social Rented Housing is housing provided at an affordable rent by the NIHE or Housing Association which is registered and regulated by the Department for Social Development as a social housing provider. Social rented accommodation should be available to households in housing need and is offered in accordance with the Common Selection Scheme, administered by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, which prioritises households who are living in unsuitable or insecure accommodation.

Intermediate Housing consists of shared ownership housing provided through a Housing Association (e.g. the Co Ownership Housing Association) and helps households who can afford a small mortgage, but that are not able to afford to buy a property outright. The property is split between part ownership by the householder and part affordable renting from the Housing Association. The proportion of property ownership and renting can vary depending on householder circumstances and preferences. It will also incorporate other forms of housing products to ensure houses are retained for affordability in the long-term and below open market rates.

Jobseeker's Allowance: Breaching Regulations

Mr F McCann asked the Minister for Social Development how many people on Jobseeker's Allowance have been reported as breaching regulations by officials from the Department of Employment and Learning.

(AQW 34194/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The information requested is not available. Staff from both the Department for Employment and Learning and the Social Security Agency can refer Jobseekers Allowance claimants to a Decision Maker where a doubt has arisen concerning their entitlement to benefit. The IT systems used to record these referrals cannot distinguish between referrals made by Department for Employment and Learning and Social Security Agency staff.

Charity Commission

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development whether the criteria used by the Charity Commission for Northern Ireland in deciding to carry out a statutory inquiry has been the subject of any audit or review; and if so, whether he will publish the findings.

(AQW 34195/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The process used to decide on the opening of a statutory inquiry, including the criteria, has been subject to review by the Department for Social Development's Internal Audit, who found the process was satisfactory. The Department for Social Development does not publish Internal Audit reports.

It should also be noted that charities have the right to appeal the decision to open a statutory inquiry to the Charity Tribunal, which includes a review of the decision.

Charity Commission: Investigations

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development when the Charity Commission for Northern Ireland will update its website to set out how it carries out a risk-based approach to investigations, as has been done in England and Wales.

(AQW 34196/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Charity Commission for Northern Ireland is currently developing a new, updated, version of its website, expected to be launched later this year. As part of this update, the Commission will consider the content.

Charity Commission

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development for his assessment of the costs incurred by charities in responding to investigations from the Charity Commission for Northern Ireland and how some funding generated by grants and money raised by donations is now being diverted from providing frontline services to engaging with these investigations .

(AQW 34197/11-15)

Mr McCausland: I have not made an assessment of the costs incurred by charities in responding to investigations from the Charity Commission for Northern Ireland. It would certainly not be appropriate for grant funding to be diverted from its intended purposes and used for the handling of an inquiry by the Commission. That should be a matter of concern to the relevant funding body. Statutory inquiries are not entered into lightly and can be necessary to protect the charity or its assets, for example where there is evidence of misconduct and mismanagement by trustees.

Hospitality: DSD

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development what was the total cost of hospitality provided by (i) his department and (ii) its arm's-length bodies in 2013/14.

(AQW 34205/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The table below provides a breakdown of my Department's and its arm-length bodies' spend for the total cost of hospitality in 2013-2014.

Year	Department spend	Arm's-length bodies' spend
2013-2014	£37,066	Charities Commission for Northern Ireland £3,150 Northern Ireland Housing Executive £4,168
Total	£37,066	£7,318

Housing Stress: Ballymena Area

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of (i) people considered to be in housing stress in the Ballymena area; (ii) social housing development proposals which have planning permission, funding and support of a housing association which are under consideration by the Housing Executive in the Ballymena area; and (iii) social housing units under consideration within such proposals.

(AQW 34214/11-15)

Mr McCausland:

- (i) At March 2014, there were 880 applicants in housing stress in Ballymena Borough.
- (ii) The table below shows the schemes currently programmed for delivery in the Ballymena area in the 2014/15 to 2016/17 Social Housing Development Programme.

Year	Association	Scheme	Units	Scheme Type	Need Group
2014/15	Ark	Templemoyle, Kells	6	NB	General Needs

2014/15	Triangle	Mill House Re-provision Ballymena	21	NB	Homeless
2014/15	Trinity	St Mary's Primary School, Larne Rd, Ballymena	74	NB	General Needs/ Category 1 Elderly

2015/16	Fold	Cushendall Road, Ballymena	60	NB	General Needs
2016/17	Fold	Phoenix Fields, Railway Street, Ballymena	22	NB	General Needs

At this stage none of these schemes have secured planning approval. In order to obtain Housing Association Grant (HAG), Associations are required to submit applications for project approval (effectively application for HAG funding) to the Housing Executive's Development Programme Group (DPG). Applications have not yet been submitted to DPG.

- (iii) There are a total of 256 new social housing units proposed for the eight planned schemes.

While the schemes listed above will contribute to meeting housing need, there remains an unmet housing need across the Borough. These locations are listed in the unmet housing need prospectus (see link below) and housing associations are encouraged to find sites in these locations.

http://www.nihe.gov.uk/unmet_social_housing_need_prospectus.pdf

Housing Stress: Ballymoney Area

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of (i) people considered to be in housing stress in the Ballymoney area; (ii) social housing development proposals which have planning permission, funding and support of a housing association which are under consideration by the Housing Executive in the Ballymoney area; and (iii) social housing units under consideration within such proposals.

(AQW 34215/11-15)

Mr McCausland:

- (i) At March 2014, there were 192 applicants in housing stress in Ballymoney Borough.
- (ii) Detailed below are the schemes programmed for delivery through the Social Housing Development Programme (2014-17) for the Ballymoney area.

Year	Association	Scheme	Units	Scheme Type	Need Group
2014/15	Ark	Balnamore, Ballymoney	3	NB	General Needs
2014/15	Triangle	2A Garryduff Road, Ballymoney	9	RI	Learning Disabilities

Housing Associations are currently drawing up their planning applications for submission for these schemes. In order to obtain Housing Association Grant (HAG), Associations are required to submit applications for project approval (effectively application for HAG funding) to the Housing Executive's Development Programme Group (DPG). Applications have not yet been submitted to DPG.

- (iii) A total of 12 new social housing units are proposed for delivery through the two planned schemes.

Housing Associations: Redecoration Grants

Mr Copeland asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the total paid in redecoration grants as a result of the installation of double-glazed windows in housing association properties, broken down by housing association.
(AQW 34229/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Of the current 24 registered Housing Associations only Apex has advised that it paid out £2,201.79 in redecoration grants as a result of the installation of double-glazed windows.

Housing Associations: Redecoration Grants

Mr Copeland asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the total number of homes that have received a redecoration grant as a result of the installation of double-glazed windows in housing association properties.
(AQW 34231/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Of the current 24 registered Housing Associations only Apex has advised that six of its properties received a redecoration grant as a result of the installation of double-glazed windows.

Housing Associations: Redecoration Grants

Mr Copeland asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the total number of ineligible applicants for a redecoration grant as a result of the installation of double-glazed windows in housing association properties.
(AQW 34232/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Of the current 24 registered Housing Associations only Apex advised that one applicant was ineligible for a redecoration grant as a result of the installation of double-glazed windows.

Housing Executive: Double-glazed Windows

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister for Social Development what steps he has taken over the last 3 years to ensure that all Housing Executive properties have double-glazed windows; and when this will be achieved.
(AQW 34233/11-15)

Mr McCausland: In line with the Northern Ireland Executive's Programme for Government commitment to improve the thermal efficiency of Housing Executive stock and ensure full double glazing in its properties, the Housing Executive has developed and implemented a programme to upgrade any of its properties which have single or partial double glazing to full double glazing.

In 2012/13 there were 8,856 dwellings started but none in 2013/14 as the Housing Executive was in the process of appointing contractors to deliver the programme. The contractors have now been appointed and the remaining programme, which is estimated to be 7,809 properties, is underway.

The Housing Executive has advised that the remaining programme is due to be completed by the end of March 2015 in line with the Programme for Government commitment.

Medical Assessments

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development how many people are awaiting a medical assessment for (i) Employment Support Allowance; and (ii) Disability Living Allowance, as a result of the current backlog.
(AQW 34238/11-15)

Mr McCausland: At close of business on Friday 13 June 14, the numbers of claimants currently awaiting a medical assessment is:

- (i) Employment and Support Allowance - 5384; and
- (ii) Disability Living Allowance - 736.

This includes claimants waiting for an appointment to be scheduled.

The Agency would normally expect to have a normal backlog within both the Employment and Support Allowance or Disability Living Allowance process of around three weeks. The current figures within Employment and Support Allowance equates to a six week backlog of work. Whilst the increased backlog in Employment and Support Allowance does not adversely impact on claimants as they are continuing to receive their benefit payment; the Agency is working closely with our medical service provider to address the increased backlog.

Victims and Survivors: Gateway Process

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister for Social Development what steps his Department has taken to ensure that any money received by victims and survivors through the gateway process will not impact upon their benefit entitlement.
(AQW 34240/11-15)

Mr McCausland: My Department has been liaising closely with officials in OFMDFM as proposals for payments by the Victims and Survivors Service are further developed. Payments under Financial Assistance (Scheme 6) are being disregarded in full for benefit purposes in accordance with the relevant legislation.

Programme for Government 2011-15

Mr Brady asked the Minister for Social Development how many of the Programme for Government 2011-15 target of 8,000 social and affordable homes have been built.
(AQW 34254/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Programme for Government 2011-15 committed to delivering 8,000 new social and affordable housing starts. This was broken down into 6,000 new social starts and 2,000 new affordable starts.

In 2011/12, the target was to deliver 1,900 new homes (1,400 social and 500 affordable). A total of 2,053 were delivered (1,410 social and 643 affordable).

In 2012/13, the target was to deliver 1,825 new homes (1,325 social and 500 affordable). A total of 2,336 were delivered (1,379 social and 957 affordable).

In 2013/14, the target was to deliver 1,775 new homes (1,275 social and 500 affordable). A total of 2,522 were delivered (1,299 social and 1,223 affordable).

In 2014/15, the target is to deliver 2,500 new homes (2,000 social and 500 affordable). Housing Associations are working towards delivery of this target by 31st March 2015.

Atos Healthcare

Mr Brady asked the Minister for Social Development how many people have had their incapacity benefit withdrawn after a work capability assessment by Atos Healthcare, in each of the last three years.
(AQW 34258/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The benefit assessment process involves an Atos Healthcare Professional making a recommendation on a claimant's fitness for work and, on receipt of this information, a social security decision-maker will then consider the opinion of the healthcare professional, along with all available evidence, to make a decision on whether the claimant has limited capability for work or for work related activity and is eligible for benefit.

The table below details the number of people who had their incapacity benefit disallowed on reassessment following a work capability assessment.

Year	Assessed as Fit for Work
1 June 2011 - March 2012	4990
April 2012 - March 2013	9600
April 2013 - March 2014	3950

Statistical information is only available from June 2011, the start of the contract with Atos Healthcare.

Reid and Wright Printers: Former Site

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Social Development what steps his Department has taken to secure the former site of Reid and Wright Printers adjacent to Clifton Street Orange Hall in Belfast to prevent the site from becoming a focus for disturbances.
(AQW 34260/11-15)

Mr McCausland: My Department does not own the site in question and therefore cannot take steps to fence it off. A derelict building, which previously was a source of urban blight on the site, was demolished as part of a wider environmental improvement scheme funded by my Department and carried out by Belfast City Council ahead of the Giro d'Italia cycle race in May 2014.

Social Housing: Hollywood

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development what social housing areas of Hollywood have yet to have double glazing installed.

(AQW 34283/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that there are currently 178 dwellings in Hollywood which require double glazing. They are all included in the same scheme which is scheduled to commence in September 2014. A breakdown by area is as follows:-

■ Loughview	54 dwellings
■ Redburn	43 dwellings
■ Spencer Street	60 dwellings
■ Strand/Kinnegar	8 dwellings
■ Woodlands	13 dwellings

The Information provided in this response is governed by the Principles and Protocols of the Code of Practice for Official Statistics. This is enforced by UK Statistics Authority.

Victims and Survivors: Housing

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Social Development whether he has considered introducing a points award for victims and survivors as part of the housing selection scheme.

(AQW 34368/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The housing selection scheme awards points to eligible applicants in respect of their current needs. The scheme is under review and any proposed changes will be subject to consultation.

Urban Development Grants

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development how many project applications, that were submitted by the 1 August 2013, were awarded an urban development grant; and to detail the value of each grant.

(AQW 34375/11-15)

Mr McCausland: There were 10 applications for Urban Development Grants submitted between 1 April 2013 and 1 August 2013. To date 6 have been awarded grants. The value of each grant was; £44,041, £45,000, £103,313, £130,400, £136,728 and £188,550.

Urban Development Grants

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development when all the urban development grants for 2013-14 were allocated.

(AQW 34377/11-15)

Mr McCausland: There were 38 urban development grants awarded in 2013-14. All of these were made between 16 April 2013 and 13 March 2014.

Urban Development Grants

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development when the responsibility for the urban development grant scheme passed to local councils.

(AQW 34380/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Local councils do not have responsibility for the urban development grant scheme. The scheme is currently administered by the Department for Social Development.

From April 1 2015 powers currently available to DSD will be extended to Councils to assist them, where necessary, in addressing issues related to social need and to take forward regeneration within their areas. The decision to operate an Urban Development Grant scheme will be for the new Councils to make.

Urban Development Grants

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development when funding under the urban development grant scheme can be administered and allocated by local councils.

(AQW 34381/11-15)

Mr McCausland: From 1 April 2015 the relevant budgets and powers currently available to DSD will be extended to Councils to assist them, where necessary, in addressing issues related to social need and to take forward regeneration within their areas. From this date a new Council could choose to administer an Urban Development Grants scheme in their area.

Affordable Warmth Scheme

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 32641/11-15, for an update on the work of the Project Group overseeing the pilot affordable warmth scheme in relation to its liaison with local councils.

(AQW 34390/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The affordable warmth scheme project group was established to monitor the progress of the affordable warmth pilot and to plan for the delivery of the targeted area based approach to tackling fuel poverty across all council areas. Representatives from all 26 councils have been meeting regularly to plan the implementation of the affordable warmth scheme. The Department proposes to work in partnership with local councils and the Housing Executive to target households most at risk of fuel poverty, it is anticipated that this new affordable warmth scheme will commence across all councils from 1 September 2014.

The existing warm homes scheme contract has been extended to 31 March 2015. This will allow councils more time for the planning and implementation of the new affordable warmth scheme.

Affordable Warmth Scheme and the Warm Homes Scheme

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Social Development (i) to outline the difference between the affordable warmth scheme and the warm homes scheme which ended on 18 June 2014; (ii) when the affordable warmth scheme will come into operation; and (iii) what is the criteria and process for accessing the scheme.

(AQW 34420/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The warm homes scheme is a self-referral scheme aimed at owner occupiers and people who rent their home from a private landlord. Two scheme managers, Bryson Energy and H&A Mechanical Services, deliver the warm homes scheme on behalf of the Department. To qualify for the warm homes scheme, the applicant must be in receipt of a qualifying benefit. If the application is successful, a warm homes scheme manager will arrange for the property to be surveyed and appropriate energy efficiency improvements to be installed. The warm homes scheme was due to end on 18 June 2014 but has now been extended until 31 March 2015. This will allow a gradual ramp up of the affordable warmth scheme which is expected to commence on 1 September 2014.

Under the new affordable warmth scheme my Department will provide each council with the addresses of those privately owned and privately rented homes which are considered to be most at risk of fuel poverty. Councils will target these properties to complete a short survey regarding the tenure of the property and the householder's income. This information will then be passed to the Housing Executive to complete a technical survey. Once energy measures are approved, householders can arrange for an installer of their choice to install the measures. Once council Building Control inspect and approve the completed works the Housing Executive will arrange for payment to be made direct to the installer. Qualification for the affordable warmth scheme will be based on householder income as opposed to a qualifying benefit; it will also include additional energy efficiency measures.

Whilst identified households in severe/extreme fuel poverty will be the primary target for the affordable warmth scheme, other eligible households will still be able to access the scheme via a number of routes including referral from a health care professional such as a GP, Community nurse, Social Worker, Citizens Advice Bureau or Environmental Health Officer.

Queen's Parade, Bangor

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the progress of the Queen's Parade development in Bangor.

(AQW 34452/11-15)

Mr McCausland: My Department is taking the lead to progress proposals for the comprehensive development of the Queen's Parade. Over recent months good progress has been made and the Department has agreed the purchase on a number of properties required to complete the proposed site boundary and negotiations to acquire the remaining property are ongoing with owners. In March DSD appointed Turley Associates to work with officials to develop a planning application and attain planning permission for the Queen's Parade scheme by March 2015.

A series of engagement events to seek the views of the public, local businesses and Council on what they would like to see developed on this prominent site have been undertaken. It is these views that have informed a number of proposed options for the site which are being presented to the public for their consideration from 16 June 2014 to 30 June 2014.

Hollywood: Public Realm Scheme

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development how much funding will be going into the Hollywood public realms scheme.

(AQW 34453/11-15)

Mr McCausland: My Department is investing £1.4 million and Council is investing £1 million in the Hollywood public realm scheme. On-site construction works recently commenced and the works will address all aspects of street design including paving, kerbstones, street furniture, lighting and planting.

Double Glazing: New Schemes

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 33385/11-15, to detail the current stage of the two indicative schemes for consideration for new double glazing.

(AQW 34483/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that both retro-fit schemes are included in the 2015/16 programme. The schemes at Garvaghy/Rurals, for 89 dwellings and Clounagh/Ulsterville for 256 dwellings are due to be briefed in December 2014 with an onsite date of June 2015.

Housing: Monkstown

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Social Development for his assessment of the current housing need in Monkstown.

(AQO 6445/11-15)

Mr McCausland: I am pleased that Monkstown has undergone substantial transition in recent years; from in the 1980s being an estate which was difficult to let, to an estate in which people now wish to live.

In March 2014 there were 119 applications for social housing whose first preference was Monkstown, of which 72 were deemed to be in housing stress.

In the 12 months to March 2014, there were 55 social housing allocations. In addition, two schemes were completed by Connswater Housing Association in Monkstown Gardens (May 2012) and Ards Drive (April 2013) delivering a total of 18 units.

The combination of increased allocations and recent new build has met the social housing need in this area.

Although there are no new schemes planned for Monkstown over the next three year period the Housing Executive will continue to monitor the waiting list for the area, and if need begins to emerge, suitable schemes will be added to the social housing development programme.

Alcohol: Minimum Pricing

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on proposals for minimum pricing schemes for alcohol.

(AQO 6446/11-15)

Mr McCausland: My Department is responsible for the law regulating the sale and supply of alcohol in Northern Ireland. The Department of Health takes the lead in addressing alcohol misuse and trying to reduce overall consumption levels.

I have been working closely with Health Minister Poots on considering the need for introducing minimum unit pricing of alcohol in Northern Ireland.

Following the outcome of a joint consultation in 2011 between my Department and the Health Department, research has been commissioned in collaboration with the Department of Health in the Republic of Ireland to model the likely impact of introducing a minimum unit price of alcohol in each jurisdiction.

I understand that this research, which will be used to help inform any policy decision in this area, is nearing completion and will be presented to Minister Poots and me for our consideration over the summer months.

Early indications show that introducing a minimum unit price of, for example, 50p would result in a significant impact on public health in Northern Ireland. I await with interest the findings to be presented in the final report.

My officials also continue to monitor the developments in other jurisdictions, including Scotland, where I understand the introduction of minimum unit pricing is currently subject to legal challenge.

Northern Ireland Assembly Commission

MLAs: Office Accommodation

Mr Hussey asked the Assembly Commission what steps have been taken, under welfare at work provisions, to provide suitable office accommodation for Members with physical disabilities.

(AQW 34123/11-15)

Mr P Ramsey (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): At the beginning of each new mandate the Director of Facilities allocates a block of accommodation in Parliament Buildings to each political party for use by Members and party support staff. Allocation of the individual offices within the block is managed by the party.

The Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations state that employers must provide 'suitable and sufficient' welfare facilities for the well-being of their employees while at work including toilets, washing and changing facilities and somewhere clean to eat and drink during breaks. These are all well catered for in Parliament Buildings.

The regulations also cover ventilation, temperature, lighting, cleaning, room dimensions and workplace furniture and fittings.

Building Services Branch deals with requests relating to office accommodation on a daily basis and staff are on call to discuss in confidence any issues a building user may have with their office.

Any Member who has a physical disability that may require any special provision or alterations to their allocated accommodation should speak in confidence with the Director of Facilities in the first instance.

It is also important that anyone with a physical disability working in an office in Parliament Buildings completes a Personal Emergency Evacuation Plan so that an evacuation plan can be put in place.

Please let me know if you require anything further, I would be happy to meet with you to consider any specific concerns that you may have.

MLAs with a Disability

Mr Hussey asked the Assembly Commission what reasonable adjustments have been made in relation to Members with a disability who have to attend the Assembly Chamber in a specified timeframe, when the only suitable travel arrangements are lifts. (AQW 34124/11-15)

Mr P Ramsey (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): The Director of Facilities allocates a block of accommodation in Parliament Buildings to each political party for use by Members and party support staff. Allocation of the individual offices within the block is managed by the party.

Members' offices are located on the second and third floors of Parliament Buildings and access to the Assembly Chamber on the Ground Floor is available via passenger lifts located at the west side (2 lifts), east side (2 lifts), north and south of the building.

Any Member who has a disability that may require any special provision relating to accommodation or building services should speak in confidence with the Director of Facilities in the first instance.

Please let me know if you require anything further, I would be happy to arrange a meeting with you to consider your concerns.

Parliament Buildings: Official Invitations

Mr Allister asked the Assembly Commission whether Her Majesty The Queen was invited to visit Parliament Buildings during her upcoming visit to Northern Ireland. (AQW 34494/11-15)

Mr Weir (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): Official invitations to visit Parliament Buildings are issued by the Speaker in his representative role, on behalf of the Northern Ireland Assembly. By convention and protocol the Speaker does not comment on the issuing of invitations or the status thereof. The member will be aware that Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II visited the grounds of Parliament Buildings during her last visit to Northern Ireland, as part of the Diamond Jubilee.

Written Answers to Questions

Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister

Maze/Long Kesh Site

Mrs Dobson asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether model aircraft enthusiasts will regain permission to use the Maze/Long Kesh site in Lisburn.

(AQW 30992/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness (The First Minister and deputy First Minister): There is no current agreement on Maze/Long Kesh. We continue to discuss a way forward.

Shared Future Strategy

Mr I McCrea asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how events such as the Giro d'Italia contribute to their shared future strategy.

(AQO 6135/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Together: Building a United Community Strategy outlines a vision of a united community, based on equality of opportunity, the desirability of good relations and reconciliation – one which is strengthened by its diversity, where cultural expression is celebrated and embraced and where everyone can live, learn, work and socialise together, free from prejudice, hate and intolerance.

We recognise that sport is a powerful tool in bringing people together and the Strategy commits to supporting initiatives that use sport to build good relations. We know and have seen at first hand that sport can play a central role in breaking down divisions in society and can provide a mechanism to encourage sharing, learning and friendship, especially among young people.

For our people and neighbourhoods to begin to see the real tangible benefits of better good relations, we must all play our part in addressing division, intolerance, hate and separation. We are fully committed to this agenda and to driving forward on the commitments outlined in Together: Building a United Community. We are all too aware that a united community does not only bring social benefits but also economic advantages, such as increased tourism and investment opportunities.

The success of the Giro cannot be questioned and can only further strengthen the competitive position of our tourism industry and contribute to the economy in both the short and long term. Attracting the Giro to our shores has the potential to contribute significantly to the economy, through attracting additional visitors, including out of state visitors, and generating additional tourism revenue. However, perhaps most importantly, it has shone a positive light on our community and demonstrated the unity that can be created when we all work together for the benefit of all our people.

Ethnic and Religious Minority Groups

Mr Nesbitt asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what financial, or other, support is available from their Department for religious and ethnic minority groups.

(AQW 33877/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Minority Ethnic Development Fund (MEDF), managed by the Racial Equality Unit, has been providing support for voluntary and community organisations working with minority ethnic people and groups since 2003.

The fund, worth £1.1m per annum, is currently supporting approximately 30 projects.

The Racial Equality Unit also provides day to day assistance and guidance to individuals and groups in respect of their funding awards.

Social Investment Fund

Lord Morrow asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the allocation of the Social Investment Fund.

(AQO 6285/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Fund has been allocated across the nine Social Investment Fund Zones as follows:-

■ Belfast North	£9 million
■ Belfast South	£8 million
■ Belfast East	£8 million
■ Belfast West	£12 million
■ Londonderry/Derry	£9.5 million
■ Northern	£9 million
■ Western	£8 million
■ Southern	£8.5 million
■ South Eastern	£8 million

Flooding: Defence Measures

Mr McKinney asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether they have received a report from the Performance and Efficiency Delivery Unit on flood defence measures in 2013/14.

(AQW 34175/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Performance and Efficiency Delivery Unit (PEDU) provided a report to the Executive, dated September 2012, entitled 'Review of Response to Flooding on 27 and 28 June 2012'. This report included a recommendation to review flood defence expenditure priorities. This action was allocated by PEDU for consideration by the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development and the Department for Regional Development, working with their respective agencies.

Energy Efficiency

Mr Flanagan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on their commitment to bring forward proposals to boost economic activity through the retrofitting of energy efficiency measures in homes.

(AQW 34211/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Since this commitment to develop proposals was made in November 2012 steady progress has been made in exploring the potential for this initiative. A market testing exercise, completed in May 2014, indicated strong demand for the delivery of an energy retrofit programme. Plans are now in place for a series of pre-market engagement events with the industry, in the coming weeks, which will help to provide further clarity around the potential aims and objectives of this initiative.

The development of operational plans for potential delivery will continue in parallel with this pre-market engagement process.

All of this preparatory work will allow us to make decisions on proceeding to implementation, based on a clear view as to overall demand, market capacity, alignment to other programmes, realistic implementation timetable and available finance.

Victims and Survivors Service

Mr Nesbitt asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether the sub-budgets are allocated to the Victims and Survivors Service for Schemes 1-6 targeting individual victims/survivors via the gateway process.

(AQW 34225/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The 2014-2015 opening budget for Schemes 1-6 has been set as £4m, with £1.8m allocated to Financial Assistance Scheme (Scheme 6) and £2.2m allocated to schemes 1-5. These are initial allocations and may need to be amended in line with client demand and Ministerial priorities.

Victims and Survivors: Offer Letters

Mr Nesbitt asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail a timeline of when offer letters will be issued to victims/survivors offering support under Schemes 1-6.

(AQW 34226/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Expressions of Interest for schemes 1-5 are currently being processed to ensure that when the schemes and budgets are opened for 2014-2015, the Service will be in a position to respond with minimum delay.

The Financial Assistance Scheme (Scheme 6) was opened to the seriously injured on the higher care component of Disability Living Allowance in April 2014. Payments have already been issued. The Scheme opened to remaining clients on 2 June 2014 and will close on 30 June 2014. Applications will be processed and payments made after this date.

Victims and Survivors: Benefit Entitlement and Taxation

Mr Nesbitt asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what steps they have taken to ensure that any monies received by victims/survivors through the Gateway Process will not impact on their benefit entitlement or taxation responsibilities.
(AQW 34228/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: We have been liaising with the Department for Social Development to ensure that monies issued to victims/survivors for Financial Assistance (Scheme 6) are in keeping with guidelines. The Department for Social Development has issued guidance to ensure that Financial Assistance (Scheme 6) payments are disregarded in relation to means tested benefits. HMRC have responsibility for advising on taxation issues.

Victims and Survivors: Funding Cycle

Mr Nesbitt asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister (i) what work has been undertaken on the preparation for the new funding cycle commencing 31 March 2015; (ii) whether there will be any new tendering process introduced in respect of Health and Wellbeing provision; and (iii) to detail the contractual period for group funding under the new funding cycle.
(AQW 34250/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: In going forward there is a need to ensure funding continues to be directed to those victims most in need of support and services. To support this, the Commission for Victims and Survivors is commissioning research to evaluate the effectiveness of the funding Programme 2013-2015. The recommendations from this report will inform funding for victims and survivors from April 2015 onwards.

OFMDFM, the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, and the Health and Social Care Board officials are working on a suitable approach for the provision of acute mental health services and physical aids within the health and social care system to develop an effective and sustainable cross-sectoral approach to treating psychological trauma.

It is expected that contractual arrangements with groups will cover a period of at least two years.

Victims and Survivors: Funding Allocation

Mr Lyttle asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail how the £1.3m June monitoring round bid for victims and survivors funding will be allocated if the bid is successful.
(AQW 34290/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: If the bid for £1.3m in the June Monitoring round is successful, it will enable the Victims and Survivors Service to maintain the existing level of service provision to the victims sector which includes £4m for Individual Needs Reviews and £5.9m for the Victims Support Programme.

Delivering Social Change

Mr Lyttle asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail how the £6m June monitoring round bid for Delivering Social Change will be allocated if the bid is successful.
(AQW 34293/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: There is currently a £14m resource budget allocation in 2014/15 for the Delivering Social Change Programme. However, the total current requirement in respect of the programme is some £20m.

The £20m programme requirement can be broken down as follows:

■ 6 Signature Programmes	£13.20m
■ Social Investment Fund	£ 2.40m
■ Childrens Hospice	£ 0.40m
■ Bright Start	£ 1.00m
■ Playboard	£ 0.33m
■ OFMDFM Support Cost	£ 1.27m
■ SIB DSC Delivery Unit	£ 0.50m
■ Northern Ireland European Regional Forum	£ 0.18m
■ Play and Leisure Programme	£ 0.50m
■ Other	£ 0.22m
■ Total	£ 20.00m

Heat, Electricity and Water: OFMDFM Spend

Mr Agnew asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how much their Department has spent on (i) heat; (ii) electricity; and (iii) water in each of the last five years.
(AQW 34342/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Department of Finance and Personnel is responsible for paying most of the heating, electricity and water costs for our Department and will include these in their reply.

Departmental costs not covered by the DFP reply are detailed in the table below.

Year	Heat £	Electricity £	Water £
2009-2010	3348	7495	Nil
2010-2011	3264	12942	48

2013-2014	3109	10407	210

Social Investment Fund: Capital Projects

Mr Easton asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the capital Social Investment Fund projects to extend community houses in North Down and Ards to accommodate the training needs of the community.

(AQW 34389/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: This project is currently being processed through the economic appraisal process. Following initial consideration, we have agreed with the Steering Group a two stage approach; first stage to complete a scoping study to ascertain the potential to improve the community houses identified and what works can feasibly be progressed; the second stage to fund the resulting works identified.

Funding for both stages is subject to approval of the economic appraisal which we expect to determine over the summer and final costs resulting from the scoping study.

Good Relations Grants

Mr Lyttle asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to list the (i) Good Relations grants awarded in 2013/14; (ii) dates on which applications were called for; (iii) dates on which applications were received; (iv) dates on which awards were made; (iv) outcomes of these grants; (v) process for awarding Good Relations grants in 2014/15; (vi) the Good Relations grants awarded in 2014/15.

Women Into Politics The 2013/14 Central Good Relations Fund opened for applications on 4 October 2013 and the closing date for applications was 22 November 2013. Decisions regarding funding were made in January 2014 and applicants were informed of decisions.

A wide range of activities were covered by the 36 groups awarded funding. All of the activities were designed to improve good relations outcomes. The activities included capacity building, cross community sporting and arts activities, shared activities on a cross community basis, programmes of volunteering and training for young people and building community cohesion

The Central Good Relations Fund for 2014-15 closed for applications on 10 February 2014. Preliminary consideration of the applications was carried out in advance of a selection panel meeting. The selection panel then agreed the first tranche of funding to be released and successful applicants were advised. We primarily fund good relations work through the Community Relations Council and local Councils. The fund does not and will not replace mainstream core or project funding.

Social Investment Fund

Mr Wells asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister when they will announce the Revenue projects that will be funded by the Social Investment Fund.

(AQO 6409/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: On 10 February we announced that £33 million will be invested in 23 projects, aimed at tackling poverty and deprivation through improved community-based services and facilities. This included 11 revenue projects.

Details of these 23 projects, along with the projects which are currently within the funding allocation for each zone and which are subject to approval through the economic appraisal process are available at <http://www.ofmdfmi.gov.uk/index/delivering-social-change/social-investment-fund/sif-projects.htm> .

We intend to issue letters of offer for all projects as soon as possible.

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

Telephone Enquires: System Failures

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the number of occasions that the telephone helpline service experienced system failures preventing callers from contacting the office in the last 12 months.

(AQW 34351/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): I am not aware of any failures by my Department's telephone helpline service during the last 12 months.

Live Export Sales: Current Restrictions

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the current restrictions relating to live export sales; and whether she intends to relax these restrictions to enable local producers to increase export sales.

(AQW 34395/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I am not aware of any restrictions currently affecting live export Sales. Since the lifting of the European Commission's ban on the export of live cattle to other EU member states in May 2006, over 278,000 cattle have been exported from the north of Ireland to Europe.

Live exports take place on a regular basis from both premises of origin and EU Approved Assembly Centres (EACs) throughout the north. Animals entering the EAC must fulfil the requirements of Council Directive 64/432/EEC (cattle) and Council Directive 91/68/EEC (sheep/goats), as required by EU legislation.

A new EU Animal Health law proposal is currently being negotiated in Europe which considers some relaxation of conditions for cross border movement of animals with other landlocked Member States in accordance with the assessment of risk. My officials have been feeding into the development of the new EU Regulation in consultation with DEFRA in Britain and DAFM in the south. This provides us with an opportunity to frame the EU Regulation in a way that would facilitate the objectives of the All-Island Animal Health and Welfare Strategy and allow us to reach an agreement to achieve the free movement of animals within the island.

Cattle Movement: Local Marts

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether she intends to provide guidance to livestock auctioneers relating to the display of cattle movements at local marts.

(AQW 34396/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The Animal Public Health Information System (APHIS) holds data on herd keepers' animal movements from birth to death. The collection of information held on APHIS is in accordance with Regulation 1760/2000 of the European Parliament establishing a system for the identification and registration of bovine animals and regarding the labelling of beef and beef products. Member States are obliged to set up a database with the intention of providing an open and transparent method of traceability from "farm to fork".

The display of cattle movement data at local marts by livestock auctioneers occurs as part of a commercial transaction entered into between the seller and buyer of an animal. This therefore falls outside my Department's remit.

Ulster Farmers' Union

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the dates in 2014 when she has met the Ulster Farmers' Union; and the subject matters discussed at each meeting.

(AQW 34398/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I met with representatives from the UFU on 21 January, 4 March and 13 May 2014 where we discussed a range of key agricultural issues including CAP reform, the Rural Development Programme, and the future potential of the agri-food industry.

I also attended the UFU Annual Dinner on 28 March.

Going for Growth Strategy

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether she will answer the question asked in AQO 6372/11-15.

(AQW 34505/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I meet regularly with the DETI and DFP Ministers at Executive meetings, where a range of issues are discussed.

As outlined in my answer to the House on 17 June 2014, the DETI Minister and I jointly submitted proposals to the Executive in relation to Going for Growth in December 2013. I am delighted that the Executive has now agreed its response to Going for Growth; and has also agreed to support my proposals for a Rural Development Programme 2014 – 2020 of up to £623million. This funding will help us deliver on the aims and objectives in Going for Growth, including the Farm Business Improvement Scheme. Having received the Executive's approval, my Department will bid for up to £250million of additional funds to deliver the proposed 'Farm Business Improvement Scheme' as part of the 2014-2020 Rural Development Programme.

We intend to finalise and publish the formal Executive Response to Going for Growth on relevant websites over the coming weeks.

Conference Attendance

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether she or a representative from her Department attended the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs conference on poor farm gate prices.

(AQW 34603/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I am aware that Defra recently hosted a seminar for officials, which among other things looked at the global and British and north of Ireland consumer markets and the implications for trade and prices. I understand a senior representative from AFBI attended.

Obviously, I share the concerns of farmers about the recent drop in prices. I want to see a strong, profitable agri-food sector here in the north and that can only be achieved if farmers see a fair return for their high quality, traceable produce.

The price farmers receive for their produce is a commercial matter which is not within my remit. However, I hope that industry can work together to get a mutually agreeable resolution on pricing that will ensure a sustainable local agri-food industry focused on export-led growth. My Department and I will continue to work with all elements of the supply chain to help them to achieve those results.

Reservoirs Bill: Full Cost Recovery

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 34119/11-15, whether she has gained approval from the Department of Finance and Personnel not to pursue a full cost recovery for sections contained in the Reservoirs Bill.

(AQW 34647/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Department of Finance & Personnel (DFP) approval is not required in relation to including clauses in the Reservoirs Bill which would enable my Department not to pursue full cost recovery where considered appropriate. However, in accordance with the Department's charging policy, DFP approval will be sought, as required, in advance of any decision not to recover full costs if and when such circumstances arise after the legislation is in place.

Tri-council Fisheries Group

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail (i) the work programme of the Tri-Council Fisheries Group for the last five years; (ii) the origin and extent of the funding made available to the group; (iii) the personnel who comprise the group; and (iv) the forward work plan recently agreed by the group.

(AQW 34742/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The Tri-Council Fisheries Working Group is a group formed and administered by, Ards Borough Council, Down District Council and Newry and Mourne District Council. My Department has no role in its functions and therefore the Group itself, or the Councils are probably best placed to advise on the matters you have raised.

Pesticide and Planting Restrictions

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what guidance her Department can offer to farmers to explain the pesticide and planting restrictions, in relation to buffer strips running along watercourses.

(AQW 34783/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Agri-environment agreement holders can opt to manage marginal areas along watercourses as ungrazed grass margins 'or' 'riparian zones'. These act as buffer strips where pesticide use is prohibited. They also help to prevent pollution of the adjacent waterbody by organic and inorganic fertilisers. An additional 'riparian zone – native tree planting' option is available at suitable sites where planting along the waterway will not cause overshadowing of the watercourse. DARD Countryside Management Unit provides guidance on these options at the commencement of the agreement and within the relevant scheme booklet, received by all agreement holders. Further advice is available from local Countryside Management Advisers.

All Single Farm Payment and Less Favoured Areas Compensatory Allowance claimants are bound by Cross Compliance Statutory Management Rule 9 which states that 'plant protection products ('pesticides') must be used in accordance with the principles of good plant protection practice'. The Code of Practice for Using Plant Protection Products can be read at or downloaded from the DARD website together with the Code of Good Agricultural Practice (COGAP) for the prevention of Water, Air and Soil, which also gives advice on the implementation of buffer zones.

Single Farm Payment: Appeals

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many single farm payment appeals have been submitted in the last five calendar years; and of those appeals, to detail (i) how many have been upheld by the appeals panel; (ii) how many successful appeals have been paid; and (iii) how many payments have been withheld including the reasons for withholding payment.

(AQW 34876/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The Department operates a two-stage Review of Decisions process. The first stage involves an internal review and the second an External Panel. At Stage 2 the Panel make a recommendation, with the Head of the DARD Paying Agency making the final decision in all cases.

In the last 5 calendar years (i.e. 2009 – 2013), 1,817 applications for Review were submitted at Stage One and 325 at Stage Two, which comes to a total of 2,142.

- (i) Of the 325 Stage 2 applications received, 216 have been finalised and, in 54 of these cases, the Department changed its original decision either in whole or in part.
- (ii) In some of these cases, depending on the circumstances of the claim and the out workings of the change to the original decision, a refund of recovery may result. If this is the case, any monies due will have been repaid to the applicant.
- (iii) In the remaining 162 Stage 2 cases finalised, the Department's original decision remained unchanged. These decisions relate to a variety of issues relating to non-compliance with the scheme rules and include claims being made on ineligible land, duplicate field claims and cross-compliance breaches. In some other cases, where the Department's decision has been changed, the result will be a requirement to recover monies from the applicant, for example a penalty may result.

Hospitality: Foyle, Carlingford and Irish Lights Commission

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what has been the expenditure by the Foyle, Carlingford and Irish Lights Commission on hospitality in 2013-14.

(AQW 34972/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The total expenditure by the Foyle, Carlingford and Irish Lights Commission (the Loughs Agency) on hospitality in 2013-14 was £9,963.

Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure

Ballyshannon: ESB Dam

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline the impact on migratory fish stocks, such as eel and salmon, caused by the ESB Dam at Ballyshannon.

(AQW 33689/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): The ESB dams at Cathaleen's Fall and Cliff at Ballyshannon represent a significant barrier to the passage of migratory fish, including wild Atlantic salmon and the European eel, through the Erne system. ESB is required by European law to take steps to minimise the impact on migratory fish.

Salmon smolts must make their way through the dams in their migration to the sea, and ESB estimates that around 90% of smolts survive passage through the turbines.

Both dams have a fish ladder, which extend from the power station tailrace over the dam into the head waters and consists of around 70 pools with a difference of one and a half feet between successive pools that allow adult salmon to navigate past the dam and into Lough Erne and its tributaries to spawn.

Another fish pass at Cathaleen's Fall allows eels to ascend the dam into a holding tank, where they are collected and transported by my inland fisheries staff for release into the Erne system.

While these are good aids to fish passage, it should be noted that no type of fish pass is 100% effective and my officials have regular meetings with colleagues in ESB and Inland Fisheries Ireland to monitor the operation of the fish passes and address any issues that may arise. This is particularly pertinent given the recent loss of around 100kg of elvers and I can assure you that I have made clear to my counterpart in the South the need for ESB to ensure the uninterrupted passage of fish through the facilities.

Walled City Tattoo: Londonderry

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the assistance available for (i) organising; (ii) holding; and (iii) promoting the Walled City Tattoo in Londonderry on 27 to 30 August 2014.

(AQW 34613/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department provided a grant of £100,000 to contribute to costs associated with delivering The Walled City Tattoo in August 2014, additional funds to The Walled City Tattoo are part of a bid to DFP in the June Monitoring Round.

Department of Education

Elective Home Education

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education, in light of the intention to further regulate Elective Home Education, how many adverse incidents from this sector have been identified in the last three years.

(AQW 33973/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): There is no intention to further regulate home education at the present time. The Education and Library Boards (the Boards) have directly prepared guidance in relation to home education which reflects their existing legislative responsibilities and are currently consulting on that guidance. The outcome of the consultation process will be of assistance in informing any future proposals in this regard.

In terms of adverse incidents relating to the educational provision for home educated children, the Boards have advised that they are aware of less than 15 incidents.

Board	Adverse Incidents
South Eastern Education and Library Board (SEELB)	Less than 5* adverse incidents in the last three years
North Eastern Education and Library Board (NEELB)	Less than 5* adverse incidents in the last three years

Capital Funding: South Eastern Education and Library Board

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education how much capital funding has been allocated to each school in the South Eastern Education and Library Board in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34305/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department does not allocate capital funding to schools. At the beginning of the financial year capital funding is allocated to each of the five Education and Library Boards who are responsible for capital projects in the controlled sector.

Estate Operations Team (EOT) within the Department is allocated a capital funding minor works budget for the non-controlled sectors. EOT recently made a call for applications for capital minor works schemes. When submitted each application is assessed on its merits. Grant aid is allocated to successful schemes.

The following table details capital expenditure in all schools in the South Eastern Education and Library Board (SEELB) area in each of the last five financial years:

Elective Home Education

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Education how many children in the Southern Education and Library Board area receive elective home education.

(AQW 34486/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Southern Education and Library Board (SELB) has advised that, at 1st January 2014, 58 children and young people were registered with the SELB as being home educated. However, the Department recognises there may also be other young people who are being home educated at home who are not currently registered with the SELB hence the actual figure may be higher.

Teachers: Voluntary Redundancy Requests

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education how his Department works to respond to requests for voluntary redundancy from teachers; and what is the timescale for dealing with such requests.

(AQW 34618/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department does not offer a voluntary redundancy scheme for teachers, rather my Department has provided for a Cost Based Teaching Redundancy exercise to assist schools to reduce their cost base through a reduction in their full-time equivalent (FTE) staff numbers.

Guidance was issued to all Employing/Funding Authorities on 10 February 2014 advising of the process, with applications to be submitted to the Department by 16 April 2014 after the relevant Employing Authorities had completed their due diligence in respect of the applications they received.

During May 2014 my Department scrutinised the applications against the criteria; however, due to the difficult financial environment that the Executive is facing, the decision on the approval of teaching redundancy applications was delayed. On 28 May 2014 my Department advised Employing/Funding Authorities of the applications which were deemed not to meet the criteria after strict prioritisation (based on need) was applied and invited them to submit any further evidence that would support these applications. This additional information was scrutinised by my Department during June 2014 and each application placed in order of priority based on need.

I made my funding decision regarding the 167 applications for teaching redundancies on Thursday 19 June 2014, having considered the latest information available in respect of the overall funding position for both my Department and the Executive. Funding Authorities and CCMS were advised of my decision on 20 June 2014. Initially, 46 applications were approved and on Thursday 26 June a further tranche of 30 applications was subsequently approved.

As you are aware, I have bid in June Monitoring, for £10m in respect of severance.

The Executive has not yet agreed the June Monitoring paper.

School Maintenance and Repairs

Mr Anderson asked the Minister of Education how much has been spent on maintenance and repairs in each school in the Southern Education and Library Board, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34620/11-15)

Illuminate

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Education for an update on the introduction of Illuminate for pupils and students who are unable to attend due to illness.

(AQW 34680/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Illuminate is an online collaboration tool, incorporating video streaming, which is available to all of our schools and has been used successfully for some time. Illuminate should not be considered the only appropriate e-Learning tool that can be used to help pupils who are based at home due to illness; it is just one of a number of available e-Learning tools.

The Joint Working Party (which is comprised of representatives of the teaching unions and employing authorities) set up a working group to develop a protocol on Home to School e-Learning. This protocol is currently in draft and it is expected that it may be finally approved in the Autumn (2014).

Examinations: Irregularities

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of schools where irregularities in the examinations process are alleged to have taken place; and what action was taken in each case.

(AQW 34709/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: In the January 2014 and June 2014 examination series, the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) has dealt with 51 irregularities (instances of alleged malpractice) originating from 32 centres, including 1 centre in England. 40 of these relate to alleged candidate malpractice and 11 to alleged teacher malpractice or centre maladministration.

Each instance has been, or is currently being, investigated and managed by the CCEA Malpractice Committee in line with the Joint Council for Qualifications (JCQ) policies and procedures.

Of the 40 allegations of candidate malpractice, 24 cases have been closed and penalties were imposed in 20 of these. Details are shown in the table below.

Penalty	No. of Candidates
Written Warning	9
Loss of all marks for the Unit	10
Disqualification from the Unit	1

Only one of the cases of alleged teacher malpractice or centre maladministration has been closed, with no sanction being applied.

Schools: Capital Funding in North Down

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education (i) to list the schools in North Down that sought capital funding for new school buildings; (ii) what each school scored in each of the criteria against which the proposals were judged; (iii) each school's total score; and (iv) the score of the lowest scoring school to receive capital funding, as announced in his statement on Tuesday 24 June 2014.

(AQW 34710/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The South Eastern Education and Library Board, having consulted with School Authorities, forwarded the following schools for consideration as potential new build projects in North Down:

(i)

Primary Schools	Post Primary Schools
Bangor Central Integrated Primary School	Priory College
Crawfordsburn Primary School	St Columbanus College
Grange Park Primary School	Sullivan Upper School
Hollywood Primary School
Rathmore Primary School

- (ii) and (iii) As outlined in my Statement on Tuesday 24 June each proposed project on the list was taken through the protocol process and hence was subject to a number of 'Gateway Checks' including ascertaining any sustainability or outstanding area planning issues. Any schools deemed to have unresolved 'gateway' issues were not considered further. Priory College and St Columbanus College did not pass the gateway checks.

The scores for the remaining schools are set out below:-

Name of School	Rationalisation	Operating on Split Sites	Condition of Accommodation	Suitability of Accommodation	Reliance on Temp Accommodation	% of SEN registered pupils	% of pupils eligible for FSM	School Enhancement Project	Total
Bangor Central PS	0	0	1.10	12.45	5.00	0.48	5.96	0	24.99
Crawfordsburn PS	0	0	0.77	12.23	5.88	2.70	2.21	0	23.80
Grange Park PS	0	0	4.63	12.99	1.25	0.58	2.55	0	21.99
Hollywood PS	10	0	2.79	7.17	2.86	1.45	3.35	0	27.62
Rathmore PS	0	0	6.89	3.49	1.48	0.59	2.15	0	14.60
Sullivan Upper School	0	0	0.51	16.00	1.06	0.76	0.01	-5	13.35

NB: Rounding of individual scores may result in some lack of correspondence in row totals.

- (iii) The score of the lowest scoring school to receive capital funding in the Primary school sector was 44.63 and in the Post Primary sector was 31.00.

Buddy Up Programme

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education what action his Department is taking to secure the future of the Buddy Up programme between Holycross Nursery, Boys Primary and Girls Primary Schools, Edenderry Nursery School, Glenwood Nursery School, Wheatfield Primary School and Community Relations in Schools; and how can they involve the participations in the future roll-out of the Buddy Scheme as part of the Together: Building a United Community Strategy.[R]

(AQW 34711/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department of Education has not contributed to the 'Buddy Up' programme supported by Community Relations in Schools (CRIS).

The Education and Library Board led Community Relations, Equality and Diversity (CRED) Enhancement scheme provides funding for cross community work in statutory nursery, primary and post-primary schools. In the absence of other sources, the schools may be able to apply under the terms of the scheme although the level of funding is limited.

The Department of Education is taking forward the commitment set out in Together Building a United Community to roll out a buddy scheme in all publicly funded nursery and primary schools.

Department of Education officials met with Community Relations in Schools (CRIS) representatives in late 2013 to discuss the CRIS programme. They have also engaged with the Education and Library Boards colleagues to discuss how a buddy scheme might be delivered across the North. Officials are developing a business case and no model to deliver the programme has been agreed.

Schools: Capital Building East Londonderry

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Education, further to his Statement on the School Capital Building programme on 24 June 2014, when a new school in the controlled sector will be commenced in the East Londonderry constituency.

(AQW 34718/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Only one school, Ballykelly Primary School, from East Derry constituency was identified as a priority for new build by its managing authority, Western Education & Library Board (WELB).

A protocol was applied to prioritise the potential major works projects announced on 24 June. The outcome of this was that Ballykelly Primary School did not achieve a high enough ranking when the protocol was applied and therefore it was not one of the schools included in the announcement.

The protocol can be viewed at:

http://www.deni.gov.uk/protocol_for_selection_for_the_selection_of_major_capital_works_-_24_june_2014__pdf_290kb_.pdf

Teachers: Redundancies

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education when was it known that 93 teacher applicants had not met the criteria for redundancy approval; and why this information was not immediately conveyed to the individuals and schools affected.

(AQW 34755/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I made my funding decision regarding the 167 applications for teaching redundancies on Thursday 19 June 2014, having considered the latest information available in respect of the overall funding position for both my Department and the Executive. Funding Authorities and CCMS were advised of my decision on 20 June 2014. Initially, 46 applications were approved and on Thursday 26 June a further tranche of 30 applications was subsequently approved.

Schools: Solar Panels

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Education (i) what funding has been set aside for installing solar panels on schools; (ii) who controls this funding; (iii) what body decides which schools should receive solar panels; and (iv) to outline the tendering and contracting processes.

(AQW 34764/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd:

- (i) I have agreed to invest up to £10 million to fund a range of energy efficiency measures across the schools' estate in 2014/15. The installation of solar panels is one aspect of this programme. Other energy efficiency measures which will be considered under the programme include the conversion of heating systems from oil to gas; boiler upgrades; replacement of single glazed windows with double glazing; roof insulation and the installation of energy and water monitoring systems. Under the programme £1 million has been allocated to each Education and Library Board (ELB) for works on controlled schools; with a further £1 million being made available for non-controlled schools in each Board area. The portion of the £10 million programme used for the installation of solar panels will be determined following sifting and scoping applications from the schools.
- (ii) ELBs will control the funding for controlled schools and the Department will oversee funding for non-controlled schools. A Programme Board will be established to provide strategic oversight of the programme.
- (iii) The Department, ELBs and the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) are currently assessing the applications to ensure each school is viable and sustainable. The list will then be passed to the relevant ELB who will proceed with scoping each school site. This will inform the decision on whether a school will receive solar panels. ELBs will make the decision in respect of controlled schools while the Department will make the decision for non-controlled schools.
- (iv) ELBs will manage the procurement process for both the professional services to scope and design the works, and the work to procure and install the equipment. This will be through an invitation to tender process or using existing Term Service Contract, as deemed appropriate by the ELBs. These services are supplied by the ELBs to non-controlled schools under the terms of a Memorandum of Agreement between the ELBs and the Department.

Abbey Community College

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Education where the new build for Abbey Community College will be built; and for an estimated time period for this work to be completed.

(AQW 34765/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The location of the school will be a matter for consideration in the economic appraisal that will be prepared for the capital project.

In my Statement of 24 June I said that different projects will progress at different speeds and given the likely timescales required to complete the economic appraisal, design and procurement processes, significant spend is unlikely before financial year 2016/2017. Progression of this project to construction stage is also dependent on the availability of capital budget however the school should have a valid expectation that construction will follow within a reasonable timescale.

CCEA: Industrial Action

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education what assurances he can give that the stop-gap measures taken to mitigate against the ongoing industrial action with staff in the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) have not compromised, and will not compromise, the integrity of CCEA examination results.

(AQW 34767/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I have received assurances from CCEA that its summer series examinations will not be adversely affected by the action being taken. The industrial action does not apply to its contracted teams of expert examiners. Therefore, marking will continue as normal and grades issued as scheduled.

The action is being taken by a small group of staff who provide support to the examining teams and contingency plans are in place to ensure that the examining teams continue to receive the support they need to undertake and complete this very important work.

Elective Home Education: Regional Strategy Group

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education to list the attendees at meetings of the Regional Strategy Group when the issue of Elective Home Education has been discussed.

(AQW 34768/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Chairperson of the Regional Strategy Group on Special Educational Needs has confirmed that the attendees at meetings of the Group when the issue of Elective Home Education was discussed were as follows:

Post-primary Places

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education how many P7 children in each Education and Library Board area have yet to be allocated a post-primary place for September 2014.

(AQW 34770/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education and Library Boards have advised that at 26 June 2014, the number of P7 children in each area who have yet to be allocated a post-primary place for September 2014 are as follows:

Belfast ELB	2
Western ELB	12
North-Eastern ELB	2
South-Eastern ELB	10
Southern ELB	5

Teachers: Redundancy Offers

Mr Storey asked the Minister of Education how many schools will be forced into a deficit situation as a result of redundancy offers being withdrawn.

(AQW 34771/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Since 2011, I have implemented a strategic cost reduction programme. This was required so that the Education sector could live within its very challenging budget position over the 2011-15 Budget period.

A cost reduction teacher redundancy programme was initiated by the Department in February 2014. All applications have been assessed and prioritised against strict criteria. Of the applications, 76 met the criteria and I have authorised the funding of these redundancies.

The remaining applications have not been approved as they do not meet all of the criteria.

Irish Language: Examinations

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education how many children attained Grade A or A* in (i) A-level; and (ii) GCSE in the Irish language, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 34775/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The answer is contained in the table below:

	2010/11		2011/12		2012/13
	No.	%	No.	%	No.	%
Year 14 pupils achieving grade A or A* in A-level Irish	167	54.4	155	56.2	142	50.2
Total year 14 pupils with entries in A-level Irish	307		276		283

Total year 12 pupils with entries in GCSE Irish ¹	1656		1441		1615

1 Excludes Gaeilge

Irish-medium Education

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education how many children from a (i) primary; and (ii) post-primary Irish medium education background are attaining Grade A or A* at (a) GCSE; and (b) A Level, compared to the number of children from a non-Irish-medium education background.

(AQW 34776/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Based on the format of examination entry information held by the Department, it is not possible to match individual grades awarded at GCSE and A-level to those pupils educated in Irish medium primary schools or Irish medium units in post-primary schools. However, as the format of the data held does enable grades to be attributed at a post-primary school level, the table below presents the requested information for Colaiste Feirste along with all other NI post-primary schools including those with Irish medium units.

Pupils attaining at least one grade A or A* at GCSE or A-level, 2012/13

Number		GCSE		A-level
		%	Number	%
All Subjects	Colaiste Feirste	73	93.6	15	33.3
	All other NI post-primary schools ¹	11645	50.5	4859	43.3

¹ Excludes Colaiste Feirste pupils, but includes those from Irish medium units in other schools.

Schools: Local Produce

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Education (i) what was the annual expenditure on food in schools in each Education and Library Board, in each of the last three years; (ii) of this total expenditure, what was the expenditure on food produced in Northern Ireland; and (iii) whether this food is clearly identified as having been produced in Northern Ireland on menus and at point of service.

(AQW 34788/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The expenditure on food costs by each Education and Library Board in the last three financial years is as follows:

	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14
BELB	£2,560,688	£2,546,223	£2,922,337
NEELB	£2,765,870	£2,884,918	£3,151,003
SEELB	£2,130,000	£2,477,000	£2,714,000
SELB	£3,900,579	£4,092,721	£4,421,723
WELB	£3,475,000	£3,450,000	£3,734,000
Total	£14,832,137	£15,450,862	£16,943,063

The Boards do not hold records which break down expenditure between food produced in the north of Ireland and food produced elsewhere.

The Boards do not identify at service points or on menus if the food is produced in the north of Ireland.

Teachers: Redundancy Payments

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Education why funding is not available to provide redundancy payments to teachers.

(AQW 34798/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I have provided funding for 76 teacher redundancies which were deemed to meet all 4 criteria of the cost reduction school based teaching redundancy process.

The remaining 91 applications have not yet been funded as they are deemed not to meet all 4 criteria of the cost reduction school based teaching redundancy process. Further scrutiny is ongoing in respect of these remaining applications.

Glastry College, Ballyhalbert

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Education when the boiler, roof and window replacement work will begin at Glastry College, Ballyhalbert.

(AQW 34804/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: As Glastry College, Ballyhalbert, is a controlled secondary school, the South Eastern Education and Library Board (SEELB) is responsible for capital works at the school.

The SEELB has advised that a replacement boiler has been ordered and it is anticipated that it will be installed, tested and commissioned by 31 August 2014. Extensive roofing repair works have been designed and are currently being priced with a view to the work being completed by 31 March 2015. Replacement windows are also currently being designed however it is unlikely that the SEELB will be able to carry out the work in the 2014/15 financial year. The SEELB will revisit this project and consider it in conjunction with the competing needs of the whole controlled estate in 2015/16.

Ballee Community High School

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Education to detail the process for the disposal of the Ballee Community High School, following its closure in August 2014; and whether any agency has indicated an interest in utilising the site.

(AQW 34811/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Before a decision to dispose of any school in the controlled sector is reached, the relevant Education and Library Board (ELB) will ascertain if it has further alternative educational use for the premises. Once confirmed that the ELB no longer needs the premises, it is then established if there is interest from any other educational body. If none is determined, the ELB will commence the formal disposal process, with the approval of my Department.

Disposal is in line with the guidelines in the Land and Property Services' document 'Central Advisory Unit – Disposal of Surplus Public Sector Property in NI (March 2013)'. These guidelines apply to all Government departments.

Further information regarding the disposal process for all schools and the LPS document can be found at: http://www.deni.gov.uk/index/schools-and-infrastructure-2/13-schools_estate_pg/schools-estate-disposals-and-grant-recovery.htm

Ballee Community High School is under the management of the North Eastern Education and Library Board (NEELB). NEELB has not yet formally declared this property surplus to requirements nor has any agency indicated an interest in utilising the site following the school closure.

School Reports: Access by Absent Fathers

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Education what rights absent fathers have to access their childrens' school reports.
(AQW 34812/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The general rights of parents to information on their child's education, including the annual pupil report, are detailed in the Education (Pupil Reporting) Regulations (NI) 2009. These Regulations outline the minimum information that the report must contain along with details on the timing and manner of provision. Individuals involved in disputes in this area may also wish to obtain legal advice on the specifics of their case.

A copy of the Regulations can be accessed at: http://www.opsi.gov.uk/sr/2009/nisr_20090231_en_1

Schools: New Capital School Builds in North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education, further to his Statement on 24 June 2014, for an update on the progress of new capital school builds in North Down.
(AQW 34825/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: There are no new capital school builds in the North Down constituency at the present time.

Schools: Small Works Contracts

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Education, in relation to the tender process for contractors for small works in schools, to explain the reasons for the variation between (i) retention percentages; and (ii) the length of time that the retained money is held back from contractors, across the different Education and Library Boards.
(AQW 34841/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Four of the Education and Library Boards use the same figure of 5% for retention percentages for minor works. The same four ELB's release half of this retention at the completion of the work and will normally hold back the remaining 2.5% for 52 weeks.

The Belfast Education and Library Board have two main procurement processes neither of which uses retention. When negotiating its Strategic Partnership Agreement the contract did not extend to include retention. BELB also uses Term Service Short contracts which, as part of their terms, do not include retention.

Down's Syndrome: Expenditure

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 34251/11-15, how much was spent on children diagnosed with Down's syndrome, with a statement of Special Educational Needs, in each Education and Library Board, in each of the last three years.
(AQW 34846/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education and Library Boards have advised that they are not able to provide actual spend on pupils with Down's syndrome. As I stated in my response to AQW 34251/11-15 funding is linked to individual needs with each child accessing a range of provision and special educational needs (SEN) services as identified within each child's statement of SEN. It is, therefore, not possible to attribute costs specific to each child.

Down's Syndrome: Statement of Special Educational Needs

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education how many children with Down's syndrome were in receipt of a statement of Special Educational Needs in each Education and Library Board area, in each of the last three years.
(AQW 34848/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The information requested is detailed in the table below.

Number of statemented pupils with Down's syndrome by ELB, 2011/12 – 2013/14

Notes:

- 1 Figures include funded children in voluntary and private preschool centres, nursery schools, primary (including nursery, reception and year 1-7 classes), post primary and special schools.
- 2 Figures refer to the ELB in which the school the pupil attends rather than the ELB in which the pupil is resident
- 3 Figures include pupils at stage 5 of the Special Educational Needs Code of Practice only.
- 4 Pupils in the figures above do not necessarily have a statement because they have Down's syndrome
- 5 Data refers to any special educational need rather than primary need

Entitlement Framework

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Education how schools are expected to fulfil the Entitlement Framework in its final implementation stages given the proposed cuts in key stage 4 and 5 according to circular 2014/15 issued on 10 June.
(AQW 34860/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: You will be aware that additional Entitlement Framework funding support has been provided as a contribution to the costs associated with developing an expanded curricular offer at Key Stage 4 and post 16 and that I extended this support to the end of this budget period. It has always been the intention that Entitlement Framework funding would be a transitional contribution rather than a permanent funding stream.

Schools are funded through their core delegated budget to deliver their statutory obligations, including the curriculum. Following full implementation of the Entitlement Framework I expect that the delivery of all aspects of the curriculum, including the Entitlement Framework will be mainstreamed in schools and across all Area Learning Communities. However, I will continue to explore funding in future years if it is available.

Schools: Lisanelly Campus

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Education whether any schools on the Lisanelly campus will have ownership of their sites; and to outline the plans for ownership for the site.
(AQW 34887/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The ownership of the Lisanelly Shared Education Campus in Omagh rests with the Department of Education. My officials will work with the relevant school managing authorities regarding any legal arrangements necessary to ensure the effective operation of the individual schools involved on the site.

Schools: Development Proposals

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 33626/11-15, to list the (i) decisions made on development proposals in the last twenty four months; and (ii) development proposals outstanding to (a) increase; and (b) decrease places.
(AQW 34888/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: A record of current development proposals and decisions made in the last twenty four months is available on my Departments website.

http://www.deni.gov.uk/14-schools_estate_devprop_pg.htm

Schools: Transformation or Closure

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Education whether his Department has advised Education and Library Boards to carry out public consultations on development proposals for the transformation or closure of a primary or post-primary school during the months of July and August.
(AQW 34889/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department has no direct role in the Development Proposal (DP) process prior to publication of a DP, and does not determine when Education and Library Boards carry out their public consultations on potential DPs.

The legislation underpinning the DP process, Article 14 of the Education and Libraries (NI) Order 1986, outlines the statutory consultation that must be undertaken before a DP is published. The Board or person making the proposal must consult with the Board of Governors, Staff and Parents of pupils and the Board must also consult with other schools which would, in their opinion, be affected by the proposal. Following publication of a DP there is a two-month period during which comments can be sent directly to the Department.

Teachers: Exemption at Secondary-level Education

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Education whether his Department or the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister plan to carry out a public consultation into changes in teacher exemption at secondary level, now that the introduction of Education and Skills Authority has been postponed for the foreseeable future.

(AQW 34890/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: OFMDFM has responsibility for this legislation, which governs the exception.

Muscular Dystrophy

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Education how many (i) primary; (ii) post-primary; and (iii) special educational needs school pupils have been diagnosed with muscular dystrophy.

(AQW 35014/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The information requested is detailed in the table below.

Post-primary	17
Special	15

Department for Employment and Learning

Developmental Disabilities

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 33777/11-15, to detail the expenditure incurred by his Department to increase the employment opportunities for young adults with developmental disabilities in the last three years.

(AQW 34366/11-15)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): The Department for Employment and Learning provides a range of services, programmes and support options to young adults with developmental difficulties, in order to prepare them for work, and then to directly assist them to progress towards, move into and sustain paid employment.

This provision transcends departmental services, including specialist Careers Advice, Further Education, Skills Development, as well as a number of disability employment and employability programmes.

In addition to the significant human resource and other running costs associated with the direct delivery of these services by departmental staff, the Departmental budget expenditure incurred to increase the employment prospects and opportunities for young adults with developmental disabilities in the last three years is as follows:

Disability Employment programmes

Workable (NI)

The expenditure on 16 to 24 year old clients with a learning disability or difficulty on the Workable programme:

- 2011/2012 - £49,880.00
- 2012/2013 - £49,880.00

Total expenditure on Workable during the three year period was £149,640.00

Access to Work (AtW)

The expenditure on 16 to 24 year old clients with a learning disability or difficulty on the Access to Work programme:

- 2011/2012 - £10,710.24
- 2012/2013 - £43,354.89
- 2013/2014 - £68,752.90

Total expenditure on AtW during the three year period was £122,818.03

Work Connect.

The Work Connect programme commenced in September 2012. Expenditure on 16 to 24 year old clients with a learning disability or difficulty on the Work Connect programme:

- 2012/13 - £19,733.00
- 2013/14 - £5,832.50

Total expenditure on Work Connect during the three year period was £25,565.50

Parkanaur College, Dungannon

Expenditure on the students attending Parkanaur residential vocational training college:

- 2011/12 - £193,584.00
- 2012/13 - £258,286.00
- 2013/14 - £327,974.00

Total expenditure on Parkanaur College during the three year period was £779,844.00

Further Education provision and expenditure

The Department currently provides £4.5 million of ring-fenced funding per annum to Further Education (FE) colleges through the Additional Support Fund (ASF). This fund helps provide additional support to students with learning difficulties and/or disabilities (SLDD), to enable them to complete a course of study and progress to further study or employment.

The table below shows the most recent available data on the number of student enrolments with moderate to severe learning difficulties and the associated SLDD funding received by the colleges. In addition to the funding below, £2 million was allocated in each of those years through the ASF. As a result of the continued increase in the number of enrolments, the Department has increased the overall ASF allocation by £1 million per annum for 2013/14 and beyond.

Year	Enrolments	£
2010-11	2483	£1,981,278
2011-12	2467	£1,992,982
2012-13	3094	£2,615,832
Total	8044	£6,590,092

Training Programmes

Training for Success

The Training for Success (TfS) programme has four strands and provides a guaranteed training place for all eligible unemployed young people aged 16 and 17, with extended eligibility for those with a disability up to age 22.

Two strands, Skills for your Life and Skills for Work, focus on those young people who have barriers, including learning and other developmental difficulties, and the training and support offered aims to address these and to help the young people to benefit from training.

Disability related funding for TfS

The Department's additional financial support to enable young people with a disability to participate on the TfS programme includes the following:

- A weekly training fee premium to help Suppliers provide significant additional input of resources (e.g. training time, equipment, or support) in order for the disabled participant to benefit fully from the training;
- Taxi costs to and from the Supplier's premises where it is accepted that public transport is not a suitable or viable option for a young person with a disability; and
- Contracted support for the main delivery partners of TfS, provided by a number of local disability organisations who specialise in the area of employment and training for people with learning difficulties and other disabilities.

Expenditure

The figures below represent the amount paid in respect of those participating in Training for Success over the past three financial years, who are recorded as having a disability.

2011-2012	2012-2013	2013-2014

Projects funded through the Northern Ireland European Social Fund

Over the period 1 April 2011 to 31 March 2014 the Department has provided funding under Priority 1 of the Northern Ireland European Social Fund (ESF) Programme to 11 projects that aim to increase employment opportunities for people with learning disabilities. The projects target mainly young people with learning disabilities, but may also include older people with learning disabilities among their participant groups.

Priority 1 of the ESF Programme, 2007-2013, is entitled 'Helping people into sustainable employment' and aims to assist unemployed and economically inactive people by helping them to enter, remain, and make progress in sustained employment.

The total funding allocated by the Department to these 11 projects during the three year period was £21,205,797. This amounted to 65% of the total funding received by the projects, whilst the remaining 35% would have been provided through additional public sector match funding. Effectively, the total funding received by these 11 disability projects therefore totalled £32,624,303 over the three year period up to March 2014.

Blast 106: Radio Station

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of the contribution that the community radio station Blast 106 has made to the learning experience of young people who have completed work placements with the organisation as part of their course; and the impact on these young people following Ofcom's refusal to renew the station's licence.

(AQW 34479/11-15)

Dr Farry: My Department provides a range of employment programmes that are available to adults of all ages.

The aim of such programmes is to assist the unemployed or economically inactive to find and sustain employment, some of which include periods of work experience. Provision of work experience placement can be within the Private, Public or Voluntary and Community Sectors. Blast 106 has provided a number of valuable placement opportunities for Steps to Work programme participants seeking experience in the media related occupational area. The organisation has also supported participants attain qualifications in film and TV production.

The Steps to Work programme recognises that skills to find employment are more readily obtained by active participation in a work setting with an employer or a voluntary organisation taking into consideration the participant's job goals and work aspirations. Whilst it is regrettable when a business can no longer offer work experience opportunities, my main concern has to be that all programme placements are of the highest quality to equip individual participants with a range of core skills and behaviours to improve their long term prospects of finding and sustaining employment.

North Down Training Ltd

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether he is aware of the concerns and reservations of parents and students regarding the proposed movement of training facilities from Dundonald to Newtownards by North Down Training Ltd.

(AQW 34632/11-15)

Dr Farry: I am aware of the concerns and reservations of parents and students involved in this relocation.

North Down Training Ltd is one of the suppliers contracted to provide the Training for Success programme in this area. North Down Training Ltd has given a reassurance to my Department that it will continue to provide the best possible training experience for all programme participants.

Officials from my Department's Careers Service and Training Programmes Branch have spoken with programme participants and their parents to discuss their apprehensions about the move and will continue to do so to give guidance and help with the transition.

Disability Support arrangements for participants are also in place and will continue to be available as required.

The Training for Success Operational Guidelines are explicit about what is expected of all Suppliers in terms of programme content and support given to participants. My Department's Supplier Performance Branch monitors all contracted Training Suppliers to ensure compliance with requirements.

Further Education: Senior Managers

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many non-academic senior managers are employed in each Further Education College and Higher Education Institution.

(AQW 34736/11-15)

(AQW 34745/11-15)

Disabled Students' Allowance

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many students were in receipt of Disabled Students Allowance in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34759/11-15)

Dr Farry: The numbers of full time undergraduate students in receipt of Disabled Students' Allowance for the last five academic years (rounded to the nearest hundred) are as follows:

- 2008/09 1,200
- 2009/10 1,200
- 2010/11 1,500

Disabled Students' Allowance

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what action his Department is taking to increase the awareness and uptake of the Disabled Students Allowance.

(AQW 34760/11-15)

Dr Farry: Disabled Students' Allowances are available to students who have a disability, mental health condition or specific learning difficulty and are attending a Higher Education course. This allowance is not means tested and is available in addition to the usual tuition fee and maintenance support.

Students and their families can access information by obtaining a copy of the booklet "Bridging the gap: a guide to Disabled Students' Allowances in higher education". It is automatically sent to a student who indicates by ticking the relevant section in their student support application form that they have a disability. The booklet and separate information on Disabled Students' Allowances can be downloaded on the NIdirect website and the student finance NI website. The booklet can also be obtained at University open nights for parents and students. In addition, the Education and Library Boards visit schools and colleges each year to promote the student financial support package.

(AQW 34241/11-15)

Mrs Foster: All of NITB's funding programmes operate on an open call basis.

(i) Tourism Development Scheme (TDS):

11 applications were submitted for the Upper Bann area over the last three financial years (April 2011 - March 2014). Of these, 6 projects failed to meet the eligibility criteria, 3 projects subsequently withdrew, 1 was approved and 1 application continues through the approval process.

Procurement Contracts: DETI

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to what extent her Department has implemented the Programme for Government 2011-15 commitment that all public procurement contracts for supplies, services and construction works will include social clauses; and to what level such clauses have been implemented.

(AQW 34277/11-15)

Mrs Foster: From 1 April 2012 to 31 March 2014 DETI awarded 140 procurement contracts for supplies and services work, which included standard Health and Safety and Equality clauses. No Construction contracts were awarded.

Twenty contracts had clauses to encourage participation of Small and Medium Enterprises (SMEs) to widen the scope of those able to apply and ultimately create new jobs at SME level. Eighteen contracts had sustainability social clauses which included encouraging companies to dispose of waste in an ecologically friendly manner, protect the environment by managing development sustainably, promotion of renewable energy and helping local unemployed set up in business. Eleven contracts contained a requirement for the creation of work placements for 326 training weeks.

Renewables Obligation Certificates

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how much was awarded through Renewables Obligation Certificates to individuals generating electricity from renewable sources and who were not connected to the main electricity grid, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 34279/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Ofgem Renewables and CHP Register, which my Department uses to obtain data on Renewables Obligation Certificates, does not distinguish between generators connected or not connected to the electricity grid.

Renewables Obligation Certificates

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how many individuals, who are generating renewable energy and are not connected to the main electricity grid, are currently receiving payment through Renewables Obligation Certificates.

(AQW 34289/11-15)

Mrs Foster: I would refer the Member to the reply I gave to AQW 34279/11-15.

Invest NI: Funding

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how many applicants supported by Invest NI have sought funding from (i) The Technology Strategy Board/Small Business Research Initiative; and (ii) FP7/Horizon 2020, in each of the last six financial years and the current financial year.

(AQW 34330/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest NI's support to companies making applications to the Technology Strategy Board and EU R&D programmes is both pro-active and reactive. Invest NI classify support as "minor" or "detailed" interactions.

- Minor Interaction – An applicant was alerted to the opportunity, has attended an information event that Invest NI has hosted or actively participated in, was signposted to an National Contact Point (NCP) or European Commission Desk Officer, TSB Lead Technologist/Advisor or "_connect" (TSB participant on-line support platform) or has met with an Invest NI R&D Advisor on one occasion;
- Detailed Interaction – Invest NI has had a further role, this could be feedback on a draft application, finding a partner or provision of funding for proposal preparation or part-funding for the project.

As tracking minor interactions is not always possible, Invest NI reports, as per its 2011-2015 Corporate Plan, on applications submitted from detailed interactions only.

Northern Ireland Tourist Board

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the criteria used by the Northern Ireland Tourist Board when assessing the success of large scale events such as the Giro d'Italia.

(AQW 34360/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The evaluation of large scale events such as the Giro d'Italia is based on ascertaining if the objectives and targets outlined within the original business case were successfully delivered.

These will be different for each event, however on the whole the objectives will be around repositioning Northern Ireland on a global stage, visitor numbers and spend, satisfaction levels and return on investment.

The key objective for the Giro d'Italia was the international media profile and repositioning Northern Ireland on a global stage.

The Northern Ireland Tourist Board has procured an external and independent company to evaluate and calculate the success of the Giro.

Wind Farms

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what percentage of power is (i) currently generated; and (ii) estimated to be generated from wind farms by the end of 2015.

(AQW 34364/11-15)

Mrs Foster: In the 12 month period to the end of March 2014, approximately 18% of all electricity generated was from onshore wind. It is difficult to estimate how much electricity will be generated from onshore wind by the end of 2015 as it will depend on a number of factors including wind availability and future deployment of wind farms. The current Programme for Government includes a target of 20% of electricity consumed to come from renewable sources by 2015.

Research and Development

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, in relation to Research and Development Project Definition Support, to detail the number of businesses that have applied for this funding in each of the last four years; and of these (i) how many have been successful; and (iii) how much funding has been allocated, in each of the last four years.

(AQW 34376/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Please see table below which shows the amount of businesses applying and receiving Project Definition support over the last 4 years.

	2010-11	2011-12	2012-13	2013-14
No of businesses that have applied for funding	32	57	46	54
No of businesses that were successful	32	56	43	49
Funding approved £m	0.47	1.15	0.72	1.02

Heat, Electricity and Water: DETI Spend

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how much her Department has spent on (i) heat; (ii) electricity; and (iii) water in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34404/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment has spent the following on heat, electricity and water in the last five financial years

Financial Year	(i) Heat (Gas/Oil)	(ii) Electricity	(iii) Water
2009/10	£51,808	£138,493	£14,091
2010/11	£52,821	£129,569	£16,833
2011/12	£53,034	£144,632	£12,729
2012/13	£63,918	£146,983	£17,571
2013/14	£63,556	£139,629	£17,428

Open Championship: Royal Portrush

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, in light of the announcement that The Open Championship will be played in Portrush, what lessons have been learned to better benefit local traders within the town of Portrush, given that the bussing in and out of spectators caused in a fall in footfall within the town during previous international golf events.

(AQW 34405/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Countries choose to host iconic global events such as The Open for the medium to longer term economic benefits such events bring, rather than any shorter term gains.

However, a key lesson from hosting the Irish Open held at Royal Portrush in 2012, is to ensure ticket holders can regain access to the event grounds, therefore enabling them to use the local facilities throughout the day if they choose to do so. The R&A, owners of The Open, have a re-entry policy for ticket holders thus this will not be an issue when the event is hosted here in a few years time.

Indeed I would encourage the local industry to work collectively with the R&A, Royal Portrush Golf Club and the Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) to capitalise on all the opportunities hosting this major event brings to the local area and to Northern Ireland.

Electricity: Costs

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to provide a breakdown the cost of a unit of electricity in each year from 1994 to 2004.

(AQW 34406/11-15)

Mrs Foster: My Department does not hold this information in the format requested. However, Power NI has provided the following details of cost (pence) per kilowatt hour for domestic customers:

■	April 1994	7.75
■	April 1995	8.25
■	April 1996	8.45
■	April 1997	9.16
■	April 1998	9.16
■	April 1999	9.00
■	April 2000	8.60
■	April 2001	9.38
■	April 2002	9.38
■	April 2003	9.38
■	April 2004	9.64

European Business Network Congress

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) the amount paid to each of the guest speakers at the European Business Network Congress from 29 to 31 May 2013; and (ii) the amount of funding provided by Invest NI for this event.

(AQW 34440/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest Northern Ireland received a request to sponsor the European Business Network Annual Congress from the local organisers, Northern Ireland Business and Innovation Centre (NORIBIC) in February 2013. After assessing the proposal Invest NI agreed to provide NORIBIC with £50,000 plus vat to support the Congress. The overall budget for the event was £375,000.

The aim of the 2013 Congress was to promote collaboration and partnership and use the EBN Europe-wide network of some 200+ Business Information Centres (BIC's) to encourage and facilitate better access to the next round of European funding such as Horizon 2020 (budget of €80billion) and other structural funding.

The Congress took place between 29 and 31 May. This was the first time it had been held in Northern Ireland. As the event organisers, NORIBIC were responsible for the overall programme and for securing an array of international speakers including Steve Wozniak, co – founder of Apple Computer Inc. The details of the fees paid are therefore a commercial matter between NORIBIC and their suppliers/speakers.

As one of three principal sponsors for the 2013 Congress, Invest NI had the opportunity to play a leading role in showcasing Northern Ireland as an important centre for innovation and as a source of collaborative partners for European programmes such as Horizon 2020. Invest NI had an exhibition stand and staff at the event who handled enquiries over the three days and a made a presentation in the main auditorium on its available support.

There were 669 attendees representing 34 countries at the event, of which 313 (46.7%) came from outside Northern Ireland. This attendance represented a figure of nearly three times the average attendance at previous annual Congresses.

Destination Fermanagh

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how much has been spent on Destination Fermanagh since its introduction.

(AQW 34464/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) has invested substantially within Destination Fermanagh in terms of capital expenditure, destination support, marketing/promotion and events estimated at £3.2million.

Since 2009, Fermanagh has featured strongly in NITB's marketing campaigns, most recently in the Spring 2014 campaign where the Fermanagh Lakelands were used to showcase Northern Ireland's Coasts and Lakes experience. This campaign featured Fermanagh on TV, Radio, Press, Outdoor media and was strongly supported through Digital and Social Media.

Fermanagh hosted the G8 Summit in June 2013 which showcased Fermanagh on a world stage as a destination to visit work and invest. NITB funded an animation, events and infrastructure enhancement programme and a media showcase event as well as a dedicated marketing campaign promoting Fermanagh as a tourism destination.

NITB hosted over hundred international tour operators in Fermanagh in April 2014 to engage in a series of over 4000 business appointments with key Northern Ireland Industry tourism operators as part of their annual Meet the Buyer marketing workshop at the Lough Erne Resort.

Tourism: Signature Projects

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what further investment she plans to provide to the five Signature Projects.

(AQW 34465/11-15)

Mrs Foster: With the Northern Ireland Tourist Board's (NITB) Signature Projects near completion, focus is now on enhancing the visitor experience, with NITB encouraging and supporting the tourism industry to collaborate together to produce quality visitor experiences that will appeal to both domestic and international visitors.

Experiential tourism will provide a great opportunity for the tourism industry throughout Northern Ireland. A number of new thematic pillars have been created, Coasts & Lakes, Unique Outdoors, Living Legends, Naturally NI and Culture & Creative Vibe.

Destination Fermanagh

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what further investment she plans to provide to Destination Fermanagh in terms of increasing tourism to County Fermanagh.

(AQW 34466/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) continues to support destination development and visitor experience enhancement to all the nine destinations including Fermanagh through its financial assistance schemes such as the Tourism Development Scheme (TDS), Tourism Innovation Fund (TIF) and Events Fund and its wider Industry Development programme.

Through TDS, an allocation of almost £700,000 has been made towards the Heritage Gateway Fermanagh project which aims to develop a world-class visitor centre within the historic grounds of Enniskillen Castle in Fermanagh.

NITB in partnership with Fermanagh District Council, Fermanagh Lakeland Tourism, Tourism Ireland and Waterways Ireland have provided support to the Fermanagh Cruising sector via the establishment of a forum. The initiative has included both development and marketing activities, including a new website and brochure, attendance at overseas exhibitions and a dedicated online marketing campaign in key overseas markets.

Events Funding has secured sponsorship for the 2014 Ulster Rally for £5,400 and an offer has been made to the Enniskillen International Beckett Festival for £405,000 over the next 3 years.

NITB will be supporting and facilitating the future development of visitor experiences through destination led tourism clusters. The clustering and packaging of quality visitor experiences are fundamental to encouraging the visitor to stay longer and spend more thus benefiting the local visitor economy.

Blast 106: Radio Station

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for her assessment of (i) the impact that the community radio station Blast 106 has had on promoting the nighttime economy and tourist potential of Belfast; and (ii) the impact of the decision by Ofcom to refuse to grant the station renewed licence.

(AQW 34482/11-15)

Mrs Foster: My Department does not conduct research into the impact that radio stations have on the night-time economy. Radio in this context does not fall within my Department's remit – this is an issue for DCAL as it relates to broadcasting and not radio for telecommunications purposes.

Cyclists: North Antrim Area

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how the North Antrim area will be marketed to cyclists following the success of the Giro d'Italia 2014.

(AQW 34489/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB) through a series of seasonal campaigns promotes specific experience pillars towards key segments. Through the experience pillar of the unique outdoors, cycling will be promoted through advertising campaigns as a distinct outdoor recreation and adventure playground.

From January 2013 NITB has hosted international media of 28 overseas cycling press trips with a total of 82 journalists, photographers and camera crew. These media have covered cycling in Northern Ireland, many referring specifically to the North coast in overseas publications.

In building on the success of the Giro d'Italia, NITB will continue to promote Northern Ireland as a destination for cyclists across a range of social media and digital channels including Facebook, Twitter and YouTube.

NITB produced and promoted a film featuring Irish cycling champion Stephen Roche who spent a day cycling along the Causeway Coastal Route. A second film, featuring a rider performing stunts at various landmarks across Northern Ireland also showcased this area as a key destination for cyclists. These videos attracted over 70,000 views.

A short round-up film of the second day of the Giro d'Italia was also produced and promoted via NITB's digital channels, and showcased the race passing through North Antrim and the surrounding area.

NITB provides funding through an annual Service Level Agreement to Outdoor Recreation NI (ORNI) to help deliver on the development and marketing of outdoor activities, of which cycling is a part. Specifically there is ongoing work to the dedicated Giro D'Italia section of the CycleNI website with the intention of creating a Giro Legacy that will inspire visitor participation.

NITB has also supported ORNI to organise the Causeway Sportive Cycle event which is run on a section of the Giro route.

Tourism Ireland has been building on the success of the Giro d'Italia 'Grande Partenza' by continuing to highlight Northern Ireland, including North Antrim, as a top cycling and outdoor activities destination in its overseas promotional activity through, for example, publicity; travel trade training events; and at events linked to the Giro such as the Gran Fondo.

Tourism Ireland has also developed a dedicated cycling section on its international website, Ireland.com, which highlights our great cycling routes, all the sights to see along the way and special accommodation offers. In 2013, Ireland.com attracted over 13.5 million unique visitors from around the world.

The Giro d'Italia continues to be highlighted as part of Tourism Ireland's digital 'Northern Ireland Roadtrip' campaign in key markets. The aim of this campaign is to highlight Northern Ireland as a touring destination.

Renewable Heat Incentive Scheme

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment when the Northern Ireland Renewable Heat Incentive Scheme will be launched.

(AQW 34499/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The non-domestic Renewable Heat Incentive was launched in November 2012 with the Renewable Heat Premium Payment scheme commencing in May 2012.

DETI is in the process of securing final approvals, processing legislation and putting in place administrative procedures for the domestic RHI which will replace the Renewable Heat Premium Payment scheme. It remains my aim that the scheme will be in place this year.

In the meantime, the Renewable Heat Premium Payment scheme will continue to provide support for domestic customers wishing to install renewable heat systems.

Invest NI: Sandwich Sector

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 33946/11-15, in delivering this level of investment into the sector, for her assessment of how Invest NI have adhered to their 2012 study of the sandwich sector in Northern Ireland and its key recommendation of the avoidance of displacement of jobs and investment.

(AQW 34541/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Following the commissioning of the sandwich sector study in 2012, all cases for support from clients within that sector have been subject to Invest NI's normal appraisal and approval process.

Appraisals of projects from companies within the sector are carried out with particular focus on potential displacement issues in line with the recommendations of the study.

Invest NI is content that any offers of support to the sector have been in support of business expansion and/or gaining new contracts not currently serviced by other Northern Ireland based sandwich companies in export markets or non sandwich sectors and have been consistent with the recommendations contained in the study.

Gas: Licence Area PL1/10

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what information has been provided to her Department regarding the unconventional gas potential of licence area PL1/10 in East Antrim.

(AQW 34580/11-15)

Mrs Foster: As part of its assessment of the overall petroleum prospectivity of Licence area PL1/10, Infrastrata plc, the Licence holder, has assessed the potential for unconventional oil and gas resources in the PL1/10 Licence area.

Based on data currently available, the Company has advised my Department that there is unlikely to be any potential for unconventional shale gas or shale oil production within the PL1/10 licence area.

Danske Bank: Branch Closure

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether Danske Bank consulted with her Department prior to recent branch closures.

(AQW 34591/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Banking is a reserved matter and as such, my Department has no statutory oversight of the banking sector.

Given the challenges facing banking I, along with the Finance Minister, regularly meet all the Northern Ireland Banks. During those discussions we have raised the impacts of restructuring and the need to minimise the impact of any potential closures. However, there was no prior consultation in relation to the recent announcements of Danske Bank branch closures.

Exports

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how exports to (i) Europe; (ii) the Americas; (iii) Asia Pacific; and (iv) India, the Middle East and Africa compare in 2012/13 to 2010/11.

(AQW 34631/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The information you requested is outlined in the table below:

Manufacturing Exports to Invest NI Territories - Comparison of 2010/11 and 2012/13

Invest NI Trade Territory	2010/11 (£m)	2012/13 (£m)	Variance (£m)	% Change
Asia Pacific	560.410	616.680	56.270	10.04%
Europe and Russia	3,436.317	3,377.364	-58.953	-1.72%
India, Middle East & Africa	531.252	620.290	89.038	16.76%

Inward Investors: Limavady and Coleraine

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of potential inward investors who visited (i) Limavady; and (ii) Coleraine in each of the last two years.

(AQW 34648/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The inward investment visit statistics for 2013/14 are not as yet in the public domain, but in the figures for previous years are as follows:

- Limavady Borough Council area, 2011/12 none; 2012/13 none.
- Coleraine Borough Council area 2011/12 four visits; 2012/13 three visits

Invest NI promotes Northern Ireland as an attractive and viable location for inward investment opportunities to new investors, along with the parent companies of existing foreign owned investors. Northern Ireland's investment proposition is therefore promoted on the basis of a talented and loyal workforce, advanced telecoms infrastructure, high skilled business clusters, a pro-business environment, competitive operating costs and proximity to major markets.

The requirements will vary depending on the nature of the project, but a company will typically look at existing investors in the same business sector (Invest NI's key target sectors being ICT, business and professional services, financial services and renewables); universities and colleges that offer courses relating to that sector; and suitable, available property.

Areas in which these desired features do not exist, or are not clearly presented, are unlikely to attract the attention of potential investors to visit or locate in the area. In addition, potential investors are often drawn to population centres that they consider will provide the appropriate number of suitably skilled potential employees. Therefore a clear understanding and evidence of skill demographics for any region would greatly assist a potential investor in considering a particular area.

Ultimately the investor will make the decision as to where they visit and locate based on their specific business needs and having considered the options available to them.

Unanswered Questions

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment why (i) AQW 32727/11-15; (ii) AQW 32720/11-15; (iii) AQW 32719/11-15; and (iv) AQW 32718/11-15 have not been answered.

(AQW 34690/11-15)

Mrs Foster: These questions have been answered during April 2014.

Craigavon Industrial Development Organisation

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what work Craigavon Industrial Development Organisation has completed with Higher Education Institutes to attract new businesses.

(AQW 34691/11-15)

Mrs Foster: As Invest NI has no financial or operational responsibility for Craigavon Industrial Development Organisation, the organisation is not aware of what work Craigavon Industrial Development Organisation may have completed with Higher Education Institutes to attract new business.

Department of the Environment

Planning Applications: Timeliness

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what is the average length of time taken by each planning division to process a planning application.

(AQW 34261/11-15)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): Table 1 below outlines the average processing times in weeks for each planning area, from 2011/12 up to 31 December 2013, which is the latest published information.

Table 1: Average¹ processing time (in weeks) for decided² applications from 2011/12 to the 31 December 2013³

Taxi Licensing: Staff Locations

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment where the taxi licensing staff, who will not relocate to Coleraine, will be located. (AQW 34308/11-15)

Mr Durkan: All departments have already agreed to apply restrictions on the recruitment, promotion and transfer of staff to posts in the relevant grades to allow for the maximum number of redeployment opportunities to be identified for staff affected by the centralisation of vehicle licensing services in Swansea.

These restrictions will also be used as the basis for identifying suitable redeployment opportunities for staff in the Roads Transport Licensing Division (RTLDD) who do not relocate to Coleraine.

My Department has undertaken an assessment exercise for RTLDD staff to determine if there are any disability or welfare related reasons why their mobility should be restricted and will work with colleagues across departments to identify suitable posts for the redeployment of staff.

Taxi Licensing: Relocation of Jobs

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what plans exist to relocate taxi licensing jobs from Belfast to Coleraine. (AQW 34309/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The taxi driver and operator licensing, together with bus operator licensing, function will be transferred to Coleraine in early autumn 2014. Training for the staff in Coleraine will commence as soon as the winding-up of vehicle licensing has been completed, following the transfer of that function to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency in Swansea from 21 July 2014.

The exact date for the transfer of taxi and bus licensing will depend on the progress of staff training so as to ensure a smooth transition and no disruption of services for customers.

I will ensure that all customers are kept fully informed as the process develops.

Taxi Licensing: Relocation of Functions

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what impact the relocation of taxi licensing functions from Belfast to Coleraine will have on the taxi industry. (AQW 34312/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Driver and Vehicle Agency (DVA) will manage the relocation of functions from Belfast to Coleraine in such a way that the current service levels are maintained, and that there will be minimal impact on the taxi industry.

Taxi driver and operator licensing, together with bus operator licensing, will be transferred to Coleraine in early autumn 2014. Training for the staff in Coleraine will commence as soon as the winding-up of vehicle licensing has been completed, following the transfer of that function to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency in Swansea from 18 July 2014. The DVA will ensure that customers and licence holders are fully informed throughout the process to ensure a smooth transition and a consistency in service delivery.

Planning Enforcement Cases

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of current planning enforcement cases that have been open for (i) between one and two; (ii) between two and three; (iii) between three and four; (iv) between four and five; and (v) more than five years, broken down by divisional office.

(AQW 34331/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Table 1 below details the number of live planning enforcement cases in each divisional office, broken down by length of time in the system.

Table 1: Live Planning Enforcement cases by Planning Division and time in system, as at the end of Quarter 4 2013/14¹

Programme for Government 2011-15

Mr Boylan asked the Minister of the Environment to what extent his Department has implemented the Programme for Government 2011-15 commitment that all public procurement contracts for supplies, services and construction works will include social clauses; and to what level such clauses have been implemented. (AQW 34341/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Department has entered into 30 contracts for supplies and services since the Programme for Government commitment took effect. All of the contracts included social clauses in respect of health and safety and equality as performance measures. A number of contracts also included opportunities for graduate trainees and long term unemployed to gain valuable employment experience in the Department. These opportunities have enabled employees to benefit from their experience by finding permanent employment with other organisations.

Heat, Electricity and Water: DoE Spend

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment how much his Department has spent on (i) heat; (ii) electricity; and (iii) water in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34343/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The table below details the cost of heat, electricity and water for the years 2009-10 to 2013-14.

YEAR	2009-10 £	2010-11 £	2011-12 £	2012-13 £	2013-14 £
Heat	378,271.76	406,907.44	418,907.02	519,150.58	522,543.93
Electricity	692,183.62	697,031.42	767,498.42	813,661.44	789,803.94
Water	57,638.00	53,494.96	67,760.21	25,886.56	50,830.84

The lower charges for water in 2012-2013 reflect a refund received that year against an earlier overcharge in 2011-12 for water at the Derry Driver and Vehicle Test Centre.

Dereliction Funding Applications

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of the Environment when the next successful dereliction funding applications will be announced for local councils.

(AQW 34359/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I made a bid in the June Monitoring Round for £1m for Dereliction Intervention Funding. If that Round provides resources for Dereliction, I will allocate them amongst councils as soon as practicable thereafter.

Councillors: Code of Conduct

Mr Craig asked the Minister of the Environment, given that guidelines on the new Code of Conduct for councillors have not yet been issued, why councillors have been asked to make a declaration of interest under this Code; and when guidelines will be issued.

(AQW 34412/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The new mandatory Code came into force on 28 May following approval by resolution of the Assembly.

Councillors must sign up to the new mandatory Code and provide written notification of their personal interests which will be added to a new register of interests which will be maintained by the clerk of each council.

The existing declaration of a councillor on acceptance of office, as contained in Part 1 of Schedule 1 to the Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 1972 (the 1972 Act) has been amended to take account of the new mandatory Code.

Paragraph 4 of Schedule 9 to the Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 2014 (the 2014 Act) amended that declaration to provide that those councillors elected to the new 11 councils to sign an amended declaration (which includes reference to the new mandatory Code) before they could act as a councillor, at the onset of their term.

In addition, regulation 5 of the Local Government (Transitional, Supplementary, Incidental Provisions and Modifications) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2014 (the 2014 Regulations) also amended the declaration to take account of the new mandatory Code as it would now apply to existing councillors. This amendment required existing councillors to sign up to the new mandatory Code before they could continue to act in the office of councillor.

The Department issued Local Government Circular 26/14 on 23 May which alerted and provided information to councils on the amended declaration as a result of the new mandatory Code.

Section 62 of the 2014 Act provides for the establishment of a register of interests, which will be maintained by the clerk of each council. Part 5 of the mandatory Code provides the rules relating to registration of interests. Councillors must register any personal interests (both financial and otherwise) which may fall within the categories of interests listed.

The mandatory Code states that councillors must register their interests by written notification to their clerk within 28 days of election or appointment to office (if that is later). This 28 day period also applies to any future change required to any existing interest or the registration of any relevant new interests that may arise.

In addition, Part 6 of the mandatory code provides information on the rules relating to the disclosure and declaration of interests. It refers to the current provisions regarding the disclosure and action to be taken in relation to any relevant pecuniary interests contained in sections 28-31 of the 1972 Act, with which most councillors are already familiar. The rules also outline the procedures for any disclosure and action required relating to private or personal non-pecuniary interests, such as those that should be registered under Part 5 of the mandatory Code. Councillors should seek the opinion of their Chief Executive should they have any doubt regarding the registration of an interest.

These rules have provided sufficient information to enable councils and their councillors to supply the necessary information. A number of councils have already provided training on the mandatory Code for their councillors and further training is planned which will include input from the Commissioner for Complaints, the Equality Commission and the Community Relations Council.

Section 54 of the 2014 Act provides that the Commissioner may issue guidance on matters relating to the conduct of councillors. The Commissioner has indicated that he will also issue information on the procedures that will apply should someone wish to make a complaint. The Commissioner's office has already created a page on their website which provides information regarding any complaints relating to the conduct of councillors. This will be developed further as the ethical standards framework settles in.

Councillors: Right of Appeal

Mr Craig asked the Minister of the Environment what right of appeal a councillor has against a decision made by the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints.
(AQW 34413/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Part 9 of the Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 2014 (2014 Act) established the new ethical standards framework for councillor in Northern Ireland.

In that Act, section 59 (Decision following report) permits a councillor who is censured, suspended or disqualified by the Commissioner to appeal that decision, provided the High Court gives leave to do so.

The grounds for such an appeal are set out in subsection (14) of section 59 of the 2014 Act and are as follows-

- that the Commissioner's decision was based on an error of law;
- that there has been procedural impropriety in the conduct of the investigation;
- that the Commissioner has acted unreasonably in the exercise of the Commissioner's discretion;
- that the Commissioner's decision was not supported by the facts found to be proved by the Commissioner; and
- that the sanction imposed was excessive.

Under section 58 (Interim reports) of the 2014 Act, the Commissioner may, if he considers it necessary in the public interest, produce an interim report on an investigation. Under section 60 (Decisions on interim reports), where the prima facie evidence is such that it appears to the Commissioner:

- that the person who is the subject of an interim report has failed to comply with the code of conduct;
- that the nature of that failure is such as to be likely to lead to disqualification; and
- that it is in the public interest to suspend or partially suspend that person immediately, the Commissioner may give notice to the clerk of the council concerned that that person is suspended or partially suspended from being a councillor for such period and in such way as may be specified in the notice.

Section 60(9) of the 2014 Act permits a councillor, who is the subject of an interim report, to appeal the decision of the Commissioner, provided the High Court gives leave to do so. Subsection (10) of that section states that an appeal in this case can be made

- against the suspension (or partial suspension);
- against the length of the suspension (or partial suspension).

Planning Appeals Commission

Mr Craig asked the Minister of the Environment whether he plans to review the workings of the Planning Appeals Commission, in particular the decision making processes.
(AQW 34414/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Planning Appeals Commission is an independent appellate body under the sponsorship of OFMDFM and it is not within my remit nor would it be appropriate for me to undertake a review into its workings and decision making processes.

Driver and Vehicle Agency: Staff

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of the Environment, following his meeting with the Minister for Social Development on 17 June 2014 on civil service redeployment to assist Driver and Vehicle Agency staff in Coleraine, what further work must be carried out to ensure that the additional temporary positions can be offered promptly.
(AQW 34428/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My officials are currently in discussions with DSD to ascertain the arrangements that need to be put in place to facilitate the offer of temporary work for surplus staff in Coleraine.

DSD has already visited the proposed site and arrangements are being made for the necessary telephony support. A training schedule is being devised with the intention that surplus staff, for whom other work has not yet been found, will be made available to DSD from the end of July, as soon as all winding up activities for vehicle licensing have been completed.

The surplus staff will be available until they are redeployed to other posts.

Councils: Status

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the process by which new councils gain Borough, District or City status.

(AQW 34434/11-15)

Mr Durkan: All eleven new councils are currently district councils, under the provisions of section 1 of the Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 1972 (the 1972 Act), as amended by section 3(1) of the Local Government (Boundaries) Act (Northern Ireland) 2008.

The Department is currently preparing Regulations to allow the new councils to take the necessary decisions in relation to their district, borough or (if applicable), city status. The Regulations will offer councils the option of:

- a remaining a district council (which will require no action to be taken);
- b retaining the charter of an existing borough within the new council's district (the roll of honorary freemen attached to any outgoing charters will form part of the continuing charter); or
- c petitioning the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for a new borough charter (this option is already provided for by section 2 of the Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 1972, but the Regulations will allow the roll of honorary freemen of existing charters within the district to form part of any new charter).

These Regulations will also make provision for the continuance of the city status of the current city councils.

The Department will shortly be engaging with councils in relation to the draft Regulations and the proposed processes in relation to borough and city status.

Crawfordsburn Country Park: Access Arrangements

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment whether there are any plans to change the access arrangements to Crawfordsburn Country Park for the summer of 2014.

(AQW 34437/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) manages visitor access to Crawfordsburn Country Park, and I have been advised that there are no plans at present to change the access arrangements for the summer of 2014.

Vehicular access to the Park is provided in line with the opening and closing hours detailed in Table 1. A no return one-way traffic management system allows vehicles to exit the site after closure of the access barriers. Outside of these hours, visitors can access the site via pedestrian access routes.

The opening hours of Crawfordsburn Country Park are managed by the NIEA and reviewed on an annual basis. I have been advised that there are no plans to change the opening and closing times from those detailed in Table 1.

Opening times for the 2014/15 season are consistent with other NIEA Country Park properties. Outside of these hours, visitors can still access the sites via pedestrian pathways. Only vehicular access is restricted outside of these hours to reduce the risk of anti-social behaviour occurring.

Crawfordsburn Country Park: Opening and Closing Times

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment whether there are any plans to change the opening and closing times of Crawfordsburn Country Park during the summer of 2014.

(AQW 34438/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) manages visitor access to Crawfordsburn Country Park, and I have been advised that there are no plans at present to change the access arrangements for the summer of 2014.

Vehicular access to the Park is provided in line with the opening and closing hours detailed in Table 1. A no return one-way traffic management system allows vehicles to exit the site after closure of the access barriers. Outside of these hours, visitors can access the site via pedestrian access routes.

Opening times for the 2014/15 season are consistent with other NIEA Country Park properties. Outside of these hours, visitors can still access the sites via pedestrian pathways. Only vehicular access is restricted outside of these hours to reduce the risk of anti-social behaviour occurring.

Listed Buildings: North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment to list the listed buildings in North Down; and to detail the spend on each of these buildings in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34472/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Information on Northern Ireland's listed buildings is held on the Northern Ireland Buildings Database, on a Council and Ward basis.

A large amount of information has been produced to answer this question; therefore it has been placed in the Assembly Library. You should note that this information on 'spend' relates solely to grant-aid provided by the Northern Ireland Environment Agency. Any expenditure that may have been incurred by the private owners of properties or other agencies or bodies is not recorded by the Department and has not been included.

Planning Application L/2011/0079/O

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on when a decision will be made on planning application L/2011/0079/O.

(AQW 34484/11-15)

Mr Durkan: This application remains under consideration as further information is required in relation to a number of outstanding issues. This has been requested from the applicant and it has been agreed to defer any decision until the end of August 2014 to allow the agent to submit the necessary reports.

Statutory Off-road Notification (SORN)

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister of the Environment how vehicles that have had a statutory off-road notification for a number of years and subsequently sold, will be (i) taxed; and (ii) registered.

(AQW 34504/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Indefinite Statutory Off Road Notification (SORN) was introduced on 16 December 2013 which removed the requirement for customers to renew a SORN every year. A SORN declaration now remains in force until the vehicle is taxed, sold, permanently exported or scrapped (via an Authorised Treatment Facility (ATF)). This change also removed the need to send out renewal reminders for vehicles with a SORN declaration in force.

Customers who purchase a vehicle that had a previous SORN declaration in force can apply to tax and register the vehicle using a 'V10 (NI) – Vehicle Licence Application' form. This service is currently available at selected Post Office® branches, any Driver and Vehicle Agency (DVA) local motor tax office, or by post to Coleraine.

You will be well aware that the Department for Transport in London is introducing new arrangements for vehicle registration and licensing services in Northern Ireland. After 17 July, the DVA in Northern Ireland will no longer register or tax vehicles. This will become the responsibility of the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency (DVLA) in Swansea from Monday 21 July 2014. From this date customers will be required to tax or register a previously SORNed vehicle using DVLA's online relicensing facility, via their automated telephone system or at any Post Office® branch that offers vehicle relicensing services.

County Hall: Ballymena

Mr Swann asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the annual cost of providing services, for which his Department has responsibility, from County Hall in Ballymena; and what contingent liabilities are planned in the financial year 2015/16 for the use of this facility.

(AQW 34506/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Department has three functions located at Ballymena County Hall. The table below summarises the functions and the costs of providing the services for 2013-14.

Function	Cost £'000
Road Safety and Vehicle Regulation Division – Road Safety Education Office	154
Local Planning Office – South Antrim	2,051
Driver and Vehicle Agency – Local Vehicle Licensing Office	315
Total	2,520

No decision has been made on the use of this facility for the financial year 2015-16.

Air Quality Research Study

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of the Environment whether the outcome of the air quality research study for Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland will be brought before to Assembly before Christmas 2014.

(AQW 34509/11-15)

Mr Durkan: It is anticipated that the Study will conclude in September 2014, and that its final report will be presented to the North-South Ministerial Council in November 2014.

As part of my update to the Assembly on proceedings of the North-South Ministerial Council, I will make a statement to the Assembly regarding the key findings of the study. The report will also be published at this time, and presented to the Environment Committee.

Wildlife Poisoning: Investigation

Mr Wells asked the Minister of the Environment how many specialist trained staff are available for the investigation of wildlife poisoning offences; and within which Government Departments they are employed.

(AQW 34533/11-15)

Mr Durkan: There are no specialist trained staff available for the investigation of wildlife poisoning offences in DOE, or in any other Northern Ireland Executive Departments.

My Department has a contract with the police National Wildlife Crime Unit based in Scotland who support DOE NI and the PSNI in tackling serious wildlife crimes of local or national importance.

Eagles: Illegal Poisoning

Mr Wells asked the Minister of the Environment what steps have been taken to combat the risk of illegal poisoning of the populations of golden eagle, white-tailed eagle and red kite.

(AQW 34534/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The persecution of birds of prey is illegal under the Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Order 1985 and is a particularly serious crime.

While incidents and reports of persecution of wildlife are investigated and prosecutions are taken by the PSNI my Departmental officials are available to provide expert advice and guidance. My Department also has a contract with the National Wildlife Crime Unit based in Scotland which investigates serious national and international wildlife crime incidents and provides tactical support to DoE NI and to the PSNI in tackling serious wildlife crime.

Over recent years DOE has grant aided the successful reintroduction of the red kite into Northern Ireland through support to the RSPB and has funded the Raptor Study Group to carry out specialist surveys and monitoring of populations of several species of birds of prey. Grant aid was also provided to the Golden Eagle Trust in Ireland to develop a Raptor Database for Northern Ireland.

The Raptor Study Group was also successful in the Department's 2014 Challenge Fund allocation and delivered two education projects raising awareness of the conservation of birds of prey and highlighting poisoning, shooting and habitat destruction as threats to the species.

Eagles: White Tailed

Mr Wells asked the Minister of the Environment, in light of the conservation status of the white-tailed eagle, to explain the delay between a white-tailed eagle being found dead in April 2013 and the PSNI announcing that it has been poisoned in May 2014.

(AQW 34535/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Under the terms of the Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Order 1985, DOE has no power to investigate or prosecute wildlife offences of this nature. These powers lie with the PSNI. As this is the case, my Department does not hold, or is in position to collect, the information requested.

The details requested in your question are held by the PSNI.

Infrastrata Drilling: East Antrim

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment when he will commence the public consultation on the proposals by Infrastrata to drill in East Antrim.

(AQW 34540/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The proposed works by InfraStrata fall under Permitted Development in accordance with Part 16, Class A of the Planning (General Development) Order (NI) 1993. As such the development has planning permission by virtue of the above order and the Department is not required to advertise or seek public comment on the proposal.

Any interested parties can of course obtain details from my officials in Strategic Planning Division.

Pollution Incidents: Muckamore Bridge

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of recent pollution incidents at the combined sewer overflow at Muckamore Bridge on the Six Mile Water River.

(AQW 34566/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Two reports of water pollution at this location have recently been made to the Department. NIEA officers attended both incidents promptly, investigated the potential sources and held discussions with NI Water (NIW) on the required follow up.

In the first incident on 18 April 2014, a sewer blockage was found approximately 500 metres away from a flap valve into the river, causing an overflow from the sewer to the storm water system. Subsequently NIW confirmed that they had also identified a lesser contributory blockage which had also been cleared. Based on the actual impact on the river, this incident was assessed as 'low' severity.

The second incident on 1 May 2014 was again assessed as being of 'low' severity, as upon investigation it was found that the water flowing out of the flap did not appear to be polluted and there was no visible plume in the river.

Departmental officials met representatives from the Six Mile Water anglers on 1 May 2014, when a number of issues including these incidents were discussed in detail. This matter was also discussed at length at the Lower Neagh Bann Stakeholder Meeting (which includes the Six Mile Water catchment) held in Randalstown on 6 May 2014, attended by Departmental Officials and NIW staff.

In conclusion, the pollution incidents at this location comprised two 'low' severity incidents which were promptly responded to by the Department and NIW and were rectified. Departmental officials continue to check this outfall at regular intervals but are not aware of any recurrence of pollution since the incident on 1 May 2014. The Department and NIW remain aware of wider contributory factors, such as sewer misconnections by third parties and are cooperating closely to deal with these issues.

Red Kites: Katesbridge Area

Mr Wells asked the Minister of the Environment what steps his Department has taken to investigate the recent deaths of three Red Kites in the Katesbridge area.
(AQW 34567/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Under the terms of the Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Order 1985, DOE has no power to investigate or prosecute wildlife offences of this nature. These powers lie with the PSNI. As this is the case, my Department does not hold, or is in a position to collect, the information requested.

The details requested in your question are held by the PSNI.

Marine Bill

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of the Environment what discussions he has had with the Crown Estate regarding the Marine Bill (NIA 5/11-15).
(AQW 34600/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I have had no discussions with The Crown Estate regarding the Marine Bill, which came into operation on 18 September 2013, and is now the Marine Act (NI) 2013. However, I would refer the Member to the Answer given to his AQW 8970/11-15, which outlined the consultation my Department has had with The Crown Estate on a number of marine issues, including the Marine Bill.

Planning Application E/2013/0093/F

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment (i) whether planning application E/2013/0093/F includes a full Environmental Impact Statement and a Health Impact Assessment; (ii) if not, why this is the case; (iii) whether the application includes seeking permission for any hydraulic fracturing; and (iv) whether an Article 31 Inquiry is anticipated.
(AQW 34606/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My officials are nearing completion in assessing the need for such a statement to accompany this planning application.

This application does not propose unconventional hydraulic fracturing. However at the testing phase a conventional stimulated fracture is proposed.

This application, consisting of an exploratory borehole, does not meet the criteria for an Article 31 Inquiry.

Lough Neagh: Sand Extractors

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment whether he or his officials have had any meetings, conversations, or correspondence with the Lough Neagh sand extractors or their representatives in the last twelve months; and what was the outcome of those discussions.
(AQW 34617/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Department's Minerals, Management and Compliance team (MMC) currently has a live investigation into the unauthorised working of sand from the bed of Lough Neagh.

MMC team has in the last 12 months had a meeting with the Quarry Products Association (QPANI) on 6 February 2014 and a meeting with Shaftesbury Estate's solicitors on 26 February 2014 to obtain further information on the dredging operators, the operations and any permission held by them.

Ongoing discussions have taken place with QPANI to arrange a suitable inspection date for the shore based and Lough based activities and operations.

The Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) held a meeting on 12 June 2014 with QPANI representatives.

There was discussion around the requirements of environmental legislation including the Habitats Directive and the need to bring the activities of the sand and gravel operators into the regulatory framework. The NIEA is to detail information required to fully assess potential impacts of the dredging on the Lough and liaise with Planning and QPANI.

Planning Application J/2011/0081

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of the Environment when he will make a decision on planning application J/2011/0081. (AQW 34668/11-15)

Mr Durkan: It is my intention to visit this site at the request of local representatives from Strabane District Council and thereafter I will make my final decision.

Planning (Control of Major-Accident Hazards) Regulations (NI) 2000

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment whether explosives required for blasting associated with mining are considered a hazardous substance for the purpose of the Planning (Control of Major-Accident Hazards) Regulations (NI) 2000. (AQW 34693/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Planning (Hazardous Substances) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1993 amended by The Planning (Control of Major-Accident Hazards) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2009 include a number of named substances in Schedule 3, Part A and a number of classifications in Part B.

Explosives used at mines can vary in type and quantity and may be included in either Part A or Part B.

Each named substance in Part A and each classification of substance in Part B has an applicable threshold.

Storage of substances above their respective thresholds will require Hazardous Substances Consent from the Department [Article 53 of The Planning (NI) Order 1991], subject to applicable exemptions.

Lough Neagh: Mineral Extraction

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 33458/11-15, whether he intends to permit unregulated mineral extraction from Lough Neagh Special Protection Area to continue; and if so, how this conforms with the precautionary principle. (AQW 34712/11-15)

Mr Durkan: As indicated in my previous response, my Department's Minerals, Management and Compliance team (MMC) is currently investigating the unauthorised working of sand from the bed of Lough Neagh. Once this investigation is complete, my officials will be in a position to take the appropriate course of action.

Planning Application E/2013/0093/F

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment whether planning application E/2013/0093/F will be subject to a full health impact assessment. (AQW 34728/11-15)

Mr Durkan: While all issues concerning public health are routinely assessed in processing any planning application, my officials are concluding an Environmental Impact Assessment determination on this application. Should the outcome of this determination require the submission of an environmental statement, all significant impacts identified including health will require consideration.

Planning Application E/2013/0093/F

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment, in the event of planning application E/2013/0093/F gaining approval, whether a baseline study into health, water quality and air quality will be conducted in Ballinlea ahead of any work taking place. (AQW 34733/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My officials are currently assessing potential impacts on health, air and water quality. No decision has been taken in relation to this proposal at this stage.

Planning Application E/2013/0093/F

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the proposals relating to the shale reservoir within planning application E/2013/0093/F. (AQW 34799/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The application seeks permission for the temporary works of drilling an exploratory borehole to approx 2700m depth to investigate underground strata for hydrocarbon exploration under DETI licence PL3/10 issued to Rathlin Energy Ltd.

Rathlin Energy's primary objective is to test the Carboniferous sandstones but it does intend to assess the underlying Carboniferous shales.

The mini fall-off test will not allow the company to ascertain the viability of unconventional shale gas resources in the area although it will give it information about the character of the shales that would be relevant to an assessment of their unconventional resource potential.

Planning Application E/2013/0093/F

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment when a decision will be made on planning application E/2013/0093/F. (AQW 34801/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The application is currently under consideration. At this time my officials do not have a time frame for issuing any decision.

Ballinlea 1 Test Well

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment whether hydraulic fracturing has taken place at the Ballinlea 1 test well; and whether there are any plans for this process to take place. (AQW 34831/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I am not aware of any previous or future testing in relation to hydraulic fracturing at the Ballinlea 1 test well.

Lough Neagh: Habitats Regulation Assessment

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment whether his Department has carried out a Habitats Regulation Assessment for the unregulated sand extraction taking place from the Lough Neagh Special Protection Area. (AQW 34896/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Habitats Directive requires member states to carry out a Habitats Regulations Assessment when considering the authorisation of plans or projects. NIEA carries out a Habitats Regulations Assessment to ensure that the proposal will not have a significant effect on Natura 2000 sites (including SPAs). As the Department has never been consulted on active applications for abstraction within Lough Neagh the Habitats Directive has not been applied.

Greenhouse Gas Emissions

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on his progress in achieving a reduction in greenhouse gas emissions by at least 35 per cent on 1990 levels by 2025, as per the commitment in the Programme for Government 2011-15. (AQO 6453/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Northern Ireland Executive has a target to continue to work towards a reduction in greenhouse gas emissions by at least 35 per cent on 1990 levels by 2025. The latest inventory published on 10 June 2014, for the 1990-2012 period, shows a reduction of 16 per cent in 2012 in emissions since the base year of 1990.

My department's analysts use a projection tool to estimate reductions in 2025 based on the latest inventory. A projection figure based on the 2012 figures will only be available in December 2014. However the 2011-based projection figure shows a 27.6 per cent reduction in greenhouse gas emissions between 1990 and 2025.

Environmental Crime Unit

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of the Environment for an overview of the work programme of the Environmental Crime Unit. (AQO 6460/11-15)

Mr Durkan: As you may be aware, NIEA's Environmental Crime Unit (or ECU) was set up in December 2008 following recommendations made by the Criminal Justice Inspectorate. Its role is to investigate and prosecute serious and persistent, commercial-scale illegal environmental activities, crimes driven by the considerable financial gains that can be made from avoiding legitimate landfill taxes, VAT etc.

ECU's work is intelligence-led, maximising resources towards tackling the worst offenders who continue to flout our environmental regulations and cause considerable damage to our world-renowned landscape, while at the same time depriving our economy millions of pounds that could be put to the collective good through hospitals, infrastructure and schools.

It is critical to view the work programme of the ECU in the context of the direction I have set for waste management in the North. In my response to the Mills Report, I emphasised that our focus must start with reducing the amount of waste created in the first place, supported by doing a better job of regulating residual waste.

This means that DOE has a range of programmes, ranging from supporting business innovation, supporting community waste reduction efforts, partnering with local councils and providing support and guidance to regulated waste operators.

The ECU's work sits at the compliance end of this spectrum, is focused on tackling the worst waste offending and is critical to the whole strategy. To achieve its aims, ECU has business plans in place that include the targets in respect of the number of:

- intelligence reports to be assessed in connection with environmental
- crime or other environmental offences;
complex investigations underway throughout the year into serious environmental criminality.
- prosecution cases to be submitted to the Public Prosecution Service.
- confiscation investigations to be investigated under POCA.

PPS 21 Definition: Farm Business

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of the Environment when his Department will issue an update on the definition of a 'farm business' under Planning Policy PPS21.

(AQO 6452/11-15)

Mr Durkan: PPS 21 policy CTY10 'Dwellings on Farms' permits a dwelling on a farm subject to a number of criteria, including that the farm business is currently active and established.

Whilst the policy does not provide a definition of a 'farm business' it does contain a definition of agricultural activity which is 'the production, rearing or growing of agricultural products including harvesting, milking, breeding animals and keeping animals for farming purposes or maintaining the land in good agricultural condition'.

I have no plans to introduce a definition of a 'farm business', however members will be aware of ongoing work to bring forward a new single Strategic Planning Policy Statement. Whilst primarily a consolidation of existing planning policy, the SPPS provides an opportunity to bring improvements to the planning policy framework that will operate under the new two tier planning system that will take effect from next April.

The consultation on the SPPS has now closed and my officials are working to analyse the many responses received, including representations in relation to rural planning. When this work is concluded I will formalise my position with respect to this matter.

Strategic Planning Policy Statement

Mr Boylan asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the new Strategic Planning Policy Statement.

(AQO 6455/11-15)

Mr Durkan: On 4th February 2014, I issued for public consultation the draft Strategic Planning Policy Statement for Northern Ireland (SPPS). The SPPS sets out the Department's regional planning policies for securing the orderly and consistent development of land under a reformed two-tier local planning system. It is a proportionate and appropriate framework for delivery of the reformed planning system when the primary responsibility for planning functions transfers from the Department to councils on 1 April 2015.

The 12 week public consultation exercise on the draft SPPS was facilitated by means of online digital consultation with stakeholders invited to respond electronically. This is the first time the Department has incorporated digital engagement into the policy-making process. The consultation closed on 29 April 2014.

During the consultation period the Department held and contributed to a wide range of meetings and consultation events in order to both explain the content of the draft SPPS to interest groups and to inform stakeholders considering responding formally to the public consultation. One series of events, which ran from 31 March to 4 April, involved round table discussions which were facilitated by the RTPI who then prepared a report on the key themes that emerged. I am pleased to advise members that the RTPI report of those discussions is now available from the SPPS webpage www.planningni.gov.uk/spps.

Over 700 responses were received from individuals and a wide range of stakeholders, such as Business and Industry interests (including CBI, NIIRTA, IOD, NIFHA); Environmental interests (including NIEL, RSPB); Community / Academic / NGO interests (including Royal Town Planning Institute, Belfast Civic Trust, Historic Monuments Council, various residents groups); and Local Government interests (including NILGA and a number of local councils).

The scale of the response and the diverse composition of respondents is considered to be encouraging as it indicates a healthy public interest in planning matters generally but particularly the future of planning under the new two tier system that will be brought into effect in April 2015.

To date all responses have been acknowledged and transferred to a database which has been put in place to facilitate detailed analysis.

The process is well underway and I expect to be briefed shortly on the emerging findings. Work on the SPPS will continue into the summer and I expect a full report providing a synopsis of responses in the autumn.

Subject to Executive Committee agreement, the Department remains on target for finalising the SPPS by the end of the year.

Artefacts: Crannog

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on how much his Department has spent on work at the Crannog in Enniskillen, including the protection of artefacts.

(AQO 6456/11-15)

Mr Durkan: This is a significant project which commenced in June 2012 with the excavation of the Crannóg. Phase two of the works now involves a great volume of work to bring the evidence to publication. To date my Department has spent £261,237 on work at the Crannóg and on the protection of artefacts. This covers only the costs incurred by the Department of the Environment and not other government departments.

Environmental Crime Unit

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of the Environment for an overview of the work programme of the Environmental Crime Unit. (AQO 6460/11-15)

Mr Durkan: As you may be aware, NIEA's Environmental Crime Unit (or ECU) was set up in December 2008 following recommendations made by the Criminal Justice Inspectorate. Its role is to investigate and prosecute serious and persistent, commercial-scale illegal environmental activities, crimes driven by the considerable financial gains that can be made from avoiding legitimate landfill taxes, VAT etc.

ECU's work is intelligence-led, maximising resources towards tackling the worst offenders who continue to flout our environmental regulations and cause considerable damage to our world-renowned landscape, while at the same time depriving our economy millions of pounds that could be put to the collective good through hospitals, infrastructure and schools.

It is critical to view the work programme of the ECU in the context of the direction I have set for waste management in the North. In my response to the Mills Report, I emphasised that our focus must start with reducing the amount of waste created in the first place, supported by doing a better job of regulating residual waste.

This means that DOE has a range of programmes, ranging from supporting business innovation, supporting community waste reduction efforts, partnering with local councils and providing support and guidance to regulated waste operators.

The ECU's work sits at the compliance end of this spectrum, is focused on tackling the worst waste offending and is critical to the whole strategy. To achieve its aims, ECU has business plans in place that include the targets in respect of the number of:

- intelligence reports to be assessed in connection with environmental
- crime or other environmental offences;
complex investigations underway throughout the year into serious environmental criminality.
- prosecution cases to be submitted to the Public Prosecution Service.
- confiscation investigations to be investigated under POCA.

Driver and Vehicle Agency: Job Relocation

Mr Attwood asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the provision of new employment opportunities at County Hall in Coleraine following the closure of the Driver and Vehicle Agency. (AQO 6454/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Following the unjustified and unwarranted decision by the Department for Transport to centralise all vehicle registration and licensing services in Swansea, I have been working hard to secure alternative employment for the staff affected.

In conjunction with the Minister for Finance and Personnel, I asked every department to introduce vacancy controls so that suitable vacant posts are offered in the first instance to surplus DVA staff. I also asked each department to identify any functions that could be relocated to Coleraine. Unfortunately, other than in my own department, no such permanent work has been identified as yet.

I have identified 70 jobs for relocation to Coleraine. 50 of these jobs will be available to surplus DVA staff and the other 20, while not suitable for the grade mix of surplus DVA staff, will help to mitigate the economic impact on Coleraine.

Officials are also continuing to discuss the possibility of a small number of jobs being retained in Coleraine to carry out minor, residual functions for the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency. I have asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to trawl all departments in Britain for back-office work that could be carried out here which may go some way to eliminating well-publicised backlogs in the delivery of services such as the issue of passports.

My Department is continuing to work with other all other departments to identify individual, vacant posts which can be offered to surplus DVA staff in Coleraine and the Minister for Social Development has offered temporary work for up to 100 staff in Coleraine until the end of the year. This temporary work will provide additional time to find permanent posts for the affected staff.

I remain fully committed to securing appropriate alternative posts in the Civil Service for the displaced DVA staff who have served motorists and others so very well in delivering a high quality vehicle licensing service.

Councils: Planning Functions

Mr McCartney asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the range of planning functions and powers which will be transferred to the new councils.

(AQO 6457/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The range of planning functions and powers which will be transferred to the new councils is as follows:

- Local Development Planning;
- Development Management - determining the vast majority of planning applications except for Regionally Significant Applications;
- Enforcement – enforcing against breaches of planning control; and
- Other planning controls – responsibilities with regard to listed buildings, conservation areas, the preservation of trees, the control of advertisements and hazardous substances.

Councils: Performance Improvement

Ms Fearon asked the Minister of the Environment, given that councils will have a duty to report on their performance improvement under the Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 2014, to outline the proposed reporting mechanisms.

(AQO 6458/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 2014 requires councils to make arrangements to secure continuous improvement in the exercise of its functions. The Act also provides that, before specifying performance indicators or standards, the Department must consult with councils, it also sets out the required reporting requirements. These include the requirement for councils to gather information to assess improvements in their services and to issue a report annually on their performance against indicators which they have either set themselves or that have been agreed with departments.

In recognising that the aim of local government reform is to deliver improved services to the community it is appropriate in the context of the governance of public funds, for a performance improvement structure to be in place to ensure effectiveness and consistency in approach by the councils in delivering services.

The Act sets out the broad parameters for reporting performance improvement and my Department will be working with councils, other Departments and the Local Government auditor to put in place an integrated performance improvement and reporting arrangement that is better co-ordinated and more responsive to local needs and circumstances. An effective regime will create opportunities for councils to serve citizens better, which is vital to secure sustainable improvements in public services. The delivery of community planning will be supported at council level by the performance improvement framework which focuses on the delivery of continuous improvement in service delivery against more strategic aspects.

Gaelectric

Mr Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the pre-application enquiry by Gaelectric to build a power station in the rural area of Inver, near Larne.

(AQO 6459/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My officials have held 5 pre-application discussion (PAD) meetings with Gaelectric to date on their “Project CAES (compressed air energy storage) Larne” proposals. A further meeting is scheduled for July. It is anticipated that a planning application will be submitted to my Department before the end of the summer.

Planning Service: Craigavon

Mr Irwin asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the future of Planning Service, currently based in Marlborough House, Craigavon, in preparation for the transfer of planning powers to the new Armagh, Banbridge and Craigavon council.

(AQO 6461/11-15)

Mr Durkan: In preparation for the smooth transfer of planning functions to the new Councils in April 2015, my officials have been working closely with the Armagh, Banbridge and Craigavon shadow Council. Work is ongoing on a number of key areas including capacity building for both Councillors and staff, and preparatory work on development plan. Decisions regarding future arrangements for the delivery of the planning function for the new Armagh, Banbridge and Craigavon Council, including location, is a matter for the new Council.

Councils: Standing Orders

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment why the consultation on Standing Orders for the shadow councils has been delayed.

(AQO 6451/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The draft Local Government (Standing Orders) Regulations (Northern Ireland) and the draft Model Standing Orders were finalised and issued for consultation as soon as was practicable following the Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 2014 being passed by this House. Prior to the formal issue of the documents my officials had engaged with the chief executives of the new councils on the content of the proposed mandatory standing orders.

In order to ensure that the new councils operated within the new governance framework from the beginning, including the procedures to protect the interests of minority communities, provision is made in the Local Government (Transitional, Supplementary, Incidental Provisions and Modifications) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2014 requiring a new council to incorporate specified provisions in its standing orders.

These provisions include the specification of decisions that must be taken by a qualified majority. These are in addition to the decisions which are specified in the 2014 Act as being required to be taken by a qualified majority. Provision is also made in relation to the procedure that must be adopted by a council for the appointment of councillors to committees, if the council is appointing more than one committee at the same meeting. The other key aspects of the new governance arrangements, including in relation to filling positions of responsibility and the ability for 15 per cent of the members of a council to requisition the reconsideration of a decision are all provided for on the face of the 2014 Act.

The Local Government (Standing Orders) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2014, which are subject to the draft affirmative procedure in this House, will be made at the earliest opportunity following the Assembly's summer recess.

Department of Finance and Personnel

NEETS: North Belfast

Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many young people aged 16 to 25 years in North Belfast are not currently in education, employment or training,
(AQO 6232/11-15)

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): A person is defined as NEET if they are aged 16 to 24 and not in employment, education or training (full-time or part-time). All available data refers to this age group therefore the question has been answered on this basis.

Estimates of young people not in education, employment or training (NEETs) are sourced to the Labour Force Survey (LFS). However, these estimates are only available at Northern Ireland level, as the LFS sample size and design does not support the production of sufficiently reliable estimates for any lower level geography. Table 1 shows the most recent estimate of the overall number and rate of NEETs in Northern Ireland in January – March 2014.

Table 1 – NI NEETs January – March 2014

Northern Ireland NEETS (16-24)
Quarter	Total
	No. of 16-24 year olds	Rate (% of 16-24 year olds)
Jan-Mar 2014	32,000	14.6%

Source: Labour Force Survey, January – March 2014

The only other available data source which allows estimation of the number of NEETs at sub-regional level is the 2011 Census. This estimated that there were 2,656 young people aged 16-24 years old who were not in education, employment or training in North Belfast, accounting for 20.9% of the 16-24 population, on the 27th March 2011.

At this time, the Census also estimated that there were a total of 33,516 young people falling into the NEET categories in Northern Ireland, representing 14.7% of the 16-24 population.

Air Passenger Duty

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, pursuant to AQW 33543/11-15, why this information is not available, given that variable levels of taxation apply to flights in different bands.
(AQW 33863/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: HMRC has indicated that this is commercial-in-confidence taxpayer information that cannot be disclosed.

Institute for Professional Legal Studies

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for his assessment of the current arrangements whereby some students can gain admission to the Institute for Professional Legal Studies without having obtained a primary degree or sat the Institute of Professional Legal Studies (IPLS) examination, due to their employment in a solicitor's office, whereas other applicants have to demonstrate academic achievement and pass the IPLS examination.
(AQW 34010/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Department does not have a direct role in relation to admission to the Institute of Professional Legal Studies (IPLS).

Tourism: Jobs

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for a breakdown of the current assessment of tourism jobs, broken down by constituency.

(AQW 34128/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The table overleaf details the number of jobs in tourism characteristic industries, broken down by parliamentary constituency. The figures refer to the number of employee jobs in September 2011. Figures for 2013 will be available by September 2014.

Table 1: Northern Ireland Employee Jobs in Tourism Characteristic Industries by Parliamentary Constituency Area

Parliamentary Constituency Area	Employee Jobs in Tourism Characteristic Industries
Belfast East	2,615
Belfast North	3,393
Belfast South	9,023
Belfast West	2,116
East Antrim	2,163
East Londonderry	3,236
Fermanagh and South Tyrone	2,787
Foyle	3,375
Lagan Valley	2,833
Mid Ulster	2,224
Newry and Armagh	2,798
North Antrim	2,650
North Down	2,834
South Antrim	3,707
South Down	2,955
Strangford	2,851
Upper Bann	2,788
West Tyrone	1,844
Total	56,192

Source: NI Census of Employment, September 2011

* The Tourism Characteristic Industries (TCI) used are based on international guidelines that include employees in business sectors with a significant reliance on tourist activity, but do not include the self-employed. The TCI industries are defined as "Accommodation for Visitors", "Food and Beverage Serving Activities", "Passenger Transport", "Sporting and Recreational Activities" and "Other" (including for example, travel agencies, museums, conference and exhibition centres etc.).

Hospitality: DFP

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what was the total cost of hospitality provided by (i) his Department; and (ii) its arm's-length bodies in 2013/14.

(AQW 34139/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The total cost of hospitality provided by the Department of Finance and Personnel in 2013/14 was £50k.

The total cost of hospitality provided by the Special European Union Programmes Body (SEUPB) in 2013/14 was £0.5k.

Executive Spending Allocations

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what checks are in place to ensure that Ministers are spending only on matters agreed in their financial allocation, as agreed by the Executive.

(AQW 34177/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Each department must provide DFP with detailed monthly expenditure data, which is monitored to assess the risk of overspend, or underspend, against departmental budgets.

Whilst the majority of funding is at a Minister's discretion, should departments receive an Executive budget allocation for a specific ring-fenced service and are unable to incur full expenditure, then they must surrender that funding to the Executive for reallocation under the In-Year Monitoring rules.

Departments are also required to ensure that their expenditure represents Value for Money and has the appropriate legislative authority. This is monitored by DFP through expenditure approvals above delegated limits.

More widely, Executive Ministers have a collective responsibility to ensure that the Northern Ireland Budget is managed and controlled properly. This includes a clear imperative to adhere to the budget allocations agreed by the Executive.

Contingency Funds

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what rules apply to Ministers who withhold part of their departmental budget to use as a contingency fund.
(AQW 34178/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: It is for each individual Minister to manage his or her budget within the context of the Executive's In-Year Monitoring Guidelines. This guidance clearly states that any Reduced Requirements must be surrendered at the earliest opportunity.

If the operation of a departmental contingency fund reflects surplus resources in that department, then this would be inconsistent with the requirements of the In-Year Monitoring Guidelines. In that scenario a contingency fund would be seen as an attempt to circumvent the Executive's authority in the redistribution of surplus funding.

Contingency Funds

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether any Minister has established a contingency fund within their Department that has not been agreed by the Executive; and if so, to detail if he has corresponded with the relevant Minister on this matter and the content of the correspondence.
(AQW 34179/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The management of departmental budgets is generally a matter for each individual Minister within the context of the In-Year Monitoring Guidelines. The key issue in relation to any contingency fund is that Reduced Requirements are surrendered at an early stage for reallocation in line with the Executive's priorities.

It is not good practice for any department to withhold surplus funding and I would view this as an attempt to circumvent the Executive's role in redistributing Reduced Requirements.

I have not corresponded with any Minister on the issue of contingency funds.

Budget Controls: Treasury Rules

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether any Treasury rules apply to the use of money allocated to a Department; and if so, to detail the rules and whether there has been a breach by a Minister.
(AQW 34180/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: HM Treasury Budget Controls apply to the entire Northern Ireland Block rather than individual departments.

Northern Ireland Executive departments are also expected to manage their budgets in line with relevant sections of HM Treasury's Consolidated Budgeting Guidance, which is the technical budgeting guidance that applies across the UK. DFP plays an important role in working with the departments to ensure compliance with this guidance. HM Treasury has not expressed any concern in relation to compliance in Northern Ireland with the Consolidated Budgeting Guidance.

Heat, Electricity and Water: DFP Spend

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how much his Department has spent on (i) heat; (ii) electricity; and (iii) water in each of the last five years.
(AQW 34216/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: My Department is responsible for managing the Northern Ireland Civil Service Office Estate and pays the utility bills associated with DFP occupied buildings and buildings where DFP holds the budget.

The table below details the figures you requested.

Financial Year	Heat (million)	Electricity (million)	Water (million)
2009/10	£0.6	£2.3	£0.5
2010/11	£1.0	£2.9	£0.3
2011/12	£0.9	£2.6	£0.3

Financial Year	Heat (million)	Electricity (million)	Water (million)
2012/13	£1.0	£3.0	£0.3
2013/14	£1.1	£2.8	£0.3

Hardship Relief Scheme

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many applications, since 2011, were received from commercial properties for rates relief under the (i) Hardship Relief Scheme; (ii) how many were granted; and what was the total relief given in each year.

(AQW 34265/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Thirty six applications for Hardship Relief have been received since 1st April 2011. During that period, two applications were granted rate relief under the scheme; with the total value of relief awarded equalling £4,052.71. One award of £3,262.08 was granted during 2012/13 (backdated to 2009/10) and another for £790.63, for a period during 2011/12.

Commercial Properties: Ballymena

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of commercial properties in Ballymena with no rateable value; and to outline the reasons why this is the case.

(AQW 34266/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Land & Property Services has currently 37 new non domestic properties listed as yet to be valued in the Ballymena Borough Council area. These properties will be inspected in due course to ascertain if they are ready to be entered in the Valuation List. The number outstanding is considered to be well within a normal quota of work in progress.

Ballymena: Encouraging Investment

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether a 'rates holiday' was offered in the last ten years to any incoming businesses as a means of encouraging investment within Ballymena; and if so, to detail the properties to which this applied.

(AQW 34268/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: There is no legislative provision within the Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 for granting a 'rates holiday'.

Rates: Domestic Rebates or Exemptions

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether any domestic properties will benefit from a rates rebate or exemption because of the presence of a place of worship within the property.

(AQW 34317/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Under rating legislation any church, chapel or similar building occupied by a religious body and used for purposes of public religious worship is exempt from rates.

Any occupation of this nature is considered on a case by case basis; in particular the question of the paramount occupation, the actual use of the premises, and the public nature of the worship will be considered.

The District Valuer in Land & Property Services in determining any entitlement to exemption will consider the facts of each case within the statutory framework and guided by case law.

European Business Network Congress

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the (i) amount paid to each of the guest speakers at the European Business Network Congress from 29-31 May 2013; and (ii) funding provided by SEUPB's INTERREG IVA Programme for this event.

(AQW 34430/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The funding provided by the INTERREG IVA programme for this event was £17,652.59.

As the programme assistance did not relate to the fees paid to each of the guest speakers, it is not possible to provide you with such detail.

Cycling: Stormont Estate

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what consideration he has given to improving cycling infrastructure in the Stormont Estate.

(AQW 34491/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Stormont Estate Workplace Travel Consortium, comprised of representatives from all the departments based on the Stormont Estate and the Northern Ireland Assembly, will shortly be issuing a questionnaire to all staff based on the Estate seeking information on their travel to work arrangements.

The results of this questionnaire will help formulate plans for developing a strategy more focused on sustainable transport (including cyclists) for all those who work on the Stormont Estate.

In the meantime we await the findings of this survey.

Rates: Liability

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel (i) why tenants assume rates liability if the capital value of the property is greater than £150,000; and (ii) what evidence base is used to set the financial amounts which determine liability. (AQW 34500/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Although the domestic rating system has developed and is long established as a tax on the occupier, the owner or landlord is normally liable for rates in respect of rental properties with a capital value of £150,000 or less. A valuation limit is applied because the evidence shows that collection difficulties tend to occur in lower value rented properties because as a rule they are occupied by a more transient population. The general principle that the occupant is liable remains for higher value properties.

When the new capital value system came into effect in 2007, the threshold was reset at £150,000 assessed capital value. It replaced the old Net Annual Value (NAV) limit, which had been in place for many years. This was not a new policy initiative but something that had to be done because of the general revaluation in 2007.

The £150,000 threshold was decided following statistical analysis comparing frequency distributions between the old NAV and new capital valuation lists but set a little higher to allow for higher than average capital values in areas such as those around Queens University. The setting of the new threshold was also informed by a consultation undertaken by DFP in 2006, which was based on a study undertaken by the Institute of Revenues, Rating and Valuation in 2005. Evidence for the continuing transient nature of private rented housing in Northern Ireland was obtained from Northern Ireland Statistical Research Agency's Continuous Household Survey.

Rates: Arrears

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether he is aware of the concern amongst some private rental tenants who are being pursued by Land and Property Services for rates arrears despite having paid their rates to the landlord of the property; and what steps he is taking to address these concerns. (AQW 34501/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I am aware of a small number of cases where the landlord has taken payment from the tenant in respect of rates as part of the tenancy agreement, but not passed on to the Department. Such instances are unfortunate (and AQW 34500/11-15 refers); however for domestic properties with a Capital Value over £150,000, liability rests with the tenant or occupier. Land & Property Services is sympathetic to these cases and works closely with the tenant to agree a suitable repayment plan. In parallel, LPS and Housing Rights Service have met over recent months to discuss an approach for genuine cases of tenant hardship and where the tenant may be pursuing action against the landlord.

My Department has also taken steps through recent legislation to simplify the rules around landlord liability and from next April there will be no need for landlords or tenants to produce tenancy agreements. This change has the support of landlords, as represented by the Landlord Association and tenants, as represented by the Housing Rights Service.

Civil Service: Employment Advertisements

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (i) the number of employment positions advertised externally by the NI Civil Service in 2013; and (ii) the total number of applicants for these positions. (AQW 34543/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The NI Civil Service reports figures annually on all external recruitment activity, including number of applicants. These figures are available in the NICS Annual Report on Recruitment for 2013. This report is in the public domain and is available on the NICS recruitment web-site at:

<https://irecruit-ext.hrconnect.nigov.net/resources/documents/r/e/c/recruitment-to-the-nics-annual-report-2013.pdf>

Danske Bank: Branch Closure

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what discussions he has had with Danske Bank following their decision to close their branch in Holywood, Co. Down. (AQW 34558/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I have had no specific discussions with Danske Bank regarding this particular branch closure.

Roe Valley Country Park: Visitor Numbers

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the estimated number of visitors to the Roe Valley Country Park in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34611/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Visitor numbers to Roe Valley Country Park are collected by the Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency (NISRA) Visitor Attraction Survey. This is a voluntary Survey and the results are based solely on the visitor numbers provided by respondents. The estimated number of visitors to Roe Valley Country Park for each of the last five years is shown in the table attached.

Visitor Numbers to Roe Valley Country Park (2009-2013)

Year	Estimated number of Visitors
2009	300,000
2010	300,000
2011	280,000
2012	250,000
2013	300,000

Welfare Reform: Financial Penalties

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for an estimate of the total sum of financial penalties due to Welfare Reform issues, deducted from the Block Grant, from the date of the first deduction until May 2015.

(AQW 34833/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Chief Secretary to the Treasury has confirmed the Welfare Reform penalties of £13 million in 2013-14, £87 million in this year and £114 million next year. The 2015-16 deduction equates to £9.5 million per month.

As a consequence, if Welfare Reform has not been agreed by the end of May 2015, the Executive will have lost a total of £119 million. The financial penalties will continue to escalate significantly over time as reforms to the welfare system are rolled out in Great Britain.

Rates: Liability

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what action can be taken to protect tenants from rates liability where the landlord has given a verbal assurance that they will assume responsibility for rates payment.

(AQW 34892/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I am aware of a small number of cases where the landlord has given a verbal assurance that they will assume responsibility for rate payments but failed to do so. Such instances are unfortunate; however, in relation to domestic properties with a Capital Value over £150,000, liability rests with the tenant or occupier. Land & Property Services is sympathetic to such cases and works closely with the tenant to agree a suitable repayment plan. In parallel, LPS and Housing Rights Service have met over recent months to discuss an approach for genuine cases of tenant hardship and where the tenant may be pursuing action against the landlord.

My Department has also taken steps through recent legislation to simplify the rules around landlord liability and from next April there will be no need for landlords or tenants to produce tenancy agreements for rating matters. This change has the support of landlords, as represented by the Landlord Association and tenants, as represented by the Housing Rights Service.

Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Hospitality: DHSSPS

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what was the total cost of hospitality provided by (i) his Department; and (ii) its arm's-length bodies in 2013-14.

(AQW 34140/11-15)

Mr Poots (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): The total cost of hospitality provided by the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety and each of the Department's Arms Length Bodies, in 2013-14, is set out in the table below.

	2013/14 £000
DHSSPS	62.8
Health and Social Care Board	53.7
Belfast HSC Trust	25.8
Northern HSC Trust	22.8
Southern HSC Trust	32.3
South Eastern HSC Trust	51.0
Western HSC Trust	13.1
NI Ambulance Service	2.8
Business Services Organisation	18.8
Public Health Agency	53.6
Patient Client Council	12.3
NI Fire & Rescue Service	16.7
NI Social Care Council	7.8
NI Guardian Ad Litem Agency	3.9
NI Medical & Dental Training Agency	5.9
NI Blood Transfusion Service	1.0
NI Practice & Education Council	-
Regulation & Quality Improvement Authority	8.0
Total	392.2

All organisations across the HSC have comprehensive policies and procedures in respect of hospitality which outline the eligibility and entitlement to hospitality.

Due to the wide ranging operational nature of the Department's ALBs, hospitality may also include expenditure other than that associated with the provision of refreshments, for example room and/or equipment hire.

The annual total cost has decreased steadily in recent years to less than half of the 2008-2009 sum.

Skin Camouflage Services

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much has been spent on skin camouflage services by the Health and Social Care Board in each of the last three years; and how much is projected to be spent in the next two years.

(AQW 34152/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Health and Social Care Board has not issued funding directly to any organisation for skin camouflage services during the last three years.

In terms of projected spending, I understand that the Health and Social Care Board will be meeting with the Changing Faces charity in the near future to discuss this issue.

Staff Vehicles: DHSSPS

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the procurement procedures used for servicing and minor repairs of staff vehicles, in terms of the delays caused and keeping vehicles off the road.

(AQW 34298/11-15)

Mr Poots: I understand that this question relates to NIFRS vehicles. In that context, I would advise that procurement procedures are in place to ensure NIFRS follows national best practice and achieves value for money in terms of vehicle maintenance and repair.

Procurement is only one logistical aspect in turning around vehicles in a timely manner. The procurement for servicing and minor repairs of NIFRS vehicles includes a number of contracts, for example oil, filters, batteries and vehicle parts. These are collectively aimed at enabling repairs to be made in the most effective and efficient manner. In addition, NIFRS has analysed all aspects of the repair route and seeks to constantly improve start-to-finish times in a workshop, positioning of workshops and the way vehicles are serviced (One-Stop-Shop concept).

Strategic Service Reform

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he will publish the reports made by Ernst & Young, on behalf of the Northern Health and Social Care Trust, on phase 1 of the Strategic Service Reform; and to outline the cost of the work carried out to date by Ernst & Young.

(AQW 34299/11-15)

Mr Poots: I propose to answer these three questions together.

The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB), following a procurement exercise, commissioned two consultancy firms, KPMG and Ernst & Young, to provide External Implementation Support to those taking forward the implementation of Transforming Your Care (TYC).

Each of the firms was allocated a group of Trusts, the associated Local Commissioning Group (LCG) and related Integrated Care Partnerships (ICPs) to work with. Ernst & Young were contracted to provide support for:

- | | |
|-------------------------|-----------------------------|
| ■ Western Trust (WHST) | ■ Northern LCG |
| ■ Southern Trust (SHST) | ■ 2 x ICPs in Western area |
| ■ Northern Trust (NHST) | ■ 3 x ICPs in Southern area |
| ■ Western LCG | ■ 4 x ICPs in Northern area |
| ■ Southern LCG | |

Phase 1 of the exercise set out to examine each organisation's readiness for change; the robustness of their service reform and financial plans to support that change; consideration of 'difficult choices' options, projects and reforms to deliver TYC and 'shift left' whilst maintaining quality and safety of service. This phase of work is due to be completed by the end of June 2014.

The cost of EY's work for Phase 1 is a fixed fee of £537,574 (excluding VAT). The fixed price fee was negotiated for provision of support to 3 Trusts, 3 Local Commissioning Groups (LCG) and Integrated Care Partnerships within the 3 LCG areas. The HSCB advise that it would not be possible extract costs specifically for work with the NHST.

The focus of this work has been on supporting the HSCB and Trusts to deliver significant and major whole system reform. Once I have had the opportunity to read reports from Phase 1 of this work I will consider placing a copy in the Assembly Library.

Any proposals for service changes arising from this work will be subject to the normal consultation and public engagement processes.

Transforming Your Care

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether the Northern Health and Social Care Trust will publish the advice or reports produced by Ernst & Young to assist the Trust in the implementation of Transforming Your Care.

(AQW 34303/11-15)

Mr Poots: I propose to answer these three questions together.

The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB), following a procurement exercise, commissioned two consultancy firms, KPMG and Ernst & Young, to provide External Implementation Support to those taking forward the implementation of Transforming Your Care (TYC).

Programme for Government: Implementation

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to what extent his Department has implemented the Programme for Government 2011-15 commitment that all public procurement contracts for supplies, services and construction works will include social clauses; and to what level such clauses have been implemented.

(AQW 34332/11-15)

Mr Poots: Social clauses for capital and construction related contracts are at a more advanced stage of development than those for goods and services contracts. Indeed, relevant clauses for capital contracts are well developed and understood by the construction industry, which means that they are routinely included within the tender documentation as a core specification. In that context, all construction works contracts awarded in the Health and Social Care and Public Safety sector since March 2010 have included social clauses.

In contrast however, the nature of goods and services contracts means that specific and tailored clauses must be developed. This issue is not specific to my Department and has been acknowledged as an issue across the wider public sector. All goods and services contracts awarded in the HSC sector are required to include standard social clauses in respect of Equality and Health and Safety. In addition, steps have been taken, where appropriate, to include clauses to support apprenticeships, employee development and employment opportunities. Further work is currently underway to expand the inclusion of these latter requirements and others across a wider number of contracts as renewals fall due. To support this, a HSC-wide group has been established to develop wider use of social clauses within goods and services HSC contracts.

Paediatric Congenital Cardiac Services

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the recommendations into the future of paediatric congenital cardiac services.

(AQW 34333/11-15)

Mr Poots: The International Expert Team, led by Dr John Mayer, commissioned by Dr James Reilly TD, Minister of Health in the Republic of Ireland, and me to carry out an independent assessment of current and future needs for cardiology and cardiac surgery for congenital heart disease in the Republic of Ireland and Northern Ireland have been aiming to submit its report to Minister Reilly and me by 1 July 2014. I understand this timetable has slipped slightly. The team will describe the existing hospital services in both jurisdictions, outline options for service configuration and governance arrangements and report to both Ministers, jointly, recommending the most appropriate model that meets the population health needs and other requirements of both jurisdictions.

Health and Social Care Trusts: Invoices

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail, for each Health and Social Care Trust, the reduced (i) volume; and (ii) value of unprocessed and unpaid invoices making up the backlog reported to Business Services Organisation's Board meeting of 30 April 2014; and whether the agreed plan to address the backlog included the provision of an explanation to those suppliers whose invoices remain unpaid.

(AQW 34334/11-15)

Mr Poots: Because of the similarities in these questions, a combined response has been provided.

The number and value of unprocessed/unpaid invoices making up the backlog reported to Business Services Organisation's (BSO) Board meeting of 30 April 2014 are shown in the table below.

	Invoice Backlog as of 30 April 2014
	Volume of Invoices	Value (£)
Belfast Trust	14,767	24,458,069
Northern Trust	4,490	4,476,807
Western Trust	5,649	11,190,020
Ambulance Service	864	3,158,917
Total for Trusts	25,770	43,283,813

As part of the plan to clear the backlog, the Backlog Team are in regular contact with suppliers to inform them of progress and considerable progress has been made in this regard – as at 30 June, the backlog had reduced to 8,404 invoices with a value of £10.7m.

Health and Social Care Trusts: Invoices

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail, for each Health and Social Care Trust, the (i) volume; and (ii) value of unprocessed suppliers invoices which made up the significant backlog of invoices reported to Business Services Organisation's Board meeting of 30 April 2014.

(AQW 34335/11-15)

Mr Poots: Because of the similarities in these questions, a combined response has been provided.

The number and value of unprocessed/unpaid invoices making up the backlog reported to Business Services Organisation's (BSO) Board meeting of 30 April 2014 are shown in the table below.

	Invoice Backlog as of 30 April 2014
	Volume of Invoices	Value (£)
Belfast Trust	14,767	24,458,069
Northern Trust	4,490	4,476,807
Western Trust	5,649	11,190,020
Ambulance Service	864	3,158,917
Total for Trusts	25,770	43,283,813

As part of the plan to clear the backlog, the Backlog Team are in regular contact with suppliers to inform them of progress and considerable progress has been made in this regard – as at 30 June, the backlog had reduced to 8,404 invoices with a value of £10.7m.

Shared Services

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how Shared Services intend compensating suppliers who have been denied timely payment of their invoices; and why it appears that, when it comes to late payment, suppliers are apparently being treated less favourably than Health and Social Care staff.

(AQW 34336/11-15)

Mr Poots: The issue of prompt payment for suppliers remains a key priority for my Department. Guidance contained in Managing Public Money NI requires departments, agencies and NDPBs to pay invoices accurately and on time to avoid late payment. The Late Payment of Commercial Debts Regulations 2013 ensures that businesses do not suffer financially from late payment by permitting businesses to charge statutory interest on overdue payments.

My Department's governance and accountability processes in this area requires all Arms Length Bodies (ALBs) to ensure that any issues relating to the timely payment of supplier invoices are addressed with the relevant supplier and resolved as a matter of urgency in line with the prevailing legislation and guidance.

Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how money apportioned through the Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme in the last three years has been spent.

(AQW 34337/11-15)

Mr Poots: The annual proceeds from the UK wide Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme apportioned to NI have been used, together with other efficiency measures, to address the ever increasing financial challenges faced by the HSC over recent years.

Belfast Health and Social Care Trust: Complaints

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether there is a time limit or target for the resolution of complaints within the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust; and how many people registered a complaint with the Trust before 1 January 2014 and have yet to receive a final response.

(AQW 34339/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Belfast Health and Social Care Trust operates a complaints policy in line with the HSC Complaints Policy – Standards and Guidelines for Resolution and Learning. A copy can be found at http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/hsc_complaints_revised_standards_and_guidelines_for_resolution_and_learning__amds_.pdf

The Trusts deals with over 2000 complaints per year. A complaint should be acknowledged in writing within 2 working days of receipt. However, a full response should be provided within 20 working days and service users should be notified of any delays. Some complaints will take longer than others to resolve because of differences in complexity, seriousness and the scale of the investigative work required.

The Trust is currently working to provide a full response to 58 complaints which were received before 1st January 2014.

Heat, Electricity and Water: DHSSPS Spend

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much his Department has spent on (i) heat; (ii) electricity; and (iii) water in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34345/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Department of Finance and Personnel Properties Division is responsible for paying utility bills associated with multiple occupancy buildings. My Department is housed in Castle Buildings, Stormont which is a multi-occupancy building.

I therefore refer you the Department of Finance and Personnel's response to your Assembly Question reference - AQW 34216/11-15 which details the costs of multi occupancy buildings.

Cross-border Nursing Home Places

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 33922/11-15 and in instances where better value for money for the state and the client can be demonstrated and where clients can be closer to their families, whether he will approach the Minister for Health Dr James Reilly TD in order to come to a reciprocal arrangement whereby clients on both sides of the border could be placed in nursing homes that are registered with, and regulated, by either the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority or the Health Information and Quality Authority.

(AQW 34374/11-15)

Mr Poots: As detailed in my answer to AQW 33922/11-15, both jurisdictions are in a similar legislative position. The Republic of Ireland's Health Service Executive (HSE) permits the HSE to only place clients in the Republic of Ireland (ROI) and registered with the ROI regulator and here in Northern Ireland, the Health and Social Care (HSC) Trusts can only place clients in care homes in Northern Ireland that are registered with the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority (RQIA) under Health and Personal Social Services (Quality, Improvement and Regulation) (Northern Ireland) Order 2003. Therefore, significant legislative changes would be required to allow for the placement of NI residents in care homes based in the ROI.

You should be aware that clients can move from one jurisdiction to another when the care package in the new care home is privately funded – as this requires no assistance from either HSC Trusts or the HSE.

Northern Health and Social Care Trust: The Cottage, Ballymena

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, given that the Northern Health and Social Care Trust headquarters have been relocated, what use will be made of The Cottage in Ballymena.

(AQW 34432/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Cottage in Ballymena currently houses the following Northern Health and Social Care Trust (Trust) health and care teams, including 3 meeting rooms:

- Complaints
- ICT
- Corporate Communications
- Adoption

In addition, the Business Services Organisation (BSO) Procurement and Logistics Team are also located within the facility.

A proposal for the Autism and Brokerage services to move to The Cottage is currently being considered by the Trust as part of an overall accommodation review. This will take place over the next three months.

Northern Health and Social Care Trust: The Cottage, Ballymena

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, given that the Northern Health and Social Care Trust headquarters have been relocated, whether there are any plans for the disposal of The Cottage site in Ballymena for development purposes.

(AQW 34433/11-15)

Mr Poots: There are no plans for the disposal of The Cottage site in Ballymena. The Northern Health and Social Care Trust are continuing to utilise the site as per AQW 34432/11-15.

Organ Transplants: Children

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of operations for organ transplants to children that have taken place in each of the last three years, broken down by organ type.

(AQW 34436/11-15)

Mr Poots: The information requested has been supplied by NHS Blood and Transplant, which is the organ donation organisation for the UK and is responsible for matching and allocating donated organs.

The information is shown in the following table –

Transplants - by financial year as at June 2014

Organ	2010/11	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14	2014/15
Kidney (deceased)	<5*	<5	<5	-	<5
Kidney (live)	8	5	<5	<5	-
Lung(s)	-	-	<5	-	-
Liver (deceased)	<5	7	<5	<5	<5
Ocular tissue	2010/11	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14	2014/15
Cornea	<5	<5	<5	<5	<5
Sclera	6	<5	<5	<5	-
Total	20	16	10	8	<5

* Patient numbers of less than 5 in the attached document could become identifiable data and are therefore listed as <5

Gastric Band Operations

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many gastric band operations have been carried out by the Health Service, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust, in each of the last three years.
(AQW 34460/11-15)

Mr Poots: Over the last 3 years there have been fewer than five gastric band operations carried out by the Health Service in Northern Ireland. It is not possible to break this down per year due to the very small numbers involved and the right of those individuals to privacy and our obligations under Data Protection Act.

Cancer Drugs

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether any drugs for the treatment of cancer are generally available in Great Britain but not in Northern Ireland; and if so, to detail the drugs and the measures he has in place to address any disparity.
(AQW 34462/11-15)

Mr Poots: Access to effective treatments for the population of Northern Ireland, including access to cancer drugs and other specialist medicines, is an important priority for me and for my Department.

In Northern Ireland the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) is responsible for commissioning drugs and treatments. Both the HSCB and the NHS in England are guided by the National Institute for Health and Care Excellence (NICE) in determining which cancer drugs should be routinely available. All NICE approved cancer drugs that are available in England are either recurrently funded or available via a cost per case mechanism in Northern Ireland.

The HSCB has a clear process by which unapproved drugs (including drugs and therapies not limited to cancer) can be made available to patients in Northern Ireland. Around 98% of the applications for unapproved drugs for cancer are approved. I have recently instructed my Department to evaluate this process, and to take account of measures that other devolved administrations are considering in their approach towards access to specialist drugs.

Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the financial return from the Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme; and whether this funding is targeted towards the accessibility of cancer drugs.
(AQW 34477/11-15)

Mr Poots: The attached table details how much money Northern Ireland was apportioned through the Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme (PPRS) (2009) in each of the last three years.

Financial Year	£m
2011/2012	3.426
2012/2013	3.003
2013/2014	2.853

The proceeds apportioned to Northern Ireland from the PPRS are used, together with other efficiency measures, to address the ever increasing financial challenges faced by the HSC. It is not specifically targeted towards the accessibility of cancer drugs.

Eye Tests: Children

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many children had at least one eye test in 2012/13; and of these, to detail the number of children under 16, shown as a percentage of the total population of children. (AQW 34513/11-15)

Mr Poots: The information requested is provided in the tables below, figures relate to Health Service sight tests only and excludes private sight tests.

Data relates to the date the sight test was processed and paid on the system rather than the date the test took place. Claims must be submitted for payment within six months of the date of the test.

Age is calculated using the date of birth on the sight test form and the date the test took place. Registered health population figures are taken from October 2012, the mid-point of the 2012/13 financial year.

Children who received Health Service sight tests in 2012/13

Age	Number of Health Service sight tests	Number of children registered for Health Service treatments at October 2012	% of children who received a sight test
0-15	104,986	384,097	27.33%
0-17	122,296	433,595	28.21%

Health and Social Care Trusts: Adherence to Guidelines

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 33960/11-15, what processes are in place within Health and Social Care Trusts to ensure adherence to the guidelines; and what mechanism can be instigated if the guidelines are not followed. (AQW 34545/11-15)

Mr Poots: Trust governance arrangements support processes of staff appraisal and, in the case of doctors, revalidation. Whilst medical revalidation is aimed at ensuring doctors adhere to the guidance of the GMC, the process does not rely on monitoring against every individual element of guidance. However, it does require that all doctors collect and reflect on complaints raised against them and the services they provide with a view to continually improving their practice. This will be documented at their annual appraisal.

If a person is dissatisfied with their care, including the handling of consultant to consultant referral, the Trust complaints process is the appropriate mechanism for them to raise their concerns.

Details on the process and support available can be found at Make a complaint against the health service | nidirect

Cancer Drugs

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when he will announce the terms of reference for the evaluation his Department will carry out on the Individual Funding Request process for access to cancer drug treatments. (AQW 34547/11-15)

Mr Poots: The terms of reference for the evaluation of whether the Individual Funding Request (IFR) process is meeting its objectives are currently being finalised by my Department and I expect to make an announcement in the near future.

European Cancer Patients Bill of Rights

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how he will ensure that Article 2 of the European Cancer Patient's Bill of Rights is upheld. (AQW 34549/11-15)

Mr Poots: I attended the World Cancer Day event in February this year when the European Cancer Patients Bill of Rights was launched. Article 2 of the charter states every European citizen should have the right to "optimal and timely access to appropriate specialised care, underpinned by research and innovation".

The health service in Northern Ireland is working hard to ensure optimal timely access to appropriate, evidence based, specialised care. Specific action includes:

- the Cancer Service Framework which provides standards to improve how services prevent, diagnose and treat cancer, as well as standards to support both cancer survivors and those with end of life needs;
- the endorsement of National Institute for Health and Clinical Excellence (NICE) technical appraisals and clinical guidelines, and the provision of NICE approved drugs;

- continued ongoing collaboration between cancer research and clinicians, for example through the Northern Ireland Cancer Trials Centre and Network, and the Queens University Centre for Cancer Research and Cell Biology, for which my Department provides funding, helps promote innovation in cancer diagnostics and treatment; and,
- partnerships with organisations like Macmillan Cancer Support has led to innovation and improvement in follow up services for patients with cancer.

Dyslexia

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, given that dyslexia is recognised as a disability under equality legislation, why there is no Health Service provision for dyslexia, including at a diagnostic level.

(AQW 34554/11-15)

Mr Poots: Dyslexia is identified mainly within educational settings by educational psychologists, when teachers or parents have identified problems with reading and writing.

The additional and specialised teaching and adaptive strategies required to address the difficulty associated with dyslexia are delivered in schools and other educational settings.

While there are no specific health problems associated with dyslexia, any co-morbid or additional problems which require Health and Social Care input can be accessed by the normal referral routes.

If a referral is made to Health and Social Care, professionals including Speech and Language Therapists and Occupational Therapists support educational staff by assessing the child's or young person's phonological awareness and visual perceptual needs. They then provide appropriate intervention strategies and advice whilst liaising with educational colleagues and parents to meet the holistic needs of the child and enhance their literacy development.

Car Parking: Causeway and Antrim Area Hospitals

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what consideration he has given to the provision of additional staff car parking space at the Causeway and Antrim Area Hospitals.

(AQW 34557/11-15)

Mr Poots: My Department's policy on car parking provision and management in the Health and Social Care (HSC) sector for Northern Ireland sets the direction for car park management including charging and makes clear that decisions relating to specific HSC site car parking rest with each Health and Social Care Trust.

The Northern Health and Social Care Trust has advised that there are currently no plans to increase the provision of additional staff car parking space at the Causeway Hospital site. With regard to the Antrim Area hospital, car park provision for staff was increased in 2013 by 133 spaces. Further spaces may be considered subject to demand and availability of capital funding.

Northern Health and Social Care Trust: Appointment of Non-executive Directors

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the appointment of non-executive directors to the Northern Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 34564/11-15)

Mr Poots: The competition process to appoint two non-executive directors of the Northern Health and Social Care Trust is underway. Interviews were held in May 2014 and it is hoped that the appointment process will be completed within the coming weeks.

Out-of-hours Service: Kilkeel Health Centre

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether there are any plans to reduce the out-of-hours service provided at Kilkeel Health Centre.

(AQW 34568/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Health and Social Care Board commissions the provision of GP Out of Hours service from the Southern Health and Social Care Trust.

The Board currently has no plans to reduce the Out of Hours service provided at Kilkeel Primary Care Centre.

Mental Health Unit: Omagh

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether a decision has been made on the future location of the mental health unit currently situated in Omagh.

(AQW 34583/11-15)

Mr Poots: No decision has been taken. At my request, the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) undertook an appraisal of the two suggested locations for the second Mental Health Inpatient Unit in the Western Trust area. The HSCB findings will inform the required business case for this project which will also need to take account of a financial and value for money analysis.

Only when a business case has been finalised and submitted to my Department for consideration can a final decision be taken. The business case will also need to be approved by the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP).

Timing of the project will be subject to budgetary availability and this project will need to be considered alongside all other demands on the capital budget as we move to the next budgetary period commencing in 2015/16.

Omagh: Local Enhanced Hospital

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when the new local enhanced hospital in Omagh will be built; and to list the facilities that will be available.

(AQW 34589/11-15)

Mr Poots: Work on the new Omagh Local Hospital is expected to commence this month and will be completed over a two year period. The Operational Commissioning is expected to take a further three to four months with the Hospital being operational late 2016.

The two storey building will provide accommodation for a range of services including GP practices, urgent care and treatment, cardiac assessment, renal dialysis, out-patients, dedicated children's department, X-ray and imaging, in-patient rehabilitation, recovery and palliative care services, day case theatres, community dental, allied health professional's therapy centre, the community mental health team and a dedicated centre for woman's health.

South West Acute Hospital: Maintenance Costs

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the maintenance costs for the South West Acute Hospital in the 2013/14 financial year.

(AQW 34590/11-15)

Mr Poots: The maintenance costs for the South West Acute Hospital are included in the Unitary Charge payable to PFI Partner, Northern Ireland Health Group. The Unitary Charge payment is made up of a number of components which include costs relating to the building construction, contractor supplied equipment, capital replacement and lifecycle and interest charges (et al), in addition to estates, energy and grounds maintenance services.

The annual Unitary Charge was the subject of detailed scrutiny during the three-year procurement as part of the competitive tendering process and set within the PFI contract at Financial Close (May 2009).

The detailed breakdown of Unitary Charge payments is considered as commercially sensitive information and the Trust is therefore not permitted to disclose this information in accordance with the PFI contract and the Freedom of Information Act.

Prescriptions

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many prescriptions have been issued in each of the last three years.

(AQW 34608/11-15)

Mr Poots: The number of prescription items for which a prescription was written, dispensed by a community pharmacist, dispensing doctor or appliance supplier, and presented for payment in 2011, 2012 and 2013 is shown below.

Not all prescriptions issued are subsequently dispensed and presented for payment, so the number of prescriptions issued is not known centrally.

The figures shown are presented by the calendar year in which the prescription was paid to the pharmacist; it should be noted that there may be a time lag where prescriptions have been dispensed by the community pharmacist in a particular year but paid the following year. The data provided only covers drugs dispensed in primary care, as drugs prescribed and dispensed in hospital cannot be captured centrally due to the use of different hospital IT systems.

Number of prescription items dispensed in each of the last three years

Calendar Year	Number of prescription items
2011	36,322,851
2012	37,841,141
2013	38,661,481

Tattoo Removal

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether tattoo removal can be carried out on the Health Service.

(AQW 34622/11-15)

Mr Poots: Plastic surgery procedures carried out through the Health and Social Care Service in Northern Ireland are consistent with the principles set out in the policy document "A Policy to Make Best Use of Resources in Plastic Surgery and Related Specialties". This states that clear clinical criteria will be used to determine whether a patient should have surgery. In the case of tattoo removal, the policy states that tattoo removal will only be available if the following criteria are met;

- the tattoo is visible in a person's normal daily life, and either
- the tattoo may put the patient's life, health, or livelihood at risk, or
- the tattoo was inflicted without the patient's valid consent.

A copy of the policy document is available on the DHSSPS website at http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/microsoft_word_-_a_policy_to_make_best_use_of_resources_in_plastic_surgery_and_related_specialties__205_kb_.pdf

Wheelchair Accessible Scales

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when wheelchair accessible scales will be available at the Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children.

(AQW 34626/11-15)

Mr Poots: I can confirm that wheelchair accessible scales were installed in the Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children on Tues 24th June 2014.

Social Workers

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he will consider the introduction of a new code of conduct as part of the development of a new social work strategy.

(AQW 34630/11-15)

Mr Poots: It is important that the standards of conduct, performance and ethics set by the NISCC in Codes take into account the different level of training, roles, responsibilities and job requirements of both social workers and social care workers to guide individuals and ensure they can be held to account for actions or omissions in their conduct or practice commensurate with expected levels of behaviour and performance.

I am fully supportive of the work being progressed by the NISCC to revise and update the Code of Practice for Social Care Workers (including social workers) which was developed over 12 years ago.

There will be two new Codes, one for social workers and one for social care workers, that will set out core standards of conduct that apply to both alongside specific standards that reflect specific differences in performance expectations.

This is in line with the Department's policy and the aims of the Social Work Strategy and officials are working with the NISCC to this end.

Legal Highs: Emergency Departments

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people have reported to emergency units because of the effects of legal high psychoactive substances, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 34640/11-15)

Mr Poots: Information on attendances at emergency care departments because of the effect of legal high psychoactive substances is not available, and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Legal Highs

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what discussions he has had with the Minister of Justice on the issue of legal highs.

(AQW 34641/11-15)

Mr Poots: My Department leads on the cross-departmental strategy developed to tackle alcohol and drug misuse in Northern Ireland, the New Strategic Direction for Alcohol and Drugs (NSD Phase 2). The NSD Phase 2 contains outcomes to reduce the availability and supply of all illegal/illicit drugs, including New Psychoactive Substances. With regard to illegal drugs, enforcement of the key UK-wide legislation (the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971) is the responsibility of the PSNI, and therefore this Department has, and continues, to work closely with the Department of Justice and the Criminal Justice sector on this issue.

Examples of cross-departmental working include the Law and Criminal Justice Advisory Group, chaired by the Department of Justice, which is one of four advisory groups set up to provide advice and policy guidance on specific priorities contained within NSD Phase 2. In addition, key links have been made between NSD Phase 2, the DOJ Community Safety Strategy, the Organised Crime Task Force, and the Strategic Framework for Reducing Offending. At a local level, my Department continues to promote joined up working between the Drug and Alcohol Co-ordination Teams, the Policing and Community Safety Partnerships and local councils.

My Department is also represented on the Organised Crime Task Force Drugs Expert Group – chaired by the PSNI with representation from the UK Border Agency, the Department of Justice, and other key partners – which meets on an ongoing basis to share information and intelligence, and to monitor and oversee joint action to help restrict supply and reduce the availability of all illicit drugs, including New Psychoactive Substances.

The issue of these substances was also discussed by all Ministers at the Executive meeting on 05 June 2014.

Legal Highs: Discussions with Other Jurisdictions

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what discussions he has had with his counterparts in other jurisdictions in the UK and in the Republic of Ireland on the issue of legal highs.

(AQW 34642/11-15)

Mr Poots: The British-Irish Council Ministerial Sectoral Group on Substance Misuse is chaired by the Republic of Ireland and includes representatives from the UK Government, Scotland, Northern Ireland, Wales, Jersey, Guernsey and the Isle of Man. This group meets on an ongoing basis to share information and intelligence, and to monitor and oversee joint action to help restrict supply and reduce the availability of all illicit drugs, including New Psychoactive Substances.

In addition, as the key UK-wide legislation (the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971) is reserved to the Westminster Government, I have engaged with the Home Secretary Theresa May MP and other Home Office Ministers on the need for strengthening the relevant legislation on this issue. Following this, the Home Office is currently overseeing an “expert review” of the issue and is due to make recommendations in the near future.

Fire and Rescue Service: Vehicles

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the number of white cars operated by the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service; (ii) the mileage covered in the last twelve months; and (iii) the procedures in place to differentiate private use.

(AQW 34677/11-15)

Mr Poots:

- (i) The number of white cars operated by the Northern Ireland Fire & Rescue Service is 115.
- (ii) The total mileage for the last 12 months is 1,326,738 giving an average of 11,537 per vehicle.
- (iii) In accordance with NIFRS policy private usage of these vehicles by flexi duty Officers is not permitted.

Adult Safeguarding Policy

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the Adult Safeguarding Policy.

(AQW 34678/11-15)

Mr Poots: Work on the development of an Adult Safeguarding Policy is being taken forward by my department in partnership with the Department of Justice. The draft policy is currently being finalised. We intend undertake a final round of engagement with key stakeholders over the summer months and commence public consultation on the draft policy in Autumn 2014. It is our intention to publish the final policy in the early part of 2015.

Hospital Beds

Ms S Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for a breakdown of medical beds within each local hospital.

(AQW 34681/11-15)

Mr Poots: Information in relation to the number of available beds in HSC Hospitals in Northern Ireland is regularly collected by the Department.

The following table details the average number of available beds under medical specialties by HSC Hospital in 2012/13.

MRI Scanner: Royal Hospital

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the purchase and the installation of the MRI scanner at the Royal Hospital, Belfast.

(AQW 34686/11-15)

Mr Poots: Work on the site is due to commence in August 2014, with completion of the MRI suite expected by the end of March 2015. The Trust plans to make the MRI scanner operational immediately after handover.

Bangor Hospital: Capital Works

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail any future capital works planned for the Bangor Hospital.

(AQW 34701/11-15)

Mr Poots: The South Eastern HSC Trust has no current plans for future capital works at Bangor Hospital, however, a project to convert the old kitchen block has recently been completed and staff will be transferring from leased accommodation to Bangor Hospital after the summer .

Testicular Cancer

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many men were diagnosed with testicular cancer in (i) 2003; and (ii) 2013.

(AQW 34713/11-15)

Mr Poots: The latest information provided by the Northern Ireland Cancer Registry (NICR) indicates that 56 men were diagnosed with testicular cancer in 2003. Figures for 2013 are not currently available however 67 men were diagnosed in 2012.

Information on cancer incidence and survival rates in NI are available on the NICR website at <http://www.qub.ac.uk/research-centres/nicr/CancerData/>. Cancer incidence figures for 2013 will be available in March 2015.

Eating Disorders

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the service provision for people below the age of 14 years diagnosed with eating disorders.

(AQW 34749/11-15)

Mr Poots: Eating Disorder Services for young people are provided by specialist community-based teams in each Health & Social Care Trust area. The Belfast Trust provides these services for the South Eastern Trust.

Inpatient care for children and adolescents with eating disorders is usually provided at Beechcroft, the Regional Child and Adolescent Mental Health Inpatient Unit. The Unit provides inpatient care for children and young people up to the age of 18.

However, if a patient's condition is primarily physical, clinicians may decide that the best place for treatment is an acute hospital setting. If this is the case, acute paediatric medical and CAMHS eating disorders services work in partnership.

If a patient requires intense specialist treatment for an eating disorder, Trusts can access beds in England, Scotland and Ireland through the Extra Contractual Referral (ECR) process. Developments in local Eating Disorder Services in recent years have resulted in a significant reduction in the number of children and young people having to be referred outside Northern Ireland for treatment.

Eating Disorders

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many young people are diagnosed with an eating disorder.

(AQW 34750/11-15)

Mr Poots: It is not possible to identify the number of young people diagnosed with an eating disorder.

The number of admissions of young people to acute hospitals as a result of eating disorders in each Health and Social Care Trust is given in the table below. The figures do not include admissions to any community or mental health facilities.

Financial year	Admissions
2010/11	15
2011/12	11
2012/13	16

Notes:

- 1) Young people have been defined as those aged under sixteen years.
- 2) Eating disorders were searched for in the primary diagnostic position only.

Mental Capacity Legislation

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps his Department is taking to ensure that new legislation on mental capacity complies with requirements outlined in Article 12 of United Nations Charter on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.

(AQW 34752/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Department has taken account of the UN Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and will continue to assess the compatibility of the draft Mental Capacity Bill with the Convention, in light of recent developments such as the publication of the General Comment on Article 12. This assessment will also be informed by views expressed during the current consultation exercise on the draft Bill during which the Department intends to focus on raising awareness of the guiding principles of the draft Bill. These relate to maximising capacity and supporting people where possible to make decisions for themselves. The draft Bill's alignment with the themes of equal treatment, inclusion and accessibility enshrined in the Convention will also be highlighted.

Mental Capacity Legislation

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety will consult with people with learning disabilities regarding the draft mental capacity legislation, to raise awareness and facilitate their involvement in monitoring its introduction and implementation.

(AQW 34753/11-15)

Mr Poots: The draft Mental Capacity Bill is a wide-ranging piece of legislation which has the potential to affect many people across various programmes of care. It was published for consultation on 27th May this year, following a detailed policy development phase during which key stakeholders were extensively engaged.

Five public consultation events are being held across Northern Ireland and, in addition, my Department, along with the Department of Justice, has offered to meet with any group during the consultation period to raise awareness of the draft Bill and gather feedback. To date, a number of events and workshops have already been arranged involving people with a learning disability. Officials from both Departments also recently presented to the All Party Group on Learning Disability. Easy read material is also available.

The Departments are also planning a collaborative approach with a wide range of stakeholders, including people with a learning disability and their representative organisations, to plan for the implementation of the legislation, for example, on the development of the associated Regulations, Code of Practice and training for those with a role under the legislation.

Learning Disabilities: Families

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how his Department will recognise the key role played by families and their involvement as a source of support to their loved one with a learning disability when making decisions about their own life.

(AQW 34754/11-15)

Mr Poots: My Department, along with the Department of Justice, recently published the draft Mental Capacity Bill for consultation. The draft legislation sets out a new framework for decision making in relation to a person's care, treatment or personal welfare. It also covers decisions about property and affairs.

The Bill details the importance placed on the right of an individual to make their own decisions, but recognises that there will be many circumstances in which families and carers will play a role in helping and supporting a person to make their own decisions where they have capacity to do so.

For people who lack capacity, the Bill puts in place new and improved safeguards that go beyond what is required under the current law and which also ensure that families and carers are actively involved in any decisions made, through determining what would be in a person's best interests to acting as a Nominated Person under the Bill.

Tombstoning: Injuries

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people have been injured as a result of tombstoning, in the last twelve months.

(AQW 34762/11-15)

Mr Poots: Information on the number of people injured as a result of tombstoning is not available.

Dental Hygiene

Mr Brady asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline his plans to sustain the future viability of dental hygiene training.

(AQW 34797/11-15)

Mr Poots: I am aware that no new students have been enrolled into the two year diploma course at the Belfast School of Dental Hygiene since September 2011. Officials from the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust, Queen's University Belfast and the Department have been considering options on the way forward and I expect to receive their advice in due course.

Downe Hospital Emergency Unit

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant of AQW 33198/11-15 and given that the Downe Hospital Emergency Unit has had restricted opening times for six months, what progress has been made on the proposals to address the shortfall in the number of middle grade doctors by (i) converting middle grade doctor posts to consultant posts; (ii) developing middle grade staff by working intensely with locum staff; and (iii) employing and training GP trainees.

(AQW 34805/11-15)

Mr Poots:

- i) The South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust converted 4 middle grade doctor posts to consultant posts in 2011 as it had been consistently difficult to fill the middle grade vacancies. Other Trusts are considering this as an option.
- ii) Trusts continue to seek to work with locums to help them develop to work at middle grade level but this has been met with limited success at present due to the small number of locums taking up this development opportunity, and there are currently no locums who fall into this category.
- iii) The South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust had one GP in training for A&E but this GP has now moved to a different speciality outside A&E in a different Trust. The Southern Health and Social Care Trust currently employ a number of qualified GPs with special interests in A&E who provide sessional work.

Epilepsy

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people have a diagnosis of epilepsy. (AQW 34837/11-15)

Mr Poots: Under the Quality & Outcomes Framework (QOF), GPs maintain a register of the number of patients aged 18 and over who are currently on drug treatment for epilepsy.

As at 31 March 2014, there were 15,378 patients on the epilepsy registers of GPs located in Northern Ireland.

Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission Inquiry: Emergency Healthcare

Mr F McCann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how his Department will support and engage with the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission's Inquiry into Emergency Health Care. (AQO 6478/11-15)

Mr Poots: My Department is committed to providing all necessary assistance and support to the Commission in carrying out its investigation.

I met with senior representatives of the Commission last month to discuss the Terms of Reference for the Inquiry. My Department and the Commission have agreed to work constructively together as the Inquiry moves forward.

Speak Up and Save a Life

Mr Girvan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the Public Health Agency's Speak up and save a life campaign. (AQO 6483/11-15)

Mr Poots: 'The Speak up and save a life campaign' is the first public information campaign of its kind in Northern Ireland. The campaign message focuses on lives saved by organ donation and takes a testimonial approach which shows the impact of organ donation from the recipient and the donor family perspectives, highlighting the importance of sharing our organ donation wishes with loved ones.

Unfortunately, the number of transplants needed is rising due to an aging population and increases in illnesses such as diabetes, kidney, heart and liver disease, so it is crucial that people speak up if lives are to be saved.

The Public Health Agency has already completed phase one of the campaign and has recently launched phase two which runs until 31 October 2014.

During the first phase, in February and March this year, the website received 11,260 visits and the registration page 3,629 visits. Social media also performed well, with Facebook ads and YouTube videos receiving significant levels of likes and clicks. A full evaluation of the campaign will be produced following the end of the campaign.

I take this opportunity to once again urge everyone to consider signing the organ donor register and having made such a decision, to discuss their wishes with their families and loved ones.

Care Homes

Mr Attwood asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what assurances he can give, following the Health and Social Care Board's review into residential care, that Health and Social Care Trusts will not unilaterally remove open admission policies or close care homes in the next twelve months. (AQO 6484/11-15)

Mr Poots: Mr Speaker, with your permission I will answer questions 9 and 15 together. As you will be aware, the board of the HSC Board considered and approved the post consultation report on Making Choices: Meeting the Current and Future Needs of Older People' on Thursday 12 June.

The report provides a thorough analysis of views shared during the consultation process and sets out final criteria against which statutory residential homes for older people will be evaluated. Where that evaluation indicates a clear case for a home to continue to provide residential care, the relevant Trust will be asked to review any non-admission policy in respect of that home. Any proposals for change will be subject to full consultation on a home by home basis.

Patients: '10,000 Voices: Improving the Patient Experience'

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the recent findings of the 10,000 Voices: Improving the patient experience report. (AQO 6485/11-15)

Mr Poots: A Regional Outcomes Report on the 10,000 Voices Project is in final draft and due to be presented to the Public Health Agency Board in August 2014 and the Health and Social Care Board September 2014 and will be published thereafter.

A briefing report on the progress of the 10,000 Voices Project was provided to my Department in May 2014 detailing the progress based on almost 4000 stories obtained from a range of different health care settings to date.

My assessment is that the interim report indicates that through this initiative, significant local improvements have already been achieved, and that there are also action plans in place for further improvements.

Trusts have implemented Quality Improvement measures across the areas where the stories were gathered. Most of these improvements have been practical and easily implemented solutions to issues raised by patients on their experience.

This initiative has also provided an opportunity for a partnership approach to shape the way in which we deliver and commission services based on patient experience.

By using information obtained from peoples stories of their experience of health care provision, to inform the commissioning of future services, we can be assured that quality improvements will be based on information which we know really matters to patients.

Suicide Prevention Projects

Mr McCartney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the procurement process for suicide prevention projects.

(AQO 6486/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Public Health Agency will take forward the procurement of suicide prevention services, along with services linked to wider mental health promotion, in 3 phases over the next 12 months. Phase 1 will be initiated after the summer, with the aim that newly procured services will commence from April 2015. These services will include awareness programmes to support the mental and emotional health needs of specified groups - LGBT individuals and their families, travellers, and minority ethnic communities. They will also include community based psychological intervention services for people who self harm and family support services

It is anticipated that Phase 2 and 3 tenders will be awarded by June 2015 covering services such as counselling, complementary therapy, training, community support and bereavement support.

The Public Health Agency will keep the timescales under review and will provide periodic updates of any changes via their website.

Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme

Ms Boyle asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much money has been returned to his departmental budget as a result of the Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme.

(AQO 6487/11-15)

Mr Poots: The Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme is a UK wide scheme negotiated between the Pharmaceutical Industry and the Department of Health (London) on behalf of all parts of the UK.

Through the scheme, for each of the last three financial years, Northern Ireland has been apportioned the following:

- For the 2011/2012 year £3.43 million
- For the 2012/2013 year £3 million
- For the 2013/2014 year £2.85 million

Children: Named Contact

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what consideration has he given to a designated named contact for every child, similar to the provision included in the Children and Young People (Scotland) Act 2014.

(AQO 6488/11-15)

Mr Poots: In drafting the Adoption and Children Bill, consideration has been given to new policy and legislative provisions in other jurisdictions. These have been highlighted in the consultation document on the draft Bill and include reference to the "named person service" recently introduced in Scotland. This service requires certain providers to make available an individual, to carry out specific functions in order to promote, support or safeguard the wellbeing of every child or young person from birth until they reach 18 years of age. Consultation responses on the Bill will inform a decision on whether a similar provision should be introduced in Northern Ireland.

Paediatric Congenital Cardiac Services

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the review of paediatric congenital cardiac services.

(AQO 6489/11-15)

Mr Poots: The International Expert Team, led by Dr John Mayer, commissioned by Dr James Reilly TD, Minister of Health in the Republic of Ireland, and me to carry out an independent assessment of current and future needs for cardiology and cardiac surgery for congenital heart disease in the Republic of Ireland and Northern Ireland is aiming to submit its report to us shortly.

The team will describe the existing hospital services in both jurisdictions, outline options for service configuration and governance arrangements and recommend the most appropriate model that meets the population health needs and other requirements of both jurisdictions.

Minister Reilly and I will need to carefully consider the report and I will aim to make public the implications for the future delivery of this service for Northern Ireland as soon as I am in a position to do so.

Care Homes

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the recommendation in the Health and Social Care Board's Statutory Residential Care Homes post consultation report that Health and Social Care Trusts should review their individual positions regarding permanent admissions.

(AQO 6490/11-15)

Mr Poots: Mr Speaker, with your permission I will answer questions 9 and 15 together. As you will be aware, the board of the HSC Board considered and approved the post consultation report on Making Choices: Meeting the Current and Future Needs of Older People' on Thursday 12 June.

The report provides a thorough analysis of views shared during the consultation process and sets out final criteria against which statutory residential homes for older people will be evaluated. Where that evaluation indicates a clear case for a home to continue to provide residential care, the relevant Trust will be asked to review any non-admission policy in respect of that home. Any proposals for change will be subject to full consultation on a home by home basis.

Department of Justice

David Paige: Serious Case Review

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to the Serious Case Review into David Paige, why his "stable" assessment of August 2012 was not revisited after being downgraded from "acute" status; and for his assessment of whether this would have assisted in alerting authorities to any potential reoffending.

(AQW 34321/11-15)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): The Stable Assessment is an accredited risk assessment tool completed at 12 month intervals in accordance with guidance in the PPANI Manual of Practice. The Local Area Public Protection Panel (LAPPP) met and agreed it was appropriate to recategorise David Page's risk status from Category 2 to Category 1 approximately four weeks before a further annual stable assessment would have been due to be undertaken.

In this case the LAPPP considered a series of favourable assessments, using Acute Assessment tools, which had been had been completed in the months preceding the reduction in Mr Page's risk category. In addition they considered a number of other positive contributory factors including current compliance with Sexual Offences Prevention Order (SOPO) and bail conditions and the absence of any emerging concerns about potential victim access opportunities. On the basis of these indicators it was not considered necessary at that time to revisit the Stable Assessment.

The Serious Case Review recommended that where the LAPPP meeting is considering recategorising the risk category and the current Stable assessment is more than 6 months old, that consideration should be given to the need for the Stable assessment to be revisited. This has now been incorporated into practice.

The Serious Case Review concluded that in view of the thoroughness of the supervision provided by both PBNI and PSNI in the period leading up to the offence, it is unlikely that any different assessment of the risk posed by Mr Page, including a revisited Stable assessment, would have assisted in alerting authorities to any potential reoffending.

David Paige: Serious Case Review

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to the Serious Case Review into David Paige, why he was not considered to be high risk given his continued refusal to acknowledge his offending behaviour which would have automatically meant he rejected the suggestion that any further actions would be wrong.

(AQW 34322/11-15)

Mr Ford: A range of factors are taken into consideration when assessing the appropriate risk category including: current behaviour; absence of any emerging behavioural concerns (as evidenced in this case through visits carried out by PSNI's Public Protection Unit); the outcome of accredited assessments; the offender's attitudes towards his offence; and compliance with external controls put in place (including Sexual Offences Prevention Order and bail conditions). Mr Page's continued refusal to acknowledge his offending behaviour would not, in itself, have provided a sufficient basis alone to maintain Mr Page at a higher risk category.

David Paige: Custodial Sentence

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, to confirm that David Paige will not be released from prison, even when his custodial sentence has been served, until he no longer poses a threat or danger, acknowledges his offending behaviour and completes all required sexual offender behaviour programmes.

(AQW 34323/11-15)

Mr Ford: The court imposed a determinate custodial sentence on Mr Page and there is a statutory requirement that he must therefore be released on licence once he has served the custodial part of his sentence set by the sentencing judge.

It is only where the court has imposed an indeterminate custodial sentence that release is at the direction of the Parole Commissioners for Northern Ireland who must be satisfied before directing release that it is no longer necessary, for the protection of the public from serious harm, for the offender to continue to be confined in custody.

David Paige: Serious Case Review

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to the Serious Case Review into David Paige, why he was downgraded from a Category 2 sex offender to a Category 1 in August 2012, whilst he was awaiting sentencing for breaches of Sexual Offences Prevention Orders proving he was not compliant with court orders.

(AQW 34324/11-15)

Mr Ford: At the time that Mr Page was recategorised from a Category 2 to a Category 1 risk, he was awaiting sentence in relation to a breach of a Sexual Offences Prevention Order (SOPO) which had occurred 22 months previously on 1 November 2010. The decision to recategorise was based on assessments which took account of more recent factors including: compliance with SOPO conditions over that 22 month period; adherence to bail conditions; no evidence of any emerging concerns, including potential victim access opportunities; and compliance with home visits by PSNI's Public Protection Unit.

David Paige: Serious Case Review

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to the Serious Case Review into David Paige which states "The independent reviewer found that the agencies discharged their responsibilities fully and conscientiously in the management of the offender in the community", and "Accommodation was carefully assessed prior to approval being granted", to detail (i) how his Lurgan residence could have been deemed appropriate and as carefully assessed, given the number of children residing in the area, particularly on the same street and the close proximity to several schools; and (ii) whether the Public Protection Arrangements Northern Ireland intend to review this section of their report.

(AQW 34383/11-15)

Mr Ford: Two potential addresses provided by Mr Page were assessed by police officers. One was rejected on the grounds of location and the second address was approved following assessment. The approved premises were located within approximately five minutes walk of two local educational establishments; a situation that is likely to apply to many urban residential properties across Northern Ireland. However the premises were not on the same street or road as those establishments nor did it overlook the entrance to either.

The independent reviewer, who conducted the Serious Case Review, concluded that the agencies had acted conscientiously regarding the management of Mr Page and the recommendation contained in the report has been implemented by the agencies. There is no mechanism for further review.

Probation Board for Northern Ireland

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33561/11-15, whether this funding is open to all local authorities that are prepared to facilitate a service for the Probation Board for Northern Ireland.

(AQW 34384/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Community Grants Scheme operated by Probation Board for Northern Ireland (PBNi) invites application from organisations and groups in an annual advertisement. The scheme is open to local authorities who wish to apply and further details can be found on the PBNi website; www.pbni.org.uk.

Probation Board for Northern Ireland: Grants

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33561/11-15, in relation to the £50,000 received in grants from the Probation Board for Northern Ireland over a number of years, what specific services Banbridge District Council provide to facilitate community service.

(AQW 34386/11-15)

Mr Ford: Banbridge District Council established an employability project known as the Restore project in 2009. The Restore project applied to Probation Board for Northern Ireland's Community Grants Scheme to help facilitate the delivery of Community Service placements in the council area. The project provides PBNi with 20 placements per annum for those on Community Service Orders.

Prison Service: Lisnevin Site

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the future of the Lisnevin Prison Service site in Millisle.
(AQW 34392/11-15)

Mr Ford: The site will continue in its present role as the Prison Service College until the Northern Ireland Community Safety College is completed at Desertcreat.

Consideration is being given to extending the training facility for use by other Justice Organisations.

National Crime Agency: Northern Ireland

Supporting Prisoner-at-risk Proceedings

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice whether the prisoner was subject to Supporting Prisoner at Risk (SPAR) proceedings on the most recent occasions prior to and after the episodes of self-harm; and if so, how many times SPAR proceedings closed and reopened during his time in custody.

(AQW 34439/11-15)

Mr Ford: This information has been withheld as disclosure would be contrary to the Data Protection Act 1998.

NIPS has asked the Prisoner Ombudsman to conduct an independent investigation into this case. I hope the Member will be reassured that it is being treated both seriously and with transparency.

Committal Proceedings

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice how many committal proceedings in the last twelve months proceeded by way of (i) preliminary investigations; and (ii) preliminary inquiries.

(AQW 34446/11-15)

Mr Ford: During the last 12 months, provisional data indicates there were 35 committal proceedings by way of a preliminary investigation, 1,579 by way of a preliminary inquiry and 22 by way of a mixed committal.

Of this number, a total of three preliminary investigations, 40 preliminary inquiries and three mixed committals were not returned to the Crown Court. The outcome of each of these committal proceedings is outlined below.

Courts and Tribunal Service: Service Providers

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 33915/11-15, why this investigation and subsequent report was not made public at the time or on conclusion.
(AQW 34456/11-15)

Mr Ford: Details of the investigation and subsequent report were not made public as internal reports are not routinely published by the Department of Justice. Any requests for access to information are considered on a case by case basis under the Freedom of Information Act.

No material breach of contract was identified by the investigation. Disciplinary actions are a matter for the contractor. The Police Service of Northern Ireland was consulted and advised that no criminal investigation was required.

(AQW 34457/11-15)

Preliminary Enquiries

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to detail (i) the total percentage of preliminary enquiries assigned to counsel for hearing; and (ii) the percentage of enquiries broken down per court division, in each of the last three calendar years.

(AQW 34469/11-15)

Mr Ford: There were 1,467 preliminary enquiries during 2011 with counsel instructed for 14% of defendants, 1,616 preliminary enquiries during 2012 with counsel instructed for 17% of defendants and 1,669 preliminary enquiries in 2013, with counsel instructed for 17% of defendants.

The percentage of preliminary enquiries in each court division is outlined below.

Legal Aid: Legal Services Commission

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the process of making Legal Aid payments by the Legal Services Commission; and for a breakdown of the timescale in which payments were made in each month of the last three years.

(AQW 34502/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Commission processes claims in chronological order. I am satisfied that this is an equitable basis on which to process payments.

There are two parts to the payment process. The first is a system to validate and authorise the claim on the Commission's case management system. The second is a procedure for paying authorised claims.

The Commission has performance targets in place for each of part of the process, which are measured on a quarterly basis. To extract the information on a monthly basis would involve disproportionate cost.

Table 1 below provides details of the Commission's performance in respect of the time taken from receipt of a claim until it is authorised for payment. From 2012/13 the Commission has measured performance separately in respect of standard and non-standard fees, as standard fees are more straightforward and take less time to assess and process for payment.

Table 1 – Time taken from receipt of claim to authorisation of claims

Year	Payments	Target Performance	Q1	Q2	Q3	Q4	Total
2011/12	Authorisation of Standard fees for payment from date of receipt	75% within 6 weeks					86%*
	Authorisation of Non-Standard fees for payment from date of receipt	75% within 6 weeks					77%*
2012/13	Authorisation of Standard fees for payment from date of receipt	75% within 4 weeks	74%	73%	62%	53%	64%
	Authorisation of Non-Standard fees for payment from date of receipt	75% within 12 weeks	92%	83%	85%	60%	79%
2013/14	Authorisation of Standard fees for payment from date of receipt	75% within 4 weeks	51%	65%	50%	9%	47%
	Authorisation of Non-Standard fees for payment from date of receipt	75% within 12 weeks	78%	46%	22%	9%	41%

* The split between standard and non-standard was not reported on a quarterly basis during 2011/12. Therefore only year-end figures are available.

Table 2: Time taken from authorisation of claim to payment

Year	Payments	Target Performance	Q1	Q2	Q3	Q4	Total
2011/12	Payments (Legal Fund) from date of authorisation.	85% in one week	86%	91%	87%	92%	89%
2012/13	Payments (Legal Fund) from date of authorisation.	95% in 7 working days	98%	97%	99%	9%	79%
2013/14	Payments (Legal Fund) from date of authorisation.	95% in 7 working days	81%	99%	73%	94%	91%

National Crime Agency: Northern Ireland

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice whether he has held any discussions with the National Crime Agency (NCA) since January 2014 in connection with the consequences of organised crime in Northern Ireland not being effectively countered as a result of the NCA currently not being fully operational.

(AQW 34511/11-15)

Mr Ford: My Department is in constant contact with the National Crime Agency in relation to this issue and the ongoing attempts to ensure that it is resolved.

We are currently engaging with the Northern Ireland Office, the Home Office and law enforcement agencies on a further proposed model which we would intend to put to all parties and relevant bodies as soon as practicable.

Zero-hours Contracts

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 34185/11-15, whether this applied to contracted companies providing services to his Department following a tender process; and if not (i) how many service providers use zero hour contracts; (ii) the name of the providers using zero-hour contracts; and (iii) why a disparity is permitted when using Departmental funding.

(AQW 34514/11-15)

Mr Ford: My answer to AQW/34185/11-15 did not apply to contracted companies providing services to my Department following a tender process.

- (i) My Department currently has two contracts which use zero hours.
- (ii) G4S Secure Solutions (UK) Ltd is the service provider for both of these.
- (iii) As per my previous reply, within the Northern Ireland Civil Service HR Handbook there is no provision for a Department to provide zero hours working for permanent civil servants. In one of the two contracts, it was the employees of G4S Secure Solutions (UK) who specifically requested zero hours and declined offers of full-time, or part-time, employment.

Legal Highs

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Justice to detail the current legislation that can be used by PSNI officers to cease or arrest people selling legal highs.

(AQW 34522/11-15)

Mr Ford: Current Home Office guidance outlines the relevant legislative provisions and the main types of offence that can be used against those selling what are known as "legal highs". The sale of "legal highs" is not in itself a specific offence though alternative powers can be available.

The offences available include selling controlled drugs, selling drugs paraphernalia, and breaching the Intoxicating Substances (Supply) Act 1985. General Product Safety Regulations has also been utilised in terms of breaching consumer protection regulations.

Twelve month Temporary Class Drug Orders can also be made by the Home Secretary under the Misuse of Drugs Act - a reserved matter - to ban emerging substances that have not yet been assessed by the Advisory Council for the Misuse of Drugs.

Across jurisdictions it is acknowledged that more needs to be done in terms of the law around "legal highs". The Home Secretary has therefore commissioned a Review of the effectiveness of the current legislation.

Whilst the Review is ongoing, I continue to support the efforts of all related agencies and local Councils as they work to remove these dangerous substances from our communities.

Legal Highs

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Justice whether he has met with his counterparts in other jurisdictions to learn about other efforts combating the sale and distribution of legal highs.

(AQW 34523/11-15)

Mr Ford: I have met with counterparts in other jurisdictions to discuss a wide range of Criminal Justice matters and whilst not the specific focus of discussions, it is evident that responding to the emergence of New Psychoactive Substances across the world has been a challenge given the range and diversity of these illicit substances. This has resulted in a range of innovative responses including the utilisation of existing legislative provisions aimed at controlling the open sale of these harmful substances.

However, it is also clear that more needs to be done and as this remains a reserved matter, I welcome the Home Office led Review that will consider the effectiveness of the current legislation and operational response to date.

I understand that the review will consider the opportunities and risks of any new ideas identified, informed by international and other evidence and make a clear recommendation for an effective and sustainable UK-wide legislative response.

Legal Highs

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Justice to detail all programmes his Department has funded to educate young people about the dangers of legal highs, broken down by constituency, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 34524/11-15)

Mr Ford: While the provision of education programmes is not the primary locus of the Department of Justice, my Department's Community Safety Strategy does refer to the need to increase awareness about substance misuse amongst young people. Policing and Community Safety Partnerships (PCSPs) are addressing this where it has been identified as an issue of local concern.

Whilst I am not able to provide the information in the format you have requested I have attached information on the wide range of programmes and events that have been delivered across Northern Ireland that have either been designed specifically, or contained elements within them, to educate young people about the dangers associated with taking New Psychoactive Substances (NPS). You may wish to seek further detail from local PCSPs.

Substance misuse issues, including NPS, are also addressed through the delivery of appropriately tailored programmes to young people under supervision by the Probation Board for Northern Ireland or the Youth Justice Agency. I am also aware that the PSNI have undertaken a number of awareness raising events in local schools to highlight the dangers of these substances. You may wish to approach these organisations for specific details on their programmes.

It is evident that a wide range of stakeholders are engaged in responding to this issue and my Department remains committed to working and supporting all efforts to highlight the risks and consequences involved in taking illicit substances, including new psychoactive substances.

Legal Highs

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Justice how many people have been prosecuted for selling legal high products to children, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 34525/11-15)

Mr Ford: As the sale of New Psychoactive Substances to any member of the public is not a specific offence there cannot have been any subsequent prosecutions.

Whilst this is the case I commend the specific action that has been taken by Local Councils under the General Product Safety Regulations 2005, against those who sell these products, in order to remove these harmful substances from sale to the general public.

Legal Highs: Dangers

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Justice whether he has had discussions with the Minister of Education on how young people in school can be warned about the dangers of legal highs.

(AQW 34526/11-15)

Mr Ford: Whilst I have not met with the Minister for Education on this specific issue, we are both contributors to the Executive's New Strategic Direction on Alcohol and Drugs (NSD) which recognises the importance of raising awareness around the risks and the potentially fatal consequences, of all substance misuse, particularly with young people.

Whilst the Criminal Justice system has a role to play in reaching out to young people either through Statutory Agencies or through a range of programmes delivered by Policing and Community Safety Partnerships, you may also wish to approach the Minister for Education regarding details of the drug education programmes included in the Curriculum.

Birds: Poisoning, Shooting or Trapping

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of prosecutions for the (i) poisoning; (ii) shooting; and (iii) trapping of (a) red kite; (b) golden eagle; (c) white-tailed eagle; (d) peregrine; (e) hen harrier; and (f) buzzard, in each of the last ten years.

(AQW 34532/11-15)

Mr Ford: No prosecutions have been made in the courts on charges relating to either the poisoning, shooting or trapping of a red kite, golden eagle, white-tailed eagle, peregrine, hen harrier or buzzard during the period 2007 to 2013. To provide information for years prior to 2007 would require a manual review of court records at a disproportionate cost.

Police: Pension Scheme

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice to detail the regulations under which the closed police pension scheme operates.
(AQW 34579/11-15)

Mr Ford: The regulations under which the closed police pension schemes operate are as follows:

- The Royal Ulster Constabulary Pensions Order 1949
- The Royal Ulster Constabulary Regulations 1973
- The Royal Ulster Constabulary Regulations 1988
- The Royal Ulster Constabulary Pensions (Supplementary Provisions) Regulations 1988

Magilligan Prison

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice to detail the total spent on the preparation and planning of the new prison project at Magilligan, from 2007 to date.
(AQW 34584/11-15)

Mr Ford: The total spend to date on the preparation and development of the new Prison at Magilligan is £3,799,905.

Prison Service: Voluntary Early Retirement

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice whether all Prison Service staff who left the Service under Voluntary Early Retirement will receive the same excess leave pay as those who remained in the Service.
(AQW 34595/11-15)

Mr Ford: Staff who have left the Northern Ireland Prison Service, have been paid in line with the terms of the Annual Leave Chapter of the Northern Ireland Civil Service (NICS) HR Handbook relating to cash compensation and have received payment in hours or calendar days, in line with their contract, in the month of leaving.

Staff who have remained in post received payment in May 2014 in hours or working days.

Trafficking: Associated Sexual Charges

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 34042 11-15, in relation to the recently concluded case of R-v-Weir following public remarks made by Robert Weir in the Sunday Life on 22 June 2014 in which he claims he only pleaded guilty to controlling prostitution because of "the threat" of being charged with human trafficking, and as this charge was notably dropped, whether he will conduct a review into the handling of this matter, specifically, but not exclusively, focusing on how this charge was permitted to be withdrawn under the circumstances; and to detail whether a plea deal was arranged; and if so, if this was at the suggestion of the prosecution or defence.
(AQW 34605/11-15)

Mr Ford: Prosecution decisions are a matter for the independent Public Prosecution Service (PPS), having regard to the public interest and in accordance with the Test for Prosecution. It is therefore not appropriate for me as Justice Minister to become involved in such matters or to review the decisions made in individual cases.

Domestic Violence Advisers

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the tendering process for Independent Domestic Violence Advisers for Multi-Agency Risk Assessment Conferences.
(AQW 34633/11-15)

Mr Ford: The appointment of an Independent Advice and Support Service for high risk victims of domestic violence remains a key priority for my Department. My Officials have been working, on an ongoing basis, with the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety and the Police Service of Northern Ireland to define and develop the role of the Service and this specification is in the final stage of being drafted.

One final issue regarding management of the sensitive information which this Service will encounter remains to be resolved by all funding partners to enable the completion of the specification. We anticipate that we will be in a position to commence the procurement process in Autumn this year.

Adult Safeguarding Policy

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the Adult Safeguarding Policy.
(AQW 34634/11-15)

Mr Ford: My Department has been working in partnership with the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety on a new adult safeguarding policy. It is intended to consult on the policy in the autumn, including the legislative change that is needed to underpin it. The final policy will be published following consideration of the consultation responses.

The development of an adult safeguarding policy will complement the measures already in place to protect older people from abuse and my Department's plans to enhance further the support available to all victims of crime.

Criminal Justice Workers: Regional Funding

Mr Cameron asked the Minister of Justice whether he plans to provide regional funding for Criminal Justice Workers currently funded through the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, Health and Social Care Trusts and Policing and Community Safety Partnerships.

(AQW 34636/11-15)

Mr Ford: Criminal Justice Workers are based within particular PSNI Public Protection Units to work alongside Domestic Abuse Officers. My Department currently part funds these workers through the local Policing and Community Safety Partnerships. I have currently no plans to provide further funding at this stage.

Car Parking: Dungannon Court House

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to parking issues in the area of Dungannon Court House on sitting days, what discussions he, or departmental officials, held with (i) the PSNI in Dungannon; (ii) the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunal Service; and (iii) Dungannon Court House staff on this matter.

(AQW 34652/11-15)

Mr Ford: I have had no discussions with the Police Service of Northern Ireland on this issue. My officials in the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service have liaised with the PSNI following the issues raised about parking near Dungannon Courthouse. PSNI advised that they have not had any safety issues raised with them and they do not have any particular safety concerns regarding excessive street parking in the Killyman Road area.

National Crime Agency: Northern Ireland

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Justice to detail the talks that have taken place, or will take place, between his Department and Her Majesty's Government with regard to securing the full operation of the National Crime Agency in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 34705/11-15)

Mr Ford: My officials and I have had regular contact with the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland and her officials. I have also discussed the issue with the Home Secretary, and her officials and mine continue to have exchanges.

We are currently engaging with the Northern Ireland Office, the Home Office and law enforcement bodies on a further proposed model which we would intend to put to all parties and relevant bodies as soon as practicable.

Prison Service: Suicide and Self-harm Prevention Policy

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice what amendments have been made to the Northern Ireland Prison Service suicide and self-harm prevention policy since 2011.

(AQW 34717/11-15)

Mr Ford: In 2013 the Suicide and Self-Harm Prevention Policy was updated to reflect changes to prison grades.

The Northern Ireland Prison Service is committed to completing a formal review of its Suicide and Self Harm Prevention Policy, which will be taken forward in consultation with the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust and informed by the recommendations from the Prison Review Team report and external scrutiny bodies.

Mental Capacity Legislation

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Justice what steps his Department is taking to ensure that new legislation on mental capacity complies with requirements outlined in Article 12 of United Nations Charter on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.

(AQW 34743/11-15)

Mr Ford: I am aware that a similar question has been asked of the Health Minister (AQW/34752/11-15).

In developing the new mental capacity legislation both my Department and the Department of Health Social Services and Public Safety have taken account of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities. The current consultation exercise on the draft Bill provides an important opportunity for both Departments to continue to assess the compatibility of the draft Mental Capacity Bill with the Convention.

Mental Capacity Legislation

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Justice how his Department will consult with people with learning disabilities regarding the draft mental capacity legislation, to raise awareness and facilitate their involvement in monitoring its introduction and implementation.

(AQW 34744/11-15)

Mr Ford: I am aware that a similar question has been asked of the Health Minister (AQW/34753/11-15).

Over the past few years, Learning Disability groups have been closely involved in the development of the draft Mental Capacity legislation currently out for public consultation. The Member will also be aware that Justice and Health officials have already had a very productive session with the Assembly All-Party Group on Learning Disability.

Moving forward, the consultation on the mental capacity proposals over the coming months includes five public events across Northern Ireland along with a number of sessions for particular interest groups. A number of events and workshops are already in place including some for people with learning disability and/or their representative organisations. It is my intention that my Department will be represented at those events.

Along with Health colleagues we have also produced easy read versions of the consultation material for those who might find it helpful.

Supporting Prisoner-at-risk Process

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice what amendments have been made to the Supporting Prisoner at Risk process since its commencement; and to outline the analysis that has been carried out to monitor their effectiveness in the detection and prevention of incidents of self-harm and attempted suicide, per amendment introduction.

(AQW 34791/11-15)

Mr Ford: No substantive amendments have been made to the Supporting Prisoners at Risk (SPAR) process since its commencement.

Since the introduction of the Suicide and Self Harm Prevention Policy in February 2011, each prison regularly monitors and reviews samples of SPAR documentation and enhanced auditing was introduced in March 2013.

Consistent with my previous responses the Northern Ireland Prison Service is committed to completing a formal review of its Suicide and Self Harm Prevention Policy in due course.

Joe Campbell

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Justice to outline what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland regarding the grave findings of the Police Ombudsman's Report into the murder of Sergeant Joe Campbell and the necessity for full cooperation with the Office of the Police Ombudsman.

(AQW 34929/11-15)

Mr Ford: I have not had any such discussions with the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Magilligan Prison: Stakeholder Group

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of Justice how many times the stakeholder group on Magilligan Prison have met with the local community.

(AQW 35034/11-15)

Mr Ford: My Ministerial Statement of 19 March 2013 on the development of the Northern Ireland Prison Service (NIPS) Estate Strategy noted how the positive engagement between NIPS officials and a range of stakeholders helped shape my thinking that there was a case for the retention of Magilligan prison. In addition to the strategy's public consultation responses, that engagement centred on:

- NIPS officials presenting and discussing 'partnership working' at meetings of Limavady Borough Council and Coleraine Borough Council, and of Derry City Council's Staff Committee;
- establishment of a Magilligan Prison Elected Members' Liaison Group, which has met twice, supported by:
 - a working group of council Chief Executives, officers and NIPS officials (Ballymoney Borough Council represented in addition to those mentioned above);
- discussion with local businesses and employer groups; and
- operational planning between council officials and Magilligan staff.

This has delivered improved rehabilitation opportunities for those in custody at Magilligan and NIPS officials are committed to continuing with and building on this engagement as the redevelopment of the prison progresses.

Maghaberry Prison: Self-harm Incident

Mr P Ramsey asked the Minister of Justice to outline the circumstances surrounding a recent incident that led to a prisoner from the Foyle constituency being able to seriously self-harm in Maghaberry prison.

(AQO 6500/11-15)

Mr Ford: I fully understand the concern of the Member and the family of this prisoner. I have utmost sympathy for everyone affected by this incident of serious self-harm.

In the interests of independence NIPS has asked the Prisoner Ombudsman, Tom McGonigle, to conduct an investigation.

I do not wish to pre-empt the outcome of that investigation, but I hope Members and the individual's family will be reassured that this incident is being treated both seriously and with transparency.

Forensic Science: All-Ireland Service

Ms Boyle asked the Minister of Justice to outline any recent discussions with the Minister for Justice and Equality on a collaborative approach to forensic science services on an all-Ireland basis.

(AQO 6501/11-15)

Mr Ford: I meet regularly with the Minister for Justice and Equality under the auspices of the Intergovernmental Agreement on Cooperation on Criminal Justice Matters to discuss North/South cooperation on a range of justice issues. My most recent meeting was last week when I met with Frances Fitzgerald and we discussed ongoing cooperation between the forensic science laboratories in the two jurisdictions, amongst other issues.

I fully support collaborative working between the two forensic laboratories to underpin the delivery of high quality and efficient forensic services. Recent cooperation between the two laboratories, for example, has included joint training courses and exploring the scope for dealing with excess demand. A Memorandum of Understanding, signed in 2011, also ensures that both laboratories can rely on each other's facilities in the event of sudden loss or damage to either laboratory.

Interface Barriers

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the recent comments by the Chair of the Community Relations Council on the prospects of removing all interface barriers by 2023.

(AQO 6502/11-15)

Mr Ford: I agree with Peter Osborne's recent comments and indeed those of Dr Adrian Johnston, IFI Chairman, that working towards the removal of 'peace walls' is complex, difficult and challenging work, and they are correct in highlighting that a lack of resources is a risk to progress.

It is clear to me that there are three main issues that need to be addressed to make progress. The lack of a dedicated programme budget is one. The need for a cross Executive commitment to address economic and social renewal is another. The need for continued and intensive good relations work is the third. These issues remain key to achieving the target of removal of barriers and must be addressed.

I know for local engagement there is a real need to tackle physical, economic, social and community renewal within interface areas. The Department of Justice cannot deliver this magnitude of change alone. It requires a properly funded programme which brings together the community, statutory bodies and voluntary groups. I believe that the Executive needs to address the issue comprehensively so that we see meaningful change in interface communities. I hope we can move forward soon.

Firearms: Age Restrictions

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Justice what lessons he has taken from other regions in the United Kingdom with differing age restrictions on the use of controlled firearms in relation to his own proposal to reduce the age limit in specified circumstances.

(AQO 6503/11-15)

Mr Ford: I have proposed a reduction in the age of shooters in Northern Ireland to 12 years old from 16 for shotgun for sporting clay use and air rifles for sporting purposes with appropriate supervision. My proposals follow public consultation, engagement with the shooting lobby and taking account of the situation in GB and the Republic of Ireland.

In England and Wales the age position has evolved over time and they have different ages for different types of firearms for supervised and unsupervised use. I note that in the Republic of Ireland the age is 14.

A strong argument has been made for young people to be able to participate competitively in shooting sports. My proposed way forward on this matter, put to the Justice Committee for a meeting on 18 June, suggests 12 with a proposal for review in 2-3 years' time in light of experience. In addition, it was proposed that a regulation making power to be put in primary legislation to make any further reduction subject to secondary legislation.

Prisoners: Absconding

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Justice what action his Department is taking to prevent prisoners failing to return from leave.

(AQO 6504/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Prison Service takes appropriate and robust action to prevent prisoners failing to return from home leave. Prisoners who apply for home leave undergo a thorough risk assessment to ascertain whether they are suitable for temporary unaccompanied release. Part of this assessment looks at factors which help governors come to a view on whether applicants are likely to adhere to the terms of their temporary release.

These factors include the likelihood of re-offending; the nature of the offence or offences; an assessment of behaviour in custody; the length of time a prisoner has still to serve; the record of behaviour during any previous periods of home leave; and whether they are likely to return to prison by the appointed time. Only those who are determined as presenting a low risk across these various factors will be granted home leave.

Prisoners who breach home leave conditions are subject to adjudication under Prison Rules and, if found guilty, that will impact upon any future application.

If a prisoner fails to return from a period of home leave the police are notified and take action to return individuals to prison custody.

Department for Regional Development

Hospitality: DRD

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development, in relation to civil servants in his Department receiving gifts or hospitality in 2013/14, whether there have been any requests for approval or declarations of matters that fall outside the boundaries of what is normally allowable; and if so, to detail such requests or declarations.

(AQW 34311/11-15)

Mr Kennedy (The Minister for Regional Development): My Department operates declaration, approval and monitoring procedures in strict accordance with the NICS policy governing the acceptance by civil servants of gifts and hospitality from third parties. These include the maintenance of registers which detail all offers received and which indicate, in each case, whether the offer was accepted (with management approval) or declined.

The entries in the registers show that, during the 2013/14 financial year, there were no requests for approval or declarations of matters which fall outside the boundaries of what is normally allowable in this area. Similarly, no such requests or declarations were made within DRD's arm's length bodies, Northern Ireland Water and Translink.

Resurfacing: Causeway Road

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the continuation of the resurfacing of the Causeway Road.

(AQW 34314/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department carried out an extensive carriageway resurfacing scheme in November 2013 which has significantly improved the road surface from Whitepark Road to just beyond the entrance to the Giant's Causeway Visitor's Centre.

Whilst it is also my Department's intention to carry out further resurfacing work up to and including The Aird, the scheme is not currently included in this year's resurfacing programme. I would, however, hope to be able to include it in next year's programme for the Moyle area, subject to the availability of funding. A scheme such as this, adjacent to the Giant's Causeway, will need to be carefully planned and programmed in order to minimise disruption for both local residents and tourists visiting one of Northern Ireland's premier attractions.

Bushmills: Walkway and Cycle Path

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the walkway and cycle path from Bushmills to the Aird.

(AQW 34316/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Member will be aware this is a very extensive scheme proposal that will provide a footpath/cycle path extending for approximately 3.5km from Bushmills to The Aird. However, given the potentially high costs involved, any scheme delivery will need to be carried out in stages.

My officials are currently developing the stage proposal from The Aird to The Causeway, which is significant stretching for approximately 1.5km. The scheme will require the acquisition of a large tract of land. My officials have already met with one of the principal landowners, The National Trust, and will be arranging to meet with other landowners over the coming months.

Subject to the availability of funding and successful acquisition of the necessary land, I am hopeful this scheme will be able to be considered for inclusion in a works programme in the near future.

Disabled Parking: Limavady

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he will consider the provision of additional parking spaces for people with disabilities in Central Car Park, Limavady.

(AQW 34329/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: There are 155 parking spaces in Central car park, Limavady, eight of which are currently marked out for disabled parking.

I have asked my officials to contact you with a view to identifying the need for, and potential location of, additional disabled parking spaces in Central Car Park.

Reservoir: Church Road, Holywood

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the reasons for the draining of the Church Road Upper Reservoir in Holywood.

(AQW 34354/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: NI Water manages the reservoirs under its control in line with standards set out in the Reservoirs Act 1975 (England and Wales).

The lowering of the water level in Church Road Upper Reservoir is required to facilitate essential health and safety work to refurbish valves and other maintenance work required to protect the structural integrity of the reservoir. Due to the nature of the construction of the valve tower and the need to access the scour valve for refurbishment, NI Water is unable to complete this work without draining the reservoir. The scour valve is an essential element for releasing water from the impounding reservoir to ensure the protection of properties from flooding downstream in the event of a large rainfall event.

Reservoir: Church Road, Holywood

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the reason for the lack of consultation following the draining of the Church Road Upper Reservoir in Holywood.

(AQW 34355/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: NI Water consulted with the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) regarding lowering the level of the reservoir and continues to take advice from it on the environmental approach to this work. Consultation was also carried out with the private club who currently lease the reservoir for angling.

Church Road Upper Reservoir was also confirmed in the programme of planned works at a recent NI Water presentation on Portavoe Reservoir to North Down and Ards Borough Councils on 25 April 2014.

Town Centre Car Parks: Christmas Shopping

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he is considering implementing any additional reduced charging incentives for town centre car parks for the 2014 Christmas shopping season.

(AQW 34362/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: A range of measures in respect of town centre car parking charges for the Christmas 2014 shopping season will be considered and announced in due course.

Transport Infrastructure: County Fermanagh

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the metres of (i) dual carriageway; (ii) motorway; and (iii) railway in County Fermanagh; and how he intends to improve transport infrastructure in these areas.

(AQW 34382/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: There are no lengths of dual carriageway, motorway or railway within County Fermanagh.

No stretches of the Fermanagh road network carry sufficiently high traffic volumes to justify motorway provision, while only a few rural stretches have dual traffic volumes approaching that which would justify provision of dual carriageway (for example, the A4 near Killyhevlin – carries approximately 15,700 vehicles per day).

However, there are sections of four lane carriageway, such as those within the limits of Enniskillen town, which improve traffic flow capacity (for example, Wellington Road across Enniskillen Island – approximately 17,700 vehicles per day).

In recent years there have been a number of improvements to the roads serving the Fermanagh region including improvements to the A32 at Cherrymount, Shannaragh and Drumskinny, which had a combined cost of approximately £26million. In addition, a number of 2+1 overtaking sections were also provided on the A4 between Enniskillen and Ballygawley.

The Strategic Road Improvement Programme includes the key schemes for improvements to the trunk road network across Northern Ireland. Schemes within Fermanagh included within this Programme are: the A4 Enniskillen Southern Bypass; A4 Fivemiletown Bypass; and further upgrades to the A32 between Enniskillen and Omagh.

It is anticipated an announcement on the Preferred Route for the A4 Enniskillen Southern Bypass will be made later this year and, in relation to the A32 improvements, design work is progressing on a scheme at Cornamuck with publication of the draft statutory orders likely to take place later this year, and also on a scheme at Kilgortnaleague, where the preferred route corridor is to be identified.

I am keen that we should be ready to develop our rail network where there is the greatest potential for further passenger growth. Progress will, however, be dependent upon the amount that can be made available from the Executive's budget and, where possible, from European grant programmes.

Resurfacing: Millisle

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the cost of resurfacing Abbey Road, Millisle.
(AQW 34391/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department has in recent years carried out two carriageway resurfacing schemes on Abbey Road, Millisle at a total cost of £317,000.

Resurfacing: Donaghadee

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development whether there are plans to resurface Warren Road in Donaghadee.
(AQW 34393/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I would refer the Member to my answer to his Assembly Question AQW 34288/11-15.

Resurfacing: Donaghadee

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development whether there are plans to resurface the footpaths on the Warren Road in Donaghadee.
(AQW 34394/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I would refer the Member to my answer to his Assembly Question AQW 34288/11-15.

A75

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development how often the A75 has been discussed within the British-Irish Council transport sector format and with what effect, given its strategic and economic importance to Northern Ireland.
(AQW 34397/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department's Transport NI Division has no knowledge of any formal discussions having taken place at the British-Irish Council Transport Sector regarding the A75.

My Department's European Programmes and Gateways Unit has not had any input to discussions within the British-Irish Council Transport Sector in relation to the A75. There has been ongoing contact between the Unit's officials and their counterparts in London and Scotland which helped to ensure the inclusion of the A75 on the comprehensive Trans-European Transport Network (TEN-T). The Unit continues to remain in regular contact with Transport Scotland regarding European funding opportunities to improve cross-border and inter-regional routes, including the A75.

Railway Station and Bus Depot: Ballymena

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on when Ballymena Railway Station and Bus Depot will be upgraded to a standard similar to that of Antrim or Coleraine stations.
(AQW 34407/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised that a scoping and feasibility review of the project to refurbish Ballymena Bus and Rail Integrated Station has commenced. The project is included in Translink's Corporate Plan and work is expected to be completed during the 2016/17 and 2017/18 financial years, subject to the successful conclusion of the approval process and the securing of the necessary funding.

Cycling Strategy

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the timescale for the development of a cycling strategy.
(AQW 34408/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: An Issues Paper setting out the direction and key themes for a Bicycle Strategy for Northern Ireland was drawn up by the Cycling Unit in May 2014. The Paper was distributed to key stakeholders and the Committee for Regional Development for comment and five regional workshops were held in May. Feedback received is being used to inform finalisation of the draft Bicycle Strategy which will be issued for public consultation late summer.

Cycle Parking: North Antrim

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans his Department has to provide cycle parking facilities in North Antrim, particularly in close proximity to the route of the Giro d'Italia 2014.
(AQW 34410/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: You are aware of my commitment to improve cycling provision and my Cycling Unit is currently developing a draft Bicycle Strategy for NI which will be published for consultation in the autumn.

This strategy will outline all aspects required to create a better environment for cyclists and communities overall. An integral part of this will be the development of cycling infrastructure including cycle parking.

Good end to end cycling needs to include good cycle parking, where cyclists want to leave their bikes and are confident to do so. My officials will continue to consider providing cycle parking at specific locations and, as part of our 25 year strategy, consideration will be given to the best locations for additional cycle parking – including locations along the route of the Giro d'Italia.

Bicycles: Train Passengers

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development how he plans to increase the availability of space on the train network for passengers with bicycles.

(AQW 34411/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised that NI Railways have now had their full fleet of 20 new Class 4000 trains in service for almost one year. The commissioning of this fleet represented a circa 30% increase in passenger capacity; however, passenger numbers continue to grow at a very high rate which limits available space on trains in peak times.

NI Railways have embarked on a comprehensive review of network utilisation to ensure they are making best use of existing rolling stock and infrastructure and this issue will be considered as part of an overall assessment of passenger needs. Translink expect to see the first outputs from this process incorporated into their 2015-2018 Corporate Plan document.

Currently the Class 3000 trains have capacity for 4 cycles, and the newer Class 4000 trains have double this capacity and can accommodate 8 Cycles. Modification of existing trains would reduce passenger capacity.

Translink provides specific cycle parking amenities at numerous bus, rail and integrated public transport facilities across Northern Ireland including 146 cycle parking spaces at rail stations, 88 at integrated bus and rail stations and a further 198 at bus stations. Translink's intention is to expand cycle storage capacity over the next year. Translink is also progressing with a wider bicycle facility programme and hope to bring forward an economic appraisal in 2014/15.

Cyclists

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development whether there has been an increase in the number of cyclists over the last twelve months.

(AQW 34419/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Travel Survey for Northern Ireland (TSNI) is the only source of data that records how and why people travel in Northern Ireland. A range of cycling specific information is recorded, including the average distance travelled per person per year by bicycle, the average number of cycling journeys taken per person per year and the average journey length for bicycle journeys.

Information on those who have cycled in the last 12 months by age and sex can be found in Table 5.4 of the In-depth report published in December every year. Between 2009-2011 and 2010-2012, there was no change in the proportion of respondents who had cycled in the last 12 months according to the TSNI.

The Travel Survey for Northern Ireland Headline Report 2011-2013 will be published on the 10th July 2014. All TSNI reports and details of methodology can be found at:

http://www.drdni.gov.uk/index/statistics/stats-categories/northern_ireland_travel_survey.htm

For the future, my Cycling Unit is considering further research on cycling participation information that will compliment the TSNI.

Cycle Boxes at Traffic Lights: Parking

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he has considered introducing penalty point fines for people who park in cycle boxes at traffic lights.

(AQW 34421/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can confirm that existing legislation provides for enforcement against vehicles found parked or waiting in areas reserved for cyclists.

Where a waiting restriction is indicated by a traffic sign, Traffic Attendants may issue a penalty charge notice to any vehicle parked or waiting in areas reserved for cyclists. Most of these reserved areas will be within 15 metres of a junction where a waiting restriction will automatically apply. In urban areas these restrictions will be marked with double yellow lines.

The PSNI may issue a fixed penalty notice if a parked or waiting vehicle is deemed to be causing an obstruction. Where a vehicle is waiting in an area reserved for cyclists, with the intention of moving on at the next traffic signal change, the police may issue a fixed penalty notice for breach of a stop line.

Cycling Infrastructure: Dublin

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development whether his Department has assessed the impact of recent changes to cycling infrastructure in Dublin; and if any initiatives could be applied locally.

(AQW 34423/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: As part of the process to develop a Bicycle Strategy for Northern Ireland the Cycling Unit has undertaken a review of best practice in the United Kingdom, the Republic of Ireland, Europe and further afield. One element of this research has been to develop relations, and encourage dialogue with our counterparts in Dublin. This has included meeting with officials from the National Transport Authority.

Given that 'recent changes to cycling infrastructure in Dublin' are outside my jurisdiction, my Department will not have a role in assessing the impact of changes. The Cycling Unit will, however, continue to monitor best practice emerging from Dublin (including any assessment the authorities there make of the impacts of recent changes to cycling infrastructure) and elsewhere, and where appropriate consider changes to infrastructure in Northern Ireland.

Heat, Electricity and Water: DRD Spend

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development how much his Department has spent on (i) heat; (ii) electricity; and (iii) water in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34443/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The amount spent on heat, electricity, and water by my Department in each of the last five years is detailed below.

Year	(i) Heat £'000	(ii) Electricity £'000			(iii) Water £'000
		Electricity - General	Electricity – Street lighting, traffic signals & traffic signs	Total
2009/10	121	718	9,179	9,897	104
2010/11	154	748	10,584	11,332	92
2011/12	160	666	11,318	11,984	85
2012/13	169	610	11,454	12,064	91
2013/14	166	571	11,772	12,343	93

Flags: Removal

Mr Maskey asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he plans to take action, even in the absence of further political agreement, to remove flags from his Department's property where the flags may cause a breach of the peace.

(AQW 34455/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: In April 2005 my Department signed up to the Joint Protocol on the Display of Flags in Public Areas. Under the protocol, the agency in the most effective position to consult, negotiate, or resolve the situation will take the lead. My Department is generally not perceived to be the lead agency under the current Protocol. The PSNI, where best placed, will take the lead and also does so where the display of flags is causing community tension, or is affecting the quality of life for a community.

Under the protocol Transport NI, when called upon by the lead Agency, will provide the access equipment and resources to remove unwanted flags, once there is community agreement and practical assistance is required to facilitate such action.

Experience has shown that removing flags in the absence of widespread support can simply worsen the situation, with even more flags being displayed. My Department must also take account of the risks to workers in removing flags where agreement has not been reached.

My Department has contributed to the review of "The Joint Protocol in Relation to the Display of Flags in Public Areas", which OFMDFM initiated in April 2008 and continues to take the lead on.

Portavoe Reservoir: Drainage Operation

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development, with regards to the recent experience at Portavoe Reservoir in relation to the environmental impact of the drainage operation, whether any new measures will be implemented to minimise the environmental impact of any similar draining operations on the other reservoirs.

(AQW 34478/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: NI Water is currently carrying out maintenance work on a number of reservoirs across Northern Ireland with Portavoe being the sixth to be drawn down during this maintenance programme. NI Water has advised me that there have been lessons learnt at each of the sites, both in terms of the technical approach to the refurbishment and controlling the environmental impact. As with all other reservoir sites, the environmental mitigation works at Portavoe were designed and agreed following a period of extensive consultation with the Northern Ireland Environment Agency and other stakeholders. While there are some unavoidable consequences of drawing down a reservoir, the environmental mitigation works have been a success, with approximately 16,000 fish relocated, a swan mussel population collected and temporally relocated, and well over 100 water birds continuing to remain at the site.

The most significant lesson learnt from the Portavoe works has been the approach to public consultation. NI Water has learnt to recognise the wider public stakeholder groups with an active interest in Portavoe and ensuring early and regular communication with these groups and members of the local council to achieve greater buy in to the scheme. NI Water has already written to other local councils to advise them of future works at other reservoir sites and has offered to meet with councillors to discuss each of these proposed schemes.

Buses

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development how he is ensuring that bus drivers are aware of how to drive when in close proximity to cyclists.

(AQW 34485/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised me that as part of their Certificate of Professional Competence (CPC) annual training syllabus all of its drivers undertake a training course on safety awareness when sharing road space with cyclists. To date, 2120 drivers have completed this training.

My Department and Translink have also recently developed a programme of training along with an advice leaflet for both bus drivers and cyclists entitled 'Travelling in Harmony'. This provides cycle skills and safety training as well as guidance for bus drivers and cyclists to ensure that each understands the needs of the other, particularly in shared space.

Millennium Way: Lurgan

Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the completion of Millennium Way in Lurgan.

(AQW 34487/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department is continuing to develop the extension to Millennium Way scheme and work is ongoing to finalise the detailed design for the proposal.

The acquisition of land for the scheme requires a Vesting Order and it is hoped to publish the Notice of Intention to Make the Vesting Order in the near future. The scheme development team is continuing to meet with affected landowners and tenants with a view to minimising the risk of objections to the Vesting Order. It is possible, however, that a Public Inquiry may be required to determine if the level of land take identified is appropriate.

As previously indicated, it is estimated the scheme should take 4-6 months to construct, however, progression of the proposal onto my Department's Construction Programme and a date for the start of construction remain subject to the proposal continuing to have a satisfactory economic appraisal, clearing the statutory procedures and funding being made available in future budget settlements.

County Hall: Ballymena

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the annual cost of providing services, for which his Department has responsibility, from County Hall in Ballymena; and what contingent liabilities are planned in the financial year 2015/16 for the use of these facilities.

(AQW 34507/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: County Hall in Ballymena is a Crown Estate building and therefore the responsibility of the Department for Finance and Personnel (DFP).

My Department is the principal occupant of the Northern Ireland Civil Service within County Hall in Ballymena, and as such bears responsibility for costs associated with Security, Cleaning and Waste Disposal. The cost for these services in 2013-2014 was £296,496.

There are currently six other occupants of County Hall in Ballymena; the North Eastern Education & Library Board; the Northern Health & Social Care Trust; Planning, Road Safety and Motor Tax officials from the Department of the Environment (DOE); and Urban Regeneration officials from the Department for Social Development (DSD).

My Department recharges the other occupants on the basis of square footage occupied. In 2013-2014, £222,347 was recharged leaving resultant costs to my Department of £74,149.

Park-and-ride Scheme: Dungannon

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development whether consideration has been given to the provision of a park-and-ride scheme at Drumgormal in Dungannon on land owned by the Roads Service.

(AQW 34542/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: It is accepted that the land owned by my Department at Drumgormal has the potential to provide park-and-ride/share facilities. However, a site at this location would be less desirable than the currently proposed site in the vicinity of the Stangmore roundabout, which is located at a major interchange (A29/A4/M1), and is close to an existing bus stop. A Stangmore location would also cater for an existing demand, as evidenced by the current numbers of parked vehicles along the A29.

However, the land in question will be retained by my Department, should a future need be identified after construction of the Tamnamore and Stangmore Park and Ride/Share sites.

Craigantlet Roundabout

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the Craigantlet Roundabout Improvement Scheme. (AQW 34550/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department commissioned a detailed study of a number of alternative layouts in relation to this scheme, many of which had been put forward by local residents. The report concluded that, of the options considered, three were worthy of further consideration.

These options were subsequently put forward for public consultation, which took place between 21 January and 7 February 2014. In total, 265 responses were received through the public consultation events. Officials are currently analysing the feedback and preparing a report on the consultation, for my consideration.

I hope to be in a position to announce details of the preferred scheme later in the summer.

A2

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the progress of the cleaning and maintenance of the open drain on the edge of A2 Belfast to Bangor Dual Carriageway adjacent to the boundary of Holywood Rugby Club and the North Down Borough Council 3G pitch development.

(AQW 34551/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My officials have investigated this issue and acknowledged that further maintenance work on the drain would be beneficial prior to the winter period. It is anticipated the work will be carried out within the next 2 – 3 months.

Roads Service: Ballymena

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of (i) road sweepers; and (ii) vacuum tankers available to Roads Service in the Ballymena area.

(AQW 34553/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department has one road sweeper and one vacuum tanker (gully emptier) available for use in the Ballymena area.

Road Gullies

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the frequency of which road gullies are cleaned and emptied.

(AQW 34555/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department is responsible for the cleaning and maintenance of over 550,000 gullies across Northern Ireland. Transport NI aims to inspect and clean, where necessary, all gullies in urban areas twice each year and gullies in rural areas once each year. This is in line with the Road Maintenance Standards for Safety which apply equally across Northern Ireland.

This policy ensures that a reasonable level of maintenance is carried out to drainage systems, taking account of the Department's finite funding and staff resource levels.

In addition, Transport NI undertakes additional inspection and cleaning of gullies at locations where fallen leaves create ongoing problems at certain times of the year, or where there has been a history of gullies becoming blocked for other reasons.

Sewer Overflow: Muckamore Bridge

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on Northern Ireland Water's response to the ongoing pollution incidents at the combined sewer overflow at Muckamore Bridge on the Six Mile Water River.

(AQW 34561/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: In the past two months NI Water has undertaken extensive dye investigations in the sewerage network and properties in the vicinity of Muckamore Bridge area to ascertain the root cause of pollution incidents in the area. Some 253 properties have been tested to date with the initial focus on targeting areas identified as likely locations for misconnections.

Whilst more time will be required to explore the issues identified to date in full, the high level findings include:

- Misconnections were found at five properties
- NIW was unable to gain access to eight properties which had neighbouring properties possessing misconnections

- A foul sewer was found to be blocked and overflowing into the storm sewer. The blockages were cleared and the manholes and storm lines cleaned

Once the full extent of the issue is established, NI Water will liaise with NIEA to establish a prioritisation rank for this area, in relation to other identified areas of misconnections across Northern Ireland. NIEA has developed a scoring matrix for prioritisation of misconnections, which includes consideration of visual impact, aesthetics at outfall, accessibility/downstream users, water body designation/classification and Directive impact.

Following the completion of the investigation NI Water will work with NIEA to determine the prioritisation ranking for this using NIEA scoring matrix for misconnections. Subject to this location being given an adequate ranking in the prioritisation matrix and allocation of funding within PC15 to address misconnections, a programme of work may then be developed and taken forward to address this issue.

Waste Treatment Works: Ballyclare

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister for Regional Development what design changes are being considered by Northern Ireland Water for the Ballyclare Waste Treatment works to provide capacity so that it does not pollute the Six Mile Water when severe flooding conditions occur.

(AQW 34563/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Ballyclare Wastewater Treatment Works was constructed in 2005 to improve the quality of final effluent being discharged to the Six Mile Water. It operates under a Water Order Consent (WOC) issued by the Northern Ireland Environment Agency and has been compliant since construction. The Works continues to treat effluent to well within its consented limits and NIW has no plans to increase its treatment capacity. Base maintenance programmes will be delivered in accordance with maintenance schedules to sustain the required level of treatment at the Works.

Recent discharges into the Six Mile Water River have been investigated by NI Water and identified as being caused by sewer blockages and misconnections. Further details of NI Water's response to these incidents are included in AQW34561/11-15.

Reservoirs: North Down

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the reservoirs in North Down that are surplus to requirements.

(AQW 34572/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: NI Water currently has seven reservoirs in the North Down area which are considered surplus to requirements. The reservoirs are Ballysallagh Upper and Lower, Conlig Upper and Lower, Creightons Green, Church Road and Portavoe.

Resurfacing: Holywood

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the footpath resurfacing schemes that are under consideration for the Holywood area.

(AQW 34574/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I would refer the Member to my answer to his Assembly Question AQW 34288/11-15.

Resurfacing: Holywood

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the road resurfacing schemes that are under consideration for the Holywood area.

(AQW 34575/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I would refer the Member to my answer to his Assembly Question AQW 34288/11-15.

Traffic-calming Measures: Holywood

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the traffic calming measures that are under consideration for the Holywood area.

(AQW 34576/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I would refer the Member to my answer to his Assembly Question AQW 34288/11-15.

Dropped Kerbs: Holywood

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail where new dropped kerbs are under consideration for the Holywood area.

(AQW 34578/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I would refer the Member to my answer to his Assembly Question AQW 34288/11-15.

Cycling

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development how he promotes cycling to his departmental staff.
(AQW 34588/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I promote cycling to all my staff as a realistic and sustainable travel option through my Department's Travelwise initiative and provide a particular focus on everyday cycling such as commuting and short journeys. When I am in my office in the city centre I promote cycling by example through cycling to meetings within Belfast.

My Department provides cycle parking along with showers and changing facilities at its Clarence Court Headquarters building and other Departmental offices. An extension to the cycle parking facilities was recently completed. The Department also provides pool bikes for staff use and has recently bought two folding bikes to encourage multi modal journeys.

In addition, I spearheaded the introduction of the Cycle to Work scheme in June 2012 to staff across the NICS including staff in my Department.

I also lead my Departmental annual cycling events programme during Bike Week and participate with DRD staff in activities such as Bike To Work Day as well as supporting the 10 Minute Cycle Challenge, both of which are designed to support staff participation in cycling.

Rural Transport Fund

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister for Regional Development, given the benefits of the transport solutions provided as a result of the Rural Transport Fund, particularly the flexibility and value offered through volunteer drivers, whether his Department will protect such opportunities for volunteering and continue effective partnership working with the community transport sector in future considerations.

(AQW 34644/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department continues to provide support to Rural Community Transport Partnerships from the Rural Transport Fund. One of the main objectives of the Fund is to encourage volunteering activity and I have no plans to change this.

Bus Routes: Ards Peninsula

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans are in place to extend the number of bus routes in the Ards Peninsula to improve the service to Carrowdore.

(AQW 34660/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Officials from my Department, Translink and the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development have been working together to introduce a small number of additional rural bus services. It is hoped to commence these services as soon as possible, subject to securing funding. However, it has not yet been possible to confirm financial support which would mean the additional bus services could be introduced. Officials are continuing to work together to find a solution and hope to have clarified the position by September.

One of these proposals would include Carrowdore as part of a service operating from Ballywalter up the Ards Peninsula to Bangor.

South Antrim Community Transport

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the funding his Department provided to South Antrim Community Transport in each of the last four financial years.

(AQW 34663/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The table below indicates the level of support provided by the Department from the Rural Transport Fund (RTF) and the Assisted Rural Travel Scheme in conjunction with the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development to South Antrim Community Transport in each of the last four years. All figures are taken from the Company's annual audited accounts.

Financial Year	Level of RTF Grant	Assisted Rural Travel Scheme	Total Support
2010-11	£138,389.00	£18,853.00	£157,242.00
2011-12*	£150,150.00	£28,037.00	£178,187.00
2012-13*	£158,938.00	£27,369.00	£186,307.00
2013-14	£212,666.00	£31,858.00	£244,524.00

* Please note that in the 2011-12 and 2012-13 financial years, South Antrim Community Transport was working in a collaborative partnership with Lagan Valley Rural Transport (Lisburn), while the two organisations considered the possibility of merging. After a two-year period, the two organisations took the decision not to take the merger forward.

Flooding: Newcastle

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (i) the findings of his Department's recent report into perennial flooding in the Mourneview Estate in Newcastle, Co. Down; and (ii) the actions that will be implemented to tackle the ongoing issue.

(AQW 34741/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: NI Water has now received the feasibility study from its consultants on the drainage situation within the Mourneview Estate and the investigation has outlined a complex drainage arrangement which has interdependencies between infrastructure owned by NI Water, Transport NI and some soakaway systems where ownership is unclear.

The report identifies two elements of work, one on the NI Water combined system and one associated with a soakaway which receives road drainage. Flood alleviation proposals include the upsizing of the combined sewer and provision of a new surface water sewer and discharge. The outline cost estimate for the flood alleviation proposals is £440k.

NI Water intends to progress and implement the recommendations in the report and commence detailed design work with a view to delivering a construction project to provide the solution to the flooding problem. Transport NI will also participate in this scheme and will work with NI Water to develop and agree the detail of this joint project.

The project will be progressed as quickly as possible, and it is estimated that construction could be completed mid-2015 subject to the availability of funding, lands and statutory approvals.

Illegal Waste

Mr Agnew asked Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 33866/11-15, given a valid enforcement notice exists that requires the offender to remove the illegal waste which lies directly in the line of the proposed A6 road, to detail (i) the implications of vesting land subject to such a legal charge; and (ii) whether his Department will be liable for the cost of removal, decontamination and repatriation of the waste.

(AQW 34880/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: In responding to your previous questions about the discovery of the illegal landfill at Mobuoy Road, I advised that should I decide to proceed with this scheme:

- (i) I would confirm the Direction Order immediately to protect the footprint of the scheme from future development;
- (ii) the Vesting Orders would remain in draft awaiting Executive approval of funding to construct the scheme; and
- (iii) if the illegal landfill is still present when the road is being constructed, I am content that the installation of appropriately engineered measures to contain the illegal waste would ensure that the necessary compensatory floodplain could be constructed as planned.

Big Capital Project

Mr McGimpsey asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the start date of the infrastructural drainage changes that have been promised as part of the Big Capital Project.

(AQW 34961/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Northern Ireland's drainage infrastructure will require significant capital investment to support future economic growth. It is also important to ensure that our drainage infrastructure protects the environment to the standards set out in the relevant EU Directives and properly addresses flood risks.

My Department, with the support of the Department of the Environment and Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, has identified the potential benefits of a strategic approach to drainage infrastructure planning across Northern Ireland. This cross-cutting, strategic approach would require additional investment above and beyond the sewerage infrastructure improvements that Northern Ireland Water will continue to deliver through the water industry's Price Control 13 and Price Control 15 Business Plans.

I have circulated a draft paper to Executive colleagues which sets out a proposed way forward. I believe that an interdepartmental working group should be established to develop a strategic drainage infrastructure plan for Northern Ireland. This could develop Northern Ireland's drainage infrastructure in a joined up way to support future economic growth, protect the environment and address flood risk in a strategic manner.

Department for Social Development

Migrants: Housing Patterns

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development what information exists about the housing patterns for migrants living in public and social housing, including their prevalence in areas classified or regarded as unionist and nationalist.

(AQW 34025/11-15)

Mr McCausland (The Minister for Social Development): The Housing Executive has developed a number of monitoring systems to analyse the performance of their housing services across a number of equality areas including race and migration. Information about the ethnic origin of applicants for housing services has been collected for 10 years and more recently the Housing Executive has collected information about the nationality of customers.

However, as these systems do not give a complete picture, the Housing Executive conducts an annual Black and Minority Ethnic and Migrant Worker mapping survey to supplement its knowledge of the range and prevalence of foreign nationals using their services. This study in conjunction with the monitoring data and the Housing Executive's community based work allows them to make broad estimates of the patterns of race and migration and the uptake of housing services.

However, at this stage the Housing Executive's statistical information is only effective at District (housing area) level due to the small numbers and the Housing Executive does not define areas as unionist or nationalist. There are also data coverage and data quality issues.

I would also refer the Member to my answer to AQW 34024/11-15.

Cavity Wall Insulation: Housing Executive Report

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the reasons for the delay in the publication of the Housing Executive's report on cavity wall insulation.

(AQW 34147/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that they had been waiting on further survey data results which were received on 13 June 2014. A paper is currently being prepared to inform the Housing Executive's Business Committee of the research findings along with any recommendations. It is anticipated that this will be presented to the Business Committee on 7 July 2014.

Housing Associations: Redecoration Grants

Mr Copeland asked the Minister for Social Development how much is still outstanding in redecoration grants as a result of the installation of double glazed windows in Housing Association properties.

(AQW 34230/11-15)

Mr McCausland: Of the current 24 registered Housing Associations, none have any monies outstanding in redecoration grants as a result of the installation of double glazed windows in Housing Association properties.

Social Housing: Provision

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister for Social Development how he plans to increase social housing provision in (i) Banbridge; (ii) Portadown; and (iii) Lurgan; and for his assessment of the current capacity and its suitability in relation to demand.

(AQW 34236/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive's Social Housing Need Assessment 2013-2018 identified a need for 72 additional social housing units in Banbridge and 191 additional units in Craigavon Borough, which includes both Lurgan/Brownlow and Portadown Districts. The majority of social housing need is for Banbridge Town and North Lurgan local housing areas as detailed below:

The Unmet Need Prospectus, available on the Housing Executive's website, (http://www.nihe.gov.uk/unmet_social_housing_need_prospectus.pdf) highlights areas where housing need remains unmet and directs housing associations to the number and type of housing required in particular housing areas. The Housing Executive continues to work with housing associations as they endeavour to secure sites for social housing in the above districts. With regard to Banbridge the Housing Executive has been encouraging Housing Associations to study the Banbridge, Newry and Mourne Area Plan 2015 which lists the sites zoned with a Key Site Requirement for Social Housing within the district.

North Lurgan has the highest projection of housing need of all of the above settlements. To assist Housing Associations in sourcing suitable sites a North Lurgan Site Identification Study has been initiated by the Housing Executive. The study has identified a North Lurgan Boundary and determined all unconstrained sites within it.

This has resulted in the identification of 28 sites which have all been ranked on the basis of location and whether they have planning approval. Land and Property will be contacting all sites owners in a systematic manner to determine if any would be willing to sell their land for social housing development.

Heat, Electricity and Water: DSD Spend

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Social Development how much his Department has spent on (i) heat; (ii) electricity; and (iii) water in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34248/11-15)

Mr McCausland: This Department has spent the following amounts on the in each of the last 5 years:

	2009/10	2010/11	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14

Kilcooley: 3G Football Pitch

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development how much funding has been allocated for the 3G football pitch proposals for Kilcooley, Bangor.

(AQW 34282/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Kilcooley 3G pitch project is part of a capital cluster project entitled "Community Operated Sports Facilities" which has been submitted to the Office of the First and deputy First Minister for funding through the Social Investment Fund within the South Eastern Zone's area plan. The cluster project is currently within the funding allocation of the Zone but has not yet been approved by the economic appraisal process. It should be noted that this project is not guaranteed funding.

The Kilcooley Neighbourhood Renewal Partnership Board has included in its Action Plan a commitment of £250,000 as a part contribution towards the overall costs of the proposal. My Department has indicated that it would be minded to support the commitment, through the Neighbourhood Renewal Investment fund, subject to the completion of a positive economic appraisal and the availability of finance. However it is likely that given the timeframe involved, responsibility for deciding whether to support this project will fall to the new North Down and Ards Council as part of the Reform of Local Government.

Alcohol Licensing

Mr Rogers asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 33197/11-15, to outline the timescale for reporting on the reform of alcohol licensing.

(AQW 34295/11-15)

Mr McCausland: On 26 June, my officials provided a briefing to the Social Development Committee on the changes I propose to make to alcohol licensing law. I now intend seeking Executive agreement to the final policy content of a Liquor Licensing (Amendment) Bill. Following this I will make an announcement on the way forward.

Queen's Parade, Bangor

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the Queen's Parade redevelopment project in Bangor.

(AQW 34358/11-15)

Mr McCausland: My Department is taking the lead to progress proposals for the comprehensive development of the Queen's Parade. Over recent months good progress has been made and the Department has agreed the purchase a number of properties required to complete the proposed site boundary and negotiations to acquire the remaining property are ongoing with owners. In March DSD appointed Turley Associates to work with officials to develop a planning application and attain planning permission for the Queen's Parade scheme by March 2015.

A series of engagement events to seek the views of the public, local businesses and Council on what they would like to see developed on this prominent site have been undertaken. It is these views that have informed a number of proposed options for the site which are being presented to the public for their consideration from 16 June 2014 to 30 June 2014.

Urban Development Grant Scheme

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the criteria used to judge applications to the Urban Development Grant scheme.

(AQW 34378/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The criteria used to assess applications for Urban Development Grants are specified in the 'Application Pack', these are; location, strategic context, scale, value for money, practicability, additionality, environmental benefits and design. All applications are subject to an economic appraisal.

Employment Support Allowance

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development how many people in North Down have had their Employment Support Allowance withdrawn after a work capability assessment, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 34435/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The following table details the number of people in North Down who failed to meet the threshold at a Work Capability Assessment in each financial year from June 2011 to February 2014. The figures provided are those Employment and Support Allowance claimants who have undergone a Work Capability Assessment as part of the re-referral process which is provided for under the legislation.

Programme for Government 2011-15

Mr Maskey asked the Minister for Social Development to what extent his Department has implemented the Programme for Government 2011-15 commitment that all public procurement contracts for supplies, services and construction works will include social clauses; and to what level such clauses have been implemented.

(AQW 34449/11-15)

Mr McCausland: In accordance with the Programme for Government commitment and Central Procurement Directorate's guidance, my department considers the inclusion of social clauses in all public procurement for supplies, services and construction.

The Procurement Board, in June 2013, revised the definition of social clauses to include wider community benefits. This is considered on a project by project basis, to determine which social considerations are relevant to the needs and the obligations to be met by the procurement. Any relevant social considerations are/will be clearly stated in tender documentation. Social Clauses linked to training and employment opportunities have been included in Government construction works contracts since 31 December 2008, developed by Central Procurement Directorate in conjunction with the construction industry.

My department promotes that public procurement should be undertaken and managed via a Centre of Procurement Expertise namely Central Procurement Directorate within the Department of Finance and Personnel. Subsequently this helps to ensure that social clauses are implemented where appropriate.

Bangor Public Realm Scheme

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development how much funding will be going into the Bangor public realms scheme.

(AQW 34454/11-15)

Mr McCausland: My Department is investing £3 million and Council is investing £5 million in the Bangor public realm scheme. On-site construction works recently commenced and the works will address all aspects of street design including paving, kerbstones, street furniture, lighting and planting.

Social Housing: Taughmonagh

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development what steps have been taken to secure occupation of the new social housing dwellings in Taughmonagh.

(AQW 34530/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The allocation of new properties at Taughmonagh is the responsibility of Fold Housing Association.

Fold Housing Association has confirmed that they met with the tenants of the new properties on 27 June and are pleased to report that the issues that had previously delayed the tenants from taking up occupancy are now resolved. The tenants have now received their keys and their new tenancies commenced on 30 June 2014.

Poker: Legislation

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Social Development whether his Department will introduce legislation to allow the playing of organised poker with limited stakes.

(AQW 34594/11-15)

Mr McCausland: I would refer the member to the answer previously supplied to AQW 24512/11-15.

Land Banks: East Antrim

Mr McMullan asked the Minister for Social Development to list the (i) domestic; and (ii) non-domestic land banks in East Antrim that will be transferred to the Mid and East Antrim council.

(AQW 34614/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The table below details the land that is currently proposed will transfer to the control of Mid and East Antrim council under the Reform of Local Government. All areas of land are classed as non-domestic.

Mid and East Antrim
Rodgers Quay, Carrickfergus
Upper North St, Carrickfergus

Please note that by the transfer date the above list may be subject to change.

Housing Executive: East Antrim Properties

Mr McMullan asked the Minister for Social Development how many Housing Executive properties in East Antrim will have double glazing installed by the end of the 2014/15 financial year.

(AQW 34615/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that a total of 1,568 properties in the East Antrim parliamentary constituency will have double glazing installed by the end of the 2014/15 financial year. This includes those schemes that have been started in earlier years and those schemes that are due on site in the current financial year in order to achieve the Programme for Government commitment

Maintenance Repairs: Strabane District

Ms Boyle asked the Minister for Social Development what action he is taking to address the backlog of maintenance repairs on Housing Executive properties in the Strabane district; and whether he will consider making additional resources and finance available to resolve this issue.

(AQW 34746/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that due to a number of performance related issues associated with this contract they have had no option but to serve a three month termination notice on the contractor, which is due to end on 15th September 2014. The Housing Executive has further advised that back up arrangements are being put in place during the termination period to address the backlog and uncompleted work situation. The Housing Executive is also actively seeking a replacement contractor using the mini-competition under the Framework Contract.

House Repossessions: North Down

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development how many house repossessions took place in North Down in (i) 2007; (ii) 2010; (iii) 2013; and (iv) the first quarter of 2014.

(AQW 34763/11-15)

Mr McCausland: My Department does not hold information on the number of houses possessed each year in Northern Ireland. However, the Department of Justice provides statistics on the number of writs and originating summonses issued, cases disposed and orders made in respect of mortgages in the Chancery Division of the Northern Ireland High Court. This information is publicly available on the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service and Northern Ireland Neighbourhood Information Service websites. While these statistics are not a complete representation of possessions in Northern Ireland, they are informative as a proxy of people at risk of possession.

The figures for North Down show that:

- (i) In 2007 there were 91 mortgage cases received and 54 cases were disposed. A total of 54 final orders were made, of which 24 were Possession Orders.
- (ii) In 2010 there were 135 cases received and 121 cases disposed. A total of 121 final orders were made, of which 70 were Possession Orders.

A sub-regional breakdown of the statistics is not yet available for 2013 or the first quarter of 2014. The provisional overall figures for Northern Ireland show that:

- (iii) In 2013 3,694 mortgage cases were received and 2,741 cases were disposed. A total of 2,812 final orders were made in 2013, of which 1,811 were Possession Orders.
- (iv) In the first quarter of 2014 there were 886 cases received and 669 cases disposed. A total of 703 final orders were made between January and March, of which 432 were Possession Orders. Statistics for the second quarter of 2014 are not yet available.

It should be noted that not all writs and summonses lead to the eviction of the householder. Furthermore, lenders granted possession orders by the courts have up to 12 years in which to enforce the order. Therefore, the number of possession orders granted in any given year may not translate into the same number of enforcements or evictions.

If constituents in North Down are struggling to pay their mortgage or are worried about the future, I strongly encourage them to access advice and speak to their lender as soon as possible. The Mortgage Debt Advice Service, which is operated by Housing Rights Service and funded by my Department, can be contacted on 0300 323 0310. The earlier borrowers receive advice and engage with their lender, the more likely they are to arrive at an affordable and sustainable solution; however, it is never too late to begin this process.

Housing Executive: Glengormley Properties

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister for Social Development to list the no-fines single-skin Housing Executive properties in the Glengormley area.

(AQW 34766/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that they do not have any "No Fines" properties in Glengormley.

Housing Executive: North Down Properties

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development how many Housing Executive properties in North Down will have received double glazing between 2011 and the end of the scheme in 2015.

(AQW 34865/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that from April 2011 until March 2014 they had installed double glazing in 649 dwellings in the North Down constituency. A further 501 dwellings are due to have double glazing installed during 2014/15 financial year in line with the Programme for Government commitment.

Charity Commission

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 34197/11-15, when he will review the costs incurred by charities in responding to Charity Commission for Northern Ireland investigations.

(AQW 34917/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The costs incurred by charities in responding to the Charity Commission for Northern Ireland remain a matter for the organisations concerned and my Department does not have access to such information. In these circumstances I am not in a position to review costs.

Charity Commission investigations are not entered into lightly and can be necessary to protect the charity and / or its assets, for example where there is evidence of misconduct and mismanagement by trustees.

Housing Executive: West Tyrone Properties

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister for Social Development how many Housing Executive homes in West Tyrone are set to benefit from the new double glazing contract.

(AQW 34936/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that there is only one double glazing scheme remaining in the West Tyrone constituency for 59 properties, which is due on site in February 2015.

Housing Executive: Superannuation Scheme

Mr Allister asked Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 33845/11-15, whether there is an imperative on Northern Ireland Housing Executive staff to attend these courses.

(AQW 34987/11-15)

Mr McCausland: The Housing Executive has advised that attendance at such NILGOSC run courses is not mandatory.

Heat, Electricity and Water: Assembly Commission Spend

Mr Agnew asked the Assembly Commission how much has been spent on (i) heat; (ii) electricity; and (iii) water in each of the last five years.

(AQW 34445/11-15)

Mr P Ramsey (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): Gas fired boilers provide the majority of heating in Parliament Buildings with a small number of rooms supplied by electric heaters. There is also a range of mechanical extract ventilation or air conditioning systems which are also powered by electricity. At present it is not possible to break down the electricity costs by heat, light, power etc.

The total costs incurred by the Assembly for heat (gas) and electricity in each of the last five years can be found in the table below:

Year	Total Gas Costs (£)	Total Electricity Costs (£)
2013-2014	156,145.09	272,878.73
2012-2013	153,159.24	268,285.86
2011-2012	128,372.14	251,205.37

2009-2010	82,838.00	195,639.00

The Sustainable Development Office publishes these figures on the Northern Ireland Assembly website ensuring that they are available in the public domain.

The water distribution network in the Stormont Estate is owned and maintained by the Department of Finance and Personnel (Properties Division). The Assembly has incurred no costs relating to water charges over the last five years.

Cycle to Work Scheme

Mr McKay asked the Assembly Commission to detail the uptake of the cycle to work scheme since its introduction.

(AQW 34493/11-15)

Mr P Ramsey (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): A Cycle to Work Scheme for the Northern Ireland Assembly was first introduced in February 2013. The scheme runs annually with new applications accepted during February and March to coincide with the financial year.

Initially the scheme was only available to Assembly Secretariat Staff with 15 individuals availing of the scheme in the first year. This year the scheme was opened to MLAs as well as staff and a total of 19 people applied. It is hoped that there will be an increase in the number of people availing of the scheme in subsequent years.

If you require any additional information please feel free to contact the Sustainable Development Office on 02890521265.

Cycling

Mr McKay asked the Assembly Commission how they plan to promote cycling to staff over the next twelve months.
(AQW 34495/11-15)

Mr P Ramsey (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): A Cycle to Work Scheme for Assembly Secretariat staff was introduced in February 2013 and continued again this year. The scheme will continue to be promoted annually with new applications accepted during February and March to coincide with the financial year.

The annual '10 Minute Cycle Challenge' and 'Active Belfast Workplace Cycle Challenge' which promote cycling are advertised to all building users each year.

In addition to this Sustainable Development Branch promote 'Bike Week' with a food voucher of £3.50 available to all staff who cycle to work on the day. This year 3 members of staff availed of the offer.

Information on cycling is available to all staff via the Sustainable Development Office Cycle to Work Scheme page on the Assembly intranet, AsslSt.

If you require any further information please feel free to contact the Sustainable Development Office on 02890521265.

Middletown Centre for Autism

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Education how many children are treated in outreach by the Middletown Centre for Autism. (AQW 30039/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): The Chief Executive of the Middletown Centre for Autism has advised that 20 children were provided with outreach support from 1 April 2013 to 30 November 2013.

A further 123 children also benefitted from support offered to the referred children within the same school.

Disability Employment Strategy

Mr McMullan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 32165/11-15, to detail (i) how the Disability Employment Strategy is being developed; (ii) when public consultation on the Strategy will take place; and (iii) what events have taken place, or are planned, in East Antrim with consultees to develop the Strategy. (AQW 33925/11-15)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): The Disability Employment Strategy is being developed in close partnership with the local disability sector.

My Department fully recognises the role that the sector has to play in helping to achieve the key objective to assist as many disabled people as possible to find, sustain and retain paid employment.

A strategic working group, including a number of representatives from disability organisations, was established at the outset. The working group is in the process of finalising the draft consultation document, which is scheduled for issue in September 2014. This will initiate the period of formal public consultation, during which time, people from throughout Northern Ireland will be invited and encouraged to provide an input.

In order to inform the discussions thus far, a number of engagement events have been facilitated by the Department. Five large regional events were part of this exercise, and the strategic working group deliberately targeted a mix of those people with a disability who have or do use existing services, and those who, up until now, have not done so. One of the events took place at the Action Mental Health premises in Antrim and another took place at NICVA in North Belfast. Travel arrangements were organised through the local disability organisations and both of these locations would have been accessible for people from the East Antrim area.

The feedback from all involved, especially those participants who are disabled, has been overwhelmingly positive and all of the events were well attended. The discussion and contributions at the events have been very useful and constructive, and these will be reflected within the consultation document.

Following on from the consultation process, it is intended that the Disability Employment Strategy will be launched in April 2015.

Dumping Sites: Illegal

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the action taken to tackle illegal dumping sites.
(AQW 33893/11-15)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): Tackling illegal dumping, and the organised criminality associated with it, is one of my Department's key priorities. Working alongside local government we must be vigilant in challenging those who deliberately set out to make money by putting the health and well being of individuals and communities at risk.

Following publication of the Mills Report into the discovery of a major illegal landfill site at Mobuoy last year, my Department has drawn up an operational strategy and action plan to tackle the problems of illegal waste at their source. This means working closely with councils to monitor their contractual arrangements for the management and disposal of their waste so that we can then follow up on any areas that give rise for concern as to the ultimate destination of the waste involved. This will mean closer scrutiny of council contractors and requirements for them to provide information as to any further sub contracts they may enter into for the further processing and transport of the waste they have received.

In addition to this, the Department is continuing its actions against illegal dumping where it is discovered. There are currently 31 ongoing investigations, involving 37 locations and most of these focus on illegal waste management and dumping. Such dumping includes illegal landfill sites, products associated with fuel laundering, end of life vehicles and waste tyres.

I do not underestimate the nature and scale of the challenge we face here. There are substantial financial gains to be had by those prepared to put the health and well being of our communities at risk and damage the environment through their illegal activities. They also put at risk the jobs and futures of those waste operators who seek to secure the gains for our local economy that can be had through a legitimate waste sector.

My officials will therefore continue to work closely with colleagues in other enforcement agencies especially developing a new partnership approach with local councils on the overall management of waste. On the enforcement side, there is a Strategic Partnership with the PSNI for joint work on the prevention of illegal dumping and action to apprehend and convict those responsible for such activities.

Injunctive Relief: Publicity Prohibited

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice to detail (i) the number of orders that have been made by the High Court of Justice in Northern Ireland prohibiting publicity on the granting of injunctive relief since 30 April 2012; (ii) when each order was made; (iii) the number that are extant; (iv) whether any such orders have been discharged since 30 April 2012; and (v) the total of orders, whenever made, extant on 29 May 2013.

(AQW 23690/11-15)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): No orders have been made by the High Court of Justice in Northern Ireland prohibiting publicity on the granting of injunctive relief since 30 April 2012. Information on all extant orders, whenever made, is not readily available and could only be compiled at a disproportionate cost.
